 NOT ALL MEN

In the Scripture lesson that Evan Fry read on his radio Morning Devotions recently this sentence occurred:

"I said in my haste, All men are liars."
—Psalm 116: 11.

That sounds rather modern and on the cynical side. Too many moderns would say, "All men are liars." The Psalmist was wiser. He knew it was spoken in haste and probably wrong.

As the bus nears the end of the line, big city tensions disappear, and a friendly ease often develops between the driver and the few passengers. A young man arose, passed his hand over the fare box, and was let out. We didn't hear the coin hit the bell. The driver looked, but no coin was there. With a grimace he said, "Some people will do anything." We all felt ashamed of the young man. We thought he had cheated a friendly driver.

When we got up to go, depositing our zone fare, we found the young man's nickel stuck in the slot, and called it to the driver's attention. Our faith in humanity was restored. We all felt better.

Isn't it wonderful to know that all men are not liars or cheats? We must try not to judge people by first appearances. They are probably better than we think.

 LIARS

You have heard the saying that "Figures don't lie." But that is a generous serving of tripe. Many a time you have seen a lady going down the street ahead of you, and her figure tells you she is doing twenty or so. But when she turns around to look in a shop window, her face admits that she has already done forty. . . . Isn't anybody doing anything about "Truthfulness in advertising" these days?

 HOW TO WIN

Branch Rickey, president of the Brooklyn National League Baseball Club, described what it takes to have a winning team. This could be applied to church work, too.

1. You must have an unconquerable belief in what you are doing.
2. You must have a great desire to win. That is the difference between mediocrity and greatness.
3. There is no way to attain security except through effort.

 SMOKE SIGNALS

Perhaps the prophets were looking forward to the modern habit of smoking tobacco when they said,

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils."
—1 Samuel 22: 9.

"And the house was filled with smoke."
—Isaiah 6: 4.

The term "Holy Smoke" may refer to the incense burned at the altars in houses of worship. But most of the smoke that befouls the air in public buildings today is distinctly unholy.

There are two kinds of people: (1) those who smoke by choice, and (2) those who inhale it unwillingly. They get it second-hand, whether they like it or not. One has about the same freedom in urban America to smoke or not to smoke as he has to breathe or not breathe.

Sermons For Whom?

SERMONS ARE ENJOYED according to the inspiration and help they give the hearers—some hearers, had I better say? There are Latter Day Saints who are fond of sermons which stoutly affirm that we should believe in our type of church organization, in divine healing, the prophetic office, and baptism by immersion. "We heard a good old gospel sermon today," they tell each other. They have such a comfortable feeling; they were "confirmed in the faith." Like "the rich young ruler" of Jesus' day they say, "All these have I kept from my youth up"

M. Williard Lampe, University of Iowa, told of his experience as a student minister in a town in Wyoming one summer. He was preaching his farewell sermon preparatory to returning to school. A prosperous real estate dealer came to him at the close of the service. "We're so glad you come out here and preach repentance and hell fire. Why, we couldn't live with some of these ruffians if you preachers didn't put the fear of God in their hearts occasionally."

Dr. Lampe thanked him for the implied compliment and then asked, "And how did the sermons affect you?" "Oh, I didn't mind. You see, I am educated." It is such a comfortable feeling to hear sermons which do not disturb our ways of life—that are just for the other fellow—not the "saved" nor the educated—or are they?

In all places visited the choir was welcomed and appreciated.

PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS

Elder John R. Grice preached three sermons and gave eight patriarchal blessings during his stay in Beaverton, Michigan. Weather conditions were so bad it was impossible for people in the outlying country to attend the meeting.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO

From February 25 to March 27, Missionary Louis Zonker conducted meetings at Chatham, Merlin, Wallaceburg, Wabash, and Sarnia. The fifth week was used to make personal follow-up contacts. The total average of nonmember attendance per week was forty-eight.

The series closed with special services in Chatham. Patriarch John R. Grice spoke at the 11:00 o'clock service. At 3:00 p.m. there were 217 people present to witness the baptism of eleven. Sickness prevented several others from being baptized. The confirmation service was held in the evening.

District President Ellwood Smith and Brother Zonker were in charge of the series of meetings.

The Problem of Goodness

"The earth is full of the goodness of the Lord." —Psalm 33:5.

Two Problems

Bruce Barton once related a story in a magazine article of something he had heard in a sermon by a country preacher. The item was filed away, as so many good things are, and forgotten. A few days ago it turned up again, and now seems to be a good time to share it. We need something to bolster our faith in humanity.

People talk to me about the problem of evil, but I will tell you an even greater problem: the problem of goodness. How do you account for the fact that in such a world as this there should be so much self-sacrifice, so much unselfishness, so much love? By what miracle has man, who only a few thousand years ago was living on the level of the beasts, risen to a point where he will literally "lay down his life" for his family, for a cause, for a friend?

What Do You Look For?

Can you answer the following questions: Are church members any better than other people? Critics say they are not. Sometimes church people themselves are doubtful. But many fine people are active workers.

Here is another: Does going to church make ordinary people good, or does the church attract those who would be good anyway? That should bring a lively argument on the church steps any fair Sunday.

People seem to expect perfection of church members at headquarters. A few are angels, and there are men fortunate enough to be married to them. The rest are just people, many good ones, the majority fair, and some rather sad cases.

A few years ago a man came here from the west coast. He said he couldn't stand the wickedness and corruption of the people out there any longer. Fortunately, he said, he left before God destroyed them for their sins. His was a nervous, tense, restless joy. At last he was safe, he thought, among a righteous people.

We didn't see him for two weeks. When he came back, he let us know he had been busy. He seemed to feel relieved. Zion wasn't as good as he was afraid it was going to be. He had hunted up all the critics, the malcontents, and the disgruntled. He listened to their tales and believed every word. He dug up more dirt in his two weeks in Independence than we had found in fifteen years of living here. There was just one thing wrong with what he learned. Most of it was untrue. We knew some of those people well, and the stories were false. Enemies had deceived him.

So I tried to tell him what I knew about the goodness of our people. But his ears were itching for tales of sin, and mine was a dull story. He hated to listen, and he wouldn't believe. He was returning to the west coast. Pity the poor people there!

Examples

One doesn't have to look far in any normal community to find many examples of active, useful goodness. Dozens of men sacrifice their time for Boy Scouts, Y.M.C.A., 4-H, and other youth organizations. Women give time to Blue Birds, Orioles, and Girl Scouts. People serve on charity drives, committees for community improvements, helping the hospital, and other things, all without pay. No city would be a fit place to live without the many volunteers who serve in the public interest.

People work on clothing for the poor and needy, visit the sick, give money to distressed persons, work freely in all kinds of good causes. Church work would collapse without the volunteers.

We have a critical correspondent who writes often and condemns everybody. He thinks the whole church is lost in apostasy and sin.

Fortunately, very few people are like that. Good people are generally humble too, and pleasant, agreeable company.

Spiritual Emergencies

Sometimes in your life you are moved by an inward voice to go on some errand or visit somebody, only to discover that God has called you into an area of spiritual distress, where he has a work for you to do. With no preparation you are thrown into the old, old struggle between good and evil, with the possession or redemption of a human soul at issue. You see defeat and victory awaiting the result of your effort, you marshal your little strength, and you send up a prayer for help.

There you listen to tales of sorrow and trouble, hurts and complaints. You patiently explain, trying to bring truth and light into dark places, pouring out the balm of Gilead on hurt feelings, administering emollients to wounded pride, and performing delicate emotional surgery on tumescent vanity. If you are blessed, you are able to do some good.

Have you wondered, under such circumstances, why it is so much harder to make people believe good things than bad ones, and why ill tales travel in seven-league boots, while truth rides on the back of an injured snail?

Take the long view, and you will see that eventually goodness wins over evil. Satan always loses in the end because he destroys and consumes his friends. God always wins because he blesses his friends and gives them eternal life. It is as simple as addition.

We are in for some trouble, in this world of ours, from people who do not understand God. It is our task to bring a knowledge of God and the gospel of righteousness to them.

City-Wide Week of Prayer

BY CHARLES V. GRAHAM

Members from all congregations in the Center Place recently participated in an outstanding spiritual activity. The Week of Prayer held March 20 to 24, was called specifically to prepare our people for the coming General Conference, to unite them more fully, and to pray for God's blessings through the leaders of the church.

All other religious activities in the sixteen congregations of Independence were terminated during the week. Small children, teen agers, and young people, as well as those of middle-age and older years met at 7:45 each night in Stone Church. A total of 7,000 people attended through the five nights; approximately 1,500 were turned away because of lack of seating capacity. The upper auditorium was filled to capacity with extra seats being provided each night. Some occupied classrooms, others gathered in the radio room, and from 200 to 450 met in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church.

The public address system made it possible for all to hear, no matter where they were seated. In the main auditorium eight traveling microphones were used, four on the main floor and four in the balcony. As people would stand to pray or testify young men handling the microphones would wait upon them. For the first time in the history of Stone Church it was possible for every person who participated to be heard by every other person.

All ages, from the very young to the aged, participated freely each night. Many people said it was a reminder of the experience that is now written in history of the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, when small children and young people participated freely with the older Saints.

The priesthood in the choir loft and east and west wings of the balcony began the services with fifteen-minutes of familiar songs. There never were less than 250 men in this chorus. Paul Craig conducted the first three nights, and Donald Lents the last two nights. Charles V. Graham, Pastor in Zion, was assisted by the sixteen pastors in the Center Place in presiding over these services.

As early as 6:15 hundreds of people were already in the church, waiting for the services to begin. By seven o'clock each evening the church was almost filled to capacity, and those arriving after 7:10 were forced to sit in the lower auditorium, in the radio room, or in the classrooms. It was a very moving sight to observe the people hurrying to the prayer meeting an hour or more before the service, and then to observe the mass as they left at the conclusion of the services.

There was an average of fifty prayers and testimonies each night, and the quality of the participation was far above average.

A committee composed of C. V. Graham, Glaude A. Smith, D. B. Sorden, Fred O. Davies, and Arthur E. Stoft met twice a week for several weeks in prayer and fasting, seeking the Lord for guidance as preparation was being made for the Week of Prayer. As a result of the committee's meetings, they were led to select as the general theme, "God Bless the Church for Its Mission in the World Today." This main subject was divided into five subtopics: Monday night, "The Mission of the Church"; Tuesday night, "A Law-Abiding People"; Wednesday night, "A Praying People"; Thursday night, "A Witnessing People"; and Friday night, "A Prophetic People."

There is no doubt in the minds of the committee members, the pastors, and the Saints in Independence who participated in the Week of Prayer but that the Lord directed and blessed them abundantly in every effort that was made for these services. Out of this rich experience come the following conclusions: the Saints in the Center Place are more united than ever before, they have a greater desire to sacrifice and serve than ever before, and they have a great willingness to follow the leadership of the church in further developing the Center Place for the Zion to be and the kingdom of God.

Norman E. Hield to Manage Social Service Center

IN THE Herald of March 6, 1950, we reported on the purchase of property to be used for the expansion of the work previously carried on at different times in the names of "The Campus Shop," "The Commodity Shop," and "Home Arts and Industries." We have felt it advisable to employ a person who would give full time to the supervision and management of this splendid project. He will be assisted by the women leaders who have carried on so nobly in the past and who have brought the work to such a place of prominence. Sister Henry Rowland and her corps of workers have indeed done a magnificent job and welcome a full-time manager to take over a heavy load.

We feel we are fortunate in securing the services of Elder Norman E. Hield who comes to us with a broad background of training which we think qualifies him to render a most excellent service. Brother Hield comes from Detroit, where for a number of years he has been a traveling salesman in several of the north central states. He has a fine academic background, having been graduated from Graceland College and the Commerce College of the University of Iowa. He received his Masters Degree from the University of Michigan, majoring in Economics. He has also been intensely interested in the development of Co-operatives, and for a few years worked with the Midland Co-operative Wholesale in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Elder William Oliver who has done much to prepare the building and who has carried considerable responsibility in association with Bishop Harold Cackler will continue to serve part time in addition to his work as Manager of the Real Estate Properties of the Central Development Association (holding corporation for the church). The First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric constitute the policy-making board with whom Bishop Harold Cackler will be associated as General Supervisor.

As stated previously, the success of this work, in the final analysis, is dependent upon the support of the group of fine women who have carried it along for many years, and to this group of women we express our sincere appreciation.

The Light of Christ

By PRESIDENT ISRAEL A. SMITH

This is the light of Christ. As he is also in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2.

He hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times, and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens, and the earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 11.

disaster to all earth-bound denizens, since all earth life, as we understand it, is dependent upon the sun.

To enable us to grasp even in a limited way this tremendous loss of energy—if it be a loss—with the sun giving it off at the rate of five million tons per second, we are told that heat can be definitely measured or weighed, a single pound, it is said upon authority, being sufficient to reduce twenty million tons of rock into lava.

THE GOD OF THE UNIVERSE, however, has not left us the hazard of withstanding all this outflow of energy, because the earth is indeed a small target; it is receiving but a small portion of this heat, and it is estimated at two horsepower per square yard, all the rest streaming out into space in all directions, probably carrying blessings to the inhabitants of countless other worlds like our earth.

With the great two-hundred-inch reflecting telescope lately installed at Mt. Palomar, California, we are now learning that over half a million galaxies of stars have been discovered never before observed by man. Accurate measurements are claimed by astronomers: Alpha and Proxima Centauri are found to be almost three hundred thousand times as far away as the sun.

But we are digressing, because we set out to consider what is going on within the sun—the “power thereof” by which such tremendous quantities of energy have been and are continuously flowing from it, without appreciable or ascertainable loss of weight or volume as would naturally follow, one would think, if it were consuming its own matter—burning itself up.

Helmholtz, scientist, who brought out a work on conservation of energy in 1857, suggested the only adequate source of the sun’s heat was its contraction, but another and later scientist calculated this source would have exhausted the sun in twenty millions of years’ radiation, whereas the sun is much older than that, according to geologists.

I wish I had powers of description to put in a layman’s language what the scientists say is going on in the sun. Perhaps it cannot be set forth understandably except in terms of science.

Doctor Cecilia Gaposchkin, Harvard College scientist, says, “Nature is carrying on an alchemy of her own”—almost unbelievable it seems, and yet this doctor speaks apparently with authority, with assurance that she knows what she is talking about.

And I find the eminent English scientist, the late Sir James Jeans, setting out in his last work, “The Growth of Physical Science,” the same explanation. He speculates that a star might obtain the energy for its radiation from a transmutation of its substance, a catalytic process without loss of substance, and here it is in the terminology of the scientist, based on the calculations of a number of scientists. We trust a careful reading of the statement is not too tedious:

A SCIENTIST recently said that the “records in the rocks as interpreted by geologists, mineralogists, and physicists tell us that our sun has been shining at least two billion years and that it has not decreased much, if any, in intensity through all this time. If the sun were solid coal, for instance, it would long since have turned into a cold clinker.”

Many years ago the men learned in astronomy expressed the belief that the universe was made to run by some power within itself and runs accordingly. And now facts discovered by scientists indicate that something approaching if not indeed equivalent to perpetual motion—which has always been held by the wise to be a scientific absurdity—is resident within the sun. Our sun, the benefactor of mankind is by far our most important “star.”

We are truly amazed at the facts brought to us by the men of science concerning the sun. For instance, it is claimed that the sun pours out five million tons of energy in the form of heat and light each second. One would naturally believe this would result in a corresponding loss in volume. With but a layman’s notion about the expenditure of energy (in the form of light and heat) our judgment would suggest there will be a certain and tragic end to such waste, and that whatever resources are resident within the sun, they in time must surely be dissipated with

In brief, the scheme supposes four protons to combine to form a helium nucleus with the assistance of a carbon nucleus which expedites the process by its presence, but ultimately emerges unchanged—as the chemists say, it acts catalytically. The carbon nucleus (of atomic weight 12) first captures a proton and combines with it to form a nucleus of atomic weight 13, this being one of the isotopes of nitrogen. This now captures two more protons in succession, forming nitrogen nuclei of atomic weights 14 and 15. Yet a fourth proton is now captured, but the combination cannot form a nitrogen nucleus of atomic weight 16, for such a structure is unstable, and breaks up immediately into two nuclei of weights 12 and 4. The former is the original carbon nucleus, which is now restored uninjured to the star; the latter is a helium nucleus which has a smaller mass than the four protons which have been hammered together to form it. The difference of mass, which is approximately that of 0.028 proton, has been set free as radiation. Although the scheme is complicated in the sense that many transmutations must occur before the final product is reached, yet it is confirmed by laboratory observation at practically every stage.—Page 344-5.

Doctor Gaposchkin, however, makes it a little easier for us. She says:

It is ten years since the actual processes that are going on within the stars were observed in the laboratory, and it only remained to piece together the series of reactions that takes place. It is a very simple series of reactions, and involves atoms with very familiar names. Hydrogen, commonest of all atoms in the sun, combines with carbon, forming nitrogen, which reverts radioactively to a new kind of carbon; this again combines with hydrogen, forming nitrogen; this again combines with hydrogen, forming oxygen, which reverts radioactively to another nitrogen; a fourth hydrogen is picked up, and the end product is a carbon nucleus like the original one, and instead of the four hydrogen nuclei, one helium nucleus. In the process, several bursts of energy (the equivalents of lost mass) have been given out; this is the energy or light with which the sun shines.

“The net result,” says this scientist, is that—

by a sort of catalytic action involving carbon (which survives unaltered), four hydrogen atoms have disappeared, one helium atom has appeared, and energy has been produced. Calculation shows that this process, and this alone, produces enough energy to keep the sun alive, unchanged, for about 200,000,000 years. Hydrogen is the fuel of the process, helium the ashes, and as long as hydrogen is available, the reaction will go on. As the sun is still mostly made of hydrogen, we need feel no apprehensions about his imminent extinction. He is, it is true, living on his capital; but it appears that he has more of that in the bank than we might have suspected.

What goes on in the sun undoubtedly goes on in all “live” stars, the sun being but one of perhaps millions, the largest stars known being five hundred times its size, and some of them being a million times as bright, yet some having but an infinitesimal part of its brightness.

THIS GLIMPSE into the vastness of creation reminds us of the vision of Moses:

And it came to pass, as the voice was still speaking, he cast his eyes and beheld the earth; yea, even all the face of it; and there was not a particle of it which he did not behold, discerning it by the Spirit of God. And he beheld also the inhabitants thereof, and there was not a soul which he beheld not, and he discerned them by the Spirit of God, and their numbers were great, even as numberless as the sands upon the seashore. And he beheld many lands, and each land was called earth; and there were inhabitants on the face thereof.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 19.

Here we are, puny men, as compared with the material world, inhabiting one small sphere, now apparently a “dead star” and perhaps untold other “earths” in every direction. An “account” of this one the Lord gave to Moses. Moses probably did not comprehend what God through his “Only Begotten Son” had accomplished on all these other “lands” called earth suitable for the habitation of creatures made by him, “in his likeness”—in our likeness we hope, since man cannot even comprehend the numbers of the stars or the extent of God’s creations.

Yet He is mindful of us his children and has provided a means whereby we can be saved after the inevitable dissolution of soul and body, for an entrance into our Father’s House with its “many mansions.”

HOW WONDERFUL this creation, all creation planned for man’s benefit! And while we cannot fully comprehend it, we are learning enough about it to become lost in contemplation: “Worlds without number have I created.” Not only created but endowed with inexhaustible power by which they have run for millions of years and will continue to run at least subject to the “word” of his power.

He hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times, and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens, and the earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 11.

And as we ponder these mysterious things and the majesty of creation, the words break into our consciousness, “This is the light of Christ. As he is also in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made,” and, indeed, by which it will run forever.

Time magazine for February 13, under the title, “A Touch of the Sun,” says the sun “is a kind of hydrogen bomb that generates its life-giving energy by ‘fusing’ hydrogen into helium. Man’s new bombs will not use exactly the same reactions, but they will use similar ones yielding the same end product. When the first of them explodes, a little bit of the searing sun will have hit the earth.” And Einstein and other great scientists say humanity may become extinct whenever the hydrogen bomb is used.

If so, will this not be a repetition of the story of Adam in the garden of Eden? Man will at last have partaken of too much knowledge of good and evil—potentially of great good, but prostituted by man for evil purposes, and by his own acts will have been again banished from this fair earth.

And here again our minds revert to latter-day revelation:

Concepts of God - By ROBERT J. MILLER

THE SCRIPTURES teach us that God created man in his image and after his likeness for a very definite purpose. It was the Creator's desire that men should become godlike, overcoming the things of the earth and subduing them. It was also his desire that men overcome all evil and become his sons by adoption through Jesus Christ, inheriting a place in his kingdom and sharing in his glory.¹

Since it was God's purpose that men become like him, it was necessary that they be created with godly attributes. They had to be given intelligence in order to think and comprehend the truth. They also had to be given free agency and the right to act according to their own will. Although it is the command of God that all men shall choose him as their Father, the choice is strictly up to them. Men become God's adopted sons by personal desire and action, not by force.²

IN THE PAGES of recorded history, we note the slow progress men have made through the ages—the periods of darkness and the periods of partial light, with here and there a spiritual manifestation contributing to the social welfare of humanity. We see how men groped for the light in a world darkened by sin and, through the peculiar workings of the mind, found expression because of free agency. Thus over the centuries our thoughts, our opinions, our decisions, and our beliefs are more or less a composite of the thinking and conduct of those who have preceded us. Our measure of understanding and belief is the product of our conclusions drawn from the knowledge we acquire from all sources which touch our lives.

Therefore it is not surprising that there are almost as many different conceptions of God as there are people to formulate beliefs. We each have some idea, however vague, of what we think God is like. All have an opinion—though some may hesitate to express themselves—and each opinion is influenced in some degree by the things which enter into that person's experience: truth and falsehoods, circumstances of birth, family ties, surroundings, mass opinions, religious and racial loyalties, and personal desires. All these and more contribute to the sum total of our thoughts and conclusions. And regardless of our church affiliations, it is doubtful if any two persons of a given congregation have the same conception of God.

WE BELIEVE either that God is merciful and good, loving his creation and providing for it; or that he is more or less a tyrant, commanding his subjects and demanding tribute from them. We believe him to be intolerant of all sin, or understanding of man's limitations; or we believe him to be tolerant of sin, an easy-going God, allowing us our own pleasure in matters of worship. We believe in the authority of God and his ever-revealing power, or we believe in promiscuous authority and limit present-day revelation.

We believe that God spoke to but one people and gave his word only through them; or we believe he spoke to many people at various times and gave his word through them also. We believe in certain doctrinal matters such as faith, repentance, and baptism; or we choose from them as suits our convenience. We believe man works out his own salvation by the pleasure of God; or we believe we are predestined to a certain end regardless of our behavior.

We believe God to be eternal, from everlasting to everlasting; or we believe there is no God. We believe he wisely created us to be immortal, or we believe he limits our span of existence to the grave. We believe in the glories, a just reward for our deeds in the flesh; or we believe in two states only—heaven and hell. We believe in the final harmony of all souls with God; or we believe the Scriptures.

These are but a few of the things we believe or disbelieve about God and his plan. The beliefs we hold on these and similar matters add up to the conception we have of God. But surely a Creator who has brought into being all things by the power of his word is beyond the comprehension of man except as he sees fit to reveal. Knowing this, we should keep an open mind concerning the majesty, power, mercy, love, and authority of God.

OUR CONCEPTS change as we are further enlightened and dare exercise the courage it sometimes takes to espouse a belief. The case of the Apostle Paul is a splendid example of this. He was a Jew of the tribe of Benjamin and a tent-maker by trade. At seventeen he went to Jerusalem to study the law of Moses under Gamaliel, and became a strict member of the Pharisaical sect. He took a prominent part in the persecution of the Christians until the time of his conversion. Then on the road to Damascus, he was caused to see the error of his way.

As understanding came to him, he had the courage to do an about-face in spite of his former teachings, the opinions of his people, and certain knowledge that he would suffer persecution. Paul was honest, sincere, and courageous; he dared accept truth and act upon it.

We should never be satisfied with our concept of God no matter how beautiful it may be, for we are all limited in our understanding and have not come to a fullness of the truth. Our minds should ever be open to new revelation, and we should strive for the courage and honesty of a Paul that our horizons, too, might expand.

The measure of our faith is dependent upon our concept of God, and it behooves each of us to question ourselves honestly to determine what we really believe. Do we believe in God? Do we believe he is strict, merciful, understanding, just—loving his creation and providing for it? Does he save little children who are not baptized? Can we reach him through direct prayer, or must we pray to others to be heard? We must take these and a thousand other questions into account and decide for ourselves, letting God bear witness to us through his Spirit whether or not our decisions are right.

IN OUR CONCEPT we should have absolute belief regarding God's reality, his authority, his power of revelation, his eternal values, and his love for us. And our personal beliefs should find justification in his Word. We, as Latter Day Saints, should not be afraid to examine our own church in the light of his Word, especially those of us who have been born into the church or have come into it without serious thought, taking it for granted upon the testimony of others. If it cannot stand close scrutiny, we should know it. If it does not give us a satisfactory picture of the Godhead, something is wrong, and we should find out what it is. If it does stand up under close examination, if the Spirit of Truth does bear witness with our spirit, if God becomes a more beautiful and inspiring personage, if his Son is revealed to us in various ways, then we have received a testimony no one can take from us, and we will appreciate our church more and serve it better.

Pen Sketches of Him and Her Therapeutic Value of Dishwater

The good pastor had worked diligently cracking nuts and picking out the meats. He was helping his wife prepare treats for the Christmas season. Finally he complained, "My hands are getting sore and lame." Sweetly his wife suggested, "Dear, don't you think it would help your hands to soak them in warm dishwater?"

At the risk of alienating some of my friends of the ancient order of men, which goes back to Adam, may I venture the suggestion that dabbling in dishwater at times, not too often, may have a tonic effect on domestic relations and be good for the soul. Christopher Morley wrote:

The man who never in his life
Has washed the dishes for his wife
Or polished up the silver plate—
He still is largely celibate.

Victoria and Albert

This little story comes from overseas and dates back to the Victorian age. It is said that one day Queen Victoria and her husband Albert the Prince Consort, quarreled, as may happen even between a queen and her husband. Albert in high dudgeon locked himself in his room. Presently the queen came pounding on the door. The prince inquired, "Who is there?" The queen answered, "The Queen of England! Let me in!" The door remained locked. A second time Victoria pounded on the door, and to the challenge, "Who is there?" she replied, "The queen of England and empress of India! Let me in!" The door remained locked. A third time the queen knocked, and when the prince said, "Who is there," she replied, "Your wife. May I come in?" The door swung open. Love can open doors that kings and queens cannot force. No one can hammer his way into the heart of another.

Taking Care of "a Little Misunderstanding"

A young girl, one of four sisters from a fine family, was talking with her grandmother. She said, "Yesterday morning just before we girls were starting to school, Daddy and Mother had a little misunderstanding. Daddy got us girls into the automobile ready to drive us to school. Then he went back into the house to make up with mother. We understood. By and by he came out to the car, and mother stood in the door and said, 'Good-by, Sweetheart.'"

That is a home on which it would be safe to write an insurance policy—on the home, not the house, mind you—if such policies were to be had. They are to be had, but not from an earthly insurance company. What a splendid example for the daughters of the house. They will never forget that the gospel worked in their home. The gospel of love and reconciliation had been demonstrated. As Joseph Luff used to say: "Christ on exhibition in the home."

"It Takes Two to Have a Fight"

A charming married woman, still quite young, was talking to me about home life. She said, "My husband and I never have any fights. It takes two to fight, and he won't fight. So at times I 'blow my top' and then have to come humbly back and apologize and make up." The wife is high strung, temperamental, but very much worth-while. She knows when she has lost her temper and said things she is sorry for, and she has the grace and courage to ask forgiveness. The husband is even-tempered and steady. He knows better than to get angry at a time when his wife is upset. He is quick to forgive, in fact, he does not really take offense. They make a pretty good team—well worth knowing. Because they know and understand each other, and have held fast to their love and their covenant, theirs is an enduring home in spite of the occasional tempest in a teapot that occurs in most homes.

Joseph and Emma

Now comes a story from the long ago. Joseph Smith was a fugitive from injustice. This was in 1842, and Joseph was hiding from the mob leaders who sought to kill him and who too soon were successful in their endeavor. Apparently he was encamped on an island in the Mississippi River, and was visited at night by a few friends, unidentified, and his wife Emma. Of that meeting he wrote:

"How glorious were my feelings when I met that faithful and friendly band on the night of the eleventh, on Thursday, on the island at the mouth of the slough, between Zarahemla and Nauvoo: with what unspeakable delight, and what transports of joy swelled my bosom, when I took by the hand, on that night, my beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. Many were the revibrations of my mind when I contemplated for a moment the many scenes we had been called to pass through, the fatigues and the toils, the sorrows and sufferings, and the joys and consolations from time to time, which had strewed our paths and crowned our board. Oh, what a commingling of thought filled my mind for the moment, again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma."—Millennial Star, Volume 19, pages 695, 696; Church History, Volume 1, page 120.

This little quotation throws a flood of light upon the private life and the relationships of Joseph Smith and his wife Emma. This was the man, the husband, speaking. Out of the depth of his abiding love for his one wife he spoke, even as he had spoken as a prophet, in the revelation from which I now quote: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

ELBERT A. SMITH

Be Not Afraid - By GERALDINE WYATT

AMBROSE BIERCE, an author noted for his true-to-life psychological stories, wrote one which is almost a sermon in its presentation of the havoc which can be wrought by fear. This story, "The Man and the Snake," copyrighted in 1891 by E. L. G. Steele, is about a man who is a guest in a scientist's home. Sitting alone in his bedroom, the man reads an ancient scientific report on the inherent power a snake has to charm its victim until it can fatally bite him. The man, lowering his book, notices two points of light shining in the shadow under his bed. He thinks nothing of it at first, but presently looks again, and then again. And each time the points of light appear to blaze more luminously. Then, as he stares, the man sees the form of a large coiled serpent. The malignant fires are its eyes.

The man's first impulse is to reach for the bell cord and ring for help. But he thinks he will be thought lacking in courage. He decides to rely upon his own strength. The man's terror grows—turns to blind panic. He endures all the reputed symptoms of being charmed, until at last, in a fit, he falls helpless before the snake.

Hearing an outcry, the scientist rushes to the room. He finds his guest dead. "Died in a fit," says the scientist. Beneath the bed is still coiled the serpent—a stuffed snake with shoe-button eyes.

Similar incidents of equal or lesser degree are familiar to all of us.

FEAR, LIKE ANY EMOTION, reveals depth of feeling. It shows the ability of reckoning the cost—the indication of potential energy. No one should ever be ashamed of being afraid. But he should be ashamed of continuing in fear. Confronted with danger, many people have died like the man in the story because their minds became so fogged with terror. They had no energy nor thought left for thinking their way out of their predicament. And in some instances, would-be rescuers have also become victims of the fears of the ones they attempted to rescue. Drownings are an example.

Though most often associated with physical danger, fear also causes people to fail to achieve what their ability would otherwise guarantee. How many times we have heard people confess: "I'm afraid I couldn't do that." This is poor thinking. It is almost a sure prediction of failure. That they have the courage to try at all is a marvel. We have all known students who became so fearful of examinations that they broke down completely. They had no energy left to reason out the answers.

We have also heard church members rise up in prayer meeting and, through their dire predictions and fearful imaginings, cast a gloom on what should have been an inspirational meeting. If all members contributed this type of service, the church would meet destruction. They are saying in effect that obeying the laws of God can only bring disaster, which of course is the very opposite of what true religious obedience does. Obedience to the laws of God should give people the courage to face anything. For in compliance with his laws, they are aligning themselves with the eternal purpose and the tremendous creative force of God.

CHRISt WAS particularly concerned that his followers have a true spiritual poise. "Let not your heart be troubled," "Be not afraid," and "Be of good cheer" are examples.

In the fourteenth chapter of Matthew, we find an inspirational account of at first faith, then the overpowering of fear with its disastrous effect, and a petition for divine aid. One night, when their ship was being tossed about by wind-whipped waves, the disciples saw Jesus walking on the sea. Thinking this was a spirit, they cried out in fear.

"Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come."

Peter was able to walk on the water, until looking at the rough sea, he realized his possible peril. Fear overwhelmed him, and he began to sink. But terrified as he certainly must have been, Peter did not fail to cry out: "Lord, save me."

Peter realized his own weakness. He knew that within his own limitations he had not the power to save himself. But he knew that walking on the boisterous waves was One who did have the power.

As long as we strive to obey God's laws, we have the right to his guidance and help. We do not have to attempt anything alone. Partnership with God is a very marvelous phrase. And its potential possibilities are only limited by our own obedience to and application of his laws.

For by his laws of living and the gifts of the gospel, Christ tenders to us the comforting words: "Be not afraid." We have the source to give us equanimity of spirit. The student in the classroom, the follower who momentarily loses faith, the endangered, the ill all have a ready source of courage and of strength. And yet, if like Peter, we lose faith, Christ is always willing to help us in answer to our plea, "Lord, save me."

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Six

AT THE EARNEST REQUEST of many of his friends, and after discussing the matter with the First Presidency, Elder Waller decided to become a candidate for the governorship. As the position of governor is appointive in the Territory of Hawaii, Brother Waller and the other candidates were notified that they must appear in Washington, D. C., in person. On April 5, 1913, he sailed for the mainland, leaving the church work in charge of Elder McConley during his absence. Brother Waller carried with him a number of letters from leading men of the different political parties in the territory. He was also supported by some of the prominent businessmen of San Francisco.

On April 16 he met Secretary of the Interior Lane by appointment and had a pleasant conversation. Brother Waller found that F. M. Smith, of the Presidency, had met with President Wilson and Secretary Lane and had done good work for Brother Waller's candidacy by removing the prejudice that had been aroused by a circulated report that he was a Mormon. Secretary Lane asked Brother Waller many questions about our church and his work as an officer of it. He remarked that formerly he had thought all Mormons were alike, but that now he understood otherwise.

The following Sunday, while Brother Waller was a guest in the home of Bishop Zimmermann in Philadelphia, he was spoken to in prophecy at an early morning prayer service. He was given to understand that good would result to the Lord's work from the efforts he had put forth to obtain the governorship, although he would not be successful in obtaining it. His success was to be in forwarding the work of the church. Thus there was a blessing indicated along with failure. We quote from the prophecy:

Thou shall be blessed in thy present undertaking, and my gospel shall have honor because of thine efforts and thine integrity. Thy desires shall be realized because thou hast desired above all else to honor my name and assist in my work. Be of good cheer; be not afraid, for I am thy shield and buckler and thy strong defense, and what may seem to thee like defeat shall turn to thee success if thou wilt continue in faith holding as first of importance my gospel and the honor of my name, saith the Lord. Amen.

Upon recommendation of Secretary Lane, President Wilson appointed L. E. Pinkham as governor of Hawaii Territory. This appointment was subsequently confirmed by the United States Senate.

The Work Opened on the Big Island

At Elder Waller's suggestion and the approval of others in charge, Elders McConley and Barrett sailed for Hilo, Hawaii, to try opening up the work on the big island. Elder F. M. Sheehy, in commenting upon Elder Waller's proposal, said: "Yes, the more I think of the scheme you mention of starting missionary work as you suggest, the better it seems. Let them try it, anyway."

Arriving in Hilo, the two missionaries made a house-to-house canvass of the city besides a trip through the Puna district [twenty miles from Hilo in the country]. Opposition was strong, and they were unable to hold meetings in any of the churches or halls except the Hilo Armory, which was open to them free on Sunday afternoons. They held a few meetings on the street until finally several people offered their homes for meetings. A number of copies of the Book of Mormon were sold, both in the Hawaiian and English languages.

The year 1913 opened with Elders Barrett and McConley on the Island of Hawaii, laboring in Hilo. Elder Waller, with the assistance of the local officers and Sisters McConley and Barrett, carried on the work in Honolulu. The prospects in Hilo were becoming encouraging, and the two missionaries were instructed to work toward organizing a branch if possible. At that time there were only three members in Hilo, but a number of people were interested.

The Honolulu Branch then numbered 232. When officers were elected to serve during the year, Elder Waller was elected president. On Sunday, January 26, he had the happy privilege of baptizing fourteen young people—eleven Japanese and three Hawaiians. The Japanese children were all members of the Kalihi Japanese Sunday school, and it was through instruction given them there that they were led to obey the gospel.

In a letter from Brother Waller, printed in the Herald of February 19, 1913, we note his comments on the work of the mission:

Here in Honolulu our progress is not as rapid as could be desired, but it is a source of comfort and satisfaction to those interested in this great latter-day work to receive from time to time the assurance of the Master's watch care over his children, as evidenced by his Spirit's presence at our church meetings.

The missionaries, Elders McConley and Barrett, have been absent for some weeks at Hilo, on the Island of Hawaii, where they have succeeded in arousing interest among a number of people, two of whom have already been baptized, while others are getting ready to enter the fold.

Yesterday I had the pleasure of baptizing and confirming fourteen young people. . . . It is to be hoped that through these young people some of the parents may be led to take an interest in our work, and that some of the boys may so develop as to make it possible for our church to use them later on as missionaries to their own people.

There were two trips to the mainland for Brother Waller that year, one in February to attend the marriage of his eldest daughter Henrietta, and one in April when he went to Washington, D. C., in regard to his possible appointment as governor. In 1912 he had made a trip to the coast to be present at the marriage of his daughter Ruth.

In 1914 Apostle Butterworth arrived in Honolulu on his way from Australia to the General Conference. Brother Waller was delighted to meet him and greatly enjoyed his short visit of two weeks. The Saints' Herald of February 6, 1918, ["Hawaiian Number"] published Apostle Butterworth's account of the Hawaiian visit. Included were some comments on his genial host and on the Hawaiian Saints:

It was early Friday morning, February 20 [1914], that we entered the harbor at Honolulu, and after a short wait for the pilot and a little excitement viewing several large sharks which gathered around our boat, we landed at the wharf.

After a few minutes' walk I was at the Metropolitan Meat Market, where the office of our congenial Brother Waller is located. To see his noble face and receive his welcome words was much like the foretaste of "the earnest of our inheritance."

All my association and conversations with him were of the most inspiring and uplifting nature that anyone could wish for, and can hardly be forgotten by those who are privileged to share his company.

. . . . I found in visiting among the brethren that they were of a most kind and loving disposition, and they looked upon the missionary as a messenger of peace sent by the Lord to them. They listened with the utmost attention to the messages delivered. They have a wonderful, childlike faith in the gospel, and especially in the gift of healing, for my diary records numerous visits with Brother Waller to the homes of the sick to anoint them with oil and lay on hands that they might be healed.

Upon the advice of Brother Waller, who told them to move out in faith and the way would be provided, Elders McConley and Barrett made a 250-mile missionary trip around the Island of Hawaii, mostly on foot. Each took a small hand satchel and a paper umbrella. [Large umbrella of oiled paper; imported from Japan prior to World War II and very effectual against the heavy downpours to which the Island of Hawaii is subject.] During the trip of about five weeks, they sold some of the church books in almost every town and made friends who invited them to return.

Because of anticipated changes in the company's business and as his son was now assisting, Elder Waller was expecting to move to San Francisco to take charge of the business there. He asked for more missionary help for the church work in Hawaii. The General Conference appointed Elders J. N. Davis and C. E. Jones to the Hawaiian Mission. Then the Hawaii Meat Company, Limited, decided it was best for the manager, Brother Waller, to continue attending to the company's business in Honolulu, making it possible for him still to have charge of the Honolulu Branch. Elder Jones and his wife returned to the Mainland, leaving Elder and Sister Davis to continue the work. At this time the McConleys and the Barretts had returned to the Mainland.

The church in Hawaii was growing. There were now 247 members, mostly Hawaiians. Honolulu had five Sunday schools, and Hilo one, all the different grades of quarterlies being used.

During 1915 Brother Waller was appointed a commissioner of the Hawaiian Board of Health.

To the Mainland

The following year Elder Waller found it necessary to go to San Francisco. As he expected to be away several months, he resigned as president of the Honolulu Branch, a position he had filled since its organization twenty-five years previously. After arriving in San Francisco, he lived with his family and continued assisting in business and church work, being elected president of the Danvers Branch.

Brother C. Ed. Miller was appointed to the Hawaiian Mission, and became president of the branch at Honolulu. Elder McConley was appointed to Hilo.

An article by Elder C. Ed. Miller giving high praise to the work done by Brother Waller in the mission and insight into the problems which confronted him was published in the special Hawaiian edition of the Herald [February 6, 1918]. Here are some excerpts:

I consider Brother Waller one of the remarkable men of this church. Many discouraging matters arose which would have completely disheartened an ordinary man, but Brother Waller, with a sublime faith, never wavered for a moment. He has an iron will, tempered with a fine humility, and the work here gives evidence that he has been led of the Lord. He has a remarkable memory, which makes him an expert in the use of the Three Books. He is an interesting speaker, vigorous and convincing.

He now has a great trial to face. His son-in-law volunteered for service in the British Army, and is now in England. His son refused exemption and is preparing for active service. These younger men were helping to carry on a large business, but since their support has been withdrawn, additional responsibilities rest upon Brother Waller until other arrangements can be made. At present he is president of the San Francisco Branch, his family residing in that city, but he is still bishop's agent and historian for the Hawaiian Mission.

After being rejected for army service because of his health, Brother Waller's son Gilbert returned to Honolulu and resumed work as assistant manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, Limited. His son-in-law was seriously injured in an explosion. Through the help of doctors and the administration of one of our church elders, he recovered.

In 1918 a new Metropolitan Meat Market was erected on the same ground where Brother Waller had started his business in 1883. Brother C. Ed. Miller visited the establishment and made these comments in the "Hawaiian Number" of the Herald:

Brother G. J. Waller is manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, the largest distributor of meat on the islands. The market is not conducted by the meat company, but by the Metropolitan Meat Market, operated by Mr. Louis, who rents the building from the meat company and handles their products.

Competition has a tendency to make business selfish, every concern looking after its own interests and trying to surpass its competitor. But is there not a new spirit entering into business today? The best magazines have caught it; the great department stores are feeling it. Some of the leading steel manufacturers say they are not only trying to make money, but they are also trying to make men, and find pleasure in both efforts.

At the opening of the new market, which recently took place, as Brother Waller and Mr. Louis were conducting visitors through the establishment, I seemed to discern this larger spirit animating these men. It was the spirit which led the best of the ancient kings to subscribe for their motto: "I serve." So as the visitors wandered through that beautiful, sanitary, cool, food palace, I seemed to sense a tangible spirit also circulating everywhere in the establishment—in the frosted pipes under the counter, at the scales, in the cooling rooms back of the counters, at the butter booth, over in the vegetable stand, at the wrapping counters, that spirit was everywhere, the beautiful spirit of "I serve."

Fast Three Meals a Week

Since my letter appeared in the Herald I have received so many requests that I haven't had time to reply to all of them yet. We are now devoting Tuesday, Thursday, and Sunday of each week to fast for the sick, all who need our prayers, and the work of the church in general. We fast from both food and water until noon. From 6:15 to 6:45 a.m. we engage in prayer, either silent or audible. On Sunday at our 11 o'clock service we have special prayer for the sick and those who request that we pray for them. The Dekalb Saints have benefited from this, and we feel others can be helped also. This is no prayer marathon but a sincere effort to attune ourselves to the divine Mind.

Letter of Testimony

In 1902 cottage meetings were being held near the community in Kentucky where we lived. We and some of the neighbors drove three miles in a wagon to attend services. I thought the sermon was the best I had ever heard on the plan of salvation. When the invitation was extended for any desiring baptism to make it known, I seemed to be lifted from my chair by an unseen power. The following morning both my brother and I were baptized and confirmed. That was the happiest day of my life.

Last year when I was ill and seemed unable to regain my health, I decided I should receive administration. Since the weather was bad, I didn't call an elder but prayed that God would send one if it were his will. One morning an elder did come, and following the administration, I was able to do my work and did not have to return to bed.

This winter I have received a physical blessing through the prayers of my friends in the church. I wish to thank all who prayed for me and wrote to me during my illness. I am again able to do my work. I am grateful to the Lord for his goodness to me, and I plan to continue serving him the best I can.

Baptized at Seventy-six

I am a widow seventy-six years old. About a year ago a young man moved next door to me. He began telling me of the gospel, and was always willing to answer any questions I asked him. He also gave me church books to read. Night after night he read to me, and about a month ago I was baptized. This was the greatest step I ever took in my life.

I ask all to pray for me that I may ever be faithful to my covenant and that I may regain my health. I also ask the Saints to pray for this young man that he may teach others the truth. I will be happy to hear from any members who care to write. I am the only one in my family who belongs to this church.

Sketches from the life of C. I. CARPENTER

EVERY SUNDAY thousands of members of this church place their tithes and offering in the little duplex envelopes passed out at the beginning of the year. Many of these members will take time to read the inspiring message on the envelopes, but few will bother to wonder how the church secured them.

In Room 314 of the Auditorium can be found the man who is responsible for this work and for many more church jobs. He is Elder C. I. Carpenter, smiling and gray-haired. Fifty-seven of his eighty years have been spent in the service of the church. Over his desk in the shipping room go the orders for the duplex envelopes and for many church supplies. He will lay his hand on a pile of orders and invoices and laughingly explain, "This business grew up with me. Back in 1931 when I started to work here, there were no addressographs and not many other office machines. The influx of business has brought many changes."

Christmas is an important day in his life. It was on Christmas of 1904 that he married Miss Blanche A. Sprague, now Acting Church Statistician. It was on Christmas that his parents were married. It was during the Christmas season that he received his first appointment to the field. And it was only five days after Christmas in 1869 that he was born.

His first important church work began at the General Conference of 1906 when "Young Joseph" recommended him to be church recorder. When he lived in Lamoni, he was president of the Fifth Quorum of Elders. He moved to Independence in June, 1918, and immediately became president of the First Quorum of Elders here, one of the most active missionary groups at the time. Two years later he was made president of Central Illinois District.

Before his work was completed there, he was called back to Independence and appointed to serve on the Bible Committee. This group was preparing for publication a manuscript of Bible studies. In order to prepare this book, later known as Helps to Bible Study, many marginal notes had to be made, referring to publications of the church and to the various versions of the Bible. Because of the many years of experience that Brother Carpenter had had as a telegraph operator in railroad stations, he was able to do fine, neat printing for the marginal reference used in the manuscript of the book.

Besides serving as president of Central Illinois District, he was also president of the Kewanee District of Illinois and the Northwestern Kansas District. Following a nervous breakdown in 1924, he returned to his home in Independence. A year later he became secretary-treasurer of the Quorum of High Priests.

Besides his work in the missionary field, he has drawn a map for the church on special assignment and edited quarterlies for adults on church history and the Book of Mormon.

BROTHER CARPENTER delights in collecting things that are unique and different. The paper weight on his desk is a huge iron nut from an old, abandoned grist mill in Kansas. Photography has been a hobby that has helped him support his wife and son Milton. One of his photographs appears in The Young People's History. Brother Carpenter describes himself as "a natural collector, interested in anything unusual." His favorite collection, however, is the forty-five different translations of the Bible and New Testament in English. Some of these are mere curiosities; others are old enough to be very valuable. Along with the collection of Bibles may be found such books as the Bible in Hebrew and the Oahspi Bible in old-world Indian. One of his most treasured possessions in this collection is the King James Version that he carried with him when he first went into the mission field in 1894.

Brother Carpenter will explain with a chuckle, "The best part of life happened long before my time. My mother was born in the very house in which Zenas H. Gurley received the revelation that God would raise up the true leader of the church, Young Joseph. The house where Gurley was staying belonged to my grandfather, David Wildermuth. Part of that house is still standing.

On his seventy-fourth birthday, all those who work at the Auditorium held a party in his honor and presented him with a large book that has the word, "Memories," written in gold across its front cover. The book is added testimony to the fact that along with his church work and his hobbies, Brother C. I. Carpenter delights in collecting friends.

QUESTION:

In the light of these and other Scriptures (John 6: 69-70; 17: 12; Matthew 25: 34; 27: 5; and Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3), is Judas Iscariot a son of perdition?

Indiana

J. D.

ANSWERS:

Jesus' own words most certainly place Judas in the category of a son of perdition, for Jesus said, "He is a devil," and in John 17: 12 he mentions one of the twelve he had lost (which could refer to none other than Judas) and calls him "The son of perdition."

The apostles implied as much, when having chosen Matthias to take Judas' place, they said, "That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place."—Acts 1: 25.

Judas, in his years of association with Jesus the Son of God, and with his brethren the apostles, had had the fullest opportunity of knowing the truth. He knew what righteousness was and what sin was, yet for a considerable time he had chosen to follow in the way of sin, leading on to the greatest sin he could commit—the utter rejection of Christ and the betrayal of him to his enemies which led to His crucifixion. Judas' transgression was against light and knowledge and constituted a sin against the Holy Ghost, such as the Lord said was unforgivable in this world or the next.

As to the promise of Jesus that the twelve who had been with him in his ministry should sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matthew 19: 28; Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3), such promises do not destroy the right of free agency, and any man may by transgression forfeit any or all the promises of God as they apply to himself. Judas in his fall lost his power of apostleship and vacated his office and at the same time vacated the promised and prospective throne in the kingdom of God. It is not the divine promise which has failed but the man to whom the promise was made. The natural and legal procedure in the case was followed, and Matthias was placed in the vacated office to do the work and to inherit the promises Judas had despised.

CHARLES FRY.

QUESTION:

Who saw the Lord first? Book of Mormon says the brother of Jared was first. Ether 1: 76-79. 2200 B.C.

Genesis 7: 4, Inspired Version and Doctrine and Covenants 104: 24 say Enoch talked with the Lord face to face. 3317 B.C.

Doctrine and Covenants 104: 28 says the Lord appeared to Adam, his son, and six grandsons. 3077 B.C. Missouri

F. H. C.

ANSWER:

The word "first" does not occur in the text although it is implied. "And never have I shewed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast."—Book of Mormon, page 721, verse 79.

The first to attain the most perfect understanding is not very important. The important factor is that all men, upon obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, will finally have full and perfect knowledge.

Even if the term "Lord" refers to the same personage, the brother of Jared obtained understanding that was not exhibited in the same way in which Adam, his son Seth, Seth's sons, and Enoch received their information.

The brother of Jared "saw the finger of the Lord; and it was as the finger of a man, and like unto flesh and blood . . ." (Italics mine)—Ibid., verse 69. The following suggests a vision of the incarnation, "Because of thy faith thou hast seen that I shall take upon me flesh and blood" (Italics mine)—Ibid., verse 72. The complete personage was revealed to the brother of Jared, but he made no comparison with flesh and blood at this instance. The personage declared, "Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold I am Jesus Christ."—Ibid., verse 77. The brother of Jared was also informed, "Because thou know-est these things, ye are redeemed from the fall; therefore ye are brought back into my presence; therefore I shew myself unto you."—Ibid., verse 76. The experience is rich in detail and up to that time was unique.

The use of the word "Lord" sometimes applies to God the father, as the poet used it: "Dear Lord and father of mankind." Genesis, sixth chapter, speaks of the revelation of God to man and that He called upon Adam, declaring He was God, the creator, requesting obedience and baptism in "the name of mine only Begotten Son . . . which is Jesus Christ." It is recorded that when Adam addressed God, asking a fuller understanding of the matter presented to him, "our father Adam spake unto the Lord . . . and the Lord said unto Adam." The same two are in holy conversation, and the heavenly personage is God, the Father, whom Adam addresses as Lord. As much may be said of the experience of Enoch and prior to his time, Adam, his son Seth, and Seth's six sons, referred to the citation.

The brother of Jared was permitted to see his Redeemer and be informed of the incarnation and be told that he was in the presence of Jesus Christ. This is about the first record we have of an event of that kind, notwithstanding the truth involved was conveyed to holy men prior to the brother of Jared. In the case of Adam, it was conveyed by the voice of God and to others by the Holy Spirit. And in addressing God his Father, Adam called him Lord.

It is only fair to say that the last sentence of the Book of Mormon, page 721, verse 77, is a statement involving the doctrine of the Trinity, which is a mystery. "For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known."—I Corinthians 13: 12. Nevertheless the unique features of the deep spiritual experience of the brother of Jared, such as the incarnation, redemption, and the personage declaring, "Behold I am Jesus Christ," remain and justify the statement, "And never have I shewed myself unto man whom I have created, for never has man believed in me as thou hast."

Report on "The Messiah" Broadcast

How we enjoyed the Messiah Choir over WJR at 11:30 p.m., December 18! It was so clear and sweet.

VIOLET PERRIN

Cameron, Ontario, Canada

Let me express appreciation of myself and family for the very fine performance of the Messiah Sunday evening by the choir of the Latter Day Saints Church of Independence, Missouri, broadcast over WKRC in Cincinnati. It is regrettable that such excellent performances are not given more often. We sat listening with the score and enjoyed every minute immensely. As one who has heard great performances done by the Cincinnati May Festival and has sung in the Messiah, I can say that I heard great inspiration in the singing of the Independence choir and the top performances of the soloists and direction under Mr. Weddle.

JOHN B. SHEBLESSY

Cincinnati, Ohio

This is to express the warmest thanks of our household and of many of our neighbors who listened to your broadcast of the Messiah Sunday evening. It was well-nigh perfect—the music, reception, and technique of broadcasting. You are to be congratulated on having so near you such an unusually gifted and qualified group of singers and musicians. We shall look forward to other presentations of this masterful work (to KMBC).

THE B. M. ANDERSONS

Omaha, Nebraska

I heard your broadcast of Handel's Messiah on Sunday night and think it the best I have ever heard. I want to know if you have it on records. If so, what price would it be for the complete album.

MRS. C. C. ELKJER

Clarkfield, Minnesota

This is a letter of appreciation for your broadcast of the Messiah, appreciation and enjoyment of the fine music of the choir and orchestra, and appreciation of the broadcasting company that brings such fine works to its listeners.

O. CLARKE MANN

Memphis, Tennessee

This is to express appreciation for your broadcast of the Messiah over WBBM on December 18. It was truly magnificent, and I shall be looking forward to it again next Christmas. I only wish we could hear a choir like that more often. It is so inspiring.

MRS. ERNEST M. LEWIS

Chicago, Illinois

My husband and I listened to every word of Handel's Messiah. It was very plain and we certainly appreciated it.

LILLIAN BOGGESS

Murray, Kentucky

I enjoyed hearing the Messiah this year. It came in beautifully and distinctly over WBBM, Chicago. It was with a feeling of pride that I listened to our church excelling in such wonderful music.

F. M. HOUGHTON

Lamoni, Iowa

We enjoyed the Messiah broadcast very much. It was a thrill. More power to you.

H. ANDERSON

Lamoni, Iowa

It was worth waiting for; in fact, we attended another rendition of the Messiah by a local choir which was good, but of course, could not compare to yours. The reception was fine and we enjoyed hearing it very much.

RUBY FISHEL

Vancouver, Washington

Congratulations on another excellent performance of the Messiah. We always look forward to this broadcast each year and, in spite of the lateness of the hour we listened until the last note. We enjoyed all the soloists; the chorus was never better, also the orchestra. WKBN carried the broadcast for the first time and the reception was excellent.

AMY AXELSON

Youngstown, Ohio

(To Garland Tickemyer) We all enjoyed the rendition of the Messiah very much. You particularly were in good voice and sang the part perfectly. May I congratulate you on a fine performance.

HARLEY A. MORRIS

Consulting Psychologist

Chicago, Illinois

(To Bethel Knoche) I was very happy to have the opportunity of listening to the performance of the Messiah, and I want to say that I thought it was the finest we heard during the holidays. It was first class in every respect. I could find nothing to criticize.

HAROLD GLEASON

Rochester, New York

The over all performance was magnificent. Your direction was masterful. The soloists were excellent. To me Josephine Mader was the standout. The bass-baritone did his very difficult solos with well-nigh technical perfection. The contralto sounded lovely. I think Garland Tickemyer did his tenor solos better than ever before. The orchestra was better this year than before on a Messiah origination.

ARTHUR B. CHURCH

Kansas City, Missouri

The singing of the Messiah was inspiring.

LILLIAN POPE CROSS

New Westminster, B.C., Canada

It truly was superb, and we think it surpassed by some degree other years. The choruses really excelled.

CAROLYN H. LARSON

Portland, Oregon

I still feel as grateful for your marvelous broadcast of the Messiah as I did late on December 18. I shall remember it for a long time. Your chorus was superb, flawless, I thought . . . we enjoyed the performance of Mrs. Mader especially. Thanks again for a most wonderful Christmas gift.

MR. and MRS. RICHARD DERENZY

Flint, Michigan

I want to express my appreciation for the Messiah that was broadcast from your station (KNX) 10:30 Sunday night—I hope we may look forward to hearing it again next year.

MRS. A. J. GRAY

Sherman Oaks, California

Reception over KFAB was excellent. It was a fine program for which we are very thankful to all that took part in it.

W. T. FERGUSON

Baker, Oregon

We listened to the Messiah Sunday night. Reception was clear. Rendition wonderful. I sang in the Messiah Choir of Independence, Missouri, in 1916 at the first rendition.

MR. and MRS. HALE W. SMITH

648 South Kern
Okmulgee, Oklahoma

My husband and I heard the broadcast of the Messiah over CBS. It was very clear, and we enjoyed it very much. I hope it will be repeated next year.

MRS. WALTER J. MENZIES

6665 Long Beach Blvd.,
Long Beach 6, California

(To Garland Tickemyer): This was the first time I had listened to the broadcast. I was so impressed with its excellence that I revised my earlier plan to write nothing. Having heard the broadcast, which is as a matter of fact the only fair way to judge it, I wrote a couple of paragraphs of commentary which appeared on the music page later. Your suggestions of the need for coverage are well taken, and it certainly is my plan to do so next year. I shall have to hurry the report to make our Sunday morning edition, and if I miss it, would have to carry it on the Monday morning Times. It is my hope that you will return as one of the soloists next year. You have the voice, the temperament, and the musical instinct best suited to oratorio.

And again, verily I say unto you, The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

Malachi (3: 2) asks, "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

For answer read Psalm 15: 1-5:

Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill of Zion? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord; sweareth not falsely to hurt any man, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

"My Peace I Give"

By LENORE SPENCER DAY

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

TODAY thousands of hospital beds are occupied by people whose bodies are perfectly sound; they are mental patients. They are suffering from a dreaded malady which strikes more often than cancer and heart disease. It does not result in death, but it is more pitiful because its victims lose life without the solace of death.

The death rate from suicide is alarmingly on the increase. Strangely enough, many of those who take their own lives are physically well and do not have financial difficulties. Then there are thousands who have not lost their minds or taken their own lives but are depressed and dissatisfied. What is the matter?

These people are fearful of the past or the future, of living or dying. They have had no reservoir of faith to draw upon when life becomes difficult. These people have not found the spiritual strength and peace which Christ gives. Their physical needs have been fulfilled; they have physical strength without, but they have not developed strength of soul—strength from within.

Let us take for examples a house and a tree. Let us presume that a fierce storm is raging with winds of hurricane force. The house has strength in its walls, but once the wind finds an opening and blows into the house, the house is doomed. It is lifted off its shallow foundation and whipped to pieces by the gales.

On the other hand the tree whose roots are deep in the earth is whipped and lashed by the same fierce gales. Its branches may be broken and blown, its top torn completely off, it may be bent and mangled, but still the trunk will stand.

Today we stress the necessity of life insurance, fire insurance, hospitalization, social security, and every conceivable means of protection from without. When we come to adversity, we shall be like the building with a shallow foundation whose only strength is a shell without, instead of having spiritual strength within like the tree.

CANDIDATES for some of the ancient Greek schools of wisdom and philosophy were required to observe a five-year period of silence before they could enter. Silence and solitude were associated with peace of mind and wisdom. Today if we were required to observe even a one-year period of complete silence, we would probably expect to lose our sanity. We have not cultivated the faculty of turning the mind into a comfortable den instead of a rat's nest where we throw all our fears and anxieties to haunt us whenever we dare bring our intellects home to roost. We must take time out to clean house and cultivate a tranquil mind. We forget to "look inside" for the right answers. Soon we are not able to see inside because we have built a wall of materialism and false values about our inner self. We must work back through these, tearing them away before we can find ourselves. We must wipe the slate clean and start on a firm foundation.

It takes constant resolve to build upon this rock the framework of right thinking, but our product will be ready to stand in all weather, fair or foul. We must discard anxiety and fear as bad bricks. A mind that is tranquil will be a sanctuary for us instead of a house of torment in times of hardship. We will find the peace Christ has given us, and our hearts shall not be troubled, neither shall they be afraid.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The Word of Wisdom - Part I

By FLORENCE SANFORD OURTH

A word of wisdom—showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days.—Doctrine and Covenants 86.

IT WAS OVER TWENTY YEARS AGO that Brother Earnest Webbe and his family of Kirtland stopped in Nauvoo to visit friends. He was invited to be the speaker at our church on Sunday night. In his sermon he mentioned a few things about the Word of Wisdom—things that were entirely new to us. We were so impressed that the next morning right after breakfast my father announced that we were going over and talk to Brother Webbe. We talked until noon and were reluctant to leave even then.

Because of the interest he aroused, my mother responded to a notice in the Herald of a "Word of Wisdom Club," and we were soon corresponding with Sister Lula Mae Jackson of Boise, Idaho, and receiving the little monthly paper, Words of Wisdom, which she edited.

Her own personal experience, which was remarkable, encouraged us to try this new way of living. Sister Jackson had been an invalid for many years. Disease after disease had fastened itself upon her body until she had experienced most all of the ordinary ailments. With agonizing headaches added, her life was one continual nightmare for eighteen years, and she spent thousands of dollars seeking relief. She had been in the care of fifteen different doctors and specialists and a patient at three sanitariums. At times she was unable to speak or even move a finger.

As a last hope she sought refuge in the Independence Sanitarium. There she met Brother Ralph Farrell, chaplain, who taught her the Word of Wisdom, adding "treasures of knowledge" he had gained through its observance.

Thus enlightened, she promised the Lord that if he would give her sufficient strength to make the initial effort, she would put her whole trust in the keeping of his Word and Law.

At her request she was returned to her home where she began carrying out the instructions she had learned. It was a long, hard struggle in which she was sustained only by her husband and her faith in God. Eventually, however, she recovered vigorous health and became a living witness to the truth of God's promise in the Word of Wisdom.

In a few months a miracle of health had been wrought in this family, for she also turned her attention to the health of her husband and children, which was far from satisfactory.

Neighbors and friends who had known of her long years of suffering and witnessed these miraculous cures began coming to Sister Jackson, and she found herself in the business of teaching others how to live healthily and happily. In fact, so many kept coming that she finally opened an office, instituting a school of health.

Most of her pupils were not members of the church and never suspected they were being taught the principles of a revelation from God. Nevertheless, those who were faithful in carrying out these laws went their way rejoicing in health.

After several years she decided our people should have the benefit of her experience, so she inserted this notice in the Herald, and the club paper which was made up in part of the written contributions of its members was the result.

It was very inspirational, and with its help we tried very conscientiously to keep the revelation in section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants. But after Sister Jackson's death, when the paper no longer came, we gradually slipped back into many of the old ways of eating, and my copies of Words of Wisdom were stored away in the attic.

RECENTLY I have had occasion to dust them off and read them again. I have really studied Section 86, too, for a year ago our women's leader, Sister Bernard Galbraith, suggested we choose a Word of Wisdom chairman to make a report at each meeting. This office fell to my lot. The more I studied and thought about this revelation, the more wonderful I realized it was.

And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary and shall walk and not faint; and I the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel and not slay them.

The world has not yet discovered the best diet. For despite a better knowledge of foods and body needs, the advancement of sanitation and the discovery of new drugs, disease is on the increase, particularly mental illness, cancer, and organic diseases. More and more hospitals are being built to accommodate the physically and mentally ill. But to us has been given "a word of wisdom, showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days." If we follow it, we can become an outstanding people because of our health, vitality, mental and spiritual vigor.

The women of the Nauvoo Branch are really eager to bring this abundant health to their families. They have come to feel that since they plan the meals and cook the food, the health of their families lies in their hands, therefore they are very much interested in learning more about the Word of Wisdom.

Several of them have suggested that we share our lessons and experiences with the Herald readers. And any who would like to share with us their experiences in keeping the Word of Wisdom will find up happy to receive them.

Grain, the Staff of Life

All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts to be the staff of life. Nevertheless, wheat for man.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 2, 3.

In wondering where to start in keeping the Word of Wisdom, the Nauvoo women decided to begin with the grain which is the staff of life, the basic thing in our diet, particularly wheat, as wheat in its original state contains almost all of the chemical elements which make up a perfect human body.

"All grain is ordained to be the staff of life." The dictionary defines a staff as a stick carried for support and defense. So this grain is to be our strength for the day and our defense against disease.

We read in the Scriptures that in the last days there will be pestilences, plagues, and scourges. I feel that we will be saved from them, not by some great miracle, although the Lord could do that, but rather because we have kept the Word of Wisdom as well as walking in obedience to the commandments. Then will the destroying angel pass by us as the children of Israel and not slay us. Our bodies will have built up a defense against disease.

But the white flour of today has little resemblance to the grain God gave us as the staff of life. One prominent authority has said, "It is sacrilegious to call this incomplete food that is made of white flour the staff of life. It is more like the staff of death. Unless you possess extraordinary vitality, the teeth will become mere shells under the influence of a white flour diet, simply because the bony elements needed to nourish the teeth are lacking. Remember your teeth should last throughout your entire life. There is really no excuse for the decay and loss of teeth that is so frequent, and it is largely caused by the use of white bread and other useless foods."

To make this white flour, the bran and the wheat germ are discarded. But for some reason known only to the Creator, many of the life-giving elements exist in the darker part of the grain. Bran is rich in iron (so essential for building blood), mineral salts, and vitamins (absolutely essential in maintaining life).

The bran of grain was also made by nature to serve another purpose in the digestive tract. It takes up large quantities of water and holds it in the intestines for lubricating purposes as well as supplying the roughage necessary for normal bowel action. Its elimination from the diet is mainly the cause for the alarming increase in constipation and the stomach and bowel troubles that follow in its wake. Laxatives have become the drugstore's number one seller. Last year the American public spent ninety-nine million dollars on them. Read "Treat Your Colon Kindly" in Reader's Digest, January, 1950. The remedy is as simple as including a sufficient amount of whole wheat in the diet each day.

In the germ of the wheat grain are two very important things. First, the "oil of wheat," which is one of the richest sources of Vitamin E, so necessary for reproduction in animals and to fill other human needs. Second, it has the elements containing the Vitamin B complex essential in building healthy nerves and brain cells.

While holding a series of meetings in Fort Madison, Iowa, Brother Ray Whiting asked the congregation one night how many had eaten a tablespoon of wheat in a month, and said he doubted that very many had. He added that Mildred Nelson Smith, extension nutritionist from Ames, Iowa, says that B Vitamins are essential for maintaining mental health, and whole wheat is a rich source of many of them.

Statistics show that at the present rate there will be mental patients coming from one family in every six.

Experiments definitely show that our minds respond to certain foods. Dr. Ruth Flinn Harrell of Columbia University conducted an experiment in the Lynchburg, Virginia, Presbyterian Orphanage. Two groups of boys and girls were chosen. The learning ability of Group A was exactly equal to that of Group B, according to intelligence tests given at the start of the experiment. Both groups were given the same food in the same amounts, had the same environment, the same teachers, took the same learning tests at the beginning and end of the experiment. Both groups were given pills each night, but Group A's were fake, Group B's were thiamine (vitamin B1).

Only two scientists at Columbia University knew which children belonged in each group. The eighteen tests included arithmetic, reading, code-learning, completion of designs, and dart throwing. Scores were recorded daily. By the fifth day, there was a noticeable difference in the groups, and his difference continued throughout the experiment. In six weeks' time the gain in learning of thiamine-fed children (Group B) had surpassed that of Group A by about twenty-seven per cent. Later and more extensive studies in the same group tended to strengthen the original conclusion that learning ability is affected by foods.

The cheapest and one of the best sources of thiamine in our diet is whole grain cereals. Doctor McCollum of Johns Hopkins warns that the body does not store up thiamine (the nerve vitamin), therefore we must have an abundance in our daily diet.

Why?

By Edith Grace Beggs

I wonder why men grasp for gold—
More than they need or hands can hold—
Making of it a wanton god,
Using it as a measuring rod
With which to choose their friends?

Then at the closing of their day,
Frightened they seek their God and pray,
Their time all spent in selfish living;
Their fingers grown too cold for giving.
Useless their wealth—gone all their power—

They turn to Him in that last hour
To make amends!

Church Women in the News

WORD HAS JUST BEEN RECEIVED of the appointment of Mrs. Charles McLean, of Toronto, Canada, to the office of President of the Board of Governors of the Women's College Hospital of that city.

Mrs. McLean, the former Faye Gould of Independence, Missouri, was married to Dr. Charles McLean, son of the late Bishop A. F. McLean, of Toronto, in 1923, and has lived in Toronto since then.

The Women's College Hospital holds a unique position in Canada, being the only hospital which is completely staffed by women. It stands at the edge of the University of Toronto, an impressive testament to the work, generosity, and faith of the thousands of Canadian women and men whose efforts through two generations have gone into fostering the hospital and giving it a permanent and scientifically perfect home. It is known throughout the medical world as a notable pioneer in the reduction of maternal and infant mortality, as a pathfinder in gynecological research, and as a center, in recent years, for new technique in the detection and control of cancer.

In April, 1948, the Women's College Hospital established the first Cancer Detection Clinic in Canada where well women could be examined for the early detection of cancer. At the present time there is a waiting list of nearly 1,900 women on the files of the Clinic. When the new building, which will house the expanded Cancer Detection Clinic is finished in April of this year, it will be possible to examine around 3,000 women within a year—the present restricted quarters now accommodating about 600 for examination in a year's time.

The Board of Governors controls the business and management of the hospital, which, financially, exceeds half a million dollars each year.

Miss Adalain Lee Taylor was elected treasurer of the Whitaker Cable Corporation in North Kansas City, Missouri, on February 10. She had been with the company eighteen years and during that time had held "almost every other office," according to Jack Whitaker, president, who relinquished his additional title of treasurer. A member of the Nashua congregation in Kansas City Stake, she is also active in Girl Scout work and holds the office of comptroller in the Kansas City area council.

STONE CHURCH.—Michael Lavern Robison, son of Eldron and Imogene Robison, was baptized by his father on March 19 at the church.

ENID, OKLAHOMA.—On February 15, fifty-two women from Central and Northern Oklahoma districts met in Enid to hear Sister Doris Kelly, district supervisor, speak on the subject of, "Look for the Beautiful." The Enid women's department was presented at this time with second place award on their yearbooks. Brother Victor Witte, district president, also spoke. A basket dinner was held in the lower auditorium at the noon hour.

After Sister Kelly's talk, a round table discussion was held. Leaders from each group coming to the front to tell what their departments were doing. Representatives were Mrs. Ann Rouland, Elrino; Mrs. Ruby Hart, Ponca City; Mrs. Mable Diamond, Eagle City; Mrs. Estella Newton, Canton; Mrs. Silvia Woods, Sieling; Mrs. Robert Beck, Tulsa; Mrs. Libby Stites, Alva, and Mrs. Lorene Saunier, Enid.—Reported by Mrs. W. J. SAUNIER.

EASTERN COLORADO DISTRICT.—Three branches have been organized recently in this district. On March 5 Elder Ernest E. Crownover of the district presidency met with the Ft. Morgan Saints and effected an organization. At the Communion service Brother Lyle Wahlert was ordained to the office of elder. Mrs. Anna Delle Wahlert was also confirmed, having been previously baptized at Denver. Elder W. A. Reynolds was chosen as pastor of the new branch with Brother Wahlert as associate. Miss Verneal Maggard was chosen as clerk. The new branch has rented the Seventh Day Adventist church for use on Sundays.

On March 7 District President Ward A. Hougas met with the Longmont Saints and completed a branch organization there. Brother Roy A. Johnson was ordained to the office of deacon. Dr. W. E. Gunderson was chosen as pastor and Brother Johnson as clerk. The W.O.W. Hall has been rented and is used as a meeting place for the present.

On Sunday March 19 the Greeley Saints held their regular morning services after which an old-fashioned church dinner was served. Brother Hougas met with them in the afternoon. Two men were ordained, Dwight Wheatley to the office of priest and Harold Plumb to the office of deacon. The group was then organized into a branch with Elder Wayne Rodgers of Timnath serving as pastor and Mrs. George Cunningham as clerk. The branch will worship for the present in the Evans Town Hall. Evans is a suburb of Greeley on the south.

Two new missions have come into being in the district recently, one at Eads and one at Canon City. The Eads mission has been sponsored by the Lamar Branch with Brother Chris Ralston giving some assistance. The Canon City group has been promoted by Brother J. D. Curtis of Colorado Springs.—Reported by WARD HOUGAS.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—Flint women were hostesses of the Flint-Port Huron district women's institute which was held March 14 and 15. One hundred eighty-nine women were registered for the two days. The institute opened with a prayer service in charge of District President R. Melvin Russell and closed with a Communion dedication service with Brethren Russell, Warren Chelline, Arthur DuRose, and Raymond Sold serving the emblems to the assembled women. Mrs. V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Iowa, spoke on the theme, "Evidence of Divine Guidance." Mrs. W. R. Kapnick, of Flushing, Michigan, district women's leader, planned the institute.

Members of the Flint priesthood and their wives enjoyed an evening of fellowship when they met at Newall Street Church for a co-operative dinner on March 17. The pastor, Melvin Russell, and his two associate pastors, Arthur Slater and Glenn Hardy, arranged the occasion. Mrs. Arthur Slater was in charge of the dinner. Elder John Banks, of Midland, Michigan, was the guest speaker. It was the birthdays of both Elders Banks and Slater, and they were surprised with a birthday cake which was brought in by Mrs. Gerald Slater.

The young married couples and their families held a family night at the church on March 18. The evening was planned by the Variety Club. Mrs. Jack Smith, president of the club, was in charge. A wide range of talents was noted in a talent program which was presented after supper was served. The lower auditorium was filled to capacity.

A city choir has been organized and on special Sundays, music will be provided by this combined choir made up of musicians from Newall Street and Baltimore Boulevard Churches. Eugene Everhart and Allen Pohly are sharing the directing of this new choir. Their initial appearance occurred on March 5. Apostle Percy E. Farrow was the guest speaker on this occasion. The city choir will also present an evening of Easter music.

The Chevrolet Male Chorus was presented in a concert at Newall Street Church on the evening of February 28. This chorus gives concerts throughout the Great Lakes area. Two Flint church members, A. H. DuRose and Bert Hough, are members of this well-known chorus.—Reported by ELEANOR RUSSELL.

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Seventy Merle Guthrie recently conducted a week's series of meetings. At the close of the meetings, seven people were received by baptism into the church. They were: Mr. and Mrs. William Cottrill and son David; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Cooper and daughters Sarah and Marjorie.

The baptismal services were held Sunday afternoon at the Y.M.C.A. with Brother Guthrie officiating. Confirmation services followed. Members of the priesthood officiating in the confirmation services were: District President R. E. Rogers, Brother Guthrie, Elders Wayne Wilson and Harry Smith.—Reported by ORVAL E. COTTRILL.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—A successful series of youth conventions was held recently. The general theme was "We Seek to Establish Zion." Apostle W. Wallace Smith gave one lecture at one convention. Others contributing were Elders R. L. Booker, Franklin Steiner, J. A. Pray, all of Mobile, Alabama, and District President W. J. Breshears of Pensacola, Florida.

January 14 and 15, the host branch for the southern area of the district was Pascagoula, Mississippi. This church building was ideal for such an occasion as it is equipped with a gymnasium. Belleview, Florida, was the place of the second convention; February 11 and 12 at McKenzie, Alabama, for youths from the northern area. This procedure was followed so that the distance of travel would not be too great for anyone wishing to attend, as the Gulf States District comprises approximately ten thousand square miles.

A total of 225 young people attended the three conventions. J. A. Pray directed all arrangements. Barbara Peavy of Mobile was in charge of the campfire periods and the rededication services which were held on Sunday afternoons. Russell McGuire of Mobile led the recreational activities. Local leaders provided the arrangements for housing, music, and registrations. The women's department of the host branches provided the meals.

The young people are now looking forward to the annual youth camp at Brewton, Ala-

CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The Zion's Leaguers of the district met on February 11 and 12 for a "powwow" at Taylorville, Illinois. The theme and programs of the "powwow" centered around the Book of Mormon. Classes held on Saturday afternoon considered the theme: "The Golden Plates," "Whence Came the Red Man," "Archaeological Evidence of the Book of Mormon," and "Heroes of the Book of Mormon."

More formal association was had at a banquet on Saturday evening when talent from the different branches participated. A movie was shown explaining some of the characteristics of several tribes of present-day "Lamanites."

Sunday services consisted of a general class held in association with the Taylorville church school, a preaching service by Seventy James Menzies at 11:00 o'clock, and a dedication service in the afternoon. Elder Cecil Ettinger, general church appointee, took part in the activities.—Reported by DELMER SLOAN.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—In January, Apostle Maurice Draper was in New York for ten days to investigate a possible new location for a church cite. A committee of Roy Squire, Paul Frisbie, Glen Guest, and Charles T. Harris has been chosen to locate property which would be best suited for a church building.

The last of January, twenty-three young people went on a week-end trip to Bear Mountain.—Reported by LOIS HARRIS.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The women's department, "The Truth Seekers," of the Cincinnati Mission, held their first bake sale on February 11, 1950. Mrs. Helen Mason, assisted by Mrs. Wave Condon, was chairman for the sale. Mrs. Condon also contributed handwork in the form of tiny knitted baby sweaters and sets. The net profit to the mission from this sale was $51.75. There are twelve members in this women's group of which three were out of the city at the time of the sale.

Apostle Percy E. Farrow was guest speaker on February 20. Apostle Farrow was accompanied by Seventy Loyd Adams, the Southern Ohio district missionary. For this meeting Miss Florine Cline played "Consecration" on the marimba as a prelude, and as an offertory number "The Old, Old Path." The soloist of the evening, Miss Merleen Condon, sang "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked."

Richard Irving, the infant son of Don and Bertha Sheffer, was blessed March 5 by Elders Claud Barker and Everett Smith.

Merlin and Nola Madison and their young son Michael have moved from Madison, Wisconsin, to Cincinnati. Another new member of the branch is June Ried, who became the bride of Richard Ried on March 4 in Buffalo, New York. The ceremony took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Ried with Priest Glenn Condon of Cincinnati officiating. Miss Merleen Condon sang "Because."

The guest speaker for March 19 was Seventy Loyd Adams. The Cincinnati choir rendered two special numbers for this meeting.—Reported by JOSEPHINE M. SMITH.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.—This great gathering is the chief news of the church at the moment this is written, Monday morning, April 3.

The conference registration closed Sunday night with a total of 4,475. Numbers of other persons have not yet found their way into the long lines at the registration booth, but will be expected to do so to get their badges before the business session begins this afternoon.

CONFERENCE WEATHER.—Saturday and Sunday were clear and pleasant, except for one light shower early Sunday morning, and great throngs of people filled the Auditorium and the streets, many of them dressed in new spring outfits and Easter clothing.

Monday morning, however, upset the bucket, and there was a medium heavy hailstorm, with rains that brought out all available weather equipment—raincoats, rubbers, umbrellas, and the new transparent coverall things that blithely float away from you the moment rain hits.

MOOD OF THE CONFERENCE.—The feeling of the people attending Conference is always important. This is a peaceful and happy gathering. The people are confident and hopeful of the future of the church. One gathers that there is general satisfaction with the way things are going. Some, indeed, hope for more in the future, as all should. There are no clouds on the church horizon, no matter how many may appear over the world.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.—One of the pleasant facts about the opening of Conference was the great number that attended on Sunday afternoon to hear the Conference Address by President Israel A. Smith. His voice could be heard well in most parts of the building, due to the new system of placing many loud speakers around the room. Still, there were deaf areas where people came to sit and then moved on, hoping to find a better place where they could hear the message. Most of the great audience sat and listened very quietly and attentively.

President Smith's message is to be given in full to our readers, and it would be superfluous to try to summarize it. Suffice it to say that it was significant of the seriousness of the times for the church, the nation, and the world.

ATTENDANCE.—Newspaper estimates of the Conference Sunday crowds (April 2) stood at about thirteen thousand. To those inside the Auditorium, it was apparent that the estimates of 5,500 for the early Communion service, and 6,500 for the second service, were reasonable and conservative. It was known that at the second Communion service more than a thousand were out in the halls and lobby who could not get seats. It is still a good idea, if you want to partake of the Communion at Conference, to go to the early service.

Cars lined the streets for several blocks about the Auditorium. Many of these were "drive in" visitors who could attend on Sunday only.

Causes of Death

In a recent report of one of the larger and best-managed Life Insurance Companies in the Middle West, the analysis of the death claims for 1948 shows the following causes and the percentage of the total number of deaths:

Heart and circulatory diseases	81.48
Accidental and suicide	9.20
Cancer and all other malignant tumors	9.88
Pneumonia, tuberculosis, and other respiratory disorders	6.48
Digestive and genito-urinary disorders	3.90
All other causes	19.06

Our greatest enemy is the troubles of the heart, and they are not confined to the young. Nearly as many die from suicide and accident as from cancer and kindred evils. More die from heart troubles than from all other causes together. We need to take better care of the heart. Give it a chance to help us live a long and useful life.

Arabian Days

By MARIE GOSLINE

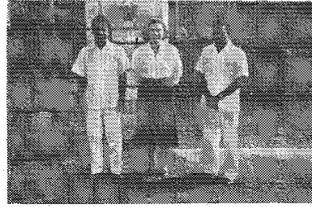

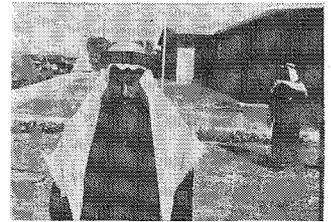

ARABIA—land of sunlight and blue skies—lies approximately half way around the world from San Francisco—twelve thousand miles! "A mere nothing," I thought when my husband came home with the news that within three weeks—just long enough to get our "shots"—we would be leaving for the land of the Arab, the land of masked women, the land of the shamal, the land of the great lord of Arabia, Ib'n Saud, the land of the Bedouin.

How wrong I was about that twelve thousand miles! It is indeed quite a distance. From New York City we flew all night down to the Azores, those tiny little islands owned by Portugal. There in the small village of Santa Maria, we spent part of the second day and most of the night. At four o'clock the next morning, we were on our way again. That afternoon we flew across North Africa and encountered our first bad weather. We passed through a hail-storm, and lightning struck the wing on my side but did no damage. Just at evening we reached Tripoli. Then, after flying all night again, about noon the next day our plane with its fifteen passengers set down in Dharhan.

As we left the airport, we passed several immense camps of borastis. These are little one-room buildings with straw-thatched roofs. In them live the Italian laborers, the Indian servants, and the Arab workmen. These camps are immense and hold thousands of people. (It must be remembered that the Arabian government forces the Americans to hire several natives for each American, believing that in this way its people will become skilled laborers.)

WE WERE TAKEN directly to the executive house. This is a large, two-story building made of brick and native stone—lovely in appearance and elegantly furnished. We were given the whole top floor consisting of a large living room, bath, bedroom, sun porch, and kitchen. The kitchen was used only for pressing clothes, as the main kitchen and dining room were on the first floor, as well as several other suites like ours and numerous single bedrooms and baths. From the sun porch I could see most of Dhahran, and from one living room window I could see the lovely blue of the Persian Gulf five miles away. From another window I could see the Three Jebels or mountains, from which the wise men are supposed to have come at Jesus' birth. Here in this land of the Moslem, we found no cloverleaf and pine—only bright stars shining on desert wastes, but we did find that God had kept his promise. He had made these descendants of Ishmael into a great nation. Little wonder that they consider themselves to be the chosen people.

Tall, dark, and hooded is one of the Crown Prince's bodyguards. He carries bullets around his waist and an antiquated gun (which the bullets won't fit). I was quite flattered when he called me "Ma'm'selle."

Michael on the left saw our camera and asked if we would take his and Jack's (on the right) pictures. These two Indian house-boys came from Goa and were our favorites. I couldn't resist the urge to pose with them.

It is difficult to put in one short story all I saw and heard and felt after my short stay in Arabia. I can only draw a few mental pictures—the ones which seem most worth-while.

In the first place it must be remembered that the term "Arab" is a very loose one. I had supposed all Arabs were dirty, uncouth, and illiterate. There is no more truth to this statement than if I were to say the same thing about all Americans. There are Arabs of all sorts, from many places, and from many walks of life. There are Arabs of various colors and of different blood. We met Arabs from Somaliland, Cairo, and Lebanon. We met Arabs from the little province called Aden on the tip of the Arabian peninsula, and we met their black brothers from North Africa. We met wealthy Arabs. We heard the cries of "baksheesh!" from the beggars on the streets. We met learned Arabs and had the privilege of living with some of them at the Executive House. We still hear from them and count them as our friends. Several were members of the Egyptian Senate. Others were connected with the American University at Cairo. One had been editor were not ordinary people. But we also saw Arabs roaming the streets whose minds were gone from disease.

We took various trips to Abqaiq, Ras Tanura, Quatif, and to Al Khobar. Abqaiq and Ras Tanura are both American villages, but Quatif and Al Khobar are native ones. While all of these little towns are within a radius of about fifty miles from Dhahran, the shifting sands and bumpy roads make it quite a task to reach them. Usually we stayed overnight in Abqaiq or Ras Tanura, but the round trip to Quatif and Al Khobar could be made in one day.

DHAHRAN is a city composed largely of Americans, and most of them are from either Texas or California. The saying goes in Arabia that there are so many Texans there now the Arabs, instead of saying only, Kafe Halleck ("Hello, how are you?") say Kafe Halleck YOU ALL! I cannot vouch for the truthfulness of this statement, but I didn't say one word against Texas while in Arabia.

There are about twenty-five hundred Americans in Dhahran, and everything has been done to make living there as attractive as possible. There is a swimming pool, a library, a theater, bowling alleys, and outdoor barbecue pits. The homes are all air conditioned, lovely, and more elaborately furnished than most of the homes in the United States, for these people have traveled widely and gathered objects from all over the world. There is a school graded from kindergarten through the ninth grade, with about one hundred fifty pupils and eight teachers. Of course it has a commissary, a canteen, a beauty shop, and a barber shop. There is a dining hall where twenty-three hundred meals are served daily.

In Dhahran there are no "white trash." This is the essential difference between this American village so far away from the American continent and a village of like size in the United States. We who live in villages in this country are forced to be neighbors and associate with people of different classes. Daily we are forced to rub elbows with those who have a lower standard of living than ours. In Dhahran we found the people of the higher income classes to be of high intellect also, and even those of the lower income classes had a great deal of culture and refinement. The Americans who did not have these features—those who did not know how to conduct themselves properly—had long ago been sent back to the United States. And these were not asked to return! I could not help but think that perhaps it would be wise to give those of us who expect to live in Zion a two-year contract. If at the end of two years we have not qualified, home we go!

The servants are all Indians—and all men. Most of them come from Goa, a little island owned by Portugal off the coast of India. They have been well trained and are excellent cooks and good houseboys.

ABQAIQ is much like Dhahran except on a smaller scale. It was on our trip to Abqaiq that we saw our first real "Bedos." The driver stopped the car opposite a tent set low in the sand. Of course there was scarcely any vegetation around. Several partially dressed children played near by. These were our first real Bedouins, and I was curious to see what they looked like. But I was not half as curious as they (or else I hid my curiosity better). Out from the tent crawled four Bedo women behind a lone man. The driver told us that these were the Bedouin's wives. While the driver talked in Arabic with the man, the women came just as close as possible to me. I could tell by the pointing and motioning that went on that they were most interested in my earrings. But the sight of those poor women certainly depressed me. There they stood, dressed in black from head to toe, their full skirts showing their ankles. They were barefoot, of course, and their faces were entirely masked except for little slits for their eyes. How uncomfortable it must be to have to wear an outfit like that in hot weather. How these people lived and what they ate was beyond me. The driver told us the man owned a sheep or two. Then the company gave them rations of a few pounds of staple goods every week. I could imagine nothing worse than living in that tent when a shamal was blowing. How could they live there without fresh water to wash in or drink? How could these women survive under their black masks?

The day the Crown Prince arrived was quite a memorable one for me. I have never seen such activity unless perhaps when I was a child and we were at reunion on the day before it opened. Tents sprang up everywhere. Most of them were at the side of the executive house but some were pitched on front lawns of the neighboring houses. How the Indian servants hated to see any member of the royal family arrive! And after watching the goings-on for a few days, I knew what they meant. How would you like to have a campfire built in the middle of your living room floor? These Arabs are still Bedos at heart.

We were fortunate in that we could visit Arabia during the winter season. The climate then is delightful, but we did experience a few shamals. During the late spring and summer months these dry desert winds blow every day, and there is just one word to describe them—terrific. The worst shamal we endured came the night of the dinner in honor of the Crown Prince. This feast was given at Damam, a little village on the Gulf. You have all read of these Arabian feasts, so I won't bore you with a description of this one except to say that if you have read of tables piled high with rice and roasted mutton which has been stuffed with roasted chickens, which in turn have been stuffed with hard boiled eggs—every word you've read is true. The sheep are piled on the table three and four deep.

RAS TANURA is a beautiful little village on the shore of the Persian Gulf. This body of water is much larger than I imagined. It looks like such a tiny strip on the map I thought I could probably see across it. However, it is not tiny, and as far as seeing across it, one might well try to see across the Pacific Ocean. On clear days Bahrein Island is visible outlined against the sky. The homes in Ras Tanura face the water; this adds greatly to their charm, for the beach is narrow and one can dine and see the beautiful blue of the gulf at the same time.

But now let us look at a native village. Many years ago—I believe it was in 1780—an English explorer visited the little city of Quatif. He wrote that of all the spots he had ever visited, Quatif was by far the lowest, the most despicable, and the most disease ridden. I haven't been in many foreign villages, I haven't seen all I would like to see, but I am certain that explorer was right. No spot could be any worse! Nearly all the children—and there were plenty of them, pushing and shoving to get closer—had trachoma. Some were totally blind; some blind only in one eye; others' eyes were in the "runny" stage. Practically all of them had sores on their hands, feet, and limbs. It was here, as well as at Al Khobar, that we saw the men crazy from disease roaming around, and it was here we heard the terrifying cries of the beggars on the streets. They were women, masked of course, and dressed in rags. As we walked up the narrow streets, their cries of "baksheesh" followed us. I cannot begin to write of the filth, the disease, the corruption in the little village of Quatif.

SO THIS was the kingdom of I'bn Saud. I could not help thinking of another King—a King whose birthplace was not so many miles from here in much the same sort of country. A King who was as poor as Saud is rich. A King who had neither a bed for his aching body nor a pillow for his weary head. A King who gave his life that even these beggars on the streets of Quatif might live. So poor he was—as the world measures wealth—yet how rich in the things that mattered most, for he was the Anointed One. One day all heads must bow before him. One day all shall know that Bethlehem cradled a King, and that the streets of Jerusalem held the footprints of a Savior.

What a light Jesus could be to all these people if they would but listen to him! What a living ray he was to the handful who did! What hope, what joy, what cheer he brought with him, and what it meant to those few living in awful desert places—those who had nothing else to feel hopeful over or joyful about.

It is hard for us sitting here in America to visualize what life was like in the biblical times. There was little water. There were no running brooks, no tall trees, no green grass to speak of, but there were heat, flies, disease, and filth—and into all this stepped Jesus with the promise of life. Like a fresh spring breeze Jesus came into the drab lives of the people of his day to heal their sick and make their blind to see. What it must have meant when he offered them a more abundant life!

Everything in Arabia is done on such a large scale that I cannot help marveling at it. So much has been accomplished in so few years. Some of the Arabs even have changed their manner of dress—some have given up their white nightgowns for trousers and a GI coat. Some of them actually wore shoes. They usually had them on the wrong feet—but they had them on nevertheless.

No story about Arabia is complete without a word about the Arabian women. I do not believe that anywhere in the world are women treated more like dogs and less like human beings. They are seldom seen on the streets. They are not in evidence anywhere. But I am told—and I firmly believe—that they know everything that goes on. The Arab can dress them in black from head to toe, he can cover up their faces, but he cannot change their bodies, minds, and souls. They are still women!

How I wish I could have taken all of you on this wonderful trip with me—across Newfoundland down to the Azores, across North Africa, Egypt, and the Red Sea into Arabia. I would like to show you all the blue of the Mediterranean, the rocky islands in that lovely sea; Athens, the gorgeous city of Rome, the snowy Pyrenees, the Azores once more, and finally the lights of Cape Cod welcoming the traveler home.

Rosa and J. W. Lea

Within a short space of time two members have passed away who were well known in the Northern California District and contributed much to the church work for many years in Ukiah and Mendocino County. Until their retirement, when they moved to Ukiah, Rosa and J. W. Lea made their home in Potter Valley, but kept in touch with the work in all that area. He was a shepherd to the Ukiah group. She was the church recorder, and always on the entertainment committee for visiting missionaries and church gatherings. Both were valiant in testimony and brave in defense of the church. Their records must be written together, for they were an inseparable team.

Marvin Romer, the priest serving the church in that area, wrote: "He hoped that the home would be used for holding church services, and that a minister could live in it. Words cannot express what a spiritual uplift he was to us. He exhorted strongly in dealing with other denominations. He told the truth to anyone who could stand it, or not." Brother R. L. Bishop of Santa Rosa, who conducted the funeral services, wrote: "They were devoted to the church and did all they could to promote interest in our work in Ukiah. They were highly respected as citizens and neighbors in Ukiah."

Having a premonition that the end was near, Rosa died of pneumonia on the evening of February 7. Father recovered from the same illness, and resumed his activities and cheerful manner, but he told several, as he wrote, "We hope we will not be separated long." He died on March 16. The bodies lie side by side in Potter Valley, but their membership has been transferred to the eternal world where, we believe and trust, their good work will go on under happy conditions.

 IN DEFENSE OF "WHODUNITS"

Mrs. A. A. Essex, 5915 Cypress Place, Kansas City, Missouri, writes (re P.S. of March 13 on murder mystery novels) in defense of her reading habits which include along with some of the best nonfiction a generous number of murder stories: "I ignore the fact and act of death in a murder mystery. I always skip over the gory details. Mystery writers, unlike authors of many types of fiction, must present certain local color facts accurately. In most boy-meets-girl or parent-child types of fiction, the solution and the problem are apparent in the first few paragraphs. Both are weary from overuse; only the word padding around them contains much variation. In other words, there is in them no real puzzle to occupy the reader's thoughts."

Readers like Mrs. Essex would probably enjoy the clever "Father Brown" mystery stories of a genius like G. K. Chesterton, or of Dorothy L. Sayers, an Oxford "donna" who brings the richness of English culture, history, and literature to her work. Great writers give you something, no matter what they write about. But the average—they just smell of the abattoir.

For a bit of fun, check titles on the mysteries at your newsstand. Did you see "The Case of the Haunted Husband"? That one should make your gooseflesh tingle!

But Reader Essex only confirms the original point. Some of the best educated people, cultured and refined, enjoy wallowing in literary blood and murder. Why? Here is a real mystery to be unraveled.

P.S. is acquiring an inferiority complex over this. He tries to pass as an educated person. But educated people read "whodunits." He hates them. What's wrong with him? He needs help.

 SPRING

A pair of hopeful robins were on hand two days early to welcome the return of spring, but the weather man did not keep track of the calendar, and continued to dish up ice, chilly winds, and assorted frozen delicacies. The robins are cheerful about it, and seem to have moved back to the little apartment near the head of the street where they stayed last year. They greeted us in friendly confidence, with a robin's attentive but quiet curiosity. A very devoted little couple, they are seldom far apart. They are making a survey of the lawns and lower bushes, with some footnotes on garden prospects for the coming season.

With all the cats there are, one ponders their chances of survival. And now that the birds return, cats will resume their nature studies, and it may be your gentle kitty, sir (or yours, ma'am), that tortures one of these friendly birds for an agonizing three hours or so before ending its pain and fear and eating it up, in the way of all cats. It seems a pity that so much friendly charm should be sacrificed to provide a cat with a little entertainment and a light lunch.

Tips of the tiniest branches and twigs are thickening now, and soon whiskers of green will appear, the annual miracle of nature awakening from her winter sleep, once more donning the gay garments of spring.

Inspirational Document Received

To the Elders and to the Church:

We approach the General Conference with a vacancy in our official circle. The death of President Garver left the Quorum of the First Presidency incomplete. This and other conditions have given me grave concern for the Church.

I have earnestly sought divine guidance, and it is with gratitude that I am able to transmit to the Church, through the appointed channels, the following as the will of the Lord:

The voice of inspiration directs me to say:

1. It is wisdom that the leading quorums should be filled. Therefore, to take the place of my servant John F. Garver, whose sacrifices and labor were acceptable to me, it is my will that William Wallace Smith be ordained and set apart to take his place as counselor to the president of the high priesthood and as a member of the Quorum of the First Presidency, to which office he is now called.

2. To fill the vacancy thus created in the Quorum of Twelve, Donald O. Chesworth is called. He should be ordained to the office of an apostle, and be relieved of his present bishopric, and assume the duties of a special witness in that council.

3. My servants of the Joint Council are commended for the spirit of moderation which they have shown in their deliberations. I have accordingly blessed their efforts, and the Cause has been measurably enriched.

4. The church as a whole is commended for the spiritual growth and the preparation of the priesthood during the conference period, and this necessary work should proceed. It will be profitable for my servants of the eldership to meet often for study, under the direction of those having responsibility to teach, at such times and places as may be practicable, in preparation for the greater endowment of spiritual power which has been promised and which awaits the time when they can receive it.

5. The hopes of my people and the goals of my church, while not yet fully realized, and at times and to many seemingly distant, are closer to realization than many recognize. It is yet day when all can work. The night will come when for many of my people opportunity to assist will have passed.

Your Servant,
ISRAEL A. SMITH.

On April 3 the "Kansas City Star" carried a lengthy article about President Smith's opening address to the General Conference. On April 4 the "Kansas City Times" carried a write-up about W. Wallace Smith becoming a member of the First Presidency. Both writings included pictures of the men.

HONORS

The annual honors and awards assembly of the Independence high school was held March 29. Many of the students inducted into the National Honor Society were members of the church. Senior students who became members of the society were Vera Louise Andes, Blair Bryant, Geneva Hunker, David Leonard, George Lund, Dick Pinson, Bill Propst, Shirley Rondomanski, Roy Schaefer. Junior students were Patsy Bates, K Curtis, Alice Eastwood, Ruth Elser, Delores Gibler, Lucille McCormick, and Viola Velt. Graduating members of the society are Beverly Barnhardt, Margaret Crick, Sylvia Hunt, Barbara Petrie, and Marian Robinson.

RESEARCH WORK

Deam Ferris, professor of Biology and Natural Science at Graceland College, received a grant-in-aid of over one hundred dollars from the American Association for the Advancement of Science through the Wisconsin Academy of Science with which to do research work. This grant is to be used for covering costs in collecting natural specimens in Dave County, Wisconsin.

SINGS IN OPERA

Miss Annjehan Brown, formerly of Lamoni, is in Europe and will sing with the world-famous Vienna Opera Company in Austria this summer. Miss Brown sailed March 11 from New York and is now in France.

She has been on several national radio programs and has appeared before many audiences in the East. After attending Graceland College, Miss Brown studied voice in Chicago and New York.

YOUTH MIXER

A crowd of young people attended the reception and mixer held April 1 at West College Street church. Although 724 young people crowded into the building, many had to be turned away.

The program started ahead of schedule with Gordon Mesley leading group singing. Kenneth Green, city-wide League president, led the mixer where the young people of the church from all over the United States, England, Canada, Hawaii, and Australia were introduced. Carl Mesle, youth director of Independence, was master of ceremonies.

Visitors to the mixer were greeted by a reception line headed by Bob Sparks, city-wide League vice-president. The line included the city-wide Cabinet and the presidents of all local Zion's Leagues.

At the registration desk, under the charge of Miss Carol Hodges and several League secretaries, the visitors received identification badges.

Featured on the evening's program was Richard Johnston, a clarinetist who has played with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, and has scored music at some of the major movie studios. Others taking part in the program were Joan Smith, Bill and Betty Hawker, Ray and Joyce Alexander, Bob Sparks, Paul Deaver and Kenneth Cooper.

It Was a Great Conference

In a Happy Mood

The closing of the General Conference on the afternoon of Sunday, April 9, found all who had participated in a happy and hopeful mood. It was a good and active Conference. There were many evidences of the presence of the divine Spirit to bless, direct, and instruct. All the activities were splendidly supported, and conversation among the visitors revealed that they were well pleased and satisfied, with but very few exceptions.

One must certainly be impressed by Conference delegates of the younger generation who are alert, well-informed, and able to express themselves in an excellent way. There was freedom, spontaneity, and wisdom in the discussion. Business meetings at a modern General Conference are pleasant and informative experiences. The church is maturing in quality as well as growing in numbers.

Attendance

The great year for conference attendance was 1930, when a special drive was made to increase both attendance and registration. The greatest crowds in the history of the Reorganization were brought together on the Sundays at the Conference of that year, and the registration was 5,908 on April 19.

At this Conference no special effort was made to stimulate either attendance or registration, and the final registration was 5,454.

Observers thought that the crowds were great for the Palm Sunday Communion services on April 2. But there was even heavier attendance on April 9 at the two morning services at which Apostle D. T. Williams and President F. Henry Edwards were the speakers, and those who were disappointed in not being able to get in for the later service ran into high figures.

Even more than in previous years, there was excellent attendance throughout the week, especially at the business sessions. It may be said truly that the great conference room of the Auditorium was comfortably and well-filled every afternoon. That meant that the people—visitors as well as delegates and ex officios—were paying close attention to the real business of the church. Conference was much more than a vacation for most of them.

Appointments

The complete list of General Conference appointments appears in the Conference Daily Herald, and unless plans are changed they will not be reprinted in the regular weekly Herald. A few, however, are of great interest, and should be noted here.

The most notable change, of course, is the calling and ordination of W. Wallace Smith, of the Council of Twelve, to serve as a Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church. Like President Israel A. Smith, he is a son of the late beloved President Joseph Smith. This change has brought the warm acceptance of the people. As one delegate expressed it, "It seems right."

Business Session Briefs

Monday:

Despite heavy spring rains and a power failure, nearly six thousand persons assembled at 2:00 p.m. in the Auditorium for the opening business session of the 1950 General Conference. The entire building was without electricity for forty-five minutes; during this time the assembly sang hymns under the direction of Franklyn Weddle. As soon as the lights came on, the meeting was called to order. During the singing of the National Anthem, the Church Flag and the United States Flag were carried to the front of the auditorium and placed in standards. President Israel A. Smith then gave a brief talk about the universality of the church, after which flags of other countries where the church has missions were unfurled from the balcony.

Following the singing of "Redeemer of Israel," the business of the Conference was begun. President Smith read greetings from mission leaders R. E. Davey of Australia, D. Blair Jensen of England, Edward Butterworth and Allen Breckenridge of Tahiti. The report of the Credentials Committee was approved, after which President Smith relinquished the chair to President F. Henry Edwards, who in turn requested Apostle Paul M. Hanson to preside over the Conference with him. Secretary Frank McDonald then read the document by President Smith presented earlier in the day to the various quorums. (See page 2.)

Apostle Wallace Smith, in commenting on his call to the Presidency, humbly recounted events in his life which assured him of the divinity of his calling. In closing he asked for the prayers of the Saints that he might be able to stand shoulder to shoulder with his associates in working for the good of the church.

Bishop Donald Chesworth in his acceptance speech declared that during his twenty-two years as a member of the priesthood he had never belonged to any other organization. He stated that his one mission was to testify to the world that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. He also said that he wanted to assist in any way he could to forward the work of the church.

Following the acceptance of the President's message as a divine document worthy of inclusion in the Doctrine and Covenants, the meeting was adjourned.

Tuesday:

Following the opening song and invocation, Apostle Maurice Draper read a call to worship from the Doctrine and Covenants. Garland Tickemyer then sang "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," after which W. Wallace Smith and Donald O. Chesworth were escorted to the platform. Officiating at Wallace Smith's ordination to the Presidency were Apostle Paul M. Hanson (spokesman), Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp and High Priest Ward A. Hougas. D. O. Chesworth was ordained a member of the Quorum of Twelve by Apostles D. T. Williams (spokesman), E. J. Gleazer, Sr., and C. George Mesley. Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith then stepped to the tribune and testified to the fact that the two calls were divine. In speaking of Wallace, he said, "Wallace is every inch a Christian gentleman—and that is a considerable number of inches."

After the reading of Monday's minutes, Elders Floyd Rockwell and John Booth moved that the conference send greetings to Patriarch G. T. Griffiths; the motion was unanimously accepted. Messages from the Tom Worths in England, the John Mervins in Tahiti, and the district presidency in Hawaii were then read by Secretary Frank McDonald.

Following the acceptance of General Conference reports appearing in the Daily Herald, it was announced that the report of the Board of Appropriations would be printed in the Wednesday issue, subject to later action. President Israel A. Smith then read the report of the First Presidency to the General Conference, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson read the report of the Council of Twelve.

The last item of business to be presented was the calling of A. Neal Deaver of Independence and Howard F. Miller of Hawaii to the office of bishop. Both calls were approved, and it was announced that Brother Deaver's ordination would take place at the beginning of the Wednesday business session. Brother Miller will be ordained in Hawaii at a later date.

Wednesday:

The third business session opened as usual with song and prayer, after which Bishop G. L. DeLapp gave a Scripture reading on the characteristics of a bishop. Preceding the ordination of A. Neal Deaver to the office of bishop, Herbert Lively sang, "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life." Following the reading and approval of the minutes of Tuesday's meeting, John Rushton stepped to the tribune and pointed out that the "Union Jack" was being allowed to hang upside down. After he returned to his seat, Al Scherer walked to the platform and stated that, as a representative of The Netherlands Mission, he felt it his duty to call to the attention of the Conference that the Dutch Flag was also inverted. Both men were assured that the flags would be displayed correctly throughout the remainder of the week. President Israel A. Smith then presented a new walnut gavel, the workmanship of Clifton Resch of Independence, to W. Wallace Smith, his counselor.

The first major business of the afternoon was the presentation of the financial report by Bishop G. L. DeLapp. It was unanimously approved. President Smith then called the delegates from the United Kingdom to the platform and introduced them to the Conference. Representing the British Isles were Elder and Mrs. John Coggan, Maureen Bailey, Elder and Mrs. W. A. Entwistle and their sons, Bryan and David; Valda Poole was presented as the Australian representative.

Four communications were read by Secretary Frank McDonald calling the following men to higher service: (to the office of high priest on recommendation of members of the Quorum of Twelve) Wesley Elvin, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Gordon E. Farrow, Warton, Ontario; William E. Ford, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; William Garnier, Windsor, Ontario; Frank Mussell, Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Samuel Zonker, Wellsburg, West Virginia; A. R. Gunning, Australia; and J. Franklyn Schofield, England; (to the office of evangelist) Arthur E. Stoff, Independence, Missouri; Silas Condit, Hagerman, Idaho; H. E. C. Muir, Melvin, Michigan; Lynn Smith, Los Angeles, California; Walter J. Swain, Sydney, Australia; William Bolinger, Independence; William Osler, Edmonton, Alberta; Charles Lee, Honolulu, Hawaii; and Clarence Archibald, St. Louis, Missouri; (to the office of high priest on recommendation of the Presidency) Clifford A. Cole, Ernest E. Crownover, Sanford Fisher, James C. Phillips, Prescott A. Foo, Brewton Greene, Lyle W. Woodstock, E. Elwood Smith, Granville L. Swenson, and Paul A. Wellington; (to the office of Seventy) Raymond J. Ashenhurst, Harry L. Doty, Cecil R. Ettinger, C. Houston Hobart, Donald L. Kyser, Herbert A. Lynn, John L. Nutgrass, John J. Puckett, Luther S. Troyer, and Louis C. Zonker. Following the speeches of commendation by Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, Apostle Arthur Oakman, High Priest Ward A. Hougas, and Seventy E. Y. Hunker, those receiving calls who were present addressed the Conference from the floor via "traveling microphone."

Report of the First Presidency

To the General Conference:

President Edwards and I could not review recent events without at the very beginning recalling our beloved associate, Elder Garver, who soon after the last General Conference was stricken and who passed away on March 3 of last year. Of him it could be well said, he was, as we would express it in legal terms, sui generis, that is, one in a class by himself. His like we will never see again. Rugged in character, brought up in what we might term the hard way, he was able to adapt himself to all situations. He understood the problems of the common man, and he never lost the common touch so necessary to acquire and hold the confidence of his fellow men. Although he was somewhat brusque, those who learned to really know him found him a sympathetic and kindly man.

He was a wise counselor, a keen judge of human nature, and basically a man of integrity who jealously safeguarded his honor.

His loss was a blow to President Edwards and myself, although I personally was given to understand in April, 1946, when our quorum was reorganized, that his ministry would not long be extended and so expressed myself at the time to President Hanson and possibly to others. His death was particularly distressing to Brother Edwards, with whom Brother Garver had served in close official relationship and intimacy for twenty-seven years.

The additional burden, however, we have carried as well as possible, and we acknowledge the constant watch care of our Heavenly Father in conducting the affairs of our office. By action of the Conference our quorum is now again filled, and we shall be pleased indeed to have associated with us Brother Wallace Smith.

I pause here to pay my own personal tribute to President Edwards, who has been a tower of strength in administering the affairs of our office. It would have been exceedingly difficult to carry on without him; his experience in association with the late President Frederick M. Smith for eight years, followed by our joint experience since 1946, gave him a comprehensive grasp on the details of management. He has been a wise counselor, considerate, just, and co-operative, and our relations have been extremely pleasant and most happy.

Apostles Roscoe E. Davey and D. Blair Jensen have prosecuted their respective missions abroad, and from all reports reaching us have done so with vigor and wisdom; the results of their work appear to be eminently satisfactory. Both are assisted by devoted companions.

Elder Glen Johnson, of the Council of Seventy, is ably assisting Apostle Jensen in the European Mission. He, too, is likewise sustained by a consecrated companion.

We are happy that the other members of the Twelve and of the Council of Seventy are with us at this time.

A Good Conference Period

We are happy to report that the church has been greatly blessed by our Heavenly Father during the inter-Conference period. The quorums, the priesthood, and the Saints in general took to heart the divine instruction to make it a period of "unusual preparation." In their several places, and without any reward save the joy of service, both groups and individuals have labored with insight, sacrifice, and increased skill. And although much which should have been done has not been done, and much which has been done might have been done better, yet the blessings of heaven have been with us, and the kingdom of God has been advanced among us. We have met in a spirit of gratitude and fraternity and high expectancy already in part fulfilled.

The Council of Twelve

The Twelve reports to you as a council, and not under individual assignment, as has been done heretofore. We believe that this is as it should be, since these brethren share a joint stewardship and together constitute one of the leading councils charged with a major responsibility. We are especially happy that behind this joint report lies a sincere and earnest endeavor to give to the church a comprehensive and unified missionary program. Without in any way disparaging the work of the more experienced members of the Council, with whom one of this Quorum labored for many years, and who have a secure place in our hearts and in the affections of the church, we have been particularly impressed at the splendid way in which the younger and more recently ordained Apostles have shouldered their responsibilities and labored with their brethren toward a planned and sound missionary enterprise already successful and victorious.

Baptismal gains for the inter-Conference period can only be estimated at this time, since the March reports are not yet available. They total approximately 5,977 plus March, 1950. The 1949 total of 4,738 was the highest since 1921, and the third best in our history. These figures reflect the growing missionary fervor of the entire church; they take on deep significance when we consider the changed lives here represented. Some concern has been expressed lest the current emphasis on evangelism might degenerate into undue preoccupation with mere numbers. We have seen no evidence of this either in the period under review nor in our study of similar periods of vigorous missionary activities. On the contrary, missionary fervor has invariably been accompanied by a quickening of spiritual life in all phases of church endeavor. Nevertheless, since the true conversion of those baptized is so very important, we call your attention again to inspired instruction given us in an early day and still available for our guidance.

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

The Presiding Bishopric

The brethren of the Presiding Bishopric have reported on their stewardship over temporalities, and we are sure you will rejoice with us in the good work done by the church in this field under their leadership. These brethren carry a heavy burden of responsibility with wisdom and good judgment and with an eager but tempered concern for the work of the kingdom. The nature of our work requires frequent consultation with the Presiding Bishopric, in considering the spiritual and temporal aspects of many and varied problems of church conservation and extension, and we find ourselves richly blessed in a partnership which we are assured has many parallels between spiritual and temporal leaders throughout the church.

The Bishopric have made a sustained effort to teach observance of the financial law as a saintly duty having great promise. In this good work, they have been well blessed. We share the sense of urgency which our brethren have felt in this connection, and remind you that the way in which we manage our temporal affairs for spiritual purposes bears testimony of the quality of our spiritual concern.

Because of its significance in character development and our continuing need for means to carry on the work of the church, we urge members to "carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants" both as individuals and as groups. There is strength and power here. And in the day of disaster those who have obeyed this counsel will find themselves free of burdens of debts to the past and unimpeded by appetites which they perhaps can no longer satisfy.

The Presiding Bishopric also report on the oblation fund. We have been happy because of the ministry made possible by this fund, which has been so generously supported. It has been conserved for the purposes for which it was created, and it has been administered with wisdom. The care of the poor is a basic aspect of kingdom-building. It is mentioned repeatedly in the revelations having to do with setting up the kingdom, and it constitutes an obligation and a privilege in which all can share.

Houses of Worship

One of the most tangible evidences of the progress made in recent years is to be found in the rapidly increasing number of our congregations which are well housed. This has been made possible, in part, through the Houses of Worship Fund. Even more significant have been the enthusiasms, the hard work, and long vision of good people throughout the church. The status of the Houses of Worship fund will be reported to you in greater detail elsewhere; but we wish to point out the necessity of building within our means, and of repaying the borrowings from the General Church as quickly as possible. Debt might easily stifle opportunities for missionary expansion, which would otherwise be possible and welcomed. Failure to repay loans made by the General Church means that other congregations throughout the church, though deserving, are denied the help which it is the purpose of the church to give them.

Church Institutions

As will appear from reports submitted to the Conference, the institutions of the church are better equipped, and therefore freer to fulfill their purpose than they have been hitherto. The needs of the Sanitarium and of Graceland College are still very urgent. Those responsible for directing these institutions are happy to advance along with the general church, as part of our total movement and as made possible by the response of the church to the obligations laid on us together.

Priesthood Leadership and Education

Because of the impact of the depression and war, we have suffered severely for lack of experienced appointee and self-sustaining ministers. This very serious handicap is gradually being overcome, and during the inter-Conference period, our progress in this respect has been very gratifying. Some men of devotion and proved ability have been set apart as evangelists and high priests, and others will be recommended to you during this Conference for ordinations to the offices of evangelists, high priests, bishops, and seventies. The work of these brethren takes on richer meaning when we reflect that their service is made effective through the ministry of thousands of elders and members of the Aaronic priesthood who serve in their several offices according to the gifts of God to them.

We feel led to point out that those who are responsible for calling men to the ministry should carry on their hearts, with special concern, young men in their late teens and early twenties, as well as others of later years, whose responsibility for service has already been indicated, in some measure, by their testimony of the gospel and the gifts with which they have been endowed.

Throughout the church, men of the ministry have been eager to become better prepared for their work. Dr. Floyd M. McDowell, representing the Presidency, and Bishop Harold W. Cackler, representing the Presiding Bishopric, have taken the lead in preparing priesthood education materials. In addition, Brother McDowell has traveled widely in the domestic fields, in association with the Apostles and others, and he reports good co-operation and steadily improving standards of performance.

Teachers and Deacons

A careful study of available statistics reveals that we suffer too many losses because members of the church who are hurt or discouraged or who find church attendance inconvenient or impossible are not sought after by members of the church who are concerned for their welfare. We are asking branch and district presidents to arrange that brethren holding the offices of teacher and deacon shall be given special responsibilities in this connection as seems to be required in the law. We believe that a ministry of helpfulness carried on by the teachers and deacons and given warmhearted support by the Saints, might well save thousands to the church and result in the conversion of many of the children of those who are now drifting away from us.

Council of Women

Under the able and gracious leadership of Sister Pauline Arnson, members of the Women's Council of the Church have given faithful and consistent guidance in women's affairs. We are particularly grateful for the co-operation given in connection with our missionary program and point out that the primary element in the building of Zion homes—which is their special concern—is the true conversion of those who live in these homes. We believe that the Council of Twelve have been wise in seeking the co-operation of the women of the church in testimony bearing. Material already prepared for use in the reunions of 1950 should be very helpful in marshaling the missionary resources of the wives and mothers of the church.

Religious Education

In the Department of Religious Education, Apostle Reed M. Holmes and his associate, Elder John R. Darling, have given special attention to the suggestion which arises from time to time in the presiding councils, to the effect that departmental work should be given a stronger and still stronger Latter Day Saint tone. These brethren have carried a heavier burden than we have desired because of the lack of available full-time associates, but they have laid a good foundation, and we believe that work in this department is moving forward acceptably.

Ministry to College Students

Elder Lawrence O. Brockway and his associates on the committee on ministry to College students have helped us to keep in touch with many of our young people at a time when they are making major decisions for life and need to be informed concerning the objectives and needs of the church. This is a most important contribution, and the willingness of the members of this committee to share their time and insights with those who are following after them is, in itself, an unending source of inspiration to many.

Planned Endeavor

As we have before advised the church, there is urgent need for careful planning in our branch, district, stake, and general work. To them we say, "Practice the art of seeing clearly what needs to be done to advance the work committed to your care." As we come to apply clear vision of the meaning of our total objectives to local situations, changes of personnel will be less disruptive than they have been, and we shall be unified in common endeavor and move forward from strength to added strength.

There is urgent need for the strengthening of branches which are below the standard of effective ministry and testimony. The general officers concerned, together with the district and branch presidents, have made some outstanding contributions along this line, but more should be done. We feel sure that many thousands of the Saints throughout the church will find themselves very happy in their work if they will put aside things which so often divide us and give support to their pastors and district presidents in building stable, vigorous, and united branches.

The Kingdom Enterprise

One of the signs of the guidance of the Spirit in the affairs of the church is the growing insistence of many members that we give such an example of our kingdom ideals as will set forth these ideals in visible form for all men to see. We have every sympathy with these good people. Much more has been done than many realize, and much more needs to be done, and we expect to press forward in this task. But we remind the Saints with sober earnestness that one of the most insidious temptations which come to us is the temptation to note the wealth of institutions when we should be concerned about their spirit, and to consider the kingdom in terms of overcoming physical, social, and industrial difficulties, when the real battleground is in the hearts of men and women, and to look at others when we should look at ourselves. Nothing herein stated is intended as adverse to the vigorous prosecution of the Gathering. It is intended, rather, as a reminder of the word so recently given to us, and so widely attested by the witness of the Spirit: "The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion's conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; but my work shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure."

Stakes

Having been led thereto, as we believe, by the Good Spirit, we shall present to this Conference recommendations that Independence shall be organized as the Center Stake of Zion, and that stakes shall be organized centering at Detroit and Los Angeles. These recommendations have received the approval of the Joint Council of First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and are brought to the Conference in harmony with our usual procedure in such matters.

It should be understood, of course, that the organization of stakes at a distance from the Center Place does not in any sense invalidate or run contrary to the gathering which centers at Independence, Missouri. For economic and sociological reasons, and quite apart from anything we can do, both Detroit and Los Angeles have already become places of gathering. It is the conviction of those responsible that the work at these centers can be best administered under a stake form of organization, and that these more distant stakes will help us very greatly in quickening and improving the quality of the gathering to Independence and the regions round about.

Marriage and the Home

One of the most important contributions we can make to the establishment of the kingdom is in the refinement of our home and family life. True marriage is a sacrament, and should not be entered into lightly, hastily, or unworthily. In particular, members of the church should not enter into this covenant relationship with persons who do not realize its sacramental nature, or who do not feel deeply their spiritual obligation to abide by its sacrificial demands, as well as to enjoy its happy rewards. Pastors and other ministers of mature judgment will do well to teach these things to our young people before they are called on to choose their life partners. And an ever greater responsibility is carried by Latter Day Saint parents, whose example will go so far to determine the quality and durability of the homes of tomorrow. Let the church be admonished that the kingdom is now seeking expression in the homes of the faithful, and that far more significant for the kingdom, than any material resources we may bring, are such spiritual qualities as industry, forethought, thrift, co-operation, kindness, temperance, patience, and compassion which are best matured in Saintly homes.

When devisive forces are already found at work in church families, we suggest most soberly that the Saints who are involved seek out their pastors or other ministers of mature judgment and secure their help in effecting reconciliation before these differences become unsupportable. And ministers who are asked to advise in such delicate situations should take particular care to prove themselves both compassionate and trustworthy. Failure to seek and to give such ministry as is here suggested means that in far too many cases the first official contact of the church with divided homes and with children threatened by the worst kind of insecurity, is when someone suggests that punitive measures should be applied.

Coming Events

Announcement has already been made of the institute to be held at Lamoni, June 5 to 11, under the sponsorship of the Departments of Religious Education and Music. In addition thereto we wish to announce the following inter-Conference activities:

A meeting of the members of the High Priesthood at Kirtland Temple October 5-8 (or longer), 1950, for worship and testimony and the deepening of spiritual life.

An institute on Book of Mormon teachings and evidences to be held at Independence in January, 1951.

An institute for the women of the church to be held in Independence, October, 1951, under the auspices of the Council of Women.

There is a remarkable increase in the morale of the church. It is the concomitant of an increase in brotherly love and co-operation. The latter is the essential factor. The former the inevitable result. The strength of the church begins at the broad base of a membership alive in the gospel, under the nurture and pastoral care of the eldership who are the watchmen on the walls.

That our common objectives and purposeful desire may find fruition and consummation in a militant church willing, ready, and prepared for the coming of our Lord and Master is the earnest prayer of your servants.

Report of the Council of Twelve

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

As the chief missionary quorum of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, we have been delighted to note the pervasive and steadily growing spirit of evangelism observed throughout the church. This spirit is at root an attitude of soul, and manifests a response to the divine Love. Our Council has sought to further nourish and direct this along functional lines.

Four years ago we adopted a ten-year missionary program. This program was formulated after careful analysis based upon as widespread consideration of the total needs of the church as our experience and insight would permit. This program is being administered in the field, and the results so far have been most encouraging as evidenced by the figures given in this report.

BAPTISMS FOR 1945-1949
	Number of Baptisms	Baptismal Per Cent.
1945	2,491	1.9
1946	2,674	2.0
1947	3,489	2.6
1948	3,706	2.7

INVIGORATION OF BRANCHES

Reports from members of our Council from various areas in the domestic field, the United States and Canada, indicate that the spiritual invigoration of existing stakes, districts, and branches has gone well. We have sought to strengthen still further the strong places by encouraging every large branch to foster missions near by. This outreach of spirit on the part of officers and members alike has been a large factor in the uptrend in baptismal gains and, we believe, has also brought cultural growth. We are giving continuous attention and consideration to branches which may be strengthened to the point of stability and also those groups which are under par. Stake, district, and branch presidents are co-operating with us in almost every place, showing an eagerness to help which is truly commendable. Where possible, missionary programs have been designed and inaugurated in co-operation with our brethren whose work is localized, with a view to building strongly integrated stakes, districts, and branches around the nuclei already existing.

Along with the other responsible appointing powers, we have sent men to stakes, districts, large branches, and groups of branches with an urgent commission to sound the evangelical note and to organize these congregations for missionary work. These men thus appointed have done splendidly. In almost every case there have come in reports of baptismal increases in areas where they have labored, fully justifying the requirement laid upon them.

We have deeply appreciated the gracious and devoted service of our brethren of the Seventy, who are our natural associates in the work of the Master. We are doing our utmost to strengthen these quorums.

INSTITUTES

Frequently institutes have been held for the appointees. In 1949 there were four of these planned and executed with satisfactory results. These gatherings were planned under the general supervision of the First Presidency and the Twelve and were directed toward an increased understanding of our fundamental problems and the improvement of techniques in relation thereto. We look forward to the time when we can, in consultation with other quorums concerned, institute a permanent school for ministerial education and practice. This awaits the further refining in experience of educational procedures already established. We note the great missionary ingathering which followed the establishment of such a school over one hundred years ago, and we are working, along with other quorums, toward the establishment of educational procedures which will further advance and sustain intelligent missionary passion. There have been other institutes for the ministers who labor locally with a view to infusing the missionary spirit through all our endeavor.

MINISTRY TO NONRESIDENTS

Reports from the various fields indicate that ministry to nonresident church members has had increasing missionary significance. The brethren have advised and assisted districts in the selection of ministers to care for these otherwise neglected Saints. In the selection of evangelical ministers, we have had in view a more effective ministry to these nonresidents. Where practicable we have advised such moves as would bring them into contact with organized endeavor.

EACH ONE WIN ONE

Last year a committee of our Council was empowered to spearhead a church-wide evangelical effort. Under the slogan, "Each One Win One," special days were emphasized, posters and literature were prepared, and contracts with local officials enabled a follow-through which has brought splendid results.

UNIFIED REUNIONS

The 1949 reunion period was also unified under missionary ideals. We believe this was no small factor in bringing to the church increased consciousness of her mission as well as numerical strength. We will continue this evangelical unification of our reunion programs through the next inter-Conference period.

YOUTH

The Council of Twelve, both as a unit individual members, have sought earnestly and through the activities of the into seek out and train young ministers, many still in high school and college with a view to full-time church service. We remind the Saints that ministry in the priesthood is a high privilege, and whether rendered locally or generally, full-time or part-time, is in every regard worthy of being held up before the growing youth in the home as one of the noblest opportunities of his life. It is imperative that we enlist an increasing number of our young people in the normal and major objectives and activities of the church. Thus will the church be strengthened for the years ahead.

THE DEPARTMENTS

The Twelve have sought in branches wherever possible to give the work of the various departments a distinctively missionary tone. We have been happy in the fact that a member of our Council heads up the Department of Religious Education, especially as this gives continuous missionary tone to the department.

NEW CHURCHES

Our Council, collectively and individually, has given careful and deliberate consideration to the matter of housing our congregations. Along with other responsible officers, we have endeavored to give guidance in this matter. Specific recommendations for individual congregations, both with respect to design, location, and financing new church buildings and the rehabilitation of those now existing, have occupied a great deal of our time. We feel that definite advances have been made in this line of our endeavor. While much remains yet to be done, we believe our church is better housed now than it was four years ago.

MISSIONS ABROAD

The work in missions abroad has been especially close to our hearts and its needs constantly upon our minds. Two of our number are abroad, Apostle Jensen and his family in Europe, and Apostle Davey and his family in Australasia. We rejoice in the reports coming in from both these missions. The purchase of properties in England and The Netherlands, followed by the assignment of men to these countries and to Germany, has materially and numerically strengthened our work. A great opportunity is before us in Europe as well as in Australasia.

Strictly speaking there are no German Saints nor British Saints nor Dutch, Danish nor Norwegian Saints. We would rather speak of the Saints in Germany or the Saints in Sweden, et cetera. We believe this follows the dictum of the great apostle of old who said, "In Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek." We most sincerely commend the church for the interest shown in her members of these missions abroad and ask for a continuation of prayers, tithes, and offerings for the further strengthening of our work in all the world.

The work in the Islands of the Pacific is progressing nicely. A marked increase in baptismal gains is noted. Missionaries have been supplied for the Society Islands from the United States and from Australia. Our work in Hawaii has been strengthened in the inter-Conference period. We recognize the importance of Hawaii as presenting an opportunity for work among peoples in the Far East.

BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES

The church has a sacred trust to take the gospel to the Book of Mormon peoples. The Twelve recognize this trust. The first missionary journey ever undertaken was directed westward to the "Borders of the Lamanites." The Book of Mormon has a distinctive part to play in the restoration of Israel to the lands of their inheritance. We have proposals in hand, which will be presented to Conference touching this important matter.

THE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE

The Twelve as a quorum is made by law one of those Councils within whose province falls the "purchasing of lands, building houses of worship, building up the new Jerusalem and the gathering of the people." Great missionary significance attaches to all these high and holy purposes. As the late Frederick Madison Smith said, "Evangelism is bringing the love of God into the lives of men and the lives of men into the kingdom of God." The building of Zion must be motivated by divine love. Otherwise, any endeavor we make toward this end will fail. It is a missionary enterprise. It is God's gift and ours to a world lost in darkness. Our missionary work will never be complete until the message of the kingdom is reinforced in witnessing power by the progressive emergence of social forms in which the love of God is embodied. As a quorum then, we are vitally interested in the social reinforcement of the gospel. We look forward eagerly and pledge ourselves to work diligently for the coming of the kingdom. We long for the day when children, young men and women can mature under Zion's environment and make a worthy and needed contribution to the world. For these ends and toward these goals we labor.

We call on the Saints in every land and clime to redouble their efforts. Let each one who has been warned, warn his neighbor. Let each home, as a unit, manifest its concern for other homes in family devotions, in disciplined culture, and in the observance of churchly duties. Again we remind you of the sanctity of the Sabbath, or Lord's Day, and the obligation to make it "Holy unto the Lord."

Our trust is in God. Our faith is also in his people. With you we devote ourselves afresh to his service.

PAUL M. HANSON, President
Council of Twelve

The Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

In submitting our report to the General Conference this year, we wish to preface our comments relative to its financial content with a deep and sincere expression of gratitude to God for the blessings we have received at his bounteous hand. We acknowledge our indebtedness to him for all that has been received which has brought growth to the church. We also wish to express our thanks for the devotion and sacrifice of the many members of the church who make such a splendid report possible.

These are still days of crisis in many areas of our church work, but they are nevertheless days of glorious opportunity for those who have faith in God and are desirous of serving him. Despite the burdens which at times have seemed beyond our ability to carry, we have felt strengthened and sustained by his Holy Spirit, and it has been and continues to be our prayer that we may prove worthy of the trust imposed upon us.

We do not wish to make threadbare a theme that has been emphasized in previous reports, but we find each succeeding Conference bringing into positions of responsibility both in general and local service of the church, young men and women who do not have the background of experience that necessitated the adoption of a financial policy in 1932 which has been the guiding instrument affecting financial administration. We wish to call attention to our comments contained in previous reports which have a bearing upon our present situation and which will direct our attention to the future:

In our report to the General Conference of 1946, we made the following statement:

We are now experiencing an inflationary period which has caused our expenditures to rise and which will require larger appropriations than it was thought would suffice at the time of our report to the General Conference of 1944.

In our report to the Conference of 1947, we stated:

The conditions that were outlined in that report substantially carried over into the year 1946 and in the future we see a continuation of these inflationary conditions.

In our report to the Conference of 1948, we pointed out:

These conditions have continued and they prove additional justification for adherence to the policy of 1932; for despite the fact that reserves have less actual value in a period of inflation such as we are experiencing now, they nevertheless are necessary to give us financial security in an inflationary period. In a period of deflation, the dollar increases in purchasing power.

Now as we appraise our present situation and seek to evaluate our policy in relation to it, there are certain trends which draw our attention and which should be examined in the light of our expanding activities and enlarged goals. These are stated briefly and are presented for such study and further elaboration as individual members may have the ability and the desire to give.

1. The inflationary period to which reference has been made continues—and will undoubtedly continue for another two or three years, thus indicating a continuation of high budgetary costs. Costs are likely to remain high because of fixed labor costs and governmental subsidies.
2. There is evidence of trends pointing toward increased unemployment in a number of areas and diminishing opportunities for college graduates in many fields.
3. Our operating budget is mounting nearer the peak of General Church income, which income seems to have reached a peak in 1947 that has not been equaled in 1948 and 1949, and fixed costs of maintaining personnel and providing facilities and equipment have increased to a point where the most careful administration of the budget and supervision of personnel is essential to continued progress and stability.

It is therefore highly advisable to maintain our reserves and to watch carefully the economic and financial trends of the next few years that adjustments in financial administration may be made to conform to whatever need any future exigency may require. We are, in fact, sounding a word of caution because of the uncertainty of present economic and business trends.

INCOME AND EXPENSE

Our total income of tithes and offerings for 1949, exclusive of Surplus and Bequests, amounted to $1,143,341.96, as compared with $1,092,983.02 for 1948, or an increase of $50,358.94. However, the income for 1949 did not reach the amount of $1,149,586.61 received in 1947.

Our Net Income ($393,141.08 in 1948, and $386,522.45 in 1949) is of course declining as our budgetary expenses are increasing. Our expenses (exclusive of Other Income, etc.) in 1948 amounted to $731,179.96 and $770,821.38 in 1949, as compared with $632,059.80 in 1947 and $523,536.98 for 1946.

An increase of $17,544.53 in Elder's Expenses in 1949 over 1948 is offset, in so far as final figures are concerned, in the increase of Offerings from Saints and Friends of $17,455.57. Total increase in Expense in 1949 over 1948 is in Family Allowances, Graceland College, Administrative Expense, and increased expense of our historic properties. It is also to be noted that there is a loss indicated on Real Estate operations in amount of $3,445.13, as against a profit for 1948 of $24,367.41. The bulk of the profit for 1948 was derived from profit on sale of real estate. These figures do not include for either year the income from the Atherton and Spring Branch properties which are recorded in the Stewardship Endowment Fund.

Our expenditures for 1948 exceeded our budget by $864.96, and were within the budget for 1949 by $42,886.62.

BALANCE SHEET ASSETS

Our cash Assets at the end of the year show a favorable situation, with $926,043.61 Cash on Hand and in Banks, in Hands of Bishops and Agents, and in United States Government Bonds. Of this cash $192,475.98 was in Canadian funds, of which $150,000.00 has been invested in Dominion of Canada Government Bonds since the close of the year, and $103,278.91 is in the Real Estate funds, offsetting a portion of the $124,951.73 Due Other Funds shown under Liabilities.

A decrease of $34,000.00 in Contracts and Notes Receivable is mostly accounted for in the reduction of inter-institutional accounts. The increase in Fixed Assets is largely from additional investments in automobiles.

Other Assets and Deferred Charges are made up of Farm Operating Fund, utility deposits, unexpired insurance, equipment, and net worth of investments in the Australasian and Society Islands Mission.

LIABILITIES

Our Liabilities consist of current Accounts Payable at the end of the year and of inter-institutional funds; Reserve for Exchange which was set up in our Balance Sheet as of December 31, 1947, was exhausted because of the devaluation of the pound.

AGENCY FUND

This fund is gradually being eliminated, and it is our policy to keep it at a minimum as it is made up of deposits made by individuals with the church for reasons which to us seemed justifiable, and we have rendered a service to the individuals concerned. The assets are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations is provided for.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

As has been our custom in the past, we are continuing the policy of segregation of funds which are received which entail liabilities present and future to individuals. These funds, for the most part, represent property consisting of cash, bonds, and real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church agrees to meet certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual. It is our intent to keep this fund liquid, and accumulation of capital will be left in the fund until it is obvious that there is more than enough to meet all obligations, at which time it will be permissible to transfer excess capital to the General Fund.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

Since our report to the General Conference of 1948, at which time we stated that we were then undertaking a survey of church properties and that a report would be submitted to the General Conference at a later date, we have substantially completed the survey and properties consisting of real estate for houses of worship and church edifices, title to which was held in the name of the Presiding Bishop, have been appraised locally in each case according to forms submitted by our office. The increase is shown under Chapel Properties "A," such increase amounting to $3,758,966.68, raising this asset from $1,930,040.26 to $5,689,006.94. This does not include approximately $158,000.00 of additional investments in reunion grounds; these were not put on the books due to the fact that we do not have our survey completed.

It is important that all congregations keep our office advised as to improvements, additions, and new purchases of property. It is also to be noted that it is essential to keep this fund segregated from our Operating Fund, for such a change in the Net Worth would throw our calculations for operations completely out of balance with the actual state of affairs.

Loans have been made from this fund to congregations on a basis of 3 per cent where funds were not available from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund. The cash and government bonds are kept in adequate sums to meet current demands of congregations for money on deposit with us. These funds are considered as trust funds and are so treated.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

At the General Conference of 1946, an appropriation of $300,000 was made for this fund, to be loaned to congregations for building houses of worship. In 1948 the General Conference appropriated another $100,000, making a total of $400,000 for this fund. Balance of loans outstanding as of December 31, 1948, totaled $298,596.32. Additional loans in process and applied for total approximately $200,000 more than there are funds available.

As stated in our report to the Conference of 1948, this fund has in most respects served the purpose for which it was created, but there has been a tendency on the part of some to consider it as an unlimited fund. In one or two instances we have encountered some difficulties in getting congregations to restrict their building projects so as to be within the means of the congregation to finance with such help as could be extended from this fund. However, for the most part excellent co-operation has been given by the congregations to which loans have been made.

Studies have been made to redefine our policy relative to these loans and to improve our techniques in the administration of this fund.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund has been quite fully discussed in previous reports of the Bishopric. Current appropriations are made as men are appointed, adding to the capital of this fund. Recent studies made and submitted to the Joint Council for consideration revealed that on the basis of needs arising out of higher living costs, an additional sum of $215,000 would be required to fully cover the retirement costs of those now included in the reserve. As pointed out previously, however, credit does not accrue to each individual, but this is a reserve from which the church draws as appointees are retired.

The present inactive list is covered only in part, and reference to the Income and Expense Statement shows a total of $10,277.91 drawn in 1949 from this fund to reduce the current cost of those on the inactive list.

AUSTRALIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

The same policy is being carried on in Australia in regard to setting up funds to meet the cost of our ministerial personnel as is practiced at headquarters.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

The purpose of this fund is to provide support of missionary endeavors in the years which are ahead, to provide funds for the appointment of men between Conferences, for the maintenance of the School of Instruction, and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages. This provides means whereby additional facilities and equipment can be purchased as may be necessary for missions abroad. It has been customary to rehabilitate this fund from current cash accumulations to replace withdrawals made.

OBLATION FUND

The segregation of this fund proved to be one of the most progressive steps taken in working toward our social objectives. It has enabled us to assist many of our needy people in practically every district and stake, as well as giving generous support to our members abroad, particularly to those in Germany, in the Russian, the American, and the British Zones. It has also made possible the establishment of homes for the aged, and the purchase of property at 9904 Winner Road, Independence, referred to as "Resthaven." The net expense of operating these homes, together with the one at Lamoni, is met from the Oblation Fund. The real estate investments shown on the Balance Sheet amounting to $107,452.39 covers the property on Winner Road, the Mark White property on Truman Road, and also the property at 310 North Liberty Street, Independence, now referred to as our Social Service Center.

While it is anticipated that the activities of the Social Service Center will be largely self-sustaining, dependent of course upon a continuation of the fine volunteer help given by the women of Independence, the Oblation Fund has made possible the providing of facilities which will greatly enlarge their contributions under working conditions made pleasant, in comfortable and well-arranged quarters. This organization has been referred to in the past as "The Campus Shop," and motion pictures have been shown in previous Conferences of the activities carried on. Continued contributions to the Oblation Fund will broaden the services rendered.

We recognize that there is a need for homes for the aged in other centers of the church, and studies will be undertaken this year to determine the extent to which other facilities outside the Center Place may be needed, and also as to the advisability of their establishment. Under consideration at the present time is the need on the West Coast and in Canada, but further analysis and study will be needed before decision and action can be taken.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

This is another fund set up for the purpose of assuring us of a continuity of maintaining our church program. The amount in this fund has been placed at a figure approximating a year's operating expense. It would be most salutary to keep this fund at such a figure. Of necessity, because of the purpose of this fund, it is kept highly liquid.

STEWARDSHIP ENDOWMENT FUNDS

This represents the value of Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands which were hypothecated for the Graceland Endowment Fund bond issue. This was approved by the Conference of 1944. The beneficial interest of $211,183.70 is shown as an Asset in the General Fund Balance Sheet. The surplus arising out of farming operations will provide for capital improvements as conditions and circumstances justify.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUNDS

This represents funds set up by the authority of General Conference to provide for institutional building needs.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATION FUNDS

This fund consists of appropriations made for Auditorium construction, radio fund, and other items which are self-explanatory. This fund has been reduced due to the withdrawals for present work on the Auditorium.

STATEMENT OF NET WORTH

The Statement of Net Worth, "Exhibit C," reflects the changes that have taken place during the years 1948 and 1949, and shows the consolidation of all funds. The total Net Worth as of December 31, 1947, amounted to $7,426,647.63. At that time this was referred to as Surplus, which in strict accounting terminology is proper, but for the purpose of our report, we think the term Net Worth is more readily understood. The Net Worth as of December 31, 1949, was $12,151,293.70. A substantial part of this increase was due to the adjustment and addition of Real Estate valuations and Houses of Worship referred to in our comments on Houses of Worship Fund.

A careful study of the Statement of Net Worth will reveal the other items which have resulted in the increase. Excess of income over expense for both years, 1948 and 1949, amounting to $448,169.11 and $410,360.29 respectively, have gone to increase our Net Worth.

We should not be deceived by the large increase in Net Worth for, as stated, the amount of the adjustment in placing Houses of Worship properties on our books, not previously entered, while showing a progressive and healthy growth, is nevertheless an increase of Fixed Assets which are not usable for purposes of general financing.

As stated elsewhere in our comments, co-operation on the part of all congregations in reporting purchases, major improvements, and new construction will do much to keep our records current and obviate such extreme adjustments in the future.

GENERAL COMMENTS

We wish to call attention to the fact that, in our opinion, the progress made has been due to the splendid support given by the members of the church who have consistently contributed in tithes and offerings and have supported the church in branch, district, and stake. We are also grateful for the fine support given our financial program by the General Church, district, and stake officers, and the many local workers who have given liberally of time and resources.

Yet, despite all such, it is noted that there is a vast field in which there is need for additional work. Of our total domestic membership (including Canada and Hawaii) of 118,594, only 29,376 (24.77 per cent) were contributors to the General Church in 1948, and the number of those filing financial statements in 1949—while the largest in our experience—amounted to only 12,776, or 10.62 per cent of our 1949 membership. However, if we can continue to show the excellent gains evident in increase of numbers of those filing, it will do much to advance the work of the church.

The church is growing in all of its activities and expanding its program. We call attention to the need for increasing participation in the financial program if our goals—institutional, missionary, and economic—are to be attained. In our opinion there is no need to repeat the mistakes of past years which arose largely out of the attempt to do too much in too many fields of endeavor, with too little capital and without adequate reserves. Adherence to the principles of the financial policy which has proved its value will assure us of continued progress. Specific recommendations regarding financial and economic goals will be presented elsewhere to the Conference for its consideration and action.

It is our sincere prayer that financial administration may be directed to the attainment of the spiritual and economic goals and that our progress toward Zion may be accelerated.

Respectfully submitted,

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
G. L. DeLapp,
H. L. Livingston,
W. N. Johnson.

Report of Church Auditor's Report of Examination

To the First Presidency and General Conference:

I have examined the records of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, an unincorporated association with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, and have prepared the balance sheets of the funds as of December 31, 1948, and 1949, the related statements of income and expense, and net worth for the two-year period ended on that date. Without making a detailed audit, the accounting procedures of the church, the accounting records, and other evidence have been reviewed in support of the financial statements. My examination was made in accordance with the generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances, and tests were made to the extent I deemed appropriate.

The following comments apply to the balance sheets at December 31, 1948, and 1949, and to the transactions for the accounting periods then ended.

Cash in banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and by reconciliation.

United States Government and Canadian securities were examined at safe-deposit vaults.

GENERAL, LAND AND INHERITANCE, AND TEMPLE FUNDS

The assets, liabilities, and results of operations of the Central Development Association and the Real Estate Department are consolidated in this fund.

Cash in the hands of Bishops and Agents, except for funds held in missions abroad, was traced to subsequent receipts and deposits.

Funds due from the Australasian and Society Islands Missions are not included in the amount due from Bishops and Agents but are included in the assets of the Australasian and Society Islands Missions, respectively. Real estate contracts are assets of the Real Estate Department and are detailed in the Report of Examination of that department.

Accounts receivable, which includes amounts due from related institutions, were verified by reference to individual ledger sheets and by other supporting evidence.

Notes receivable were examined.

Inventories of feed, livestock, and supplies were taken and priced by farm managers. I tested the accuracy of pricing and computations of inventories and made tests of the physical count of the inventories at the Atherton and Spring Branch farms.

The beneficial interest in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund represents the difference between the depreciated value of the Atherton and Spring Branch real estate and the amount due Graceland College in the form of bonds and an account payable. The beneficial interest is increased by the expenditure of funds for capital items and reduced by annual provisions for depreciation. Earnings on these lands from farm operations are held in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund as earned capital.

Additions to furniture, fixtures, and equipment were examined, and depreciation in the amount of $1,800.00 for each year was charged to the General Fund as operating expense.

Unexpired insurance on real estate improvements and transportation deposits relative to the Society Islands Mission comprise the amount stated as deferred charges.

The assets entitled "Australasian Mission" represent the net worth of that mission at the close of each year as reported by the bishop in Australia.

Accounts Payable include accounts with vendors, active and inactive allowances payable, and withholding taxes payable. A major portion of the amount stated as payable at December 31, 1949, has subsequently been paid.

The Radio Room Improvement Fund was transferred to the Unexpended Appropriations Fund during the year 1949.

The amount carried as a Reserve for Exchange at December 31, 1948, has been eliminated, due to the revaluation of British and Australian funds.

Schedules of Administrative Expense (Schedule Number 1), Ministerial Expense (Schedule Number 2), and Contributions by Stakes and Districts (Schedule Number 3) are included in this report.

AGENCY FUND

The Agency Fund was created in 1942 in order to segregate from the General Fund and other funds all liabilities which for some reason could not be liquidated. It also acts as a depository for cash and bonds held for safekeeping for individuals and church organizations.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

The Consecration Agreement Fund was set up during 1942 to record the assets and liabilities relative to certain agreements entered into by the Presiding Bishopric with certain individuals.

These agreements arise out of a desire of individuals to make a contribution to the church and at the same time provide for themselves some security for the future. These agreements, as detailed in the accompanying schedules, are described as follows:

Class B: This class represents the type of agreement wherein the individual turns over to the church cash, bonds, or other negotiable assets as a consecration, in consideration of which the church agrees to pay the individual a regular amount each year, with the possibility of additional (liability reducing) payments in cases of need. The total amount of such additional payments is not to exceed the amount of the original consecration. Furthermore, when such additional amounts are paid, the amounts of the annual payments are reduced proportionately. The regular annual payments on the agreements do not reduce the maximum liability.

Class C: Under this type of contract the individual gives cash, bonds, and in some cases real estate as a consecration. There is no provision for regular annual payments, but the additional payment provision, as in Class B, is included. Some of these agreements provide for the payment of last sickness and funeral expenses. Where real estate has been conveyed to the church, the contract and the asset have been recorded at a nominal value. The liability in such cases is limited to the amount which is realized from the sale of the property.

Class D: This represents agreements where there is a definite amount payable per month or per annum but no additional payments are required.

Class E: This class represents non-negotiable notes, payable to the individual, which contain a provision that the note shall be canceled in the event of the death of the payee.

Class F: This class represents bonds payable, at the death of the payee, to the church and both the liability and the asset are carried at nominal value.

Real estate investment represents nominal values, plus costs of acquisition and improvements, of real estate consecrated under an agreement. Some of these agreements provide for a life estate in the real estate by the consecrator.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

Chapel accounts A, B, and C represent church buildings, reunion grounds, and historical properties respectively. As a result of a Houses of Worship appraisal survey, an adjustment was made as of December 31, 1949, to increase Chapel A properties to the appraised value of $5,689,006.94. A like adjustment was made to increase the Invested Surplus account.

Mortgages payable in the amount of $1,754.10 represent a liability of this fund to the General Fund (Real Estate Department).

Construction work on the Auditorium in excess of the appropriation in the amount of $5,107.84 is carried as a deferred charge at December 31, 1949.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

A revolving fund in the amount of $300,000.00 was established in 1946, and increased to $400,000.00 in 1948, as a means of assisting branches by means of loans, at a nominal rate of interest, in the construction of houses of worship.

Notes Receivable representing loans to branches and districts were examined.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

The Ministerial Reserve Fund was created in 1937 and has been increased in subsequent years by appropriations from the General Fund and by income from investments.

The requirements of this fund are computed by the church attorney and are based on the life expectancy of those appointees now covered. The assets of the fund are held to cover retirement costs, death benefits, and other contingent costs relative to future needs of appointees. This fund does not accrue for the benefit of any one minister or his dependents. The annual transfers of cash, although based on individual cases, build up a fund which can be used to provide the necessities of life to the appointee and his dependents after his retirement or after he has reached the age of seventy. The fund balances are carried separately on the books according to the purpose for which each is intended.

Family allowances for those appointees who have reached the age of seventy was charged to the Retirement Reserve in the amount of $14,289.00 in 1948, and $14,024.76 in 1949.

The Unallocated Reserve represents the segregated reserves which have been accumulated for those ministers whose appointments have terminated.

