Designs for Markers

In the Historical Buildings Issue of the Saints' Herald, September 26, 1949, a call went out to get ideas for suitable bronze markers to identify the church properties at Nauvoo and Kirtland. The response has not been satisfactory and the time limit is being extended in the hope that a larger participation will result.

Five designs are needed, one for each of these: The Homestead, Mansion House, Nauvoo House, Kirtland Temple, and a general marker showing the ownership of all the Nauvoo property is in the Reorganized Church. The prize for the successful design selected for each of these will be a fifty-dollar government bond. The competition is open to all who wish to enter, not just to artists or commercial designers. You supply the ideas and if necessary, we will have the art work prepared. See the Herald article of September 26 for details and suggestions for these markers.

The First Presidency is desirous that this matter receive prompt attention. The prizes are worth-while, and in addition your work may have a lasting influence for good should the design you send in become a bronze tablet or marker. Each year thousands of tourists visit these properties, and the present wooden markers do not do the church nor the properties justice. Your prompt co-operation will be appreciated.

Introducing...

CASIMIR NIKEL, Cleveland, Ohio, (page 5) was born in Muerlenbach, Germany, May 20, 1911. He was baptized at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1932. He has two sons: James Erwin, 7, and Craig Erwin, 4.

Brother Nikel was not privileged to finish his high school education in his youth, but he subsequently completed the work through correspondence schools and night courses. He has also taken college work at the State University of Iowa, 1937 to 1939, and Oklahoma University in 1940. In 1948 he entered Western Reserve University of Cleveland and is working toward a degree in social service.

In 1932 he began three years employment with the Jennie Edmundson Memorial Hospital of Council Bluffs. From 1935 to 1937 he was under appointment and did missionary work in Illinois and Iowa. In 1939 he had a tire repair shop in Mobile, Alabama, which he continued to operate until 1945, when his partner bought out his interest. Brother Nikel moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma, where he was employed as shop mechanic and later as cost accountant. During the War he was employed in a Baytown, Texas, synthetic rubber plant. From 1945 to 1948 he was again under appointment and labored as pastor at Cleveland until he resigned to take further training.

Brother Nikel was ordained a priest in 1933 and an elder in 1935.

HERBERT MORGAN SCOTT, Des Moines, Iowa, (page 8) was born in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, October 29, 1917. He was graduated from the high school there, and received his B. A. degree from Denver University.

In 1942 he married Rosemary McComb of Tulsa, Oklahoma. They have one daughter, Anita Ruth, six months old.

Brother Scott was ordained a priest in 1937, an elder in 1939, a high priest in 1946. In 1939 he went under General Conference appointment, and has served as pastor in the following places: Oklahoma City, 1939 to 1942; Denver, Colorado, 1942 to 1947; Des Moines, Iowa, since 1947.

ALICE (CHASE) BURGESS, Independence, Missouri, (page 16) was born in Lamoni, Iowa, but finished her high school work in the normal school at Alva, Oklahoma. She attended Utah University for three years, and received her B.A. degree from Cornell in 1914. Later she attended Clark University, where she received her M.A. degree in 1916.

In 1915 she married Samuel A. Burgess. They have two daughters: Eveline Alice and Florence Marie (Mrs. Daniel Belcher).

Mrs. Burgess taught one year in Lamoni High School and one year in Graceland. She has also done private tutoring and substitute work at William Chrisman High School in Independence.

Her hobbies are music, singing, literature, and drama. She is the author of several quarterlies and church pageants, and is a member of the Tuesday Club, the Music Club, and the White Masque Players.

News & Notes

NOTES FROM PRESIDENCY

November baptisms totaled 407. This is the largest number baptized in November since 1921 when there were 450 baptized. This makes a total for the first eleven months of 4,340, the third highest in the last thirty years. The December totals have not been received.

The report from the German Mission received after the closing of November books includes 121 baptisms.

APOSTLES VISIT NEBRASKA

Apostles Reed Holmes and D. T. Williams met with district church school workers of the Western Nebraska district in Omaha on December 10. The primary subject of discussion was the evangelistic possibilities of the church school.

Apostle Holmes met with the Saints at the South Omaha Mission on December 11 at the church school hour and preached at the 11:00 service.

Apostle Williams attended the district conference at Inman, Nebraska, on the same day.

APOSTLE MESLEY

Apostle C. G. Mesley returned to his home in Independence on December 6. He and Bishop G. L. DeLapp have been in the Northwest United States and in the Prairie Provinces of Canada. He intends to remain in Independence until after the Joint Council meeting, January 14.

Since his return to Independence, Apostle C. George Mesley received a record that his friends in Anchorage, Alaska, had made for him. About ten people took part in the singing of hymns that was on the first part of the record. After the singing each person individually repeated his or her favorite Scripture verse.

VISITS STUDENT GROUP

Bishop Walter N. Johnson visited Warrensburg, Missouri, on December 11 and preached at the 11:00 service to a large group of college students who are church members. This active group of students holds regular meetings in a hall. Student Hale McCord, Jr., is in charge.

FINANCIAL LAW

The Presiding Bishopric reports an increased interest in the financial law. By November 30 of this year, 12,107 people had filed their statements in comparison to 9,962 of last year at the same time. There is also considerable promise of further addition to this amount in December. The goal of 12,000 had been set for the year.

ZION'S LEAGUE

Carl Mesle reports excellent attendance at the activity nights held every Tuesday evening in the lower room of the Auditorium. Two special features are an art class by John Thoman and a boxing class by Tom Deal. New rubber balls and a basketball have been secured for recreation. Among the games is a new and novel game called Arrow Ball. The game has been described as played like baseball, only with a golf stick, and the ball has a dart through it.

A library of books dealing mainly with subjects of teen-age interest is being started and will eventually be open on activity nights. There will be a reading room in the lower auditorium for those who wish to spend their time reading.

The Hastening Time

WE HAVE NOW ENTERED the last fifty years of the twentieth century. As the name of the church testifies, we are living in the latter days. The hastening time is upon us.

Latter Day Saints have always been moved by this expression, "the hastening time." It evokes thoughts and feelings akin to those called forth by such related expressions as "the times of the Gentiles," "the dispensation of the fullness of times," and "the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." It is a typical Restoration phrase.

What does the "hastening time" mean? No words can fully tell, for the expression has deep and valid emotional tones which belong to it because of its prophetic ancestry. We feel meanings here which are beyond what we can say, and they are not just vain imaginings. We are most sure that they are right when we worship together at our best, and together enter into the spirit of the Restoration Movement.

Despite this lack of exact definition we do know what is at the heart of the idea of the hastening time—its central core of meaning. It is that time is running out; that there is urgent need for us to be about our Father's business, which is the business of the kingdom; and that major spiritual energies—the energies of grace—are available to meet the deepest and most urgent needs of our time.

IN THIS CONNECTION it is of more than passing interest that the disappointment of their most cherished earthly expectations is causing many European Protestants to re-examine this biblical doctrine of latter-day quickening and judgment. As their national and temporal hopes are blighted, they are beginning to look beyond the nations and beyond any temporal means for the salvation which all good men seek. By this I do not mean that these disillusioned Europeans are reverting to otherworldliness, abandoning hope here, and indulging in wishful thinking for the hereafter. On the contrary, they share a growing conviction that the gospel of salvation must justify itself on earth as well as in heaven. Nevertheless, they are beginning to see that the only hope for sinful men, and for sinful society, is in the intervention of Divinity in judgment, cleansing, and redemption; that although much of the burden of sin must be carried by men, God must guide, strengthen, and quicken us, or we shall be lost.

The Apostle Paul wrote to the saints in Rome that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Our hastening-time testimony is that in these closing years of the second millennium of the Christian Era, when sin has spread beyond all its earlier barriers and has taken to itself the wings of the morning, the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ—the energies of his matchless love—do "much more abound."

Keep His Commandments

"And witness unto thee, O God, the eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments."

—From the Prayer for the Bread of the Communion, Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22.

EVERY MEMBER of the church who attends and participates in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper listens to this prayer and silently accepts this covenant. So do we agree to "keep his commandments." This is the pastoral theme for the month of January.

The laws of God are given, not for his pleasure, but for our welfare. Somewhere, directly or indirectly, far or near, back of every law given in sacred literature, you will find a basic human need.

When you give orders to your children, they may think you are selfish, inconsiderate, and tyrannical. They may not understand, but you know that rules are necessary. If they were not for the welfare of the children, you would be a bad parent. And if God's laws were not for our welfare, he wouldn't be the kind of God we know he is.

Yet even grown-up people (mature physically, immature mentally) rebel against the laws of God, thinking they are unreasonable because they deny one some imagined pleasure, or demand some service that seems difficult.

The purpose of the law is most clearly expressed in latter-day prophecy:

That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.

The law is a citadel within which you can be safe from the dangers of the world, the diseases of sin, the danger of iniquity, and the destruction the wicked bring upon themselves. In every situation in the world, there are a few ways of saving your life, strictly governed by rules and laws of safety. There are many ways of getting killed.

IN YELLOWSTONE PARK there are signs posted by government agents, "Don't Feed the Bears." These officers have no wish to spoil your fun, but they know what bears are like.

The bear is a wild animal, and a dangerous one, the park rangers will tell you. Will the bear be grateful if you feed him? He will not, for he knows nothing about gratitude. He may claw you and wound you dangerously to get more food to satisfy his greedy appetite.

In the silly and saccharine "animal stories" we give to children at Christmas time there is a lot of false information about the dear, precious little animals of the forest. Life in the wild is a desperate struggle for existence. Our children, misinformed by books and stories, venture too close to the animals and often get hurt. We had better tell them the truth from the first.

"Don't feed the bears" is a rule meant to save you. So God's laws are meant to save your life.

"KEEP OUT," says the sign at the open mouth of the old mine shaft. It contains no hidden treasures that owners are trying to protect. Everything of worth has been removed. If you enter that mine, rocks or rotting timbers may fall upon you and cripple you, or you may get lost. Yet boys and men sometimes ignore the signs and go in. Sometimes they die and are never found.

"BOOBY TRAPS" came into our vocabulary during the last war. When the enemy was abandoning a piece of territory, it was customary to leave cameras, musical instruments, food, or even a wounded soldier with a mine attached, which would explode when the object was touched. Only a fool would touch them. Advance engineers put up signs, "Beware! Booby Traps!" Even so, many soldiers lost a hand, an arm, an eye, or even a head.

There are many kinds of booby traps in the civilian world today. Enticing and deceptive statements, beautifully illustrated, are put into the advertising of liquor and tobacco, and vice and enslaving drugs are attractively disguised. The tavern,

POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE commandments are necessary. The negative commandments are to keep us out of trouble. The positive ones are to teach us the way of life and salvation. There are many human wrecks in the world to show what happens to people when they break the law. There are many "good" people too who have missed great opportunities, failed in service, and lost happiness because they have failed to obey the great affirmative commandments of the law.

Observe the people of your city. Which ones are always in trouble? Those who break the law. Which ones are happy? Those who obey the law.

JANUARY is a "Keep the Law" month in church affairs. This is the time to check tithing, file inventories, and make annual statements to the Presiding Bishopric. Those who keep the financial law testify that they receive many blessings from this obedience, as do those who keep the moral and spiritual laws of the church.

ZION AWAITS the development of a people who will keep the laws and commandments of God. Zion is a term well understood by our people to mean Christian community and individual life. The laws are instruments—tools—ready and waiting for us to use. When we obey the commandments, the blessings of God will come.

All we can do toward the building of the kingdom of God is to make a common fund of our talents, abilities, resources, and labors. We are as rich or poor as the sum of our individual contributions. Every member who adds something to his own powers adds that much to the common fund for building that kingdom. We can begin now with our new tasks.

Official

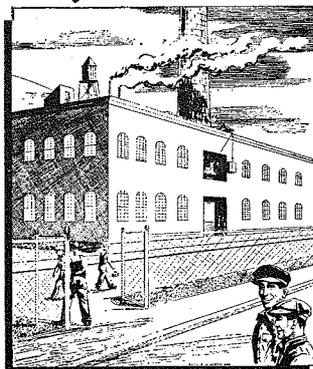

"Messiah" Publicity

The Messiah publicity materials supplied to our church members and leaders across the country have brought a favorable reaction and a larger listening audience than might otherwise have been expected. The broadcast was carried by stations in at least three large metropolitan areas where it was not carried last year—Los Angeles, Detroit, and Boston. The decision to carry the broadcast seemed to be made by at least one station on the basis of the fact that through the efforts of our church there was a ready-made listening audience.

In order to guide next year's publicity, the Music and Radio Department is anxious to receive from all over the country samples of news releases and reactions to both the program itself and to the publicity. It would like to know what stations carried the broadcast so that a greater effort may be made next year to extend the listening area.

Please send anything you might think would be of interest and value to the church in regard to this program to The Music and Radio Department, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Mid-Century Reflections

By CASIMIR M. NIKEL

SO THIS IS 1950. What a contrast to preconceived anticipations! Not at all like the reckless driver of an army tank, wearing iron pants, and sprouting antennas at all points of his cranium, with a geiger counter in one hand and the other hand on a switch connected with an infernal machine ready to split the earth like a crisp carrot. Instead this New Year, ushering in the latter half of the atomic century, is still the apple-cheeked infant with all the cheerfulness, hope, and connotation of the newly born. Today, as formerly, the human race is on the march. We are still building for tomorrow and the many tomorrows to come. There seems to be no concern that Time will stop and frustrate all our efforts.

A Look Backward

Yet only a mild reflection of the background reveals that our present attitude was not the one forecasted. At the turn of the present century, there was little said or thought of the mid-century. The United States was newly flushed from its victorious war with Spain. Europeans were intoxicated with the glorious opportunities of the New World to the extent of a pell mell mass migration unexcelled by any rising of the hordes during all preceding history. This was a time when conversation was directed in terms of eras and ages. There was talk of millenniums. Only provincials and children thought of life in terms of decades and years. But in an atmosphere of trust busting, muckraking, empire-building, industrial expansion, continental politics, and international religious pioneering, the serious minded individuals spoke of the prospects of the century as an approach to the third Christian millennium.

In less than two decades the wild orgy, which ushered in the Twentieth Century, was seriously crushed. World War I had been fought. Through legal controls, the wild and unmitigated immigration was halted. A brief economic depression preceding the war had dimmed the dollar hopes of many. Fear and despair began to assert themselves. It was predicted by some that the only hope was the return of Christ, which, incidentally, was to occur in 1918. And today there still stands a mansion on a hill in California (which was to be Christ's new earth home) as a monument to this sudden shift of sentiment. In this changed atmosphere, there was little hope that Time would last until 1950.