The Graceland College Faculty Retirement Reserve was created in May, 1942, and is based on an appropriation of $333.33 per month retroactive to January 1, 1942.

AUSTRALIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Fund appropriation of funds received and held in Australia. Subsequent additions have been covered by Conference appropriations.

Cash in banks and government bonds are stated as reflected in the audited reports received from the Bishop in Australia.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

This fund was set up in accordance with General Conference action on April 6, 1944. The original appropriation of $100,000.00 was to provide funds for appointment of personnel in interim conference periods, with further provision that up to $5,000.00 annually could be expended for the cost of a school of instruction for ministerial appointees, and provision for the expenditure of an amount not to exceed $2,500.00 to cover the cost of preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

Subsequent appropriations have rehabilitated the fund and increased the Surplus to $200,000.00.

OBLATION FUND

The Oblation Fund was created to record the contributions received as oblation subsequent to January 1, 1942, and to record the disbursement of these funds. This fund is restricted only to the extent that it shall be used "for the purpose of giving temporary aid and benevolences, and at the same time to make possible their use for the permanent rehabilitation of those who have become physically incapacitated or disabled, and who are worthy of the assistance and help of the church."

The surplus of this fund is increased or decreased by the operational deficit or surplus of Resthaven, Lamoni Saints' Home, and Liberty Home Farm.

Accounts, notes, and contracts receivable were examined and are considered to be well secured.

Real Estate Investment represents the Resthaven property, the Social Service Center Building, the Mark White property, and other property located in Independence, Missouri.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Conference action of April 6, 1944, the purpose being that of providing a fund of sufficient amount to permit the appropriation of operating expense from this fund rather than from the income of the current year.

STEWARDSHIP-ENDOWMENT FUND

General Conference action of April 6, 1944, authorized the segregation of the Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands as collateral for the bonds issued to the Graceland College Endowment Fund. The net difference between the real estate investment and the amount payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund is designated "Beneficial Interest-General Fund" and appears in the General Fund as an asset.

It is the expressed opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that "The net income from these lands is to be made available for improvements as may be necessary and required for the further development of the lands segregated." The capital account of this fund is the net earnings from operation of these lands.

The bonds payable to the Graceland College Endowment Fund mature January 6, 1956.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This fund was created by action of General Conference on April 6, 1944, and subsequent action. The funds are held subject to disbursement in accordance with the requirements contained in the appropriation.

The institutions for which these funds are held are designated in the balance sheet of this fund.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS FUND

This fund was created in 1947 in order to properly segregate funds held for future needs.

Allocation of these funds is detailed in the Surplus section of Fund Balance Sheet.

OPINION

In my opinion, the accompanying fund balance sheets and related statements of income and expense and net worth, present fairly the position of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at December 31, 1948, and 1949, and the results of its operations for the years then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

assist the Presidency. The new chaplain is J. C. Stuart. Carl Mesle, who has served the young people in Zion, will be in charge of young people's work for the church. Glaude A. Smith, to the intense gratification of his congregation, is retained as pastor of Stone Church.

Closing Thoughts

On Sunday afternoon an important and significant document, "Statement Regarding Surplus," was presented by the Presiding Bishopric and approved by the Conference.

President Israel A. Smith read the list of appointments. Among his final remarks he said, "I believe that we may reasonably expect that the eldership of the church will receive a great endowment. Like Israel of old, we are not great in numbers, but God is good to us, and we can prevail by the power of the Spirit. The Army of the Lord is on the march, and I am sure that we will make progress. The Book of Mormon is a great witness for Christ, and as it is true, there is no reason why we should not present it to the world."

This General Conference will be remembered for its spirit of peaceful unity and happy association, and for the desire of the people to work together. The outlook before the church is very hopeful, and there is before us the prospect of growth and achievement in the good cause. One feels like repeating to his friends the post card classic, "Wish you could have been here!"

Special Appropriations

INCREASE IN HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND..... This increases this fund from $400,000 to $600,000. There are already applications and possible loans as of March 1, 1950, of $207,500 more than is available in the fund of $400,000.00.	$200,000.00
WASHINGTON, D. C...... This is a part of a contemplated appropriation of $50,000 to supplement a similar amount to be raised by the local congregation to build a church edifice in our Nation's Capital.	15,000.00
REHABILITATION OF NAUVOO PROPERTIES AND GRAVE MARKERS..... This will provide for replacing logs in the Homestead and placing this historic property in good condition; also will provide suitable markers for the graves of the Martyrs and Emma Smith.	7,500.00
OPERATING RESERVE FUND..... It is to be noted that our Operating Budget now approximates $900,000. The Operating Reserve Fund is therefore increased $100,000, making a total of $900,000 which is in harmony with our financial policy and previous action taken by General Conferences.	100,000.00
GRACELAND COLLEGE MEN'S DORMITORY..... Authorization was recently given for the College to proceed with the building of the Men's Dormitory. INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM LOT..... For several years the General Church has negotiated for the lot west of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, owned by the Kansas City Power and Light Company. MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND—to rehabilitate up to $200,000.....	1,935.98
INCREASE IN AUDITORIUM FUND..... It is contemplated that this additional appropriation will provide funds to meet costs for completion of the roof, offices for the Quorum of Twelve and Seventy, Music and Radio Departments; provide storeroom and record room, and a council room; establish a library on the third floor; complete dining room with necessary heating and ventilating facilities.	75,000.00

MESSIAH BROADCAST..... To cover deficit for 1949. The total expense for 1949 amounted to $3,041.45, with a balance in the fund of only $843.06, leaving a deficit, as stated. This was inadvertently overlooked, as it was understood appropriations were made for 1949, but were not so set up.	2,198.39
RADIO STUDIO ORGAN DEFICIT..... An exchange of organs was made which provided an organ for the Auditorium at a net cost of $1,166.24.	1,166.24
STONE CHURCH ORGAN..... The Stone Church organ is used about 25 per cent of the time for radio work. An appropriation was previously made by the General Church of $3,000. The appropriation recommended here makes up the 25 per cent allocated to the General Church.	2,000.00
HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND—TRANSFER OF

THE CHURCH BEAUTIFUL

TWO YEARS AGO we suggested a project intended to stimulate a desire on the part of our people to take more pride in the appearance of our church properties. Owing to conditions over which we had no control, it was impossible to follow through last year. We are resuming the project again now.

There are two places in particular in which we should take pride: our home and our church. A congregation and the church are judged by the appearance of the house of worship. Though the building may be small, it can be well-kept and made attractive. Some landscaping, a few evergreens, shrubs and flowers, a well-trimmed lawn, and a little paint can make an otherwise ugly place look beautiful.

This is a splendid project for a church school class or a young people's group to undertake, and it means much to the branch.

We hope all branches will take a greater interest in the physical appearance of their houses of worship and enter this contest. For the most attractive church lawn, we will give two beautiful religious pictures, and for the second prize we will give one picture.

Send photographs, one in color and one in black and white, any time before October 1 to "Church Beautiful Project" in care of the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Church School and Church Music Workshop

IN THE LIGHT of the ever-present need for us to better qualify for service in Christ's church, it is imperative first that opportunities be provided whereby we may become aware of our needs and obtain more of the "know-how" in problem-solving; and second, that we accept responsibility to support worth-while activities planned for our help. Church school work and church music endeavor both hold positions of vital importance.

Confident that you too are aware of needs and that you are anxious to give your wholehearted support to constructive ventures, the Department of Religious Education and the Department of Music are joining forces and promoting an officially approved General Church activity—the Church School and Church Music Workshop, to be held on the Graceland College Campus, Lamoni, June 5-11. This workshop will be under the able supervision of two general church directors—Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder Franklyn S. Weddle.

The following is a brief review of what is included in the activities for the week: worship and discussion of the principles and procedures of public worship, music in worship, hymnology, organ materials, children and adult choir materials, church school music materials and methods, audio-visual demonstrations and discussions, a church school seminar, recreation.

This excellent program will be conducted by a well-qualified staff, assisted by a number of visiting instructors who are specialists in their fields. The faculty will include Richard Carter, John Darling, Kleta Finley, Reed M. Holmes, Bethel Knoche, Marvin McDole, Aleta Runkle, Eleanor Sandy, Glaude A. Smith, and Franklyn S. Weddle.

The guest faculty will include Henry Anderson, Roy Benson, Roy Cheville, Paul Craig, Mrs. F. Henry Edwards, Deam Ferris, Evan Fry, William Graves, and Chris B. Hartshorn.

The complete fee of $30 covers room and board, study materials, and instructional costs. What an opportunity to improve in the Master's work! Register now! Mail the completed registration form with $5.00 registration fee deposit to the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. The balance of $25.00 will be payable at Graceland College on the opening day, June 5. (If emergency prevents attendance refunds will be paid till May 27.)

phones." It was announced that Elder James A. Thomas, whose ordination to the office of evangelist had been previously approved, would be ordained along with the others at the service to be held at Stone Church on Friday.

A new resolution regarding the selection and ordination of Seventies by the Council of Presidents of Seventy, subject to approval of the First Presidency and Council of Twelve, was adopted. A motion that the time limit for the introduction of new business at the Conference be set at 3:00 p. m. Friday was also approved.

The final item of business to be presented was the recommendation that the next General Conference convene on Sunday, March 30, 1952. It received unanimous approval.

Thursday:

F. A. Smith, president emeritus of the Evangelical Quorum, was presented to the Conference assembly by Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith at the beginning of the session. The eighty-eight-year-old patriarch took his place at the tribune and related some of the high lights of his many years in the ministry and expressed his hopes for the future. Secretary Frank McDonald then gave the minutes of Wednesday's meeting, which were approved, and President Israel A. Smith read a letter from Kathryn E. Griffiths, wife of Gomer T. Griffiths, concerning Brother Griffith's illness.

The first business brought before the Conference for discussion was the Schedule of Recommended Appropriations (see pages 27 and 28). After Bishop G. L. DeLapp had analyzed the allotments and the schedule as a whole was approved, a motion was made to increase the amount designated for Ministry to College Students from $500 to $1,000. After some discussion, a vote was taken which defeated the motion.

A message from the Presidents of Seventy was read recommending Russell F. Ralston's ordination to the office of President of Seventy. This was unanimously approved, and it was announced that the ordination would take place at the opening of Friday's business session.

Pauline Arnsen, Chairman of the General Council of Women, was then requested to introduce each of the members of the council. The ten women took their places on the platform and were presented to the Conference. Some of the members were unable to be present.

A Communication from The Presidency was read recommending that the Saints in Independence be organized into the Center Stake of Zion, with Elder Charles V. Graham as president and Harold W. Cackler as bishop. Following approval of this proposal, two other similar documents were presented recommending the organization of Los Angeles Stake, with Elder Garland E. Tickemyer as president and J. Stanley Kelley as bishop, and Detroit International Stake with Elder W. Blair McClain as president and L. Wayne Updike as bishop. After much discussion on the issue, a vote was taken and both proposals were approved.

Verne Deskin and Charles Grabske, whose six-year terms as trustees of Graceland College expire this Conference, were selected to succeed themselves, with L. F. P. Curry being selected to fill the unexpired term of John F. Garver. The motion to increase the number of members on the Board of Trustees from seven to nine was approved.

The final item of business to be presented was a resolution drafted by the Chicago District concerning the establishment of a Department of Planning and Research to expedite the Gathering. Due to the lateness of the hour, the matter was deferred for discussion on Friday.

Friday:

A brief worship service in observance of Good Friday preceded the regular business session. Elder John W. Rushton gave the invocation, Scripture reading, and memorial address. Music was provided by the Graceland College Octet. At the close of this service, Russell F. Ralston was ordained to the office of President of Seventy.

Upon approval of the minutes of Thursday's meeting, Secretary Frank McDonald read a report from the Registration Committee which stated that as of 1:30 p.m., Friday, 5,416 delegates, ex officio, visitors, and hosts had registered. A report from the Committee on Administration revealed that 227 persons had received administration since the beginning of Conference. The resignation of A. B. Phillips, church historian, was read, and the Conference gave him a rising vote of thanks for his good work through the years. Elder John Blackmore was elected to take his place. The resolution for establishing a committee for Zion planning and research which was presented at the close of Thursday's session was again brought before the Conference. After much discussion the resolution was voted upon and defeated.

The last document to be presented was the resolution that the First Presidency and Statistical Department be assigned to perfect a system of selecting alternate delegates to be set up and placed in operation prior to the next General Conference. It was voted that the matter be deferred until Saturday for discussion.

Saturday:

The first matter to be brought before the Conference was the proposal for alternate delegates on which voting was deferred at Thursday's meeting. It was defeated. Apostle Reed M. Holmes presented a six-point program for ministry to Book of Mormon peoples, which included consideration of strengthening the church along the Mexican border and establishing a mission headquarters at Mexico City. It proposed that $25,000 be set aside from the Missionary Reserve Fund to take care of this expansion and to finance the printing of the Book of Mormon and selected tracts in Spanish. The proposal contained the recommendation that a General Church appointee be authorized as soon as practicable to work with the Mexicans and other Spanish-speaking nationals. It also recommended that work among the Indians in the United States be promoted. After approval of this proposal, Secretary Frank McDonald read a recommendation from the Indian Welfare Committee concerning specific measures to increase proselyting among the Indians. It was unanimously accepted. Members of the Committee for Archaeological Research were re-elected for the coming Conference period, and a resolution from the Quorum of High Priests stating ideals for ministry in the home was approved. Revision of the Rules of Order (which appeared previously in the Herald) was also approved.

Statements regarding surplus were then distributed to be voted on at the final business session. The resolution to appoint a committee to decide trends in church architecture was discussed, and a substitute proposal recommended. After a lengthy discussion, the Conference voted to accept the substitute. The resolution on human rights was also replaced by a substitute proposal from the High Priests' Quorum, which proposal was accepted.

This, the longest business session of the Conference, was adjourned at 5:45 p.m.

Sunday:

The statement regarding surplus which was presented in printed leaflets to the Conference on Saturday was voted upon and unanimously accepted. President Israel A. Smith then called to the platform A. B. Phillips, C. I. Carpenter, and Gomer R. Wells for the honor of super-

Following a rising vote of thanks from the Conference, each man was presented a red carnation boutonniere by Pauline Arnsen, chairman of the General Council of Women. Superannuation pins will be provided later. A report from the Registration Committee stated that a total of 5,454 persons had registered for the 1950 General Conference; this exceeded all years subsequent to 1930.

Following the vote to sustain the Presidency, quorums, and departments of the church, President Israel A. Smith read the list of appointments. As their names were called, the appointees took their places on the platform; when all had assembled, Conference delegates and visitors joined them in singing the traditional, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go." After they were seated, Secretary Frank McDonald read the minutes of the final session, and the Conference was adjourned.

In 1907 the Terrys moved to Perkins County and in 1911 to Keith County where Brother Terry engaged in farming until 1928 when they moved to Ogallala, Nebraska. He was a member of the Order of Odd Fellows, Ogallala Lodge Number 274.

He is survived by his wife Edna; four daughters: Mrs. Swan Monson and Mrs. Pete Gronborg of Paxton, Nebraska; Mrs. Thomas Linn of Brule, Nebraska; and Mrs. Ray Franken of Roscoe, Nebraska; a son Harold of Ogallala; eleven grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Bracken Mortuary, the Reverend C. E. Mortensen officiating. Interment was in the Paxton Cemetery under the direction of the Ogallala I. O. O. F. Lodge.

CLARK.—John George, son of James and Ellen Clark, was born November 5, 1884, at South Melfort, Saskatchewan, and died at his home near Pleasant Hill, Missouri, on March 18, 1950. On May 23, 1909, he became a member of the Reorganized Church and remained faithful to it throughout his life. In 1913 he was married (wife's name not given) in Canada; two children, Gladys and George, were born to this union. Because of his wife's ill health, the family moved first to Independence, Missouri, and then to Arizona where she died in 1915. In 1919 he returned to Independence where he was married on April 2 of that year to Sadie Olinger; eight children were born to them. Leaving Independence in 1930, they made their home near Raytown, Missouri; then in Lone Jack, Missouri; and at Pleasant Hill from 1944 until his death.

He is survived by his wife, Sadie; four daughters: Mrs. Gladys Irby, Mrs. Elsie Van Gordon, and Mrs. Clara Miller, all of Kansas City, Missouri; and Mrs. Lucille Kill of Overland Park, Kansas; six sons: George of Los Angeles, California; Stanley of Kansas City, Kansas; Fred and Robert of Kansas City, Missouri; James and Joseph of the home; a brother, James, of Canada; three sisters: Mrs. John Waite, Mrs. A. E. Waite, and Mrs. H. M. Wilkinson, all of Canada; and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Pleasant Hill, Elder Merton Loveland officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

YOUNG.—Rachel Zimmerman, was born on February 6, 1867, at Osseo, Minnesota, and died at her home in LaMoure, North Dakota, at the age of eighty-three (date of death not given). She had been ill about a year. At the age of twenty she went to St. Paul to learn the dressmaking trade. There she met her future husband, John Young, to whom she was married on May 14, 1891. They moved immediately to North Dakota, where Mr. Young had previously erected a pioneer home. As seamstress for the settlement, Mrs. Young was often called upon to make dresses for brides and shrouds for the dead. Although she experienced many pioneer-day trials, she never regretted coming to North Dakota. Until her death she kept abreast with world conditions and only a few hours before passing away, she expressed concern that her illness was keeping her son, United States Senator Milton R. Young, from Washington during the controversial farm support legislation. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Besides Senator Young she leaves two other sons: Dr. C. F. Young of Fargo, North Dakota, and Raymond J. Young of LaMoure; two brothers: Casper of LaComer, Washington, and Henry J. Zimmerman of Portland, Oregon; nine grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. A son and daughter preceded her in death.

CORRECTION

VAIL.—Katherine, was married to Frank Hewitt in 1885 rather than 1910 as stated in the obituary which appeared in the Herald of March 20.

* ON BEING ANGRY

Something ought to be said about being angry. We do it so often and bungle it so badly. We all need help with it.

Very few people can avoid being angry at some time, and they have to do a stiff bit of pretending. Even the sweetest tongue will distill some acid at times. David said, "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart" (Psalm 55: 21). That's how a cultivated person gets angry.

We need a technique for deflating anger. Some questions will help. 1. Whom does anger hurt most?—The angry one, of course. 2. Does it solve any problem? Rarely ever. 3. Whom does it help?—Nobody.

Anger is a fire that burns down the house of friendship. It makes a lot of rebuilding necessary.

Here are some rules that will help:

1. Avoid being angry as long as possible. Try not to do it at all.
2. If you are angry, keep quiet. Avoid speaking until you have cooled down. If necessary, ask for time before you decide anything or say anything.
3. Examine the whole situation and see where you are at fault. There is a reason for everything. If somebody says something mean to you, it may be your fault more than his. You may need repentance more than he does. A prayer to God for forgiveness, and an apology to the offended person will help you.
4. When you are angry, try to get over it as soon as possible, because it will make you suffer until you do.

* HUNTING

Someone mentioned the "Why Bird" recently, and we suppose he is back again. He always visits our office, too, and would anybody like to lend a good shotgun to the Reception Committee?

* BOOKS AND FAME

If you are ever tempted to attain immortal fame and temporary wealth by writing a book, go visit a secondhand bookstore, and share the apathy of the Preacher, "Of the making of many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness of the flesh" (Ecclesiastes 12: 12). Each dusty volume represents the once bright hopes of some author, pouring out his mind and heart to fill those pages. They all come at last to this dismal end, if not on the bonfire, their battered covers and dog-eared leaves gathering dust and waiting for final oblivion. Most novels are poor things from their beginnings, and factual works start their obsolescence at the moment of their publication. The world has traveled on down the highway of time, leaving such things as books far behind. . . . Dear friend, what you agonize to write today will not matter tomorrow. Really, must you write a book? Eat, live, and be merry, for time renders all thoughts obsolete alike. . . . A thousand will talk to an author for everyone that reads his book. Writers are more honored with lip service than purchase, and even those that are bought with money are often carried home and not read. . . . Must you write that book?

The April Lamb

Pride — Vice or Virtue?

BY THEIR FRUITS ye shall know them," and even pride is not all bad. Teachers and parents frequently admonish their too-easily-satisfied children, "Have more pride about your work." We are really proud of our children and our friends when by the diligent application of their full capacity they succeed in a worth-while task. There is even a justifiable pride in one's appearance—cleanliness and clothing. It was not idle talk when the Lord said: "Men of God who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing."

Every good thing can be abused to our sorrow. There are no automatic brakes on automobiles to stop us from going to roadhouses of vice and crime at dangerous speeds. Neither are there automatic brakes to keep us from eating ourselves sick. Likewise there is a point beyond which pride ceases to become a virtue.

"Pride . . . do I hate," said the Lord. In the first year of the church's existence, the Lord warned three times, "Beware of pride." Twice the revelations have pointed out that there was danger in becoming proud of our garments. "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12; 119: 3.

There is another aspect of the vice of pride. It is a little harder to describe, but just as important to recognize. It is the opposite of humility. It makes it difficult for us to see that we are wrong; that the ideas of others have value. Thus we become intolerant of criticism and hard to work with. "Only by pride cometh contention."—Proverbs 13: 10. Since we have been repeatedly admonished to "let contention cease," this church must also be guilty of carrying the sin of pride.

News & Notes

APOSTLES

Members of the Council of Twelve are kept as busy with follow-up business of Conference as with business during Conference. Appointees must be interviewed by the Apostles in regard to their new assignments. Schedules and supplies must be arranged for the men before they enter their fields.

Immediately after Conference Apostle Percy Farrow returned to his home in Michigan because of the illness of his wife.

SUNRISE SERVICE

The annual presentation of the Easter pageant, "He Is Risen," was given Easter morning at the Floral Hills Memorial Gardens near Independence. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland College was a speaker at the program. Elder Daniel Belcher was the director of the play.

The White Masque Players have presented this pageant for seventeen years. Several of the actors have taken the same parts for a number of years.

Although the morning was cloudy, 3,000 people attended the program. Kansas City Public Service busses left Stone Church at 5:45 in the morning to take people to the sunrise service.

NEW ASSISTANT

Roy Stearns of Everett, Washington, has become the executive secretary to the Council of Twelve. Brother Stearns comes to his office from a position as secretary to the western traffic manager of the Milwaukee railroad at Seattle. During General Conference he served as a stenographer on the Conference platform.

SANITARIUM

Dr. Roy A. Cheville of Graceland College was guest speaker at the Student Fellowship Service on March 16 at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. He presented an interesting review of his travels last summer in England, France, Belgium, Holland, and Germany.

FORMER MEMBERS

Elder Garland Tickemyer presented an Easter message to the Lion's Club at its weekly meeting, April 5. Brother Tickemyer was one of the founders of the club. Brother Ed Larsen, a former officer and charter member of the club, and Brother John Sheehy of Toronto, Ontario, were also present at the meeting.

GUEST SPEAKER

Elder Glaude Smith, pastor of Stone Church, was the guest speaker at the community Easter Service held in Maysville, Missouri, on April 5. About 150 people of several denominations attended the service which was held in the Maysville Methodist Church.

INDIAN YOUNG PEOPLE

Representatives of three tribes, the Pawnee, Omaha, and the Kaw Indians, from Haskell Institute, the government school at Lawrence, Kansas, were among the Conference guests. Lyman Edwards, son of President and Mrs. F. H. Edwards, instructor on the teaching staff in the printing department of Haskell, brought the group of students to the Conference. Mrs. Lyman Edwards is also an instructor at the Institute.

Your Place of Service

"Serve Where You Are"

—The Pastoral Theme for May.

Your place of service is where the nearest need occurs.

* * * * *

One morning of the recent General Conference there was snow on the ground, and it covered the wide concrete terrace at the north entrance of the Auditorium. It created a hazard for the hundreds of people who would be entering the building that day. Then a brother came along, looking for work. Most people expect pay, but he was looking for work that offered none. He found a snow shovel somewhere and immediately began to clear the snow away. In a little while a younger man saw him, got another shovel, and began to help. In less than an hour they had the job done They were looking for work for their hands, not for their tongues. Such men are God's volunteers. They found plenty of work near at hand.

* * * * *

Even if you have read this before, or heard it read, you should consider it again very carefully:

Ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Henry van Dyke's very beautiful narrative poem, "The Legend of Service," is recalled from memory. It tells of an angel who obtained permission to go on a quest to learn which of God's servants on earth loved Him best. He selected three men of renown and gave them the test. To each man he whispered these words:

He whom thou lovest bids thee go
To Spiron's huts, across the snow,
To serve him there.

Two demurred at the humble task to be performed in that isolated and despised place. The third accepted joyously, and received the prize of God's blessing.

There is no place too small for service.

* * * * *

Some years ago there was in a large congregation a brother who often complained that he was never given anything to do. A little on the "high and mighty" side, he expected something important.

On Communion Sundays crowds were large, and there was an overflow service in the basement. It was a humble gathering, but the good Spirit often blessed the people. Help was needed, and one Sunday he was asked to assist. But when he saw the setting and the small crowd, he snorted, "You haven't anything for me to do here!" turned his coattails, and went upstairs. He was too good for so humble a service. . . . He has gone to his reward—whatever it may be—and one trusts that he has received instruction in the spirit of service.

It is not in the spirit of Christ to be too good for any of his work.

Jesus ministered to many humble people, as well as the great: blind beggars, a poor woman, numerous sinners, and little children. Do you suppose he would have been too proud to go downstairs to talk to the junior department? Would he have been too important to take charge of an overflow service?

Paul's first missionary work in Europe was done at a little gathering of women who met by the river for prayer. Imagine how the work at Philippi would have gone if he had insisted on speaking in the synagogue, or at the leading heathen temple!

When we are asked to perform some humble service, let us think of these things.

* * * * *

Wherever you are, Christ has work that needs to be done, and you can help do it. Perhaps you live near some small, struggling branch that calls for your attendance and support. Perhaps there is a class that needs a teacher, a group of women without a leader, some young people who want a friend. These are your opportunities.

Wherever there are people, there are souls to be saved, and in need of ministry. The member in a little branch is just as precious to God as one in a big branch. People are saved as individuals, not as groups.

Christ is calling you. He needs you where you are. You don't have to cross the seas to serve him. You may only cross the street to find the place where he wants you to serve.

Locally, you may find only the old frustrating combination of people, problems, and perplexities. To labor for Christ, you would like to go far away, perhaps to a foreign country. You pray, "Send me anywhere, Lord, but here!"

There was a nostalgic little song on the radio about "Far Away Places." That lure gets all of us at times. There isn't much to it. Westering pioneers had a saying, "The hills look green a long way off." The mirage is always at a distance; no one ever caught up with its fringed palms and its cool waters.

Serve where you are. God needs you there. Do not abandon the little flock for the hope of a greater one. Remember how far the Good Shepherd went for one lost sheep!

"Religion and Life" Award Presented to Canadian Boy Scout

By John R. Darling, Associate Director,
Department of Religious Education

STANLEY CAMERON JAY of Hamilton, Ontario, has the honor of being the first Boy Scout of Canada to be presented the Religion and Life award as sponsored by our church. This is the Canadian Boy Scout religious award comparable to the God and Country award of the Boy Scouts in the States.

Cameron's life and accomplishments can well serve as an example to other boys of the church; he is to be commended for his high ideals and unwavering consecration. While Cameron is only twenty years old, he already has accomplished much toward his life's work.

In response to a request for information, a sketch of his life was received from Brother and Sister Leslie Hill, with whom he made his home while attending school in Hamilton. Brother Hill, too, has supervised his requirements in the Religion and Life program, and we are sure Cameron would desire that credit be given to the Hills for their share in his success.

Brother Hill writes:

Cameron was born on April 4, 1929, at Lauder, Manitoba. He lived there until 1935 when he moved to Hamilton. He became very active in the Boy Scout program, working his way up to Patrol leader and assistant Scout leader. He has also won the Bushman's Thong and the King Scout Badge, two much-coveted awards of the Boy Scouts of Canada.

He attended the Tweedsmuir school in Hamilton where he received his public school training. He then went to Central Collegiate for five years and obtained his Normal School entrance. In 1949 he obtained his teacher's certificate, and is now teaching in Fairfield school at Hamilton and working toward his B.A. degree.

Cameron was baptized on April 5, 1943, and has always been very active in church school and Zion's League activities. At the present time he is president of the League in Hamilton. In November, 1949, he was ordained a priest. He is much interested in his church, and every indication points to the fact that he will make a worthy contribution to the work of the church wherever he may be.

He is active in Scouting and hopes that some time in the near future he will have more time to devote to it.

Pastor F. Eldson Oliver adds:

I have known Cameron for the past fourteen years and have watched him grow up from a young boy into a fine young man. We have noted his spiritual growth, his expanding knowledge of the doctrine of the church and its applications in his everyday life. In his school-work he has applied himself diligently, and through his own personal labor has been able to continue his education. It has been a long, hard struggle, and he has richly earned his reward. We do not hesitate in recommending him as worthy to receive the highest award in Scouting, the Religion and Life award. He is a credit to this splendid youth organization and a decided asset to our own church.

The Department of Religious Education and the church extend congratulations to Cameron for his good work and wish for him God's rich blessings and guidance throughout his life.

Our Economic Goals

The Address Given at General Conference on Sunday, April 2

By BISHOP G. LESLIE DeLAPP

SCRIPTURE READING: Our critics have missed more than all else this Zion-melody in their telling, perhaps because its notes have not been clear enough, but the fact remains that without it, the story would scarcely be worth telling, for the greatest heritage we have from our fathers who wrote the story of their faith in blood and tears, is the belief that this "leitmotif," this plea for universal brotherhood, will someday rise at last to a grand triumphal chant—the glorious finale which has been the dream of our youth, the goal of maturity and the heart's longing of our aged ones through three long generations—"the redemption of Zion."—The Story of the Church, Inez Smith Davis, pages 9, 10.

IT SEEMS FITTING as we think of the economic goals of the church that we evaluate them in the light of the deep yearnings and emotions that have activated our people toward their accomplishment since they were vitalized in the minds and hearts of those who were responsible in bringing forth the Restoration Movement. We must think of them in terms of their spiritual implications and their relationship to the development of Christian personality.

Zion has been the great objective since the beginning of time, and its fulfillment is to be realized in the consummation of the purposes revealed in the revelations given through the latter-day prophet. This statement is essential to emphasize my fundamental belief and conviction relative to the ultimate accomplishment of God's divine purpose in us and of my faith in the reality of Zion. This conviction is forcefully emphasized because much of that which I have to say may be considered by many to be negative and a deterrent to the enthusiasm which some have relative to the immediacy of solutions to the problems respecting Zion's establishment.

A review of our history should be helpful in clarifying some of the conditions which have prevailed in the past and which have been a definite factor in the progress—or lack of progress, as one may look at it—of the church in its march toward Zion. The goals of the church may be restated briefly as the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the development of a truly Christian philosophy of life; associated with this is the practical organization of life in its economic and social aspects in harmony with Christian principles—this we term Zion.

In section 38 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the church was advised that in Ohio, where the members were commanded to go, they would be given the law. In that same revelation, certain men were to be appointed to look after "the poor and needy, to administer to their relief . . . to govern the affairs of the property of this church." Subsequently, in compliance with that commandment, the law was given which we know as Section 42, sometimes referred to as the "constitutional law of the church." This had to do with the consecration of properties for the support of the poor, the rendering of accounts to the bishop, establishing stewardships, making provision for the storehouse, the purchase of land, the building of houses of worship, and for the gathering. This law comprehended a vast social program which challenged the best that could be given to it at that time. Today it still stands as a challenge to us.

IN THE LIGHT of the objectives set forth, it is interesting to note that the broad aspects of the movement were undertaken, and the church moved westward to Kirtland, to Independence, Missouri, finally to Far West and Nauvoo, where it consistently attempted to organize and put into effect the principles of the gospel as they were revealed through the prophet, Joseph Smith. While the history of that period shows it was one of opposition and persecution from without, the church possessed elements of growth which might have eventuated in a more complete practical demonstration of its social ideals and objectives, had it not also possessed elements that produced internal dissension and contention.

It is rather difficult for the average student today to evaluate all the forces and factors which brought about the breakup and disintegration of the church in 1844. Some of these factors, however, can be understood. Chief among them was the rapid increase in membership, which made difficult complete indoctrination of ideals and philosophy; attempts at economic organization beyond the strength of the membership either financially or in qualified personnel; and internal strife and dissension. I mention this only because it may be helpful to us in understanding our present situation, to which reference will be made at considerable length subsequently.

Following the breakup of the church in 1844, there were seven dark years in which little life was evidenced on the part of those who remained true and loyal to the original teachings of the church. In 1851 the process of reorganization began which resulted in the drawing together of various small nuclei, and by 1860 it was possible to effect the reorganization of the church.

AS ONE STUDIES our history he sees the particular period from 1860 to 1895 as one of reorganization, a period of restatement of our basic beliefs and philosophy, a period of defense against the false doctrines which were adopted and made effective by the great body of the church which moved westward. So these thirty-five years were spent in the groundwork of reforming and reorganizing the church, most of which necessarily was done in the field of missionary endeavor and in an attempt to draw the Saints together in common endeavor.

That there were real problems confronting the church in those days and great concern regarding those who had moved westward is evidenced in the admonition given in April, 1877,

That the work of restoration to which the people of my church are looking forward may be hastened in its time, the elders must cease to be overcareful concerning the return of those who were once of the faith but were overcome in the dark and cloudy day, fearing lest they should bring in hidden heresies to the overthrowing of the work; for verily, there are some who are chosen vessels to do good, who have been estranged by the hindering snares which are in the world and who will in due time return unto the Lord if they be not hindered by the men of the church. The Spirit says, "Come"; let not the ministers for Christ prevent their coming.—Section 119: 4.

As one studies that period, he may marvel that progress was actually made. The fact that progress was made is an evidence of the divinity within the movement and of the basic integrity and loyalty of those who felt responsible to further the work of the church. This period was spent in reaffirming the original precepts, doctrines, and beliefs of the church, and there came the development of a spiritual philosophy as a base upon which the church could build.

Because of the scattered condition under which our members lived, there was little need and opportunity for emphasis on the social or Zionite phases of our work, but with this primary work established, there was an enlargement of a social concept on the part of the church.

With the gathering of our people, there was developed a sense of responsibility to its members in both benevolent and educational fields. It was at this time that Graceland College was founded and the Saints' Home established.

WHETHER THE DEPRESSIONS of 1893 and 1894, 1896 and 1897 had effect upon the thinking of our people is a matter of conjecture. However, there seems to be a tendency for members to turn more toward the Zionite philosophy in times of economic adversity than when business conditions are more favorable. This is also true in times when there is evidence of potential strength of unfriendly nations, which causes us to fear the possibility of oppression. Whatever the cause, there is evidence that through this era and beginning more noticeably in 1915 there was an expansion of the educational effort to relate our spiritual philosophy with our financial and social emphases, all of which was inherent in the original doctrine of the church in 1830.

There is an important point here to keep in mind: this emphasis was out of proportion to and without due consideration of the economic costs involved—that is, because of the intense drive put forth by those who were in positions of leadership and undoubtedly because of the desires of the people, the momentum of the church in this direction was greater than its numerical and economic strength seemed to justify. There was no question about the urgency of the call or the desire to make progress, for the word to the church, as found in Section 132 given in 1916, was:

Everywhere the demand for greater activity exists, and for the accomplishment of our work the great essential is fraternal co-operation in service to man and devoted consecration to God and his work, and again in 1925 (Section 135) there was emphasis of the hastening time and the promise of real accomplishment:

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.

It is also evident that the efforts made were undertaken without adequate preparation and without sufficient consideration of all of the factors involved, which were essential to the success of such undertakings.

IN 1917 the church was practically free from debt, and it is almost inconceivable that in a short period of eight years it could have become heavily involved financially; nevertheless the record is clear in this respect. During those eight years projects were undertaken which, though of considerable merit, were obviously beyond the ability of the church to finance, or at least beyond the willingness of its members to support. There are always those who say, "We could have done it if . . ." but Zion cannot be established upon potential strength alone; it must be built upon actual strength indicated by the willingness of people to consecrate and to give. So this period of eight years was marked in the financial sense by an overworking of limited capital.

The Graceland Endowment Stewardship project, involving between $200,000 and $300,000, was started. The Auditorium project was undertaken, and in a statement put out by the then Presiding Bishop, B. R. McGuire, $500,000 was asked for this purpose, an amount of $878,000 was subscribed, and the amount actually received was $481,137.92. On the face of it this was a remarkable achievement, but the total program undertaken was beyond the ability of the church to finance.

With the depression of 1921, a considerable number of men were added to the missionary lists only to be dropped in 1922 because of financial difficulties. Operating losses were sustained in the fiscal years 1921 to 1925 inclusive, totaling almost $300,000, and money was borrowed from the Auditorium Fund to meet operating deficits. The whole period from 1921 to 1931 was marked by projects undertaken, in addition to the Graceland Endowment, the stewardship project, the Auditorium, a sheep-raising project in the Ozarks, an insurance company, the expansion of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and the building of a dormitory for Graceland College (with borrowed money). All of this resulted in the intermingling of funds, the accumulation of obligations including encumbrances on the Auditorium, on farm lands, on real estate, on the hospital, on the Graceland dormitory, short-term debenture notes unsecured, and obligation on short-term notes to banks, totaling approximately $1,866,000.

AS WE LOOK BACK at that period, we see and understand the tremendous urge to expand our facilities, to speed up the gathering, to broaden our educational horizons, to enlarge our missionary endeavors.

What is said here is not said in criticism but matter-of-factly, because I wish to point out that there is a definite relationship between the attainment of economic and spiritual goals and financial administration. Undoubtedly many of these projects were undertaken in an attempt to carry out the provisions of the law:

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9.

Without question, there were attempts to achieve the purposes and goals of the church as set forth in Section 42. But as we review that history, we need to keep in mind the total scope of the law which has to do with the laying of foundations for the church as such to enable it to have the spiritual and economic stability to assure success in the endeavors that it undertakes.

To climb up a mountain part way, to become exhausted again and again in the attempt, brings neither satisfaction nor comfort. The mountain-climber who has not provided himself with adequate equipment and has not developed the stamina—both physical and spiritual—essential to the ascent of great heights, had best make preparation to provide that equipment and that spiritual and physical stamina if he expects to envision the beauties of a world visible only from that mountaintop. Likewise those who would build Zion must develop a spiritual stamina which will be evidenced by the development of talents and the consecration of those talents and material resources to the cause of Zion. The church made the effort but exhausted itself in the attempt because of inadequate preparation.

It was because of this experience that the councils of the church, in 1931, adopted its financial policy which was approved by the General Conference of 1932, and which has been approved subsequently by conferences as the reports of the Bishopric have specifically referred to this policy and have received the endorsement and approval of General Conferences. The policy adopted was designed not only to correct the difficulties which the church encountered when it was faced with the depression of 1931—an economic collapse greater than any that has ever been experienced in the history of our country—but also to maintain the church on a stable and going basis in the years following. Within that financial policy which had at the time, in addition to the five fundamental principles:

1. Arrest expansion
2. Liquidate assets
3. A balanced budget
4. Operate economically
5. Pay indebtedness

the additional principles of "Create Reserves." Herein those of us who had specific responsibility felt that we were in harmony with the divine will respecting the creation and organization of the storehouse, for the storehouse principle is that of the establishment of reserves to meet the economic needs of society in times of low income and economic adversity.

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.

THE BEGINNING necessarily had to be the strengthening of the financial status of the church and applying the principles of the storehouse to the financial administration which was to affect the entire church. The result of the application of this law has made possible the segregation of funds to meet the specific needs for which these funds were raised.

In 1931 eighty-four men were released from the missionary force. Some of us had the unhappy and unpleasant experience of sitting down face to face with men who had dedicated themselves to the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ and saying to them: "The church can no longer use your services. It is your responsibility to go out into a world where unemployment is widespread, and despite inexperience and lack of training in the field of industry and business, see what you can do to provide yourselves a livelihood."

Nevertheless in this period of depression there was evidence of a devotion and a spiritual fiber within the church which was indicative of the extent to which the philosophy of the church was ingrained within the hearts and souls of its members. Despite all the privation and heartaches and human sufferings, men adjusted themselves to the situation, and the members of the church responded in depriving themselves of just wants, and many times of the basic necessities of life, to conform to this policy of debt-elimination and the strengthening of the church.

The recent reports of the Presiding Bishopric have shown the results of the application of this policy, and any thinking person must recognize that through a period of depression and war, many of the larger aspects and objectives of the church have necessarily not been attained. Nevertheless they are yet before us for attainment. It must be remembered that during this period a great deal of progress has been made. There is substantial evidence of results attained—not just accidentally, but because of thorough planning and the organization of our forces to the attainment of specific goals.

The strengthening of our financial position is, without question, a remarkable achievement, and credit must go to that small section of our total membership which has consistently adhered to the financial law of the church and which has, month after month, year after year, contributed in tithes and offerings not only to maintain the work of the church, but also to help in the establishment of reserves which have given the church its present stability.

THE GATHERING has not been overlooked during this period. It has been discussed, policies have been developed, and direction has been given to those who are interested in locating in the central areas. Specific areas and communities were designated; meetings have been held consistently with the stake officers (particularly with the bishops who gave unlimited time and attention to those who have indicated their desire to gather and who have been in a position to do so). Questionnaires have been developed, calling for information to serve as a guide in giving such direction. Agricultural programs have been carefully and systematically developed and followed. The utilization of some 5,500 acres of land has served to provide a livelihood and the opportunity for the accumulation of resources with which to purchase individual farms for a number of our members. Studies of the soil and balanced farming programs have been carried on in connection with land usage. Additional land has been acquired looking toward the time when it would be available for needed community development. Our stakes have been strengthened by adding trained personnel as personnel or funds became available.

Progress has been made in caring for the aged and the poor. Additional homes have been purchased for the aged in Independence, and plans are under way for the enlargement of the property across from the Sanitarium to provide adequate facilities for the care of the aged. We are now at a point where we need to use again the Home for the Aged at Lamoni, Iowa, and this will be done as soon as provision is made for the needs of the college for additional dormitory facilities to release the Home for the Aged building.

A new project which involves the investment of thousands of dollars is now in process and will serve as a Social Service Center for this area. It is anticipated that facilities are to extend throughout all the districts of the church, in so far as may be possible and practicable.

Training has been carried on for the Aaronic priesthood, and studies have been made available to the Aaronic priesthood pertaining specifically to the care of the poor and needy, and ministry to the home.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital has been substantially completed. This building was without a roof in 1931 and stood uncompleted until 1940. An additional $175,000 has been appropriated and is now available for providing additional facilities for this institution, the plans for which are in process of completion.

Considerable work has been done on the Auditorium, which—some of you will remember—was covered in front with tar paper and boards in 1931. Now a project is under way to roof the building, including the facing of the walls supporting the dome.

In connection with Graceland College, a new steam plant building and workshop has been provided out of appropriations from General Funds. Also the new Student Center Building has been built, funds for which have come largely from the College Day contributions and gifts of the Alumni. An additional appropriation of $269,000 has been made and is available for the boys' new dormitory. In referring to Graceland College, we note that since 1931 the church has spent in budgets and in outright appropriations the total sum of $1,030,669.18 for this institution (exclusive of College Day offerings).

The Herald Publishing House has, under the management of its Board of Publication and administrative officers, made substantial progress.

And we might say, incidentally, that an addition has been made to Mound Grove Cemetery.

An appropriation of $400,000 has been made for a Houses of Worship Revolving Fund which has made possible the extension of help to more than fifty of the congregations of the church.

From 1931 to 1935 it was not possible to add any men to our ministerial lists, and the first appointments (few in number) were made in 1936 and in 1937 the Ministerial Reserve Fund was started, which fund subsequently has increased to over $700,000.00. In addition to this Ministerial Reserve Fund, we have set up the Missionary Reserve Fund primarily to strengthen and maintain a sustained missionary program, and our work has been strengthened in the Society Islands by an additional appointee and by providing an automobile and other equipment needed. In the British Isles we have purchased two properties; also a headquarters building in Rotterdam, for the European Mission. Our missionary list has increased and, with the appointments that we have just made at the last Joint Council, we have now a list of 159 men serving the church full time.

THESE ARE NOT ALL, but represent the obvious accomplishments during this period since our financial policy was adopted. As we look toward the future, we still see before us specific goals which will demand not only our attention but our resources and the best that we have in the way of devotion if we are to attain them. They can be classified into two groups—first, those to which we have already given attention and are in process, these are not listed in the order of their priority but will make recurrent demands for our support.

1. Further enlargement of our ministerial list, which we trust will include a reasonable number of bishops to provide the personnel needed for the development and programming of the work of the gathering.

2. The expansion of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, the demands on which are becoming increasingly greater year after year. Additional operating room facilities are needed (as well as additional bed space), a modern dormitory for nurses in training, and provision for a department of geriatrics (care of the aged).

3. Graceland College will continue to be a growing institution. Its dormitory facilities will be inadequate even when the new dormitory for men is completed, and other buildings will be required, as this institution develops. A retirement program is an essential for the personnel of this institution.

Similarly, a retirement program is essential for our General Church office personnel.

4. The Auditorium needs are more or less obvious to all who see the building.

I am not stating, in any of these instances, the amount of money that will be required, but if we continue on the basis of our present experience, we will do well to meet all of these needs in a financial way within a period of two decades, and I say this despite the fact that when we launched our program of debt payment, there were those who said it could be done in thirty to sixty days; we set our goal for fifteen years, and accomplished it in a little under twelve years. Let us not underestimate the task head of us, but let us not be afraid to move forward toward its accomplishment.

The foregoing are the projects to which we are already committed. The second category includes areas in which up to the present time we have done very little. These have to do with economic planning and organization, and I wish to state a principle which it seems to me should govern our action in this connection; this is that funds for industrial and business development must come from one of two sources—private investment and private capital, and funds which have been consecrated by way of surplus. We are, therefore, in a position where, if we are to do much in the field of industrial and business organization, the time has come for us to ask for the consecration of surplus for this particular purpose.

It is my opinion that funds to be appropriated for any planning or any research for this field of our Zionics endeavor (which would include community planning, housing, industrial location) should be allocated from surplus consecrations. Therefore this is dependent upon the extent to which our membership will comply with this phase of our law. We have made real progress in respect to individual compliance with the elementary steps of stewardship; the individual can measure his own development as a steward if he will use the "Standards for a Steward" prepared by the Order of Bishops, as a yardstick. The pamphlets covering this are available from the Herald Publishing House, or can be obtained from the office of the Presiding Bishopric.

Further development of our program for the care of the poor, training personnel to minister to them, improving our facilities for their care and rehabilitation, using the institution now being enlarged which we have designated as our Social Service Center as the nucleus.

The attainment and the accomplishment of these economic goals of the church is, in the final analysis, dependent upon the following:

1. An increase in the number of contributors and filers of financial statements.
2. A sustained support of the financial policy which has governed the administration of the business affairs of the church.

3. The additional selection of trained personnel to assume specific responsibilities in the work of the gathering and of ministry to the Saints.
4. The acceptance and discharge of the supreme test of stewardship in the consecration of surplus.

WE ARE DEEPLY GRATEFUL to God for the blessings given which have resulted in progress to a point where the church has no apologies to make relative to its financial stability, with its Operating Fund Reserve, its Ministerial Reserve Fund, its Missionary Reserve Fund, its Houses of Worship Revolving Fund, its Oblation Fund, all of which are segregated for the purposes for which they are to serve. If there is a sustained adherence to the policies which have been adopted, surplus can be consecrated with a definite assurance that the purposes of its consecration will be realized.

May I say in conclusion if we as a church have made errors, let us pray that God will forgive us and enlighten our minds that in the future we may be free from any which will retard the glorious work. If we have made progress, let us give thanks to him and to those who have sacrificed for his cause, and may we above all move forward in faith, not fearful of atomic bombs or economic disaster, but conscious of God's great love for us made manifest in the giving of his Only Begotten Son that through him we might know our Father, who said:

Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion.

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

Behold, I am the light and the life of the world, that speaketh these words; therefore, give heed with your might, and then you are called. Amen.

Visitors Welcome

Eight young men from the Spanish-American Baptist Seminar in Los Angeles, California, are visiting in Independence. They are from a class that is studying comparative religions. Some of these men come from Mexico, Colombia, and Guatemala. After their period of study in the seminar, they will do missionary work in South America.

At present they are touring the United States and visiting various religious institutes. One of the places visited was The Auditorium. Brother Gomer Wells showed them about the building and explained our religious beliefs to them. The leader of the group said that the young men would return to their class with a better understanding of this church and the ways in which it differs from other religious sects.

"Equal Rights" for Women

WITH ABSOLUTE EQUALITY with the men, would women have more or less?

I have a vivid recollection of the discussion respecting women's rights in the sessions of the Missouri Constitutional Convention in 1943 and 1944. As a member of that body, I was pleased to cast my vote to remove everything in the old Missouri Constitution that amounted to a discrimination against the women of Missouri. These former restrictions, now abolished, consisted mainly in provisions limiting State and County offices to male citizens. Today there is no office, State or County, to which women citizens of lawful age are not eligible, from governor down to township officials.

In one particular, women were excluded from the disabilities involved, and that was in the provision for drafting citizens for military duty. Notwithstanding there were women lobbyists who were almost blatant in their demand for what they considered and called equal rights, the Convention took the view they did not want women to be forced into the hardships of armed conflict.

In another instance, that of jury service, women were made eligible for it; but, when drawn for service, upon their request, with no necessity for a reason (as is required for the men), the court is obliged to excuse them.

Thus the Convention paid their respects to chivalry and their women, and the voters of the State approved their resolution of these problems.

THE EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS is now debating Senate Joint Resolution No. 25 which proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women. If adopted by the Congress it will of course have to be ratified by thirty-six States to become effective. The outcome of this movement is of course extremely speculative. Being somewhat familiar with special legislation in the various States in favor of the women, laws that would be jeopardized or canceled by such an Amendment, in justice to our wives and mothers and sisters I am impelled to recommend to the women of the church that before they vote for such a change, they get a comprehensive knowledge of what effect such an amendment would, if adopted, have on their present rights under the codes of their respective States.

THE NATIONAL CONSUMERS LEAGUE has compiled a list of these rights showing state laws that would be affected, or abolished, and it may be well for our women leaders to secure copies for their study.

I would not attempt to treat the question exhaustively, but we might take the special provisions of Missouri, as an example, and see what our laws do for the women of the State. Perhaps it will enable the women to decide if they want to exchange present preferments for what they would gain by such a change.

Missouri has the common law responsibility of the husbands to support their wives.

A widow has the right to occupy the family home during her widowhood.

She has the right to receive, free of claims of creditors against the estate, the proceeds of insurance on the life of her husband for her benefit, to the amount purchaseable by five hundred dollars annual premiums.

An unmarried woman has the right to receive insurance to the amount covered by annual premiums up to five hundred dollars for her benefit on the life of her father or brother, free of creditors' claims against the deceased person.

For working women, a nine hour day, fifty-four hours a week; seats must be furnished. It is unlawful for them to enter into any mine to work therein; to clean any part of the mill, gearing, or machinery while it is in motion; to work between the fixed and traversing parts of any machine in motion by the action of any mechanical power except the machine she is operating. And there can be no industrial labor in homes.

The foregoing is from the digest furnished by the National Consumers League. However, my memory suggests there are other benefits for wives and widows under the Missouri laws not covered by the foregoing. And I believe California and some of the newer States have laws even more favorable to the women.

Aesop told the fable of the dog that lost his bone by grasping at a reflection of another bone. Let not our women be deceived: "Equal Rights" has an appealing sound; but be sure you are leveling your rights upward and not downward.

Get a copy of the document referred to and learn what your rights already are in your State.

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Seven

DURING 1919 Brother Waller was back in Honolulu assisting until the arrival of Elder V. B. Etzenhauser, General Conference appointee, arrived in August and was elected president of the branch.

In November, while Brother Waller was staying in Waimea, on the island of Hawaii, a drought was seriously affecting many of the cattle ranches. On Sunday, November 30, he visited the Hilo Branch, and at his request the morning preaching service was changed into a prayer meeting with Elders Waller, McConley, and Etzenhauser in charge.

At the request of Brother Waller, who explained the serious situation caused by the drought, earnest and fervent prayers were offered by many of the members present for the much needed rain. Brother Waller requested the members to continue their supplications until Wednesday evening, urging them to come to the midweek meeting in fasting and prayer. On the Thursday morning following, rain began to fall in Waimea and other drought-stricken districts of Hawaii. The coming of the rain on this particular Thursday morning was remarkable since Brother Waller had requested the members of Hilo Branch to keep up their prayers until Wednesday night prayer service. One of the men who worked for a rancher called Brother Waller "rain bringer." It was a wonderful response from the Lord.

In the Autumn Leaves of January, 1927, appeared an article by Sister McConley, which supports what Brother Waller testified in regard to the remarkable answer to prayer when the drought was broken:

Christianity in Business

Gilbert J. Waller is a man greatly beloved by all who know him. Were I to pen a picture of him, it would be as I have seen him many times with his face radiant with the Holy Spirit as he earnestly delivered the gospel message; or as I have seen him at the bedside of a sick brother or sister or little one, with his heart full of love and compassion and anxiety to do what he could.

Sympathetic and kind to all, he rejoices and sorrows with them. No home is too humble for him to enter. Even the children on the street cry out to him as he passes, "Hello, Mr. Waller," which shows how fond he is of children.

One of his outstanding characteristics is his great faith in God. In times of emergency, not only have the Saints relied on his faith, but his business associates have also done so in a remarkable manner. At the time of the great drought in 1919, springs and streams that had never been known to go dry failed. Especially was this true on the north end of the island of Hawaii, where water sold for twenty-five cents a bucket. Thousands of acres of sugar cane died in the field, and livestock perished wholesale. The president of the Hawaii Meat Company called Brother Waller to come to the Parker Ranch at Waimea, Hawaii, to give counsel in meeting the emergency. This ranch carries about 10,000 head of cattle and 25,000 sheep, and the very lives of the people in that section of the country were in danger. When they had reached their extremity, the president of the company suggested that Brother Waller take the matter to the Lord. He immediately went to Hilo, arriving early Sunday morning, and at his request a prayer meeting was held, and the Saints were asked to continue in prayer and come fasting at the Wednesday night meeting. Brother Waller returned to the ranch. Monday, a small black cloud formed above Mauna Kea, the lofty mountain just to the south. Tuesday, it increased in size; and Wednesday, it threatened rain.

Thursday morning Brother Waller called us over the long distance phone and informed us that it had been pouring down for about two hours, and the drought was broken.

His devotion to duty is very marked. He allows nothing to take precedence over his church work and is always subject to official calls for service night or day. His integrity is such that he is generally recognized as one of the "squarest" men in the Islands, and his culture and refinement offer him an open door to the best society there.

A sad feature in his life is his enforced absence from his family for long periods of time, made necessary by his business interests in Honolulu and the inability of his family to reside there. However, he has made his life one of service to mankind, and we have often been reminded of the quotation from Longfellow: "Patience, abnegation of self, and devotion to others," as we have seen him ministering among his flock.

Surely he is a man in whom the fruits of the Spirit have been made manifest.

The reason Brother Waller's family lived on the Coast was because a doctor in Honolulu said if he would allow his wife to live in a different climate, he would add ten years to her life. Afterwards when she was planning to return, another doctor said to Brother Waller's son, "Well, you know that will be the beginning of the end," so Brother Waller arranged for her to stay in California.

The following from a letter also written by Sister McConley was interesting and encouraging to Brother Waller:

Missionaries have since come and gone and done their bit, but in all these years Brother Waller has been like a father to those in the Honolulu Branch and has continued to be the spiritual and financial anchor to the work.

Because of his wide experience and understanding of the different races of people in the Islands, his counsel has been sought by the church in regard to our work there. His business has brought him intimately in touch with the Hawaiians, Chinese, and Japanese, and most of his ministry, as a result, has been among those nationalities. Today, largely due to his efforts, there are three branches of the church in Honolulu—one Hawaiian, one Chinese, and one Japanese.

He has been especially blessed in his labors among the Hawaiians. And in addition to his church work he has always borne his share of responsibility in civic affairs. He was prompt to sign up as an American citizen when the Islands were annexed by the United States in 1898, and served as National Committeeman of the Democratic party for many years. At the Baltimore Convention, when Woodrow Wilson was nominated for President, Brother Waller was present as a member of the Platform Committee. He served for many years as head of the Anti-Saloon League and has also served as a member of the Territorial Prison Commission and the Territorial Board of Health, besides holding other important civic positions at different times.

I would not have you think, however, that all of Elder Waller's efforts have been confined to the three nationalities above mentioned as he has brought a number of excellent white people into the church in Honolulu, and for some time he was president of the San Francisco Branch during Elder C. Ed. Miller's sojourn in the Islands.

At a special meeting of the Honolulu Branch on August 11, Elder Waller, bishop's agent, was authorized to arrange for the purchase of the lot on Young Street (now South Hotel Street) at the rear of the church.

A Trip to New Zealand

During 1921 Elder Waller left for New Zealand on a business trip. He visited Australia, also, meeting with the Saints in Sydney and Melbourne and preaching at the different branches in these cities. While in Auckland, New Zealand, where he spent considerable time, he assisted Elder A. V. Robinson, who was in charge of the work in that city. Under his direction and with the approval of Elder Hinman Savage, the missionary in charge of New Zealand, and Elder Robinson, Elder Waller organized the Auckland Branch.

Elder Waller's visit to Auckland was seen in a dream by Elder Robinson, who describes his experience in the Saints' Herald of January 6, 1922:

I dreamed we were sailing in a beautiful, new, motor auxiliary ship. Everything seemed in perfect order, and the ship rode the mighty waves with ease. Presently a man stepped up and took hold of the wheel. We had not seen him before. He began giving instructions, and the people did not want to carry them out, but when I looked in his face, I turned to the people and said, "Why do you refuse to carry out his instructions? He is a safe pilot." Then they began to obey. He ordered the sail to be set properly and gave instructions for the benzine to be turned on so that the motor might be set going. We were soon to realize why these instructions were given so hastily, for when we looked ahead, we saw that we were sailing straight for the rocks on the shore. The pilot was just in time, and he turned the ship. So close were we to the rocks it seemed as though we could touch them from the side of the ship. He guided the ship into the right channel until the danger was passed; then he left us.

During Brother Waller's visit he gave us good instruction, and while I was presiding at our midweek meeting, the above dream came before me again as clearly as though I were dreaming it all over again. This was impressed upon my mind. I began to pray about it and asked God to shut it out of my mind if what had been given to me was not of him. As I prayed the plainer it became, and this is what was given to me as the interpretation of the dream: The ship was the New Zealand Mission (a new mission, especially this end) which was fully equipped with the gospel. We were riding over the waves of opposition, and thought all was going along all right, until this pilot came and gave his instructions. (I asked that I might see the face of that pilot again and Brother Waller's face came before my eyes.) He showed that the Spirit of God was the all-important thing to carry us into the right channel. So it seemed as if he turned on the Spirit of God into our lives which guided all into the right channels; then he left us.

Brother Waller considered the organization of the Auckland Branch under his advice and direction an important work. In Auckland there was a branch of the Mormon church and a church building. Our members were holding meetings in Brother Robinson's home, and in a hall, and on Sunday afternoons Brother Robinson was preaching on a prominent street to good-sized audiences. Still Brother Waller felt that it would be better and safer for the work if the members in Auckland had an organized branch with a pastor. Brother Waller's advice saved the New Zealand Mission, so far as Auckland was concerned, from trouble which might hinder the work.

The Work Revived

During 1922 Brother Waller decided to try to revive the work among the Japanese. With the help of Sister Emily Inouye and her husband Henry, a church school was started in the Kalihi district, where some years previous church school work had been done, and a number of Japanese young people had been baptized by Brother Waller. A number of Japanese children responded to the invitation to come to the school, which met in a cottage rented for that purpose, and before long there was an enrollment of about fifty children.

On November 7, Brother Prescott and Sister Lois Foo arrived in Honolulu by the steamer "Matsonia." Brother Foo had been appointed by the General Conference to labor in the Hawaiian Islands. In order to start the work again among the Chinese, Brother Waller and Brother Foo thought it best to try and organize a church school. With this purpose in view, they visited the homes of several Chinese and invited them to attend meetings.

Desiring to encourage the few Japanese members in the Kalihi district and others who were showing interest in the work, the elders arranged for a weekly prayer meeting to be held at the home of Brother and Sister Inouye. This, the first Japanese prayer meeting, was presided over by Brother Waller and Brother Foo. There were eleven in attendance, and a good Spirit was present. This prayer service was a new experience to several of the Japanese attending as they had probably never been on their knees in prayer before.

The year 1923 opened with encouraging prospects, especially in the work among the Orientals; Brother and Sister Foo devoted their main attention to this work, assisted by Elder Waller and Sister Inouye. There were now three church schools among the Orientals, two Chinese and one Japanese. The Japanese school was located in the Kalihi district, as well as one of the Chinese Sunday schools. The other Chinese school was located in the Palama district. The purpose of these schools was not only to instruct the children in the work, but also to draw the children's parents to the church. In addition to the Sunday school work a prayer meeting was held each week, attended by the children and Japanese members. Another prayer meeting was also held for the benefit of the Chinese Saints.

The weekly prayer services held at the old mission house, as well as the preaching services conducted by Elders Waller and Foo each Sunday evening at the Wah Mun School, Kukui Street, had been very helpful to the Chinese members and nonmembers who attended. There were now eighteen members among the Chinese. The brethren in charge, encouraged by the prospects, thought it would be advisable to recommend to the members that a Chinese branch be organized without delay. At this time Apostle McConley, with his wife and child, arrived from Australia en route to the States. Since Brother McConley was in favor of the organization of a Chinese branch, the matter was brought to the notice of the members at a meeting, and a resolution was adopted authorizing the branch organization at the earliest opportunity. It was known as the Honolulu Chinese Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In order to care for the Japanese members Elders Waller and Foo advised that a Japanese branch be organized. On November 18, a meeting was called for the purpose of organizing the Honolulu Japanese Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Elder G. J. Waller was elected pastor. As no hall was available for holding the different services in the Kalihi district, a small dwelling house was rented for Sunday school purposes, while the branch meetings were held in the home of a Japanese brother.

The prospects early in 1924 were encouraging. The Honolulu Main Branch and the Japanese Branch were presided over by Brother Waller, while the president of the Chinese Branch was Elder Charles A. Lee.

At this time Brother Waller was planning a visit to the States, and arrangements were made for Elder D. J. Williams and his wife who had charge of the work in Hilo, to come to Honolulu to look after the local work during his absence.

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

My question concerns the deacon and General Conference Resolution Number 449, which says, “. . . labor as preachers within the branches to which they belong . . . or with the consent of the chief presiding officer.” On occasions of visits to other branches would I, as a deacon, be eligible to preach upon the invitation and consent of the pastor or other presiding officers?
Washington L. B.

ANSWER:

A general rule of determining the intent of a resolution which defines certain activities of an officer is: that which is not specifically prohibited, is permissible.

Section 17:11 defines the deacon's duties, as follows: he is “to warn, expound, exhort and teach and invite all to come unto Christ.” In fulfilling these responsibilities, however, it would be ill-advised to do so in organized branches or districts without the knowledge and approval of the officers in charge. Section 120:4 covers this point quite clearly. “In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices.” To occupy the pulpit in any branch or district, upon the invitation of the officers in charge would not be in violation of General Conference Resolution Number 449.

In this connection, see the Saints' Herald, Volume 43, page 625, September 23, 1896, “The Duty of a Deacon” by President Joseph Smith III.

QUESTION:

Is it true that if our church members are not married by an elder of our church or one of proper authority, they are not married in the sight of God and are committing adultery?

E. S.

ANSWER:

The law of the church does not require members to be married by our priesthood. (References made here are to Section 111 of the book of Doctrine and Covenants.) However, it is desirable that the members of the church shall be married in the church with an elder or priest officiating. The ceremony should be performed in a public meeting and attended with prayer and thanksgiving (Doctrine and Covenants 111:2).

We believe it is not right to prohibit our members from being married by other ministers or in other churches or by authorized civil authorities, although neither is as desirable as marriage in our own church and by a member of our priesthood.

In view of the foregoing, non-Latter Day Saint marriages are recognized by the church and do not carry any stigma whatever.

QUESTION:

We are told to forgive our brother his trespasses. Yet there are those who say, “We don't do the forgiving; only God can do that.” Please explain.
Oregon Mrs. N. W.

ANSWER:

Mark 2:7 asks the question, “Who can forgive sins but God only?” But Mark 11:26 comes back with the statement, “But if ye do not forgive, neither will your father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.” At first, the whole thing appears paradoxical until we know what the writer apparently was saying. We can and should forgive our brother's trespasses against us. When he has wronged us and indicates his sorrow and repentance, we should be eager to forgive him and forget the injury that has been done.

This does not mean, however, that we have the prerogative or power to absolve our brother of guilt for his sin. As a church we have held to the belief that no man has the right to expunge a fellow mortal's sins. It is interesting to note here that the Bible usually uses the word “trespass” when the offense is against a fellow man, and it uses the word “sin” for the act or state of rebellion against the purposes of Deity. In release from the latter, only God can grant forgiveness; while in the former, both the sinner and the one he has trespassed against must be active with God in bringing about a reconciliation to the purposes of Divinity. In this connection, we will do well to always remember the statement from the Lord's prayer (Matthew 6:13 Inspired Version), “. . . and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us.”

A. Orlin Crownover.

QUESTION:

Will those who die without law (Doctrine and Covenants 76:6) have a chance for the highest glory? If so, what Scripture may be referred to? Is a baby one without law?
California F. G.

ANSWER:

There is no positive assurance that those who die without law will receive the highest glory, but the Scriptures seem to indicate that there is such a possibility. Doctrine and Covenants 45:10 states that they shall come forth “in the first resurrection and it shall be tolerable for them . . . Their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them and he will be their king and their law-giver.”

In Section 76:6 we learned that these will be of the terrestrial world. Of the three classifications the celestial is the highest glory and the telestial is the lowest. Only of the telestial is it said that “where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end.” From Section 76:7 we learn that those of the terrestrial world shall be ministered to through those of the celestial world, while the telestial receive through “the administering of angels.”

To reason that all people who died without the gospel law would receive the highest glory would be to put too high a premium upon the human failure to teach the gospel. For if ignorance of the law would save a man, it would be better that he not be preached to. On the other hand, the fact that they come forth in the first resurrection and that it will be tolerable for them rather indicates that should they respond to the ministry from the celestial glory that they might eventually inherit this glory.

Babies should not be classified as “one without law,” rather, they are innocent and redeemed through Christ from the foundation of the world. See Section 28:13.

Tributes to Church Pioneers

IN THE Nauvoo Independent of April 28, 1949, under the THIRTY YEARS AGO heading appears the following item of interest to our church.

Heman C. Smith, historian of the Reorganized L. D. S. Church died at Lamoni, Iowa, April 17, aged 69 years.

A capable man; a fearless man; a good man.

In the same issue in the column for SEVENTY YEARS AGO, April 25, 1879, this item appears:

Joseph Smith of the Saints' Herald and his brother, A. H. Smith of Andover, Missouri, were called here by the illness of their mother, Mrs. L. C. Bidamon.

Mrs. Bidamon was Emma Hale Smith. She passed to her reward on April 30, 1879. The funeral was held in Nauvoo. My grandfather, Richard Lambert, had charge of the music; the sermon was by Joseph A. Crawford, a missionary of those days; and the service was in charge of Apostle John H. Lake. Five of the pallbearers were nephews: Solomon J., Alvin, Don Carlos, and Frederick Salisbury, and Don C. Milligan, whose widow still resides in Hamilton twelve miles from Nauvoo. In company with Emily Smith Steward, daughter of George Albert Smith, President of the church in Utah, I visited her in April, 1948. She is feeble and did not recall our childhood together. The other bearer was Elder Daniel D. Babcock of Montrose.

Of that service the Nauvoo Independent carried a long article. After going somewhat at length into her early family life and the early active years she lived in the formative period of the church, the article says of Emma Smith Bidamon:

After the services were over, the large company filed through the room past the coffin, viewing the face of the deceased as they passed. It was a touching sight to see those citizens so long acquainted with the silent sleeper, while she was living, pausing beside her to take a last look at her peaceful face, so calm amid the grief of the assembly. Now and then one to whom she had been dearer than to others, would caress the extended hand, or gently stooping lay the hand upon the cold face or forehead, some even kissing the pale cheek in an impulse of love and regret. But scenes of grief must pass—the family at length took leave of her whom they had so long known and loved. The coffin lid was put in place, the six bearers raised their burden reverently, and with the mourning train, passed to the place of interment, upon the premises of her oldest son, near by, where with solemn hymn and fervent prayer the remains were left to their long repose.

The assembly was large; almost every one knew Mrs. Bidamon, some intimately and for many years; some but for a few months, but it is safe to say that the respect, esteem, and love with which she was regarded by all is but a just tribute to the sterling virtues of the woman, wife, and mother, whom the community so soberly, so sadly, and so tenderly laid away to rest, on that beautiful May day, by the side of the Father of Waters, the mighty Mississippi.

Mrs. Bidamon was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and her funeral services were conducted by elders and members of that body of believers, and the sermon was indicative of their hopes in the millennium yet to come.

Her neighbors and friends knew her as an honorable woman. I well recall an interview with Judge George Edmunds in his office in Carthage about 1908 or 1909. Several of us were present on the occasion when I asked him if he knew Emma Smith. He informed me that he knew her well. I asked further what he thought of her honor and veracity for telling the truth. He was sitting with his feet on the desk propped back in his swivel chair. When that question was asked, he promptly brought his feet from the desk, pointed his index finger at me and replied: "Young man, no one could tell a lie in her presence: she would detect him at it."

By M. H. SIEGFRIED

She kept faith with the testimony and evidence she signed with Elizabeth Ann Whitney, Sarah M. Cleveland, Eliza R. Snow, Ann Hunter, Ann Law, Phebe Woodruff, Lenora Taylor and a number of others which was published in Times and Seasons on October, 1842, in which they all solemnly declared there was no rule of marriage other than the one published in the Doctrine and Covenants of that time. Several of these women did not have the honor, courage, and devotion to live by their testimony. She did.

I ALSO WELL REMEMBER the long vigil which a few of us kept in this same Mansion House in 1909 over the ebbing life of Alexander Hale Smith, a son of this good woman. In this house he died. From this house a short service was held before his quiet, sleeping body was taken to Lamoni for burial. He lived in this house with his mother for many years; in this house, he lived with the wife of his youth, here some of his children were born; here he died. Only one of his children was present—Vida Elizabeth, wife of Heman C. Smith. A grandson, Glau A., son of Frederick A. Smith, was there, his secretary, W. R. Dexter, and myself. His family was widely scattered in church work and could not be reached. We did our best to make his last hours as comfortable as possible.

It was a quiet, sad, hot August afternoon when the body was removed to Montrose for the last journey of Brother Alexander H. Smith from the house, the place, and the city which he loved.

They Also Serve - By EMMA M. PHILLIPS

A Blue Bird-Oriole Week Story

WE CANNOT TRULY celebrate Blue Bird-Oriole week without giving some recognition to the leaders of these girls, to the women who devote hours of time in actual work with the girls and still longer hours in finding material and planning for its use. And as for compensation—there is only the joy of serving these girls and of seeing them grow into respectable womanhood, and of knowing that at times the girls can bring consolation to their leader. Such a time occurred a few years ago to Sister Charles Irwin, who lives in Independence.

Mrs. Irwin was not a young woman when she took over her group of girls, in fact, there were gray hairs already appearing among the dark. Some people thought she was too old for such an undertaking, and there were times when Mrs. Irwin almost thought it herself.

There were eight girls in her Blue Bird Band—eight lively, talkative girls. Under the careful guidance of Mrs. Irwin, the girls studied lessons, sewed, did various handcraft, and had happy times together—picnics, parties, and such as pleases the fancy of little girls.

WHEN THE WAR CAME, Mrs. Irwin suffered the same sorrows that befell so many other mothers. Her two sons, her only children, left their home to serve their country. And that service for their country took them to distant lands. They wrote often, but letters—well, letters can't compare to a greeting of "Hi, Mom" or a friendly smile. But Mrs. Irwin continued on with her eight lively, talkative girls. She was serving them and helping them as they needed her through their childish trials and temptations.

To the sorrow of being separated from her two sons, a deeper sorrow was added. Her husband was taken to the hospital in a critical condition. There followed weary hours of tears and doubts. She longed for the touch of a son's hand, but the broad Atlantic separated her from such consolation. Then came the tragic hour when her companion was taken from her. Now, she felt, she was really alone in the world. To whom could she turn for consolation?

With tears in her eyes, she left the hospital room. Then through moist lashes she saw them—her eight little Blue Bird girls. They murmured low words of sorrow as they gathered about their loved leader. They placed their arms around her neck, they kissed her, and did all that children could do by way of consolation. Mrs. Irwin found peace and comfort in their sincere words of regret. And with that peace and comfort there came the realization that these lively, talkative girls were serving her even as she served them.

The Inspired Version - By JOSEPH A. FERRIS

Is It of Man or of the Lord?

"The Holy Scriptures" is the correct title of the Inspired Version. If the work of correcting the errors in the King James Bible were of man, if the idea originated in the mind of man, then it would be at least partly of man. What are the facts? In the Preface to the Holy Scriptures (The Inspired Version) we read: "It was done by direct revelation from God."

What Is the Lord's Commandment?

In the Doctrine and Covenants 42:15, the Lord states: "Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; . . . And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people."

What does the Lord say regarding those Saints who honor the Scripture in the Inspired Version? "He that doeth" according to these holy Scriptures "shall be saved," and "he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues" is the voice of the Lord in section 42, verse 16.

The Elect Safeguarded

None but "the elect" will accept this revelation from the Lord: "And the Scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect."—Section 34: 5.

For whose sake did Jesus say he gave the prophecy concerning conditions which would prevail in the last days just before his second coming? Listen to the Son of God explaining his chief reason for giving his prophecy concerning the last days: "Behold, I speak unto you for mine elect's sake."—Matthew 24: 29.

The Only Ones Not Deceived

Matthew 24: 39, 40 gives the key to the situation regarding who will be selected from the world before the destruction of the wicked begins at Christ's second coming: "And whoso treasureth up my words, shall not be deceived. For the Son of Man shall come, and . . . shall gather together the remainder of the elect from the four winds; from one end of heaven to the other."

The Inspired Version Not of Man

The Moffatt Translation, by James Moffatt, D.D. D. LITT., M.A. (Oxon) was revised three times after it was first translated. The author admits in his last printing that his previous work on changing the Bible has been "re-studied in the hope of rendering the work more effective and trustworthy. The net result as here printed may not amount exactly to a new book, but it is a revision which is as thorough as I can make it, and I mean it to be final." I am very thankful for this promise.

Drinking From Other Fountains Than the Fountain of Life

A prophet of old warned against "leaving the fountain of life" in order to "drink from every fountain." When the Lord guarantees that the Inspired Version, which came as a result of the Holy Ghost directing Joseph Smith the Martyr, that the Scriptures contained therein are the same "as they are in mine own bosom," what greater guarantee do we need to keep us from using Bibles other than the Inspired Version? Shall we be among "the elect"?

The Long Beach, California, Branch

By Mrs. Tom Perrigo and R. A. Wight

THE SCRIPTURE, "By their fruits ye shall know them," is aptly illustrated by an experience of the Long Beach Saints in obtaining a solution to their problem. Several years ago the branch secured its present property, and while it was a great improvement over the previous location, the lack of classrooms and church school facilities was serious. In 1947 several meetings were held to discuss this problem, and many things were considered, including drastic alterations of the building. Then came the opportunity the members had longed for. The people owning property just north of the church decided to sell, and the Saints were given first opportunity to buy, due to the courtesy and consideration of our members in treatment of their neighbors.

This property consisted of a 50 by 150 foot lot, with a beautiful six-room home, a small garage with front entrance, an outside den, and a large twenty by forty foot reinforced brick garage at the rear of the lot.

The price finally agreed upon was $18,500, though the owners had two other offers of more money. Again they said they wanted the Saints to have the place as they had been "good neighbors."

With only $7,000 in the building fund and the possibility of a loan from the General Church of one half of the amount ($9,250), there still remained $2,250 to be raised in only a few days. An appeal went out to the membership, and within a week $3,000 in donations were received. The purchase was made and possession granted in June, 1947.

The twenty by forty garage could not be used without some remodeling. This offered an excellent opportunity for the young people to make a recreation hall. It could also be used for junior church and social gatherings. The building committee was called to meet with the pastor and plans were made to raise $2,000, the estimated amount needed for remodeling.

The women of the branch served a benefit dinner that netted $338. The Men's Club, which had been organized shortly before to give more men an opportunity to serve, also helped. Soon the required amount was on hand, and work began in October.

The outside den was converted into a nursery at very little expense. It seemed that all this activity gave an added impetus to the local priesthood work and there were thirty-one baptisms during the year.

IN 1948 plans were made to remodel the interior of the church. This, of course, had to be done step by step, with the money being raised before the work was started. First the windows were repaired at a cost of $300. Then the rostrum was enlarged to accommodate the choir as well as the priesthood.

The choir for years had been seated on the main floor near the rostrum, so the whole appearance of that area had to be changed. This was estimated to cost about $1,000 so plans were started to raise the money. Each member was given an envelope with pledge card enclosed, and an appeal was made by the pastor at an 11:00 o'clock service. After the meeting receipts of $980 in cash and thirty-day pledges were received.

The interior of the entire church was painted by six men of the congregation in one day.

Eight indirect lights were installed by eight different sponsors at a cost of $17.50 per fixture, and Venetian blinds were purchased.

During this period of reconstruction, members of the priesthood continued their missionary work, and twenty-one new members were added through baptism during the year.

The year 1949 will long be remembered for its achievements. The pews were remodeled and painted and the entire floor of the main auditorium covered with a carpet.

One very important step was the organizing of a mission in Lomita, California, under the leadership of Richard Hacker. Since its organization in June, 1949, four persons have been baptized. The group now has $600 in its building fund and is looking forward to establishing a permanent church home in 1950.

A boy's club was organized in Long Beach Branch during the summer months, and just recently a junior choir, composed of Zion's Leaguers, was organized to sing for the evening services under the leadership of Harry Penn.

The regular choir, with Mary Rasmussen as the leader, presented a Christmas cantata on December 25.

Fourteen new members were baptized during the year in addition to the four at the mission. Present membership is 507. The church school, under the leadership of R. E. Niles, has a corps of fine workers and is making steady progress. A credit class instructed by Guy M. Smith ran a full year with twenty-two completing the course.

John P. Davis is pastor.

Briefs

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The semi-annual district conference was held in Plano on March 12, opening with a prayer service. During the 11:00 o'clock worship hour, Evangelist Leslie Wight of Chicago brought an inspiring message.

Following a brief musical program, the business session convened at 2:00 p.m. Plans for a joint reunion this summer to be held with the Chicago District were discussed. It was voted to have a finance committee of three members, to be appointed by the district president, to make the budget and work out appropriate financial objectives for the district. The following delegates were elected to represent the district at the General Conference: Kenneth Mulvaney, Mission Branch; Pearl Pement, Deselm Branch; Clarence White, Aurora; Nina Jamieson, Ottawa; Lloyd Hadley, DeKalb Branch; James Martin, Forrest Mission; Lester Wildermuth, Plano; and Mamie Hayer, Forrest Mission.

During the morning, church school classes were held for the children, followed by a Junior Worship service, in charge of Sister Ilah Nelson, district supervisor of children's divisions.—The Bulletin.

INDEPENDENCE WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT.—The sixth preparation day service was held in Walnut Park Church in March. A fellowship service was held during the forenoon. Mrs. Harold Higgins was organist and Mrs. Kenneth Steele gave special violin numbers for the service. The picture of the "Good Samaritan" was the central item of the worship center.

A lunch and social period was held at the noon hour. There were two speakers for the afternoon session. Elder Glaude Smith spoke on the subject, "The Church Member Is a Good Citizen." Mrs. Gail Wilson spoke on the subject, "The Open House."

The next meeting will be held May 4 at Stone Church. Mrs. Mildred Nelson Smith of the Iowa State College at Ames will be the speaker.—Reported by MRS. BERTHA STECK and MRS. BEATRICE DARLING.

ROSEBURG, OREGON.—On February 5 the Saints met in the Adventist church for the morning services and the baptizing of Barbara Rodley, daughter of John and Maxine Rodley. Priest John Rodley officiated. The confirmation was by Elders James F. Ruchaber and Jasper Giberson.

At 2:00 o'clock, Hugh Kensler of Santa Paula, taught a class with the subject, "How Can I Serve Christ?"

The Zion's League of Bakersfield conducted the concluding panel discussion with "Youth and the Church" as the central theme. Brother Harry Hampton, pastor of Bakersfield, led the group, and Tommy Conduif of San Bernardino gave an excellent summing up of the thoughts expressed by the young people.

After the discussion period, a motion picture, "Oliver Twist," was shown. In the evening Patriarch L. J. Ostertag was in charge of the recreation hour with Garland Tickemyer as the guest speaker. Brother Tickemyer showed pictures taken at the last summer's youth camp and told of plans being made for the coming summer. There was group singing, vocal duets by Beverly Landon and Janice Green, of San Bernardino and Patty Fink and Roland Best of Santa Ana, concluding with a piano solo by Kenneth Cave of Santa Ana.

Outstanding Communion Service

At our regular Communion service on Sunday, March 5, we experienced such a rejuvenation of the Spirit that I thought it should be shared with others. Many times we drift along, never realizing that we are really drifting until something happens to clear the mist from our eyes so we can understand what we see.

Like dreamers in a boat we drift, with idle oars, toward the rapids without sensing our danger. Suddenly we hear the roar of the rapids and awake to reality; then it takes strenuous rowing to get back to safety. Such was our experience as a branch. The illness of our pastor and other misfortunes seemed to have awakened us from a trance. Each member seemed to realize he was partly responsible for this lethargy and came to the service with humble heart and contrite spirit. As each testified, rededicating his life to Christ and pledging to do more for the church, the spirit of rejuvenation came to the branch.

One of the high lights of the service was the reading of an original poem by Mrs. William Cottrill, a recent convert.

Emma Smith Millikin Passes

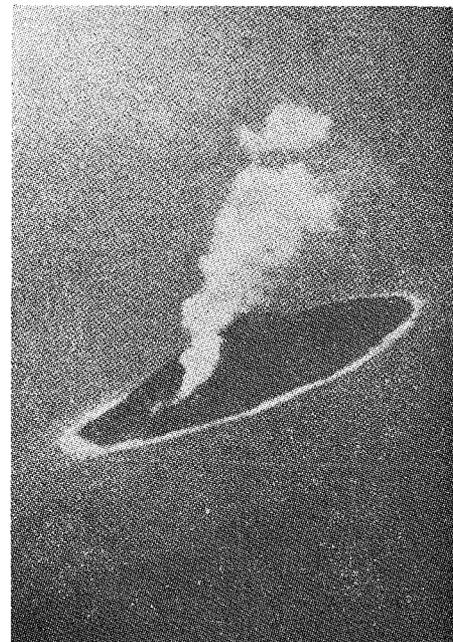

This member was a young lady when I was a boy growing up in Hancock County, Illinois. In 1900 she married Don Carlos Millikin, son of Lucy Smith Millikin, youngest sister of Joseph, the Prophet. Brother Millikin was a fine, even-tempered, cheerful man, and a firm believer in the Restoration. He converted his wife who remained faithful to the end of her life.

She died in Powellton, Illinois, on March 17. The funeral was held in Hamilton, with Elder James C. Page of Nauvoo in charge. I believe Sister Millikin was the last of this family to belong to the church. Brother Millikin died in 1932.

It is rather sad to see these crusading Latter Day Saint families slowly closing out, whereas the children and grandchildren should be devoted, steadfast members of the church. God grant that it may some day be so.

Strange Happenings Near the Island of Epi

"And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters."

THE FRENCH CATALINA "Trapas" on its way to Tahiti, September 13, 1949, was flying past the island of Epi in French Oceania when the attention of the crew was attracted to a pillar of billowy smoke rising some 3,000 feet above the sea. Pilot J. A. Pommier brought his plane down below the clouds and prepared the rescue equipment. He had thought it was a ship in distress, but to his amazement he was witnessing the birth of a Pacific island. From its north side was issuing forth the volcanic refuse which attracted the attention of the "Trapas" crew.

The position was fixed at sixteen degrees, 50 minutes south latitude and 168 degrees, 32 minutes east longitude. The island began rising from the trembling sea about September 13, and by the time the above picture was made it had risen to a height of over 300 feet.

We of the missionary staff in Tahiti could find little comfort in the statement of John who saw in his revelation of the last days, "Every mountain and island were removed out of their places."—Revelation 6:14.

The Word of Wisdom - Part II

By FLORENCE SANFORD OURTH

CHRIST taught us to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread"—not in the form of white flour, nor in the form of the denatured, prepared cereals with which the country is flooded today, but in the rich whole grains which come to us from the hand of nature.

Not only is the bran and wheat germ discarded to make our flour white, but until recently it has been bleached with a poisonous acid, nitrous oxide, which process also ages and preserves it. Tests show that even after baking, a nitrous acid reaction is plainly evident.*

The Lee Foundation for Nutritional Research says concerning the bleaching of flour:

Valuable vitamins are destroyed by the bleach chemical. When cattle are fed grain without these vitamins, they show no harmful effects until they drop dead suddenly. (See Science, Volume 104, No. 2701, page 212.) Note that heart disease is the leading cause of death in this country. Is it the bleached flour we eat? Heart disease is rare in China where bleached flour is also rare. Bleached flour is so poisonous to dogs that they get "running fits" from eating white bread, a common disease known to all veterinarians. Heretofore considered due to the wheat proteins, the disease has been recently proven to be due exclusively to the bleach chemicals in the flour.—Article "Agenized Flour," in Nature, June, 1947.

Bleached flour was declared unfit for human food by the United States Supreme Court in 1919. (Notice of Judgment No. 6380.) The enforcement of this decree, according to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, was halted through the political influence of the flour millers, and no notice of violations has since been made by the inspectors of the United States Food and Drug Administration. Thus the very law which the Supreme Court has said was enacted to protect the public health has turned into a measure to threaten public health and to defraud the purchaser of flour. (Dr. Wiley was first chief of U. S. Food and Drug Administration.)

*Editor's Note: According to Sister Mildred Nelson Smith, Nutritionist of the Iowa State College Extension Service, "There has been a tremendous effort to stop using 'agen.' Now a chlorine product is being used which, it is hoped, will not be harmful."

Alfred McCann in Science of Eating says:

The mortality statistics prepared by the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce, tells us that nearly four hundred thousand little feet cease pattering every year. Denatured foods, chief among which is the robbed and poisoned grain and the artificial sugar, are largely responsible. Many a little heart is pumping impoverished blood to hungry tissues, feeding starved nerves with an unhealthy stream, nourishing a tired little body and a weary little brain with debased foods.

Dr. William Brady says:

Plain wheat as it comes from the threshing machine without any other preparation than cooking, if you prefer it cooked, is a fine food which should be in every household. Just the undoctored grain which you may buy at the mill, seed store or feed store or from the farmer who raises the wheat. It is an excellent thing to chew in the raw, especially for children. Cooked, it makes the finest breakfast food.

We are reminded of the simplicity of a dinner in Palestine when Jesus and his disciples plucked the grain in the field, rubbed it in their hands and ate it raw.

Brother Walter Sanford, owner of the Seed and Feed Store in Fort Madison, Iowa, tells us that the wheat from the threshing machine is preferable as it has had a chance to dry out in the shock. Combined wheat is not always as dry as it should be and may develop a musty taste or it may heat in the bin, which destroys the wheat germ. Some grain is treated, particularly if it is to be shipped, so be sure you get the "un-doctored grain."

BREAKFAST, we are told, is our most important meal. After fasting all night, every cell is hungry, ready to absorb whatever we eat. That is a good time to give them these rich, whole grains. That is why whole grains, particularly wheat, have come to be the breakfast most often served in the homes of Nauvoo women.

Sister Mabel Sanford Atkinson prefers canning the wheat. Here is her recipe:

Pick over two thirds cup of wheat. Wash by putting in pint jar, filling with water, stirring with spoon and pouring off. Then fill jar with water, add one-half teaspoon salt. Screw covers on loosely with jar rings as for canning. Fill as many jars as cooker will hold, set jars on low rack as in cold packing. Fill with water to neck of jars. Cook four hours or longer if desired. Wheat will have absorbed all the water and swelled to fill the jar. Seal. Serve hot or cold with cream and honey.

Sister Ralph Tripp likes to cook hers in the pressure cooker:

Use two cups of water and three-fourths teaspoon salt to each cup of cleaned, washed wheat. Cook at fifteen pounds pressure for one hour, then allow the cooker to cool to room temperature before the pet cock is opened. Opening the pet cock while the contents are hot seems to force water out of the grains and leave them small and hard. Enough can be cooked for several mornings and stored in the refrigerator. Each cupful of dry wheat will make about three cups of the cooked product. Soft wheat will absorb more water and cook up in somewhat mushy, broken kernels, while hard wheat is apt to remain whole but plump with a considerable amount of slightly thickened water which can be drained off before using and saved for soups.

Sister Harold Smith likes the cracked wheat, and her husband grinds their own in a coffee mill. However, on their recent trip to Mexico with Brother and Sister Harold Velt, they took thirty jars of canned wheat, one for each morning they were gone. This is the way Sister Smith cooks the cracked wheat:

Stir one cup of cracked wheat into two cups of boiling water containing three-fourths teaspoon salt. Cook slowly for twenty minutes.

This was our initial step in the keeping of the Word of Wisdom.

The Home-baked Loaf

(From Blue Pencil Notes.)

Her plump little body wrapped in her favorite apron, her sleeves rolled up, and flour on her arms, Grandma Honeywell came to the door of the parlor: "Betty, bring your young man and come with me. I want you to smell my favorite perfume. When you are married, if you will keep it in the house you will not be likely to have a divorce."

"All right, Grandma," said Betty.

"Sure thing," said the young man.

Grandma Honeywell led them to the kitchen and opening the oven door took out two fat loaves of bread. She broke them apart over the edge of the table and a fragrant cloud of steam arose from the heart of each, the old-fashioned aroma of old-fashioned, homemade bread—an aroma never smelled in a bake shop, but only in a home.

"Isn't Grandma funny?" asked Betty.

"I don't know," said the young man, "but I wish I might have an end crust from one of those loaves."

"You may," said Grandma Honeywell, "and, Betty, take notice, your young man is not a bit different from what Grandpa Honeywell was fifty years ago."

Some years ago I dined with Brother and Sister Earnest Webbe in their home near Kirtland. They had some of the best brown bread I have ever eaten. Brother Webbe said, "It was in our marriage covenant that Sister Webbe should make me brown bread." How would that do for a covenant? "I promise to love and cherish this man and bake brown bread for him." Not so bad? Better than this: "I promise to stick by this man until his dough is all gone."

If I were an artist and were to paint a picture of "The Angel of the Home," I would paint her with her apron on, her sleeves rolled up, flour on her cheeks, and her hands in the dough—I mean the bread dough.

Oh, yes, of course, I know many are so situated that they are compelled to buy baker's bread—more is the pity. Baker's bread is generally a poor "staff of life." Daniel Macgregor used to say: "If there is any sight sadder than a cr-r-ipple on a cr-r-rutch, it is a cr-ripple on a cr-rippled cr-r-rutch." The average baker's loaf is a crippled staff of life; it is as near ten cent's worth of nothing as anything I can imagine.—
By ELBERT A. SMITH.

I had been privileged to live near Kirtland for eight years and came to know Brother and Sister Webbe very well. Brother Webbe runs the little village grocery store in Kirtland. I always liked to trade there because of the encouragement he gave me in keeping the Word of Wisdom and because he helped strengthen my will power to say "No" to the many things that "conspiring men in the last days" have designed to tempt the appetite and lighten the purse. We, too, had the privilege of dining with them and enjoying Sister Webbe's brown bread.

The Nauvoo women were ready for the next step in keeping the Word of Wisdom. They agreed with Brother Elbert that baker's bread is generally a poor staff of life. They decided they should be baking their own whole wheat bread for their families. But to many, bread-making seemed quite a chore.

I had been baking ever since I had been married. But as five boys came along to take their places in our household and it took from twelve to sixteen loaves a week I had simplified the recipe to the utmost. We had a bread-baking demonstration to show that it was really quite simple. At first we put a little white flour in our bread, but after Mildred Nelson Smith had given us a week of lectures on foods at the Nauvoo Reunion, we have changed to 100 per cent whole wheat.

Here is our recipe:

100% Whole Wheat Bread

(Using fine-ground hard wheat flour)

Makes two loaves

- 1 cake compressed yeast or 1 package quick rising dry yeast
- 2 teaspoons honey or sugar
- ½ cup lukewarm water
- 3 cups hot water or scalded milk
- 2 tablespoons shortening
- 1½ tablespoons salt
- 7 cups whole wheat flour

Mix yeast, honey, and ½ cup lukewarm water. In large bowl or pan put 2 tablespoons shortening and 3 cups of hot water or milk. Let cool to lukewarm (80°). Add yeast mixture. Add 7 cups whole wheat flour and 1½ tablespoons salt (not necessary to sift). Stir. Dough will be somewhat sticky, but not runny. Cover and let rise until double in bulk (from two to three hours if kept warm). Remove dough to floured board, divide and knead only enough to shape into loaves. Place in two 9" x 5" loaf pans. Grease top, prick with fork to let out air bubbles. Let rise until double in bulk. Bake at 425°F, 40 to 45 minutes. Remove from tins immediately after taking from oven. If desired, take the dough of one loaf, form into rolls, grease tops, put in refrigerator until ½ hour before they are to be baked. Let rise in warm place. Bake at 425°, 15 to 20 minutes.

The success of 100 per cent whole wheat bread depends mainly on the flour. Some of the dark wheat flour on the market is made by assembling some white flour with a little of one or another of the by-products of white flour and is not satisfactory. Other real whole wheat flours may be coarsely ground and made of soft wheat that does not make light bread. If you are not able to get the genuine finely ground, hard wheat product, you can send to Old Fashioned Millers, St. Paul 1, Minnesota, for Enright's Stone-ground "All o' the Wheat" flour.

WHILE we were living in Kirtland, Sister Guy Hammond was district leader of the women. She had been baking whole wheat bread for a health food store and came to give us a demonstration lesson. Later she invited me to meet her in Akron where she took me to a mill over a hundred years old. Here the flour was ground on big stone buhrs, run by a water wheel. She made arrangements for us, and we got some lovely whole wheat.

At our next meeting, of course, the women were comparing notes on their baking and also as to how acceptable it had been with their families, for it takes a while for some people to get used to the brown bread. Our tastes have become perverted over the years. But they reported that the husbands were delighted with their efforts and had secretly been wishing their wives would bake for them. Sister Roberta Lewis Garret said her children told her it was the best bread she had ever made. While Sister August Lee, who for years has furnished the bread for the Communion said, "Did you notice I used my home baked bread for the Communion?"

It reminded me of an experience I had while at Kirtland. There whole wheat bread is always used for the Communion. Sister Webbe bakes it. She was away on vacation one summer and I was asked to bake the bread for the Communion. I said I would be glad to do so. Then I began to realize the importance of the thing I was undertaking—I was to bake the bread that was to symbolize Christ's body which would be served in his temple. I felt I must make it the very best I could. I did a few extra things that ordinarily I did not do for our own bread. It was late that night when I finished baking it. I did not think it looked as good as usual when I took it out of the oven, and in the morning when my husband sliced it to get it ready to take we found it was very heavy and sticky, in fact it was the worst bread I had ever made. I don't know what I did wrong. Perhaps I forgot to pray about it. We wrapped it up and took it, but stopped at a corner grocery and bought a loaf of baker's bread. We explained to Brother Harry Gaskill who had charge of the preparation of the emblems and gave him the baker's bread. "No," he said. "We are going to use your bread."

I sat at the back of the church that morning and felt very humble indeed as I listened to the prayer of blessing on the bread, "bless and sanctify this bread to the souls of all those who partake of it," and watched as the priests passed it to the congregation. When it came to me and I reached out to take a piece, I could hardly believe my eyes—it was as light and nice as any bread Sister Webbe had ever baked.

Truly a miracle had happened in the blessing of that bread. And truly a miracle takes place in our bodies when our daily bread, made from the whole grain which God has ordained to be the staff of life, is transformed into physical strength, mental alertness, and spiritual vigor.

Post-Easter Reflections

ALL THE GALA, color, and excitement of the Easter Parade is over; Easter, 1950, is only a memory now. The styles change from year to year, and the "parade" changes accordingly, but the thing that the first Easter typified to the world thousands of years ago continues to challenge us. This challenge was brought by the living Christ when he said, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly."

As Christ looks down on the world of today, I doubt that he is interested in fashions or thrilled by the throngs who attend church on Easter morning, leaving at the close of the service with no intention of returning again until next Easter. I think rather that the living Christ is concerned about whether or not we have caught the challenge of living life more abundantly.

To live abundantly, we must live in tune with the Christ of Galilee that we might know of his way of life. We cannot be hermits and live with Christ for he said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

If a man building a house went out and poured the foundation one Easter and didn't do anything more to it until the next, he would take a long time in reaching his goal. The same holds true in life. Easter Sunday may be a good time to lay the foundation, but if this foundation is to grow, we must constantly build on it.

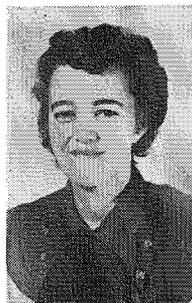

To complete the building of the house, lock it up, and leave it would be futile also. Soon the ravages of weather would destroy its beauty, and it would become only a symbol of what might have been. It takes people to make a house—a home—people who are living close together and close to God.

AGAIN WE CAN MAKE an analogy to life. If we are concerned only with ourselves and our own progress, we cannot grow, each of us has a purpose and talents to be developed and shared with others. Christ meant it when he said, "He who loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Here Is the Writer

Grace says that nineteen of her twenty-two years were spent in the town of Jonesport, Maine. She then left the east coast to attend Graceland College, from which she was graduated last spring. Since September she has been teaching the second grade at Carson, Iowa. She was baptized at the age of fourteen and has served as church school secretary, Blue Bird leader, and in the Zion's League. Next to working with children, her ambition is to write to church publications.

All about us in everyday life we find laws we must abide by. We cannot plant corn and expect peas to grow. We cannot go racing down the highway with no concern for the rules without endangering others. If we plant the seeds of kindness, love, humility, faith, and wisdom in our lives, they will grow, and we'll find ourselves more capable of fitting into God's divine plan as we work and play and worship with others. As we take from others a part of their personalities and incorporate it into our lives, so we find that they are affected in some way by the things we say and do.

I know of a man and woman whose home is always open to college students. Those who go there partake not only of the material blessings of life but of the lives of these two persons. They have built on a sure spiritual foundation, and those who share friendship with them are blessed because of it.

IN THE CLASSROOM where I was practice-teaching one day, a blue-eyed little girl looked up at me and said, "Miss Crocker, when I grow up I want to teach black people." Surely the world would be a happier place if each of us could accept those of another race as easily as that little girl did. Perhaps in her childish way of thinking she included the things we so often forget—love and service.

Last summer a group of young people from various churches went on a picnic together. On the way I sat next to a colored lad, and we talked quite a bit. During our ride, he took an orange out of his pocket and gave it to me. I thanked him, peeled it, broke it in half, and shared it with him as we kept on talking. I found out later that orange was all the lunch he had. A lesson might well be taken from this. He gave all that he had and gave willingly to someone he didn't even know.

LIVING WITH CHRIST is a wonderful challenge. Each day brings it anew as avenues of service open to us, and we reach out to help others. Perhaps, after all, that is what Christ meant when he said nearly 2,000 years ago, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." This is the challenge that comes with Easter as we invite the living Christ to become a part of our lives.

New Horizons

A Prophet Came to America

IN MODERN CHRISTIAN thinking, prophets have been "typed," as Hollywood would say. In our thinking they have all been poured in the same mold—long-haired ancients breathing thunderous threats—not really human.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Prophets have always been very, very human. Think of them: Moses—haughty soldier, statesman, then shepherd of Midian, and finally lawgiver and founder of a great nation; Isaiah—courtier, polished man of affairs; Daniel—fantastically successful kingmaker, the most capable politician of all time; David—shepherd boy to king—a Horatio Alger character—sometimes a sinner, but a great prophet nevertheless.

Of these mentioned only one, Isaiah, met violent death because of his principles. Many of the prophets never grew old. They were not allowed by their contemporaries to grow old, but died violently in full fruit of a powerful testimony, killed by those to whom the truth was a curse.

Seers and Revelators

Prophets throughout the ages have had one thing in common—they were seers. Their seeing included events in the future. We usually think first of this part of their seeing when we think of prophecy, but there are other fields in which their seeing is quite as remarkable.

A prophet's seeing often includes a foreknowledge of ideas, sciences, and mechanics not common to his day. It is not unreasonable to believe, if prophets are of God, that they should see some things in the light of truth as God sees them, rather than in the light of the ignorance of their day. This light of ignorance usually distorts events to the point where no contemporary is a good judge of his own current history. Prophets, being seers, have looked upon their day and their current events as if with historical perspective, that is, in the light of truth.

Each prophet has had an urgent message for his nation or people. This message plows through oceans of prejudice and ignorance to stand in some future generation, proved, obvious, a common principle of good living.

The enormous effect of prophets upon the history of mankind cannot be explained by studying the life of the herdsman or the soldier or the statesman who has become a prophet. These prophets have become outstanding men because they were both seers and revelators, boldly putting their seeing on record to stand the bitter test of time. This they invariably did before adequate proof of their seeing existed. The fate of a prophet is death; the fate of the prophecy is life—an increasingly important one until its mission is fulfilled.

America's Prophet

A prophet came to America. He died violently, but his prophecy lives today. He both foresaw the future and his own day in the light of truth.

This prophet produced a record of the progenitors of the American Indians and gave it to the world to stand on its own merits. In 1830 he asserted the horse had been here on this continent. He located ruins found a hundred years later and described arts and crafts that scientists, until recently, denied that these ancient people had. On page 625 of the Book of Mormon there is a detailed account of an earthquake that seismologists of today say is an accurate account of an earthquake. Scientific studies of earth upheavals are of recent date, and Joseph had never had any experience with them.

By ROLAND C. LAMBKIN

It would have been impossible for him from study or experience, to have given such an accurate description of this stirring experience.

This American prophet's treatise on the interrelation of the forces in the universe is as modern in theory as any in print today, and it was given by him in 1832.

True to his prophetic calling, the American prophet came with an urgent message to his nation. This message is desperately urgent today. Read it in the Book of Mormon, pages 78, 79, 660-664, 717.

The American Sphinx

Proof positive of the work of the American prophet is written all over the silent walls of South and Central America. As uncommunicative as the Sphinx, volumes of strange hieroglyphics stand aging in the wind and the sun, waiting to vindicate the prophet who came to America. In the words of Isaiah they whisper, "Who hath believed our report?" and "To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?"

What miracle shall come in our day to make plain these sealed records? Where is the Rosetta stone of American hieroglyphics? To whom will the arm of the Lord be revealed in our day?

Miracles

A miracle is a supernatural event, whose antecedent forces are beyond our finite vision, whose design is the display of almighty power for the accomplishment of almighty purposes, and whose immediate result, as regards man, is his recognition of God as the Supreme Ruler of all things, and of His will as the only supreme law.

"It Is Worth Study"

The following editorial from the "Decatur (Illinois) Herald and Review" was written by the late Sam Tucker on January 15, 1941. Coming from the pen of this learned editor, the editorial, written nine years ago, came into our hands just recently through Brother A. L. Henson, and we are reprinting it by permission of the editor. He advises us that Mr. Tucker died last January. Tucker was an alumnus of James Milliken University holding a B.A. degree.—Editor.

As I View the Thing

By Sam Tucker

Here on my desk, as I write, is a copy of the Book of Mormon, as it was set into English by the inspired translator, Joseph Smith, who was taught to read it from the golden plates of Nephi.

It is a remarkable, a most curious and interesting work of literature, even if you will admit no more. What I mean is, if you will not admit that God's voice spoke through Joseph Smith. It tells one of the most romantic and exciting stories ever conceived: how the prophet Nephi, inspired from heaven, led a fragment of the Israelite race away from doomed Jerusalem; how they were taught to build a great ship and sail the ocean to the New World.

Here, it is recorded, they multiplied and became a great people, building cities that have since been destroyed, keeping the covenants of God, fighting long and exhausting wars with the savage Lamanites. They held their own remarkably well until at last, weakening in their faith and no longer repenting of sins as God commanded they were overwhelmed by the savages and perished by the thousands. Their cities were burned and crumbled into dust.

In these last, desperate wars, Mormon was chosen as general-in-chief for all the Nephites although he was only sixteen years of age at the beginning. He was large in stature for a youth, learned, and devout; a sort of male Joan of Arc for his people. There were terrific battles in those days; cities were lost and retaken, then lost again. Thousands were put to the sword.

The land was filled with robbers and Lamanites [Mormon says], and notwithstanding the great destruction which hung over my people, they did not repent of their evil doings; therefore there was blood and carnage, spread throughout all the face of the land, both on the part of the Nephites and on the part of the Lamanites; and it was one complete revolution throughout all the face of the land.—Mormon 2: 8.

Having neglected their worship, the Nephites were doomed. They drew their bows still, and swung about them with their great swords, but the flaming spirit that had preserved them in earlier times no longer abided among them. "Their armies were scattered like chirping sparrows; their kings lie slain, feathered with arrows." Mormon, grown old in the warfare, lamented "the depravity of my people! They are without order and without mercy. Behold, I am but a man, and I have but the strength of a man, and I cannot any longer enforce my commands."

And so, seeing his approaching doom, he admonished his son Moroni to be faithful in Christ. In order that the record of God's nation in the New World might be preserved for future generations of men, Moroni in the year A.D. 420 sealed up the chronicles of his people, inscribed upon golden tablets, and buried them on the sacred hill in what we call New York state. Then, it appears, like the last of the Mohicans, he joined his fathers. Only the barbarian Lamanites were left in this land, to welcome the next migration of Christians after a thousand years should pass.

So runs the story, in utmost brevity. It is worth study in much more detail, even by nonbelievers. For, if you choose to deny that Joseph Smith was a true and inspired prophet; if you doubt that the Lord's angels taught him to find and translate this ancient record of the Nephites; if you disbelieve the eight witnesses who testify that they, too, saw and handled the golden plates, then you must concede that young, unlettered Joseph Smith was one of the most imaginative of all men in literary history.

For the purpose of this column, it is not important whether you choose to call Smith prophet or literary genius. It is not our business to be a missionary or theologian, but only a commentator upon secular affairs in the world. In that role, however, I must remind you for millions of our fellow Americans, the Book of Mormon is a sacred writing. For them, it has exactly as much authority as the Book of Matthew, and it behooves none of us to treat lightly what our neighbors hold sacred.

The large group of American citizens who accept this particular gospel have proved themselves good and loyal patriots. They are devout, thrifty, God-fearing, and successful in the world. If faith is proved by works, every American must concede the good works of these neighbors.

Here we come to our point, which you have been wondering about in all the preceding. If we are to have any Bible reading in the public schools of this country—schools supported by taxes upon the peoples of all creeds, and attended by children of all faiths—then our neighbors of the Saints have a perfect right to demand that the Book of Mormon shall be read, with exactly the same reverence that is shown the books of Moses. If we are going to have religious teaching in the public, tax-supported schools, the missionary elders have exactly the same right as the representatives of any other faith to do the teaching.

Our constitutions, national and state, assume of course that the things which are Caesar's, including the use of tax-supported schools, shall be kept separate from religion. If we have decided, however, to whittle away the constitutional plan, then we must still have fair play and equality. It is time to introduce the Book of Mormon into the school-room.

 OUTLINES

There are good ones and bad ones, of course. Have you ever tried to make literature out of them? It will give you a headache that all the aspirin Bayer ever made won't touch.

At first they look orderly and efficient. They reduce a chaos of ideas to intelligible system. In the end you discover they may conceal a terrible confusion.

After days of work on them, you go to bed with a migraine torment. You sleep, but outlines come riding nightmares into your dreams . . . the stars are like alphabet soup with neon lights, the signs of the Zodiac a menagerie of fierce animals. Then the cavalcade rushes at you. . . . Roman legions of "I, II, III, IV," pompous pedagogues "A, B, C, D," Arabic "1, 2, 3, 4," and the minikin hosts "a, b, c, d." They swarm at you, riding brackets and parentheses, armed with sharp pens and paper clips. You try to fight them off by throwing books—"Webster's Collegiate Dictionary," "Roget's Thesaurus," "Crabb's Synonyms," "Cruden's Concordance"—but it is futile. They bear you down in a swirling maelstrom. You wake up on the floor in a sweat, the covers wrapped around your neck. What a narrow escape!

Then you see on the floor in a beam of moonlight a note you had written the night before: "An outline is the refuge of a disorderly mind." It's probably wrong, but that's the way you feel about it.

A good outline is a scholar's delight. A bad one . . . well, it may be better, after all, not to attempt this one.

 SOIL

A great tree cannot be grown in a flower pot. You dare not stint a tree. It needs soil and space; it must bathe in the sunlight, drink deeply of the rain, bend its branches and refresh its leaves in the wind. If you want a good tree, it must have a place and the means of growth.

A great soul cannot be developed from nothing. It cannot grow in isolation and seclusion. The mind needs books for knowledge, experience for wisdom, work for discipline, and the companionship of other minds for adventure and discovery. One needs the beauty of nature and art, the joy of music and the imagination of poetry. Only in such a soil can the personality flourish.

 FLOWERS

The Lady was absorbed in the richly colored pages of a flower catalog.

"But you know you won't have time for a garden this summer," she was told.

She looked up smiling. "This is just my daydream stuff," she replied.

The flowers that bloom in our daydreams are often more beautiful than those we get, a little later, from our gardens.

But isn't it pleasant to have something around for our daydreams? All real happiness has a certain percentage of hope in it. When we quit hoping, we are through with life. We can keep it alive with a bit of "daydream stuff."

Are You a Christian?

IN 1922 the late Charles M. Sheldon, author of In His Steps, challenged a group of us with the above question. Had he asked us to tell him if we were Presbyterians, Mennonites, or Reorganized Latter Day Saints, we could have answered without a moment's hesitancy. But belonging to a denomination is not the same thing as being a Christian, as we ordinarily think of these terms.

But Mr. Sheldon did not leave us in doubt for a moment as to what his question meant. "Back up to a building where the busy throng of toilers pass as they stream out at noontime. Look them over, all colors, races, and creeds," he said. "If you can say in your heart, 'Oh, how I love them all,' then you are a Christian."

You may be inclined to challenge the distinction made in the opening paragraph by saying, a man cannot be a good Saint without being a Christian. Perhaps that is true, but an important element has been added by the qualifying word, "good." Who is to be the judge of how good a Saint a certain church member is? To argue that every person who has entered into covenant relation with the church should be a Christian as well as a Saint is begging the question at issue. However, no one is likely to want to affirm that every member of this or any other church can pour out his heart in love to all races and creeds. It is hard enough to love all of the Saints all of the time, isn't it?

Introducing...

VERNER DELBERT RUCH, Council Bluffs, Iowa (page 5), was born in Bevier, Missouri, in 1890. He was baptized there in 1899 and attended Bevier public schools. In 1913 he married Zella Mae Vanderbeck. He was a member of the Graceland College religious education class from 1920 to 1921. Following this he entered the mission field and served in the Northeastern Missouri District for sixteen months.

In October of 1922 Brother Ruch was appointed to the Scandinavian Mission. He was accompanied by his family and labored there for twelve years. However, this period was interrupted by a return to the United States. In 1927 and part of 1928, Brother Ruch served as city missionary for Independence, seventeen months in all. At the General Conference of 1936 he was appointed pastor of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and seven months later he was appointed pastor at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he has served since.

Brother Ruch was ordained to the office of priest in 1919, elder in 1920, seventy in 1923, and high priest in 1943.

GEORGE KENNETH FLORO, Lawrence, Kansas (page 14), was born in 1918 at Oak Harbor, Ohio, and was baptized there in 1927. He was graduated in 1937 from Oak Harbor High School and in 1939 from Graceland College. He received his bachelor of education degree from the University of Toledo in 1947 and his M.A. degree from Northwestern University in 1948.

In 1943 he was married to Martha J. Ford. They have two children: Charles Douglas, 4½; Beverly Joan, 1 year.

Brother Floro labored at farm work and commercial fishing during his high school days. While attending college he was employed at maintenance work and railroading. He served in the United States Navy from 1941 to 1945 and was awarded the Purple Heart. He is now an instructor at the University of Kansas.

He is a member of the Midwest Sociological Society and the American Association of University Professors.

At the age of eighteen, he was ordained to the office of teacher. He has acted as church school director at Oak Harbor and Toledo, Ohio, and Lawrence, Kansas.

Meditations

"Meditate upon these things."

The Higher Duty

Duty sometimes calls us, not to go on distant missions to great adventures and exotic shores, but to remain where we are and bear a burden for God.

It is fun to pick up and travel; it is dull to stay and work. But it is sometimes necessary, sometimes best.

A good man recently passed away. All his life he had wanted to move to Zion. But he had been called to live on the frontier, and he remained there in his little outpost of the kingdom, guarding his tiny flock, waging his one-man war against the worldly host that tried vainly to beat him down. He said, "I cannot leave these people until God sends another man to take my place." Recently a young man who had grown up under his ministry was called and ordained. And not too soon. It was the release the old servant was waiting for, and he was called home, not to Zion, but to heaven.

A Postmaster, or a King

A story that touches the heart was told by Ronald Bridges on NBC and printed in the March Reader's Digest. Erling Eidem, primate of the Swedish Lutheran Church, felt that he wanted to be a pastor, not an archbishop. His first request was turned down. At last he went to see King Gustav about it. "Your Majesty," he began, "there is a village on a lovely island off the coast of Sweden, and there is one church in that village. More than anything else, I would like to be appointed the minister of that little church."

After a silence, King Gustav said gently, "I know that little island and that village. It is a beautiful, quiet place. And I am going to tell you something. For years and years I've wanted to be the postmaster on that island."

An archbishop who wanted to be a pastor, and a king who wanted to be a postmaster, but both denying themselves for a higher and a harder duty. And sometimes people are called to be pastors and postmasters on little islands, when they have wished to go on to greater things. But they remain faithful to duty and responsibility.

The Rock and the Pit

The Prophet Isaiah exclaimed to Judah, "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged."—51: 1. We need to think of our origins and natures. People pay much attention to the paint on a house. They had better consider the quality of the wood under the paint.

They were tearing up a section of the sidewalk in downtown Kansas City one day last week, and only three inches below the concrete slab was exposed the broken rock and yellow clay composing the bluffs on which the town was built. This was the stuff that caused the pioneers so much trouble as they climbed the precipitous slopes from the shores of the river to the wooded hills and prairies above. It made the mud in which horses floundered and men soiled their boots, and holes where wagons mired and people lost their tempers.

All the streets and walks of the city are a thin veneer on the deep bosom of the aged earth. People are seldom more than a few inches from the soil, though they may forget it is there.

Veneers sometimes make us forget the true natures of things, the raw physical facts in which we had our origins. We see people as clothes rather than as human beings, as mere traveling racks upon which pieces of finery are displayed.

Physically, we are nothing fine or wonderful. The veneer of civilization is thin. We belong to the earth.

But the spirit is another matter. We cover it with a veneer of worship, formality, and restraint. We make it pretty until we forget its inner reality. The outside gives no hint of God. But, underneath a thin layer of form, we belong to him. There is a subject for a long meditation.

The Auditorium

Visible for miles, the beautiful white stone covering that has been added to the Auditorium just below the dome is a great improvement. It was enjoyed by Conference visitors, as well as all others. It is another fine step toward the protection, beautification, and completion of our most important building.

Some people worry and lament about our slowness in finishing the Auditorium. If we went ahead and finished it, those same people would complain about the debt. "Pay as you go" isn't a bad idea. It saves interest charges.

Some of the greatest cathedrals of Europe were in process of construction for hundreds of years. The American Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York has been developing for many years, and will take many more to complete. Let's not worry nor be in a rush about it. This way, we can appreciate every new feature as it is added. Some new ideas will be better than the original ones. We learn by experience as we go along. And while we are working on this one, nobody can bother us about erecting a new one. We are grateful for this improvement, and happy that it is so beautiful.

Across the Desk

At the recent General Conference, Elder A. B. Phillips handed to the Presidency a letter which breathes such a splendid spirit that we are sharing it with Herald readers:

April 7, 1950

The First Presidency,
The Auditorium.

Dear Brethren:

Somewhat more than a half century ago I entered the mission field in California by request of church officials in charge, after seeking light and divine guidance in the matter with the conviction that the rest of my active labors in life would be devoted to the service of our Lord and his church. Today, in my seventy-eighth year, my spirit is no less willing than it has ever been in the past, but physical infirmities do not permit so full or so constant responses to the demands my spirit would fain make upon activities of the body.

Knowing the meaning of this portent, my desire to serve must not in the slightest delay the appointment of others who will more adequately perform tasks that have been assigned me, hence I am willing to resign them either now or when in your judgment it appears advisable, leaving it thus with you and knowing that in our mutual concern for the work of God and his church our aims are one.

Respectfully and fraternally yours,

A. B. Phillips.

From E. Y. Hunker, Senior President of Seventy, April 12, 1950:

This is to inform you that on April 10, 1950, Brother George A. Njeim tendered his resignation as secretary of the Council of Presidents of Seventy. His resignation was accepted on the basis that he had previously stated, upon accepting it in 1948, that he would do so only until someone else could be found who would take over the work.

The Presidents of Seventy chose Russell F. Ralston as secretary of the Council.

Church Women in the News

Lucinda Nieman Madden, attorney who has been practicing law in Columbus, Ohio, for the past twenty-one years, was the only woman speaker at the Legal Secretaries' Institute held at Neil House in Columbus on March 27 and 28. For ten years Mrs. Madden was employed as a legal secretary; during the last four of those years she attended night school at Franklin University to get her degree. Three years out of the four, she received scholarships. Very few people took her aspirations seriously when she entered law school. "Mother was the only one who really encouraged me," she says, "but Father was the first to brag after I graduated."

Following her admission to the bar, she became the associate of Clayton A. McCleary, her former employer. They shared offices until Mr. McCleary's retirement six years ago. Mrs. Madden is still at the same address: 16 East Broad Street, Columbus.

On September 10, 1924, she was married to Robert E. Madden, an engineer at the Jeffrey Manufacturing Company in Columbus. Despite her busy life, she finds time to lead an Oriole Band, teach a junior class, and serve as music director at Second Church in Columbus. She holds membership in the American Bar Association, Ohio State Bar, Columbus Bar Association, Women Lawyers of Columbus, and the Y.W.C.A.

She is also a past president of Zonta International.

Mrs. Madden was the only woman at the lawyers' banquet held on Tuesday evening during General Conference.

Church Books for High School English Assignment

Editor's Note: This high school junior, required to read a certain number of books during the year as part of her English assignment, thought she might as well read one of the church books as some current fiction. She selected "Square Blocks" and found it so interesting and helpful that she wrote its author to thank him for the inspiration she received. In turn he passed the letter on to us, thinking that if published it might carry a helpful suggestion to other high school boys and girls. We are happy to present this letter to our readers.

DEAR BROTHER ELBERT A. SMITH:

I am a junior at Jacksonville High School. In our English classes we are required to read a certain number of books a year. I thought, "Why should I be reading a lot of fiction when I could be reading something worth my while?"

Since my father is in the Aaronic priesthood, we have quite a few books written by men of our church and things about our church. I kept looking at your book, Square Blocks, and decided that it was the one I should read.

I am writing this letter to tell you how much I enjoyed it. It gave me so much inspiration and cleared up so many things that I had wondered about. I am sure that God inspired you to write such a spiritual book. I am now beginning on the Book of Mormon, and I ask an interest in your prayers that I may thoroughly understand it as I did your book.

I was born in Chicago and nine years later we moved twelve miles from Jacksonville, Illinois. Here in Jacksonville we have built up a small group of ten people. I am the only young person in our group, so you can see why I enjoy reading these books.

With God's blessing,

Stewardship of Motherhood

A sermon delivered on Mother's Day, 1949, at Walnut Park Church in Independence, Missouri

By V. D. RUCH
Pastor, Council Bluffs, Iowa

(From a transcription by Milo Barnhardt)

Wives submit yourselves unto your husbands as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church, and he is the Savior of the body; therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of the water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it even as the Lord, the church. For we are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. For this cause shall man leave his father and mother and shall be joined unto his wife and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery, but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself and the wife see that she reverence her husband. Children obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother which is the first commandment with promise that it may be well with thee and thou mayest live long on the earth. And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

—Ephesians 5 and 6.

MOTHERHOOD IS A GREAT STEWARDSHIP. A woman who is worthy of the title of mother is interested in her home, in the welfare of her husband, and in her children. Because this is true, I have chosen to speak on the family and home. I have made this choice because I consider the home to be one of the foundation stones of our civilization. Many homes are breaking up today, and even Latter Day Saint homes are unstable in a large measure.

We do know that there are many kinds of homes—happy and unhappy, rich and poor, large and small, homes of luxury, and homes of misery. It is sad to see an unhappy home. There is much more discontent in our homes than most of us realize. People don't often talk about their unhappiness, but when they do, they usually confide in their pastor or some other trusted friend. And we discover quite frequently that people willfully make their own homes unhappy. At least upon many occasions when they could help the situation, they continue to make their homes unhappy.

In my pastoral work I have been called into homes where young people are having difficulty making the adjustment to married life. I discovered in most instances that stubbornness is one thing which stands in the way of reconciliation when any trouble arises. Not so long ago I was called into the home of one of our young couples. They had been having considerable trouble, and I talked to them for quite a while. Finally I said, "I think the only thing that stands in the way of your reconciliation is your stubbornness." You see people often feel that if they make one step toward reconciliation, that the other person—the wife or the husband—will think it is an admission of being wrong. But that isn't the point. A man and a woman united in the bonds of matrimony have promised to love and to cherish each other as long as they live. They shouldn't allow little insignificant things to arise which destroy their happiness and lead to divorce. When one of them is humble enough to make some advance toward reconciliation, the trouble can be settled very easily.

I was called into another home where a young wife told me that her husband hadn't spoken to her for three days, and that often, after she would prepare the meal, he wouldn't eat it. Now a condition of that kind is deplorable. I asked her if she thought she was stubborn in this case. She said she didn't think so. Then, I said to her, "If you are willing to make the first advance in this reconciliation, when your husband comes home from work tonight, you will meet him at the door with some gesture of love." When I went back to see her a few days later, she told me that when he came home that evening, as he came in the door, she put her arm around him, and he pushed her away from him. But a little while later he came over to her and put his arm around her. She had made the first move toward reconciliation, and it touched him. In spite of his stubbornness, he, too, was willing to make some adjustment in this matter, and they soon had their trouble settled.

THERE ARE MANY CAUSES of unhappiness in our homes. There's an unwillingness in people to cooperate with each other, to make the necessary adjustments and to determine to solve their problems. Some time or another most husbands and wives could have gone to the divorce courts if they had chosen to do so. That's the easy way out. It's much more difficult to try to solve problems. Disagreements often arise over money, recreation, the children, sexual relations, and religion; and neither husband nor wife should insist on having his or her own way all the time.

Marriage is a partnership between husband and wife but God should also be included. Nearly every time I perform the marriage ceremony, I admonish the couple to take God into their partnership and constantly think of him as an unseen guest in their home. He may then be available in times of trouble, sickness, and sorrow, as well as in times of joy, peace, and happiness. God loves his children and wants to have part in their marriage relationship. It is he who has placed a seal of approval on marriage. He wants to bless every couple that enters into this relationship.

The greatest help in solving our problems and making our homes happy is the developing of Christian homes where prayer is engaged in, where the Scriptures are read, and where love and Christian virtues are manifest. We should make prayer the center of family life. Instead of being self-centered, we should be Christ-centered and ask God to help us in the solving of our problems.

I AM VERY PLEASED to say that I was born of a Christian mother. My father was not a member of the church, but in spite of that my mother had the courage to take me to church even when I was so small she had to carry me. I am glad she was willing to kneel with me at my bedside when I was a little child, to teach me to pray, and to pray with me before retiring at night. That has meant much to me.

Yesterday was a very important anniversary in my life. It was my birthday. Not the date, however, on which I was born into the world, but the day I was born into the kingdom of God. I was baptized in a little coal mine pond in Bevier, Missouri. How grateful I am for that experience! I can still remember how I felt on that day when I was led down into the waters and buried with Christ. I remember how light I felt and how clean. I remember, too, that I resolved on my way home to keep my soul as clean and pure as I possibly could for as long as I could. I know there are those in the church today who do not believe children are ready for baptism at the age of eight, but I shall never forget the words of our late President Frederick M. Smith at one of the General Conferences when he cried out, "Why are your children not ready for baptism at the age of eight? If they are not, it is your fault, and God will hold you responsible for it."

Yes, I believe it is a stewardship that

God has given us. He has loaned our children to us, that we might rear them for him, that we, co-operating with the church, might get them ready for baptism at the age of eight.

IT WILL SOON BE Children's Day, and I hope there is not a parent anywhere who will prevent the baptism of his child if that child desires to unite with the church. Our children should be so taught in the home and church school that they are eager for the time to come when they can be baptized.

We were in Scandinavia when our only child, Velma, became eight years of age. Her birthday is on February 28, and it's very cold in Norway in the wintertime. We didn't have any fonts inside the church buildings we were using, and all baptisms had to take place in the open. Although I had to be in Denmark for two or three months, Velma could hardly wait until I returned from my trip to baptize her.

Today she seems to have a spiritual quality in her life that, to me at least, appears to be outstanding. I don't say that because she is my own daughter, because I see this same quality in the lives of other young people of the church. As we have gone about in our missionary work, taking her from place to place, from school to school, she has co-operated in a most wonderful manner. She has manifested a faith which has been a blessing to us and to others with whom she comes in contact. It seems there are some children who are destined to have this sort of disposition and faith, and I am grateful to our Heavenly Father that he gave us such a child.

I am glad that God came into my home before I was born, that I had a Christian mother and that I had grandparents who were members of this church. I'm glad God took hold of my life so that when I reached the age of eight years I had a desire to unite with the church. I'm grateful that after I was married to a good Baptist girl God came into my home again, found my wife and caused her to become a member of this church. How God does move in our lives if we allow him to. He is interested in our homes. He is striving to bring about his righteous purposes, and as we respond to his leadership we find him blessing us and opening the way for us in order that we might carry out his will.

I HAVE BEEN DRAWN to that story of Hannah's experience in Old Testament times. You remember that her husband Elkanah had two wives. His other wife's name was Peninnah. She had children, but Hannah didn't have any, and, oh, how she longed for a child—especially a son. She pleaded with God to give her a son, and God heard her prayer. Before the child was born she promised God that she would lend her son to him. After Samuel was weaned, she took him to the house of God where Eli, the high priest, was serving. There he grew up and did such chores as cleaning the floor, lighting the candles, opening doors, and taking care of the incense.

When he reached the age of twelve, he had a most wonderful experience. God spoke to him. We're all acquainted with this beautiful story from the Old Testament. It emphasizes the fact that God is able and willing to use children in his service. I have often wondered if one of our children would stand up today in one of our prayer meetings and speak in tongues if we would be willing to accept it. Suppose a child of ten or twelve would speak in prophecy—we'd be very skeptical, wouldn't we? But God is able and willing to use children in his service even as he used Samuel who had grown up in the house of God. His mother, visiting him year after year, was happy to see him engaged in the work of the Lord. It is strange, however, in this story of Samuel that we have two opposite examples. The message delivered through Samuel to Eli was not a pleasant one. It pointed out that Eli had been neglectful toward his own sons. Let me read two or three verses from the third chapter of I Samuel:

And the Lord said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle. In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin I will also make an end. For I have told him that I would judge his house for ever, for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not. And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

Eli loved his sons, even though they had made themselves vile. Knowing their sins he still did not restrain them. Notice in this story that the responsibility is placed upon parents when they know their children are not living right. It is their duty to admonish and teach them, to do all within their power to prevent their children from doing that which they know to be wrong. Eli was held responsible to God for his negligence and punished for it.

We often say we're not responsible for the behavior of our children, and in many, many instances it is true, but if we fail in our duty, in our stewardship, God will hold us responsible even as he held Eli responsible for the conduct of his sons.

ONE OF OUR PASTORS bore testimony recently that his parents did not leave him one cent of money when they died. He said they even left debts for him to pay, but "They did leave me a heritage in this church that I would not take a million dollars for." That's what we as parents must leave to our children. We must leave to them a heritage of faith in the divinity of this church, and we must tie them to it in some way or another.

We need to have more united families. It is a sad thing to see the many divided families in the church. How it hinders those people from worshipping God as they should! Those who are married to nonmembers should make an effort to win their companions and children to the church and to give them spiritual experiences they will never forget.

This is a great work in which we are engaged, and when we see our children becoming weak in the faith or losing contact with the powers of heaven, we must try to reunite them in some way with this power which will lead them to eternal life.

Not long ago there was an electrical storm in Council Bluffs. It blew one of the trees over on a power line which lead to Mercy Hospital in the city. In the hospital was a young boy in an iron lung with polio, and the power for that iron lung was off four hours. The people who were serving around the hospital pumped this lung by hand for these four hours in order that the child might live. When I read this account in the newspaper, I thought how much the story resembles our work. Often our children, our friends, or our companions lose contact with the power of heaven, and those of us who believe we have contact with that spiritual source do all in our power to keep life within these loved ones until they are able to establish contact themselves with the powers of heaven. Christ is the Savior of our home, and he desires that our homes shall be saved completely—father, mother, and children. Christ loves us all.

IT IS INTERESTING TO NOTE in the Scripture that often households were saved. For example the Philippian jailer and his household were united with the church. Lydia and her household were converted also. We are told in the New Testament how parents and their children united with the church together. What a beautiful thing it is to see that happen. Often we do not give the best we have to our children. Paraphrasing the statement of Winston Churchill, I think we often give our children too little, and too late.

I read a story not long ago of a mother who was supposed to be a Christian but she had become indifferent to the church. She allowed her time to be taken up with social activities rather than devoting her life to the work of the kingdom. She was going out to spend the evening and had engaged a baby-sitter to stay with her little child. As the mother put on her coat to leave home, the child began crying and wanted to go along. The mother picked up a bunch of grapes from a bowl on the table and said, "If you will be a good girl and go to sleep without crying, you can have this bunch of grapes." And the child's face lit up as she took the grapes and agreed to stay home. When the mother returned about midnight, she asked the baby-sitter about the child. Then the mother went into the bedroom, knelt down, and kissed the forehead of her daughter. As she did so the child opened her eyes, looked up into the face of her mother, and held up her clenched fist. "The best for you, Mother," she beamed. The mother pried open the little fingers, and there were three mashed grapes. The child repeated, "I saved the best grapes for you." The mother took the grapes and placed them over on the mantel in the room, and retired.

That night the child died. The next morning when they found the mother she was very bitter—bitter against God and bitter against the world. The husband, trying to console her, asked her to kneel by the side of the bed with him that they might pray to God for help. But the mother in her bitterness cried out, "Pray to a God who has taken the very heart out of my bosom! No, I will not pray." She paced up and down the room and as she did so, her eyes caught a glimpse of the three mashed grapes upon the mantel. Then she recalled the words of the little child, "The best for you, Mother." Those words seemed to soften her heart. She called her husband in, and they knelt together by the side of the bed.

The mother thought about the words of her child, "The best for you, Mother." It was the best thing that could happen to her to wake her up, that she might see the folly of her indifference, her lukewarmness to God. It was the thing she needed to make her want to consecrate her life to God and render him the best service possible. As I read that story, I thought of how many times we wait until some tragedy wakes us up to the seriousness of living—the responsibilities that are placed upon us—before we consecrate our lives and talents to the honor and glory of God.

On this Mother's Day it seems to me that the lesson we should learn is that we must have Christian homes. As our homes go, so goes the church. The world at its worst needs the home at its best. As Latter Day Saints, we should have homes that shine out in our communities. Let us not neglect the responsibility that is ours in rearing our children for God. Unless we are willing to live our own lives in harmony with his divine will, we cannot expect our children to do so. Let us not blame God, the church, nor anyone else for any failure of our own, but let us try to measure up to this responsibility of establishing Christian homes and living our lives in harmony with God's divine will.

She Tunes in on God

During the early years of her life, the brilliant Chinese girl who is now known to the world as Madame Chiang Kai-shek emphasized the importance of what she called the material. She liked to think she was practical. Her mother, whom she loved, did the praying for the family.

It was not until long after she was married and was confronted by problems too great for her to solve that Madame Chiang Kai-shek sought help from the source that had held the loyalty of her mother.

At first, when she turned to prayer, she used to tell God what she wanted. "I used to pray that God would do this or that," she says. "Now I pray only that God will make his will known to me."

She is convinced that "Prayer is our source of guidance and balance. God is able to enlighten the understanding." "I am often bewildered," she says, "because my mind is only finite. I question and doubt my own judgments. Then I seek guidance and when I am sure, I go ahead, leaving the results to him."

She does not think it is possible to make this understandable to one who has not tried it. "To explain what it means to one who has had no experience of getting guidance," she says, "would be like trying to make a stone-deaf person understand the beauty of a Chopin sonata.

"What I do want to make clear is that whether we get guidance or not, it is there. It is like tuning in on a radio. There's music in the air, whether we tune in or not. By learning to tune in, one can understand. . . . With me religion is a very simple thing. It means to try with all my heart and soul and strength and mind to do the will of God."

Letters Worth Sharing

By ROY A. CHEVILLE

THESE PAST FOUR MONTHS letters have been coming to Graceland Campus that are significant enough to be shared with the church at large. They have crossed the Atlantic or the Pacific Oceans. Many were in a strange language. Usually they came by air. This rapid transit made them fresh in spirit. A few years ago two months would have gone by in their passage. Many of them closed with a familiar old phrase, "Your brother in Christ." They remind us of letters Paul used to write to congregations. These Pauline letters were passed on from group to group because they were of general concern. They carried a spirit common to early disciples. In less measure we can do this today.

BRANCHES ABROAD ADOPTED

Last September the students at Graceland were assigned into sixteen pastoral groups. This meant about thirty in each one. A student member of the priesthood was head of each group. With him was a woman student as associate and a faculty member as counselor. Each adopted a "branch abroad" for six months. The "church universal" was to become more than a slogan. Its fellowship was to be a reality. At first I sent a letter of introduction, explaining what the year's project was to be. Immediately each pastoral group sent out a first letter to the branch through the local pastor. We were trying to become branch conscious.

At Christmas time each group sent gifts of their own choosing. These were not intended to be contributions to charity but good-will gestures. Already the college has sent almost five hundred neckties and three hundred handkerchiefs to German congregations. Some pastoral groups sent candy to be distributed among the children. Some sent Christmas cards to the members. Some sent tracts where English could be understood. Some sent books autographed by all the group. Fellowship became very real. At Christmas Vespers it was not mere dramatic staging when a representative of each pastoral group lighted from the central altar candle of Christ a candle for his adopted branch. These students were symbolizing the light of the gospel that was reaching round the world.

A BERLIN LETTER ARRIVES

"It's come!" I looked up to see Bill Ruoff holding a letter. Bill comes from St. Joseph in the Far West Stake. His paternal grandparents had come from Germany. Now at long last had come the awaited reply to the letters of this group to the Saints in Berlin. As the group met and listened to the reading of the letters from the Berlin Branch, miles dropped out, and it seemed just a short way to the east German mission. Edward Thum, the pastor, wrote thus:

I have read and learned with interest how the love of your brothers and sisters is expressed for us. I read the letter aloud to the Berlin Branch and there was a great rejoicing over it. . . .

We have a total of 161 members. Every Sunday we have worship service and Sunday school in the morning and worship again in the afternoon. On Wednesdays in the West zone and on Thursdays in the East zone, there is Bible study. The choir practices on Friday evening.

We are deeply touched by the good spirit of Graceland, and we feel that spirit as we read your letter.

A member of the Berlin Branch, Fritz Burisch, wrote for the members.

Our joy is always great when we hear something from our American Saints.

The distribution of the ties and handkerchiefs brought forth much fun. We write our gratitude to you who have thought of us in such a friendly manner.

FROM NÜRNBERG

Group IX, with Cecil Robbins of British Columbia as student pastor, sent letters to the Nürnberg Branch. George Baier, the pastor, writes and speaks a cultured English. A packet of letters came from this city, most of them in German. Some of them were from working people to whom writing did not come easily. Out of this parcel of letters we send these extracts:

We are all of one family, no matter how far we are apart, what languages we speak and under what climate or other conditions we live.

We are displaced persons from the U.S.R. We were baptized in the spring of 1949. We like to go to church. In the time of our great sorrow, it has been a comfort and now it is for us a necessity. Nürnberg was 90 per cent bombed out, but life goes on. We look forward with the church.

Our family has not been long in the church. We came out of the Sudetan area. We lost all our property, but we found the church. I want to learn to know the young Saints of America.

This autobiographical letter from a youth of the Nürnberg group needs no introduction, no interpretation:

I was born in 1935. Even in my early childhood my life began to be rather difficult. My father was opposed to the Hitler government and was imprisoned. . . . After six years he died at a concentration camp at Dachau in 1945. My mother became ill, and we lost our home. So at the age of five I went to an orphanage for four years. Then mother and I went to work in the fields. I went back to Nürnberg to find our home gone. It was then we received the message of the Reorganized Church from the Sisters' Circle. I had always prayed to our Heavenly Father to protect us. Everyday we thank God for his goodness. I desire to serve his church faithfully in return.

IN ENGLISH FROM OSLO

Group XVI had a friendly contact with the Saints in Oslo, Norway. Its faculty associate was Velma Ruch.

who had spent several years of her childhood in Scandinavia. Olaf Fossum, their leader, can read and write English. Lynn Weldon of Warrensburg in Central Missouri Stake led the group in its pastoral and evangelistic activities. At Christmas time they sent a picture album with scenes of the college included. They ordered a year's subscription to the Herald and to Daily Bread. It was expected the pastor would interpret into Norwegian. From Oslo came replies. From these we take the following excerpts:

These greetings from you are appreciated very much because they do remind us of you youths at Graceland and of our church as an organization which has been of greater importance than many people can realize.

A great work is ahead for the church to do. I am just thinking of the Indians living in North and South America and the impression of the message of the Book of Mormon in the minds of those people.

It is Sunday when I am writing you. Through the window I am looking at the falling snowflakes and listening to the sound of the wind. I am wondering how you are today, whether you have sunshine over snow-covered fields or if it is raining or snowing. I send greetings to young Saints at Graceland.

AN OVERVIEW OF THE BRANCHES

A roll call of the "Branches Abroad" reads like a roster of missions and a list of youth about the church. Each group could present letters to this library of correspondence. In the names that follow the first is the priesthood leader, the second the woman associate, and the third the faculty counselor.

A TWO-WAY FELLOWSHIP

"Into all the world!" rings through these letters. The Saints of the Center Place reach out in the ministry of correspondence. There is another side. It may be caught up in the phrase, "From all the world." Just as surely do these letters minister to us. They help us to save ourselves from ourselves. They deliver us from our provincialism. The student group that heard from Fred Becker of Kassel of the little group he is building there through his personal testimonials can hardly slink back into complacency. The group that followed the work in Tahiti can never think of "Whites Only" gospel. Those in the group that sent an autographical book to Enfield, England, find some of their heart in Britain. Benny Simmons who corresponded for his group with Ken Hughes of Marazion will not forget the handful of Saints down on the Cornwall Coast.

Last week I received a letter from Violet Worth of the Southern England District. She was wanting a song I had sung with the boys and girls on Mission Day at Nuneaton. It began like this, "O chain of love, that yet shall bind the warring hearts of humankind" and went into the refrain, "Around the world the chain of love we raise." In memory I hear them singing it. We can raise that chain. I believe understanding letter-writing can be a force in furthering this gospel circle. As in great spiritual ventures the blessings are two-direction. The salutation "Dear Brother" can be used and shared around the world.

BROTHERHOOD

God has taught in the Scriptures the lesson of a universal brotherhood, and man must not gainsay the teaching. Shivering in the ice-bound or scorching in the tropical regions; in the lap of luxury or in the wild hardihood of the primeval forest; belting the globe in a tired search for rest, or quieting through life in the heart of ancestral woods; gathering all the decencies around him like a garment, or battling in fierce raid of crime against a world which has disowned him, there is an inner humanness which binds me to that man by a primitive and indissoluble bond. He is my brother, and I cannot sever the relationship. He is my brother, and I cannot release myself from the obligation to do him good.

—WILLIAM M. PUNSHON.

Enough of good there is in the lowest estate to sweeten life; enough of evil in the highest to check presumption; enough there is of both in all estates to bind us in compassionate brotherhood, to teach us impressively that we are of one dying and one immortal family.—Henry Giles.

Kings and their subjects, masters and slaves, find a common level in two places—at the foot of the cross, and in the grave.—C. C. Colton.

Missionary Businessman

A Series Based on the Biographical Notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Eight

BROTHER WALLER sailed for San Francisco on June 11, 1924, expecting to be absent about three months. While in California, he preached in the San Francisco, Oakland, and Sacramento Branches. On July 8 he left for England via New York for the purpose of visiting his wife, who for some time had been sick and, accompanied by her youngest daughter Beatrice, was recuperating in England.

While en route to New York, Brother Waller spent a day with President F. M. Smith, who gave him letters of introduction to several elders prominent in the church work in England. During his stay in London he spent a Sunday with the Enfield Saints. He addressed the Sunday school in the afternoon and spoke at 6:30 in the evening. During the prayer meeting that followed the preaching service, the following encouraging message was given to Elder Waller by the Spirit through Elder J. A. Judd:

Thus saith the Spirit unto thee, my servant Gilbert Waller, I, the Lord, have looked down upon thee and loved thee. I have watched over thee and protected and preserved thee. Thou hast been faithful to those things that have been given unto thee, and I say unto thee, my son, that thou shalt still further be protected and preserved, for the hand that has led thee and the Spirit that thou hast been willing to follow up to this time shall lead thee in the future, and thou shalt be blessed. Thou shalt have the desire of thy heart to speak the Word in this land, and I say unto thee, my son, that it shall not fall upon barren land, for it shall awaken in the hearts of thy countrymen those thoughts concerning me that shall be the means of turning some unto me. Therefore, my son, lift up thy voice and fear not, and I, the Lord, will be with thee. I will give thee peace by day and by night; yea, the rest of thy journey shall be peace because thou hast thrown in thy sickle unwearingly and thou hast not sought for thyself, and therefore I have sought for thee. Thou hast put my work before thee always, therefore thou shalt be always before my face.

The promise made in Brother Judd's message that his words would not fall on barren land, was fulfilled. A brother, after listening to one of Brother Waller's sermons, came to him and said how much the words uttered had helped him as he was becoming lukewarm in the work and losing faith. He was spiritually revived. This, no doubt, may have been true in the case of others.

On Brother Waller's return trip a terrific storm was encountered the day before the ship reached New York. During the storm Brother Waller was comforted by the assurance of protection which had been given him.

His son Gilbert had been ill for some time. On his last visit to Australia, he had the flu followed by pneumonia. He had also had an operation at Mayo's Clinic. In October he left for England. Early in November he called upon Dr. Evans in London, who wrote Brother Waller regarding his son's condition, which he reported as serious. He had tuberculosis. On November 7 he was under the care of a doctor in Switzerland, where he went after visiting his mother and sister Beatrice in Paris.

In 1925 while Brother Waller was missionary-in-charge of the work in the Hawaiian Islands, he was also president of the Honolulu Main Branch and the Japanese Branch. On July 5 he was elected president of the Chinese Branch, as the pastor, Charles Lee, was resigning.

Because of the serious condition of his son Gilbert's health, Brother Waller sailed for San Francisco on December 1. Young Gilbert with his mother and Beatrice, had decided to return home. Although he received temporary benefit from taking treatment at a sanitarium in Switzerland, he caught cold and became very sick with bronchial trouble. Arriving at Los Angeles, he was taken to a sanitarium at Monrovia, where he was visited by Mr. Carter, who thought highly of him. Mr. Carter sent word to Brother Waller. Brother Waller arrived at San Francisco on Tuesday, December 8, and the next day left for Monrovia to be near his son. His daughter Ruth was also there, and together they visited with Gilbert until he passed away on Sunday, December 13, 1925.

The death of his only son was a terrible blow to Brother Waller. Gilbert had made a wonderful record, was highly respected in the business world at Honolulu, and was beloved by Mr. Carter, with whom he was associated at the Parker Ranch on Hawaii while acting as assistant manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, Limited.

When Brother Waller found Gilbert was to be taken, he turned to the Lord, submissive to his divine will, and received wonderful relief through the blessing of God's Spirit.

On January 6, 1926, Brother Waller sailed for Honolulu, where he again resumed his business responsibilities and his church work as missionary-in-charge.

At the beginning of 1927, Brother Waller continued his activities and was still in charge of the Hawaiian Mission. He now was living at the Young Hotel.

On Sunday, January 2, the election of officers of the Japanese and Chinese Sunday schools took place. There was a joint Communion service of the three branches—Hawaiian, Chinese, and Japanese. On Sunday afternoon Brother Waller, with Sister Chase, wife of A. M. Chase who had been doing missionary work on the island of Hawaii, visited the tuberculosis sanitarium known as Leahi Home. Brother Waller visited this home each Saturday afternoon and greeted the hundreds of sick people. On the first Sunday of each month, he took the Communion emblems to sick members there.

Important Letters

During April Brother Waller received two important letters, one from Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and one from Patriarch Bullard, both dated Independence, Missouri, April 29. Two or three months before receiving Brother F. A. Smith's letter, Brother Waller had written to him regarding promises made in his patriarchal blessing received through Patriarch Alexander Smith in Honolulu in 1902. Brother Waller wrote to F. A. Smith because he was troubled about the church work in the Islands moving so slowly and wondered how the promises in his blessing could work out. After waiting for some time and receiving no reply from the Presiding Patriarch, Brother Waller bowed in prayer to the Lord, beseeching him to move upon the heart of Patriarch Bullard so that he might be directed to write a letter concerning the matter Brother Waller wished to know. When the letters from Patriarchs Smith and Bullard arrived, Brother Waller rejoiced in his heart as he realized how kind the Lord had been in thus answering his prayer in such a marvelous way. Extracts from the two letters follow.

From Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith:

There have been conditions that have hindered and caused many of the promises of God to be delayed and may in some instances hold up the work because God works through human agencies and will not take man's agency from him. Man runs wild at times, in spite of all the warnings God has given him, and thus interferes with God's work and prevents the rapid accomplishment that otherwise would come. Then we get discouraged and conclude the promises are not coming to pass. You know God said this would be the case in Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6; "Who am I, saith the Lord, that have promised and have not fulfilled? I command and a man obeys not, I revoke and they receive not the blessing; then they say in their hearts, This is not the work of the Lord, for his promises are not fulfilled." It is our natural tendency to feel that if the promises are not fulfilled as soon as we would like them to be, something is wrong with the promises or the one who gave them. Now I have made up my mind that the fault does not always lie with the man giving nor the one receiving, but there are others directly connected with carrying out the purposes of God who may fail to discern or vision the will of God because of their desire to have their own will carried out. Thus the work of God is hindered for a season, but eventually it will triumph and his promises will be carried into effect.

Therefore, be not discouraged; your work and your sacrifices are pleasing unto me. Do not fear to leave the work in the Islands in the hands of others and cease to worry over conditions which you cannot control, and abide my time, saith the Spirit, and I will be with you to comfort and strengthen as your needs shall be, for I will move to the accomplishment of my work in my own time and in mine own way. Cease to worry over the things you cannot understand, but exercise faith in me, and I will uphold and sustain thee. Be of good cheer and press on unto the end, and thy reward shall be sure. Amen. (I have been impressed to write the above for your comfort and direction, if it may prove a comfort.)

From Patriarch Bullard:

It has been some time since we exchanged messages, and maybe your many cares will preclude your answering this, but thought travels long distances oftentimes, and faces which we have cherished come before us in our silent moments and times of meditation, and we wonder if all is well with them when absence separates. So as I am leaving home for my field of labor, I thought I would let you know you are not forgotten.

I think it is four years since I heard from you, and many things have happened during that time, some of which have been of the kind that try the soul and sadden the heart, but as that has been the heritage of mankind throughout the ages, we have to take what comes to us with whatever grace we can demand and continue the pathway of life.

I think it is foolish to trouble very much about what we cannot change or correct, but we are so very human we want to see and know the things which are hidden, and seem to feel the Lord is at times slow to hear and answer some of our petitions. Many get discouraged because of this, but if we will remember the promises of Scripture truth, "No good thing will he withhold from them who walk uprightly," we should also remember David's prescription for this: "I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me and heard my cry," and again, "The trial of our patience is more value than silver or gold." We should try and "let patience have her perfect work," in so doing we will leave with our Heavenly Father what belongs to him to perform and have faith in him to bring about his purposes.