The succeeding quarter of a century contributed little to mollify the despairing fear. Despite a short-lived optimism during the twenties, occasioned by a slight resurgence in the industrial expansion, thick gloom settled over the hopes of many peoples again as the world-wide depression settled stolidly after the 1929 Wall Street crash. World War II further demoralized the hopes and ambitions of many others. The rampant onrush of starry-eyed dictators struck dreadful fear in the hearts of nations. And the atomic culmination over Hiroshima brought men to predictions of sudden doom. One scholar said on New Year's Eve, 1946, "This New Year's Eve will be one of the last that mankind will celebrate."¹ It was reported at this same time that an eighteen-year-old girl committed suicide, leaving behind the following message, "Nothing happened in 1945 to make life worth living."²

And so it was only four years ago, Mr. 1950, that men doubted you would ever arrive. First you were too insignificant, and then, although so near, you were too remote. But should you, by some freak caprice of destiny, put in an appearance, you certainly were not going to be the innocent baby with red cheeks and sparkling eyes breathing the atmosphere of hope and ambition.

The Tyranny of Time

The element of Time has always been a problem with the children of men. James H. Breasted reflects that Time as a sociological factor had a way of creating problems even among the most primitive peoples. If the hunter father was going to a remote hunting ground, it was necessary to either count the "moons," "suns," or set up a stick to follow its shadow in determining the expected return.³ We find that the first writer of the Bible likewise had his difficulties with the concept of time. When Moses was charged to translate the eternalness of God, the problem of rendering this concept comprehensible to his people was so great that, in final futility, God had to enjoin him to just say, "I AM sent me."⁴

To be sure this problem of time, by no means, has been generally neglected or unnoticed. Biblical thinkers⁵ as well as secular scholars⁶ have developed elaborate philosophies about time. Modern scientists have experienced convulsive revolutions with regard to time as a metaphysical as well as physical factor and have spent no mean amount of effort in order to resolve the problem of time.⁷

But despite all experience with the sociological, philosophical, metaphysical, and physical aspects of the problem of time, the psychological aspect is inescapably most tantalizing. Saint Augustine introduces the psychological facet⁸ which “emerges from ancient philosophy a well-favored but still provocative problem.”⁹ And later experience teaches us that not only is the problem provocative but its effects are most tyrannical. The fearful anticipation of the future is what brought out the rash of “We have only five years to go,” “There is only a ten to one chance of survival,” and “90 per cent are doomed to die,” as was observed after the flash over Hiroshima.

Time becomes an obsession with human beings. Some commit suicide because after many years they have nothing to show for their efforts, or so they think. Others resort to self-destruction because they feel the future has nothing worth-while for them. Still others flail their conscience because they do not want to be “time-killers.”¹⁰ Time becomes a tyrant of the unadjusted and fear ridden. As Nordman puts it, “Time is our master.”¹¹ Lamartine plaintively cried out, “Oh, Time, delay thy flight!”¹² and LaFontaine gloomily declared that Time is a “notorious robber.”¹³

None, be they small or great, escape the tyranny of Time. According to popular opinion, “The Greeks were the first people to gain complete intellectual emancipation.”¹⁴ Yet James Breasted says, “But in the measurement of time their men of science suffered under complete intellectual subjection.”¹⁵ The beardless youth also suffers as he anxiously waits for Time to hurry along so he can say, “Now I am twenty-one; today I am a man.” But in twenty years, as a middle-aged man, with waning strength and the onrushing of old age he says, “Heavens, how time flies.” And so it is, be they famous or obscure, from the cradle to the grave, men find Time hovering over them like the classic Simon Legree.

Between Two Eternities

My own conscious effort to face the problem of Time goes back many years. In a sermon at the 1935 Nauvoo Reunion I attempted to stir the Saints to action by pointing out how much we owed to the past, and how completely the future depended upon the present, therefore “Onward, Christian Soldiers.” The anticipated effect resulted immediately in some poetry, written that very night and presented to me the following morning.¹⁶

We are a part of all things past
And part of all that is to be.
Who, then, dare say, “It matters not What I shall do?” Eternity
Is with us now, and future men
And women wait the heritage
We give to them, and if we fail,
We leave a blot upon our age.

We do not know how small a thing
May change all life for good or ill.
A coat of many hues, a bed
Among the reeds, gold plates within a hill, Slaves sold upon the block, one Austrian slain
Have made the world a different place.
We owe our thoughts, our peace, our lives
To men who have not failed their race.

So some small act of ours may give
All future life a higher tone.
The little boy whom we may cheer
And speed along his way, alone
May bless the world abundantly.
And some young girl who looks in faith
To us for help, may mother be To God-led men who conquer death.
—BY ROBERTA D. LEWIS.

Now as I reread this poem, I am impressed again how the poets consistently march in the vanguard of the demagogues. In the fourth line I read, “Eternity is with us now.” Later experience has taught me that emphasis on the past and the future was less realistic than life would require of us.

During a missionary series some-time later I had another interesting experience in regard to the problem of time. A young lady, in her senior year of nursing, was converted after hearing the Restoration story. However, during an interview she expressed morbid fear of being baptized, lest she later fail in keeping her covenant. She said, “Christianity is so foreboding; it requires so much, and a person is so weak to live up to it.” It was obvious that here was a person thoroughly converted and in need of the spiritual ministry available through the Christian ceremonies. Yet unless she could be convinced that she should be baptized, her last state was more dreadful than the first. Happily enough I fell on the thought of asking her if, as she understood the demands of the Christian ethics, she could bring herself to living it for one hour. Her response was to the positive. Following that trend of reasoning, she admitted she could live the Christian ethic for one day by doing it an hour at a time. Then she decided that by living righteously one day at a time, she could as easily live a Christian life for one week as for one hour. At this point her psychological stalemate was broken, resulting in her baptism and a sense of release from sin.

These experiences plus thoughtful reflection have brought me to new conclusions. Relatively speaking, there is no greater importance attached to the past or the future as contrasted to the present. “Eternity is with us now,” and we live this eternity one moment at a time. If we combine all the moments of the past with our achievements as we see them now and contrast them with the fleeting present, the result is frustration. If we vision the future with all the moments of the years to come, compacted together into one and to be lived in a moment of the fleeting present, the result is a sense of annihilation. No person is strong enough at any one given moment to carry all the burdens which are spread over the entire life span.

Be Wise—Eternalize!

As we face the new year, we do so under the pressure of an overwhelming psychological Putsch. There are many voices in the “wilderness.” Some will cry out that 1950 is the year of decision. Others will accusingly demand an accounting of our achievements. There will be those who dare us to assume objectives out of proportion to our strength. Undoubtedly each one of us, under the sway of the Gregorian calendar, shall be distracted to some degree by the clamor and tumult of traditional hubbub.

It seems appropriate therefore to advise you who are sensitive, serious-minded, and conscientious, "Be Wise—eternalize." Do not permit your former failures to frighten you. Be governed by the counsel of eternity. Follow Apostle Paul's, "Forgetting those things which are behind, . . . press toward the mark."¹⁷ Despite all the encouragement of modern advertisers for development of a phenomenal memory, understand this one truth—it is also good to forget. Forget the past which haunts you. Forget your hurts, your trials, your embittering tribulations. Practice forgetting as a mental hygiene technique. Do not let your hair down or permit your shoes to run over at the heels, and don't neglect to launder and press your clothes. Do not relax and excuse your slothfulness and bad memory because you have read this advice to forget. It is still important that you remember, but it is equally important that forgetting becomes one of your devices for living peacefully and victoriously in a world full of frustrations.

Under the pressure of an overwhelming psychological Putsch, there are those also who during the New Year observance of 1950, will need to be wise and eternalize with regard to the future. Here also it is advisable to follow the counsel of Jesus concerning eternity. He tells us, "Take no thought for the morrow." This statement from the Christ is not just a literary aphorism, it is a postulate for a philosophy of life as the elaborations in preceding verses suggest. In addition to being a philosophy, taking "no thought for the morrow" is the law of God.¹⁹

In other words, taking "no thought for the morrow" is forgetting the future. It is necessary that we build bulwarks against the frightening future by living one day at a time. As one writer so aptly puts it, "The only possible way to prepare for the future is to do today's work superbly today."²⁰

It is interesting to note that the Christian ethic is increasingly not only popularized but also incorporated into modern life. Scientists, philosophers, reformers, and scholars of every sort are championing the cause of Christ and merchandising his wares in a multitude of ways. One nationally eminent scientist said, "My return to religion was not due to the depression . . . old age and approaching senility . . . ill health and physical suffering . . . nor due to misfortune or to disappointments with the affairs of life. The realization of this fact (the observed efficacy of the Christian ethic in the life of over 15,000 counselees) accounts, in large part, for my return to the church."^{21, 22} The phenomenally successful movement identified as Alcoholics Anonymous has formulated twelve rules for victorious living.²³ Peculiarly, analysis of these twelve rules reveals principles of Christ en-couched in modern language. Numerous nationally popular and prominent persons have testified of their deliverance from a living death by following these rules. Appropriately to these mid-century reflections, rule number eleven enjoins prayer, not the "for tomorrow and its needs, Dear Lord, I pray" type, but the one-day-at-a-time kind of prayer.²⁴ The entire regimen for alcoholics bent on deliverance is undergirded with the counsel to live one day at a time.

What the Christ ethic has done for others, it will do for us. To be sure 1950 is a frightening time. Few of us are so well-disciplined as to escape the tyranny of time. Our not having been consulted about coming into this world and facing an exit, frequently against our will, gives a feeling of impotence and desolation. It is as if one were cast upon the vast stretches of eternity and, as a cold wind sweeps across the bleak and faceless terrain, night comes bringing with it the ominous portent of total futility. But, pilgrim, be wise—eternalize. Reach into your knapsack and draw out the Scriptures—those mystic vitamin pills which are so casually enshrouded with Old English; let your system be invigorated so you can bear the atmosphere you breathe in your cosmic environment and live to see another day. As you face 1950 practice forgetting as a technique of mental hygiene. But with thy forgetting also remember:

Ye that have faith to look with fearless eyes
Beyond the tragedy of a world at strife,
And know that out of death and night shall rise
The dawn of ampler life,
Rejoice, whatever anguish rend the heart,
That God has given you the priceless dower
To live in these great times and live your part
In Freedom's crowning hour.

Personal Inventory - By HERBERT M. SCOTT

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

THE NEW YEAR reminds us of work accomplished, work left unfinished, and achievements yet to come. It is well that at least once a year we take inventory of ourselves in this way. The new year reminds us of the value of time in our lives and how it can be made to serve the purposes of our creation. A whole year of time stretches before us. It is one of the greatest of all natural gifts. Queen Elizabeth, it is said, offered her kingdom for a moment of time when she lay dying. No one upon the face of the earth had the power to grant this wish regardless of the reward.

When we think of the term whrift we generally associate it with monetary values only. It should not be confined to these values alone; it applies to time as well. A wise steward exercises wisdom in the expenditure of both time and money. We have only to observe any casual group of people to see what value time has been put in their lives. On one hand there are these who, despite all the advantages of prosperity, education, and position, live a humdrum type of existence. On the other hand are those who have no such advantages yet live interesting, useful lives. The difference lies in the way they have employed their time.

Society has been benefited, and countless lives have been saved through the efforts of men and women who have been willing to spend their time in finding the causes and cures for various diseases.

The new year is an expression to us of a fresh start in our life's work. A number of years ago a young minister under church appointment in Cameron, Missouri, had a sign painted, which he carefully hung over the door to his room. It read,

"I Press on." When he left the room in the morning, he was reminded of the opportunities that lay before him that day. When he lay down at night, he was reminded of hours spent profitably and those which may have been dissipated.

The Apostle Paul said, "Forgetting those things which are behind, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God." Paul speaks of his past and his present life. He was like a man running a race with his eyes on a low goal. Christ apprehended him one day, turned him around, and headed him toward a new and lofty goal. Pharisaism, of which he was a member, had no exalted or sublime goal. He was content to aim low and be easily satisfied. He was petted, praised, flattered for his zeal and cleverness, and so had come to regard himself as faultless. After his conversion, however, he admitted the goal seemed ever a little beyond his reach. So, he said, "I press on forgetting those things which are behind."

In Paul's day it was customary to hold the great sports event in Olympia every fourth year. Only pure Greeks were permitted to participate at first. Then after the Roman conquest, the Romans could compete. The games were held in a 600 foot stadium and included foot racing, disc-throwing, weight-lifting, chariot racing, and many other events. Judges were selected ten months in advance, and the champions exercised temperance in their eating, bathing, and other personal habits. Painstaking preparation was necessary if one should compete successfully. The prize could not be won without diligence and discipline of mind and body.

Paul viewed his life and realized it was a race for the prize involving adequate preparation. Just as the contestants dared not look back to view their accomplishments but kept their eyes on the goal, so Paul says, "Forgetting those things which are behind, I press toward the prize." Each new year we think of the goal ever ahead of us and strive for the prize. Each New Year can be compared to the relay race. At the end of the year, a fresh start is made by passing the baton to another runner on the team.

THE MONTH OF JANUARY is named for the Roman god, Janus, guardian of doors and gates, having two faces—one looking backward and one looking forward—the god of openings and closings, the god whose aid was asked before any new undertaking. The significant lesson learned from observation of this god is that with his face to the past he has learned meaningful lessons which will be helpful as he faces the future.

Our Heavenly Father is our God of new beginnings. He understands perfectly our tendency to falter, stumble, and wander aimlessly. He has provided new openings and beginnings for his children. When a child is born, it is brought before the congregation to the altar of the church for the elders to lay hands on and bless—thus the first "new beginning." When the child reaches an age of accountability, it is presented for baptism. Through this ordinance the past is washed away, and the glory of another new beginning is experienced as the elders pronounce the confirmation.

Ever apt to err, the new member feels from time to time that he falls short of the expected achievements in his personal life—"All have sinned and come short." He approaches the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and renews the covenant with God made at the time of baptism. Again he feels the impetus of a fresh beginning and is buoyed up in mind and spirit.

Still he may err again and part from the straight path. He may become ill in body or spirit. If so he is privileged to "call for the elders of the church, who shall pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up: and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James 5: 14, 15. Thus God gives him a new start in body through healing, and a fresh start in spirit through the avenue of forgiveness.

GOD'S PURPOSE in sending his Son into the world was that through him the world might not perish but have everlasting life, and that through him and the plan of the gospel mankind might receive a new outlook—a new and right concept of God, the Father—a new beginning. Jesus' great task was to change the warped concepts of the people of his day from a narrow, self-centered outlook to a new form of righteousness centered in repentance and regeneration—motivated to righteousness because it is right and not just a law. "Your righteousness," he said, "must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees." When he said to Peter, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock [revelation] I will build my church," he gave the world a new beginning. Many accepted this new way of life as a challenge to their souls. Salvation was the result and the goal of their fresh start.

The church ultimately lost its motivating power, spirit, and authority, but only for a period of time. In 1830 the voice of God pierced the long silence of ages and called the people of the latter days to repentance. Again the God of new beginnings was at work among his people.

When the latter day work would have been disrupted with the murder of the prophet, and the doctrine of the Nicolaitans would have been taught for law in the church of God—once again his mighty arm was stretched forth to reclaim the scattered and discouraged Saints. They took new hope and courage in their new beginning as the church was reorganized.

The months, weeks, days, hours, minutes, and seconds stretching before us represent a time of preparation and achievement—preparation for those who are yet to run the race, achievement for those already at work in the kingdom.

A story is told of a child who was kept in a small cell for a number of years. When he was finally liberated from his cruel and demented guardians, he was dwarfed and deformed. His growth had been limited since he was not permitted to develop in a normal way. Let us not confine ourselves this year to the mistakes and limitations of the past. Let us grow and develop freely in the sunlight of our new beginning.

The Skiatook, Oklahoma, Church

Latter Day Saintism in Skiatook dates back to about 1912 when house-to-house meetings were held. A church school was organized, disbanded, and then organized again. These efforts resulted in the establishing of a branch in 1916. Surely God directed the leaders at that time in the purchasing of a corner lot on which stood a small frame building.

The present building, which is now the church home of 153 members, was erected at Vera, Oklahoma, and moved to Skiatook in 1923. Since then it has been completely remodeled.

The redecorating and purchasing of an organ were financed by serving meals to civic organizations in Skiatook for the past six years and by individual donations and offerings. The landscaping of the church grounds was financed by the young adult class which now has a membership of forty-five.

The women's council has been organized into two circles; one meets in the daytime, the other at night. The branch also sponsors one of the two Scout troops in Skiatook and has an active Zion's League.

Dedication services were held October 16, 1949. This was not only the dedication of a building to God but also the rededication of the lives of the members to the cause of establishing the kingdom of God on earth.

The Spirit of Peace - By LEONA N. HANDS

ONCE AGAIN we have heard the sweet story old, yet ever new, of the wondrous birth of our Lord and Redeemer. The glad tidings of the angel throng, singing peace on earth, good will toward men, has again thrilled the heart of young and old alike. The sweet strains of the Christmas carols have filled the air and we have sung them in jubilant voices. We have given and received gifts in keeping with the holiday season. The sick and shut-in ones have been visited and sung to, and the poor remembered with baskets of good things. Gladly have we set aside or stepped up daily duties to attend and take part in Christmas festivities.

Our cares and worries forgotten, we have dashed out to mingle with jostling merry crowds for last minute shopping—to step on and get stepped on—and, unlike any other time of the year, all radiate good cheer and no one scowls or grumbles.

THE CHRISTMAS STORY, the carols, the giving of gifts, the kindly atmosphere, the feeling of good will—these all combine to make Christmas complete for us. And is not each prompted by the spirit of Christmas? Why does this good Spirit so soon depart from our midst? Is it not because only at Christmas we open our hearts fully to its reception? Christmas passes, and the world quickly picks up its old cares, woes, headaches and heartaches. Everyone becomes so preoccupied with his own worries and problems that the poor, the sick, and the shut-in are all but forgotten. Do we vainly imagine that the poor will subsist on that one lone basket until another Christmas, or that the shut-in is lonely only during the holiday season? What a marvelous change could be wrought in this world if we all carried the Spirit of Christmas throughout the entire year.

Remember, the angel's message, "the good tidings of great joy," was to all people as was the song of the angelic host, "Glory to God and on earth peace, good will toward men." Peace on earth surely means everywhere. But how and when will this ever be unless men come to realize that "peace" and "good will toward men" are inseparable.

Perhaps there is no more beautiful word in the language of men than peace. Immediately it brings to our minds a word picture of tranquillity, serenity, and happiness. Webster defines peace as spiritual content. It is no idle theory that he who has peace of mind is at peace with God. Fortunate indeed is the individual who has peace of mind. But should this not be one of the characteristics of the man of faith? It is not a gift, unsought or unearned, but the reward of all those who diligently seek him; it is one of the fruits of the Spirit. Isaiah states it beautifully: "He will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." And Paul exhorts, "To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

AND WHERE IS PEACE? It is on the lips of men everywhere, constantly. "Peace," said a soldier engaged in the First World War, "is what we're fighting for." But did peace come with the cessation of hostilities? A second great conflict has been bitterly fought since then, and today one might repeat the words of the soldier substituting the word "over" in place of "for."

A schoolboy once wrote on an examination paper, "The armistice was signed on November 11, 1918, and since then, once in every year, there has been two minutes of peace."—Which is pretty close to the truth.

Jesus has been rightly called, "Wonderful, Counselor, the Prince of Peace, the Savior of the World." Yet the nations of the world have not opened the way for his words or counsel at the peace table. Could not men and nations alike find a common meeting ground with the Spirit of Christ?

Peace at home and abroad is the hope of all, and while we can do little about the situations abroad, we have the making of peaceful homes in our own hands. Have you ever had the happy experience of stepping into a home where you immediately felt that all was well? No "welcome" on the door mat is needed for such a home. Peace is felt by all who enter.

A RELATIVE OF MINE once bought a white cottage. It was a memorable experience to enter that home. A feeling of benediction enveloped those who went, and they found themselves thinking that happiness had made its abode there. Those who dwelt there seemed to have found such an overflowing measure of peace and contentment that a portion remained in the little house to bless all. Incidentally, this "home feeling" is not dependent upon pretentious houses or mansions. More often it is found in a neatly kept cottage with no claim on grandeur.

A missionary's wife once told me of an experience similar to this. The house they were living in was sold. Everything they owned had been packed and was already on its way to their new residence. She and her companion stood alone in the empty house delaying their departure, lingering where they and their family had been so happy together. "Let us have prayer," the good wife said. "Let us pray that those who come to live here may have the same measure of peace and happiness we have enjoyed while here." And so they knelt in that empty house asking God's blessing on those who were to come after them.

It has been wisely said that a house is built by human hands, but human hearts build a home. And again, "Great men come from great homes." Do you not think the world has an acute shortage of great men in these perilous times? Knowing that a nation is no better than the homes it consists of, it is a matter of grave concern to many people today to see American homelife so unstable.

World conditions present a challenge to Latter Day Saints to build happy, peaceful homes. Is it not the aim and ambition of all good Saints to be builders together with God in establishing Zion's homes? Are not peace of heart and mind the fruits of a happy home?

Another new year has been given into our care and keeping. May the God of peace give us peace, and may the angel song re-echo in our hearts that we may labor together to bring to pass the will of heaven—"Peace on earth, good will to men."

The Faith Account - By STAN MACK

A True Story of Brotherhood

Firstly, the rich and the learned, the wise and the noble.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 3.

THIS NARRATIVE is a testimony of the three essentials in building a new social order on the earth: man's faith in God, man's faith in himself, and man's faith in each other. Perhaps we should predicate these with one other—God's faith in men.

The two principals in this story will be identified as George and Zack. Both men are hard workers and good citizens with wives who believe in them. Otherwise in the beginning they were totally unlike.

GEORGE BELIEVED in the mission of the Restoration—that man must work as well as pray; that faith in God commits a man to actively seek the blessings promised; that faith in God and the keeping of his commandments entitle a person to receive a degree of light, intelligence, truth, and wisdom not otherwise obtainable. When God has faith in men, why shouldn't they have faith in each other?

With this background, George went into the ice-cream business. To an endowment of wisdom and intelligence from God, he added knowledge and experience gained in working for other ice-cream manufacturers. His wife and family gave encouragement, loyalty, help, and inspiration.

When George opened for business with the very minimum of equipment and space, he had $17.50 remaining capital.

Twenty years later George was operating a highly prosperous business and owned one of the largest and most modern plants in his part of the state.

During that time George had kept his close contact with God and had been a temporal and spiritual benefactor to many people in his community.

ZACK HAD FAITH IN GOD as the creator of heaven and earth and the things therein, but he did not know the vital import of the Restoration message—that God has faith in each individual man and offers every inducement temporally and spiritually for his redemption and salvation. He believed, rather, that success in life was largely, if not altogether, governed by fortunate circumstances—capital contributed by rich relatives or "striking it rich" somehow. He complained that a poor man had no chance to get ahead, that fate was against him, that "they" controlled everything so a poor man had to stay poor.

When the depression of the 1930's came, Zack became further discouraged because he could not make the barest living from the few head of stock he kept on a badly run-down farm of about one hundred acres. Nothing was modern about the place; grass was insufficient for pasture and winter hay; and he had to buy feed in the winter to carry through when his hay stacks were depleted.

The time came when he had neither cash nor credit for buying feed. Several times he moved to another location, thinking that some other section of the state would be kinder to him or that luck would come his way. But results were the same everywhere and merely added to his conviction that a poor man has no chance to get out of the poverty rut.

During World War II Zack returned to his homestead and started out again with about a dozen head of dairy cattle. He put up about three months supply of hay from his own meadows, and his pastures held up well. Milk prices were good for a while, but about the time the hay gave out in the winter, milk prices dropped. Soon Zack had neither money to buy "box-car" feed nor a profitable market for his milk. So it went for a couple of years, even during the wartime-inflated economy. Zack's prevalent idea that he was destined to a meager living on a run-down farm gained a tighter grip on him. For twelve years or more he had worked hard but had gained no ground.

IN THE MEANTIME, George's business was growing vigorously. He needed sure, steady sources of high-grade milk. He studied the dairymen who supplied him and determined that Zack might possibly fill part of the need. Carefully, for many months, George analyzed Zack's qualifications.

Chief among his drawbacks was his conviction that the world was against him, and that his poverty and difficulties were not his own fault. He had the delusion that his own time was worth more than the neighbors' hay he could harvest on shares. Moreover, he was too proud to harvest hay for others on shares because it seemed to him public admission that he was unable to buy feed. He was convinced, although he had not actually made any investigation that increased pasturage, hay, and silage would not pay the cost of fertilizing his land. His 100 acres were mortgaged and run down until they produced insufficient feed to carry even twelve head of stock. He had no capital nor credit to increase his herd to a number that could produce enough milk to make his dairy farm profitable. He had not learned either by observation or experience how to "figure himself out" of difficulties and emergencies, how to plan for the long pull ahead, or how to arrive at milk production costs. He did not understand about subsidiary crops, fattening hogs on milk residue products, as other money-making techniques. He was not stable because his chronic discouragement caused him to move from place to place, vainly hoping that some good luck beyond his own abilities would favor him.

George considered the fact that if he tried to help Zack, he might pull up stakes and move away at the first discouragement. However, the man did have some good qualities that made him desirable for the job. Zack knew stock. He knew how to judge accurately the kind of cow that would produce the maximum of milk on the minimum of feed and pasture. He knew how to care for stock, particularly dairy cattle and how to look after sick and calving cows. Though not a veterinarian, he knew how to treat his stock—how to grade and raise calves to live and grow and produce. He knew what quality milk means and how to select the kind of cows to produce it. And while he had no modern equipment, his barns and sheds were large enough to accommodate a herd of profitable size. Most of all he was honest.

FOUR YEARS AGO George proposed to Zack that he match his knowledge of dairy cows against George's business judgment and adequate financing. He proposed increasing Zack's production from twenty gallons to around 200 gallons a day. This was accomplished in about two months. Zack selected the cows but checked the prices and then paid for the new stock. George also financed the purchase of modern dairying equipment and bought a tract of land adjoining Zack's homestead to increase pasturage. He persuaded Zack to cut, on shares, all the hay he could find within reasonable distance, and to stock up sufficiently to last through the winter and beyond, instead of buying winter feed. This required argument and persuasion and finally positive insistence, because Zack still felt his time was more valuable than the feed he could store up. It was

NINETY YEARS AGO this month the first issue of The True Latter Day Saints' Herald came off the press. Despite its unimpressive size (slightly over five by eight inches) and the fact that most of its contents were in six- and eight-point type, it was perhaps the greatest boon of its day in uniting the widely scattered members of the infant Reorganization. Although by previous conference action it was agreed that a church paper should be published for only six months, the Herald appeared regularly once each month for the entire year. It remained a monthly until 1863, when it became a semi-monthly. Twenty years later—in January, 1883—it made its appearance as a sixteen-page, three-column weekly. The page size had increased to a generous nine by twelve inches, and most of the contents were set in readable ten-point type. The last page was devoted to advertising, with items ranging from farms for sale to ladies woolen mittens, twenty-five cents a pair.

Since then the Herald had varied in size from sixteen to thirty-two pages a week with special conference editions running as large as sixty-four pages. For the past two years it has stood at an even twenty-four with the Conference Daily supplementing.

The Herald's first editor-in-chief, Isaac Sheen, served from January, 1860, to May 1, 1865, when President Joseph Smith took over the editorship. Various assistants helped him in his work except from January, 1902, to January, 1903, during which time he assumed full responsibility. His two sons, Frederick and Israel, and his cousin, Elbert A. Smith, were his most continuous assistants. Following his death in 1914, Elbert became editor-in-chief and served in that office until July, 1917, when Frederick took over the work. For several years during Frederick's editorship, the Herald carried no masthead at all but was merely published in the name of the church. Since 1925, however, the president of the church and his assistants always have been listed as editor-in-chief and associate editors. When Frederick died in March, 1946, Israel became president at the April Conference, and his name was then placed first on the masthead.

Since there was no church-owned publishing house when the Herald was first issued, the printing had to be done by other establishments. From January, 1860, until March, 1863, it was printed in Cincinnati, Ohio. Then a printing plant was set up in Plano, Illinois, which was headquarters for the church at that time. In 1881 the plant was moved to Lamoni, Iowa; here the same building was used from that date until January 5, 1907, when it burned. This was a costly misfortune both in equipment and library losses. A new building was erected which served as the printing center for the church until 1921 when the present plant at 103 South Osage, Independence, Missouri, was occupied.

Today's Herald bears little if any resemblance to the True Latter Day Saints' Herald of 1860, but its purpose remains much the same. "Page one of that original issue stated the purpose of the new publication in these words: "We want it, that through it, the great work of these latter days may be presented to the world of mankind in its true light." Put in the language of January, 1950, "We want the Herald to carry the Restoration message to men and women everywhere that they may know the good life which comes to those who seek the truth."

Any publication, however, is only as effective as its circulation. People can't be converted via the printed word if they never have opportunity to read it. Each member can help in the program of world evangelism by sharing his Herald with neighbors.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION

What is the "hastening time"?
Michigan. Mrs. A. E.