You and I have put too many years in the Master's service to doubt very seriously his promises, and though there are those things which do seriously hinder the work for a time, I fully believe there will yet be a welding together of the forces which now are in a measure separated. I think unity will again be restored, but it will take the Almighty One to do this and in a way that will leave no doubt in the minds of those who profess his name to doubt; yes, he said to me by his power, "I will turn and overturn till my purposes are carried out, and none shall hinder," and also, "Wait on the Lord. Stand still, and see the salvation of God." Though oft impatient I am trying to occupy that position.

May the Lord give you abundant reason to place in his keeping your cares and trials, and give the sweet peace that is so much needed to carry on his work.

In a letter from Brother Waller's daughter Ruth, she mentions having attended the Methodist church to hear a sermon by a Dr. Parker who had telephoned regarding an article written by Gilbert J. Waller he had read. Two paragraphs from her letter are as follows:

Dr. Parker gave a fine discourse to young men on choosing a career and mentioned many prominent men in all vocations of life, who had made a success of their business life, and as a climax to his sermon said, "I am proud to know that we had to come to our own San Francisco to get real inspiration for a truly successful life. I read of a successful man in the business world who is also a success in the religious world, a man who, besides being busy with a vocation, was busy giving time and energy to the work of Christ and God who says his success in life came from determination, deliberation, and stewardship—a beautiful thought. The writer was Gilbert J. Waller of San Francisco. I was so impressed when I read his article that I felt compelled to go to the telephone and if possible get in communication with this man. I spoke to his daughter, who informed me Mr. Waller was at present in Honolulu. His life is one to model after, as I know he has made a success in the business world and has done a great deal of good work for the Master as well."

You can imagine how thrilled and proud I felt at being your daughter and thought how far-reaching a life such as yours is cannot be guessed. You should feel pleased to have your well-spent life given recognition from a Methodist pulpit of a city the size of San Francisco.

The year 1928 began with Brother Waller still in charge of the Hawaiian Mission. At this time he was living at Kahala (Honolulu), where his daughter Esther was keeping house for him.

Elder Waller's Sunday activities were such that almost every available hour of the day was taken up in attending some church service. Besides this, his week was full of other activities, such as accompanying his daughter to spend a Monday holiday in visiting among the Saints and in preparation for a funeral service he was to conduct the next day. In the evening he presided over the annual meeting of the Anti-Saloon League of Hawaii, at which there was an election of officers and a new president appointed. On Wednesday evening he attended the Japanese prayer meeting, also visiting a sister who was ill in Queen's Hospital. On Thursday evening he attended the Chinese prayer meeting. On Friday he visited members. On Saturday, after a busy day at the packing plant in which 104 cattle were processed, he performed a marriage ceremony at 6:00 p.m. Later he visited a lady who had just returned from the Coast. All the activities of the week were done in addition to caring for his regular employment.

As Brother Williams was in charge of the main branch (Hawaiian), Brother Waller devoted most of his Sundays to the Japanese and Chinese Branches. However, he was often called upon for special duties at the main branch as this Sunday schedule of January 22, 1928, will show:

- 8:00 a.m. Japanese Sunday School

QUESTION:

How could Jesus have visited the lost tribes in their scattered and unidentified condition? I believe he did, but how?

Ohio

E. L. M.

ANSWER:

When the remnants of the ten tribes were carried away captive into Assyria by Shalmaneser in 722 B. C., the greater portion of them became scattered among the Gentiles until they lost their identity. But a group of them, according to a prophetic description given in II Esdras 13, gathered together and migrated apparently eastward to a land "where never man dwelt." Here they lived until the latter time. They are referred to as "the ten tribes."

This branch of Israel is undoubtedly one of the four branches described in the parable of the olive tree in Jacob, chapter three of the Book of Mormon, which the Lord led away to plant in the "nethermost parts" of the earth, to be kept distinctively Israelite until the time of Israel's restoration in the last days. Jesus spoke of this group to the Nephites, saying "I go . . . to show myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father, for he knoweth whither he hath taken them."—III Nephi 8:4.

The Book of Mormon is a historical account of another one of the four groups, which the Lord led to the Western Continent about 600 B. C. to whom he appeared after his resurrection, restoring to them his gospel and establishing his church among them. The other two groups or branches are not specifically mentioned. The Lord's purpose was the same with all. The ten tribe group is mentioned but not identified as to people or country.

The Bible gives nothing concerning the ten tribes after their national destruction and their being carried captive to Assyria, except the numerous prophecies of their return and restoration which carry the assumption that these tribes existed as a group. The Doctrine and Covenants makes particular mention of them as being in "the north country," (north country being a symbolic term applying to the land of their residence wherever it may be) and of their coming into remembrance before the Lord, and of their being restored to divine favor and blessing.

In appearing to the Nephite branch in America, Jesus did not appear to all the people, but to a representative group, appointing ministers by whom he sent his gospel throughout the land. This is most likely what he did with the ten tribes. Even in his ministry to the Jews in Canaan, he did not attempt to personally reach all the people but sent the twelve and the seventy on their missions to carry his message to many he could not reach. Besides these, millions of Jews were scattered about European, Asiatic, and African lands who were not reached at that time. Christ's personal ministrations in all the groups where he visited were to a representative few, but his message and spiritual ministrations were extended by his messengers to all the people.

QUESTION:

What is the difference between a government system of Communism and that advocated by Bishop DeLapp in "Zioniac Procedure" and Bishop Koehler in "Religion's Answer to the World Problem"?

Missouri

C. O. H.

ANSWER:

I suspect that a "government system" in the question means a system of administration of the economic affairs of a people. No indication is given of the kind of "Communism" the questioner has in mind.

"Zioniac Procedure" and "Religion's Answer" treat of one "government system." The essence and crux of these two presentations are the same in principle. Both representations respect a mode of economic society, or a system of administration of economic affairs that is adapted to the purpose of promoting the welfare of "the soul" (Doctrine and Covenants 77:1) which is a unity of body and spirit. It is an economy in which temporal things are at once spiritual.

Communisms—which are theoretically or supposedly "all things common" affairs—are very different. Some so-called Communism is not true Communism at all. Technocracy is one kind of Communism, the Llano Colony of Southern Louisiana is another. One is a sort of "carbon monoxide" to the soul, the other is more of a "carbon dioxide." One makes the "spirit" lean by making the "body" fat. But one as the other is essentially a "bread basket" affair, "a cultivator of the soil."

The unit of economic organization or of economic life—and, of course, the unit of government—in one is the local community; in the other it is the North American Continent. So the "government system" is very different in them.

To "cultivate the soil," or to provide the needs of the body, it is not necessary to have true democracy or common consent; that is, today it is not necessary to have universal and immediate personal participation in the business of peoples. But to cultivate the soul it is (Doctrine and Covenants 77:1).

So the "government system" advocated by the writers referred to is very different from Communism, in that it is adapted to the religious purpose of cultivating the soul. But there are specific crucial differences in the "government system" advocated in "Zioniac Procedure" and "Religion's Answer." There is a very distinctive stewardship, a distinctive inheritance, and a distinctive kind of distribution—which is two-phase—and a distinctive kind of surplus.

One must live more than an hour or a day, more than a year, with Zionism and appreciate the difference between it and Communism as a "government system."

To summarize briefly, the aims of Communism are entirely different from the aims of our Zioniac organization. Communism takes away the free will of the individual. As a church, we are primarily concerned with the development of the individual, both in his individual stewardship responsibility, and in his relation to others. Communism seeks to control the government of the state; our church in its functioning must work within the government, and inasmuch as the objectives of the church and of Communism differ so greatly, it would be impossible for the church to function under a Communistic government.

Auditorium Guide Service

By CHARLES KORNMAN

GOOD MORNING. Are you visiting?" "Why, yes. We saw the sign outside advertising guide service, and we thought . . ."

"We're glad to have you. Perhaps I can be of service to you. Won't you step this way please?"

It is the affable, interested voice of Brother Gomer Wells as he greets visitors to the Auditorium. Of course, his approach varies with different groups—a guide soon learns the little signs that indicate a visitor's interest, and his tour is conducted with that in mind.

Strange people are common sights to all the guides as they voluntarily come to work in the Auditorium. They vary from the vacationing Cuban doctor to the old Mormon lady (very nice and very interesting) who simply could not understand why our two churches have never joined as one. The guide who is new at the business finds himself in a corner many times, but, if he is of the right caliber he gets caught only once on a particular point.

Generally speaking, the visitor is taken on an extended tour of the building. Its various dimensions and proportions are described. The function of the structure is stressed. Mention is made of the fact that from this building go the directives and instructions for God's work in building his society in these last days. The fact that this is an administrative building is emphasized. At all times visitors are treated with respect. No doctrine is forced upon them, although at every opportunity things are suggested which tend to make a normal person curious about Latter Day Saintism. Brother Wells takes his sight-seeing party around, giving those who care to plenty of time to ask questions—even asking if there is something he can explain to them. He speaks with the assurance that truth and right bring. He mentions apostles and prophets as if they were a firsthand experience of his. Invariably the visitor will ask, "Well, why have such things today?" And what better chance could a good Latter Day Saint ask for!

Many times a day the question of our doctrine as compared with that of the Utah church is asked—often by people from Utah. "Never argue when the question comes up" is the good advice Brother Wells gives his guides. "Don't give the impression you are trying to evade an issue, for you'll have these people for only fifteen or twenty minutes at the most, and you won't be able to change convictions which have been thirty year's in solidifying in that length of time. Always keep in mind that you are an ambassador of good will to the visitor. Suggest that we have material written by competent authors which covers the question quite adequately. If they're really seeking for the truth, these little pamphlets will certainly provide an open door for them to enter."

"Assurance of position and tactfulness—" is the final advice he gives, and, carrying his eighty-one years with sprightly dignity, moves on. Perhaps it was of such persons the Master was speaking when he said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

BOOKS

Every American citizen should read The Road Ahead by John T. Flynn. The condensation of this book appears in the February issue of Reader's Digest. It points out the steps along the road we have already traveled which are actually great strides toward socialism under the guise of planned economy. It follows through in detail the methods by which a socialistic system takes over various sectors of a nation's economy. We in America have long cherished the principles of freedom upon which our government was originally founded, but we are in danger of losing those very freedoms before we wake up to the full realization of what is happening.

It seems incredible that intelligent people, having seen the progress and evil results of the creeping revolution in Europe and Great Britain during recent years, could allow the socialist monster to gain a stranglehold over them—that they could passively exchange their freedom for a mess of pottage heavily seasoned with false promises and rosy dreams.

Shall we give up our inherent free agency and let a Welfare State relieve us of all responsibilities of self-determination "from the cradle to the grave"? We must face the facts as they exist even now and act immediately. To quote Mr. Flynn:

The task before us is clear. For our principles of action we must go back to our Constitution, to our Declaration of Independence, to our history and to the example set by our national fathers. We must begin now to dismantle the tyrant State in America and to build up once again the energies of a free people.

The Peaceable Kingdom, by Ardyth Kennelly. Houghton Mifflin, Boston, $3.

A more ironical title could not have been chosen for this novel, for peace was the one thing the people never had. At the very best, the plural wives of Olaf Ecklund could reach only a kind of compromise, an armed truce, an adjustment to circumstances they hated, a state of exhausted emotions in which they forgot their jealousy and insecurity by turning their attention to the daily and hourly needs of their children, their neighbors, and friends.

The author describes her people in a realistic and sympathetic manner, recording their struggles in adversity, their fears and perils, their want and suffering, their mixtures of human frailty and nobility, and their courage in time of trouble.

One dark shadow hung over them perpetually, an evil from which they never escaped day or night. For the women, there was always the fear that a husband would bring home another wife to divide his time, affection, and the means of support for another home. For the children, there was the perplexity of having a father part of the time, and never knowing when they would have one or not. For the men, there was the incurable jealousy of the wives, the wrangling, the risk of prosecution and jail, the fear of detection, and long periods in hiding. Polygamy was a curse to all of them.

The author makes the common mistake of many in the West of accepting the deception of Brigham Young in putting the responsibility of polygamy upon Joseph Smith, who was innocent of it. Otherwise, The Peaceable Kingdom is a good story well told, a novel with a serious purpose, a social document of pioneer America.

Youth Programs for Special Occasions

Youth leaders, teachers, pastors, and young people themselves will find here a wide variety of simple, effective, easily presented programs—inspiring, informative, rich in worship values and lasting spiritual truths. $2.50.

Lawrence, Kansas, Branch Aids in Inter-Racial Affair

Since the spring of 1949 the Saints of Lawrence Branch have provided quarters in the basement of the church for the Co-operative Nursery which includes children of different nationalities, races, and religions. The nursery is sponsored by the Lawrence League for the Practice of Democracy which is composed of faculty members from the University of Kansas, leading ministers of Lawrence, and many civic-minded persons from various occupational, national, racial, and religious groups of the community. The dominant philosophy of this organization is that peaceful inter-racial relations will be achieved in our world of conflicting values concerning race through a gradual educational program which includes contacts between racial and nationality groups under normal and mutually satisfying conditions. The nursery functions in a way consistent with this basic proposition.

The school observes a semester calendar corresponding to the university semester schedule. Incidentally many of the parents are university faculty members and students. During the semester the regular school hours are from 9:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., Monday through Friday. At the present time the nursery has twenty-two enrollees ranging in age from three to five years.

The success in operating the nursery is attributable in part to the unique combination of voluntary work by parents and the full-time services of a professionally-trained nursery teacher. The fathers of the nursery children built the chairs, tables, many of the toys and other equipment—the maintenance of which they assume. Each mother according to a prearranged plan spends one morning a week at the nursery, assisting with the activities. During the three years the nursery has been functioning in Lawrence, the mothers have developed a great deal of skill in co-operative effort. A high esprit de corps is maintained under the supervision of the nursery teacher who has shown considerable ability in working with parents as well as being unusually competent and skillful in her work with the children.

As far as the Lawrence Branch is concerned, this has been a rare opportunity for community service. The nominal funds which the nursery has paid for the use of the basement cannot in any sense be considered rent. What the Saints have done is to suggest on a community level some of the outgoing possibilities of the gospel and the church. It has been an opportunity for each of us to judge here and now whether the source of our individual motivations, as we have claimed, does come from Christian sentiments which are illustrated in the life of Jesus of Nazareth.

I Believe

I believe in the dignity of labor, whether with head or hand; that the world owes no man a living but that it owes every man an opportunity to make a living.

I believe in the supreme worth of the individual and in his right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

I believe that truth and justice are fundamental to an enduring social order.

I believe in the sacredness of a promise, that a man's word should be as good as his bond; that character—not wealth or power or position—is of supreme worth.

I believe that every right implies a responsibility; every opportunity, an obligation; every possession, a duty.

I believe that the law was made for man and not man for the law; that government is the servant of the people and not their master.

I believe that thrift is essential to well-ordered living and that economy is a prime requisite of a sound financial structure, whether in government, business or personal affairs.

I believe that the rendering of useful service is the common duty of mankind and that only in the purifying fire of sacrifice is the dross of selfishness consumed and the greatness of the human soul set free.

I believe in an all-wise and all-loving God, named by whatever name, and that the individual's highest fulfillment, greatest happiness, and widest usefulness are to be found in living in harmony with His will.

I believe that love is the greatest thing in the world; that it alone can overcome hate; that right can and will triumph over might.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

Mothers' - Daughters' Devotional

By KATHERINE H. WILSON

ONE OF LIFE'S HAPPIEST RELATIONSHIPS is that found between mothers and daughters. I speak from personal experience — my daughter has given me my greatest joy.

Credit should be given to Miss Anne Jarvis for her efforts in 1906 in beginning a nation-wide movement pleading for a day of honoring mothers, and to President Wilson who issued a proclamation in 1914, stating that a national holiday be established on the second Sunday in May known as Mother's Day. I am not inclined to bring the usual sentimental eulogy of motherhood, but I do want to say that each day should be "Mother's Day."

It is proper to have some Scripture for a devotional talk, so I have selected three statements from Proverbs 31:

But a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.

Her children arise up and call her blessed.

Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

I SHOULD LIKE to give you three word pictures of past, present, and future mothers. We are fortunate to be living in an age when mothers are recognized as having a holy mission to fulfill. About the time Jesus came into the world, women were allowed to attend services in the synagogues but were not counted as members of the congregation. Then one day God lifted a woman from obscurity and set her apart as the mother of the Son of God. Motherhood was forever sanctified by this act.

I have tried at times to picture Mary—this choice of God. Many lovely pictures of the Madonna are given us by the masters, and we marvel at her story. According to tradition she was supposed to be from sixteen to eighteen years old when the Angel Gabriel greeted her:

Hail thou virgin who art highly favored of the Lord. The Lord is with thee for thou art chosen and blessed among women. Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favor with God, and shall bring forth a child and shall call him Jesus.

Can you imagine the confusion and alarm that filled her heart when she said, "How can this be?"

Certainly a great weight of responsibility fell upon the shoulders of this young Jewish girl, and we marvel at her faith when she answered, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word."—Luke 1:38. She must have been the embodiment of gentle refinement and innocent sweetness. Coupled with her radiant beauty was strength of character, dignity, and poise. This mother-to-be, who, in the years to come when she could not fully comprehend, "cherished all these sayings pondering them in her heart." Later her eyes were filled with unutterable sadness when she was robbed of that which was dearer than life itself. Truly we may say of Mary, "But a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised."

THE SECOND WORD PICTURE I want to share is that of a modern mother—Judge Camille Kelley of the Memphis Children's Court.

It was my privilege several years ago to be a guest at a woman's club in Kansas City and hear Judge Kelley. She completely won me by her charming personality as a speaker. She is one of those rare persons who can reach right over into your heart and hold you captive by the truthfulness of her message. She has a convincing message in which she believes intensely, and she genuinely loves all human beings, white or black, rich or poor. In her twenty years on the bench she has mothered 45,000 children.

She says there are no "bad" children. All a wayward boy or girl needs is a large dose of love and understanding. Daily she proves it. J. Edgar Hoover calls her court one of the greatest centers of crime prevention in America. Delinquency isn't juvenile she says—its parental, and she deals with all kinds of parental failures.

There are the parents who violate laws in small ways and then are surprised that their children break them. There are quarrelsome parents, parents who "white-lie" by speaking half-truths, and those who exaggerate or make excuses not realizing their children are absorbing every word. One parent who deceives the other is teaching the child to go and do likewise. Among the worst are those people who refuse to accept the responsibilities of parenthood, and those who show partiality and encourage jealousy. "Children are going to get mothering and fathering somehow," says the Judge. "Many immoral girls are reaching out blindly for the love they never got at home."

Surely it may be said of this modern mother, "Her children arise up and call her blessed."

HERE IS THE THIRD PICTURE. No Angel Gabriel will search out future mothers, but God just as truly says to them, "The Lord is with thee for thou art chosen and blessed among women." We can imagine one of these mothers approaching Mary and asking, "If you had a little daughter, what would you teach her?" And Mary might well answer in modern parlance:

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

THE COMING OF SPRING brings a freshening of the spirit, and a zest for accomplishing great things in our lives. This freshness is found in the magazines for April, and is expressed in a variety of subjects.

"Are You a Glutton?" Woman's Day, speaks of a greediness of the spirit that might take hold of any one of us.

"Write It Three Times Faster," Woman's Day, gives the first five lessons of the speedwriting course, and will give you a good working knowledge of the most frequently used words, enabling you to take notes, jot down recipes, or take minutes much faster than by long-hand.

"My Child Is a Bully!" American Home, deals with a problem that many dislike to face squarely, and will point out some reasons and helps.

"Raising a Riot," Reader's Digest book condensation, is good medicine for every housewife. It is an account of one man's experiences when he had to take over as mother and father to his three children, and how he became a wise man who knows a woman's work is never done.

"When Children Have Bad Dreams," Parents' Magazine, deals with a problem that is too often met with lack of understanding.

"Grown-Ups Are Funny People," Parents' Magazine, whose author is only twelve years old, is the first part of a two-part article, that gives a penetrating and somewhat disconcerting picture of adults as children see them.

"The Self-Inflicted Backache," Ladies' Home Journal, may be just what you need after spring housecleaning, for the author tells how to cure it!

"She's Putting Her House and Herself in Shape," McCall's, gives a posture expert's tricks for turning housework into a beauty treatment.

"Etiquette for the Wedding," Good Housekeeping, presents a simple and useful guide to the basic

Story of a Mother

MANY YEARS AGO there came to the throne of Egypt a pharaoh who did not treasure the memory of Joseph, the Israelite. Because this ruler thought the Israelites might become more powerful than the Egyptians, he made them slaves of his people. Over every group of Israelite slaves he placed a cruel taskmaster. Not satisfied with this means of exterminating the oppressed nation, the pharaoh decided upon another plan. He called to him certain women of the Israelites and charged them that every boy child should be drowned in the Nile River. Because these women feared God, they suffered all children to live, but as many children as were found by the soldiers of the pharaoh were put to death.

Now there was at that time in Egypt a certain Israelite woman who had an infant by the name of Moses. Because she loved her child and would not deliver him up to death, she concealed him until he was about three months old. When she could no longer hide him, this good mother made a small ark of bulrushes, and put the child therein. As she placed the lid of the ark over her son she besought God to care for him. She laid the boat among the flags at the river's edge. Miriam, sister of Moses, watched from a distance for she wondered what might happen.

AT THAT VERY TIME the daughter of Pharaoh came with her maid servants from the palace to bathe in the river. The daughter of Pharaoh looked upon the river and beheld rules and regulations which apply to all weddings.

A noted educational adviser discusses a question facing many young people and their parents in "Who Should Go to College?" American Magazine.

"It Takes a Woman to Make a Wife," Woman's Home Companion, is an outstanding contribution to the field of marriage relations.

the little ark moving slowly among the flags. After the small vessel had been brought to her by one of her maid servants, she lifted its lid. Because the little one cried, she had compassion on him, yet her compassion could not quiet the child. Then came Miriam to the water's edge and said to Pharaoh's daughter, "Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?" No sooner had the daughter of Pharaoh consented, then Miriam went directly to her mother. When the Israelite mother arrived the daughter of Pharaoh commanded her, "Take this child with thee, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages."

The heart of the good mother was filled with silent thanksgiving as she took her son from the hands of the royal princess. During the next few years she knew the joy of raising her own child, of teaching him the glories of God, the value of prayer, and the knowledge of his forefathers. She cared for his childhood injuries, directed his association with playmates, and taught him the proper rules of manhood.

WHEN MOSES was old enough to receive instruction from the scholars of the royal household, his mother took him to the daughter of Pharaoh and delivered him into her keeping. But no instructions, however skilled the teacher might be, could overshadow the instructions of the mother. She did her part well, for in her hands rested the preservation of Christianity. If she had not planted her religion deep into the heart of Moses, he might have stepped aside and worshiped the idols of Egypt. Because an Israelite mother knew how to care for her child, a nation was turned from the worship of idols to the worship of the God of heaven.

Why Girls Should Not Smoke

The purpose of tobacco companies today is, as far as possible, to place a cigarette between the lips of every girl in America. Cleverly written articles by experts have appeared in the leading journals and newspapers, calling attention to the benefits supposed to be derived from the use of certain brands of cigarettes . . . One company had for a slogan, "When tempted to reach for a sweet, reach for a cigarette instead." There is no objection to an occasional sweet since candy is a food. It is not the most wholesome food and should, therefore, be used sparingly. The craving for sweets is, however, a natural and normal one . . . My advice to the girl who has an ambition to be slim and trim, and has a desire to keep a clean skin, pure blood, and a healthy body is, "When tempted to reach for a cigarette, reach for an orange instead." Other acid and subacid fruits serve the same purpose and, when used freely, even lessen the craving for cigarettes.

Smoking has in the past few years become common among girls and young women chiefly because of cleverly-written, misleading, and untruthful ads of tobacco-sellers. Deploring this, one editor of a publication devoted to music and drama said, "I wonder if some artists are not going too far in testimonial writing." Of a tenor whose name was attached to two rival cigarettes, he said, "Each testimonial signed by this man was so eloquent and extreme that you wonder how he could endure another brand." This artist, like many of his colleagues, sold his name and prestige for the sake of advertising. The editor said further, "I know of some endorsers of cigarettes who have never smoked in all their lives."

Sonja Henie, world's champion figure skater, was approached by publicity agents for her endorsement of a certain cigarette. They said, "You don't have to put one in your mouth, but we will publish your picture and give you $2,500." To this she replied, "I don't smoke. I won't take your $2,500. I am ashamed of women who smoke."

It is a serious thing for boys and young men to become addicts to the cigarette, but it is worse for girls or young women to form this habit. Hugh S. Cummings, former United States Surgeon-General, in referring to the increase of smoking among women, said, "If American women generally contract the habit, as reports now indicate they are doing, the entire nation will suffer. The physical tone of the whole nation will be lowered. The habit harms a woman more than it does a man. The woman's nervous system is more highly organized than the man's; the reaction, therefore, is more intense."

Public sentiment is being aroused in certain localities against the misleading statements made over the radio and through the printed page concerning smoking. One city council termed it "a travesty upon young womanhood," and called it a "direct attack upon the well-being of our young people." There should be a universal protest against the mode of advertising carried forward by the various cigarette concerns. Ministers of the gospel should put forth a special effort to enlighten youth on the matter. Doctors should call attention to the results of the use of cigarettes by girls and young women. Teachers in public schools and church schools should keep before the young people the truth about the evils resulting from the use of cigarettes, for there is no addiction in America today that is more detrimental to the health, efficiency, education, and character of girls, and to the future well-being of America, than the cigarette habit.—Permission of Southern Publishing Association.

Please Keep Your Glamour!

Just a moment, Young Lady, before you light up that "Unlucky" and put it between your pretty lips. Let's see what you are planning to do to your charm and glamour.

You have a clear, pretty complexion. Cigarettes will turn it a swallow color, muddy and saffron.

Your hands are pretty. Cigarettes will stain your fingers a nasty yellow.

Your cheeks are smooth and attractive as only the cheeks of a healthy young woman can be. Cigarettes coarsen your face and make you look prematurely old.

You have taken pride in being immaculately clean in body. You brush your teeth to avoid "halitosis." You buy deodorants to prevent "B.O." Now, if you smoke that cigarette, stench will settle down upon you like the smell of an old stable.

Another thing—have you noticed among women who are habitual, calloused smokers a certain coarseness of manner, a lowering of the quality of voice and manner, a loss of refinement?

Success in life, a happy marriage and home, may depend on your charm and loveliness of appearance. Can you afford to throw your beautiful qualities away for the sake of a cigarette?

Knoxville, Iowa, Church Completed

THE KNOXVILLE, IOWA, congregation recently completed a new church building. It is one of the most attractive of a total of thirteen churches in the city, though not one of the largest.

The formal opening was held January 8, 1950, with Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionary John Nutgrass representing the General Church, and District President Ralph Wicker and Bishop Stephen Robinson representing the district officers. Des Moines Branch furnished special music for the services under the direction of Sister Helen Harrington and Brother Wilbur Chandler. To Brother Frank C. Price of Des Moines Branch goes the credit for designing the building and drawing the plans. Much credit is also due the building committee composed of Dr. Charles F. Hull, chairman; Fred Baux, George Smith, Frederick Mohler, Gerald Toney, and Pastor Robert W. Gunlock.

The structure, which cost approximately $25,000, has an automatically-controlled oil heating system. Standard pews have been ordered and are scheduled for delivery in August.

The main section of the auditorium shown in the picture seats one hundred persons. An additional section to the right (not shown) seats sixty persons. This section may be made a part of the auditorium or separated into two classrooms by moving the accordion-type doors. The walls of the main auditorium are a very light green, the folding doors are of a slightly darker shade, and the front section containing the pulpit is still darker. The baptismal font has been built into the raised platform and may be entered directly from the pastor's study which is connected with the classrooms by an enclosed wall. This makes it unnecessary for baptismal candidates to be seen by the congregation except as they enter and leave the font.

The basement auditorium is used for classwork and as a dining room. A new section has been added and is being made into a kitchen.

LOCAL NEWSPAPERS gave frequent and favorable publicity while the building was under construction, and the following editorial recently appeared in one of them:

CONGRATULATIONS

The Journal offers congratulations to the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints who have just completed their new church home. Long years of planning and hoping and saving entered into its building, and the result is a structure that is thoroughly modern in design and equipment.

But although usefulness and convenience for the tasks of the church were uppermost in planning the structure, that did not lead the planners to forget the possibility of beauty in its design. It presents a beauty of usefulness that makes it fully attractive. The time-honored spires and gables may be missing, but in their place is a beauty and distinctiveness of simplicity that is impressive.

There is in the structure a prompting to be about the work of the Father that should keep the congregation moving to still further achievement. The community will long appreciate this note-worthy addition to its list of important public buildings.

THE CHURCH is located two blocks from the main business block of the city, at the edge of the business district. There are attractive buildings on each side of the church with little or no prospect of a deteriorating neighborhood. The tendency for that neighborhood has been to very slowly improve in appearance the past twenty-five years. The bus depot is one block east, and all north- and south-bound busses of the American Buslines pass the church.

Knoxville, a city of 7,500 population, is primarily a farmers' trading center. However, there is a 1,800-bed United States Veterans' Hospital drawing patients from Iowa, Eastern Nebraska, and Northern Missouri which greatly increases business in the city. A number of our members are employed there.

There has been a total of twenty baptisms thus far this year, representing an increase of 11.1 per cent of the branch enrollment. This has been made possible through the liberal help of the priesthood of Des Moines Branch, forty miles from Knoxville, and by the very able assistance of Elder John Nutgrass, district missionary. The baptisms have come from the city of Knoxville and its two missions, Dunreath and Red Rock. Most of the converts are from nonmember families and not the anticipated increase by children becoming eight years of age. In addition, quite a number of other persons are favorable to the church and have indicated an interest in it. They are considered good prospects.

The church is well known in Knoxville, and local papers always welcome articles in connection with various church departmental activities.

—Robert W. Gunlock, Pastor.

Let Us Worship Him

By CLAIR E. WELDON

Some have looked beyond the mountains to discern the presence of a Creator of all that is . . .

Illustration by John Thoman

AS PROFESSED BELIEVERS in God and followers of Jesus the Christ, we Latter Day Saints are by definition people who worship. We meet together regularly in religious activities which we call "worship services." Nearly every Sunday a few early risers among the members of each branch gather for a short devotional service before church school. We listen—sometimes attentively—to the reading of a "call to worship." We sing—sometimes enthusiastically and sometimes in harmony—hymns with words that express praise and devotion to our Heavenly Father. We may bow our heads and listen to someone speak words in a certain form called "prayer." During much of the service, we may be yawning or coughing, fidgeting with the hymnal, adjusting our position, craning our necks at late arrivals, noting new dresses and pretty ties, and (among Zion's Leaguers) eyeing the favorite boy or girl friend.

We have other weekly services such as preaching, prayer, and fellowship meetings. We attend certain special services, as the Lord's Supper, and services for performing the ordinances of the blessing of children, baptism, confirmation, marriage, and ordination. In these services we often behave in the manner just described. And as the last "amen" is sounded, some bolt hungrily for home while others linger to profane by boisterous visiting the sanctuary where so recently we claim to have "worshipped." With all respect for the sincerity of each of my brothers and sisters in the church, I raise this serious question: "How many of us have truly worshiped God?" It would seem wise for us to consider what real worship is, and what it involves.

THE TERM "worship" is derived from an old Anglo-Saxon word, weorthscipe or worth-ship, and means "courtesy or reverence paid to worth; hence, honor and respect." We may "worship" almost anything to which we devote ourselves and our energies because we consider it to be of great worth. The religious history of mankind is broad and complex. Men have worshiped small bits of colored stone, gaily-painted figurines and statues, animals, other men, trees, rivers, mountains, sun, moon, stars, and fire. In our more enlightened age, some of us devote our energies to, and consider to be of great worth, bits of paper deposited in banks, dwellings magnificently appointed with the most modern comforts and latest gadgets, large streamlined vehicles, and a high position in the swelling acclaim of our fellows.

Adoration is a part of worship. The deep love of a man for his wife, a little child's affection for its mother, and even the "liquid, big-brown-eyed" gaze of the faithful dog at his master partake of the nature of worship.

Some men have looked beyond the bits of stone, the trees and mountains, and even beyond their fellow men to discern the presence of a Creator of all that is—a Heavenly Father, a divine personality of transcendent and eternal worth. Men then functioned at the higher level of the meaning of worship: "to revere or pay divine honors to deity."

IN 1830 our church became the vehicle of the gospel (good news) of Jesus Christ, because the ways in which men worshiped were not resulting in the final object of worship: fellowship with God! The purpose of our church is to call all men to repentance, that they might walk in "the narrow way which leads to life eternal." As members of this church, we ought to be worshipping! The following seems to be essential to true worship:

1. Time and place should be appropriate. A church building with a beautiful altar does not guarantee a worshipful experience. We may worship around a campfire, by a bedside, or while watching a sunset. We have services of worship in places of formal assembly because we gain strength and fellowship from being together. Our physical bodies should be rested and our minds ordered and firm. We should be calm and serene (literally: "shining with a clear, steady light"). We may worship on a busy street corner amidst honking horns and yapping people. A more desirable situation is described in the hymn, "Come Ye Apart."

2. We should have deep intent and sincere purpose. Our Heavenly Father is not approached easily nor by any spur-of-the-moment decision on our part, even though "He is not far from any one of us." We must make time-consuming preparation, even at the expense of less essential things. Worship may not be accomplished in any light-hearted or half-way manner. It demands all of our might, mind, and strength focused in an activity of supreme worth. The promise is: "Where two or three are met together IN MY NAME."

3. We should be deeply reverent and humble. Reverence is "profound respect mingled with love and awe." We cannot approach God without a deep awareness of him and a willingness to heed his counsel. Isaiah condemned the people of his time in this way: "They worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made. And the mean man boweth not down, and the great man humbleth himself not."—2: 8, 9. Our Scriptures tell us how the Lord regards those men who "puff themselves up," who have an exalted sense of their own wisdom and importance. It is idiotic for "the thing framed to say of him that framed it, he hath no understanding." Undue self-regard is a prime enemy of worship. We must have humility—a sense of proportion and relationship.

4. We must be righteous, clean, and pure. The Spirit of God does not dwell in unholy temples. Though our physical bodies be clean and neatly clothed, we may not worship while great beams of selfishness blind our eyes, and ignorance and unconcern manacle our hands. We must try to examine ourselves—a feat similar to that of the camel galloping through the needle's eye!

5. True worship will be deeply felt both emotionally and intellectually. It is said that "the great moral tragedy is the separation of cool intellect from warm emotion." The true manifestation of God's Spirit is neither emotional nor in-

Choosing to Grow

By HEBER F. COLVIN

AS CHRIST walked the streets of Jericho, he was attended by a multitude of people. Some were merely curious. Some had theories to defend. There were the handicapped ones who cared little about his philosophy except as it brought them relief from their pain.

Those with philosophies of their own to defend were deaf to Jesus' teachings. Their minds were not free to consider any good the Nazarene had to present. Selfish interests and self-will cheated them of this opportunity. Many who sought healing turned away since their wishes were gratified. They missed both the tragic majesty of Calvary and the timeless drama of Easter Morn. The sterile wisdoms of self-satisfaction closed eyes and ears and souls to the abundant life they might have made their own.

BUT THERE WAS ONE in the crowd who recognized the voice of his Master. This man—Zaccheus—was so short of stature as to be unable to see Jesus. Wanting to behold the Master, he climbed a tree and looked out over the heads of the crowd. He had no theory to defend. He had no desire to curry favor or be healed. He knew only that he wanted to expand the compass of his vision. So he took the means at hand to gain his end; he climbed a tree.

It seems more than probable that had Zaccheus never taken this action, he would not have been singled out for special favor. The need which urged him to expend sufficient energy to carry him to the level above the crowd brought about the Master's declaration: "Zaccheus, make haste and come down, for today I must abide at thy house."

How very human! How many of us there are who "climb trees" for a view of Divinity over the heads of the crowd and, having seen, receive the invitation with joy. What a magnificent privilege in repayment for a small investment of effort—to take the Master to our home! To have him to abide there, and eat, and leave his blessing. Talking with the Master, Zaccheus decided to reform his former actions, and said so. It was his promise to Jesus to live up to the better way afforded him, and Jesus acknowledged his resolve: "This day is salvation come to this house." And how like Jesus that he should discern unerringly that work in Zaccheus' life had to begin at home.

SURELY, WITH ZACCHEUS, we may look into the face of the Master and seek to share the humility, adaptability, the vision, the high quality of the man. Zaccheus, who was chief publican and a leader of men himself, had taken the measure of Jesus and found it right. An ambitious fellow, he would follow none but the best. Here there was no quibbling over personalities, no excuses or hard feelings, no compromise. He chose, simply, to make an adjustment himself. He chose to grow.

In being honest with himself and with Jesus, Zaccheus was small no longer. For bigness of soul is the size of man. Coming down from his high perch, his spiritual stature had expanded till he could bear intimate communion with his Master. Another man to whom Jesus had offered friendship, had "turned away sorrowful, for he had great riches."

Any follower of Jesus Christ who chooses to become less than what he ought to be is selling his birthright.

New Horizons

tellectual. It integrates the two (as in reality they are one) and lifts the whole human soul beyond its bounds in a dynamic experience of sharpened insight. In such a situation the hearts of men "burn" within them. When we know something with an intensity that stirs every fiber of our being, tears often come welling up. We need not be ashamed of our tears when they rest on the surface of a deep current of spiritual meaning. But we should not regard mere tears as evidence of the indwelling of the Spirit of God.

6. True worship must be translated into action. The person who has received new understanding and new conviction goes forth with new responsibility. We ought to leave each worship experience repenting and making definite changes in our lives. We must be "doers of the Word, and not hearers only." Isaiah writes of a most worshipful experience in which he saw the Lord in his majesty and power. Isaiah was made very humble—"undone." This resulted in the later cleansing away of his sin. He gained new insight, vigor, and determination. He had a will to do, and when the Lord called, he answered quickly: "Here am I; send me!"

WE SAINTS of these latter days, with stated goals of Zion-building and world-evangelization, ought to be up and doing. Our task is great, so great we alone cannot accomplish it. Only as we allow ourselves to become true and faithful servants of the Master, can we succeed. By living in right relationships we may become cleansed vessels for the power and authority of God. True worship is the narrow (demanding) way, the fundamental process by which this may be achieved.

We have not plumbed the power, love, and mercy of our Heavenly Father. We know little of the vastness of his preparation for the salvation and eternal life of our souls, nor of the abundant blessing which awaits those who do his will. We do have a growing understanding of the possible consequences of our present patterns of individual, social, and world living.

The need is greater and the time more limited than we may appreciate. Let us be learning to worship! Let us take advantage of every opportunity and of all our resources to grow in the grace of God. Let us do his will. Let us worship him!

From her infancy up teach her the fine art of being a mother. Give her the invincible helps of sweetness, tact, and graciousness. Teach her good manners, teach her to meet people well, to smile, to be friendly and thoughtful of others. Teach her kindness and appreciation, for people hunger for little attentions. Teach her to think before she speaks, to be tactful. When your daughter learns how to be charming, sweet, and gracious, you have given her the tonic the whole world craves.

You should tell her of life's dangers and temptations. Safeguard her future by helping her learn how to make her own living. Give her a Christian home where love, understanding, peace, and sympathy abound—where religion is taught, loyalty to Christ developed, and regular worship of God established. Teach her love of truth, reverence, obedience to law, the sacredness of marriage, and respect for age, and it shall be said of her, "Strength and honor are her clothing and she shall rejoice in time to come."

BUTTERWORTH.—May, daughter of Alfred S. and Elizabeth Webb Busbey, was born on July 6, 1858, in Indiana, and died April 15, 1950, at her home in Independence, Missouri. In early childhood she moved with her parents to Minnesota, and in her late teens to Iowa. Here she married Robert William Butterworth on December 20, 1876, and on April 1, 1886, they were baptized into the Reorganized Church. Their home was always open to missionaries, and Sister Butterworth often sent church papers to friends and neighbors she wished to interest in the Restoration. She was active in women's work, taught a church school class, and acted as branch solicitor at Allen, Nebraska. Her husband died on July 5, 1943, and soon after that she had a bad fall from which she never recovered.

Surviving are two daughters: Grace B. Fry of Independence and Esther Detwiler of Roanoke, Missouri; three sons: Eugene L. of Magnolia, Iowa; Frank E. of Independence; and Chester of Spirit Lake, Iowa; a sister, Mrs. Nettie Butts of Council Bluffs, Iowa; nineteen grandchildren and twenty-eight great-grandchildren. One daughter, Elsie Blanch, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Odess L. Athey officiating. Graveside services and burial were in the Dow City, Iowa, cemetery.

RAIN.—Carrie, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Oscar Alberti, was born July 29, 1877, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs on April 15, 1950, after three weeks of illness. On July 2, 1895, she was married to Jesse John Rain, who died June 29, 1947, just three days before their fifty-second wedding anniversary. She was a charter member of the National Daughters of the G.A.R., and a member of the Reorganized Church, having been baptized on February 25, 1948.

Surviving is one grandson, Jack A. Rain, of Vail, Iowa. An adopted son died fourteen years ago. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Chapel in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

ROOT.—Frank Charles, was born on November 1, 1872, in Wausshara County, Wisconsin, and died April 13, 1950, at the Pleasant View Nursing Home in Oregon, Wisconsin. He joined the Reorganized Church as a young man and on October 16, 1894, was married to Minnie Hancock; seven children were born to them. He was ill for a number of years before his death.

Surviving are four daughters, three sons, two sisters, two brothers, twenty-one grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Schroeder Funeral Home, Patriarch Harry Wasson officiating.

DAVIS.—Ida Lovvlina Lofton, was born August 31, 1878, at Gorgiana, Alabama, and died March 31, 1950, at her home in McKenzie, Alabama. She was married to Thomas F. Davis on October 4, 1907; five daughters were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for a number of years.

She is survived by her husband, Frank; her five daughters: Mrs. Viola Hallford, and Mrs. Myrtle McKenzie of McKenzie; Mrs. Annie Barlow of Mobile, Alabama; Mrs. Bertha Stabler of Greenville, Alabama; and Mrs. Ethel Hening of Montgomery, Alabama; twenty-three grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.

P.S.

* THE ALLEY

When your office window overlooks an alley, you get to see "How the other half lives," for life shows its seamy side there. The alley is the poor cousin of the street. The "rich and the learned, the wise and the noble" tread the streets with lordly air, but it is the poor and humble, the derelict and the mendicant, who trudge and skulk through the alleys. The alley is scavenger land, the playground of neglected children, the home of the thin, mongrel dog and the hungry, complaining cat. When people are poorly dressed, depressed or insecure, they scurry through the alley rather than face the better part of the world in the streets. . . . In our alley the sparrows quarrel over a dirty orange rind. An old woman, perhaps young and fair once, sadly pokes a stick in a pile of rubbish. A boy steals a bottle from a case, and runs. People throw things out of office windows into an alley that they would never think of throwing into the street. A decrepit truck with a consumptive motor expires in a fatal fit of coughing and malodorous smoke, and the unhappy driver delivers a funeral oration over it in language that can be regarded only with regret. . . . Do you ever feel like going through an alley? Better check your appearance, get your shoes shined, put on a freshly pressed suit, or buy a new hat. Your self-respect is sagging. . . . When you are judging a city, you can learn more about it by looking at the alleys than at the streets.

* TYPIST

Tiny was working at the typewriter, picking out a message. Her system was the well-known Hunt & Peck method. There was a great deal of Hunt for a little bit of Peck.

* SPEED KILLS

This should be repeated till everybody knows it: speed kills. Some think young drivers are more reckless than older ones. An insurance agent informed us that families in which there are teen-age drivers have to pay more insurance. That must be based on statistics.

But not all foolish and reckless drivers are young. Two brothers, aged 65 and 67, were recently killed driving their new car too fast. "Speed in excess of eighty miles on hour," said highway police, surveying the damage. As usual, they also hurt an innocent person, a woman. Speed kills.

The speeder takes your life in his hands, and never considers your right to live. Speeding is a criminal and dangerous thing.

Say it again: speed kills. Tell everybody, especially the ones who can't or won't read the papers. Speed kills.

* THE HELPER

We were discussing a certain member who has had a stormy and argumentative career in the church. My friend said, "He has helped to keep his branch small for many years."

What a negative tribute! What a record to have to face when one goes up to the great final Judgment.

Reminds us of the small-town football team. A visitor asked a player, "And what position do you play?" A second player replied for him, "Oh, he's the drawback!" A completely equipped team: fullback, halfback, and drawback! An effective drawback can keep any branch small.

Dominant Leaders

EFFECTIVE LEADERSHIP has been the most potent factor in the growth of our church. There is no sustained growth without leadership. Leadership is found in all kinds of communities and in all kinds of branches. Wherever it is found, such leadership marks the difference between a number of individuals or families worshiping in one center, and a united group working toward one goal.

In the early years, and still in our less highly organized centers, the dominant qualities of local leaders have been deep conviction, knowledge of the Bible, and an aggressive missionary drive frequently expressed in impassioned oratory. Many small branches were built under such leaders, but after their passing, the branches were disorganized. The fundamental qualities of these leaders are still important, although impassioned oratory is not a prime qualification for branch presidency. To these qualities the times demand that we shall add administrative ability, long vision, tact, the capacity to endure.

The Pioneer Mother

Designed by the Canadian-born sculptor, Alexander Phimister Proctor, this bronze statue, in heroic proportions, is true to life in detail, and represents the patient fortitude and courage of the pioneer family, their physical weariness on the long journey, their alertness to danger, and their hope of finding a new home in the West. The statue was the gift of Howard Vanderslice of Kansas City, and was unveiled in 1927. It stands on an eminence in Penn Valley Park, Kansas City, a short distance southwest of Liberty Memorial and of the Union Station.

She taught in the public schools until her marriage and then used her musical and speech education in private teaching in her home. She still does some special speech instructing in the local schools.

News & Notes

"OUR TASK"

On the morning of April 23, President W. Wallace Smith spoke at the two services in Stone Church on the subject of "Our Task." These were his first sermons since becoming a member of the First Presidency.

COUNCIL OF TWELVE

On April 24 Apostle Maurice L. Draper left Independence to continue his work in Ohio and places east of Ohio.

Apostle Reed M. Holmes left Independence on April 21 to do missionary work in Texas and Oklahoma.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer left Independence on April 25 to begin church work in his new field of western United States and western Canada.

CAMPING

Carl Mesle, Director of Young People's Work in Zion, was one of the speakers at the camp institute held April 21, 22, and 23 in Knobnoster State Park, Knobnoster, Missouri, by the Missouri Valley Section of the American Camping Association. Although six denominations were represented at the institute, this church had the largest representation. Miss Edna Easter, who is in charge of the Blue Bird and Oriole organizations of the church, also attended the institute.

Brother Mesle will be in charge of the youth camp to be held at Gardner Lake, June 18 to 25. He will not begin his work as general director of the young people as appointed by Conference until fall.

THE FIRST

During the Blue Bird-Oriole award service held in Stone Church on April 23, Barbara Bryant, a fifteen-year-old church member, was presented with a corsage in honor of her being the first girl in the world to have completed all the awards in the Oriole program. The presentation was made by Mrs. Vida Kraus, leader of the Orinzi Senior Oriole Circle to which Barbara Bryant belongs. Barbara has at least one honor badge in all forty-three fields of Oriole endeavor—a total of fifty-four badges.

PRIESTHOOD

In harmony with the recent city-wide priesthood classes held in Independence, the Stone Church group elders held a supper on April 18 at the Women's Center to discuss the carrying into effect the plans made at the classes. An organization of five men was established to supervise the group work. Charles E. Chapman will be in charge of division one, Marion G. Talcott in charge of division two, Clyde T. Baker in charge of division three, and William N. Inman in charge of division four. J. E. Kelsey is chairman of the ministerial staff. The Stone Church pastor, Glaude Smith, and the two associate pastors, L. F. P. Curry and Howard W. Harder, were in charge of the meeting.

BUILDING STARTED

On May 30, 1949, the Saints in Lamoni, Iowa, met for a "clean up" of the property where the new church is to be built. Men of the construction company handling the work are busy during the day. Groups of volunteer laborers will work during night shifts. According to Bishop Landsberg, the contract for the steel has been let by the building committee in the amount of $23,000, and the glass brick needed has been purchased.

A Garland for Mother

"Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." —The Fifth Commandment.

Elbert Hubbard once wrote: "I believe in the holy trinity of father, mother, and child."

When they are united by love, they form a partnership, and it becomes holy when God is included in the family circle.

There is nothing in this world more beautiful than a young mother playing with her happy, healthy child. She has participated in the miracle of creation; she has brought forth another being in God's image, and she has something to love. Forgetting herself, she concentrates her mind on the babe in her arms. She is contributing something to the future of the world. Her child is the flower of her hope, from which the fruit of a mature personality will some day appear.

While motherhood begins with a biological fact, it takes more than physical birth to make a good mother. That is only the "down payment." The regular "installments" of love and service that must be paid are what count in motherhood. Any good animal mother can bring a new life into the world. Mothers who give only the biological service account for the hosts of unloved and unhappy children in the world. The good mother cultivates the mind and spirit of her child, as well as taking care of his body.

We ought to say a few good words for foster mothers. One of the finest local mothers never had any children of her own. But she has been a wonderful mother to children who lost their own, and needed loving care. When mothers are honored, she will receive as great credit as any in the world.

Include in your list of honored saints also the good mother-in-law. She offers help when it is needed. She does not intrude at the wrong times. She is not jealous of her daughter's love, and she does not try to come between the daughter and her husband. She rejoices in her daughter's happiness in her new home. Her skill and knowledge are great helps in meeting many a household problem. And when there is company to entertain she contributes a cake, or helps with the work. To her son-in-law she is a second mother when his own is far away. He honors and respects her because he knows she is as eager for the home to be a happy one as he is himself. It is very easy to love her. . . . Couldn't we find a prettier-sounding name for her than "mother-in-law"? She deserves something fine, for she is one of the world's wonderful people.

A good teacher often gives mother-love to a child who is not loved at home, and who is starved for affection. She must often listen to the home troubles of the children. She must try to compensate for the loss they sustain in being cheated of their right to love and security. A good teacher often loves her children as a mother should, and with her training, she often understands them better than some mothers do. When mothers are honored, there should be some fine teachers standing with them.

* * * * *

Young people are growing up in the homes of missionaries under church appointment. Like all other worthy young people, they want an opportunity to go to college and prepare for life. But the family income is not enough to pay the high costs of education. It is something the father cannot help. But, as often happens, mother finds a way In some of the department stores of Independence and Kansas City, some of them will be found working in order that sons and daughters may go to college.

The working mother is one of the brave figures of American life today.

Sympathy, understanding, and help are needed by the mother who must rear her children alone. Death or divorce has invaded the home, and she must try to be breadwinner as well as companion and nurse. Sometimes she must give her children into the care of others, so that she can work and earn a living. This is unfortunate, for children need her constant companionship. The community should attempt to help her find a satisfactory solution for this problem.

* * * * *

Medical science has done much to make motherhood a safe and happy experience. It will do more. Our education and social training have far to go to give the mother a good and happy home, with peace and security, and an opportunity to guide her children to mature and successful Christian citizenship.

One key to the effectiveness and happiness of a mother's career is a good husband. Let us train our sons from their earliest years to respect womanhood and motherhood, to prepare for their responsibilities as husbands and fathers.

The church has an important work to do in aiding the mother to make clean, fine, honorable citizens of the children.

Official Notice

We should like to know what use is being made of the recording of sermons and lectures taken at General Conference time. Will those who took such recordings please write to the First Presidency, stating what is actually being done with the recordings. This is important, since it may open up a new field of ministry to isolated Saints, shut-ins, and others.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

Our Indian Work Starts Anew

By Hubert Case

IN ORDER to see the Indian as he is today, we need to look at him with tribal restrictions removed. These were removed when the government gave the Indians their rights as free American citizens, with privilege of voting. Since this has been done, the way has been cleared for greater progress.

To illustrate how some people felt about Indians thirty-five years ago, this little incident is recalled. Brother J. F. Curtis and I attended a great Indian fair at Weatherford, Oklahoma, back in those years. Brother Curtis remarked, "I wonder if these people speak English." An immediate response came from an Indian woman who said, "Gentlemen, what do you wish to know? I am a government interpreter, and a graduate of Carlisle." Carlisle was then the largest Indian school in the United States. She was a fluent speaker.

Between thirty and forty years ago, I put in some fourteen years preaching among the Indians, visiting in their homes and teaching them the gospel. By this I mean that I spent only one or two days a month among them except for the week of Christmas and a few other large gatherings when we held series of meetings for them. Brother A. H. Christensen and others of the priesthood were with me in those meetings, and we learned that many of the leading Indians were graduates of Carlisle (Pennsylvania) and Haskell (Kansas). There were also a few graduates at that time from Oklahoma A & M College, as well as from the University of Oklahoma and the University of Kansas. Many are graduating from these schools now. Even back in the days of my experiences in their midst, there were college graduates among the Cheyennes, Pawnees, Otoes, Iowas, Kaws, and Omahas. Some of them were lawyers, doctors, senators, and nationally known lecturers. Many of them are born orators.

Among the Cheyennes there was a rigid marriage code. If a man put away his wife and married another, he was ostracized for life and could never sit in any of their councils nor represent them in any of the Indian commissions.

MY FIRST MISSION was to the South South Sea Islands, where my wife and I spent four years among people who had never gone to school, and where a lot of money has been spent and is being spent in missionary work. We learned through experience that the same God who ruled in the General Conference just closed ministers by his Spirit to people of all nationalities. God wills that all of these peoples should be given the opportunity to learn, for the Islanders, the Indians, and the peoples of every race who hear the gospel of Jesus Christ and respond to the call to citizenship in the kingdom of God have the right to the Holy Comforter, which seals our adoption in his kingdom and unlocks stores of knowledge, for the Holy Comforter is the key to knowledge, the Great Teacher.

Our Indian elder, Virgil England, who teaches in the Chilocco (Oklahoma) Indian School, is an authority on the status of the American Indians. He says that Indians are apt scholars, and that they no longer have to go to the Indian schools because they have a revolving fund to assist their young people who desire education in other schools. He said also that he has frequent applications from Oklahoma A & M College at Stillwater for graduates from Chilocco, to place them in positions in those colleges at good salaries.

My soul overflowed with thanksgiving to God when I heard the recommendation from the Council of Twelve read at the Conference, which is to include taking the gospel to the southern republics as quickly as possible, with intensive work along the Mexican border. The Book of Mormon is to have its fulfillment in preparing the Lamanites for the work the Lord has designed for them.

It has been one of the greatest regrets of my ministry that the church felt under the necessity of curtailing the Indian mission work some years ago during the days of the depression. However, after fasting and praying about the matter I was shown that when the 1948 Conference passed the resolution it did, the way was opened for the Lamanite cause. With the action of the Conference which has just closed, the highway of God has been opened for the work to begin in greater power than ever before. This resolution recommends that Oklahoma and Nebraska Indians have help. In my work among them, it was always my policy to build up strong groups so that our local forces could handle the pastoral work in these places, assisted by missionary endeavor, as we do among the white peoples. President Smith's closing remarks assure us that if we work together in love, we shall have the power of the endowment greater than ever, which will be true among the Lamanites as well as all others.

TO THIS I add my testimony. When I preached to thirteen tribes in one great meeting a literal endowment of the Spirit was mine to enjoy, and such a response followed as I never had before in my life.

On one occasion, I was in a heavenly vision about forty minutes, and again tasted the power of the endowment, seeing the greatness of the Lamanites. When they do turn to the Lord, the promises made to them shall indeed be fulfilled,

And when these things come to pass, that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel.—III Nephi 9: 93.

I saw in that vision the great and marvelous things of the kingdom which we shall enjoy if we move in and occupy as we have been admonished to do in this Conference. Among the Indians there are those calling to us, "Come and baptize our young people. We older ones know this work is true, but our young folk do not know this. They do believe, though, and want to join this church."

At Jesus' birth the angels sang, "Peace on earth, good will to men." We must yet learn to appreciate these goals and practice love for one another. We must give God a chance to pour out the endowment upon his people. Our fondest hopes and most cherished dreams all depend on our preaching, living, and teaching the real fundamentals of the gospel, getting rid of race prejudice, hate, and ill will toward our fellow men.

My vision of the endowment on the ministry while the Joint Council was in session one week before Conference began is worthy of note at this juncture. At three o'clock in the morning I awoke and began praying. Immediately the

Prayer Is Discovery

By EVELYN SCHNELL

UNTIL WE EARNESTLY SEEK to hear his voice, how can we hope to feel the presence of God? Until we feel this presence, how can we sincerely pray? Until we discover prayer, how can we appreciate the knowledge that we are endowed with a great inner power?

For years before I drifted away from the church and for a period of time after my return I had heard prayer defined as a "great inner power." While I certainly am not disputing this, I do say it is a definition far too mature for an individual who has not as yet discovered prayer.

The very greatness of this spiritual gift, or so-called "power," causes one who has not as yet sensed its very simplicity to feel that it is far beyond his short reach. In his dark corner of unenlightened thinking, he questions how so great a power could become a part of him. His distorted thoughts lead him to the conclusion that prayer to contact God must surely come from ministers of the gospel and perhaps some few other exceptionally religious-minded people.

So it was with me. After such reasoning, and without too much remorse, I reconciled myself a few years ago with the thought that since I had lived so long without prayer there was no justifiable reason for my becoming alarmed or concerned by the realization that I could not pray. I truly believed I could be religious without prayer.

However, when I attended mid-week prayer services during the months that followed, I didn't find it quite that easy to dispel the mental anguish I suffered because I couldn't bear my testimony. I was truly thankful for my reawakening and my return to church. I had become an active member and a new life had opened up before me. I had found a new joy and purpose in living. I was thankful for the privilege of service in God's church and the new incentive it had given me, but I could not bear testimony.

The reverence of prayer worship always impressed me deeply. The prayers that were offered in our fellowship services would always inspire me to bear my testimony, but reluctance lent the stronger hand—reluctance because I knew I couldn't express myself as well as the others who would be taking part. This seemed most important and reason enough for me to withhold such thoughts as came to my mind.

On one such occasion I tried to recall what could have induced me to leave my church, even for those few years. I remembered that I had never before been willing to accept a single responsibility. I had, no doubt, become disinterested and bored because of inactivity. Despairing thoughts entered my mind as to what my life might have been had I not answered the nagging of my conscience to start my little girl in church school.

Each time I attended a prayer meeting service, such thoughts as these would electrify my mind. I had a testimony, but always I seemed powerless to stand. Each time there would follow the embarrassment of that last few minutes' lull when I felt sure those in charge were waiting just for me—and then, once more it was over. Rather than to continue subjecting myself to such discomforting feelings, I refused to attend any more prayer meetings. I found, however, that this act offered my conscience little or no consolation, and so I accepted more church responsibilities in hopes they might help to recompense. I had already convinced myself that prayer was not for me, but I found myself sincerely hoping that God would perchance look my way and understand.

AS THE MONTHS PASSED by I began to feel discouraged. The day came when I concluded my load was more than I wanted to bear. I was no longer strong enough to face my problems. My future church interest was hanging in the balance. And then, just when I thought I had decided what my course would be, the words of a song came to me:

Yield not to temptation,
For yielding is sin,
Each victory will help you
Some other to win;
Fight manfully onward,
Dark passions subdue,
Look ever to Jesus,
He'll carry you through.

Ask the Savior to help you,
Comfort, strengthen and keep you;
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through.

Suddenly, I could no longer deny or ignore a lack of something vital in my life. It seemed that the tiny cavity to which I had reconciled myself months and months ago had grown into a vast emptiness. I now felt a serious need for an outlet through which I could unburden my soul and seek comfort and direction. "Ask the Savior to help you." But why did prayer have to be so difficult? I still thought of it as a complicated spiritual technique—a demand for a proper phraseology of words—in short, a language I couldn't speak. I felt lost and alone. Perhaps it would help to talk to someone, but since I felt sure I was in need of spiritual advice, I realized I couldn't talk to just anyone. Suppose the one I chose to talk to wouldn't understand? Worse than that, suppose he would just pass off my approach lightly. I couldn't dare chance that.

Then I thought of a minister of another branch in our city. I hadn't known him long, and since he was not a member of our own congregation, we had had few direct contacts through our church activities. Somehow I was sure I would be able to talk to him with absolute ease. Notwithstanding my deep respect for him in his office and the high esteem I felt for his conscientious endeavor, I was also attracted by the extraordinary human side of his character. Knowing him to have all these qualities gave me confidence that he would listen to me and understand. I know now that I was directed to a God-sent minister, and that without spiritual guidance, such as was given me, this story could not have been possible.

BEFORE I EVEN ADMITTED to him that I could not pray, he said, "You should pray frequently. If you can't find words, then just talk to God as you talk to me. You will be amazed at the versatility of God's Spirit. All you need do is reach out."

These words were embedded in my thoughts. I found myself saying them over and over in my mind. This was the first time in my life I had ever heard of prayer as "talking" to God. Could God be so versatile—could that great power I had always heard about be within my grasp? I wondered too, why he had said, ". . . if you can't find words . . ." It was uncanny. How could he have known?

In his effort to help me find a foothold, he also gave this advice: "What you need is to draw deep draughts from the well-spring of spirituality. You need to tap the source of great strength to steady you and to give you the balance of judgment that comes with inspired wisdom and spiritual discernment. You need to feel the solidness in your soul which comes from having set foot on soil that is invisible, yet the stuff from which blocks of energy are compressed into mass and finally into solid earth, flesh, material structure." I began to concentrate deeply on all that he had said.

I feel sure I must have been remembered often in his prayers, since it was only a few weeks later as I sat in a church service at our own branch that I found myself listening with almost unbelieving ears to a sermon on "The Simplicity of Prayer." This is what I heard:

"Most people are reluctant to pray because they feel they don't know how. If only they would cease to think of it as praying and regard it as talking with God! You housewives, for instance, find it easy to run next door and ask a neighbor for something you need. You should, with exactly this same ease, confidence, and simplicity, feel free to ask God for a spiritual blessing you need."

As I sat in that front row, I was completely oblivious to all others in the congregation. I was overwhelmed with the feeling that the speaker was talking directly to me. The thought entered my mind, "Could God be concerning himself this much over me?" Again those words began to hammer in my head, "Just talk to God as you talk to me." As I left that service I felt richly blessed and challenged.

DURING THE DAYS that followed, my thoughts were serious. It is difficult to explain what took place inside my heart, but I was aware of a constant shadow that followed me everywhere. I seemed to sense there was an extra pair of ears hearing every word I spoke and an extra pair of eyes seeing each thing I did. I couldn't understand it. There seemed to be a presence, invisible yet so real that I found myself depending on it. It seemed to say "no" or "yes" so firmly that I felt bound to respect it and act accordingly. I had never before experienced a peace and contentment like it. There seemed to be a wall of serenity surrounding me through which nothing harsh or unpleasant could penetrate. After a time I was startled by the realization that this must be what is meant by the recognition of God's Spirit within us. The word "versatility" was completely defined, because I had discovered I could feel God's presence.

The next step came quickly. Since feeling his presence, I discovered also that I could talk to him in very simple words. My attempt to "reach" him dissolved when I discovered I didn't have to reach—he was very close to me.

Gradually as I learned to depend more and more on God through the discovery of prayer, that great hollow within me began to fill up. The realization that God was answering my prayers was exhilarating. It was almost startling at times, but I was grateful for the feeling that I would never be alone again. As never before I was eager to bear my testimony to a renewed faith and hope through the discovery of prayer and to rededicate my life to Christ. Now that I didn't have to depend just on myself any longer, there seemed no end to the possibilities the future had to offer.

But, as the months passed by, I had to admit with disappointment that thoughts of public prayer still frightened me. The complete ease I felt in talking to God in my own private prayers somehow didn't accompany me into a church group service. On such occasions I found myself again considering prayer as "a proper phraseology of words."

As I look back now I can clearly see a manifestation of God's eagerness to encourage and teach me—his unceasing efforts to help me come closer to him. I hadn't, as yet, learned my lesson well enough.

DURING THE WEEKS that followed, our church school director was attempting to put a new interest in our church school hour by asking different ones from the group to give a short talk. After a few others had taken a turn, I was approached and asked if I would accept an assignment for two weeks from that day. As willing as I was to be of service to my church, I didn't choose to project myself in this way, and I wondered what in the world I could talk about. My knowledge was far too limited to give an intelligent discourse before the entire congregation. I stood there searching frantically in my mind for a possible subject and then like a flash there came the answer, "prayer." But no, my thoughts on prayer were far too juvenile for such a presentation. What should I do—I couldn't refuse. And then I was jolted back to reality by the voice of the director saying, "Just choose a subject—any subject—'prayer' for instance—then work your talk around the subject."

For the second time I found myself hearing with unbelieving ears. I fairly whispered, "Why did you say prayer?" I added words to the effect that I would try to find something and endeavor to carry out the assignment. Again I felt challenged beyond my capabilities.

I had two weeks for preparation. I spent the entire first week wrestling in my mind, trying to force my thinking away from "prayer." How could I base a talk of interest on my own personal experiences? How could I make people understand prayer in the simple terms I felt it? I would have to present it to the general congregation more solidly than that—I would just have to find something different to talk about. But try as I would I couldn't concentrate on another subject; my thoughts kept going back to "prayer."

TIME WAS GOING FAST, and so I decided to force my own ideas on prayer to the back of my mind and launch out anew on an intensive study of this subject I seemed compelled to use. I felt unqualified for the task before me, and had I not appealed to God continually and depended on him for direction.

Honoring Our Name - By H. M. SCOTT

A Sermon Delivered in Des Moines, Iowa

EVERY individual on the face of the earth bears a name; whether it is Smith, Jones, or Carter matters little. We are given names in order that we may know others and that we may be known.

There is a great deal in the name one bears, and the honor attributed to one is determined by the degree to which he honorably upholds that name. Do you honor the name you bear?

Often one looks into the history of his ancestry, finds one of whom he can be rightly proud, lifts up his head, and holds high the tradition of his name. He does all within his power not to bring reproach or dishonor upon it.

In addition to our given name, we have taken upon ourselves, voluntarily, another name—Jesus Christ—or the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. How well do we honor this name? Just as we look into history for noble ancestors, so we look into the history of our church. There we find we have a tradition, a heritage, to honor and uphold.

Our heritage begins in a little pioneer village—Palmyra, New York—with a young man who claims to have been the recipient of a spiritual manifestation from God. Through this experience and others like it, the church of Jesus Christ was organized on April 6, 1830, in Fayette, a village not far from Palmyra.

Our church has had a colorful history. Books, pamphlets, magazine articles, novels, stories, and plays have been written about Latter Day Saints; and countless sermons have been preached both in favor of and against them. Many of these have been written by zealous ministers, peeved dissenters from the church, and students trying to earn their degree by writing on "The Psychology of Mormonism."

Out of this debris, our task is to sift the truth. Matthew Arnold once said, "The mass of mankind will never have any ardent zeal for seeing things as they are—very inadequate things will always satisfy them." We find this to be true, as there are many who accept for truth that which has been written by those not sympathetic to our cause.

Our church has meant many things to many people. To some it stands as an imposture claiming to represent the true church of Christ on earth. To others it is a dizzy dream of a fanatic, but to those who have accepted its gospel, it represents God's eternal plan of salvation.

IN our study it is well that we investigate the religious and economic conditions prevailing at the time of the organization of the church and the connection they had with its organization. For a number of years prior to the organization, the world had undergone several hard wars and suffered the natural moral and spiritual decadence which inevitably follows. Church services were unimpressive. Americans were still drunk with their new-found liberty. Quarrels with England brought about the war of 1812. France was our friend, but she was atheistic. At the turn of the century young people were ashamed to call themselves Christians. Voltaire, Rousseau, and other French atheists had many followers. Prominent thinkers of the day predicted that the Christian religion would soon be discarded.

In 1800 many people went to church in disguise. Intemperance was the rule of the day. Liquor could be found in the majority of homes. Few people preached against social evils. Drinks were passed freely even at ordination services. Moral degradation was on every hand. The only difference between Sunday, the Lord's Day, and any other day of the week was that the Sabbath was a little more noisy. There were no churches at all on the western frontier.

Intolerance among the Christians themselves was also the rule of the day. Each denomination drew up a code to keep to itself. There was no thought of economic brotherhood.

Into such a world as this our church was born. Its purpose was to preach against the prevailing social ills, to eliminate the exploitation of the four-dollar-a-week laborer, to set the kingdom of God in motion, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, to meet the spiritual needs of the people, to set forth the more abundant life, to present the eternal plan of salvation, and to teach the reality of the kingdom of God. It was to teach that the kingdom is an achievement as well as a gift, that it is the pattern for social life and personal life—in fact the fundamental Christian message.

Through the organization thus established, the spiritual gifts were again in evidence, and the gospel of faith, repentance, and the laying on of hands was preached. The authority of the priesthood was restored. The principle of stewardship of life became a vital part of the church. The revelation of God was once again made manifest.

This was the pure, undefiled purpose and gospel of Latter Day Saintism.

FOLLOWING the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith, a large body of the church under a new leadership introduced the strange doctrine of "plurality of wives." Many honest-hearted people asked, "Can such a doctrine be of God?" In January, 1853, in Beloit, Wisconsin, a group of these Saints asked God for wisdom regarding this doctrine. The answer was:

Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God; it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrines of the Nicolaitans, and the men or set of men who practice it. I judge them not; I judge not those that practice it. Their works shall judge them in the last day. Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine; many will be led into it honestly, for the devil will seek to establish it and roll it forth to deceive.

These good men and women from Wisconsin and Illinois formed the nucleus for the reorganization of the church and contended against the doctrines of evil. Just as men have laid down their lives and paid the full measure of devotion to their country, so men have paid the full measure of devotion for the name, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

What's in a name? In the name of the church there is honor, truth, sacrifice, heartache, tears, work, devotion, and love.

What should the name mean to us today? It means that we should be better men and women, because we claim to be possessors of a greater truth. "To whom much is given, much is required." It means we should be better neighbors. It means we should be more appreciative of God's gifts, more obedient, more faithful, more prayerful, more willing to share, more truthful, more studious, more humble, more devoted to the cause of Zion, more evangelistic and better stewards. We should have more of the likeness of Christ.

Yes, we should be proud of the name, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

Surveying for the Rural Church

Note: The rural community as discussed by economists and sociologists includes towns of 2,500 population or less. It will help our ministry who may consider applying the methods Brother Gabriel discusses to so classify their community.—Editor.

By GERALD GABRIEL

IN surveying the rural church the surveyers should have well in mind just what they are trying to disclose. Surveys are for discovering facts. In general, the survey has three purposes; to affirm or disaffirm what is already believed to exist, to discover facts that will clarify indistinct areas, and to discover the unknown. No survey should be made unless it accomplishes these things.

Surveys, as considered here, are to bring to light the true structure and function of any one or group of local churches. The church can be compared to a tree in need of adequate scaffolding branches or framework on which to bear fruit. There is need for balance between the top and root system. There is need for prevention of crotches, crossing or interfering limbs and dead, diseased, or injured wood. It is necessary to increase the quality of its fruit, which in turn calls for the control of insects. Surveying the rural church should disclose some of the undesirable conditions existing and bring to light the worth of adopting new methods for improving it.

Surveys are not an end in themselves; they are simply a means to an end. Gathering statistical information is important, and facts not given in their true light or quantity are misleading. They must be timely and thoroughly gathered. The information obtained over a period of time, rather than a single day, week, or year will give an idea of true trends. Care should be taken to make proper note of unusual influences such as holidays influencing the attendance record as at Easter, climatic conditions—unusually rainy seasons or periods of heavy work such as the harvest—the effect of world conflict, and many other outside or inside influences. There must be a uniform standard for a true diagram to be given. "A false balance is an abomination to the Lord but a just weight is his delight."—Proverbs 11:1.

Surveys should break down the whole into small parts for study. As the mechanic must have all parts to make a machine function properly, so must the surveyer have all the facts. In reassembling, each fact must be used and considered in its proper place and function.

SINCE human events are cumulative we must look not only on the surface nor at the event, but go through each series to find out why, when, where, and how these events happened to be. To understand the functioning we must know the social and economic environment that influenced these events.

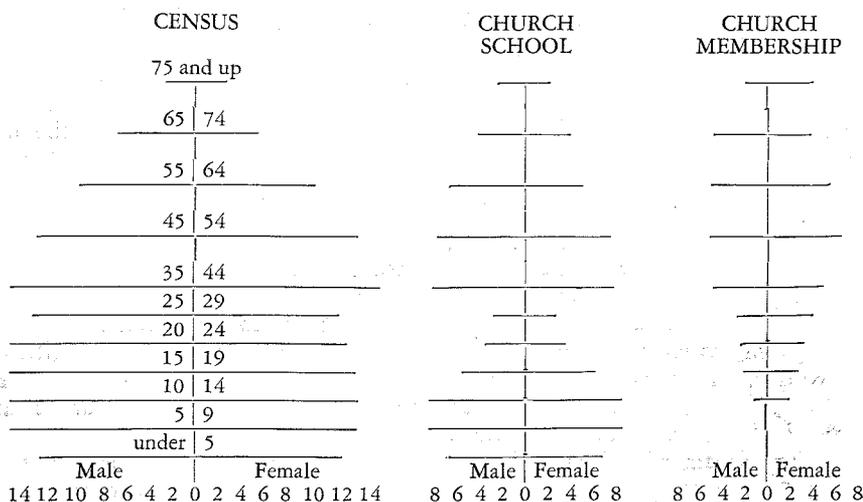

Just as business institutions take yearly inventories, churches should also take annual surveys. This type of survey, however, need not be extensive. It should give trends and specific needs. An extensive survey should be taken at least every ten years, preferably the same year the census is taken, for valuable information can be obtained from the census report.

THE first thing a church survey should disclose is the community boundaries—where the people naturally go to trade (the grocery area is good, but the clothing area does not give a true picture) and the boundaries of the church area (how far the people go to church). These two areas should be mapped. Social, economical, and institutional life in these areas should be recorded.

A new method of studying the local church has been devised by the Garrett Biblical Institution. This study is based upon the balance of membership and an unbalanced program. "Presumably the church exists for young as well as old, for men as well as women. If there are more women than men in an area, it is to be expected that the church will have proportionately more women in its membership. If the proportion of children in the community is unusually large, there should be a correspondingly larger number enrolled in the church school. This does not imply that the church will reach every person within its parish, but that its program, if well rounded, will draw to itself all ages and sexes. Where this is the case, the church will appeal to a normal cross-section of society.

The "population pyramid," a device developed by the United States Bureau of the Census a number of years ago, can be utilized to study the adjustment of the local church because it depicts the actual age and sex distribution of the people within a local community. Such a pyramid is a graphical portrayal of age and sex divisions in a local community. Males are shown to the left of the center line, females to the right. The horizontal bars indicate the relative size of the different age groups, beginning with the youngest (under five years) at the bottom and ending with those sixty-five years of age and over at the top. Communities differ greatly from one another in age and sex composition. In a similar way we can prepare one population pyramid for the children, young people, and adults enrolled in the church school, and another for the church membership. Three pyramids are needed for the study of each individual church, since the pyramids for the church school and the church membership can be judged only in terms of its particular parish. If balance between the sexes in the church pyramids is comparable with that of the community, and if the age distribution is practically the same, it is a clear indication that this particular church is conducting a well-balanced program, appealing to the whole of the people and not overwhelmingly to one sex or age group.

Note the extreme weakness in the youth age of both church school and membership pyramid. The program is evidently of such a nature that the youth groups are not included and attracted to this rural church.

SURVEYS that disclose some changes in economic or social conditions, may throw light on needs of modification in church programs. The shift of a type of farming as from cash grain to dairying might necessitate a change of hours for services. Whenever a church program or policy is questioned as to its adequacy, surveys should be made to ascertain the needs.

Any rural church wishing to make a survey will do well to study other surveys made under similar circumstances and for similar purposes. Results of surveys, that can be compared with other surveys have many advantages. A modest beginning and completion of the undertaking is better than setting out to cover everything and finishing nothing. After these facts have been gathered, they must be tabulated and interpreted before they can be made available for use. This also should be kept in mind when preparing the survey. Much pertinent material is already available concerning the community to be surveyed and studied. These facts are more reliable than opinions of people and can be used. Sources of information are as follows:

1. Physical
 - a. Soil surveys.
 - b. Geological surveys.
 - c. Maps.
2. Economic
 - a. Census reports on agriculture.
 - b. Income tax reports.
 - c. Literature issued by the Chamber of Commerce.
3. Historical
 - a. Population farm census.
 - b. State reports.
 - c. County statistics.
 - d. School records.
 - e. Newspaper files.
 - f. Other surveys.
4. Social
 - a. Social agencies.

Some principles to watch for are:

1. Phrase questions so not to offend anyone.
2. Aim at facts.
3. Form questions so they will not be misinterpreted.
4. Make for simplicity and precision.

5. Be definite in standards to be evaluated.
6. Avoid questions that disclose the answer expected.
7. The answers to the questions should be clear.
8. Care should be taken that every question be answered one way or another.

Three types of surveys are practical for rural churches. First, the reconnaissance survey for communities to disclose various phases of country life. Second, the topical survey for the study of one aspect of community life that is vital, such as health, recreation, religious education, etc. This type of survey deals with concrete things: time, money, and membership. The third type of survey is the house-to-house canvass. It is made to show the religious affiliations and participation of the people in the community.

When the survey is made, tabulations and results can be prepared in the form of maps, charts (line, bar, or surface), graphs, or tables. In these forms they are convincing when explained and presented to the public in books, papers, or by lecture, and interest may be aroused for the proposed remedies.

The Original Christian Community - Reasons for Its Failure

By KARL SCHOEPKE, Berlin, Germany

JESUS Christ laid the spiritual and practical foundations for the erecting of his church. His marvelous and unequalled teachings and appointments of sincere, diligent men to priesthood, plus the influence of the Holy Ghost, made possible the beginning and development of the church and righteous community life.

The sermons, miraculous deeds, feelings, and thoughts of the Redeemer had to do with the masses, the community, the earthly and heavenly government. The final purpose of his working on earth was to bring about the condition announced by the angel at Jesus' birth: "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will to men."

The Christian idea received in the material and spiritual world will not be made enduring by force but through freedom and the education of righteous men and women. Christian education aims at and necessarily leads to desirable actions of the earthly and spiritual gifts. In a German church hymn is the sentence: "Wohlbzutum und mitzuteilen, wissen wir, ist Christenpflicht" ("We know it is a Christian duty to do well and to inform and share.")

The questioning mind will ask, "How can the idea of brotherhood be realized in the harsh reality of life, in the struggle for existence?" The original Christians tried to realize it by having joint property. It is reported in Acts 2:44 and verses following that they "had all things common." This in the Vulgate (Latin translation of the Bible) reads "habebant omnia communia." From this the term "communism," meaning joint property, was derived. (See also Acts 4:32, 35.)

THIS attempt completely failed. It led rapidly to poverty of the original church. This circumstance made it necessary for the apostles to select seven alms-custodians (Acts 6:1-6). Later the Apostle Paul collected auxiliary money for the impoverished saints on his wide mission journeys.

The attempt had to fail. One of its starting points was the erroneous opinion that the second event of Jesus Christ was near at hand. There was also a great lack of economic planning. It was the experiment of a total joint-property interest which sacrificed of the substance and means for production. By selling their fields and workshops, they got rid of their labor and earning possibilities and literally lost the soil under their feet. If they had formed a possession and labor community in connection with a co-operative society, their enterprise would have been effective and enduring. The leadership in regard to economic things also should have been in the hands of well-experienced men. The further reason for failure is to be found in the conduct of the members. Not all people who were baptized at Pentecost or afterwards were really converted. In the moment when they were baptized, they perhaps thought they had done all that was required by the gospel of Christ, that is, exercising faith and repentance. But we must suppose that a certain part of the early Saints did not grow and develop in the great light of the gospel after their baptism. Conversion does not end with baptism; it is a continuing process which leads to spiritual maturity.

Missionary Businessman

A Series Based on the Biographical Notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Nine

ON Sunday, July 8, 1928, Mr. Carter called at Brother Waller's home in Kahala, where he was recuperating from the flu, and informed him regarding the company's future management. He considered it best for Brother Waller with his daughter Christie, to move to San Francisco to take charge of the office there. This was pleasing to Brother Waller. Mr. Carter told him that his successor as manager would be Lawrence Judd; who at that time held an important position with Theo. H. Davies and Company. While Brother Waller remained in the Islands, Judd was to learn to run the business under his direction.

Since Brother Waller was expecting to leave soon for the Coast, he asked the First Presidency to appoint Brethren Crum and Etzenhauser as missionaries to Hawaii and to send Patriarch Martin over for a time. Brother and Sister Crum were then living in Hilo, Hawaii, doing missionary work. Elder Waller's requests were confirmed by the First Presidency. On November 20 the Etzenhauser family arrived with Patriarch Martin. Soon afterwards Elder Waller resigned as the pastor of the Hawaiian Branch and was succeeded by Elder Etzenhauser.

On Sunday, December 2, there was a splendid Communion service with Brother Waller in charge, Patriarch Martin and High Priest Etzenhauser assisting. After administration of the emblems, Brother Waller offered a prayer asking that the Lord would speak, directing in wisdom and love. A few minutes later Patriarch Martin arose and gave a wonderful message. Brother Waller was very much comforted, encouraged, and strengthened by the message, in which he was particularly mentioned. We quote:

Many years ago I sent a remnant of Manasseh to these islands of the sea. Yea, your forefathers were brought to this place that a righteous people might be raised up unto me, saith God. But they forgot my word and failed to keep my law. They dwindled into ways of wickedness and were led by false spirits to wander after strange gods. But in mine own due time, I sent to you the Stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim that you might have knowledge of your ancestors and be taught the fullness of the everlasting gospel, that I might turn you from the errors of your progenitors and raise up here a people who would serve me in righteousness, and from time to time I have sent my servants to assist you in your efforts to walk the way of life. Particularly have I given to you my servant Gilbert, and he has diligently served in planting in your hearts the gospel seed. He has been your father, friend, and teacher and has faithfully kept the counsel of God concerning this people.

King Street Church Sold

At this time (December 12) as the church property on King Street had been sold and there was now no building to meet in, Brother Waller made arrangements with the board of education to hold services in the Lincoln Grammar School, which privilege was kindly granted. The new property for the church was purchased from what was called the Lunalilo Home Tract.

At the beginning of 1929 Brother Waller was still in charge of the Hawaiian Mission, although he was gradually resigning from all the branch presidencies he held.

On March 6 the weekly prayer and testimony meeting was held in the Lincoln School. Brother Waller presided, assisted by Brother Martin. At the close of the service Brother Martin gave Brother Waller a special blessing of great importance, parts of which we quote:

As has been said of you by the Spirit on another occasion, "You have faithfully kept the counsel of God concerning this people," but, dear brother, inasmuch as you have contemplated leaving this place permanently, I feel prompted by the Spirit to tell you that it is not well that you think of entirely severing your association with this people as yet, for, although you have been a father indeed to those who reside in these islands and have been the means of bringing many souls into the kingdom of God and have lifted them up toward the throne of grace and have awakened within their hearts desires for righteousness, yet your mission is not ended among this people. It is pleasing to God that for a time you may go to other fields as you have planned and receive that strength to your soul that will come through associating with the people of God across the sea, and I feel to assure you that you will receive the rest and recuperation to your body that is needed, and will also be a blessing to many in those distant lands. The same Spirit that has been with you here will be with you there, and many will rejoice under your ministrations. But, it is God's will that you again return to this place and assist in the further promulgation of his work here in the islands of the sea. Dear Brother, you may feel at peace in heart and mind concerning this matter, for it is not wise that your influence, your service, and your love should be taken away from this people, for there are still existing conditions and circumstances that will demand your wisdom, your judgment, your patience, and your love. So while you may, with a surety, look forward to the time when you must entirely separate yourself from association with this people, yet this shall not be for a while. Therefore, let your heart be made glad under this information and rejoice at the goodness of God in continuing to lead you in the journey of life. When the time comes for you to take your final departure from immediate activity in this mission, there will come to your heart a feeling of peace, assuring you that you can safely leave the work in other hands.

Naturally Brother Waller wondered how he could follow out these instructions as in them the Lord was telling him to stay in the Islands for a time longer while the Hawaii Meat Company, Limited, was arranging for him to leave upon his return from Australia. However, he realized he had been under divine guidance so long in the past that he felt sure the Lord's will would be carried out.

After a business trip to New Zealand and Australia, Brother Waller returned to Honolulu. Upon his arrival he met a reporter of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin from whom he learned that Lawrence Judd, who was expected to succeed Brother Waller as Manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, Limited, had been appointed Governor of Hawaii by President Hoover. The president of the meat company suggested that Brother Waller should go to San Francisco and visit with his family for a week or two and then come back and continue as manager of the business.

Thus Brother Waller in a marvelous manner was enabled to work in harmony with the Lord's will as expressed in the message given by the Spirit through Patriarch Martin at the prayer meeting on March 6. The turn of events was encouraging to Brother Waller, for they showed how God was continuing to lead him in his life's work.

In 1896 Brother Waller was instructed by the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith to abide in the Islands yet for a time as his services were needed for the church work. Brother Waller was obedient and now after thirty-three years of service, he was told that because of existing conditions, his wisdom, judgment, patience, and love were demanded. And while it was stated that the time would come when he must entirely separate himself from association with the church people in the Islands, yet this should not be for a while.

Brother Waller, rejoicing in his heart that the Lord thus valued his services, was again obedient to God's will. Now being settled in mind regarding his immediate future in business as well as church work, he left on May 22 for San Francisco to spend a short time with his family there.

Dedication of the New Church

Following the sale of the King Street property until July, 1929, the Hawaiian Branch held meetings in the Lincoln Grammar School Auditorium. Now it was possible to use the annex of the new church for these meetings. In August preparations were made for the dedication of the Hawaiian church, located on the Lunalilo Home Tract not far from the car line but free from noise.

At the invitation of Elder Waller, President Frederick M. Smith arrived on November 12 to dedicate the new church building. While in Honolulu, President Smith stayed at the home of Brother Waller. Both men were given favorable mention in the newspapers:

There are in the territory of Hawaii 500 members of Dr. Smith's church; 300 of them are in Honolulu alone. Mr. Gilbert J. Waller, well known to Hawaii, and bearing in his manner and countenance that strange provocative quality of spirituality that one finds in men who have grown old with a religious belief they have cherished, presides over the destiny of the organization here.

The year 1929 closed with Brother Waller still in charge of the mission. He appreciated greatly the progress of the work and was active in the different branches in Honolulu, assisting occasionally the Hilo Branch.

As the year closed he realized how wonderfully the Lord's promise to him in 1896 had been fulfilled. At that time there was only one branch in the Islands, the Hawaiian Branch in Honolulu, and no church buildings. Now there were three branches in Honolulu and one in Hilo, each having a church to hold services in.

The year 1930 opened with Brother Waller in charge of the Hawaiian Mission and assisting in branch work. Brother Etzenhauser was planning to return to the Mainland, which meant he would soon resign as pastor of the Hawaiian Branch.

On April 15 Brother Waller received a message of congratulation from Imila Tatum, who was in Independence attending General Conference. Brother Waller had been called to the office of patriarch. The Honolulu newspapers printed notice of his calling and some items concerning the Conference. On May 23 even an Australian newspaper, Country Life, Sydney, made comments, from which we quote:

L. D. S. PATRIARCH

Gilbert J. Waller has been made Patriarch of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints in Hawaii.

I cannot visualize a more typical patriarch. Extremely tall, with commanding presence, and a dominant personality, but withal, gentle, confidence-inspiring, and lovable, this dynamic force of religion and commerce was in Sydney a few months ago and won many friends.

While Brother Waller was not presiding as pastor over the three Honolulu branches, still, he was busy assisting in the work of the church, retaining the responsibility of the Hawaiian Mission and serving as bishop's agent.

A Patient Love

By Kay Norman Beldin

HAVE YOU EVER WATCHED a child learning to tie his shoe or button his coat? I have. Not so long ago I watched our little girl trying to button her coat before going out to play. She worked and worked before her little fingers finally pushed the button through the hole. Despite the fact she was eager to play, she stayed with the "buttoning" until the job was finished.

As I watched her I thought, "How fortunate we older folk would be if we could cultivate such patience." Too often we become discouraged when faced with a job which requires a great deal of perseverance, and, because of our lack of patience, we fail to see it through.

This is particularly true in regard to "everyday evangelism." Many times we become discouraged and give up when a friend or neighbor to whom we have been trying to take the gospel apparently refused to heed our counsel. Perhaps we have labored for months—even years. Because of our love or concern for this person, we desired to help him find the better life. But because he continued in his own way, refusing to accept our help, we finally class him as a "lost soul."

We are commanded to "love our neighbors" and even to "love our enemies." The first step we must take, if we are to help those who need the peace and assurance of the gospel, is to develop within our hearts a love for them. But if we are to keep on helping them when the task begins to seem futile, we must go a step farther than just loving them. We must develop a patient love for these people—a love with the patience of a small girl learning to button her coat; a love with the patience to work and keep on working when the last ray of hope seems to have faded away. Then our desire to bring these souls to Christ will become such a burning desire that we will see our task through to the end.

spirit of prayer came, and I prayed in the Spirit one full hour. I was shown the endowment come upon President Israel A. Smith and Bishop Leslie DeLapp and then the whole Council and the Conference, as a result of the great preparation which the Saints in many places had made, especially in Independence during the week of fasting and prayer prior to the opening of the Conference. A real baptism of divine love filled all those men in the Joint Council, and then the people came in for their share, according to their willingness to serve God and move forward in the great building program the Lord has given.

Then came President Smith's message—a really wonderful page in church history—following the revelation, which came in answer to prayer. Then, unity and peace came as a cherishing fountain, and a program to open the kingdom to the Lamanites in Oklahoma and Nebraska, also Mexico and South America. Thank the Lord, the Book of Mormon is going to be used as a great standard to the nations with power to convince men that God is ruling his work in love and peace and power, as we have believed he would. Let us qualify for service in humility and love, in order that Zion can become a reality and flourish upon the hills and the Lamanites blossom as the rose and become a white and delightful people. God speed the day is my prayer.

The REORGANIZED CHURCH of JESUS CHRIST of Latter Day Saints

Mrs. Lola Mitchell

A Good and Faithful Servant

The following modest record of a life spent in the service of the Lord and his church was made at the request of the Santa Ana Branch Historian. Sister Lola Mitchell has made an outstanding contribution to the Santa Ana Branch, in spiritual as well as in material things. She, with a few other consecrated Saints, made possible the church building and parsonage, entirely free from debt, where the Santa Ana members now worship. Her cheerful acceptance of membership responsibility at all times has been an inspiration to other church members. Both in the branch and in the Southern California District her influence has been felt for good. Now, in the declining years of her life, her courage, her gay sweetness, and her great wisdom make her counsel worth following. The following words which she has written of her work as a member of the Santa Ana Branch give only a brief glimpse of her great devotion to the church.

PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL,

Santa Ana Branch Historian.

I WAS BORN in Santa Ana on May 2, 1876, and moved at an early age to the old Newport country known as Gospel Swamps. My father, John C. Bedford, and my mother, Laura Louise Bedford, were not members of the church at this time, although mother's people were.

We attended the little country church and after a series of meetings held by Heman C. Smith and D. S. Mills, my parents were baptized in a pool on Brother Steven Penfold's farm, not far from where we lived.

My early church training began in this little branch. We lived about two miles from the church, but we children always walked to Sunday school. Brother Daniel Garner, a quiet, spiritual man, was our Sunday school superintendent. It was his custom to have us memorize verses from the Bible, and to this day some of those beautiful passages come to me and help me over the rough places of life. I did not particularly select them for their beauty or helpfulness at that time, but rather because I received as much credit for a short verse, such as the Beatitudes, as a long one.

Brother Peter Betts was president of our branch at this time, and my father was the deacon. In those days we believed a man was divinely called if he was in the priesthood, and it was his sacred duty to magnify that calling. This my father did with utmost diligence, and the whole family was enlisted to help. He took care of the building and any who were in need. On Saturday we would clean the church. We swept, dusted, polished and filled the kerosene lamps, and laid the fire so my father could warm up the building early Sunday morning. I will never forget how we had to polish those lamp chimneys and the water pitcher and glass for the pulpit. My father would fill the pitcher with fresh cold water when he went early Sunday morning to build the fire.

He not only acted as a good keeper of the Lord's House but furnished the wood for the fire and oil for the lamps without any thought of remuneration. In those days we would have thought payment a sacrilege. Had not the Lord called my father to do this work?

Once father was called upon to go with the teacher of the branch to visit one of the brothers who had been imbibing a little too freely. When they returned my mother asked what success they had had. My father replied that he thought the brother worse sinned against than sinning and could not censure him. His home life was made almost unbearable by a wife and four grown daughters who were considered good church members.

Elders D. S. Mills and J. F. Burton were our missionaries at this time. They could not be with us much, although their families resided in the neighborhood. It was from this branch (Gospel Swamp) that Brother and Sister Burton were sent as missionaries to the Hawaiian Islands.

I WAS BAPTIZED when eight years old by Brother John Brush, fireside missionary and a true disciple of Christ. He lived in the Huntington Beach area, as it became known in later years, and would make his rounds by horse and buggy, visiting each family for a few days at a time. He lived so close to God that when he talked to us we felt we were in the very presence of the Almighty.

Our first reunions were held at Downey, and it was a big treat to be allowed to ride there with Grandpa Brush as we called him. Just a few days ago I ran across my Saints' Harp and inside is this inscription, "Presented to Lola Bedford by John Brush, July 17, 1890, at Downey Reunion." He received only a small government pension but took delight in buying the church books for any of us who did not possess them.

In 1894 I went to Los Angeles to enter the normal school and while there attended services in a rented hall where O. W. Earl and Nelson Van Fleet served as pastors. Our reunion was held at Santa Monica, and it was here I first met T. W. Williams, who with F. M. Sheehy had come out as our missionaries. I shall never forget my association with these good men.

In 1885 our Orange County branch was moved from Newport to Garden Grove, and Albert Carmichael became pastor. It was from this branch he went to serve as Presiding Bishop of the church. I was teaching in the little school by the church at this time, and I could not see how we could possibly manage without him. It was he who performed our marriage ceremony over fifty years ago. However Brother Nathaniel Carmichael was put in as our pastor, and we carried on as usual.

IN 1907 my husband was appointed county superintendent of schools, and it was necessary for us to move to Santa Ana. By this time a small branch had been organized there and a church home purchased at First and Garfield Streets. As soon as we established ourselves, we located the church. On the first Sunday I started out with our four children, not knowing where it was except on a certain street. We walked and walked, inquiring as we went until we finally arrived at it two miles from home. We were tired but overjoyed to find our people. This little church became the center of our activities.

Our men in this branch were scarce, but we had Henry Pankey, Sr., John Inman, and R. M. Dungan as loyal standbys. Our first big undertaking was to purchase a piano. We met quite a bit of opposition from the men over such a "big investment," but we went ahead and always made our monthly payments by the various ways known to "Ladies' Aids."

About this time Brother Frank Burton moved to Olive, a town eight miles from Santa Ana. He attended our branch and served as pastor for several years.

We were beginning to feel cramped in our church quarters as we had only one large room for all. I had charge of the Sunday school and thought that we could do much better work if we had more room. We sold our church home and began renting a hall. Since the hall was used Saturday night, it was necessary for me to go an hour earlier on Sunday morning to get it ready for services. This was no small task with a family of four, but the two boys were able to sweep while the girls could dust and place the chairs. We would soon have things going—even a few bouquets around.

Occasionally speakers came from Los Angeles. Among them was Brother V. M. Goodrich who became our pastor when we settled at Fifth and Flower Streets.

WE SOON STARTED raising money for our building fund; then our real task began. There was no time for discontent or evil thoughts. We were too busy. Through the aid of my husband, we served a banquet to the three hundred teachers who were attending the Institute, which brought us a fine sum of money. This we did for three successive years.

About this time plans were made to hold the county fair on South Bristol Street. We immediately saw a chance to add to our building fund, so we secured the concession of serving meals at the fair. This was an all day concern. We borrowed the old Southern California District tent and set up for business. Everyone had a job to do. Sister Balchen was in charge of the dining room; I had charge of all finances, and the other women were given their duties in the kitchen. Someone had to be there at night, and my boys volunteered for the job. We were always short a few pies and cakes the morning after but no questions were asked. Next to the last day of the celebration the fair committee staged a free barbecue. Since we had a contract for exclusive right to serve meals, I protested to the committee and restitution was granted. Our week of hard work brought us several hundred dollars more for the building fund.

Reunion was being held at Hermosa Beach during these years, and since we were still in need of funds, we secured permission from Brother R. T. Cooper to run the cafeteria, doing our own buying and serving. We did this for three years, making a nice profit each time. Dear old Uncle Henry Pankey would always be in the kitchen ahead of us, getting the fires started. My husband had made a large tent house on the reunion grounds which accommodated those who needed shelter. All they needed to bring was a cot and a couple of blankets. These cots were moved in at night and out each morning to give room for cooking and eating. I feel repaid many times over when I listen to the boys and girls of that day now grown to fine men and women, relating their good times at reunion.

It was during the reunion of 1915 I first met Apostle John W. Rushton. He was missionary in charge of the Pacific Coast, and I was district leader of women. I have always been thankful to have had Brother and Sister Rushton as my friends. She was head of one of the departments in our women's organization and made a splendid contribution.

At last we had enough funds to start building the Santa Ana church. Brother Dungan was chief architect and contractor. Our little church stands as a monument to this wonderful man who did most of the work. How proud and happy we were to move into an adequate new church home of our own!

WHEN THE GARDEN GROVE BRANCH dissolved and its members moved to Santa Ana, we welcomed Brother Nat Carmichael as our pastor. Under his reliable and patient leadership the little branch moved ahead and became one of the important groups in the district. Sister Balchen organized an orchestra, which officiated at home, district gatherings, and reunions. No boy was allowed to "forget" and leave his instrument at home on these occasions.

Our Sunday school numbered nearly a hundred at this time, although many who attended were nonmembers. If we saw a child at home in our vicinity on Sunday morning, we called on the parents and enlisted the youngster in our Sunday school. The girls were organized into an Oriole band. Sister Pearl Pankey Loucks was in charge of the older circle and Sister Hattie Kraschel Tait of the younger ones. They had many good times and got first prize on their record book at General Conference. Brother Eldon Whistler gathered the boys under his wing and supervised their outings.

Among the early missionaries who came to visit us were H. J. Davidson, P. R. Burton, E. A. Davis, George Harrington, and F. G. Pitt. Of course each time a series of meetings was held we had to tract the town. The women of the branch were appointed to go two on each street ringing door bells and inviting people to the meetings. It always seemed a wasted effort, but they never gave up. Brother Harrington made several containers for our church literature, and I secured permission to install these in parks, hotels, and depots. I would select the material and send my boys to place it in the containers. Woe be unto any sect that put its periodicals in our boxes!

ABOUT THIS TIME, the dreadful flu epidemic hit our town and we who were well were called upon to aid those who were ill. I was very busy at this time as three of my own family came down with it, but I was soon able to spare a while each day for some of our neighbors. One nonmember family especially needed help. Their own pastor was afraid to go near, but Elders Inman and Chapman called and administered several times. After recovering, the children attended our Sunday school although they never joined our church. In all my years of working for the church I have never seemed to be able to get somebody to join. Yet I have never, to my knowledge, let anyone, regardless of creed or color, be in need and not help them. I took the second chapter of the Book of Mosiah to mean me personally. I always had a keen sense of duty and when called upon did my best to fill the place, whether it was head of a department or janitorial work. For that matter, Sister Pearl Loucks and I served as janitors for years and were happy to do so.

As a child I was taught that our men in the priesthood were truly called of God, and I never could conceive of their doing anything wrong, but the big contention that arose in the church in 1925 left me with the knowledge that our men were very human and fallible. I felt bewildered and bruised. I grieved deeply and wondered if all my years of work in the church were wasted. However I decided to stand still and wait. After a time I realized I had Christ as an un-failing leader. He and he alone I would follow. I searched the Scriptures more diligently than ever in an effort to reconstruct my views. This was good for me, as some of my earlier ideas were misconceived. Now I had a firm foundation on which to stand. It is not enough in serving to just THINK you are right; you must KNOW the way.

I grieve for some of my brothers and sisters who faltered then. I never felt to

QUESTION:

I have always been taught that in a Communion service the presiding officer should be served first by one of his associates, after which he serves the emblems to them. Is this right?

Iowa

J. H. C.

ANSWER:

The procedure in conducting the Communion service is not definitized nor restricted by church law. However, the service is regulated largely by certain practices, and it seems most appropriate that a rather well-defined order is followed. A definite procedure is observed in the congregations around Independence, and basically the same order is being accepted elsewhere.

Usually one of the associates serves the officer in charge of the service. In turn, the presiding officer serves his associates and the other presiding officers seated on the rostrum. Then two of those officiating serve the priests who serve the congregation.

In this connection, we may well take notice of the procedure followed in the observance and administration of the sacraments in the early days of the Restoration Movement. The position of Joseph Smith, as leader and presiding officer of the church, was given pre-eminence in each instance. In baptism, it was Joseph who first administered the sacrament in baptizing Oliver Cowdery. On April 1, 1830, it was Joseph who first ordained Oliver. It is likely that in the Communion service which followed, in keeping with this procedure, Joseph served the emblems to the other members or at least to those assisting him in presiding. This arrangement in the administration of the sacraments has become more or less the accepted custom throughout the church.

It seems that such procedure as that given above is appropriate recognition of presiding authority, and is a good policy to follow.

QUESTION:

Regarding excommunication from the church, has much but trouble ever resulted from it? Why not let the tares grow up with the wheat and let Christ be the judge? Can an excommunicated member enter the church by way of baptism again?

Oregon

N. W.

ANSWER:

This depends somewhat on how we define trouble. In practically all cases of excommunication, there is some degree of uneasiness, embarrassment, and disparity. In spite of this, failure to excommunicate when expulsion seems to be wise is often much more distressing and damaging. In this regard we would say that much less real trouble results from excommunication than would result from leaving unworthy members within the flock.

Anyone who has grown wheat knows that the yield can be cut to almost nothing with the presence of cheat and tares which crowd out and sap the life from the wheat. Thus any farmer is anxious to destroy any plant that deters the growth and limits the yield of the wheat. In this connection Jesus has already judged. Matthew 5:29 reads: "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell."

While it is not desired that we should ever lose anyone from our fellowship, it is nevertheless wise that we shall sever from that fellowship those who would pollute the whole body if they were allowed to remain. The right-thinking administrative officer takes action against such people only when he feels that wisdom indicates their continued presence in the body will be detrimental to the life stream.

If an excommunicated member repents of the sin for which he was expelled and makes such adjustments as release him from the bondage of that sin, he may be again received into the church by baptism when he has indicated his desire and worthiness for fellowship. Such application must be reviewed and approved by the proper administrative officers.

QUESTION:

The gospel covenant existed from Adam until Moses. Since circumcision was practiced prior to Moses, why is it not practiced now under the new covenant?"

Michigan

G. H. F.

ANSWER:

The question seems to infer that circumcision was a part of the gospel covenant. Such is not the case.

Abraham claimed he was commanded of God to practice circumcision as a sign or a token of the covenant that the Lord made with him. This covenant had to do with his inheritance of certain lands for him and his posterity. It did not relate definitely to the gospel covenant. Moses commanded the practice to be an act of purification and had no relation to sacrifice.

Circumcision was not practiced among the Semitic, Assyrians, Babylonians, Edomites, and Moabites. However, according to Herodotus, the practice was universal among the Egyptians as a sacrificial rite designed to secure fertility.

The fifteenth chapter of Acts records the solution of the question of circumcision in relation to the Gentiles by the apostles. Peter contends that the Gentiles had received the Holy Ghost even as had the Jewish Christians, "and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith" (verse 9). He further called it a "yoke on the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear." The conclusion of the matter was that circumcision was not required of the Gentiles—and that by apostolic decision. Years later it was abandoned by the Jewish Christians as a rite or a sacrifice.

Of circumcision Paul said:

For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love.—Galatians 5:6.

For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature.—Galatians 6:15.

Circumcision is practiced by many people, Jew and Gentile, in modern times as a matter of hygiene, without reference to religious rite, sacrifice, or covenants.

rection and inspiration I would surely have failed.

I made a thorough search through all our church books and other books as well. I read everything I could find that had to do with prayer. When I was ready to formulate my thoughts, I had more material than I could possibly use for my talk. I was enthusiastic, for most thrilling of all was the fact that my study had revealed an even greater hope through prayer than I had previously found.

As I read and reread these following lines of poetry, I was touched by the deep sincerity of their words. I wondered—could it be possible that during the period of time when I felt prayer to be far beyond my reach that my very thinking had been prayer—for instance, those moments when I had “hoped God would perchance look my way and understand”?

Fountain of mercy! whose pervading eye
Can look within and read what passes there, Accept my thoughts for thanks; I have no words

My soul o'erfraught with gratitude, rejects
The aid of language—Lord!—behold my heart.
—Hannah More.

As down in the sunless retreats of the ocean,
Sweet flowers are springing no mortal can see,
So deep in my soul the still prayer of devotion Unheard by the world, rises silent to Thee.
—Moore.

Then I turned to the Scriptures which I had so often taken for granted before.

For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and unto him that knocketh, it shall be opened.—Matthew 7: 13.

But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul.—Deuteronomy 4: 29.

And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.—Isaiah 65: 24.

A study of God's word reveals that he has made prayer “powerful” because he has bound and tied himself to it. And yet, the more we study, the more we realize how very easy he made it for us to pray. “Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance, but taking hold of God's willingness.”

Throughout my study I was most greatly impressed by the simplicity of prayer. Above all, I learned that we need not be ashamed of the most simple thought of prayer. Christ, in his Sermon on the Mount, stressed simplicity and sincerity of prayer:

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men; for, verily, I say unto you, they have their reward. . . . But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the hypocrites do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Therefore be ye not like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.—Matthew 6: 5, 7, 8.

Excellency of prayer does not consist in the multitude of words. “It is far better to have a heart without words than words without a heart.”

As further evidence that God does hear our unspoken prayers, we are told in the Book of Mormon: “And Alma and his people did not raise their voices to the Lord their God, but did pour out their hearts to him; and he did know the thoughts of their hearts.” They hadn't uttered a word but God answered their prayers and released them from bondage.

After this more complete discovery of prayer, I presented my talk. I was able to do this, not authentically on the merits of my own personal discovery of prayer alone but through an exploration of the works of many choice writers. My fear of presentation was forgotten in finding that this new material actually emphasized and intensified my every thought of prayer. Because of God's love and direction, I was given this further assurance through a study for a church school talk. Again I was made to feel that service in God's church is a privilege.

A CONCENTRATED STUDY, along with a constant practice of prayer, will teach us many things God would have us know:

Religion is NOT possible without prayer. Life itself proves to be a hopeless struggle without prayer.

Prayer will open the door of the soul to God that he may enter and direct our lives for good. In answering our prayers, he will give us a sense of direction that will help us to solve our many problems and give us the comforting assurance that he is ever with us.

The divine wisdom has given us prayer, not as a means to obtain the good things of earth, but as a means whereby we learn to do without them; not as a means to escape evil, but as a means whereby we become strong enough to meet it.

Prayer will change our unhappy situations. God teaches us tolerance and patience, often times, where we never believed it could be exercised. Before we even realize it has happened, he causes us to see our fellow men with a heart of love, where before we may have felt only resentment.

When we become disgruntled, little by little the bitterest feelings are sweetened by the mention of them in prayer. Always we can regain our self-control in the divine presence.

Each one of us has a cross to bear. When it becomes heavy beyond our strength, God will lighten its load.

When we learn to feel God's presence, we come to consider him as our constant companion—one to whom we may speak at any time during day or night, even when a problem first presents itself. We can spare ourselves much sorrow by not waiting to keep an appointment with God. Pray when you will, but remember always—God has no office hours. He is our refuge on a moment's notice.

And now, with a most humble and sincere heart, I want to testify that there need be no “dark corners” because of prayer. Truly prayer may be a very simple discovery. We need only a sincere wish to have God enter our lives and then seek earnestly to hear his voice. To hear his voice is to feel his presence. When we experience this, the discovery of prayer is inevitable. It is then we have spiritually matured to the point where we are capable of understanding what is meant by that “great inner power,” because then we can feel it burning within our heart and soul. It is a power—alive and real.

The Artist Mother

She sews a dainty pinafore
Of pink, with ruffled lace.
She washes sun suits bright and clean,
She scrubs a year-old face.

She makes her home a lovely place
To look at and to be.
Her love is as a deep, deep well—
None so serene as she.

She reads—and sifts the things she hears,
Discarding all but good.
She knows a smile is quick to soothe
Where mere words never could.

She tends her hearth with loving care.
She's just and kind and wise
And sees the passing of the days
With calm and peaceful eyes.

She picks bright flowers from the yard;
She knows and loves the sod.
She tries each day to do her best,
And she believes in God.

Mother's Day - By GERTRUDE P. ALLEN

WHY should we celebrate Mother's Day? There is nothing in the civil calendar that can equal it! For one short day in the year, we hail the Madonna of our childhood, our hearts are softened, and the rugged way of life is made more smooth because our minds are halted before the shrine of motherhood.

"Mother's Day" was originated by a Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia, because of the undying influence of a good mother over her child. Miss Jarvis describes her mother as an "old-fashioned" type, whose chief interests in life were her home and Sunday school. Oh that there were more women of this "old-fashioned type" whose sweet lives were spent unreservedly in the nurture of the body and soul of little ones. Mrs. Jarvis taught in school for so many years that at last she was teaching children's children, thus repeating her good influence on the next generation. When she passed on to her reward, Anna arranged a memorial service, to which she invited all whom her mother had served and loved. She provided beautiful decorations of white carnations, which were to be shared among these people at the close of the service dedicated to a true and faithful mother. But this was not all. So great had been the effect of this gentle woman's walk through life that many felt her loss and remembered her teachings. Anna decided it was a pity her mother had passed beyond before she heard some of those words of praise and appreciation which came from those upon whom she had poured her wealth of affection.

Why, she wondered, should people wait until the empty loneliness of a vacant chair compelled an avowal of that love before they rendered homage to the queen of their lives?

Thus the idea of Mother's Day took form, and now it stops neither at oceans nor continents, but is heralded by young and old, irrespective of race.

The month of May was selected by Miss Jarvis for this distinction, but in England, "Mothering Sunday" is the Sunday before Palm Sunday. This, too, seems a most appropriate choice, for our minds go back to that far-off time when Jesus was on the earth. Mothers, with their children, gathered round him on the hillside and listened to his stories. His all-seeing eyes looked into theirs, and they knew he understood their difficulties. He spoke words of wisdom and comfort, and the mothers urged their children forward that they might receive a blessing. Now they learned he was to enter the city of Jerusalem, that was later to be the city of his tears. Their children would be in the band that strewed flowers along his path! Their children's voices would raise in childish treble as the hallelujahs rang out! Their hearts were full of mother-love and good desires. Yes, this was a Mother's day.

GOD himself knew the importance of mothers. He trusted them, knowing the special quality of love that mothers bear—the love which endures when everything else has gone, the kind of love Shakespeare describes: "Love is not love which alters when it alteration finds, it looks on tempests and is never shaken, it is the star, with heights unknown."

Such is mother love, that indefinable something which incorporates hopes, fears, courage, determination, wisdom, and endurance.

God has needed women who possess this ability to love throughout the ages and continues to need them. More than once he has trusted mothers with his greatest hopes and dreams. What kind of mothers were among his choice? Were they powerful, dominant, rich, influential? Not in the worldly conception of those attributes. Because they were chosen of God, was their way smooth and easy? Were all their difficulties erased, their problems solved?

I think not! God chose lowly, honest, true mothers of love and faith.

Remember the Hebrew mother who placed her son in the river and set her daughter to watch, lest ill should befall him. Was it any easier for her to part with her baby than it would be for us? Were her difficulties submerged? She was a woman of strong religious faith, of vision and resource, but most of all she was a mother. Did she know what lay ahead as she nursed her own baby in an enemy stronghold?

Her mind was often anxious, her thoughts troubled, but God saw something in that lowly woman which he needed—"love that looks on tempests and is never shaken." She loved not only her baby but God too. That lowly mother had God's confidence. He trusted her, and she fulfilled his trust. She so taught her son of God, that although he was reared among heathens, he became the deliverer of his people. She was no great lady—just a mother who soon passed out of the picture—but of what value would Moses, Aaron, and Mariam have been without her training? A good mother stood behind these leaders—a mother undaunted by adversities, unaffected by environment, a mother God trusted.

THERE is no woman in history to whom artists and poets have been so irresistibly drawn as Mary, the mother of Jesus, and yet she stands out as solitary as she is gracious. A simple maid, betrothed to a carpenter of Galilee, expecting a quiet, simple future in the little town of Nazareth.

Once again God trusted a mother with his most prized possession, his Son. If Mary was granted the greatest honor, she also bore the greatest sorrow, but throughout her life that love which is "the star with heights unknown" was transcendent. What strange fears must have clutched at her heart as she nursed her infant son. Mothers will understand her ponderings as her child waxed strong. She knew not how or when the sword would pierce her own soul—maybe when he went from the little home, but never from her heart or her prayers. When she heard that he was inflaming the hostility of Jewish leaders her fears for him were intensified. Mary experienced conflict within the family circle. She was a widow and knew what hardship was; she was often perplexed and troubled, but God had not misplaced his trust. "In her heart a sanctuary unto God had been built, and God entered in." Never once do we find her mother love faltering or her faith in God wavering. What depths of sorrow lie in the words, "Now there stood by the cross of Jesus, his mother." Disciples, and friends forsook him, but the mother who bore him did not shrink from the final agony. God trusts mothers because they have "the love that looks on tempests and is never shaken."

The Home Column

ONCE again God trusted a mother when Emma Smith guarded the manuscript of the Inspired Version of the Bible. Much that we now hold dear was once bound round a mother and her sons. Love, faith, and courage—in spite of opposition and persistent persecution—were the qualities God searched for as he looked into the heart of Emma Smith and he did not look in vain. After terrible trials and persecutions, Emma said, "I have nothing left but my home, and no friend greater than God; I will go there and maintain the dignity and sanctity of our home."

Can you imagine the depth of courage and faith she needed to return to hostile territory and bravely continue to live as a Saint should with the terrible memories of previous days seared on her soul?

God knew whom he had trusted. He had trusted a mother who, because she loved God, was determined to do his will. She remembered that she was an "Elect Lady," and she kept the mark of her high calling shining brightly on her immediate horizon.

Whatever obstacles she encountered, under whatever circumstances she found herself, she was steadfast, immovable. She, like the mother of Moses and the mother of Jesus, was ready when the Lord called for signs of his trust, her children. And they were ready. She answered, "Here is Joseph, and Alexander, and David, Lord, who never saw his father's face. Here they are—ready to do thy work. Thy trust is in them."

THESE qualities of love and trust are inherent in mothers. Look around and you will find godly mothers. Think of your own mother, and you will glean from your memories many instances of "love that looks on tempers and is never shaken."

The influence of a godly mother is beyond all estimate. She holds the key which can unlock the gate to Christian success—the key of sacrifice and love. God knew the value of mothers when he placed the culminating of his dreams in their slender hands. He is not stationary. His plans are not yet complete, and now he calls to you whose finger can control the mainspring, the pulse of his handiwork—children.

As the mother of Moses nursed her son amid the heathens, she little realized that her simple faith and godlike teaching were to fit him for the laws of Moses and the government of an oppressed people.

As Mary watched her son in the humble home at Nazareth, she little dreamed that he grew in wisdom because of her gentle faith, and that she would leave her imprint on the salvation of the world.

Emma, as she crossed the frozen Mississippi with four little children, never thought that 150 years later she would be the inspiration which urged other mothers to be strong and valiant.

As these women walked day by day with their hand in the Master's, they met their problems in the light of fulfilling a trust. It was no easy task. Many times were they discouraged, but the waves and the billows never overcame them. They remained true.

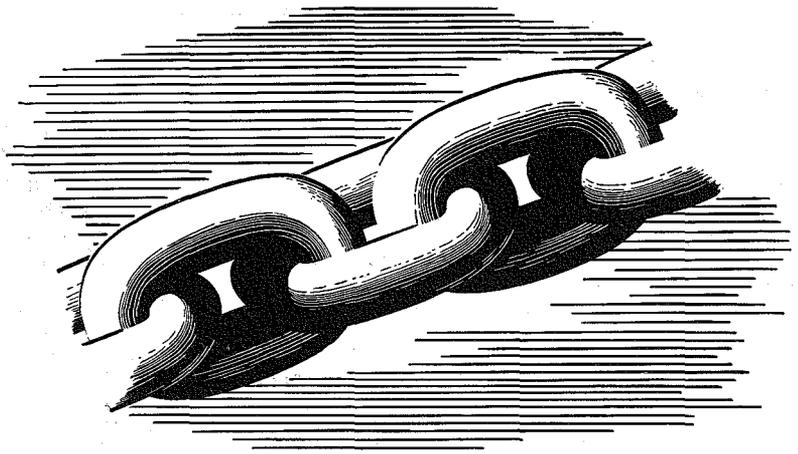

An old Chinese philosopher was once asked the greatest joy he found in life, and his answer was, "A child going down the road singing, after asking me the way."

That is God's trust to mothers, to put the children on the right way—his way.

To all the mothers, past and present, who in their unsung way, hidden and obscure, are trying to walk in the steps of the Savior, let us make this a day of coronation. Let us kiss the wrinkled brow and gladden the tired heart. Let us hail the queen of our lives and by some manifestation of gratitude reassure her of our unquenchable love.

This is our Mother's Day and with the angels of old we re-echo the throb in our hearts, "Blessed art thou among women."

A chain is as strong as its weakest link.

Is there a weak link in your branch's educational program?

You can have devoted teachers and eager classes . . . and still get nowhere! Especially if you are using the generalized lesson materials offered by commercial publishers.

You can remedy this by using solely the teaching aids published by your own church publishers . . . Herald House . . . whose lesson materials are geared specifically to our church aims and Zion program. Every link in the chain is vitally important. Make sure your branch is using Herald House church school materials.

Values Received from Branch Offerings

By MRS. JOHN W. THOMAS

The following article was developed from a church school worship service talk by the author. While it has particular application to one branch, we believe that many of our readers will re-evaluate the ministry of their own branch in the light of this article.—EDITOR.

I know a man who pays his tithing faithfully, yet never puts a dollar in his local branch treasury. This has puzzled me, since money contributed to our local church is well-spent indeed. Let's consider some things it provides for.

First, it helps to pay for our pastor's services. Since moving to the Walnut Park area more than ten years ago, we have had five pastors: William Patterson, Emery Jennings, Glaude Smith, Donald Lents, and Fred Davies. All are men of ability, and each left his imprint on our lives. Close association with them has helped us take steps toward better living. Our choirs are exceptionally good, and we have a fine orchestra. Money for music is provided by local collections. Even the organ and piano were purchased with funds supplied by members who thought good music in the church important enough to give. Scout troops, Oriole and Blue Bird groups are also helped in many congregations by contributions from the branch fund. The church school, which helps us to increase our knowledge, depends on collections for its materials. The Zion's League often figures into the branch budget, too; but the benefits received from it by the young people of a congregation cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Certainly no member should deprive them of these advantages by refusing his offering.

A short time ago I was talking to a young man who spent several years in the armed services. I asked him how it felt to be home. He said, "You can't imagine how wonderful it is! The one thing I want to remember is that it is wonderful. I don't want to take it for granted and forget how fine life is here, as some of the others seem to do."

Another one of our boys said when he was home from Graceland during the recent vacation, "You take the things you have learned at home and the things you learn at church and put them together with the things they teach you at Graceland; then you begin to see the pattern of life and how you can fit into God's work." A good home, a good church, and a good school are molding that boy into the right kind of a man.

IN summing up the benefits of our branch services, I realize they have been of unestimable value to our family. Because of them I am a better wife and mother, my husband is a better man and father, our home life is happier. Church attendance has helped us to teach our children more effectively the true values, and has made us more proficient in serving others. But the church must continue to have our support—financial as well as moral—if it is to survive.

Walnut Park congregation has turned out men and women to be proud of. One young man who was recently put under General Church appointment said, "There are people here in Walnut Park who would be surprised to know how much they have influenced my life."

Elbert A. Smith in "Blue Pencil Notes" says:

Behind each man that we surmise
Is very great and good and wise,
Whose name we hasten to acclaim,
Are many men of lesser size
Who gave themselves to swell the rise
Of his impressive fame.
They asked no notice or reward,
These unknown soldiers of the Lord.

OUR churches are not perfect. They are just what we and those who have gone before have made them.

Have you been putting all that you can into improving your branch?

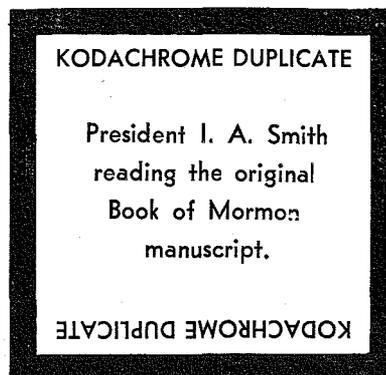

How much work are you able to do to make your church what you want it to be? It takes a lot of money. Have you pledged your consistent support? Your pastor and departmental leaders can accomplish much more if they can plan ahead. Are you developing the talents God gave you? Are you using them in your branch? Do you pray to God every day for the success of your church in the life of each individual connected with it? How much love do you have for your church and the people in it? Is it enough to help you overlook mistakes and failures, and still hold out a helping hand to those who make them?

Brother Elbert A. Smith says:

Still it is ours to work toward the vision of Zion, and to the best of human ability approximate the ideal—when we shall have done that faithfully, righteousness will look down from heaven to join the righteousness that has looked up from earth. Zion will never come to people who just sit and wait; neither to people who sit and murmur about the obviously imperfect efforts of those who are honestly endeavoring to build the kingdom.

Let us dedicate ourselves and our local offering to the task that lies before us, and take this pledge: This year, now, together we will make our church serve our community as God wants it to.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—At the close of a missionary series held by Elder A. F. Gibbs, four people were baptized. They were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baillie and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Burgoyne.

Alterations in the interior of the church are now completed.—The District Challenger.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—“Gertie Goes Plain,” a two-act comedy, provided hilarious entertainment when it was dramatized by the Young Women’s League of the branch before an audience of approximately one hundred people on March 30. The members of the cast were: Mrs. Marven Diggle, Mrs. “Buster” Scott, Miss Anne McConnell, Miss Elsie Foreman, Mrs. Melvin Dodds, and Miss Lois Flegel. Mrs. Marven Diggle, leader of the women’s department and president of the Young Women’s League, directed the play in a very competent manner.

The following night the play was presented at the Britannia Community Club. Priest Leonard Smith, formerly of Victoria, British Columbia, is the president of this club.

The money raised through presentation of this comedy is for the building fund.

Fifteen women from the two women’s groups of the branch gathered at the home of the women’s department leader, Mrs. Marven Diggle, on April 10 to hear Mrs. Phyllis Graveley speak on the subject, “Social Security in Canada and Its Relationship to Stewardship.” Mrs. Graveley is one of the government experts studying the problems of social security.

The building committee under the chairmanship of the pastor, Elder A. E. Caldwell, are having regular meetings in an effort to solve the many formidable problems that face them as they approach the task of building a church home. The site has already been selected and purchased.—Reported by MISS B. M. FARROW.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—On January 8 five children were blessed. Mary Lou Braun, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Braun, was blessed by Elders Seibert Chesnutt and L. W. Steigel. Harold Stanford O’Brien, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanford O’Brien, was blessed by Elders John Steigel and Lee White. Mary Lou Sharrar, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Sharrar, was blessed by Elders L. W. Steigel and Seibert Chesnutt. Michael Wayne Williams, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Williams, was blessed by Elders Lee White and John Steigel. Judith Marie Austin, sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hinkle, was blessed by Elders Seibert Chesnutt and Lee White.

The “Each One Win One” effort is continuing to bear fruit. On January 29, Betty June Nuccio and Saverio Nuccio were baptized by Elder L. W. Steigel. This brings a new family into the church. March 1, Harold L. Braun was baptized by Elder L. W. Steigel. Harold joins his wife and three daughters in the church. March, 26, three children, Mary Jon Short, Elizabeth Irene Clark, and Edward Clark were baptized by Elder Orville Short. Lois Edwards was baptized by Elder L. W. Steigel. Lois joins her husband in the church, thus uniting another home. This brings the total of baptisms to twenty-three, exceeding our goal for the year by three. This church year there have been four homes united in church membership, which has strengthened the branch.

A new automatic pump has been installed in the baptismal font. The font is to be redecorated. The fluorescent lighting system has been completed in the lower auditorium. Ken tile has been laid in the rest rooms.

The organization of the junior church choir, under the supervision of Maida Seline, has been a great inspiration to the children and adults alike. The choir, in their new robes, rendered their first numbers Easter Sunday, and an excellent ministry was received by all present.

The women’s department, under the supervision of Helen Steigel, held a Smorgasbord on January 29 to raise funds for banquet tables. Four tables have been purchased, two by the general women’s department, one by the Zion’s Friendship Circle, and one by the Sorosis Circle. They are to be used for the church school and for church suppers. The women’s department has also purchased a movie projector to be used for church school and church services.

A study course, “The Use of the Bible With Children,” taught by Elder L. W. Steigel, has just been completed by the church school workers. Seventeen signed to write up the course. There was an average attendance of sixteen. In the month of May a branch institute for the priesthood and church school teachers will be held. There will be a series of four lectures under the direction of Elder Seibert Chesnutt.

Special speakers have been District President Lyle Woodstock and Elder W. H. Norris, president of the Peoria Branch.

Easter Sunday, there was a record attendance of one hundred and ninety. The third Sunday of each month is being set as a day to make special effort to increase our building fund.

There were eighteen members of the Rock Island Branch who attended General Conference. All agreed it was the greatest Conference they have attended. It will be a source of great strength to the work in the branch.—Reported by DOROTHY O’LEARY.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—On April 16, a special after-Conference church school worship service was prepared by the church school superintendent, Mrs. Thelma Cline, carrying out the theme, “Thy Will Be Done.” Special music for this service was rendered by a quintet of girls including Misses Merleen Condon, Florine Cline, Loraine Smith, Gwendolyn Manning, and Evelyn Smith. They sang, “Thy Kingdom Come.”

For the church service Seventy Loyd Adams, Southern Ohio District missionary, was the guest speaker. Soloist, Miss Merleen Condon, sang “Another To-morrow.”

Earline Draper, formerly of Independence, Missouri, has recently moved to Cincinnati.

In the Cincinnati briefs of the April 10 issue mention was made of Merlin and Nola Miller. The name should have been Merlin and Nola Madison.—Reported by JOSEPHINE M. SMITH.

GREAT BEND, KANSAS.—On April 15 and 16, the Saints living in the towns surrounding Great Bend met to discuss plans for a mission church school. There were twenty-three present on Saturday evening and twenty-nine on Sunday morning. Brother and Sister J. C. Shannon of Wichita and Brother and Sister T. W. Bath of Pittsburg were present.

Meetings are being held in the various homes until a suitable place of worship is found. Church school classes and Communion services have been held.—Reported by MRS. T. W. BATH, JR.

CRESCENT CITY, CALIFORNIA.—The Brookings, Oregon, group consisting at present of six widely scattered families of southwestern Oregon and the extreme northwestern part of California, met at the home of A. V. Moore for Easter services conducted by Elder Joseph Elkins of Eureka, California. Two children were blessed. There were twelve adults and nine children in attendance, some coming as far as one hundred and fourteen miles.

This group wishes very much to grow, so they would like to hear from any members living in the locality. At present the meetings are held the second and fourth Sundays of each month at the home of A. V. Moore on Arnold Lane, Brookings, Oregon.—Reported by MRS. VIVIAN CUMMINS.

The New God, Science

By CLARK E. VINCENT

A sermon given at Golden Gate Branch
San Francisco, California

Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto him, Art thou he of whom it is written in the prophets that he should come, or do we look for another? Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and tell John again of those things which ye do hear and see; how the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them.—Matthew 11: 2-5.

THE Apostle Paul once stood on Mars' Hill and told the people of Athens that he had found in their midst "an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."¹

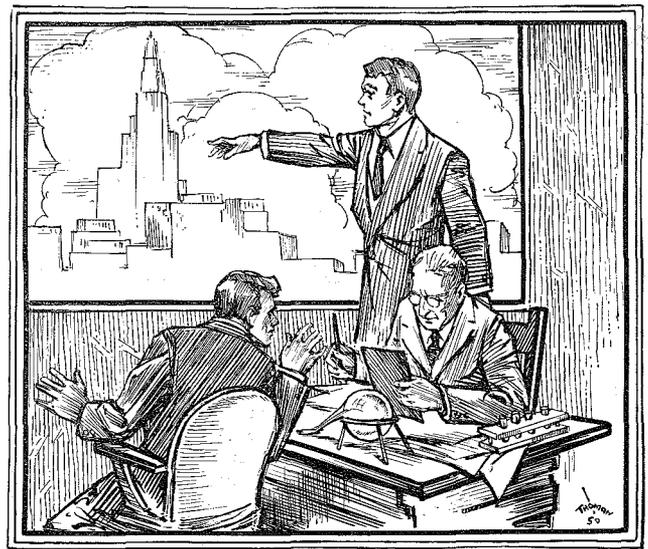

Were Paul to stand on a hill with a Pisgah view of western civilization today, he might point out that he finds in our midst "an altar with this inscription, TO THE NEW GOD, SCIENCE. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

It is not my intention to attack science. Its benisons are innumerable. It has brought us material comforts. It has given physical, mental, and emotional health to many. It has provided media for carrying the gospel by way of improved transportation, radio, newspapers, and public address systems.

However, it is difficult to deny that we have raised an altar to the new god, Science, and to the scientific method. Evidence of the worship of the new god is to be found in the minister who apologizes to his congregation for the lack of empirical proof for his convictions (this is not an uncommon practice today). The Christian pays homage to the new god by apologizing because his convictions are based on faith or unproved assumptions which are not measurable. Additional evidence of conversion to the new god is to be found in the attitude of the member of the congregation who refuses to believe, because there is no empirical proof, anything that cannot be measured, as he argues that the "signs" must precede rather than "follow those who believe." The university student at some time during his academic career is in the midst of this dilemma. His loyalty is torn between an allegiance to the divine Creator, who requires faith and manifests himself more through subjective than objective media, and an allegiance to the new god and the new method which requires logical, tangible evidence that is measurable.

IN light of the increasing homage paid to the new god and the new method, we may raise the question, "What are its limits?" Or as Paul said in another context, if we are to worship this new god, he should be declared to us.

First, let us take a look at Christianity. The Christian convert believes there is a God and that God has a plan for, and loves, that which he has created. It may be argued by some that many evidences of God and his love are measurable, and that there is empirical evidence of the existence of God and his love. Certainly the Christian convert has evidence for himself that God exists, but this is subjective evidence to the extent that he cannot show God to another individual as he might measure a table or point out a house. Thus the newly-won convert to the god of science (who requires such proof as the latter) will argue that the Christian can't prove the existence of a God and that all of the Christian's ideas and beliefs rest on this unproved assumption.

Now, let us take a look at science. Does science ever have faith in basic, unproved assumptions? Yes, most certainly! This is where the pseudo-scientist and the scientist are distinguishable. The pseudo-scientist would tell us that science rests on tangible experiments and never resorts to faith in that which is unproved. Many scientists, however, will tell us quite candidly that all the sciences rest on certain unproved assumptions, and that various sciences are marked off from one another by virtue of these different basic assumptions.²

For example, we may refer to mathematics, the most basic and often referred to as the only "pure science." Mathematicians cannot prove that 2×2 equals 4; they agree by logical definition at the outset that 2×2 equals 4. Then having agreed upon this and a host of other assumptions by definition, they proceed to use these basic assumptions and produce wonderful results.

Similarly physics cannot disprove or prove its basic categories of space or time, because the ideas of space and time are its basic categories, without which physical measurements could not be undertaken.

It is not surprising that the basic starting points cannot be proved, because the basic assumptions are the ultimate categories by means of which observations are organized; they are irreducible by means of observation, because observation itself depends on the existence of such general categories.

THE scientific method itself cannot be proved; rather it consists of a procedure which has been agreed upon, with occasional changes of the statements of agreement. Scientists agree that a high correlation is better than a low correlation; and it is not possible to prove such an agreement beyond the restatement of the premise as a conclusion.

Consider the discipline of geology. Many Christians who accept the time span and the record of genealogies contained in the Bible are confused when the geologists, the paleontologists, or the archaeologists find fossils which according to a time chart, "prove" that the world is older than we thought and "prove" that the creation picturing Adam as the first man is impossible. We seldom stop to realize that although the fossil and rock strata are compared to a time chart, the time chart itself has never been proved. It is the basic category or unproved assumption which was agreed upon and is constantly being revised. Here again, we see that the scientist cannot prove his basic assumptions, but agrees to accept them and use them to produce results.

Similarly in the social sciences the disciplines of psychology, economics, sociology, anthropology, history, and political science differ from each other in part because of the different basic unproved assumptions with which they begin their investigations.

It is important here to point out a distinction between religion and science with regard to basic unproved assumptions. Because they have been partly converted to the new god and don't fully understand its limits (and not all the converts to the new god recognize its limits), Christians have apologized for their basic assumptions and spent most of their time arguing about and trying to prove them; i. e., that there is a God and a "hereafter," and that this is the "right" church. Science, on the other hand, has largely followed the advice of Pareto who suggested that all sciences advance when they consider results instead of quarreling over first principles.³

Thus science justifies its existence by its results, and justifies its faith in unproved assumptions by results.

ONE more point in our look at science. Many scientists tell us that as scientists they cannot make value judgments. They state that they must wait for society to decide the ends or goals desired, and then they can point out or investigate the best means to reach that end or at least point out the alternative means. For example, if society decides that cancer is bad, the scientist will work to wipe out cancer. If society decides that divorce and juvenile delinquency are bad and that the goal desired is fewer divorces and less juvenile delinquency, then the sociologist and psychologist endeavor to discover the means of decreasing divorce and juvenile delinquency. This does not mean that the scientist as a private citizen cannot have his opinions and convictions which he may express and engage in furthering as a private citizen, but in his role as a scientist he cannot determine ends. (There are some scientists⁴ who disagree, but the majority hold to the belief that science is nonevaluative.)

This has an important implication for our answer to the limits of the new god, science. It says in effect that science cannot make decisions for us. As Poincare⁵ has pointed out, many people thought that science would make their decisions for them, and that science would prove that God exists as well as proving what church was "right" so that faith would no longer be necessary. Many scientists are deeply concerned with emphasizing the erroneousness of such an idea to a civilization which has become ashamed to hold beliefs.⁶

THERE are several points to be emphasized in summary:

(1) In answer to our question as to the limits of the new god, science, we discover that it, too, rests on unproved assumptions. (2) We notice also that decision-making regarding ends or goals and value judgments are beyond its limits as agency remains the responsibility of individuals. (3) It is possible to follow and have faith in both science and God. They are not polemics if we rightly understand the limits of science and see it as an instrument, a method, which is being used to benefit mankind and help spread the message of the Creator. (4) Science not only utilizes faith, but demonstrates the power of active faith. (5) Science doesn't waste time arguing about basic unproved assumptions, but concentrates on results and is believed in because of the results it produces. Christians in general might profit from such a procedure so that instead of spending so much energy trying to prove that there is a God and a "hereafter," we live as if there were a God and do "good for goodness' sake."⁷ rather than for reward. The results of such living will prove our basic assumptions. (6) To Latter Day Saints in particular, perhaps it reveals an accounting of the fruitage of our spiritual lives if we find ourselves relying too heavily on structure, lineage, or archaeological evidence for proof that this is the church of Jesus Christ. As William James⁸ has repeatedly emphasized, the divinity of a religion, religious experience, or organization should be judged by its fruits and not by its roots.

Pointing to our structure, our lineage, and the accomplishments of our forefathers in order to justify our existence as an organization is important but subsidiary evidence compared to the fruitage and power of individual lives in the present. We might well profit from the procedure of science and worry less about proving our basic assumptions and instead try to justify our existence as an organization because of our fruits rather than our roots.

It is interesting that when John the Baptist was in prison and sent men to Jesus asking if Jesus was "the man of whom it is written in the prophets that he should come?" Jesus answered, not by question begging and references to his past, his lineage, or his authority, but he pointed to the results of his ministry:

Go and tell John again of those things which ye do hear and see; how the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them.

No, science cannot be our God if we rightly understand its limitations. It needs to be "declared unto us," for it too rests on unproved assumptions. Value judgments and decision-making are beyond its limits. It cannot encroach upon agency.

We need not be apologetic about our values, our basic assumptions, and our faith in those unproved assumptions, but we do need to have the courage of our convictions. Rather than apologize for our beliefs, we need to make them explicit; then concentrate upon living so that our lives as individuals and as members of an organization will be the proof of God's reality, and will be proof of the divinity of the church of Jesus Christ.

The proof will be found but not in our lineage, our roots, or in archaeological evidence—these are important, but auxiliary proofs. Our primary evidence is results, for like science, "we shall be known by our fruits."

"The One and Only American Bible"

This is the second Sam Tucker editorial from the "Decatur Herald and Review" (January 17, 1941) which is reprinted here by permission of the editor, Robert C. Schaub. While it deals somewhat with the situation of teaching the Scriptures in the public schools of Illinois, this article has much of general church interest in it.—EDITOR.

As I View the Thing

By Sam Tucker

When we advocate the teaching of the Book of Mormon and its religion in all our public schools, we do not want to be condemned as sectarian or intolerant. On the contrary, we will support just as strongly the teaching of Mary Baker Eddy's Science and Health to all the public school children of the state. We will join any of our Catholic friends who are willing to present a demand, that a priest or a teaching nun be allowed to enter each public school, to instruct every pupil who will consent to listen, in the principles of Catholic faith.

The one, and the only stumbling-block in the way of religious instruction in public schools is the question, "Whose religion?" If we are going to have one, tolerated in defiance of the constitution and the Supreme Court of Illinois, then the only fair thing is to have them all. If we present a special argument in behalf of Mormon convictions, it is not because we are narrowly partisan, but only for the purpose of concrete example.

There are special reasons, of course, why the Latter Day Saint faith should be taught to young Americans

As for the teaching of the Book of Mormon to all our boys and girls whose parents will consent for them to listen, there is very good argument. It is not a part of the tolerant Latter Day Saint creed that any should be made to listen unwillingly. Pupils whose parents do not wish to hear about the more recent revelations of the gospel should be excused, and allowed to slink out of the classrooms, marked by their teachers and fellow pupils as they go.

For the majority, however, there will be priceless inspiration in the great epic of the Nephite migration to America, the thrilling stories of warfare against the Lamanite, the miraculous revelations which enabled Joseph Smith to receive and translate the sacred tablets.

In the Book of Mormon we have the one and only American Bible. It contains the only written history that can even pretend to account for the happenings on our continent a thousand years before Columbus. The moral teachings of the work are exalted: every page calls for submission to the divine command, and it reveals that departure from the true faith brings degradation of character both in men and nations, leading to disaster.

On that point, no testimony is more compelling than the words of the Prophet Alma to his son, Helaman. Book of Alma 14: 10:

Behold, I perceive that this very people, the Nephites, according to the Spirit of revelation which is in me, in four hundred years from the time that Jesus Christ shall manifest himself, shall dwindle in unbelief:

Yea, and then they shall see wars and pestilence, yea famine and bloodshed, even until the people of Nephi shall become extinct;

Yea, and this because they shall dwindle in unbelief, and fall into the works of darkness, and lasciviousness, and all manner of iniquities But they grew proud, being lifted up in their hearts because of their exceeding great riches; therefore they grew rich in their own eyes, and would not give heed to their words, to walk uprightly before God.

Such is the teaching of the Mormon Bible, a terrifying lesson for the irreligious in this day, as it was when first revealed to Prophet Smith in 1827. Small wonder that it impressed pious and thoughtful men of that time, in revolt against the materialism of their age; small wonder that converts began to come from all over America, and from lands across the seas. The later migrations of the Mormons to Ohio, to Missouri, and to Illinois.

No other religious faith is so completely American; no other has such a stirring history of martyrdom, high adventure, and phenomenal success in our land. For all these reasons, we are prepared to insist, that if any variety of religion is going to be taught in public schools, the Latter Day Saint faith has the first and best claim.

It is, to be sure, an austere and exacting discipline that is enjoyed by Mormon faith. It demands tithing by all members, dutiful submission to church authority, missionary effort by all, and a regular performance of worship, founded by simple folk and poor; like the Twelve recruited around Lake Galilee, it has grown great and powerful in the world through the magic of firm conviction and sacrifice. Let us, by all means, begin to teach the Book of Mormon in the schools of Illinois.

censure them but rather prayed that God would send them the inspiration he so generously gave me.

Now in the eventide of life I look back and, seeing my many mistakes, I wonder how God could have been so good to me when I lacked so much. Truly, he looks upon the heart. While I cannot take a prominent part any more, there are many little things I can do. I spent too much time in my early days witnessing for the church, now I can spend the remainder of my life witnessing for Christ. In all the stress of life, I have had only to call and feel his presence near. Often I have heard the still, small voice, so penetrating and so clear there was no mistaking it. How wonderful God is!

NEW KIND OF BREAD

A man in Kansas, where they raise wheat, is suggesting that bakers put more flour in their bread to help use up the surplus.

What do bakers put in bread, if not flour? Perhaps, as they say at the filling stations, "Free Air." And that may be what is wrong with bakery bread.

In that Kansas town the people are trying a "new loaf" with 15 per cent more flour in it. People like the "new bread," and sales are increasing with no special advertising campaign.

You remember with hungry longing the rich, grainy bread that Grandma used to make. The crust was something special, and the body had a fragrance like nothing else in this world. A slice from a freshly baked loaf, spread with soft country butter, or with clotted cream and sugar, was a treat for a king, especially one from eight to twelve years old. Grandma wasn't afraid to put something into her bread—plenty of flour, good fresh milk, shortening for tenderness, old-fashioned yeast, a little sugar, and a little salt. Baking days gave out celestial odors around the house.

What's happened to the modern girl? She not only can't make bread—she can't even slice what she gets from the store. Now she will hardly eat it. There must be a reason.

Reason number one may be the great bakery chain product. Isn't it amazing that in America where we boast the greatest flour mills and the biggest bread factories in the world, we produce bread with very little flavor or character?

If you want good bread and Grandma isn't near, you go to the little bakeries for a loaf of salt-rising bread or potato bread. The long crusty loaf of the Italians, the pretty little cakes of the French, the strudel of the Germans, the crescent rolls of the Austrians, the thin wafer bread of the Scandinavians, the hot-breads of our own South—all these are delectable.

Maybe Kansas is starting something that will make it possible to get a sandwich that won't flatten down to a doughwich, or a slice of bread that will toast and not look like insulating material. It will be nice if we can have the "staff of life" strong enough to hold us up and still taste good.

 TIED

Conferences wear all the workers out, and this last one, with heavy attendance, was particularly strenuous. Last Thursday at the afternoon rest period, Business Manager Kenneth Graham called a staff meeting, thanked everybody, and personally dished out double-dip ice cream cones for the crowd. "I've got Conference hangover," said Essie, "and I could just drop down and go to sleep anywhere."

 A GOOD CAUSE

is often defeated, not for its lack of intrinsic merit, but for purely extraneous factors—poor presentation, attacks on persons, and the mistakes of its proponents.

 CASUALTY

Uncle Joe came in with a cut-out purple heart stuck to his hatband.

"What's that for?" the official interrogator asked him.

"That's my decoration," he replied. "I am a casualty of combat. I got it at Conference. I was wounded in the War of the Resolutions."

Personal Evangelism

PERSONAL CONTACT has proved our most effective means of proselyting. By using such contacts branches grew faster before they had numerous full-time ministers than after the appointment and sustenance of stipendiary ministers seemed to relieve the Saints of missionary responsibility. Growth is quick now only in those places where the body of the Saints is active in missionary testimony.

Cottage meetings have been the most fruitful means of group proselyting in the history of the church, and here the essential idea is personal contact. In earlier years cottage meetings were rivaled by schoolhouse meetings. Now these have passed, but the importance of the home still remains. Big business demonstrates and sells in homes. Good men have been won and can still be won through informal, face-to-face missionary testimony borne in their homes by men like themselves who know the Scriptures.

The death of Brother John W. Rushton on the morning of May 8, 1950, brings great regret to all the church. He was recovering from an operation at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, and seemed to be improving, when an embolism caused his passing. Brother Rushton was a member of the Council of Twelve from 1902 until 1947. Further information will be given in a later issue.

Chandler, and Miss Margaret Thomas.

Brother Thomas started work early in life and was unable to complete much formal education; however, by night school and correspondence courses, he prepared himself for business and church work. For twenty-five years he was employed in the wholesale electrical supply business, where he served as purchasing agent, office manager, and general manager.

He was ordained a priest in 1907 and an elder in 1920. He was in charge of Stone Church Group twenty for four years. The Will of God "And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done." —Acts 21:14.

Life and Death

Many times our ministers are called to comfort those who have lost members of the family in death. It is a time when the heart goes out in a desire to help and serve, but words seem too weak and useless.

Death may seem an abstraction until it invades your own family circle. Then it becomes a terrible reality.

What can one say when he is asked to give comfort and reassurance in a time of loss?

A Little Book

Concerning this theme, there was a little book that came out in the year 1927 for which the publishers held small hope of success, though they knew it had extraordinary literary merit. Since then, The Bridge of San Luis Rey, by Thornton Wilder, has gone through sixty-one printings at least, and it may become a classic of American literature.

Trusting that my nice new college education would enable me to understand anything, I read it then with appreciation. Recently I picked up a new pocketbook edition for a quarter, and read it again. I was amazed at how much I had missed the first time. It takes more than an education—generally experience with life and death—to understand great literature.

The Will of God

Wilder tells a story of the early eighteenth century, in which "the finest bridge in all Peru broke and precipitated five travellers into the gulf below." A little Franciscan monk, Father Juniper, saw the accident and was troubled by a question, "Why did this happen to those five?" He sought, in a study of the lives of the dead and the living, to discover if there were some indication of the intention of God in that accident. The study occupied him for years. His conclusion was that those who were killed were five times more worth saving than those who escaped. This was called heresy by the church, and he was burned at the stake, but died in the conviction that he was right. Those five had completed a pattern of life, he thought, and had suffered much. There was little more this world could offer them. Perhaps—and the balance between the probable and the improbable was exceedingly fine—it was God's mercy to choose this way of taking them home to himself.

The Bridge of Love

There is beauty and, we trust, some truth in the reflections of the abbess, Madre María, at the end of the story:

"Soon we shall die and all memory of those five will have left the earth, and we ourselves shall be loved for a while and forgotten. But the love will have been enough; all those impulses of love return to the love that made them. . . . There is a land of the living and a land of the dead and the bridge is love, the only survival, the only meaning."

Those who have loved deeply, and have been required by the hand of fate to give up their loved ones, will find comfort in such words. Love is the bridge between heaven and earth. It is a tie that is not severed by the vast immensities of time and space. In practical and immediate truth, moreover, it is the bridge between living souls, immured as they are in the solitary prisons of their own corporeal beings.

An Alternative

Somewhere in life one wishes there could be an answer for those who must submit to the will of God, if that's what it is. Punishment without understanding, loss without knowledge of the fate that determined the loss, is a bitter thing.

Sometimes what one has left is made meaningless by what one has lost, and the victim looks to heaven and asks, as Brother Juniper did, "Why?"

He may have his choice of answers. He can believe that God set the laws of the universe in working order, and that losses are contingent upon the impartial operation of those laws; or that there is a higher wisdom than humans can understand, and that what appears here as tragedy is only the divine love and care, looking far ahead.

The Answer

You can see many times farther by the light of the stars at night than you can in the day by the sun. And the greater truths that may escape the waking intelligence are revealed to the soul in visions and dreams. One poet exclaimed, "There's a land that is fairer than this, and by faith I can see it afar." And Catherine MacDougall wrote (Hymn 355) "Across the far blue hills of time, beyond the western gate, There is a far serener clime, where patient loved ones wait."

Those who have lost loved ones in death have given hostages to eternity. And each one who has passed on to that land "from whence no traveler returns" becomes the center of a new hope.

Between the land of the dead and the land of the living, there is a bridge of love. It is God's gift to those who grieve. L. J. L.

E d i t o r i a l

There will be an appointee school for new and recent appointees held in Independence on June 13-23.

This is for the purpose of orientation and instruction in preparation for service to the church. Those who are to attend will be notified by letter.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Across the Desk

From Seventy Eugene A. Theys in Rotterdam, Holland:

On Sunday, April 23, Seventy Glen H. Johnson and I completed a series of missionary services with our group at Zwaagwestiende, Friesland. In the morning eleven fine people were baptized, and on April 30 at least two more will be baptized as a result of this service. With the baptisms already at hand, we are two ahead of last year; other baptisms planned during the coming months promise Holland one of its best years in conversions for quite some time.