ANSWER

The "hastening time" has both a spiritual and a physical meaning. In part at least it denotes the last one hundred and more years of the Restoration period in which there has been a great physical advancement and scientific development.

Material developments such as the radio, airplane, and television, will inevitably have their part in our church work. While the work of the church does not necessarily await the development of any particular instrument or product of science, discoveries and developments in the material realm will enhance the work of the church and assist in ushering in the kingdom. Through the radio, for instance, we now can preach the gospel to every nation in a comparatively brief time. In years to come certain phases of the gospel ordinances and principles may be illustrated by television in the home with as great clarity as is now possible in the chapel or classroom.

It is also a time for concentrated and accelerated spiritual development within the church. Of course this is applicable to the individual members as well as the whole. The last revelation to the church (Doctrine and Covenants 141:5) says, "The hastening time is upon us." This indicates to us that we should work more diligently than ever before to qualify ourselves spiritually for the work of the church and to bring to pass the purposes of our Heavenly Father.

QUESTION:

Since it is a doctrine of the church that the Holy Ghost is bestowed by the laying on of hands, how is it that Cornelius (among others) received the Holy Ghost before his baptism?
Michigan L. G. T.

ANSWER:

The church believes and teaches that the Holy Ghost is given by the laying on of hands by the elders. This does not mean, however, that the Holy Ghost is never bestowed without the imposition of hands. In our own history we have evidence to support this statement. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received an abundance of the Spirit which accompanied the work they did prior to their confirmation in April, 1830.

Cornelius was a devout man who had prepared himself for baptism. But he was a Gentile and therefore "they that were of the circumcision" considered him unworthy to receive the gifts of God (Acts 11:2). These disciples contended with Peter and asked him to justify what he had done. In defending the baptism of Cornelius, Peter referred to the gift of the Spirit and God's recognition of Cornelius' worthiness as justification for his action (Acts 11:17).

In view of the record, we may be reasonably certain that if Cornelius had refused to be baptized, he would not have received the Holy Ghost as an Abiding Comforter and Guide.

QUESTION:

Several sections of the Doctrine and Covenants (5:3; 18:2; 19:2, 3; 20:1; 27:2; 30:2) direct the elders and the church to give heed to the things revealed and declared by Joseph Smith. What was meant by "the things" the Lord gave to Joseph which needed to be taught and obeyed?

Kansas W. W. S.

ANSWER:

From a reading of Doctrine and Covenants 5:1 given March, 1829, over a year before the church was organized, we learn that Martin Harris wanted some divine assurance that the claim of Joseph having received the plates, from which the Book of Mormon was translated, was a fact. The phrase "these things" appears several times in the revelation, and no doubt refers to the visitation of the angel, the plates, the restoration of the gospel, and the organization of the church.

In another revelation the phrase "these things" refers to the revelations that would come to the church through Joseph Smith as prophet (Doctrine and Covenants 19:2).

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 20:1 the phrase apparently refers to the new and everlasting covenant, the gospel covenant which in our time was to replace and abrogate not only the Mosaic law but also our acceptance of and obedience to the gospel covenant, annulling any covenant that we might have made in some other organization.

As the Mosaic law was a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, so any former devotion to truth and righteousness had value in leading us onward and upward.

Wherever the phrase, "these things," appears in other revelations the reading of the context throws light upon its meaning.

JAMES F. KEIR

QUESTION:

Are those who do not waste their time of probation here the only ones entitled to celestial glory?

Missouri E. H.

ANSWER:

"Awful" is the state of "the enlightened" "that wasteth the day of his probation" (II Nephi 6:56). And an "awful" condition is not celestial glory.

Note that it is required of "the enlightened" to "walk" in the light until the end of the day of probation" (II Nephi 15:10).

The Restoration prophet said that the people who have espoused the cause of Zion—the enlightened—should serve God with all the powers of their being (Doctrine and Covenants 4:1). It says further (77:1) that preparation for a place in "the celestial world" must be made through seeking to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion—it is a duty not to waste "their time of probation."

Now the meaning of "waste," in the sense in which it has application here, is to expend needlessly, carelessly, or without valuable result any talent that should be devoted to some purpose. Idling—useless, ineffective effort—is time-wasting. And the most pernicious wasting has been done by the most energetic. Foolish expenditure of time is wasting. In II Timothy 2:16, Paul mentions a way of wasting time—often the time of others who would like to employ that time in profitable ways.

The Ministry of Power: Its Nature and Function

PART I

THE NEED of "power" in the ministry of the church is recognized not only in our communion, but by churches in general. This need is expressed by the eminent psychologist, Josiah Royce, of Harvard as follows:

The article of the Creed regarding the Holy Ghost (Spirit) is, I believe, the one matter about which most who discuss the problem have least to say in way of definite theory. Yet, if I am right, this is, in many respects, the really distinctive and therefore the capital article of the Christian creed, so far as that creed suggests a theory of the divine nature. This article then should be understood, if the spirit of Christianity, in its most human and vital features, is to be understood at all. And this article should be philosophically expounded and defended, if any distinctively Christian article of the creed is to find a foundation in a rationally defensible metaphysical theory of the universe.

Speaking as a psycho-therapist, Dr. J. A. Hadfield says:

I cannot help pointing out that our discussion of the psychology of power has a very direct bearing on the question of the dynamic of religion, and especially on the power possessed by the Christian religion of liberating energies which can transform the living soul into a quickening spirit In its doctrine of the Spirit it emphasizes the element of power in religion. No reader of the New Testament can fail to be struck by the constant reiteration in different forms of the idea that the normal experience of a Christian at that epoch was enhancement of power—"I can do all things"—an enhancement attributed by them to the operation in and through them of a divine energy to which the community gave the name of the "Spirit"—"Ye shall receive power." Pentecost, the healing miracles of the Apostolic Age, the triumphant progress of the religion through the Roman Empire, the heroic deeds of saints and martyrs—all these point to the sense of a power newly discovered. In contrast, looking at the Church of today, one cannot but be struck with the sense of its powerlessness. It contains men of intellect; it produces a type of piety and devotion which one cannot but admire; it sacrifices itself in works of kindness and beneficence; but even its best friends would not claim that it inspires in the world the sense of power. What strikes one rather is its impotence and failure. This want of inspiration and power is associated with the fact that men no longer believe in the existence of the Spirit in any effective practical way. . . . They believe in God, the Father, and they are reverent; they believe in the Son, and the Church numbers amongst its members millions who humbly try to follow "in His steps"; but for all practical purposes they are like that little band at Ephesus who has "not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," and, lacking the inspiration of such a belief, they are weak and wonder why.

—"The Spirit" The Psychology of Power, pages 108 and 109.

WITH the new natural forces which science has made available to mankind, there is also the feeling that these may become dangerous and destructive unless they can be matched and controlled by spiritual power through the ministries of the church. Vaguely, it is suspected that the church has not kept pace with intellectual advances; mankind is clever but not good. Our age is characterized by the discovery and application of forces about which we know little at present; but their potentiality has been to some extent registered in terms of tragedy which also suggest beneficent possibilities if only man knew more and would behave better.

We recognize that in and of themselves these forces are neither moral nor of value. All values are moral and spiritual, and these forces must be under moral and spiritual control or their strength and diversities may become catastrophic in their effects as we have witnessed in the cities of Europe and Japan. Hatred may easily convert these forces into a Frankenstein which would destroy our civilization. Or we may learn to employ them as docile servants to redeem mankind from toil and sweat, and through co-operative good will enrich life beyond the powers of imagination.

In the two world conflicts since the beginning of the present century our immoral and unspiritual cleverness has resulted in the destruction of millions of lives (the cream of the two generations involved), the wastage of treasures of the centuries, and a demoralization and pollution of the stream of life which has spread its miasma over the whole world, threatening universal bankruptcy materially and morally. The wisdom of the wise is baffled, the strength and skill of humanity made impotent. There seems to be no way out unless we radically change our way of thinking and acting. If we gain the world and lose souls, or if God should say to us, "This night thy soul is required of thee," what can we answer? It is imperative that we bring nature's forces under control of the power of the Spirit.

IN THE 150 YEARS since the discovery of most of the natural powers in all varieties, life has been transformed so thoroughly that what was phantasy and miracle is now commonplace. The discoveries of the atomic explosive, the nuclear energy in what science labels "fission" of uranium and plutonium have placed within man's reach forces of such magnitude, as to bewilder and frighten him. In their most extravagant imaginings, Jules Verne and H. G. Wells did not dream of that which is now in humanity's grasp.

By JOHN W. RUSHTON

In Virginia Gildersleeve's foreword to Sir Richard Livingstone's book on education she says:

Many Americans fear that our schools and colleges will not help us develop the wisdom needed to control for human welfare the terrible tools put into our hands by modern science and invention.

We are told that one pound of this power, no larger in size than a walnut, could provide energy equal to a thirteen thousand horse power engine working one thousand hours; it could do the work now requiring fifteen hundred tons of coal; it contains as much energy as the output of a hundred horse power automobile engine working continuously for fifteen years. As much of this energy, which goes into a single bomb—a well guarded secret—but guessed to be about twenty to thirty pounds—as large as a grapefruit and at a cost of about one million dollars, would provide enough electric power to supply the requirements of seven million people or a city the size of New York. For a very frank discussion of this subject, written in terms of popular understanding, see an article by Gerald Wendt in Harper's Magazine for May of this year, in which the author says:

There is no greater tragedy for humanity than the international tension that keeps the colossal atomic power secreted behind walls and readied only to spread destruction and death. With peace around, this same power could multiply many times over the industrial production, and therefore the wealth of unnumbered nations.

It is the conclusion of some experts that, as an instrument of destruction, atomic-power is not such a decisive weapon as is generally supposed. If this power were used in the ways these authors suggest, the real atomic-power age could begin and result in what President Truman has described as the aim we should have in mind—"to help the free nations and peoples of the world, through their own efforts, to produce more goods, more clothing, more materials for housing, and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens."

This informative article by Mr. Wendt very clearly shows that the church especially is challenged to match these forces with the power which alone can convert them through moral and spiritual controls, into values of beneficence thus creating a new world in which the kingdom of God shall be discerned. David Lilienthal has expressed this hope.

OUR UNIVERSE is a living universe as intimated centuries ago by Bacon (the apostle of the inductive method), "I had rather believe all the fables in the Legend, and the Talmud, and the Alcoran than that this universal frame is without a mind." Also, Carlyle speaks of the heavens and the earth as the "Time-vesture of the Eternal." Dr. H. B. Streeter in his Reality reminds us that Bergson's conception of "creative evolution" has popularized the idea that the universe is the expression of an "indwelling life-force." Here is the argument:

Now the Universe, whatever else it is, is an organized system; otherwise the elaborate structure of knowledge we call science would be a cloud castle of the human mind having no correspondence with reality. And as Life is a thing that exists in the Universe, and as it is also the only principle of synthesis and organization of which we have real knowledge, the hypothesis that life is (or, at least, is a representative expression of) the synthetic, organizing, controlling principle in the universe is of all the hypotheses so far propounded the most completely scientific. On this hypothesis the driving power behind the universe is thought of not as a dead wholly unconscious force comparable to an electric current, but as an all-pervading Life. The totality of things is pictured no longer as a machine but as an organism. The Universe becomes alive.

In the several arguments used to "prove" the existence of God, the teleological argument is accepted as the most impressive and is regarded today as of increased authenticity. As defined by G. T. Ladd in his Philosophy of Religion:

The argument from design in general proceeds from the obviously planful nature, or orderliness, of particular existences and their relations, as man has increasing experiences of them, to the conclusion that they all have their Ground in One Mind.

The universe demonstrates purpose; purpose evidences will; will registers itself in character. Hence the conclusion: "The universe as the expression of mind is one of which the importance cannot possibly be exaggerated."

The force, or energy, or power which is at work in and through all phenomena, is a living power. It is not religious ecstasy to believe that the universe which in the now distant aeons "was without form and void" was "moved upon [brooded over] by the Spirit of God" and it became alive with order, beauty, and the promise of the evolutionary progress in which the creativity of God is still manifested. "It doth not yet appear what shall be," but in the finality all will be identified with God, because all will be purified and sublimated in him and be "pure even as he is pure."

To this end all creation is moving inevitably "that God may be all in all." This is his universe—"It is my Father's world." His will and pleasure will be fully realized in his way and time. As expressed by Marcus Dods, the Scottish divine: "At the root and origin of all this vast universe there abides a living, conscious Spirit, who wills and knows and fashions all things."

A generation ago "Material Monism" as expounded by Haeckel in his Riddle of the Universe postulated the atom as the last word of the universe. Today science repudiates the implication and the claim that the universe is only matter with its ninety-two (more or less) elements in various combinations. The atom is not the beginning of things, and at its heart are negative and positive forces, which in their organization are as wonderful as the astral systems, whose ponderous masses and magnitudinous distances baffle description. This widening and deepening knowledge reveals God as Creator and Sustainer in terms more wonderful than ever before conceived, and as the "necessary hypothesis" is demanded more imperatively, and as the explanation of the now familiar phenomena.

Prophets and poets have anticipated the scientists: such minds as Plato, the Stoics, and Job, among the ancients; Kant, Goethe, Wordsworth, Shelley, Blake, Tennyson, Ruskin, Carlyle—to name but few of the moderns. These saw and communed with the Life immanent in and transcending our universe.

To understand the universe, its nature, methods and purpose so far as we have capacity, we must understand the mind, a function of life, the power at work in and through all phenomena. Our understanding of mind must be in the light of our experience; always making allowance for the limitations imposed by the finite in our effort to understand the infinite. However, there must be that in both which has affinity for each other. The infinite and the finite while immeasurable in their differences so far as quantities are concerned would be similar in qualities. The functions of each would be similar in each—the affective, the cognitive, and the conative. Affections, reason and will, function together and constitute "personality." Says Dean Matthews:

Personality is in its essence, dynamic; a person is not a substance but an energy. Persons must be active and creative, and it would be strange if the kingdom abolished just those marks which distinguish persons as the highest form of Life.—The Purpose of God, page 167.

Silent Symbols - By ALICE M. BURGESS

THE WORDS OF JESUS that have been written down and preserved are very brief and fragmentary in comparison with the great influence of our Savior upon the lives and history of humanity. It is the silent symbols of his life in quiet act and deed that have reverberated in the hearts of mankind for almost two thousand years. It is because he dwelt among us and clothed in human flesh and earthly life the great, divine purposes and limitless love of God the Father that his message to the world will live forever.