We feel that the Saints both here in the Netherlands and Germany desire more than ever before to witness for Christ. It is a pleasure to be associated with the many fine people of these two missions, and we sincerely hope we can do our part as servants for our Heavenly Father in this part of his vineyard.

We rejoice with you and the other members over the recent Conference.

Graceland Opportunities for Veterans

By R. Edwin Browne

IT IS DECISION TIME for U. S. veterans! If you are a veteran of World War II and you desire to go on to school under the government's educational benefits program, there is little time left to enroll in college.

Most veterans who desire to receive educational benefits from the government should initiate their educational programs by July 25 of next year in order to be eligible for benefits. This means that veterans who plan to enroll at Graceland College should do so this fall, or at the latest should enroll at the beginning of the second semester of the coming school year—in February of 1951.

This information comes to Graceland from the Veterans Administration and is more fully explained in the following reprint of paragraph 10035, Veterans Administration regulations, dated April 1, 1950.

10035. REGULATION CONCERNING THE PURSUIT ON OR AFTER JULY 25, 1951, OF COURSES OF EDUCATION OR TRAINING UNDER THE SERVICEMEN'S READJUSTMENT ACT, AS AMENDED (PART VIII, VETERANS REGULATION NO. 1 (2), AS AMENDED).— July 25, 1951, is a critical date in the education and training program under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act. Veterans who are eligible for education or training and who have not undertaken such training under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, as well as those who have commenced but have not completed their course, may be vitally affected by the July 25, 1951, date. In order that all such veterans may be made fully aware of the importance of the date and of its effect on the education and training program, this regulation is promulgated at this time for the purpose of providing all such veterans with ample advance notice so that their plans may be made accordingly.

(A) This regulation applies to all courses of education or training pursued by veterans on or after July 25, 1951, under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, as amended.

(B) The law provides that a course of education or training shall be initiated before the termination of four years after the date of discharge or by July 25, 1951, whichever is the later, and that such education or training cannot be afforded beyond July 25, 1956, except for those veterans who enlisted under the Voluntary Recruitment Act of October 6, 1945. Therefore, a veteran otherwise eligible must have commenced and actually be pursuing his course of education or training on July 25, 1951, or the date four years after discharge, whichever is later, except where his attendance is interrupted because of the normal interruptions for summer vacations, or other reasons beyond the control of the veteran.

(C) A course of education or training shall consist of such curriculum, program of study or training, or combination of subjects as are prescribed by the institution as constituting the course. When the veteran elects his course of education or training, is accepted by the approved educational or training institution as qualified to undertake and pursue the elected course, and commences such course, he shall pursue his course of education or training continuously until completion, except for conditions which normally would cause interruption by any student.

(D) A veteran may change his course of education or training only while in training and then for reasons satisfactory to the Administrator. A change of one or more subjects in the elected curriculum or program of training, including the dropping of a subject without replacing it with another, or the adding of a subject, or a change in the sequence in which the subjects are undertaken does not constitute a change of course of education or training. Advancement from a basic or preparatory phase to an advanced phase within the course of education or training which the veteran is pursuing does not constitute a change of course.

(E) A change of course of education or training may be considered to be for satisfactory reasons when:

(1) The veteran is not making satisfactory progress in his present course and the failure is not due to his own misconduct, his own neglect, or his own lack of application; or

(2) The course to which the veteran desires to change is more in keeping with his aptitude, previous education, training, or other such pertinent facts; or

(3) A course to which the veteran desires to change, while not a part of the course currently pursued by him, is a normal progression from said course and will enable him to attain his educational or vocational objective. No additional changes of courses of education or training will be approved except for the most cogent reasons.

(F) When the veteran completes his course of education or training as defined above or discontinues his elected course of education or training, the law does not permit the initiation of another course of education or training.

Graceland College is now accepting applications for admission for the 1950-51 school term which begins September 7. Graceland welcomes veterans who wish to join the ranks of hundreds of other veterans who have enjoyed the twofold benefits of financial help from the government and the distinctive education available to them at the church college.

Revelation and Science - Part I

An Investigation of the Prophetic Mission of Joseph the Seer and His Revelations in the Light of Science

By C. W. CLARK

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets.

—Amos 3: 7.

A RECENT TRANSLATOR, Ferrar Feriton, put this Greek text into modern language: "However the Mighty Lord will not produce an event without disclosing his intentions to his servants, the prophets."

From this we might properly assume that God would reveal through prophecy those things which affect his relationship to people before men discover, from a factual basis, these same truths in order that men may have a testimony from the Almighty of such facts. Our purpose is to show that before man comprehended the vastness of the universe, God spoke through one whom he chose as a prophet and intimated what was about to be made known scientifically through the telescope, the microscope, and also the spectroscope.

In John 14: 29 we have a statement that well covers every true, prophetic statement, "And now I have told you before it came to pass, that when it is come to pass ye might believe."

Much of that which is here presented for consideration was scientifically unknown until recent years. True, there may have been some speculative philosophy, but it was only speculation.

Because I will quote extensively from a book written by H. Henry Garbedian entitled Major Mysteries of Science, published in 1933, it might be well to present excerpts from two book reviews. In the Saturday Review of Literature for May 27, 1933, appeared this statement:

We know at once, however, that his is a trustworthy guide in realms of scientific knowledge. . . . He knows how to sift evidence which sources accept as authoritative, and can discard fallacies and far-fetched misconceptions while retaining valuable scientific truths.

The New York Times for May 7, 1933, carried this appraisal:

Written to be of most interest to the average educated but non-scientific reader A cosmic reporter rather than a working scientist The book deserves to have future editions.

Mr. Garbedian says, "The small family that makes up the solar system—the sun, moon, and planets—was all that concerned the astronomy of a century ago" (page 293). It is the purpose of God that the heavens should declare his glory to intelligent people and that the order of the cosmos should proclaim an infinite intelligence. When properly applied, science should lead to God, for the vast system of nature is an expression of divine thought. However God chooses to reveal some of the mysteries of the universe through his prophets before man, by the spark of divinity and inspiration, invents the great telescopes by which one may test the revelations of God. The whole creation is the result of one master purpose—of one mind.

Scientific evidence always commands the respect of reasoning men. Science belongs to Christianity, and Christianity should assert her claim. For this very purpose God revealed enough of the enlarging vision of the cosmos through his prophet, Joseph Smith, to have stabilized the thinking of mankind, had they accepted God's revelation. Atheism thrives because so few who claim to have accepted the word of God really believe it. The whole plan of creation was mapped out in the mind of the Creator from the beginning. No amendments or modifications of these plans have been necessary. His work is continuous.

LET US EXAMINE some of the prophetic statements given to the world in June, 1830, through Joseph Smith.

3. And behold, thou art my son, wherefore look, and I will show thee the workmanship of mine hands, but not all; for my works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease; wherefore, no man can behold all my works except he behold all my glory; and no man can behold all my glory, and afterwards remain in the flesh, on the earth.

also paragraph

21. And the Lord God said unto Moses, For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me. And by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth. And worlds without number have I created, and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. And the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many. But only an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you; for behold there are many worlds which have passed away by the word of my power; and there are many also which now stand, and numberless are they unto man; but all things are numbered unto me; for they are mine, and I know them. —Section 22.

These paragraphs postulate two facts to be discussed, viz., God's works are continuous, "For my works are without end," and "Worlds have passed away by the word of my power," the many now in existence being "numberless unto man."

We also want to examine paragraph 23 of the same section.

And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying, The heavens they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

Here are three more terse statements: "The heavens, they are many and can not be numbered unto man." As one earth shall pass away and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come.

Major Mysteries of Science quotes Dr. Millikan (a Nobel prize winner and in 1933 connected with California Institute of Technology):

The physical sciences far from destroying the right to believe in the continuous formation of the heavy element out of the lighter, have, by inductive reasoning based on experimental fact, apparently traced the work of a creative force to its very source and report to humanity that such creation is probably even now occurring throughout the vast regions of space.

LET US REMEMBER that outside of our own solar system, suns are the only visible stars. There is a difference of opinion between Dr. Millikan and Sir James Jeans. The latter contends that the universe is running down and eventually will be annihilated. He looks on the gloomy side as to final results, yet suggests in his book, Through Space and Time, that "there are vast colonies of stars whose number compares with the sands of the seashore—being born—living their lives—and dying." He thus confirms the fact that new stars are being born—and dying. "As one earth shall pass away and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23.

It may be true that the particular universe of which we are a part belongs to that referred to as passing away. Yet elements are not destructible, only changeable. Therefore the elements of a dying sun may be used to build up another universe. In fact Revelation 21: 1 intimates this to be a fact, also the fifth and twenty-third verses of the same chapter. "God's work is continuous." In Genesis 1: 2 the statement is made, "The earth was without form and void." (Note I am quoting from the King James Version so as to be more generally usable, although the Inspired Version refers to these facts in the same way.)

Twice in Section 22 the prophet says of the worlds or heavens, "They are numberless unto man, but they are numbered unto me."

Remember that in 1833 little was known of outside solar systems, but the scene has changed, and now science admits they are numberless. The sad fact is that as man's knowledge of the immensity of space occupied by these solar systems became known, he was lost among the stars. The leaders of the religious world who would not recognize the truths revealed by Joseph Smith turned many of their followers into the ways of atheism. Man has ever been slow to accept the revealed will and information from divine sources. Joseph Smith did unravel great mysteries which he could not have known except by revelation from on high. "Numberless are they unto man." We quote the following from Major Mysteries of Science, pages 289, 290.

Instead of a paltry 3,000 stars, we now know that there are at least 10,000,000,000 in the universe or galaxy of which our earth and solar system are a part. . . . The solar system, together with superior organizations of star clouds, globular clusters and associations of star groups, is rotating around a focal point near where the constellations of Scorpio, Ophiuchus, the serpent-carrier, and Sagittarius, the archer, merge.

Mystery still shrouds the vital questions of how big the center of the universe is and what makes up its structure, a structure powerful enough to exert its gravitational power on our solar system 300,000,000,000,000 miles away and to make it obey its will.

This has reference only to our own universe or Galaxy which includes what we know as the Milky Way. We quote further from page 290.

The investigations at Harvard Observatory show that the center of the galaxy is bounded by billions of stars scattered in space as if on a gigantic watch. So huge is this watch that it takes light, traveling through space at the rate of 186,000 miles a second or 6,000,000,000,000 miles a year, two thousand centuries (200,000 years) to traverse its diameter and 500 centuries (50,000 years) to cross its thickness. Our earth and the solar system is way off to one side of this watch near the rim.

Although this universe of ours is so vast that one's imagination finds great difficulty in picturing it, the researches of the past few years show that it fills but a small fraction of space. What lies beyond our "private universe"? The answer is more universes. . . . Science now believes that there are at least 2,000,000 other universes like our own scattered in space as far as our most powerful telescopes can fathom.

In further support of the magnitude of creation in harmony with the prophetic statement of Joseph Smith, we quote from Astronomy for Everybody, copyrighted in 1902 by Doubleday, Doran Company of New York City, and republished by the Garden City Publishing Company. Author: Simon Newcomb, one-time Professor of Mathematics in the United States Navy, was a noted astronomer.

The Galaxies, like individual stars, are assembled in clusters which are known as supergalaxies, as many as forty supergalaxies are already listed (1902), varying in membership from a few to hundreds of galaxies. . . . Just as the stars around us are assembled in a galaxy, we may suppose that the galaxies and supergalaxies are members of a greater organization, the metagalaxy, whose form and extent must remain unknown until telescopes are constructed powerful enough to reach its boundaries, and what lies beyond. . . . We can for the present only speculate on these questions.—Page 332, 333.

This book is a wonderful introduction to study of astronomy.

EXPRESSIONS of this magnitude are written in the revelations to Joseph Smith, Jr., in the following expressions: "to fill the immensity of space" (Section 85: 3). "There is no space in which there is no kingdom."—Section 85: 9. "And numberless are they unto man."—Section 22: 21. "The heavens they are many."—Section 22: 23.

These statements were a preview of what science was about to reveal to man. As usual when God speaks, the message was largely rejected because the prophet was largely rejected and man thought that the universe had grown outside the revealed will of God. The preceding quotations from Doctrine and Covenants are expansive enough to include any other discoveries that may be made.

An enlightening article appeared in Colliers of May 7, 1949, about the new Palomar two-hundred-inch telescope. It informs the reader that already this new telescope has recorded Galaxies of light 6,000 billion billion miles from our tiny planet and adds that there is order and plan out there no matter how far we go.

According to Science News Letter of February 9, 1946, Dr. Berkhoff of Harvard University says there are apparently 11 billion Galaxies or universes. Some require 1,000 million light years in reaching us.

Dr. Einstein postulates that the universes are expanding. Read again Section 22: 21, 23. If the universes are building up, there must be a continuous creative power.

The Creative Power of God

Jesus told his apostles (Matthew 28: 18), "All power is given me in heaven and in earth." This does not mean that he in any way supersedes God, the Father, but he is the executive officer who carries out the will of God. With such power he would be able to use every force in the universe to carry out his will, which is always the will of the Father. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work."—John 4: 34. "O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."—John 17: 5.

As far as this world is concerned, Jesus came "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." Some day this mission will be accomplished. Do not overlook the fact that all power is given him in heaven as well as on earth, and as the executive officer, he carries out the plans of God. The powers given him in heaven would be according to law. Should man discover some of the sources of power, such discovery does not vitiate the force of the law which existed from the beginning.

Genesis 1: 26 in King James Version begins, "Let us make man," indicating conclusively that someone was with God in the creative incidents which resulted in intelligent life on earth. (I am a devoted believer in the Inspired Version but am using the King James Version in order that this article may be used to approach those who do not appreciate the beauties of the Inspired Version.)

Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21 says, "Here is wisdom that it remaineth in me, and by the word of my power have I created them, which is mine only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth." Remember Jesus said, "All power is given unto me." It is in harmony with God's great plan that this power given Christ would be the result or product of law.

Let us examine Section 85: 2, 3, 9:

This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom; which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn, even of God, the holiest of all, through Jesus Christ, his Son; he that ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the powers thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.

All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions.

THE FAIRLY RECENT DISCOVERY of the cosmic ray is the unfolding of one of the forces used by Christ in the creative processes, and perhaps other rays of more recent discoveries.

In Scientific Digest of January, 1942, Dr. Arthur Compton, well-known scientist, author, and Nobel prize winner, discusses the cosmic ray. He tells us these rays came from distances far out beyond our solar system, in fact far out beyond our universe. They have a startling effect in the control of all planets. He says the rays explain how the sun pours out heat a million times greater than could result from chemical reaction. (Section 85:2 also says Christ is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made.) Each cosmic ray possesses a billion times greater power than a single ray of light. He adds that these rays are exceedingly penetrating, and that he has counted them coming into a mine over 1,000 feet deep under solid rock.

The Indianapolis Times of May 2, 1933, page 10, quotes Dr. W. J. Humphreys, noted physicist of the United States Weather Bureau, as saying, that these rays, whose full properties are not known, bombard the earth from outer space.

In the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch of January 3, 1933, Director L. J. Briggs calls these rays the outstanding mystery of the scientific world. They present a baffling problem to scientists, which, if solved, will contribute much toward the knowledge of the material of which the world is made. He states that while their exact nature is unknown, they possess energies equivalent to hundreds of millions of volts of electricity.

We again quote from Major Mysteries of Science, pages 172, 173, about these rays:

The strongest of the cosmic rays can penetrate with ease through thirty feet of solid lead or several hundred feet of water. . . . The energy of the cosmic ray is so great that it would take, according to present estimates, a 60,000,000 volt X-ray tube to produce some of its milder forms. . . . We now know that we are exposed twenty-four hours a day to the power of the cosmic rays, no matter where we are. . . . We now understand that these cosmic rays break up millions of atoms every second in the body of each of us, as they do in all forms of matter. . . . We do know that the riddle of the cosmic rays is one of the mysteries of matter, of the universe, possibly of life. Millikan points to the rays as a signpost indicating the way to the very doorsteps of Creation's laboratory, in which matter is itself fashioned out of primeval electrons and protons.

To sum up, investigation of cosmic rays points "with much definiteness" to three important conclusions:

First, cosmic rays have their origin not in the stars but in interstellar space.

The Exercise of Faith - By E. A. THOMAS

ADMINISTERING THE ORDINANCE of laying on of hands for the healing of the sick presents many problems, among which the most disturbing is the question, "Why do we not have more frequent healings?"

The desired results are not always obtained, but a careful study reveals some very vital reasons why. First, some people cannot be healed because they are appointed to die. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12, 13.) Second, faith may be lacking. Faith is the all-important factor, and it is to be found in the ones who are sick and also in the ones who administer to the sick. James 5: 13-16 states the prayer of faith saves the sick. Third, there is the gift of faith to be healed, and there is also the gift of faith to heal, as found in I Corinthians 12: 9-28, and Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12, 13; 46: 7; 127: 2.

James 5: 14 states that those who are sick should call for the elders to lay hands on them, anointing with oil and offering prayer for them. In some cases, one may be too sick to call for the elders. If so, the family or loved ones should originate the call. And there are cases where the one who needs to be administered to is too sick to exercise faith. Here again the family or loved ones must bear the responsibility of exercising faith until the sick one is able to do so. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.)

The elders when called should respond at once, even though they do not have time for special preparation, because the one who is sick may have faith to be healed. Again the Lord may be ready to grant a blessing of relief from pain or distress, although it may be just temporary. The elders and those involved should not think their task is completed and nothing further needs to be done once they have administered. It is a mistake to think that after the sick one has been administered to, he or she should be considered in the hands of the Lord, and that further importuning would be displeasing to God. Unless it be made known through proper channels that the sick one is appointed to death, it becomes the duty of those concerned to continue to pray, exercising faith and having the elders to administer repeatedly.

MANY PEOPLE assume a wrong attitude regarding the sick in thinking they should not call upon doctors for help. A careful reading of the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 127, will show the services of one "acquainted with the laws of health and the practice of medicine" are desirable and should be used. If this were not so, why did God tell the church to establish the Sanitarium, why appoint Apostle Luff as "physician to the church"?

In many cases, careful investigation by proper authorities, usually the pastor, will show that the sick one or the family or other loved ones may not know how to exercise faith intelligently. It then becomes his duty to see that they are taught. In such cases certain elders selected with approval of the pastor, or appointed by him, should accept special assignment of this task, discharging the duty faithfully and completely. During this period and after, prayer and administration should be continued. Sometimes the blessing of healing may be withheld until God's own due time.

PAUL REVEALS the secret of the intelligent exercise of faith, as related in Philippians 4:8 "... think on these things." He was an expert psychologist and knew, as do scientists and educators of today, that our thoughts are powerful and influence our lives greatly. "Thought is the father of the deed." The idea of right thinking spoken by Paul agrees with the teaching of Jesus, who says: "... those things that proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man." If the kind of thoughts coming from the heart can defile a man, it is evident that the right kind of thoughts coming from the heart may save. Remember also the wise man said, "... as he thinketh in his heart, so is he."

This kind of teaching is scriptural, doctrinal, and as old as mankind. It is not to be looked upon as "new-fangled philosophy" nor as departing from the faith, although some may claim it is the so-called new philosophy of auto-suggestion. As a matter of fact, the basic principle of auto-suggestion, and similar philosophies, is but the principle of faith. This principle of faith was taught to Adam. (See Genesis 4: 6-8, Inspired Version.) He could not look forward to Christ and do all things in his name without faith. Why then should we not place emphasis on the teaching of faith intelligently exercised today?

A VERY SUCCESSFUL MINISTER of today, Doctor Norman Vincent Peale of New York, wrote a book that has captured the interest of thousands of people in all walks of life. It is called A Guide to Confident Living. A careful study of this book reveals that it is based upon proper exercise of faith in God. In fact, Doctor Peale himself said to a reporter whose interview with him appears in the June issue of the American Magazine,

The most important function of the preacher is to remind people of the great things that can take place in their lives through the power of God. It is not enough to tell people they ought to pray and have faith. They must also be shown how to pray and how to have faith.

We should make a special effort to teach our people the importance of this vital force in connection with administering to the sick. Thinking the right kind of thoughts continuously will cause one to subconsciously do that which he thinks about. To illustrate this we might tell those who are sick to think "With the help of God I can get well." If he does this regularly and persistently, the one who is sick will gradually come to think "with the help of God I am getting better." When he reaches this point, he is able to receive further and more detailed instruction on how to intelligently exercise faith in God, the ordinances of the church, the priesthood and its function, and how he may realize fulfillment of the promises of God.

WHEN ALL OF US more fully understand the basic principle of faith and exercise it more intelligently, we can look for sure results which now we regard as miraculous. Webster defines a miracle as "an event deviating from known laws of nature or transcending our knowledge of these laws; that which is divinely natural but which must be learned humanly." When we learn that which is divinely natural and understand the laws governing the events we desire, we can more surely obtain these results. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18 says the mysteries of the kingdom will be revealed to Joseph Smith; and in 63: 7 the same is promised to "any who will keep the commandments." God is willing to reveal these mysteries—how and why they transcend human knowledge.

When we reach this point in our spiritual development, we can, through compliance with the laws that govern, obtain divine healings to the fullest extent. Until then we should seek earnestly to intelligently exercise faith.

Missionary Businessman

A Series Based on the Biographical Notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Ten

AS THE END OF THE YEAR was nearing, Brother Waller was troubled because of the sickness of his wife in San Francisco. After receiving an unfavorable report in a message from his daughter Ruth, he sailed for San Francisco on December 24. He was invited to preach at the Sunday service following Christmas on board ship. He based his subject on the words of the angels in their song to the shepherds in the fields near Bethlehem: "On earth, peace; good will to men."

Brother Waller landed with his daughter Esther in San Francisco. His heart was sad, yet he was happy to meet and talk with his wife again. A few days after his arrival, he arranged for her to be taken home from the hospital. She was kindly cared for by her daughters, the doctor, and a nurse.

The year 1931 brought sadness to Brother Waller and his family. His beloved wife Annie, to whom he had been married almost forty-eight years, passed away on Tuesday morning, January 7. Of this event he said: "God's help enabled me to bear up and to continue active in my work and church duties. I had five daughters to comfort me."

On March 22, 1933, he was ordained by President F. M. Smith to the office of patriarch. Brother Waller was on a business trip to San Francisco at the time, and commented on the remarkable manner that his business visit to San Francisco fitted in with the time Brother Smith had arranged to be in San Francisco.

In 1936 Brother Waller attended the Centennial Celebration in Kirtland Temple. At one of the prayer services Patriarch Griffiths received by the Spirit a wonderful message in which Brother Waller was told not to give way to discouragements. He was spoken of as a chosen vessel and was promised that he should be privileged to reign with Christ and his holy people during the millennium.

At the end of March, 1937, Brother Waller resigned as manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, thus climaxing over fifty years of development of Honolulu enterprises. The Honolulu he knew upon his arrival from England as a young man lacked all modern conveniences except the telephone. He was the first to inaugurate commercial cold storage of island and imported foods and to start a fertilizer factory, using the by-product of bone meal from the meat company and converting it into fertilizer for the sugar plantations. He organized the Marconi Wireless Company, the first in its field, later absorbed by the Mutual Telephone Company. He organized the First National Bank of Hawaii, whose successor is the Bishop National Bank, which operates under its charter as a member of the national banking system. In partnership with James Campbell, James I. Dowsett, and Thomas Foster he organized the Metropolitan Meat Company in 1892. His civic responsibilities included being a member of the prison board from 1906 to 1910, a member of the board of health from 1911 to 1919, territorial jury commissioner for ten years, federal jury commissioner one year, and member of the board of harbor commissioners from 1934 to 1937.

The Honolulu Star-Bulletin had this to say about his retirement:

Few businessmen in Hawaii have served so long with one firm as Gilbert

J. Waller. When Mr. Waller retired a few days ago as vice-president and manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, he ended a connection with one business that began fifty-four years ago.

Resigning as the culmination of a successful business career, he was asked if he did not intend to "travel and take it easy, now that you have ample leisure." His reply was characteristic, "My church depends on me for a number of things here. I feel that it will now have first call on my services."

The reply was emblematic of his quiet conscientiousness, a trait that he carried into business, politics, and religious life.

He has retired—but not to rest.

IN NOVEMBER, 1938, Brother Waller sailed for San Francisco, leaving Elder Etzenhauser in charge of the Hawaiian District. He also resigned as bishop's agent, a position he had occupied for almost fifty years. Besides his pastoral and district duties he had served for a number of years as local church historian.

On the eve of his departure, a special meeting was held in his honor at the Makiki Branch (Hawaiian, or Main) in Honolulu. There were several hundred in attendance from the three Honolulu branches. Representing the loving respect of the members of Honolulu and Hilo, a beautiful silver cup was presented to Brother Waller. The inscription recognized his recent birthday as well as his missionary service: "Presented to Gilbert J. Waller, father, friend, and teacher, November 9, 1938, for his forty-eight years of faithful service to the Saints of the District of Hawaii."

When Brother Waller left the Hawaiian Mission, he longed for the appointment of a full-time missionary. He was made happy during the year 1939 to learn that the First Presidency had appointed Eder Velt.

TO A MAN as devoted to church work as Brother Waller had been, settling in San Francisco did not mean the end of activities. He continued to minister in the two San Francisco branches, preaching and conducting classes at the Berkeley church, across the Bay, when he was invited to do so. He also preached at Sacramento and other branches in the district which were eager to have his ministry. Besides this work in the branches he filled his days with visiting the sick, the shut-ins, and taking the gospel message into the homes of those who wished to hear.

At the Communion service on Sunday, October 1, 1944, Brother Waller gave the address. He mentioned several times during the afternoon the power of the Spirit which he had had then, saying he had never felt such a degree before.

On the following Saturday Brother Waller was suddenly taken ill and requested administration. Shortly afterwards a doctor called and pronounced his trouble double pneumonia. Through the excellent nursing care given him by two of his friends, Sister Forbes and Sister Gates, Brother Waller rallied from his sickness. However, he never regained sufficient strength to leave home. Daily he continued his habit of reading from the Three Books until he grew too weak to hold them. He passed away on January 26, 1945, his five daughters all being present.

The three Honolulu branches, Makiki, Kalihi, and Palama, held a joint memorial service at the Makiki Church on Sunday morning, February 11, 1945. The attendance of 290 included, besides members, Mr. Carter of the Hawaii Meat Company and other old friends. An enlarged picture of Brother Waller on a koa table in front was flanked on either side by white orchids.

At his death even the Honolulu newspapers showed that Brother Waller's way of life had not gone unnoticed. To his history was added this paragraph:

Austere in his manner of life, honest as the day is long, true as steel, he lived the tenets of Christian belief as few men have. His charities were unostentatious and countless. He preached temperance and practiced it. His friendships were true and lasting.

Brother John W. Rushton, who had known Gilbert J. Waller for many years, was chosen to give the funeral sermon. We quote a few paragraphs which befit the gracious character which was Brother Waller's.

In his presence meanness, vulgarity, and triviality found no welcome, and one sensed that mystic aura of guilelessness which seemed to make him immune to that which was unworthy. His benign aspect and his natural gentility attracted attention wherever he would go. In his business and social life as well as in his church life, honor, truth, and duty were his cardinal principles and the criterion by which he evaluated men and things.

It was his joy to help those who needed what he was able to give. Among the many who had responded to his teachings and had experienced his ministry in the Islands, he was "Dear Father Waller," and since being away from them many letters which he received showed the affection and trust of children for a beloved parent.

PLANS ARE NOW BEING MADE and contributions received for the erection of the Gilbert J. Waller Memorial Church. The 1946 General Conference appropriated $7,500 for the purchase of a site for this new chapel. At present, funds on hand amount to a little over $20,000. It is estimated that the building will cost between $35,000 and $45,000.

The Waller Memorial Church will be located in Honolulu, next to and in conjunction with the Makiki Church, which was built in 1929, while Brother Waller ministered in Hawaii. Additional room has already been provided through the purchase of the property adjoining the mauka [toward the mountain] side of the land upon which the Makiki Church now stands. The mission house has been moved to this new lot to give space for the project, which upon completion will become the central gathering place for the Hawaiian District at conferences and reunions, as well as being used for the regular Sunday preaching services of the Makiki District. It seems fitting that a life devoted to the upbuilding of God's kingdom in these isles of the sea should be honored in the Waller Memorial, which will serve more races than any other center in the church.

QUESTION:

Does our church recognize the Utah priesthood as having any divine authority? Undoubtedly some of them have lived good lives and have received blessings while acting in the line of their ordinations. Could this be evidence that with some of them the lineage and authority of the priesthood had continued?

Missouri

ANSWER:

We do not recall any instance wherein the Reorganized Church has acknowledged or accepted any priesthood authority springing from ordinations performed under the auspices of the factional organization set up in Utah. In the early days of the Reorganization, men were accepted from that and other factional groups, both as to baptism and ordination, when these ordinances dated from before the rejection and disorganization of the church in 1844. It was held that these groups "could neither confer nor take away the priesthood." (See General Conference Resolutions, No. 72.)

The rejection of the church, of which the Lord had warned prior to the martyrdom in 1844, is understood to have taken place at that time. It could not have occurred so long as the Lord saw proper to extend priesthood powers to the church and acknowledge its acts, hence rejection meant nothing less than the loss of priesthood power and the right to function. Under such circumstances all ordinations, official decisions, and actions by the leaders and their conferences were but dead works, without authority, and binding on no one.

However, rejection of the church did not cancel or destroy the priesthood rights of individuals who had been legally ordained, for the only grounds for such cancellation are transgression and nonrepentance, which are quite personal. Hence it is that individuals who in all sincerity followed Brigham Young westward, mistakenly giving him their allegiance yet keeping from personal sin of a grievous sort, retained their priesthood, and in their personal ministrations when performed within the provisions of the law, were acknowledged of God. It was quite possible that some sinned so grievously in the sight of God as to forfeit their priesthood rights.

The organization being under divine rejection could not legally function in ordering new ordinations, and were it to do so, individual elders, though retaining the authority of the priesthood, could not legally ordain, for the law of God provided that no ordination should be performed without the prior vote of the church. The vote of a rejected church would lack legality.

From this it will be seen that with the passing of the first generation from the Utah Church, the last vestige of lingering authority passed with it. Those of a later generation, regardless of any lineal rights they might have, could not receive their priesthood from a rejected or unapproved organization which was itself without the right of administration.

Priesthood emanates from Christ, and by his wise arrangement his church is made the repository, the guardian, and the administrator of that power, to hold and to use according to the law which he has given. Never has he permitted that priesthood to become the possession of any other organization, religious or otherwise, than his own established church, and always when his own church has turned from him and his law has the priesthood been withdrawn and the church left cold and dead.

QUESTION:

I would like to know if there is a legend concerning "the stone that the builders rejected" and the Temple. Colorado.

A. A. W.

ANSWER:

Jesus referred to this Scripture in Matthew 21: 42; Mark 12: 10, 11, and Luke 20: 17. It is also mentioned in Acts 4: 11; Ephesians 2: 20, and I Peter 2: 6, 7.

The basis of it in Scripture is: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner."—Psalm 118: 22.

The following is the discussion upon this passage in the Abingdon Bible Com- mentary: "The metaphor may have an historical background. There is a tradition of a time when, in the building of King Solomon's Temple, a stone was found without seeming purpose and was thrown away; later it was discovered that the chief cornerstone was lacking and the rejected stone fitted this most important place. Israel was rejected by her neighbors as a useless race, but they were found at last to possess the very elements upon which the structure of human society and salvation rested. So Jesus, despised and rejected of men, is found to be the chief cornerstone of human salvation."—Page 584. L. J. Lea.

The Use of Consecrated Olive Oil

(Note: The article which appears here was written by Elder E. A. Thomas and needs little explanation. Elder Thomas has submitted this in a good spirit, and we are glad to have his contribution.)

In the Herald for February 6, 1950, there appeared in "Question Time" the question of using consecrated olive oil in salads and cooking. The following is offered with no thought of argumentation, but only as an interesting sidelight on the use and purpose of consecrated olive oil.

The use of olive oil was a command of God through Moses and was for a dual purpose. Also there were different kinds of olive oil.

- A. Oil for light—Exodus 25: 6; 27: 20.
- B. Oil mixed with spices for anointing purposes—Exodus 30: 24, 25; 35: 28.
- C. Oil for anointing and sanctifying persons and things of the tabernacle—Exodus 29: 5-7, 21; 28: 41; 40: 9-16.
- D. Anointing oil not to be used for any ordinary purpose—Exodus 30: 31-33.

It is but reasonable for us to assume that the practice of using anointing oil continued until the advent of Christ. Then all teachings and practices of the Old Testament times ended. Christ said, ". . . I am come not to destroy the law, but to fulfill."—Matthew 5: 19.

Christ and the apostles after him taught the use of oil for the purpose of anointing, especially in cases of sickness (Mark 6: 14; James 5: 14). From this stems our use of olive oil.

The method used in the church today does not call for oil mixed with spices or perfumes, but the consecration is by prayer.

When so consecrated by prayer for a particular use, we should not use it for any ordinary purpose.

Make Me Believe - Part IV

By RUBY TINKHAM

THE SOFT STRAINS of violin music filled the late summer evening with enchanting magic. Mike gave the glider a little shove with one foot and hummed softly under his breath.

Mary came out on the porch. She sat down beside him, sighing contentedly. "He plays beautifully, doesn't he, darling? Sort of does something to you inside. I told Carrie today that I never had really loved violin music until Ronald came."

Mike laid his arm across her shoulders and whispered softly, "Listen, he's playing our piece." Tenderly each golden note trembled in the air between them as "Libestraum" came weaving its magic spell of remembrance.

He squeezed her shoulder and said warmly, "It's marvelous that any boy eleven years old can play like that. How are things going over there—any better?"

Mary shook her head sadly. "I feel so sorry for Carrie. You know when Dr. Brown told them that Ronald was coming, Herb finally agreed that he could stay with them until Dr. Brown found him a good home with someone else. Carrie was sure that Herb would give in and let Ronald stay, but she says he's just as bitter as ever. He isn't actually mean to the boy—he just tolerates him, that's all, and it's breaking Carrie's heart."

Mike straightened up. "I wonder why Herb doesn't like him—he's a nice kid. A trifle quiet and shy and a little underweight, but Carrie will soon fix that with her cooking."

Mary sighed. "Carrie says Herb's just stubborn. He doesn't want any child around since Letty was killed. Seems such a shame. I thought after Ronald came that everything would turn out all right, but he's been here three months now—and well, Carrie said the other night she had cabbage for supper and Ronald looked a little pale. She asked what was the matter and he said, 'Nothing, Aunt Carrie, it's just the cabbage, we had so much of it at home, but I'll take some anyway. Grandfather said I should always eat some to remind me of how fortunate I am to have a good home in America.' She said Herb jumped up from the table angrily and grabbed the bowl and set it outside. He stamped back in and said harshly, 'Nobody eats anything in this house they don't like. Besides you haven't found a good home in America yet.' You know what that does to Carrie. She broke right down and cried."

Mike stretched his long legs and got up. "I think I'll walk over and have a little talk with Herb. He's out there digging at something."

Mary reached out and caught his arm. "Please, Mike, don't say anything—"

He grinned good-naturedly. "Don't worry, honey, I'm not going to say anything. I'm just as anxious as you are to have Ronald stay."

MIKE WHISTLED the gay lilting notes of the "Blue Danube" as he crossed the yard. Herb was busy transplanting, and tiny beads of sweat stood out on his forehead and upper lip.

"Hi, Herb. You still working?"

Herb kept his head down. "Hello, Mike, seems like a man's always got something to be done." He jerked his head towards the house. "Couldn't get rest anyway with all that screeching and scraping going on."

Mike sat down on the sidewalk that circled the house and pulled his knees up under his chin. "Sounds pretty good to me, Herb. Mary and I listen every evening. Not many boys would practice like that every night."

Herb jabbed the spading fork into the ground viciously. "Practicing, practicing, that's all I hear around here. A million orphans in the world, and I have to get one that wants to saw on a fiddle all the time. Other boys play ball and get dirty and slam doors and even cuss once in a while, but not him; he has to play fancy pieces on that sound box of his and Carrie, she sits there with that silly look on her face as if he was an angel sprouting wings."

He jerked the bulbs out of the ground and threw them into a basket at his side. "I tell you, Mike, sometimes I don't think I can stand it. I asked him last week if he would like to have a bicycle to ride to school like the other kids and do you know what he said? He said, 'No, thank you, Uncle Herbert, I really enjoy walking to school.' What kind of a boy is that?"

Mike grunted sympathetically. "I know, but that isn't what he told my boys. He said that it wasn't right for you to buy him a bicycle when he wouldn't be staying here very long."

Herb straightened up and wiped the sweat from his perspiring face. He squinted at Mike in the gathering twilight and then cocked his head towards the house. "I tell you, it ain't right for a boy to be always practicing like that. He ought to be doing other things."

Mike fell back on his arms and asked quietly, "How would you like to be a mechanic like Chuck?"

His friend turned in surprise. "You know better than that. I can't even change a tire on my own car."

Mike continued: "O. K., how would you like to sit around in an office all day and juggle figures like me then?"

Herb remained stock still. "What you getting at? You know I ain't got no education like you. I can't do much more than write my own name. Besides, I got to feel the sun on my back and the dirt in my hands."

Mike leaned forward earnestly. "Look, Ronald is smart just like you. He knows he has to have the feel of a violin under his chin and the sound of music in his ears. He knows it already. It's a smart boy who knows where his place is in the world when he's only eleven. It takes some of us all our lives to find out that much."

Herb returned to his task thoughtfully and spoke over his shoulder. "Carrie thinks that way, too. She thinks we ought to send him up town to a special teacher, giving him lessons that cost five dollars apiece." His voice rose raggedly. "That's too much—five dollars for one little music lesson. I can't afford it!"

Mike nodded his head in assent. "I know that is a lot of money. But the teacher at school says Ronald is already way beyond her." And then musingly, "You know, Mary says that in five more years we will all be paying more than that just to get a seat to hear Ronald play—and she's probably right. Mary always knows that kind of things."

Herb worked silently with his back still turned resentfully towards his visitor. Mike got up leisurely and stood with his hands in his pockets. "Say, did you ever let Ronald help you with the flowers? The boys say he knows all their Latin names and everything."

Herb filled the hole with loose dirt and pressed it down determinedly with his foot. He spoke without turning. "No, and I ain't going to. He keeps hanging around, but I don't need no help from nobody. I ain't having my flowers broke off by some fool kid messing around."

Mike felt the anger rise in his throat and he clenched the jingling keys in his pocket, holding on tight, waiting for it to subside. Mary would never forgive him if he said the wrong thing now. He turned to go and then he paused uncertainly. "Say, did you ever look out there behind your garage? Ronald was digging out there the other day. Mary asked what he was doing, and he said he found some old tulip bulbs you had thrown away and he was planting them for Carrie so she would have something to remember him by when he left."

Herb snorted. "Them old bulbs won't bloom. They're no good. He's just wasting his time."

Mike returned a step or two and his voice was firmer. "It won't really make any difference whether they bloom or not. If they do, Carrie will think they are the most beautiful tulips in the whole world, and if they don't, well—Carrie will hate every other tulip in this yard." With that Mike turned on his heel and left, with Herb staring after him.

MARY WAS WAITING for him on the porch. She searched his face hopefully, but he spread his hands and shook his head despairingly. They sat quietly, each understanding the other perfectly.

Finally Mary broke the silence. "It's no use, is it? Herb just doesn't want the boy around. Poor Carrie, it will just about kill her when Ronald leaves. I wish there was something we could do. Dr. Brown has planned a concert at the church Sunday night for Ronald. Carrie was so enthusiastic about it. She said Ronald asked Herb if he would come and hear him play and Herb about bit his head off. He said, 'Why would I want to go to church to hear you play? I have to listen to you all the time at home.' I guess it spoiled the whole thing for both of them."

Mike found her hand in the soft darkness. "Don't worry, honey; old Herb's not such a bad guy. We'll just have to give him time. He just can't see that Ronald isn't asking to take Letty's place. I really think he likes the kid, but he's too stubborn to admit it. I'll bet if someone else would jump on Ronald, he'd be the first to defend him."

Suddenly they both sat up straight and looked at each other in surprised wonder, and then they burst out laughing.

"Do you think it would work?"

Mike chuckled under his breath and slipped his arm around her. "Honey, we sure can try. I'll see Dr. Brown tomorrow. He can help us if anybody can. Old Herb hasn't really got a chance against us three."

MIKE WAS late getting home from the office next day, and Mary knew by the look on his face that he and Dr. Brown had had a very profitable session.

She wanted to ask him a hundred questions but supper came first, and the boys were as talkative as a pair of monkeys, so she waited as patiently as she could.

After supper she trailed him to the porch where he was pretending to read the paper. "Mike Ferrel, if you don't tell me what's going on, I'm going to burst with curiosity."

He grinned and laid the paper down with exaggerated neatness. Then he scanned the yard to see if Herb was outside yet. Herb was there all right, working beside the front porch, moving some shrubs.

Mike got up and pushed Mary gently into the glider. "Don't move," he said, "you are about to see what a wonderful actor your husband is. More than that, keep your fingers crossed and say a little prayer, because if this works Ronald is here to stay." And before she could ask any questions her husband was swinging across the yard. She held her breath and waited.

Mike didn't waste any time. He dropped down on the porch steps and spoke casually. "Say, I was talking to Dr. Brown today, and he said he's found a good home for Ronald. Seems as though Mose Hart wants him. You know that big farm out on Route 42?"

Herb turned slowly and looked at Mike speculatively. "Why, he's already got six kids in that little house of his. What would he do with any more?"

Mike remained unperturbed. "Oh, he says there's always plenty of room for one more. He's got a pretty big place there. Says he needs another boy—you know how it is, chores and things."

Herb dropped his mattock and came over to the steps. "Look, Doc Brown must be crazy. He knows Ronald can't do chores and farm work. Why he'll ruin his hands and when would that big lout ever give him time to practice his music? The nearest thing to music he ever heard was the sound of a calf bawling for its mother."

Mike shrugged his shoulders and acted unconcerned. "Well, music isn't everything. A boy has to learn other things, too. Anyway, Dr. Brown explained to Mose about Ronald's playing the violin, and he said that was 'ok' with him. Said they liked a little hoedown once in a while, and if Ronald was good enough, he could play Saturday nights for the barn dance over to Brewster."

The air was suddenly electrified with animosity. Mike kept his eyes off Herb's face, for he knew what was happening without looking up. He took a deep breath and made one last plunge. "You know how it is, a big family will be good for Ronald. Maybe he'll learn to hold his own. And he won't miss his music much if he's busy milking cows and driving a tractor—plenty to keep a boy busy on a farm that size. You don't need to worry about food either. Mose always raises his own meat and chickens, and there's plenty of potatoes and cabbage!"

That did it! Herb was trembling all over. He shook his fist in Mike's face. "You go back and tell Doc Brown that Ronald ain't going on Mose Hart's farm nor any other farm. He's not milking cows nor plowing for anybody." His voice rose hoarsely, "And he ain't playing no hoedowns at no barn dances either. A little kid like that trying to fight his battles against six other brats. You know what they'd do? They'd make him eat cabbage every day! I won't have it, Mike. I won't stand for it. Ronald's got a home. He can stay here with us, and I'm going to tell Doc so. I'm going to tell him myself right now!" And he stomped into the house through the front door without even wiping the dirt off his feet.

Mike nearly shouted he was so happy. He hoped Mary had heard every word. He knew Carrie had, for he had seen tears of gratitude in her eyes.

He strolled back across the yard and thanked God that it had worked. Boy, Dr. Brown sure knew human nature.

SUNDAY BROUGHT ONE of those especially beautiful evenings that summer reserves for her elect. Mike and Mary and the boys were ready to leave for church when suddenly Mary called excitedly from the window, "Mike, come here quick!"

He went over to her, and she nodded her head across the way. There was Carrie on the front porch. She had on her good black dress with the white lace collar and her best straw hat with the pink roses in front. Ronald had on a new suit and was carrying his violin. They were exchanging tremulous smiles and watching the front door expectantly. And then it happened! Out came Herb. He had on his blue serge suit, a white shirt, and a tie. He looked at each of them uncertainly, and then twisted at his tie uncomfortably. Carrie slipped her hand under his arm, and her face was radiant. Ronald ran ahead and held the car door open proudly. Then they were off—just like any family.

Mary looked up at Mike, and the tears were very close. "He's going! Herb's going to church to hear Ronald play. Oh, I'm so glad."

Mike smiled tenderly, and then he grabbed his hat. "Come on, honey, let's get going. I want to be at the church to welcome old Herb when he comes in."

The Shepherd's Interpretation of the Twenty-third Psalm

By JAMES K. WALLACE

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was originally published in the "National Wool Grower" of December, 1930. It has been reprinted by them and copied by other magazines. We are reprinting it by permission of the editor, Irene Young, of the "National Wool Grower."

Mr. Wallace explains that he met this shepherd, Fernando D'Alfonso, on the Nevada desert. Mr. Alfonso immigrated from northern Spain fifty years ago, and before his death was rated as one of the best sheepherders in the state. As the author sat with him one night under the starry skies, he watched his care of the sheep and how he made his bed for the night. Before he curled up in his blankets to go to sleep, he suddenly began a dissertation in Greek or Basque. Mr. Wallace asked him what he had said, and he began a dreamy meditation in English of the Twenty-third Psalm. His interpretation is both interesting and unique in that he points out that this Psalm is an interpretation of the points of view of the sheep rather than the shepherd. He felt quite sure that David knew the sheep of the Holy Land and was able to interpret their feelings. Our ministry and church school teachers will be interested in this interpretation.—C.B.H.

The Lord Is My Shepherd; I Shall Not Want.

"Sheep instinctively know," said D'Alfonso, "that ere they have been folded for the night the shepherd has planned out their grazing trip for the morrow. It may be he will take them back over the same range; it may be he will go to a new grazing ground. They do not worry as his guidance has been good in the past, and they have faith in the future, knowing he has their well-being in view."

He Maketh Me to Lie Down in Green Pastures.

"Sheep graze from around three-thirty o'clock in the morning until about ten o'clock. Then they want to lie down for three or four hours and rest," said D'Alfonso. "When they are contentedly chewing their cud, the shepherd knows they are putting on fat. Consequently the good shepherd starts his flock out in the early hours on the rougher herbage, moving through the morning onto the richer, sweeter grasses, and finally coming with the band to a shady place for its forenoon rest into the best grazing of the day. Sheep, while resting in such happy surroundings, not only have had the benefit of the good late eating but have the atmosphere on the fine green pastures around them, giving the natural incentive towards contentment and growth."

He Leadeth Me Beside the Still Waters.

"Every sheepman knows," said the Basque, "that sheep will not drink gurgling water. There are many small springs high in the hills of the Holy Land whose waters run down to the valleys only to evaporate in the desert sun. Although the sheep greatly need the water, they will not drink from the tiny fast-flowing streams until the shepherd has found a place where rocks or erosion have made a little pool or else has fashioned out with his own hands a pocket sufficient to hold at least a bucketful."

He Restoreth My Soul; He Guideth Me in the Paths of Righteousness for His Name's Sake.

"Holy Land sheep are led rather than driven in their wanderings in search of browse. They exceed in herding instinct the Spanish Merino or the French Rambouillet," according to D'Alfonso. "Each one takes its place in the grazing line in the morning and keeps the same position throughout the day. Once, however, during the day, each sheep leaves its place and goes to the shepherd. The sheep approaches with expectant eye and mild little "baa." Whereupon the shepherd stretches out his hand and the sheep runs to him. He rubs its nose and ears, scratches its chin, whispers love words into its ears, and fondles it affectionately. The sheep, in the meantime, rubs against his leg or, if he is sitting down, nibbles at the shepherd's ear and rubs its cheek against his face. After a few minutes of this communion with the master, the sheep returns to its place in the feeding line refreshed and made content by this personal contact."

Yea; Though I Walk Through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, I Will Fear No Evil; for Thou Art With Me.

"There is an actual Valley of the Shadow of Death in Palestine and every shepherd from Spain to Dalmatia knows of it. It is south of the Jericho road leading from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea and is a very narrow defile through a mountain range. It is necessary to go through this valley to get from the old-time feeding grounds of David and his tribesmen to those of Abraham and his descendants. Its side walls are over fifteen hundred feet high in places, and it is about four and one-half miles long, yet is only ten to twelve feet wide at the bottom. The grade of the valley slopes from about twenty-seven hundred feet above sea level at one end down to nearly four hundred feet below sea level at the other. The valley is made dangerous due to its floor being badly eroded by waters from cloudbursts, so that actual footing on solid rock is so narrow that in many places a sheep cannot turn around. Mules have not been able to make the trip for centuries, but sheep and goat herders from earliest Old Testament days have maintained a passage for their stock. Gullies often seven and eight feet deep have been washed in many places. It is an unwritten law of the shepherds that flocks must go up the valley in the morning hours and down towards the eventide, else there would be endless confusion should flocks meet in the defile."

Thy Rod and Thy Staff They Comfort Me.

"About half way through the valley, the walk crosses from one side to the other at a place where the two- and one-half foot wide path is cut in two by an eight-foot gully. One section of the walk is about eighteen inches higher than the other, so in their journeying down the valley, the sheep have to jump upward and across, while on the opposite trip they jump downward. The shepherd stands at this break and urges, coaxes, pets, encourages, and sometimes forces the sheep to make the leap. As a result of slippery walkways, poor footing or tiredness, sheep occasionally miss the jump and land in the gully. The shepherd's rod is immediately brought into play. The old style crook is encircled around a large sheep's neck or a small sheep's chest, and it is lifted to safety. If the more modern narrow crook is used, the sheep is caught just above the hoofs and lifted up to the walk. Many wild dogs lurk in the shadows of the valley looking for prey, and when they are encountered, the shepherd's staff comes into active use. After a band has entered the defile, the lead sheep may come onto a dog. Unable to retreat, the leaders "baa" a warning and upon hearing this, the shepherd, skilled in throwing the staff, hurls it at the dog, often one hundred fifty feet away. In all but rare instances, he succeeds in knocking the dog down into the washed-out gully where it is easily killed. Climatic and grazing conditions make it necessary for the sheep to be moved through the valley of the Shadow of Death for seasonal feeding each year, so they have learned to fear no evil, for their master is there to aid and protect them."

Thou Preparest a Table Before Me in the Presence of Mine Enemies

"This statement seems to convey a boastful, rather pagan thought of gloating over the hunger of others while those in the favor of Jehovah feasted. However, David's meaning is a simple one," said D'Alfonso, "when conditions on the Holy Land sheep ranges are known. Poisonous plants abound which are fatal to grazing animals. The most noxious is a species of whorled milkweed. It sinks its roots deep down in the rocky soils and its eradication during the centuries has been impossible. Each spring the shepherd must be constantly on guard as the plant is on some of the best feeding ground. When found, the shepherd takes his awkward old mattock and goes on ahead of the flock grubbing out every stock and root he can see. As he digs out the stocks, he lays them up on little stone pyres, some of which were built by shepherds in Old Testament days, and by morrow they are dry enough to burn. In the meantime, the field being free from the poisonous plants, the sheep are led into the newly prepared pasture and, in the presence of their deadly plant enemies, they eat in peace."

Thou Anointest My Head With Oil; My Cup Runneth Over.

"This phrase has been interpreted many times as symbolic of fullness of reward for well-doing. Literally, however, it is the statement of a daily task of a professional shepherd in the most time-honored calling. At every sheepfold there is found a big earthen bowl of olive oil and a large stone jar of water. As the sheep come in for the night, they are led along the side of the wall to the gate in one end. The shepherd lays aside his woolen robe and his staff, but rests his rod across the top of the gateway just higher than the backs of the sheep. As each passes him in single file he quickly examines it for briars in the ears, snags in the cheek or weeping of the eyes from dust or scratches. When such conditions are found, he drops the rod across the sheep's back, and it steps out of line and waits until all the sheep have been examined. Out of his flock of two hundred fifty ewes, the shepherd may find one or a dozen needing attention," said D'Alfonso. "Each sheep's laceration is carefully cleaned. Then the shepherd dips his hand into the bowl of olive oil and anoints the injury gently but thoroughly and is never sparing of the oil. Along with the treatment the shepherd's 'love words' are poured into the sheep's ears in sympathy. Then the cup is dipped into the large jar of water, kept cool by evaporation in the unglazed pottery, and is brought out—never half full but always overflowing. The sheep will sink its nose down into the water clear to the eyes, if fevered, and drink until fully refreshed. Then it is allowed to enter the sheepfold and the next injured sheep is treated.

"When all the sheep are at rest, the shepherd places his rod in the corner, lays his staff on the ground within reach in case it is needed for protection of the flock during the night, wraps himself in his heavy woolen robe, and lies down across the gateway facing the sheep, for his night's repose.

"So," said D'Alfonso, "after all this care and protection can a sheep be blamed for soliloquizing in the twilight—as translated into words by David?" Surely Goodness and Mercy Shall Follow Me All the Days of My Life; and I Shall Dwell in the House of the Lord Forever.

Pleasing Flower Combinations

By BLANCHE NEAL SHIPLEY

IT TAKES ACTUAL EXPERIENCE, supplemented with pencil and paper and good hard work, to produce the maximum of beauty in flowers and shrubs. Many times we lose the full value of an otherwise lovely flower by having it planted in the wrong place or with the wrong companion plants.

Last summer while visiting my sister Mrs. Gertrude Hinderks in Blairsburg, Iowa, I had a most interesting experience. We drove to the beautiful farm home of Mr. and Mrs. George Fidderlic, about two miles east of Blairsburg. Everything, including the barn lot, was meticulously kept. Even the big flock of White Leghorns looked well groomed! After a hearty welcome from Mrs. Fidderlic, I asked permission to just look and look, sort of hoping I could absorb some of the beauty in such a way that I could carry it home with me and incorporate it into my plantings.

All the hedges were trimmed, except the Grootendorst roses, and they grow naturally, blooming almost continuously all summer. Contrasts were given by use of the purple plum, and Tamarix. At the front of the house, various evergreens were growing luxuriantly. On either side of the back step were beds of pink petunias (Celeste, I think) and blue ageratums; the color combination was striking. Petunias of various colors adorned a huge rock pile in the barnyard. A friendly white dog seemed to be keeping watch over the whole peaceful scene. This home was, indeed, a living example of loving, continuous care.

When I asked, "Who keeps the lawn so beautifully clipped?" Mrs. Fidderlic locked her arm into that of the teen-age son George, and gave him a knowing look. He grinned and thumbed his suspenders.

"And the spraying?" I asked again, "how can you get it all done?"

"Oh, we don't spray," was the answer. "We aren't bothered by pests here."

Imagine that, will you? Here at home in Worth County, Missouri, the regular sprayings and dustings are the only way of assuring any vegetables, flowers, or shrubs of good quality and beauty. If I slacken for a couple of weeks, spiders eat holes in the dainty rosebuds and worms devour the cabbage. It is a continual fight.

One thing that made the Fidderlic shrubs so pleasing to the eye—besides their healthy, lush growth—was their trim appearance in leaf and limb, and the cultivated black soil at their roots. Hoeing is not only good for the plant, but adds remarkably to the general beauty of the picture. Mrs. Fidderlic uses chicken manure for fertilizer, and waters the flower garden with a hose during dry weather.

NOW BACK TO COLOR COMBINATIONS. The rosy pink petunias and blue ageratum are well-worth remembering. Most anyone could have such a bed of flowers, and with proper care they would give lovely blooms all summer and fall.

Here at home one of our most satisfactory combinations is on the south side of the house, where old-fashioned pink roses and blue anchusa bloom together. Our anchusa seeds itself freely, so we always have abundant plants.

In the flower garden, we especially like the color effect of yellow coreopsis and the various shades of pink annual poppy, with a few blue larkspur, all blooming at once.

Red tulips in front of white Spirea Van Houttei make a spectacular picture, yet one very simple to arrange. Red and yellow tulips with the early blue-purple iris are beautiful too.

Pure white Regal lilies in front of a graceful green spirea bush is most satisfying. Last year we had twenty-seven huge lilies blooming in our clump. They could be seen easily by the passers-by, and received many compliments. Without the green background they would have gone unseen except by the few who deliberately took time to look them up. This year I am eager to see how my rubrum lilies look in a similar setting.

Red Russian lilies are such a brilliant orange that one must be very careful where to plant them. I find them beautiful with blue larkspur, using the feathery green of asparagus for a background.

LAST SPRING when we came home from the hospital with our baby son, I thought our home was beautiful indeed. Not that it is so fine in terms of dollars and cents. It isn't. But surely on that day, when my heart was fairly bursting with pride and joy, Mother Nature was also doing her utmost to make it a memorable occasion with flower beauty. Tulips of all colors, mid purple iris and white spirea, greeted us, and I exclaimed, "Oh, Kelton, aren't they beautiful? Did you ever see the grass greener?" But my real surprise came when I looked from the bedroom window where I was resting a few moments later. There I could see the pink creeping phlox literally covered with blooms, and the wild Sweet William (oh, how I had hoped it would grow and bloom, for the little girls and I had dug it up in the timber and planted it) and columbine harmoniously blended in a profusion of color.

So it is that I recommend to my friends a study of the old maxim, "Haste makes waste," as it regards flowers. Take time to plant carefully and wisely, and let your knowledge grow year by year as you experiment. Flowers, like children, must have tender care, and if you give it to them, under normal growing conditions, they will, like children, enrich your lives and bring peace to your souls.

I'm Glad I Can Remember

COMING HOME from the hospital in an open jeep with the strange awesome feel of our baby in my arms. The months of waiting were over. The last few anxious days were past. The three of us were alone together for the first time. It was raining, and we didn't talk much, just snuggled—together. Later a friend said how much he would have liked to have brought us home in his luxurious new car. But I didn't want that. All I wanted was our old jeep and the three of us.

A fat little fellow in white woolies, squatting hands on knees on the garden path solemnly watching scurrying ants.

A little red armchair dragged all over the house and yard, and how Small One hot and tired would plump down sideways—one sturdy leg flung over the arm—a favorite position to this day.

When a conscience began to prick. Struggling out of a high chair, bib tied in big rabbit-ear bows. Small One announced, "I think I'm going to be naughty." And off he strode—blue eyes rebellious, obstinate little back belligerent—to his self-imposed "solitary" in the bathroom.

The mixture of awe and confidence in a little face breaking into a new world—his first day at kindergarten. I couldn't quite see the sidewalks on the lonely way home.

Some weeks later trudging home together through the snow: Eager feet flying ahead—mischievous giggling as snowballs caught me unprepared—a happy, laughing voice shouting, "Send 'em harder, Mom. I can take 'em!"

A small Wolf Cub off to his first camp. The full regalia—it was much more than a uniform, for it included various and sundry pieces of equipment: cup, knife, whistle, and ax disposed about his person; and on his back, a huge pack, almost as big as himself. To my protests, No-Longer-Small-One answered, "Gee, Mom, all the fellows have this much—and look, I've got Akela as well!" Sure enough there was Akela, pride and joy of the whole pack, the beautifully carved Sitting Wolf—his responsibility in addition to the already heavy load. For a minute I hesitated, then I remembered a merry voice calling out, "Send 'em hard, Mom, I can take 'em!"

An eight-year-old standing beside his grandfather on the brink of a font. Dear friends and relatives gathered round to welcome a new member and to start him joyously on The Way. A sopping wet head, but a priceless grin as he came up from the water.

A summer morning in a beautiful reunion prayer meeting: A minister knowing he had a message for the people of the Lord but hesitant about delivering it: God moved upon the heart of a young lad to start singing, "Stand up! Stand up for Jesus." And the minister rising to deliver a message unusually comforting, inspiring, challenging, from the Lord God to his people.

A Sunday afternoon service in an overseas mission. A special service with a sixteen-year-old sitting quietly and seriously facing the congregation. The voice of the minister, deep, controlled, but overflowing with love, as he said, "My son, by the will of God, and the consent of these people, I ordain you a minister in the Church of Jesus Christ"

I'm glad that I remember priceless pictures like these.

Golden Wedding Anniversary Present

We celebrated our golden wedding anniversary on March 15, and for a gift our children made it possible for us to attend General Conference. We were disappointed that we didn't arrive in time for the Communion service, but the other meetings were a wonderful experience for us. We particularly enjoyed the dedication service at which the beautiful hymn, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," was sung. Although I have been a member of the church for fifty-six years, this is the first time I have been able to attend. It was indeed a golden privilege. J. J. RUSNELL

Serve Now

Shortly after returning from the recent General Conference, I received a vision and understanding of death. This is something I have pondered all my life. I saw that death is a condition in which we find our spiritual body severed from our physical body. We have the same desires to do good, but we no longer have a physical body with which to go about making recompense for our transgressions. In order to repent we must forsake our evil ways and make amends as best we can.

In vision I saw myself as a spiritual body desiring to do good, but my chances to serve were greatly limited because I had no physical body. To those who have lived good lives, death is sweet, since there is no remorse for wrongdoing or worthy deeds left undone. For those who do not repent, there will be great bitterness of soul because they will see clearly the good they refused to do.

Realizing that time is short, let us all labor with our hearts, might, minds, and strength for the cause of the kingdom.

Answer to Prayer

I add my testimony to the many fine ones which have already appeared in the Herald, with the hope that it will prove helpful to others. Although I was reared in the Methodist Church, I became dissatisfied with it because it did not provide for the signs mentioned in Mark 16 which should "follow them that believe" or for the anointing with oil and praying for the sick mentioned in the fifth chapter of James. I was living in central Illinois when the desire to serve the Lord came to me. One evening in June, 1899, I prayed, "Father, is there a work for me to do?" and a voice answered, "Yes, in the West." With it came a light brighter than the sun.

On October 8, 1901, my wife and I left Jacksonville in a covered wagon. After four months we arrived at Post Oak, Missouri, where we first heard of the Restored Gospel. On May 20, 1902, we were baptized.

An attack of flu in the winter of 1932 left me with a heart ailment so serious that one doctor told me there wasn't any cure for me. In 1934 my wife and I went to California to care for three of our grandchildren whose mother had died. While there I was administered to by Evangelist W. H. Dawson and Bishop Edwin C. Burdick. Several months later my health had improved so that I was able to take a job as watchman with a lumber company. I know that through faith and God's servants I was healed.

In the winter of 1937 our granddaughter became ill. Since most of the people in the lumber camp, including the camp doctor, had left for the winter, we had no one to call on for help. Eight feet of snow covered the ground, and the only means of travel was by skis or snow shoes. Feeling sure that the child had pneumonia, I administered to her, asking for divine help. About an hour later she said, "Gramie, I'm hungry." By the next day she was playing. God in his great love came to our aid and healed her.

My prayer is that the Lord will bless all the Saints.

Notice to Chicago Members

I shall appreciate having members of the priesthood and Saints living in Chicago call on my daughter and her husband, the James K. Laings, who live at 6710 Sheridan Road, Chicago. They were married recently and are strangers in Chicago. My daughter works in the afternoon and evenings, so the best time to contact her would be around ten or eleven o'clock in the morning. Her husband is not a member of the church, but I believe he is a good prospect.

Correction

In the weekly Herald of April 17, page 364, column 2, paragraph one, the name of Apostle Arthur A. Oakman was unintentionally omitted as one of those officiating at the ordination of President Wallace Smith.

Briefs

GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND.—On February 19 a dedication service for the church building was held. District President Frank Fry was in charge of the service. Apostle D. B. Jensen gave the dedicatory sermon. Bishop A. T. Trapp received the presentation of the deeds and the key for the church. A special number on the program was a solo, "Bless This House," by Shirley Sykes.

Part of the program was the reading of this historical data of the property being dedicated:

On or about the first day of May, 1940, the property was purchased by the branch for use by them as a place of religious worship. The property comprises the dwelling house as well as the building in the rear wherein we hold services. The owner, Mr. W. J. Bell, offered the property to us for 650 pounds which was afterwards reduced to 640 pounds.

The branch at that time had accumulated funds for building to the amount of about eighty-two pounds, a fund which had its foundation and beginning in a modest but singularly important amount donated by our late Sister Harris. At a special meeting held at which Apostle Oakman expressed in favorable terms in respect to this project, a further sum of about twenty pounds was then added to our building fund; in addition, Apostle Oakman donated ten pounds as a personal gift.

The branch by 1942 had reduced the indebtedness considerably by having received a gift of fifty pounds from one of its members. Brother J. H. Coggan of Nuneaton loaned 235 pounds.

From then until September, 1949, through consistent effort in which the women's department in their five-year plan played a great part, the branch reached its objective. Each member, according to his capacity, has gladly made a valuable contribution and is justly proud of this achievement.

The women's department under the direction of Martha Forbes have been very active on their project to increase the organ fund.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—April 23 to 30 was designated as Blue Bird—Oriole Week. On the first Sunday of the week the girls and leaders, in uniforms, attended the morning services in their home congregations. These services centered around the value of girls' work in the church. Awards services in the various congregations were held either on the first Sunday evening or on the following Sunday evening. Leaders, as well as girls, received awards.

During the week many of the store windows featured handcraft and requirement displays by the girls. On Tuesday evening of the week, the girls and their leaders were honored by the congregations by social programs in the churches. Wednesday evening the girls and their leaders in uniform attended the prayer meetings.

On Thursday the girls wore their uniforms to school. Friday evening was "Fun Night." This was held in the gym of the Auditorium and was sponsored by the Daughters of Zion, with Mrs. Frances Benner, president, in charge. Mrs. Ruth Draper was mistress of ceremonies. Mrs. Arlene Cackler gave two humorous readings, and Don Lents, chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium, sang a solo. Three movie reels of the girls were shown by Mrs. Pearl Wilcox. Between the reels of movies, the girls sang songs.

On the last Sunday of the week the girls presented the programs at Junior Church.

NORTHEAST NEBRASKA DISTRICT.—Most of the branches and groups in the district have been giving considerable emphasis recently to missionary endeavor, and as a result, several have been baptized and many others have become intensely interested in the church.

Missionary G. Wayne Smith recently spent two weeks in Walthill, Nebraska, holding cottage meetings and preaching. At the conclusion of these meetings, four persons were baptized. A special Easter service was later conducted by Pastor L. W. Hunt, and eight were baptized that day and four children were blessed.

Following the series in Walthill, Brother Smith went to Decatur where he held a similar series of services, at the conclusion of which six persons joined the church through baptism.

The Fremont, Nebraska, group under the leadership of its newly-ordained leader, Elder R. E. Gould, has also produced results. Five people were baptized Easter Sunday.

Because General Conference was in session the week prior to Easter, the pre-Easter services in Omaha were held from March 26 to 31. Speakers for these services were Elder V. D. Ruch, pastor of Council Bluffs; Elder Clifford Cole, president of Northwest Iowa District; Elder C. F. Putnam, Council Bluffs; and Elder Charles D. Neff, pastor of Omaha. The Easter film, "King of Kings," was presented Wednesday evening. As a result of this series and other missionary endeavor, two were baptized in Omaha on April 16. Another baptismal service was held in Omaha, April 23, at which time two young men were baptized.—Reported by C. B. CONSTANCE.

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS.—Dr. Roy Chevillie visited the branch during the week end of April 22 and 23. He preached at the 11:00 service at the church.

He delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Bald Knob high school at the high school auditorium on Sunday evening. He used for his theme, "Liberty." His talk was greatly appreciated by those attending the services.—Reported by MRS. DALE EDWARDS.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Audiences as high as 280 and never under 200 turned out at the St. Louis Branch to hear Roy Weldon of Warrensburg, Missouri, deliver his series of six illustrated lectures on the Book of Mormon, April 23-28.

Based on Brother Weldon's extensive travels in Central and South America, the lectures presented archaeological findings in support of Book of Mormon teachings. Subjects were: "Christ in Ancient America," "A Sacred Book in Ancient America," "America—Joseph's Land," "The Great Upheaval in America," "Fine Workmanship of Ancient Americans," "The Book of Mormon Proves Joseph Smith a Prophet."—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Ordination and confirmation services were held at the morning services of April 9. Brother Cecil Williams was ordained a priest in the Aaronic priesthood, and Glen Cattrill was confirmed a member in the church. A special song for the ordination service was sung by two Zion's Leaguers, Ruth and Earl Smith. For the confirmation service Sister Eva Black sang "Behold Thy Sons and Daughters." Immediately following this service, the three small daughters of Brother and Sister Cottrill were blessed. Members of the priesthood officiating in these services were Pastor Clyde S. Rice and Elders Wayne Wilson and Harry B. Smith.

On April 15 and 16 Brother Samuel Zonkers and Brother Otto Melcher, their wives and children, visited the branch. Both men are members of the district presidency. The other member of the district presidency, Brother Wilson, resides in Parkersburg and was also present.

On the evening of April 15 a recreation and get-acquainted meeting was held in the church basement, followed by a surprise birthday party for the pastor, Clyde S. Rice.

Brother Zonkers was the speaker at the morning services on Sunday. Dinner was served in the basement by the women's department.

At the afternoon services, Brother Melcher spoke on the theme, "The Restoration."—Reported by ORVAL E. COTTHILL.

NAUVOO DISTRICT.—The young people of the district held their annual Restoration Festival on April 29 and 30 at Burlington, Iowa, in commemoration of the Restoration of the church. Forty-eight people registered on Saturday.

A candlelight banquet was held Saturday evening with Brother Robert Reipe from Burlington, acting as master of ceremonies. The entire meal was prepared and served by a number of the Burlington girls.

Following the banquet, a pageant was presented by the Burlington Zion's League, depicting phases of the Restoration and the answer of today's youth to the call of the church. This skit was under the direction of Paul Savage, League leader of the Burlington group.

After a short interlude in which distinctive hymns of our church were sung, Brother Edward McKiernan of Ft. Madison, who accompanied Elder Harold Smith, Nauvoo, on a recent archaeological trip to Mexico, presented a very entertaining talk on their experiences and showed his fine collection of slides.

The Leaguers spent the night in the various homes of the Burlington Saints.

At 7 o'clock Sunday morning, they met again at the church for an early morning fellowship with Brothers Reipe and Leonard Duke of Burlington, in charge. This service was originally scheduled to be held at Crapo Park, but the weather prevented this. Theme for the fellowship service was, "What the Restoration Means to Me," and it brought forth many fine expressions from the young people.

The church school hour was taught by Sister D. J. Williams of Burlington. She continued with the theme of Restoration.

Dinner was served the young people at noon.—Reported by BETTY SANFORD TRIPP.

Miracle Needed

By NAOMI RUSSELL

A DISINTERESTED MEMBER is the poorest advertisement a church can have. He is the one who retards its progress—not the unconverted millions who have never heard of the gospel. Through his indifference he silently announces to all who know of his affiliation that, so far as he's concerned, the church doesn't count for a thing. If he preached vehemently against it, he would only lead others to investigate to see if what he said were true. But by ignoring his religion, he arouses no interest, challenges no investigation, invites no questions.

In our program for kingdom-building, it would be well for us to consider the disinterested member and try to reclaim him. It will be a harder job than "starting from scratch" with those who have never contacted the Restoration Movement, but we can never hope to be a strong organization until we get rid of our weak links.

The psychology of indifference would make a profound study for the best of scholars. Why should one person be so thoroughly converted that he leaves the baptismal waters a new man dedicated to a righteous mission while another forgets his covenant before his baptismal robe has dried? Why do still others serve faithfully for years and then allow some quirk of human nature or petty offense to alienate them from church fellowship the rest of their lives?

Dipping into the case history file, let us investigate three "disinterestededs" and attempt to analyze their problems.

JANE A. was baptized at the age of twelve along with her mother and father, following a series of meetings. She had gone to church school with a Latter Day Saint friend and there learned the usual junior version of church history and theology. Her parents had always been good people and were members of a Protestant church before accepting the Restoration message. Religion was an accepted thing in their home, but nobody got excited about it. Jane's father was attracted by the Latter Day Saint idea of Zion, and her mother—a musician—found an outlet for her talent in the small, frame church. Now, ten years later, both parents continue to attend Sunday morning services—provided nothing more attractive entices them away. Brother A. has lost all interest in Zion because it didn't materialize as he had thought it would, and Sister A. doesn't feel too bad about missing church when the choir isn't scheduled to sing. They can take their religion or leave it and feel perfectly comfortable either way. In this "comfortable" setting Jane grew up, fell in love, and married a man of similar background, although of another faith. She felt no qualms about marrying "out of the church" because "so long as a person believes in God it really doesn't matter." For a while they attended his church one week and hers the next, but now that they have a baby they seldom go at all. Life is good to them, and they are grateful—but not to the degree that they are willing to sacrifice any of their comforts or pleasures to promote the work of the Giver of all good gifts.

BOB M. grew up in a home where "church" was part of nearly every conversation. Even before he started to school, he knew most of the faults and virtues of the sixty-seven members who attended the local branch, and he felt as at home with the kids in Sunday school as with his two younger brothers in his own back yard. He was promptly baptized upon reaching the acceptable age of eight, and by the time he was sixteen had become Zion's League president. He was well liked and popular, so it came as no surprise when, the following year, he was called to the office of priest. It was as logical as his being chosen captain of the basketball team. His parents often referred to him as "a natural born leader," and most people warmly agreed with them. Because Bob was a good speaker and a confident organizer, he found loyal supporters both at church and school. His ideas were usually accepted as the best, and his plans were seldom frustrated. Perhaps this constant approbation was what made it so difficult for him to share honors when young Elder B. moved from another town and became an active member of the congregation. As Elder B's popularity grew, Bob's interest in the church decreased. During the summer following his graduation from high school, he made an all-out attempt to regain his standing by promoting the building of a tennis court back of the church for the Leaguers. But few had the time or money to carry out his plans, so at the suggestion of Elder B. the unfinished court was used for volleyball. This, he reasoned, took less preparation and provided recreation for a larger number of young people. Bob was hurt by such disloyalty on the part of his former followers, and he went away to college with a very large chip on his shoulder.

Since there was no Reorganized Church in the city where Bob chose to continue his education, he began attending services at the Congregational church with a college friend. Here he was again recognized as a leader and became chairman of the young adult committee, a role in which he was able to regain some of his former prestige. At the end of three years, including summer semesters, he was graduated from college and took a position with a local firm. Today he continues to serve in the Congregational church.

FOLLOWING THE DEATH of his mother and father, Bill S. went to live with his paternal grandparents. Brother and Sister S. were proud of the fact that they could trace their Latter Day Saint lineage back to the 1860's, and one of their great missions in life was to maintain this record of allegiance in their progeny. They attended church three times each Sunday and went to Book of Mormon class on Tuesday evening, midweek prayer service, and choir on Thursday night. Wherever they went, little Bill went with them—even to the Sunday afternoon testimony meetings. This to a ten-year-old was undeserved torture, and while Grandma and Grandpa talked of the wonders of the kingdom to come, Billie solemnly resolved that when he grew up he would never go to church again. His resolution weakened slightly when, at eighteen, he fell in love with a girl who liked to go to church. He had to go with her to protect his interest, but soon after they were married, he crossed church off his list again. Many people have attempted to reinterest him, but so far all have failed. He meets their invitations with "I don't have time," "The church is full of hypocrites," or just a very final "No!" Sometimes, deep in his conscience, he is ashamed and would sincerely like to change. Sometimes he is lonesome for the fellowship he knows he could enjoy at church. Sometimes as he watches his wife leave for services alone, he wonders if he isn't doing an injustice to their marriage by not joining her. But always he sticks by his resolution. It has become an obsession . . . he can't go back now.

WHAT CAN BE DONE ABOUT them—the complacent, the egotistic, the contrary? Too bad there isn't a blanket remedy that can be applied to all who have lost interest. Instead, each demands very special, personalized attention. Some reformists will say, "Take their names off the records. The church'll be better without them." But would it? Aren't they just as needed as new converts?

Perhaps I'm among the foolish optimistic, but I believe they can be reclaimed. Somewhere in each disinterested member there must be a spark that can rekindle the fire of loyalty. The big problem is finding that spark. Perhaps it will take an appeal for her child's spiritual welfare to shake Jane from her lethargy. Perhaps only deep, personal tragedy that makes humanity dependent on a Higher Being for hope will bring her back. It may take something of this kind of "shock treatment" to make Bob forget his wounded ego and reaccept his calling. As for Bill, about all anyone can do is let him alone until he tires of being on the defensive.

Fortunately God can work miracles where mankind cannot. The least we can do is to pray for these who have lost interest, believing that the Master Psychologist will help them find their way back.

This Is What Really Counts!

"Remember, what has happened to you is never so important as what you do about it."

The words were my father's; the occasion, the almost simultaneous deaths of our last remaining Civil War veterans. One, "Shifty" Jackson, who, minus an eye, used that for a lifetime to excuse every possible chicanery. The other, Judge Smith, armless, in his youth involved in bitter scandal, but before his death the most respected and useful man in the county.

How often since have those words, coming back to me, energized a course of action which, otherwise, would never have seemed possible. At the loss of one whose going changed the pattern of my life, at the sudden attainment of a dearest ambition, at a sudden, if temporary, defeat—my father's words have been both challenge and springboard.

There is no defeatism, I think, in the idea he intended to convey, but rather a tremendous faith in human capabilities. What has happened is not only past, but the child of circumstance; what I do about it is mine, and begins now. The same, whether good or ill, has happened to a million men before me, no small number of whom have thereupon conducted themselves with courage and dignity, with wisdom and with grace and honor.

Can I, he seems to have implied, do less?

It's the kind of thought which leaves one thrusting a hand toward the bootstraps, not only comforted but compelled.

Revelation and Science

Second, they are due in part at least "to the building in the depths of space of the commoner heavy elements out of such lighter elements as hydrogen, which the spectroscopy of the heavens show to be widely distributed through space" (Millikan asserts that oxygen, helium, nitrogen, carbon, and even sulphur are found between the stars.)

Third, "these atom-building processes cannot take place under the conditions of temperature and pressure existing in the sun and stars"—Page 177.

While Sir James Jeans, and Dr. Eddington contend that there is no building up of atoms, Dr. Millikan and Dr. Einstein assert there is. What does revelation through Joseph Smith tell us? Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23 states "and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof [the attending solar system] even so shall another come." Jeans and Eddington have caught the view of destruction taking place and see no farther, while Millikan and Einstein have seen the building processes, and Latter Day Saints appresciate that both are right as far as they see.

As a schoolboy I remember I had a trinket with a picture on it in red and green lines. When looking through a red glass, the red lines on the picture disappeared, and when looking through a green glass, the green lines disappeared leaving only the red lines in the picture showing. Each constituted a good view in itself but not as complete as the entire picture. To get the complete scene, we had to look at it without either glass. This somewhat illustrates the situation of our scientists, but the revelation through the prophet reveals the entire truth.

The power of the cosmic ray probably is a part of the Spirit of God mentioned in Genesis 1: 2.

As the article on the cosmic ray in Science Digest of January, 1942, says, everything points to the fact that these cosmic rays come from distances far beyond our solar system. We cannot tell how far, but indications are that they come from vast distances.

No doubt this ray is part of the power granted to Christ, for the Scripture says, "all power."

 MYSTERY

Something awesome has happened at Uncle Joe's place. A blight has fallen upon his dandelions, and the crop is almost a failure. What has caused it he doesn't know. There was a time he might have welcomed it; now he is not sure. For years he fought them every spring, ending his campaign with a glow of victory. Last week he stood on the old battlefield—his front lawn—a basket in one hand, a digger in the other, and a look of frustration on his face. The enemy did not show up, except for five puny stragglers. It seemed a shame to attack anything so helpless. He dug them up, but with a discouraged heart. He is a champion, and now there is no demand for his art. Ah, me, alas, and wellaway!

* A living testimony of the Word of Wisdom is C. C. Randall of Columbus, Kansas, who recently made his annual visit to Independence and Herald House. He will be 89 on his birthday, May 28, and has enjoyed good health all his life, which he attributes to his obedience to the laws of the gospel. At the age of nine he came with his father in a covered wagon from Illinois to Kansas. They settled in Cherokee County, and he recalls that Indians lived in the hill country not far away. He never had the experience of living in a sod house as many pioneer Kansans did, for his father erected a tent in which they spent the summer until a house was built. He was baptized at thirteen by Orson Sutherland, and blessed by the well-known missionary, Henry Kemp.

* DON'T be too impressed by the neat leather brief case the white-collared gentleman is carrying. It may contain only his lunch, with a few odd scraps of paper. Like his blue-collared brother in the jeans, he has to eat, and he may hate a crowded restaurant and its gummy fare as much as anybody. Remember George Bernard Shaw's "Chocolate Soldier" who carried candy in his ammunition pouch instead of bullets because he knew bullets could kill other people but not sustain life. If you don't have a lunch to eat, the world's most sensational new book will mean nothing to you.

 THOSE "WESTERNS"

Have you observed the deterioration of "western" films lately? You can't help it if you have got caught with a double feature when you really wanted to see one of the better shows . . . Floपालong McCafferty is such a nice, clean fellow. He speaks in the vocabulary of a high school freshman, and any bright eighth-grader could beat him on expression. He never drinks; he never smokes; he never swears. Far different from the cowpokes we knew in real life. He utters only one short, simple sentence in the flat tones of an egg market reporter before he gets out his guns and starts shooting. He never runs out of ammunition, and he rarely hits anything. If the villain is finally defeated, it is because he sprains his ankle or cuts his finger. . . . Redeeming feature of the "western" is the beautiful scenery, unspoiled by modern highways and phone lines. And how those horses can run, to the music of "The Ride of the Thuringian Hussars"!

That "Left-Out" Feeling

PERHAPS ALL OF US have been slighted at some time or other. Some slights are real and inherent in the nature of a situation; others are imaginary or at least quite unintentional. Almost as soon as man becomes conscious of the struggle for survival, he becomes concerned with the social importance of maintaining his dignity. Whenever anyone is ready to admit that he is "through, all washed up," the elements of death have set in, and the end is in sight unless something happens soon to remedy that situation.

These thoughts were stimulated as I listened to a lecture of one of our younger apostles during Conference: "After I had finished a talk before another group here, an old man came up and said, 'I am glad to see you younger men taking hold of this; however it is leaving us older men out.' My reply to him was, 'Our church work leaves no one out. The major work of this church is not that of holding offices or positions, but of witnessing for Christ. In this task all can give their full strength.' This task of witnessing for Christ will last as long as life endures in the Saint of God."

Two visitors in my office yesterday were discussing how gracefully some of our brethren had grown old. They still did what they could and maintained a "sweet spirit." The names of three elders known to the entire church were mentioned in quick succession. These gentle souls are witnessing for Christ in a real way every day. "Keeping sweet" seems to be "a natural" to them.

We may not realize the struggles they have gone through in their struggles for "sanctification and honor," however if they now have any of that "left-out" feeling they are successful in concealing it. They have not lost their dignity in the church simply because they are in less active positions; they have found it in another type of witnessing. With Paul they can say, "For me to live, is to do the will of Christ; and to die, is my gain."—Philippians 1: 22.

Perhaps it is not too soon for us to start praying that we may find our satisfaction in being about the job of witnessing for Christ. What the branch or general church asks of us in service may temporarily affect the nature or locale of our witnessing, but it does not limit nor leave us out of the witnessing program before the church.

A Rushton Issue

"Herald" readers were given a brief notice of the passing of Elder John W. Rushton in last week's issue. In an early issue we plan to give several tributes, as well as the obituary of Brother Rushton. We believe that his many friends will appreciate the material in this special issue of the "Herald" where an effort will be made to pay a proper respect to the passing of a great minister.

Charles Hield, son of Apostle Charles R. Hield, has been selected as the student council president for the first semester of next year. Tim Ransomanski and R. L. Coberly, both R.L.D.S. youths, will serve as officers on the same council.

When two hundred and seven R.O.T.C. cadets paraded on Campus Hill for their annual inspection, they were led by a young church youth, Cadet Lt. Col. George Lund. Other officers who belong to the church were Capt. Sandy Jennings, Capt. David Leonard, Capt. Carlin Talcott, and Lt. Claire Weddle.

At the music festival held at the University of Missouri, excellent ratings were given to Joan Talcott, and Claire Weddle; superior ratings to Arthur Burnham, Jerry Sherman, Patsy Bates, Marilyn Tiberghien, Delores Tandy, Frank Church, and Carol Freeman.

Celia Fry, daughter of Elder Evan Fry, was one of two students sent by the high school to enter in the National Forensic Finals. A Pebble Dropped in the Water

"For the pebble has dropped in the water, And the waves circle round with the shock."

—A line from Hymn 188.

The poet who wrote that song was emphasizing, by means of a very vivid metaphor, that great consequences sometimes develop as a result of little beginnings.

In 1830, Joseph Smith and five associates, the legal minimum number that could start an organization, threw a pebble into the theological waters of the world, and the waves are still circling round with the shock caused by the restoration of the gospel and the mission of the church.

But, as in all cases where a pebble is dropped in the water, the force and height of the waves diminish as they travel farther from the point of beginning. Unless some new impulses are added, the waves will die.

It is time now for some of the followers to toss in more pebbles.

* * * * *

During the recent General Conference, we heard from members of the Council of Twelve accounts of the very remarkable experiences of some of our people who were willing to make a venture for God.

Brother John Coggan of Nuneaton, England, was at the Conference. He delivered a notable sermon in the historic Stone Church of Independence. In presenting him to the congregation, Brother Peter Whalley told how he had begun the work in Nuneaton, working along and telling the gospel story. As a result of his faithful labors, a fine church and a splendid congregation are serving God in that place today. Brother Coggan started with church school classes and built the work. This is as fine a memorial for a life of loving Christ and laboring for him as one could wish.

Brother Coggan threw a pebble in the water, and the waves circled round with the shock.

* * * * *

Another inspiring story was told at the Conference about Brother Charley Brown, who found it necessary to move to New Mexico, and was far from what some members call "church privileges." While he was still moving the furniture into the house he had acquired, some neighbors stopped to invite him and his family to attend a Sunday school not far away.

"Thank you. That's fine," said Brother Brown. "We're going to have church school here next Sunday." He didn't wait for the "church privileges" to come to him. He created them. On that next Sunday the living room of the house was ready, a church school class began its sessions, and neighbors were invited to attend. The meetings grew, and there is a fine group in that place now.

This is the story as we heard it at Conference. Instead of permitting himself and his family to become a few more of the "scattered Saints," instead of losing their identity and drifting away, he made his home a new outpost of the kingdom of God. Nobody asked him; nobody appointed him. He remembered, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Brother Brown tossed a splendid pebble into the spiritual waters of New Mexico. Souls will be saved as a result of his efforts there.

One of the seventies related this fine tribute to the work of Brother John W. Rushton. It happened while he was in the Council of Twelve.

"A fine woman worker in one of our congregations told me that she and her family had been isolated, living in a western town far from any branch of the church. Brother Rushton came a long distance to find them and visited the family for about three hours. 'It was the finest experience of our lives,' she said. 'To realize that he cared so much made us very grateful. We will always remember it.' Afterward they decided to move to another place where they could attend church." This seventy went on to say that he had met many people whom Brother Rushton had visited under similar circumstances, and all were deeply appreciative.

The ministry of visiting may change the course of a person's life. We do not do as much of it as we should.

* * * * *

The work of the church has begun in many places because somebody started a Sunday school class and gathered in little children who were not getting religious instruction anywhere. Pleased because someone took an interest in their children, the parents began to follow them and became interested in the church. "And a little child shall lead them" (Isaiah 11: 6) into the kingdom of God.

Wherever you are, there may be water waiting for some hand to drop a pebble into it. How about yours?

If you have the desire to do something for God, you can begin now, wherever you are, whatever conditions may be.

Across the Desk

Some months ago while attending the organization meeting of the Belleview, Florida, Branch, it was my pleasure to be associated with Brother David Donaldson, whose one hundredth birthday will be celebrated January 2, 1951. Brother Donaldson has been a priest for seventy-five years and is probably the oldest member of the Aaronic order in the church at present writing. Today I received notice from Brother W. J. Breshears, president of the Gulf States District, that Brother Donaldson attended the fiftieth wedding anniversary of his son and his wife. We are happy to extend greetings to this centenarian and trust that he shall have many more years of active service.

This Is For You

By Aleta Runkle

Are you nervous? Do you have frequent headaches? Are you easily upset? Do you lie awake nights worrying? Then stop worrying about how to teach that church school class or what to do about a choir with no tenors and come instead to the combined music conference and church school workshop to be held on the Graceland College campus from June 5-11. Here is what you have been wanting—the chance for enough time under expert leadership to really dig in to the problems that have troubled you. After an entire week of discussion, demonstration, and group participation in your particular area of service, you'll go home feeling as if you have the "know-how." You'll get rid of that discouraged feeling that everybody is successful but you. You will discover that everyone has problems. When you hear the best methods discussed, when you see in actual demonstration some of the techniques for overcoming your problems, you will feel that you have had a mental tonic.

The classes will be practical. In "Choir Materials" you will sing anthems that will be most appropriate for you to use at home with your own choir. Problems too, such as how to get the same group there on Thursday night that comes to sing Sunday morning, will be discussed. In the church school classes you may be a kindergarten child one day and a junior the next as you learn the many interesting ways to present lessons to children. You will hear skilled organists play the selections that are most appropriate for worship in the class, "Service Playing." There will be interesting, educational films in the audio-visual workshop. Some of the morning worship periods will be planned by laboratory groups.

You may think, "But I just teach a kindergarten class on Sunday mornings. There will be so many classes that are out of my field that it wouldn't be worth my time and money to go." Have some of you who have been asked to plan a worship service said, "I would like to do that, but I wouldn't have the least idea of how to begin." When your pastors visit your church school department do you think everything is fine as long as the children are quiet? The leaders in every branch need to know something about all of the activities of that congregation so they can better co-ordinate their own efforts with those of all other departments. We need to see our work in relation to the entire branch unit. Those kindergarten teachers, pastors, and Zion's League leaders who come will want to go to the organ class so they will better understand and appreciate the kind of music that is the best aid for worship. The choir directors should attend church school classes and learn what goes on there. Even though you may never be asked to serve in any other department than the one where you are now, you will find that you enjoy your church life much more if you know something about all of the phases of activity in your branch.

By now you probably think all we're going to do during the week is study, and you have decided that by Wednesday you will be all worn out. We are going to really work, but there will be plenty of time for fun, too. Every afternoon Mr. Richard Carter of the Graceland faculty will direct a recreational period. For some this period will provide free time to relax in their rooms. And then, of course, there is no better time to get acquainted with the three church school workers from Portland and the pastor from Pensacola than at breakfast or lunch. After the evening class closes at 8:30, there's still time for a "sing" or campfire before we go back to the dorm. And then on Saturday night we will climax the busy week with a banquet.

This workshop should be an ideal combination of serious study and fun. Why not plan this as your vacation this year? The campus will be at its best in early June. If it's money that troubles you, perhaps your branch will send you as a representative or finance part of your expenses. There is always a way. You need the workshop; the church needs your improved service. Come to Graceland, June 5-11.

Your Heritage, the Endowment

A Sermon Given at Liberty Street Church

By PRESIDENT F. HENRY EDWARDS

(Reported by Gladys Gould and Rosamond Sherman)

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it rested upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.—Acts 2: 1-4.

WHITSUNDAY IS THE anniversary of Pentecost; and Pentecost is the time when the endowment of the Spirit of God was received in the early church. This is the last of the great festivals. There is the festival of Christmas when we are reminded of the birth of the Lord Jesus; there is Holy Week, with particular emphasis on Good Friday, on which we are reminded of the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus; then comes Easter, perhaps the most joyous of the festivals of the Christian year, when we think of the triumph of righteousness; and now we have arrived at Pentecost. This ought to be one of the outstanding celebrations of our church year. Now, perhaps more than at any other time, we ought to sense what the Spirit means to the church and how fundamental the gift of the Spirit is.

I should like to talk with you about the significance of Pentecost. This festival rises out of Easter. Something marvelous happened then. Even prior to that time, those who were nearest to Jesus had practically all the facts of the Christian message. They knew something about the importance of faith in God; they certainly knew the necessity for repentance; and they had had some knowledge of the meaning of baptism; but all they knew was impaired because they had not yet been captured by any vital sense of the tremendous power of God.

Until Easter no one had ever grappled with the fact of death; and because of this no one had any deep assurance of a power adequate to vanquish this last dread enemy of mankind. But when Easter came, the entire perspective of the disciples was shifted. Whereas the values men set up from day to day had been all important, the values of eternal life now became paramount. The believers became movingly aware that if death were not the end of life, then they must make some preparation for values that go beyond death. The more they thought of this, the more it possessed them and the more sure they became that in the long run the only values which matter are those that endure far beyond life itself and partake of the nature of eternity.

So the men who daily met with Jesus during the forty days which followed the Resurrection were busy seeing life as they had never seen it before; feeling its majesty and dignity and outreach and responding to its truth, beauty, and challenge. Never before had they really seen and felt and been moved by the glory of the gospel as they were in those forty days.

AT THE END of that time the Master said to them, "I am going away, and you are to wait here until you are endowed with power from on high." That was hard to take.

These men had seen life anew and felt a divine impulsion to do something about it. They could not think of working without Jesus in their midst, and they wanted to bring the rest of their lives into conformity with his central personality so as to feel at home with him. It did not seem right that he who was forevermore abroad in the world should have his way blocked by sin and wickedness and blindness and inequality. They wanted terribly to do something about it. And yet the very one who had opened their eyes and set before them this new vision, new purpose, new life, said to them, "You are not ready yet; wait quietly in this place of tender memories until you receive the promise of the Father which I have given you before, and which I now reiterate; wait here until you are endowed with power from on high."

That is just what they did. As a matter of fact it was the only thing they could do. They had no alternative. It is extremely probable that Peter, impetuous as ever, wanted to rush out and say something. It is not unlikely that Thomas, who had to be shown, wanted now to show the people. It is altogether likely that some of the others said, "Why wait? We know we have all the facts now. We know the message of the gospel as we never knew it before. We are sure we can bear testimony that Jesus is the Christ. Why wait?" But since the very one who had opened their eyes had told them to wait, they quieted their impatience. And as they did so, they sensed within themselves that, despite their knowledge of the facts, something was still lacking. When Jesus spoke, something happened to people; but when they spoke, only information was conveyed. There is a tremendous difference. So they waited.

These were not the same people who had waited before Easter. Then, when they were on the dusty highway, the Master went ahead, and they followed. As they walked they would talk to each other about the chief places in the kingdom they hoped to occupy. But all that was forgotten now. They waited because the Master said they were to wait, but they waited as those already prepared in part for what was to happen. Instead of squabbling about who should sit in the chief places, instead of remembering the way some had betrayed him and been responsible for his crucifixion, instead of going back to the past before they had understood him, instead of any of these or similar things, they were all with one accord, and they continued in supplication and prayer, waiting for the fulfillment of the promise of the Lord Jesus.

THAT WAITING PERIOD was tremendously important. Perhaps we can understand what waiting is now better than ever we could until these last few years; for there are very few of us who have not now had the poignant experience of waiting with hungry eagerness for a boy to come home, for peace to come, or for life to be clean again. Despite the way we have of living from moment to moment and forgetting in one minute the thing that happened in the last, this waiting has been too searing an experience for us to forget easily. Many of us never will forget. Waiting cast its influence forward to the return of those we loved, the coming back of normalcy, the opportunity for clean living without hate, so that all we did was different than it would have been otherwise. There was an undertone, a purpose, in our waiting. It was not just a passing of time. It was the maturing of resolution and opportunity so that when the day came we would be ready. We tried to keep up so that the years of separation would not divide too much, and our waiting was shot through with a certain soberness which turned gradually to joy as the time passed, and we were ready and true and eager.

That is something of what happened to Christ's disciples. They waited purposefully. They probably counted the days. The Master had said "not many days hence." It is not unlikely that the Ascension, the time when he left them, was Thursday. If so, they waited through Friday and Saturday and Sunday and Monday—waiting, watching, wondering, "Is this the day?" Then broadening their queries to ask, "What will happen?" "What will this Comforter do for us?" So they went back and remembered what the Master had said and what the Scriptures said. This is evident, because as soon as the time was elapsed the first thing the disciples did was to quote the Scriptures. They had evidently been exploring the meaning of the coming endowment. So the second Friday and Saturday passed, and they came again to the anniversary of the Resurrection, to the Lord's day, to Sunday.

THAT IS THE END of chapter one in the Book of Acts. Chapter two starts out with the word "and"—"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come." That and is important. It is a connective which ties up all that had been to all that was to be. All the sadness of Calvary, all the joy of Easter, all the instruction of the forty days of Resurrection, all this waiting that piled up day after day was tied up to what was to be. So Luke, in his story, says, "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come" —when the waiting had stretched out and fulfilled its purpose, when their patience was ready to come into fruition—then suddenly there was a sound from heaven, and the faithful disciples received the fulfillment of that for which their hearts and souls had hungered, that which the Lord had promised—the rounding out of their possibilities as witnesses and ministers. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire and rested upon each one of them, and they spoke forth the words of the Lord as the Spirit gave them utterance. There took place in them something akin to what had taken place in the Lord Jesus himself. Here, in them, was achieved a marvelous fusion of Divinity and humanity. They remained men, but they were possessed of the Spirit and spoke with the power of God.

So now, after the weeks of preparation were fulfilled and the arduous days of waiting and expectancy had matured, they were together in an upper room, with one heart and mind. After they had stopped arguing about who was to be what and what their reward was to be; after they had learned to face the central fact that they could not live without the presence of God, one of the great miracles of all time took place. The Spirit of God took possession of them, yet nothing of their own agency was lost. Every man bore testimony as he was empowered to do. He stood forth, God speaking through him. He reached up, becoming more a man and yet more truly a son of God than ever he had been before. And from that time to this all Christian people have known that here was a miracle of transformation which was at the same time a prophecy of what God designed for every one of us individually and for all of us together.

IT IS PROBABLE that the place where the disciples met was just a small room. It is called an upper room, but it is not unlikely it was an open place on the roof with an external stairway that made it available as an extra room. The street on which the house was situated was probably small and narrow and people going by could hear any loud talk. So when these disciples received the endowment of the Spirit, word got out; and people came rushing to see what was happening. Apparently without prearrangement, the disciples thus bore testimony to Jews who were in Jerusalem from all over the Roman world. It was Babel in reverse. Many centuries before men who put themselves first had tried to build the tower of Babel, but their languages had been confounded. Now these men who had learned to put God first started out to promote his kingdom and found the barriers that separated them from their fellows had been torn down. Every man heard the truth in his own tongue.

One of the things of which we are most proud today is our eagerness to face the facts. On that the scientific age is built. If our theories conflict with the facts, we reject the theories and re-examine our convictions in the light of what is. It is important that we do this in the field of religion. What I have narrated constitutes a body of facts we need to face and to understand. But let us go on.

As these Jews came together, many of them devout people who had made long and hazardous journeys to visit the Holy City, they heard the marvelous and convincing testimonies of the disciples, and they had to find some explanation. Some looked on scoffing and said, "They are drunk." But Peter could not take that. He said, "Why, it is yet early in the morning. If it were late at night, you might persuade us. Obviously these men are not drunk. This is what happened." And he told them.

I like the way the record is phrased. It says that Peter, standing up with the eleven, started out, "Ye men and brethren . . ." I like to picture that. This was the Peter who at the Judgment Hall had slunk away. Maybe this is what Luke had in mind when he used that particular phrase. Yet Peter was in many ways the same man he had been before; he was still impetuous, aggressive, resentful of misunderstanding, and a little uncouth. He was still a Galilean with his Galilean mode of speech—roughly eloquent maybe, but no polished speaker. We cannot possibly explain what happened by just looking at Peter. But there has to be some explanation. The narrow street was filled. Three thousand people were packed in as tight as they could be packed. As Peter began to talk, practically all of them were cynical and somewhat resentful, but as Peter continued they were sobered and looked at each other with questions in their eyes. Then after a time they did not look at each other, but just looked inside; and then, after a bit more, some of them were not only sobered but convicted. One cried out, "Men and brethren, what can we do?" And others echoed him. Of Peter, James, John, and Thomas, they asked, "What shall we do?" So here before them all, the promise of the Master was fulfilled. The Comforter whom the Father sends was demonstrably reproofing the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment.

Peter did not accomplish this. God did it. But God did not do it by himself. God and Peter and the eleven and those who had waited and had continued in prayer and in supplication in the upper room for ten days—these and others who were behind them and supporting them and with them did it together. But the characteristic thing, the distinctively Christian thing, the significant thing that happened, was that here at last, after their preparation, came the endowment. That endowment could not be forced; it could not be manufactured; it could not be counterfeited. This power of God which made men know within themselves the rightful demands God lays on his children—this power that makes for miraculous strength, wisdom, and testimony, and brings conviction and transformation came from God to his faithful children.

IN THIS DISPENSATION, as in that, one of the distinguishing characteristics of the church of Jesus Christ is the overflowing endowment of the Spirit of God. Where that endowment is, there is the church of Jesus Christ. Where that endowment is not, there the church of Jesus Christ is not. We need to be aware of this. It was possible in those days to have a form of godliness but to lack the power thereof; and it is still possible. It was not until the Spirit of God rested upon these early disciples that the power from on high gave them utterance; it was not until then that they were knit together and empowered by the same Spirit that united them; it was not until then that they became in full truth the church of the living God moving forward to its appointed destiny. And today it is only as we are endowed with power from on high, and the Spirit of God does something to us which lifts us above and beyond all that we might otherwise be, that the church of God moves in majesty and power for the salvation of humanity.

We general officers of the church have looked to the needs of the church in these present days. We have been reminded that these needs are as fundamental as ever. Manners of presentation might change, as do manners of speech and dress, but fundamental needs are unchanging. As always, this day demands that the people of God shall be the people of God, and this means that believers shall be newly cleansed and uplifted and empowered by Divinity. We need missionary testimony, but this testimony must vibrate with such power as is found only among men and women who have experienced the endowment of the Spirit of God.

In the church today we need the same kind of hunger for the Spirit of God that we once had for the return of our loved ones who were away from us in the war. We need to be just as deeply concerned about the peace of God as we were once

Revelation and Science - Part 2

An Investigation of the Prophetic Mission of Joseph the Seer and His Revelations in the Light of Science

By C. W. CLARK

Inhabitation of Other Planets or Worlds

UNTIL MAN is able to reach other worlds by the use of rockets and space ships, or by means of radar or other supersonic communications, this subject must remain in the realm of speculation, yet opinions of great scientists are extremely interesting. In Section 36:7 the Lord tells Enoch:

Behold, I am God; man of holiness is my name; man of counsel is my name; Endless and Eternal is my name, also. Wherefore, I can stretch forth my hands and hold all the creations which I have made and my eye can pierce them, also; and among all the workmanship of my hand there has not been so great wickedness as among your brethren.

In order not to feel too bad about this condemnation, let us note that it referred to the inhabitants of this earth before the flood. These were all destroyed except righteous Noah and his family of three sons. But this distinctly points out that other worlds are inhabited. Let us see what great thinkers are advocating.

Sir James Jeans in Through Space and Time says, "We have no right to say we shall find no life elsewhere." Garbedian in Major Mysteries of Science (pages 214, 215) says:

Our leading men of science maintain that in all probability life does exist elsewhere in the universe, if only in a few odd nooks and corners and that it is not impossible that someday we may possess actual knowledge of the existence of other beings "a little lower than the angels" whom man may regard as his equals—or perhaps even his superiors.

He also quotes Dr. Harlow Shapley as saying:

If somewhat similar conditions of temperature, light, oxygen, soil, and water exist elsewhere, we may take it as certain that life exists elsewhere. We have no proof that it does so exist, but it is probable that it does exist . . . In the absence of information, we can only surmise that the chance that it surpasses our own is as good as that it falls below our level.

Science News Letter for June 30, 1945, quotes Dr. Henry Norris Russell of Princeton University as expressing the same views and adds that it is not unreasonable to expect to find some form of life on Venus and Mars. The expectancy of life elsewhere extends beyond human imagination. (I have put these thoughts in my own language.)

On this point Garbedian says:

Science has now dropped its traditional theory that Mars is dead. There is life on the famous red planet, whose ruddy light makes such a beautiful picture in the heavens, according to the general belief today among leading astronomers, many of whom several years ago scoffed at the idea as impossible. . . . Dr. William Pickering, director of the Harvard College branch station at Mandeville, Jamaica, in the Carribean Sea, takes the advanced view that it is almost certain that Mars is inhabited by intelligent beings and suggests the Martians are signalling to us.—Pages 218, 219.

A Central Control (Throne of God)

HERE AGAIN Joseph Smith shows his prophetic mission by being ahead of his times. How can anyone read the following excerpt from Section 85: 11, 12 and not feel that it was given under the spirit of true revelation and uttered by a prophet?

And again, verily I say unto you, He hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times, and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens, and the earth; which comprehend the earth and all the planets; and they give light to each other in their times, and in their seasons, in their minutes, in their hours, in their days, in their weeks, in their months, in their years: all these are one year with God, but not with man.

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise ye could not abound.

This revelation points to the fact that from some definite place a control over the creation of all planets is being exercised. This place is the throne of God or generally known as heaven.

I like to think of the vision of Joseph Smith, Jr., given to him on January 21, 1836, at Kirtland Temple and recorded in Church History, Volume II, page 16:

I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that (celestial) kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire: also the blazing throne of God whereon was seated the Father and the Son.

Also Hebrews 12: 29: "For our God is a consuming fire." (Read again the quotation previously given from Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3 in conjunction with paragraphs 11 and 12 just quoted.)

Science used to teach that if there was a God at all, he manifested himself as universal power scattered or diffused in the entire universe. Now, with the new discoveries, there is a more general acceptance of the idea of a central control station from which this power radiates. The materialistic ideas are fading with the discovery of the perfect laws by which the universes are operating. Such forces as the cosmic ray are having much to do with this change of heart. God is revealing through such forces that the entire creation is moving under a reign of law. From some definite place these great powers are being governed. The laws of the universe move in a controlled order.

THE COSMIC RAY, infra-red, X ray, ultra-violet ray, beta ray, cathode ray, and perhaps many others all represent power, but some of these rays are not perceived in our everyday life. They are as "a light which shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not." It is true that man has invented machines which produce some of these rays, yet the laws by which they are made evident are not manufactured. All these rays represent power and are perhaps different manifestations of the cosmic ray. Our own sun with its attendant planets travels around a center of gravity at a speed of two hundred miles a second. It requires two hundred twenty million years to complete a revolution in its orbit, the size of which can be imagined if you multiply the two hundred twenty million years by 31,636,000, which is the number of seconds in a year, and then multiply by 200 which is the number of miles traveled in a second. Remember that this represents travel around a focal point which exerts enough gravitational pull to cause the entire universe to follow the same course. (See Marvels and Mysteries of Science, by Clyde Fisher, Ph. D., published by William H. Wise Company, 1943, New York City. Dr. Fisher is curator of the Hayden Planetarium.)

Again we quote from Major Mysteries of Science by H. Gordon Garbedian.

Although we are lacking definite knowledge as yet, there is evidence pointing to the conclusion that apparently some mysterious bond unites these outer galaxies and our own universe into higher organizations—into “galaxies of galaxies.” These higher systems are immensely larger than our own universe or any other single stellar system.—Page 291.

The fascinating suggestion is advanced that all of creation may be one single unit, with all of its various divisions existing in direct relationship to each other, and all possessing uniform properties and tendencies. The test tube, the microscope, and the spectroscope tell fundamentally the same story. Electricity, whose positive and negative particles constitute the smallest whirling world of material things, may also make up the substance of the largest and most distant universes. There is substantially no difference, in Dr. Shapley’s opinion, between the lowly atom and the most remote cloud of twinkling stars. In the former the electrons and protons are considered as single units; in the later, they are considered in toto.—Page 265.

Men of science are now convinced that what goes on in the nucleus of the atom determines what goes on in our own bodies and throughout the universe. The nucleus has a protective wall of electricity. It is this powerful wall which guards the nucleus from tampering on the part of mere man.—Page 182.

There are many atoms besides the one man has tampered with to produce the atomic bomb. This book was written before the atomic age.

SCIENCE HAS DELVED into the subjects of intelligence, agency, and immortality. Some of its ideas are somewhat speculative but corroborative of the revelations to Joseph Smith. Of course, all scientists do not agree, but the fact that some of the greatest minds are in accord should thinking men to give due weight to the question at issue. To get the setting of this, we quote from the King James Version of the Bible, Genesis 2: 8, 9, 16, 17; 3: 1-5, 19, 22, 23.

And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

Now the serpent was more subtil than any least of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.

And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil. And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken.

And from I Timothy 2: 13, 14:

For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.

These verses give a sort of a preview of the things that occurred in the Garden of Eden. Our Heavenly Father knew just what would happen. Usually this is referred to as the Fall of Man, but it was a part of the great redemptive scheme as witnessed by the preparation made for it.

Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you.—I Peter 1: 18-20.

It is not my purpose to discuss such questions as “Was the sin of Adam intended?” or “What kind of tree was used?” or “What was the sin committed?” other than to point out that whatever it was, Eve partook of it first and by herself. It is more the result of this act that is to be considered. Evidently Adam and Eve as created were not endowed with knowledge of good and evil but given their agency by a commandment that they could choose. Read the first four chapters of the Inspired Version and note this point in chapter two, verses twenty and twenty-one.

But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but remember that I forbid it.

A few sentences from previous quotations will help us:

“Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil.” This was a direct result of the partaking of the fruit.

Death (physically) came as a result of decree of God because of Adam and Eve’s having obtained this knowledge, “For dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return.” The tree of life was not withheld from them until after they partook of the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

“Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. . . .” Without the knowledge of good and evil, our intelligence would not be of a very high nature. Latter-day-revelation through Joseph Smith has much to say about intelligence. Let us examine some of it.

Man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence, or the light of truth, was not created or made, neither indeed can be. All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also, otherwise there is no existence. Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light. And every man whose spirit receiveth not the light is under condemnation, for man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy; and when separated, man can not receive a fullness of joy. The elements are the tabernacle of God; yea, man is the tabernacle of God, even temples; and whatsoever temple is defiled, God shall destroy that temple.

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that evil one.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5, 6.

All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions.

All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth her own; justice continueth its course, and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and governeth and executeth all things: he comprehendeth all things, and all things are before him, and all things are round about him; and he is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things; and all things are by him, and of him; even God for ever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 9, 10.

Note there is the intelligence of God, which is the intelligence that was in the beginning known as the light of truth. Before man could receive intelligence, he had to exercise his agency. In this he partook of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil and became mortal with an agency for which he was responsible. God said, “Man is become as one of us, to know good and evil,” and man became mortal (Genesis 3: 19, 22).

Again we read, “I gave unto them knowledge, in the day I created them: and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency.”—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7. (Here let us suggest a careful reading of section 28, verses 9-12 inclusive, and II Nephi 1: 80-86.)

concerned about the peace that stopped the armed strife. We need to be so concerned that we shall get together, being of one heart and mind, without bargaining, without seeking special favors, being concerned only that by the grace of God we shall be made ready for the endowment of the Spirit. The early disciples waited until God could do something in them which he wanted to do, but which could not be done until they themselves were transformed. So, also, must we wait—no idling, but waiting as we work.

OUR CHURCH needs Pentecost, and needs it desperately. No training of our ministry, no special academic preparation, no drawing up of blueprints for Zion, no designation of a Center Place, no anything can take the place of the endowment of the Spirit of God which frees, unites, cleanses, and sends forth the people of God to do these other things which are also necessary, but which are necessary only as we live for and receive the blessing God has designed for his people.

We come, then, to Whitsunday, to Pentecost of this year, with a renewed conviction of our complete and utter and unfailing need of God. Of ourselves, or by ourselves, we cannot accomplish what God requires at our hands. He is not reluctant to bless us, but the blessings we need come only as we become aware and ready and hungry. You cannot give a man a good meal unless he has appetite for it. God himself cannot give us the endowment of his Spirit unless our appetite is sharpened, and we are hungering and thirsting after righteousness.

I bid you then, by the grace of God, to look around you with a new conviction of the rightness of that eternal life for which we were born, and with a new awareness of the values which endure. I also bid you to wait for the endowment of the Spirit which is your heritage, but remember that you can do this in fellowship with each other, searching the Scriptures, bearing the testimony you are now empowered to bear, but expecting always the greater endowment that shall free you and commission you until you and your fellow servants shall be even more greatly used of God in convicting the world of sin, of righteousness, of judgment, and of the kingdom of God.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE

At a meeting held in the Stone Church on May 8 by the sixteen congregations of Independence, the new Independence Stake was organized. President Israel A. Smith presided. President F. Henry Edwards discussed the historical background of the organization. President W. Wallace Smith offered the invocation, and Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith gave the benediction.

Elder C. V. Graham was made stake president, and Bishop Harold W. Cackler was made stake bishop. Glaude A. Smith, pastor of Stone Church, and Fred O. Davies, pastor of Walnut Park, were made counselors to Brother Graham. Elder M. L. Parker was approved as counselor to Brother Cackler.

Nine members of the Stake High Council were approved. They were Lloyd L. Bland, L. F. P. Curry, Ralph A. Harder, Chris B. Hartshorn, Don V. Lents, Joseph E. Kelsey, Howard C. Timm, Roy C. Thrutchley, and Wilfred E. Wakeman. All city-wide officers were sustained for the remainder of the year.

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

The Hilo Oratorio Society presented a cantata called "The Crucifixion" on Good Friday. Elder James Kemp was one of the conductors of the sixty-voice choir. Other members taking part were Esther Aki, Takeko Hayashi, Sadako Ishizaki, Alice Kawamura, Helen Kemp, Masako Odachi, Carrie Wagner, Etsuko Yamamoto, Clara Camara, Raymond Kaaihue.

NEW CHURCH

On May 9, delegates, including Pastor V. D. Ruch from Council Bluffs, met in the office of the First Presidency to consult with the presidency and the bishopric regarding plans for a new church building in Council Bluffs.

CAMPUS SPEAKER

Carl Mesle, Youth Leader in Zion, was guest speaker at Graceland College on May 7. He spoke on the subject, "Returning to Our Home Leagues." This talk was part of a series called "Into Our Home Fields," that is being presented to Gracelanders by various speakers.

Enticed to Do Good

By ROBERT J. MILLER

READING: Book of Moroni 7: 5-17.

Disciples of our Lord should be expressly clear upon this one point: "Every good thing cometh from God, for the Devil at no time enticeth man to do good." God and Satan are the authors of two distinct ideologies—the good and evil ways of life. They never compromise or borrow one another's tools. Every moment of every day each is consumed with a single desire; that of bringing about his ultimate purpose—salvation or destruction.

However, there are times when Satan appears to incorporate good with his evil deeds. In such cases you may be sure the mark of "good" is placed upon the act to deceive the innocent into subscribing to the evil purpose Satan has in mind. If there be good in it, Satan has planned it with the intent of his evil designs outweighing and nullifying the good, the sum total of the purpose being evil. The good that Satan appears to do is counterfeit.

An example of this is to be found in questionable sports events which are sponsored for a charitable cause with a certain amount of the proceeds going for some benevolent purpose. Upon close examination we will probably find more harm than good resulting from this if it makes converts to such sports as boxing and wrestling. The greatest harm may not be from conversion to the sport as to the fact that these converts are brought into closer fellowship with evil companions and worldly ways. Again, lotteries to raise funds to build churches can hardly be said to carry the stamp of divine approval, for they teach people to gamble, seek the easy way—something for nothing.

SALVATION is not the first prize in a lottery. God is not deceitful; he doesn't offer easy or loose ways to salvation; his purposes are above reproach and will endure the light of close inspection by the measure of truth.

As the Scripture states, there is something of the divine nature in every man showing him the road to salvation. Some call it conscience. Man's duty is to honestly respect its promptings that it may ever have an active part in his life. Eventually it will lead him to God.—From the Columbus Challenger.

OUR "WHITE HOUSE"

ONE OF THE SPRING TREATS in Missouri is the blooming of the redbud trees, which began this year about April 18. Before the leaves come out, the branches are covered with red blossoms, some of them a deeper shade, almost a purple. Few redbuds are large; they nestle in small sunny spots near the greater elms and maples, like a touch of feminine beauty in a strong masculine world.

One of the loveliest of redbuds we have seen is at the home of President Israel A. Smith. Rather unusual and picturesque in its formation, it makes a work of natural art against the white walls and green windows of the home. This tree was planted by Sister Smith's brother, Ralph Grenawalt, one day when she was away. It made a happy surprise at the time and, since his passing, is a reminder of his love and thoughtfulness.

The home itself is an attractive and comfortable structure, representative of the tastes prevalent around the close of the Victorian period. It remains to us from a period of history and a way of life that has closed. Such houses will be regarded with increased appreciation as time goes on. Its broad veranda, the wide windows, the high ceilings, and spacious rooms all belong to an era of comfort and gracious living, of hospitality and generosity that are being lost today.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH made his home there in his later years, receiving visitors from all over the country and around the world—men in positions of responsibility in the church and in business. In this home Wallace Smith, lately called to the Presidency, grew to young manhood. There President Israel Smith and Sister Nina Smith preserve the spirit of tranquility and kindness, of purpose and devotion, that has always belonged to this home.

For church people, historic associations and ties of affection give this home a special significance. Memories of great occasions pervade it, and there are reminiscences of those we have loved in other days, now gone to their heavenly reward.

Speaking humbly and reverently, this home is the "White House" of the church.

Blessed Are the Poor in Spirit For Theirs Is the Kingdom of Heaven

THE OLD TESTAMENT is full of descriptions of the spirit of the world—the spirit of selfish wealth with its attendant cruelty. In contrast to this are the descriptions of the oppressed poor, who are the friends of God. Not all of the poor are the disciples of Christ—only those who are reborn by the Spirit of God, those who have refused to let possessions become their God.

Our Lord has, as recorded by St. Matthew, gone beneath the surface and based his kingdom, the character of his citizens, not upon actual poverty but upon the detachment of possessions. The world says, "Get all you can and keep it." Christ says, "Blessed are they who get all they can in righteousness and use it for the betterment of their fellowmen."

"Blessed are the poor in spirit" is a difficult phrase and can be interpreted in two ways.

First—these feel themselves spiritually poor and in need of all things. They approach God in the spirit of penitence and humility, beseeching him to supply their needs, clothe their nakedness, give them strength to earn their daily bread, and enrich their poverty of spirit. This spirit is the opposite of pride, self-righteousness, and conceit. It is the spirit of the publican rather than the spirit of the Pharisee.

Second—it also could have reference to economic poverty—this is especially true in the version of St. Luke. It is inferred here that a true Christian, rich or poor, must have the spirit of poverty. We must possess our wealth as if we possess it not and be willing to resign it at any time without regret. We should be able to say with Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord taketh away." The Rich Young Ruler lost salvation because he was unable to give up his possessions—"But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions."—Matthew 19: 16-22.

No man can let his possessions rule him and expect to receive the blessed life. Job understood the meaning of detachment from one's possessions. Job used aright what God gave him. He recognized the sovereignty of God. The Lord recalled what he had given and Job gave it up freely. Being detached from possessions is poverty of Spirit. When we have food and covering, at least let us be content and praise the name of the Lord.

JESUS ANNOUNCED that the reason for his coming was so the poor might hear the gospel (Luke 4: 18). He is proclaiming his religion as one of love, not force. Blessedness is even higher than happiness. Happiness comes from without and is dependent upon circumstances; blessedness is an inner fountain of joy in the soul itself, which no outward circumstance can effect. Blessedness consists in standing in right relation with God, and realizing the true law of a man's creation. According to Christ, the blessed life can be enjoyed even by those who are unhappy.

The Greeks thought that the blessed life was possible for only a few—that it was impossible for slaves, the diseased, the poor, and those who die young. Christ's teaching was different. He said the blessed life was possible for all mankind—for the meanest slave and the most wretched cripple, as well as the prosperous. The Greeks taught that the wise man was blessed. Jesus opened the blessed life to the simple and the uneducated. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly at heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

OUR LORD SAYS, then, blessed are those who are detached from the desires of the flesh. Paul caught the same vision when he called people to "repent from dead works." Of course, we look to Christ for the supreme illustration, for this beatitude expresses his own character. He was detached. The incarnation was a self-emptying. He didn't cling to all the glories of heaven, but "emptied himself" and refused to lay up treasure on earth.

Paul said, "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—II Corinthians 8: 9. Jesus set the example of clinging to nothing external. He abandoned ease, popularity, the favor of the great and even the sympathy of his friends. Each privilege in turn was abandoned without a murmur. He stood empty, persecuted before Pilate, and said, "Thou sayest I am a king." And the generations since have witnessed that he spoke the truth.

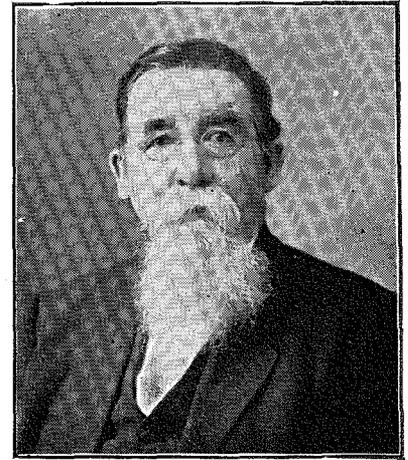

So we, like him, must be willing to submit ourselves to full surrender, ready to give all for the establishment of God's kingdom on earth as it is in heaven. As Paul said, we must be found "having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

Our Lord asks all baptized Christians, to have the spirit of poverty—to possess their wealth as if they possessed it not; to be willing to resign it at any time without regret; and to say with Job, "The Lord gave, the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

A Tract and a Prophetic Promise

A Story of the Tract, "The Church of Jesus Christ"

By WILLIAM LEWIS

William Lewis

NOBODY KNOWS how many people have been started on the path to conversion and membership in the church through reading the tract by William Lewis, "The Church of Jesus Christ: Where Is It? How Shall I Know It?" Brother Lewis came to America as a young boy with his parents. In 1901 he returned to his native Wales with his family, as a self-sustaining missionary, to present the gospel to his people. The work was going slowly, and he needed printed literature. One night he dreamed of writing a tract in Welsh, and the words of it were given to him. In the morning he arose and wrote it as he had received it in the dream, as nearly as he could remember it. He had it published, and it was a great help in his work. His assistant, Frank Pierce, a well-educated young man, translated it into English, and it was published in the United States where it began an even greater period of usefulness. It has been one of the most popular missionary items issued by the Herald Publishing House.

TIME BROUGHT CHANGES, and to some the tract seemed "old fashioned" and "out of date." When the last printing was sold, it was "out of print" and remained so for a number of years. But year after year there was a steady demand for it. Nothing really took its place. Nothing was done to reissue it.

Obviously the work was not perfect, and it needed reorganization. Yet it had merits and a strong appeal, for it was written in a spirit that touched people's hearts, and its good qualities should not be lost. The First Presidency decided, in the latter part of 1949, that it should be revised for a new edition, and directed the undersigned to do the work, which was done between November 15 and 24, and the new edition was brought out early in 1950. Thus the tract was given a new opportunity to continue its service.

WE DID NOT KNOW that this reprieve was a fulfillment of a prophecy given more than thirty years ago, until we received a letter on April 24 from the daughter of William Lewis, Mrs. Mark (Ruth) Holman of Independence. It will be of considerable interest to all those who use the tract. We quote a part of the letter:

Just a note of thanks to you for your careful revision and modernization of William Lewis's tract, "The Church of Jesus Christ, etc.," When you called me about three months ago and read "The Author and the Tract" which you had written for an insert, I was surprised to hear it was to be reprinted. I thought it was off the market for good and that its mission had been fulfilled. As you were reading your explanation over the phone, there flashed into my mind a picture of the last thirty-six hours of father's life

I am sure you are unaware of the part you have played in fulfilling a prediction—or prophecy—given by Gomer T. Griffiths in 1919. Brother Griffiths and my father had been very good friends for more than fifty years. Both were Welshmen and worked together in Wales and America. When Brother Griffiths heard that father was critically ill, he came to St. Joseph to see him. On Friday afternoon he spent about half an hour in the room with father. They talked in Welsh and the last words ever spoken by father were to Brother Griffiths that day. As soon as Brother Griffiths and R. S. Salyards left the house, father lapsed into a coma which lasted until his death the next night, Saturday.

The same night, Friday, Brother Griffiths came back to the house. He talked with the family and friends downstairs in the library, and then when he was getting ready to leave, said, "Now you children and grandchildren, come upstairs into your father's room. I want to talk to you." We did as he requested. The room was too crowded for all of us to go in, and I remember standing in the doorway of the adjoining hall and listening very closely to every word Brother Griffiths said. He talked for several minutes about the ministry performed by father in the past years and wound up by saying, "And while William is being called to the other world where evidently God has work for him, still the fruits of his labor here will live on. Things which he has written will live on and on and many, many years after he has gone will still bear fruit."

To outward appearances, father was unconscious, totally paralyzed, but tears streamed down his face, and mother, who was sitting by his side, wiped them away. We have always felt he heard and understood, although he could not speak.

And now my own testimony. When I began to work on this tract, I felt the warmth of the good Spirit in reading it and recognized its many merits, which I was resolved to preserve. It needed correction and clarification at points; it needed rearrangement in some parts. But it was good timber, a material that would last. God had left the touch of his hand upon it. I hope that there is a long career of service ahead for this tract in the missionary work of the church.—L. J. L.

QUESTIONS:

In the story of creation (Genesis 1) does a day refer to a twenty-four hour period or a longer period of time?

In Genesis 11:2, 3, God rests on the seventh day and sanctifies that day. With Sunday falling on the first calendar day of the week, how do we explain it to be the seventh day on which we are to rest?

Iowa

Mrs. F. S. W.

ANSWERS:

Without doubt the days of creation mentioned in the first chapter of Genesis refer to periods other than our twenty-four hour solar day determined by the rotation of the earth on its axis, which is part of its movement in its orbit of 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 46 seconds around the sun.

Three days of creative activity passed before the sun was established, therefore, those days could not have been our twenty-four hour solar days.

The word "day" used in connection with the creation is translated from the Hebrew word yom, or otherwise spelled yom. That word is frequently used to indicate indefinite eras or periods of time. In many places in the Bible—for example, Genesis 2:4—it covers the entire period of creation: "the day that the Lord made the heaven and the earth."

These considerations, (1) the fact that the sun, which is the chief factor in determining the solar day of twenty-four hours, was not established or set in relationship to the earth until the fourth creative day, and (2) the very general and indefinite meaning of the Hebrew word yom, which is translated "day," indicates very clearly that the solar day is not meant but more likely the terms "age" or "season" are applicable.

It is true that the Lord rested on the seventh day and sanctified it. But that rest was taken by God unto himself as a result of his creative work. Man, as a creature and not a creator, did not participate in the creation and therefore did not earn the rest period. Neither was it committed to man as an earthly duty during the creative period and is not heard of until it was given to Moses on the stones containing the Ten Commandments. It might help to note that the term "seventh day," for both Jews and Christians, stems from the preceding six days of labor, though the event memorialized under each covenant differs.

That man was not created physically at the time the Lord rested is clearly stated in Genesis 2:5-7.

And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew: for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the earth. But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.

From that day until Moses received the law, some 1,491 years later, there is no reference to a command to keep the Sabbath; but contrawise do we read:

The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.—Deuteronomy 5:3.

The covenant, including the Ten Commandments, in which is specified the keeping of the Sabbath, follows in the same chapter. Singularly, the argument used in Exodus 20:11, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth. . . ." is not found in the Deuteronomy statement. Of that statement we read:

These are the words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of fire, of the cloud, and of thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me.—Deuteronomy 5:22.

If God did not add any more than this account given in Deuteronomy, then Exodus 20:11 must be incidental material inserted by Moses as a commentary or an argument.

The Sabbath day as given to Moses was not a universal law. It was a national memorial day.

And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day.—Deuteronomy 5: 15.

The gospel deliverance from death is more far reaching than a national release from Egyptian bondage. It is universal in its effect and has more reason for being celebrated than the Egyptian release which concerned the ancient Israelites alone. And the significant event that makes that universal deliverance from death possible is the resurrection of Christ.

I am he that liveth, and was dead, and, Behold, I am alive evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and death.—Revelation 1: 18.

The resurrection of Jesus took place on the first day of the week. It is natural to think that such a tremendous event should supersede any minor national event, such as deliverance from earthly bondage, in the minds of the early Christians. And so we find record of the disciples breaking bread on the first day of the week. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them."—Acts 20: 7. (See also I Corinthians 16: 2.) Gradually the Lord's day superseded the old national sabbath of ancient Israel. Such a change was fully endorsed by the church fathers. One of them, Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, who lived in the days of the apostles, said, "It is absurd to name Jesus Christ, and to Judaize. For the Christian religion did not embrace the Jewish, but the Jewish the Christian."—Epistle to Magnesians 3: 11.

QUESTION:

1. In the parable of the ten virgins, what does the oil represent?
2. In Revelation 6: 6 the voice says, "A measure of wheat for a penny, and a measure of barley for a penny; and hurt not thou the oil and the wine." Does this oil represent the same thing?
Ontario. E.W.D.

ANSWER:

1. The oil in this parable represents the Holy Spirit of God. It is the only distinction between those "possessors" of the true faith and the "professors." The wise virgins possessed Christ, while the foolish ones professed him. Christ was to be in his true disciples through his Spirit (John 14: 19, 20). Oil was widely used in Palestine for lighting, and the prophets associated it with the Spirit of God (Zechariah 4: 1-6).
2. The oil mentioned in Revelation 6: 6 does not represent the same thing as the oil in the parable of the ten virgins.

The oil here is associated with the black horse (verse 5), and this horse represents famine. Wheat and barley were always a staple food commodity in Palestine and life depended on them. Oil and wine were pleasantries, and people could live without them. Failure was to hit the items of food that were needed the most, but the pleasantries were to remain in abundance.

QUESTION:

Who baptized John the Baptist?

ANSWER:

Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4 states that he was baptized while in his childhood, but I do not recall any information which states by whom he was baptized. We are told that he was ordained by an angel, but whether he was baptized by an angel or by his father or by someone else appears uncertain. A. B. PHILLIPS

An Easter Service in the Yukon

A News Letter From Jean Barnett

R.C.A.F. Station

Whitehorse, Yukon Territory

Dear Herald Friends:

I had to write to you this morning and share with you the joyous experience of Easter Sunday. I shall always feel that you have a partnership in the work up here. I would like to share the good news with each one who has written encouraging letters and given help, and perhaps I can do so in some corner of the Herald.

Easter week end started like a lion blustering down out of the hills. First of all the mountains disappeared behind a dark shroud, then a heavy ceiling settled over our valley. The "Sked" zoomed low overhead, carrying the church school supplies that I needed so urgently for Sunday's program. . . . The blizzard was solid, and the Sked had to turn back to Watson Lake until the afternoon. By the time she came back it was snowing harder than ever. . . . She circled and circled, the boys and I listened, watched, and prayed. Then at six o'clock my neighbor looked over—he was down, a safe landing, and our supplies with it.

The Recreation Hall had its grimy face lifted on Good Friday, and Saturday Camp Commandant, Major Howard, second in charge of the Canadian Army here, and supervisor of our Intermediate Boys' Bible Class, brought up thirty-five yards of white bunting. He and the Padre lined the dark stage walls with it and the Padre's wife, Dot, and I planted our paper daffodils and lilies along the little white picket fence. With the help of spotlights, we silhouetted the "Shadow of the Cross" on the screen, and under it a real Easter lily, a costly and precious thing up here.

When the children lined up behind the picket fence to sing "Christ the Lord is risen, this is Easter Day," I'm sure no cathedral shone brighter in praise than our hall. When the Padre was speaking of the agony on the cross, one little tot said to his mother, "But, Mummy, Jesus rose again." And that is what I have been telling them—"Jesus lives."

In the congregation on Sunday morning, we had a wonderful response—over two hundred children and parents, about half of the latter. When I think back one year and remember all the skeptical people who thought me a little queer, and compare the present attitude and support with it, it is wonderful. Still, I knew that this work would succeed because I was working for One who never fails.

So many thanks to all the kind people who have written,

Your sister in Christ,

JEAN BARNETT.

A Single Blossom - By SUE THOMAN

ELLEN FOSTER GAZED OUT of the speeding automobile, her thoughts filled with the memory of her mother who had passed on several years ago. It was Memorial Day, and the back seat of the car was banked high with multicolored flowers as Ellen and her husband George were on their way to the cemetery to decorate her mother's grave.

Soon the car left the busy city and rolled along through the blossoming countryside.

"Ellen," George spoke softly, not wanting to intrude too suddenly on his wife's deep thoughts, "what are you thinking? You haven't said anything for miles."

"Huh! O—I'm sorry, George, my mind had gone back to that first time we came to the cemetery after Mother had passed on and how neglected and forlorn some of the other graves looked after we finished decorating Mother's," Ellen paused.

"Yes," smiled George, "and then you dismantled it and placed a single blossom on each of the other graves all around."

"Even a single blossom was better than none. I like to think that those who have gone on are remembered by us," Ellen defended.

"Oh, that was all right, but you must remember that there are many who live too far to come to decorate the graves of their loved ones," answered George.

"I'm not really blaming them, dear. That is why I feel that those of us who live near and are able to, should remember those who have served so well," said Ellen.

BY THIS TIME the car had passed through the wrought-iron gate and slowly wound its way over the stony path. It was so beautiful and still that Ellen caught her breath with the wonderful peace of it all. Even the birds sang softly in tune with the stillness. Soon they stopped beside a neat grave with a simple headstone. Ellen got out of the car and stood for a few moments beside her mother's grave in quiet prayer. Then she put on her garden gloves and knelt and started clearing the dried scars of winter off the mound. She worked quickly as George began to bring the baskets of flowers from the car.

For several hours the two of them worked, moving quietly from one grave to another, saying little but with a deep understanding of what was in each other's hearts.

"I think I'll go over and place some flowers on the graves of Joseph Smith and Brother Fred M.," George said.

"That will be fine," answered Ellen, "I will be through here in just a few minutes."

AS GEORGE WALKED AWAY, his arms filled with flowers, Ellen's eyes misted for a moment as she brushed away a wisp of hair that had fallen across her face. A figure suddenly stepped out from the path and approached Ellen hesitantly.

"Hello!" the figure called. "Are you Ellen Foster?"

Startled, Ellen turned and stood up quickly.

"Why—yes, I am," she answered slowly.

"I'm Sister Perry from California, and I was visiting my son, so we decided to come out and visit my father's and grandfather's graves. You wouldn't remember them, perhaps. But they were missionaries in the church for years. Robinson was the name."

"Yes," Ellen hesitated, "I remember reading that name on the headstones. They are buried next to my mother. I hope you didn't mind my placing some flowers on their graves."

"Mind! My dear, I'm so grateful to you. I have wondered and worried about their graves. But I understand from some friends that you have given them the same loving care that you have given your mother's. How can I ever repay you?"

"Repay?—I have received much from doing it. I have felt my mother knows and approves of what I am doing."

"I am sure she does!" and with these words the lady leaned over and kissed Ellen gently on the cheek. Then she turned and walked slowly away.

Ellen stood watching the receding figure for several minutes, then resumed her work, her face aglow. The effort she had made there with her single blossom was good, and her heart was glad.

Songs of Zion -

By MILDRED BELROSE

*My Savior is praying for me,
My Savior is praying for me
I will not doubt nor fear,
This my infinite cheer,
My Savior is praying for me.*

THESE WORDS still float into my consciousness after many, many years; for they are the words of one of my mother's favorite hymns. This song aids us through dark hours when spiritual strength is ebbing, and it has a deep and abiding comfort for me. I was fortunate in having a singing Latter Day Saint mother. She had a large family, and her days were filled to overflowing with numerous wearying tasks. She lacked time to gather us at her knee often and tell us the gospel story, so she sang it to us. My mind has been indelibly impressed with the words of many "Songs of Zion," because Mother sang them as she worked. She had no special vocal talent, nor did she sing in the choir, but she loved the "Songs of Zion." She sang "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me" when in doubt; "'Tis a Glorious Thing to Be in the Light" when filled with joy over her blessings. Among her favorites were "God Will Take Care of You," "Give Me Thy Heart," "We're Marching to Zion," "Dare to Do Right," "Wonderful Words of Life," and "Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On." When these hymns are sung I can still hear her singing in the ear of my memory. Closing my eyes in retrospection, I see her with swift skill ironing a shirt, sewing on a button, tacking on a half sole, or whipping up some pancakes with a song on her lips.

The Ladies' Aid which often met at our home had for its theme song, "Earnest Workers for the Master." What a world of truth is in it:

*Earnest workers for the Master
Send a word along the line,
We shall never know disaster,
Trusting in the power divine.*

MOTHER WAS CALLED to her heavenly home just as I was launching my experience as a homemaker, but through her favorite songs, she lingers in spirit to help me in my adventure. Remembering her counsel to sing the "Songs of Zion" through trials and days of work, I soon found myself singing her songs and some of my own favorites as well. In times of perplexity I found comfort in "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me" and "Will Your Anchor Hold."

*God will take care of you,
Long as you live;
Granting you blessings
None other can give.*

These words of comfort came when my husband lay desperately ill with diphtheria, and when the children had the measles and pneumonia.

As my own little girl grew up, some of my most beloved hymns became hers. At Wednesday evening prayer service, before leaving her home for the first time to attend Graceland College, she requested that we sing "Jesus, My Shepherd." In my heart swelled the knowledge that somehow the things Mother had written indelibly in my memory, I had succeeded in instilling in my own daughter's memory with God's help and the "Songs of Zion."

ARE WE "Marching to Zion" in our homes with the "Songs of Zion" on our lips? They are some of the best tools we have to hold the hearts of our children and mold their thinking and actions in later life. How can they cheat in arithmetic or history with "I would be true, for there are those who trust me" ringing in their ears? How can they carry evil stories or mix with unclean companions with "I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord, I'll be what you want me to be" burning in their conscience?

Anxiety, anger, fear, and discouragement cannot abide in a soul where a song dwells. When you become the victim of frustrating emotion, compel yourself to sing a comforting hymn. Your soul will soon be lifted and filled with the light of God's Holy Spirit, and all your anxiety and fears will be dispelled.

*How sweet are the songs of Jesus,
Of tenderest melody,
The hope of the heart to waken,
Oh, sing them, yes, sing for me.*

*No songs like the songs of Jesus,
To lighten the weary heart,
Its burdens of pain to lessen,
Or bid them far hence depart.*

*Had we not the songs of Jesus,
How sad all the world would be,
Our hope would be lost in darkness,
And life lose its melody.*

*Then hail to the songs of Jesus,
And welcome their joyous strains,
The songs of that wondrous story,
How Jesus in triumph reigns.*

*Sweet songs, songs of Jesus,
Sweet songs, sing them to me,
Sing them with the Spirit,
Sing them, yes, sing for me.*

-Zion's Praises, No. 145.

Mothers who sing the songs of Jesus in their homes as they work will bring to our Heavenly Father and the church the strength of this generation.

Come, let us sing the "Songs of Zion" every day of the week.

LONGVIEW, TEXAS.—After a period of nearly two years of inactivity due to a lack of priesthood help, this group was reorganized on April 30. Preaching services were first held on Easter Sunday. After the service a picnic dinner was held outdoors.

Priest Paul A. Hacker, who has recently moved to East Texas from Houston, preached every Sunday morning in April. On April 30 an election of church school officers was held and a course of study planned. New officers are Raymond Aaron, church school supervisor; Sister Carl Aaron, secretary and treasurer; Sister Clifford Aaron, supervisor of the children's department; Sister Paul Hacker, music director; Sister James Blakely, chorister, and Carl Aaron, custodian.

Paul Hacker was elected pastor of the group. He chose Priest Birkhead as his assistant. Brother and Sister Birkhead moved to East Texas from Ava, Missouri, recently.

Brother C. C. Aaron, 1929 Gladwater Road, Longview, and Paul Hacker, 2010 West Pine St., Tyler, were given the work of contacting all Saints who live near East Texas.—Reported by PAUL HACKER.

SANDUSKY, MICHIGAN.—The Eastern Michigan District held a church school institute on April 29 and 30. The theme was "Each one win one." Elder John Darling rendered a fine ministry as institute leader assisted by Elders James C. Phillips, Earl Diem, and Eldon Winters. Elder John Rogers, district church school director, was responsible for the planning and organizing of the institute. Many local workers assisted as class leaders and panel discussion participants. The excellent classes were concluded Saturday evening by a banquet served by the women's department.

The church was filled Sunday morning for further worship, classwork, and preaching. Six people summarized the institute in the afternoon under the direction of Elder Darling. The concluding service was a Communion dedication service in charge of District President James C. Phillips.—Reported by ISABEL PHILLIPS.

BOISE, IDAHO.—On March 10 the adult group and the Zion's League met together to see the picture, "Air Age of 1950," shown by the Idaho State Aeronautic Bureau. Following the picture, Helen Jones gave a talk on Palestine. She was stationed there during her service in the war.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The semi-annual Utah-Idaho Conference was held February 25 and 26 in Salt Lake City. A business meeting was held Saturday evening. President Ralph Briggs was in charge of the prayer meeting and worship service held Sunday morning. Seventy Russell Ralston and the district presidency were in charge of the Communion service held later. In the afternoon the new baptismal font was dedicated by Elder E. E. Richards, a class was conducted by Elder Alfred H. Yale, and a confirmation service in charge of Brother Ralston was held.

On March 24 Brother Ralston was master of ceremonies at a birthday party held in the basement of the church. Twelve tables were set and decorated to represent the twelve months of the year, and everyone was seated according to his birthdate.

RUPERT, IDAHO.—An Easter program was given on Easter morning followed by a sermon by Pastor Tom Ultican. An outdoor picnic planned for that day had to be changed to a dinner at the church on account of a cold wind.—The Rock Mountain Vigil.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Apostle Donald O. Chesworth and Elder James Daugherty were guest speakers during the month of April. District President C. H. Archibald spoke on Easter Sunday. From April 23 to 28 Elder Roy Weldon preached a series of missionary sermons, using slides. Attendance never dropped below 200 and reached the 300 mark on a couple of evenings.—Reported by FRANK McDONALD.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—On May 7 John William Chapman III, infant son of John William Chapman II and Shirley Louise Harrington was blessed by Elders Evan Fry and William Worth, Jr.

God's Auditors - By RICHARD PRICE

MONDAY NIGHT two priests visited the Benston home. During the conversation, they asked a number of searching questions which were politely and carefully answered.

Parma Lou, age ten, had her first good opportunity the following night at the family altar to ask why they were so inquisitive.

"Parma, come sit by me," her father said, "and I will tell you a story. Long ago the Lord made the earth, as you know, and he placed us on it so that we might learn how to live the way he lives."

"Why not live our own way—just as we do now? I like it this way."

"Why, Parma!" her mother said. "Just this evening you came home crying because you saw some drunkards fighting on the street."

"Yes," her father continued, "you like life as we are trying to live it, but not as you see non-Christian people living. There is much drunkenness, laziness, and wrong in the world which make unemployment, war, and various other troubles."

"You mean that things do not have to be this way?" questioned Parma.

"Course not," her teen-aged brother Dale blurted out. "It won't be this way in Zion, will it, Daddy?"

"It certainly won't, Dale. You see, the Lord placed us here to mature."

"To grow up, that is," Dale stated.

"That is one way of saying it," Mother Benston added. "While we are here on the earth we are supposed to have enough experiences to teach us how to live on God's plane of life. Then we will become ready to live in heaven with him."

"And we will live with him right here on the earth, too—during the millennium, won't we?" Dale asked.

"Yes," his father answered, "but it makes a difference as to what kind of experiences we have. One who refuses to do anything but evil can never rise to God's level; while those who attend church and strive always to train themselves to be like Jesus shall learn to appreciate, understand, and enjoy heavenly life."

"You mean we might not enjoy living in heaven now?" Dale queried.

"Do you like classical music and art, Dale?"

"Nah!"

"Well, you may someday when you understand it," Father answered. "No doubt everyone would enjoy heaven some, but we shall appreciate it much more when we fully understand God and his way of life."

"God is sure good!" Parma explained.

"We haven't seen anything yet!" Dale added.

"You are both right," Mother said, her heart warming within. "So you see how important it is for us to rise to God's level."

"Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect," Dale quoted quickly.

"Go ahead with the story, Daddy."

I TOLD YOU that God made the world, and that everything in it belongs to him, didn't I?"

"That's right," Parma asserted.

"Well," Father continued, "when he placed us here to become like him, he provided all the things we need in order to have an abundant and happy life. And he made us stewards over everything we possess. But these things are still not ours—they are really his. He commands us to use them as wisely as possible and render an account of our stewardships to him and to the ministers he has called for that purpose."

"What does 'render an account' mean?" Parma questioned seriously.

"It means to keep a record and report it," Mother answered with a smile, as she prepared to read that evening's page of Daily Bread.

"What do we render our accounts of?" Dale asked.

"We are commanded to report every penny of our income and expense, our time, our talents, and all the other things we possess."

"Are reading and everything talents?" Parma Lou wondered aloud.

"They certainly are," Father explained. "And we'll be judged by what we read, how we use our musical talents, and how well we do our everyday work."

"Whom do we render our accounts to, Dad? Christ can't come down and go over every move we make, can he?" Dale questioned.

"We'll render our accounts on judgment day in heaven; won't we, Daddy?"

"Yes, Parma," Father said as he stroked her hair. "But it isn't just at the judgment bar that we are to render accounts of our stewardships. Remember when we each filed our inventory statements to the Presiding Bishopric last year? We had Brother Al, our Bishop's Agent, come to our home and go over all our financial problems with us."

"I remember! He got us to buy this house so we wouldn't have to pay rent the rest of our lives, didn't he?"

"Yes, he helped us in many ways. Well, we were rendering accounts of our stewardships by filing our statements and having Brother Al counsel us."

HOW DO WE make an account of time and other things, Dad?"

"Well, we don't send in written reports to anyone, Dale. But we are supposed to watch closely how we use them, and remember always that we will be called to account for it at the judgment bar of God."

"Then we don't give an account of our other possessions right here in this life?"

"Yes, we do," Father continued. "Just last night the men of our priesthood asked about our stewardships over our church work, our leisure time, and many other things—remember?"

"Is that why they asked all those questions?" Parma asked excitedly.

"That is why," Mother assured. "You see, they are human too, but God has ordained them to 'watch over the church' and to 'exhort all to righteousness.' And they love God and his kingdom and his children."

"Daddy, what did you call those men who came to your office and checked everything last week?"

"They were the company's auditors. They came to see if we were doing everything the way the company wanted it done and to help us find mistakes," Father answered in a puzzled manner.

"Then, are the priesthood men God's auditors, Daddy?"

"I never thought of it that way before, Parma. But if the company can have auditors, why can't God, since he is a good businessman? Yes, Parma girl, they are God's auditors."

Religion — a Toy, a Tool,

ALL OVER THE WORLD, people are trying to diagnose our national and international ills. Some of us blame the various "isms." Some of us blame our local congressman. Some of us find it convenient to blame God directly. Few of us think of putting the blame where it more properly belongs—on religion. But it isn't religion as religion that is at fault. The fault lies in the use we make of it.

Listed according to activity, there seem to be three major categories into which we Christians fall. In these categories, we use religion as a toy, a tool, or a taskmaster.

The Taskmaster Religion, although it is disappearing rapidly under the pressure of our evolving mores, is not altogether bad even by modern standards. This was the religion of our forefathers, the men of literal interpretation and strict practice; men with a Bible in one hand and a birch rod in the other. For them, God was as stern and uncompromising as they were themselves. Religion was a matter of four-hour church meetings, lengthy prayers, fire-and-brimstone sermons, tedious Sabbaths, and the minister-for-dinner twice a year. Salvation was as simple a thing as this: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Good men went to their reward, and evil men went to eternal damnation with a quickness and dispatch which reflected credit on the efficiency of the heavenly office staff.

The Taskmaster Religion is one in which a frowning God hovers over your shoulder and says, "Do this, do that; don't dare go ice skating on your new skates on Christmas afternoon if Christmas falls on Sunday."

In one sense it is too bad there are so few of the Taskmaster school left because they are so much to be preferred to the ultra-moderns who have replaced them. In the swing from the far right to the far left are those who use religion as a toy.

THE TOY RELIGION is subscribed to by those who like to suck the sugar coating off of pills and throw the pills away. For these people, religion is no more than a handy thing to have around the house for use when the minister drops in unexpectedly or in case God should suddenly decide to call the whole thing off without warning. They want all the benefits of religion—eternal bliss in heaven, the mystic "glamour" of speaking in tongues, administration to the sick, and a cheap holiday beside some nice lake at reunion—without paying the price.

The classic example of a member of this popular category is recorded in the Bible where a wealthy young man asked Christ what he must do to be saved and, when Christ told him he would be required to sacrifice the things of the world, he turned away sorrowing. The price was too great. He wanted to keep the comforts of his old life, his old friends, his old habits. When he saw he could not have both, he at least was honest enough to admit it and go on his way.

The trouble with people of the Toy Religion class is not that they are not good men, because they are. But they are good for very little. They may be among our more intelligent and better educated members; they may be generous with their financial support and offer the most willing hospitality to visiting missionaries; it may be their eyes that fill most readily with tears at a powerful sermon. But when they are called to task for their worldly way of life, they answer, "Yes, I know it's not right, but I just can't give it up." They have all the attributes for the finest kind of Zion builders, but they will never build Zion. They won't work at it.

THE IDEA of the Tool Religion opens up an entirely different line of thought. It goes like this:

Religion is the tool with which we build salvation. Salvation is more than merely the state of being saved after death. Salvation means also the state of being saved from the evils of this world. The evils of this world are disease, war, poverty, famine—all of the things that kill men's bodies as well as their souls. Religion, therefore, is more concerned with life than with death.

or a Taskmaster - By JOSEPHINE SKELTON

The life with which it has to do is the good life, the Zionite life. The pitiable thing today is that we have the blueprints for the type of society which God recommends for man; we have the knowledge and the intelligence, but we refuse to use the tool of religion to weld our scientific-social-economic-political interests together.

Suppose we compare religion to a welding torch. Life is a complex thing, and the different parts which make up the whole may exist on any of three levels—moral, amoral, or immoral. How can we expect the social part of our lives to be moral if our political life is immoral and our economic-scientific life is amoral? We cannot be moral in just one or two divisions of living; it must be all or nothing. To make it all rather than nothing, we must bring all of the parts of life into moral alignment and then weld them there with the torch of religion.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLE of applied religion is to refrain from doing evil—and among the evils are such things as wasting our time, our talents, our ambitions, and our affections on things which are of no consequence in building Zion. This may be carried over into our analogy to mean turning on the electricity in the welding torch.

But turning on the electricity is only the first step. If we leave the welding torch sitting on the work bench or turned in the wrong direction from the job at hand, the whole effect of turning the switch will be wasted.

The second principle of applied religion is to begin living in a godlike way. This is where action comes in. This is where we put the different parts of life in a straight line and weld them firmly in place. The second step cannot be done without the first, and the first step is of no practical value without the second.

If we look at it closely, we can see that the first step is actually static. It is the cessation of evil, and here we may count all dead works (from wasting money on pinball machines to wasting too much time in the work of fraternal organizations at the expense of family and church matters) as being evils of varying degree. The active part of our theory of using religion as a tool lies in living the goodly life. If we simply stop wasting money on pinball machines, we are only repenting from the evil and being statically good. To make our goodness good for something, we would have to use the money we saved thereby for a constructive purpose—such as paying our expenses to a reunion this summer. Similarly, it does no good to save time from one project unless we use the time we save actively in a better project.

SURELY when God made the universe and put man on earth as the great experiment, he intended that religion should be used as a tool. He could not have meant it to be a taskmaster because he gave us our agency and the intelligence to learn how to use it. He could not have meant it to be a toy, because Christ called it a "business," and a good businessman doesn't play around with his job.

No one person can expect to weld the life of the world into moral alignment. Religion is a tool which must be used collectively. Religion is the tool with which we can build a Zionite society that will be safe from the evils of disease, war, poverty, famine, and all of the things which threaten both body and soul. Religion is the tool with which we make for ourselves the "goodly life." Religion is the tool on which God counts for the successful conclusion of his great experiment.

Defeated

After an infidel had concluded a lecture in a village in England, he challenged those present to discussion. Who should accept the challenge but an old, bent woman, in antiquated attire, who went up to the lecturer and said:

"Sir, I have a question to put to you."

"Well, my good woman, what is it?"

"Ten years ago," she said, "I was left a widow, with eight children utterly unprovided for, and nothing to call my own but this Bible. By its direction, and looking to God for strength, I have been enabled to feed myself and family. I am now tottering to the grave; but I am perfectly happy, because I look forward to a life of immortality with Jesus. That's what my religion has done for me. What has your way of thinking done for you?"

"Well, my good lady," rejoined the lecturer, "I don't want to disturb your comfort; but—"

"Oh, that's not the question," said she; "keep to the point, sir. What has your way of thinking done for you?"

The infidel endeavored to shirk the matter again; the meeting gave vent to uproarious applause, and the champion had to go away discomfited by an old woman.

New Horizons

Revelation and Science

Intelligence cannot be ascribed where there is no agency. Agency cannot be exercised unless there is a law. We quote further from Major Mysteries of Science.

Those who have not found scientific ways to restore nature's equilibrium arrive at the age of 40, when they should be in the prime of life, in a general state of decrepitude. They are faced with an increased possibility of from eight major causes: tuberculosis, heart disease, cancer, diabetes, cerebral hemorrhage or apoplexy, pneumonia, nephritis and accidents Dr. George W. Crile, the celebrated surgeon, describes the frontal lobe of the human brain, seat of man's intellect and instrument of his survival, as a "slave driver," mercilessly driving man to many of the diseases typical of civilized life, such as diabetes, goitre, stomach ulcers and soldiers heart"—Pages 86, 87.

Here the use of intelligence (the knowledge of good and evil) seems to bring to pass mortality in man, since he was not permitted to partake of the tree of life.

EVOOLUTIONARY BIOLOGY does not preclude the belief of an endless soul in nature, in the opinion of some scientists, including Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Nobel Prize winner in physics, who holds:

Biologically speaking, life is essentially immortal. . . . The phenomena of emergent evolution, however, strongly suggest that the evolutionary process is directed towards a definite end, with intelligent minds as perhaps the goal. On this view an intelligent mind would be its own reason for existence, and we might reasonably expect nature to preserve at all cost the living souls which it has evolved at such tremendous labor—Pages 60, 61.

We do know that the riddle of the cosmic rays is one of the mysteries of matter of the universe, possibly of life. Millikan points to the rays as a signpost indicating the way to the very doorsteps of creations laboratory.—Page 172.

In Revelation 22: 2 the tree of life is placed definitely in the New Jerusalem which is to come down from God out of heaven.

Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23 makes this significant statement:

And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying, The heavens, they are many and they can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man.

As a further explanation, we quote Section 28: 12:

But, behold, I say unto you, that I, the Lord God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption through faith on the name of mine only begotten Son; and thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation; that by his natural death, he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe, and they that believe not, unto eternal damnation; for they can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, for they will love darkness rather than light, and their deeds are evil, and they receive their wages of whom they list to obey.

This explains more fully Section 22: 23:

As one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

See also Section 22: 3, 21: "for my works are without end, and also my words . . . and by the word of my power have I created them."

Here is shown that "word" refers to the word of power or the creative processes, and that this creative immortality; connected with life and immortality; therefore to bring to pass immortality it is necessary that there be no end to creation's works but that it be a continuous process which is in harmony with the best scientific thinking.

Garbedian raises this question:

But a mystery for which no scientist has attempted a solution is how this primeval substance, the original matter from which creation is said to be constituted, came to be there. Why and how was it endowed with properties of mass, motion, and energy which were to lead to the cosmic evolutionary process as we know it? This is a problem for philosophy, rather than pure science, many men of science say, unwilling to speculate on so momentous a riddle. Jeans, a little more daring, suggests: "If we want a concrete picture of such a creation, we may think of the finger of God agitating the ether."

The prophet, Joseph Smith, Jr., has an answer for this in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5 previously quoted: "The elements are eternal." Genesis 1: 5, Inspired Version, reads: "And my Spirit moved upon the face of the waters, for I am God." Here is an illustration of the "finger of God" in creation.

The Book of Mormon is an outstanding witness of Joseph Smith's prophetic mission, and so far no reasonable proof against it has been advanced. The real reason for this article is to show that he did not lose his prophetic power with the translation of the Book of Mormon nor with the issuing of the Book of Commandments, but, by the power of God, produced some of the most profound, inspired declarations the world has received and which furnish a complete answer to atheistic materialism.

* OSCAR ART

A few days ago somebody in Hollywood saw a shining object in a pile of trash. He pulled it out, and found that it was an "Oscar"—an "Academy Award" to somebody in the movies for superexcellence in something or other. So many are given that they couldn't trace the owner.

Who tossed that Oscar into the junk heap, and why? Perhaps it was because of the "Oscar" kind of art.

In the high school of a neighboring town, there is a large case filled with athletic trophies that nobody ever bothers to look at. There are more than sixty cups, mugs, plaques, and statuettes of athletes in various spread-eagle positions, and not one of them pretty. Either we should make them artistic or quit giving them.

Only this year's heroes are really important. Last year's hero is rather pitied as a "has-been." Even the girl who married him in an ecstasy of hero-worship is quite calm about him now. He is just another average guy to her. . . . And his medals? Why, they are always in the way of something she wants to put there, until finally it ends in the attic or the basement or . . . Hey! There's an idea!

It's a twenty-to-one chance that it was that chap's wife, in an orgy of house-cleaning, who threw the Oscar away!

* DIS & EX

You have seen those "Men of Distinction" smiling at you (or leering, according to your viewpoint) out of the liquor ads. The "Man of Distinction" has a healthy tan, not obtained in any cocktail bar; a good physique, not yet touched by the ravages of alcohol.

But, dear friends and gentle hearts, one big drink of that stuff he has in the glass in his hand, and he ceases to be a man of distinction and becomes a man of extinction.

* VISITOR

There are many people throughout the church, parents and grandparents now, but once young and students at Graceland College, who will be glad to hear news of an old friend. Dr. George N. Briggs, President Emeritus of Graceland College, visited us to express his thanks for something he appreciated. It is probable that he has never forgot a favor during his long and active life. You who remember with gratitude his splendid influence in the lives of the students will be glad to learn that he is exceedingly well for his years, alert, abreast of life and current events, interested in political science and in the processes of history as much as ever. He and Mrs. Briggs spend part of their time in Des Moines, a part in southern California, with members of the family near. Remember how fond he was of "meetings." He still enjoys them, and manages to get to a good many campus functions here and there. Now another of his sons is in Florida, tempting him with tales of a balmy climate and other attractions there. He has almost decided to go. Wherever he goes he finds something interesting to do, read, and think about. From all who know him, best wishes for many years of happy life yet to come.

* THE GREAT MAN

will never think of himself as a great man. In fact, he will have little time to think of himself.

L. D. S. Visual Missionary Materials

Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

This set of slides is the most authoritative set yet assembled on the subject of Book of Mormon Archaeology. Apostle Paul Hanson, with the collaboration of other members of the Society for Archaeological Research, has selected the best and most significant material from over 2000 slides for use in this set. It is made up of 40 slides; 31 in color, 5 color text, and 4 sepia, together with a printed manual. Set No. 6, 40 slides and manual $15.00

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper

In the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, as in some other features of the gospel, we deal with a combination of physical symbols that relate to and express spiritual realities. The purpose of this aid is to help church members to a better understanding of the symbols and what they mean. It may also be used to good advantage with nonmembers in explaining the significance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Set No. 5, 16 slides in full color and printed manual $7.00

The Gift of the Holy Spirit by the Laying on of Hands

This series is concerned with two factors: (1) with the ordinance of the Laying on of Hands, and (2) with the spiritual reality back of it—the gift of the Holy Spirit, as this gift is associated with confirmation of new members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and administration of the sick. Set No. 4, 15 slides in full color with printed manual $6.50

Ye Must Be Born Again

Scripture texts and historical quotations are used to teach the essential features of Baptism, illustrated with color slides. This is a missionary aid, but can be used to good advantage in prebaptismal classes. An illustrated script serves as a guide for study. Set No. 3, 19 text slides and 9 color illustrations with printed manual $6.00

Statement of Belief

The official Statement of Belief as originally written by Joseph Smith II has been visualized and brought into more concrete form in this set of 37 color slides. Each frame has a short text together with a color illustration conveying the central idea of that part of the statement. Further details together with the price will be announced in the "Saints' Herald" some time after June 1, 1950.

Tract Ideas Wanted

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY desires the creation of a considerable number of small tracts of "envelope size"—about $3\frac{1}{4} \times 5\frac{1}{2}$ inches. It will be a simple four-page folder containing a brief message that can be quickly read. It can take a message from 350 to 400 words in length.

An appeal was made for such tracts in the February 20 issue, and there was a generous response from members of the church. Those that can be used are being prepared now for publication.

We did not hear from men under appointment actually facing missionary situations and requirements. Since they will be the greatest users of successful tracts, it would be an advantage to hear from them. We would like to hear from both the experienced missionaries and young men under appointment, from seventies, district presidents, pastors, and all who are actively interested in practical evangelism. We believe we can get some of our best help from them, and that this will enable us to help them in turn.

What we need are plans, ideas, and suggestions for contents. We know these men are too busy to take time for finished work. We think we can put the material in shape if the ideas are given. Write a letter, outline an idea, give us a plan, suggest texts—anything you have time to do, up to a finished product.

May we hear from you soon?—Tracts Editor.

LANDS TO THE SOUTH

The first one hundred pages of the Spanish translation of the Book of Mormon are almost completed. Apostle C. R. Hield is being assisted in this work by Mrs. Tillie Bootman, Mrs. Vivian Johnston, Juan Vigil, and Clifton Resch and his Stone Church class.

Apostle Hield is interested in contacting any Spanish-speaking church members who are attending universities or colleges of the United States. He is also compiling a list of names of people who live in the Spanish-speaking countries who are church members or who have some association with the church. Brother Hield would like to make the acquaintance of any person who is moving to a Spanish-speaking country for business purposes.

Elder Wayne Simmons, who will assist Apostle Hield in this work, is at present professor and director of the "Centro Venezolano Americano" in Caracas, Venezuela.

CLASS OF 1950

The fourth annual dinner honoring R.L.D.S. members of the graduating class of the William Chrisman high school was held May 16 in the South Chrysler Church. Elder Charles V. Graham was master of ceremonies, and Elder Carl Mesle was in charge of the group singing. President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. L. DeLapp, who have sons in the graduating class, were guest speakers. A program of light entertainment was provided by Bob Sparks, Arlene Cackler, and Homer Gatchett. The banquet dinner was prepared by the South Chrysler women's department. Table decoration and menus were arranged by a committee in charge of Mrs. Maurice Draper.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Elder John Darling, Associate Director of the Department of Religious Education, recently assisted in two church school workers institutes in Michigan. The Eastern Michigan District institute was held in Sandusky on April 29 and 30. Elder James Phillips, district president, was in charge. Elder John Rogers, district church school director, was unable to attend because of injuries received in an auto accident. The theme for the institute was "Each One Win One."

Elder Harry L. Doty, district president of the North and Central Michigan Districts, was in charge of the church school workers institute held in Boyne City on May 6 and 7. Mrs. Ella Nelp is church school director. The theme was "Learning for Serving."

INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM AND HOSPITAL

Apostle Charles Hield presented an illustrated lecture on the ruins of South America to the students on April 19.

Elder A. Orlin Crownover and his family were luncheon guests of the student nurses from Hawaii on April 27. Chaplain Don Lents and several members of the faculty also attended.

The Sanitarium was one of the four hospitals selected by the University of Kansas Medical School in their postgraduate medical program.

"Add to Your Faith, Virtue."

—Theme for June

IN AN EFFORT to strengthen and clarify the meaning of our theme, let us consult a number of translations of the passage.

The King James Version says: "Add to your faith virtue."—II Peter 1: 5. The Inspired Version supports this rendition. Goodspeed's American Translation offers: "Supplement your faith with goodness." Moffatt prefers: "Furnish your faith with resolution." Weymouth adds: "With your faith exhibit also a noble character." The Emphatic Diaglott: "Superadd to your faith fortitude."

There they are—all good, all different. You may choose one or more. Fortunately, they all agree on "faith." Their differences are without conflict. One can put all of them together and find harmony.

The dictionary tells us virtue is "moral practice or action." Perhaps this is the real help we need. Faith is a way of thinking, feeling, and believing. It concerns the movements of mind and spirit which precede the outward and physical acts.

Peter is saying, as many others have said, that faith is not enough. You can't solve the problems of the world by thinking something about them and stopping there.

When you have settled something in your mind, the next step is to get out and do something about it. Webster says, "action." That means it is time to go to work. The alarm clock has rung, breakfast has been served, the sun is rising above the horizon to shine upon the harvest fields, and it is time to put on our hats and gloves and go out to work.

You have heard the old saying, "Talk is cheap." So are plans. If you are building a "Castle in Spain"—one of those day-dream affairs—it will cost you no more to build a big one than a little one. Dream dollars can be minted at any rate, with no additional charge. But when the dreamer awakens, he faces the same old reality, and nothing has been changed during the dream.

One must put the dream to work. It is the Christian task to change the world, not just to dream about it.

Our favorite farm radio commentator recently reviewed some plans before Congress, ending with this statement: "But they are all in the talk stage yet, and nothing has been done."

"The talk stage!" What a phrase! How many things have never gone beyond it. How much religion has halted there, never to move again.

E. Stanley Jones once said, "There are many fine programs in the world with no power to fulfill them." We have talked quite a bit about our program. Is it not time to give some attention to our power?

In one of the railroad yards of Kansas City, there is a trackful of locomotives. Their fireboxes are cold and empty. They don't even have ashes in them. And they can't move an inch. No power.

In a recent radio broadcast, Edward R. Murrow quoted something rather neat from the fiery primary contest in Florida. One citizen told him, "There's a great deal of political talk in the air these days. And vice versa!"

Friends, it is the "vice versa" that smothers the work of God in the world.

In the larger churches there are always numbers of talented people—including members of the priesthood—who do nothing but sit and listen. Try speaking to some of them about it. "But what can we do?" they will ask in tones of injury. "They never ask us to do anything!" Brethren, God has not called you to labor where you are not needed. There are little branches and missions where help is desperately wanted. Go to them and you will find a place to labor. Everybody can find something to do if he really looks for it.

Jean Barnett left her splendid congregation in Toronto where she was very happy, and followed her husband into the Yukon, where she found a wilderness of sin as well as a wilderness of mountains and trees. She could have grieved for her lack of "church privileges," but she had no time for it. Against opposition and indifference, she gathered more than a hundred children, including her own two sons, and many others of all faiths and of no faith at all, and brought them together into a Sunday school. There she is teaching them about the Lord Jesus, with the understanding that has been given to her in the gospel.

If one brave little woman can do that, what ought the rest of us do?

To your faith, add virtue—"moral practice or action." You may be timid, but remember that courage is likely to fail with long thought, while it will generally grow with immediate action. The time comes when you should cease to be a student to become a teacher, though the good teacher will always be a student. At least, you should find a class of your own. The time comes to quit reading a book and go to work. That time is now.

Apostolic Epistle

TO THE CHURCH:

We, your Brethren in the Council of Twelve, gratefully acknowledge to Almighty God his providential care, and deeply appreciate his manifold blessings.

At Whitsuntide, we celebrate the growth of the Early Church as it received the endowment of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. For it was at Pentecost, when the Apostle Peter stood forth and gloriously declared words that have rung down through the years of time, that God had vindicated his Anointed One, and the resurrection from the dead had made him both Lord and Christ. The report of that endowment two thousand years ago states that "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, . . . and spake as the Spirit gave them utterance." They all felt impelled to serve, as the Christ had served. Under the power of that pentecostal fire, their eyes were opened—they sensed a new truth and a new power. Their master really was the Messiah! Sin had not triumphed! The empire of death had not been able to hold him! A new blood seemed to course through the veins of his followers. Now they had no fear. Now they understood many of the former teachings of their Master. Now they were enabled to envision that new society Jesus had so often pictured for them—new ideals, new moral principles, new moral energies. In him they lived and moved and had their being. They went out under this new spirit and "turned the world upside down"—they changed the history of that first century. It is our task, under this same spirit, to change the history of this century; for this knowledge upon which the Church is built—this apostolic gift—is promised not only to the people who heard the voice of Peter and the rest but is to be to their children "and to all them that are afar off."

We reverently remind the church that God has guided the course of history from that day to this. For centuries our Heavenly Father has worked among people of foreign climes and those speaking alien tongues. Through the night of apostasy, after the church had fled into the obscure wilderness, God worked with Wycliffe, with Huss, with Luther, and with many other saints and sages to break down tyranny and to change the course of human thought and actions. The Holy Spirit wrought in the soul of a mariner an invincible surmise; and the ships of Columbus were guided westward to a land of promise. Then our Heavenly Father led and inspired the Pilgrim Fathers, who left the shores of the Old World, with a great faith in God—a faith expressed by one of their dearly beloved leaders, John Robinson, who prophetically said: "The Lord hath yet more truth and light to break forth from out His holy word."

After all this was done, he led a boy into the woods of Western New York to share what was then a great secret. Joseph Smith did not know as he fell to his knees on that memorable spring morning, that awaiting near by to make her appearance once more among men was the bride of our Lord Jesus Christ. So after this divine preparation, and under the ministry of the selfsame apostles who first proclaimed the testimony of Jesus on the day of Pentecost—Peter, James, and John—there came again among men the church of Jesus Christ. She first made her reappearance while the nineteenth century was young and in a wellborn nation yet in its infancy, "a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." This guidance of the Holy Spirit continues today, for when our people humbly examine their lives, they find the hand of God directing their destiny. It guided our parents to the truths of the Restoration message. Most of the members of the Church can testify to God's watch care over their early years, their education, their marriage, their choice of a vocation, until now they have arrived at this hour of service. We stand in the midst of the course of time, deeply grateful for our heritage and dedicated to the promise which that heritage has so richly guaranteed.

We humbly remind the Church in this day when men have annihilated time and space and have subdued substance that the foundations of the City of God have already been laid where alone they will be ever secure in the souls of men of good will. We stand together rich in the testimony of Jesus in the midst of a generation which has allowed material wealth and pleasures to so monopolize life that it has neither the time nor the inclination to seek a better and richer life hereafter. We warn the Church against the tendency to gigantism, with its tools of hate, power, greed, selfishness, etc. These are the expressions of human pride, and we remind you that it is more important that one soul shall make a decision for Christ than that a whole generation shall live in the flesh on the earth.

Let us be aware as we observe the quickening of sin that the Lord admonished, "O inhabitants of the earth, I am willing to make these things known unto all flesh . . . and willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh . . . when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his Saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon the world." With this insight through the prophetic channel, let us consistently enlist those who are willing to accept the responsibility to contend against this destructive trend and encourage that which is right. Be admonished, as before, that the Saints should avoid the appearances of evil, not only in our problems of social relationships, but in our economic stewardship. May the good spirit encourage us to give

Morally Autonomous - Man Mature

By EVANGELIST BEN HEWITT

IF MAN IS TO survive and build the kingdom, a new type of man must be evolved. During the centuries and under most favorable conditions, his concepts have matured until they challenge the admiration. However, no group has yet taken these concepts seriously enough to put them into daily living. Unless a new type of man is developed, civilization faces extinction.

Because of our faith in and acceptance of divine revelation through accepted channels, Latter Day Saints have the best opportunity to produce the new society. Let us consider several aspects of needed development toward this maturity.

Webster defines "moral" as "conformed to accepted rules of right conduct" and "autonomous" as "independent in government, self-governing." "Morally autonomous" is a term used by some philosophers to describe individuals who have the right of self-government because they not only know what is right but are also determined to do right. That means they have reached perfection. To date only one person has achieved this status—Jesus Christ.

Some philosophers explain the great changes that have taken place and also point to the final change. They say that in the great scheme of things, at first there was the cosmic, or inorganic stage where no life as we know it existed. Next, there was a "change in kind as well as in degrees," and what we call life came into existence; this is the organic stage. Then there was a "change in kind as well as in degree" and man appeared on the scene, ushering in the age of experimentation in social relationships. As man perfects the science of social interdependence, it is hoped there will come a "change in kind as well as in degree" and the morally autonomous will emerge.

These individuals will have learned how to live together in peace. This will be eternal life. In this condition there will be no competition, no privation, no war.

As far back as there is any record of man, generally speaking, he achieved physical maturity at about the age of twenty-five years. Millions have lived and died—some have lived well over the century mark—but none have fully matured mentally. This latter process is not merely for the individual but belongs to the whole human race.

IN THIS STRUGGLE for better things, there are several significant steps that have been achieved during the years. Each has been introduced to the race by men with the prophetic powers who have sensed clearly humanity's needs from time to time. We shall attempt to list twelve of the most important. There are others, but these will suffice for the present discussion.

(1) Man realized there was a power outside himself that was bigger, better, and more powerful than he was—the "good" or God. At first he had several gods.

(2) A bold Jew advanced the idea that there was only one God, but he was their god—"the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." Paul declared that there was but one Lord, and Peter discovered that he was the God of all flesh, of all races.

(3) Still another important idea came from the Jews, namely, that in order to survive, man must be moral. By revelation from God, Moses crystallized these into what we call the "Ten Commandments." This is a most important concept. If man disobeyed these, he could not live peaceably and happily with his fellows. There was also this other side to the question—disobedience to these precepts was contrary to his better nature. To lie and to steal got him into endless difficulties; it also prevented the development of high character and spiritual peace. "Thou shalt not commit adultery" was intended not only to prevent love triangles and social difficulties, but to keep man from being untrue to his highest self. A man was created to be true and faithful to one woman—his ideal—and vice versa. Adultery causes moral breakdown and dissipation. To remember the Sabbath day and to keep it holy is not just a command; it is necessary to man's best development. Man has reached the place where he is capable of destroying himself. It is in the interest of his health that he rest the seventh day; and, if he is to survive, he must let his mind and soul go out in reverent worship to a superior and higher power. To achieve his best development mentally, physically, and spiritually, he must have rest and must worship God.

(4) Prophets under the intelligence of God tried to show their people that they must think of their fellow men. "Learn to do well, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow . . ." was the admonition that there was a better way than to think merely of oneself. Jesus emphasized it by saying, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even unto them." Or simply, "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." He went even further, "Love your neighbor as yourself . . . Love your enemies." We must become more and more socially conscious. Man's biggest threat is himself. A complete understanding love of humanity is a very pertinent mark of mental maturity.

(5) We are indebted to the Greeks for the idea that man is supposed to use his God-given powers to reason and to think. This is expected of a person today, but because Socrates persisted in using his mental facilities and teaching others to do likewise, the immature Greeks decided that his voice should be silenced, and he was ordered to drink the potion of poisonous hemlock. Every mature idea has had to struggle for existence.

(6) After the enslavement during the Dark Ages and Renaissance, man became conscious of the importance of his own individuality, but it took years of struggle and suffering before he began to sense the need for individual freedom. It is only in recent years that this has received proper consideration. Rousseau and John Dewey contributed some fine thinking along this line.

(7) About this same time the development of the scientific method had its birth. Roger Bacon had to endure scorn and persecution to give this wonderful idea its proper place. It has proved to be an effective means of getting us away from prejudices and false teachings, enabling us to learn more and more about actual facts and to think more clearly along the lines of philosophic thought.

Two mature concepts were given us by Thomas Jefferson, who declared:

(8) "All men are created equal," and Abraham Lincoln, who advocated:

(9) "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Lincoln's homespun expressions like, "God must love the common people best because he made so many of them" are still on our lips. While today these are generally accepted, yet when they were enunciated in the latter half of the eighteenth century, they were not at all accepted, and in some quarters they were scorned.

Some have misconstrued the former to mean that all men are equal. All men are not equal, but they should have equal opportunity to make their chosen place in a complex society. The common factors are equal opportunity and willingness to serve. Having equal opportunity, men's achievements vary with their ability, determination, and energy. Even the humblest citizen should have the opportunity to rise to the highest position of responsibility and trust.

The latter is the generally accepted ideal of government, but it is handicapped because so many people are immature in perspective and moral courage and fail to follow high ideals.

(10) One of the most important and far-reaching of mature concepts is the inalienable right of man to make his own choices as long as he does not interfere too much with the same right of others—that is man should have his free agency. This was enunciated centuries ago, but never so clearly stated as by the young prophet, Joseph Smith, in the first half of the nineteenth century. While it is taken for granted today as almost axiomatic, yet at that time it needed to be said because, religiously at least, people were being regimented into thinking as they were told; the idea of not allowing others to do one's thinking is comparatively new.

(11) This same young prophet advanced an idea which actually cost him his life. It was that God speaks and reveals his mind and will to man today. This caused a terrible furore in his day. It was blasphemy! Yet it has been in the Bible, and no less an authority than Jesus made it perfectly clear in his remark to Peter after Peter affirmed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Peter was blessed because he had received this all-important knowledge. It was upon the rock of REVELATION that Jesus said he would build his church When we realize that we need revelation from God to guide us, we will be a little nearer mental maturity.

12. A further stage of maturity and perspective will be achieved when we realize that in order to receive revelation from God, we must walk closely enough with him to commune with him. More and more we are beginning to realize the importance of this truth, but few are willing to discipline themselves for such exalted privilege and fellowship. In this one thing too many of us are in our adolescence. As a church we must reach this maturity. God cannot descend to man's level; he is merciful; he reaches down after man and constantly seeks him, but man must find and follow God's way before His "will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Similar sentiments are expressed in the song:

Take my yoke upon you;
Learn my ways aright;
For my yoke is easy
And my burden light.
Let my thoughts be your thoughts
And my ways your ways;
I shall smile upon you
And enrich your days.

THE KING SHALL COME!
His will on earth be done;
When men have learned HIS ways,
Then God can live with them.

Giving is twice blessed;
Do not riches hoard;
Joy in ways to serve men
Is your great reward.
Leave all love of profit;
Serve your fellow man;
Live a life of service—
That is God's own plan.

IN THIS EXISTENCE, man has been given a PHYSICAL body. By this means through pain, God shows us when we are making mistakes—when we are not moral in the fullest sense. Thus God was able to give us our agency. When we learn how to choose properly, there will be no pain or suffering. I have heard people say that they were doing the best they could. Is that true? God gave us the right to choose and as long as we choose the right way, there will be no pain nor suffering—that is heaven. God whispers to us in the still small voice; he speaks to us through his word, but he shouts to us through pain and suffering.

The moral issue is always before us, but there is one other point that has been missed for many years and that is, "How is man to know what is right?" He has been struggling upward ever since his fall—the world is full of philosophies and religions, and quite sincerely he has followed one or another seeking the way that would help him find higher standards and ideals. One sect believes it is right; another believes its way is best. What is the answer? Man is beginning to recognize that he cannot save himself; there has to be a power higher than and outside himself. We come back to the rock mentioned by Jesus, that God must reveal himself to man. For over a hundred years we have taught that the church was built on the rock of revelation. It is also a fundamental that each member stand on the same rock of revelation so that he shall know what is right and be able to make right choices. When, by experience, man has learned to choose the right way, he becomes "morally autonomous"—he has eternal life; he is fully matured.

With all these mature concepts, why have we not made more progress in our struggle for better things? There is no doubt but that the philosophic thought is improving every day. The economic, political, and social movements are bringing us to recognize that we must be more serious, more earnest in our struggle upwards. Neither our economic nor political accomplishments have brought us satisfaction or solution. We have come to recognize that we are one world, but why have we not matured sufficiently in our thinking to build that better world where crime, strife, and war are eliminated? From many quarters comes the same answer: "We need to get back to the teachings of Jesus and to strengthen our moral fabric." Why don't we?

The great concepts have come to us by minds inspired of God, but they were presented to immature minds, and the immature minds took from them only what they could assimilate and understand. We have given lip service to these things, but we have not made them a part of our lives. Only when enough men in responsible places grasp, teach, and practice them will there be a change. As far as our church is concerned, it is up to the priesthood, who must be in touch with God, to understand and exemplify for the laity—the word must be made flesh and dwell among us.

Today the average person says, "Let's see what your religion will do; I am interested in results." We must show by our lives that God still speaks; we must build the city whose maker is God. Zion must be established. Our experiments, under divine light, must become more positive. We must become the "morally autonomous" citizens of the eternal way of life.

The Protection of His Grace

The promise has been given that no power shall stay the hand of God in the accomplishment of his purposes among his people; and as the church shall move forward in its great work, the fulfillment of prophecy may cause the Saints to tremble at the exhibition of divine power, yet they shall rejoice in the protection of his grace.

—Doctrine and Covenants 135:3

NOT LONG ago while telling about the West Coast's vulnerability in case of another war, a brother made a most sobering remark. "You know, George, in case of war the enemy will try his best to destroy our power generating plants, and what a condition we will be left in! There is not one hand pump left in all of the San Joaquin Valley. What will we drink, and how could we irrigate our crops?" This thought must come to every thinking individual not only in California and the western states that depend on irrigation but everywhere in the nation, and more especially since we know that Russia has an A bomb.

The Scripture at the beginning of this article was given to the church at a time when the work of the Lord and his promises were almost forgotten, and problems of a personal nature came to the front. The hope for continued peace never was brighter than it was at that time, and industry assisted by science was making great strides toward the elimination of poverty. It is doubtful that there ever was a period in the history of the church that lulled people into worldly security more subtly than that period—1922-1929. How timely it was then for the Lord to break through and remind us of his promises towards the Saints and the fulfillment of prophecy respecting the wicked. For the last twenty years we have been witnessing the "exhibition of divine power," and not only that, we have had abundant reason to "rejoice in the protection of his grace." Individually and collectively we came through a dreadful depression, not only financially bettered, but much wiser to the false promises of the world and better prepared to go forward in the "great work." The last war, though it made us all "tremble," deepened the quality of our sainthood. Only the unconverted of us may continue to look with doubt at the promises of God. Because of his help to us when we were lean in faith, we look with confidence to the continued "protection of his grace" over the years to come.

Trip to Yaxchilan - By APOSTLE C. R. HIELD

This article appeared in the Pemex Travel Club Bulletin for December 1, 1949.

A TRIP to some of the pre-Hispanic ruins in Mexico is one of the most thrilling experiences imaginable, particularly if one loves people and has an interest in archaeology. Such a trip to Yaxchilán, in the state of Chiapas, was made recently by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Elder Harold Smith, and the writer of this article.

We started from Kansas City, Missouri, by car and entered Mexico at Nuevo Laredo.

In Mexico City, we went to a hotel where only Spanish was spoken, for thus one learns to appreciate the real Mexico (there are, of course, a large number of hotels where English is spoken). After a busy day making plane reservations, visiting the Zócalo Square, El Palacio de Gobierno, El Palacio de Bellas Artes, etc., friend, Arthur Stockdale, in the beautiful Guardiola Building. We asked him to go with us to a typical Mexican restaurant, one he would recommend for a real Mexican dinner. He took us to the "Prendes Cafe," a businessmen's place, and ordered percebes (a snakelike sea food). It was delicious, and Mr. Stockdale was right—we shall never forget that meal.

Next, we contacted Señor Eduardo Noguera, Director of pre-Hispanic Monuments, of the Instituto Nacional de Antropología e Historia. He gave us most valuable information about getting to Yaxchilán and furnished us with a letter to the scientists at the different archaeological zones, as well as a personal letter to the caretaker of Yaxchilán. This co-operation and help from Doctor Noguera was very much appreciated, and we learned later, without the letter to the caretaker at Yaxchilán, we would not have been permitted to remain at the ruins. (Most of the more frequented ruins need no special permit.)

DRIVING SOUTH, we passed through Cholula where we stopped and visited that most interesting pyramid. At Oaxaca we had another proof of the friendship of the officials of the Mexican Government in the person of Señor C. Lorenzo Gamia, archaeologist in charge of such work in the state of Oaxaca. He was most helpful when we visited the ruins at Monte Albán and Mitla. Señor Gamia even volunteered to let us leave our automobile in his truck shed while we went to Yaxchilán.

Tenosique was to be the jumping-off place for the ancient Maya ruins at Yaxchilán. It has been said that friendship begets friendship. That certainly was true of the busy, yet charming, little town of Tenosique. It is situated on the banks of the Usumacinta River, and also on the railroad that comes from Campeche. We stayed several days in this hospitable little village, making preparations for our trip to the ruins. We were most pleased to renew our acquaintance with our engineer friend, José Luis Paullada, whom we had met four years before on the way to Palenque.

While Yaxchilán is only about sixty miles from Tenosique, as the crow flies, it lies up stream from a very dangerous rapids on the Usumacinta River. No highways, railroads, or airplanes lead to it. It is a fifteen day trip by mule. The best way to go, we learned, was to get a chiclero plane (airplane used in bringing out the "chicle" for chewing gum) to Campamento Santa Clara; thence by mule to Anaité above the rapids; and the rest of the way by cayuco (dug-out canoe). We found Señor Plinio Valenzuela, who runs the chiclero camp at Santa Clara, and arranged with him for passage on a plane to his forest camp, also for the use of some of his mules to reach Anaité.

We were glad to find the pleasing, yet efficient personality and skill of the two pilots, José Machias and Guillermo Sors. They landed their plane, the XA-FAO, with regularity as they ferried the chicle back to Tenosique and the railroad.

Marino Cano, and his son, José (Pepe), were engaged to pole us up the Usumacinta River in their cayuco to the ruins at Yaxchilán, a trip of about six hours.

At the ruins the government keeps a caretaker named Miguel de la Cruz. At first he was not going to allow us to stay since he was not sure that the letter from Dr. Eduardo Noguera was genuine. After about half an hour of conversation, he was convinced that it was O.K., and Lola, his wife, prepared for us small cups of coffee. (Miguel and Lola had been married only a few weeks.) We were then invited to swing our hammocks in one of the cottages. For furniture it had a stove (made of a box of dirt built up on poles, with an ingenious horseshoe-shaped oven), a mahogany table, cupboards, etc. Also for company we had a little mico (monkey) and a guacamayo (macaw-parrot). We were served the usual tortillas, frijoles, bananas and eggs; and once some fresh fish from the river.

YAXCHILAN WAS an important Mayan city at one time. There are a number of huge pyramids, the most important of which is the "Temple of Quetzalcóatl." We worked for some time with a machete to clear the light growth of trees and brush from in front of the building so we could take pictures. There are remains of several stucco figures on the façade.

One statue rests on the ground before the middle doorway. We were particularly interested in finding the underside of the lintels carved with figures and hieroglyphics. Two figures appear on each lintel. They seem to represent priests. One priest seems to be in the act of receiving a money bag (?) from a lady. Another lintel showed the figures of two priests holding crosses that resemble our Christian cross. On the top of each of these crosses is fastened a royal quetzal bird. The third lintel portrays two officials holding small images.

Another building is called the "House of the Queen," because a large stela still remains upright in front of the structure. The stela is carved on both sides, but on the side facing the house is found the image of a lady.

There is a mysterious building called the "House of the Princess." No one seems to know why the building is so called. It appeared to us to be more like a mausoleum, for it had about thirty or more niches in the walls. In some of these niches the local Mayas (Caribes and Lacandones) place little sacred colored cups in which they burn copal (an incense made from the gum of a local tree), which gives off a very dense, black smoke. This they do as an offering to their ancient bearded white God, Quetzalcóatl.

We were also puzzled about the possible use of a building called the Laberynth. It had a number of rooms, arranged in a very confusing order, with some of them even below ground. Here, however, one sees how the ancient builders finished the interior of their rooms, for several still had the original smooth plaster or cement finish on the inside. Though badly faded now, the walls originally were colored with beautiful designs.

MANY OF the buildings have fallen down, but we walked over and around the heaps of stone for several days. At one mound we found a beautifully carved lintel that had come to rest on its side. The design was of a priest wearing a gorgeous feathered headdress. In each hand he held a cross. There are two bars, however, instead of the usual one on each cross and they have the quetzal bird fastened to the top-end as in the lintel at the Temple of Quetzalcóatl. We explored other buildings and examined lintels, but most of these had not been carved. At the bottom of the pyramid of the Temple of Quetzalcóatl we found the head of an image. It belonged, no doubt, to the headless body of the statue resting before the central door.

Our pictures taken, Miguel and Lola took us in their cayuco back down the river to Anaité. True to his word, Señor Valenzuela sent mules to pick us up at Anaité on a certain day, and we were soon back at the chiclero camp at Santa Clara. We passed a day or two here, however, waiting for the sun to dry the airstrip, so that the plane could land and carry us back to Tenosique.

We spent three days at Tenosique before we could get airplane space back to Villa Hermosa, Coatzacoalcos, and the railroad. The officials and the businessmen of the town are most friendly. We enjoyed contact with Señor Francisco (Pancho) Villanueva, an agent for mahogany and other fine woods. He allowed us to leave some of our baggage at his home while we made the trip into the jungle. Señor Fernando Servín, airline agent for Comunicaciones Aéreas de Veracruz, was also most friendly and co-operative. We bought our newspapers at his office, and got a fine picture of his little daughter, Lidia María, wearing her red shoes. We also learned more about the chiclero business from the government inspector of chicle camps, Señor Armando Barragán.

We were pleased to meet two archaeologists, Eric Thompson of the Carnegie Institute, and Giles G. Healey of the United Fruit Company. They were on their way with equipment to photograph the mural paintings on the walls of a new ruin at Bonampak.

Oliver Cowdery

One of the Three Special Witnesses of the Book of Mormon

Oliver Cowdery was born in Vermont on October 3, 1806, of an illustrious family, a direct descendant of Lord Cowdery of South Downs, England, who feasted Queen Elizabeth and all her attendants. He had good education and literary attainments; he taught school in Manchester, New York.

According to our history, on September 22, 1827, the fourth anniversary of the specified yearly appointment, the Angel Moroni met young Joseph Smith at the Hill Cumorah, near Palmyra, New York. At this, the most eventful of their meetings, Moroni gave Joseph the Book of Mormon plates and the historic Urim and Thummim. During the translation of the "plates," Joseph used at times five different scribes: Emma Hale Smith, his wife; Martin Harris; John and Christian Whitmer; and Oliver Cowdery. The scribe doing most of the work was Oliver Cowdery as the manuscripts plainly show. It was not until April 5, 1829, according to records made by Oliver that he first met Joseph Smith, and two days later began his sacred labors.

An Unusual Incident

During their pleasant association, Joseph wrote: "A difference of opinion arising between us [Joseph and Oliver] about the account of John the Apostle, mentioned in the New Testament [John 21: 22] whether he [John] died or whether he continued—we mutually agreed to settle it by the Urim and Thummim."—Church History, Volume I, page 33.

This was the occasion of the receiving of a revelation known to us as section 7 of the Doctrine and Covenants. It contains three paragraphs assuring that John the Beloved did not die, but was changed, given power over death, and is still ministering, by direction of the Lord, "to nations, kindreds, tongues and people."

The Aaronic Priesthood Conferred

In Church History, Volume I, pages 34-36, Joseph Smith wrote:

We [Joseph and Oliver] still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month [May, 1829] we on a certain day [May 15], went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He [John the Baptist] said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized; I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John the Baptist and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and I should be called the first elder, and he [Oliver] the second.

Following the historical account of their baptisms, it is also related that the Holy Ghost was given them in the gift of prophecy, and other special manifestations. Oliver Cowdery continued the account, confirming their blessed experiences, even in more eloquent recitals than the preceding.

By C. J. HUNT

The translation of the plates was completed in 1829, and by divine instruction Joseph selected Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris as special witnesses of the Book of Mormon who should see and handle the plates and converse personally with the Angel Moroni. Eight other men saw and handled the plates after the translation, but they did not see or talk with Moroni. Their signed testimony is also recorded. After the entrusted work was fully finished, Moroni took possession of the plates and the Urim and Thummim. The sacred instruments have never been returned nor used by any member of the church since 1829. All of the "witnesses" reaffirmed their published testimonies during their lives. (See first pages in all Books of Mormon.)

Oliver continued as scribe and amanuensis, sharing sacred responsibilities in many of the early activities of the Prophet. Safeguarding the manuscripts of the Book of Mormon, Joseph directed Oliver to make and retain a complete copy before entrusting it to the printer for publication.

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Organized

In keeping with divine instruction, six of the newly baptized believers met at the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr., near Fayette, Seneca County, New York, on April 6, 1830. Preparatory for this solemn occasion, Joseph Smith, Jr., was ordained an elder in the Melchisedec priesthood.

Joseph was unanimously chosen to preside. At this meeting Oliver was ordained the second elder in the church by Joseph, and the first sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed. The six charter members were: Joseph Smith, twenty-four years old; Oliver Cowdery, twenty-three; Hyrum Smith, twenty-nine; Peter Whitmer, Jr., twenty; Samuel H. Smith, twenty-two; and David Whitmer, twenty-five.

Missionary to Lamanites

In a revelation given October, 1830 (Doctrine and Covenants 31), the first missionaries to a distant field were appointed. Oliver Cowdery and three other elders were named. They left Fayette, New York, for Independence, Missouri, a distance of 1,500 miles, and held meetings at Kirtland where over a hundred were baptized, including Sidney Rigdon and Lyman Wight. They also preached at other places en route. They walked most of the way, at times on trackless prairies and through forests and arrived at Independence in January, 1831, where they started preaching to the Indians.

On August 2 and 3 of that year, Oliver took part with seven other brethren in the sacred dedicatory services of the Independence Temple Lot. Soon after the organization of the church (Section 16), Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer were directed to "search out the twelve" to be ordained apostles. In due time the selections were made and approved by conference action.

Oliver was chairman of a committee appointed to select and prepare revelations for publication. Their work was approved and the book of Doctrine and Covenants resulted. In January, 1832, he married Elizabeth Ann Whitmer, daughter of Peter Whitmer, Sr.

It is apparent that the formative period of the great Restoration Gospel Movement found in Oliver Cowdery a ready, capable, efficient, and trustworthy servant of God.

An Experience in Kirtland, Ohio, Temple

On Sunday afternoon, April 3, 1836 (the Temple was dedicated one week previous), Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery met in solemn prayer at the pulpit. After arising, they witnessed a wonderful heavenly vision, for in turn there appeared before them, giving instructions, Jesus Christ, Moses, Elias, and Elijah. (See full account in Church History, Volume II, pages 46, 47.)

After years of close association with the Prophet Joseph and his family, Oliver wrote: "I have been intimately acquainted with him . . . and his private life. He was honest, upright, virtuous, faithful, and industrious." Of Emma Hale Smith, he wrote, "She most certainly evinced a decidedly correct mind, uncommon ability of talent and judgment" and "in justice, her character stands as fair for morality, piety and virtue, as any in the world."

The Story of the Church, 1948, revised edition, page 356, records a letter by Oliver Cowdery, written at Tiffin, Ohio, and dated July 24, 1845. On marriage he said:

Polygamy may do for the followers of Mohammed; it may have been done thousands of years ago, but no people professing to be governed by the pure and holy principles of the Lord Jesus can hold up their heads before the world at this distant time and be guilty of such folly, such wrong, such abomination. It [polygamy] will blast, like a mildew, their fairest prospects, and lay the ax at the root of their happiness.

An Appropriate Closing Testimony

A creditable report states that Oliver Cowdery as one of the Three Witnesses, reaffirmed his testimony at Kaneshville, now Council Bluffs, Iowa, in October, 1848. He said:

My name is Oliver Cowdery, I wrote, with my own pen, the entire Book of Mormon (save a few pages) as it fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph Smith, as he translated it by the gift and power of God, by the means of the Urim and Thummim, or, as it is called by that book, "holy interpreters." That book is true. Sidney Rigdon did not write it; Solomon Spaulding did not write it. I wrote it myself as it fell from the lips of the Prophet. . . . It contains the principles of salvation; and if you, my hearers, will walk by its light and obey its precepts, you will be saved with an everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God on high.

I was present with Joseph (Smith) when an holy angel from God came down from heaven and conferred on us, or restored, the lesser or Aaronic priesthood, and said to us, at the same time, that it should remain upon the earth while the earth stands.

I was also present with Joseph when the higher or Melchisedec priesthood was conferred by holy angels (Peter, James, and John the Revelator) from on high. This Priesthood we then conferred on each other, by the will and commandment of God. This Priesthood, as was then declared, is also to remain upon the earth until the last remnant of time. This holy Priesthood, or authority, we then conferred upon many.

Oliver Cowdery went from Iowa to the home of his brother-in-law, David Whitmer, Richmond, Missouri, where he died fifteen months later on March 31, 1850.

After publication of the first copies of the Book of Mormon in March, 1830, the original manuscripts used by the printers, together with the transcript of several lines of the hieroglyphics of the Book of Mormon plates shown by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon and Dr. Mitchell in New York City, were all entrusted to Oliver Cowdery for safe-keeping. He was true to the sacred trust imposed. Just before his death, Oliver very feelingly placed them in the hands of his brother-in-law, David Whitmer, saying: "Brother David, remain true to your testimony."

Great and Mighty Things

One of the things that will astonish us in the glory will be the smallness of our conception as to what the Lord was willing to do for us. If it is according to the exceeding greatness of his power, surely we should look to him for greater things. As Satan is working with mighty power in these closing years of this present age, so should we expect miracles in the great matter of getting the gospel to all who have never heard.—R. C. McQUILKIN.

The Testimony of Patriarch J. F. Curtis

FREQUENTLY, I have been requested by Saints and friends, including a number of my relatives, to make a statement as to how the Curtis family came to join the Reorganized Church. My father and mother were Emsley and Martha Curtis. To them were born twelve children, nine boys and three girls. I am the fourth child. One daughter and three sons died in infancy. The rest lived to maturity. Of the six boys, five have been ministers of the church; Joseph was ordained an elder; Jacob David, Thomas Walter, and Edward Alvan were ordained seventies; I was first ordained an elder, then a seventy, then an apostle, and finally an evangelist or patriarch. I was born in Livingston County, Missouri, January 26, 1875, on a branch of the Grand River known as Mud Creek. The following story was related by my parents to us at different times as we grew to adulthood.

In 1872, A. C. Inman, a relative of my father's came to Missouri from California, where he had been converted to this latter-day work by the preaching of W. W. Blair of Illinois, who was then on a mission for the Reorganized Church. Mr. Inman, at the time of meeting Brother Blair, was a minister of the church started by Alexander Campbell, known as the Christian Church. Reverend Inman soon became converted to the gospel of Christ as preached by Elder Blair and was baptized into the church represented by Brother Blair. Brother Inman was so rejoiced to find the gospel of Jesus Christ had again been established here on earth following the great apostasy of 1,260 years, that after his baptism he wanted his relatives to know what he had found out. So he made up his mind to visit his relatives in Missouri. He came to the home of my grandparents, Eli and Margaret Curtis, and to the home of my father and mother. Father was not there at the time, but mother was. Brother Inman was so full of faith and hope in the gospel of Christ that he began to tell my mother the gospel story. Mother was very much interested in what he had told her, and they spent several hours talking. Finally Brother Inman returned to grandfather's home, but before leaving my mother, he said, "Tell your husband that I will come back and see him when he is at home."

When father came home, mother told him that his great-uncle had been there, and of his explanation of the gospel story. Father replied that he had heard of the Mormons and did not want to have anything to do with them. The home of my parents, in which I was born, was only about nine miles from Haun's Mill, where, in 1838, some seventeen or eighteen Saints had been killed and thrown into an old well for burial.

IN A FEW DAYS Brother Inman returned and found my father at home. They spent the day talking on church matters. Brother Inman explained how the true church of Christ was organized with apostles, prophets, high priests, and seventies, as well as with elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; he said that the principles of the gospel were faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, followed by the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit.

All this was most interesting to my father who, up to this time (he was then twenty-five years old), knew very little about the Bible and churches. At that time he was attending a Methodist revival in the neighborhood and had gone forward to the altar, trying to get religion.

Elder Inman made an explanation of the differences between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Utah Mormon Church with headquarters in Salt Lake City. My father became much interested and enjoyed what his relative had to say.

Brother Inman told my father that a minister of the Saints' church was to preach next Sunday in a schoolhouse only about five miles away. He requested my father not to unite with the Methodist Church until he had heard a Latter Day Saint minister preach. Father promised him that he would attend the service in the schoolhouse the next Sunday.

This was the first sermon by a minister of the Reorganized Church that father heard. The minister was a farmer but spent his Sundays preaching in schoolhouses from place to place. The minister said, "I believe that if a man is called to preach, and that man lives his religion, the Lord will stand by him and bless him."

As the minister looked more like a respectable farmer than preacher in his general appearance, Father was of the opinion that the sermon would be of poor quality. The minister took for his text the sixteenth chapter of Mark. He read the chapter which includes

Christ's statement to his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel:

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not, shall be damned; and these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils. They shall speak with new tongues. They shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them. They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.

Father became deeply interested as the minister explained the gospel and made plain to him what the Bible contained. Father said it was the most wonderful sermon he had ever heard, and that now he knew more of the gospel than he had ever known before.

At the close of the sermon, the minister announced that a conference of the church was to be held at Wakenda, Missouri, the next Sunday, and invited as many as could go to attend the service. He stated that a number of Saints lived there, and visitors would be cared for while in attendance.

My father with five others, including two of his sisters and a brother-in-law, went to the conference. On Saturday evening after their arrival, they attended a prayer service which was very spiritual indeed. Someone spoke in tongues while another spoke in prophecy. A large measure of the Holy Spirit was present during the service, and it affected my father very much. He said he saw and felt that these people had something much greater spiritually than what he had known before. A brother-in-law of my father's gave my father a hunch with his elbow when the man was speaking in tongues and said, "He won't fool me; that is something he learned at college."

My father and the rest were very deeply impressed with this prayer service. Following the prayer meeting came the preaching service which they all seemed to enjoy. After the service one of the ministers asked father to go home with him and spend the night. Father accepted the invitation, and when they reached the home of this brother, they discussed the gospel until 4:00 a.m.

On the way to the conference, Father had decided that if he was convinced the Saints were right, he would not join them for at least two years, but would unite with the Methodists instead. He would still keep in touch with the Saints, and if everything proved out all right he would then join the Saints' church. But after spending the night with this minister, Father was so deeply impressed that he thought he had better go home and not stay for the day's services as he didn't feel as if he wanted to join at that time. So he harnessed the team of horses and was making preparation to return home when someone said, "Who has harnessed the horses?" Father said, "I have." When asked, "Why?" Father replied, "Mother is at home alone with the children, and I think we had better return." But the others said, "No, we came down here to stay until Monday morning. And we want to stay." So the majority were against him, and they stayed and attended the services during the day.

On Sunday evening before the preaching service, another prayer service was held which was very helpful and encouraging. By this time my father was so deeply impressed that when the minister stated, "If any desire to unite with the church they may make it manifest by rising to their feet," my father was the first to arise, followed by four others. The minister said, "There is no water handy here where we can do the baptizing, but I understand that Brother Curtis lives on a branch of Grand River and has a large house. If agreeable to him, we will hold services at his home next Sunday and attend to the baptizing." This was agreeable to my father.

ON RETURNING HOME father told my mother what he intended to do and that others were to be baptized also. Mother said to him, "I think you are in too big a hurry; I think you should take more time to consider it." But father said, "I believe the gospel, and I am going to be baptized. You need not be baptized unless you want to, but I have made up my mind to become a member of the church. They have told me that if I am faithful I shall receive evidence and testimony of the divinity of the work. If I receive this testimony, I will never be ashamed of the church, but if I do not, I can go out of the church if necessary."

On the Wednesday following, a union prayer service was held in the neighborhood, presided over by a Methodist minister. One after another of the young people who had decided to be baptized, arose and said they intended to unite with the Saints' church and requested the prayers of praying people in their behalf. After a number had spoken, the minister arose and said, "I am glad to see young people starting out to serve the Lord, but I am sorry to see them take the wrong road." He said Mormons were the worst people in the world, and for quite a while he gave expression to how bad they were. My father defended himself as best he could and finally he and mother started homeward. Mother said, "If that is the kind of people these Saints are, I do not want to have anything to do with them." But Father answered, "Mother, God's people have always been persecuted. I do not believe what the minister said is true."

As they traveled homeward three and a half miles in a large wagon with a spring seat on it, they talked for a while and finally they became quiet; each was in the spirit of prayer. Mother wanted to do the right thing, but didn't know just what to do. Still in the spirit of prayer, they drove up in front of their own home. The moon was shining bright, but above the brightness of the moonlight, my mother said as they drove up in front of the house where they lived, a bright circle of light appeared on the top of the house, in the center of which stood the Savior. He raised his right hand and spoke to my mother, "This is my church and my people. Inasmuch as you will obey it, you and your house shall be blessed." Mother burst into tears, and when father offered to help her out of the wagon she was weeping so that it took some minutes for her to recover her composure. She then told father what she had seen, but he had not seen it. This was for mother. Father was already convinced. But as she told him what she had seen, the Spirit of God rested upon him and bore witness to the truthfulness of it. Without unhitching the team from the wagon, they tied them to the hitch rack and went into the house and got down on their knees, and for a long time they prayed and thanked the Lord for what he had done for them.

On the following Sunday, six persons including my father and mother were baptized by A. C. Inman. The ice was about eighteen inches thick on the river, but they cut an opening for the occasion.

I WILL NOW make a statement concerning myself.

When I was eight years old, my father moved to Independence, Missouri. In that same year my sister Mary and I with eight others were baptized into the church by Elder J. C. Foss. I do not remember a time when I didn't know something about the church, as it was so often discussed in Father's home. After living in Missouri until I was twenty-one, I went to Colorado and lived in a community about ten miles from Falcan. Brother J. W. Gillen of the Quorum of Twelve visited us in July, 1899. My wife and some others were baptized, and Brother Gillen desired to organize us into a branch.

He told me what he had in mind, and I asked him whom he was going to put in charge of it. He said, "You." And I asked, "To what office?" He said, "An elder." "Oh, no," I replied, "that is too much for me." But he said, "You think it over and pray about it," and I told him I would. Later when I asked, "Are you sure of it?" he said, "I have not the least doubt about it."

As he was an apostle in the church, I decided to be ordained. I prayed earnestly that when I was ordained I might have a testimony of my calling to this office. But the testimony did not come at the time of the ordination. However, the branch was organized and I was placed in charge.

One evening at our prayer service, a brother and sister of the church requested administration. They were both quite ill. I had seen people administered to, but I had not acted in that capacity. I knew that of myself without God's help no good results would be had. Before administering I requested that we all bow in prayer, and I started to pray. Immediately the power of God rested upon me, and I arose and administered to these two people. They both said afterwards that they were immediately relieved of their distress.

This convinced me that God had accepted my work, and from then on I was sure that my ordination was all right. I was ordained an elder July 31, 1899, by Apostle J. W. Gillen. On April 4, 1903, I was ordained to the office of seventy by Apostles W. H. Kelley and Gomer T. Griffiths. On April 20, 1909, I was ordained an apostle of the church. I served in the Quorum of Twelve for twenty-nine years. On April 9, 1938, I was ordained an evangelist or patriarch. I am still serving in that office.

I received my first appointment to do missionary work from the General Conference in April, 1900. When first called to the office of elder, I thought it would be impossible for me to preach, for I did not think I would make a preacher, but as I had received evidence that my ordination was proper, I began to feel condemned because I didn't try to preach. I feared that to try meant to fail, for I had little confidence in being a minister so far as preaching was concerned. I began to feel condemned because I didn't try, and I really did not know what to do about it.

One night, after retiring to bed, I saw in dream or vision, a messenger. I recognized him as an angel. As he walked up to my bed, I looked into his face, and he said, "The Lord says that inasmuch as you will lift up your voice to proclaim the gospel, he will stand by you and bless you." Instantly I was taken to a schoolhouse a few miles away, and in my dream I preached to quite a number of people. It seemed to me that I preached about an hour. The service was opened and closed in the regular way. At the close of the service, I saw the people go out into the yard. Most of them had gone out into the road getting their rigs to go home, but there were still six or eight in the yard where I was, when immediately this same messenger that had stood at my bedside, walked through the yard to where I stood. He said, "Don't you see the Lord said he would stand by you and bless you, and he has," and I answered, "Yes, I see that he has." Immediately, I found myself wide awake and filled with the Spirit of God.

Time passed. Where should I commence to preach? Little did I think that I would give my first sermon in this schoolhouse. I thought that my dream was for the purpose of encouraging me. But on a Sunday later, my wife and I attended Sunday school in this schoolhouse.

The subject discussed was the gathering of Israel. A Free Methodist minister was in charge of the Bible class we attended. He made some statements that I took exceptions to, and I tried to get a chance to explain my position. But with an open hand he pressed it toward me, and I had to keep quiet. When he did so, something seemed to give me a punch in the ribs, and a voice spoke to me and said, "You have been ordained an elder; get up and preach to them! Get up and preach to them!" I thought I could not, then I thought, "I have a right in the class to take part in the discussion under consideration." So I tried again, but with no better results than before; again I was stopped with the big hand pointing toward me. And again I heard the voice, "You have been ordained an elder; get up and preach to them!"

I looked at the audience, and there was one of the directors of the school board, a neighbor of ours, by the name of Buzzard. I arose and walked down to Mr. Buzzard and asked him if he had any objections to my preaching in the schoolhouse. I was well acquainted with him. He looked at me and smiled and then said, "Preach all you want to." I announced there would be preaching at the close of the Sunday school. Someone asked, "Who is going to preach?" I said, "I am," but I felt about the size of my little finger.

I opened the meeting in the regular way, with a song and prayer, and I preached to a congregation including the Methodist preacher. My subject was, "THE GATHERING OF ISRAEL," which was the subject of the Sunday school lesson. I had good liberty for almost an hour, and I felt so well about it that I had courage enough to announce that two weeks from that day I would preach again. I had forgotten my dream about preaching in this schoolhouse. Some two or three months passed by when one day I was driving by this schoolhouse, and all at once my dream came before me. Sure enough I had preached my first sermon there just as I had in my dream.

During my ministry I have baptized 1,092 persons and held fifty-four public discussions. I have labored in all of the states in the Union except three in the southeastern corner of the United States. For years I labored in Canada, from east to west, north to south.

In 1923 Brother Paul Hanson and I were appointed to the European Mission. For a year we traveled in the British Isles, Europe, Asia, and Africa. I visited Palestine on this trip and had the wonderful privilege of baptizing an Arab's wife and a Hebrew student in the water of the Jordan River about one mile below where Christ was baptized by John.

The Lord has been good to me, and his blessings have been many. For this I truly thank him with all my heart.

Eternal Life

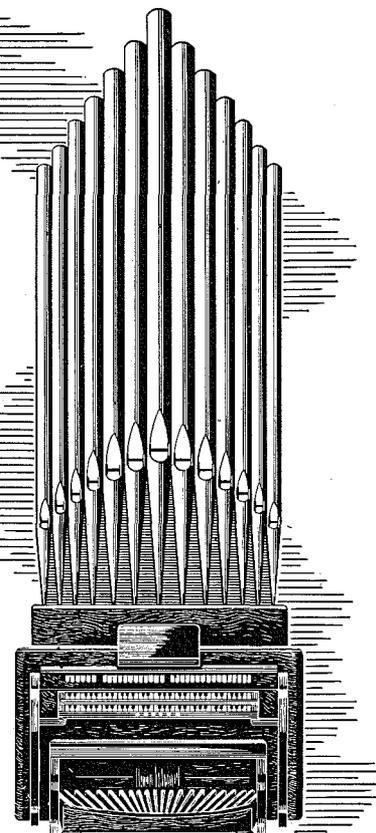

It is only Jesus Christ who has thrown light on life and immortality through the gospel; and because he has done so and has enabled us by his atoning death and intercession to make the most of this discovery, his gospel is, for all who will, a power of God unto salvation.

The Land Shadowing With Wings

By C. Ed. Miller

I SHALL try to be helpful by reviewing briefly three articles that have appeared in the Herald under the above caption. The discussion has caused considerable interest, especially among members of the priesthood.

The brother who started this discussion has made a real contribution to the church. He has presented arguments which could be used against the "standard" interpretation the elders have placed on the Scriptures discussed.

In the Herald for October 31, 1949, an article on this subject appeared. To save space I shall designate the author as "Brother X." He makes the broad assertion, "There is nothing in the prophecy (Isaiah 18) to indicate that Joseph's land was the Land Shadowing With Wings."

Reverend D. H. Bays of the Christian Church published a very pretentious book of 459 pages against the claims of the church. He concedes it would be of great value to the church if the Latter Day Saints' interpretation of Isaiah 18 can be maintained. He devotes five pages to ridiculing the interpretation of prominent men of the ministry that Isaiah 18:1 refers to North and South America. The King James version renders the passage thus: "Woe to the land shadowing with wings which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." Hebrew scholars state the first word in the text can be translated Woe, Ho, Ah, O, and Oh! I prefer "Ho," as it represents Isaiah saluting the land, and that is exactly what he did.

Bays asks this question, "What direction is Ethiopia from Jerusalem where Isaiah resided? Directly south as may be seen by any good map of Africa. The rivers of Ethiopia are the rivers of Africa, the Nile and its tributaries, hence the land described is Egypt and not America. . . . No amount of sophistry or special pleading can change the facts of geography."

Bays was a highly intelligent, experienced polemic, but what an inexcusable blunder he makes! He used a modern geography to determine a fact in geography 700 years B.C.! Brother X comes to about the same conclusion but increases the error by adding Israel and Assyria to Egypt. Reader, look at the map. Now repeat the text. Our pioneer ministers were 100 per cent correct in their interpretation of the text. It's North and South America, NOT Egypt. In the Herald of December 12, 1949, I go more fully into the vital question, "Where is the land shadowing with wings located?" Try to visualize tiny Egypt as being that land! We not only agree with Bays that the facts of geography must determine the matter, but also insist that the facts of geography do settle the question when a geography representing the age in which Isaiah was prophesying is used. The two maps accompanying this article should settle this question. In the February 6, 1950, Herald, Brother X has another article on the subject. He makes no effort whatever to negate my piece de resistance—the map. Why?

THE FOLLOWING is offered by the brother to prove Isaiah was not prophesying about the Americas: "The Jews understand the things of the prophets." "Did Isaiah tell the Jews of the location and people of Joseph's land, 700 B.C., or was it kept secret from the Jews as Christ said it had been?" I answer that it may have been kept secret from some Jews, but not only did the prophets and Jews know about America as far back as 700 B.C., "for they understood the things of the prophets" but they knew about the Americas as far back as 1689 B.C., for Jacob in blessing Joseph goes into detail regarding the Americas. Moses confirms Jacob's prophecy and calls the land Joseph's Land. Brother X assures us he believes these prophecies. If the Lord were trying to hide from the world the location of the Americas, then we are all wrong in claiming that America is Joseph's land, because Jacob and Moses were not referring to America at all. It was to be hid from the world until the time came for its discovery. If we can't interpret Isaiah 18 as pointing to America because it was to be hidden from the world, then we can't accept the prophecies of Jacob and Moses as referring to America. But Jacob, Moses, and Isaiah did reveal these lands, and Isaiah's prophecy is the clearest and the easiest to defend. The maps prove it.

Joseph's land and the land shadowing with wings are the same land, and in the prophecies concerned, land means land not something else. Isaiah revealed the coming forth of the Book of Mormon on this land. Nearly the whole twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah is devoted to religious and international affairs.

Answering the assertion that the land shadowing with wings was a cursed land, I refer the serious student who may read this to a splendid article by Patriarch William Patterson and published in the Herald for February 26, 1949. He enthusiastically uses over a page describing the blessings that should come on the "Land Shadowing With Wings." He calls Isaiah "America's prophet-historian."

WHEN CHRIST was on this land after his resurrection, addressing the Nephites, he paid this tribute to Isaiah: "Yea, a commandment I give unto you, that ye search these liberally of our time, talent, and tithe to the advancement of the church in the years ahead. As admonished, the elders should quicken their study under proper direction, that we shall be equipped to more successfully solve our problems. We bid you not to be deceived in this day, when men's fears have multiplied with their conquest over the temporal and physical order.

In this dispensation of time, which we are pleased to refer to as the "hastening time," there is an ever-increasing need for "witnessing."

As reminded by the Prophet Amos, many years ago, a famine will be sent in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of "hearing the words of the Lord." That day is upon things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah. For surely he spake as touching all things concerning my people which are of the house of Israel; therefore it must needs be that he must speak also to the Gentiles." —IV Nephi 10: 27, 28.

What were Isaiah's credentials regarding knowledge of Egypt and Ethiopia? He didn't need a heavenly vision to see tiny Egypt. For three years he traveled (very lightly) through that land and Ethiopia. He knew its rivers and environments. Christ bore testimony to his prophetic versatility. In a glorious vision Isaiah saw twin continents extending to the frozen Arctic Circle on the north, and almost to the Antarctic Circle on the south with the uncluttered Atlantic Ocean in the front yard, and the expanding peaceful blue Pacific Ocean in the back yard. Isaiah, while enveloped in spiritual splendor and viewing this marvelous geographic setting, cries out in a never-to-be-forgotten salutation, "HO TO THE LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS WHICH IS BEYOND THE RIVERS OF ETHIOPIA."

It is the cornucopia land of the world; the land of divine benedictions; the land of the plumed serpent; the land of Quetzalcoatl, Kukulcan, and Wiracocha; the land trod by the sacred feet of the resurrected Christ. It is God's "choice land."

us. This is the day for the church of the Restoration to "witness" with power and authority. Sensing the seriousness of our day, where all sorts of ideologies and governments are clamoring for the attention of men, we come to you with the testimony that the teachings of the Christ are the only truths that will bring us peace, love, and world brotherhood. We call upon all our ordained men, as well as our entire membership to quicken our missionary drive. Our testimony of this Latter Day Movement must reach far beyond our present-day influence, through a thousand congregations—to the world at large. We must make our religion practical in our everyday life.

Our faith must not only be a belief that God and Christ exist, but a firm faith, that moves us to venturesome action , confident that the gospel program of the Christ will build the world brotherhood we so much need today. Faith is channeling all our talents and energies into a great endeavor to bring to pass God's will among men. Repentance is not only being sorry for past sins, but it is also being dissatisfied with our contribution to his program so far. It is a firm resolve to be more and more profitable to Christ and his church each succeeding day. We must seek new and better methods to serve! Baptism is, with the other sacraments, an outward ceremony which must indicate inward change. In baptism we seriously make a covenant with God, as did the Christ, that we will henceforth devote our lives to building righteousness among mankind. The pentecostal blessing—the power of the Holy Spirit —comes to those, and only those, who dedicate their future to the development of a society built after the pattern of God's eternal laws. Celestial glory is the reward that is granted to those who attain sinless personalities. We must put all things to spiritual uses, thus enriching the righteous life of all people. Even Zion itself, as we build it under the direction of the Christ, must be a great witnessing demonstration—a great missionary endeavor. Observing our lives, homes, industries, school, farms, etc., under the control of the Spirit of the Christ, the world will be won to his ways. The word of the Lord to us today assures us of the greater endowment of spiritual power which awaits our preparation and ability to receive.

The Church in America stands in the promised land. The Church in Missions Abroad looks toward the promised land. Let not our hearts remain in Egypt even though the ancient fleshpots are found in modern setting of scientific wizardry.

We bear testimony to you that at the heart of life, beyond the eye and wisdom of man, there lies a divine order—quiet, purposeful, serene, invincible , and altogether lovely; all that poets and musicians have put in sound and song; all that scientists have or yet will discover; all that men of good will have fought, bled, died for, and won for us in their struggles down through the ages; all these values and much more are in the will of God to give to those who obey the gospel. Love, joy, and peace, adequate to satisfy men at their best is found alone in the Holy Ghost which is bestowed on those who love God and serve him. We humbly remind you that gratitude to God for all his many mercies to us is the beginning of culture and wisdom, and that life lived in this gratitude, will enable the Church to arise and shine. For as is related in latter-day revelation, "He who receiveth all things with thankfulness, shall be made glorious."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 4.

We feel eternally indebted to God and most grateful for his love. Ingratitude is one of the greatest of sins; and we feel led, under our great love for the Master, to share with all men in all the world, regardless of race, color, creed, or nationality the good fortune and good news which we have. Indeed it is our sacred obligation so to do. Our world is torn and racked with pain, suffering; it is imprisoned in fear, men are bound in bundles with cunningly devised fables, and no man can loose them. Nothing but the power of God will suffice to deliver his world, which is a province of his kingdom, from the thralldom in which it is held by the evil one. As citizens of the kingdom of God, we must be keenly aware of the needs of mankind, sensing our destiny under God to bring salvation to the world. We bid the Church to arise, to put away her fears, to open her mouth in Pentecostal testimony, for this is our day—and it is yet day. Soon comes the night.

As Special Ambassadors for the Christ, we pray that God may enrich and bless each of you; may the humblest testimony be endowed with the divine spirit. May words of wisdom, spoken in humility, find lodgment in the hearts of those who hear, so that men may be won to the cause of Christ in ever-increasing numbers! We are living in a great age. The Christ has entrusted to our care the truths that can save mankind and bring us back to him in righteousness. God has selected this period, out of all the ages of the past and future, for us to serve in the world. We must not fail him! With the ever-increasing endowment of the Holy Spirit—shown in such power years ago at Pentecost—we bid the Church respond to the call of our Lord and Master, the Prince of Peace.

Your servants in Christ,
THE COUNCIL OF TWELVE,
Paul M. Hanson, President.

Briefs

BOULDER, COLORADO.—In October, 1947, Elder Merle Howard organized the Boulder Mission, and since that time there has been an active, though small group. The largest number out to a service has been twenty, and the smallest number has been six. There are several families of elderly people who have been baptized. Several students from the University of Colorado have been regular in attendance. Gordon Harshman, the only priesthood member for a long time, has tried to minister to the people as best he can. Edwin Robert Fishburn is sponsor of the college student group. Meetings have been held in one of the campus buildings, in a rented hall, and in one of the trailers in Vetsville. Priest Bill Van Fleet is also assisting with these cottage meetings.

PASCAGOULA, MISSISSIPPI.—District President W. J. Breshears conducted a series of missionary services from April 30 through May 7 in the Pascagoula Branch. Elders Breshears used Kodachrome slides as a projected visual aid to illustrate each sermon. The subjects of the services included, "Life and Ministry of Jesus," "The Church That Jesus Built," "The Restoration of Christ's Church," "Ye Must Be Born Again," "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," and "Where Will You Spend Eternity?" A very good spirit prevailed, and many nonmembers attended. The chapel was filled to capacity each night. Elder J. L. Barlow, pastor, had a program of the services printed in pamphlet form and distributed them to members to give to friends.—Reported by MRS. NINA LEA MASON.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—Seventeen requests for baptism and church membership were received during the first week of missionary services now being conducted. Splendid preparatory work had been done under the direction of Elder Herbert M. Scott, pastor, and the missionary preaching and visiting is now being done by Evangelist Ray Whiting. There are more than thirty in the prebaptismal class, and expectations run high for a fine ingathering.

IOLA, KANSAS.—Meetings are held in the I.O.O.F. Hall in Chanute. Seventeen church members living near Iola attend church school and services in Chanute. Elder A. C. Barker is the pastor, and Brother Roy Hill is the priest. On April 30 Elder and Sister C. E. Cadmus and daughter, and Brother and Sister Norman Grey of Parsons, Kansas, were visitors. Brother Grey, who is district bishop's agent, spoke on stewardship.

The nineteen members of the women's department are studying "A Commentary on Doctrine and Covenants," by F. Henry Edwards. President of the group is Mrs. W. C. Moore, and teacher is Mrs. R. C. Walton. The friendly visitor for Iola is Mrs. Lillian Matney, and the friendly visitor for Chanute is Mrs. J. F. Joy. Meetings, alternating between Iola and Chanute, are held the first and third Friday of the month.—Reported by MRS. LILLIAN MATNEY.

LOWBANKS, ONTARIO.—On Easter Sunday, after the church school session, a special service for the blessing of children was held. At this service Alfred Allan, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wernham and Dale Robert, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cook were blessed by Elders Clarence Macdonald and H. A. Dayton. Appropriate songs were sung by the junior class and solos by Mrs. David Albon and Mrs. Archie Dayton.

Following the service of blessing, the Easter sermon was preached by Priest Percy Graham, who spoke from the text, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

At the evening service Elder H. A. Dayton gave a short talk on "Easter" and a pageant, "Easter Dawn," was presented by members of the Lowbanks Branch. Solos were rendered by Mrs. Archie Dayton, Donald Moscrip, and Mrs. Houser. This service was brought to a conclusion by the presentation of another pageant, "Glorifying the Cross." A capacity congregation was present for the evening service.—Reported by H. A. DAYTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

"Behold How Great Is Your Calling"

- By FLOY L. BENNETT

This is a condensation of a talk given at a meeting of the women of Kansas City Stake on March 2, 1950, at Central Church.

Verily I say unto you, Behold how great is your calling. Cleanse your hearts and your garments, lest the blood of this generation be required at your hands. Be faithful until I come, for I come quickly, and my reward is with me to recompense every man according as his work shall be.

THIS QUOTATION from the Doctrine and Covenants was not directed to the women of the church; it was given to the quorum of Twelve Apostles. However, both the language and the instruction may very well be applied to the women of the church today—especially the sentence, "Behold how great is your calling."

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." Some of us are called to be women's leaders, some church school teachers, some choir directors or pianists, singers in the choir, or something else. And these are all noble callings; but that is not what I want to talk about today. We are called to be women, with all that the word implies! Most of us are called to be wives and homemakers; almost as many are called to be mothers. All of us are called to be Saints. Behold how great is your calling.

In passing let me say that I do not wish to minimize the important responsibilities for women at church. I merely say that is not my major concern today. We are called to be women's leaders, church school teachers, choir directors, and all the rest, definitely. The Lord and the church need us for these jobs. We can also make worthy contributions in school and civic affairs. It is my firm conviction that such responsibilities, in addition to hastening the work of the kingdom add much to our qualities of womanhood and sainthood. We function more effectively in both these capacities because of interests away from the home and because of that good feeling it gives us, that feeling of being worth while to the growth of a cause. If we are not careful, however, the tail may easily wag the dog, and we may lose sight of or neglect the first and real purpose of our existence, our divine calling.

THERE IS A STORY told of two friends who met again after many years of separation. Each inquired about the other's family. "We lost our first child," said the first man to his friend. The other, shocked, cried out, "Oh, I didn't know she was dead." "She isn't dead," was the quiet response to which he added sadly, "I was too busy." Our own are dear to us. We dare not be too busy to give understanding and affectionate attention to our responsibilities at home.

Our days are crowded with the necessity for making choices. Daily we are confronted with the choice between life and—no, not life and death, that choice is not rightfully ours—but the choice between just life and the more abundant life; the choice between the "misty flats" of mediocrity and the "High Way" of Christ-like achievement. We have our agency; the choice between mediocrity and the more abundant life is ours. We may seek to avoid responsibility and decide not to choose. In which case and in the language of Little Orphan Annie, "The Misty Flats will get you, if you don't watch out." It is surely true that, "He who chooses not to choose has chosen."

We cannot avoid the responsibility of choice. The High Way is our way only when we are decisive in our choices for the good way of life. We have to work at it if we are to attain "the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus." We may be quite comfortable on the "misty flats." Maybe we can even be good, but we cannot be good for much. The way of Christ is not a comfortable way—it never was; but the way of Christ is the High Way. We shall not meet him often on the "misty flats" of mediocrity.

HOW SHALL WE ATTAIN the "mark of our high calling"? Since the beginning of recorded history, various wise individuals have tried to tell others how to improve themselves. One man writes, "The wise man becomes full of good, even if he gathers it little by little." Another says, "One ought every day to hear a little song, read a good poem, see a fine picture, and if it were possible, to speak a few reasonable words." Yet another writer advises his young friend, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." There is much for us to consider in each of these statements, but Paul's injunction to Timothy is the most comprehensive of the three. He is definite and clear and one has but to define the word "study" to understand his meaning.

While it is true that study may be defined as the "application of the mind to books, etc., in order to acquire knowledge," Webster continues to define study as "earnest or reasoned effort; as, his study is to do right. To endeavor with thought and planning; as he studied for the public good." Actively directing one's energies toward the accomplishment of worth-while aims, according to our definition, is study. Let us consider the full and complete meaning of study when we set out to follow Paul's instruction to Timothy.

BOOKS ARE A RICH source for self-improvement. They make possible an intimate acquaintance with the greatest minds of all time. We cannot remember all we read, but we can remember much of it, and "man's mind stretched to a new idea never goes back to its original dimensions." One may not hold the specific idea in mind very long but his mental horizon has been extended by that idea, and his opinions and judgments will forever after be colored by it whether he knows it or not.

The woman who wishes to magnify her calling will study to develop standards for sound judgment and wise discrimination between good and bad in literature, music, motion pictures, radio programs, and various forms of amusement and recreation. She cannot travel the High Way herself, nor can she point the way for her children unless she has studied to be wise in her appreciations, evaluations, and judgments.

The woman who is challenged by the divinity of her own call will wish to acquire a general knowledge, a vocabulary, and a psychological set for adequate education in many fields in which children have a natural curiosity. Questions concerning the church, social inequalities, and sex challenge even the best trained parent.

If we would avoid mediocrity, we must study to improve our own personal qualities. If only we might give more consideration to voice and speech! We tell so much about ourselves when we open our mouths to speak. The aggressive or retiring personality is announced at once. Qualities of kindness, patience, tolerance, sympathy, happiness, and love are most readily heard in the voice. It is truly said that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If our hearts are dry as the desert, our speech cannot be alive with the qualities of spirit that characterize those who travel the High Way.

WE SO OFTEN LACK in our appreciations of people and things. Even our prayers are proof of this; they are much more frequently asking prayers than thank-you prayers. If we would pursue the High Way, we must see the beauty of God's creation and see the good in our fellow men. Life is much richer if we can enjoy the glory of the sunrise, the fragrance of the rose, the music in the thunder, and the grace in the wind-lashed trees even in a storm. In our failure to recognize the good in others, we often fail to capitalize on our greatest opportunity for development in others. School administrators and supervisors are taught to look for the strong qualities in their teachers and help to strengthen and develop these further, rather than to point out the weak points to be overcome. Faults often starve for lack of attention when one is concentrating on a further development of his strengths. We as women and as Saints are called with a holy calling. We can magnify that calling by striving to improve our personal qualities.

These are but a few of the fields in which we must study to show ourselves approved. Study is necessary if we are to acquire these graces, but there is something else: after setting ourselves in the path of study, we may well ask ourselves, "What lack I yet?"

OUR SECOND RULE for walking in the High Way is to practice the presence of God through prayer. "In all thy ways acknowledge him and he will direct thy paths." If the High Way is often rough and difficult, it is through prayer that we can be sustained in our endeavor. Our finite powers can be extended by the infinite power of God, and our personalities may be developed and sublimated by our association with that power. We too often neglect this greatest of all sources of strength. Properly interpreted it is the cable which anchors us to the Rock and the greatest motive power for every worth-while endeavor. We must learn the value of prayer.

In seeking to live the more abundant life, "Bear ye one another's burdens," for you cannot walk the High Way alone. Traveling the High Way is a distinctly co-operative affair. Not only must we make room for the fellow traveler, but we must be diligent in our efforts to aid him and accept with humility his assistance when it is graciously offered. In co-operative effort there is strength; strength to travel the High Way; strength to lift us out of the "misty flats" of mediocrity.

The responsibilities which are ours because we have been called to be women are heavy but so important! It is easy to get caught in the treadmill of mediocrity and lose sight of the more abundant life possible to those who are called to be Saints. It is our responsibility and privilege to magnify and glorify our calling. "Study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Practice the presence of God through prayer. "In all thy ways acknowledge him and he will direct thy paths." And "Bear ye one another's burdens," for you cannot travel the High Way alone.

Behold, how great is your calling!

New summer fashions blossomed out in all of the women's magazines, and while we will not mention any specifically, each woman should be able to choose some becoming new styles, as many hints are given to aid choices. Illustrations and reading matter in May magazines have a freshness that is pleasing.

Almost one person in every hundred is mentally retarded. This fact makes "The Child Who Never Grew" by Pearl S. Buck, Ladies' Home Journal, one of interest to all. It is beautifully and lovingly written, and everyone should be better and more understanding after reading it.

"Was It Cancer?" Ladies' Home Journal, and the companion article, "They Built It Themselves for $3,400," are articles you will want to read, because Virginia Phillips, the young wife, is one of our own church members and because the

Religion and the New Community

By GERALD GABRIEL

FOUR TOP ATOMIC scientists are saying that thirty to sixty million Americans should be moved from our larger cities. This is not new thinking, however, for the past two decades have seen a new type of community growing in America. This type is unlike any in American history. It is known to sociologists as the fringe-type community; that is, it is neither rural nor urban, but borders on both.

A solution envisioned by many families in the event we are forced to experience again a period such as the '29 depression" is a small farm to produce needs for subsistence. This also has its appeal in case of heavy bombing if war should come.

This type of community has been a problem since its birth and was one of the chief topics of discussion in the last Rural Life. More than one third of the rural population of today is made up of those who represent something akin to "the back to the farm movement." There are certain characteristics about these communities that should be of interest to us. (1) They are our fastest growing group in America. (2) They are younger than either farm or urban groups. (3) They have more children than other groups. (4) They have a high rate of home-ownership, and a high rate of indebtedness through mortgages. (5) They are the least organized group and the least interested in community organizations. (6) They are a mixed group of various professions and services as well as religions. (7) They are our most mobile. (8) They are more interested in secular activities than the church. (9) Their spare time is spent in home enterprises; repairs or improvements about the home, garden, or landscaping. This type of recreation often consumes not only weekday evenings and holidays, but also Sundays. (10) They have less in common with their immediate neighbors.

THE CHURCH of the future will, of course, meet the crying need of such communities on one hand and cope with the evils on the other. In the first place a devoted member of the church is not likely to move into such a community unless there is a church near enough for his family to attend. If there are sufficient numbers of church members living in the community or prospects are good for a gathering, he will give it considerable thought because of the financial and physical strain that he would be undertaking on his own home adventure, besides the needed support for a new church. Lukewarm members might not hesitate to make such a move. Here a family will work its spare time in improvements in and about the home. Other time will be spent on movies, week ends at the lake (if such can be afforded), or some other activity in which there are no community ties. Some secular organizations have made inroads into these communities. Because of their uniqueness, they may, in some way be advantageous to the church as they have proved to be to the organizations which have met their interests and needs. These organizations have made their inroads by giving service in the fields of architecture, home improvements, modernization, sanitation, landscaping, gardening, and loan and finance service, as well as physically relaxing types of recreation. Now, how can our church meet the interests and needs of such a group?

THE FIRST FOUR characteristics previously listed seem to be an advantage to the church. The age range is not so large; composed chiefly of young adults and children. Each family is interested in building comfortable, modern, enduring homes. (They are interested in the physical—the house, conveniences, beauty, and scenic values.) They are interested first in improving "things about the place," second, in other recreation that is physically relaxing.

The church reaching these people must supply leadership from an outside source—community residents are too interested in homework, bills, et cetera. This is usually accomplished by establishing a mission supported by a larger, stable congregation which gives leadership and helps finance the new group until it is on its feet. Church activities are not as numerous as in larger congregations—enough to provide for the immediate needs of the new community, but not enough to overload an already overworked people. There may be subsidiary organizations to meet the needs of the children and teen-agers. The social needs of this age and type community must also be met, yet not overdone. This may be a rich missionary field if there are a few members in the community to give the church attendance and interest support. The missionary priesthood representative from the mother congregation will usually carry the load in all missionary endeavor. His approach is no different than any other missionary endeavor—he begins where the people are. He becomes interested in their interests. If he has met with similar problems, or has had actual experience and education in home development, landscaping, gardening, et cetera, he has his first approach. On the other hand, if he lacks such knowledge, his counsel may prove more detrimental than helpful. His contacts must not be time-consuming; informal chats, friendly visits of personal and family concern lay the best foundation for an invitation to church or an opportunity to enter the home or to invite people to his home for a serious talk about the church at a time when their work is less demanding.

THE BIG OPPORTUNITY for the church lies in the interest in the type of enduring home it can build. As long as a family is working together toward the dream house in the country, there is apt to be unity—once this is attained, the purpose for their labors is soon lost sight of. Enduring homes are built only on those principles found within the church. A well-balanced home life is physically healthful, economically sound, morally wholesome, and spiritually centered.

Alma Mater - By BARBARA McFARLANE

I SIT AT this desk for the last time. For the last time I look out of the window, and my pencil falters, the trees and lawn and red brick buildings blur and swim before my eyes as a wave of nostalgia engulfs me. But with this feeling of loss and emptiness comes an overwhelming sense of gratitude for the experience I have had.

I sit at this desk for the last time—this desk on which I composed so many papers, studied so many lessons, wrote so few letters home. My thoughts wander across the desk to my roommate's place opposite mine. She is already gone, but her presence lingers—lingers in the mirror which held both our reflections the innumerable times I gave my nose a hasty flick with the powder puff over her shoulder, lingers in the corner of the bed on which she bruised her elbow executing an intricate contortion she learned in tumbling class, lingers in the remembrance of those countless hours we spent making ourselves sick on popcorn as we read our English Lit lesson aloud, lingers in the echo of the intimate talks in the dark after we had gone to bed. Here was our home, and tomorrow I will close our front door for the last time.

I sit at this desk for the last time and see from the window the picture of red brick buildings. For two years I have been drawn irresistibly to classes in those buildings. Sometimes my steps were quick with anticipation, sometimes they were a little reluctant, but those steps have become wiser and richer because they answered the call of the red brick buildings.

I sit at this desk for the last time and see from the window the green trees and lawn. I have seen through my window the brilliant colors of fall; the winter which transformed my picture to a fairyland of dazzling lights and purple shadows; the spring which filled the air with the oriental perfume of lilacs and bordered the walks with flaming japonica and snow-white spirea.

BUT I HAVE NOT felt for the last time the spirit that is Graceland. I will always thrill with warmth to the memory of my friends on the faculty whose sincere concern for me and others like me prompted personal sacrifices which will follow us the rest of our lives. I leave Graceland a better member of society because in the dorm, on the football bleachers, in the classroom and dining hall I learned to be a good part of my group. I leave Graceland richer by many intimate friendships which cannot be broken by distance or time, because we walked together for awhile and are now united by common ideals and a common goal. I leave Graceland challenged to live life adventurously. But most important of all, I leave Graceland uncomfortable. I came two years ago complacent in my little narrow world. That world was pushed out rather roughly, I thought, until I caught a glimpse of an inexpressible something that "waked the dormant soul of such as I." This will drive me the rest of my life. Yes, I came to Graceland comfortable, but I leave uncomfortable, and I shall never be comfortable again. The feeling of emptiness will pass with time. I shall be able to sing the Alma Mater hymn with a quickened tempo of heartbeat, but not with a stifling constriction of throat. I shall adjust to new situations, go on to other schools, enter the world of affairs, but always the memory of golden days on the hill will remain with me, to challenge and direct my life.

I sit at this desk for the last time. For the last time I look out of my window and my pencil falters, the trees and lawn and red brick buildings blur and swim before my eyes. I think I know now what "Alma Mater" means.

topic is timely. Thinking it might be of interest to our readers, we called Mrs. Phillips, at her parents' home in Independence for more recent news of the family. Due to local labor conditions in Indiana, Mr. Phillips was unable to find steady work there, and the family came to Independence to the Fleeharty home. Since coming, Mr. Phillips has secured work in Kansas City. They were fortunate in finding an apartment near one of our churches, and they have rented their Indiana home. While Mr. Phillips' new job is not precisely in his line, it is steady, and they hope additional opportunities will open up in this area.

"The Most Glorious Experience," Reader's Digest, is an article about natural childbirth from the viewpoint of a mother who tried it. We strongly urge that all women read it with open minds.

"What Do You Eat for Breakfast?" Reader's Digest, gives the latest facts, figures, and suggestions about the most important meal of the day.

"If You Have to Change a Tire," Woman's Day, is a picture-story that will help to make you self-sufficient if you are faced with the job of changing a tire.

"A Footnote to the Beauty Ads," Woman's Day, discusses the importance of one "cosmetic" which is too-often overlooked—a pleasant voice.

To get your mind away from everyday tasks and on a broader plane, read "Eisenhower on War and Peace," McCall's. "The best chance for peace lies in a strong America," and a strong America depends on each of us.

"Sassy or Sweet," American Home, gives four ways to decorate an unfinished chest, and you'll be interested if you are faced with such a job.

"The Horse in the Bathtub," American Home, is strictly for laughs—good, hearty, wholesome laughter.

Parents' Magazine seems particularly filled with articles of wide interest, but we will mention only a few. "Grow With Your Children" stresses a wholesome, growing relationship between parents and children. "Who's Boss at Your House?" offers a new clue to what often makes trouble in marriage, and what to do about it. If you have ever wondered how real people feel about seeing their story in movies, you'll be interested in "Cheaper by the Dozen Goes to Hollywood."

A very important article for everyone is "Obesity," Good Housekeeping, even though it is principally a repetition of all that doctors know about the subject of overweight.

Worthy of being printed in booklet form for easy reference is Good Housekeeping's "Sandwich Manual." It is a much more complete guide to sandwich making and serving than is contained in most cookbooks.

 IT COULD HAPPEN

This is almost pure fantasy. But it could happen sometime, somewhere.

The year is 2050. You enter your rocket ship with your brief case under your arm. You close the vacuum-sealed door and twirl the dials. There is a "whoosh!" as the ship leaves the earth, and minutes later you land at the airport of Gomorrah, the City of Sin. You are hoping to sell bullet-proof glass and armor plate to some of the leading citizens.

Leaving your ship, you detect that something has changed since your last visit. Yesterday's papers are still on the kiosks, recording the city's crimes—murder, gambling, robbery, and violence. But today a strange quiet has settled over the city. It even seems peaceful.

The saloons are open, but there are no customers. Bartenders, bewildered, are polishing the counters in a daze. Where are all those who hunger and thirst after unrighteousness? The gambling halls are brightly lit, but empty except for the attendants. Roulette wheels are idle, dice are in the cups, slot machines are gathering dust.

A pair of policemen—they have to go that way in Gomorrah—are standing at a corner muttering between themselves, wondering when hell will break loose again. In all their experience, they have seen nothing like this.

Car traffic is orderly, and nobody goes against the light signals. There have been no holdups in hours, no murders, no suicides, no crimes of lust, no mayhem, no gangland slaughters. At the police stations the daily blotter is empty, and the lieutenants in charge are amazed.

People are terrified. Sin they understand. Righteousness frightens them. But they will get used to it soon.

What has happened to these people? They have had a very slight, an almost imperceptible, an invisible change—a change of heart. Last night a preacher spoke on the radio. Seemingly nobody took it seriously, yet this morning, everybody is wondering. Just a change of heart.

The saloons close, the gambling halls fold up, the vice centers have no customers. People gather in the parks, and somebody is heard talking about God. There are no churches, but somebody mentions building one. Voters take an interest in civic affairs, and politicians mend their ways.

You are disappointed. You leave Gomorrah without the orders you had expected. There is no need for armor plate now.

A change of heart. That, of course, is fantasy. But, under the preaching of the gospel, it could happen sometime, somewhere. It happened when Jonah went to Nineveh and preached. It could happen in your city. It could happen in Gomorrah.

 WESKIT

Hail, imperturbable vest; of pockets you're a veritable nest; when clean, you're adorable; with spots, you're deplorable; for fat men a corset, at best. You harbor some toothpicks half-broken; small change, a watch, and bus token; a couple of bills and Missouri mills; and a package of gum not yet open. In front your appearance is best; in back you're only half-dressed; and good fashion, we note, requires a coat, or the wearer will seem dispossessed. You make a pleasing facade; style experts will give you the nod; but come sunny spring, I'll gleefully sing, and hang you on the hall closet rod.

This series is concerned with two factors: (1) with the ordinance of the Laying on of Hands, and (2) with the spiritual reality back of it—the gift of the Holy Spirit, as this gift is associated with confirmation of new members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and administration to the sick. Set No. 4, 15 slides in full color with printed manual $6.50

Ye Must Be Born Again

Scripture texts and historical quotations are used to teach the essential features of Baptism, illustrated with color slides. This is a missionary aid, but can be used to good advantage in prebaptismal classes. An illustrated script serves as a guide for study. Set No. 3, 19 text slides and 9 color illustrations with printed manual $6.00

Statement of Belief

The official Statement of Belief as originally written by Joseph Smith II has been visualized and brought into more concrete form in this set of 37 color slides. Each frame has a short text together with a color illustration conveying the central idea of that part of the statement. Further details together with the price will be announced in the "Saints' Herald" some time after June 1, 1950.

A Chosen People

IN THE PSALMS was laid the coping-stone of American Independence. In 1787 it was to the first verse of Psalm 127 that Benjamin Franklin appealed, when speaking before the Convention assembled to frame a Constitution for the United States of America:

In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the divine protection. Our prayers, Sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence. To that kind Providence we owe this opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten this powerful Friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need his assistance? I have lived for a long time (eighty-one years), and the longer I live the more convincing proof I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow can not fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured, Sir, in the sacred writings, that "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." I firmly believe this, and I also believe that without his concurring aid we shall proceed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. I therefore beg leave to move that, henceforth, prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven and its blessing on our deliberations be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service.

—Benjamin Franklin.

Gomer T. Griffiths

In a telegram from Willoughby, Ohio, Elder W. E. Williams tells of the death of another valiant soldier for Christ last Wednesday afternoon. Elder Griffiths passed away at 2:45 p.m., May 24, after a long illness. Had he lived until June 2, he would have reached his ninety-fourth birthday. In our next issue, Herald readers will be given some biographical data and tributes to this very worthy minister.

News & Notes

PRESIDENT TO GO ABROAD

On June 20 President Israel A. Smith, accompanied by Bishop Mark Siegfried, will leave Los Angeles for the Hawaiian Islands. He will attend the District of Hawaii Conference on July 25.

From Hawaii he will go to the Society Islands and will attend a conference there.

President Smith and Bishop Siegfried plan to return to the United States about the first of September.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI

Elder Emery E. Jennings, district president of the Far West Stake, was instrumental in purchasing for the church at a public auction on May 6 a school building for $6,500. The building will be converted into a permanent home for the local congregation. Partitions on the first floor will be removed to make a large auditorium. On the first floor will also be classrooms, the library, and the pastor's study. On the second floor will be the auditorium for junior church, classrooms, and recreation rooms. Several changes will be made on the exterior of the building, and a considerable amount of landscaping will be done to the yard. On the south of the building will be a parking area and on the west will be a recreation area.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Brother and Sister Claude F. Snider of Independence were honored with an open house celebration of their golden wedding anniversary. They have lived in the same home in Independence since 1906. Sister Snider's father, D. S. Crawley, was a missionary in the early days of the church.

GRAY LADIES

On May 21 graduation exercises were held at the Stone Church for a class of fifteen women who have completed work that qualifies them for membership in the Gray Ladies, a unit of the Red Cross. Elder D. V. Lents, chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, spoke to the congregation. Caps were presented to the class by Miss Gertrude Copeland, and pins by Miss Nelle Morgan. Certificates were presented by Mrs. Fred R. Richart of the Red Cross.

Two women, Mrs. Vera Fairbanks and Mrs. Pearl Franklin, received ten-year service pins. The women awarded four-year certificates were Mrs. Ina Hinde, Mrs. Ruby Barliam, Mrs. Mary Cordis, Mrs. Maud Etzenhouser, Mrs. Grace Hall, Mrs. Katherine Harder, Mrs. Sarah Johnson, Mrs. Myrtle Keiney, Mrs. Ada Richter, and Mrs. Faye Stewart.

LEADERS IN MUSIC

Elder Franklyn S. Weddle was in Lamon, Iowa, on May 21 to confer with President E. J. Gleazer and to complete arrangements for the Church School and Church Music Workshop to be held at Graceland College in June.

RAY WHITING

Successful services are being held in Des Moines, Iowa, by Elder Ray Whiting, Seventy John L. Nutgrass, and Herbert M. Scott, pastor of the branch. Instead of conducting a preaching service, Brother Whiting is teaching a class every evening, the average attendance of which is two hundred. Thirty adults and twenty-five children have been baptized.

The Heritage of Children

"Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord."

—Psalm 127:3

THE GREATEST NEED of every child alive is to be loved.

Put that statement in a place by itself. Print it in bold type. Under-score it with heavy red lines. Then ring a bell and shout for attention. When people stop talking long enough to listen, tell them about it.

In all probability, many of them do not know it. They may never know it. And, sad to say, quite a number of them will be parents.

The tragedy of childhood is not to be loved.

Your child can share poverty with you, and not mind it too much. He will eat common fare, and thrive. He will wear humble clothing, and it will not hurt his soul. He will share in the family toil, and still be happy. All this if you love him and care for him. All this if you will give him as much of the good things of life as you have for yourself.

But if you do not love him he will be miserable, though you heap the treasures of the earth in his lap, surfeit him with the finest food, and dress him in costly raiment.

One of the sweetest stories of all time was told of an old doctor and his smallest patient in a hospital. All the other babies were gaining weight and looking rosy and sweet. This one little fellow ate poorly, remained small, and was listless. Medicine did not remedy his trouble.

Then one day while making the rounds, the doctor wrote on the baby's chart: "This baby to be loved every three hours."

With that permission, you can imagine how the nurses went to work.

In a little while the baby took his food better, his eyes brightened, and he was soon gaining weight normally.

Love is the indispensable vitamin of the spirit, especially for children.

Here is what happened in the home of a young church couple. They had one child, but the birth went so hard that the doctor told the mother she should have no more if she expected to live and bring her daughter to maturity.

But their hearts were large, and they had room to love more children than one. So they went to an agency and adopted one. It is almost as difficult to adopt a child as it is to have one, but they endured and finally accomplished it.

Now the little boy is growing up in a happy home. He is loved and wanted, and he knows it. Visit in that home, and you will see him having a wonderful time. He will be a splendid man some day.

Children's Day is celebrated at church. Why not at home, too? You are not immune to the none-too subtle flattery of attention; neither are children. Let Sunday dinner be something special in their honor, with their favorite kind of cake. Let a child sit at the head of the table and ask the blessing. Children grow in character and responsibility as they realize their importance in the family. Everybody needs to feel important at some time of the year. The best way in the world to get a child to behave is to talk to him as one human being to another, and treat him as an equal as much of the time as you can.

The glory and happiness of childhood is to be loved.

You may think it superfluous, perhaps a piece of folly, to say that children should be loved. Yet if you travel in public or teach in the schools or engage in social work, you will find too many of them that are not. And the consequences on the child's personality are always serious.

You have seen well-dressed mothers rudely pulling their children along with them in buses, on city streets, and in stores, scolding and threatening. A disagreeable mother is a sorry sight. A happy, loving mother is a beautiful sight.

Above all, you will pity the child who is not loved and want to take him and care for him.

If a child is not loved, he feels rejected, and he tends to express his resentment in destructiveness and disobedience.

It is good for you to love children, whether you have them or not. It is something you should try to learn if it does not come to you naturally. The friend of a child is a friend of the future and looks to the continuity of life. Those who do not like children are facing only a blind alley whose end is extinction.

If you want love you must give it out first, and there is no more grateful recipient than a child, if you know how to love him intelligently.

In our church work, let us love our children well enough to give them good classrooms, to train ourselves to teach and lead them. Let us care enough about them to provide a program for their spiritual education and their soul's salvation.

Every home needs children, or it suffers from an emptiness that nothing can conceal. Children are the beautiful fruit that a good home offers to the future. L. J. L.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.

Stakes, Their Organization and Purposes

By F. Henry Edwards

FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS the steadily increasing concentration of our people in key centers has presaged the more complete organization of the work of the church in these areas. The Saints were not greatly surprised, therefore, when the First Presidency recommended to the General Conference of 1950, with the prior consent of the other members of the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, that the work in Independence, the Detroit area, and Los Angeles County, California, should be administered through stake organizations. These recommendations were approved, and at the time this is being written, the reorganization called for in Independence has already taken place.

Questions coming to us from interested persons, both in the areas immediately affected, and from other places within the church, will perhaps be best answered by a brief discussion of stake organization and purpose in which we shall seek to gather up the teachings of the revelations and of our church experience as they have been understood by those who have written for the Herald and those with whom we have had an opportunity to discuss the matter.

STAKES IN THE EARLY CHURCH

The first references to stakes found in the Doctrine and Covenants are in revelations received in November, 1831. Here (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4) the families of Zion and "any of her stakes which are organized" are admonished concerning their spiritual obligations and (in a revelation given to the same conference but printed later in the book) the elders of the church are sent forth:

unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; . . . unto foreign lands; to call upon all nations; firstly upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3.

The first specific instruction concerning the organization of stakes was received in May, 1833, as follows:

A commandment I give unto you, that ye shall commence a work of laying out and preparing a beginning and foundation of the City of the Stake of Zion, here in the land of Kirtland . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 91: 1.

A month later the church was told:

It is expedient in me that this stake that I have set for the strength of Zion should be made strong.—Doctrine and Covenants 93: 1.

This principle that stakes are "set for the strength of Zion" appears to be fundamental.

From the earliest mention of stakes in the revelations, it is clear the intention of our Heavenly Father is that the work of gathering shall center in Independence, and thereafter, "that the borders of my people may be enlarged." In this connection the following quotations from the revelation appear to be pertinent:

This land, which is the land of Missouri, . . . is a land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the Saints: Wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the City of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

And that the testimony might go forth from Zion; yea, from the mouth of the city of the heritage of God; yea, for this cause I have sent you hither. . .—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 4.

. . . . For the good of the church and for the rising generations, that shall grow up on the land of Zion, to possess it from generation to generation, forever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 69: 2.

I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 8.

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

The enlargement of Zion is anticipated in the following:

. . . . Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3.

Stakes were soon recognized as an important part of church organization. Thus at a conference held at Kirtland on September 17, 1837, "Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon were requested to locate other stakes for the gathering of the Saints."—Church History, Volume II, page 109. At a Conference held in Daviess County, Missouri, on June

Twenty - one Days in Mexico

By HAROLD I. VOLT

Part One

A TOUR THROUGH MEXICO among the ruined cities of the pre-Columbian civilizations is an experience long to be remembered.

On January 4, 1950, Elder Harold D. Smith of Nauvoo, Illinois, his wife Mildred, their son Harold, Sister Velt, and I left Independence for Mexico on a twenty-seven-day tour which took us a total of 5,639 miles by the time we returned to Independence.

We had been vaccinated against smallpox, typhoid, and paratyphoid, and took with us pills for motion sickness, malaria, et cetera, and chlorine tablets for water.

Every day was packed with new and interesting experiences. After driving two and a half days through snow and ice, we were surprised to find Texas still under ice as far south as Austin. It sparkled with frost and glistened with icicles. Radio reports indicated that Dallas had to be by-passed, as her main thoroughfares were temporarily closed because of ice. Wrecked cars and buses testified of the troubles experienced, and we had a little difficulty getting started once, after photographing unusual ice scenes.

Fascinating sunset scenes entertained us the closing hours of the first two days.

We obtained cozy tourist cabins without difficulty along the way. At Laredo we changed sufficient money into Mexican pesos for use as far as Mexico City. We were surprised a little that tips in pesos were asked of us both entering and returning from Mexico.

AFTER LEAVING the desert country, we were thrilled with the majestic mountain scenery en route to Mexico City; it was beautiful beyond our anticipations. We were surprised that we had not heard more about it. We marveled that the natives have their milpas (little farms) so high, and at times so steep, that of necessity they tie themselves while working as a safeguard against falling down the mountainsides.

We ascended to an altitude of over nine thousand feet, and descended again some two thousand feet before entering Mexico City. On a trip to Cuernavaca and Xochicalco, though we climbed considerably for a time, we found ourselves two thousand feet lower at Cuernavaca than Mexico City. The steepest descent of all was in dropping thousands of feet toward sea level before reaching the tropical lowlands on the Vera Cruz trip. Sister Smith described it as "roller-coaster" descent.

It was a real thrill to see the plantations of sugar cane, bananas, pineapples, and papayas. These, the heavily shaded mango trees and flowering trees, reminded us of Hawaii. Eucalyptus gum trees along the highways reminded us of Australia.

At times we would see well-shaped ancient mounds projecting up from flat agricultural fields, reminding us of the real quest of our tour. Once we saw, on a hillside, caves with well-fitted stonework of apparently ancient times. Our driver would not stop often for minor details of interest, especially on mountainous winding highways; for distance had to be covered, and major scenes awaited us.

Brother Smith's fine Mercury Station Wagon made the entire trip without mishap. Brother Smith is to be commended for his careful driving. It is good in this age to find one whose skill and constant care allow one to feel relaxed throughout a trip like this. We observed some taking dangerous chances and witnessed the disastrous consequences.

PASSING THROUGH the desert country of Northern Mexico caused us to wonder if ancient people without modern means of travel would likely pass through such country, and for what purpose. And how would they find food to sustain them along the way? The Book of Mormon suggests something more likely, I think—that of travel by ships.

Sister Smith and Sister Velt had taken canned foods, dried fruits, cookies, biscuits, cheese, butter, canned milk, celery, apples, et cetera, for daily lunches. This proved a wise measure. We also took gallon bottles for drinking water and were careful not to drink until chlorine tablets had been dissolved in the water. Sister Smith had canned whole wheat which proved a popular daily breakfast food. We would eat together in a room of our cabins or hotel, and after a season of prayer for divine guidance, would start out very early. We made it a practice, when convenient, to have one warm meal a day, taking the precautions advised in our travel folders in matters of what foods to avoid. Except on special occasions we substituted eggs for meat on the menu.

Upon reaching Mexico City, we

And Forbid Them Not

By W. REED EMSLIE

IT IS RECORDED in the New Testament that the Master of men, upon a certain occasion, observed his disciples endeavoring to indoctrinate doting parents in the idea that they should keep their children in the background. This action by the disciples caused the Christ to say, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Carrying the thought further, he stated that anyone who did not accept the kingdom as a little child does could in no wise enter it.

Since the day on which Christ expressed these sentiments and thereby completely reversed the desires and teachings of his disciples, various interpretations have been placed upon their meaning. It is my opinion that a simplified approach to the idea expressed by Jesus regarding the place of children in the kingdom is not acceptable as true Christian philosophy.

Christ was an extremely intelligent man. He understood and taught many things which were beyond the grasp of his most ardent followers. For this, he was not only misquoted, misrepresented, and misunderstood but grossly mistreated as well. His attitude toward the role of the immature human being in the kingdom is still inadequately appreciated.

In admonishing his disciples to allow little children to come to him "and forbid them not," Christ was visualizing in the growing child, not a desirable entity but the inherent potentiality of the many fine attributes and qualities which children possess—characteristics which the mature individual must come to appreciate and emulate if the kingdom is to be a reality in any sense.

CASUAL OBSERVERS can discover the following traits Christ undoubtedly saw in the normal child. These qualities must be appreciated and practiced by those who embrace Christian philosophy if they are to become successful participants in the kingdom.

First, Christ must have seen a child's insatiable curiosity — an awareness of the environment and thirst for knowledge and understanding of the things which are new and within the powers of observation. Psychologists tell us that curiosity is a measure of intelligence. The greater the intellectual capacity, the greater the desire to know and understand. And conversely, the more one develops and expands his innate curiosity, the more he accomplishes in developing his intellectual capacity.

If we are to believe that "the glory of God is intelligence," we must gain an appreciation of this phenomenon which Christ saw in the young ones as well as the full import of continuing individual intellectual achievement. God's great glory is the intellect which he has given to man in its highest form. It is a prime consideration, then, that man exercise this gift to the fullest extent. What better example could be found of potential and actual intellectual development and achievement than the easily observable curiosity of a little child? Truly, a little child shall lead them.

Another readily identifiable characteristic which Christ saw is a child's desire and willingness to be doing something—not merely things which satisfy his needs for recreation and imagination, but things which others with whom he associates are doing. Anyone who has been around children has learned that it requires little persuasion to secure their whole-hearted co-operation in almost any undertaking. In fact, their willingness to participate in grown-up activities is pretty much on a voluntary basis. Children like to work with and for others and will do so at almost every opportunity.

Christ must surely have seen in the normal child an expression of faith which borders on perfection—faith in his parents, faith in the teachings which parents provide, and faith in the belief that parental care and sustenance will be ever-present. Such an expression of faith must be expanded and transferred to the heavenly parent as the child grows mentally and widens spheres of activity and association with others.

THESE AND OTHER like characteristics so evident in the average child must have been in the mind of Jesus when he chided his disciples for attempting to relegate the little ones to the rear ranks. He rebuked his disciples for not recognizing in children the priceless assets which are the essential building blocks of the kingdom.

In other words, Christ was giving support to the idea that children should be encouraged and taught to express their curiosity, thereby enhancing intellectual development. They should be permitted to work with and for others in performing the tasks at hand. Their faith in God and his divine laws should be an outgrowth of the faith they have in human beings. To forbid the expression of these things can lead only to human stagnation and the perpetual absence of the kingdom.

As children grow into maturity, these and the other fine qualities they possess must continue to function. As a matter of fact, it is imperative that these qualities be given expression by all followers of Christianity if there is ever to be a kingdom of heaven. It is upon such qualities as these that the kingdom is to be built.

Why I Belong to the Church

By J. L. VERHEI

YOUNG PEOPLE often come to my study to sit and talk about things in general. Many times they are not members of this or any church, but they are friends of our children.

Before we converse too long, I usually invite them to come to church, and quite often they ask, "Why belong to a church?" This question comes from the open and carefree mind of youth. A recent conversation with a teen-age boy and girl brought out some interesting problems. They had seen their elders "join" the church and still not belong. To be sure, one would have to join before he could belong, but to really "belong" one must do more than join. There are many who have joined by baptism and confirmation but still do not belong. They have not fully repented and turned from their sinful ways; therefore their vows are not true. They have not sought diligently and wholeheartedly to live the kind of life expected of church members. Some lack the proper training for effective Christian living. Some have not known spiritual experiences based on the true philosophy of the Savior. Others have not shared fellowship with the Saints. Still others lack the real desire to be true to the Christian way of living.

Successful membership depends upon the conception one has of the church. We are much in need of a broader understanding and a deeper insight into its meaning and the reason for its existence.

We must be careful that, as a church, we don't take on a worldly stride in trying to keep in pace with other churches and organizations. If we do, we are quite certain to become just another social organization engaged in routine tasks. Membership will be less and less meaningful and possess little spiritual power to effect the greatly needed changes in men and society.

The church must be the instrument sent by God to bring about the kingdom of heaven on earth. Its purpose is to redeem men and society. Now is the time when we must achieve the full understanding of the church and its mission and develop a new sense of devotion, character, and responsibility.

WHY SHOULD ONE belong to the church? The question deserves an honest answer. We as members should be able and willing to give a reason for the hope that is within us. Neither the individual nor the church can gain by evading or generalizing. If our church is to be judged by its indifferent, disinterested, or overzealous members, there is little to commend membership in it. We must be as fair however with the church as we are with any other institution. No organization would seem attractive if appraised by this type of individual. We should consider only those who honestly and earnestly seek to be the best living examples of the ideals of any organization.

To reap the benefits of belonging to the church, one doesn't have to die and go to Paradise. He can benefit by its influence here and now. One of the best assurances of success two people can have when they get married is regular attendance at church. Men and women have been known to realize more success in business because they participated in teaching, leading, and speaking in the church.

The real challenge is not that one will be perfect in a day, but that he will steadily develop so that each day will find him progressing farther toward a deep satisfaction of success within. In his progress he should make it easier for others who follow after him to move toward the same objectives.

Since the church was first brought into being by Adam, and again in these latter days through an angel, it has sought to teach men to become divinely perfect, even as God is divinely perfect. No one has fully achieved that goal, except the Son of God.

ONE OF THE VITAL REASONS for belonging to the church is a fellowship that brings us together in mutual understanding and aid. The reason marriage and home life mean more to those of us who belong to the church is that human lives become more valuable to us. As the result of the principle of giving to our loved ones, we learn to give to others without expecting any return. Yet in both cases, we usually reap a rich harvest.

Church membership helps us to be clean in our thinking, actions, and habits. We are also helped by the experience of working with loyal members to build a perfect society that will not yield to the evils of the day. In this society honest, upright men and women will be able to obtain livelihood without fear of cold or hunger; sickness and disease will meet their match and go down in defeat; wars will cease, and only God will control the destiny of men and nations.

Belonging to the church gives us a kinship with the Creator and his son, Jesus Christ. If we are loyal to that kinship we have an opportunity to be heirs and joint heirs in our Father's kingdom both in this world and the world to come.

AN INTERPRETATION OF THE PARABLE IN DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 98: 6-8

and the final consummation of its purpose.*

By J. W. Stobaugh

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY ever given to the people of the church of Jesus Christ is being given us today, not only to live good lives, but to go forth and testify before all men of the blessed assurance that is within us. Jesus asked Peter, "Whom say ye that I am?" When Peter answered, "Thou art Christ the Son of the living God." Christ said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." Most members of the church reason this to mean that revelation was the rock of which he spoke. The revelation was that Jesus was the Son of God, but this is only part of the truth. He couldn't build his church on revelation alone. He had to have a Peter, the testimony that Peter had to offer, and revelation to build upon.

The advantages of belonging to the church are that we have a definite knowledge when we are baptized that our sins and guilt are washed away, and we gain a closer kinship with Saints and loved ones—they mean more to us. We have the assurance of earthly and heavenly blessings if we are reasonably faithful. Too, we shall escape the fears that the world faces when men's hearts fail them. Christ promised that through his church our burdens would become light and easy to bear if we trusted in him and those he sent. The church can help us find more enjoyment in clean recreation than the world does in lustful pastime.

As members of the church of Jesus Christ, we do not have to trust the arm of flesh or join lodges or other social organizations to obtain security, satisfaction, and safety. The hope and security of the church bring so much more than these that their appeal fades as mist before the great sun from heaven.

We can take the raw stuff of life and give it noble and lovely form, or we can take a masterpiece of God and make it gross and dull.—Ted Bentz.

A CERTAIN nobleman [God] had a very choice piece of land [the institution of the church in the wilderness]. He said unto his servants [commissioned], "Go ye into my vineyard and plant twelve olive trees; [twelve apostles first mentioned in Restoration Movement on June, 1829, Doctrine and Covenants 16:6] and set watchmen round about, [to protect the vineyard—the Standing High Council—a judicious quorum] and build a tower, that one may overlook the land, to be a watchman upon the tower; [a tower of strength, the supreme prophetic authority] that mine olive trees may not be broken down, when the enemy [within the church, not without] shall come to spoil."

It is a well-known fact that there was contention in the church from the first regarding this centralized prophetic authority.

"Now the servants of the nobleman went and did as their Lord commanded them; and planted the olive trees, and built a hedge round about, and set watchmen, [the Standing High Council—see section 99, Doctrine and Covenants] and began to build a tower. And while they were yet laying the foundation thereof, they began to say among themselves. 'What need hath my Lord of this tower?' [contention arising concerning this prophetic authority] and consulted for a long time."

Some of the leading men of the church opposed Joseph with regard to this authority saying, "Why should it be necessary for all revelations to come through you? There are others eligible and capable of receiving revelations."

One Hyrum Page came up with a seer stone, which gave revelations that caused a serious contention. Oliver Cowdery and the Whitmers contended it was genuine and true. Only Joseph's steadfastness finally prevailed. (See Church History, Volume I, page 118.)

Church History, pages 13, 114, also makes mention of a letter which Cowdery wrote to Joseph, saying he had discovered an error in one of the revelations, and wrote, "I command you in the name of God to erase certain portions thereof." In answer, Joseph wrote, "Who are you to command me to erase from a revelation I received from Almighty God." A woman appeared, giving revelation and commandments, also found sympathizers. Joseph inquired of the Lord and received the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 43. (See Church History, Volume I, page 175.) Thus contention arose from time to time. The Lord spoke several times correcting this error once in 1830, three times in 1831, once in 1833 and possibly others (See Doctrine and Covenants 27:2; 43:2; 64:2; 87:2).

In Section 67:2 the Lord challenges the Saints with, "Seek ye out one of the least of these revelations, and if you can produce one like unto it, then ye are justified in saying that ye do not know that they are true." W. E. McLellan accepted the challenge but utterly failed and acknowledged his failure.

Yes, these people started to build a tower, but contention arose—"Why can't others receive revelations also." Through these conditions the enemy (within) broke down the hedge, scattered the watchmen (dissolved the High Council), and broke down the olive trees. Thus the latter-day apostasy prevailed for a season.

"Now behold, the nobleman, the lord of the vineyard, called upon his servants, and said unto them, Why! What is the cause of this great evil? Ought ye not to have done even as I commanded you? And after you had planted the vineyard, and built the hedge round about, and set watchmen upon the wall thereof, built the tower also, and set a watchman upon the tower, and watched for my vineyard, . . . Behold, the watchman upon the tower would have seen the enemy, while it was yet afar off, and made ready and kept the enemy from breaking down the hedge thereof and saved my vineyard from the hands of the destroyer. And the lord of the vineyard said unto one of his servants, [young Joseph] go and gather together the residue of my servants [all the scattered ones that remain]."

This Brother Joseph did in the early days of the Reorganization of the church, through the general epistle to the scattered ones, inviting them to come and unite with the true church.

28, 1838, the Adam-Ondi-Ahman Stake was organized. Similarly, on October 5, 1839, at a General Conference held at Commerce (Nauvoo), Illinois, "it was then unanimously agreed upon that it [Nauvoo] should be appointed a stake and a gathering place for the Saints." —Church History, Volume II, page 371. A similar organization was effected on the Iowa side of the river.

The record shows that on July 4, 1840, "the Presidency decided to organize the Saints at Crooked Creek, Illinois, according to a request from a branch located there."—Church History, Volume II, pages 450, 451.

At a General Conference held at Nauvoo, beginning October 3, 1840, "Hyrum Smith, Lyman Wight, and Almon Babbitt were appointed a committee to organize stakes between Nauvoo and Kirtland, Ohio."

—Church History, Volume II, page 467. And during the month of October and November this committee did organize stakes at Lima, Quincy, Mt. Hope, Freedom, and Oregon County, Illinois. (Church History, Volume II, page 468.)

Apparently these stakes organizations are not necessarily permanent, for the Ramus Stake was discontinued by action of the conference held at that place on December 4 and 5, 1841. At about the same time a conference held at Zarahemla discontinued the stake at that place and organized a branch in its stead. (Church History, Volume II, pages 558, 559.)

The only other important reference to stakes in the revelations prior to 1844 has to do with the function of stake high councils. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14.)

STAKES IN THE REORGANIZATION

The idea of stake organization was evidently to the fore from the beginning of the Reorganization. Thus, at the important Conference held at Beloit, Wisconsin, in June, 1852, one of the resolutions adopted read as follows:

Resolved, that, in the opinion of this conference, there is no stake to which the Saints on this continent are commanded to gather at the present time, but that the Saints on all other lands are commanded to gather to this land preparatory to the re-establishment of the church in Zion, when the scattered Saints on this land will also be commanded to gather and return to Zion, and to their inheritances, in fulfillment of the promises of God; and it is the duty of the Saints to turn their hearts and their faces towards Zion and supplicate the Lord for such deliverance. —Church History, Volume III, page 210, 210.

Less than a year later "a stake was appointed at Argyle, Wisconsin, to be known as the Zarahemla Stake" (Church History, Volume III, page 218). The president of this stake was sustained at the annual conference of 1854. (Church History, Volume III, page 231.) This stake lacked the resources essential to its success and did not flourish, and further attempts to establish stakes were temporarily halted by the inspired instruction given in 1873:

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established. Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter until it shall be otherwise given of me.— Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

This command to discontinue the organization of stakes was a matter of expediency. Stakes are called for by the nature of our organized endeavor, but the time was not yet ripe for them to be set up. Among other things, we did not have enough people concentrated in key areas. And we did not have enough high priestly leadership available. But as the gathering around Lamoni proceeded, the organization of a stake at this major church center was forecast as follows:

Lamoni, Iowa, having been made by the agreement of the church under the law of the land the principal place of business of the church, it is wise and expedient that it should be considered and declared by the conference to be the seat of the presidency of the church, and in due time be made a stake. In the meantime the district may be left to the care of its district organization subject to the direction of the presidency, no one of the missionary force being appointed to the charge thereof for the conference year, or longer if it shall be found advisable. —Doctrine and Covenants 122: 12.

Seven years later the command came:

My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law; a presiding high priest with counselors, a high council, and a bishop and his counselors. These stakes shall be made to comprise the boundaries of the districts as they now stand, the center at the towns and places named; and the majority of the councils that should be chosen should be residents of the places named, in order that there may ever be a sufficient body to transact the business required.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10.

The Independence and Lamoni Stakes were the only stakes in the church until 1916, but the General Conference of that year authorized the division of the Independence Stake into the Independence, Kansas City, and Holden Stakes. The General Conference of 1917 authorized the creation of Far West Stake. These organizations were authorized on recommendation of the First Presidency, concurred in by a Joint Council.

PRINCIPLES REVEALED IN THE REVELATIONS AND OUR HISTORY

It appears that stakes:

- (1) "Are for the curtains or the strength of Zion."
- (2) Are centers of gathering.
- (3) Are not necessarily contiguous. Kirtland and Nauvoo were not adjacent to each other nor to Zion.
- (4) In the early church were not regarded as necessarily permanent organizations, but in the Reorganization this element of permanence has been emphasized.

(5) In the early church were organized by the authority of revelation; or on the recommendation of the Presidency, approved by General Conference; or as a sequel to Conference action which had probably been previously approved by the Presidency.

(6) In the Reorganization were first organized as a result of Conference action. Later they were organized under authority of revelation, approved by General Conference. Once the organization of stakes had been resumed, they were organized on recommendation of the Presidency, approved by a Joint Council, and then by General Conference.

FACTORS BEARING ON NEW STAKE ORGANIZATION

Zion centers at Independence, Missouri, and extends into the "regions round about." It is to be expected that in due time stakes will be organized throughout this area, which is our primary area for both gathering and evangelism. We are here to stay.

It is well to understand that the term regions round about must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot, and that the necessities of the great majority of the church in gathering together can only be provided for by settling carefully together as many in one region as may be practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people under the laws existing in the places where such settlements are to be made.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 5.

As long as the foregoing is kept in mind, and stakes organized at a distance from Independence assist and do not impede the gathering to Zion and the regions round about, the First Presidency feel that the organization of these more distant stakes is well within the intent of the law. There has been some uncertainty on this point because of what we believe to be a misunderstanding of the revelation of December, 1833. This revelation was given after the Saints had been expelled from Independence, and says:

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

It was after this time that stakes were organized at Adam-Ondi-Ahman, Nauvoo, and elsewhere. It was also after this time that the revelation of January 19, 1841, indicated that the Quorum of High Priests

... is instituted for the purpose of qualifying those who shall be appointed standing presidents or servants over different stakes scattered abroad.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 42.

The organization of stakes in points remote from Independence is an adaptation, within the law, to the necessities of the church in highly concentrated areas and particularly in metropolitan centers. It is intended to bring to these centers the advantages of high priestly leadership not called for in districts and branches. Apart from such organizations, the tendency is to administer metropolitan areas under appointee leaders acting under the general authorities of the church. These appointees have few authorized and experienced local counselors. What is desired is a combination of general church and local leadership. In these important areas, it is imperative that we shall draw on the judgment and experience of high priests who are directly related to the local situations, and whose selection for their places in the stake presidency or high council or bishopric has been approved by the stake conference concerned.

The move is in harmony with the general policy of decentralization to which the leading quorums of the church are committed. It looks toward the time contemplated in the law (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, 15) when the stakes shall enjoy a high degree of autonomy in local matters. Such organization is directly related to the far-flung missionary endeavor to which the church is called.

In approaching the organization of new stakes, such questions as the following are considered:

- (a) Are enough members of the church available, preferably not less than 2,500?
- (b) Do these members have mature experience in the work of the church?
- (c) Do they live in close proximity to a given center?
- (d) Does this center have a sufficiently stable industrial or agricultural background and economy to give some guarantee of permanence?
- (e) Are there enough men clearly called to the high priesthood to provide the personnel for the presiding quorums?
- (f) Does the proposed stake offer the possibility of relating the contributions to be made in this area to the advancement of our Zion's purpose?

There are yet other areas which should in time be organized as stakes, particularly areas in the regions round about. It is to be hoped that as our evangelism in these areas is more and more successful, they can be linked together so that Zion indeed shall be strengthened and her borders enlarged. But the organization of the stakes, both permanent and secondary, near and far, awaits growth in every phase of the life of the church, and particularly that spiritual growth which warrants the call and ordination of members of the high priesthood whose primary stewardship is to be the key standing ministers of the church.

Significance of the Communion Service

By CHARLES KORNMAN

COMMUNION Sundays roll around just as regularly as birthdays and much more often. On those particular Sundays we take part in an ancient ritual—a ritual designed to help people become rich in the things of eternity. And by the very nature of man that possibility of richness is fraught with danger. In order for him to choose riches, he must be able to choose spiritual poverty.

Consider those Communion services in which you have participated either as a member of the priesthood or as a member of the congregation. Is it not true that those services in which you “felt the Spirit” were the ones in which you placed the emphasis on the substance rather than the form? When participation becomes habitual and customary—when we emphasize the form and not the power of godliness—we voluntarily choose spiritual poverty when we could have the “riches of eternity.”

Any categorical description of the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper will find reality overflowing these categories at every point, but there must be—and we believe there are—areas of discourse of which we, who have experienced the Lord’s Supper, can make universal application and thereby enrich our individual participation.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of the Lord’s Supper and the implications of that ritual are tremendous. The phrase: “It is the renewal of our covenant of baptism” is often heard with respect to this sacrament. We believe it is renewal, but just as there are many things that we understand now which we did not understand at the time of baptism, our covenant experience must be enlarged and expanded. If the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper is to be a living memorial of our Master, it ought to reflect to each individual his own image of Christ, as well as a brighter image, and each succeeding service ought to reflect an expanding image and a growing concept of the Master. The service of the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper is designed precisely to objectify and to bring out in concrete personal experience those things we could not understand at the time of baptism. Our Communion experiences ought to reflect a growing intimacy with Jesus our Lord—the Christ we see, overshadowed by the Christ we ought to see.

So it ought to be more than renewal of a covenant—it is designed to enlarge our understanding of who Jesus is, what he stands for, and what our relationship to him ought to be. It ought to be an expansion of our experience with him. The Lord’s Supper is a vehicle for that enlargement and is thereby a vehicle to a larger spiritual stature.

The significance of the Lord’s Supper is the significance of simplicity. All our rituals are simple—ordination, baptism, marriage, blessing—but this simplicity is counterbalanced by the power that may be manifest by worthy participation, and this worthy participation is the means to experiences marked by richness which are enhanced in turn by the simplicity of the ritual. Let us all look to our participation to see that the simplicity does not blind us to the possible richness of the experience.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of the Communion is the significance of service. Isaiah looked down history to the latter day and spoke with anguish in the name of the Lord: “This people draw near unto me with their mouth and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me.” It is only when the quality of our service demonstrates that there is coalescence between our lip service and our heart service that the significance of the Lord’s Supper becomes increasingly apparent to us. The richness of the sacramental experience is directly proportional to the quality of our service.

The significance of the Communion is the significance of sacrifice. This ordinance is designed precisely to convey what it has cost God to make it possible for us to become like him—to become his sons. It is designed to convey the importance of the element of sacrifice. “Let every man take up his cross daily and follow me.”

Every one of us is guilty of at least one besetting sin—the principle of sacrifice is not known to us. Paraphrasing Apostle Holmes: “We must be of a disposition to sacrifice purposefully else our children shall have to sacrifice needlessly.” We know what it means to give up a meal or two—to do without dessert for a week or two—most of us know what it is to sacrifice, but do we know what it means to live sacrificially? Again, the richness of the Communion experience is directly proportional to the quality of our sacrificial living.

The Lord’s Supper is tremendous in its implications, beautiful in its symbolism, significant in its potential richness. It is still a vehicle though, still a means, still just a tool. Righteousness waits upon proper utilization by good men.

The church tells men of evil and sin and other unpleasant facts. They constantly try to escape From the darkness outside and within,
By dreaming of systems so perfect that no one will need to be good. But the man that is will shadow The man that pretends to be.

—T. S. Eliott.

Autobiography of Elder James D. Shower

I WAS BORN in Licken County, Ohio, near Pataskala, about twenty miles east of Columbus on March 29, 1880. When I was seven years old my parents purchased a farm six miles southwest of Barnes, Kansas, and there we lived until I was thirteen years old, moving then to another farm just one mile north.

While my parents were religious, they were not members of the Reorganized Church so I was not taught the fullness of the gospel. I read of the Lord's manifesting himself to his children in Bible times, but I was taught that he no longer spoke to mankind neither sent his angels to earth. One night when I was about twelve years old, after I had retired but had not yet gone to sleep, the room became light. I saw a woman seated in a chair at the foot of my bed. In front of her stood a small girl. This child's hair, which was very tangled and snarled, was being combed by the woman who turned her head and looked at me. I was frightened and threw the covers over my head. When I had courage to peek out, the woman and child had vanished. I thought then my parents should know of this experience but put off telling them because I found myself too timid to say a word about it. I did not forget, however, and during the years which followed, my memory frequently would be troubled by what had happened that night. I did not know what it meant until years afterwards, when it was interpreted for me by a woman. Later, also, my patriarchal blessing told me that the Lord had been with me from my childhood.

Up until the time I was sixteen years old I had not joined any church. Both my parents and my sister, who was two and a half years older than I, were members of the Methodist Church, but there were several reasons why I just could not accept this faith. The Methodists believe in three modes of baptism: immersing, sprinkling, or pouring. My Bible taught me to believe in baptism as a burial—a going down into the water—the same method I read of in the story of Philip and the eunuch in the eighth chapter of Acts and of Jesus' baptism in the River Jordan. Besides this, the Bible plainly taught only one baptism. The Methodists at that time practiced a six-month period of probation. I believed when we accepted the gospel the Lord would not keep us out in the cold for six months before taking us into his kingdom. I frowned upon the excitement in their protracted meetings. I believed that when one accepted the gospel he should be able to consider calmly the act he was taking. Because of these objections, I attended Sunday school at the Christian Church, which was more to my liking.

WHEN I was sixteen, the Methodists held a protracted meeting in which there was much excitement, and many people were joining. Yielding to persuasion, I went forward to the mourners' bench to seek salvation. I fully expected to know if I received the Holy Spirit, for even my limited knowledge of the Bible taught me to expect this evidence. Nothing happened the first night. I went forward the second night, and still the third. Many people gathered around me and made comments. One lady said, "You have the Holy Ghost and don't know it." I thought, "If I have it and don't know it, I could lose it and not know it. What better off would I be then?" Another advised, "Just get on your feet and tell the people that you are gloriously saved and have the Holy Ghost. Then the Lord will give it to you. That's the way I did." I thought, "No. I can't lie to the Lord and to these people, and then expect him to give me the Holy Spirit."

During these three days and nights of anxiety I prayed very earnestly, climbing into my father's haymow in the daytime and pouring out my heart to the Lord, asking him to give me that same Spirit that his children received nineteen hundred years ago. Nothing happened.

I attended the last night of this series of meetings. The Methodist preacher declared, "We are going to stay here tonight until he does receive the Holy Ghost." That meeting lasted until 1:30 a.m. Still nothing happened to me. The series of meetings closed, and I went home sad, feeling that there was no hope of salvation for me.

About four weeks later, the Christian Church started its series, and I attended. I was told that I had expected too much when I had gone forward at the Methodist meetings. "We don't receive the Spirit now as people did in the days of Christ," they said. "That was just for the establishment of the church then. Now we just receive the gift of the Spirit, not the Spirit itself." Finally I joined the Christian Church.

LATER I started going with a girl by the name of Mollie Transue, a member of the Reorganized Church. Although we disagreed about church membership, we were married and a few years later moved to western Kansas, near the little country town of Lucerne. Before we were married, I heard my first gospel sermon preached by Brother I. N. White, and afterwards I had the opportunity to hear some more, but I fought this work bitterly. The result was that I found myself gradually drifting away from any church, and for a year or two I made no profession of religion.

In 1904 my wife, my baby son, and I returned to my home town of Barnes, Kansas, for a visit. While there I was exposed to the measles, but did not realize it at that time.

We came home, and I was helping one of my neighbors move his wheat to the railroad town of Jennings, where he was storing his wheat in a granary. I became sick and got worse as the day passed. I was sixteen miles from home, and after a futile attempt to drive my team of horses there, I turned around and came back to town. I consulted a doctor, who told me that I was taking the measles. He gave me some medicine and said, "I want you to walk home. Riding in this cold wind will make you worse."

Arriving home I promptly went to bed. As the days went by I failed to break out with the usual rash. Instead the right side of my face became numb, then my entire right side. Gradually I lost consciousness, and from six to seven weeks I lingered between life and death. Strange to say, I had had a premonition of this coming sickness and had told my wife that I did not know whether I would live or die. A terrible feeling of sadness came over me as I realized I was not prepared for eternity.

When I regained consciousness, I was still paralyzed on my right side, and in a short time my limbs were swollen with dropsy. While I was in this condition, one afternoon about four o'clock the room was filled with the Spirit of the Lord. Not in an audible voice but to the inner man the Spirit spoke to me, "The work you are fighting is the work of the Lord. You will be healed of your infirmity if you obey it." I answered, "Lord, I am willing to accept that but two things I never will accept are old Joe Smith and the Book of Mormon." The reply to me was, "Joseph Smith was a true prophet of the Lord as were the other prophets in the past. The Book of Mormon is a true record of the ancient people of the land of America." I cried out, "Lord, it is enough, it is enough! I am willing to accept."

WHEN my mother came to see me, I told her what the Lord had revealed to me about this work being true. She turned to me with a look I shall never forget as she said, "You are just joking." I said, "No, Mother, I am in earnest." Her reaction was, "If you go into that church, we will disinherit you—not have anything to do with you."

"Mother, I expect to obey the fullness of the gospel at the first opportunity," I still affirmed.

In a short time Brother Samuel Twombly came to Barnes to hold some meetings. As very few came out to hear him preach, he decided not to hold the meetings any longer. I kept hearing the question in my thoughts, "Will you now obey the gospel?" But there seemed to be some other power which kept telling me, "In your afflicted condition you are not able to bear up under the trial you will have to undergo." As I hesitated the Spirit spoke to me, "Obey the fullness of the gospel or your life will be required." I answered, "Lord, I will now obey." I told Brother Twombly that I desired to be baptized before he left.

The next day we drove to Coon Creek, where I was baptized and confirmed in the church. Oh, how much better I felt. I improved very rapidly. In a few days I was able to walk with ease, and in two weeks I did not so much as limp on that right side.

About that time I met my mother on the grounds where a carnival was being held. In surprise she said, "Oh, my, are you able to be here?" After I had replied in the affirmative, she asked, "Did you join that church?" I answered, "Yes, Mother, several weeks ago." With that she turned and walked away.

It was two and a half years before Mother was reconciled. I was seated on a bench before a store one day. She sat down beside me, saying, "I want to have a talk with you. I am not going to say if your church is right or not, but I know that you are a far better boy than you were. I believe you have been sincere in what you have done, and if I ever feel as you do, I will also go into that church." It was five years before my father came to our door, and then his reason for coming was business.

When my father and mother disinherited me, I prayed about them. The Lord spoke to me in a dream, telling me that the day would come when I would baptize my mother. For several nights I dreamed this. With this encouragement I continued to write letters home, each time telling of our beliefs and quoting scriptural evidence in support. In their letters back to me, my parents never acknowledged the slightest interest in my statements regarding the church. Later I learned that they verified every Scripture and that Father had admitted his defeat when he said, "Mother, we'll have to give up. Our boy has the fullness of the gospel." Twenty years after my baptism I baptized my mother in September, my father being absent at the time. In December of that same year my father wrote that if I would come home from the mission field for Christmas he would come to Independence and be baptized. It was no surprise to me when he acknowledged after the baptism, "My son, a higher power than man compelled me to come," as I had prayed very earnestly that the Lord would cause him to obey.

IN the summer of 1909, I was making preparations to move to Cameron, Missouri. I had even gone there and paid a month's rent on a house, although I felt I was doing the wrong thing. Night after night I could not sleep but passed the time praying. About three o'clock one morning I was spoken to and told that I should not go to Cameron but to Independence. Previously I had declared that I would never move to Independence until the Lord told me to. Now I demurred, "Lord, might I not be deceived? Might this not be some other power advising me?" I was answered, "Nay, but to Zion, to Zion have I called thee, saith the Lord." The great burden I had been carrying for sometime passed away, and the sweet Spirit seemed to flood my being.

The following year in Independence my name was presented at the business meeting for ordination to the office of priest. At first I declined because the summer before a heavenly messenger had appeared and talked to me about this responsibility. When he turned to leave, I begged, "Pray don't leave until you tell me when I am to occupy in this office—when this service will be required of me." His reply was, "At the coming Conference." As plans were to ordain me at once, I did not feel that this would harmonize with what the messenger had told me, but Brother I. N. White, then of the Twelve, set my mind at rest. He pointed out that the heavenly messenger had not said when I was to be ordained but when I was to occupy, and that at the coming Conference I was to be sent out in the mission field. As his explanation seemed reasonable, I accepted the call and was ordained.

THE first year I was sent to Nodaway District in northwestern Missouri; the next year I went to northeastern Kansas. While I was holding meetings at Garnett, Kansas, I told of the experience I had had when twelve years old. A woman said, "I can give you the interpretation of that vision." Then she proceeded to do so: "The woman represented the church; the child was one of the children. As the woman was combing out the tangles in the child's hair, so the church will comb out the tangles in the life of each of us."

I labored some eight years in northeastern and northwestern Kansas. From this territory I was sent to Oklahoma, then to Ohio, and back to Oklahoma for three months, at the earnest solicitation of the people there. During those three months, I baptized forty-three people. One of them was a man near Alva who had said, "If that man [referring to me] ever comes back here, I'll be baptized." Again I returned to Ohio to work for five years; the following year I was sent to West Virginia.

One of the interesting experiences of my missionary life happened in Durham, Oklahoma, before I was sent to Ohio. I had been challenged to a debate on the position of our church regarding the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith as a prophet, and other general church beliefs. I told my challenger, Reverend Carver of the Baptist Church, that I would come back the following year and debate with him. He said, "Now, or never!" We held the debate on March 12, 1920, in the assembly room of the high school. The 250 opera seats were occupied, and people were standing. There were three twenty-minute speeches and a fifteen-minute rebuttal, which went to me. Afterwards a lady shook Reverend Carver's hand and said, "I'm glad to be here, but I'm not on your side."

ONE of the most marvelous experiences of my life came after I had suffered eight and a half years as the result of a bus accident. My backbone had been broken in two places, both hips and a number of vertebrae were dislocated, and my brain injured. After about two years, part of which I was bedfast, I was able to walk with the aid of crutches. Often I prayed that the Lord would take my life, as the suffering was so intense. He answered, "My son, thy life's work is not yet completed." I pleaded, "Lord, this pain is more than I can bear." Again he answered, "Fear not, my child, in my own due time I will come to thy rescue."

I continued to be crippled until May 12, 1946, when I attended the afternoon prayer meeting at the Stone Church. I arose to bear my testimony as to how the Lord had so miraculously brought me into the church, and as I started to give this experience, some power which seemed like an electric current began in my head, progressed down my back, and struck my hips. By this time, I realized that it was the power of the Lord working my bones and putting them back in place after they had been dislocated eight and a half years. I was relieved from the terrible pain in my head, which at times had been so severe that I could not lie on one side more than two hours, but would awaken and turn over. All the pain was gone; in an instant I had been relieved. I now had only temporary soreness, as if some physician had made some adjustment of my entire body.

Today I have perfect freedom in walking. I no longer need a crutch or cane, do not so much as limp, and have been more active than I have been in years. I cannot praise the Lord enough, and I am so happy and feel so free sometimes it seems this condition must be just a dream.

While the physical blessings are greatly to be enjoyed, yet the greater degree of the Spirit of the Lord that has been mine to enjoy since I received this bodily blessing is worth far more to me than the physical. Strive as I may, I cannot repay the Lord for the goodness and mercy he has bestowed upon me.

looked up Elder and Mrs. Albert Loving who are in Mexico for the winter. Mrs. Loving (my sister) accompanied us to Cuicuilco ruins; then together we visited her daughter Ethel who is practicing dentistry. Her husband, Rogelio Diaz has his practice of medicine and psychiatry in the same establishment. He is a graduate of Iowa University. His mornings are occupied in teaching at the University of Mexico. Blanche Loving is there too attending the university. In remuneration for her secretarial services, she is getting an extra year of tuition.

They recommended some good restaurants to us. The Flor de Lis was selected, and the Lovings, Diazs, Smiths, and Velts ate together. A few evenings later the same group enjoyed a fine meal at the Diaz home.

MEANWHILE, at the Central Airways Depot, we met Irvin Petz and wife Elva from California. They had come by plane to join our party. With them was Brother Petz's sister, Verna, who was enjoying her first visit with her brother in many years. Our party then consisted of eight. Together we made the tours among the ruins in Brother Smith's Mercury. We also made the side trips together to Xochimilco Gardens, Chapultepec Palace, the Cathedral of Mexico, the National Palace, the National Museum, the Oaxaca Museum, Vera Cruz, et cetera.

We were fortunate in securing valuable Kodachrome pictures all the way. As startling as it is to view the marvels and fineness of the ruins upon the screen, it is much more wonderful to actually explore them, pass through their underground tunnels, climb their precipitous heights, view their mighty dimensions, and have interesting explanations by a competent guide.

Elder Harold Smith proved a good interpreter of Spanish. At times when he was not near I did my best, but often had to insist Repítalo usted, por favor (Say it again please), Hable usted más alto, por favor (Talk louder please), Hable usted despacio por favor (Talk slowly please), or Hable palabra por palabra, poco a poco por favor (Talk word by word, little by little please.) This way I managed to carry on a conversation fairly well at times. Irvin Petz, who has had considerable experience with Mexican workmen, was helpful (especially reading descriptions in Oaxaca Museum) though he was under the same handicap as I in interpreting spoken Spanish unless the enunciation was clear, distinct, and not too fast.

Each day we would read from Paul M. Hanson's book, The Land of the Feathered Serpent, regarding the ancient site we were about to visit. It proved very helpful. I would find myself eagerly turning up appropriate pages of the Book of Mormon to reread accounts in connection with interesting features we had seen, or with the geography of the country through which we were passing.

I believe it would be possible for experts to approximately locate Book of Mormon lands, rivers, and cities. I believe too some changes must be made from earlier maps published. Elder H. A. Stebbins, great Book of Mormon student of his time, discovered that. As early as March 25, 1911, he wrote in the Saints' Herald,

The map will have to be revised, as also our students will need to correct their ideas about the hills, and lands and waters, as many of them are already doing, according to recent advices. . . . For thirty-five years I held the error about Cumorah, until Earle Corthell of Independence, took the blinds off, and then study made all plain to me

That was written thirty-nine years ago. Since then important discoveries by scientists have confirmed Elder Stebbins' latest conclusions. I refer to the deciphering of chronological hieroglyphics on the monuments among the ruins.

QUESTION:

What is the "Rock" of Matthew 16: 16-18?

ANSWER:

This is a question that has caused much discussion and some disagreement among the Christian churches. First, let us read the Scripture:

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

The Roman Catholic church says that the "rock" is Peter. But would Christ build his church upon a frail human foundation? And if the Roman Catholic Church is based upon such a human foundation, what are we to think of it? Paul wrote, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—Corinthians 3:11.

By that it would appear that our Catholic friends have put themselves out on a rather long limb, from which they would go well to retreat, if they can.

Now, back to the passage. Christ did not say, "Upon you [Peter] I will build my church." He did say, "Upon this rock I will build my church." What is the antecedent of the word "this"? It appears to a student of language that Jesus was using a literary device, a figure of speech, in this place—a kind of play on words, which was common from the most ancient times. It has some of the qualities of a metaphor. It is a sort of parallel structure. There is even an element of antithesis in it.

It is clear that we cannot accept Peter as the "Rock." It is equally clear that our Catholic friends have trapped themselves, if they hold to their theory.

Some of our men have sought for another, and a more plausible antecedent for the word "this." They say that the "Rock" is the revelation that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. If we take no more Scripture into account than what we have under consideration, this would seem very acceptable.

But let us turn to some other Scriptures, which offer us help on this question.

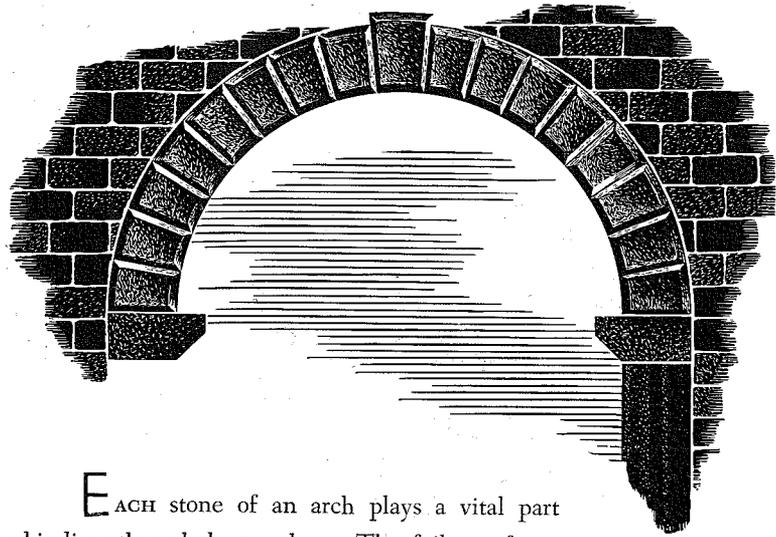

The Song of Moses contains this statement: "I will publish the name of the Lord; ascribe ye greatness unto our God. He is the Rock, his work is perfect."—Deuteronomy 32:3, 4. Similar statements are found in verses 18 and 31.

The Song of David says, "The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer."—II Samuel 22:2. This is elaborated in Psalm 18:2: "The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength." See also Psalm 92:15.

This idea is made exclusive in Psalm 62:1, 2: "Truly my soul waiteth upon God: from him cometh my salvation. He only is my rock and my salvation."

Paul contributes this: "And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ."—I Corinthians 10:4.