The personality of Christ was the most perfectly balanced and poised the world has ever known. His gospel impels us to divine heights of self-realization, to discover the God in us, to sanctify ourselves and speak, act, and live with an assurance based upon divine authority. Yet this self-sanctification must be for the purpose of service to mankind and must lead to meekness and lowliness of heart. Jesus spent long hours in the solitude of nature, and his life was constantly refreshed by deep seasons of prayer. But he always came back to long hours of service. He kept himself on the highest plane spiritually and mentally that he might come back and minister to the multitude.

Jesus united the apparently divergent ideals of self-culture and self-denial into a symphony of perfect balance and power. His life mirrored crystal clear the divine light of God's truth and love.

WHEN THE LATE Joseph Smith died, the Kansas City Journal published the following tribute:

He was the prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived; as such he died; as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith.

Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his creed, tolerant to those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation; such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character.

Thus are the beauty and truth of the written word which God saw fit to give the church through this prophet glorified and made flesh in his life of Christian righteousness.

Daniel Webster said that the strongest argument he knew for religion was his old aunt who lived in the New Hampshire hills.

George Eliot said a true Christian will impress one like a fine quotation from the Bible in the midst of a newspaper paragraph.

My father told often of his experience as a missionary in the little town of Myrtle Point, Oregon. He went there rather hesitantly with the gospel tent because there was only one family of Saints, and it meant a long haul over the mountains by wagon in those days. But that one good man by the power of his Christian life opened all the doors of that little community to the gospel. When Father went to ask for use of land on which to set up his tents and told what church he represented, the comment came, "Why that's Mr. Buell's church, isn't it? You can use the lot as long as you want. A religion that produces men like Mr. Buell should have a hearing in any community." The same answer came when he interviewed the mayor and the newspaper and came repeatedly as he and mother, with the help of my brother and me, made the usual house to house canvass of the town. Brother Buell's life had become a symbol to everybody of all the kindly, neighborly virtues and the incarnation of truth and dependability. Needless to say the response to the preached word was also generous, and a branch was soon built up in that place.

On the other hand there is too often truth in the old accusation: "What you do thunders so loud I cannot hear what you say."

THE OLD TESTAMENT Prophet Jeremiah declares, "The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness; come and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God."—Jeremiah 51: 10. Shall we accept this challenge today and ask ourselves to what extent we declare the work of the Lord our God through the silent symbols of our lives and acts? In what measure do our personalities and everyday attitudes clothe in human flesh the light and truth of the gospel? Are our lives so grounded in love, patience, and kindness that we can keep an even keel in the stress and strain of everyday living? Can we endure injustice and unfair dealing without being deflected from the peaceful, joyous personality that is truly Christian? Do we have enough faith in God's purposes and in the ultimate triumph of right that we can go on in spite of apparent failure on our part or misunderstanding of others? Are we good "forgivers"? Paul said, "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and railing be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God also in Christ forgave you."

We must declare the work of the Lord our God through the sacrificial way of life. Do we serve those around us in lowly ways by doing the little things as well as the big that are ours to do? Sometimes when my aged father had an unusually big job to do—an important sermon or a ministry to some special family—I'd find him working up to the last minute, doing the dishes or some lowly household chore. Several times I rather fussed at him, for his strength was not as adequate as in former years, and I feared he'd incapacitate himself for the Lord's work he had to do.

One day he said, "Don't worry about me, Alice, I've long ago found I do a better job of ministry if I do not neglect the little chores at home."

The sacrificial way of life is the only way to victorious living. We must not save ourselves for the big things around the corner and neglect the little necessary duties of today.

FOR WOMEN the most important and first mission is to declare the work of the Lord at home. Too often it is true that:

They say the world is round and yet it must be square
So many little hurts we get from corners here and there.
We flatter those we scarcely know, we please the fleeting guest,
And deal full many a thoughtless blow to those we love the best.

Do you have peace in your home?
Do the silent symbols of your daily round of tasks cheerfully done reflect
God to your family?

Whether you realize it or not you, more than any other member of your household, set the tone of your home.

"Better a dinner of herbs where love is than a stalled ox and hatred therewith" is just as true today as it was in Solomon's time. Perhaps the modern meaning of this is "Better a vegetable plate with love than a big, thick steak with hatred." Are you at peace with yourself? Not a martyr, not a nag, not a scolder, not so rushed that you can't take time for the pleasant, considerate little kindnesses that mean so much to your husband and your children?

Are you cheerful, serene, and poised at home? Do you walk and talk softly, or does the block echo with your screams and tirades when your child fails to come at once when called?

A young friend of mine recently hoped she'd never yell at her children as one of the neighboring mothers did, adding, "And she's such a polite, well-bred person when you meet her in church."

We women particularly need patience in the Christian way. Patience is often listed as one of the peculiarly feminine traits, and the wife and mother who doesn't have it, is sorely handicapped. Two little girls, three and four years old, were playing house under my window the other day. I heard a slap and "Shut up! Shut up now! Go to sleep, you!" I was shocked and looked out to protest, thinking Patty was being unkind to her little sister. But a moment's observation showed me this was merely the accepted routine for putting the little one to bed. It was repeated several times, and each time little sister subsided and took it as part of the game. They were repeating the habitual pattern of their home life. Their bed time hour which should be a time of love and worship meant only slapping and impatience—a sudden inaction enforced by threats and violence.

Genius has been defined as a superior aptitude to patience. Surely if we are to excel, to show genius in homemaking, in Zionite living in our families, we must have patience and forbearance. This character symbol is one of the most silent, yet it shines brightly into the hearts and minds of those around us. Endurance follows after patience.

Endurance is the crowning quality
And patience all the passion of great hearts;
These are their stay, and when the leaden world
Sets its hard face against their fateful thought,
And brute strength, like a scornful conqueror, Clangs his huge mace down on the other scale,
The inspired soul but flings his patience in,
And slowly that outweighs the ponderous globe;
One faith against the whole earth's unbelief,
One soul against "the flesh of all mankind."

ARE YOU A DEPENDABLE person? Is your word as good as your bond? When you promise to do something for your family, for the school, for your church, is it "as good as done"? Or do you have to be called and reminded? Do you often alibi yourself out of fulfilling your contract if things become difficult for you?

I don't have to tell you how important it is to establish with your children absolute confidence in your promises. I won't mention threats—I hope you don't make any.

And how very important it is that there be absolute integrity between yourself and your husband. When he depends upon you to make telephone calls, to launder or mend his clothes for some special occasion, or to pay a bill—are you just as scrupulous in keeping your promise as you were in the first months of marriage? As a citizen both of the community and of the kingdom, do you deliver the goods as you have agreed?

Undoubtedly prayer is the keystone of a life which, by the silent symbols of Christlike character, would reveal the "righteousness of the Lord in Zion." As Doctor Alexis Carrel points out in his article, "The Power of Prayer," the truly prayerful person is stamped with an indelible mark—a tranquillity of bearing, a facial and bodily repose. He says that whoever engages in prayer changes both body and soul for the better, no matter how weak, silly, vain, or futile he may be.

In the hurried and helter-skelter life of today one is very apt to slip out of the habit of constant prayer. As soon as we fail to take time to speak oft with our Lord, our lives slip from the pattern Christ set.

Often we get so earnest in our warfare, so bowed down with all we want to do, that we fail to be cheerful. The truly Christian life is a joyous one lived in shining faith and assurance. If we are rooted in Christ and caught up in his divine purposes, we shall not be fearful or anxious.

Briefs

MILL SPRING, MISSOURI.—The District Church School Director Elder Gomer Malone of Kennett, Missouri, met with the Saints and organized the church school on September 11. Melvin Knight was elected superintendent; Mrs. Opoc Nelson, adult teacher; and Mrs. G. M. Knight, nursery teacher.

Elder W. A. Kuntz and District President J. A. Phillipps conducted a series of missionary meetings from September 24 to October 18. On November 27 Elder W. A. Kuntz, Corridon, Missouri, pastor of the branch, baptized Mrs. Calvin Knight. She was confirmed the following day by Brother Kuntz.

The women's department held a bazaar November 26 to raise funds for the needs of the church.—Reported by MRS. OPIE NELSON.

SIoux CITY, IOWA.—Dan Emmerson, Troop 21, attained the top honor in Scouting at the Court of Honor in Sioux City, December 8. He was awarded the Silver Palm for the Eagle Scout. He has earned thirty-one merit badges, the bronze palm, and the gold palm.

Dan is sixteen and a sophomore at East High School. He is an outstanding athlete, having earned letters in basketball, football, and track.—Reported by VELMA FLOYD.

VENICE, CALIFORNIA.—The general church has approved plans for the building of a church for the little mission of Venice. The plans that have been approved will accommodate a congregation of 150 members. The building will consist of a chapel with choir loft, baptismal font, and sound proof nursery. There will be a recreation room which can be used for junior church and classrooms. Adjoining the recreation room will be a modern kitchen. The church will be located on the corner of Walgrove and Vienna Way in Venice.

The women's department have been instrumental in raising the funds for the purchase of the lot for the building fund. They have sponsored dinners, rummage sales, and bazaars. At one of the dinners $800 was raised.

This mission group was started in 1941. The first meeting was held at the home of Sister Ola Hattens. Then for three and a half years meetings were held at the home of Sister Lucy Worcester. She distributed the Saints' Herald on garden benches in front of her home, and there was a large sign in the front yard to attract any casual passer-by to investigate the church. She and her son, Herbert Worcester, were secretary and treasurer respectively. Brother C. F. Clark was pastor.

This group became a mission on May 6, 1945. Albert Knowlton was pastor. He was succeeded by Pastor William I. Meador and his assistant, Foster O. White. There has been a 10 per cent baptismal increase since it started, and an average attendance of fifty every Sunday. There is an additional sum to be raised before the building can be started.—Reported by MARGARET SENSENEY.

WICHITA, KANSAS.—At a special service in the evening of October 2, Leo Heiser, Anthony, Kansas, was baptized by Elder Myron F. LaPointe and was confirmed by Elders Elbert A. Schmidt and E. E. Wilson. Michael Kay and Patricia Ann Wooten, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Wooten, were blessed by Elders Floyd A. Bedwell and J. W. Wooten; Marcia Helen Day, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall H. Day, and David Leo Heiser, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Heiser, were blessed by Elders Chester Richards and Myron F. LaPointe.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Donald E. Manuel, appeared over station KFH on the morning of October 9 on the Youth Church program and presented the story of "The Old, Old Path."

Apostle Reed Holmes was the speaker at the evening service, November 6.

The following persons were baptized by Elder Myron F. LaPointe on the morning of November 20 and were confirmed at the evening service: William Phelps, R. S. Cavin, Laura May Cavin, David Cavin, Gary Lee Houser, Carolyn Houser, and Patty Jo Sanders.

The women's department, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Albert Hopfer, held a bazaar for three days in the downtown stores, realizing $211.77 from sales. These proceeds will be added to the branch building fund. The women have also been having calendar parties to raise money for the fund.—Reported by MARIAN L. MANUEL.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.—Pastor Elbert D. Guilbert and his wife took part in the Twenty-fourth Annual Performance of "The Messiah" by the Municipal Chorus of the city.

Brother Guilbert sang in the chorus. Sister Lena Guilbert was at the console of the Estey organ. Sister Guilbert is not only a degreed and accomplished musician but also a good and devoted church member, and, as a pastor's wife, gives herself freely and efficiently to the work of the church in San Jose.—Reported by WILLIAM PATTERSON.

MT. VERNON, ILLINOIS.—The South-eastern Illinois District conference was held November 19 and 20. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the speaker on the evening of November 19, and was also the speaker at the 11:00 service on Sunday. A prayer and testimony meeting was held previous to the 11:00 service. A basket dinner was served at the noon hour.

Officers for the coming year are S. R. Coleman, district president; Dr. W. E. Phillips and Harry Henson, counselors; Mrs. Ruby Ellis, district secretary; Ed Knapp, treasurer and bishop's agent; Rufus Rockett, director of religious education; Mrs. S. R. Coleman, music director; Ed Colvin, young people's leader; Rufus Rockett, W. W. Brown, and E. W. McKinney, auditing committee.—Reported by MRS. RUBY ELLIS.

INDEPENDENCE.—The Stone Church was the center of activity December 1 as an almost capacity group of city-wide women assembled for their regular monthly "Preparation Day." The setting was around a worship center which had been prepared by Mrs. Eldron Robison, with a service of music presented by Mrs. Clayton Wolfe, organist, and Mrs. John Darling, pianist.

Mrs. Gail Wilson, City-wide Women's leader, presided with the assistance of Mrs. Oliver McKeivt who gave the devotional, and Jack Craig, who sang two solos. He was accompanied by both the piano and organ. Elder F. M. McDowell, Supervisor of Priesthood Education, was the guest speaker, choosing as his topic: "Morality Makes Sense."

During the afternoon individual classwork was conducted with Mrs. S. S. Arnsen as speaker for the women's supervisors. Mrs. Preston Hubble spoke to visiting directors and cradle roll workers group. Mrs. Fred Stevens taught the class of study guide chairmen. The Daughters of Zion group had as their guest speaker Mrs. Harry Simons, of Warrensburg, who spoke on "How Can I Teach My Child to Become a Morally Responsible Person?"

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS.—The pastor, Elder J. O. Dutton, held a series of missionary meetings September 18 to 25 after which Hillis Dean Falnstrom was baptized. Visiting speakers for the last few months were John Stiegel of Rock Island, Ed Jones of Kewanee, Herald Corvin of East Galesburg, and Herbert J. Dutton, Peoria.

Mrs. Hallie Funk from Elmwood, has been holding prebaptismal classes every Thursday evening for a group of girls in and around Dahinda. Mrs. Anna Popplett entertained them at a turkey dinner.

A Sunday school picnic was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gustafson. Herbert J. Dutton was the main speaker.

Guest speakers at the annual home-coming held November 27 were Jesse Cady and John Harrington. On December 1 the women's department was organized under Mrs. Clarence Hapton with an attendance of six.—Reported by MRS. J. W. MILROY.

WALNUT PARK, INDEPENDENCE.—On November 6 the Blue Birds and Orioles received awards for the work completed in the year 1948-49. Those passing from Blue Birds into Orioles were members of the Wakiye Band, and are: Mary Handy, Joan Sherman, Virginia Turner, Mary Kay Smith, Wilma Scott, Betty Bohonsky, Geraldine Lades, Norma Peterson, Marsha Smith, and Lois Hurshman. Orioles receiving One Hundred Hour Pins for paging at the Sanitarium are Erlene Willoughby, Velma Davies, Joy Hoover, and Dixie Mock. Girls who received Senior Life Saving badges for swimming are Kay Oeser, Mary Gunzel, and Alice Eastwood, First Rank Builders are Sylvia Sallee and Dixie Mock. Lavonne Krickle and Marge Hulmes received Blue Bird Leadership Certificates. Ruby Smith received an Oriole Leadership Certificate. Walnut Park now has four bands of Blue Birds and four circles of Orioles. There are eight leaders and assistant leaders for the Blue Birds and four leaders for the Orioles. There are a total of thirty-five Blue Bird girls and thirty-six Oriole girls. For the past two months, Oriole Monitors from various branches in Independence have met at the home of the Walnut Park girl's leader, Rachel Oeser, to take instruction in the art of ceramic painting under the leadership of Lavonne Krickle. They will take this knowledge to their Oriole girls.

At a union prayer service held November 9, Frank White, Vern Brown, and Joseph Williams were ordained to the priesthood. November 18, the Daughters of Zion with the direction of Frances Benner presented their first annual Family Night. Elder Donald V. Lents acted as master of ceremonies. The children of the branch lead by Mrs. Vernon Sackman and Mrs. Vernon Young, presented a tableau, "The Fruits of the Spirit" for the branch Thanksgiving Service. The choir assisted. Baptisms and confirmations for the month included Larry Bergman, Frank Freeman, Jr., and Garry Mitchell. November 20, Leslie Willoughby was blessed.—Reported by Mrs. ELLA WILLIAMS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The Southern District Youth Thanksgiving Festival was held November 26 and 27; the branch acting as host. The festival opened Saturday with games followed by organization of a youth choir under the capable leadership of Mrs. Vivian Sheehy. The high spot of the day was a progressive supper held in the evening for the group, which contributed greatly to the general enjoyment and good fellowship. On Sunday, District President Almer Sheehy and Elder Sanford Fisher conducted a "Thanksgiving Youth College," for the group, during church school hour. The regular eleven o'clock worship service for the branch was conducted by the district youth. A message and introduction were given by Leonard D. Garlick, president, followed by Paul Stoff, of Boston, Massachusetts, whose theme was "The Abundant Harvest," and by Donald L. Seaver of Onset, who spoke on "Thankful Living." At the noon hour, a dinner was served for the young people, and the activities closed with a Youth Fellowship meeting.

The annual Christmas bazaar of the Providence Branch, sponsored by the women's department, was held December 3, and was well attended. An interesting talk on church activities, illustrated by colored picture slides, was given by Mr. Ralph Hardy of Boston, followed by a sale of candy and fancy needlework articles. Refreshments were served, and besides enjoying an evening of good fellowship a contribution was made to the welfare of the branch.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

NOTE.—Reporters are urged to include their own names and addresses so the editors can send each a sheet of "Helps on Writing Reports."

Memory Lane

THERE IS AN ELDERLY SISTER in Kansas City whose forebears were active in church work many years ago. She is Sister Fannie L. McVay, widow of James H. McVay. Brother McVay also was born into a Latter Day Saint family and was a nephew of Patriarch Isaac N. White.

Sister McVay's memory goes back to her girlhood days in Michigan; the removal of her parents, Elder Henry C. Smith (many years a missionary) and wife, to Lamoni, Iowa; her marriage first to Alvin Hopkins, who died soon afterward; and later her marriage to James H. McVay, attorney-at-law.

After a few years in Leon, Iowa, where Brother McVay served as county attorney, she moved with him and their children to Kansas City, where she has since resided.

Among her prized possessions is a pencil sketch made by Elder David H. Smith, father of Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, when he first engaged in missionary work, afterward he became a counselor to his brother, the late President Joseph Smith.

The minutes of the General Conference of 1868 show the following (page 140 of the Herald for that year):

"Brother Jason W. Briggs having requested the names of those ready to take missions, . . . the following names were handed in:
D. H. Smith. . . ."

The next action placed these new appointees under the direction of the Quorum of Twelve. Apparently David H. Smith was appointed to serve in Michigan, for on November 30, 1868, he wrote a letter to his brother from Hopkins, Michigan, the first of many interesting letters from his facile pen through a term of years. "My mission has been blessed beyond my expectations. . . . God bless you, my brother, under whose hands I was confirmed unto a lively hope in Christ, when the voice of prophecy promised the sheaves I am now gathering."

Sister McVay, writing from a bed of affliction, recently sent this message to us for use in this story. Her salutation consisted of the opening words of David H. Smith in a poem addressed to the Herald:

"Little Herald, Stop a Moment as You Journey on Your Way."

What I am going to say may sound childish to some, but to me these memories are sacred.

This picture of my mother, Mrs. Henry C. Smith, was pencil-drawn by David H. Smith many years ago. I saw him pick the rose and fix it in her hair. We lived in a small log house my father built in the wilds of Michigan, and all the elders were made welcome in this little home in the early days of the church. David stayed with us quite a while. I was nearly always at his side. His heart was full of love for all animals. He made friends with ants and studied their ways. A large toad came every day to be fed by him in an old stump. David helped wash dishes and plant potatoes. He was a happy man [twenty-four years old] and loved by us.

This was over eighty years ago, and now I am eighty-six. Love to all the dear ones I have known.

FANNIE McVAY.

In a later note she writes, "God is near me and has always been through all my trials of life."

This heartfelt tribute by Sister McVay to the memory of David Smith was supported in a letter from a brother at Hopkins, Michigan, J. E. Hopper, in the Herald of February 1, 1869, when he said:

Brother David H. Smith is about to leave us. We can hardly bear the thought of this. He has been a brother to us, always cheerful. . . . He has done a great deal of good here, which his heavenly Father will reward him for.

We are indebted to our aged sister for the opportunity to reproduce this historic drawing and tell our readers about it. Sentiment endures though civilizations and peoples are forgotten.

The Importance of Unified Thought

By J. MARK FOUNTAIN

IF WE ARE to have a unified people, we must first have unified thought." So spoke the pastor of the Stone Church recently. This concept of unified thought is complex, but it merits understanding if it is to function effectively. I don't believe he used the term in the sense of regimented or controlled thinking but rather as meaning oneness of purpose and a diligent awareness of the dynamic character of this church.

The mechanics of thought processes are easily neglected, but the power latent in them make them worthy of quick review if not of detailed study. We lapse easily into figurative language in describing thought, probably because it is so intangible; but as in all analogical thinking, such language is both inaccurate and misleading.

When uninterrupted by some practical issue during our waking hours, we usually engage in what is known as a reverie. This is our spontaneous and favorite kind of thinking. Our thoughts will flow around our hopes, fears, desires, likes, dislikes, loves, hates, and resentments. There is nothing else so interesting to us as ourselves. All thought that is not more or less laboriously controlled and directed will inevitably circle about ourselves. It is amusing and pathetic to observe this tendency in humanity.

Another kind of thinking is stimulated when anyone questions our beliefs and opinions. We are incredibly heedless in the formation of most of our beliefs but find ourselves filled with hostility when anyone proposes to change them. It is clearly not the ideas themselves that are dear to us, but our self-esteem. We are by nature pledged to defend our own from attack, whether it be our bodies, our family, our property, or our opinions. The result is that most of our so-called reasoning consists of finding arguments for going on believing as we do.

A third kind of thought has raised man from his subsavage ignorance and squalor to the degree of knowledge and comfort he now possesses. On his capacity to continue and expand this kind of thinking depends his chance of groping his way out of the plight in which the most highly civilized people of the world now find themselves. This type of precision thinking is reason or creative thought. This kind of meditation produces knowledge, and knowledge is really creative inasmuch as it makes things look different from what they seemed before and may even work for their reconstruction. "A little learning is a dangerous thing" precisely because it gets creative thought started, and creative thought, though it may sometimes lead to truth, may result in ridiculous or perilous falsehood.

Here Is the Writer

Mark Fountain is a graduate of William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri, and Graceland College (class of '48). During the war he served in the Navy as a pharmacist mate and is now a senior in the department of psychology at the University of Kansas City. On September 10, 1948, he was married to Doris Elaine Watt of Lamoni.

—"The best thing that ever happened to me," he says. His favorite pastime is playing golf with Albert Scherer (his brother-in-law).

THOUGHT IS ALSO RELATED to action and through action to doubt. When action ceases, creative thought also ceases. No one can be a great thinker who does not recognize that, as a thinker it is his first duty to follow his intellect to whatever conclusion it may lead. Truth gains more by the errors of one who, with due study and preparation, thinks for himself, than by the true opinions of those who hold them because they do not trouble themselves to think. In any vast social movement, such as this church has undertaken, an individual's most valuable contribution may be his brilliant mistakes.

It is generally agreed that independent thinking and intelligence are correlated, that one thought born and reared of your own endeavor is worth a thousand secondhand thoughts of other people. In this modern age of mechanics, mass, robotlike repetition is necessary and desirable in machines; but it is neither necessary nor desirable in men's thinking.

Why, then, this concept of "unified thought"? All mankind, high and low, thinks in the aforementioned ways. The process goes on all the time not only in the mind of the mill hand and the debutante but equally in robed judges and learned professors. It has gone on in all the philosophers, scientists, poets, and theologians who have ever lived. Individualized, personal thoughts are the elements of unified thoughts. When we speak of personal thought, the phrase carries several implications. It means, first, that the individual's thoughts form an arrangement of related strivings rather than a chance conglomerate. It means, in the second place, that this thought has no standard form, but differs in individuals according to their nature and history. It must have still a third implication if we are going to talk about living people rather than inanimate systems. It must mean that the thoughts are unified and patterned in order to accomplish the maintenance and expansion of a living unit. They function within an organism, and they are patterned to make that organism live and grow. This is the unifying principle that governs the patterning and makes it intelligible.

CONSIDERING each individual in the Zionite movement, how many complex ideas make up the idea of church membership responsibility? How many complex ideas are united in the idea of home? How many more in the idea of God? How many more in the idea of Zion? It is necessary to locate and maintain a red thread of unity in all these ramifications of thought, but it is equally necessary to recognize the invaluable factor of diversity in free, flexible, and versatile thinking.

The great need then is intelligence, and Socrates was not far wrong in counting this as the highest virtue. Again we do not mean intellectuality, which is the opposite of specific and realistic thought, but that flexibility of mind which can unify and readjust past experiences to novel stimuli and purposes.

Creative thinking is difficult, but it is the surest means by which we can improve ourselves. Let us strive to think well.

Winter Woodland

Peace in the winter woods.

Stark trees sleep.

Gently the soft snow falls

Pure and deep.

Still lie the winter hills.

Brown earth dreams.

Quiet the chattering brooks,

Silent the streams.

Dusk in the barren woods,

Etched in white.

Dim in the gathering gloom,

Black in the night.

Cold in the starlight-gleam

Snow-fields lie.

Black lace on rose-pink dawn—

Trees against sky.

Be of Good Cheer

By MARIE GOSLINE

IN THESE TRYING TIMES when the world is in such great turmoil and unrest, it is a comforting thought that Jesus wanted his followers to be a people of peace, joy, and good cheer. So many times in the Bible we hear Jesus repeat the words, "Be of good cheer." Even when Paul was taken to the castle at the captain's orders after he had been nearly "pulled in pieces" the Lord stood by him and said, "Be of good cheer, Paul." What these words must have meant to him! And what it means to us today to know that close at hand in our hour of need is the Savior who stands near by saying, "Be of good cheer." Nothing can daunt a people who have this admonition in their ears. Nothing can stand in the way of a people who have the Lord "standing by" at any crucial time.

Jesus came that we might live more abundantly. If we are not living more abundantly than our neighbors, we are not living up to our religion.

What sort of a man was Jesus? Did he walk the streets of Jerusalem covered with a blanket of gloom? Was he one who went about spreading bad news? Did he forever preach the gospel of destruction on the street corners? The answer is an emphatic "no." Jesus was too occupied with his Father's business to be melancholy. All he had time to do was to perform miracles—to make the blind see, the cripples walk. He was too busy healing the sick and keeping the adulteress from being stoned to death. Jesus didn't have time to spread gloom and talk of destruction. He wanted his people to live life to the fullest, to taste all its joys and blessings. That's why he came into the world in the first place.

IF OUR RELIGION means anything to us we should be able to face each new day with a prayer in our hearts and a smile on our lips; we should feel eternally grateful to him for allowing us to live one more day to taste all the joys of living. He has given us one more day to do our bit for him—to partially repay him for his great Gift to us; one day in which to learn to love our neighbors a little more; one day in which to say a kindly word to somebody—perhaps the old lady who lives across the street or the little child who runs his three-wheeled "bike" into our favorite rosebush; one more day to smile over the back fence at a neighbor hanging out her laundry.

And what an important thing a smile can be! I remember Eddie, the bus driver. It's worth more than the fifteen cents to ride with him. Everybody loves Eddie because he loves everybody. He completely ignores the sign above the steering wheel which reads, "No unnecessary conversation with the driver," and asks his passengers all sorts of questions from "How's the family?" down to "What in the world do you have in that paper bag?" He probably will not hear your answer, for by the time you formulate a reply he is waving at the men working on the street.

A smile is the cheapest thing one can give these days—the cheapest, but it means the most. And I don't mean a half-way smile where only the lips move and the rest of the face is frozen. I mean a real one where the eyes shine and sparkle and the whole face lights up, because there is a smile deep down inside one's soul. And there is a smile there because we have a story to tell to the world. It is the story of Jesus—of his love, peace, joy, and good cheer!

New Horizons

The Faith Account

a long pull to get him away from the appeal to pay high prices for "box-car" feed. Under George's urging, Zack began fertilizing his land and in time realized he had tripled the productivity of his pastures, meadows, and fields. He began raising improved grasses and other dairy feeds and found they paid well in production and profits. He saved the better heifer calves for building up his herd and sold the seconds and males for veal. He sold his dry cows, replacing them with fresh cows and discovered that not only could he thus keep in steady production but that the loss on the dry cows was regained in a week or two instead of having a sixty- to ninety-day loss in production because of retaining dry cows in the herd. On George's suggestion, he stocked a small herd of hogs to use residues from the dairy and the ice-cream plant.

THERE WAS NO WRITTEN CONTRACT covering the agreement between these two men. George's greatest problem was overcoming Zack's ingrained idea that he was destined to a meager living, and seeing him through his periodic discouragements and eliminating operating losses. With steadfast faith and patience, George guided Zack in analyzing his problems, in planning rectifying measures wisely, and sticking with them until they paid off. Carefully he showed him how to study feed and other production costs, and how to analyze them from different angles such as storing hay, fertilizing for richer pasturage, and raising his own supplementary feeds. He also showed him how to figure the actual cost of his milk production per gallon.

During the first two years of the arrangement, it was repeatedly necessary for George to use pressure to induce Zack to stick with the project. Frequently he had to reason with him and show him that he had nothing to lose whatever, not even his mortgaged land. When George's loyal wife became disappointed in Zack, he would say, "Oh, Zack's got the sense; he's just using it wrong. I can show him yet how to use it right and win."