These Scriptures agree that the "Rock" is in the Godhead. In considering them, it would be impossible to accept the view that Peter could be the "Rock." Leonard Lea.

EACH stone of an arch plays a vital part in binding the whole together. The failure of any member means serious harm to the entire structure.

It is also true that a breakdown within some unit or arm of our church organization could injure its whole program of advance. Such a breakdown might easily occur if you use commercially prepared lesson materials in your branch's church school. Lesson materials bought from Herald

House are exactly fitted to your needs and will ease your teaching burden. And, in patronizing Herald House, you help strengthen the great unifying force of faith that will help us build Zion.

The Mentally Stimulating Home

By BETTY CARLSON

And study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people.
—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

QUITE A NUMBER of years ago I heard a minister give a Mother's Day sermon based on the story of Hannah and her dedication of her child to God before he was born. This minister told of someone's coming to him and asking at what age a child's religious education should begin. He said he thought that Hannah had given us the answer to that. A child's religious education should begin before he is born, through preparation on the part of the parents by prayer and study, followed up, of course, by training from earliest babyhood. I believe this same idea applies to mental training in the home. In other words, it should begin before the child is born, by the parents' careful thought and study in preparation for their family's training.

Among the basic characteristics of a mentally alert family are love and understanding. These seem to be fundamental to all other attributes. We know today that any child, even a tiny baby, urgently needs a strong feeling of security and love from its parents in order to become well balanced mentally and emotionally.

We also find that curiosity, if it is wisely guided and encouraged, is an important factor in the mental growth process. Parents can help the child broaden his interests and knowledge by helping him find answers to the how and why of things.

Recreation also plays its part in developing alert minds. Activities the family can participate in together—good movies, music, sports—are helpful. There are many games the whole family can enjoy which develop skill, concentration, and thought. Then there is the field of creative recreation and hobbies of all kinds. Hobbies call for understanding and co-operation from the parents, and for more than a little patience. Cluttered-up rooms may seem to be the result, sometimes; but the real returns are in values of growth and mental stimulation. Hobbies and interests may change often. For awhile it may be model airplanes, or oil painting—then the interest changes to another subject. But all the time the child is learning to think for himself and growing in knowledge.

READING, OR rather the ability to read well and appreciate good literature, is certainly an important part of developing a mentally alert home. Here again all the evidence points toward very early training for best results. The very small child can be taught a love of books and stories, and then wise parents must see to it that he is provided with good books and magazines, suitable to his age. They should be chosen and watched over as carefully as one would supervise the child's playmates. Of course, there will inevitably be the comic books, and later other undesirable publications. It doesn't seem wise to forbid all of the comics, for that only makes them seem more attractive, and children are going to read them sometimes at school or elsewhere. However, their influence on reading habits is less for the child who already has gained a love of good stories and has constant access to worth-while books. As the children grow older it is an enjoyable source of mental stimulation when the family can discuss books which all have read. Most important of all, the child can be guided to an appreciation of our heritage in the Scriptures and to an understanding of them.

THE FAMILY that is alert mentally will also be interested in civic and school activities and take some part in them. It will be world-conscious and keep up-to-date on national and international problems. It will also be concerned with Christ's plan for the world and endeavor to grow in intelligence and truth.

A mentally stimulating home is one of love and friendliness where all members of the family have interests both in common and individually. They like to learn and do things, they are sincerely interested in people, they are community and world conscious, and they are constantly growing toward Christ's way of life.

Prayer

By Ida M. Moore

Are you in the habit of praying for something you wish to come true? Do you ever pray for another that his wish may be realized, too? Do you ever pray for the sinner or just for the godly few? Remember that Christ came to save the world. He gave his life for everyone, the saint as well as the sinner. He told us to pray without ceasing. It is sometimes hard to do. We would rather cease without praying. But the Master has said, "When you pray, pray not as the hypocrites that they may be heard of men, but enter thou into thy closet. And when thou hast shut the door, then pray to thy Father in secret and he will give thee reward." So when you pray, pray unto the Lord and not to the ears of your friends.

Our Talents and How We Should Use Them

By BESSIE KANNEMAN

YOU PAINT so beautifully; I wish I had such wonderful talents." . . . "If I could only sing the way she does!" No doubt you have heard remarks such as these. Probably the one who uttered them has as great a talent or talents as the one of whom she spoke.

In the plan of salvation, which God in his great love and wisdom has prepared for the redemption of mankind was incorporated all the gifts and talents we find at the disposal of humanity. To be sure we find many people with the same gifts, and others with varying gifts, but when the different groups combine their talents and work together in harmony and for the good of the group and the glory of God, then a truly Zion condition will exist.

Let us consider another kind of talent. According to Helps to Bible Study, the silver talent was supposed to weigh about fifty-six pounds eleven ounces troy weight and was valued at from $1,166 to $1,218. Truly it was of great value. The mite or lepton was worth the least, but just the same it could be of value in the sight of God. Do you remember what the Lord said of the widow who put her two mites in the offering plate? "For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God; but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had."—Luke 21: 4.

This widow did not have great talents. She was not a famous singer or renowned artist of great demand; she was a poor, humble woman who realized that the world and all in it belonged to the God who created her and blessed her with daily life, humble as it was. She realized something of the glorious plan, that better way of life God was trying so hard to get all men to see. She was willing to put her all to the glorifying of our Heavenly Father.

MANY PEOPLE have great talents but use them for selfish purposes heaping honor, glory, and riches to themselves. The works they do shall die with them. Since they are working for the glory of this world, they will receive here all the glory they are entitled to. However, he who works for the glory of God and the accomplishment of the divinely appointed task given to man will not receive all his reward here but will receive an abundance when he stands before the judgment throne and hears the longed-for plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful one, enter thou into thy reward."

Let us see what some of those talents are. The Bible speaks of the gifts of prophecy, wisdom, knowledge, and speaking in tongues. Wisdom certainly is one that covers a lot of ground. If we have wisdom, we will want to learn more of the things God wants us to do in order that his kingdom way of living may be put into practice. We will want to put all thoughts of malice from us and learn to love all men as God loves them. We know he loves them or he would never have sent his Son to teach us the way of life, to suffer and to be crucified on the cross as he was.

If we have wisdom we will want to render an accounting to God for the blessings he has poured out upon us, be they little or much. After all, everything we have in this world is God's gift to us, and the way we use it is our gift to him.

WHAT ABOUT a pleasing personality? Surely it is as much a gift as speaking in tongues. Some possess it to a greater degree than others, but those who have not inherited it in abundance can readily acquire more charm simply by practicing on everyone they meet. Let us be the first to smile when we look at others. We should approach them believing that they are going to be pleasant. We must look into the heart through the eyes of God and see the goodness there. Remember all men are potential sons of God. If they have not obeyed the gospel, then let us set the example so all will soon desire to become his sons.

Cannot we vision an over-all picture of Zion in its working condition with each man using his gifts and talents for the good of mankind in the way they were intended to be used? The farmer using his talent in raising meat, vegetables, or grain; the doctor using his talent in the study of the laws of health and healthful things; the artist using his talents for the entertainment and inspiration of mankind. In the old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," we find the idea that God intended for man to enjoy life, getting the most out of it by putting the most into it.

Finding Fellow Saints

Last July my husband, Corporal Loyd Read, had two weeks' convalescent furlough from William Beaumont General Hospital in El Paso. Two carloads of us, including my husband's brother Earl and his family, went to Independence to visit relatives. We had our five children with us. Our youngest son, only five weeks old, had not been blessed, and we were so in hopes of having him blessed on our trip but didn't know where or how we could in so short a time.

We were not in Independence for any church service, and then we continued our trip to Knoxville, Iowa. We did not know that we had a branch there, but when we stopped near a public telephone, we saw a group of people bidding farewell to each other. To my surprise I saw a sign in a tree identifying the building as our church. We wondered if the elders had gone, and if we could get our son, Howard Leonard, blessed there. My husband and children and I got out and went to see. We had him blessed that day in a special service since the other service had closed. At that time the building was not finished, and the service was held in the basement. I am thankful to know that the church has been finished now.

That was the last time my husband was able to attend church because we don't have any church here. He got worse after our return here, and went to his Heavenly Father on January 28, 1950, and was laid to rest in Independence, Missouri.

Appreciation

Just a line to express my appreciation for the articles on "Word of Wisdom" by Sister

Florence Ourth. I have already made several loaves of 100 per cent whole wheat bread. I had hoped there might be some more recipes given, but not seeing any in the last couple of Heralds, I went out on a limb and made a chocolate cake with 100 per cent whole wheat, also some bran muffins, and they both turned out fine. I'm trying to live according to the "Word of Wisdom" and pray that others might have the desire to obey, especially since Sister Ourth's articles have been printed.

I'm thankful for the Herald because God has answered my prayers through articles put in the Herald. Special help came to me through Garland E. Tickemyer's article, "Taking It on the Chin," and Sister Beldin's article, "A Patient Love." I wish to thank them and all the others who are giving of their time and talents to make it possible to have the Herald in my home.

Enjoys Article on Word of Wisdom

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the sister who wrote the article on the Word of Wisdom concerning the use of whole wheat flour. We sent for some, and it came yesterday. We used to use it all the time when the children were little and my husband was in poor health. I got to thinking of our rye bread at home and wondered why wheat wouldn't do the same. It proved wonderful—far better than rye. Then we had to quit using it as we were unable to get clean wheat. So we are very happy to be able to get it again.

This flour is very good. I have tried making cookies, gems, and hot cakes. I know bread will be delicious. I feel this morning my pantry is well stocked. Once more, many thanks for the article.

Once more the Savior proves to be a good doctor who knows what it takes to keep man healthy.

The Miracle of Prayer

I found the Restored Gospel while caring for a woman who belonged to the church. I was impressed by the fact that prayer in the Reorganized Church is such an effective source of healing. I talked to one woman who, as a girl, had to wear a shoe with a three-inch sole so that she could walk without limping. Through prayer she was restored to normalcy. I know of a man who had pneumonia in both lungs and was given up as incurable by the doctors. After being administered to, his lungs cleared and he regained his health.

I would like to contact other members of the church in Winnipeg.

Asks for Prayers

I feel that if I am ever to gain eternal life I must have the prayers of the Saints to help me in my attempt to live as I should. I believe that Zion can be redeemed only by a prayerful, humble people who strive earnestly to keep the commandments of God. I have had some rich experiences but did not always recognize their significance at the time they were given me because I was too preoccupied with things of the world. However, they have come to mean much to me in later life, and I now marvel at what I have been permitted to see and hear.

Again I ask for the prayers of God's people. My prayers are ever for the church and its members.

Testimony of Healing

I am an elder in the church and laboring at present in Tarona at Pepeeete, Tahiti. My former home was in Rairoa, but I have since removed to Tahiti for a better education for my children, both in school and the church. This necessitated my taking work in order to sustain my family. The work was too heavy for me, and one day I was stricken with a paralysis which completely deadened the entire left side of my body and affected my speech. For several days I was unconscious, and it was thought that I would never recover. The doctor did not give me long to live, and predicted that I would never again walk unassisted even if I were fortunate enough to live through this attack. Brother Butterworth and Brother Breckenridge never left my bedside for long, but continued to administer to me according to the law of the church. A special fast was called, and the members remembered me in their devotions. I now testify that I can walk unassisted and carry on the majority of my regular work without difficulty. All this has taken place within the last two months. I am convinced that the day of miracles has not passed but is here for all to witness and experience as I have. My faith, as well as that of my family's, has been increased, and I am now beginning to see the reason for my affliction. I have seen the marvelous good my testimony does for others; at least two have been brought into the church as a result of this and other experiences. May the Lord continue to bless his ministry and the church in its mission of salvation.

A Name to Praise

By EMMA M. PHILLIPS

IT WAS AT THE TIME of the straightening of the green shoots that the stranger from the tribe in the far Northland became a guest of Nooka, member of the Ceequa tribe. Their meeting had come about one morning just as the sun was breaking its way through the dawn, heralding another hot summer day.

As usual Nooka of the Twisted Legs had been awakened early by the cheerful songs of the birds, and as usual he had arisen and gone directly to the woods to gather material for the making of snowshoes. The cool morning was a more appropriate time to select wood and to trap animals than was the heat of the day.

The stranger, tall and young, was standing pensively beside the tender green shoots of corn and grain that were growing on the edge of the river. Nooka hesitated momentarily, wondering whether the young man were enemy or friend. The stranger, seemingly aware of the presence of the crippled man, turned to face him and to speak to him. "I come from a distant tribe. I am the wisest of many wise men, yet I must increase my wisdom constantly. I come to learn what I can about your people, then I move on to a greater learning."

Nooka laid down his load and extended his arms in a gesture of greeting. "The people of Ceequa are honored to have such an illustrious one among them. And I, Nooka of the Twisted Legs, will be honored to have you stay with me while you improve your wisdom."

"Let it be so," was the calm reply.

As NOOKA led the way along the shore to his home, he wondered if perhaps it were a god who followed him in the personage of the stranger. Nooka continued to wonder this as he watched his guest piously eat his gourd of boiled rice, berries, and beaver meat.

At the conclusion of the meal, the youth lay down on his back, placed his hands beneath his head and began to talk. "For many seasons I have become annoyed by seeing men do the commonplace things of life. I have become annoyed by seeing my fellow men sacrifice their own joys and comforts for those of others. I am going forward to make an important name for myself. I do not as yet know just what I will do, but it will be outstanding. I will do it so that men can long remember me. Go, now, to your chief and tell him to call a meeting in the Lodge at the time when the setting sun bids the birds to seek the shelter of their nests."

"And who shall I say has called this gathering?"

"Tell them it is 'The One Who Will Be Great.' I have no use for any other name."

The youth closed his eyes. Nooka moved quietly from the tent, and toward the dwelling of the chief. The many friends that he passed on the way called cheerfully to him, but he took no time to visit with them.

The friends whispered among themselves, "Nooka does not visit with us as usual. Instead he moves with the determination of the gray rabbit fleeing before the dog. And he moves toward the home of the chief. Let us follow him, for if there is something happening, we want to learn about it."

The chief came forward to greet them, and he smiled as he spoke, "What are you doing, O Nooka of the Twisted Legs? Does the heat of the day cause you to lead these others in a child's game?"

But there was no smile on the face of the crippled man as he delivered his message.

"Let us go see this youth," suggested the leader of the tribe.

As a group they moved swiftly to the home of Nooka. Quietly they peked into the doorway of his home and beheld the young man sleeping on the floor. Perhaps this was a god. Yet gods in previous days had come to earth only to help mankind, and not to make great names for themselves.

"Nooka," said the chief, "remain here with your guest while we make preparation for the feast in the Lodge. There will be much for us to do. Sit quietly at his side. Work quietly on your snowshoes for the coming deeps of the winter. We must be considerate of 'The One Who Will Be Great!'"

Nooka folded his twisted legs beneath him and began plaiting leather. Constantly he watched the face of the sleeping man. As he kept his vigil, the people of Ceequa were industriously preparing the Lodge for the celebration.

WITH THE SUDDEN, uncompromising anger of Nature, darkness came upon the land. The blue of the sky was concealed by clouds of gray, moving fury. The green shoots on the river bank pressed to the ground beneath the onslaught of the wind; crystals of ice, sharp as knife blades, fell upon the young squash plants, tearing their wide, green leaves. The tall trees twisted like upright serpents, then fell full length on the ground.

The dwelling of Nooka and all therein were lifted into the air and plummeted into the rising whirlpool of the river's water. The storm closed in above it.

Peace and calm came with the evening. Members of the tribe moved cautiously about among the debris caused by the storm. In their efforts to locate relatives and acquaintances, they forgot the celebration planned for the evening.

On the bank of the river, they found the place where the dwelling of Nooka had stood. Some distance from the place, they found the twisted body of Nooka and the muscular body of "The One Who Will Be Great."

"Nooka has left us! Nooka has left us," moaned a little boy. "Now who will mend our snowshoes when they become broken, and who will make us new snowshoes?"

"Another must learn his work," said the child's father. "Nooka has been of much service to his fellow men. We will miss him."

The chief shook his head in sorrow, "We must make a totem pole and erect it in the honor of Nooka. We will not forget his good works."

"What will we do for the other man?" asked the child.

"We can do nothing but give him proper burial," responded the chief. "He did not tell us his name. He was not interested in serving his people or any people. He sought only a name, and we know no name by which to bury him."

The child clapped his hands together, "It is as Nooka said. Last winter I broke my snowshoe. While he was mending it for me he said, 'Snowshoes are not important enough to be given names, yet when an Indian is lost in the winter woods, his snowshoes are one of his most valuable possessions.' Nooka's good was better than an important name."

The Glory of God

By DONALD SAVAGE

SEVERAL YEARS AGO I was privileged to behold in vision a bit of the marvelous rest and peace enjoyed by the inhabitants of paradise. The quiet serenity of this place has left such a lasting impression upon my mind that I doubt if the vision of it will ever fade. It was calm as a summer morning, warm as the love of our Savior. I wish every human being could understand that attaining this place is a million times worth living a life of righteousness, even if there were no penalty required for living the life of wickedness.

It does not appear that paradise is synonymous with heaven. Paul speaks of it as "the third heaven," while Alma describes it as "a state of peace, where they [the righteous] shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow." But certainly they are much the same in one respect, both are the reward of the righteous from the hand of God. If paradise is delightful—and I testify that it is—then heaven must be something wonderful beyond the imagination of man. Is there any price too high to pay for the attainment of this glory which will endure forever and ever?

THE MEASURE of human righteousness is not the amount that men fear God. When we hear of people serving their master through fear, we can be sadly certain that they do not understand him or his purpose in them. Men are not placed upon this earth to live in fear their allotted number of years. Rather, human life is encouraged and protected that God might be glorified, and his glory exists in bringing to pass the eternal happiness of people as they dwell forever in his presence.

Human suffering, spiritual and physical, is a pain to the heart of our Creator. With us he bears all our pains, all our sorrows, all our griefs. Within our own hearts we have not the power or righteousness either to attain eternal life or to continue mortal life; it is purely a gift. If God so loves us that he willingly bears our griefs, cares, and burdens, then offers us eternal happiness—not of ourselves, but as a gift—can we keep from loving him?

He does this for our sakes alone, to make our souls eternally joyful. Could there be a more righteous glory than this: to make another life glad? Therefore, God's great instruction has rung down through the centuries, "Love thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself."

Recipe for Success

William Colgate, whose name has achieved world fame in connection with soap, left home because the family was so poor. He started for New York City, and on the tow-path, an old canal boat captain asked him where he was going, then had a word of prayer with him.

When they arose from their knees, the old captain said, "William, what can you do?"

"Make tallow candles and soft soap," he replied.

"Well," said the captain, "give your heart and ten cents out of every dollar you earn to God, and maybe he will help you become a great soapmaker some day."

Young Colgate did this, then increased his tithe to fifteen cents on the dollar, and later to twenty-five, and on up until he was giving half his income to God's work.

New Horizons

An Interpretation of the Parable in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 6-8

"Go ye straightway into the land of my vineyard, and redeem [not plant, but redeem] my vineyard." (The vineyard is not yet extinct, but in a broken, unorganized condition, scattered, the wall broken down, watchmen scattered, the olive trees broken.) "Now go and redeem," rebuild as formerly commanded, "and break down the walls of the enemies, throw down their tower, scatter their watchmen . . . and avenge me of my enemies [denounce their false doctrines and dogmas, affirm the true lineage, and preach the true gospel]."

"And the servant said unto his lord, When shall these things be? And he said unto his servant, When I will, go ye straightway and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and this shall be my seal and blessing upon you . . . And his servant went straightway and did all things whatsoever his lord commanded him"—(redeemed the vineyard, planted the olive trees, built the wall of protection, set the watchman, and built the tower, with "supreme prophetic authority.") No man in the church today would dare assume the responsibility of offering to the church a document, purporting to be a revelation to the church, save the one who is now upon the tower safeguarding its destiny—God's prophet, seer and revelator. "And after many days all things were fulfilled."

Isn't it wonderful about the young people? They are lean, slender, and graceful, and always hungry. At all times of the day and evening, you see them going into the eating places. They eat, and eat, and eat. But they never get fat. It makes no difference to them. It never makes any difference. It makes no difference at all.

And isn't it sad, what happens to them when they get a little older? Nature tricks them, and they begin to get fat. They lose their youthful and lissome (there's a sweet word!) figures. Weight sags about them and burdens them down. Instead of the nimble step, they wearily plod. And then they try to get thin again. They diet. They go hungry. They starve, and starve, and starve. But it makes no difference. It never makes any difference. It makes no difference at all!

 MYSTICISM

Vernon E. Lundeen, 4337 West Broadway, Robbinsdale, Minnesota, writes: "An interesting item came to my attention some time ago, and I thought you might be interested in it. In the September, 1949, issue of the 'Cosmopolitan Magazine' began Henry Morton Robinson's novel 'The Cardinal.' Out of curiosity, I started to read it, and finished it a month or so ago. In the second installment, in the October issue, were these words: 'We Catholics are apt to think of mysticism as our monopoly. But witness the case of Emanuel Swedenborg, or again, the strange experience of your Mormon-founding American, Joseph Smith. Wherein does his vision of "two glorious personages" who accosted him, differ from those of Teresa or Augustine?' . . . I believe the novel will soon be published in book form."

 PYGARGS

You can find the strangest things in the Scriptures. . . . For example, have you had a nice pygarg to eat lately? No? Then you are living below your privileges. For the law of Moses permits you to eat them (Deuteronomy 14:5), but it is up to you to catch your own. The text of the law lists them among the edible "beasts." The footnotes go farther and identify the pygarg as a bison. Personally, we lost our taste for bison on the last visit to a museum, where there was a stuffed one on display. Probably (ugh!) tough and rancid. But a pygarg may be different. Next time you visit your butcher ask him for one, and watch him pick up the cleaver.

Something has been digging holes in our lawn—might have been pygargs. Our last nightmare ended dreadfully, pursued by a three-horned beast that ran like an antelope. . . . Hey, let me out of here!

 GIFTS

We were helping in the drive for funds for the American Cancer Society recently, and were pleased to discover that people did not need to be converted to the necessity for research to conquer this terrible disease. Tragedy has struck many families—one in every eight die from some kind of cancer. Good gifts were made by a number of concerns, but the largest single gift in our area was made up of the contributions of individual employees in our own shops and offices, a tribute to their thoughtfulness and generosity.

Gomer T. Griffiths

AFTER a long illness, Gomer T. Griffiths, formerly President of the Council of Twelve, passed away at 2:45 p.m. on May 24. The funeral service was held at Kirtland Temple on Saturday, May 27. District President Floyd Rockwell preached the funeral sermon. Apostle Paul M. Hanson represented the general church and spoke in tribute. Evangelist Richard Baldwin offered the invocation.

Brother Griffiths was spared to the church for many years, and gave a splendid and remarkable service. His ministry blessed great numbers of people, and his passing will be mourned by all.

Brother Griffiths was born June 2, 1856, at Minersville, Pennsylvania. He was baptized July 5, 1866, at St. David, Illinois, shortly after hearing President Joseph Smith preach and seeing him there for the first time. In 1876, at Bevier, Missouri, he came under the influence of Apostle T. W. Smith, and was ordained a priest and preached his first sermon. In 1878 he was ordained an elder, and the next year a member of the Seventy.

In 1881 he met and married Harriet Anna Robbins, who remained his companion until her death forty-three years later. Eight children were born to them. He attended the first General Conference of the Reorganization to be held in Kirtland Temple. For many years he lived near the Temple, contributing much to its care and laboring continuously in church work.

Brother Griffiths was ordained an Apostle April 10, 1887. On April 20, 1913, he was ordained President of the Council of Twelve, and continued in office ten years. In addition to serving many years in various parts of the United States and Canada, he made numerous trips on missions abroad, including the European Mission, the Society Islands, Australia, the Faeroe Islands, Iceland, and Palestine.

In October, 1923, relieved of the burdens of his office, he was ordained an Evangelist. Sister Griffiths died on December 9 of that year. On June 2, 1925, he was married to Mary McGowan, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who lived until April 30, 1936. On May 22, 1937, he was married to Catherine Eoll.

Brother Griffiths was superannuated April 7, 1934, but he continued nevertheless to preach, to visit the Saints, and to minister to the sick very actively as long as his health permitted him to do so.

Introducing...

LUELLA BERDE (CRAYNE) ROONEY, Nevada, Missouri (page 12), was born in Lowry City, Missouri, where she grew to womanhood and was baptized. News & Notes

INTERNATIONAL STAKE

President F. Henry Edwards, President W. Wallace Smith, and Bishop Walter N. Johnson attended the meeting held in Detroit, Michigan, on May 27 and 28 for the purpose of organizing the International Stake. They worked in association with Apostle C. George Mesley. Apostle Percy Farrow assisted Sunday.

APOSTLES

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was in Kirtland, Ohio, on May 27 to assist in the funeral sermon of Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths.

Apostle Charles R. Hield was in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital for a physical check-up during the last of May.

Apostle D. T. Williams was in Wichita, Kansas, the last of May to assist Seventy James C. Daugherty with work in Kansas State.

Apostle Donald O. Chesworth preached the funeral sermon of Elder Paul Fraccascia, Y.M.-C.A. secretary and prominent leader among youth of Independence, on May 27.

DAN SORDEN

After having suffered a vascular accident and spending a considerable amount of time in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Elder Dan Sorden, pastor of Liberty Street Church, has returned to his home. His physician reports that he is improving daily and that a complete recovery is expected.

PRIESTHOOD EDUCATION CONTINUES

Apostle Maurice Draper and F. M. McDowell recently conducted priesthood work in the Eastern states as follows:

New York and Philadelphia District—a district priesthood institute, ninety-six members of the priesthood in attendance representing the thirteen missions and branches of the district. All pastors were present but one who was ill.

On the evenings of May 9, 10, and 11, the brethren conducted one-night services in Norwalk, Connecticut; Providence, Rhode Island; and Boston, Massachusetts, with panel discussions on the theme "Evangelism—What, Why, and How." The interest and response are reported as most encouraging.

On May 13 and 14 they conducted a district priesthood institute in Jonesport, Maine. Attendance was small but representative. The response of the brethren was outstanding and the blessing of the divine spirit was marked.

En route toward Independence, Brethren Draper and McDowell visited the Niagara Falls, New York, Branch where they participated in a business session and a social gathering.

On May 20 and 21, F. M. McDowell directed a district priesthood institute for the Eastern Colorado District at Colorado Springs. Sixty-five ordained men were in attendance and the interest and response were noteworthy.

Brother McDowell preached to the Denver Saints on the evenings of May 21 and 24 and conducted priesthood institute work on the evenings of May 22 and 23 in the branch.

Brother McDowell reports a unique and unusually well-arranged Father-Son Banquet at Omaha on the evening of May 25. Each member of the priesthood present brought either his own son or an "adopted" son for the occasion. Eighty-two were in attendance. All of the branches of the district were well represented. Brother Neff and the women of the Omaha Branch were commended by Brother McDowell for their exceptionally fine work in planning and conducting the entire affair.

Tributes to Gomer T. Griffiths

From the Presidency

ELDER GOMER T. GRIFFITHS is dead. "Uncle Gomer" had a most colorful personality and will be kept in affectionate memory by many, many members of the church, thousands of whom met him at Kirtland Temple and at various General Conferences. His kindly manner, his un-failing faith, and his rich fund of stories of early church experiences endeared him to young and old. He never met a stranger. We shall all miss him.

Brother Griffiths' personal contacts reached back to the very beginnings of the Restoration Movement. Seventy years ago he traveled as a missionary companion with William B. Smith, brother of the Martyr, a member of the 1835 Quorum of Twelve. He was a close personal friend of Jason W. Briggs, who served as "Representative President of the Church" prior to the ordination of Joseph Smith III, and of each of the three presidents of the Reorganized Church. He was personally acquainted with all of the Presiding Patriarchs and Presiding Bishops of the Reorganization, and of nine out of ten of the sixty men who have served as Apostles of the Quorum of Twelve in the past one hundred years.

As a member of one of the presiding quorums, he participated in the Joint Council of 1894 (Doctrine and Covenants 123), and was concerned in the establishment of Grace-land College, the organization of the Independence and Lamoni Stakes, and the building of the Sanitarium. He ordained hundreds of members of the priesthood, including President Frederick M. Smith and many others who still serve throughout the church.

The whole church is indebted to Gomer T. Griffiths. While his great age and his extended illness prepared us in some measure for his demise, we nevertheless feel a sense of personal loss in his passing. To his widow and to his daughters, we extend the sincere condolences of the First Presidency and of the Church.

Signed by,
ISRAEL A. SMITH.

From the Presiding Patriarch

Personally, and as President of the Order of Evangelists, I wish to pay tribute to the memory of the late Gomer T. Griffiths. I had the opportunity to know him intimately for many years. He was the Apostle in charge of the mission field in which I labored under my first General Conference appointment, on the Pacific Coast, in the year 1900. He was wise, kind, and patient with the bungling efforts of a novice in missionary work. Gomer himself was a very successful missionary and an able administrator of the affairs of the fields in which he had jurisdiction.

Later I was often associated with him in the joint councils of the church, at General Conferences, and in the mission fields. Finally, under my hands, he was ordained to the office of Evangelist and Patriarch on October 1, 1923. He occupied as a member of the Order of Evangelists until his death.

His long ministry as apostle and as evangelist, his wide travels in the United States, Canada, British Isles, Europe, Australia, Palestine, and the island missions of the church gave him a vast number of friends to whom he ministered counsel and comfort and a reviving faith. His name was for years a household word in thousands of homes—to the Island Saints he was "Gomera." I render honor to him as a man and as a fellow minister.

A Letter to Father

"And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers." —Malachi 4: 6.

Dear Dad:

They tell us that June 18 is Father's Day.

Now I know that reminder will make you squirm a bit and think furtively of where you could go fishing so they can't put you up in front and make a public example of you, with a lot of fuss, which seems entirely unnecessary to you.

But you have already gone through so much for your family that you can do just one thing more, can't you? And if you had any idea that Father's Day was meant exclusively for you, you can put it away now, because it's for the whole family, just as Mother's Day and Children's Day were. They went through with it bravely and survived rather happily.

You can do it, too. And we think you ought to, just for the sake of the family. Okay?

* * * * *

Somebody ought to tell you before it is too late—before you go to sleep some night and wake up in the spacious halls of eternity—how much all you've done and all you've tried to do for the family has been appre-

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Across the Desk

From William Patterson, Northern California District:

Yesterday morning I came to Stockton from Sacramento, where I spent a most profitable and pleasurable ministry. If there was any complaint, it was regarding my too brief stay of ten days. The spirit of the General Conference brought back by a large delegation from Sacramento, together with missionary zeal which has been evidenced in this congregation in recent times, prepared the people for my ministry. I am informed by the administrative officers that these were the best average attended missionary meetings conducted in the local church, and by far the greatest number of nonmembers present in any similar series.

Sunday morning there were six adults baptized, and since then others have given in their names for baptism. We contacted some excellent people of different congregations—two families being members of the Mormon Church. I never saw such fine prospects in any branch I have visited in this mission, and I expect to learn of an influx into the church there. One Mormon woman

We are very grateful that this income is keeping up in view of the increased budgetary expenses approved by the General Conference.

The report referred to says:

We are pleased to furnish you with the following comparative report on General Church income for the first three months of 1949 and 1950:

has expressed her desire to join the church, and the other Mormon family desires church literature. I am sure the local men will minister to these people.

From Seventy Glen H. Johnson, Rotterdam, May 10:

The bit of news regarding the early organization of the several stakes is encouraging. Perhaps you will be seeing my dad and mother in Los Angeles on June 18. They are living there now. We shall remember this date because our daughter, Glenda Fern, is being baptized in Rotterdam. She has asked her daddy to perform the ordinance.

To date, eighteen have been baptized in the Netherlands Mission. This brings our total to 375. We should reach the 400 mark by the end of the year. We have now in the mission two branches, one group, two mission church schools, and two branch mission church schools. Priesthood members in the Mission are giving splendid support, and much of the credit for growth and development goes to them.

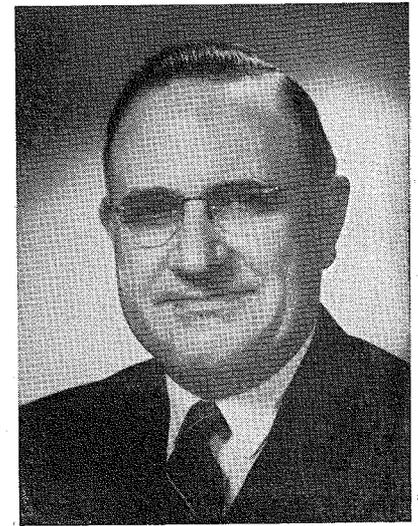

Brother Jensen is coming to Rotterdam the twenty-first

We assure you we shall do all we can to forward the work of the Master in the Netherlands Mission during this conference period.

As the Spirit Gave Them Utterance

*Based on a sermon given at Walnut Park Church
Independence, Missouri*

By APOSTLE E. J. GLEAZER

SCRIPTURE: I Corinthians 12: 1-11.

THE CHURCH has never emphasized the importance of any one gift over another, neither does it hold for a moment that there are merely nine gifts. So while I mention "the gift of tongues," I trust no one will take for granted that I consider this gift of more importance than the others bestowed by God through his Spirit.

I should like to quote a few verses from the second chapter of Acts:

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place, and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting, and there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it set upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues, as the spirit giveth them utterance. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven. Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together and were confounded because that every man heard them speak in his own language, and they were all amazed and marveled saying one to another, behold, are not all these which speak, Galileans? And how hear we every man in his own tongue wherein we were born?

The gift of tongues on this occasion enabled men of limited education to address devout men of other nations in their own language regarding the life and mission of Jesus Christ. I want you to notice that the first purpose of this gift was to make it possible for men of limited education, not familiar with the tongue of those whom they desired to address, to speak to these people in their own language. It was absolutely necessary that God should thus endow them if they were to administer effectively to these people.

However there was another purpose, too. This manifestation of divine power attracted the attention of a multitude that otherwise would not have been attracted. It was just as difficult in those days as it is today to turn men aside that they might hear the words of eternal life. And all through the Scripture you'll discover that the great God of this universe has from time to time used the miraculous not to make converts, but to attract the attention of those whom he would address. Hence, on this occasion, the gift of tongues was also used as a means of attracting the attention or arousing the curiosity of these devout men and furnished to Peter and others the opportunity of proclaiming the life, the crucifixion, and the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. And as a consequence, three thousand people were added to the church.

Now please do not get the impression that these people were added to the church through the gift of tongues. I think you will discover that converts who are worth while are not thus added to the church, and I would say that this is equally true of the gift of healing or the gift of prophecy or any of the other gifts. Individuals are not converted through the miraculous, but they may be attracted, and their attention may be gained through an exhibition of divine power. It is what follows that determines whether or not the manifestation was in vain.

I would say that the gift of tongues on this occasion served at least a twofold purpose—and by the way, that's important; the God we worship is a purposeful God. He's not in the business of putting on an exhibition to amuse us or to satisfy our curiosity. Whatever God does is for a purpose, and his chief purpose is to bring men and women into right relationships with himself. On this occasion, there was a twofold purpose. Devout men from various nations—the kind of people that should be added to the church—were assembled at Jerusalem. They heard the gospel in their own language—not in a broken tongue, not in a tongue which was difficult for them to understand, but "in their own language." Any of you who have been born in lands beyond the sea where a different tongue than English is spoken will appreciate how much more effective it is to have the gospel brought to you in your own language. A second purpose was also realized in this miracle inasmuch as it attracted men (and no doubt women) so that the apostles of Jesus Christ had an opportunity to present the life, death, resurrection, and purpose of the Messiah. The gospel was taught by these helpful people, and the testimony they bore revealed that Divinity was back of their efforts.

I'm taking the position that these two needs still exist. Over and over again it is said that "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness," yet one does not need to go outside of the borders of the United States to find that there are honest-hearted souls, even in our land, who find it difficult to understand the English language. Now it is true that there are ministers today—some in our own church—who can speak several languages. There is no occasion that these men should receive the gift of God so that they can speak in an unknown tongue, or a tongue with which they are not familiar, but I take the position that when such is necessary this same unchangeable God can and does bestow the gift.

Why should it be thought strange that our missionaries serving in lands where a different language is spoken should, under the endowment of the Spirit of God, speak to these people in their own tongue? I have heard the testimony of some of our missionaries that God has thus blessed them, and I know of occasions when men who have attempted to study the language of the natives of the South Seas have recognized that, in addition to their endeavors, they have been gifted by Almighty God in the efforts they put forth, and have at times spoken with authority far beyond what they were capable of exercising through their own study.

IT occurs to me that one can have the gift of an unknown tongue, and that tongue still be English. If you have ever had the experience, under the endowment of the Spirit of God, you have recognized a freedom of language and even a vocabulary beyond that in which you are accustomed to speaking. There have been some occasions in my ministry when I was blessed with a tongue that was not my own, but it was still the English tongue. I was conscious of the blessing, and those in the congregation also were conscious I was thus being blessed. Why should it be considered strange that God should endow an individual if the occasion demands it? We do not hesitate to state that God can inspire thought, and if he can inspire thought and give direction in various activities of life, why should he not endow one with an improved vocabulary?

Furthermore there are occasions when one is blessed with a greater understanding than he is accustomed to. You may call that "the gift of interpretation." I do not wish to introduce any humor into this discussion, but I remember listening to Brother John W. Rushton when all who heard him seemed touched by what he said. At the close of the service I went to him and said, "Brother Rushton, I understood every word you spoke tonight. One of two things happened. Either you had the gift of expressing yourself as you did, or I had the gift of interpretation." For when one understands every word John W. Rushton utters, something has happened either to Rushton or the individual. It was one of those rare occasions when he spoke on a fundamental doctrine of our church with a freedom I have seldom seen matched anywhere in our church. Others present that night recognized his liberty; so I think it is possible for such a gift to be extended even in the matter of a greater understanding on the part of an individual.

I think I had been in the mission field possibly five or six weeks when I heard an individual pray during one of our Communion services. I thought I knew practically all the people in that small congregation and understood their voices. It was customary, of course, to kneel as we engaged in some of our opening prayers, and my back was turned to the congregation. When I heard this voice, I thought some stranger had entered our assembly, and I was curious enough to try to find out, so I looked about. If everybody else had bowed their heads, they wouldn't have noticed it anyhow. I discovered that there was no stranger in that building, but one of God's handmaidens praying under the inspiration of his Spirit in a vocabulary which was not her own, although she was speaking in the English language. To me this was the gift of tongues.

By the way, let me mention this, one should not attempt to remain in ignorance regarding a language in order for God to give him a gift. If I were called upon by this church to wait upon people who do not speak our language, I would attempt to do all in my power to find out enough about that language to understand those people and to make it possible for them to understand me. But I would expect that when I did all that I was capable of doing, if a need existed for divine help, then that help would be forthcoming from God.

IMPORTANT as the gift of tongues might be in the twofold purpose that I have already mentioned, it is more important that these people "spake as the Spirit gave them utterance." Whether one speaks in an unknown tongue or in his own tongue, unless the Spirit of God gives utterance, he speaks in vain.

I invite your attention to the first letter of Paul to the Corinthian Saints. Every time we hear someone emphasize the need for the gift of tongues, another one will say, "Well, what did Paul say in the fourteenth chapter of I Corinthians?" Of course, those who have never been blessed with the gift of tongues, or may not have heard it exercised, or who have heard it used by people who abused this gift just as they abuse every gift of God will not appreciate it. There are people who attempt to speak in tongues who are never inspired by Almighty God. Others do it that they might attract attention to themselves. When anyone does this, he is going contrary to the purpose of God in regard to any of the gifts, for they are not given that any one individual shall profit. They are given for the benefit of the church as a whole. Read the fourteenth chapter of I Corinthians at your convenience.

Some folks have, no doubt, told you that Paul said,

I would that you all spake with tongues, but rather that you prophesied, for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying. Now brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation or by knowledge, or by prophesying or by doctrine? And even these things without life-giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

A great many people will take Paul's advice out of the setting in which it was given. They owe it to the fact that some people in the early church were guilty of what we mentioned a little while ago—of exalting the importance of the gift of tongues out of proportion to other activities in the church. It was the spectacular that appealed to them. Most people today want to be spectacular too, whether they admit it or not. They want to attract attention. It seems to be a human frailty, though it may have some good in it at the same time. Paul was pointing out that there's no purpose in speaking in an unknown tongue when you are in the presence of those who speak your language. He also goes on to state in this chapter that if those are present who do not understand the church that the speaking in an unknown tongue would confuse them. That's why I spent as much time as I have already calling your attention to the fact that the gift of tongues is justified where the occasion demands.

In order for you to minister to one who does not understand your language, or on occasions when it is necessary to attract attention of those not of our faith, God must intervene. Paul was talking to the church, and God never intended that the church should indulge itself in moments of spectacular display for the sake of display alone. That's what some people were attempting to do, and there may be people and denominations even to this day whose only purpose in justifying the gift of tongues, or any other gift, is for the sake of being sensational. These people have never discerned God nor his purpose.

Paul told them that he was capable of many languages and did speak in tongues. There is no doubt in my mind that Paul was capable of speaking several tongues in his own right, but the Scripture also seems to suggest that he possessed, from time to time, the gift of tongues. But he used his gift in harmony with the two purposes already mentioned, and not to entertain the saints or to demonstrate his spiritual power and insinuate that he was more spiritual than his brethren. He used it only when the occasion demanded it. He also admonishes in verses eleven and twelve: "Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me." "Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, [and that's the point I don't want you to overlook] seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church." Don't seek a gift for your sake, but seek that you may excel for the edifying of the church.

Wherefore let him that speaketh in another tongue pray that he may interpret. For if he pray in another tongue my spirit prayeth but my understanding is unfruitful. . . . For thou verily hast given thanks well, but the other is not edified. I thank my God I speak with tongues more than ye all, yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in another tongue. Brethren, be not children in understanding; howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be ye men.—Verses 13, 14, 71-20.

He's saying to these people that God has purpose in bestowing this gift upon individuals in the church, but it's not to be used to satisfy one's idle curiosity, for God is a purposeful God.

THE other extreme is just as damaging as far as the welfare of the church is concerned. We should not assume that there is no place in the church for the gift of tongues. I'm taking the position that the same need exists today which existed 1900 years ago—that men who speak another language shall be addressed by us under the inspiration of God, and furthermore, that men and women who are indifferent to the cause of truth might be attracted by the miraculous. Not that they are to be converted through miraculous power, but that they shall be turned aside to hear the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Here are a few more statements made by Paul:

Wherefore, tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. If any man speak in an unknown tongue, yet it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God. Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the others judge. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints.—Verses 22, 26-33.

That's very important counsel.

IM THINKING of a brother who passed away recently in the East who was very zealous. On one occasion he attended a service that was conducted by another church. He told me this experience himself. He did what few of us would do, and something that I wouldn't advise anyone to do, but he was a very devout man and sometimes lacking in wisdom. He entered the building where a number of people were praying quite loudly—some were singing, some were speaking in tongues, and some were prophesying. This brother climbed upon a chair and cried out so loud that he startled everybody in the building. At first a few ceased, but they soon took it up again and he called a second time, and then got order. After he obtained silence, he said,

I want to know what's going on here. I'm a visitor. I assume you people claim that God is manifesting himself—that he has something to say. Now the Good Book claims that if God has something to say, let one speak at a time, so that all can understand. Why don't you honor the Book?

They almost threw him out of the place. While I think his judgment was poor in interrupting a meeting of another sect, nevertheless what he attempted to advise was correct.

Who could understand the word of God in such confusion? Yet these people were more or less honest in their devotions—that's the sad part of the story. They were desirous of doing good; but exhibitions like this turn thinking people away from the church and cause men and women to ridicule God's gifts even when the gifts are administered under the power of his Spirit. Man has always been guilty of abusing the things of God or putting forth imitations of the things of God. The power and mission of the Holy Spirit has too frequently been overlooked by men and organizations engaged in the work of the church. Too many times those of us who claim to be followers of Christ deny God the opportunity of moving upon us by the power of his Spirit. We attempt to move in our own strength and after the imaginations of our own heart. So let me repeat, the power and mission of the Holy Spirit has too frequently been overlooked by men and organizations engaged in the work of the church. That's why so many times we are not successful in making converts to Jesus Christ.

Time and again the prophecy of Paul to Timothy has been fulfilled when he said that there would come a period when the people would have a form of godliness but they would deny the power thereof. Over and over again, speakers and writers who are concerned in the welfare of men and nations are asking, "Where is the power that should be in the churches to save men and nations from destruction and possible annihilation." The Spirit must give utterance if any sermon or testimony is to be effective in carrying conviction to the hearts and minds of those addressed.

Have you not at times listened to radio addresses by those who claim to be ministers for Christ—and for the moment I'm not excluding Latter Day Saint ministers—and marveled at the language and possibly the masterly manner in which it has been presented yet found no conviction in your own soul? There have been many occasions in this church—I hold literally to this church because it's happened upon the part of those who are not identified with us for the Spirit of God is not reserved merely to this church—when humble men have touched the hearts and minds of people and changed their ways of life. I know some men who are well-informed and studious speak with considerable power but nothing happens to the people who hear them.

Paul said on one occasion, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of

The Church's Founder Honored

ABOUT A YEAR AGO General E. M. Stayton, president of the Jackson County Historical Society, invited me to supply an oil portrait of Joseph Smith to be placed in the "trophy room" of the Independence Memorial Building.

After a year's intimate association with General Stayton when we were both delegates in the Missouri Constitutional Convention, I have come to have a high regard for him as one of the leading citizens of not only Jackson County, where his family has resided for more than a hundred years, but of the State of Missouri, and of the nation.

The request came to us because, while Joseph Smith's residence here was brief, the church movement begun by him has had a great impact on this section of Missouri.

Accordingly we secured the art services of Harold Bullard, formerly of Independence, a son of the late Bishop Richard Bullard, but now (temporarily) of Ness City, Kansas; and early in the last winter the portrait was completed.

On February 3, 1950, after special invitations had been issued for the occasion, the writer had the pleasure and privilege of making the presentation, with a representative assembly present.

General Stayton, in beginning the proceedings, introduced Elder Glaude A. Smith, as follows:

We are gathered here to receive a portrait of the founder of a great church. It seems fitting that a distinguished clergyman of that church should give the invocation—the Reverend Glaude Smith of the Stone Church.

After the invocation, General Stayton continued:

At the recent Constitutional Convention, it was my privilege to be intimately associated with and to occupy an office with the grandson of Joseph Smith. This association developed into a fine friendship that I value highly. He was an outstanding delegate, respected and admired by everyone, and contributed greatly to our work. It is a great pleasure to us that this portrait is to be presented by President Israel A. Smith.

My remarks were as follows:

General Stayton, and members of the Jackson County Historical Society:

I need only remind some of you—to others it may be information—that I had a most pleasant relationship with General Stayton who indeed was one of the most respected and most influential delegates in the Constitutional Convention to which he has made reference, and I have come to have a great affection for him.

Indeed I was gratified to receive from him the invitation to provide a picture of Joseph Smith, my grandfather, to be hung here at this place.

It is unnecessary to recall the asperities of a hundred and more years ago. In my experience, I have found the citizens of Missouri to be truly a great and magnanimous people, and it would ill become us to harbor any resentment on account of what transpired here so long ago.

Truly Joseph Smith's experience here in Jackson County was very limited in time; but in view of the religious movement begun by him, and the fact that it now has headquarters here, it is pleasing to us that his picture is to be seen in these halls.

Sometime about 1842 or 1844 an artist came to Nauvoo, Illinois, and painted two oil portraits, one of my grandfather, the other of my grandmother Emma. These pictures, unframed, hung in what we called the sitting room in our home one mile west of Lamoni, Iowa, where I was reared. Later, when my father came to Independence in 1906, these paintings were brought to Independence, properly framed, and have been kept in our vaults in Bartholomew Hall. In spite of extended research, we do not know the name of this artist.

Some excellent copies of the painting of Joseph Smith have been made by some of our Independence artists, and knowing something of the ability of Dr. Harold Bullard, I engaged his services, and as a result we have what we believe is a very fine copy or reproduction of the original.

Today there are present certain of the posterity of Joseph Smith, besides myself: Frederick A. Smith, aged 88, a grandson, the oldest living descendant, and his sister, Mrs. Emma J. Kennedy, both children of Alexander H. Smith who was the third son of Joseph Smith. Mrs. Kennedy has lived in Independence since 1882. There is also present Mrs. Georgia Warfield, a great granddaughter.

On behalf of the family and the church which made it possible for us to do so, we are pleased and happy to present this portrait to you, General Stayton, as president of the Jackson County Historical Society, and we extend our appreciation and thanks for your invitation and for the opportunity to make this presentation.

At the close of my remarks, General Stayton said:

The Historical Society is pleased to accept this portrait and give it a place in the collection of what we are pleased to call our "immortals"—men who had a

"And Satan Came Also."

—Job 1: 6.

LONG AGO a man sat hunched on a rock, chin in hand, brow corrugated: "The thinker." Presently he bestirred himself to carry out a dream. He worked long on a large piece of hard stone until it had a crude cutting edge. Then he fitted it into the split end of a stick and tied it there with sinews. He had a stone ax. He had watched beavers cut down trees with their sharp teeth. Now he too could chop down a tree, if he hacked at it long enough. Perhaps he had a dim vision of log houses and canoes. A dim vision of what tools would mean in the hands of men.

Battle Axes

Friends gathered around this inventor to admire or to scoff. Presently "Satan came also" to look on with a shrewd smile. He said, "My friend, this new tool will revolutionize industry. But stop to think; there are the people on the other side of the creek. You have fought them with clubs and stones. This is a much better weapon. True, you can kill a bear with it; by the same leading part in forming our community and helping to create the rich heritage we enjoy.

Joseph Smith said things and did things here that made history and profoundly affected the lives of millions of people all over the world and gave Independence an important place in that history.

Let me again, President Smith, assure you that we are honored and happy to add this portrait to our collection.

The General then extended an invitation to furnish the Society with biographical and other historical matter connected not only with the founder of the church, but also his son Joseph Smith III, and his grandson the late President Frederick M. Smith.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

token you can kill a man. This will revolutionize warfare."

The men with the ax felt secure. The backward people on the far side of the creek would not dare to fight them. But, alas, soon the men on the other side of the creek learned to make stone axes. Presently many men carried battle axes and tomahawks, and there were many broken heads and many widows and orphans.

The problem of securing food was still rather tough. A great deal depended on the hunter. Birds could fly away out of reach. Rabbits and deer were alert and swift. The bigger animals were fierce and terrible in hand-to-hand combat.

Bow and Arrow

Another thinker sat and thought. The problem: how to strike at a distance. Presently with his ax he cut a stout sapling, bent it and stretched a string from one end to the other. He twanged the string, and it made a pleasant sound—perhaps the beginning of stringed instruments. But that was a passing fancy. He cut himself a long slender reed and fitted a bit of flint into one end of the reed. He had a bow and arrow. Friends gathered around to admire—and one guffawed when the amateur archer shot his arrow at a tree and missed it.

Nevertheless, here was a real weapon. One could hide behind a tree or a boulder and strike his game at a distance. With experience and skill, a deer or bear might be brought down—or even a lion. "Satan came also" to admire. He hefted the weapon, smiled his sardonic smile, and said, "My friends"—they were beginning to think of him as a friend, which illusion he chose to foster—"my friends, this is all very fine for the hunt, but remember those fellows on the other side of the creek who fight with axes, hand to hand. With this weapon you can shoot clear across the creek. Do you follow me?"

They followed him, and for a time had the balance of power. But others learned how to make bows. Red Indians and black men in Africa had bows and arrows. Robin Hood had a bow in the green forest. The English had their "long bow" and their archers terrible in battle. They even learned to shoot flaming arrows. The thing should have been outlawed. But men were not enlightened then. There was no League of Nations.

Gunpowder

Time passed—a lot of time. There were many thinkers. They gave some attention to metalurgy and chemistry. A peaceable people called the Chinese invented gunpowder. It made a delightful noise when used in firecrackers. It was useful in blasting rocks for building purposes. Someone manufactured an iron tube with a bell-shaped muzzle and fitted it to a gunstock. It was called a blunderbuss—a good enough name. Loaded with gunpowder and bits of lead or iron, it was more effective in the hunt than the bow and arrow. "Satan came also" and took notice of this new weapon, but did not comment. Men were learning. They would carry on.

By and by there were long-range rifles, machine guns, sixteen-inch naval guns, mortars, bombs—all sorts of weapons of modern warfare. War spread beyond the creek. Battleships carried guns across the big ponds. Americans visited the Japanese, a hermit people, trained their guns on the capital city and told the Japanese to open up or else. The Japanese opened up.

Wings

Men had long watched the birds fly. Darius Green had said, "The birds can fly and why can't I?" Modern thinkers put some sticks and canvas and metals together and actually learned to fly higher and faster than the birds. Here was a great instrument of progress, full of promise of service to humanity. At the least men could get from where they were and did not wish to be to some place where they wished to be but would not find contentment—and they could do all that in a hurry.

Among the many who stood to marvel at the new birds in the sky “Satan came also.” He rubbed his chin reflectively and decided to speak again. “This is truly a wonderful machine, my friends. You are a very great people. But have you stopped to think? Now you can carry bombs aloft and rain down fire from heaven on the cities of the people on the far side of the pond. This will revolutionize warfare.” Some squeamish people of a weak stomach said, “We will never make war on civilians, on women and children—and defenseless cities.” They were wrong.

Atomic and H Bombs

Time was stepped up. Changes came with confusing rapidity. People became case-hardened to calamities until something happened that shocked and bemused even modern civilization. Now there were many thinkers. But they were not sitting on rocks. They sat in swivel chairs or worked in laboratories. They were scientists. They thought thoughts and talked a language that the little people did not even begin to comprehend—not the backward peoples on the far side of the creek nor even many of the intellectuals on the near side of the creek. The scientists put an invisible crowbar into an invisible atom and announced that they had split it and released enormous power.

Power undreamed of was to be at the disposal of man in the industries; to run factories, railway trains, steamships, airships, tractors, and to light all the cities of all the world. Poverty and toil could be eliminated—and perhaps sickness. But two world wars with old type weapons, dreadful enough, awoke military minds to the need for something even more dreadful. The newly found power was packed into bombs, a single one of which could devastate

Tribute to Dad

By BLANCHE NEAL SHIPLEY

HE WAS JUST an ordinary man—my Dad—but as I remember the sterling qualities of his character and their evident influence upon the lives of his children, I am led to an appreciation of all the other ordinary men who are fathers.

Dad was an honest, hard-working farmer, fair and square in all his dealings with his fellow men. When he borrowed a neighbor's tool, he returned it in as good shape as he had borrowed it. (Sometimes better, for Dad always greased the implements he used.) When he exchanged work with his friends, he insisted on giving a little extra service for good measure. Because of his own ill health and mother's, and a family of six children who were forever draining his finances, Dad rented rather than owned a farm. Never did any landowner ever accuse him of carelessness in handling the soil, the buildings, or the plant life of the farm. The brush was cut, the fences mended, and the weeds kept under control just as systematically as if the farm were his own. Dad kept his word to the very letter. His promises were sure.

Because of his great honesty, Dad disliked the idea of borrowing money, and there were few times he ventured to do such a “reckless” thing. When it became necessary for my sister and me to borrow money to pay our college tuition one summer, Dad almost had a nervous breakdown before we received our September teaching checks with which we paid off our debts. Perhaps more people need such a philosophy. Even our economic system might profit by it.

DAD WAS JUST an ordinary man, but I fondly recall his loyal and devoted services to his family. For instance, I remember how he helped us children over a period of twenty-five or thirty years to get to public school, high school, and college, then to our teaching positions. While we were small, that often meant morning and afternoon trips to the schoolhouse with the team of horses. Never once were we late to school, and never were we absent, except in cases of illness. Later, when we were teaching, Dad would drive perhaps twenty miles with a team through snowdrifts or deep mud. He used to say he attended school regularly in bad weather and graduated practically every two years from some school or other.

I well remember that miserable day when, as a tiny child, I became very ill at school. Dad walked to the schoolhouse and carried me home in his arms that evening. Always in times of illness Dad was kind and sympathetic. I remember exactly his words of comfort and reassurance.

Few children grow up in a home where religious training is given more emphasis than it was in ours. Mother and Dad were not perfect, nor did they claim to be, but they each had a firm faith in God and a desire to serve him actively. I am most grateful for this day-to-day association with my parents as they endeavored to live close to their Creator. We children were taught scriptural truths and stories of noble men and women who lived in Bible times. We were taught that prayer was a means of speaking with God in companionship and praise. We were taken, not sent, to church every Sunday. We saw our parents assume heavy church responsibilities in spite of their physical handicaps. I cannot remember any one of us questioning the importance of church attendance or making excuses for staying at home; if we had done such a thing, I am sure Dad would have changed our minds quickly! He

By HAROLD I. VELT

PART II

A GUIDE showed us through the great Cathedral of Mexico, the oldest and grandest of the Western Hemisphere. He explained that this was once the site of the chief Aztec temple of their capital. Another guide told us that the cathedral was built by Indian slave labor. He pointed to the Rivera murals and explained the scenes of the Indian men and women being tortured if they absented themselves from church three Sundays or were otherwise indifferent to church law.

We were shown through the catacombs under the cathedral, and through rooms which contained priceless robes once worn by church dignitaries, together with exquisite jewelry, rugs, drapes, and precious handwork from all parts of the world. We were told that what we saw in these rooms was valued at ten and a half million pesos. Yet this was only one third of the entire collection—there was not adequate space for displaying all of it.

We saw many worshiping, some confessing, choirs chanting, and people coming and going while we marveled at the grandeur and costliness of the furnishings, the carvings of gold, silver, onyx, priceless wood carvings and paintings. We thought of the prophetic statement of Nephi:

Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted; and their churches are lifted up; because of pride, they are puffed up. They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor, because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek, and the poor in heart.—Pages 153, 154.

Pitiful mendicants sat or stood around the cathedral with open hands, expecting help from tourists and others.

Near the Zocalo, not far from the cathedral, we saw just under ground level some of the ruins of the ancient city. They show fine workmanship in sculptured stone and evidences of the worship of their fair God, Quetzalcoatl.

IN THE SAME VICINITY we enjoyed some hours in the National Museum. Our learned guide Señor Flores explained in detail the elaborate stone carvings of various idol gods, symbols, and chronology in connection with the many relics gathered from numerous ancient sites. He elaborated at length upon the many signs on the great Aztec Calendar Stone and their significance. This stone, over twenty tons in weight, was brought miles across country by the ancients to their capital. A scholarly description was given of the Tablet of the Cross from Palenque. The decipherment of the chronological data reveals that it was wrought at least eight hundred years before Columbus discovered America—A.D. 692 according to the Goodman-Thompson correlation; A.D. 432 according to the Spinden correlation. Our guide favored the latter. He said, "Mr. Thompson is not in favor with Mexican people."

One detail held special interest for me. I had often wondered if the priest of larger size to the right of the cross were presenting a baby in a service of blessing. Señor Flores explained that a religious ceremony was represented in which the priest was holding a baby toward the cross of Quetzalcoatl. (See illustration in America's Lost Civilizations, page 159.) We saw beautifully carved rock crystal in both the museums of Mexico and Oaxaca.

Among the many ruins we visited, as well as in the National Palace and the National Museum, we were interested in hearing the guides describe the native traditions concerning Quetzalcoatl. Apparently fearing we might be skeptical, or perhaps the guide himself was skeptical, the story was sometimes modified. But always the account was of a personage, light of skin, with flowing beard, not born in America, a God whom they worshiped, who had appeared among them miraculously in the form of a man and had left them mysteriously without dying. The cross was one of the emblems associated with him. We secured good pictures of the cruciform tomb at Monte Alban and saw the elaborately decorated underground cruciform tombs at Mitla.

ONE THING that has puzzled many, perhaps, is that while the worship of Quetzalcoatl had persisted until the Conquest, and no doubt still does among many, there developed also a worship of other gods—the rain god, the war god, etc.—and idols. Perhaps worst of all was the practice of human sacrifice. Though such was not practiced in Yucatan until the tenth century A. D., it was known in Mexico before that. We saw evidence of human sacrifice at Teotihuacan. The temple of Quetzalcoatl had been built over and covered up; in front of it a large and beautiful structure was erected by later people. Here it was we saw the wooden poles where victims had been tied for sacrifice.

Modern excavation has uncovered part of the Quetzalcoatl temple again. We photographed sea shells, conches, and waves of the sea carved upon the temple which, guides explained, symbolized the fact that Quetzalcoatl, their fair God, had come from across the mighty ocean. He likewise returned that way again, across the sea, after miraculously departing from them.

But how did it come about that the worship of the benign and loving Quetzalcoatl, who himself had forbidden any sacrifice "except fruits, vegetables, and flowers," should ever have become dimmed by idol worship and human sacrifice?

The Thanks of Stefan

By BERDE ROONEY

THE land of Samaria lay verdant and beautiful in the spring sunshine. It seemed to Stefan, son of Joel, that it surely must be the most beautiful country in the world, and the broad, rolling acres of his father's farm the choicest within its borders.

Standing at the yard gate, he looked at the scene before him with keen interest. Lush, green meadows, dotted with many sheep, sloped gently from either side to a cool, shaded stream below. Beyond the meadows lay the fields where soft breezes rippled the growing grain into shimmering waves. Nearer the house was the vineyard, its straight rows of sturdy vines surrounded by a thorn hedge for protection against grazing herds. Stefan was especially proud of the vineyard. His father had taught him how to till and fertilize the soil, how to prune the vines to make them produce the finest grapes he had ever seen. He appreciated this training, since here, as well as in other phases of farming, the burden of the work fell upon his shoulders, for Joel, his father, was a cripple.

Three years before he had received an injury to one of his knees that had left it twisted and useless, so that he could not walk without crutches. Since that time Stefan had cheerfully assumed the responsibility of providing for his parents, a younger brother Philip, and a baby sister.

At first he thought only of their needs, but as he grew older he began to think of his own future. As was quite natural, his dreams included another person, Tyra, the daughter of Joel's best friend, whose land joined theirs on the south.

Frequently when the day's work was done, Stefan walked across the meadows to spend a precious hour or two with his beloved. Sometimes they talked of the home they would build on that portion of land which would be his when he was of age. By that time, his brother Philip would be old enough to assume the responsibility of tending his father's farm.

STEFAN was thinking of such things that pleasant Sabbath afternoon, and life was very sweet and full of promise. So quietly he stood engrossed in his dreams that a butterfly, seeking a place to rest its gauzy wings, alighted on his motionless hand. The young man gently lifted his hand that he might better see the lovely creature. For a moment it remained still, then flitted away in the golden sunshine.

Then it was that Stefan noticed a tiny spot on his finger—perhaps a bit of down from the dainty wings of the butterfly. Taking his handkerchief, he brushed the spot but could not remove it. Startled, he examined it more closely. A chill struck at his heart. He knew of the dreaded plague of leprosy that began in just such a manner; he had seen pitiful lepers outside the city going from place to place, but keeping others at a distance with their warning cry, "Unclean!"

Was such a fate to be his? No, oh, no, it could not be! He was healthy and strong. This spot was of no consequence; it would be gone by morning, he was sure. But he would be careful. If such a curse came to him, there must be no chance of spreading it to the other members of his family or to Tyra. Quickly he made his plans. He would pretend to go to Tyra's house as usual, and his parents would not suspect he was spending the night outside. The room where he slept with Philip was on the opposite side of the house from theirs, and he often came in so quietly that they did not hear him. Philip was a sound sleeper, and when morning came, he would think his brother had risen early to be about his work. As soon as it was convenient, Stefan would make some excuse to get away and go to the priest at the temple for the period of testing, as the law required, to make sure whether he had been stricken with the plague.

PRETENDING he had hurt his finger, he wrapped it with a cloth and prepared to carry out his plans. Early next morning his father found him quietly doing his chores. But he was not easily deceived. Well out of the hearing of others, he confronted Stefan.

"What is troubling you, my son? Your eyes knew no sleep last night. You may trust me. Perhaps I can help you."

Stefan removed the cloth and held out his hand. The father's face grew pale.

"You must go at once to the temple," he said.

"So I had planned," was the answer. "Do not tell Mother just yet. Make some excuse for me. Good-by, Father." And he was gone.

At the temple the priest was kind. "Do not be discouraged," he said. "It is a very light spot and may disappear entirely during the next seven days."

So for a week Stefan was shut away from others, while fear and hope battled for supremacy in his heart. Again he was examined by the priest. The wise man studied the spot carefully.

"There is not much change," he said, "but we must be certain."

The law provided for another seven days of confinement. Seven days of anxious waiting for Stefan and of agonizing suspense for his parents.

When he did not return, it was necessary to explain his absence to his mother. Joel thought it was wiser to tell her the truth, then if it came to the worst, she would in a measure be prepared, and he feared such would be the case. In this he was correct, for when the fatherly priest again looked at the spot he saw the unmistakable sign of leprosy.

"You must be brave, my son," he said gently. "There is nothing more to be done. You understand you will keep apart from others for their safety."

STEFAN bowed his head in silent resignation, his heart heavy. As the days went by, the longing to see the dear ones at home was almost unbearable, but he refused to allow himself to go even near enough to talk with them. Little Marta, now three years old, would not understand why her big brother did not toss her to his shoulder for a ride as was his habit; not did he want to see the anguish in his mother's eyes. If he could only go near enough to watch them for awhile, without being seen by them! He resolved to try.

Keeping away from the traveled paths, he made his way to a tree overlooking the house and garden and climbed to a limb where he was concealed by the thick foliage. His eyes filled with tears as he saw the beloved form of his father moving slowly on his crutches cutting weeds. It was late evening, and Philip was doing chores at the barn. Marta was playing in the dooryard, and Stefan knew that inside the house his mother was preparing the evening meal.

A little later, under cover of dusk, he lowered himself to the ground and crept close to the house. He could see his loved ones as they ate, and he longed to be with them. For several minutes he stood there, being careful not to make a sound that would betray his presence.

Suddenly the sheep dog, with a joyous bark, bounded toward him. Quickly Stefan gave a low word of command, and the dog, always obedient, walked toward the house. Fearful lest those inside might have heard, the homesick youth, with a last longing look, turned and hurried away.

DURING his absence from home, Stefan had made the acquaintance of nine others, like himself victims of the terrible plague. They were Jews and at first debated among themselves whether they should ask him to join them.

"Let him go his way," said one, "he is only a Samaritan. What business have we with his kind?"

"But he seems a good sort," said another.

"What matter, Jew or Samaritan? At least we have one thing in common. We are all lepers. Let us ask him to come with us."

And so Stefan became one of them, and the ten were soon good friends.

As they wandered about seeking some kind of diversion, word came to them concerning a healer, a Nazarene, who performed miracles and healed all manner of diseases. He was different, one told them, from other so-called healers and sorcerers, in that he asked no gold for his services. He did not serve only the rich and powerful but gave freely to all who had faith in him. Only recently, their informer said, this man, who preached with a marvelous understanding of the Scriptures in the synagogues, on the shores of Galilee, and many other places, had fed five thousand hungry people with a few small loaves and fishes. He had healed the sick, given sight to the blind, and made the lame to walk. He had even cleansed the lepers, incredible as it might seem.

This put hope into the hearts of the ten who had resigned themselves to a miserable fate. "Where can this healer be found?" they asked. Their informer could not say; he had not seen those things himself, but had only heard rumors of them. Disappointed, the lepers went on their way. But hope is strong. They talked often of the healer whose name was Jesus, and they asked for news of his whereabouts from those who came near enough to call to them.

Then one day Jesus of Nazareth passed their way, going to Jerusalem. There was no mistaking him. Kindness and love for all shone from his face. Crowds pressed about him, seeking his help. The lepers stood afar off. They could not go near him, but lifted their voices and cried out, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!"

The wonderful healer heard, turned his compassionate face toward them, and held out his hand. "Go show yourselves to the priests," was all he said.

AS one man they turned to go, and as they went, they saw they were cleansed. The nine Jews quickened their steps, but Stefan turned joyfully and hurried back to Jesus.

"I have come to thank you, Lord," he said. "I was a leper—now I am clean." And falling at Jesus' feet he glorified God.

"Where are the other nine?" the healer asked. "Were not ten cleansed? Yet only you, a stranger, return to glorify God."

"I am sure they are thankful, Lord, but they are so eager to reach the priests that they have forgotten to give thanks."

"You, too, are eager, but you remembered."

"Ah, but my need was so great. I have others besides myself to think of. My father is crippled and needs my help in providing for my mother and brother and sister. Please accept my thanks, Lord."

Jesus gently touched the bowed head. "Arise, go thy way. Thy faith hath made thee whole."

Stefan's heart was very light as he again started to the temple.

Then followed the period of ceremonial cleansing provided for by the law. This was finished on the eighth day, and Stefan joyfully turned his steps to the road that led out of the city and away to his home.

"Mother," he cried, "I am clean! Jesus of Nazareth has healed me!" How good it seemed to feel his mother's kiss on his cheek and catch his little sister in his arms again.

"Where are Father and Philip?" he asked when the happy greetings were over.

"Philip will soon be here," his mother replied, "but Father has gone to the city in search of you. We had had no news of you for some time. I am surprised that you did not meet him on the way."

At that moment there was a step at the door, and Stefan turned to greet his father.

"Jesus has healed me!" he said, showing his hand. "See, I am clean!"

Then suddenly his eyes grew luminous. "Father, you are walking! Your knee—it is straight!"

"Yes," was the glad reply, "I, too, have seen Jesus, and he has healed me. He also taught me many things. We will destroy our idols and henceforth worship only Jehovah."

AFTER the work was finished and they had eaten the evening meal, Stefan kissed his mother, waved a hand to the others, and strode down the path that led across the meadow toward Tyra's home.

A short distance from the house was a rustic seat under a friendly tree where they had spent many happy hours together. As he neared this spot, he stopped and out on the evening air sounded the thrice whistled notes of a bird. It was their secret call. Would she hear it and come to their meeting place?

He had only a moment to wait. In the clear moonlight he could see her as she stepped from the house and stood hesitantly as though she could not believe her ears. Stefan repeated the call. There was no hesitancy now. She was coming on swift, eager feet.

Happiness surged over him like a flood. Exultantly he flung wide his arms and lifted his face toward heaven as again the thanks of Stefan poured from an overflowing heart.

ciated. It should not be assumed that you know how the children appreciate you—this is something that should be said loud enough for the whole congregation to hear.

All these years you have taken the harder blows of the world and sheltered your family against them. A good many discouraging things happened in the shop and the places you have had to go, and you haven't brought all of them home to trouble your family, though Mother guessed more than you ever suspected. You have given up many things, and gone without, and made old things do, just as Mother has, because there wasn't enough to go around. And you never regretted it, nor did you think yourself a hero for doing it either. You would do it again if necessary.

* * * * *

Probably the most precious thing you have given your children, Dad, has been the beautiful example of love and loyalty that has always existed between you and Mother. Don't think that the children didn't notice this because they didn't talk about it. Children don't know how to speak of these things when they are young. It is only in the later years, when they remember.

You and Mother always thought of each other first. The love of the parents for each other and for their children is the strong foundation, the spiritual security of a child's world. It means a lot to a young person to have a heritage like that and to want to plan it for his own home when it comes.

* * * * *

We have learned something about being fathers in recent years, haven't we? We have got over the idea that all the problems of a family can be solved simply by signing a check. The father is not just a money-maker. He is very much needed as a friend, a counselor, a tower of strength for Mother when things are too much for her, and a pal for the children sometime during every day. The family needs you, personally, yourself—and not just what you make in the world.

There are times when giving a child money is just like giving him a stone—to borrow from that parable by Jesus—when what the child needs is bread—the spiritual bread of love and companionship.

Yes, a lot has been learned. A real father lives with his family, not just for it. And that's what you have done.

* * * * *

The highest type of father is not satisfied just to bring children into the world and then forget about them, letting them take care of themselves. Animals do that. The difference in the highest type of human father is that he loves his children about as much as the mother does—though this is not a quantitative matter. He teaches them. There are so many kinds of knowledge about life that only he can give them. . . . Dad, had you ever thought of yourself as a teacher of your own children? Probably not. But you were. You passed on bits of interesting information. You warned them against danger. You showed them ways to do things. You gave them ideas of the meanings back of life. And you let them know how you felt about God—he was the greater Father of all. . . . Yes, you and Mother were teachers, about the best teachers your children ever had.

* * * * *

Sometimes I think there is a new spirit of fatherhood in the world, but then it is probably the same spirit that was there all the time, and we didn't notice it.

I have seen young fathers carrying small sons or daughters in their arms, not ashamed to be fathers, not self-conscious about it, but proud of their parenthood, feeling the warmth of precious little bodies against their own, the beat of little hearts, the sweet softness of a child's skin—and glad to have the children along with them wherever they go.

This letter is long, Dad, and it must end rather soon; but I haven't had a chance to say half the things I wanted to, nor what I ought to.

Have a good time when June 18 comes around, Dad. We'd like to be there, and we hope we can. Good luck, and God bless you!

With love,
Your Son.

an entire city. Witness Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Volcano, earthquake, and tornado were all wrapped up in one package. The tactics of assault were old enough. They were essentially those employed by Indians with battle axes and bow and arrow. Simple enough—take a sleeping community entirely by surprise in the early dawn and wipe it out—men, women, and children.

As a climax upon climax, the scientists went to work to produce a hydrogen bomb even more awful that might devastate a whole nation. Men on both sides of the creek attacked that problem. Satan came also and looked and listened but gave no advice. To himself he said, "This is away beyond me. In spite of myself I recall the time when worlds were made and the 'Morning stars sang together and the Sons of God shouted for joy.' I was one of those who shouted for joy. In those days I was called a son of the morning. Now these people work with powers of destruction that turn even my stomach. They may devastate the whole world. When it happens I don't want to be here. My own habitation is reputedly not comfortable but it will be better than earth in that day—unless men come to their senses. And who am I to give them advice or teach them new lessons—they are post graduates."

As the Spirit Gave Them Utterance

angels and have not charity it profits me nothing." I think we could say, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not the Spirit, it profits me nothing." Well did one of the most outstanding speakers of the New Testament say "but the spirit giveth life." That's no reflection on men of letters, but something is needed in addition to letters, oratorical power, and facts. Men and women are not converted to facts. It is one thing to know what you should do; it's something else to receive the motivating power to do that which you know.

CONTENT IS NECESSARY, but we need something to season the content that men and women and boys and girls may be able to say to us as they said of the Master of men, "They teach with authority and not as the scribes." Content—who could match the scribes of ancient Israel so far as content was concerned? We have some modern scribes today who could be matched by few ministers of this church. Occasionally some of us have to go and sit at their feet. That's not too bad providing when we come back to address our own people we realize that in addition to what they have given us, we better have the Spirit to accompany it, because we have been admonished by God that if we lack the Spirit, we had better not attempt to teach. The truth is, no man can be effective as a teacher or preacher in the things that pertain to the gospel of Jesus Christ without the Spirit, regardless of the content.

It was said regarding the disciples of Jesus Christ, "They spake the word of God with boldness." That doesn't mean that they were going about insulting people, but they spoke with authority that turned men and women to an investigation of what was an unpopular doctrine in those days. Again I say it was just as difficult to make disciples for Jesus Christ 1900 years ago as it is today, but these men of Galilee seemed to exercise more boldness in their presentation of the gospel. In fact, some of us have been cautioned that we had better not be too bold or we might be driven out of Jackson County again. That's a tremendous price to pay to stay in Jackson County. I still think that what is appreciated and respected is whether a man is sincere and earnest in what he believes. It's hypocrisy that disturbs our friends, and not our boldness in the proclamation of truth. It's one thing to be bold in the proclamation of truth and it's something else to go about insulting people. I wouldn't have you think for a moment that I'm suggesting you insult your friends and neighbors who are not of our faith, but rather that you do not withhold from them the gospel truths. Good devout people will appreciate your presentation.

On one occasion an angel appeared. I trust that most of you believe in the ministry of angels. If you're not a member of our church and you believe in the Old and New Testament Scriptures, you possibly say, "Well, I believe that God once used angels." It shouldn't be difficult for you to believe that what God has done, he can do again and will do again. In the fifth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, verses 18 and 20, the men who spoke the truth with boldness got into trouble. They went to jail. Not many of us are put in jail today. The world suddenly has become a better place, or else we're too cautious to proclaim ourselves. We "go along" too many times. But back to the apostles, they were put in jail, and then something happened. The angel of the Lord released them and told them, "Go, stand, and speak all the words of life," and they did. Can you imagine what would happen if our ministers were conscious of the fact that even the angels of God are assisting them in giving utterance to the words of life? Talk about putting new life into this church, about arousing our people, about making new converts. Let this people become conscious of the fact that God is at work—let them see evidence of the power of God—and I'll show you a people capable of building his kingdom. Peter said that holy men of old spoke and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost (II Peter 1:21). As the Spirit gave them utterance, they spoke and wrote. We need that today. The words of men do not suffice; the words of men do not move or motivate men and women in righteous behavior.

I often think of Paul as he stood before Agrippa—by the way, he made that opportunity for himself, not for his sake, but that he might have an opportunity to talk with Agrippa regarding the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

One of the most marvelous declarations ever made is Paul's statement before Agrippa. I have been touched by Agrippa's remarks—remember, Paul was standing before him as a prisoner—when he turned and said to Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." I wish we could catch the full significance of those words. The gospel was most unpopular at that time, and Paul was on trial for his life, yet he almost persuaded the judge to become a Christian. Paul spoke as the Holy Ghost gave him utterance. This wasn't an occasion for speaking in an unknown tongue, but here again, the Holy Ghost prompted Paul and penetrated the mind and heart of this ruler.

DO MEN AND WOMEN need to be persuaded in this city? Do they need to be persuaded throughout the world? Do they need to be persuaded in the various professions? Are you satisfied with the converts being made to this church? Is this campaign, "Each One Win One," satisfactory with you? Are you going to be content in the knowledge that we've had one of the best baptismal years in the history of our church? I don't think you should be. We haven't even scratched the surface of making converts to Jesus Christ. Neither are we reaching the men and women who can make possible the kingdom of God—men and women who stand in places where they can attract the attention of those who need to be attracted to what God is attempting to do in this latter day.

I've lived long enough now to say that possibly more of the people I've known of this church have gone to the great beyond than those who remain. I remember when Brother Rushton used to say that most of his friends were in heaven—at least, he hoped they were there. We don't believe in preaching death-bed repentance, and if I should be called upon to officiate at the funeral of one of your loved ones, I wouldn't take advantage of you in your moments of sadness. But I feel to say that there's great condemnation awaiting any of us who, knowing the truth—what God is attempting to bring to pass in these latter days—have failed in convincing others of the divinity of this work. Do we attempt to do it in our own strength, or do we sense the necessity of coming in contact with his Spirit so that we too shall speak as the Spirit gives us utterance? That same power is yours to command if you're willing to use it for the purpose for which it is given. May God help us to appreciate not only the gift of tongues, but also this same unchangeable God who has placed at our disposal the Holy Spirit, which can equip us so that we shall become witnesses to the good God is bringing to pass in this latter day.

Difficult to Get Away From

It is very difficult for an individual who knows the Scripture ever to get away from it. It haunts him like an old song. It follows him like the memory of his mother. It remains with him like the word of a revered teacher. It forms a part of the warp and woof of his life.—Woodrow Wilson.

So You Want to Be Beautiful

By RUBY TINKHAM

YOU LOOK AT THE PICTURE of a beautiful model on the front of a magazine and heave a sigh of wistfulness. She's gorgeous. Every gleaming hair is in place, artfully cut and arranged. Her hands with the long tapering nails are soft and slender and enchanting. The long, lithe legs in the sheerest nylons and high heels excite visions of sidelong glances and low whistles. You gaze enviously at that plain little suit, about a size twelve, and worth a small fortune. And those simple little accessories, a soft corded bag with handstitched gloves falling so casually over the side, the innocent looking pearls and earrings—all of them impossible on your income with three children to feed.

You turn the pages trying to comfort yourself with the thought that the average woman looks no better than you do. Here on another page is a woman sweeping, and even in a cotton house dress she looks lovely. Then another hanging out a big wash, and she too is immaculate. You read the beauty section eagerly. On thirty minutes a day you can change yourself into a glamour girl with a radiant new personality. By dieting you can lose that extra weight. By exercise you can gain a model figure. Here are a few tricks to liven up your old dresses. There is a personality chart on how to highlight your best points. This one tells you how to pin up your hair, and that one tells you how to deal with Johnny after a long hard day when both of you are upset.

You close the magazine and resolve to try whatever has appealed to you most. Sometimes it works, sometimes it fades into disuse; but more often you just haven't the time to try it.

THEN ONE DAY you walk into a club meeting or P.T.A., or church, and you meet an old friend you haven't seen for a long time. You sit up in admiration. She's lovely. She looks younger than she did when you knew her as a girl. Why, she was downright ugly then. You stare because you just can't help yourself. What has she done to herself? She isn't any thinner than you are, and her clothes aren't expensive, but she wears them differently, as if they didn't really matter at all. Her hair is gray, and it isn't perfectly set, but it's flattering, and she isn't always picking at it or pushing it here and there. You can't keep your eyes off her, and you notice she smiles most of the time; that accounts for the friendly look on her face. In repose her face doesn't look tired or strained but has an eager look as if she were expecting something nice to happen all the time. You notice that she isn't nervous and doesn't twist or fidget or play with the beads around her neck. Then she speaks and you are amazed. Why, that isn't her old voice at all. This voice is soft and low, and the harsh whiny sound is gone!

How did she acquire such poise and assurance? You had just as much education as she did. Suddenly you would rather trade places with her than all the models in the whole world.

Your curiosity is more than you can bear. Your pride and vanity are wounded to the quick. Anything she can do, you can do too—if you can only discover her secret. You must talk to her, and so you invite her to your home the following week.

EVERYTHING IS SHINING and in readiness. You fix a tasty lunch and shoo the children out of the way. You had hoped she would not look so lovely this time, but your hopes are groundless, for she appears even prettier. She compliments you on your lovely home, and your three fine youngsters and even has them shining up to her. You go into the living room to talk, and she makes you feel relaxed and at ease so that you are enjoying yourself and unaware of the passing time. Suddenly you remember why you asked her to your house, and you wonder how to go about getting the information you want so much. No doubt she will evade you and resent your inquisitiveness. But you have to know, so you manage a weak question.

"Martha, I just can't believe it—the way you have changed in the past five years. What have you done to yourself?"

She smiles and never withdraws a particle. In fact she acts very happy that you have noticed the change.

"Thank you. That's the nicest thing you could say to me. I was even hoping you'd ask me—I love to talk about myself."

You lean forward in anticipation, for you sense something unusual in the air, and you don't want to lose a word. Her voice is low and soft, and there is a radiance about her that illuminates her plain face into loveliness.

"You see, Linda, I have got religion!"

You sit back in your chair shocked at the simple statement. Why that's plain foolish. Who doesn't have religion? Why, Martha has always gone to church every since you knew her. What does she mean about getting religion?

The Home Column

She watches you kindly, and suddenly you feel ashamed for doubting her statement. Maybe she does have something. You decide to listen. Nobody will ever know about it.

"Maybe you remember that I had a very serious illness about five years ago. My recovery was slow, and one day my doctor said, 'I've done everything I can for you, Martha, but I have a feeling you don't want to get well. Why, I don't know, but I am not coming back here any more until you make up your mind to help yourself. I think you need a greater physician than I am, and I advise you to get down on your knees and ask Him for some help. After all, it's his time and equipment you're wasting, not mine.'

"Well, at first I hated the doctor, but gradually I became more and more afraid he might be right. I had to find out, so I started to pray. I found out I didn't even know how to pray. As I look back now, I wonder that God was so patient with me. I decided to learn how, so I concentrated on prayer. I studied! I read the Bible! I went to church regularly even when I didn't want to. I joined study classes and began to read everything I could find that would help me. I even kept a notebook of my progress. I found my habits changing. Instead of starting my mornings out in a hurry and rushing everybody around in a nervous frenzy, I found I wanted to rise early and share a little time with God alone. This worked miracles for the whole family.

"I learned that if I prayed over even the most common things I did better work, and I did it faster. I began to try new skills; they too came easier and brought me much happiness and satisfaction. My family noticed the difference in me and complimented me. I found I wanted to please them and help them as God had helped me.

"I felt a new aliveness inside me, an eagerness to live and work. I lost all the surplus weight I had been carrying around for years; I felt light and buoyant. Small incidents that formerly worried me became unimportant, and I had time for all the things I really wanted to do, because I didn't hesitate or waste valuable time when making decisions.

"It was as if I were reborn. And suddenly I remembered that Christ had said, 'Ye must be born again.' I know now what he meant. I know I have much to learn, a long way to go, but now I feel that I have started in the right direction. I want to tell all my friends, for it is the only way I have of showing God how much I still need and appreciate his help."

YOU SIT THERE QUIETLY. You are compelled to believe, for the testimony is a revelation in itself. It is the old, old story, and you have heard it hundreds of times before—how a person's whole life can be changed by the simple acceptance of God. This is just another case of someone's actually making it work. You sigh. How you wish you were like her. You do so want to be beautiful, too.

By Love Serve One Another

By Audrey Stubbart

BILLY needed a home. Coming from a broken home, being shifted from home to home on the passing of his mother, his eyes, at seventeen months, were full of questioning lostness. He was a beautiful child, blue eyes and yellow curls. But our home was already full—too full? Should we take him in?

An appearance before the court, and he was ours on probation. The arrival of a new baby sister and the days were fuller yet. Upstairs and downstairs—baths and lunches—dirty clothes and ironings—blue eyes and brown—one felt like screaming with Little Black Sambo, "Tiger butter!"

But stopping to sit a few minutes one day on the divan, mother kicks off her shoes to rest her tired feet as she relaxes a few precious minutes. Billy, now two, spies the bare feet and exclaims, "Mommie's feet tired. I fix 'em." And he runs for the damp washcloth and wipes gently the tired feet.

A vision of the Master, kneeling in a position of servitude while he bathed feet, comes to our minds, reassuring us; and we know that no matter how hard the work or long the hours, we need Billy.

THE BOOK OF MORMON answers this strange anomaly. After two hundred years of peace and righteousness following the appearance of Jesus Christ among the ancient peoples, many of them began to apostatize. They professed to know the Christ, yet denied the greater part of his teaching. They began to practice all manner of wickedness. They prospered exceedingly because of the power of Satan (page 684: 29-30). Many priests and false prophets had churches built and did all manner of iniquity (page 685: 36). This caused a great division among the people. From that time on, they were not called Lamanites because of their descent from Laman nor Nephites because of their descent from Nephi, but those who were true believers in Christ were called Nephites, and those who professed to believe but rejected the gospel were called Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites. These latter did not dwindle in unbelief regarding the coming and power of Christ, but "they did wilfully rebel against the gospel of Christ" (page 685: 41, 42).

By A. D. 244 the wicked had become far more numerous than the righteous, but they continued to build churches and to adorn them "with all manner of precious things." Also they laid up an abundance of gold and silver and became a people given to much traffic (page 686: 46-55). The Nephites had become as wicked as the Lamanites by A. D. 320 (verse 53). At this time Ammoron, being constrained by the Holy Ghost, hid up the sacred records in the hill called Shim (page 687).

The population increased greatly, and the land became covered with buildings (page 688: 7). Major wars broke out between the Lamanites and the Nephites. As early as A. D. 367, many Nephite women and children were offered up as sacrifices to the idol gods of the Lamanites (page 697: 16). Later on, after some Nephite victories, the Lamanites were again victorious and again sacrificed Nephite women and children to idols (page 697: 23).

Mormon's last epistle to his son Moroni indicates that by A. D. 384, the Nephites at Moriantum had become more depraved in some ways than the Lamanites (pages 772: 10-17; 701; 702).

After Moroni's last words, written about A. D. 420, we have no further guide except what is indicated by the buildings erected after that time, together with Indian tradition and their ancient books, most of which were destroyed by the Spaniards. It is marvelous that the ruins evidence as they do, the strange anomaly told in the Book of Mormon of a mixture of idol worship and human sacrifice with the worship of Jesus Christ, called Quetzalcoatl by the natives.

Tribute to Dad

was actively engaged in the work of his Lord and felt it a great privilege to be.

Because of our parents' humble financial condition, we children were often away from home, making a few extra dollars to apply to the family income. Many were the times that temptations came our way, but our background of religious faith was sufficient to carry us through. When my older brother served several months in the Marines in the Pacific theater of the war, he constantly repeated that the only thing which kept him mentally and morally decent was the strength of his faith in God—the spiritual heritage Mother and Dad had given him.

The instances of our failures to live up to the family's religious standards of clean living have been in spite of our parents' teachings, not because of them.

Yes, Dad was an ordinary man, possessing weaknesses of the average person, but also possessing such virtues as to make him honored this day with the other ordinary Dads of the world.

No Better Way

Here are the Youngs

Until this spring, Biloine Whiting needed no introduction to "New Horizons'" readers, and George Young was only a potential contributor. On April 8, Biloine changed her name from Whiting to Young, so something of an introduction is in order. The "Herald" is happy to present this new husband-wife writing team.

Following graduation from high school, George enlisted in the Navy and spent a year and a half on the Mediterranean as navigator on an L.S.T. After returning to the States, he attended Denison University in Ohio and the University of Kansas at Lawrence on the V-12 program. He now holds a commission in the Navy and is a graduate student in education and guidance at the University of Pittsburgh. His favorite sport is baseball, and he is an ardent supporter of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Youngs live at 217 Morewood Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and attend Pittsburgh Branch.

PART ONE

By Billie

WHAT DOES A LATTER DAY SAINT GIRL DO when the man with whom she falls in love does not belong to the church? Or, even worse, is a Catholic? If anyone had asked me that two years ago, I'd have said, "Convert him." Later, when I myself faced that very situation, I found that converting a husband-to-be is not so simple—but not for the obvious reasons.

George and I met in a poetry course at the University of Kansas in 1947. We were seated alphabetically, and since there were no last names beginning with "X" in the class, I found myself sitting next to one George Young. George was a mild-mannered senior with unruly black hair and an enormous navigator's wrist watch. It was the wrist watch that started it all. I asked George for the time, and George asked me for a date.

We went together for a year and a half before I became concerned about his religious beliefs. He had told me that he had been reared a Catholic, but from the curt way in which he stated that fact in his background, I gathered that he was not pleased with his religion. But if George was a "bad Catholic," or no Catholic at all, he still was not a Latter Day Saint. One evening he made the casual comment that he was "shopping around for a religion." I considered that statement an "opening," so when he brought me home I kept him waiting on the front porch of the dormitory while I hunted for my Call at Evening to loan him.

On my next date with George, I waited anxiously for some reference to the book I had given him. None came. Neither of us mentioned it on any of our subsequent encounters until at last spring came with graduation. We were saying good night on one of our last dates of the school year, when suddenly he pulled the copy from under his jacket and returned it to me. There was no time to get his reaction. The house-mother was already rattling the house keys inside the screen door.

AND THEN, after a year of trying to discover my own mind, I found that I was in love with George. I, an appointee's daughter, surrounded from birth by church influences, was in love with a man who was not a Latter Day Saint, a man whose principal religious experience had been in the Roman Catholic Church.

All of the tragic cases brought to pastors by couples made unhappy by religious differences came to my mind. I believed in the necessity of establishing a Zion home, but could that be done if Zion were only a word to one of the homemakers? I wondered just how much religious convictions affected our daily lives, how active a part one really needed to take in church activities, and how necessary it was that these activities be shared by a husband and wife.

The ideal solution, obviously, would be to convert George. But it was here that I ran into difficulties with myself. I had given George the Call at Evening and nothing, apparently, had happened. I was doubtful of the usefulness of taking him to church, because often our doctrine is presented in a sketchy way in individual services. The Book of Mormon, I felt, was too tedious to read when one is cramming for examinations. Looking back on my experience, I see that I was perhaps afraid to put our church doctrine to the test of convincing a critical person, though I would vigorously have denied those sentiments if I had been accused of them.

RIGHT OR WRONG, this is how I felt: George is marrying me with all of my faults. He does not say, "Stop doing this particular thing, and I will marry you." Therefore it follows that I cannot say to him, "Stop smoking, and I will marry you." Because George is a completely sincere person, I cannot ask him to subscribe to a philosophy merely to please me. Such a baptism would be foreign to his nature and would not result in happiness for either of us. I also realized that much of the feeling between us had an intellectual as well as emotional basis. Intellectually, George was not a Catholic. He could not accede to the “you-must-believe-and-not-question” demands of the Catholic dogma. He was tolerant of my beliefs and willing for me to follow in them.

The story of two people who wanted to get married despite their religious differences

And so we were engaged to be married. I left for an extended trip, adjusting my mind to the idea of being married to a nonmember and wondering how to soften the effect of this announcement to my father to whom it might come as a personal defeat.

I thought I had exhausted all of the alternatives, at least for the present. In this I had failed to reckon with the church itself, with George, and with my father. With me out of the country, they took matters into their own hands, and the first that I knew about it was when letters arrived telling me of George’s baptism by my father.

It is hard to describe my sentiments when I received those letters. It would not be correct to say that my feelings changed for my fiancé, but it is certainly true that they deepened. The effect upon me was so marked that my two traveling companions noticed and commented upon it. Our wedding in the Stone Church during General Conference seemed especially symbolic to us of the part already played in our lives by the church.

PART TWO By George

A FEW HOURS at a small kitchen table—a few hours spent questioning, probing, explaining, discussing—and finally the hand shake, the hand shake signifying agreement. But the final agreement actually was a thing assured many years ago, and thus the episode becomes just a little less dramatic than you might at first suspect. The man with whom

I shook hands was to become my father-in-law. The man with whom he shook hands was to become a Latter Day Saint.

When Billie asked me about my religion, I said I belonged to the Roman Catholic Church. I was a Catholic, at least in name, although at times I had said I was a Christian, since being a Catholic disturbed me. So I told her and that was that, but only for the time being. I fell in love with her, asked her to marry me, and then began my long, impatient wait for our wedding. All this while I was still officially a Catholic. Actually I wasn’t bothered by the difference in our religious backgrounds . . . it meant nothing to me. I had got from Billie at least an idea of her beliefs, and they certainly agreed with mine, which really were not Catholic beliefs. But, being in love and not totally unlike all other cloud-walkers, I could feel that this must be a problem for Billie. Of course, my intuition was aided somewhat by the facts. Billie’s father was an R.L.D.S. minister, and had rather definite views concerning the Catholic Church. Her problem became mine and the solution was very simple.

HAVE YOU EVER HAD an idea about which you weren’t so very sure and then discovered that others had the same idea but were sure? That happened to me. I had an idea about God and about what he must have intended for man here on earth. No one else, until Billie, had expressed the same idea I had.

This is what I thought: All about me was beauty. There were brilliant sunsets, spectacular displays of stars, cool rains, warm days, blue skies, thrilling storms, trees, flowers, grass.

There were people who loved me, laughed with me, were sad with me. I could feel happiness bubble up within me—happiness for no reason other than just plain being. I fell in love, the final proof, if indeed any at all were needed, that what I thought just had to be so. Surely the God who allowed such things to happen to me must certainly be the loving, generous, forgiving, considerate Being I felt him to be.

But others seemed afraid of him; others warned of his terrible wrath; others lived in fear of what God might do to them. They offered sacrifices, shut out the beauties God offered for fear the good feeling which comes with all beauty would somehow offend the Giver. Some withdrew completely from the world, rejecting all that God had placed before them and asking for a better fare in a different world. Those who were the Catholic Church did these things. If that was what they really wanted, then they had the right—another God-given gift—to go ahead, but they insisted that I do likewise. Anything so unnatural as the life a Catholic is forced to lead if he wishes to remain Catholic could not possibly be in tune with God’s wishes.

So I disagreed and formed my own conception of the personality of God. Man, I thought, could love other men, could accept the teachings of Christ and apply them practically in his life today. God made the earth for all who lived on it and gave no man the right to deny another his place here. Catholics have no prior claim on the earth or on God’s heaven. The kingdom of God is populated by all who desire to enter. The beauties of this world are for all who but open their eyes to see them—the wonders of the next world are no less restricted.

I COULD SEE BEAUTY all about me, but the brilliance of beauty could not blind me to the not-so-beautiful. I could see the terrible competition among nations, among the people of our nation, slowly but surely bringing civilization to its knees. Christ taught co-operation. He said, "Love thy neighbor." So we all agreed, on Sunday we agreed that Christ taught the way to salvation, and then on Monday the old competitive grind began all over again. Whenever men compete there must be a loser, and there's nothing beautiful or god-like about that. I could see the terrible lack of beauty in the discrimination practiced by the church to which I belonged, in the discrimination practiced by many other avowed followers of Christ. The Catholics discriminated against Protestants who discriminated against Catholics, and they both discriminated against Jews, Negroes, and countless other minority groups. How could I reconcile this with the teachings of Christ? If I should ask a priest about discrimination, he would deny it; but yet there were no Negroes in any Catholic congregation of which I ever was a part. Perhaps in this instance there was no active discrimination, but certainly a passive discrimination which is the more insidious because of its hypocrisy.

I could see the inconsistencies in the church's teachings and practices. I could read of the terrible things which had been done with the blessings of the church—the Spanish Inquisition for example. I saw that I could not be a Catholic. So, since being a Catholic bothered me, I would say at times that I was a Christian.

BILLIE WENT TO EUROPE, and shortly after she left I visited her father at Hammond, Indiana. There we sat at that small kitchen table and finally shook hands in agreement.

There I found that these things I had thought and believed for years had been taught and believed by an actual organization. There was a church which did believe in the teachings of Christ, which did believe there was a God-given beauty to this world. I found a church which not only talked about co-operation and co-operative living on Sunday, but actually practiced it during the week.

I found my church. I had belonged in spirit from the first time I had questioned Catholic authority, and so it really wasn't surprising that finally I should belong in name as well. And thus the problem was solved even before we knew the problem existed. As soon after the baptism as we could get to pen and paper, Billie's father and I wrote her and told her what had happened. The happiness expressed in her next letter to me insured my own.

God smiled, and my life with Billie began.

 EVERYTHING—

Is so late, and we have had such a rough time the last two months, that it seems to us that Mother Nature has been bumping along with a broken Spring.

 PRAYER FOR A TIME OF DROUGHT

O Lord, send rain for the thirsty land, and please send us enough. We have had caravans of empty clouds that return to their place, yielding nothing, drizzles and promises, and a hatful here and there. Now we need rain in earnest. Let it soak deep down into the parched earth. Let it fill the wells and springs with clean water, and make the tanks and reservoirs run over. Let it rain till the ducks rejoice and the chickens run for shelter.

It is the steady rain we need, Lord. Not the cloudburst that brings floods and washes away the soil. And spare us from the gales that destroy, and the whirlwinds that rend and tear. Save our homes and the loved ones who live in them. A gentle rain does the most good. We don't need to be scared to death this time.

Lord, send abundant rain to refresh the earth, assure the harvest, and comfort thy people. Amen.

 UNCLE JOE

He can't understand why his office, with the window closed and only him in there, smells stuffy.

"Don't worry about it, darling," says Aunt Molly. "It's only some of your ideas!"

 SHOWERS

It is a custom widely honored to give "showers" of practical gifts for the prospective bride. Once in a while, just for fun, the prospective groom and some husbands are included, too. It is a good thing, and helps the poor man to make the transition from the bright pink cloudlands of romance down to the material world, where problems of housekeeping must be met. It can prepare him for what his household duties are likely to be. . . . Give him a big kitchen apron for washing dishes, dishcloths, pot-scrappers. Remember that women like dainty things; men like them hefty, strong, and durable. . . . Every man, to be a good husband, should learn to take his fair part of home work and responsibilities. Sharing the work helps to make happy marriages, with good humor and fair play all around.

 REMEMBERING

An old prayer that may be useful for very busy people is one traditionally used by the British Admiralty for a day when a battle was about to begin:

"Lord, thou knowest how busy I shall be this day. If I forget thee, do not thou forget me."

How fervently one can say "Amen!" to that prayer.

 DEFT DEFINITIONS

Sister Grace Krahl brought us this clever one:

An optimist is one who sees a light when there isn't any. A pessimist is one who comes along and blows it out.

* Uncle Joe complains: "I have had to spend so much of my life erasing my mistakes!"

Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

This set of slides is the most authoritative set yet assembled on the subject of Book of Mormon Archaeology. Apostle Paul Hanson, with the collaboration of other members of the Society for Archaeological Research, has selected the best and most significant material from over 2000 slides for use in this set. It is made up of 40 slides; 31 in color, 5 color text, and 4 sepia, together with a printed manual. Set No. 6, 40 slides and manual $15.00

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper

In the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, as in some other features of the gospel, we deal with a combination of physical symbols that relate to and express spiritual realities. The purpose of this aid is to help church members to a better understanding of the symbols and what they mean. It may also be used to good advantage with nonmembers in explaining the significance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Set No. 5, 16 slides in full color and printed manual $7.00

The Gift of the Holy Spirit by the Laying on of Hands

This series is concerned with two factors: (1) with the ordinance of the Laying on of Hands, and (2) with the spiritual reality back of it—the gift of the Holy Spirit, as this gift is associated with confirmation of new members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and administration to the sick. Set No. 4, 15 slides in full color with printed manual $6.50

Ye Must Be Born Again

Scripture texts and historical quotations are used to teach the essential features of Baptism, illustrated with color slides. This is a missionary aid, but can be used to good advantage in prebaptismal classes. An illustrated script serves as a guide for study. Set No. 3, 19 text slides and 9 color illustrations with printed manual $6.00

Statement of Belief

The official Statement of Belief as originally written by Joseph Smith II has been visualized and brought into more concrete form in this set of 37 color slides. Each frame has a short text together with a color illustration conveying the central idea of that part of the statement. Further details together with the price will be announced in the "Saints' Herald" some time after June 1, 1950.

Lonely People

A FACULTY MEMBER of Graceland College remarked at the recent Workshop that he was troubled at times by loneliness. The late President F. M. Smith expressed a similar complaint. This affliction seems to be the lot of many busy and efficient persons who come in contact with others each day. This paradoxical situation arises out of the gregarious nature of man. He is a social being.

It is difficult for most of us to realize how the president of the church or a classroom teacher, who must deal intimately with several persons and their problems each day, could honestly say, "I get lonely." We are inclined to restrain ourselves lest we intrude on such persons and add to their vocational burdens. And such caution is the mark of a thoughtful and cultured person. Then why should these busy men complain of being lonely?

Bishop G. L. DeLapp told the Center Stake Conference last May that the officials at the Auditorium have as their standard greeting or pass word, "I have a problem." The age we live in is demanding and willing to pay better salaries for problem-solvers than for any other class of employees. But a man can be in the midst of dozens of people each minute of the day and still get lonely, painfully lonely. The "wallflower" at the party or the stranger on the street are examples. A mother with ten children about her could get plenty lonely though not for the lack of human association nor problems.

The answer to this paradox seems to be in the social craving which is ministered to only by personal friendships. This is quite different from merely having vocational associates. We must find compensation in the evidences that we are people of social worth to those of our kind. We are sought out because we are human beings who can contribute socially to the happiness of others.

There are such people in your branch and district that you might help. And by helping these workers you will find a new dignity and sense of mission in your own life.

Marriage Always a Sacrament

THE FIRST MIRACLE by the Master of Men was witnessed at a marriage which the Savior graced by his presence. Whether he officiated is not stated; but his presence undoubtedly gave it the sanction of Divinity.

Some months ago the writer was asked to solemnize the marriage of one of our young appointees. His fiancée was a member of the church. In planning the service the brother said, "I make but one stipulation: I desire that the formula set out in paragraph 2 of our Article on Marriage be used."

Marriage services are solemn occasions, generally carefully planned, and more often than not the service is "read." This insures dignity and a safeguard against possible embarrassing mistakes by those directly interested.

Not long ago I received a letter from one of our experienced pastors who wrote: "I have noticed that elders and priests are not using that portion of Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3 which should be used in the reading of the marriage ceremony," and he expressed the belief "that this should be brought to the attention of our priesthood."

Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3 has this regarding marriage: "And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."

Without question this law should be read as a part of our service, and it lays a splendid foundation for the use of the instructions in Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2, which are as follows:

"Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: 'You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?' And when they have answered 'Yes,' he shall pronounce them 'husband and wife' in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him: 'May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and for ever. Amen.'"

It will be noted that these provisions are not strictly mandatory, although 111: 2 gets very close to it when it provides "the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed by the person officiating," etc.

There are many forms of services to be read. Many of them are very beautiful, impressive, and meaningful, and in the absence of any adverse convictions it is easy for the minister to prefer the read ceremony. However, it does not require much ingenuity to make an adaptation of any of them to the requirements (advisory) of our law in order not to lose the virtues and benefits of careful obedience to direction—even if it be but mildly directory.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The real trouble in so many homes is that people forget marriage is founded on love . . . yes, the same sweet, sentimental, illogical force that made them want each other in the first place. Love is the cement of the marriage, the foundation of the home, the goal of a shared existence, the rich reward of all faithfulness.

If you love each other, nothing else can make you part. If you don't love each other, nothing else can really keep you together.

If love dies, all you have left to keep you together is a piece of paper, and that isn't enough.

* * * * *

If you love your companion, be willing to express it and show it. The "strong, silent type," at best, is a wooden Indian standing in front of a cigar store. You can't compete with him—and why should you want to? If you love your companion, say so every day. Prove it with occasional gifts, happy surprises, and little celebrations that show you care.

* * * * *

Let a husband be determined to love his wife as much as he can every day, and he will never have any trouble with the circle formed by the wedding ring getting bent into a triangle.

* * * * *

One modern notion of romance is false and misleads many people: it is the idea that love cannot be controlled.

The truth is, love can be controlled. Of course, some people make it hard for you to love them; some make it easy. But still, if there is a spark of love, it can be cultivated so that it will grow and bear a rich harvest of happiness for you and your companion. It can be neglected so that it will die. It all depends on you.

Across the Desk

From William Patterson, Stockton, California, May 24:

We concluded our services here at Stockton last Monday night with a confirmation and testimony meeting. I had the pleasure of baptizing three adults Sunday—a husband and wife, the parents of four small children, and another lady who had been a member of Jehovah's Witnesses. These are fine people and should become assets to the local congregation. After their confirmation two of the three baptized gave testimonies. There are several others here who should be baptized; two have already given their names in for baptism since Sunday. Altogether the services were fairly successful, and the Saints desired that I remain longer.

Address to Priesthood

By President Israel A. Smith

April 8, 1950

I TRUST what I may be enabled to say this morning will be in entire harmony with the very fine spirit which is here. Before talking briefly on the topic which was assigned to me—assigned to me by my own suggestion however—I wish to review the situation in which we find ourselves.

It is a source of great satisfaction to me that once more the Quorum of the First Presidency is complete. I take additional satisfaction and am indeed grateful that once more the Council of Presidents of Seventy is complete. I believe the Church from its organizational personnel is in as good position if not better than it has ever been.

When we talk about being laborers together, we are talking about the one central thing necessary to our success. We are co-laborers with God. Being a co-laborer means simply that we are workers in connection and together with somebody else. I believe the priesthood of this Church is in better position to go out with that power and authority which ought to be resident in everyone who holds the priesthood of God.

I do not like to predict, but in the light of the experiences within recent years I am sure that the Church is on the march, and the Church is on the march because of a priesthood that is gradually coming to a state and condition where we may properly say it is united. I have seen evidences of disunion in the councils of the Church; I have seen evidences of the unrest and disquietude of the Church, that is the members of the Church, because of this lack of entire unity in the councils. I wish to read at this point something from Section 119 with respect to our being laborers together; this is all familiar to you. Like many other things, when we look them over again and read them carefully, we see something in it that we haven't seen before or at least that we haven't remembered. Now we're going to read paragraph 8 of Section 119, particularly because of what follows the first sentence: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may." That of course is the prime, fundamental objective of the Church.

And here follows the statement: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." If this injunction applies to the labor, the joint labor of the ministry and of those who are not of the ministry but who labor in the affairs of men, how much more important is it that members of the priesthood—the eldership—should work together and be united. But as I picked up this book this morning, and looked at it, my eye caught some words three lines above in paragraph 7 where I find this language: "Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word." I have seen this happen to brethren, at least temporarily, because of just a chance remark, perhaps a word unwisely chosen, and I think this is an injunction we should very carefully follow; we should have in our hearts that broad charity, sympathy, and love for our brethren that we will never ascribe to them any wrongful motive or ever make them an offender for a word.

I have seen, too, in my experience what disruption comes to the Church and councils from jealousy. Certainly jealousy is something we should all very carefully avoid. In 1946 when by the action of the Conference I was selected to assume the responsibilities of the office which were left when my brother passed beyond, I felt led to say at that time—which amounted to a pledge, and

John W. Rushton

Distinguished Veteran Church Leader

Passed Away May 8, 1950

Circumstances of His Passing

After fifty-seven years in the ministry of the church, forty-five of them as an apostle in the Council of Twelve, John W. Rushton died at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital on Monday, May 8, 1950. He had faced the necessity of a serious operation in which considerable risk was involved. After the recent General Conference he returned to his home at Van Nuys, California. Then he and Sister Rushton came to Independence on what was to be their last trip together.

The operation took place on Wednesday morning, May 3. In the next few days he was making satisfactory gains. The time of anxiety seemed to be over, and Sister Rushton was able to obtain one good night's rest. He was examined carefully by physicians on Monday morning, and his condition appeared good. A short time later an embolism occurred, and in a little while death claimed him.

Sister Rushton was staying with friends of many years, Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess. They, with other friends and church officials, have done all possible to help her through this great trial. Not many knew her because she, by preference, remained in the background to give full support to Brother Rushton in his public work. Her courage has been revealed in this time of trial, and her graciousness and kindness have impressed all who have met her. The sympathy of the church is extended to her. Fortunately, her son John was able to reach Independence in time and be at her side.

Tribute of the First Presidency

The following tribute was adopted by members of the First Presidency as expressing their sentiments concerning Brother Rushton's ministry and passing, and it was read by President Israel A. Smith at the Memorial Service held at Stone Church, Independence, on Tuesday, May 9, 1950:

John W. Rushton began his work in connection with the Reorganization midway in its existence and was an active minister of our ranks for more than fifty years.

When he was relieved of official responsibility in 1947, his appointment was changed to that of "Minister at Large." No one has better deserved such a high commission nor has any worn its insignia with greater dignity.

"He served his generation and the Church long and faithfully—his reward is sure." The kindly smile which lighted his eye together with his friendly handclasp expressed "the enthusiasm of humanity" born of communion with our Lord. And, when he spoke to his fellows, they, irrespective of creed, nationality, or color, recognized something of a better self in the Master of Men to whom our brother was utterly devoted. He was ever conscious of the "unspeakable gift of God" to humanity, and of that gift he freely received. Just as freely did he give, and so he lives in the lives of a host of friends, a great many of whom were not of his religious persuasion.

John Rushton was an Olympian, occupying the heights in daily life and work. It is not difficult to contrast the unsteady progress of the sparrow with the sustained and majestic flight of the eagle. The supremacy of Brother Rushton over the average man was as the excellence of an imposing cathedral over the ordinary structures seen about us.

Knowledge did not encumber him; for he had formed and fashioned it into serviceable tools which, with a marvelous mastery of his native tongue, became the rapier of the champion fencer. He employed words with all the skill and exactitude of a technician.

Such a man the Apostle Paul must have had in mind when he gave us the injunction:

Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

In all respects, our brother, now called to a greater realm, wielded so ably both sword and shield, we are convinced we shall never see his like again.

A bright and charitable soul has taken flight. May we be permitted some day to renew our fellowship with this friendly man in that better clime where sin and sorrow enter not, and all is peace—blessed peace.

The Obituary

The following obituary was read by President F. Henry Edwards at the memorial service held in Independence:

JOHN WILLIAM RUSHTON was born February 12, 1874, at Leeds, England. On August 1, 1898, he married Beatrice M. Rudd, and to them were born two daughters, Dorothy (Backer) and Margaret (Frazee), and three sons, William, Frank, and John.

With his family Brother Rushton moved to the United States in 1911, and for a number of years the family home has been in California.

Brother Rushton became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints September 15, 1888, in England. A little less than five years later he was ordained to the local ministry, and he served in his home branch and in near-by branches until called into the full-time ministry fifty years ago. He was ordained a member of the Quorum of Seventy on August 4, 1901, and an Apostle in the Council of Twelve on April 20, 1902. Thereafter his ministry took him as a supervising minister to almost every country in which the church is represented: to Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii, the Society Islands, and on repeated assignments to his native land and continental Europe. He was held in high esteem wherever he served. He was known as a man of wisdom, courage, and rich culture. He was relieved of responsibility in the Council of Twelve at the April Conference of 1947 with the thanks of the entire church, thus completing one of the longest ministries in that Council in the history of the Church.

Brother Rushton was in attendance at the recent General Conference of the church where he continued his distinguished ministry. On the advice of his physician and the church officials concerned, he returned to California to make preparation for a serious operation, and after this trip entered the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital where even those who knew him well were impressed by his quiet and unostentatious faith. He died at the Sanitarium on the morning of Monday, May 8, 1950.

In addition to his wife, four children, seven grandchildren, and a sister in England, Brother Rushton leaves to mourn his passing many, many friends and admirers. His body will be taken to California where it will be interred at Forest Lawn, Glendale, California, Friday afternoon, May 12, near that of his son William, the only member of the immediate family to precede him in death.

The Funeral

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Council of Twelve, who had served so many years in close friendship and fellowship with Brother Rushton, gave a deeply moving sermon which was taken for the Herald on a wire recorder.

Others whose services contributed to this memorial to Brother Rushton were Bethel Davis Knoche, organist; and a quartet composed of Pauline J. Arnson, Doris Weddle, Evan A. Fry, and Leslie Kohlman. The quartet sang, "Lead, Kindly Light," "Abide With Me," and "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

The Funeral Sermon by Apostle Paul M. Hanson

Independence, Missouri, May 10, 1950

OUR TEXT IS from the Book of Revelation, words of the Apostle John.

And I heard a voice from heaven say unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.

It is hard to realize that the resonant voice of Brother Rushton is hushed in death, that the truth of Christ valued by him above all else shall not continue to find eloquent expression by him in our midst. Brother Rushton was an unusual man, a good man, a God-fearing man. The source of his greatness can be found in the fact that when he was scarcely more than a boy he utilized the powers of his soul in a search for that which was most worth while in life. What a noble utilization of his powers! And as he moved through the forces of life, seeing some that were human, sensing others as diabolical, he discerned what to him were the movements of God in his life, and he responded thereto. This resulted in his discovery of matchless truth and goodness and beauty and divinity in Jesus Christ. His life found expression in faithful devotion to his family.

When visiting at his home this last winter, I sat with him in the parlor, and we spoke intimately one to the other. He spoke of his family, and then referring to his wife he said, "Really, Paul, if in the world to come she does not receive a higher recognition than what may come to me, I shall hardly be satisfied." The world is better for Brother Rushton's having lived in it, and from the church has been taken one of its renowned servants. I know of no one—and I choose my words—who has endeared himself to more people in and out of our church than Brother Rushton. Everyone in this land and abroad will greatly miss him—everyone who has come under the influence of his gracious personality.

As a member of the church, an official of the church, and a citizen of our nation, I am the product of all I have passed through. As I look to the church in the days of my youth when I saw and heard men like our late Joseph Smith, J. R. Lambert, Joseph Luff, and many others I would enumerate if time permitted, I remember how as I saw and heard them, I thought that if the church makes men like them, I want the church in my life. And I would not leave Brother Rushton out of the small list of names mentioned. A good deal of whatever might be considered praiseworthy in my life is due partly to my association with our brother who has been taken from us.

I HAD the privilege of being closely associated with him, especially on the mission to Australasia in 1919 when for a year and a half we were together every day and night. We slept together except when traveling on the steamers. We were inseparable except perhaps when I would say to him, "Brother Rushton, the mail has come in from the States. If it's all right with you we'll meet at Brother — and have dinner this evening." I thought perhaps he'd like to have the day to himself. My relationships with him were very close.

After he discovered divinity in Jesus Christ and cast his lot with the church, not many years passed before the church and its councils had in their midst an intellectual and spiritual giant.

I visited Brother Rushton in the Sanitarium before he went home to talk with his family over what appeared to be advisable in his behalf. He told me what had been said to him, that there was hazard in the operation, but that it appeared advisable. Then quietly he said to me, "But should it be, I am ready to go." He paid tribute to the doctors, the nurses, and the chaplain of the Sanitarium.

BROTHER RUSHTON has gone to his reward. Death is the separation of the body and spirit of man. It is not annihilation but a vestibule through which one passes from this life to the world to come. Jesus said to one of the malefactors on the cross at his side, because of what he perceived was goodness in the man despite his being where he was, "Verily I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with me in paradise." "With me"—this suggests fellowship.

The spirit of our brother has been disrobed of its mortal tabernacle and has gone to rest in the paradise of God to be with Christ without whom nothing was made that was made. When the resurrection takes place and a glorious body is given as God wills, then will take place the saying, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Thus in Christ death becomes a triumphal arch through which the righteous pass into fair fields of immortality in fellowship with God, and their works do follow them.

What a marvelous thing is the mind! It is an amazing instrument with the power to recall scenes of the past, broadcast them on its walls and under Christian influences select those which bring light and cheer and hope. Our brother was spared to his family until his children grew to maturity, and grandchildren have risen to call him blessed. The church has had his ministry for many years. The influence of his life has gone far out not only to the church but to the world in a very wonderful way. With the departure of our brother from our midst, we can recall the past and with that there will come that which will help us to see that in the wondrous working of the providential hand of God, there is much to bring cheer to us.

Let us pray:

Our Father in heaven, we thank thee for thy many blessings, for the wonders of earth and even its mystery, for the light that comes to give meaning even to disappointments and sorrows and loss and pain and grief. We thank thee for the solution that has been given to mankind of life and death by thy Son.

Wilt thou bless, as only thou canst, those of the immediate family of our beloved brother, and may they, in realizing the rich heritage that he has left to them and his church and his country, feel to rejoice because of the movements in thine own way in his life. As they shall repair to their home in the West, we pray that thy hand may be over each one. May there be that protection only thou canst give and comfort like that which a child can and does receive when it goes appealing to its parent for aid. We ask it all in the name of Christ our Lord, Amen.

Service at Forest Lawn Cemetery, Glendale, California

The following is from a letter written for the Rushton family by John Rushton, Jr.:

The services at Forest Lawn were beautifully conducted by Brother Ostertag. The floral tributes were numerous, and the church was filled to overflowing with his many friends and admirers. It made our hearts a little lighter to know how our dear father was held in such high esteem. What more could be said than was said of him, "Brother John was indeed a Christian gentleman."

The following extract is from the report of Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag, former president of the Southern California District:

From every part of Southern California and from Northern California, too, Saints and friends came to pay their respects to him. Sister Rushton and her family planned the service in such a way that everyone who was a friend to Brother Rushton, in a ministerial capacity, was recognized. The four grandsons and the two sons-in-law were the pallbearers; honorary pallbearers were D. B. Carmichael, Rodney Engel, Tom Beil, Arthur Ballard, Ed Nelson, Garland Tickemyer, J. Stanley Kelley, and George Njeim.

The order of the service was as follows: Scripture, Psalms 23 and 121; obituary, Louis J. Ostertag; prayer, Tom Beil; "Lead, Kindly Light," Garland E. Tickemyer; sermon, Louis J. Ostertag; "The Lord's Prayer," Garland E. Tickemyer. The graveside liturgy was by Brother Ostertag and the benediction by Brother Beil.

Tribute of the Council of Twelve

ELDER JOHN W. RUSHTON was born in Leeds, England, in 1874. He came in contact with the Reorganized Church in his young manhood and recognized the call of the Master to which he willingly responded. Soon after joining the church, he was ordained, and in 1902 called by revelation to occupy as an Apostle. Here he served the church in many fields, occupying as an apostle for perhaps the longest period in the history of the Latter Day Restoration. Soon after his ordination, he was selected as assistant secretary of the Council and later occupied as secretary—an office which he filled with distinction and honor.

He loved his native land with the true passion of a man reborn. Never did he forget his own country or his own people. Although he made his home in California and became a citizen of the United States of America—a privilege which he always prized most highly—he was ever able to appreciate the contribution of Great Britain to the cause of freedom. In him the land of his birth and the land of his choice found equal affection and esteem. His first mission was to Great Britain. In that land he has left a lasting impression for good.

John W. Rushton was endowed with many rich gifts. He possessed a gracious personality, a love of the beautiful, the good, and the true; and he was a very talented and able preacher and minister of the gospel. But he was not content merely to possess these gifts. His endowments were met by a zeal for hard work, an infinite capacity for taking pains, and a disposition to broaden and enlarge and deepen his fund of knowledge. He possessed within himself that capacity to persevere which is ever the mark of great men, and never was his integrity questioned.

WHEN ONE THINKS of him as a preacher, immediately there comes to mind many of the “thoughts of God” which were “hung upon his words.” Not only did Brother Rushton acquire by diligent study and faith a large vocabulary, but he fashioned that vocabulary into an instrument of ministry. Never once was the impression given that he was striving for outward effect or rhetorical brilliance. Always his discourse was a fit setting for his ministry. How well he loved to talk of the Incarnation of Our Lord Jesus Christ, as “God’s unspeakable gift”; and when thus he opened his mouth, not only did his hearers rejoice in the new ideas presented, but the Life of God flowed to them also.

Brother Rushton was a “shepherd and bishop” of souls. Young people loved him; to him they came for advice when marriage vows were to be taken. He blessed their children and visited in their homes and ministered to their sick. He was especially loved for his care of the aged and infirm. “Pure religion and undefiled” he learned and taught to others both by precept and by example.

HE WAS AN avid reader of classical literature, of history, and of theology. He enjoyed works of art and of music. In these things he had the fire and passion of a free man. He hated totalitarianism and dictatorship. In his ministry to the church, he sought always to share with others the burdens of leadership, but was ever quick to conserve the interests of minority groups; he loved fair play.

At home he was quiet and gracious. His wife and family he held in highest esteem; and they, together with him, reflect the ministry of grace which he was ever anxious to receive and share with all.

His work was not confined wholly to the people of the Church. His influence reached outside his own communion, and a host of friends were bound to him by indissoluble ties of lasting affection. When he was reaching the end of the road, and his “sun was westering,” he was blessed with a calling to be “minister at large.” Regret was felt that this ministry was not of longer duration, but it must be remembered that now he has been freed from physical handicaps.

His spirit has soared to join that immortal band, many of whom labored with him in the flesh and dwell triumphantly in their Christian manhood waiting the day when they shall return to claim their inheritances.

John W. Rushton served his generation and the church “faithfully.” His reward is sure. The Will of God is his peace. While we mourn his passing, while we shall miss his handclasp and smile, and while we offer our deepest sympathies to Sister Rushton and the family, yet we have the while added assurance that in the sight of God the death of such as he is “blessed.”

PAUL M. HANSON

Tribute of the Presiding Bishopric

With the passing of Elder John W. Rushton, we feel that a great loss has come to the church and to the many friends, both in and outside of the church, who came to know him intimately and were benefited by his outstanding ministry.

We of the Bishopric always deemed it a high privilege to have him drop into our office and occasionally to have the opportunity of discussing with him matters pertaining to the church, and particularly to enjoy the benefit of his personal ministry and to have our own spiritual sights raised as a result of the philosophical discussions we enjoyed.

We find that words fail us in an attempt to express our deep appreciation for his ministry and for the life he gave the church. We can only say that it is a rare privilege to have known him and to have had his friendship and to have received of his ministry. It challenges us to achieve greater heights and to strive ever to extend our own ministry to the people of the church.

Yes, we have indeed lost a great personality, but because it was great it shall never be forgotten.

Tribute From Europe

The following is from a news letter by Apostle D. Blair Jensen, in charge of the European Mission:

The years of his life were seventy-six, well over the allotted span. They were full and rich. He was one of that very small group whose ministry was given world wide and to practically all districts and missions of the church. It is fitting that our brother who gave service so generously and widely and with such complete devotion and dignity could conclude a life of worthy service with that power and strength which characterized his contributions to the late Conference. The Saints in Europe mourn the passing of a godly minister whose origin was with them and who gave much service to them. The sympathy and prayers of all are extended to Sister Rushton at his passing. We rejoice that while active and yet vigorous he found his rest. Our loss is heaven's gain.

ity to light through the gospel." Not only life, but immortality. Immortality is more than length of days; it is quality rather than quantity. Saint Paul gives us the clue:

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

In all the changes through which we pass, life is establishing its sovereignty; and in the increasing refinement through the many vicissitudes and sufferings, the divine qualities resident within human life are being purified and enriched until in the change which comes at death, "love claims its own." God's victory is complete. "For God is love, and they who dwell in God dwell in love."

The Need for Easter

Radio sermon delivered by John W. Rushton on Sunday, April 9, 1950. His last public message on record.

... And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore.— Revelation 1:17, 18.

THROUGHOUT THE CHRISTIAN world today, there will be exultation and rejoicing because we celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. This event authenticated his mission, inspired universal hope, and demonstrated that death is not the end of things. He showed us that death is not our enemy nor is it punishment inflicted by God. In his own simple and gracious language, he said, "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Through death we find fulfillment; it is the gateway to fuller and richer life.

Easter Sunday morning through all the earth is bright with spring's promise of new life, new beauty, new hope. In nature, spring is the never-failing herald of the new world with its new life. It is Christ's promise of continued life.

I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

Death is the agent by which man is released from that which hinders the purpose of God being accomplished in man's life. It is the disrobing of the house which is "made with hands," "temporal" and "earthly"; after the "earthly house"—this poor tent—is taken down, the heavenly house God provides is put on. This is eternal and therefore possesses God's nature, and will be glorified according to the real worth the soul has.

"What we are conditions what God will give us." Our life here determines our destiny.

EASTER AUTHENTICATES the dreams and hopes men have had of the continuity of life and indicates the nature of the resurrection. As frequently in the teachings of our Lord, He finds this truth revealed in nature. Life's values change in form, the seed, the blade of grass, the blossom, and the fruit. One crisis leads to another until, as Saint Paul says, "And as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." So the resurrection is more than resuscitation. Jesus, it is said, "... abolished death and hath brought life and immortal-

REVELATION THROUGH PROPHECY is in agreement with revelation through nature. As we see the unending changes in the story of life's evolution, its manifold differentiations, so in the resurrected state we are told, the glory of life will be in many varied forms. The glory of the sun, the moon, and the myriads of stars in their differing radiances indicate what Jesus meant when he said, "In my Father's house are many mansions."

The truth is that if we would be with God and Christ in eternity, we must here and now cultivate the hunger for him, appropriating those qualities of character he has shown to be enduring because they are identified with him.

The resuscitation of the body would have little meaning if we did not consider the question, "What is it that will make the resurrection worth while?" It is in the language of the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness." When we are judged at that great day, we shall be approved by God because we shall be examined and appraised by our identification with him, who is the criterion "whereof God has given proof, in that he raised him from the dead." Also the history and experience of humanity joins with the witness of nature and prophecy in its declaration that "if Christ is not God, at least he has for us that value of God."

Faith in human immortality stands or falls with the belief in absolute values. The attributes of reality, in our world of values, are goodness, truth, and beauty. In this world we find our own immortality:

Values are eternal and indestructible.

Insofar as we can identify ourselves in thought and mind with the absolute values, we are sure of our immortality.

"What is man?" He is what he loves and is worth what he loves.

In the glory of Easter day God not only has shown his power by immortalizing his Son, our Lord, but also has revealed to all the kind of person who will be worthy of his resurrecting power—to participate in eternal life. "That which is eternal belongs to God" as declared in modern inspiration.

With Saint John, in reverence, we acclaim Him who was dead and is now alive forevermore.

Note of Thanks From Mrs. Rushton and Family

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks and gratitude to all who have sent cards and letters during our time of sorrow. We have received over three hundred and we appreciate each of them. Such kindness has meant much to us as a family.

Eternity

Eternity has no gray hairs! The flowers fade; the heart withers; man grows old and dies; the world lies down in the sepulcher of ages. But time writes no wrinkles on the brow of eternity.—Bishop Heber.

When God Touched My Life

By W. J. HAWORTH

THE touch of God on the lives of men and women is not physical. In the call of Moses to high enterprise, God gave his directions out of a burning bush. To the recalcitrant Balaam, he used the mouth of an ass. A blinding light took away the physical sight of Saul of Tarsus that the eyes of his soul might see the Light of the World, even the Jesus whom he persecuted.

The word "touch" has various shades of meaning, but in the sense in which this testimony is written, it is parallel with the Old High German zuchon meaning "to draw, to pull," though another meaning is just as acceptable: "to perceive by the sense of feeling." Psychologically, consciousness is "knowing, willing, and feeling." It is in this spiritual sense that we perceive the "touch" of God.

My first recognition of the divine interest in me came through my being taught in church school and the preaching of the gospel by God's servants. Through these I was brought to the knowledge that I needed a Savior. The story of the sacrifice of Jesus on Calvary impressed me deeply, causing me to love him dearly and to accept his commandments as the plan through which I must be saved.

Accordingly, on April 26, 1885, I was baptized by my father, with seven others. The confirmation took place in a Communion service in my parents' humble abode. About fifty people crowded into our largest room. It was not an "upper room," but the Spirit of that first century upper room was there. It did not come as "a mighty rushing wind" but it "filled the whole house" nevertheless. It was indeed a latter-day Pentecost.

God's servant who taught me the ways of life assured me that I should know for myself the truth of what I had been taught. This was soon fulfilled to my soul's satisfaction. At the same time my heart and life were set aflame by the love of God and Christ. Such was the way in which God first "touched" my life. But in addition, there was an exercise of what the commentators have called the "charismatic blessings" of the gospel.

THE will of God to the small rustic branch was proclaimed in unknown tongues through Emma Burton. By the Spirit of God I was given to understand the import of the message and knew that God was expressing pleasure at our obedience and admonishing us to continued watchfulness and faithfulness. The interpretation, given through another, confirmed my personal knowledge.

In my confirmation, Elder Joseph Burton prophesied concerning my life and work in the service of the Master. Many times through the years I have looked back with joy upon that utterance. It set forth in much detail the work I should do as a minister for Christ and much of the responsibility that has been placed upon me.

How we rejoiced in that meeting! With what verve we sang that distinctively Latter Day Saint hymn, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning"! We knew that day, through the baptism of Holy Fire and the assuring thrill within our hearts, that we had obeyed the truth and no cunningly devised fable.

But that first rapport was not to remain a mere memory of when I had been in touch with my God for a day. By that divine Spirit I had been commanded to keep in tune with the "source of infinite power" to whom I had been introduced. In this connection my feelings were decidedly mixed. The life program of ministry for Christ filled me with trepidation.

I confessed to my father that my heart was full of fear about it all. On the contrary he rejoiced at the prospect and confided that he and my mother had dedicated me to such service for the Lord even before I was born. Then, smiling, he said, "Have you forgotten that in your confirmation the Lord said he would make you a polished shaft, and no weapon formed against you should prosper?"

"That means God has pledged himself to do all these things for me?" I asked.

"Oh, no, not all that is necessary to make you an efficient instrument in his hands. You must be faithful to the obligations you have assumed and seek the knowledge and wisdom requisite for you to become a useful servant. If you will endeavor by study and by prayer, backed by a godly life, he will help you by the power of his Spirit."

AND that is the way I found it. Still, to qualify myself for the work of the church was not easy. The church could not give to me the help which Zion's League and other groups give to young people these days. In this mission the church was only eleven years old when my Christ life began, but I commenced a program of self-development. This included the study of elocution, membership in a choral society, a Good Templar's Lodge, a debating society, and teaching mathematics in a night school. On the physical side there was long-distance running, football, and other ball games. In all of these matters I needed much divine help to keep the ship of my life out of the shoals and breakers. According to the strength of my desire I received it.

My membership in the church automatically set me apart from my schoolmates and later, my workmates. I could not fully enter into their activities, many of which were against my religious principles. It became an absolute necessity under the circumstances for me to ally myself more and more with the activities of the priesthood of the vicinity.

The mission did not own a church building until I was fifteen. Even then, there were none where I lived. The brethren preached in parks, on street corners, hired halls, private houses, and wherever it was possible to get a hearing. My father and other elders used to walk many miles on Sundays to fill appointments. The urge to be with them was so strong that each week end saw me on the job. I helped with tracting, with the singing in the meetings and in such ways as I could. In all the efforts I made to fit myself for a life of devotion to his cause, the good Lord was with me by his Spirit.

ONE Sunday there came an unexpected opportunity for me to start my public speaking for the church. A rationalist was speaking from the proverbial soapbox some distance from our group in Islington Park. Something impelled me to go over and listen to him. He was decrying Bible prophecy and among other things ridiculed the ancient prophecies anent the restoration of Palestine's fertility.

When he had finished his speech, I asked him if it were not a historical fact that the former and latter rains had returned to Palestine in 1853. His reply was, "I don't know anything about it, my boy. If you do, get on my box and tell us about it." He said this with a knowing smile.

Though fear was almost paralyzing my efforts, I sent up a swift prayer for God's help. I did not plead in vain. As I mounted that rude rostrum, the Spirit of the Lord took possession of me and dictated my presentation of facts I had read upon the subject. Many years later, when I had grown to young manhood, I encountered the rationalist in a Good Templar Lodge. "Hello," I said, "I thought you didn't believe in the Supreme Being you must acknowledge to become a member of this lodge." "Oh, I've been thinking of late years," answered he. "A mere boy confounded me in Islington Park one day." He seemed to recognize me.

THROUGH the years there have come to me many avenues of service and in all of them, as I have lived for it, I have experienced the divine presence: sometimes to comfort me in sorrow or trial, at other times to strengthen me in periods of spiritual conflict, to protect me when in danger, to counsel with me when decisions have had to be made.

Eventually I was called to the priesthood—first a deacon, then an elder, a seventy, and a high priest. With my calling and in my ordinations, there was present that divine unction which assures the recipient of the heavenly choice. In my ministry God has blessed me with prophetic utterance, songs of the Spirit, divine healings, and wonderful blessings in administrations to the sick. But I think that the richest experiences I have ever had of the divine illumination of my mind has been in preaching—an experience common to the elders of the church. Truly, "Our gospel comes not in word only, but in demonstration and in power and in the Holy Ghost."

My earliest experiences of the inspirational power that accompanies the preaching of the Restored Gospel was as a member of the audiences of Elders Joseph Burton, J. W. Wight, and other pioneers. I experienced the drawing power of Christ. It was no idle speech of his when he said, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

When Christ is lifted up in the preaching of the gospel by one inspired of God, there is a "feeling" quality in the message's delivery which stirs the emotions as well as appealing to the mind, thus drawing the hearer to the Master and causing him to be willing to do the divine will. It is a psychological fact that "everything we prize is valued in terms of feeling." Jesus wants our love, and the sublimation of all the kindred emotions we know—hate alone being barred.

THE reader may wish to know what the divine touch has done for me. In the individual realm, as dissociated from my public ministry, the last analysis shows that it gave me "power to become" a son of God. That which drew me was love personified on the Cross of Calvary—love, sublimated in sacrifice, "even unto the death upon the cross."

So far I have testified of power given to me and my associates that we might minister for God in things pertaining to men. Now I must testify of the exercise of this power in my personal life—for it is possible that I may "speak with the tongues of men and of angels" and yet my life may be lacking in what it takes to be a son of God.

The unquestioned power of Jesus Christ, to whom I have looked as an example, is love. His final sacrifice, glorified by love of man in life and death, reveals him as the Savior of mankind. I cannot be a son of God until I am full of this love. Loving God and my Savior, I have sought to love my fellow men and to serve them according to the best of my ability because of the drawing power of Christ and the leadings of the Holy Spirit. Through me many have been blessed, but the credit for these benefits bestowed on God's people belongs entirely to God.

Perhaps many have also been blessed by the natural gifts or talents which God has bestowed on me. The "touch" of God has constrained me to cultivate these powers and therein I have enjoyed divine help—mixing these qualities of service with love, for in return I have enjoyed the love of God and the Saints.

JESUS has reminded me that "he that believeth in me, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Have such rivers of blessing flowed through me to others? God knows. I do not presume to answer. Perhaps I have not always borne the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, meekness, temperance, patience—in my Christ life. I question whether the love of Jesus flowing into my life streamed out to the blessing and joy of others.

I am conscious of the fact that the divine "touch" has made my life pleasant indeed. During my sixty-five years of membership in the church, I have been daily challenged to walk with my God. Conscious of his presence always, I have tried to keep step with SCIENCE REVEALS that wonderful buildings were erected long after the destruction of the Nephite nation (A. D. 384). We should not forget, however, that great numbers of Nephites had become Lamanites, as already suggested. This may also account for the position of modern scholarship that "Toltec" civilization was perpetuated some centuries after the Book of Mormon date of Nephite destruction.

When we remember that the great Cathedral of Mexico was built by Indian laborers under skilled direction, could not the Lamanites also have built those mighty edifices of centuries as late as A. D. 1200 or even later, under direction of skilled Nephites among them?

Notice the following from the Book of Mormon:

When God Touched My Life

him, but sometimes I have scarcely been able to keep the pace.

Sometimes I have not heard his voice because of the din of mundane things. Still, when I have looked toward him again, his reassuring smile has met me. It is indeed true that "Like as a father pitieth his children, so God pitieth them that fear him."

As to my security as a son of God, I agree with the Apostle Paul who wrote: "The expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." I am one of those who with "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain" awaiting the issue.

In the meantime, "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Which is the land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance, will not utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed [the seed of Nephi], which are among thy brethren.—(Page 36).

... and mixed with the Lamanites until they are no more called the Nephites, becoming wicked, and wild, and ferocious, yea, even becoming Lamanites.—Page 550: 14.

And now Joseph, my last born, whom I have brought out of the wilderness of mine afflictions, may the Lord bless thee forever, for thy seed shall not utterly be destroyed.—Page 87: 4.

Also it is natural to suppose that the Lamanites became skilled builders during their association with the Nephites the first two centuries after Christ. It was a time of great prosperity and of building cities.

AMONG THE RUINS one remarkable evidence is at Xochicalco and Teotihuacan of shower rooms with cement floors. Their drainage systems are similar to some in public places today. At Tula and Xochicalco we viewed the ball courts used in ancient times. We imagined the excitement of eager crowds gathered around the players, urging them to fast competition by cheering and yelling.

At Tula and Teotihuacan we viewed with interest recently uncovered frescoes in beautiful colors. These are well designed and artistically wrought. What kind of paint did they use in their plastered walls to have retained, through the centuries, this richness of color?

It seems "there is nothing new under the sun." Women painted their nails red centuries ago. The frescoes declare it.

Surprising everywhere are the many buildings that remain unexcavated. They are still covered with earth and appear like mounds. Guides told us that many of these were covered by the natives to save them from destruction by the Spaniards. I asked how it would be possible to cover so many, and such mighty buildings. The guide replied that what would otherwise seem impossible has been known to have been accomplished through religious fervor. To uncover such buildings in some cases, many years and many workmen have been required.

At Tenayuca the guide labored hard to be useful. He was kind and obliging, but apparently had imbibed too much pulque. With occasional English mixed with Spanish, he succeeded in describing the relics in the small museum, and took us through the tunnels, cut for exploration purposes, through the mighty building. He showed us the evidences of about five distinct periods of building in the Tenayuca Pyramid. The latest of these, if I remember correctly, were in the "Chichimeca" and "Azteca" times. The earliest were probably in early Christian times.

AT CHOLULA, a native woman guide, showed us evidences of seven periods of building. To see these evidences we had to follow long distances through exploration tunnels, sometimes up stairs, sometimes down. This pyramid is said to be the largest single building in the world in cubic content. It covers about forty-four acres of ground. This was a great religious center for centuries. Even enemies to the people of Cholula could come and go unmolested, providing their coming was to worship Quetzalcoatl. It is said there were 365 churches in the ancient city. When Cortes destroyed them, he promised to replace them with Christian churches—hence the many Catholic churches in Cholula today. For a few pesos we were privileged to climb high into the tower of one of them (Iglesia Lateranense) to photograph the great pyramid. These color photographs include the church with the sixty-four domes—a beautiful view. In a small museum is a model of the pyramid showing how, in each of the different epochs of building, the builders built over the previous structure without destroying the former workmanship. The Cholula traditions indicate that the first period would correspond to a time that we call Jaredite. Later, the worship of Quetzalcoatl would indicate times probably just before and following the Christian Era. Though it is not definitely known, I am inclined to believe that the first buildings of Teotihuacan also belong to the Jaredite period.

AT CUICUILCO, the ruins were covered by a lava flow at a period now believed to have been two thousand years or more ago. It is interesting to note that scientists have changed considerably their conception regarding the age of most of the ruins. At one time they estimated this lava flow at from 3,000 to 7,000 years ago. Discoveries of corresponding relics of civilization where dates have been approximated by hieroglyphic decipherment have proved of great value in estimating ages of occupation. The Book of Mormon account of the Jaredite, Nephite, and Lamanite times stands unmoved by modern discovery. Further research at Cuicuilco as well as at most of the ruins will yet undoubtedly bring many more valuable discoveries to light.

At all the ruins we visited—Cuicuilco, Teotihuacan, Tula, Tenayuca, San Cecilia, Xochicalco, Oaxaca, Mitla, and Monte Alban—we observed many students and tourists marveling at what they saw. With good highways leading close to all these ruins, American archaeology is fast becoming more popular.

It was of interest to us at Mitla to be shown evidence of government action in preserving ancient art. The Catholic Church there had used some of the ancient walls in its building and had covered some of the fine mosaic work. This covering had been removed, and it is unlawful now to destroy or cover any of the ancient work.

As the guides would bemoan and deplore the wanton destruction of their cherished relics, they would respond heartily to my ejaculation, "Qué lástima!" (Too bad!)

AT PRACTICALLY all of the ruins we saw evidences, carved in stone, of the worship of Quetzalcoatl. In Cuernavaca, in the Cortes Palace, we admired the window painting of Quetzalcoatl in stained glass. Seeing he was worshiped as the Creator, the only God who had come to earth in human flesh, and that the numerous legends of him correspond with the Book of Mormon story of Jesus Christ coming to America after his resurrection, is it not strange that everywhere he is symbolized in stone as "the feathered serpent"?

No doubt this fact has led many into erroneous conclusions. Careless writers have sometimes suggested serpent worship by the ancients who used the feathered serpent symbolism. To the careful student, this is far from the truth. I believe it is difficult for most of us to comprehend the mind of peoples who are given much to metaphor, types, and symbols. We have voluminous language and writing for our own expressions. The Indians and Polyneians, like the Hebrews, are given much to figure of speech, symbolism, and type. I know an Indian singer who is called "Chief Little Elk." That of course does not mean that he is a little elk or that he is like a little elk. You have heard of "Chief White Calf," "Chief Sitting Bull," and "Chief Red Tomahawk," etc.

I believe with Herbert J. Spinden that "When we can bring ourselves to feel the serpent symbolism of the Mayan artists as we feel for instance, the conventional halo that crowns the ideal head of Christ, then we shall be able to recognize the truly emotional qualities of Mayan sculptures." Take for instance the cross. Millions have a sacred regard for the cross. But why? Jesus was not a cross, nor did any of his characteristics resemble a cross. Is it not because of associations that come to memory with regard to the sufferings of Jesus upon a cross? Apply the same principle to the following: The inhuman, demonlike treatment of Jesus in nailing him to the cross was typified by a serpent and a cross or pole, lifted up. God himself commanded the lifting up of this type, the serpent of brass (Numbers 21: 8, 9).

Christ upon the cross represents sin at its worst, and his willingness to suffer the worst for man's sake. This conceivably could be typified either by the cross or the serpentlike or Satanic influence that nailed him to the cross, hence, the serpent. In the Book of Mormon, page 427, verse 191, we read, Behold, he was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold, a type was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. And many did look and live.

The verses that follow tell us:

But few understood the meaning of these things, and this because of the hardness of their hearts. But there were many who were so hardened that they would not look; therefore they perished. Now the reason they would not look, was because they did not believe that it would heal them.

HERE WERE TWO reasons why people were not healed at that time: Either they did not understand and would not look, or if they did understand the type, they did not like it. Had the type been a lamb, a dove, or one riding triumphantly amid palms and flowers, it might have been different; but a type that suggested that he would be despised and subjected to Satanic forces upon a cross was too great a blow to their racial pride.

I believe that the serpent was not intended to represent any characteristics of Jesus, except his willingness to suffer the worst that sin could offer. Is it not reasonable to suppose that the feathered serpent, or more correctly speaking, the Quetzal-bird serpent symbol, was intended to represent the meeting in one of the two greatest extremes—on the one hand Christ's rejection and crucifixion being represented by the serpent, on the other hand the beautiful quetzal bird representing his glorified resurrection and the victory of liberty and righteousness over sin and death? Hohepa Terake, the Maori interpreter, says that the serpent represents earthly wisdom and the quetzal bird, heavenly power. It was earthly wisdom that nailed Jesus to the cross, heavenly power that raised him from the dead. The contrast of the two in one is expressed by the hymn poet:

Did e'er such love and sorrow meet,
Or thorns compose so rich a crown?

If the foregoing is the correct idea, as I believe it is, then the more grotesque the serpent heads in contrast to the beautiful quetzal feathers, the better the representation. None but Jesus Christ has ever been the embodiment of such extremes contrasted in one.

In a subterranean passageway at Monte Alban we saw an elaborately decorated serpent symbol of Quetzalcoatl, belonging to a period estimated as early in the Christian Era or before. It is not known definitely.

BANQUET

The Melchisedec priesthood banquet, held May 23 in the Auditorium, was attended by 275 people. Myron Zerr was the toastmaster and in charge of the banquet. He was assisted by Ralph Freeman and Clyde Baker. The three men are the presidents of the three quorums of elders in Independence.

Charles Graham, president of Center Stake, was the speaker. Bill Leonard was the soloist.

PREPARING FOR CAMP

On Memorial Day over two hundred people from Independence assisted in improving the conditions of the grounds at Gardner Lake. A new waterline was laid; underbrush was cleared away for a new camping area; electric lines for lights were extended farther; and three buildings were completely painted. Men, women, and children assisted with this work.

Paul Kelsey was in charge. The committee assisting him was composed of Donald De Tray, Paul Elliott, William Worth, Jr., Harry B. Sprague, and John Thomas.

TO TRAVEL ABROAD

Miss Doris Oakman and Mrs. Irene Rannie, both of Independence, have left for England and plan to spend four months touring Europe before they return. Their immediate destination is London, where Sister Oakman's father, David Oakman, lives. This will be her first visit to her homeland in twenty years. They will visit the birthplace of Mrs. Rannie's father in Devonshire, England. Their tour of Europe will include France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, and the Scandinavian countries.

The entire trip will be recorded on movies by Sister Oakman.

PUBLICATION

In the May issue of the "Farm Journal" appears an article, "You Can Grow Vitamin C," by Sister Mildred Nelson Smith, nutrition specialist of Iowa State College. Sister Smith often speaks to women's groups on the subject of nutrition.

District Leader Lula Jernigan spoke at the opening session. The classwork followed with Sister Jernigan conducting a class for local leaders; Clara Paul discussed "The Value of Family Unity" with the older mothers, and Evangelist A. D. McCall directed the young mothers, using the topic, "You and Your Child Build for Christ." At 10 o'clock a musical

A covered dish luncheon was served followed by a social hour to get acquainted. In the afternoon a demonstration of worship in the home was given, followed by a dedication service. Approximately 300 women attended.—Reported by LOYCE GRIMSLEY.

STONINGTON, MAINE.—On March 4 and 5 a district-wide Youth Rally was held at Stonington. The following branches were represented: Jonesport, Beals, Vinalhaven, Little Deer Isle, and Stonington. Fifty-three young people registered Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. Recreation was planned for everyone from 2 to 4:30 o'clock. Games included a basketball and volleyball game in which all took part. A banquet was held in the newly completed dining room of our church basement. Group singing was led by William Wilson, district music director. Our guest speakers were Seventy Donald Harvey, president of the Maine District, and Evangelist Newman Wilson of Jonesport.

On Sunday at 8:30 a.m., the young people met for fellowship, followed by classwork. Evangelist Newman Wilson preached in the afternoon, followed by the dedication service led by the young people's leader, William Wilson.

This was the first district-wide youth gathering. A similar program was held at Beals on April 29 and 30. Our guest speaker was Seventy William Guthrie from Niagara Falls. Another rally is planned for autumn at Vinalhaven.—Reported by LETHA BARBOUR.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—

On May 29 the Senior Zion's League gave a farewell party for Doris Oakman who left for England, and Margaret Cable who returned to Canada. They also honored Pastor Glaude Smith on the occasion of his birthday.

The fellowship group that meets every Friday evening in the church surprised Brother Smith by presenting him with a large birthday cake on their May 27 meeting.

NEW LONDON, CONNECTICUT.—

When a large number of the Saints in the New London Branch moved to Independence, Missouri, the church building was sold, and the few remaining Saints held meetings in the home of one of the brothers. When he became ill, the Saints decided to find a church building not in use and through the efforts of Alton and Muriel Wheeler were fortunate in obtaining a five-year lease on such a chapel. The location of the church is ideal, as it is just off the main Boston-New York highway. The Saints have redecorated the inside and with good weather approaching the outside will be painted white.