Often George would tell Zack to "go home and pray over it." Zack would laugh, but later acknowledged to George that this had been a major factor in causing him to stick through.

During the third year of operations, Zack began to pray in earnest over his problems. In a short while he realized that he was making progress and was on the way to making real money. His whole attitude changed; he saw that he had received a great blessing, and that he had a great opportunity in his own resources and powers he had kept submerged under wrong thinking through the years. He joined the church. Then he began thinking his problems through to constructive, logical conclusions, but before acting would submit his plans to George with the question, "What do you think of this?" Finding the plans sound, George began to rely on Zack to carry through on his own judgment and initiative.

THIS YEAR, the fourth of the project, George cast up his faith-account with Zack. The ice-cream plant now has a dependable source for approximately 200 gallons of high quality milk. George's financial investment is being paid off in full, with a net profit of about three per cent, derived mostly from the subsidiary hog feeding program. His faith investment has produced an independent, self-reliant, prosperous, progressive man, and an active follower of Christ. This is George's enduring dividend, the real pay off.

Zack's faith-ledger shows that he is now worth approximately twenty thousand. He owns clear of debt 120 acres of improved land; automatic dairy equipment, and a modernized home. His current income is about $75.00 a day. To clear off the last of his obligations this fall, he reduced his producing herd somewhat, but young stock coming on will raise his production back to about two hundred gallons per day. He has a new vision of both temporal and spiritual life, and a practical, working faith to carry through successfully.

ONE DAY Zack asked George, "Why is it that before I joined the church you always seemed to disagree with whatever I proposed doing, but now when I come to you you nearly always say, 'O. K., go ahead'? Do you have more faith in me now that I'm a Latter Day Saint?"

George answered, "Yes, I do have more faith in you—and you in me! Zack, your intelligence, judgment, wisdom, and understanding have improved so much since you joined the church that now your decisions are pretty well right before you come to me. That is part of the wisdom promised you with your confirmation—part of your blessings for keeping the commandment: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you.'"

Zack, with a far-away look, reflected, "Too bad I couldn't have seen that ten years ago."

The city-wide women's meeting announced in last week's Herald will be held on January 5 instead of January 4 at Walnut Park Church.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. R. A. Simons, 615 North Rogers, Springfield, Missouri, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her son and his family.

Joe Robinson requests prayers for his father, John A. Robinson of Panola, Oklahoma.

Prayers are requested for J. H. Thomas, Rural Route 3, Lamoni, Iowa, who recently suffered a stroke and is paralyzed on his right side.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. David N. Nelson of Evanston, Illinois, announce the birth of a son, Norman Bruce, born November 17. Mrs. Nelson, the former Mamie Irene Black, is a graduate of Graceland College, class of '46.

Mr. and Mrs. William Duren of Detroit, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter, Jill Elaine, born November 8. Mrs. Duren is the former Wanda Benedict.

DEATHS

FINCH.—Alice Evalyn, was born at Bevier, Missouri, on December 2, 1901, and died October 28, 1949, at Omaha, Nebraska. Residing most of her life in Des Moines, Iowa, and Omaha, she was always an active worker in those branches, contributing especially in the field of music.

She is survived by her husband, Dale; a daughter, Mrs. Jeanne Filter of Littleton, Colorado; two sons: Duane and Donald of Omaha; and her mother, Mrs. Mary Rudkin of the home. Funeral services were held in both Omaha and Des Moines on October 31, Elder Charles D. Neff officiating. Interment was in Glendale Cemetery, Des Moines.

HOLMES.—Lillie May, daughter of Amos and Jeanette Martin, was born September 16 (year not given) at Dwight, Illinois, and died December 12, 1949, at her home in Breckenridge, Missouri. She was married on December 25, 1883, to Charles Wilson Holmes; three children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1882.

Surviving are two sons: Newton D. of the home and Charles of Kansas City, Missouri; eight grandchildren; and twenty great-grandchildren. Her husband and one son preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Christian Church, Elder Ormand Salisbury officiating. Burial was in the Rose Hill Cemetery at Breckenridge.

MUSIC

Franklyn S. Weddle was the director of the concert presented December 9 in the Memorial Hall. Sixty-three members of the Independence Symphony Orchestra took part in the concert. The last part of the meeting was devoted to carol singing in which the audience participated. Since the program was arranged so that all ages might enjoy it, parents were urged to bring their children to the concert. About 500 people were at Memorial Hall to enjoy this music.

The Independence Music Club presented its annual Christmas Concert in Stone Church on December 11.

CANVASS CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

The ministerial alliance of Independence held a breakfast meeting at the Women's Center on December 6. The main subject of discussion was the city-wide church membership canvass to be held January 22. Elder Glaude Smith, pastor of Stone Church; Reverend Robert M. Lehw, pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist Church, and Reverend Harold M. Hunt of the First Baptist Church are in charge of the census enterprise.

CHRISTMAS PARTY

The Stone Church women held a Christmas Fellowship meeting at the Women's Center on December 9. Elder Glaude Smith, assisted by Elder Charles Graham, was in charge of the meeting. Elder Smith's inspiring talk was a challenge to the women's group.

MISSION IN NEW MEXICO

A mission, known as the Lea County Mission, has been organized in Eunice, New Mexico. Elder C. C. Brown was appointed pastor by District President Ralph Wilt. Other officers are R. L. Schwartz, secretary; Glen Stach, treasurer; Mrs. C. D. Borland, historian, and Mrs. Buddy Ray Nunn, publicity agent.

At present meetings are being held in the Brown home seven miles southeast of Eunice. There were thirty-four present at the day of organization, twelve of whom came from Stanton, Texas. This mission is the result of the establishing of a home church school by the Browns the day after their arrival in Eunice. They have sought members of the church in the surrounding country and have encouraged the attendance of nonmembers. Seventy William Haden ministered in this area during the week prior to the mission organization and baptized a young man, Buddy Ray Nunn, on the day the mission was organized.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—Brother L. M. Spence has been made the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Council Bluffs for the coming year. He replaced Brother Don Harding who was president during the year of 1949.

At the annual banquet held in Hotel Chieftain, Brother Harding surrendered the gavel to Brother Spence. Pastor V. D. Ruch and his wife were invited to attend the banquet. Brother Ruch offered the invocation.

MUSCATINE, IOWA.—The fifth anniversary of the branch was celebrated November 27. President F. H. Edwards spoke at the forenoon service of that day, and gave the invocation for the special musical service held in the afternoon. At this musical service, Sister Mary E. Ranking, who is ninety-two years old, was presented with a corsage. The serenade for the program was by Elder Lyle W. Woodstock, district president. Meerlyn Williams of Davenport, Iowa, installed a loud speaker for the day's programs.—Reported by V. L. HESFORD.

SWEET HOME, OREGON.—On December 4 Elder and Mrs. J. L. Verhei met with the Saints for the worship service and Communion. The noon dinner was served by the women of the branch. At 2:00 the annual business meeting was held, and officers were chosen for the coming year. Following the business meeting, a round-table discussion was held under the direction of J. L. Verhei, president of the Northwest District.—Reported by NELLIE WALBERG.

LANSING, MICHIGAN.—The annual business meeting of the Jackson Group was held at the home of Brother and Sister Ellis Monroe. Two lots for the building of a church have been purchased and blueprints for the starting of the building have been completed.

Officers for the coming year are Robert Smith, pastor; Irene Howe, secretary; Ellis Monroe, treasurer, bishop's agent, church school director; Lena Sherwood, women's leader, publicity agent, Herald correspondent.—Reported by IRENE HOWE.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—Evangelist John R. Grice was the guest speaker at the anniversary services, November 20. Following the early prayer meeting, Brother Grice spoke at the 11:00 service. In the evening he spoke on the subject, "Ancient America." Sister Grice attended the meetings also.

Family night was observed on November 21 with a potluck supper and a program.

P.S.

* INVENTIONS

No matter what new gadgets the genius of inventors may produce, they will never be able to make a mechanical substitute for common sense. And, since some people lack that humble commodity, there will always be trouble with men and machines.

An English woman living in India became annoyed by the fact that a native electrician continually came to her with small, unimportant questions. Finally she exclaimed, "Go ahead! Use common sense!"

The native bowed low and said, "Madame, common sense is the gift of God. I have only a technical education."

That goes for a lot of Americans too. Common sense is still the gift of God. For the rest of us, we have only technical educations.

* GADGET WANTED

The first heavy sleet of winter reminds us of an invention that has haunted our thoughts for years but required some lacking touch of genius to complete: shoe heels with retractile claws, operated like an airplane landing gear, to be lowered for crossing the ice, to be drawn up again for crossing the parlor floor. So many other inventions have been imitated from nature—the hypodermic needle from the sting of the bee, the fly swatter from the cow's tail, the windmill from a two-year-old boy at play, television from a mother's psychic understanding of guilt, the airplane from a bird, etc. So this assignment ought to be easy, if science and industry are as marvelous as we have been told they are. Just look what nature did for the cat!

* MERCY

Mercy still lives in the world, and people's hearts are touched when they see cases of human need. Maybe we ought to get around and see people more often than we do. And that, too, may be the reason we are commanded to visit the sick.

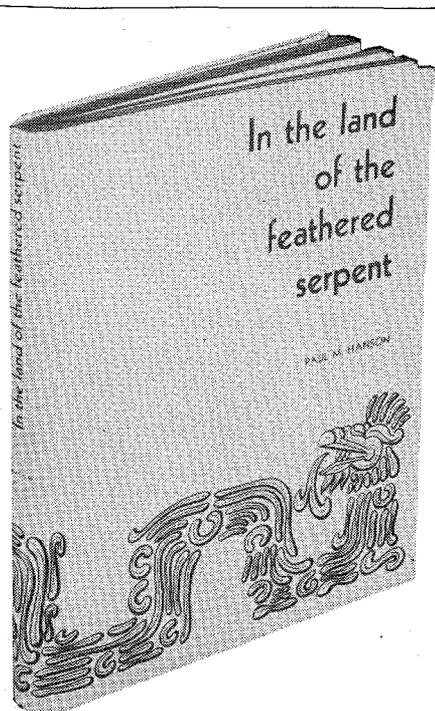

Down in a southeastern state a little girl was threatened with the loss of her hand on account of a disease. She wrote to the editor of a paper, asking the people to pray for her. They prayed, and are still praying. Then a rich man sent a plane to take her to a famous New York hospital to see if the hand could be saved. Everything that can be done will be done. There are lots of good people in the world.

In the east, an isolated little community was dependent on a mine for work and the means of existence. Orders fell off, and the mine closed. For weeks there has been want and suffering in that community.

As long as nobody knew about it, nothing was done. Then the facts came to the public. A famous radio commentator took it up. Food has been sent to the community by truck, also many cash donations. Who knows but that the mine may be re-opened, or the people given a chance to get away to better opportunities.

Trouble, as such, is an unrelieved evil. But when hearts are touched and mercy goes to work, we are thankful for the divine spark that burns somewhere in every human soul. Such sparks can make a flame that will fill a dark world with wonderful light.

It is better to bite your own tongue than to let it bite others. The flesh can heal more rapidly than the spirit does.

In the land of the feathered serpent

By PAUL M. HANSON

This is the new and long-awaited book by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, one of the church's foremost students of archaeology. It tells of his travels in "the land of the feathered serpent" . . . the Book of Mormon lands of Mexico. As such, it is an intensely interesting book, packed with historical facts every church member should know about. Beautifully illustrated, it is also a book which any nonmember would deeply appreciate as a gift. Order your copy of Brother Hanson's new book today . . . just fill in the form below and send to us in Independence.

A Key to Leadership

THIS church, its achievements, its goals, and its progress means much to many people. The past few days we have heard a great deal about plans and aims for 1950. Some even made "new resolutions." Right down in our hearts, however, few of us expect the turning of the calendar to make much difference to us as individuals or to our nation.

Though we are not so quick to hope as in the days of our youth, there is no reason for pessimism among church members. There is much to give courage and bring peace to men of good will. There is nothing, absolutely nothing wrong with this church which more faith and works will not cure. The members are looking for more specific and more dynamic instructions from the leaders. Those called and sustained as our leaders are inclined to think that the greatest barrier to our Zion's goal lies in the lethargy or failures of the membership to bring their lives into harmony with known principles and the call of the church. Doubtless there is much truth in both viewpoints. But blaming the other fellow gets us nowhere. "While I wait another waits for me." Neither can the church go forward without the good will and co-operation of both—leaders and followers.

A new effort has just been launched by the leadership of this church to offer some specific and timely helps. This is the new Guide Lines to Leadership. The January-February issue has been mailed to all subscribers. It is full of practical suggestions and inspirational helps. It concerns all those who are carrying responsibilities in branch, district, or stake. These articles are not just of passing interest. After you read them you will want to keep them handy for further reference. The adage, "Next to knowing a thing, is knowing where to find it," is pertinent here. This is a handy-sized journal which you will need to keep in reach at all times. The mission of Guide Lines is to unify the thinking and functioning of the whole church—not just the church school and Zion's League, but the Women's Department, Music and Radio Department, and priesthood personnel also.

Please don't blame the leaders for not offering a program or the helps needed for carrying out the activities of our church program until you have familiarized yourselves with what Guide Lines has to offer. The price is moderate—$1.50 a year ($1.65 in Canada; $1.85 abroad). Your willingness to accept leadership will be shown in part by getting and using this leadership material. We urge you to act at once. Act promptly and get the first issue and thus have a complete volume—six issues—by the year's end.

"But I'm neither a general church officer nor a pastor. This is just for the leaders, isn't it?"

Not in the Restoration Movement. "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." A great many of us act in dual capacities: we are both leaders and followers. President Joseph Smith III once said, "No man can be a good leader until he has learned to be a good follower." Everyone who has some responsibility in this church, all who have covenanted to witness for Christ, bear an influence of leadership. In this sense we are called to be co-laborers with "him that laboreth in the ministry" and with God.

We sincerely believe that Guide Lines has a mission to all who will receive. It is the key to a more successful leadership.

NEWS FROM HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

Apostle Charles R. Hield returned by air to the mainland from the Hawaiian Islands, to spend Christmas at his home in Independence. After the Quorum of Twelve meeting in January, he will go to Los Angeles and East Bay area with Apostle Reed Holmes to attend a Religious Educational Institute. In February both brethren will attend the Religious Emphasis Week at Graceland College.

He reports that Elder Samuel Lee, who suffered a brain hemorrhage and for whom the Saints were requested to pray, is constantly recovering. He is slowly regaining the use of his right side and is expected to regain the use of his entire body. Apostle Hield says that in his opinion "this is as great a miracle as any miracle of Bible times."