On Mother's Day an all-day meeting was held with Saints visiting from Boston, Attleboro, Fall River, Westerly, New Haven, Springfield, Manchester, and Philadelphia. Brother Almer W. Sheehy officiated at the morning and evening services.

The building is left in trust to the Morgan family and at the 11 o'clock service thirteen members of that family came to hear Brother Sheehy. They are extremely grateful to the Saints for the care taken of the building and showed their appreciation by leaving with the pastor, Elder Gilbert Hambleton, a check for $25.00.—Reported by MARGARET SLATER.

BENTON HARBOR, MICHIGAN.—The mission was organized in April of 1946, and under the leadership of Elder V. L. Coonfare has thrived to the point where meetings are held every Sunday morning in the Odd Fellows' Temple and not in private homes. There is a building fund, the growth of which is insured by each wage earner being encouraged to contribute one day's wages a month for this purpose.

During the last week of March, Elder Luther Troyer gave three illustrated lectures in the chapel of the Congregational Church. On May 8 Patriarch J. J. Ledsworth began a two-week series of cottage meetings. Sister Ledsworth was with him during these two weeks. On four evenings he spoke in the council chamber of the St. Joseph city hall.

Saints who are living near Benton Harbor are asked to contact Pastor V. L. Coonfare, 1523 Niles Avenue, St. Joseph.—Reported by E. J. HAYDEN.

MADISON, WISCONSIN. — Financial Statement Day was held in March, and Edd Ford, bishop's agent, gave the sermon. Financial statements of the congregations were taken up by the deacons. They presented them to the pastor, and he presented them to the bishop's agent.

Sister Brirene Mussel, district leader of women, spoke to the women at one of their recent meetings.

Frank Root died on April 12 at the nursing home. His funeral sermon was preached by Evangelist Harry Wasson.

On April 16 Duane Conery of Milwaukee spoke. Four babies were blessed at the beginning of the service.

A meeting of district pastors was held in Madison on April 22. District President Frank Mussel, James Daugherty, and the new missionary for the district, Merle Guthrie, were present. The district leader for women held a meeting of leaders of the branches at the same time.

On April 23 Elder Mussel was the speaker, and April 25 Seventy Guthrie was the speaker. On April 30 Elder Leroy Hunt of Milwaukee spoke.

A mother and daughter banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church on May 11. Sister Eva Moore was in charge of the program.

The junior department presented a program on Easter morning. There are seven in the prebaptismal class which is being taught each Sunday at 11:00 by Pastor Fred Moore.

Sixteen women attended the district women's institute in Beloit. Sister M. A. McConley of Independence was the guest speaker.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT.

AMES, IOWA.—The group at Iowa State College has grown this year under the pastoral leadership of Elder Delbert Smith, with the help of the four other priesthood members on the campus: Priests Dr. J. P. Anderson, Mitch Juergens, Bill McKeown and Teacher Don Vogelsang. The average attendance has been about thirty, mostly students and faculty.

A building fund program is under way, the most recent project being a box supper sponsored by the women's department. Eleven boxes were auctioned off for a total of $43.00.

On March 4 and 5, Bishop Wayne L. Urdike conducted a week-end institute dealing with the economic and social aspects of Zion. Four meetings were held during the two days with several persons who were not members of the church attending. Bishop Urdike lighted us on many aspects of Zion through his talks.

District Missionary John Nutgrass spent the greater portion of his time with the branch here in Ames during the period of April 16 to 30. Cottage meetings were held and several sets of slides shown to the group. A beginning contact was made with Spanish-speaking people from Central and South America.

This was followed up when Elder Harold Smith of Nauvoo spent May 14 with the group showing archaeological slides taken during his several trips to Central America, stressing these findings as additional proof of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.

Apostle Charles R. Hield visited the campus from May 17 through 21 showing slides on "The White Bearded God of America" to an audience of over eighty, about half of them nonmembers. Considerable interest was aroused among Latin-Americans attending. Brother Hield also spoke to the college group on "The Urge to Evangelize," Thursday night; "God's Purpose for the World," Sunday morning, and "The Glory of God Is Intelligence," Sunday evening.—Reported by DELNO KNUDSON.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, Branch began the construction of a new house of worship on May 9. Just six hours after notification of approval by general church officers had been received, the building project was under way. On Saturday, May 13, a large crew of workmen were on hand and excavation for the foundation was completed. Plans are to construct the building by volunteer labor from members and friends of the church donating their evenings, Saturdays and spare time. Each evening and Saturday since the work began has found a good-sized crew of workmen on the job. Elder Bruce C. Jones, the pastor, is acting as general superintendent of construction. Robert W. Mattingly is foreman and has been engaged to give his full time to direct the construction work. Elder James Cooper, 74 years of age, hauled the first wheelbarrow load of dirt and has been on the job daily. Priesthood and laity alike are giving of their time unstintedly.—Reported by W. J. BRESHEARS.

ESCATAWPA, MISSISSIPPI, Branch voted recently to donate their old church building to the Ocean Springs, Mississippi, group to be used as material for the construction of a building for that mission. Escatawpa's new building is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy in about two weeks. They have constructed a building valued at $45,000 for $17,000 by using volunteer labor. Elder A. N. Barnes, the pastor, has been the superintendent of construction and has been assisted by members and friends of the church. The gift of the old building to the Ocean Springs Saints will enable them to begin construction on the first unit of their house of worship in the near future. — Reported by W. J. BRESHEARS.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.—On Friday, May 5, the women's department sponsored a banquet at the church to bring to a close their three months' talent fund project at which $860 was raised and turned in to the building fund. Mrs. William Fout was the project leader. Bishop Clarence A. Skinner was master-of-ceremony and gave an opportunity to the branch to view the blueprints of the new church. On Sunday, May 7, Bishop Skinner delivered the Communion address.

On Mother's Day special tribute was given to the seven oldest mothers of the Phoenix Branch: Sisters Bertha Burdick, Cora Coberly, Zaida Foster, Fanny McFall, Dolly Olsen, Maude Townsend, and Gladys Wise. These mothers were presented corsages by the Orioles and Blue Birds.

Those recently baptized have been Norman Bean, Larry A. Blakely, Stella J. Place, and Mrs. Bessie Jackson. On Sunday, May 21, Leonard M. Speer was ordained to the office of priest by his father, Priest Mabeen Speer, and Elder Kay Tsuji.

On May 26 and 28, Seventy Russell Ralston met with the branch; his general theme was "The Church Moves Forward." On Sunday morning, Brother Ralston spoke on "Unity" to about 125 people.

Vacation Church School will be sponsored by the branch from June 5 through June 16. Mrs. Gladys Williams will be the school superintendent.

The church is located at the corner of Tenth and East Moreland Streets.—Reported by WALLACE GREENE.

VANCLEAVE, MISSISSIPPI, Branch recently conducted a series of missionary services with Elder W. J. Breshears, president and missionary of the Gulf States District, as the speaker. The attendance and interest were very good in spite of illness in the community. Mr. Ray A. Booker, Miss Flora Inabinette, and little Ila Jean Holden, age 8, were baptized. Two other adults made decisions and will be baptized in the near future. Twelve children are to be baptized on Children's Day. Elder Alber G. Miller, the pastor, recently underwent a very serious operation and through the blessings received from administration and the prayers of the people is making slow but steady progress in his fight to recover.—Reported by W. J. BRESHEARS.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Since the first of the year, the speakers have been Elders Linden E. Wheeler, H. E. Davenport, R. F. Moore, H. H. Davenport, C. A. Green, and Priest Roy Clark.

The Sunday morning attendance has increased considerably. Every Sunday evening a prayer meeting is held. Every Wednesday evening the men's class meets to study the Book of Mormon. One nonmember drives fifty-two miles to class.

President Wallace W. Smith and his wife were visitors in February. Brother Smith preached at the morning and evening services.

The Zion's League under the leadership of Evelyn Logan, assisted by Thelma Mottashed and Harold Peterson, is very active. The Leaguers furnished the music for the Mother's Day services. In April they sponsored an April Fool party for the branch. After completing a study course on "Each One Win One," they have taken up the study of "The Reformation" and "The Restoration" movements.

The women's department meets twice a month, one day and one evening meeting. A project that is bringing money into the branch treasury is the traveling basket. The women are now working on a rummage sale, the proceeds of which are to go for the new church building. Eunice Wages is women's leader.

Pastor Linden E. Wheeler preached the Easter sermon. The choir furnished the music under the leadership of Merle Hallenberger, music leader. Nancy Peterson is active in the music department.

Leonard Munroe, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Carpenter, was blessed by Elders H. H. Davenport and H. E. Davenport. Edith McClosky gave a reading as part of the service.—Reported by CHATTIE EVERETT.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist E. R. Carter held missionary services during the months of March and April. Five people who were baptized May 7 at the Y. M. C. A. were Edward Reel, William Sherwood, Delores, Marline, and Joan Greili. Evangelist Carter plans to return soon for a second series. Robert E. Smith is the pastor of the branch.—Reported by LENA K. SHERWOOD.

Conversations and Conversions

By KATHRYN CARTER ARMESON

CONVERSATION IS A VITAL PART of living. Consider the words of Hannah: "Talk no more exceedingly proudly; let not arrogance come out of your mouth; for the Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." Could it not be said, "Howsoever a woman speaketh, so is she"? "So is she" pretty well takes in the whole woman—her actions, her thoughts, her manner of life. To be converted to a way of life toward God is bound to make conversations uplifting and a moving force toward conversion.

We say that Latter Day Saint women should strive to convert, that we fully believe in the "harvest" and that we do hold the "Pearl of Great Price." However, few things can scare people away more quickly than the cold, bold-front, out-to-convert attitude. In two of our women's groups the expression has been made by nonmembers, "I'll help, but don't try to convert me." Many women start their churchward conversations in such a "mine's the best way" tone that they provoke the listener. Others are afraid even to mention religion—afraid to infringe on the people's rights.

HOW THEN are we to converse with nonmembers? There are no better examples than the "red letter" conversations of Jesus. Jesus' works started with nonmembers. He walked among them and talked with them here and there, and after a period of time, believing ones forsook their way of life and followed him. Why? Because he met their way of life and their conversations with his own fuller meaning, thus causing them to think, act, and talk on higher plains. They became conscious of a better way of life and turned toward it.

ONCE JESUS sat on the stone wall of Jacob's Well. A woman came to draw water. Opening the conversation, Jesus asked her for a drink of water. Human, simple, natural—wasn't it? But from the word "water" came "red letter" words of life and truth. As a result of that conversation her way of life was changed; she left her water jug and went out to tell others. (Sometimes our conversations do not lead to baptism, but there is such an awakening consciousness that those to whom we talk go and tell others what they have heard.)

Again Jesus met a fisherman, Simon. Jesus went on his boat and interested himself in Simon's livelihood. He watched with interest his way of fishing and listened to his complaints. When Jesus asked about the day's catch, Simon answered, "I toiled all night"—rough water, no luck. Jesus said, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets." Simon must have looked at Jesus in surprise, for here was a man that knew something about fishing. Sure, he would try it. Now Jesus was in on the "ground floor" with Simon; he had his friendship and confidence. Simon did launch out into the deep and hauled in a catch. Jesus picked up the key words of the conversation, "fish" and "catch," and taught Simon a higher way of life. So appealing was the conversation that Simon forsook his old way of living and became a fisher of men.

THESE TWO EVENTS are history. How shall the gospel be told today? The principles of conversation remain the same. First you must be interested, honestly so, in the everyday work, fun, travel, and religion of the one you would convert. Second, be alert for key words that will unlock a wise conversation about the kingdom. As Evangelist Ray Whiting says, a kingdom of peace, love, food, clothing, and shelter. Third, desire Zion so strongly that you can talk it. Zion is more than a plan or a place. It is a way of life. We are to establish it. (Professors of economics say we have the solution to the nation's troubles. Isn't this our challenge?)

Here are some suggestions and experiences.

A. BE NEIGHBORLY

1. OVER THE CLOTHESLINE. A neighbor one morning said, "I hear one of your ministers is a laundry man. I suppose cleanliness is next to godliness." The word "cleanliness" led to a discussion of how easy it would be if sin in the world could be washed clean as clothes. Our boys had a storybook that deals with a colored preacher who holloed, "Let's drive old man sin out of the door." The boys wondered what "old man sin" looked like. This progressed into illustrations of the way things are going today, how parents send their children off to the movies instead of to church. Here was a chance to speak of a community of interested parents as well as children, with the suggestion that some church has to start it. Literature followed later.

2. OVER THE BROOM HANDLE. A woman hired to help clean the church camp was sweeping rugs, and so was I. She was praising the grounds and asked how she could own a cottage. The conversation led to church membership and modes of baptism. I used the word "baptism" as a springboard to invite her to come in and listen to an explanation of the church that night. Later on in the summer she purchased some church books and subscribed to the Herald. While she is still a worker in her church, she has been made conscious of "Latter Day Saintism" and tells her friends and minister about it.

3. WITH PEOPLE IN YOUR HOME.

A saleswoman noticed my boys' picture and commented that she had lost her boy in the war. When I asked if she believed in the hereafter, she expressed hope of seeing him again. She asked about my belief and the name of my church. When I told her, she said, "My husband read the Book of Mormon last summer." She left the house with more literature.

B. MAKE YOUR WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT "TALKABLE"

1. BY PLANNING GOOD TIMES AND INVITING YOUR FRIENDS. Talk it up! A magazine article recently asked, "Why not revive the old-fashioned Sunday school picnic?" A good sister in the church got her introduction to this work by being invited to such a picnic.

2. BY ARRANGING FOR GOOD PROGRAMS AND SERVICES. A nonmember said she always watched the local papers for Latter Day Saint events because they looked interesting. She had known several members, yet had not been asked to come. Of course the paper had said, "All Are Welcome," but it lacked that personal, "talkable" touch.

3. BY SUPPORTING MISSIONARY MEETINGS. One woman said recently that she had heard there were to be some special missionary meetings, but none of her Latter Day Saint neighbors suggested that she come. We can help the pastor by being friendly in our conversations and telephone calls. We can talk up special meetings and invite our friends.

4. BY SUPPORTING CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS. In the Springfield Mission parents came because of the children's work. We can help church school workers by talking about it. "A little child shall lead them" is a good quotation to remember in working with nonmember families.

5. BY ALLOWING NONMEMBERS TO PARTICIPATE. Two young women took part in our "Book of Mormon" project in the women's work. They talked, and we talked. Today they are good church members.

C. BE A GOOD VISITOR

1. BY PEN. A sister in the Boston Branch is noted for her friendly correspondence; she makes a hobby of it. She talks by mail. Once her letters helped convert a boy friend. She purposely used key words that would give leads for further thought. Young women can very well use "moonlight" to talk church; it will pay dividends in their home conversations of the future. A prayer for each letter dropped in the mail box can help, too.

2. BY VISITING. Go to rest homes and visit the tired, old folks. Visit with the poor and the sick and comfort them. Dorcas did. She was one of the Bible's best visitors.

3. BY INVITING OTHERS TO VISIT YOU. Hubert Case has said that most conversions are made through personal contacts—the good "heart to heart" talks with people. A woman just this week said as she accepted an invitation, "I had hoped to get a chance to visit with you. I want to talk religion with you so much. I am 'starved out' religiously with my friends."

D. BE ALERT TO SPIRITUAL VALUES

1. GOOD PRAYERS ARE NEEDED. A sister in Dennisport became interested in our church because the women at their meetings took time out to pray for the sick in their congregation and for nonmembers, too.

2. RADIATE GOODNESS. Do away with idle conversation, slang, and questionable stories. Latter Day Saints should have no time for them, but strive to be on the "higher plane"—to give cheer, to talk of good things, to give spiritual help, and to bless.

E. BE CONVERTED

Finally, above all and through all, Be Ye Converted that those without the gospel of the kingdom may be won by your good conversation. Pray to the Lord of the Harvest that he will send you forth as a laborer in his field.

Going to Reunion?

The Lodge, Racine, Missouri

REUNION OF THE OZARKS, MISSOURI

One of the newest and best of our many fine reunion grounds is this property at Racine, Missouri, about fourteen miles from Joplin. This beautiful lodge is one of the main buildings in a fine group of structures. There is no better drinking water in the world than flows from the springs that fill the lake there.

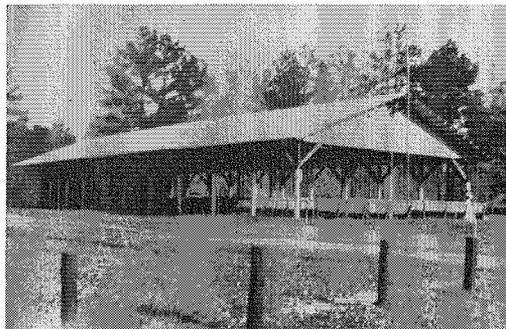

Camp Ground, Silver Lake

SILVER LAKE REUNION, WASHINGTON

One of the great beauty spots of the Northwest, this reunion is a favorite of travelers among church people. Workers vie to be "sent" here to do church work. This scene is near the center of the grounds. Not far away are the beach, the boat dock, and the cool, clean waters of the lake.

Here in the shelter of these stately trees, the campers are sheltered from the heat of the sun and from the cool breezes of the evening.

Silver Lake attracts a great many young people, who are equally active in the meetings and in the sports and activities for which there are so many natural advantages.

Auditorium, Brewton, Alabama

PARK OF THE PINES, MICHIGAN

Famed throughout the church is this splendid reunion ground of the North. Shade is so abundant it was difficult to get a good picture of the main auditorium. Here it is, shortly before the last reunion season began. With Michigan hospitality and good will, Park of the Pines is one of the most popular reunions.

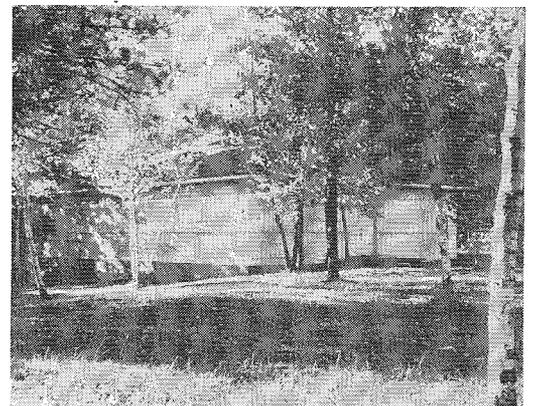

The smell of fragrant pine and fir drifting across the lake waters—the sound of waves lapping against the shore—the pleasant laughter of children in their bathing suits, playing in the clean sand on the beach—the sighing of the night wind in the branches of the trees overhead—deep cool shadows of the woods under the bright sunshine of a summer sky—boys and girls finding new friends in the youth meetings and their sports—and, in pavilion and tabernacle, the Good Spirit touching the hearts of the people as they sing the songs of Zion and engage in prayer and testimony. . . . Reunions are beckoning to you. Can you stay away?

Reunion is the perfect cure for that lonely and "isolated" feeling so many church members get when they live in a small place with only a few other church families, or none at all. It is good for those who live in Big Town, too, and gives them a chance to get well acquainted with people they have always wanted to know better.

A reunion is a "vacation with a purpose"—and lots of company to help you enjoy it.

GULF STATES REUNION

This is the main tabernacle on the spacious and pleasant grounds of the Gulf States Reunion. There are fine accommodations including a special nursery building and a big dining hall. A good roof and no walls give maximum comfort in the South. Pretty southern pines and other trees are abundant in that country.

which I have carefully tried to live up to, though at times I have been tempted—that I would never be jealous of any of my associates. In my own mind I found the determination that I would be proud and happy because of the capacities and abilities and fine qualities of those with whom I would be called upon to work. I have tried to do this.

Not so long ago Brother Edwards called my attention to an incident that happened on the day that he and Brother Garver had been ordained counselors and members of the Presidency. He recalled that after they had been ordained, the three of us proceeded to our office. We went in the corner room there that had been formerly occupied by Brother Fred. Closing the door, I said to them, "Brethren, whether our administration will be long or short, I do not know. It hasn't been vouchsafed to me that it will be a brilliant administration. But if we through our efforts and example"—I'm trusting my memory in this—"shall be able to unify the councils of the Church, through them unify the Church—long or short, however it may be, I fully believe that it will be a considerable contribution." Even before Brother Garver passed away, he reminded me of this; at least as I recall it now, he said he believed that we had accomplished this in part. And since then President Edwards has been kind enough to suggest to me, in recalling this incident, that this has been well accomplished.

Unity is not so much an essential to our progress as it is our progress itself. And if we can go from this Conference, every man happy in his work, enthusiastic about the duties and responsibilities of his office, carefully pushing from him anything that would cause discontent with his lot and with his fortune, I am sure the work of the Church will go forward rapidly. To this end and purpose I pray and shall continue to pray to the Father on behalf of you brethren.

If the Lord Be God, Follow Him

By AL PELLETIER, JR.

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER in his power and majesty has ordained that man might build His kingdom by the plan he chose in the beginning. The great Master Builder has seen fit to give us a blueprint to follow and tools to master that we might build in accord with his divine will, even as Noah built the ark. This blueprint is his code of laws, with "do's and don'ts" specified therein. Each step is outlined that we may build with wisdom upon the eternal foundation he has laid.

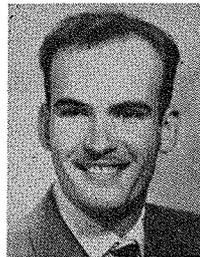

The tools we are to use in the construction of the kingdom are time, talents, and tithing—the three T's of stewardship. We must learn to use properly these tools and read the blueprint with clear vision or we will build no kingdom. Tools and blueprints are essentials in building, but even more essential is the skilled and qualified worker who is able to use these aids to the best advantage. So it is with the kingdom of God. We need to become skilled and qualify ourselves for this business of kingdom-building. We need to learn to use the tools our Heavenly Father has given.

A man I know once purchased an old house. A large tool chest, filled with every essential tool to build a new house, was in the basement. Only one thing was missing—my friend had no knowledge of the proper use of these tools. Because of his failure to understand their use, they were of no value to him. He invited me to see his house and also showed me the tools. Then he remarked, "Look at the tools I own. I've enough to build the best house in town. Now, Al, tell me where I can get a job as a carpenter." Of course he could never get a job as a carpenter until he learned to use the tools he had at his disposal. Because he never desired to learn, the tools are rusting in the basement of his home as the old house decays. The tools alone never gained for him the new house of his dreams, because they were not put into use.

Because of our lack of knowledge, the kingdom waits. Because of our lack of insight and desire to learn to put into practice the tools of time, talents, and tithes, the work of the kingdom is retarded, and we remain in our old house (the unspiritual world) as it crumbles about us. We

Here Is the Writer

Alcide Milton Pelletier, Jr., was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, and attended high school in Putnam, Connecticut. During the war he served as a sergeant in the Eighty-second Airborne Division (paratroops) from January, 1945, to August, 1946. He has been a member of the church since 1945 and holds the office of priest. Following his ordination, he was appointed pastor of the Addison, Maine, congregation; he has also served as bishop's solicitor, district League leader, and "volunteer" missionary. At present he is attending Graceland College and will graduate in 1951.

On September 17, 1943, he was married to Myrtle Elizabeth Stoddard. They have two children: Paulette, five, and Alcide Milton III, four.

fail in our task of following the great Master Builder because of our inability to read the blueprint of life as it is presented to us by his Son Jesus Christ. A chestful of tools never built a new house by themselves. Neither will the law of stewardship build the kingdom unless we as the Saints of God adhere to the teachings of this law and learn to use wisely our tools of time, talents, and tithes.

"If the Lord be God, follow him."
—I Kings 18: 21.

WE ARE TOLD that we must render an accounting of our stewardship (Luke 16: 12). How have you used your first tool—time?

We are commanded, "Thou shalt not be idle, for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12. And again in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38, we are admonished, "Cease to be idle." Also note, "Let every man be diligent in all things. And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5.

God in his infinite mercy has looked down upon latter-day Israel and caused his voice to be heard and his words to burn within men's hearts calling them to service in obedience. He is concerned that we become active and diligent in our ultimate goal of building his kingdom here on earth.

Let us not be as the Israelites of old who lost the vision of the kingdom even though they were forewarned of God—"When thou shalt have eaten and become full then beware lest thou forget the Lord."—Deuteronomy 6: 11, 12. There is a danger of forgetting our mission in times of comfort and easiness.

In this business of kingdom-building, you must use to the best advantage the element of time. There is no room for the idler in this great work. Your inheritance in that kingdom will depend entirely upon your character and your willingness to serve. You will not eat the bread of your neighbor, the laborer, if you remain idle.

Some of the busiest people on earth are idle. This might sound strange but it is a fact. Too many people are engaged in idle gossip, in filling their barns with the material things of this world, in eating, drinking, and making merry, in condoning sin, in pleasing self, and in tearing apart the church of their neighbor. Although we must not compromise, yet we must not be intolerant and vicious. Busy as these people are, they are idle when it comes to building the kingdom. When yet a member of the Catholic Church, I was almost driven away from the restoration work by a busy Latter Day Saint who emphatically informed me that I was a member of the church of the devil. Busy as she was, she was idle in building the kingdom.

We need to "take time to be holy" and "speak oft with the Lord." While driving along the road in my automobile several months after my call and ordination to the priesthood, I found myself troubled about some trivial matter. While thinking about it, the still small voice of the Spirit of Christ spoke these piercing and unforgettable words to me, "You have not taken enough time to pray. You have not spoken often enough with the Lord." In the spirit of that moment, I immediately stopped my car and went aside to pray. When I returned, I was filled with the love of Christ and was no longer troubled. Since then I have never been negligent about going to my Heavenly Father. Busy as I had been, I was still idle when it came to kingdom-building.

Latter Day Saints need to speak with their Heavenly Father more often so that he might guide them to use their time for the cause of the kingdom.

We also need to be students. We need to know the church and, above all, to know Him. Study should be included in our time schedule along with speaking to God. We need to know the story before we tell it to others.

We need to spend more time in family worship. Many children and young people fail to appreciate the church because their parents are too busy with social events to speak about the church at home. Most parents don't pray enough; some do not pray at all. To these negligent parents it might well be said, "Ye are the light of your children." You must lead the way before them. So family worship needs to be stressed in the proper use of our time.

We also need to support our church institutions both local and general more faithfully. Too many of our people have a very limited knowledge of how our church institutions fit into the Zion plan. This is because of their failure to respond in the support and promotion of these institutions. We need to attend our church institutions if we would mold Christlike lives and be fit timbers for the temple.

Greater consideration must be given to this tool called time. We need to know how to use it, or the kingdom of God will wait while our old house crumbles about us.

How about this second tool called talent? Are we guilty of burying it in the earth where it will mold and decay (Matthew 25: 18, 24-30)? We are admonished by the Lord that the hastening time is upon us, and all should consecrate of their talents, abilities, and substance for the prosecution of the great work entrusted to us (Doctrine and Covenants 132:3). Note that this admonition comes especially to those of us who hold priesthood responsibilities. Have we been guilty of saying, "I'm too tired to do this or that for the kingdom, I'll wait until next week, next month, or next year. I'm too tired to visit and contact new prospects, too tired to administer to that sick person because he lives five or ten miles away, too tired to attend reunion to set the example for my flock"? If so, we are too tired to let the Spirit of God work through us. This is a day of sacrifice (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5), and we should be willing to sacrifice even as Christ did. If we have been guilty of this tired attitude, then it is time we turned the mirror of life toward ourselves because in our lukewarmness our souls are wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked. We shall remain lukewarm until we open the doors of our hearts to the love of souls for Christ (Revelation 3: 16-20). We need to know that God is and that Christ lives by our experiences with Deity.

Notice also that the admonition (Section 132: 3) says, "All should consecrate of their talents . . ." This means every member—none are exempt. All are called to sacrifice along with the priesthood and the Son of God. We need to develop and magnify our God-given talents like the good and faithful servants in Matthew 25. We who call ourselves Saints should strive to be deserving of the title. We cannot excuse ourselves by saying, "I'm too tired to witness for the Master." If we had only five minutes left to live, could we say with sincerity and meaning, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."—II Timothy 4: 7? Could we say as Jesus Christ, the hero of our church, said: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."—Luke 23: 46?

There is no promise of the celestial glory in the Scriptures for the person who sits back and says, "Let the priesthood do it." We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9 that the laity is to witness for Christ along with the priesthood. We must be valiant in testimony if we would inherit celestial glory (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6). If we fail in our stewardship responsibility to share the story of the Restored Church and gospel of Jesus Christ, we cannot truthfully sing, "We're marching to Zion," or any other hymn of the Restoration with the keynote of Zion in it. The kingdom waits because too many of us fail to respond to the call to service. The building of God's kingdom is the greatest work to be engaged in. If we are converted and convinced of its value, we will share it with others. No selfish person will inherit the celestial world.

Some have been blessed with more talents than others. Perhaps we have said, "I have done as much as Sister Jones or Brother Brown." Remember the words of Jesus, "To whom much is given of him shall much be required." Have we used all of our God-given talents to the enhancement of his kingdom?

Before witnessing for Christ, one must know him. We must develop the talent that enables us to know the Christ. The kingdom of God waits because of us.

LET US INVESTIGATE this third tool called tithing. In latter-day revelation, we are admonished, "Verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5. And again in Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, 2, we are told that all of our surplus property is to be tithed, and we are warned, "If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, it shall not be a land of Zion unto you."

Zion waits because too many of us who carry the name of Saint fail to respond to the law of tithing. If all believed wholeheartedly, they would not hesitate to comply to the financial law to promote Christ's work. Indeed our Heavenly Father would open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing upon them that there would not be room enough to receive (Malachi 3: 10).

Too many of our people are coasting along. Remember we can only coast downhill. The kingdom of God calls us to higher ground, which is uphill, so it is impossible to coast into the kingdom. Nine out of ten of our people, like parasites, are trying to gain spiritual help by the sincerity of the one complying. Therefore nine out of ten are robbing God (Malachi 3: 8), and in robbing God, they rob themselves (Malachi 3:10). Nine out of ten Latter Day Saints are talking about the kingdom while souls of men are dying because they do nothing to promote its work.

Those who win new members to the church are able to witness "with a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man" (Acts 24:16). They are the ones who have complied with this important law of tithing.

He who fails to respond to the call to obedience can never hope to win a new member to the church, for he is like the blind leading the blind, both will stumble and fall (Luke 6: 39). The kingdom waits while hungry souls of millions wait to hear the Restored Gospel. The church waits to send out more missionaries as ambassadors of truth because many members have not heeded the admonition of God and become converted to the financial law—a fundamental principle of the gospel.

I have heard many testimonies of blessings from those who have closely adhered to this principle of the gospel. Our people, called to be Saints of God, must be strong in testimony. The spirit of conviction and sincere testimony can soften the hardest heart.

WHAT HAVE WE DONE with our tools of time, talent, and tithing? Have we learned to use them? To be good stewards we must first learn to use these tools ourselves and then teach others to use them. All three of the standard books of the church teach the law of stewardship. Zion waits because too often we turn a deaf ear to the pleading of our Heavenly Father and his son Jesus Christ ministering in the power of the Holy Spirit (Matthew 23: 37-39).

We have the tools. Let us move forward and use them in the greatest work of all ages, that of helping to build the kingdom of God.

"If the Lord be God, follow him."

Mailing of Tithing Payments

It is recommended that tithing and general offerings be made through the regularly appointed solicitors in the branches and bishop's agents or bishops of the various stakes and districts.

However, when these officers are not available and contributions are mailed to headquarters, the remittances should be by check, postal note, or money order made payable to the Presiding Bishopric, and the letter addressed TO THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, THE AUDITORIUM, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

 MORE ON "SPEED KILLS"

Brother Al Boos, vocational instructor, sends us some added information on the fatal accident rate in relation to young drivers. "Maim Street," put out by the Travelers Insurance Companies, says on page 15:

"In 1948 an awesome peak was recorded: 26.9 per cent of all drivers in fatal accidents were between the ages of 18 and 24." Preventive education was taken up by schools, civic clubs, safety organizations, and newspapers. Result was a much better record for this age range in 1949. So it appears that public education can help in the cause of safety. "Maim Street" concludes: "But the problem is far from licked. Youthful drivers are still the cause of thousands more deaths and injuries than their numbers warrant."

Young people, you could really do something to promote safe driving by your own generation.

 ANOTHER PEÛBLE DROPPED IN THE WATER

We received a splendid testimony in a letter from Brother C. J. Lant, 1717 Thomas Avenue, Santa Barbara, California:

"Your editorial in the May 22 'Herald' calls to mind our own experiences here in Santa Barbara. Sister Lant and I came here from Kansas City and Independence . . . and found that there was not another member of our church living here. We missed church very much, and began writing to the 'Herald,' 'Autumn Leaves,' and 'Zion's Ensign.' As a result, a missionary called on us. We started a Sunday school and held a series of meetings in our dining room. These were well attended by nonmembers, and in less than two years we had grown to a mission, then outgrowing three meeting places.

"In another year or two we were organized into a branch, and for over twelve years met in a rented building until the way was opened up for us to purchase our present property from the school board. It is in a good part of town, and we hope that some day you can pay us a visit."

A faithful and good work has been done by Brother and Sister Lant in Santa Barbara, and we hope some day to be able to accept that invitation.

 HUMOR

"There are two kinds of humor," says Aunt Molly. "Some of it is funny. The other"—and here she casts a reproving eye at Uncle Joe—"is merely punny!"

 POOR BROTHER B.

Pity the plight of Brother B., who died and went to eternity. He took along some lovely plans, as fine, I'm sure, as any man's. He had hoped, you see, to do great things—to help the poor, convert some kings. But the little tasks that came his way, he put them off till another day. Of earthly joys he had every one, but "Jobs for God" he left undone. His bank account was fat and swank, his heavenly treasure, lean and lank. Death called, one day, to stay his hand, and led him to the eternal land. And there he tried, as you'd expect, to pay his way with a big, fat check. The check bounced back to Brother B. "No Funds," said the Bank of Eternity!

Lest We Forget

JUNE 27, 1844, Joseph and Hyrum Smith sealed their testimony of the Restoration in martyrdom. Without doubt Joseph had a premonition of the impending disaster to the church. This tragedy was the climax of a long series of unfavorable incidents starting with the refusal of the Lord to longer accept its baptisms of the dead in the Mississippi River (see Doctrine and Covenants 107: 10, 11; Church History II:546), which resulted in the rejection of the church. False brethren, steeped in sin, accused the prophet of cowardice when he sought to elude his persecutors by seclusion. He returned to face his accusers with the proclamation, "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter . . . I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, 'He was murdered in cold blood.'"

Introducing...

PERCY ELGIN FARROW, Port Huron, Michigan (page 5), was born near Owen Sound, Ontario, Canada, July 16, 1902. He was baptized in 1912 at Warton, Ontario, and was graduated from Warton High School in 1922. He married Norah May Schrank in 1924. After her death he married Clara Thompson in 1929.

Before going under church appointment, Brother Farrow worked as a salesman for the Continental Electric Company of Toronto; however, most of his life has been spent in the full-time ministry of the church. He was ordained a priest in 1921, an elder in 1922, a seventy in 1926, and a president of seventy in 1942. In 1948 he was ordained an apostle. His first missionary appointment came in 1923. He has served as pastor at Colpoys Bay, Ontario; Cleveland, Ohio; Sarnia, Ontario; and was president of the Owen Sound District. Most of his missionary work has been in Michigan and Ontario. From April, 1947, until October, 1948, he was minister-in-charge of Minnesota, the Dakotas, and the Prairie Provinces in Canada.

His hobbies are woodworking, upholstering, fishing, and outdoor activities. His special interests are religious history and theology.

JAMES NORRIS KEMP, Hilo, Hawaii (page 7), was born at Springfield, Missouri, March 20, 1919, and was baptized there in 1928. He was graduated from Springfield High School in 1937. He continued his education at the State Teachers College for one year, and he has had a year's work at the University of Hawaii.

In 1940 he married Helen Delores Hoefgen. They have one daughter: Jacqueline Sue, one year old.

Brother Kemp was in the military service from 1942 to 1945, and served in Africa.

He is a member of the National Guard and the Kiwanis Club. His hobbies are music, photography, and woodwork. He is director and organizer of the Hilo Symphony and the Hilo Oratorio groups.

He has served under church appointment since 1946, being pastor at Spokane, Washington, until his appointment to Hilo in 1947 as missionary pastor.

JOSEPHINE SKELTON, Independence, Missouri (page 10), was born at Tillsonburg, Ontario, Canada, January 26, 1925. She was baptized at London, Ontario, ten years later. She was graduated from the London Central Collegiate Institute in 1943, from Graceland College in 1946, and received her A.B. degree from the University of Kansas in 1949.

Her hobbies are writing and amateur theater directing. She received the Edna Osborne Whitney Award for creative writing from Kansas University in 1948 and 1949. With Biloine Whiting Young she is coauthor of the religious novel, North of Heaven, which was published by Herald House in 1948. Last fall these two young authors toured the British Isles and Europe.

WILLIAM PATTERSON, Independence, Missouri (page 11), was born in Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia, June 9, 1894. He was graduated from Superior Public School in Australia, and attended Graceland College for two years.

In 1914 he went under Conference appointment and since then has labored in Australia, Canada, and the United States. He was ordained a priest in 1914, a seventy in 1923, a high priest in 1930, and a patriarch in 1940.

Add to Your Virtue, Knowledge

"That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God."

—Colossians 1:10.

Who knows enough to presume to tell others that they should seek knowledge? We are all ignorant together.

Fortunately, our ignorance lies in different areas, as our knowledge does. Since no one can know everything, we must depend on each other. This is the democracy of knowledge, that each one knows a little and helps to bring the total to a respectable sum. Emerson wrote: "Our knowledge is the amassed thought and experience of unnumerable minds."

In the time of Sir Francis Bacon it was still possible for one great mind to attempt to master all knowledge. He tried hard, and he almost succeeded. He was the great scholar of the age of Queen Elizabeth and King James. One thing he didn't know—that corruption in office would cause trouble, and he learned that the hard way.

Since Bacon's time, knowledge has increased so vastly that it is impossible for any one man to know all about a single subject, unless it is a very small one.

* * * * *

Nobody should be proud because of his knowledge. He didn't invent the truth. One only borrows knowledge. We are indebted to God and to thousands of other people, for what we know. We should give thanks for knowledge.

If you find yourself feeling proud of your knowledge, go to the public library and look around. Say to yourself, "Here are thousands of great books—not one of them by me!"

Never consider another man ignorant for not knowing what you do, unless you are willing to consider yourself ignorant for not knowing what he does.

* * * * *

If you would speak to anyone about knowledge, say to him, "My brother, here we stand upon the shores of knowledge as upon the beach of a vast and uncharted sea. The tides have brought flotsam from distant lands, which many have noted, and travelers have returned with their argosies filled. Let us also take ship and explore while life remains, what Truth has to reveal to those who seek."

* * * * *

Knowledge comes to those who listen. We learn very little by speaking.

The senses are the gates of knowledge. Let us keep them open and active. Eyes, ears, smell, taste, and touch keep feeding impressions into the mind. An active mind will gather golden treasures out of these impressions; a dull mind will find nothing.

Look at the people on the bus or street. So many of them are half asleep. Their eyes are glazed, their ears dull, their minds shut. They chloroform themselves. They are indifferent. They seek oblivion. They are the lotus-eaters of modern civilization.

* * * * *

Nobody can make you learn. Few are interested if you don't care.

Do you really wish knowledge? Here are the highways of learning: 1. Listen to those who know something; 2. Observe life around you and remember; 3. Study in class under a good teacher—superior people will give you something; 4. Engage in some good work and learn from it; 5. Read good books and magazines; 6. Think for yourself.

* * * * *

The retention of knowledge is very important. Teachers offer us these helps: 1. Make the original impression as strong as possible; 2. Repeat the impression as often as necessary; 3. Review your knowledge when you have opportunity; 4. Share your knowledge with others—be a teacher; 5. Put your knowledge to work.

Remember all that you can without notes. This is the most convenient and accessible kind of knowledge. Keep notebooks and files of information that you will need again. Build a good personal library, especially of reference books that relate to your needs. Learn to use the public library, and go there often. Put your card to work.

* * * * *

Discriminate as to the quality of knowledge. Some of it is trash—pure, unredeemed trash. You will know, if you think a minute, what is trash and what is not. Don't clutter your mind with useless information.

Some knowledge is good.

Paul exclaimed, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!"—Romans 11:33.

Unless we know something about God, our ignorance is terrible indeed. For even if we could know all about everything in the universe, this only concerns creatures and shop notes, and nothing at all about the great Creator himself.

President Truman Gets a Bible

A well-known sister in Independence, Sister Irene Rannie, wife of Doctor Paul Rannie, some weeks ago called our attention to the fact that President Truman was a collector of Bibles. She brought to us a fine edition of the Inspired Edition, embossed as follows: "Harry S. Truman, President of the United States," which with a letter of transmittal was delivered to the White House. Since the sister did not desire to have her connection with the gift made known to the President, it went from the undersigned. In due time the following, on White House stationery, was received:

Dear President Smith:

I want to thank you for that beautifully bound and personalized copy of the Holy Scriptures which you so thoughtfully sent to me. I am indeed happy to have this version of the Bible in my collection and want you to know that your kindness means a great deal to me.

Very sincerely yours,
Harry Truman (Signed)

President I. A. Smith,
The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,
Independence, Missouri

This letter we have given to Sister Rannie as a reminder of her thoughtfulness.

Sister Rannie and Sister Doris Oakman are soon to visit England and other European countries.

From Cecil R. Ettinger, appointee in charge of guide service at Nauvoo:

In the period from May 1, 1948, to May 1, 1950, 24,416 visitors registered at the properties in Nauvoo. This does not include, of course, those who did not take the trouble to register but came and looked over the properties at odd times when there was no guide on duty.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that we congratulate Brother John Williams on his work in enhancing the beauty of the property as far as the physical appearance is concerned.

Brother Ettinger calls to our attention the fact that it will probably be necessary in the near future to have year-round guide service at Nauvoo. This is indeed growth as far as the church is concerned in its contact with people who come to see this historical property.

Elder Lee Quick of Mapleton, Kansas, writes:

We were made sad when we read in the Kansas City paper of the passing of Brother Rushton, a man with a very fine personality. We never have had any trouble with any of the Twelve we have labored with, but Brother Rushton always made us feel he was our brother, and that we had the same rights he did. It seemed with his position or super-ability, he always made people feel his equal. Another good man has gone to his reward.

From Sister Catherine Griffiths, Kirtland, Ohio:

Your kind and sympathetic letter and telegram reached me soon after the passing away of my beloved husband. His passing away was peaceful, and he looked calm, happy, and years younger as he lay in his casket.

His family and I greatly appreciated the arrival of Apostle Hanson and his uplifting message at the funeral service. A record of the service was taken by a young brother.

Though grieved at his loss, I have been made happy to know of his joy in meeting his loved ones, his meeting with your father and uncle whom he loved so deeply, and seeing those on the other side that he had been instrumental in bringing into the light of the gospel. A sister was given an open vision. She saw him in a green field in the full vigor of manhood, walking toward a host of people. It gave her indescribable joy which stayed with her during the whole funeral service.

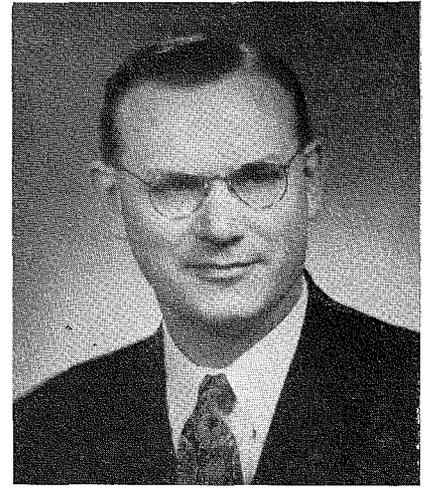

I am staying in Kirtland for a few months until I plan with the Bishopric about my future. Later on, after I have gone through the cherished and valuable letters of "G. T.'s," I will write you concerning them. A framed picture of the nine apostles including your Uncle Alexander, when he was president of the quorum, is in my possession. Brother Hanson desires this picture to hang in the room of the Quorum of Twelve.

I shall always remember and cherish your interest and the kindness of all the church. I still hope to render some good service for the building of the kingdom. I can never repay my Heavenly Father for giving me the light of this gospel in my later days.

The Gift and Power of the Holy Spirit

By APOSTLE PERCY E. FARROW

LATTER DAY SAINT TEACHING from its inception, in seeking to conform to the Word of God, has given unyielding emphasis to the essential and unchanging functions of the Holy Spirit. That the Holy Spirit was promised to the church has remained unchallenged. Indeed this promise has been affirmed through the centuries by all bodies of the Christian faith. Seldom if ever has there been any attempt to deny the doctrine of the promise of the Holy Spirit or the early manifestations thereof within the Christian church. That these manifestations were fraught with special gifts and the dispensation of divine power all are in agreement. I shall now seek to explain the nature and purposes of the power of God as it is revealed by the Holy Ghost. The entire discussion will be predicated upon the hypothesis that inspirational power and divine gifts are, without exception, the manifestation of the Divine Intellect. This would place our ability to understand these and their uses upon a spiritually intellectual basis, which would in their manifestation to us constitute an experience of the mind as well as of the emotions. If the minds of men are not enlightened by divine intelligence in the operations of the Holy Spirit, these gifts would have no permanent value to the church.

A CONCISE STATEMENT explaining our teaching in this regard is recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. This says, "The glory of God is intelligence." It also proclaims that it is God's work and God's glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. Man's salvation, therefore, is brought about through the progressive course of godly intelligence demonstrated in saintly living.

The logical interpretation of spiritual power which follows this reasoning is that it is the means of manifesting the intelligence of God to enlighten man in the way and means of his salvation. This is in consonance with the statement of Jesus: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." It is also in accord with Paul who wrote, "Now concerning spiritual things, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. . . . Wherefore I give you to understand. . . . that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." And, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

Paul wished the Corinthian Saints to whom he addressed these comments to understand that the use of spiritual gifts was for their enlightenment. He recognized the abuses that would follow ignorant or lustful misuse of spiritual power; hence he wrote: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

THE FIRST PRINCIPLE leading to man's redemption in the operation of the Holy Spirit is to give evidence that Jesus is the Christ. Continuous operation of this power is, therefore, vital to man's redemption and to the spiritual life of the church. The church cannot maintain its spiritual vitality to redeem men from sin without the testimony of the love of God revealed in the life of his Son. John the Revelator said that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. That the testimony of the Son of God was and is given by the power of the Holy Ghost is well established and verified.

The conviction we have thus reached cannot be maintained logically without giving special consideration to the miraculous aspects of spiritual power. For instance, there is the question of the gift of tongues enjoyed on the day of Pentecost; though the apostles were not linguists, yet everyone heard them speak in the languages of more than a dozen of the different countries and provinces represented among them.

Certain concepts have undoubtedly overemphasized the qualities of mystery connected with divine manifestations. Such views often have led to skepticism and eventual unbelief. In spite of the danger of overemphasis, to ignore the supernatural is to close one's eyes to the truth. One who discards the means of revelation will soon lose the testimony of its power. The history of God's dealings with man is resplendent with evidences of miraculous power, and such evidences are still occurring.

GOD DOES NOT DISREGARD LAW in order to perform miracles. That which appears miraculous to man is thoroughly understood by the Almighty, and therefore is not a miracle to him. God may intensify laws beyond the comprehension of finite analysis or use laws which we do not as yet understand. Even man has been able to discover and intensify laws producing results that would have been considered miracles to some and would have been regarded as witchcraft or looked upon with superstition by others a century ago. My limited intelligence does not prevent God from bringing to pass that which is beyond my ability to explain. The fact that man cannot explain all the hidden miraculous power in the operation of spiritual gifts, through chosen human agents, need not destroy the effectiveness of divine intelligence experienced through them. Who can explain the hidden mysteries of electricity? Yet we profit daily by its uses. Thus Paul was led to write: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

It is obvious that our analysis and acceptance of the gifts of the Holy Spirit must be upon a spiritually intelligent basis. This approach provides a competent safeguard against two extreme and opposite dangers. The first is the attitude tending toward skepticism. The second is the tendency to overemphasize the miraculous in the interpretation of unusual happenings without making a sufficient analysis of all the factors involved.

The miraculous aspects of religion, when properly interpreted, have always had a beneficial psychological influence upon man. The truth thus comprehended produces within the mind of man a worshipful attitude. He is made humbly cognizant that there are powers greater than his own, which are extended to him by the loving mercy of his Maker. This deepens and enriches man's spiritual trust in God.

THE CONJOINED PROMISE of gifts of power with the last commission to the apostles was stated thus by the Master: "These signs shall follow them that believe." It is most noteworthy that these signs are not primarily for the purpose of causing people to believe, but are to follow those who already believe. Signs or gifts of the Holy Spirit are not intended to satisfy the whims of the curious nor to prove righteousness to the unbelieving who tempt God for a sign. Rather, they are given for the special benefit of those who do believe that they may be confirmed in the faith, and that thereby their testimony of righteousness may become fortified with evidences of the truth.

The promise of the baptism of the Spirit was first made by John the Baptist. He taught his disciples that as he had baptized them in the water, so Christ would baptize them with the Holy Ghost. In consonance with the promise made by John the Baptist, Jesus laid the foundation for man's eventual perfect relationship with God, in which he demonstrated the power to overcome the flesh and its ever present encumbrances. In doing this, Christ definitely gave recognition to those spiritual forces which were at his disposal. He also placed them at the disposal of the apostles when he gave them the authority of their ministry. He intensified and increased these powers by his sacrificial life. Then before his ascension and in preparation for the task of promoting the Christian faith, he reappropriated this power to the apostles by promising them a greater spiritual endowment than they had yet received. Mark interprets this promise in these words: "In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." This promise was verified as the disciples qualified for such experiences. Hence the apostle Paul was led to write: "When he ascended up on high. . . . He gave gifts unto men." In I Corinthians, chapter 12, Paul gives a more complete account of these gifts. He records nine: wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues.

Upon the basis of the unchangeability of God, and upon current experiences we maintain that there should be a full enjoyment of these gifts within the church today. Our experience, and therefore our affirmation, is that this power has been restored to the church and may be enjoyed by those who believe and who qualify for such experiences. To qualify for the reception of this power means that one must dedicate it unselfishly and use it effectively in building the kingdom of God on earth.

The Lovely Church

BY LOIS LARSEN

I OFTEN HAVE OCCASION to take San Gabriel Boulevard as it runs from the outskirts of Los Angeles toward the foothills of Pasadena. Just on the edge of that rich and sophisticated town the road curves sharply, and in the bend of the curve there is one of the most soul-satisfying churches I have ever seen. It is not large, neither is it tiny. It is not extreme in style. I believe it is modified Gothic architecture. Its lines are pure, lovely, and serene. Its landscaping is simple but adequate.

I have come to watch for it; to enjoy for a few moments the peace and inspiration from the sight of that man-constructed but God-inspired building. But each time I pass this pleasant church I deliberately glance away from the neat black and gold sign near the entrance. I do not want to think of it as belonging to any denomination. It is better for it to remain a symbol of the great Christian philosophy; a source of power dedicated to virtue and the positive good of man.

Upon These Foundations

By JAMES KEMP

AS PRIEST Edwin Kaaihue raised his hand to baptize the first of the five young men waiting beside the water, I felt my soul rejoice as I thought, this is the high point of many years labor of a band of faithful workers—this lays the foundation of a new branch of the church.

It started in the fall of 1944 when Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs, missionary to Hawaii, took advantage of an opportunity provided by the Territorial Department of Public Instruction and Elder Miguel de la Cruz, principal of one of the local schools in Hilo. The Territory permitted any religious denomination to hold classes in the schools during schooltime for one hour each week, providing the parents of the students gave their children written permission to attend. This is pure essence of missionary endeavor, especially in a community where none of our own church members attend school.

Brother Gibbs started in several of the Hilo schools not experiencing much difficulty in securing a following—chiefly because students could cut one of their regular classes to attend religious education. The critical problem was to take this group of “class-skippers” and instill within them real Christian ideals. This was doubly difficult because 85 to 90 per cent of the students not only were nonmembers but non-Christian (Buddhist) as well.

OF THE VARIOUS SCHOOLS worked in by Elder Gibbs and his helpers, one exhibited more promise than the others. This was Waiakea Kai, where the school principal chanced to be an elder in our church and pastor of the Hilo Branch. This probably was a contributing factor to the enthusiasm shown.

Encountered by the two hundred and more students turning out to Friday afternoon classes at Waiakea Kai, the workers’ group decided to see how many of these youngsters could be tided over into a church school each Sunday morning. This met with greater success than had been anticipated as more than half of the group decided to stay for the Sunday meetings.

Building space was a problem from the start. An old Buddhist temple, the settlement house, the local theater, and finally the school building were all used. Of course the use of the school simplified this situation for the time being.

Most of the workers from Hilo Branch gave of their time and taught at Waiakea Kai early Sunday morning and then moved on to their teaching duties at the regular branch services.

Of interest in the fact that most of the students of this new church school were seventh graders or below, and no encouragement from the parents could be counted on. In fact there was a good deal of parental opposition to these young Buddhists going to a Christian church school. This meant a children’s church school and nothing more.

SPEARHEADING THE STUDENT BODY was a group of sixth grade boys who felt that this was their own special church and spent much time in keeping it going. Instruction continued, and this band of settlement children grew into a group of young Christian men and women.

In spite of excellent teaching and healthy study on the part of the students, they were very hesitant about coming into the church through baptism. They were true to the church and believed in it but, being very serious about baptism, they would not take the step without the utmost in proper preparation in their individual lives. This seems to be in keeping with most Oriental groups. They may be slow about making a decision, but once made that decision is very seldom, if ever, changed. They will remain faithful to the church—come what may.

Not until the spring of 1947 were any of this group baptized. At that time a few of the girls, now in high school, took the step and united with the church. In the years to follow several more of the girls joined. But the boys—still the ring-leaders of the group—were waiting to be sure they could live up to the covenant they would be required to make. It was rather strange in a way; many of the Zion’s League officers were not members of the church, yet no one could ask for better workers. This is why I felt so strongly when in February of this year the first five of this group of young men, church leaders in their own right, were baptized.

WAIAKEA KAI is a very active unit, both in its church school and its Zion’s League. Now part of the converts have been graduated from high school and are fast becoming substantial young adults. However, they still have many problems. Religious education was taken out of the school system two years ago. This left the group without a hold on its main source of supply, but permission to use the school building on Sunday has continued. In August of 1950 a school remodeling plan will take from them the use of the much-needed quarters, and they will not have a place to worship. The transporting of this group to Hilo Branch is out of the question.

With only very limited financial prospects, this group of nonmoney earners must build a house of worship and do it quickly. I feel that with their spirit of enthusiasm and the help of the Almighty this will be possible and from this foundation will one day be established the Waiakea Kai Branch.

Twenty-one Days in Mexico

By HAROLD I. Velt

Part IV

APOSTLE PAUL M. HANSON'S BOOK, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans (Notes XX), appropriately sums up the main issues in connection with Book of Mormon geography. His more recent book, The Land of the Feathered Serpent, approximates the position of Book of Mormon lands and places. Our recent tour brought further confirmation to me that the Book of Mormon history of the Jaredites, the Nephites, and the Lamanites was enacted within the borders of Central America and Mexico. I found myself continually watching for a hill called Cumorah in the land of Cumorah, which was a "land of many waters, rivers, and fountains" (page 701). It was a hill where all but a few of the ancient records were deposited by Mormon after removing them from the hill Shim. This hill was farther south where Ammoron had deposited them (687); but because of Lamanite encroachments northward, Mormon removed them to Cumorah for safety (697-698: 5). The few plates carried from the hill Cumorah by Moroni were apparently those that later were translated into the Book of Mormon by Joseph Smith. It was a hill sufficiently high for Mormon, Moroni, and others to hide themselves from the view of their enemies. Yet Mormon, after being wounded, had been able to reach the top of it sometime during the day after the last great battle. From the hilltop he viewed the two hundred thirty thousand dead Nephites and camps of the Lamanites (702: 12-17).

The hill Cumorah was called Ramah by the Jaredites and was the place where the Jaredites had fought their last great battle (757: 83; 759:

103-108). The continent was not very wide at this place, for the Jaredites had fought hand to hand from coast to coast, from the sea west to the sea east, and the whole land was covered with their dead (757: 83; 735: 4; 754: 46-62).

Cumorah was part of the land Desolation and was a land of many waters (693: 69; 701: 5; 488: 30, 34, 35; 548: 3, 4). We should be careful to note ... that no part of the land was desolate, save it were for timber, . . . but because of the greatness of the destruction of the people who had before inhabited the land, it was called desolate.—549: 6.

Around this area the people became exceeding expert in building with cement (549: 7).

The land Desolation bordered on the west sea by the narrow pass (540: 6; 488: 35; 501: 61; 502: 78), and apparently extended to the east sea (755: 57-62). On the south it was bordered by the narrow pass which separated it from the land Bountiful. Adjoining Bountiful was the land of Zarahemla. The land of Zarahemla and the land of Nephi "were nearly surrounded by water" (388: 77). These lands extended "from the sea south, to the sea north, from the sea west to the sea east" (388: 78; 549: 8). Of this geographical description, Henry A. Stebbins wrote:

And some have ridiculed this as necessarily meaning that the book claimed the peopling of North America at that time from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Ocean, and from the Pacific to the Atlantic. But this assumption is not warranted by the language. Evidently it refers only to Central America and Mexico. [Italics mine. H.I.V.] For you will notice on the map that these countries extend from northwest to southeast, not from north to south; therefore no other description answers so well as to say that the sea is south of it and north of it, also east of it and west of it.—Book of Mormon Lectures, page 216.

THIS WOULD SEEM the only logical conclusion, and would place Shim, which was in the land of Antum (687: 4), not so far south from where the Nephites were destroyed (735: 3, 4) and near the land Jashon (691: 42, 43). Jashon was the place of retreat before the Lamanites from the cities of David and Joshua. These cities were near the west borders by the seashore (689: 27) where the mighty fortifications had been built by the Nephites by the narrow pass (692: 61; 693: 69, 70). This of necessity would be the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. Thus the account of eleven-year-old Mormon's being carried by his father from Shim to Zarahemla (687: 6, 7) becomes feasible. Also the account of King Limhi's men finding the remains and ruins of the Jaredites seems reasonable. They were lost for many days while searching for Zarahemla and found themselves in a land of many waters—the land of Cumorah (232: 60-64; 701: 5; 759: 103-108).

Here they found twenty-four gold plates (232: 60-64; 270: 166-169). These had been deposited by Ether (751: 15; 759: 103-108). All this would indicate, I believe, that Zarahemla could not have been in South America, nor Cumorah far north of the Valley of Mexico. This conception would make practicable the account of the Jaredites going into the land southward to hunt game for their people (741-742: 66-69). Had Zarahemla been in South America it would have been beyond the bounds of practicability to transport their game the required distance through mountainous country.

There is evidence that Tehuantepec was vastly narrower in ancient times than at present, and may conceivably have been but "a day's" or "a day and a half's journey for a Nephite" (553: 39; 388: 76).

Central America and southern Mexico fit uniquely into the Book of Mormon description of the lands of Nephi and Zarahemla which were "nearly surrounded by water," between the west sea, the east sea, the sea north, and the sea south (pages 388 and 549).

The Isthmus of Tehuantepec was once vastly narrower than at present and apparently was the "narrow neck" that divided "the land northward" from "the land southward," one of the most densely populated areas of its size in the world the first few centuries of the Christian Era. Approximately 2,000 sites of ruins cover this area.

We remembered, too, that no important ruins have been found in Panama, neither fortifications like those described in the Book of Mormon as having been built by the "narrow neck" (553: 39; 689: 24-27; 693: 70). There are such at Tehuantepec. The question arises, of course, as to how and when South America was peopled if the landing of Lehi and his colony were not in that part of the hemisphere. Personally I think that both North and South America constitute "the land shadowing with wings" or the "Joseph's land" of Bible prophecy. I believe, however, that we have no record in the Book of Mormon of South American geography or history. According to that book there were other records to come forth of peoples whom Jesus would visit, and who were of Israel (157-158: 56-72; 648: 4; 42: 249; 149: 127; 151: 143, 144; 160: 96-98; 644: 15, 20; 645: 24-27). Some of these may have been in South America, for the Peruvian traditions of Wiracocha agree with the Mexican traditions of Quetzalcoatl. The civilizations of the two continents seem to have been developed separately; and it would seem that those of South America are not as old as the Nephite civilizations of Central America and Mexico.

AS EARLY as 55 B.C. there was considerable building of ships and transporting of timber and people, both of Nephite and Lamanite descent, by ships (540-541: 5-24; 549: 10, 11). There may have been migrations by ship before that, for Helaman tells us "a hundredth part of the proceedings of this people . . . their wars . . . and their shipping, and their building of ships, and their building of temples . . . cannot be contained in this work." —549-550: 12-14. Some may have migrated to South America by ships; some may have gone by land. Mohopa Terake in his book, Maori Symbolism, undertakes to trace his Polynesian ancestors from Mexico through Central America and Peru, the Easter Island, and Tahiti, some of them going to Hawaii, others to New Zealand. This would suggest migrations southward into South America and beyond. Incidentally, Sister Velt and I found ourselves often commenting on the similarity between the natives of Mexico and Hawaii. Such thoughts as these, concerning ancient America's recorded history and geography, occupied our minds much of the time as we traveled from site to site of ruined cities, north and south, and across the continent to Vera Cruz.

We were exceedingly interested in the Diego Rivera murals in the National Palace showing the country surrounding the ancient city of Tenochtitlan, where Mexico City now stands, as "a land of many waters." The murals picture the ancient city as one of great beauty, with palaces, pyramids, temples and other elaborate buildings all surrounded by water, with causeways of water channeling the entire city. This city was destroyed by the Spaniards and its materials used in the fine buildings of Mexico City.

Extending quite a distance along the main highway, north of Mexico City, is an ancient stone wall, high, thick, and strong. It evidences the precautions taken by the ancient occupants of the land against destructions by flood waters. Modern workmen keep it in repair.

Reunions - a Church Tradition

BACK IN THE "GOOD OLD DAYS" reunions were reunions. It was nothing to shout about when 5,000 people gathered at Leland's Grove or Logan, Iowa. Tents sprang up like mushrooms on the camp ground. Members flocked in from distant points by train, on horseback and in wagons. Nonmembers came almost as far to marvel at the good fellowship and orderliness of the worshipping thousands.

Of course, in the "good old days" it was easier to feed and care for the 5,000 than it is today. Those were the days when rooms could be rented in homes of the town for $3.00 a week and meals were provided at "nominal prices" at the camp. Those were also the days when reunions were planned so that they came during the full of the moon because "This date will secure the light of the moon for the entire time of the meeting, a matter of much importance to those residing within twelve miles of the camp grounds as well as to those tenting there." Those were the days of October reunions because "it brings the meeting at a healthy, pleasant season of the year, and at a time when there is likely to be no storms, and when people generally have more leisure."

The people may have had more leisure, but the weather wasn't always pleasant. However, they were hardy folk and the atmosphere of the reunions was such as to assure their success. The Logan (Iowa) Observer said of the 1891 reunion:

There is talk of the reunion running for at least two weeks. The people have come prepared to stay, and stay they will until they have had a good meeting. As the members are made up of early pioneers of western Iowa, a little rain, a little mud, a few discomforts, simply remind them of the early days when they first laid the foundations of their present happy prosperous homes.

THE ARRANGEMENTS committees had to make were a little different from those we make today.

The committee on arrangements will in due time give notice through the Herald relative to board, hay, wood, food supplies, and reduced railroad fares if such can be secured.

And so large were the crowds of both members and curiosity seeking nonmembers that reunion heads often maintained a police force. Occasionally the police were provided by the nearest town which was also concerned for safety.

At first it was determined not to appoint any police force, but with the coming of a number of those who are not respecters of other's devotional rights, and the presence in surreptitious form of whisky—that bane of good manners—several brethren were appointed as police.

To those of us who have grown up in the church, it seems as though we have always had reunions. But as a matter of fact they date back only sixty-seven of our 120 years. In the early days, the church used to hold two yearly meetings known as General Conferences. One convened on April 6 in the East and the other on October 6 in the West. Finally it was decided to do away with the fall conference in the West and keep only the one General Conference to be held beginning April 6 in the East.

ELDER CHARLES DERRY was instrumental in organizing the fall reunions which were to take the place of the fall conference. Brother Derry described this work as follows:

The Saints greatly missed the fall conference, for by taking that away they were deprived of one great means of grace and also of the privilege of mingling with each other in the bonds of true fellowship, which is essential to the growth of each other in love. As a shepherd among them, I saw this; and the idea of holding reunion assemblies by several districts in the West to fill the void caused by taking away the fall conference impressed my mind.

I presented the matter to the next General Conference on April 12, 1883, at Kirtland, Ohio. Some opposed the measure, thinking it would be a financial burden on the church. I urged that the reunions would bear their own expenses. The request was granted, and such assemblies were named "The Latter Day Saints Reunion!"

The Little Sioux District at Galland's Grove District met at Leland's Grove on September 15, 1883, and continued until September 23. . . . The Almighty condescended to meet with us by the power of his Spirit; and although the weather was unfavorable, yet. . . . the vote was unanimous to hold another reunion next year, in Garner's Grove. . . . The reunion was now fairly launched, and the smile of God was upon it.

The attention of the world was aroused, and as we met in different places year after year, thousands flocked to see the strange phenomenon of a people meeting to worship God in the open air. . . . Many came to scoff and remained to pray. Leading men and women of the world expressed their surprise. They had expected to see an ignorant and disorderly crowd, but instead they declared they had never seen such an orderly assembly. . . . and while they were not able to discern the grand secret of such peace and order, they declared that every Latter Day Saint governed himself or herself. But we who obeyed the truth knew it was the divine influence of the Holy Spirit that governed.

From this beginning the reunion movement has spread to include every district in the church. Reunions have opened the door for the various auxiliaries of the church for the benefit of the young as well as the old—and instead of loading the church with an added bill of expense, they have become a great source of financial help.

THE STORY IS TOLD that at an early Logan reunion a group of men were working in the big tent, cutting a large hickory stump out of

The Surviving Rodger

By WILLIAM PATTERSON

A RECENT ITINERARY took us to the beautiful oasislike city of Phoenix, Arizona, which is irrigated by the waters of melting mountain snows. To it come the afflicted from afar to benefit from the dry climate and perpetual sunshine. In this city a growing congregation of the church worships in an inadequate building while a more capacious and elaborate structure is being planned.

To this city and congregation in 1928 came the subject of this brief sketch, Mrs. Hanna Elizabeth (Rodger) Olsen, only surviving member of the family of the late Glaud Rodger, father of the Reorganized Church in Australia.

"Aunt Dolly," as she is affectionately called, was born March 29, 1868, at Irvington, California, and was a five-year-old girl with "red locks" when her father entrained for a mission which was to take him to the way where the seats were to be placed, when a citizen from the town happened by. He watched them for some time and then commented, "I don't believe there is another body of people under the sun who would be so cheerful under the circumstances as you people. Why, you would hop with a good heart onto a stump as big as this tent if you wanted it out of the way."

That has been a distinguishing character of Latter Day Saints yesterday and today. They have always "hopped on the stump" when there was a job to be done.

Let's not ask ourselves, "Am I going to reunion this summer?" but rather, "Which reunion shall I attend?"

It's reunion time again! Let's hop on the stump.

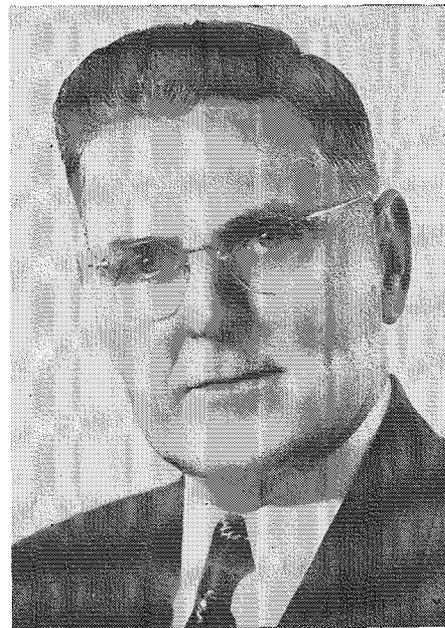

the far-distant shores of Australia, where his rugged Scot determination laid deep and secure the foundations of the Restoration Movement. Reminiscing, Sister Olsen said: "Mother didn't go to the train to see father off . . . for reasons." Those "reasons" were later expressed so beautifully in her poem, "Farewell to My Husband," one verse of which follows:

Good-by, e'er the words are spoken
Heaves my heart the bitter sigh,
Choking words I fain would utter—
Oh! 'tis hard to say good-by;
Yes, beloved one, thou art going,
Perhaps for years—perhaps for ever;
Dearest treasure thou art leaving,
But we'll not forget thee—never!

The white handkerchief waving from the speeding window of the train still waves in the memory of Glaud Rodger's daughter, now in her eighty-second year.

IN 1831 the Lord admonished the church: "Behold now it is called today [until the coming of the Son of Man], and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." This was to be a mutual sacrifice shared by all in the church, irrespective of age, station, or condition. The men under general conference appointment were to set this example of sacrifice to be matched by those in secular and domestic employment. Glaud Rodger made himself equal to the demands of the great sacrifice to the Australian Mission, but his wife and the mother of his children supported him with a more exacting sacrifice. Only men and women of deep devotion, sterling character, abiding faith, constant and cheerful sacrifice could survive.

From the lips of his daughter one gets a glimpse of the great soul that was Glaud Rodger. Being disinherited by his father made the cost of uniting with the church a little more severe, but he esteemed the bargain priceless and the purchase worth the cost.

IT IS A TRUISM that "back of every good man is a good woman." Had it not been for the unswerving consecration of his noble companion, Glaud Rodger could not have gone to Australia and the good he did would not have been achieved. We of the Australian Mission are indebted to this good and gracious lady who fought so valiantly on "the home front," making possible victory on "the firing line." As "Aunt Dolly" said, "Father did a good work; but we had a good mother, too, who took care of us." In those days when the "financial law" was little understood and less observed, the small church income made possible a survival family budget, and like other ministers' wives of that day "mother had to work all the time, and the boys, too, as soon as they were able" to augment the meager allowance. To this economic hardship add the fact that only once a month this family received mail from husband and father; then let us ask, "What am I

QUESTION:

What was the Jewish Sanhedrin?

ANSWER:

The correct form of the term (Aramaic) is said to be Sanhedrin. It was the supreme religious council of the Jewish body, and in Acts 5: 21 is probably referred to by the term "senate," as Josephus uses this term, or quotes it from King Antiochus. The Mishna indicates that it was considered to be derived from the seventy elders of the time of Moses. For a time they appear to have been of the priesthood, but later scribes and elders of other lineage were included. Originally they evidently were the "princes" of the various tribes of Israel. At times the high priest appears to have been a member of the Sanhedrin, and at such times he presided over its functions, which were ordinarily concerned with questions of the Mosaic law and established religious customs.

The members of the Sanhedrin were chosen for life, unless removed for cause. It is said by Josephus that Ananus (Anas) the high priest called the Sanhedrin and condemned James, the brother of Christ, to be stoned to death.

QUESTION:

Psalms 51: 5 says, "Behold I was shapen in iniquity and in sin did my mother conceive me."

If that was true of David, is it true of all men? If not, please explain.

ANSWER:

"Shapen in iniquity" is a parallelism and bears the same meaning as "conceived in sin." According to the Scripture, this is the heritage of all men.

The atonement of Christ has effect on two classes of sin; in the following we note the distinction. 1. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1: 29. 2. "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matthew 1: 21.

In the first Scripture, "sin" is in the singular; here it is considered to be original or Adamic sin, and all come under its effect. "As in Adam all die," and for which Christ atones, "even so in Christ shall all be made alive." In the second Scripture the word "sin" is in the plural and has reference to personal sins for which repentance and baptism must precede forgiveness. The second article of our Epitome of Faith reads, "We believe that men will be punished for their own sins and not for Adam's transgressions."

The atonement of Christ so affects little children who die before accountability that they are saved in the kingdom of God. Of them Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven, and he laid his hands on them."—Matthew 19: 14, 15. Mark says of this circumstance, "And he took them up in his arms, and put his hands upon them, and blessed them."—Mark 10: 16. The Book of Mormon is in harmony with this and is very explicit.

Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; the whole have not need of a physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; wherefore the curse of Adam is taken away from them in me, and it hath no power over them, and the law of circumcision is done away in me.—Page 769, verse 9.

On this question the Inspired Version has interesting and detailed information. Adam is told by God that he is forgiven of his transgression in the Garden of Eden. This is evidently extended to all his posterity, for it goes on to say, "Hence the saying went abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children for they are whole from the foundation of the world."—Genesis 6: 56, Inspired Version. It definitely states that Adam's children are conceived in sin and that when they grow up sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter that they may know to prize the good. Parents have the responsibility teaching the children the gospel plan of faith, repentance and baptism of water and the Spirit.

QUESTION:

What does the word "besom" mean in Isaiah 14: 23?

ANSWER:

This word is a translation of the Hebrew matate, and means a broom, or at times a rod or bunch of twigs. Shakespeare uses the word in Part 2 of King Henry VI, and it is still common as a provincialism.

Interesting Personalities:

Sister Theresa Blair, Centenarian

IN THE LITTLE VILLAGE of Burt, Michigan, a pleasant lady is working for the church. The unusual fact about this is that Mrs. Theresa Blair is undoubtedly the oldest woman of the women's department, for she has just celebrated her one hundredth birthday.

To honor this special occasion, her faithful doctor brought her a large birthday cake made in the shape of an open book and on which was written in cake-frosting script: How to Live to be 100 Years Old, by Mrs. Theresa Blair. During last winter's cold weather, this doctor attended her through three severe attacks of pneumonia. Many other people came to visit her on her hundredth birthday, for visiting is the favorite pastime of Sister Blair. Although her body is weak, her mind is alert, her conversation is fascinating, and her smile is an invitation to return for another friendly chat.

Another person whose visits are welcomed is the local pastor, Elder L. C. Loomis, for he brings her comfort and instruction. Although Sister Blair is old in years, she is young in the church and still has much to learn about it. She spent most of her life as a member of the Roman Catholic Church. At the age of 91 she was baptized into the Reorganized Church in the Flint River. From then until about three years ago she was a regular attendant of the little local church. Now that the years are pressing heavily upon her body, she must content herself by helping the church as much as she can while remaining in her little apartment. Carefully and patiently she tears cloth into carpet rag strips, sews them together, rolls them into neat balls, and donates them to the local women's department. Yes, she can sew them together herself, and she can thread a needle without the use of glasses.

I'M NOT AS OLD as the Restoration," she tells her visitors, "but we do have the same birthday." She was born in Detroit, Michigan, on April 6, 1850. Very shortly after this, her young mother died. Her father, confused by the turn of events, gave her to a Canadian family to rear. Sister Blair describes her foster mother as "nice enough" and her foster father as "a brute." As a child of nine years she was required to milk the cows in the morning, work all day in the fields, and do housework in the evening. During the cold winters she worked in the woods. There was no time for schooling; just time for work and more work.

When she was twenty-six she married, and after living several years in Canada, she and her husband moved to Michigan. It was only eight years ago that her companion died. Out of the eight children born to the union, two are still living. One of the best achievements of her long life is the young woman that she took into her home as an infant and reared to womanhood. When Sister Blair was seventy-five years old, she opened her heart and home to this nine-month old infant. Now that infant has grown into womanhood and has three small children of her own, all devotees of their "grandmother."

LIFE GOES ON CALMLY for Sister Theresa Blair. She sits by the window of her little apartment where she lives alone and watches the traffic on Bell Road—traffic that averages about ten cars a day. If a car or a person should turn off the road and come in her direction, she smiles happily, hoping that another visitor is coming. She has no radio in her apartment because she thinks they "make too much noise." In the same house with her live her half brother and his wife, Edward and Mary Long. When Sister Blair needs their care, she taps on the wall to draw their attention.

Unlike most centenarians, she gives no reason for her longevity and lays down no unique rules for admirers to follow. And as for the world in general, Sister Blair comments that she "doesn't believe folks today are any better or worse than those of my youth."

Don't Let Go of Life

"If all men past 50 got out of the world, there would not be enough experience left to run it," once said Henry Ford. "We are told that 10 to 20 years have been added to the average life of human beings in modern times. This, coming at the experienced end of life, is tremendously valuable."

Maybe he's right. The other day I talked down street with a man who is a bit beyond 60 but who hasn't changed in general physical appearance or in general vigor in the past 20 years. I asked him how he managed to stay so young-looking.

"It's all a matter of keeping young mentally, my boy," he said. "I never allow my mind to close up tight. New ideas, new thoughts, new experiences are what I am eternally welcoming. Why, every morning when I wake up I jump out of bed eager to face the day and its problems. Men who age prematurely have let go of life too soon and, naturally, lose its electrifying urge. That's all there is to it."

Don't let go of life!

The Spaulding Story

By ISRAEL A. SMITH

WHEN WE DISCOVER newspaper or magazine articles about Solomon Spaulding and his manuscripts we at once are prepared to see a re-telling of the claims set up by E. D. Howe. From two of our members, Brother Casimir Nikel of Cleveland, Ohio, and Sister Anna B. Rasey of Painesville, Ohio, we have received copies of an article published on March 5 last in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Much to our gratification we find that Miss Grace Goulder, the writer, has given what I would call judicial consideration to the issues of fact raised from the beginning as to the correctness of the Howe theory—one he advanced even after he had been advised that it was not tenable, according to Miss Goulder's article.

Because of some special features, such as the references to Professor Kirke L. Cowdery, a nephew of Oliver Cowdery, we are pleased to give space to this article, permission having been granted by the publishers of the Plain Dealer and Miss Goulder:

OHIO SCENES AND CITIZENS

Old Manuscript by Conneaut Pastor, Which Mormons Resented, Now Rests Behind Locked Doors in Oberlin College Library.

By GRACE GOULDER

IN THE DIGNIFIED and inviting library of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, the most famous volume is a battered manuscript that has been the cause of bitter controversy for more than a century. Kept securely behind locked doors, this is a novel written about 1810 by Rev. Solomon Spaulding, Conneaut, Ohio. For years it has been tagged by non-Mormons as the basis of the Book of Mormon, a claim violently denied by all followers of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

It is an innocent-looking document, without a title, the difficult script faded almost to illegibility. The Oberlin Library has had it bound carefully in fine leather, and prefers that the many persons who come to study it use the photostatic copy. Looking at it, one is amazed that it could have stirred such heated invectives and such ardent advocates. Sermons, books, quantities of paper and ink, as well as hours of earnest scholarly research have been expended on it alike by the Latter Day Saints themselves and by "Gentiles"—the Mormon name for all outside their sect.

For all this probing searchlight, mystery still clings alluringly to the old pages, and people like myself always are turning up asking to see it—while I was handling it, a long distance telephone call came to Librarian Julian S. Fowler, its custodian, from a man in Philadelphia who was planning a special trip to Oberlin to study it. Mr. Fowler, like most of those who have gone into the story in late years, believes with the Mormons, that it could not have been the inspiration for their Book of Mormon, their "bible" that Joseph Smith insisted had come to him from golden tablets he found buried in the 1820's in Palmyra, New York.

Such sober disclaimers cannot rob the book of its fascinating history, its long connection with the Mormons and the points of resemblance between it and the Mormon work. Though originating along Conneaut Creek, which Author Spaulding spells "Coneaught," Oberlin College obtained the manuscript 75 years later in Honolulu. The college's president, James H. Fairchild, was visiting L. L. Rice, a former Painesville and Oberlin resident. They were sorting out Rice's papers, searching for anti-slavery material when they came upon a package containing about 175 loose pages, labeled "Writings of Solomon Spaulding." Rice had not realized he had the work. Spaulding's name was famous, made so by a Painesville newspaper man, E. D. Howe, whose plan, it happened, Rice had bought. In 1835 Howe wrote an anti-Mormon book, its main argument being that the foundation for the Book of Mormon was not the golden plates as Joseph Smith claimed, but an unpublished novel by Spaulding. Howe based his statements on testimony of neighbors who swore that Spaulding had read many passages of his book to them, which were similar to the Book of Mormon which came out later.

Spaulding had died in 1816, and Howe made contact with Spaulding's widow, hoping to locate that manuscript. She did send him one of her husband's manuscripts, which Howe, when he examined it, realized did not resemble the Book of the Mormon closely enough to be THE work he sought. That one, he concluded was lost, and he went ahead and put out his book anyway. It received wide attention, since it bolstered the strong trends of Mormon persecution developing in Ohio at that time. Fairchild and Rice knew all this, and concluded they had come upon the missing Spaulding writing that Howe had looked for. News dispatches gave the story wide circulation, calling the old novel the "Manuscript Found."

Closer scrutiny of the quarto convinced President Fairchild that it differed too radically in style and subject matter to have been the basis for the Mormon work. But no matter. The name, Manuscript Found, persisted, probably because actually there are some startling points of resemblance. Spaulding, much interested in Indian and Mound Builder lore, confides to the reader that he "discovered" the original text in a golden box hidden deep in a tunnel which he stumbled upon when excavating a mound near his Conneaut home. (Joseph Smith had found his plates buried, too.) The writing was in Latin—Smith's tablets were in what he termed "reformed" Egyptian hieroglyphics. The tale is about a Roman, Fabius, living in the time of the Emperor Constantine. Fabius, Spaulding imparts, hid the chronicle that recounts the Roman's experiences with the Indians after he and his companions landed here in a storm—their destination had been Great Britain. The Book of Mormon is about Christ's coming, after his resurrection, to bring the gospel to the American Indians, the record of those events preserved for 400 years in golden plates that a descendant of those aborigines, one Mormon, handed down to his son [later known as] the angel Moroni. It was Moroni who hid the plates near Joseph Smith's home in New York State, and led him to them in a vision. . . . Beyond these points the similarity ends. The so-called Manuscript Found is not written in the biblical language of the Book of Mormon and has none of the characters that appear in it.

Particularly interested and well informed about the Spaulding manuscript is one Oberlin resident, Mrs. Kirke L. Cowdery, 184 Woodland Avenue. Her husband, until his death a few years ago, was a long-time French professor at the college. He was a grandnephew of Oliver Cowdery, by whose hand nearly all of the pinter's copy of the Book of Mormon was written. Prof. Cowdery, from a line that never espoused Mormonism, spent much time in Mormon research, following the footsteps of the Cowdery's and the Smiths from their birthplaces, both in Vermont, on through New York, Ohio, the Middle West, Utah, and the Southwest into every spot in this country where Mormonism flourished. Mrs. Cowdery accompanied him on these journeyings, which became a kind of hobby for them both.

I found her in the sunny bay window of her living room, surrounded by luxuriously blooming African violets and blue-flowered morning-glory vines climbing up the curtains. She showed me her husband's collection of Mormon papers, among these a deed from a local farmer, bearing Oliver Cowdery's signature, for land given Joseph Smith where the Kirtland Temple now stands. Oliver, about Joseph's age, came under the "prophet's" spell when he went to teach school near Palmyra, and the two baptized each other, Oliver becoming the second convert. Oliver, along with Smith, was the only one permitted to see God in person in a blinding spectacle during temple dedication rituals—this according to Smith's journal. Oliver broke with the prophet following the failure of the Mormon bank at Kirtland, but later he rejoined the sect. His greatest fame rests on the fact that he is one of the Three Witnesses whose testimony that they saw the sacred tablets is carried in the front of every Book of Mormon—a refutation of any claims for Spaulding. . . . How annoyed Oliver would be to know that the queer old Spaulding document is getting all this care and attention in Oberlin's Library!—Cleveland Plain Dealer, March 5, 1950.

All One Body

The church is an organic whole; its parts are inseparably related; they minister to each other, or they impede each other.

Priesthood called and ordained in a small branch may thereafter minister far and wide. Converts won in one area may help win other converts at far distant points. Emphasis on one phase of gospel teaching (e. g., missionary work) must sooner or later be compensated by emphasis on other phases of the work (e. g., finances). The group which ignores its young people has no tomorrow. The group which ignores its yesterdays never grows up. There is no group in the church but at some time draws on other groups for leadership, for literature, for ideas, for financial help.

Letters

Tributes to John W. Rushton

Since reading in the Herald of John Rushton's death, I have been thinking of the time he spent in England, particularly in Birmingham. Brother Rushton, the late John Schofield, and Peter Whalley used to travel together. I wonder if Brother Schofield was among those who met him "on the other side." I can visualize his smile as the two were reunited. Only Brother Whalley remains to carry on the good work of this missionary trio.

Of all the things Brother Rushton taught us, I remember best his emphasizing the importance of good, clean, spiritual homes. I am grateful for this gospel and ministers like Brother Rushton who inspire us to better living.

The passing of Brother Rushton brings to my memory the days following World War I, when, as a returned veteran, it was my happy experience to hear him preach at the old Ninth and Lydia Street Central Church in Kansas City. It was largely through his preaching and friendship that I was converted to the church. He was my guide, and I his disciple. To me there has never been a greater orator in the church.

One evening here in Santa Barbara he appeared before the local post of the American Legion as my guest, and I was granted the privilege of introducing him. There was a number of state and national representatives of the Legion present—many of them men who would be bored listening to the usual special occasion speaker. However, as soon as Brother John began to speak, they gave him their attention and listened intently until he had finished. Later the local commander wrote in our paper that Rushton's speech was the high light of the Legion year.

His passing brings a great loss—the loss of a brother and an outstanding minister.

Three Great Men

I wish to express my sympathy to the family of John W. Rushton. I knew him in England when he was a young missionary. Even then he was an eloquent speaker and drew large audiences. It was a pleasure to have him stay at our homes. When President Joseph Smith came to Great Britain and requested Brother Rushton to return to the States with him, we felt it was a real loss to England, but we also realized that he went to do a greater work for the church. In 1909, two other men, Ben Green and E. J. Trapp, were called to the office of elder and ordained under the hands of Brothers Rushton, William Lewis, and E. B. Morgan.

I was glad to read in the Herald of the honor bestowed upon Brother Lewis in the reprinting of his tract. Many have borne testimony of how they decided to join the church because of Brother Lewis' ministry.

Another great man who ministered to us while we were living in Wales was Gomer T. Griffiths. Certainly he has done a good work for the church. He and Brother Lewis were both Welshmen; they loved each other and worked in harmony.

These three men did much for us as a family. It is good to think of the present and plan for the future, yet the happenings of the past are important to us. These men brought such gladness to our souls that their works live with us even though they are gone.

From an Isolated Member

Recently I had an experience I feel I should share with others. I was reared in the Christian Church, and when I first heard the Restoration message I ridiculed it. But God in his infinite love gave me another chance several years later when we lived next door to a church family in Colorado Springs. In vision I was shown that the Reorganized Church is Christ's church. Two years ago we returned to the town where I had first heard of it; two of my daughters and a son-in-law are the only other members living here. When a couple of Mormon elders gave me the book entitled, "The Origin of the Reorganized Church," I read it and became confused. I lay awake hours praying for the knowledge I needed, and after I fell asleep I had an enlightening dream. The next evening Evangelist J. F. Curtis came to our home while he was en route to General Conference. I had written to him, but did not expect him to receive my letter before he left for Independence. He spent a day at our home giving me the council and encouragement I needed.

I thank God for such ministers as Brother Curtis, and pray that we may someday have a branch here with such a leader in charge. One cannot appreciate the blessing that comes from association with other Saints until he is isolated. I am grateful, however, that no matter where we are, we need never be isolated from God.

I ask an interest in the prayers of Herald readers that my husband may realize the need of God in his life and come into the fold of the kingdom.

Appreciates Missionary Help

I have just finished reading in the Herald of Brother Charles Brown's work in New Mexico. I couldn't help comparing our lives now with our condition at the time I wrote my last letter for the Herald telling of our need for an elder. We now attend church regularly, and our children are being taught the gospel along with others of their faith. We can never adequately express our gratitude for these things! God has directed another member of the priesthood, Brother W. H. Sandell, to our group in New Mexico.

May others' blessings be as abundant as ours is my prayer.

Finds Comfort in a Hymn

"What a Friend We Have in Jesus!" I have often sung these words without stopping to think what they mean, but now I am beginning to realize more what a friend Christ truly is. For the first time in my life I am away from my church, my family, and the friends of my youth. Yet when I get lonely, I am reminded by this song that wherever I may be Christ is always with me. Of course, to enjoy this friendship I must live each day to be worthy of it.

My husband is attending the University of Illinois, and will continue to do so for the next three years. We have our own home, a lovely daughter, and good health. For these things we are very grateful. I am finding time to read the Three Books and other church publications. I hope this will help prepare me for service in the church later on. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may remain faithful. If there are other members living in the Champaign-Urbana area, I shall appreciate hearing from them.

All Service Counts

Several weeks ago before prayer service, I expressed my discouragement at having apparently wasted my time in trying to teach others to obey the financial law. After the service started, our pastor announced the theme as, "Your labors are not unrewarded nor in vain." Many good prayers and testimonies followed, and before the meeting was over I was sorry I had complained. Now I know I should be satisfied with doing his will whether others respond to it or not.

God rewards us continually. He has helped me many times and has blessed my children. When my son Robert was confirmed, the one officiating said that God was well pleased with "the offering thou hast brought this day." Much the same assurance came concerning my daughter also.

I know this gospel is true and God is unchangeable. I feel very humble and underserving of his great love and mercy. I want to continue being of assistance in the accomplishment of his eternal purposes.

Courage in the Dark

Several weeks ago I heard the story of a brave woman which I should like to share with others. She lost her sight after bearing her eleventh child. Within two years her husband died, and so she had to depend on the help of the vicar of the parish who gave her a pension of eleven shillings weekly. The lady for whom her daughter worked also provided a pension for the family. Although this mother had more than her share of trials, she never lost her courage and was never bitter. The day she died, she called her family around her and said, "I am going to leave you. I have had a good life." And at the age of ninety-four she passed peacefully away.

The Privilege of Parenthood

By MARY DENMAN STOBAUGH

I HAVE JUST PUT our fifteen-month-old baby girl to bed. For a change I rocked her to sleep. I used to feel that I didn't have time to rock her, but today as I held her I realized what a great privilege it was to be a mother, and how much happiness she had brought me.

I remember how I wanted to be a mother from the time I was very small, yet motherhood is a great responsibility. Each child born to earth is the gift of God placed for a while in human hands. My daughter is really His, although I often selfishly say, "MY child." It is an honor for me to be permitted to have this small life entrusted to my care, and I feel deeply my need of guidance in making of her the person God would have her be.

While I was in nurses' training, I had a three-month affiliation at Mercy Hospital—the hospital for little people in Kansas City. There the desire to teach children grew in my heart. I realized that each tiny patient belonged to God and deserved to be treated as such. I remember one little fellow in particular. Wayne was ten years old and the victim of chronic ulcerative colitis. It was Christmas week, and the hospital was alive with expectation because Santa was to make his annual visit. Wayne had been selected as the one to welcome Santa on behalf of the children who were in bed, but two days before Christmas he had a flare-up. As I was bathing him that morning he noticed from my sleeve tag that I was a nurse from the Sanitarium. He asked, "Do you belong to Jesus' church in Independence?" I felt sure that he meant our church, so I answered, "Yes." Then he said, "Will you ask Jesus to help me so that I can greet Santa?" Again I answered, "Yes."

I took Wayne's case to God in prayer and also asked a number of my church friends to pray for this trusting little boy. On Christmas Eve Wayne did greet Santa. Later he told me, "I knew Jesus would help me."

Somewhere along the line someone had told Wayne about God. Perhaps it was another nurse, but I prefer to believe that it was his parents. With all my heart I hope that no parent will ever fail God and His children.

ADEL, who holds a responsible position, seldom attends church services. Sometimes she must work on Sunday. Most Sundays when she is not working she visits her parents who live in another town. Even though she does not attend regularly, she gives liberal financial support to her branch and is faithful in paying her tithing.

MAME is active in the women's department. Several weeks ago while listening to a review being given at a book club she heard Joseph Smith named as the instigator of polygamy. Afterwards, she asked if she might say a few words. She read a clipping from a prominent Iowa newspaper, which clearly substantiated our history and beliefs on this subject. Another book club member supported her by saying that although she was not a member of the Reorganized Church, some of her ancestors had been, and she knew that Mame was right. Several members asked questions. Had Mame not been there, those women would have been misled about our beliefs and the church.

ALICE is branch music director, teaches a church school class, and is musician for a Grey Lady Unit in a VA hospital. Many times "The Old, Old Path" is her prelude. She says that most of the women in her group now know the words to this beloved hymn. Recently an out-of-town church member was a patient at this hospital. You can imagine his joy on hearing these familiar strains as the ladies prepared to give their program.

TRESSA's husband attends school during his vacations. She manages their home so that this is possible. She is active in the church school and in women's department. Visiting priesthood and church members know that they are more than welcome in this good Latter Day Saint home.

United Prayer

By Frances McDole

IN THESE TRYING TIMES the women's leaders of our stake have set aside the hour we are to pray each day. At nine o'clock we have been requested to pray in behalf of the church, the ministry, our branches, our homes, and our families. United prayer has power. At the hour we pray we are of one mind and heart—a request made of us during the inter-conference period of unusual preparation.

I gave some thought as to what one should pray when it is for the sake of all. Watching the clock so I would not miss the nine o'clock hour, I began to feel the need in my own heart for such united prayer. I felt the impact of the devastating evil power ahead out of which we must come with our hearts yet "tuned to hear His slightest whisper." I felt how much, how very much, we need a manifestation of what we should do to make these preparations. I was conscious also of the need we have to know that the Lord forgives us for what we have not done, and that he could send us forth with an awareness of his great abiding love to accomplish the tasks yet at hand. It came to me that I should be mindful of the individual members of the families, as each one goes to work or school. I felt to ask Christ to enter our homes and be received at the door as we greet our husbands each evening. I sensed a need for revelation individually and collectively of how to go forward and by what means we should do so. I would not be unmindful of individual needs unknown to us as we pray.

I am thankful for the appointed hour of prayer. It impresses me that this is a particularly important moment for the women of the church. I am deeply aware of the weight one prayer in faith adds to the sum total of the final united prayer which God receives from us.

This hour is important, for by prayer we do all things.

I would be mindful of the time set apart for the benefit of all the women of the church to prayer for one another.

Summer is upon us, and June magazines carry many suggestions for appetizing foods, as well as cool and attractive clothes and homes. Nearly all the magazines have ideas for home decoration, so if that is your primary interest now, you will find much material available.

"You Can't Get a Divorce From Yourself," Woman's Day, is a good piece of reading for all married people, even if they are not considering divorce. It is especially good for those who know that their marriage falls far short of what it might be.

"The Dressing Makes the Salad," Woman's Day, consists of twenty-eight recipes for salad dressings for every type of salad.

"Embroider With Rickrack," Woman's Day, will make it easy for any woman to create highly decorative borders, designed by a well-known artist.

"A State Cancer Clinic Could Save Your Life," Woman's Home Companion, tells of the need for more facilities and how these have been provided in some states, and could be in all the rest.

"We Live Again," Ladies' Home Journal, another of the "How America Lives" series, tells of a family of displaced persons from the Ukraine who are happily becoming Americans.

"What Do You Mean Old?" American Home, develops the theme that age is not a calamity but an opportunity.

"How to Glaze Pine," American Home, is for those who like to do their own finishing of furniture or walls.

"Little Outdoor Ideas," American Home, gives pictures of and directions for making several clever additions to outdoor living.

"The Family Chore," Good Housekeeping, will appeal to almost anyone who has children. The author says, "Let's not pretend it's a game, and let's stop apologizing to children for work they should do."

The season is now upon us when "Poison Ivy," Good Housekeeping, is almost required reading. Both precautions and treatments are discussed.

"Twelve Barbecues You Can Build," Good Housekeeping, describes types for beginners, enthusiasts, and experts.

Saved for the last because of its excellence is "How to be a Good Father," Parents' Magazine. In spite of the title, it is valuable advice for mothers as well. Do read this one carefully.

Observe Sixty-first Wedding Anniversary

Brother and Sister A. J. Yarrington of Lamoni, Iowa, celebrated their sixty-first wedding anniversary at their home on April 8. They were married at Dunlap, Iowa, after which they made their home in Lamoni where Mr. Yarrington was in the hardware and farm implement business. Brother Yarrington has been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1879 and holds the office of high priest. He served fourteen years as a counselor to the bishop of Lamoni Stake and twenty-two years as a member of the Lamoni Stake High Council. He was also manager of the Saints' Home farm for many years. Sister Yarrington was baptized in 1896 and has been an active worker in the women's department.

Their three children, Elder Hollis Yarrington, Mrs. Edith Sumption, and Priest Byron Yarrington, were present for the occasion.

doing to perpetuate and increase the work for which these so nobly sacrificed?" I was informed though not in the spirit of recrimination that there were those in the church "who picked at mother because she by her good management kept us well-dressed. She would patch an old dress given her and put a ruffle on it."

While Glaud Rodger was yet in Australia, his wife disposed of her goods and took the children by train on the long journey to the village of Sedgewick (now Lamoni, Iowa). Here she purchased a small piece of land where she could have a cow, a horse, and some chickens to increase the small family income. It was the desire of this good mother to establish her home where her children could enjoy better church privileges and to be associated with those of their own faith. Sister Olsen recalls that she observed her eighth birthday on the train en route to Iowa, and that she was fearful the train might be wrecked before she was baptized. It was a childlike fear, but it discloses the importance of baptism inculcated, no doubt, by the teaching of a "mother in Israel." Soon after her arrival in Sedgewick, Dolly was baptized. According to her account, "The first church in which we met in Sedgewick was a temporary one with a cinder floor. There were not any seats in the building, and we were obliged to use our buggy [sulky] seats during the services. This building was a sheep shed. Mother and I kept it clean."

THE LAST MISSION Glaud Rodger performed was at Elko, Nevada. Here he died and was buried. This burial was to be temporary, as it was intended to disinter the body and take it to Lamoni for permanent burial, "But mother could not go through the ordeal and decided to leave him at Elko." The graveyard was later discontinued and the marker lost. The late President F. M. Smith tried to find the site of his interment without success. But although the place of his burial may be lost, the place he occupies in the church history—especially Australian church history—will never be lost.

Near the resting place of his good wife in the Lamoni cemetery stands a humble memorial to this humble and devout minister.

This article is based on an interview which took place at a women's meeting in a private home on June 9, 1949. "Aunt Dolly," who lives at 1510 North Sixteenth Street, Phoenix, Arizona, was eighty-two on March 29, 1950.

Keep your temper. Do not quarrel with an angry person, but give him a soft answer. It is commanded by the Holy Writ and, furthermore, it makes him madder than anything else you could say.

Editorial

Fortunate are those who are now learning in the schools. More fortunate are those who are learning in the midst of life.

For people of all ages, the church is a school. In church we learn about God, about the gospel of salvation, and about the work of the kingdom. No other knowledge is as important as this.

We are all students, some of us good ones, some poor ones. The only difference between us is that some are trying to learn, and some are not. The little child patiently trying is more precious in the sight of God than the proud one who thinks he knows it all. And what are you learning today?

If he wishes, a person who has knowledge can be an instrument for good in the hands of God.

SEATTLE DISTRICT.—The first priesthood retreat of the district was held at Deception Pass State Park on May 20-21. Elder Ray Sowers of Tacoma, a member of the district presidency, conducted the opening worship, followed by an hour-long class taught by Apostle E. J. Gleazer on the subject, "Effective Priesthood Ministry." Bishop M. E. Lasater teamed with Apostle Gleazer at the next class period to impress the priesthood with the importance of "Teaching the Law of Tithes, Offerings, and Surplus" and the "Spiritual Aspects of the Financial Law." Elder Clark Coleman of First Seattle Branch directed a period of recreation for the priesthood before the dinner hour while the pastors of the district met with Apostle Gleazer to discuss "Calling Men to Priesthood."

In the evening Apostle Gleazer spoke to the deacons and teachers on the "Function and Ministry" of these two offices, and High Priest Paul Wellington of the district presidency spoke to the priests and Melchisedec priesthood in a "New Ideas" session concerned with missionary procedures in effective evangelism. Elder Ray Sowers was in charge of the campfire devotional held just before "lights out."

Plans had been made to take an early morning hike to the top of Mt. Bromac (named after Brother F. M. McDowell at a previous Youth Camp) for Sunday devotions, but the weather did not permit such a hike. Instead a "hotcake" breakfast was held. Following this there was a prayer and testimony service led by High Priest Alma Johnson. The first hour was devoted to group conferences concerned with various phases of being "Ministers for Christ."

Following a noon-hour feast, the group met for a final dedication service before leaving. In this service directed by Elder Wellington, Apostle Gleazer challenged the district with the responsibility of carrying forward the general church aims and objectives more effectively in this field. District Preesident Granville L. Swenson accepted the challenge and in turn challenged the pastors of each branch to assist in this task. Elder Paul Anderson of Yakima responded for the pastors. Evangelist A. W. Lundeen emphasized each priesthood member's individual responsibility to respond to this call to service.

High Priest L. R. White, pastor of the Bellingham church, arrived first at the camp grounds and saw that everything was in order. The cooks were Ted Wolfgram and Bob Baker. Sixty attended the retreat.—Reported by PAUL WELLINGTON.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—Work was started on the new church building May 13. The young ladies of the Zion's League furnished a lunch for the volunteer workers. Every day someone volunteers some work on the project.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The first district conference under the new apostle in charge of the district, D. O. Chesworth, was held May 27, 28. Brother Chesworth spoke at the 11:00 service.

Cecil Ettinger, new missionary appointee to the St. Louis and Central Illinois Districts, spoke to the priesthood on the evening of May 27. At the same time Elder Frank McDonald spoke to the women, and Patriarch C. L. Archibald spoke to the young people.

A Sunday afternoon prayer service, which nearly filled the main auditorium, was preceded by a short business meeting in which the district membership voted its endorsement of Elder McDonald as district president to replace Brother Archibald.—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—District President G. L. Swenson was ordained to the office of high priest at a recent service in the Seattle First Church. Many members of surrounding branches were present to witness this ordination, Sunday evening, May 21.

High Priest J. L. Verhei, president of the Oregon District, was present to give a charge to the candidate for ordination. Apostle E. J. Gleazer, with the assistance of High Priests Alma Johnson and Paul Wellington, performed the ordinance. Bishop Lasater and Evangelist Lundeen assisted in the service and gave their continued support to Brother Swenson.

Following the ordination, Apostle Gleazer preached on the subject of "The Power of Godliness" and its relation to the ordinances of the church.—Reported by PAUL WELLINGTON.

VANCLEAVE, MISSISSIPPI.—There was a large attendance at the annual home-coming services on May 21. Due to the illness of Pastor A. G. Miller, Elder A. N. Barnes of Escatawpa was in charge of the services. Guest speakers for the day were Elders R. L. Booker and Franklyn Stiener of Mobile, Alabama, and Elder Gordon Gibson of Escatawpa. Basket lunch was served on the church grounds.

Brother Miller was highly commended by Elder Stiener for his devotion to the branch.—Reported by MRS. MYRTLE MAE.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Seventy Joe Yeager visited the branch on May 17. Apostle Farrow was the guest speaker of the evening. Special music was furnished by Misses Florine Cline, Gwenn Manning, Evelyn Smith, Mereleen Condon, Mrs. Wave Condon, and Mrs. June Ried.

On May 28 Elder and Mrs. Harold Van Buskirk of Buffalo, New York, were visitors. Brother Van Buskirk was the speaker for the morning service. Special music was by the Cincinnati choir.—Reported by JOSEPHINE SMITH.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—During the month of May these children were blessed: Ann Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert MacGregor; Karen Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Cooper; John Alexander Hoffman, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hoffman; Paul Richard, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Davidson; and Alana Jean, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Floyd Skelton.—The London Beacon.

BEVIER, MISSOURI.—On May 14 the Macon, Huntsville, and Bevier branches had a joint all-day service. Patriarch Orman Salisbury and wife were guests. Brother Salisbury spoke at the morning and 2:30 p.m. services. A basket lunch was held at noon.

On May 21 Elder Donald Bowman of Hamilton was guest speaker. On May 28 Elder Fred McKane of Springfield, Illinois, a former Bevier resident, spoke at the morning service. In the afternoon of May 30 Dwight Fowler of Huntsville was baptized by Elder Morris Worden and confirmed by Elder J. P. Vanskiike at Bevier.—Reported by GRACE VANSKIKE.

If we want to escape criticism we should say nothing, do nothing, and be nothing.

ALMOST ALL OF US are influenced by what people think of us. When they think well of us we are happy, but when they ridicule and criticize us we are unhappy. Some of us think that as long as we do the right thing we will please everybody. This is a misconception; we won't and can't possibly please the whole world. No one has yet discovered a way to give universal satisfaction. The most perfect Man who ever lived could not, so why should we hope to succeed where he failed? It is not in the divine plan that we should please all men; if it were, Jesus would have accomplished it. The Master taught, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." Please notice that he emphasized for my sake. In the opening Scripture we find a similar meaning but different wording, "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake." Christ is God's example of righteousness for men. We have been called to do righteousness, and we must press onward doing what we think is right regardless of what other people think of us.

If we want to escape criticism we should say nothing, do nothing, and be nothing; for the higher a man goes, and the more important he becomes, the greater he is criticized. This is especially true if he tries to do right. Therefore, we should expect criticism and prepare for it, but there is no reason for us needlessly to invite it.

What People Think of Us

By STEPHEN BLACK

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

If great men had been swayed by what others thought of them, our social, cultural, and industrial achievements would still be on a par with those of the Dark Ages. Think where we would be today in the field of medicine, engineering, electronics, nuclear fission, politics, or even religion, if the leaders in these fields had let the opinions of others influence them in their search for truth. If men like Pasteur, Edison, Marconi, Washington, Wesley, Luther, and Joseph Smith had listened to the unjust criticism of their contemporaries the whole social, industrial, and religious world would have been different. These men went ahead doing what they thought was right, and although they were sensitive to criticism and the opinions of others, they did not let what other people thought of them dissuade them from their purposes. One of our greatest presidents expressed the feelings of these men at a time when he was under attack from some of his critics. He said,

If I tried to read, much less answer, all the criticism made of me and all the attacks leveled against me, this office would be closed for all other business. I do the best I know how, the very best I can. I mean to keep on doing this, down to the very end. If the end brings me out all wrong, then ten thousand angels swearing I had been right would make no difference. If the end brings me out all right, then what is said against me now will not amount to anything.

Lincoln knew that the man who spends all his time worrying about what others think of him and trying to answer their criticism would have time for nothing else. The earlier in our life we realize this truth, the better off we will be.

THE UTTER FUTILITY of trying to please everyone is well illustrated in one of Aesop's Fables. A man and his son were leading their donkey when a bystander scolded them for walking when the donkey didn't carry a load. So the father put his son on the donkey. Soon they came to another man who criticized the son for riding while his tired father walked. Then the boy walked and the father rode on the donkey, but the next person they met complained about the heartless father who rode while his son walked. So both father and son got on to ride, but the next passerby accused them of being cruel to a poor dumb beast. Finally, they tied the donkey's feet together and tried to carry it on a pole between them. When they were hilariously ridiculed they let the beast down on a bridge and in the struggle to get to his feet the donkey fell in the water and drowned.

The moral, of course, is that no matter how hard you try, you are bound to be criticized by someone if you do anything at all. Even the Master was criticized for most of the things he did. But when he was censured for healing on the Sabbath day, he pointed out that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. Christ's critics followed him even to the cross saying, "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross." And then, as a final reviling and parting blow, Matthew records that "The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth."

What people think of us can be an influence for good in our lives if we accept their censure with the right attitude. Instead of resenting criticism as we do most of the time, we might look beneath the surface of such attacks and seek the reason for them. If we know the reason we can do something about them. Most successful people have become that way because it was not above them to learn and accept the censure of others.

THE GREAT SCIENTIST George Washington Carver pleaded with other Negroes to listen to the unfriendly criticism of white people and profit by it. He once said, "A good many biting things are said about our colored people. These frequently irritate Tuskegee boys and make them angry. They are inclined to deny and make hot comments on their critics. But I tell them, you get nowhere that way. If fault is found with us, no matter how rudely, we should try to think to what extent it is well based, and then correct our shortcomings as far as we are able. Even the most unfriendly criticism may be a help if you take it right." This is excellent advice for all of us regardless of race or color, for most of our greatest creative moments are associated with some criticism we have received.

However, we should not let criticism or other people's opinion of us destroy our peace of mind. In his little book on happiness, William Lyons Phelps said, "I regard myself on the whole as an amiable person, and yet there are a considerable number of people who, when they hear of my death, will feel relieved. . . . I do not intend to let other people, especially those who do not like me anyhow, determine whether I shall have peace of mind or not." We should not be too much concerned about other people's opinion of us as long as our lives are in harmony with the example set by Jesus. However, if we know our lives do not measure up to his standard and that is the reason for the attack against us, we had best do something about it. If we walk with the Master and live rightly we shall have an assurance that no critical opinion will be able to shake us. For we have his promise: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

A Way of Life

By Maude D. Anderson

DURING THE VICTORIAN PERIOD, discussing abstract theology and trying to find differences in various doctrines were entertaining pastimes. However with the dawn of a new era when civilization was being burdened down with facts it didn't know how to use, the more enlightened people began to realize that religion needed to be something greater than a mental stimulus. The world needed to be shown a better way of life. It was not enough to tell people their interpretation of the Scriptures was wrong; they needed to be shown what Christianity could do for them. Does criticizing the work of Chopin, Mozart, and Bach make a fine musician? Does criticizing the paintings of the masters make one a fine artist? Is it not the things one accomplishes that will be appreciated rather than his appraisal of what others do? I have seen any number of good people who would not unite with our church simply because those who presented it had nothing in their own lives which was admirable above that of the members of any other denomination. They were always ready to criticize but never ready to compliment or co-operate. It is human nature to see the reflection of our own shortcomings in the lives of others.

Some people would tell us that Christianity has failed, but it is only those who have shirked the responsibility of giving it to the world who have failed.

The various denominations of the world have been like a group of big husky men standing by as a friend sinks into the quicksand. They argue as to the best methods of saving him. Each "knows" that only his own particular method will succeed. Each wants to win the medal of honor for his heroism. As they argue, their friend sinks slowly out of sight until none can save him.

We were told more than a hundred years ago that Zion could be redeemed then if the people would have it so. Today my boy lies buried on the battlefield in France when he should have a home in Zion and be serving in the priesthood. I doubt if it makes much difference to him now whether the theology of the Adventists or the Catholics, the Reorganized Latter Day Saints or the Methodists made the greatest contribution to suffering humanity. The point is they all failed to give the world what it needed most—the message of the Sermon on the Mount.

He grew to manhood in Missouri, attended the State Normal School at Warrensburg, and then entered the teaching profession. In 1900 he homesteaded in North Dakota, and on December 7, 1902, married Maude Kennicutt. Four children were born to them. In 1918 he entered the United States Rural Free Delivery Mail Service, which work he continued until his retirement in 1941. His wife Maude preceded him in death in 1931. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since he was fifteen and was ordained an elder in 1914. He served in the ministry many years, both locally and as president of the North Dakota District. In 1936 he was married to Adeline Richter who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves three sons: Warren K. and Laurel V. of Altadena, California, and Fred W. of Los Angeles, California; a daughter, Mrs. Pearl Caudle of Altadena; three sisters: Mrs. Hattie Stowell of New Rockford, North Dakota; Mrs. Zenia Stowell and Mrs. Leta Crowl of Independence, Missouri; a brother, George McElwain of Fresno, California; and nine grandchildren. Services were held at Mount View Chapel. Evangelist Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in the Mount View Cemetery, Altadena.

SOMERS.—Mary Ellen Winemiller, was born May 16, 1880, in Franklin County, Illinois, and died May 30, 1950, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Elva J. Taylor, in Indianapolis, Indiana. She was married in 1898 to Moses F. Somers; five children were born to them. In 1911 the family moved to Posey County, and in 1935 to Jamestown, Indiana. Mr. Somers preceded her in death, and she spent the final years of her life in Indianapolis. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for forty-two years.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Elva J. Taylor, Mrs. Lula Kelley, Mrs. Anna Huro, and Mrs. Faye Corne; a son, Walter Somers; two stepsons: Heber and William Somers; thirty-three grandchildren; and eleven great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Bethsadia Christian Church near Stewartville, Indiana, Evangelist Arthur W. Gage officiating. Burial was in the family plot back of the church.

* LAMONI DOES IT AGAIN

A few years ago, the Lamoni Creamery Co-operative came out with a really superior kind of butter, churned from sweet cream. It was absolutely better than anything on the city markets. Whenever anybody was making the trip there, Independence housewives would phone, "Bring me back some butter!" Then a few independent merchants began handling it. Now even the chain stores are selling "Iowa Butter." Lamoni, predominantly an R.L.D.S. community, had produced an item of high excellence, and it was recognized by the world.

The story is being repeated again. This time it is bread. The Lamoni bakery is producing the finest loaf of 100% whole wheat bread on the market. It is not heavy, and has a delicious flavor, distinctly on the "Yum!" side of the counter. A friend just brought in some loaves of it, and it is going like grandma's cake. Housewives are on the wire again, calling, "Bring me several loaves of that Lamoni bread." Well, there's a trend, and maybe somebody down here will begin importing it. Maybe Lamoni is doing it again.

All the good things do not come from the large cities. Great ideas can come from little places. The Lamoni people have something. And aren't we proud of them?

* FLAVOR

Uncle Joe to Aunt Molly, at table: "I like this cucumber. It reminds me so much of the watermelons we had last summer."

* PAUL FRACCASCIA

A good man goes down—a place is vacant in the line—where are the volunteers? Who will take his place? And who will make new places of service as he did?

Life was promising and full of hope for Paul Fraccascia just a few years ago. He was a splendid young man, with quiet ways that won many friends. He was called to the priesthood and served the church in many places, especially as a pastor in Kansas City. Completing his education he was a teacher for a time, then went into Y.M.C.A. work, and was widely appreciated in the community. He married a fine girl and they had two children, as good boys as anybody could want Then an incurable malady appeared, and he spent some time in the hospital. Released, he attended the last General Conference. There was a relapse, and he passed away on May 24. He had kept his pastoral work as a volunteer to the end He was so young to go, and so greatly needed by his family, the church, and the community. There are so many thousands who could more easily have been spared, some who would never have been missed at all, and a few whose death would have been a blessing. But he had to go, while these others remain. In his short years he lived a complete life and accomplished great good, more than several ordinary lives.

* THE CLOTH

You have probably noticed the "holy tone" as well as the holy pronunciation in some of the religious programs on Sunday radio broadcasts. What is there about religion that makes men speak that way? Could it be that the "men of the cloth" get some of it in their mouths?

The Birthday of Freedom

OUT OF THE PAST comes a memory of a little boy bent over a book at his desk with his teacher standing near by, giving the class instruction to learn a poem. It was a passage from The Lay of the Last Minstrel, by Sir Walter Scott. As the lad read the lines, his heart was filled with a music he has never forgotten, and the words come back to him again today—

*Breathes there the man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned,
From wandering on a foreign strand?*

July 4, 1776, was the birthday of freedom in America. Of course we know that this is not the time in history when the world needs an arrant nationalism. And we remember, too, that the Great Commission which Jesus gave to his disciples in all ages commanded them, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." For in the sight of God, all men are brothers and equally precious to him. At the same time, we rejoice in our country's honor and glory, as other people rejoice in theirs. Our friends have often joined in celebrating our Independence Day, as our people have joined in celebrating their national holidays.

On the Fourth of July, 1950, the United States of America has reached a peak of power in the world and is beginning to feel the weight of a great responsibility to other peoples. When a nation gains power, it is necessary for that nation to be humble. In the great days of the British Empire, the poet Rudyard Kipling declared in his "Recessional"—

*If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!*

Let every American remember that when he came into this world, he had nothing very important, besides his life, that was not given to him by his country: the abundance of the good earth; freedom to think, to speak, to travel, and to pursue his own welfare and happiness in whatever way he might choose; freedom to worship God according to his own conscience; and a thousand good gifts found in lesser measure or not at all in many other parts of the world. This is the birthright our country has given to us.

On our country's birthday, we send a message of good will to all the world—a message of peace in the name of Christ.

News & Notes

WORD FROM HAWAII

A cable received from the Hawaiian Islands announces that President Israel A. Smith and Bishop Mark Siegfried were welcomed with a grand aloha when they arrived on June 21. During the nine days they are spending in Hawaii, they will work with Elders Howard F. Miller and Orlin Crownover. Their itinerary will take them to French Oceania.

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH

Twenty-five years ago President Frederick M. Smith participated in the ceremony for the laying of the corner stone of Woodbridge, Ontario, church. On June 11 President W. Wallace Smith spoke at special services honoring the anniversary of this ceremony. About two hundred people attended the services. Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin and Pastor William Archer also participated in the services.

On June 18 President W. Wallace Smith was associated with Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Elders J. D. Anderson, Herbert C. Lively, and Bishop L. Wayne Updike in the opening and dedicatory service of the Eastbrook congregation of the Kansas City Stake.

NEW APPOINTEES

Apostle Arthur A. Oakman is in charge of the institute being held in the Auditorium, June 13 to 23, for the young missionaries who were appointed at last General Conference. Classes are held daily for the group. During the first week of the institute, Elder J. C. Daugherty taught classes every evening.

These young appointees will also participate in the sixty cottage meetings that will be held in Independence between June 19 and July 14. It is expected that at least 600 nonmembers will attend these meetings.

MUSIC

Elders Evan Fry, Franklyn S. Weddle, and Chris B. Hartshorn attended meetings held by the American Symphony Orchestra League on the week end of June 17, 18, at Wichita, Kansas. The league is the only association of community symphony orchestra in the nation.

"THE MIKADO"

The Walnut Park Zion's League presented two performances of the Gilbert and Sullivan light opera, "The Mikado," June 13 and 16 on the out-door stage at the Campus. Eighteen local Zion's Leagues assisted with the production. The opera was presented with the purpose of raising money for the Campus Recreation Fund.

The opera was one of the most elaborate amateur productions of Independence since the war. Leading parts were played by Bruce Reynolds, Robert Sparks, Lloyd Hurshman, Kenneth Butterworth, Elmer Sloan, lone Martin, Velma Davies, Roselie Young, and Inis Redfield. A fifty-voice chorus of school girls, nobles, guards, and coolies, and a twenty-piece orchestra supported the cast. Others who had leading parts assisting with the production were Bernard Butterworth, Audrey Hurshman, Allene Lucas, Bernard Hurshman, A. L. Henson, Mrs. A. L. Henson, Betty Thomas, Mrs. G. B. Closson, Sr., and Mrs. Wallace Fike.

The opera was such a great success that the Zion's Leagues of Independence plan to produce another next year. Approximately 4,000 attended the two performances.

Lights and Shadows

“What saith the Scripture?” —Romans 4: 3.

Good and evil are often represented in the Scriptures in terms of light and dark. In the Proverbs we read, “The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The way of the wicked is as darkness.”—Proverbs 4: 18, 19.

This is more than a figure of speech. John is not writing metaphorically when he says, “God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.”—I John 1: 5. He is a light so pure and clear, and so intense, that any light of this world must seem by comparison with it to be darkness.

It is a truth that must be experienced to be understood, that the opposite extreme, evil, is a darkness in which there is no light at all.

We look at people in the world, and we see some of them walking in the light, some in blackest darkness, and some in the grays and shadows in between.

* * * * *

One of the darkest pages in the history of Judah was the reign of Jehoram, who came to the throne because he was the eldest son of the deceased Jehoshaphat. He had no other qualifications to make him a king. He reigned in Jerusalem from 850 to 843 B.C. He was unrighteous and unpopular. He slew his own brothers and other possible rivals for the throne. To strengthen an alliance, he married Athaliah, daughter of Ahab, king of Israel, and let her introduce the worship of the evil god Baal to Judah. Two provinces revolted, and he lost them. Then he contracted an incurable disease and died of it. “He did evil in the sight of the Lord.”

At his death, an unfriendly historian wrote of him, “Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without being desired.”—II Chronicles 21: 20.

What a summary of a man’s life! What a failure he was!

We can learn something from negative examples, even if they are unpleasant. Here was a king who wasn’t wanted. He had no friends. He died in dishonor. He betrayed the God of his fathers. And when he was gone nobody missed him.

While we are still writing the record of our lives, let us think what kind it may be. We can still change the verdict of history upon our careers. Some people have lived in their churches and communities in such a way that their death brought sighs of relief. The only really good news of them was their obituary. That is neither necessary nor wise. Let it not be said of us, “He departed without being desired.”

* * * * *

There are many pages of light all through the records of history. A modern example may as well be selected. A woman church member of an Indian nation wrote concerning one of our finest veteran missionaries, now inactive because of ill-health: “Oh, if he could only be young again and minister to my people. I would like to hear him preach one more sermon!”

That is an eloquent tribute to a humble but splendid ministry given through long years. The missionary loved those people and still loves them. In return, they love him.

A man’s ministry may be built upon many things that go to make the foundation principles of his life: ability as an administrator, knowledge as a debater, eloquence as a preacher, loyalty as a friend, righteousness as a man, wisdom as a judge. All these things are good.

But he will not be remembered unless he loves the people.

* * * * *

There are lights and shadows in every human soul. You can see their reflections in the faces of the people you pass on the street. A man whose purposes have been evil will reveal it in his face sooner or later. What he has written in his mind will show in his body.

Some lives are dark with selfishness and sin. Such people would not dare to be seen in their true colors, or they would be rejected by society.

Good people do not have to pretend. They have nothing to conceal. Life is easier for them because they do not have to suppress any conflict. What they appear to be on the surface is what they are all through.

* * * * *

The world is a meeting ground of darkness and light, of good and evil. At that meeting point a struggle takes place. As the Book of Mormon says, there is a necessity of “an opposition in all things.”

The individual soul is a meeting ground, too, of darkness and light, and the contest that takes place there must result in a decision which determines personality, character, and one’s ultimate fate.

The great delusion of the skeptical person, the agnostic and atheist, is the idea that there are no powers external to the individual that are interested in what the issue of the struggle may be in any human soul. To deny that the powers are there is to fail to recognize the most significant and important forces in the universe. And it may lead to personal destruction.

“If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.”—I John 1: 7.

1950 Reunion Material

Attention of All Reunion Workers:

Reunion Theme: "We Witness for Christ in the Restoration."

Sermon and prayer service themes:

It is our understanding that these will be determined by the leaders at each reunion, but that emphasis is upon basic elements of our beliefs. Some daily themes have been suggested, but the final determination of the specific daily themes for your reunion is up to you and the others in charge of the reunion with you.

For the General Class, "The Restoration Story." This is a printed visual aid complete with textual material. The objective of the general class is to familiarize youth and adults with this textual material. We suggest the following division for classwork:

DAY—

Monday: "I Will Build My Church"—conclude with illustration

Tuesday: "They Left Their Mark Upon the World"—conclude with illustration

Wednesday: "The Kingdom of God Was Forgotten"—conclude with illustration

Thursday: "More Than Ever Men Needed the Kingdom of God"—conclude with illustration

Friday: "The People Were Scattered"—conclude with illustration

Saturday: "We Invite You Into the Fellowship of the Restored Church of Jesus Christ"—conclude with illustration

Men's Class, "Studies in Family Evangelism." This is a series of six lessons in the "know-how" of family evangelism, including suggestions for the actual use of "The Restoration Story" and other tools. Limited numbers of these will be available for purchase at each reunion.

Women's Class, "I Witness for Christ." This splendid text was written by Sister Blanche Mesley primarily for the women of the church, but it is excellent for both parents. For reunion classwork it may be divided as follows:

Monday: Chapters 1 and 2

Tuesday: Chapters 3 and 4

Wednesday: Chapters 5 and 8

Thursday: Chapters 6 and 7

Friday: Chapters 9 and 10

Saturday: Chapters 11 and 12

For Youth (High School and College), "We Witness Through Stewardship" by Bishop Wayne Updike. An up-to-the-minute analysis of our financial stewardship and our witnessing possibilities through the tithe.

For Children, "Finding God Through Nature." This is a unified schedule of classwork and activity with separate instructions for each age grouping—kindergarten through junior high. The material for each age level has been prepared by separate instructors for that specific age level.

Kindergarten — Martha Sharp Sharrock

Primary—Elsie Garlick Cummings

Junior—Sadi Moon Nagel

Junior High—Richard A. Carter

Bishop's Classes — "Stewardship Opportunities and Responsibilities" has been prepared by the Presiding Bishopric.

Plural Marriage Folly and Trash

In the December 1, 1842, issue of Times and Seasons, Volume IV, Number 2, page 32, Joseph Smith published the following "Notice":

There was a book printed at my office a short time since, written by Udney H. Jacobs, on marriage, without my knowledge; and had I been apprised of it, I should not have printed it; not that I am opposed to any man enjoying his privileges; but I do not wish to have my name associated with the authors in such an unmeaning rigmarole of nonsense, folly, and trash. JOSEPH SMITH.

We have often wondered what this book was, this "rigmarole of nonsense, folly, and trash." We have never seen Jacobs' book, but a careful examination of a copy in a well-known library has disclosed some of the facts about it.

It is called "An Extract from a Manuscript Entitled: The Peacemaker or Doctrines of the Millennium," by Udney Hay Jacobs. It bears the imprint: "Nauvoo, Illinois, J. Smith printer."

Here are some of the things in this book that rightfully characterize it as "nonsense, folly, and trash". On page 29:

LEAH - RACHEL JUSTIFIED

There is no positive law of God against a man's marrying Leah, and Rachel both. So long as he is a good and faithful husband, he is justified

. . . . if a man has no right to marry another woman while his first wife liveth, then he is under the law of his wife

Again on page 30:

. . . . it would be as reasonable that a man should possess no more than one dollar, one servant, or one cow at a time

. . . . if a man entice a maid and lie with her, he shall partly endow her to be his wife. And if the man refuse to marry her, he shall suffer death.

Can one question Joseph's opinion of this as "folly and trash"?

And can anyone who believes Joseph Smith was a good man believe that at the time he published this notice over his own signature he was and had been guilty of the crime of polygamy for years as claimed by the Mormons? ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The Church as Mediator in the World - By Evan Shute

"By the Splendor of God." This phrase was a favorite oath in medieval Europe. May I discuss it for a moment.

God has grown so much of recent years. Once he was someone to wrestle with at Jabbok—and, indeed, came so near to being overcome that after a whole night's catch-as-catch-can he had to resort to legerdemain to win. Later he was the enigmatic, tired traveler beside the well at Samaria, or the indignant scourge of the Temple—very human roles, indeed. Then he was a muscular Michelangelo giant on the ceiling of a Roman chapel, surrounded by hordes of naked cherubs and by ascetic saints in flowing drapery. Still later he was the far-off prime-mover of Herbert Spencer, sitting aloof once his primordial worlds and simplest cells were started on the immutable but blundering and callous way described as evolution.

Nowadays matter has evaporated into particles or waves of energy—we are not sure which, since we must sometimes deduce our natural laws on one basis and now on the other. Sir James Jeans said that the universe looks less and less like something solid, and more and more like a great mathematical thought. This year Einstein in his unified field theory may have laid bare the skeleton of as much of that thought as dealt with the nonliving world. The living portion eludes definition and adequate description, however, as warily and decisively as in the days of Socrates or the Moses of the Pentateuch. Still we apprehend what life is only from parables or in history or in our own limited and shallow experience. Could it be that we also were manifestoes of his thought—as our material bodies certainly appear to be? What greater thing could one say of the soul that dizzily and briefly wears such an elusive and transparent vesture as matter now seems to be?

Yes, God the Creator has grown of late. Through a gap in one system of universes called the Milky Way, we catch a glimpse of thousands more of such vast galactic systems. Hubble has claimed that the universe has been expanding at a prodigious rate for a few thousands of millions of years—and still is—some nebulae rushing away from us at rates as great as seven thousand two hundred miles per second. But then the physical theorists tell us that space is but describable as bent back on itself in an unimaginable four-dimensional sphere of space-time. At the other end of the scale, as we jar new electrons loose from their orbits and create five new elements Nature never realized in actuality, we glimpse the stupendous energies involved in such a disintegration and catch the feeblest glimpse of the cohesive forces all about us—the integrating and creative forces that we take for granted as readily as we assume gravity, the clinging togetherness which makes great planets and our physical world, and should equally characterize life itself.

As specialists in anatomy, physiology, astronomy, geology, plastics, and steroid chemistry gather at the annual meetings of the Association for the Advancement of Science, all Babel literally breaks loose once again, not only in word but, worse, in mind. Few men today can talk to men not interested in their "field," and such arbitrary but convenient divisions of delimited interest, thought, and exploration go on redividing endlessly until fewer and fewer specialists can encounter men of like mind. One problem draws to the fore in all this: "What limitless scope of divine mind set all these problems which endlessly fascinate and occupy all this concourse of skilled human minds?" It must have been a thought of endless dimension and diversity, something as hard for us to feel our way into as the light-years of exploding galaxies.

What purpose could animate such an immeasurable mind in creating us and our world? To Moses he insisted it was for His own purpose and that that secret remained His. Dare we compare his motives to those which in their sun move our Einsteins, our Raphaels, our Beethovens, our Russells, our Pasteurs? That would mean, as the Hindus long ago postulated, that God was an artist, working in macrocosm as Leonardo da Vinci worked in the microcosm, slightly careless if he built catapults for Sforza of Milan or sketched the muscles of an arm. Having attained an equilibrium in which He and the Son co-existed and ruled oppositionless and questionless, what could move them to make the worlds and living beings, notably such troublesome persons as ourselves? Having mastered the mechanical problems since analyzed in part by geologists, astronomers, physicists, and chemists, what remained for him? Was he in the situation of the lonely millionaire on a tropical island sprawled under a coconut palm? Was life the only problem that remained whose infinite complexity was worthy of his creative finger, and then worthy only if he turned it loose? And was man to be its noblest product? Christ is the best answer to that last query. Man who could be Christ was "good" and even companionable to God. Was the development of perfect men as eternal companions to the eternal but lonely God the most difficult and triumphant achievement His might could contemplate and his glory desire? If the Trinity were always existent, then God as a personal power always abhorred isolation. Christ demonstrated that the perfect man could be achieved. The fact that only Christ achieved it proves it was a feat of incomparable difficulty. As Edna St. Vincent Millay said: "It happened once that no man might despair, but only once that no man might presume!" How many billions of lives have fallen short of their objective! How could any power salvage the multitude of our chronic imperfections? Only God could either develop or solve such a problem.

Men can make a mechanical brain such as the Mark III at Harvard—but this has no "judgment." It merely answers automatically "yes" and "no," or quantitatively to yes-and-no-type questions. We know life is more than a yes-and-no problem, for that type of answer does not tell us how hard to hit the villain about to kidnap our children or assault our wives or how to punish a Himmler or Beria. God, himself, as the last and supreme exercise of his majesty and superlative power has set his judgment.

The Problem of Evil

Making life, God made creatures with wants and needs. The hardest line to draw in all the world is the line dividing those two items. He made living things independent. As they came together in groups or geographic areas a certain conflict necessarily developed, between either the needs or wants of such individuals. Here evil began—as soon as a self appeared and further reproduction was made possible—far below the level of man. Evil is the inevitable outcome of such competition, whether for waterholes or food or mates. Thus in the Adamic story evil enters not with Adam but with Eve and pairing and their first children. Indeed, it is impossible to develop an aggregate of free individuals without competition, or in short without struggle. That struggle needs a larger arena than any "Garden." It fills the world, and hence of necessity Adam and his competitive seed were liberated into the whole world. How must struggle end? By the surrender or retreat of one party. How shall this be achieved? By persuasion or force, the only means being either pain or the threat of pain or punishment. In short, the moment God made two individual animals, he inevitably made evil, including pain. No alternative inside the scheme of free living is conceivable. Only by mutual arrangement and agreement shall such evil or pain disappear. Animals can scarcely achieve this, although many species seem to recognize the boundaries of segregated feeding grounds or the areas within which the writ of one male runs. Man conceivably may so limit himself by ethical rules—if he is once shown the way to such freedom by the teaching and example of someone free of evil, himself whole and integrated—but rarely has this been done since Enoch's day. Sin is so great a burden to the world that certainly no man could lift it or counter it—only God can do so. If sin must entail punishment, and Adam unloosed something evil that no man could contain or imprison again, then Adam plus Christ equals Adam's escape plus Christ's sacrifice, the equation of the atonement.

Thus evil is neither the absence of good, nor the dilution of good, neither is it peculiar to man. It is as rampant among bees or badgers as in burgomasters. It is a correlate of independent existence among all living forms, and only adequate and impartial sharing without regard to appeals to force can avert it. Hence the age-long desire for "security"—a security not precariously upheld by guns but based on at least good will and, better, and friendship and love.

If evil is to be defined in such terms, then evil should increase proportionately with time and increase of population, whether of animals or men. Carnivorous slaughter increases on the plains of Africa as the harmless herds of antelopes increase, but the alternative is slow starvation, a worse evil. However wisely or mercifully men plan, they rarely if ever disturb this divine but sometimes terrible balance of nature to soften or better it. Even sharks, rats, and ichneumon flies must lie inside God's plan. If death must come, can anything preferable to a lion or a boa constrictor or the tubercle bacillus be found? The problem grows increasingly acute as the world ages and now it occupies more of men's thoughts. Therefore God sends his church to our rescue in the latter days. He predicts the need of a returning Messiah who must hasten lest he find no flesh alive on the earth to greet him. The correlated problem is to have men ready to receive him. If to pluck the rose safely out of the thorn, danger is ever a notable achievement, then plucking a group of perfect men out of the crucial and critical final act in the drama of the ages is an effort worthy of the whole glory of God, even of the almighty designer of universes and digestive enzymes and blood cells and mason bees.

God, as he watches evil, is prophetic and foresees its defeat. What does prophecy imply? It implies an accurate preliminary analysis and prevision of incalculably complex human and other performances, the thought sequences of whole nations, the interactions of economic and racial conflicts, and the course and velocity of flow of rivers of emotion and impulse dwarfing any Amazon. Prophecy has rightly been regarded as the greatest manifestation of the divine intellect or of its inspiration of man. If I am baffled by the interval of the fixed stars, I am staggered beyond calculation by the implications of prophecy. We do well to revere the prophets and to value their words as second only to the fundamental law of God when we appeal to the "Law and the Prophets." The man who predicts an eclipse or guesses an election result is wise. What about the man who utters God's preview of events in the next century or a thousand years away! What a proof of God's transcendent glory and might!

This very brief study of God's motives and powers is meant to locate at one pole, God the Almighty, the location from which we came and toward which we strive. If the church is the vehicle of that return journey, then it must be magnificent and different and divine, a fiery chariot for modern Elijahs.

The Place of the Church

And here I come to the crux of my discussion. Has the church or its people realized how different or peculiar they must be for their role? If the church and its people are mediatorial, then they stand somewhere between the Omnipotent God I have tried to indicate, and the lowly beings we know ourselves to be. If it stands even at the mid-mark between, should it not stand much farther away than it does from the lower pole, man? It cannot stand so close as to be scarcely distinguishable from its rivals, or from Rotary Clubs and polio drives. It must be obviously God's. It must be vastly different and difficult and dangerous and thrilling. Its members must really be Saints, approaching the knowledges of Aquinas, the religious ecstasies of medieval nuns, and the practical ethics of stoical Marcus Aurelius. We must be giants of very obvious and terrible, yet of forgiving, tender, and appealing stature.

Now the experience of our church to date has not stressed this. It has based its case on humility and love and a pious trust that the hand of God can reach far down, however far, to fill our beggar's cups, however small, whenever we whine or call. But does God demand more? Should we offer him more? Why should not every apostle be a Paul, every evangelist a Philip, every woman a Lydia or Martha, and every lay member a generous Joseph of Arimathea or a faithful centurion of Caesarea? If we are preparing to company with God, shall we be less careful and anxious than if we were going to dinner with Oppenheimer or George Bernard Shaw or Pandit Nehru or Sibelius? How can we prepare to endure the perfection of his glory if we remain such insignificant atoms of understanding and taste and skills? How dare we call upon God to sup with us? I grant you that God's love makes any man great, but it can multiply John, the mighty apostle, as many times as the woman with the alabaster box of ointment. Humility can and often has elicited the confidence and help of the Almighty, but cannot Socrates be as humble as the woman who cuts salads at the ladies' aid? Charity and the forgiving spirit and the helping hand God must always honor, but why should these not grace a group of men who "talk with the tongues of men and of angels"?

Every mediator tends to achieve his ends by compromise. In the result achieved there is often a practical basis for further endeavor—but so little that is glorious or inspiring, so little to challenge and hold the best men, and the compromise ever falls short of its goal. Diluted solutions of dilemmas are still poor things, and the best men detect that promptly. The greatest men have always attached themselves to vast, glorious, daring, and "impractical" enterprises. Only such situations call up the best in us. Only such efforts ever attain their goal, however high the percentage of failures. Being Christ or a disciple of Christ has always been a silly business by common standards, but, O Lord, deliver thy church from all common standards, from all the muddy values of men. Let us have more of the tireless and unappeasable God in us, and less of the weary and disillusioned man, more of thy glory and less of our safety, more adventure and less cynicism, more thyroid and fewer barbiturates, more speed and less weight, more drive and fewer exhaust gases and noises. Christ, come down to thy church, but first catch us up to meet thee in the air, somewhere along the long light-years and thought gaps that now divide us.

The Church Triumphant

What is now exceptionally radical and exciting must become our rule—just as it is growing to be in science. The man who is uniquely challenging and tall must not be the standout that Saul was in Israel. Our ensign must be on the hills for all nations—or how shall they see it, must less be attracted to it? We have too long held a high opinion of safety and sanity, and a leave-it-to-the-Lord or wait-for-the-endowment policy. While we leave it to God, he leaves us. God is not captured by little men with butterfly nets. He expects more skill and agility of his pursuers. We must be suspicious only of those who do nothing, of policies that entail no risk, of little men and the foolish ways we have walked in so long. Mere sanity is no kindling thing. We need blazing faith. I wonder about my allegiance to the church only when it is above criticism, when every member smiles sleepily, when it is so much like any other that I need to scrutinize the name plate over the door. When David Cohn asked a Finn how his country carried on against such odds, the reply came: "Whom the gods would preserve they first make mad."

We must keep asking ourselves if we would be fit companions for the returning Messiah or would we bore him to tears? Does anyone here feel able to chat with him or laugh with him "as a man talketh with his friend"? The Moses who did that had absorbed all the knowledges of Egypt and then meditated on them in the desert for forty years before he reached that colloquial pinnacle. Surely God does not want in Zion the intimacies of slaves or yes men or bootlickers or muzzled scholars. Shall he find great comrades among us when he comes or just those of little faith and shrunken hope and palsied minds?

Twenty-one Days in Mexico

By HAROLD I. Velt

Part V

AS INTERESTING as it is to explore the ruined cities of Mexico, nothing was more interesting to us than the people. Of Mexico's twenty-five million people, 60 per cent are mestizo, or Indian mixed with other blood; 30 per cent are all Indian; and about 10 per cent are white. Perhaps two million speak their native Indian tongues, with only a rudimentary knowledge of Castilian.

Years ago I was told by an elder in California that during the years he spent traveling among the people of Mexico, he never felt more safe and secure. He found them always friendly, kindly, and considerate. Another church member in El Paso, in the moneylending business, told me that he wished all people were as trustworthy as the Mexicans in money dealings.

My feelings are that many have been wrongly impressed by the history of rebellions in Mexico, and by the barred windows and doors in the cities. Of course there are dishonest people among them, but it should be remembered that in 1840 the national income was but $36 per person per year, with but slight improvement through the years until by 1947 labor laws provided that a worker be paid five pesos a day, or nearly $1.00 in American money. Some Latin American countries still have workers receiving only a quarter of a peso a day (less than five cents in our money). An Indian child in Mexico even today has but a fifty-fifty chance to reach his tenth birthday. Until the time of Benito Juarez (the Abraham Lincoln of Mexico), most Indians were subdued to hopeless slavery. The church fostered dictatorship and allowed no public schools. Kind-hearted priests, such as Hidalgo, who could not bear such cruelty under the tyranny of Spain and the church, bravely revolted. Though punished by death, they started a series of incidents destined to bring liberty to Mexico. The pattern of George Washington and his men has greatly affected the Latin American countries.

IT WAS PLEASING to us to see public schools throughout the country. We were delighted to observe the nature of their simplified, well-illustrated health and hygiene charts and pictures upon their walls. Their motto, "Each one teach one," is being carried out interestingly. We would see a man sitting in a park or public place, teaching another man to read. Perhaps 50 per cent are still illiterate. We were told that 60 per cent could speak some English, though we are inclined to doubt the percentage.

We found the people industrious and hard-working. Children delight in learning to work like their elders. We watched men with crude machinery grinding sugarcane, making hemp rope out of sisal plants, skillfully thatching roofs with palm leaves, ploughing with oxen, irrigating their fields, herding goats, sheep, cattle, pigs, horses, and turkeys. Often while thus engaged they work at making sombreros. We became so sunburned that we were glad to purchase these wide-brimmed hats, which sold for only 25c to $1.00 in our money.

We were interested in the methods of washing clothes. Many women do their washing together in streams. They use flat stones for washboards. At Tula we watched a young Indian woman washing a white shirt. She had a bucket of water but did not dip the shirt in the water. Probably water is scarce there. She would take a little water from the bucket with her hands, wash the shirt upon a large, flat stone, rinse and wring, then repeat the operation. Soon she had the shirt clean and white.

Our women insisted upon my asking her some questions. So I said, "Es usted casada?" (Are you married?) She replied, "Si, Señor." I asked, pointing to a fine looking young Indian, "Es él su marido?" (Is he your husband?) She replied again, "Si, Señor." Our women insisted upon my asking again, "Es

Mrs. Harold Velt with young Indian couple

¿está su casa?" (Is this your house?) We then had a nice visit with the couple. In answer to my question he told me there had been no rain since September. We secured beautiful color photographs of them, and they refused a tip for it. I had Sister Velt stand with them for a picture. The little Indian lady put her arm around my wife and leaned toward her affectionately. I have a perfect picture of that scene, among our many wonderful pictures, and there are none I prize more highly. After all, are not these descendants of Joseph our relatives? They are of Manasseh, we of Ephraim. Both Manasseh and Ephraim were sons of Joseph. A number of them seemed to sense an affinity for us, as did this couple, and as we did toward them. We will keep in touch with this young couple at Tula.

AT MITLA I was blessed with a spiritual experience. The guide, a full-blooded Zapotec Indian, was taking us from room to room of the Mitla buildings. His enunciation was so clear and distinct in Spanish that I could understand practically all without Harold Smith's interpretation. As I followed closely, I observed that his skin was very dark. I thought of the statement in Mormon 2: 44 (page 700):

For this people shall be scattered, and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people, beyond the description of that which ever hath been among us; yea, even that which hath been among the Lamanites.

On various occasions I had thought of the term "loathsome" as we used particular care in what we ate or drank, but regarding this man I felt that this did not apply so much as did the darkness of his skin. While I thus meditated, the manifestation of the Holy Spirit rested strongly upon me, and under that influence, I said in a low tone to Irvin Petz, who was close to me, "This man is a Nephite." We were all impressed at the respectful way he would doff his cap at the very mention of the name, "Benito Juarez." Benito Juarez, the best president Mexico ever had, was also a full-blooded Zapotec Indian. I will write more about him at a later date, for I regard him as one of the greatest men who ever lived. Brother Petz waited anxiously until I later explained the spiritual experience I had.

More than once, some member of our party would express surprise that so few of the Mexicans use tobacco. We saw some the worse for liquor. One fell and scratched his face badly on a dirty sidewalk. Their main drink is pulque made from the maguey plant. It is white in color like milk.

During our twenty-one days travel in Mexico, we were delighted to observe that practically no signs of moral looseness were in evidence. We often noticed a disposition of playfulness, sparring, wrestling, etc., always in good humor. Even the vendors, apparently so anxious to sell their wares, would take it good naturedly when another vendor would press in with his or her goods before the others. I noticed one woman had a hearty laugh at the expense of a boy who insisted on selling something to me. A number of times I had said, "No quiero, gracias!" (I don't want it thank you.) At last I said, "Muchacho, no entiende usted el español bueno?" (Boy, don't you understand good Spanish?) Perhaps her amusement was largely because I did not use good Spanish; but at least I had a lot of fun trying to talk it, and especially so because the Mexicans apparently are pleased to have you talk with them. They observe good manners. Evidently they have been trained not to speak until spoken to (except the vendors). But always there is a hearty response to "Buenas dias!" (Good morning!) "Buenas tardes!" (Good afternoon!) or "Buenas noches!" (Good night!) by children and older folks.

We occasionally found people who refused tips for favors. Upon one occasion we started something by giving United States pennies to children. Soon a crowd of youngsters gathered, which brought the guide's sharp reprimand in English, pleading with us, "Please, please, don't do that."

At Vera Cruz, from the hotel where we stayed, we observed the age-old Latin American custom of courting. They seemed to be predominantly Spanish rather than Indian, and every Sunday night they would promenade around the public square, the young men in one direction, the young women in the other. There is no "dating," for young people must not be together except with parents or guardians, until within a few weeks of marriage. Older people danced vigorously to orchestra music close by in the hotel square. Being three floors up, we had an advantageous place for viewing the whole proceedings. The noise of it kept our women from sleeping, but I found no difficulty in that regard since there was only limited time for sleeping on the tour.

The Church as Mediator in the World

1307, December 10, 1949) proclaims that the world is "in the middle of a race between human skill as to means and human folly as to ends." About the first half of that dilemma we have little to say, but about the second half we should assume a compelling position. We are the specialists on ends, since God chose us for Latter Day Saints. Russell sees the unchecked progress of present methods in the world achieving a new and denigrated stability only "at the cost of everything that gives value to human life." Nothing can produce stability in the world of the future but a world government, he goes on. Human experience no longer is a valuable aid since now it is so quickly outdated. Hence a world government possessing a monopoly of power but dedicated to a peace it can enforce, and preserving individual initiative in both work and play, with a diffusion of its power among its individual components is his desideratum. What else can he be talking of but the millennium, whose groundwork we must lay here, whose mason bees we are, whose hives we now plan. But we must be highly differentiated and skilled for that role. Let's set about it.

Spiritual Bearings

After more than thirty years of the practice of psychiatry, I have reached the conclusion that what is most needed by modern civilization is an enlargement of the spiritual life, an enhancement of universal insight. I find in the vast majority of my patients that, when all is said and done, the thing that is really wrong with them is that they have lost their spiritual bearings—they are suffering from a lack of that stabilization of personality which is dependent on a real religious experience.

QUESTION:

During the thousand years will Satan be bound so that no one will be tempted anywhere? Will there be people living outside of Zion who will be protected?

Missouri

Mrs. C. H.

ANSWER:

It appears that the bondage of Satan during the thousand-year reign will be complete and absolute.

And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.—Revelation 20: 3.

Doctrine and Covenants tells us, "And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man" (96: 5). ". . . Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men" (45: 10).

It seems that there are three conditions among the children of men during the thousand-year reign. There is Christ at the head of the immortal and resurrected beings who are his at his coming. Among these, marriage, family life, and rearing of children has no place, for theirs is a heavenly condition of which Jesus said, "For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven."—Matthew 22: 30.

There will also be Latter Day Saints living righteously in mortality and in family relations. "And their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he shall be their King and lawgiver."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

The same record supported by other Scripture teaches that there will be no burials during this period, ". . . nevertheless it is appointed unto him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but be changed in a twinkling of an eye."—Ibid. 63: 13. That there will be children during the thousand-year reign and that they will be translated, and be among the immortals and resurrected is supported by the following Scripture: Isaiah 11: 6, 8; Isaiah 65: 20, I.V.; Ezekiel 37: 25; Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5.

According to Zechariah 14, the destruction of those who fight against the people of God at the coming of Christ will not be complete. And of those who are left it says,

And it shall come to pass that everyone that is left of all the nations which come up against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of the tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.—Verses 16, 17.

In harmony with this, Doctrine and Covenants teaches that in the thousand-year reign, "And then shall the heathen be redeemed . . ."—45: 10. This redemption will be a growing process throughout the thousand years. The situation will be strategic for such work. At the center will be Christ, his throne, and the redeemed and resurrected people. Next will be his people in mortality, enjoying the gospel and the wonders of the earth during its rest, beauty, and power, when the Spirit of God will be over all things and in all things. Then out beyond will be the heathen nations, subjects of God's mercy and love. And so the glory of Christ centered in the earth radiates to his covenant people and from them to the heathen. Surely a marvelous and glorious condition, prophetic and preparatory for the new conditions after the final destruction of the heaven and earth when all things will be made new.

Jesus, the Opportunist

- By Lottie Clark Diggle

ALL THE MIRACLES of Jesus were performed with some great purpose in mind to further the building of the kingdom, to help the distressed, perhaps to teach a great lesson or to set an example. Never at any time did the Savior manifest his divine power for his own aggrandizement nor to be seen of men. Such was the case in perhaps his most spectacular miracle—the feeding of the five thousand with five loaves and two fishes.

When the twelve returned from their first missionary journey, Jesus, wishing to confer with them alone, led them to a desert place in the environs of the city of Bethsaida.

Hardly had they started to discuss the affairs of God's kingdom when a curious person espied the group afar off, informed his neighbors, and all made occasion to investigate the desert conference. Soon word was carried back to Bethsaida that Jesus of Nazareth, healer and worker of miracles, was in the vicinity. Like a snowball the crowd gathered and increased until five thousand men, women, and children milled about the Son of God. Many of the sick, blind, deaf, and lame solicited his compassion with the result that often the Great Healer paused in the telling of the story of the gospel to bring restored health and well-being to the unfortunate.

Through the blistering heat of a Palestine noon, Jesus held the attention of that vast concourse of people by the simple device of talking of those things with which they were familiar, the sowing of seed, attending a wedding, flowers growing by the wayside. When heat and hunger or the whimpering of little children diverted the attention of the women, he talked of patching worn garments or of sweeping the earthen floor in search of a lost treasure.

AN ORATOR who addresses a great throng today has the advantage of a loud speaker and an auditorium acoustically designed to magnify his voice. He is trained in articulation and the definite stressing of the final consonant. Yet the carpenter's son was heard with clarity by five thousand people as he spoke under the blue vault of heaven by the power of the spirit of the living God.

When the burning copper sun sank behind the Galilean hills and the stars came out one by one, the disciples of Jesus conferred among themselves. They were hungry and weary of the crowd. They longed for quiet and a chance to sit with the Master around a cheerful crackling fire while they ate. In a body they approached Jesus and demanded, "Master, send the multitude away that they may go into the towns and country round about and lodge and get victuals."

But the heart of the Son of God was moved with compassion for the children who cried for bread and for the multitude that hungered for the bread of life. Here was the opportunity of a lifetime. Such a chance might never come again. What would not a seventy in these latter days give for an audience of five thousand non-members eager to listen to the gospel story? Therefore Jesus, discerning the hearts of the people, disregarded the shortsighted suggestion of the twelve and commanded, "Give ye them to eat." —Luke 9: 13. "We have but five loaves and two fishes," replied the chagrined apostles.

JESUS THEN TOLD them to form the multitude into groups of fifty. When they were all seated, the Lord Jesus took in his hands the loaves and fishes and looking up to heaven, he called upon his Father, perhaps in this wise:

"Father, thou seest these weary, hungry people. Wilt thou bless and multiply this scanty supply so that each and every one may have his physical wants supplied, and wilt thou also grant to thine own Son the power to satisfy their spiritual hunger?"

As the apostles divided the meager supply of food among a hundred groups of fifty, they were amazed to discover that God, through his Son Jesus Christ, had given the increase, and each and all were filled to repletion. Jesus had yet another lesson to teach, that of economy. At his direction all the leftovers were collected and saved to the amount of twelve full baskets.

Their hunger satisfied, the little ones quit crying and fell asleep in their mothers' arms. There was no sound save the rich and resonant voice of the Messiah as he continued to expound the mysteries of the kingdom. There was no light save that of the stars and the radiant uplifted countenance of the Lord Jesus who knew neither hunger nor weariness nor heat nor cold when there were souls to be saved.

Life's Sunset - By Orrin R. Wilcox

IN DAILY BREAD for August 15, Chris B. Hartshorn tells of a man who took such great delight in watching the sunset that he had not missed seeing one in two years. He had developed such a great appreciation for sunsets that he "left the theater after having paid the admission charge and just when the picture was nearing its climax to see the sun set for the seven hundred thirtieth time."

There are few phenomena in nature more beautiful than an awe-inspiring sunset. He who has observed life's sunset—the later years of one who has learned to "grow old gracefully"—has had a view of the dawn of eternity.

There can be no period of life so filled with usefulness as "old age." When this period begins depends on the person. Some begin to grow old when young in years; some never grow old.

Thanks to a better understanding of the laws of health, modern methods of sanitation, and progress in methods of fighting and preventing diseases, the life span of man has almost doubled in the past fifty years, holding out the hope that with God's help man may yet eradicate the effects of sin in nature in preparation for immortality.

If you are prone to grieve because the years pass quickly and your hair turns gray, take a look at some glorious sunsets and fill your life with deeds of love and kindness. The old saying, "Life begins at forty," is out of date. We now say, "Life begins at eighty." Indeed, a large percentage of the world's best work has been done by older people.

Thorndike says the average age for producing masterpieces is forty-seven and four tenths years. Handel wrote The Messiah when he was fifty-six.

Haydn's best works came after fifty, and his "Creation" was done at fifty-seven. Giuseppe Verdi, Italian composer, wrote "Ave Maria" at eighty-five.

Higher schools of learning are now expanding to take care of older students whose minds are still young and eager for more knowledge and skill.

In the field of religion, Paul, the greatest missionary of all time, made his remarkable journeys after the half-century mark in life. The apostle of love wrote his Revelation when nearing the century mark.

And William Marks, at the age of seventy-one, was ordained counselor to Joseph Smith III.

Joseph Smith, "the mighty and strong," was president of the church for fifty-four years. His sunset was occupied in leading the Saints to Zion "with songs of everlasting joy." How glorious his sunset!

Briefs

HOOD RIVER, OREGON.—On June 3 and 4 an institute was held with District President Jack Verhei in charge assisted by Patriarch Barker, Miles Whiting, and Elven Chapman. Sister Royce Chapman taught the recently organized women's group. Many isolated Saints attended.

On Sunday a dinner was served in the newly-finished basement. There are new pews in the auditorium. Brother and Sister Dan Howes now live next door to the church and keep the church grounds in perfect condition.

Just prior to the institute, Brother Harry Howell made a sign for the church, and Brother Charles Gallehan made three signs and placed them on the three main highways leading into the city.

Brother and Sister Dooley and Mrs. F. McKeiv of Independence, Missouri, visited here on June 7. Brother Dooley related how finding the Hood River church was an answer to a prayer.

When the Liberty Bell recently visited the district, Sister Elaine Gallehan sang the national anthem and Brother Jim Dixon, the highest ranking Boy Scout in Hood River, rang the bell at the ceremonies.—Reported by MRS. ROY BRANSKY.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—The senior group of the women's department under the supervision of Mrs. Mary Proulx held their spring sale of knitted goods, needlework, shellcraft novelties, and home baking on April 29. There was a large window display. About $113.00 was realized from the effort.

Bishop Joseph Baldwin of Ontario was in Ottawa from May 17 to 21 and directed two discussion classes and preached two sermons.

Elder Jerald Stickley of Davidson, Michigan, formerly of Ottawa, spoke on May 29.

Evangelist Ben Hewitt and Elder J. L. Prentice, both of Toronto, were guests on June 4. Elder Prentice spoke at the Communion service in the morning. At the evening service Evangelist Hewitt was the speaker.

Squadron Leader and Mrs. Marven Diggle and their sons, Robin, 7, Brian, 5, and Marshall 2, are moving this month to Camp Borden, Ontario, where Squadron Leader Diggle is commanding officer of the Royal Canadian Air Force Technical Training School. OREGON DISTRICT.—The annual spring conference and convention was held May 5, 6, and 7 in the new church of the Camas Branch. There were approximately 350 in attendance from all over the district. Ernest Webberly is pastor of the Camas Branch.

Classes were taught and sermons preached by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Seventy Arthur Gibbs, and Elder Elwin Vest. Other teachers, leaders, and instructors were Mrs. Peggy Vest, Harold Carpenter, Effie Verhei, Carolyn Larson, and Leona Carpenter.

These pastors from district missions and branches were ordained elders: John McKee of Baker, John Rodley of Roseburg, and Raymond Huggett of Forest Grove.

The conference was saddened by the death of one of the district's most faithful members, Mrs. Helen Hoisington, wife of Elder Leonard Hoisington and mother of Alice Nelson and Helen Billings. She had been present in the morning Communion service. She was taken sick while sitting in the choir.

District institutes have been held over week ends at the following places during the year with exceptionally large attendance at each: Forest Grove, Vancouver, Longview, Hood River, Cottage Grove, Eugene, Salem, Estecada, Sweethome, Camas, and Myrtle Point. The instructors and leaders have been of the district officers and wives, and the missionaries and wives.

Evangelist E. R. Carter of Lansing was in Kalamazoo the week of May 21 to 28. He preached both Sundays and visited in the homes of the Saints during the week.

Paula Jean, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Carl Frederick, was blessed on May 28 by Evangelist Carter and Elder Harvey Pearce.

On the evening of April 30 a baptismal service was held at the church. Dixie Parker and Mary Lou Grabow from the Battle Creek Branch were baptized by the Battle Creek pastor, Edward R. Ashley. Just a month previous, Mrs. Grabow also was baptized.—Reported by MUIRL F. ROBINSON.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist Edward R. Carter from Lansing completed a series of evangelistic sermons on June 11. During the day time he visited the homes of the Saints. Baptismal services for ten people were held at Liahona Park Reunion grounds. Saints and friends met on Hill Top and with Pastor Jason Methner and Evangelist Carter in the lead, marched down the hill to the water's edge singing "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken." At the water's edge prayer was offered by the pastor, and Evangelist Carter spoke briefly to the candidates and others. The confirmation took place at the evening service in the Coleman church with Elders Pendleton and Seymour from the Beaverton Branch assisting. Elder Burton of the Coleman Branch officiated in baptizing the candidates.—Reported by RAY MOGG.

You Should Have Been There

Home

June 26, 1950.

Dear Roberta,

I am just now getting to my correspondence after our church school, music workshop at Graceland. Now I look at the calendar, I see I have been in a real tangle—the workshop ended two weeks ago—June 11. It began June 5. We were there an entire week, you know—and what an inspiring week! I wish you could have been there.

Some of us on the staff went up on Sunday to set up shop and catch a quick breath before registration early Monday. We began at 9:15 the next morning with two registrants from Illinois and one from Arizona. Then about 10:30 here they came—from everywhere—California, Montana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Arizona, Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Kansas, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Illinois (have I forgotten any?)—and Zion! Seventy-six registered in all.

First we had lunch (the food was so good all week that by Saturday night almost everyone rather hesitantly mentioned gaining two or three pounds). Then at our opening session in the Student Center (the newest building on the campus) President Wallace Smith; E. J. Gleazer, president of Graceland; Franklyn S. Weddle, director of Music and Radio; Apostle Reed Holmes, director of Religious Education, shared the hour in speaking. Brethren Weddle and Holmes were the directors of the workshop. Then an informal reception (the friendly, chatty kind) and off to dinner. After dinner we launched right into classes, and from then on we worked! I don't know when I have experienced a more stimulating, intensive week. The classes were varied and practical. Every morning we had a half-hour worship, planned by a different group each day according to the principles learned in the evening class, "Principles and Procedures of Public Worship." Then at night we would evaluate the worship—discuss its good and bad points. Right after our morning worship period we had a combined class and then subdivided into specialized groups. In the church school classes there were demonstrations. Some teachers told stories with flannelgraphs; others showed films. There were many interesting methods described. Over in the music section we sang anthems, heard demonstrations by a children's choir, and listened to organists play the best in worship materials.

That's the way it went all week from 8:30 in the morning until 12:05, time out for lunch, and then back for two more classes from 1:30 to 3:20. You might think that all would have been so worn out that by free time (3:30-5:30) they would have crawled over to the dorm (we all stayed in Walker Hall—the girls' big dorm on the campus) and flopped right down. But we had a surprise. Some of the trainees asked for private conferences during that time, and still others asked to see films. One day a group of fifteen showed up for an unscheduled class at 5:30. The staff certainly appreciated the fact that the trainees were there for work. They were in dead earnest about the whole thing. They listened attentively in all the classes and were alert with questions. It was one of the finest "student bodies" I have seen.

I don't want you to think we worked all the time. We had fun, too. One night we had a campfire around the fireplace in the Student Center; another time we went roller skating; and then Saturday night we finished with the most hilarious banquet I have ever attended. (Oh, it had its serious moments, too.) Sunday we closed with an impressive dedication service and a stimulating sermon by President F. Henry Edwards. Then another of those "I shouldn't but I will" dinners and off for home.

But so far all you have heard about the workshop has been strictly from a staff member's point of view. I wish you could have experienced the enthusiasm of the trainees. All week on the campus we heard: "This workshop as a whole has been a wonderful experience in my life. Many of the things discussed here have been very enlightening and have taught me more fully how to worship and how to help create a worship for others. I think it has been well worth while to spend a week of my vacation here, and I hope we can have more of these workshops in the future."

"I feel, however, that every pastor and as many members of the priesthood as possibly could attend should have been present. It has been a high light of my life. I am grateful for it."

See what you missed? You should have been there, Roberta. Try to make it next year.

Yours,

ALETA RUNKLE.

"More Things Are Wrought By Prayer . . ."

By Jennie Elliott

(Miss Elliott is a resident of the Catherine Hale Home for the Blind, 2918 Tracy Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.)

MY GRANDMOTHER taught me to pray almost in my baby days. So I have always talked to my Heavenly Father to tell him of my needs, just as I used to talk to my earthly parents about the things I wanted. Since my prayers had so often been answered, I thought I knew how to pray, but I didn't. It has taken a serious illness to teach me.

It was on the Sunday morning of January 15 this last winter that I awoke with the knowledge that I could not walk, talk, or swallow as I should. Before long my back, entire left side, and throat were paralyzed. I was frightened. What should I do? I didn't want to remain a burden on the people who care for me here at the home. I decided I just had to get well.

In my panic I suddenly remembered a bit of Scripture: "Be still and know that I am God." So it was in the stillness of those hours and days of waiting that I really learned to pray. It was then that I came to know the true depth and power of prayer. But I was not left to pray alone. No sooner was my need made known than the good people of the church and my friends at the home joined together in united prayer for me. Most comforting of all were the times when Pastor Herbert Lively came to administer to me or to pray at my bedside.

God often needs loving hearts and willing hands through which to answer prayer. So it was in my case. Mrs. Silver and Mrs. Cockrill of the home staff and Sister Martin of Central Church cared for me during the long days and nights of my convalescence. So efficient was their nursing that, as by a miracle, in less than three weeks' time I could walk a little by holding on to things. Exactly three weeks after the stroke, I could swallow well enough to take Communion. Since then my recovery has been steady. I can now attend to all my personal needs myself and am able to go to church for three services on Sunday as well as prayer meeting on Wednesday night. I still am in need of prayer, however, that I may become wholly well. I am lame, and at times I find it difficult to speak and swallow. I have faith that I shall be completely healed, for truly "more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

The Word of Wisdom - Part III

By Florence Sanford Ourth

Nevertheless, wheat for man—Doctrine and Covenant 86

A hungry, undernourished people are a half sick people, physically, mentally, and spiritually. They are the real menace to our republic. Through their apathy, their ignorance, their lack of intelligence, their stunted social judgment (conscience), their sexual immaturity, and their emotional instability, they are an easy prey for the psychopathic compatriots among the professions, politicians, and labor leaders. Of such are bloody revolutions and wars made. Therefore let us quit quarreling about details and get down to fundamentals. A sound nutritional program for all, based upon a sound and prosperous agriculture . . . will keep our people free and save our Republic.—Jonathan Forman, M.D., Ohio State Medical Journal.

THIS QUOTATION appeared at the beginning of an article, "The Word of Wisdom and Modern Research," by May Elliot which appeared in the Herald for May 30, 1948.

Satan would like for everyone to be in a half-sick condition—physically, mentally, and spiritually—and he will do all in his power to bring this about.

When God created us he made our bodies of many elements. But with every breath we take, every move we make, every thought we think, we use up some of these elements, and we must replace them if we are to maintain health.

God has made provision for this by putting these same elements in the foods he created and ordained for our use.

But Satan has put it in the hearts of "conspiring men" to tamper with our food, removing certain substances God put there for our needs. In the very beginning of Doctrine and Covenants 86 we are told:

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation.

Here in America, a land of abundance, "hidden hunger" and "malnutrition" are familiar words. Our foods are refined, denatured, devitalized, dehydrated, and bleached. Too many of the health-giving qualities of our cereal foods are discarded in the milling of flour, polishing of rice, pearling of barley, refining of rye, and degerminating of corn.

In twenty million households, three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days each year, a table is spread. Whether that table is set in a mansion or hovel, whether loaded or simple, one food is nearly always present—bread made from the grain which should be our staff of life. Undoubtedly this is the reason our flour has been a special target of Satan. For from white flour has been taken three fourths of the mineral salts, including calcium, phosphorus, iron, potassium, chlorine, sulphur, magnesium, manganese, and a large portion of the vitamins.

DR. ROYAL LEE, president of the Lee Foundation for Nutritional Research at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, says:

Until sixty years ago bread was made from locally ground wheat. Then the milling industry became centralized, mass production methods were instituted, bleaching was invented to improve keeping qualities of flour, and the downhill trend of public health began that would have been far more obvious had not medical discoveries and improvements in sanitary science offset in considerable degree the otherwise astonishing increase in death rates from diseases now attributed to mineral and vitamin deficiency. . . . But modern advertising science works to keep people in the dark and keep the dollars flowing into the coffers of the makers of devitalized, "foodless" foods. In Canada, an honest administration has obtained the passage of a law prohibiting the adulteration of wheat flour or bread with any synthetic substance. . . . The Canadian law says that if a high vitamin bread is to be sold it must contain the original vitamins of the wheat and not an imitation. . . . Enriched flour is so called because a few synthetic factors are added to replace several times as many natural factors.

When we set ourselves to remedy these deficiencies in our food that we might have perfect bodies, Satan does his utmost to discourage us; to keep us from finding "wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures"; to keep us from being able to "run and not be weary and walk and not faint." These are the very qualities that will be so necessary in this hastening time with our stupendous task of evangelizing the world and redeeming Zion.

Perhaps you will be discouraged because whole grain breads and cereals do not appeal to the appetite of your family. Again I quote from May Elliot's article:

Some do not have an appetite for whole grain breads or cereals; some do not like fruits or vegetables or other articles of wholesome natural food. You can satisfy your appetite, and your body can still be hungry—even starving—for certain elements you do not crave or have not learned to like. An adult can learn to like foods just as a baby can—by tasting a little every day and deliberately setting himself the task of learning to enjoy the article in question. Dr. A. C. Ivy, M.D., Ph.D., vice-president of the University of Illinois Professional Colleges and head of the Department of Clinical Science, says: "I should like to point out and emphasize how the bad features of appetite predispose to poor nutrition, to disease, and make food more expensive. . . . Food fads and fancies and commercially produced food appetites may lead to nutritional deficiencies and poor health. In some instances the appetite has been so modified by custom that people have been led to prefer a food with the vitamins and minerals refined out of it to the natural food. For example, the appetite of most of us has been so trained that we absurdly demand that the flour be refined to such an extent that we have to add minerals and vitamins to make the flour a desirable food. . . . Our nutritional problems arise chiefly from our appetites and arise in the presence of plenty. They are due to the undisciplined and pampered appetites and to appetites for unnatural foods created for taste and eye appeal, both of which contribute to the waste and cost of food."

PERHAPS YOU HAVE BEEN DISCOURAGED with your bread-baking. If you find your loaves dry out too fast, add more honey—one fourth cup or more to the recipe—and they will stay moist longer. If you can buy the honey from a beekeeper, you will find it much more economical than in the little jars at the grocery store. Your bread may have a tendency to fall during the baking process. Do not let it raise as high as white bread, or else make the dough a bit stiffer. Some feel results are better if they let the dough raise twice, stirring it down after the first raising and letting it come up again.

Here is a recipe for rolls that are lighter than bread rolls. They are my "company rolls." I often put them in pans in the refrigerator overnight, then take them out in time to raise and bake the next morning. The same recipe can also be made into a loaf.

1½ cups of milk	1½ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons shortening	1 egg beaten
4 tablespoons honey or sugar	1 cake yeast
4 cups whole wheat flour

Scald milk, add shortening, honey, and salt. Let cool to lukewarm and add yeast which has been dissolved in a little warm water and honey. Stir in two cups of whole wheat flour, add beaten egg, then remainder of flour. If too sticky add more flour. Cover and let raise in warm place until double in bulk. Turn out on floured board, form into rolls, roll in melted shortening, let raise and bake in hot oven, 425°.

Bread raises best at 80 degrees, which makes a problem on hot summer days. Then it raises faster and needs to be baked sooner.

Bread-making troubles may be due to difficulty in getting the right kind of flour. Recently one of our group, Brother Harold Smith, bought a small electric mill with stone buhrs. It grinds very slowly so the natural oils are preserved. It grinds a fine flour that can be used for pancakes, cookies, gingerbread, and some cakes. A home grinder has the advantage of giving you freshly ground flour as you need it, for the vitamins in wheat and other grains become oxidized in a few days and freshness is the only guard to wholesomeness. The flavor of whole wheat changes day by day after grinding, like coffee. The finer it is ground the faster the loss of vitamins. Brother Smith has been experimenting with different varieties of wheat. Hard wheat is necessary for good bread, but even hard wheat varies. Some varieties make very good bread, while others do not. Brother Elbert Tripp tells us that the University of Illinois recommends "Rival" and "Pilot" the best as kinds for bread-making. Brother and Sister John Coggan, while visiting Nauvoo, remarked that the bread baked from this home-ground flour is much like the bread they make in England from "whole wheat meal."

THE FOLLOWING EXPERIENCES may prove encouraging. I told them to my family one morning along with Daily Bread in our worship service.

Over in Mesopotamia during World War I a detachment of English soldiers and their East Indian allies, when cut off by the Turks, took refuge in a mud-walled town. There they were besieged for months. Water and flour were plentiful—white flour for the English soldiers, and coarse whole wheat for the natives, but their other supplies were used in a week. And then a remarkable thing happened: by two's and three's at first, then by scores, the English soldiers showed symptoms of polyneuritis. At first they were unable to stand or walk, then their respiration was affected. Finally general paralysis set in. On the other hand, the Indian troops, who ate only coarse whole wheat flour, remained in perfect health. The medical officers could not understand it until someone suggested the white flour might be responsible. They changed the white flour for whole wheat flour for the troops and the disease disappeared.

Jim Enright's Story

There comes a time in the life of almost everyone when serious illness enters. Often a dangerous operation is required. It is then, perhaps for the first time, people become interested in how to keep well, how to keep the body functioning as it should to insure a healthy, hearty, happy life. It was so in my case.

I Was Well and Happy!

I took a job as a traveling salesman when I was thirty years of age. I covered all of one state and part of another. That was back in the horse and buggy days, and in those days stores opened at six in the morning and stayed open sometimes as late as ten o'clock at night. The hours were long; the work was hard; but I was on the job when they opened, and many times I got an order at closing time. It was a hard grind for one who traveled from town to town selling merchandise. I spent nine years at this work, and the vigorous exercise kept me in splendid condition; in fact, I was about as well as a man could be.

Promotion Came to Me!

Then, one day, the thing which most men strive for came my way. I was promoted to a position which, at the time, was too big for me, but it was a great opportunity. With right good will, I tackled this big job with all I had. At first it was only one job, but, in a short time, it grew into four. I became General Manager of two flour mills and president of two others. It was all office work, the hours from seven in the morning until far into the night, and you may be sure I put everything I had into it for two of the hardest working years of my life.

Health Not So Good

The great change I had made undermined my health, but I didn't take it seriously and continued on the job.

After a couple of years of this strain, I was in bad shape—so bad in fact that the last word from my wife on leaving for the office every morning was, "Go straight to the doctor," and when I got home that night, she would greet me with, "Did you see the doctor?" For a long time I paid no attention to it, because I couldn't think of anything the doctor could do for me—but, in the end, I had to come to it, and so, one day, I decided to see a doctor. I found I would have to undergo four different operations.

I Become Frightened

After supper that same night I took a train for Portland, Oregon, to see my mother before passing on—as I was sure the four operations would finish me.

I arrived in Portland in the fruit season and there was fruit everywhere. I was always fond of it, consequently I had fruit for breakfast, fruit for luncheon, and fruit for dinner, and not a little between meals. After three weeks of this I was feeling somewhat better.

Then I received a telegram to go at once to Boston. We had a branch in Boston where we wholesaled our flour on a substantial scale. The man in charge was found short some $30,000. It is a long ride from Portland to Boston. It was hot, and when I arrived in Boston I was nearer dead than alive and wondering which of my troubles would be the one to finish me.

More Bad Luck—or Is It Good?

To make a long story short, I couldn't see that we were going to get much of the $30,000, so I decided to sell the Boston business. I found a buyer, a young man who desired to enter business and whose father was a retired medical chemist with ample means to finance his son. I was invited to spend a week end at their summer home at Annisquam on the Atlantic Coast, so thither we journeyed that Saturday afternoon.

The father was about seventy-five years of age and as dour and distant as any of the old-school Bostonians, but at dinner that night he proved to be a congenial and wonderful host. We became better acquainted as we chatted, and the evening wore on. Every once in a while I would catch him looking at me fixedly and I thought perhaps he was trying to figure out how far he could trust me. After breakfast Sunday morning he invited me to see what he called his private club. It was a cozy place, with easy restful chairs, two billiard tables, hunting trophies, and in a rack at one side of the main room rested 27 rifles. Every kind in the world, it seemed to me: French, English, German, American, etc. I had been somewhat of a rifle lover in my early youth and was much interested as he told me many a hunting story.

Again I caught him looking steadily at me, and, after an apology, he asked if I were not considerably under normal weight. I replied that I was forty-five pounds underweight, that my temperature had been two to three degrees subnormal for months. He asked me to tell him all about it, so I told him what I knew, including the four operations I should have had.

He did not even smile. I said, "You were a physician in your early life, were you not, Doctor? What would you advise me to do?" He said, "I was a physician until I took up chemistry. You told me last night that your mills grind 10,000 bushels of wheat per day. Do you happen to know the chemistry of wheat?" I replied that I knew it only as it related to making bread.

Another Diagnosis

He continued, "Now that I have your story, I think doctor was right! Your system is so loaded with poison that you are probably dying of blood poison! I am not practicing medicine now, so I am not going to offer any advice."

"But, Doctor, if you were in my place, would you submit to the four operations?" I asked. He replied, "If I were in your place, I would go home and eat my own wheat and for a month at least I wouldn't eat anything else except, perhaps, a glass of milk at each meal."

I asked how I could fix the wheat to make it edible. He told me to grind it and make bread or muffins of it, but not, under any circumstances, to mix in any other flour with it. I was an experienced operator in the milling business and I certainly thought this could not be done. I didn't know a lot about chemistry, but I thought I knew about milling. I explained it to him, or tried to, and his only reply was, "Very well, then, boil it, cook it that way, but eat wheat."

His advice interested me because of his standing as a medical chemist, and I asked him to tell me more about it—why I should eat wheat alone. He replied that wheat contains every element that your body contains when it is in health. He said, "You will assimilate these elements and be restored to health."

I Find a Cure

So I went home and procured and cleansed a bushel of the best wheat that I could buy, and for the next month my wife kept busy cooking wheat for me. I ate it every day and soon I was feeling remarkably better. Before the month was up, I felt that I had a new lease on life, felt as I used to feel before I went into the office.

I believe this is the best food God ever gave to mankind.

J. C. ENRIGHT.

THEN THERE IS THE STORY of Norman Allish that I heard Brother Ray Whiting tell several years ago. I was so impressed with it that I recently wrote and asked for the story; he in turn wrote to Sister Allish now of White Horse, Yukon Territory, so that I might get all the details. Brother Whiting tells of holding a series of meetings in Canada and being invited to the home of Sister Robert Allish. As he went in he could not help noticing the many trophies around. "I must be in the home of a champion," he exclaimed. "Yes, you are," Sister Allish replied, and told the remarkable story of her son, Norman, and the Word of Wisdom.

Norman had never been strong. As a baby he nearly died of dysentery, and a few months later he contracted whooping cough and bronchitis. As he grew up, he was afflicted with terrible headaches. Later he suffered a knee injury that kept him in bed for months at a time. He was thin and sickly. If it had not been for God's blessings through administration and his mother's care he would never have lived. The doctor particularly told her that he must have good food, and this she tried to give him. Norman was seventeen when he came home one day and said he had decided to become a champion swimmer. He was much in earnest about it and took his training quite seriously, conscientiously getting his required amount of sleep, holding strictly to a training diet taking deep breathing out in the air in cotton shorts even when it was ten below zero. In the meantime Sister Allish, remembering that the doctor had said he must have good food, studied the Word of Wisdom. She had never let him have tea or coffee, but now she ground their own wheat for porridge in the morning and made cakes of it for dinner at noon. They ate vegetables, fruit, milk, and not too much meat—none in hot weather. Norman continued to gain strength. It was during the depression years, and he could not afford a change of climate for training or even the price at the Y. M. C. A. pool. The river was the cheapest place to swim. There he would practice, swimming a mile at a time in all kinds of weather, even swimming in the river with ice floating on the top. Finally the day came for the contests, and he entered for the two-mile race. He won, coming out of the water nonfatigued. Since then he has won many other races.

At the recent General Conference we had the great pleasure of meeting Norman and his wife, Beatrice, and one of their four daughters. They are now living at Vancouver, British Columbia, where he has established his own business and has been ordained recently to the office of teacher. He told us some of the spiritual experiences he has had—blessings that have come because of his observance of the Word of Wisdom. He related his experiences of taking up swimming, realizing that it was necessary to do something about his physical condition. He remembers well how his mother fed him, particularly how she ground the wheat for their breakfast and made cakes of it for their dinner. In fact, he said wheat was their main diet as they were on relief at the time and could not afford much. Sometimes she would get a soup bone to cook with vegetables, or some fruit and milk. But with this simple diet and his training he was able to set records in Canadian swimming, some of which still stand.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Randall of Independence, Missouri, observed their golden wedding anniversary on June 10 by holding open house. They were married at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, but shortly thereafter moved to Ludington, Michigan, where they resided until 1941 when they came to Independence. It was in Michigan on December 31, 1912, that both Mr. and Mrs. Randall (the former Wilhelmina Julia Heilman) were baptized into the Reorganized Church. Brother Randall was first ordained a teacher and then an elder, serving for several years as pastor of the Ludington Branch. Sister Randall has served as branch secretary and friendly visitor. They have two children: a son, J. L. Randall, of Independence and a daughter, Mrs. Glenn H. Foster, of Lansing, Michigan.

News and Notes

VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL

The sixteen congregations of Independence held their summer sessions of Vacation Church School during the first two weeks in June. Elder Clair Green was pastor, and Mrs. Violet Sackman was supervisor.

The total enrollment was 1,565, an increase of 290 over last year. The faculty enrollment was 324, an increase of 36 over last year.

The training school for these sessions was held May 1 to 6 at Liberty Street Church. The enrollment for the school was 174, an increase of 45 over last year.

SUMMER SERVICES

Sunday evening church services for all the congregations in Independence are being held on the Campus. The first speaker of the summer was Elder Russell F. Ralston of Salt Lake City, Utah, a president of the Seventy, who spoke on the subject, "The Just God of the Restoration." The theme for the meetings, beginning with the June 18 meeting and continuing to the September 17 meeting, is "We Witness for Christ in the Restoration."

PLACE OF HONOR

Claire Weddle was selected to be a member of the small orchestra that furnished musical accompaniment for the noted singer, Mack Harrell, during his recitals at the University of Kansas City Playhouse on June 15.

Claire received the national Arion Award for Band when he was recently graduated from the Independence high school, and played the oboe at the recitals.

FIVE OUT OF SIX

Every year the American Legion of Missouri sponsors a "Boys' State" in which a number of selected high school boys are given an opportunity to learn about the government in a practical way. The 484 boys attending "Boys' State" are approved by high school authorities and sponsored by various civic organizations. Of the six boys selected from the Independence high school, three of them, Charles Hield, R. L. Coberly, and Jerry Sherman, are church members, and Gary Bergen and K Curtis are active Zion's League members.

NAME OMITTED

In the May 22 issue of this column was an article about young church members of the Independence high school. Among the names of R. O. T. C. officers listed in the second paragraph should have been the name of George DeLapp, son of Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp.

NATIONAL WINNER

Mary Lou Branem, fifteen-year-old daughter of Clarence F. Branem, of Kirtland, Ohio, received second place in a national safety poster contest. Besides receiving an award, she appeared on a Cleveland television broadcast.

FIRST AGAIN

Of all the hospitals in the Greater Kansas City area, the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital has the lowest mortality rating. The mortality rate for the hospitals of the area ranges from 1.9 to 3.4. The rate for the Sanitarium is 1.9.

Action Needed

I was impressed by Leonard Lea's editorial, "Action Please," in the May 29 issue of the Herald. It is not good to spend too much time day-dreaming. Wishful thinking inspires a lethargy from which it is difficult to emerge. A reasonable amount of time is required for successful planning, but unnecessary talking about plans may consume the energy needed to carry out a project.

I remember that Apostle E. J. Gleazer said in one of the General Conference prayer services that each member should seek to do the Father's work by serving those about him. May we take time to study and improve our talents, then consecratedly work together with God to fulfill his design for us.

Appreciates "Daily Bread"

I subscribed for Daily Bread soon after it was placed on the market. I find that it strengthens me for my work in the home, and I have also found inspiration in it while a patient in the hospital. I read it early each morning. I think that the theme, "Serve Where You Are," can apply to patients, too. Being co-operative and appreciative can help the one who is sick as well as helping the nurses and doctors. While in the Sanitarium I received both a physical and a spiritual blessing after being administered to by Chaplain Don Lents.

A Divine Healing

While renewing my subscription to the Saints' Herald, I feel that I should add my testimony, since God has blessed me so wonderfully in the past year. Twice he has healed my body, once when I was so seriously ill that several doctors who were with me told my folks they had no hope I would live through the night. For years I had had high blood pressure, and a soreness in my abdomen. I had been administered to and had been helped for a while, but the sickness always came back.

About a year ago as I sat at the dinner table I suddenly became so ill I could not hold up my head nor lift my hands. I whispered to my husband and daughter to get me to my bed. As I felt my whole body relax I thought my time to die had come. My husband and daughter called the other children. One son lived quite a distance away, and I prayed that I might live till he could get home. The pain left me and I thanked God for being so good to me.

A neighbor woman took me to St. Charles. When the doctor saw me he told the children who were already at the hospital that he had no hope for me to last through the night. I was given a hypodermic and slept without pain. My son came early in the morning. He talked to me for about half and hour and when he left I thanked God and waited for the end. After a long while I heard voices. One said, "She is asleep." I opened my eyes and saw Brother and Sister O'Bryan. I told her, "I am going to die, Sister O'Bryan, but it's all right. I am ready to go." Then Brother O'Bryan asked if I would like for him to administer to me. I said, "Yes." When he anointed my head with oil and put his hands on my head I felt a perfect peace. After the administration I opened my eyes and said, "The pain is all gone." Sister O'Bryan kissed me and said, "You are going to get well. You have not finished your work here yet." I slept for three hours and when I awoke I knew I was well.

When my sister came into the room I told her what had happened. She told me of a dream she had had the night before in which she saw the obstruction that had caused my sickness and how it had been removed.

When the doctors came in, they examined me and said, "You are well." They were amazed at my sudden recovery and attributed it to the new drug they had used.

Now I am able to do all my work and feel well most of the time, although I still have high blood pressure. I can't thank God enough for his many blessings to me. It is my desire to do whatever work he has for me to do. I ask the prayers of all the Saints.

Missionary Teacher

A member of our branch teaches school up in a little community near Whitehorse and Three Fingers Mountains, north of Everett, Washington. Her name is Josie Clark, and she has been a member for three years.

A small house, situated on the school grounds, gives Sister Josie a comfortable place for her and her daughter, Anna Maria, to live. There are no busses, so all her visiting is done on foot or through the kindness of neighbors who share their automobiles. She teaches the first three grades and is dearly loved by her pupils. Because she has been unable to attend her own branch, she has gone to the little country church of mixed denominations. On Mother's Day the pastor was speaking of "chosen mothers," and among those mentioned was Josie Clark. He said that citizens of the community were happy to have a Christian mother as a teacher for their children and presented her with a lovely potted plant.

Then Sister Josie wrote and invited Brother Elliott Gilberts, pastor of Everett Branch, and all the Saints to come up to her school for a picnic followed by services in the late afternoon. The next Sunday she attended the little country church and invited all to come to hear her pastor. She obtained permission from the superintendent to hold a service in the school building.

After the picnic we had a nice visit before Sister Josie rang the school bell telling all her neighbors it was time to come. Many of her friends came. Brother Gilberts showed the slides, "I Will Build My Church," and explained them to these good people. There was community singing and several solos preceding the illustrated lecture. Those in attendance spoke highly of Sister Josie, and they want her back to teach next year. We of Everett congregation were invited to come again.

During the school year she has taught the boys and girls prayers and songs and told them Bible stories, which is greatly appreciated by the parents. She cannot help doing this as it is so much a part of her. May God bless her in her work.

Report on Phoenix Vacation Church School

At the end of the first week of vacation church school we look forward to the second week with happy anticipation. The work was started under handicaps, and we almost decided not to have the school because so few people were able to help. However, under the capable supervision of our church school director, pastor, and principals, a staff of teachers was finally assembled. Some of the workers are young, but they are giving excellent service. We all have been blessed in our early devotional services and have felt the help of the Holy Spirit throughout the day. The children have been happy, co-operative, and reverent, and many are responding in their prayer and testimony meetings. We are grateful for the material provided in Stepping Stones to Zion. To others who are hesitant to start a vacation church school we offer our encouragement. With a little sacrifice, devotion, and divine help any group can do it.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

In the Line of Duty - By Sue Thoman

MAMA WAS A LADY—all five feet of her—and when she announced during the soup course at dinner that she was going to work, Papa sputtered so that Danny lifted his napkin in a protective gesture. Mama continued to ladle out bowls of thick lemony soup and never changed her expression. “You know there is a war,” she announced, “and every ci-ti-zan must do his duty!”

“Yes,” Papa was still blustering, “but didn’t you give ten pints of blood to the Red Cross?”

“Pooh—that! I go to work in a war plant. No use arguing. I start tonight!”

It was 1942, and women had been forming a steady line to the war plants. It was like Mama to see her duty there. It was as Papa said, she had given blood to the Red Cross, organized several Red Cross units, and sent food and clothing overseas. But this, no one in the family had expected her to do. Since the Petrovics had come from Armenia during the last war, Mama had occupied herself solely with church and women’s work.

It was Danny, the eldest, who broke the silence. “But, Mama, you’re too fat to work in a war plant.”

“Then I reduce!” Mama stated flatly.

“Those extra fifty pounds you’re carrying around won’t be easy to lose!”

“Danny, don’t be insolent,” Papa admonished.

All the children tried to tease Mama out of her new venture, but she was adamant.

“I give up,” Papa said, throwing up his hands, “Your Mama—she make up her head—no use talking!”

THE PETROVICS were in modest means. Papa was pastor of the Armenian Orthodox Church, and his salary was adequate. There were six children. The two youngest were in high school. The three older children were married, and Michael was in the army. Danny and his wife lived at home.

Here Is the Writer

SUE THOMAN is a graduate of the University of Chicago. A busy homemaker and mother of four children, she still finds time to be a leader of a church group, parent-education chairman of the P. T. A., and a member of the Stone Church choir.

She is a comparatively new member of the church, having been baptized in Chicago in 1944.

The family moved to Independence in 1945, and both she and her husband John never cease to marvel at the increasing avenues of activity to be found here.

“Rosa, she can help with the house. I be up in time to cook your dinner, Papa,” Mama said as if the problem were all settled.

“But our friends—our neighbors—what they think? A minister’s wife working—” Papa’s voice trailed off into a sigh.

“They won’t know about it—I work night!”

“Nights!” sixteen-year-old Rosa cried, “why, Mama, you’re always telling me not to stay out nights, and here—”

“This is diff-runt!” and she smoothed her black hair back from her face and smiled at her youngest. “Your Papa, he take me to work, and it be daylight when I come home.” With that she ate the rest of her dinner in silence—stuffed grape leaves, tossed salad, torte dessert, and demitasse cups of Oriental coffee.

Papa finished his dinner, sat back, clasped his hands solemnly and eyed Mama. “It will be all right, Mama,” he said, “if you don’t try to change everybody down there.”

“Change! I no change anybody—I mind my own business.”

“I know what Pop means. If there’s anybody down there you think isn’t doing his duty as a citizen, you’ll change him, all right,” Danny said laughing.

IN A FEW WEEKS the Petrovics adjusted themselves as best they could to Mama’s working, but there were days when it took much courage and some quick thinking to keep up the deception. Many times it looked as if Mama would have to admit to her acquaintances that she was working. When an old friend from St. Louis visited one week, she almost caught Mama coming home from work. Mama had just let herself in one morning, but when she saw her friend, she backed into the doorway and made it appear that she was just leaving the house. The fact that it was too early for the stores to be opened never occurred to her, and her friend was too sleepy to question it.

And there were other times when Mama wondered whether it was worth it because Rosa wanted to stay out later than she should, and Papa could not control her. But Mama had a serious talk with her, after which she promised to come home earlier.

IT WAS THE WOMEN with whom Mama worked, however, that presented the biggest problem. They seemed to resent her because she was a foreigner. Mama only wanted to do her duty, as she called it, and had no time for the pettiness and plant politics of which many of the women were guilty at the time. She was friendly with all her co-workers but they eyed her suspiciously because of her concentration on her work. She caught on quickly to her duties and spent very little time in idle conversation.

New Horizons

Things moved along smoothly for awhile, but one day there was much excitement when Sadie Miller caught her hand in the power machine, and blamed Mama for it. Mama had warned her to be careful, but Sadie had deliberately edged closer, goading Mama. Just then the foreman had come by, and in her hurry to return to her own machine, Sadie stumbled and caught her hand in Mama's machine; but Mama had almost anticipated it and immediately turned off the emergency switch.

When the plant doctor took Sadie to the hospital, Mama insisted on going along. Between spells of quiet tears, Mama prayed fervently, eyes tightly closed. The hospital corridor was empty and cold, and when a nurse approached her, her shadow fell along the stone floor like an impending ghost. Mama sat there until daylight, her face tear stained, her handkerchief in shreds. She had closed her eyes again in prayer when the door opened and the doctor came out. When he approached her, she arose quickly and grasped his sleeve. "Sadie," she whispered, "she no die?"

"No," the doctor answered quietly, "she has a badly crushed hand, but, thanks to you, she'll be all right. She will need another transfusion soon, and we will have to have blood donors for her, but she will pull through. Right now it is mostly shock."

"Why, I give blood many times to the Red Cross. I give my blood gladly," and she raised her sleeve as if expecting the doctor to make the transfusion right then and there.

"No, not now," the doctor smiled. "You go home and get some rest and tonight before you return to work you come in and we will see how everything is. You had better come along now and I will drive you home." And the doctor guided Mama gently out of the hospital and into his car.

Mama did not sleep that day, but baked all the delicacies that her sugar ration coupons would permit. Then she went to the hospital during the afternoon visiting hours to see Sadie. Sadie was asleep and the nurse wouldn't let Mama see her, but she took the package and promised to give it to her the minute she awoke. Mama thanked her, left the hospital, and hurried home to fix the family's dinner.

MAMA AND ROSA were doing dishes when the phone rang and the nurse at the hospital told Mama that Sadie Miller was asking for her. Papa took her there. When she entered the room, her fears subsided for Sadie was sitting up in bed, although her hand was all bandaged.

"Sadie," Mama said timidly, "you all right?"

"Sure, I'm all right," Sadie laughed, "Doc says I'll be fine. In a few days I can go home. I'll have to keep the cast on my hand for awhile, but my unemployment check will take care of me. You know, Mama, I want to apologize to you. I was mean to you, but you never lost your temper with me. You should hate me!"

"Hate you? — Oh, no!" Mama said, "I hate nobody."

"Yes, you should. I tried to make out like you were to blame because you were so conscientious about your work. I thought you were trying to get in good with the foreman so that you could get my job."

"Oh, no!" Mama's expression was one of dismay.

"But I know better now, Mrs. Petrovic—you're just a better American citizen than I or any of the other women down there. We don't try to see how much we can do, but how little."

"Oh, Sadie, you make mistake. You are a good ci-ti-zan, too, or you no work down there in such a respon-si-ble job," Mama smiled.

Mama left soon after, a warm glow of happiness shining in her dark eyes. She had made a new conquest — she had made a new American citizen, and she was proud. Papa was right!

Happiness Can Be Ours - By Laurence Vogel

ALL OF US have moments when we ask ourselves what life is all about. Why are we here? Does it make any difference what we do or believe? At such times we are apt to realize that we are not living up to our best possibilities; although we feel condemned by some of the things we do, we are reluctant to give up our favorite indulgences. These two desires result in a conflict that can become very frustrating. We do desire to be better neighbors, better parents, or better Latter Day Saints, and deep in our souls we know that much greater satisfaction could be ours if we would heed these good impulses, yet we hesitate.

These urges that would lead us to the better life originate with some power outside ourselves. If the urge is especially strong, we cannot resist its appeal. We begin to refuse to be tempted by cheap, mean things. When we make a special effort to please this spirit, we feel a joy and satisfaction nothing else can bring. In our heart we know we have accomplished something worth while. We wish we could feel like this always. Then we get out with the old crowd and the glow of this new feeling begins to fade. We struggle to keep it, but it slips away in spite of all our efforts. In a few days we lose our desire for it and may even forget about it until we are again inspired to live better.

These good experiences and urges come from God. They are demonstrations of his Spirit bringing the goodness and happiness of life the way he planned it to be. If we talk it over with him in our hearts and tell him our desires, God will help us in our efforts to follow his divine directions.

Happiness can be ours if we are willing to live for it.

 DR. MARSHALL

Dr. L. J. Marshall, who has occasionally contributed his excellent writing to the pages of the "Herald," is a frequent visitor to our editorial offices, to discuss the best new books, prominent people, and world affairs. He has given forty-eight years of service as a minister in Independence and celebrated his eightieth birthday on June 24. We wish to add our congratulations and best wishes, along with many other friends.

Dr. Marshall knew "Brother Joseph," issued the first invitation to inter-church co-operation to Bishop E. L. Kelley, and knew President Frederick M. Smith from young manhood until he died. "Brother Fred" highly valued that friendship.

Throughout the years Dr. Marshall has done much to promote friendship and good will among church people here, and many have benefited from his practice of making friends for others. "I have always wanted to be an apostle of reconciliation," he says, "and I am still working at it." He has many of the fine qualities of his ancestor, John Marshall, the great Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

President F. M. Smith once said to me, "You ought to get acquainted with Dr. Marshall. He is a splendid man!" A few weeks later Dr. Marshall came in, shook hands, and visited. We have been friends ever since, and his visits have been occasions of intellectual light. Officially he is "retired," but people still call on him for help, especially for the great occasions, and those who really know what problems are go to him for advice.

It is a pleasure to express appreciation of one who has done so much for others.

 THE COWBOY

He was very small and quite young, the only real cowboy we ever had, and we liked him. His ways were quiet, and he had a soft voice, like all the good cowboys. He made no display of costume, but he kept his comfortable wide leather belt, and you could see the heeled boots of his trade under the folded ends of his Levis. He didn't mind pushing a broom—for awhile—but somehow it never seemed to fit his hands, and he worked with the light of "faraway places" shining in his eyes. It was inevitable that he should leave us, because the four walls of the building "fenced him in" . . . The girls didn't pay much attention to him until the last day when he said he was going away, and two of them talked to him a little while. Girls sometimes take an interest too late. City girls don't feel the lure of a "home on the range." He started out on a recent evening, headed "out where the West begins." Good luck, cowboy, and a happy roundup!

 QUOTING SCRIPTURE

Typewriter had a gremlin yesterday and wrote "Pslams" instead of "Psalms." This seemed curiously symbolic of our troubled age. How few people you meet today who can quote from the Book of Psalms. But how many can quote long passages, "ad lib" and "ad lip" from the Book of Psalms!

L. D. S. Visual Missionary Materials

Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson

This set of slides is the most authoritative set yet assembled on the subject of Book of Mormon Archaeology. Apostle Paul Hanson, with the collaboration of other members of the Society for Archaeological Research, has selected the best and most significant material from over 2000 slides for use in this set. It is made up of 40 slides; 31 in color, 5 color text, and 4 sepia, together with a printed manual. Set No. 6, 40 slides and manual $15.00

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper

In the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, as in some other features of the gospel, we deal with a combination of physical symbols that relate to and express spiritual realities. The purpose of this aid is to help church members to a better understanding of the symbols and what they mean. It may also be used to good advantage with nonmembers in explaining the significance of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Set No. 5, 16 slides in full color and printed manual $7.00

The Gift of the Holy Spirit by the Laying on of Hands

This series is concerned with two factors: (1) with the ordinance of the Laying on of Hands, and (2) with the spiritual reality back of it—the gift of the Holy Spirit, as this gift is associated with confirmation of new members, ordination of the priesthood, the blessing of children, and administration to the sick. Set No. 4, 15 slides in full color with printed manual $6.50

Ye Must Be Born Again

Scripture texts and historical quotations are used to teach the essential features of Baptism, illustrated with color slides. This is a missionary aid, but can be used to good advantage in prebaptismal classes. An illustrated script serves as a guide for study. Set No. 3, 19 text slides and 9 color illustrations with printed manual $6.00

Statement of Belief

The official Statement of Belief as originally written by Joseph Smith II has been visualized and brought into more concrete form in this set of 37 color slides. Each frame has a short text together with a color illustration conveying the central idea of that part of the statement. Further details together with the price will be announced in the "Saints' Herald" some time after June 1, 1950.

The Size of a Branch

News & Notes

THERE IS A SIGNIFICANT "efficiency level" in branch administration. In rural communities this efficiency level appears to be not less than two hundred members and not more than four hundred members. Branches of this size are capable of becoming genuine community centers and of making a specific community contribution. They are not likely to be vitally injured by fluctuations in economic conditions on the removal of a few families. In urban areas the "efficiency level" is higher, our most effective branches having between two hundred and fifty and four hundred and fifty members. Branches with less than this membership are frequently quite effective, but there are definite hazards to their stability and growth. Those above this membership tend to be unwieldy and to forget the individual in the mass.

Branches of less than one hundred or one hundred and fifty members tend to divide into two groups, showing rather definitely different missionary characteristics: the older branches, whose rate of growth has slowed up because they have lost their missionary drive or because the community is small and scattered, and younger branches which show a high baptismal increase because of their vigor and the fact that they have not yet "saturated the field."

And Now Divorce

"Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they twain shall be one." —Genesis 2: 24

A Beacon of Hope

It sometimes happens in the course of human events that someone comes up with a great idea, puts it to work, and does marvelous good in the world.

Such a thing has happened again. This time it is in the field of our most serious domestic problem: divorce.

Adapting the plan invented by Alcoholics Anonymous, Samuel Starr, a Chicago lawyer, has given Divorcees Anonymous to the country. A happily married man himself, he has taken pride in the fact that he has been able to prevent divorce in two out of every five cases that have come to him.

One day he was trying to prevent a separation in a case where he knew it should not happen. The husband was threatening to go to another lawyer. Starr went into his waiting room, where he saw a former client who had insisted on divorce, but had returned to tell him that it was all a tragic mistake. He asked her to come in and talk to the principals in the new case. Three days later that couple were on their way to Niagara Falls for a second honeymoon, and they were very grateful.

Mr. Starr then had the idea for Divorcees Anonymous. Other young divorced women were recruited. They work anonymously—their real names are not known to the people they help. They receive no money for their services. They pay their own expenses, which may be considerable while the work is going on. They serve simply to save other women from their own unhappy experiences. And they are having a high percentage of success.

Those who are interested can read the full story in the February Red-book, or the condensation in the May Reader's Digest.

The Destroyer

For more than a generation the world has witnessed the growth of an evil that has wrecked homes, broken families, and set children adrift in an uncertain world. Divorce is a destroyer that is bringing sorrow and trouble to our people at an accelerated rate.

Laws to restrict divorce have proved of little effect. Religion has served as a mild deterrent. Social workers are too few in number to cope with it. Conscientious judges and lawyers are able to do something, but more help has been needed than they can provide. The number of rescues, in proportion to the number lost, has been pitifully small.

The scourge of divorce sweeps on. Years ago it struck one family in seventeen. It climbed until it was one in six, then one in four, and finally in St. Louis, one in two.

It used to be possible for members of the church to take pride in the fact that our record was far better than that of the country at large. We are doing better than the national average, but we still have too high a percentage of failure.

Divorce is not a simple set of statistics. In the mass, the personal tragedy and grief are not apparent. It is when we get down to individual cases that we see what divorce really costs.

Strength and Weakness

Divorcees Anonymous has great possibilities for good because it brings volunteers to help meet the problem. These women, in most cases, have been through the divorce mill themselves, and they know what the results are. They have learned something about their mistakes, and what could prevent trouble. So many divorces are based upon trivial complaints and grievances.

One feature is to be noted. Alcoholics Anonymous depends upon a trust in God, a conviction that there is no other source of help. Divorcees Anonymous makes no mention of religion. Is it missing an important factor there? Many will think so. Christian faith and work can mean so much to a home.

Organization

Immediately when national publicity made known the existence and operations of Divorcees Anonymous, calls for help came from all over the nation. The organization is now incorporated on a nonprofit basis, and there are branches in a number of cities. Service is given free of cost to those who apply for aid, and the operators keep their identity secret. Some service is given by mail too, where distance prevents personal service.

Obviously, such a movement in any city should remain in good hands. Everything depends upon the ability, honesty, and sincerity of the individual operator. The founder estimates that 70 per cent of the divorces occurring today could be prevented by quick service. But he says, "Divorce is like cancer. Catch it early and cure it; neglect it, and the end is inevitable."

Here is a need of help and an opportunity for service that should stir many good people to activity. It is true that many factors enter into the problems of domestic relations: education, culture, religion, self-control, finance, and others. The D.A. movement is not a cure-all, but it can do good in an area where nothing else is meeting the problem at the present time.

"Joseph's Favorite Song" (?)

By Israel A. Smith

I WOULD BE entirely devoid of a sense of family pride if I experienced no revulsion of feeling when hearing or reading the various and sundry stories, anecdotes, and "what have you" about Joseph Smith and his alleged connection with what has been called—and justifiably—the "twin relic of barbarism," polygamy. It has amazed me how illy supported many of these reports prove to be.

For example, many years ago an old pioneer in Utah was interviewed. His name was Johnson. "Yes," he averred, "I was intimately acquainted with the Prophet"—in fact one of his "bosom" friends. He had even been an inmate of the Joseph Smith home at times, he said.

Among other things, he said Joseph's favorite song was—not any well-known gospel hymn, not a religious song of any kind—no—it was "Wives, Children, and Friends"!

I had remembered seeing a poem called "Wife, Children, and Friends" published in a certain issue of the Millemial Star some time about the 1850's which certainly required much emasculation and downright corruption to make it harmonize with what this fellow Johnson called it.

Later on I found this poem in a work in my own library, called Spofford's Library of Choice Literature, published in 1890. In Volume 2, on page 84, is this poem, written by Sir Thomas Robert Spencer, born 1770, died 1834.

I ask our readers to examine carefully and see to what extent and in how many places this poem would have to be changed to make it harmonize with this polygamous-minded Johnson's claims that it was called "Wives, Children, and Friends"? Just more evidence of the self-serving nature of the testimony produced by Utah Mormonism on the old controversy.

Wife, Children, and Friends

When the black-lettered list to the gods was presented (The list of what Fate for each mortal intends),
At the long string of ills a kind goddess re-
lentent,
And slipped in three blessings—wife, children, and friends.

In vain surly Pluto maintained he was cheated,
For justice divine could not compass its ends;
The scheme of man's penance he swore was defeated,
For earth becomes heaven with wife, children, and friends.

If the stock of our bliss is in stranger hands vested,
The fund ill secured oft in bankruptcy ends;
But the heart issues bills which are never protested,
When drawn on the firm of wife, children,
and friends.

Though valor still glows in his life's dying embers,
The death-wounded tar, who his colours
defends,
Drops a tear of regret, as he, dying, remembers
How blest was his home with wife, children, and friends.

The soldier whose deeds live immortal in story,
Whom duty to far distant latitudes sends,
With transport would barter whole ages of glory
For one happy day with wife, children, and friends.

Though spice-breathing gales on his caravan hover,
Though for him Arabia's fragrance ascends,
The merchant still thinks of the woodbines that cover
The bower where he sat with wife, children,
and friends.

The dayspring of youth still unclouded by sorrow,
Alone on itself for enjoyment depends:
But drear is the twilight of age if it borrow
No warmth from the smile of wife, children, and friends.

Let the breath of renown ever freshen and nourish
The laurel which o'er the dead favourite bends;
O'er me wave the willow, and long may it flourish,
Bedewed with the tears of wife, children,
and friends.

Let us drink, for my song, growing graver and graver,
To subjects too solemn insensibly tends;
Let us drink—pledge me high: love and virtue shall flavour
The glass which I fill to wife, children, and friends.

What I Have Learned About Counseling

By LOUIS J. OSTERTAG

Summary of an address given before the Order of Evangelists at the 1950 General Conference.

TO BETTER understand what counseling is, we must first define the terms used in that field.

Advice and Counsel

Sometimes there is a tendency on our part to group together the idea of advice with counseling, but there is a difference.

The word "advice" has its root in the French language. Its root is avis which means an opinion. But avis also means that which seems best. Advice, therefore, literally means the expression of an opinion, or the passing of judgment, or the weighing of all sides of a question with a desire to help someone come to a conclusion which, if carried out, will be for his best good. But advice is not primarily given to influence the personality of someone.

Counsel on the other hand is definitely used to influence the personality of someone, for counsel is an opinion given with the recommendation that it be followed. This word also has a French origin; it comes from the term consulere, which means to consult; and in France consultation means asking a doctor to diagnose an illness and prescribe a remedy for it. Counseling, then, reaches into the heart and mind of the person whose personality or life is to be changed deeper than the mere giving of advice.

We can illustrate by saying that one gives advice to a student on the subjects he ought to study, then leaves it to him to make his choice. However if the student has a problem of adjustment with his environment, if he has neurotic tendencies or is mentally upset or feels spiritually inadequate, then counsel must be given to him. Someone must help him make a decision and guide him back to a normal condition.

It should also be clear in our mind that there are times when counsel and advice cannot be separated from each other.

Personality

The field of counseling therefore, is primarily concerned with the improvement of the mental health and helping in the personality adjustment of an individual. Personality is the basic nature of a human being which makes him a person. It is the spirit in man, the "psyche." Some psychologists call it the soul of man, but since the Doctrine and Covenants calls the body and the spirit of man the soul of man, I would rather use the word "spirit" and say that personality is the essence of man. It is the quality which stands out more prominently than any other. We say, for instance, that a man has a winning personality, because seemingly without effort on his part he has the ability to win other persons to him.

Here is an illustration of what I mean by "prominent quality." Mint grows as a plant, and out of the soil it gathers something good for man which no other plant has. So man extracts it for his own use, and it is called "essence of mint." Mint never forgets to gather the proper elements. The essence of mint is the spirit of mint; it is its personality—if plants have personalities. Now man, out of his heredity and environment, acquires certain traits which makes him what he is, and thus builds up a personality. It becomes the man. The difference, however, between mint and man is that man may change by will some traits he does not care to have.

Sympathy and Empathy

Dr. Rollo May (whom I shall quote rather copiously in this article) introduced a new word in our vocabulary when, as a psychologist, he used the term "empathy." This word was first used by a German psychologist. In German the word is einflussung and means "feeling into." Empathy is derived from the Greek pathos, meaning a deep and strong feeling akin to suffering, with the prefix "in." It is a parallel word to sympathy, which means "feeling with," but whereas sympathy may lead to sentimentality, empathy means a much deeper state of identification of personality in which a person so "feels himself into the other" as to temporarily lose his own identity. It is a sort of mysterious something, but it is the key process in counseling.

Let me illustrate. Empathy is found in all kinds of situations. In sports, for instance, you have seen men and women who tried to help the players from the side lines; they go through all the motions, feel good if the point is made, and bad if the player fails. Take the man who bowls; he throws the ball, then twists his body to try to affect the direction of the ball so as to make a strike. His actions are related to empathy. In this case, however, his actions produce exactly nothing.

Now consider this case I witnessed in California. A young man wanted to become a preacher in the church. In an attempt to realize his goal quickly, he tried to imitate someone he admired very much instead of being himself. There came a time when the boy would pray in the prayer meeting and his voice was the voice of the other man. When speaking, he did not use his own mannerisms but those of his model. He totally lost his own identity in the identity of someone else. That's empathy. But in this sense it is not good, for one should never try to become another but seek to be himself and develop his own particular personality. Jung says, "Each of us carries his own life-form, an indeterminable form which cannot be superseded by another." It is the real self and reaches far below the ordinary consciousness. Aristotle calls it "entelechy" the unique form in the acorn which destines it to grow into an oak.

The counselor must, therefore, be an expert in empathy in that he can for a time project himself into the personality of another and actually feel what his counselee feels and thus obtain the evidence that will help him solve the personality problems.

With these definitions in mind, we can proceed with our ideas of counseling and perhaps reach some conclusions as to the methods we ought to use. It must be remembered, too, that we cannot set down rules and say, "This is what we must do with each case." There is no standard method or series of questions to be asked one after the other and thus solve every problem. Counseling is not like solving a problem in algebra or calculus, where each step is outlined by exact rules. Counseling has not yet reached the point of an exact science.

Here are a few thoughts about what counseling is and what it can do.

To Help People See Their Problems

The purpose of counseling is to help people see problems in their true perspective. A person who can talk to a counselor without interruption about his problems and in some way empty his mind of the irritating thoughts that might be present in it, will no doubt feel a load of anxiety lifted and probably will go away with a new light on how to solve the problems.

Fields of Counseling

There are times when the most important factor needed is trust. If someone is under a mental strain and the doctor recommends a treatment of which this person is afraid, then the counselor should be so trustworthy that when called in for consultation his judgment and suggestions will be regarded as mature and recognized as the wisest course to follow. This recognition should not be accepted by the patient alone but by his relatives and friends as well. The "electric shock" type of counseling sometimes has a portion of danger involved and therefore the suggestions offered ought not to be given except after prayerful consideration and some degree of inspiration and divine guidance.

Sometimes a counselor is called in to help a person who has an urge to destroy himself. In this case the judgment on how to help should be supplemented by the judgment of others. The integrity, the sincerity, the wisdom of the counselor toward his counselee must be weighed against many factors that enter into the solution of such a heavy problem. In such cases it is sometime necessary to suggest and help find a different environment.

Then there is the place for counseling those who suffer mental anguish because of a guilty feeling, the result of personal indiscretions. From such experiences the counselee suffers a double pain. He suffers physical pain and mental anguish. Thus we learn that a man is punished by his sins. God does not punish; we punish ourselves. God uses chastisement, which is his method for making us pure. If suffering is involved, God allows it to become a part of the experience in the process of becoming pure. Further, all suffering is not the result of sin. "He whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth," and God loves us most when we repent of our sins. So chastisement is for those who feel true repentance. God does not deliberately send pain upon us, but if we desire to be righteous, he uses pain to refine our soul.

Another field of counseling is guidance along spiritual lines. Sometimes an individual comes with a heavy load of anxiety because of some misconception or misinformation. The pseudo-minister, the self-appointed representative of God, who believes his whole duty is to scare people into the church (and if unable to obtain his end, passes eternal judgment upon individuals) can do a lot of damage to the emotional balance of a trustful soul. When a distressed person comes for aid, it is the duty of the minister-counselor to seek to teach the truth. Theory alone is not enough; the truth plus proof is necessary. Help in such problems may come through wise usage of the Bible and the other Standard Books of the church. The counselor should seek to re-establish faith in God, in the counselee's self; and especially in the true doctrines of Christ.

The Mind of Christ in You

"Let the mind of Christ be in you" is not vain counsel or merely a mouthing of beautiful words. It is the path of sanity away from the condition of insanity. The minister-counselor must of necessity feel what Jesus would feel, and speak what Jesus would speak under the conditions involved to create in the mind of the counselee an assurance that what the counselee thinks is right in the sight of God.

Ministerial counseling involves both wisdom and love; leave out one of those ingredients of the formula

A Twentieth-century Religion

By RUTH M. KIRBY

AS ONE MOVEMENT follows on the path of another, it was but a part of the natural course of events that a nation of people who had fled from the petty hatreds and ossified ideas of an antiquated Europe to establish a new and free political concept of life should produce soon thereafter a new and free religious concept as well. Following close upon the heels of Jonathan Edwards and his satellites spewing hell-fire and brimstone over their helpless congregations, was the religion of a man who taught a doctrine of unprecedented mercy. Against the background of the hell-fire preachers, he taught that even eternal punishment is not endless, but is rather the punishment of a God who is eternal; against all the insane sadism of the Edwards' interpretation of Deity, this man taught that the punishment of God is not vindictive, but comes merely as the result of broken law in order to teach men the effects of law-breaking.

The church of 1830 was, by the very fact of its being in advance of the thinking and feeling of its day, the light of the world. Since then that light has spread, and many of the ideas which were a novelty then are now believed among the peoples of other churches. Of the nuts of truth cracked by the founders of the new religion, much of the meat has been spread abroad as bread cast upon the waters. To that degree the church of 1830 fulfilled the functions of its generation.

BUT AS GENERATION to generation utters peace, so generation to generation must add to the message the substance of its own inspiration and revelation. No past generation can assure the glory of the present. We must carry our glory with us. It is not enough to reverence a religion of the ancient Hebrews or the early Christians, nor is it enough to bring our reverence up to the comparative modernity of 1830 or even of last year or last week. The living religion of the living God, with all due reverence to the past, is a religion of the living NOW.

It is not enough to reverence the name of a man because he has received light from God. Neither is it enough to reverence the revelation of light he has received. Such characteristics are common to all religions, and they in no way differentiate a living religion from the run of the mill variety. There is nothing unique here, nothing to distinguish the new religion from the religious concepts of any other denomination or religion. All religions, all denominations, started from some person or personage claiming to have more than average enlightenment concerning God. To stop at the man is to miss the point entirely, and to stop with the revelations of the man is to stop with the man. Many religions have fallen into this bog and never traveled any farther. The only idea, the only personage, to glorify is the God from whom the light flows; for only in so doing can we understand even the degree of light already given. It is only in moving on and on that we shall find means to bring honor to the names of those to whose memory honor is due.

IT IS NOT ENOUGH that the church of 1830 was advanced for its day. The church of the twentieth century, if it would continue to be the light of the world, must be likewise advanced for its time. This fact a living church implies.

It is the curse of churches and of living, pulsing movements of every kind that public opinion is very slow of change, and public convictions even more so. For this reason it has been difficult in all ages to maintain a flux of spiritual life and light. There has been a constant tendency on the part of humanity to crystallize its concepts into creeds from which it will not easily be budged. The living light of God, nevertheless, is a condition of flow and not of petrification. The crusts of opinion and prejudice we are always forming over its molten stream must give way to allow for the natural progress of development.

While the modern mind is more of a thinking mind than that possessed by men of some previous eras, yet, spiritually speaking at least, the average mind is still merely embryonic, stirred only to the extent that it is dimly conscious that it is, yet not know what it is. It is the function of a true minister to any generation to give direction to its day. As such, only as we maintain a twentieth-century religion can we minister to a twentieth-century world. As the light of the world, we must move in its advanced ranks, mentally, emotionally, and culturally, blending the whole into a broadening view of the eternal truths of the Spirit of God, feeding the world from the spiritual manna we are able to gather and from the kernels of truth we have rescued from the hard shells of our social and personal prejudices. And we shall have to give a twentieth-century answer to the question: "What am I?"

ONLY AS WE APPROACH nearer spiritual adulthood than the remainder of the world can we function as ministers to the world. Here, indeed, is challenge in a fast-moving world. We have emerged from the childhood of humanity in the past few centuries, passed the Renaissance and Reformation of our puberty, and entered our willful and fast-growing adolescence. It is an age of unprecedented danger, and the ministry of a church which is actually alive to the problems of its world is needed now as never before. It is not a time to console ourselves for or to dwell unduly upon the glories of another day. Unless we have the actual spiritual enlightenment in our own hearts and minds this day, we can become just as fossilized in a religion of 1830 as in a religion of the post New Testament period.

The religion of 1830 was not a speculator in fossils, had not to do with mediocrity of virtue worshiped not unduly at ancestral shrines, but moved on into the future, unafraid, projecting its philosophies and its higher intuitions into the future world. A true child of its father will respond to life in a similar manner to its father, but it will not repeat the life history of its father in doing so. Although a hand sickle was a new and improved implement at some former time, the sons and the sons' sons of the generation which produced it, if they are truly sons, will worship not the sickle but the inventive genius which produced it. And for that specific reason we now have our combines and other complicated machinery. It is not in the nature of things that the concepts which apply to our physical world do not apply as well to the spiritual. The Apostle Paul was evidently thinking somewhere along this line when he said that we shall know the things which are spiritual by the things which are seen. The sickle and the combine can be a visible lesson to our religion.

IT IS TRUE that truth is eternal. But our concepts of it are not eternal and shall not be until such time as we achieve in an absolute sense a fullness of perfection—if indeed such time shall ever be. As God is an infinite being and his truths are infinite, we are not likely to come to an end to them in the near future. Any idea that any one of us has a perfect concept of truth comes of the adolescent trait of knowing more than father does. A little more wisdom, and we shall be more humble. A little more humility, and we shall begin to understand more truth.

The church as an institution has been condemned by many honest and clear-sighted people because of the artificial ceilings of thought and feeling it has maintained. The Restoration was meant to free men to the open sky. To the extent it has not done so, it has failed. To the extent it shall be able still to do, so it shall succeed.

The children of light have never been given to brooding over a nest of stale theological concepts or to the building of a temple of stone over their little spot of sunshine to imprison it and keep it safe. When they do, they cease to be the children of light. It is significant that Jesus spoke of himself as a way—a means of continual progress. It was for that reason he was able to say, "Greater things than I have done, ye shall do." The sum and total difference between a living church and a fossilized church is that a living church rises above the seeds which gave it growth, and a fossilized church worships merely the petrified seeds. In the unenlightened era to which Jesus came, he was able to reveal only mustard seeds of light, but he promised to his followers a spirit of truth to lead them on and on into all truth. The whole plan of the gospel of Jesus was geared to the purpose of tearing down the artificial walls of custom and prejudice and to open up a literal way of progress. When Jesus spoke of himself as a way, he was not speaking mysteries.

To the extent we miss the significance of the gospel as an open way to truth, we shall miss its significance altogether. Life is a condition of flow and growth. Only the absoluteness of death can know the torpor of rigid changelessness. But change itself is not life. There is the change of disease, the change of old age, the change of rigor mortis, and the change of mortification, and only in complete dissolution is our identity with change completely lost. But in the progressive change of growth and the increase of skill, knowledge, and insight is life. We must not believe a movement to be progressive merely because it is change. Neither must we so fear change that for dread of retrogressive change we shall petrify the living truths we hold and deny them their natural growth. In either extreme we shall fail.

WE HAVE EMERGED from a day of the divine right of kings to a day when every man may be a king in his own right—king of himself. We have emerged from a day when men fawned and cringed and bowed and begged to a day when the divine right of the soul to pride in itself is the keynote of religion. The church of 1830 touched that key. The new religion, the new concept, was a product of the same ideal out of which America grew and walked hand in hand with the philosophies of our great American writers who contributed out of their inspiration some of what may in time become known among our children's children as the Great American Scriptures. The prophecy of Walt Whitman that "every man shall be his own priest" goes hand in hand with the religion which declared of itself its purpose: "that man should not counsel his fellow-man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of the Lord, even the Savior of the world."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4. The church of Jesus Christ is above all a condition, and it is on this condition of personal divine contact and personal revelation that the statement is based of a church brought forth out of obscurity and darkness, "the only true and living church upon the face of the earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased."

A living church and a living nation come of the same substance, touch at the same altar of living light. Here Whitman again sounds the deeps of inspiration. "A live nation," he says, "can always cut a deep mark, and can have the best authority the cheapest—namely, from its own soul." A living church is a condition of living authority, a living inspiration of soul. "Bibles," Whitman says at another time, "may convey, and priests expound, but it is exclusively for the noiseless operation of one's isolated Self to enter the pure ether of veneration, reach the divine levels, and commune with the unutterable." Hence comes, and hence alone, the power to expand the souls of men and women into "priests and kings" of the Most High "who have received of his fullness and of his glory" (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5).

When Jesus and Simon Peter had exchanged a mutual communication of revelation in which each revealed to the other his soul's identity, Jesus said: "Upon this rock"—the rock of personal revelation—"I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Not Peter, not the church, is inviolable. It is the living rock of revelation, and this alone, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. It is the saving grace of a church or a man. Without it we have no promise. With it, the stars are ours and all life is ours, and there is a soul in everything.

EVERY MAN A KING and every woman a queen. It was the ideology of the founders of our nation, and it was the ideology of the founders of our church. It is the problem of our time.

For nobility takes more than a throne and a scepter and a jeweled crown. The new nobility—the true priesthood—springs from within. In an age of general moral breakdown and confusion of ideals, it is the function of the new nobility, the spiritual royalty, the priesthood of the soul, to face the challenge of maintaining the ideals of noble manhood and noble womanhood. In an age when the new will of our social adolescence is tearing us away from all the half concepts of our childhood and leaving us to face our world with precious little real moral training, we must set up truer standards of morality. We cannot go entirely to the past for our enlightenment. We must profit from the enlightenment of the present and even so reach on into the future.

We shall not withdraw into our temples and pray like the Pharisee, "We thank thee, Lord, we are not as other men." We shall not prune our feathers with the idea of all the bad things we do not do. Charity still covers a multitude of sins, and only by true charity are we able to behold the multitude of our sins. It was because of the charity in the heart of the publican that he bowed his head and prayed, "Forgive me, a sinner." The whole difference between the Pharisee and the publican was the difference of the conceit of self-satisfaction, which is petrification of soul, and the humility of the power to grow which is the only true repentance.

For repentance, in the enlightened concept of the term, is not a useless remorse for past sins, but a condition of mind and heart which admits the spiritual, mental, and moral growth of progressive change. In the plan of life given by Jesus, this conditioning of the spiritual soil is of necessity one of the primary principles. In this light, when men were told to cry nothing but repentance unto this generation, they were in reality told to cry nothing but the power of and way to inner growth and the opening of the heart to progressive change. This takes religion out of the back alleys of medieval days and gives it meaning to enlightened men and women of the twentieth century. The understanding that the principles of the gospel which Jesus taught are simply the principles of life is the crying need of our generation. To help to give that understanding is the mission of all twentieth-century religion.

MEN ARE REALIZING more and more that we have exceeded our social development in creating the atomic bomb and the science of aviation. Now the hydrogen bomb makes the prospects even more terrible. More and more our best thinkers are realizing that our safety—our very existence—lies not in our armies and armaments but in the inner spiritual and moral development of the people themselves. But we cannot impose the ideals of a mid-Victorian era on the world of the twentieth century. We have outgrown that period, mentally, morally, spiritually, and socially. To the adolescent mind we must not continue the imposition of the limited patterns of childhood. There comes a time when we reject the commandments of arbitrary authority and begin to demand an intelligent basis for our beliefs—a reason for the hope that lies within us. The adolescent mind will see for itself and will know for itself. It is the function of twentieth-century religion to give true sight and knowledge.

In substance, leadership comes of the possession of the qualities of leadership. There is no room in the gospel of Jesus for the artificialities of pose and claim. We have no assurance concerning our being the light of the world except as we are by our active presence in the vanguard of thought and feeling and practice, the spiritual leaders of the world. It is a responsibility large enough to make every true-seeing man and woman stand in awe and umility before it.

Twenty-one Days in Mexico

By HAROLD I. Velt

Part VI

THE TRIP TO VERA CRUZ on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico was a treat provided for the whole party by Brother and Sister Petz. We were thrilled to see the ocean, and it was just the right temperature for swimming. We could not recall the Spanish word for "shark," but the bathers whom we asked made us understand it was perfectly safe in that regard.

Some of us for the first time watched pelicans diving for fish from high in the air. For the first time too we saw whole schools of fish jumping out of the water between the shore and the bathers. We were just a moment too late, by the time we adjusted our cameras, to secure pictures of these "jumping" fish.

Mocombo Beach is owned by President Aleman, and in the very grand hotel there we enjoyed a sumptuous meal—thanks to Brother and Sister Petz. It was here that President Truman was entertained by the president of Mexico, with many diplomats attending from other countries. One would feel ill at ease to feast so luxuriously in our United States, but difference in the exchange rates makes prices very reasonable in our money at present in Mexico, and some of our number were getting hungry, through extreme care in eating. Our dollar at present is worth 8.68 pesos (Mexican dollars).

Brother Smith and I desired to get to the ruins of Papantla, but every report indicated that it was well-nigh impossible to get near there by ordinary car, so we contented ourselves by seeing what we could in Vera Cruz. Our stay was all too short, being but one full day in addition to the afternoon we arrived.

BROTHER AND SISTER PETZ and Verna remained in Mexico to visit Acapulco and Taxco after our leaving. They offered to take us to Acapulco Beach, but Brother Harold Smith had been driving long and continuously; Sister Smith was anxious about her children in Nauvoo; and the Velts—well, perhaps they had seen about as much as they could assimilate at one time anyway. However, the whole party did have a happy day together, being rowed up the Xochimilco Gardens (Mexico's "floating gardens") amid serenaders and vendors of beautiful flowers.

We also had another day together at the beautiful Chapultepec Palace. The Emperor Maximilian and his beautiful wife Carlotta lived at this palace for a time. We saw their elaborate dining room, bedrooms, bathrooms, banquet and guest rooms. We also saw rooms full of European jewelry of the best quality. We are impressed that the presidents of Mexico were wise in deciding that so luxurious a palace is altogether too rich and costly for their living quarters while so many are in squalor around them. Today Chapultepec Palace is a National Museum. We marveled at its roof gardens, and especially its large stately, pine trees.

When the French armies withdrew their support of Maximilian at the protest of the United States, his princess Carlotta went personally to Europe to interview Napoleon III, then to the Pope himself for help. Failing in her attempt, the disillusioned princess lost her mind, and though she lived until but a few years ago (in Belgium), she never knew about her husband's execution. She always believed herself to be Empress of Mexico.

It is a sad story of the fight of the church, dictatorship, and monopolistic interests against democracy and equal opportunity for all. We are glad that the forces of right prevailed. How interesting is all of this in light of the prophetic statement in the Book of Mormon (page 114: 18, 19):

And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles; and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish.

Clearly, dictatorships and force are against the principles of Zion; and efforts to establish or maintain them are fights against Zion.

There is comfort in the above promise in the Book of Mormon. Religious systems of dictatorship and force are also against Zion's principles; and those who foster them shall perish. Certainly the hand of the Lord has been over the Latin American countries, freeing them from the tyranny of their homeland, separating church and state, and influencing them toward liberty and democracy (See I Nephi 3: 145, 155).

We find a comforting promise in the spiritual prediction of Lehi:

Wherefore, I Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord."—Page 78.

How marvelously the Lord is preparing the way, yet how seemingly slow his people have been in taking advantage of opportunities afforded to spread his kingdom of peace and good will.

THE SMITHS, Sister Velt, and I paid a visit to the Mormons in Mexico City. Their headquarters are situated in Monte Libano, Lomas de Chapultepec. They treated us very cordially and showed us through their elaborate premises. We met quite a number of their missionaries, young women and young men, some of them natives. They told us they have 140 missionaries in Mexico and 5,000 members. They have a system of supporting their native Mexican missionaries by having families in United States take care of them as foster sons; especially childless couples or families in which sons have been lost in war or other causes. These families care for the missionaries' expenses while they are in the field for two years as if they were their own sons. The young men and women from the States give two and a half years of their time as missionaries to Mexico.

I secured from them their Doctrine and Covenants in Spanish. What a shame it is that their fine young men and women sacrifice so much to circulate error mixed with truth. Their Doctrine and Covenants in Spanish has a lengthy paragraph of explanation to prepare people to accept their Section 132 on polygamous marriage. Unsuspecting investigators little realize that while other sections of the book came through lawful channels, this particular one, providing for polygamy, did not appear until eight years after the death of Joseph Smith; it was not in his hand writing, nor did it bear his signature. Usually the young missionaries themselves do not know this until it is pointed out to them in the mission field by some of our people. They seemingly have not caught the significance of section 43 (same section in our Doctrine and Covenants) which forever brands their section on polygamy as spurious and not of God. Years ago after many Mormons had taken refuge from the United States for the practice of polygamy in Mexico, the Mexican government followed the example of the United States and declared polygamy unlawful, prohibiting it within their borders. Our hearts yearned to tell these young missionaries the truths so dear to us.

HOW LONG shall the Lord wait for us to awake to keeping the whole law with diligence that the gospel may go with power to the Lamanites of Latin America? There is the promise:

But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose. Zion shall flourish upon the hills, and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 49:5.

And now this commandment they observe to keep; [to have but one wife each and no concubines, H.I.V.] wherefore because of this observance in keeping this commandment, the Lord God will not destroy them; and one day they shall become a blessed people.—Jacob 2: 56.

And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them. . . . And their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes: and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and a delightsome people.—II Nephi 12: 82, 84.

The last quotation includes not only Lamanites by descent, but the mixture of Nephites among them. There are more than seventeen million full-blooded Indians in Latin America, and over sixty-three million of mixed blood called Mestizos. Paraguay is unique among Latin American nations because it is the only country where the official language is Indian. The upper classes use an Indian language in their homes and on the streets. Maybe the Lord has directed it so. The preservation of an Indian language will continue to furnish evidence of Hebrew relationships.

Mexico, I believe, is largely leading the way in her divinely directed preparations for receiving the gospel. Her governmental strength in keeping church and state separated is pleasing. Her progress in public education, health, and hygiene is encouraging. Developments toward equality of opportunity, the principles of democracy, and general betterment of labor conditions are hopeful. A large number of Mexicans are learning to speak our language. With the fine spirit they possess, they will develop into a blessed and delightsome people if granted proper opportunities.

What I Have Learned About Counseling

and counseling may become a failure.

The personality which needs counseling may be likened to a river that has overflowed its banks; it needs to return to its bed and stay there. The bed may have to be made deeper so it will contain the water. The wise use, on the part of the counselor, of sympathy and empathy to bring about personality readjustments, together with the digging out of the foreign factors, will restore the flow of life in the path of one's own life-form.

Some Conclusions

From my experiences I have learned the following:

1. We must start on the premise that one coming for counsel has a physical, mental, or spiritual problem and needs help.
2. We must seek to re-establish a balanced life.
3. We must be wise in the use of the spiritual gifts, lest misuse bring about misunderstanding and thus develop or increase emotional disturbances and conflicts.
4. We must become interested in the distress of the person who comes for help, and through loving-kindness help as much as we can.
5. We must be willing to assume the role of "confessors" without being shocked by what might be revealed.
6. We must refrain from passing judgment. It is neither our prerogative to approve or disapprove others' actions, except when the actions are of such grave nature that intervention is necessary.
7. We must help to restore faith—not only in God but in oneself.
8. Finally we must be alert to the great need for counseling and keep ourselves in a spiritual mood to be ready when the need comes.

May God bless us with wisdom, love, and knowledge to do this kind of work effectively is my humble prayer in the name of him who is called COUNSELOR.

A Tree Grows for Marcia

By MABEL WILLIAMS CRAYNE

THE WIDE-SPREADING camphor tree, a native of South America, was like an addition to the house all through the long, dry summer months when the pitiless sun beat down upon the inhabitants of Coachells Valley. There seemed always to be a soft, cooling breeze beneath its branches. It was really three trees in one with its trunk separated into three large limbs not more than four feet above the ground. There was nothing like it in the whole valley where most of the houses were hidden by a grove of date palms.

Carlos Navarro and his pretty bride, Inez, had come to California and the date farm soon after their wedding in Nogales, a border town between Arizona and Old Mexico. Though they had left all their friends and relatives in Nogales, they were happy in their new home. When their daughter, Marcia, was born, their happiness was complete.

All her life Marcia had known and loved the tree. It had been her playhouse when she was a child and other children had brought their toys and played with her and ate her mother's delicious tea cakes.

Later, her schoolmates came and held wonderful birthday parties beneath it. The gay Japanese lanterns on its low-hanging boughs made it a fairyland.

Then early one spring there had come a serious illness, and Marcia was confined to a wheel chair.

Across the highway a traveling missionary was visiting his son and family, and he came over and talked to the Navarros a long time about Christ and how the sick were healed by faith. After putting oil on Marcia's head from a small vial he carried in his brief case, he laid his hands upon her head and prayed, and a warm comforting feeling came over her as he said, "God will richly bless you, my child, and you shall know the power of his great love." Before leaving he left them a small book entitled, The Angel's Message.

A flower stand built around the tree was filled with picturesque boxes of ferns and begonias. A rustic table and chairs added to the beauty and comfort of this outdoor shelter for Marcia.

With faith and hope she watched the birds build their nests and rear their young and made friends with a noisy mocker that came down to eat the crumbs she placed on the table.

After the missionary's visit, she and her parents had prayed earnestly as the days, weeks, and months went by, but now she no longer had faith and hope and did not pray. She no longer believed the words of the missionary but was defiant and sullen.

THE SUN was shining as usual that morning when her mother wheeled her to her usual place beneath the tree, though the dead calm and stifling heat seemed different somehow. There was a tenseness in the air, and even the chickens were restless and perturbed about something.

"Now, my Marcia," said Inez, "you'll be all right here, and I can go to help Papa pack the rush order. So beautiful are the dates we have this year, and so little is the time to pack. They ripen fast on the trees." Inez paused, but her young daughter gave no sign that she had heard. She sighed and spoke again, "It is good that we have these wonderful trees and the fruit they give us to sell. The money for this order shall be for you, my sweet, and you shall buy anything you want. You do not mind that I go to help Papa? No? He works so hard for us, Marcia. So many dates to be packed and many go to the faraway places."

After hearing her say listlessly, "I do not mind. Why should I?" Inez turned away and left Marcia to her own thoughts of self-pity.

Always, before, she had pored over the order lists and dreamed of seeing the faraway places. In another week she would be fifteen. Her friends were all back in school while she sat helplessly at home, and she had refused to have the usual birthday party. Why should she mind about anything any more?

INEZ NAVARRO was a good mother, and her heart was heavy as she walked down the path that led to the packing shed where her husband was busy filling three-pound boxes with luscious dates. His skillful fingers placed them in shining rows and covered them with wax paper. Inez closed the box lids and sealed them.

As she worked her mind went back to that pathetic little figure she had left under the tree. She and Carlos had not forgotten the missionary and had never lost faith that their beloved child would walk again, but she missed the sweet companionship she and Marcia once had shared; it hurt deeply that she had been shut out of her child's life. She bowed her head in silent prayer. "Oh, God in heaven, be merciful to our Marcia. Help us to reach her good self and bring her back to you even if she never walks again."

When they had finished their task and were putting up the bars across the door of the shed, they noticed the darkening sky. A sharp flash of lightning followed by a roll of thunder made them wonder if they could reach Marcia before the storm was upon her.

As they came in sight of the wheel chair, Carlos suddenly stopped and took her hand, "Wait, Inez," he said. "Look!"

"Holy Father in heaven," cried the frantic mother, "help us to reach her before she falls."

Carlos' restraining arm held her back, "No! No! Have faith, Inez. Watch and pray!"

Marcia was standing beside her chair. Several months had passed since she had even tried to stand alone. There came another flash of zigzag lightning across the sky, and before the terrifying sound of the thunder that followed had rolled away into the distance, Marcia had taken a step toward the house.

Her father and mother watched breathlessly. Inez' arms ached to reach out and protect her, but Carlos held her close to him as he said, "The Good Book tells that God works in mysterious ways, and we must wait and trust him. Let her go the whole way. She is not alone, for God and our love and prayers are with her."

MARCIA WALKED very slowly but reached the shelter of the porch before the first big drops of rain fell. The wind was getting stronger as Inez and Carlos hurried in, bringing the wheel chair with them.

Marcia was lying face downward on the couch and sobbing. Carlos whispered, "She has not cried for so long, it is good that she cries now."

When Marcia became quiet and arose from the couch, her mother went to her and holding the trembling girl in her arms, she rocked to and fro as she had done when she held her as a baby. "There, there, little one," she crooned, "you are safe in the house with your papa and mama."

The wind grew louder and shook the house as though angry because it could not come in. The palm trees swayed and bent, while the camphor tree writhed like a mortal in pain. With her mother's arm about her, Marcia stood at the window watching the downpour of rain when there came a terrific tearing sound followed by a crash, and the three branches of the camphor tree were split asunder.

Marcia's face grew whiter and her lips trembled, but she made no sound.

"The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away," said Carlos reverently, "Blessed be—"

"Don't say it! Don't say it!" cried the unhappy girl. "Don't say, 'Blessed be the name of the Lord.' He has killed my tree."

Shocked at her words, Carlos raised his voice in anguish, "Marcia! Marcia! Can you count a tree of more worth to you than to walk again? You have walked alone, and you will not say, 'Blessed be the name of the Lord'?"

Marcia's dark eyes opened wide with amazement as she looked at her father and heard his words. In her terror at the approaching storm and the loss of her sheltering tree, she had been wholly unaware of the fact that she had walked unaided into the house and was now standing without support. All the anger died out of her face, leaving it sweet, tender, and childlike again. She held out her hands to her father as she said, "No, Papa, not alone, but with God."

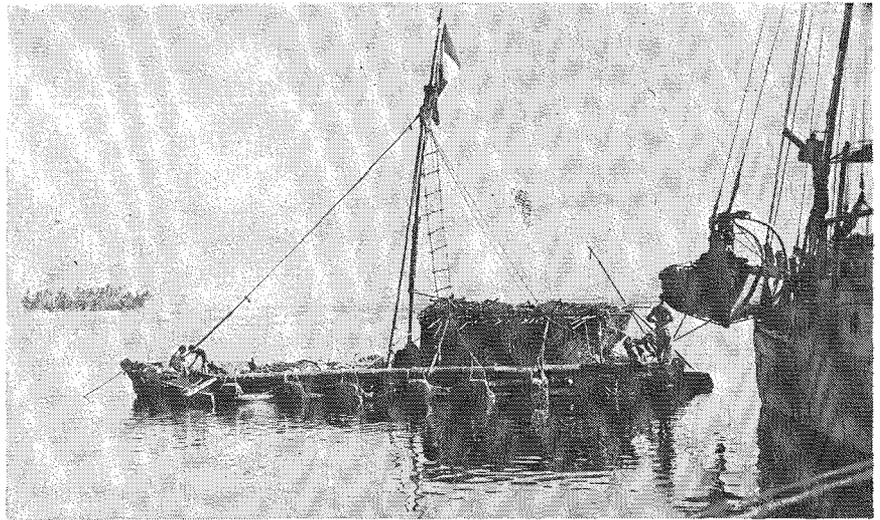

Not long after, Carlos found a stranger growing in a fern box that had escaped destruction, and by the red tips on the new shoots, he knew it to be a strong, healthy sprout of the camphor tree—the first he had ever seen.

After the roots of the old tree had been cleared away, he planted the sprout in the same spot and called Marcia. "Look, my daughter," he said, "God has left you a reminder of his goodness. Never doubt him again. Straight and beautiful is his gift to you—a tree for my Marcia."

ISLAND SAINTS AID NAVIGATORS OF PERUVIAN RAFT

THE FOLLOWING is an interview conducted by Seventies F. Edward Butterworth and Allen J. Breckenridge with Tumureva a Kamake, a member of the church who was the first person to arrive at the scene of the "Kon Tiki" raft as it was beached on the Raroia reef of the South Sea Islands. Mr. Bengt Danielson (Penitito) a member of the expedition of 1947 is still on the island doing research work. This expedition is of much interest to Book of Mormon believers because of the theory that some of the islands of the Pacific were peopled by those who went in ships from this continent in Book of Mormon times. A very interesting article appeared in the North American Newspaper Alliance and was condensed in the Reader's Digest, issue of November, 1947, as told by Thor Heyerdahl, who was captain and leader of the expedition. A brief article on this adventure was also written by President Israel A. Smith and appeared in the Herald of March 6, 1948.—EDITOR.

INTERVIEW

(Held in the Tahitian tongue, the following is a free translation.)

Question: What was the first indication here in the village that someone was wrecked on the reef across the lagoon?

Answer: The first thing that brought it to our attention was the discovery of a tin of food which was washed ashore near the wharf. We opened this tin and found seven different kinds of foods inside. These included, bread, jam, coffee, white sugar, orange juice, powdered soup, and chocolate. We knew that the local ships did not carry this type of food and finally determined that a foreign yacht must have met with disaster on the opposite shore.

Question: Did you see or hear anything unusual at the time the "Kon Tiki" raft struck the reef?

Answer: No, because it is over eight miles to the other side of the lagoon, and that side of the island is uninhabited. However, the night following the discovery of the tin of food, the village policeman and I kept vigil and saw what we believed to be a light or fire although we were not certain. On the following morning when the village chief sent out the various searching parties, we went directly to the spot where we believed we had seen the light.

The first thing that attracted our attention as we neared the shore was a tent erected among the sparsely scattered coconut trees along the barren reef. We loosened the sail to slow down the "vaa" in order to get a better look. To our surprise we saw two men approaching us. This whole affair was so unusual that we were momentarily distracted. We quickly tightened sail and removed some distance off shore, keeping our eyes constantly on the two men.

Question: Why were you afraid of these men? Did you think they were E mau tupapau or supernatural beings?

Answer: No. But we were afraid that they might be carrying guns or weapons of some sort. However, when we saw them waving a flag of truce, it seemed to dispel our fears, and we returned to the shore. The two men of which I made mention came into the water to help us carry our "vaa" ashore while a third man snapped a picture of us making a landing. The leader of the group greeted us in the Tahitian language with the salutation, Ia Ora Na. We were overjoyed to hear one of them speak to us in our own tongue and naturally thought they understood our language, but neither we nor they were able to understand each other after the opening salutation.

Question: How many days were these men marooned before you discovered them?

Answer: I believe about three days.

Question: Did you remain all night at the camp?

Answer: Yes. On the following morning we noticed the other members of the party searching the opposite shore with their binoculars, evidently worried about Penitito. But at nine o'clock, as we had promised, they returned to camp. Penitito conversed with the other five members of the expedition, while we interrogated Kehea about what happened in the village. Shortly it was decided that two of the party should return immediately to attend a very sick lad who lay impotent at the village. Mr. Herman who was somewhat trained in medicine went with Penitito, but the gravity of the affliction called for more skilled attention than they were able to give, so they returned immediately to the camp. They sought medical advice by "ham" wireless and contacted a physician at Los Angeles who advised the proper amount of penicillin to inject into the sick boy. The boy's life was spared which gained for the crew of the "Kon Tiki" the esteem of the entire village.

(There are no medical facilities on any of the Tuamotuan islands and with one or two possible exceptions, no doctors or qualified nurses.)

Question: Why was it necessary to commute this great distance from the village to the camp by "vaa"? Would it not have been better to remove to the city?

Answer: Yes, it would have been better, and in fact all preparations had now been made to do just that. We broke camp and sailed to the village, having sent a committee beforehand to make preparations for their reception by the populace. I was one of that committee who helped decorate the government assembly hall. At length the "Kon Tiki" members arrived, escorted by our own rescue party. We sang the French National Anthem, "La Marsellaise," and a special greeting which we invented for the occasion. Following the ceremony, we engaged in a typical native feast.

Question: Is there anything else of interest in connection with their stay here in the village that you can recall at this time?

Answer: Captain Thor asked us to pull his "Kon Tiki" raft off the reef and bring it also to the village. Five of us—Tehono, Tetohu, Tavi, the governor, and I—went immediately to the scene to survey the situation. We lashed ropes to the raft and attempted to pull it off the reef into the lagoon, but it was too heavy for such a crew to move. However, an extra large wave broke over the reef at that precise moment, and we were able to pull the raft into the lagoon and eventually to the village.

Question: Were there any other members of the church involved in this rescue?

Answer: Yes. Tehono, who helped pull the raft off the reef, is also a member of the church. The first boat to arrive to pull the "Kon Tiki" to Tahiti, the "Maoa'e," belongs to John Mervin, who is also a member of the church. However, the "Maoa'e" struck a stone in the center of the pass and almost capsized. Before we could pull it off the reef, a second boat arrived, and although it was a much smaller boat, it accepted the task of pulling the "Kon Tiki" to Tahiti.

(Note: Mr. Danielson told us that they were preparing the "Kon Tiki" raft to assist in the salvation of at least some of Tihoni's coprah. However, with the help of the "Kon Tiki" expedition members, and most of the available men on the island, they were successful in getting the "Maoa'e" off the reef.)

Question: This, no doubt, is the end of the "Kon Tiki" narrative so far as it relates to Raroia and the village here. How did you feel as you watched the "Kon Tiki" disappear over the horizon being pulled by the small ship "Tamara"?

Answer: It is hard to describe our feelings as we watched the ships disappear toward Tahiti. For several days the island seemed deserted, but gradually the inhabitants returned to the normalcy of native life. The reminiscences of this experience have not yet ceased to be the major topic of discussion where two or three are gathered together. However, we are glad to see our old friend Penitito who has returned to Raroia as he promised two years ago. (Mr. Danielson is a sociologist who is gathering information for a book he hopes to publish.)

QUESTION:

"Was the Urim and Thummim which the Nephites held the same one held by Moses and the priests, or was there more than one? When was it taken away from the old continent?"

ANSWER:

For an exhaustive report on this question see Saints' Herald for March 9, 1932, pages 235-239. It is the opinion of this author, Brother J. W. A. Bailey, that there is but one Urim and Thummim. I agree with him. Brother Bailey says:

There are those who are of the opinion that there were two sets of the Urim and Thummim; that God gave one set to the brother of Jared about 2230 B. C., and that he gave another set to Moses about 1491 B. C.

The writer is of the opinion that there was but one set of the Urim and Thummim, and that it was transferred from one country to another by the power of God.

The Book of Mormon says, "These things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation and they have been kept, and preserved by the hand of the Lord."—Page 291: 19, 20.

To me, the statement, "prepared from the beginning," means from the Creation, and not from the time God gave them unto the brother of Jared. I believe that God gave them to Adam, the first man, and first high priest presiding on earth. I further believe that this divine instrument was had in every time and place the gospel had to be restored except the time the Son of God himself restored the gospel.

If the Urim and Thummim did not come down to Mosiah through the prophets from Lehi, as may be inferred from these references (Book of Mormon 207: 7; 291: 19, 20; 292: 1, 2; 233: 81, 83), then the Lord evidently gave them to Mosiah, or to Benjamin; and from that date they were handed down to Moroni, who hid them in the state of New York, where Joseph Smith obtained them in 1827 by the will of God.

As you will have noticed, the first account of the Urim and Thummim being on this continent is about 2230 B.C., when it was given to the brother of Jared. The next we hear of it, it was given to Moses in 1491 B.C. How it got from America to Palestine, we do not know except that it must have been by "the power of God" as Brother Bailey suggests. Later it was returned to America, but again we do not know how or when the transfer was made. Certainly we know that it came finally into the hands of Moroni who hid it in New York state where Joseph Smith obtained it in 1827. After Joseph Smith used this strange instrument, he delivered it back to the messenger from whom he had received it. This story is corroborated by David Whitmer in Church History, Volume I, page 13.

QUESTION:

Should we baptize and then convert, or convert and then baptize?
Ohio C. M. G.

ANSWER:

The word "conversion" means to turn from one form of belief or practice to another. Theologically it means the spiritual or moral change which attends a turning to religion. However, complete conversion to the whole law of God involves a lifetime of growth in appreciation of the truth and in soul culture.

After approximately three years of close association with Peter, and several years after Peter's call to the apostleship, Christ said to him, "When you are converted, strengthen your brethren." This clearly indicates the idea of progressive conversion. The same principle of progressive conversion after baptism is clearly indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18. There further instruction is commanded to be given to candidates after baptism, but "previous to their partaking of the sacrament." Continuous growth in appreciation of religious truth and in soul culture is a fundamental and elementary principle of the gospel.

The practical question underlying this principle is, "To what extent should a person be converted before the rite of baptism is administered?" In the case of children who seek baptism at eight years of age, the factors of background of church association, family relationships to the church, and elementary instruction in religion should be considered. Some instruction in the rudimentary principles of the gospel must be given.

In the case of older candidates, the extent of conversion is dependent upon a group of factors, such as ability to appreciate the gospel principles, the past life and social association of the candidate, and the present attitude toward religion, together with future possibilities for learning and practicing advanced truth. There is no definite amount of textual or theological knowledge set forth as a standard. However, there undoubtedly exists some minimum requirements:

1. A sincere belief in God and in the divinity of Jesus Christ.

2. A clear indication of the genuine desire and effort of the candidate to live a life in harmony with the ethics and the spirit of Christ's religion.

3. A knowledge of the basic elements of religion in terms of the rudimentary beliefs of the church.

The pastor, missionary, or administering elder must use some judgment in every case, keeping in mind the various factors involved. "Should we baptize and then convert, or convert and then baptize?" It is evident that the process of conversion should precede baptism and continue on through life after baptism. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man . . ." The church and her officers are for the perfecting of the Saints. We climb by the culture of our souls in good works toward celestial glory.

QUESTION:

Will I receive the Holy Ghost and speak in tongues if I join the Reorganized Church?
Colo. E. C. D.

ANSWER:

The promise is to those who comply with the law, repent of their sins, and are baptized in water by immersion by one having authority. They shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (See Acts 2: 38; John 3: 5, 6; Mark 1: 8-10.) To speak in tongues is a gift of the Holy Spirit as recorded in I Corinthians 12: 8. This gift is not promised to everyone who is baptized but is given of God through the Spirit as he sees fit and not at the instigation or desire of man.

Briefs

LAMESA, TEXAS.—Elder T. B. Sharp held a ten-night meeting. Seven were baptized at the close of the meetings.—Reported by E. C. RIEBOLD.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The men of the Northeast Nebraska District held a father-and-son banquet at the Omaha Central Church on May 25. The fathers were all members of the priesthood. Each priesthood member was asked to bring either his own son or an "adopted" son for the evening. Practically all members of the priesthood were present.

The special purpose of this banquet was to bring the unordained young men in closer relationship with the work of the priesthood and to endeavor to inspire them to great activity in the church. District President Charles Neff planned the program, the theme of which was "Follow the Gleam." He presided as toastmaster. The guest speaker was Dr. F. M. McDowell who spoke on the topic, "God's Everlasting Whisper." Elder Guy Riley gave a toast to the sons, and Priest Dale Paterno gave the response. Deacon Marlin Constance led the singing with Deacon Richard Oehring at the piano. Special music consisted of a vocal solo by Brother Roy Bray, and a vocal trio by Marlin Constance, Bill Taylor, and Harry Henderson. Brother Ira Lewis from Walthill was the oldest priesthood member in years of service, having been in the priesthood for over fifty years. Brother Fremming Self of Omaha represented the fifth generation of priesthood in his family. The meeting was the first of its kind ever held in Omaha.

Dinner was served under the direction of Sister Stella Merchant.

Another outstanding meeting was the June 9 evening service in which five were baptized: Roy Bray, Harold Fredrickson, Parker Erickson, and Dana Palmer of Omaha, and Norman Prucha of Lincoln. The four Omaha men were baptized by Pastor Charles Neff. Brother Prucha was baptized by his father-in-law, Elder B. M. Anderson.

A baptismal service was also held in Omaha on Children's Day, at which time Pastor Neff baptized Jerry McIntyre, Jack McIntyre, Jimmie Kelley, Bruce Bradbury, Richard Petersen, Roger Class, Preston Hamer, Lane Hamer, Gerald Hamer, Linda Hamer, Daren Dawson, and Dorothy Cunningham.—Reported by C. B. CONSTANCE.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—There were four baptisms on Children's Day: Barbara Fitzpatrick, Sally Young, Geneva Yocum, and Charles Maloney. They were baptized by Priest Paul Lannum. Elders R. E. Rodgers, Williard Allen, and Pastor John Treiber participated in the confirmation. Jay Ross Chadwell, infant son of Onilee and Harley Chadwell, was blessed by Elder Wilhard Allen. John Edward Stinaski, infant son of Violet and John Stinaski, was blessed by the pastor.

A visiting campaign has been outlined by the pastor, and with the assistance of the priesthood and women's group, an effort to reclaim delinquent members and interest new prospects will be made. Visiting has been the project of the women's group for the past two years, and under the leadership of Lenor Nixom numerous visits have been made. The storehouse instituted by the group has provided assistance for many in need.—Reported by LEONA HANES.

CARAWAY, ARKANSAS.—The new church building was opened on May 7. The building was started in July, 1949. The first sermon was preached by Pastor Clarence Carmack.

Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Seventy J. H. Yager visited the branch the evening of May 11. Brother Farrow was the speaker.

The Mother's Day service was given by the children. The speaker of the 11:00 hour was Brother E. G. Nuckles.

Brother Paul Earnhart was the speaker for the Children's Day program. In the afternoon four children were baptized by Elder C. A. Carmack. The confirmation service was performed by Elder Carmack that evening.

On Father's Day Elder Carmack spoke at the 11:00 o'clock service.—Reported by DORIS CARMACK.

ESCONDIDO MISSION, ESCONDIDO, CALIFORNIA.—The series of meetings held here by Seventy Herbert Lynn were well attended. The slides and Cottage Book were enjoyed by everyone. The last day, June 9, Phillip Allen Tarling and Clarence Orville Zickefoose were baptized by Pastor Benjamin Sanders. Seventy Herbert Lynn and Pastor Benjamin Sanders confirmed them.

On June 18 Alta Lorretta Page and Alfred Laurie Page, twins, were baptized and confirmed by the pastor.

Apostle Edmund J. Gleazer was a visitor during the day of June 8.—Reported by BENJAMIN SANDERS.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—The annual business meeting of the branch was held June 14, with Pastor George F. Robley in charge and Brother John Foster of Boston attending. Brother Henry C. Hallgreen was elected church school director; all other officers were sustained. The branch voted $1,500 from its treasury to be used toward a building fund, with an additional one thousand or more to be raised during the coming year.

The Children's Day program was by the children. During the church school hour, two children, Richard Garth and Shirley Maynard, were baptized. At the 11:00 o'clock service, Elder Edmund B. Brown delivered a sermon with illustrations especially for the children.

David Earl Bottomly, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bottomly of Cranston, was blessed on June 18 at the Providence Branch. Elders Daniel F. Joy and Edmund B. Brown officiated. At the same service Richard Garth and Shirley Maynard were confirmed, Elders George F. Robley and Edmund B. Brown officiating.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

GUELPH, ONTARIO.—A two-day conference for youth of Owen Sound and Toronto Districts was held on May 27 and 28. The conference was in charge of Everard Kennedy of Guelph, young people's supervisor of the Owen Sound District, and Jack Carty, young people's supervisor of Toronto District. Dr. Evan Shute of London was the guest speaker. The meeting was held in the large auditorium of the Co-op building.

At the banquet held on Saturday evening, William Green welcomed the out-of-town guests. Louis Zonker, church missionary in Ontario, was introduced at this meeting.

The theme of the conference was "Youth Moves on With the Church."

BAKER, UTAH.—On Mother's Day a potluck dinner was held at the McKee home after the morning services at church. When Brother and Sister John McKee attended the conference at Camas, Washington, Brother McKee was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood. Brother Fritschle is teaching a class every Sunday evening on "Church Member's Manual." Alvin Pierce of Boise was the speaker on May 21.

HAGERMAN, IDAHO.—A playlet, "The World Pays Homage to Mother," was part of the program presented on Mother's Day. The sermon was by Seventy Philip Moore. A basket dinner was held later. The Vigil.

Thomas Ford, Governor of Illinois 1842-1846

SOME VERY REMARKABLE EVENTS marked the early history of the church. No one with ordinary vision or capacity could have done in Nauvoo what Joseph Smith did from May, 1839, to June 27, 1844—little more than five years. Brilliant men from all parts of the country were attracted to the vast accomplishments of this group of people. To build a church of two hundred thousand followers in fourteen years was a feat in itself; but to turn a swamp infested with all the possibilities of a health hazard into a lovely place to live—a city of 20,000 with all types of artisans, educators, manufacturers, and professional men coming to visit the place, in addition to the vast number of such men and women who joined the church and became ardent, devoted defenders of the faith they had newly found was much more of an accomplishment. Or, should I not say this latter was because of the complete faith and devoted adherence of this dynamic leader, the uneducated boy born in the hills of Vermont in 1805, through whom the inspiration for the accomplishment of all these came?

It is doubtful if the Christian church had as many members in A. D. 44—fourteen years after Christ began his ministry, as belonged to the Latter Day Saint Church in 1844—fourteen years after the Restoration began.

Of course Joseph Smith made mistakes, some of them serious, very serious. But all prophets in all ages have made mistakes. Most of them, too, were killed—not for their mistakes—but because of their achievements.

BUT WHAT ABOUT GOVERNOR FORD? What had he to do with this?

Be it remembered he was governor of Illinois in 1844, the year Joseph and Hyrum Smith were murdered in Carthage. He may have been honest in his intentions; but if so he was what in this day and generation would be called a "weak sister." In reading the history of Illinois which he wrote, largely, I believe, to try to clear himself from the blame he personally felt justly fell upon him for the murder of these men, I see both the evidence of this desire and of his vascillating weakness — possessed too often by men in responsible offices.

Recently going through that history, I was startled by the quotation which follows:

It is to be feared that, in course of a century, some gifted man like Paul, some splendid orator, who will be able by his eloquence to attract crowds of the thousands who are ever ready to hear, and be carried away by the sounding brass and tinkling cymbal of sparkling oratory, may command a hearing, may succeed in breathing a new life into this modern Mahometanism, and make the name of the martyred Joseph ring as loud, and stir the souls of men as much, as the mighty name of Christ itself. Sharon, Palmyra, Manchester, Kirtland,

By M. H. SIEGFRIED

Far West, Adamon Diahmon, Ramus, Nauvoo, and the Carthage Jail may become holy and venerable names, places of classic interest, in another age; like Jerusalem, the Garden of Gethsemane, the Mount of Olives, and Mount Calvary to the Christian, and Mecca and Medina to the Turk. And in that event, the author of this history feels degraded by the reflection, that the humble governor of an obscure state, who would otherwise be forgotten in a few years, stands a fair chance, like Pilate and Herod, by their official connection with the true religion of being dragged down to posterity with an immortal name, hitched on to the memory of a miserable imposter. There may be those whose ambition would lead them to desire an immortal name in history, even in those humbling terms. I am not one of that number.

What a prophetic statement that has already proved to be! It is doubtful if Governor Ford has been known in history by anything so much as what he had to do with the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and his dealings with the church at that time.

Be it remembered also he stood on a platform just across the street south of the Mansion House in Nauvoo talking to the people of the church, admonishing them to quietness under stress and strain and to obey the law; while at that very hour the mob was gathering in Carthage after he himself had sent home the promised guard for the protection of the prisoners.

AFTER WRITING the foregoing, I decided to find more about his last days, so I wrote the Chamber of Commerce at Peoria where I had heard the governor was buried.

Later I received a letter containing the following:

Governor Thomas Ford died of tuberculosis (consumption) in 1850. He was buried not at county expense but through the generosity of friends. He was buried in the City Cemetery. The state erected a gravestone. His remains were later removed to what is now Springdale Cemetery. The state erected a new and larger monument at his grave.

His wife died in 1850 of cancer. She, too, was buried through the generosity of friends.

Too bad, isn't it, that one so prominent should be brought so low. The mills of the gods grind slowly, but exceedingly fine.

Again I have been credibly, I believe, informed that one of his two sons, Tom, became a rather notorious horse thief and was hanged by the vigilantes at Wellington, Kansas, in 1871. His brother met the same fate in the same neighborhood in 1874 for a similar cause.

A Challenge - By MRS. JOHN LEROY PRITCHARD

HAVE YOU THOUGHT about the place you take in modern society? You and I—the women—set the standards of beauty in our homes, in the church, and in the community. Without beauty, society made up of interrelated groups would be disconnected, with little purpose, and void of its full meaning. However a society permeated with sincere beauty is ever moving forward. The importance of beauty in relationship to society cannot be overemphasized. Of the many New Year's resolutions you may make, the one that can bring you the most noticeable return is your effort to live more beautifully. Sincere beauty is made up of two parts: a well-groomed appearance and a wholesome personality. Let us first consider appearance.

It takes but a short time each day to carry out a systematic program of personal grooming. Cleanliness, of course, is the first step: neatness, too, is essential. Each of us has a natural beauty we should strive to enhance through care of hair and skin. You needn't wear the latest styles in order to look chic, but you must keep the clothing you do have in first-class condition—clean, well-pressed, and in good repair.

Appropriate dress is most important. Never overdress for any occasion, whether it be a picnic or a formal banquet. If you're not certain what to wear, dress conservatively. A street length dress at a formal banquet where most of the women are wearing dinner dresses would not be so nearly out of place as a dinner dress among street-length dresses.

If you are called upon to speak or give lectures, be quite certain beforehand that your appearance is all you want it to be. Inspect yourself before a full-length mirror to see that you look the best you can. If you do this beforehand, you can dismiss it from your mind and devote your entire attention to your study material with ease and confidence. How often have you observed a speaker who looked as if she had just been swept in by a hurricane or had run all the way to the meeting? Have you ever attended a lecture and found yourself unconsciously watching a dangling hairpin or a slip that shows? However good a listener you are, some of these things are bound to cross your mind and take up at least a part of your listening time.

Posture is another important factor. Try walking and sitting as though there were an invisible rope pulling you up at least an inch. You'll discover that you not only look better, but also feel better.

WHILE IT TAKES but a few minutes each day to achieve outward beauty, inward beauty or graciousness is a quality that will require your entire time to develop.

Your spoken word is one very good yardstick for measuring your character. Nothing can boost your charm rating like speaking kindly of others. In order to speak kindly, one must think kindly. There is no place for a sharp tongue, and at no time is there a right time for tale-bearing and gossip. Besides creating ill feelings and possibly hurting others, it definitely has a bad effect on your own personality. Uphold your friends at all times. Speak highly of them. If you can't say something good about them, then say nothing at all.

I tried this several years ago, and to my amazement I found myself with nothing to say. Much of my conversation had been criticism. It came so easy. But after really trying for several weeks, I found that the nice things began to come easier. It was just a matter of habit and I decided to trade bad habits for good ones. Since then, ever so often I "listen in" on my conversation to see if I am keeping the good habits. To seek out the virtues in our friends will change our whole outlook on life.

Don't stop with speaking kind words. Enhance your kind words with good deeds. An excellent plan for making kindness a habit is suggested in the Scout's Handbook. Do at least one kind deed daily. If you consciously go out of your way to do one kind deed daily, you will do many more unconsciously. Like a snowball rolling down hill, there is no limit to the size it can grow.

Another quality that definitely proves a woman's character is her consideration of older people. It is shown not only by such acts as giving up her seat at a crowded gathering to an older person, but by giving more freely of her time.

A SINCERELY BEAUTIFUL PERSON will always be surrounded by friends. If you desire more good friends, the simplest solution is to be a good friend. Always be dependable. Be careful not to make a promise you cannot fulfill. This will become much easier if you seek first to be dependable to yourself. Check yourself to see that you don't have the habit of putting things off. Don't be constantly thinking of the things you should have done yesterday. Do them right now! Then you can forget about them tomorrow. If you can but learn to be dependable to yourself, you cannot help being dependable to others.

By this time you are probably thinking, "That sounds good on paper, but it's a pretty high ladder to climb." On which rung of that ladder will you be standing by 1951? You still have half a year to go. How good a climber are you?

What We Owe Our Children

By COURTNEY LEE HUNTER

IT CAN BE SAFELY SAID that every problem in the world can be solved by applying the principles of Christianity. But in a world seemingly trying its utmost to either disprove or ignore this type of solution, it is difficult for one man, or one family, or even one church group to make a dent in the behavior of civilization. Here in the promised land of America, Christianity has the greatest free rein and the most potent opportunities to develop into a "land of Zion." Nevertheless, we are peculiar, fast-living people who expect immediate results and are prone to follow the dictates of our will rather than God's will. Somehow we aren't content to invest our all into God's company and live on the interest in the years to come. We seem to follow the "get-rich-quick" theme, whereby we invest little or nothing and expect a huge return.

How often have we looked at our children and thought, "In them rests the future of mankind"? With regret for our own mistakes, we promise ourselves to make their lives better. It is a right and a privilege for parents to expect better things for and of their children. With great love and expectations we feed, clothe, and educate them, worry when they won't eat; become confused when they misbehave, and rejoice when we see a small counterpart of Jesus in their souls.

AT THE TIME of Adam's fall, God promised us that our children would not have to suffer for their parents' guilt. But it seems the law of divine government is that the penalty of one man's sin is shared by those connected with him, and likewise, the benefits of a good man's deeds are distributed over a large area. So it is rather futile to say we will make our children different from their parents. True, we can alter their lives by the material posessions we heap upon them, by our concern over their health, and our cognizance of the latest of human skills. We can instruct them in the ways of God and in the ways of the church, but we are unwilling to make the supreme sacrifice for our children. Above and over every physical need, we owe them ourselves as God intended us to be.

The physical essentials for a child's growth should take a back seat in his ride to adulthood. He could have no better companion in the front seat with him than God, and we can give God to our children by giving ourselves to God. In his kindness and goodness he has made this possible for us by the infallible example of his Son Jesus.

In every Latter Day Saint home there is a worship of God, but is there also a love of him? To worship him is to honor and respect him as the one God. To love him is to feel within ourselves a strong personal attachment to him. We owe to our children our own personal love of God.

I've often thought what poignant truth there is in the statement, "There are no problem children, only problem parents." One can almost always find in any issue of the magazines that are devoted to parent-child relationships at least one article stressing the point that parents can best help their children by helping themselves. It might be well for them to add that it's quite an easy thing to help yourself if you have God on your side.

For thousands of generations, parents have been suffering and in turn their children have been subjected to the same fate. We speak too lightly of the oft-repeated phrase, "Thy will be done." Shall we continue to "pass the buck" to our offspring, or shall we begin now to make the world a better place by loving God and keeping his commandments?

Verbal Faith

By Emma M. Phillips

THIS STORY is about a man who had a verbal faith and no courage to confirm it. It is not difficult to explain the meaning of "verbal faith." Many prayer meetings have examples of it. It is that faith which compels a man to say in the hearing of others, "I will do anything to serve my God; he has but to command and I will obey him instantly." Verbal faith ends there. No kind deeds or good works follow it.

One time a rope was stretched tightly across the top of a falls. A man, who was a tightrope walker, prepared to make the dangerous trip over the rushing waters. He knew that to make one mistake on the rope would bring him to a cruel death. Among the crowd of people who gathered to watch him, there was one loud-mouthed young fellow who declared that he had implicit faith in the tightrope walker. He drew attention to himself by acclaiming this faith in a voice loud enough to be heard by the audience. He said that he had faith in the man, and that he knew he would reach the other side safely.

Annoyed by his clattering, the tightrope walker came to him and said, "I am glad to find one who has such faith in me and who will say so before his fellow men. You can be of help to me. I would like to make this feat more daring by carrying someone on my shoulders while I cross the falls. Will you be that someone?"

Because a verbal faith cannot pass such a test, the man instantly exclaimed, "I could not do that. You might slip and throw me into the falls."

It was easy to say he had faith; it was difficult to prove it. Faith without works is of no value to God, the individual, or mankind.

What Makes Men Brothers?

By JOSEPHINE SKELTON

It suffices that one man knows that another man is a sensible being like himself, to perceive what is useful or hurtful to him.—Thus the feeling and thinking being has only to feel and think, in order to discover what he must do for himself and others. I feel, and another feels like me; this is the foundation of all morals. —d'Holbach.

A COUNTRY does not feel really foreign until you find yourself without a language. As long as you can order a meal, ask for a hotel room, and count your change, the difference of shillings and pence, English tweeds and a Cockney accent doesn't seem to matter. While an exchange of ideas is possible, it is comparatively easy to reach a level of understanding.

But what happens when you visit a country where your ignorance of the language renders you (in spite of natural garrulousness) speechless? When an exchange of ideas becomes impossible, how can you achieve a feeling of brotherhood? It is a problem which, since the Tower of Babel, has been causing wars and rumors of wars.

The answer is so simple that I am almost ashamed to put it into print. It is simply this: Under the skin, people are people. No amount of difference in language or national customs can change the basic ingredient of humanity. And yet it took me twenty-four years and a trip to Europe to find it out.

FRANCE was my first experience of enforced speechlessness. I found that my high school French, long buried under my daily use of English, wasn't going to be of much help. Menus were a mystery. The "Rules and Regulations" carefully tacked up in our hotel rooms were just so much gibberish consisting of phrases I could translate and longer passages I couldn't, and none of which connected sensibly. Asking direction was like asking to be confused with all the mon dieu's, a la droite's and a la gauche's which resulted.

And yet I feel a warm at-homeness for Paris and the French people.

There was a man on the train from Calais to Paris who spent a fascinating three hours of gestures and pigeon-English, teaching us a few of the more essential phrases of French—essential phrases like: "I'm hungry;" "I'm thirsty;" "We want a hotel room for three;" and "How much does it cost?"

There was the French-Canadian student at the Citie Universitaire who took us on a once-over-lightly tour of Paris to show us places we must see in detail and introduce us to restaurants with both atmosphere and good food at prices we could afford to pay.

There was the concierge at our hotel who took an active interest in our night expeditions. When we left our room key in his office as we went out, he seldom failed to wish us well in a curious combination of French and Spanish followed by what we took to be his one piece of English, "Be careful." And when we came in later than he thought we should, he shook his head at us in fatherly disapproval.

A friend had given us the address of a Parisian family who had been hospitable to Canadian troops stationed there during the war. It was a privilege to visit in their home with its gracious, old-world charm. Monsieur Petsche was an art connoisseur who delighted us with his collection of books on the old masters and the many fine photographs which he had himself taken on his travels in Switzerland, Spain, and Italy.

This picture was taken on the beach near Rosignano Solvay while we were guests in the Paternoster home. Lino Paternoster, Carlos of the un-spellable surname, Maria Dardini, Lina Paternoster, and Biloine Young.

Under his guidance we saw more of the Louvre in half a day than we would have seen in a week of aimless wandering around the miles of corridors by ourselves. Madame Petsche spoke Spanish as well as French, but no English. My traveling companions, Billie Young and Bonnie Yeater, were able to speak Spanish to her, while I was reduced to the language of smiles and broad gestures. But she seemed to understand the compliment when I accepted second helpings at her dinner table and looked ecstatic over that wonderful French food. When she was excited, which seemed to be most of the time, she could not wait to speak slowly enough for Billie and Bonnie to understand. Instead, she would rattle off what sounded like one long word of many syllables to Monsieur Petsche. He would listen patiently, then turn to us and in his precise, accented English translate. Each translation began primly with, "My wife says . . ."

ONE OF OUR FAVORITE PASTIMES was strolling along the Seine past the bookstalls set up along the street like so many green window boxes on a cement wall. At first we were hesitant about letting the proprietors dig out all of their wares to show us, for we knew that our ability to buy was limited. But we soon found that their chief delight is to show off their books and water colors to passers-by—with no desire to sell. It was almost as if the ragged, little lady with the discarded army boots and tattered black shawl was in business for pleasure and not to make a living. And laughter was everywhere.

Every Frenchman owns Paris, and every Parisian owns its beauty.

Wherever we went, we were particularly indebted to the representatives of the American Express who rescued us from the difficulties of language and custom. As we were leaving Paris, burdened down with suitcases and typewriters and unable to find our train, one of these men, a Frenchman educated in England, called a porter for us and personally escorted us to the International Express for Geneva. As we walked down the platform with our porter behind us, he asked, "How much money do you want to pay the porter? Are you rich Americans?" We admitted that not only were we far from rich but that unfortunately we had most of our trip ahead of us and most of our money behind us. He nodded and spoke to the porter firmly. The porter looked glum but nodded. Our friend winked at us. "I told him you were poor and could only afford to pay him 100 francs. He will take it and not make a fuss on the train because it is too small."

IN SWITZERLAND where French and German are the official languages, we were as badly off as in France. In Geneva we found friends who spoke English, but in the little mountain village where we spent nine scenery-packed days, we were the only English-speaking people at the inn. Even the local priest, their one man of education, could speak only French and German and so was unavailable for conversation.

On the mountainside directly above our village was a military tuberculosis sanitarium, and out of all the up-patients who came to the inn every evening, we found only Albert who could talk to us, and one other, Serge, who could say a few words and ended every attempt at conversation with, "I am a CLOWN." They taught us to play a Swiss game that is a sort of hockey and laughed at our awkwardness good-naturedly. One evening they escorted us up the steep path to the sanitarium to see an American movie, "San Francisco"—with the dialogue dubbed in French.

The proprietors of the inn spoke no English, but no one could have taken better care of us. At every meal they set enough food in front of us to have fed a small army and left us to eat it with the wish, bon appetite. When we came down in the morning, we were greeted with a handshake and a bon jour, mesdames. And when we retired at night, our host would hurry after us to open the door to the stairs, shake hands again and bow us out with a bon soir, bon nuit. When we left, they followed us out to the bus, carrying our bags, shaking our hands, smiling and saying good-by even though we couldn't understand it. From the sanitarium above us, the soldiers had gathered on their sunporches to wave the "young Americans" good-by, and we could see Serge standing on the railing waving a pillowcase. Still a clown.

ICAN'T TELL YOU the peculiar feeling it gave me to see an Italian soldier for the first time. It was in Milan where we stopped to change trains for Venice. We stepped down off the train, and there, marching up and down the platform, were two Italian M.P.s. For a moment all the war stories of secret police, arrests, and what not brought my heart into my throat, and then they eyed me disinterestedly and went on.

Again we found representatives of the American Express very helpful, only here, unlike France, they were young men who had a short time ago been members of an enemy military force. One man who helped us change our money into Italian lire in Milan told us without bitterness that he had served in the navy, had been torpedoed by an American submarine and had been adrift on the Indian Ocean for eighteen hours, wounded and alone. I felt ashamed—as though I should apologize for all people everywhere.

IN ITALY we found that the approach of the black-market money-changers had a familiar ring: "Change your money, baby?"

Again we found friends, this time an Italian family who had billeted American pilots during the war. It was unbelievable, the lengths to which they went in making us welcome. They had been Fascist, as all Italians were Fascist during the regime, but they had taken American soldiers into their homes almost gratefully when the time of their defeat came. Now they welcomed us so eagerly that we felt humble, wondering if we would have been so generous to visitors who were not only strangers but came as friends of the men who had been their conquerors.

We did not dare to admire any of their possessions or they immediately offered them to us and were hurt if we refused the gifts. If we complimented a meal, Mama Paternoster would spend the whole day in the kitchen, cooking elaborate delicacies to please us again. Their friends came in to see us, invited us to their parties, talked eager English and begged us to tell them about life in America. When we left, they wept and gave us parting gifts of candy, and candy is still scarce among people of modest means in Italy.

Yet when we tried to thank them, tried to tell them what their kindness meant to us, they told us with gentle dignity, "Do not make compliments."

THE BOAT COMING HOME was another experience in internationalism. It was crowded with all ages from the old man who spent his days curled up in seasick misery on a couch in one corner of the lounge to the unborn child of an Italian woman who kept everyone intrigued with the possibility of a birth on board ship before we reached the New World. There was every nationality from the German boy who had been reared in the States and had returned to Germany in time to be caught in the mesh of war in 1939 to the young Yugoslav whose face held distilled hate when he spoke of his years in a concentration camp, the death of his parents and the unknown fate of a sister who had been torn away from them on a night six years ago. Now these people were going together in the enforced intimacy of a ship to a land where they would become one nationality.

Every day in the dining room, we saw a beautiful, dark-haired woman who ate at the second sitting with us. We saw her help another woman with her children when the other woman became too seasick to give them proper care. We thought her young and lovely with that rather mournful beauty of southern Europe. It wasn't until we landed at Halifax and she got off the boat that we really got to talk to her in a brightly lighted, starkly austere immigration shed.

She was Hungarian, married, with three teen-aged children. Her husband was American and had returned to the States several years ago believing that his family would follow soon. But immigration laws raised unforeseen and unfair difficulties. Eventually the children were allowed to join their father, but the mother had to remain in Europe. Well educated and a woman of refinement, she was assigned as a charwoman to the Communist rulers of her city.

"I never knew when I left my door in the morning whether I would return to it at night," she said.

Tactlessly we asked why.

She looked at us from a dead face, and we saw the fine lines that told us she was much older than we had thought. Without emotion she said, "They took women, you know."

She had managed to escape from her city and had gone to Rome, but it had taken more months for the American consul there to find a loophole that would allow her to rejoin her family. Now here she was in Halifax. Within a few hours the boat train would take her to Montreal where she would meet her husband, and the American and Canadian immigration laws would combine to give her the right to accompany him across the border to the home she had never seen.

"In twenty-four hours," and her face was no longer dead, "I will see my husband."

There are many more stories that could be told. But why go on? People are people. They live, they love, they die. They eat and sleep and bear children. When they are happy they laugh, and when they are unhappy, their tears are as real as yours.

"I feel, and another feels like me: this is the foundation of all morals."

 HUBERT CASE

Brother Hubert Case visited the editorial offices recently, and informed us that on Monday, June 5, he celebrated his eightieth birthday.

He showed us a very interesting document, the record of his first appointment, which reads in part as follows:

"Certificate of Appointment, and Letter of Recommendation. Lamon, Iowa, Sept. 22d, 1894. Elder Hubert Case; and Alice, his wife . . . you are hereby appointed as a traveling missionary in . . . the South Sea Islands to preach therein the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to administer in the ordinances thereof."

The document is signed: "Joseph Smith, President of the Church," and "Henry A. Stebbins, Secretary of the Church."

The wording of that document may seem a little quaint to us now, but it is sincere and strong, echoing with overtones of spiritual power and conviction. Brother Joseph's handwriting at that time was firm and clear, a little large, and very neat. Brother Stebbins' signature was smaller and rather artistic.

In looking over documents penned by those who have passed on, the reader has a feeling that he has something that makes a contact with the Great Beyond and the eternal life.

 ALL IN THE MORNING MAIL

It depends on the morning mail whether you feel like going on being an editor or not. So many different kinds of things come in: A few good articles from able writers that will make the readers happy. Some pieces, too good to return, but not quite good enough, in their present form, to use. A letter of appreciation from a friend, which makes you want to do better. A story of some brave little woman living and teaching the gospel of Christ in a distant wilderness. Then the Adversary tries to discourage you with a few letters of criticism. A post card covered with cryptic symbols, veiled allusions and dark threats—from some poor victim of a cerebral misfortune.

Sometimes editorial work is so pleasant one prays that he will be assigned to a post on the Celestial Press, in heaven. Other times, it would be a relief to go cultivate a garden somewhere far away, and never see a publication again.

The morning mail is like the "net that was cast into the sea, that bringeth forth all kinds, both good and bad." How much Jesus packed into that parable!

C. S. Lewis, in "Out of the Silent Planet," described the good people there as standing straight; the bad folk as the "bent ones," referring to an injury of the spirit. A bent or injured spirit cannot produce a good, straight deed. This certainly applies to the mail. Everything a good man does bears the mark of an upright spirit; everything a bad man does carries the mark of his aberrations.

 ONLY A WORD

Beautiful was having a chat-fest with a former teacher. The talk went on for an hour or more, while Hubby waited in the car. Meeting him later, the teacher assured him, "You couldn't have got a word in edge-wise, even if you had greased it!" . . . Messieurs, does that remind you of any of your experiences?

When Your Child Is Baptized . . .

When your child is baptized his future is not settled. It is no time for you to be complacent and think that you have taken care of everything for his spiritual future. If you are a wise and alert parent you will know that your responsibilities have increased.

In his baptism, your child receives his citizenship papers in the church, and is granted full membership in the kingdom of God. He opens the door to what will be a long journey filled with many experiences. It will be your privilege to help him in many of those experiences, particularly the earliest ones.

After the baptism, what does the child have as a memorial of his experience? What help have you to guide him?

The church has provided something that will help to meet both of these needs. Every baptized child should have a copy of the booklet, "The Church Speaks to Its Junior Members." This booklet was written and arranged by one of the pastors of the church, John F. Sheehy. It contains a letter of welcome from the First Presidency by President Israel A. Smith. Following this is the record, to be filled out by the officiating ministers, of the baptism and of the confirmation, together with the branch enrollment of the child.

The booklet contains a collection of excellent instructions and helps for parents about church membership, its privileges and duties. The parent who will study this material and use it can give his child a good foundation of knowledge about church membership. Every baptized child should have one of the booklets, which may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House.

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.—Proverbs 22: 6.

News & Notes

ATTENDS REUNION

Apostle D. T. Williams reports excellent attendance and interest at the Rock Island Reunion held in the Palisades State Park in Savanna, Illinois. Apostle Williams is the apostle in charge of the district.

IMPROVING

The July news bulletin of the Toronto, Ontario, church carries the notice that Pastor John Sheehy has returned from the hospital to his home. Although he is not able to receive many visitors, he has "gained sufficient strength to be concerning himself with the details" of the branch.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Paul Barritt was awarded the Cousin's Cup for ranking highest in the Engineering curriculum at Graceland. Lynn Weldon, Bill Ruoff, Don Landon, Howard Lane, and Bob Krahl were awarded the Silver Seals for their excellent work in the field of journalism.

LIBERTY BELL

Because Hood River County in Oregon sold the most "E" bonds during the war, it was honored by receiving the first replicas of the Liberty Bell. Jim Dixon, seventeen-year-old son of Brother and Sister Floyd A. Dixon, was given the honor of being the one to ring the bell. Jim is Senior Patrol Leader of his local troop, and Senior Patrol Leader of troop number nine from the Portland Area Council to the National Jamboree at Valley Forge in Pennsylvania.

BOY SCOUTS

David Freeman, son of Brother and Sister Ralph Freeman of Independence, was selected from among the 50,000 Scouts camped at Valley Forge Park, Pennsylvania, for a high honor. He was selected because he is one of the outstanding Scouts in the Three Trails District of Independence, home of President Truman. The honor was having the privilege of presenting President Truman with a Silver Buffalo, one of the highest awards, just before he spoke to the large gathering of Boy Scouts. Many of the leading newspapers of the nation carried pictures of this sixteen-year-old Eagle Scout. While at the Valley Forge National Jamboree, he has been appointed to the position of Troop quartermaster.

REUNION

Eight people were baptized at the North Dakota Reunion that was held June 11-17 at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota. Seventy E. Y. Hunker and Elder Z. Z. Renfroe were in charge of the reunion. Brother and Sister John Darling were in charge of the young people.

SUNDAY SERVICE

When church services were held on the grounds of the Campus on July 2, Seventy Russell F. Ralston was the speaker. He chose as his subject "The Testimony of Christ in the Restoration." About 2,700 people attended.

Reunion Is Calling You

*Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together.
... Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else."*

—Isaiah 45:20-22

An Invitation

There is an invitation waiting for you. If you haven't received it yet, or if it has been misplaced in the pile of mail you have neglected to examine carefully, accept this editorial as an invitation direct to you.

Go to reunion this summer. Your church leaders and friends will be there and expecting you. You will enjoy the experience. It will rebuild you and give you benefits that no other type of vacation can. And when it is over, you will have an experience worth remembering.

Vacation

Whether you live in the city or the country, you will need a vacation. Everybody should have a change of scene, some new experience, some bit of variety added to his life. The daily routine of work and home, no matter how pleasant, will become dull and uneventful in time. To appreciate your home, you must leave it sometimes. If nothing else, you need to know how other people live, see what they are doing, and hear what they have to say.

The development of personality calls for an occasional change of environment. Before Abram could do the work God planned for him, he had to leave home and country and migrate to a new land. As he traveled and put the old ways and the old gods behind him, he had an experience which taught him about the one true God.

On a smaller scale that is what a vacation does for you. And the right kind of vacation, spent at reunion, is best.

A Gathering of Friends

A reunion offers many good things. Primarily it is a gathering of friends, and of people who will become friends: friends of each other and, like Abraham, friends of God.

Reunion presents a full table of spiritual and social fare. There are the prayer meetings where inspirational experiences in prayer and testimony are found. There are classes where informed church leaders give instruction in subjects of current importance. There are the sermons in which leading speakers present their messages on the main purposes of the church at the present time.

Young People

There are generally hours of pleasant and profitable recreation in which the young people have an opportunity to meet each other and form those friendships which will mean so much to them in later life. Older people must remember that they have had their opportunities to form friendships. The young folk must not be deprived of that experience. Parents should also remember that young people often learn more from each other than from older ones. It is important that they should meet the right kind of young people and learn from them in groups that have some guidance. At reunions they learn to pray, to bear their testimonies, and to work together with church groups.

But friendship is not alone the affair of the young. Older ones need to renew their friendships. People change and get new ideas and experiences. You don't really know your friends unless you have seen them recently and talked with them.

Improvements

In the last few years the church has seen the revival of the reunions and a great growth of interest in them. Some fine new grounds have been purchased and are undergoing development. Each year some new improvement is effected, providing more buildings, greater comfort, better conveniences. If the people keep attending, it is possible to continue these improvements.

It is true that one does not have all the comforts of home on the reunion ground. But one misses those comforts on any vacation trip, in hotels and tourist courts, unless he can afford the most expensive accommodations. For these little bits of "roughing it" one is compensated by the fresh air, sunshine, change of scene, and fine fellowship provided at the reunion.

Attendance

There is only one way really to enjoy a reunion and get the full benefit of it: that it is to go at the beginning, stay and participate in all activities, and remain there until the end. You can't dip in and taste a reunion on two Sundays and expect to skim the cream of the whole experience. It rises every day, and you must be there to get it.

"Week-enders" create a problem for a reunion administration. They are welcome, but they impose a burden. Provisions must be made for them, and then they are gone. It is better to go on Sundays than not at all. But if all people attended only on Sundays, there could be no reunion. The strength of the session rests in those who attend throughout.

The reunions of this summer, it is believed, will be better than ever. They offer great opportunities to the people of the church. It is hoped that when the grounds are opened, the people—and that means you—will be there!

Church Institutions

The church is moving forward. Not the least important area of advance concerns our major institutions. For these, substantial appropriations have been made. These appropriations reflect the interest and fine support given by the Saints, and their use has called for careful and responsible work on the part of the Bishopric, institutional officers, and others concerned.

The Presiding Bishop now presents a report on these institutional projects, and we are happy to call special attention to this report which, we believe, is of major importance.

We join the Bishopric in congratulating the church on continuing obedience to the financial law, which is reflected in the financial statement with which this report closes.

F. HENRY EDWARDS

Building Program

We are submitting at this time a brief report relative to the status of some of the projects for which appropriations were made by recent General Conferences, which we are sure will be of interest to the members of the church and will also bring them information we think they should have. It is apparent to almost everyone that, because of the great amount of building being done throughout the country, construction necessarily does not move at as rapid a pace as could be desired. The projects for which appropriations were made are: The Auditorium, The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Graceland College, and additions to the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund.

Reports have already been made by the college advising of the start of the Boy's Dormitory, and funds are being released by the Presiding Bishopric to the college for labor and materials needed.

Independence Sanitarium and Hospital

For some time a committee has been at work with the architect on the development of plans for the completion of the seventh and fifth floors of the present hospital and the addition of a workshop and storage space and a laundry. This committee consists of Miss Copeland and Bishop A. N. Deaver of the hospital administration, and Bishop W. N. Johnson of the board. A considerable amount of study and planning has been necessary to make possible the best use of the space available and to provide for the additional needs. This committee has worked closely with the board, and at a meeting of the board held recently, the report of the committee was approved. The board authorized the securing of bids and also the filing of an application for Federal assistance to provide funds needed in addition to those provided by the church. This application is being submitted at this time. It is hoped that the construction can be started in the near future.

In detail, the work calls for the finishing of the seventh floor for pediatric and isolation departments; the finishing of the fifth floor for laboratory, physio-therapy, etc; and, as previously stated, additions to the present building for workshops, receiving dock, and a laundry.

A Modern Prophet

By Apostle D. T. Williams

JOSEPH SMITH was informed by a Heavenly Messenger that his name should be had for good and evil over the world. No prediction has been more remarkably fulfilled. Millions of people have accepted him as prophet, seer, and revelator—the restorer in these last days of the original Christian church in all its divine grandeur and pristine simplicity. Other millions have been as antagonistic and vitriolic as these have been favorable; so much so that some adversely-minded poured a volley of lead into his defenseless body one tragic day in June, 1844, at Carthage, Illinois. From that day until now his name has been an enigma to many uninformed, and his memory has been maligned by his enemies, while his friends and followers have revered him as a possessor of prophetic quality—one divinely authorized to represent God in this “dispensation of the fullness of time.”

While many have lambasted his memory with words of anathema, others have seen in him the qualities of genius. Such an observer as this was Josiah Quincy, Mayor of Boston, author, traveler, and lecturer, who in his book, Figures of the Past, made the following statement:

It is by no means improbable that some future textbook, for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet. And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this age of free debate, who was and is today accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. Fanatic, imposter, charlatan, he may have been; but these hard names furnish no solution to the problem he presents to us. Fanatics and impostors are living and dying every day, and their memory is buried with them; but the wonderful influence which this founder of a religion exerted and still exerts throws him into relief before us, not as a rogue to be criminated, but as a phenomenon to be explained. . . . Joseph Smith, claiming to be an inspired teacher, faced adversity such as few men have been called to meet, enjoyed a brief season of prosperity such as few men have ever attained, and, finally, forty-three days after I saw him, went cheerfully to a martyr's death.

Such a prophetic statement from a man of sober sense is indeed a commendation worthy of consideration. At this late date, more than a century after the warm folds of immortality have gathered comfortingly about this soul which in the midst of travail had yearned for rest, there has begun to emerge the fulfillment of Mr. Quincy's elaboration.

THE CHURCH which this founder of religion was instrumental in bringing forth is not a dying ember in the cold grate of memory, nor a passing cloud on some forgotten horizon. It is still, after more than a century, an influence growing in stature, a power seeking its development and destiny in human service.

The most profound result of this man's work is not to be counted so much in the large number of lives he affected, but rather it is to be signalized because of the depth which he has plumbed in human experience. His keen sense of things eternal is manifested in the spiritual elements with which he dealt. In him dwelt the spirit of the prophets—such a spirit as could search the immortal heights and reach to the most expansive horizons. His achievements were beyond the ken of ordinary men, since man “by his own wisdom cannot find out God.” This power to delve into the depths, adventure into the heights, and expand into the breadths of divine knowledge is more clearly understood and appreciated in the following word-picture of this modern prophet and his ability to focus divine truth for human attention:

Whatever one's personal opinion of Joseph Smith and his revelations may be, there is no concealing the wonderment that seizes one at the fact that this so-called ignorant youth, this self-educated man, martyred at thirty-nine years of age, had been able to formulate. . . . the “Word of Wisdom”; had received hundreds of “revelations” that even his severest critics and bitterest enemies cannot deny have a remarkable coherence; had attracted a number of well-educated, level-headed, keenly intelligent business men as well as ministers of the gospel, who yielded to his rule with a submissiveness little short of marvelous; and had gathered from all parts of the earth proselytes, who—whatever other qualities they failed to possess—were so devoted to their prophet and leader as to be willing to follow him to the ends of the earth through incredible hardships, and even joyously to martyrdom. To deny such a man a wonderful power over the human heart and intellect is absurd. Only fanatical prejudice can ignore it. However he may be accounted for by the reasoning mind, Joseph Smith was one of the wonders of his time.

Now let the candid reader carefully think over these statements: Here was a boy not yet fifteen years of age, confessedly not extra learned, not remarkable in anyway to his relatives or neighbors, yet seeing there was something decidedly wrong about the multiplication of sects. . . . How many boys of fifteen years, no matter how well educated, have begun to think on such matters? And is it not remarkable that, in this year of our Lord, 1921, and that for many years past, there has been a growing conviction in the minds of men of all churches, denominations, and creeds, that it is a scandal and a disgrace to Christendom that the professed followers of Christ cannot harmonize, get together, unite, and as one force fight the armies of evil? The boy Joseph Smith was, but a hundred years ahead of his time. Had he seen this vision in 1920, instead of 1820, his Methodist minister to whom he told it, instead of rebuking him and treating his communication with contempt, might have hailed him with delight, sent a telegram to the heads of the Interchurch Movement that an inspired leader had been found, and have prided himself upon his perspicacity and the good fortune that had brought the youth into his hands. But in 1820 he was far ahead of his time, and consequently received the contumely, scorn, and bitter hatred visited upon those who dare to speak before the people are prepared.

The man who penned that statement, Mr. George Wharton James, was born in England in 1858, came to the United States in 1881, became an interpreter of the great Southwest and wrote In and Around the Grand Canyon, Prehistoric Cliff Dwellers of the Southwest, Indian Blankets, etc.

IN LIGHT of this illuminating statement, it may not be at all amiss to mention some of the salient truths which this age and prophet revealed for our consideration. Many who have not been better informed have been prone to believe that this man was a "profane nobody" who knew not the first law of reverence nor cared one iota for things divine. But please note this revealing statement as his testimony of the living and all-powerful Christ:

By the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, even from the beginning, of whom we bear record, and the record which we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, whom we saw and with whom we conversed in the heavenly vision; . . . and while we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about; and we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and saw the holy angels, and they who are sanctified before his throne, worshiping God and the Lamb, who worship him for ever and ever. And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.

What a powerful testimony this is! Have you ever heard a better witness to the sonship of our Master? Note again, please, "And now after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony last of all which we give of him, that he lives, for we saw him."

This witness of Jesus as the Christ was manifested from heaven in an age when even those who professed to accept him as Master were of such an infidel mind as to not believe that God could be heard even in a matter of such profound importance as bearing testimony of his Only Begotten Son. But this young man, now only twenty-seven years of age, and untaught in religious lore or in the arts and sciences of man, despite the skepticism of his day, came out boldly to say that Christ lives and still reveals heaven to earth, if earth will but lend an ear to his divine testimony.

IN THE BOOK OF MORMON, in which Joseph Smith was inspired to reveal the history of the ancient inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere, he gave us the testimony of another prophet who lived in this same sphere of activity long before the birth of Christ. This other witness also speaks with no uncertain sound of the coming of the Son of God. He says:

Behold, my soul delighteth in proving unto my people the truth of the coming of Christ: for, for this end hath the law of Moses been given: and all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him. And also, my soul delighteth in the covenants of the Lord which he hath made to our fathers; yes, my soul delighteth in his grace, and his justice, and power, and mercy, in the great and eternal plan of deliverance from death. And my soul delighteth in proving unto my people, that save Christ should come, all men must perish. For if there be no Christ, there be no God; and if there be no God, we are not, for there could have been no creation. But there is a God, and he is Christ; and he cometh in the fullness of his own time.

This witness, coming through a man who has been accused of vulgarity toward spiritual powers and of the sin of trying to set himself up in the place of Christ is a witness of the strongest character asserting as he does that "Save Christ should come, all men must perish." And again, "If there be no Christ, there be no God. But there is a God, and he is Christ." This witness of the Son of God is the center and circumference of our activity and our message as a church. As in the teachings of Paul, we say, "If Christ be not risen [from the dead], then is your preaching vain and your faith is vain also and ye are found false witnesses of God." So the testimony of his church in these last days is and must be in keeping with the witness given by the Apostle Paul and all other worthies of the Scripture, both in the Old and New Testaments.

The Strange Story of Our Missions to Tahiti

By Elbert A. Smith

AT THE TIME of this writing, the departure of President Israel A. Smith and Bishop Mark H. Siegfried, bound for Hawaii and ultimately for Tahiti, reminds us of the strange story of the Tahitian mission. It would seem to have been founded in the first instance and renewed in the second instance by accident or misadventure—unless one looks deeper and sees divine providence at work.

The story is best told in detail in The Story of the Church, by Inez Smith Davis, who has the rare ability to make history seem to come alive again in the telling. Here are a few of the high lights.

October 9, 1843, less than a year before the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith, four of our missionaries embarked from New Bedford, Massachusetts, on a rambling tramp of the sea, a whaling vessel following no fixed schedule and only in a general way headed for the islands of the South Pacific. The missionaries had in mind Tahiti and hoped to land there within one year. They were Addison Pratt, Noah Rogers, Benjamin Grouard, and Knowlton Hanks. Their boat was the "Timeoleon." These men had first been set apart for their mission in the office of the Presidency in Nauvoo before taking their way overland to New Bedford.

For more than seven long months the dirty, foul-smelling whaling vessel was the home of the missionaries. Knowlton Hanks died early in November and was buried at sea—the first of our missionaries to die abroad. The wandering course of the ship led them down around South America and out into the South Pacific.

At long last, buffeted by terrific storms, the little ship drew near to

New Zealand. This was not the destination that the missionaries had in mind when their journey was begun. It was above all else the place where the captain of the ship wished to make a landing. However, fate or chance or Providence altered the plans of the captain. The weather continued so bad that the ship's course was changed toward Tahiti, and the proposed landing at New Zealand was abandoned.