The Saints are working hard to raise money for the Memorial building in Honolulu in honor of Gilbert J. Waller. About $20,000 of the $30,000 needed for the building is available. Avon Yap is doing an excellent work among the young people.

Property costing $23,000 has been bought by the branch in Kalihi. The church building was moved from Owen Street to this property. A large building, also on the property, has been remodeled and will be used for educational purposes.

The branch at Hilo is progressing rapidly under the guidance of Pastor James Kemp and the local priesthood. Brother Kemp conducts the Hilo Symphonic Orchestra and the Hilo choral group. Each organization gave a program in December.

A site has been selected for the new mission building at Waiakea Kai. About eighty young Japanese people from this area attend the church.

It is hoped that a mission will soon be built on the island of Maui where a number of church members live.

Apostle Hield and High Priest Howard Miller stopped at the islands of Molokai and Lanai to visit several church members. Among those they visited on Molokai was a brother in Kalaupapa who is stationed in the colony for Hansen Disease (leprosy).

The Palama Branch, under the leadership of Peter Ahuna, has a very active group of young people.

About twenty-three young people from the islands are attending Graceland College or are at the Sanitarium.

SPECIAL SERVICE

A very impressive service in which three babies were blessed was held in the Radio Room of the Stone Church. The worship center was built around a large bouquet of winter evergreen. After the musical prelude, the Reo La Da Sa quartet sang. Elder Glaude Smith Stone Church pastor, spoke on the "Significance of the Blessing of Babies." Apostle Maurice L. Draper was in charge.

Valory Jane Laird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Laird, was blessed by her grandfather, Elder Herman Chelline, and by President F. H. Edwards. Frances Marleen Krahl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Krahl, was blessed by Elder Glaude Smith and L. J. Richards.

Don Glaude Lents, son of Mr. and Mrs. Don Lents, was blessed by President F. H. Edwards and Apostle Maurice Draper.

Be of One Mind

"Be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you." —II Corinthians 13: 11.

Business

Our business meeting had a good beginning as the pastor made his report. It was so peaceful that some were disappointed for having come to so poor a show. If you want a large attendance at business meeting, let a rumor get out that trouble is anticipated. Some people like to anticipate trouble.

The atmosphere changed abruptly when the pastor brought up some problems to be solved which affected the membership in various ways. For a time it appeared that we couldn't agree at all, and that everybody would go home angry. The discussion was uninhibited. Some folk spoke what was on their minds, and some spoke without anything on their minds.

Then a man stood up, pointed out our common needs and the basic interests and objectives of the congregation. After that, some member conceded some points, a few made sacrifices for others, and there was a really fair agreement on a course of action for the general welfare. I have never seen a better example of the good that can result when people try to work together.

The Human Factor

In all the situations of life—at home, in business, in church work, education, and society—we must recognize and deal with the human factor, which means that we must expect individual differences, ideas, preferences, and tastes. So many of our troubles arise out of these differences. And so much of the richness and beauty of life comes out of them too.

It is the work of the church to bring peace and harmony into the lives of individuals, into our homes, and into our group relationships, such as those that are involved in church work. It is the work of the church to bring peace, if possible, to the world. We cannot give peace to the world if we have war at home.

Differences

It would be a dull world if we were all alike. Why should any one set of faults and failures, of obstinacy and meanness, be imposed on more than one person at a time? You want to be you, and nobody else. You have probably met very few people so wonderful and admirable that you would be willing to abolish your own personality to adopt theirs.

The universe exhibits two great characteristics in all examples of creation. The stars are all alike in some respects, but different in many details. The animals of any one group are easily identified by common features, but the individuals vary. You can distinguish the differences in the leaves of the soft and hard maples, but if you try to find two leaves alike in every respect you may search for hours in vain.

In our human society, many advantages grow out of our individual differences, as well as out of our likenesses. One is gifted in art, one in music, one in business, one in science, and so on; and the whole group benefits by the rich variety and beauty of their work and contributions. Each person makes his contribution on the basis of his capacities and gifts.

In any one gathering, one person cannot possibly have all the good ideas, which is the reason that dictatorships, in the long run, generally fail. A democracy is strong because it permits each person to do his best and grants him the freedom to make his maximum gift to society. It is a sterile state where only one man dares to express his thoughts.

The Commandment

How can we obey the commandment? "Be of one mind, live in peace," is easy to repeat, but hard to apply in any group of people. To some it will appear impossible. Yet the success of the church and the coming of God's kingdom depend upon its fulfillment. How can we obey that commandment?

We can unite upon the primary purposes and objectives of the church. We can agree on the major working methods and projects. We can have a common understanding of the principles of the gospel. When we gather to do business, we can be willing to abide by the rule of "common consent," and let the majority decide. When a decision is made we can abide by it and support the officers of the church. We are not all required to think the same thoughts. We can differ, be tolerant of each other, and live in peace together.

The Promise

Wherever there is a commandment in the gospel, there is a promise that depends upon obedience. In this case we have the commandment and the promise given together. "The God of love and peace shall be with you."

What greater promise could be given to any people? The older we grow, the more we realize our need of God. It is God who frees us from worldly sin and suffering. It is God who throws the light of his Spirit into the darkness of our souls. It is God who brings truth and understanding to replace fear and error. It is God who delivers us from the powers of darkness. We need that God of love and peace. It is worth any labor and any sacrifice to have him with us. L. J. L.

GRACELAND APPLICATIONS

Graceland is now accepting applications for admission for the second semester of the current school year which begins on January 26. The college will be able to accommodate twenty-five new students.

Students who enroll for the first time at the beginning of the second semester often continue their education the second year and the first semester of the following year. Others choose to transfer to four-year schools at the end of the second year. Still others take two full years of work at Graceland in addition to the work taken during the second semester of their first year.

Graduates of high schools or students twenty-one years of age or older are eligible to apply for admission. They should write the Director of Public Relations, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for application papers. A number of students have already been accepted for admission to begin work or continue their college work with the semester which opens January 26.

Director of Public Relations.

Historical Notes on the Owendale, Michigan, Branch

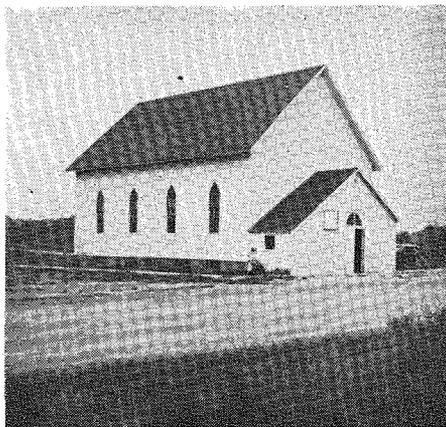

Owendale Branch, organized in 1887, was first known as the Pigeon River Branch. Elder J. J. Cornish's missionary sermons laid the groundwork for its organization.

Charter members were Brother and Sister George Crouch, Mary J. Corbet, Katherine Hinton, Julius Carr, and Jennet Hinton. Sister Jennet Hinton, now living in Detroit, is ninety-four years old.

At first, services were held in homes, but as the membership increased, Sharrad School became the meeting place.

In 1904 a schoolhouse was purchased and moved onto an acre of ground donated by Brother and Sister Alfred Fisher, two and a half miles east of Owendale. Since then the church has been known as Owendale Branch.

This congregation has been under the direction of Teacher George Crouch; Priests J. H. Soper, Robert Grant, and B. F. Parker; Elders Alfred Thomas, C. E. Pearson, Francis Smith, Myron Carr, Ezra Abbe, Silas Parker, John Rogers, and at present Frank Sheufelt.

By 1925 the membership increased to about one hundred members, and the little church that was purchased in 1904 became too small for effective service. On August 28, 1925, the present church, thirty by sixty feet, was purchased from the Free Will Baptists at a cost of $500. It was in a rundown condition, but the untiring efforts of the Saints have made it a beautiful building today. A new roof, a basement, chimney, furnace, and redecorating inside and out have regenerated it. Today it stands as an altar to God and a landmark representing the efforts of many good people.

The present membership is 170, with an average attendance of ninety at church school and the 11:00 o'clock service. Approximately four hundred were present last October 23 to hear Brother Israel Smith. At the afternoon dedication service, the deed was formally presented to Brother James Phillips, district president. It now rests in the vaults of the General Church.

THE WORDS ARE ALL THERE

IF YOU WISH to acquire a knowledge of the English language, there is Webster's unabridged dictionary. Read it through. The words are all there—except some vagrants that came along yesterday afternoon. Which words will you decide to use? How will you put them together?

There are dirty words, cruel words, "weasel words." There are such words as hate, contempt, malice, revenge—and trailing along after them, remorse. Two words killed Jesus, "Crucify him!"

Then there are wonderful words. Words "with healing in their wings." Words full of friendship, hope, courage, faith, endurance. Leading the vanguard are such words as good will, love, and charity.

The words are all there. Lincoln did a great job putting words together in his Gettysburg speech. The Pilgrim Fathers did a fine bit of work putting words together in the Pilgrims' compact, beginning—"In the name of God."

Jesus framed a wonderful prayer with simple words, beginning, "Our Father who art in heaven." What a message he put into his farewell sermon, including this, "Let not your hearts be troubled; you believe in God."

The words are all there. How shall we use them? Not just the big impressive words—rather the plain, simple ones that all may understand. How shall we put them together to best declare our message, with God's help to make it concise, easily understood, and yet beautiful? Not just the letter of the message—empty words—but words carrying such a spirit of sincerity from the hearts of us that men will believe them and be converted, counseled, comforted, saved.

The words are all there—they wait the Spirit to give them life, and the will and wisdom to use them.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Anno Domini

Based on a Sermon Given at Stone Church

By Apostle Charles R. Hield

I AM ALWAYS INTERESTED at the beginning of a new year to read what is written in our newspapers and to hear the things people say about the starting of a new life.

A few days ago, I overheard three men talking on the street. I didn't hear all of their conversation since they turned and entered a building. I admit that I did quicken my step a bit, for I would have liked to have known how the conversation finished. One of the men said, "If I were to live my life over again, I would" and I did not hear the rest. Had he the privilege of living his life over, I presume he might change his job from being a farmer to being a lawyer, or perhaps from being a lawyer to being a doctor. Curiosity made me wonder what he would have done had he had the chance.

Even though we do start a new year in January, according to our Gregorian calendar, we cannot start a new life. We must go on from where we are. The second measure of every score of music must go on from the preceding score. It is an interesting mental exercise to meditate on how God and Christ measure time.

Recently I've been reading about the volcanic eruptions of Mauna Loa on the island of Hawaii. All the islands of that archipelago are of volcanic origin. Thousands and perhaps millions of years are required to break down the lava rock into soil that will grow pineapples and sugar cane.

At the Grand Canyon of the Colorado we can see the marblelike formation of the original volcanic construction of the earth. Then we see a type of rock formation which the park guide informed us was, for millions of years, the mud-bottom of a lake. Next appears limestone, and in that limestone is found the shells of little fishes, crabs, oysters, and other sea life. These shells have formed, under pressure, a strata two hundred feet thick. Then higher up on the canyon wall, they point out a four hundred foot strip of sandstone. The surface of the earth had lifted enough that the land again came up from underneath the water and the whole area for thousands of years was a sandy desert. Again the earth's crust fell, and the sand disappeared under the water. There, due to the pressure, heat, and mud on top, it formed sandstone.

JESUS SAYS to us in modern revelation: "I was in the beginning with the Father, and am the first-born."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4. What may 1950 have to do with God and Christ and their program? We know that God and his Son created the worlds, and they are still creating others. In the Doctrine and Covenants God says to us, "Worlds without number have I created . . . and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 21. In the Bible we read: "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made."—John 1: 3. In America we believe Christ gave the same message. To me, one of the strong confirmations of the Book of Mormon is the fact that it teaches the same truths Jesus taught in Palestine. Also, modern revelation never violates these past commands. In Mosiah we read how this prophet looked into the future and said of the Christ who should come, ". . . and he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things, from the beginning."—Mosiah 1: 102. When Christ personally appeared in America, he said: "I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are."—III Nephi 4: 44.

This Christ is a most interesting personality—ageless in his life. It is difficult for us to visualize one of this type. He speaks of being taught by the Father. He says that what the Father does he also does. And we shall do greater works than these, he tells us, if we believe on him (John 14: 12).

So we know that Christ has a more definite responsibility, a more definite stewardship, over the world and its people than anyone else. He is the Savior of our world. God repeats that to us in Doctrine and Covenants (22: 4), "My Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior." And for those who would think of other gods or of becoming a god themselves, he adds "but there is no God beside me." In America the same philosophy is taught by King Benjamin: "There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh."—Mosiah 3: 11.

WE GENERALLY BRAG each January first on the success of the preceding year. We have big celebrations. I recall those held in New York City. Some newspapers put out a special edition on the first of January to tell of all the accomplishments in the city. We can be proud of some things; but we may not be so proud of the spiritual growth of our personalities. I doubt that January first of any year means too much to the Lord.

The world has not always designated January as a date to start a new time period. The Jews still start their new year in the fall. The Egyptians used to have the beginning of their new year in June when the Nile overflowed. The Babylonians had their new year in the spring when new plants appeared. In Rome it began in what we now call March, though at that time it was called Janus, and was represented by a head with faces on both sides—looking backward and ahead. Our word January comes from the Roman Janus. The Mayas had twenty months in their year, and every fifty-two years they had a special time recording.

It was not until the sixteenth century that the Gregorian calendar, which we use today, was instituted. Some nations and businesses do not use the first of January as a time count. In our own church we generally have our branch elections in September and start our church schools in October. The United States government closes its fiscal year in June and starts a new one the first of July. Need we wait until New Year's Eve with its noisy celebration to think through our past record and make resolves for the future? In our church we should do it at least every Communion Sunday. In fact, Christians may well make a daily revaluation of their lives.

AND SO I SAY, I wonder what is in the mind of God and Christ when they think of 1950. It takes centuries to grow righteous people. I marvel at the patience of God. Think of all these thousands and thousands of years in which he has been pleading with people to obey his laws. Think of the many wars, the heartaches, and the struggles of mankind down the centuries. We know also the grief of God and Christ as patiently over the centuries they try to grow godlike people. So often at Christmas time we think of the Christ only as a baby. We don't think of him as the Master Teacher. We like to keep him in the manger. We don't do that with Washington or Lincoln. I wish we could think of Christ as an adult, the mature Son of God. That's hard for us to do unless we think of him in his later ministry in Palestine. Few think of Christ as the skilled worker in the heavenly administrative government before he came to the earth.

About two thousand two hundred years before the beginning of our Christian Era, the Christ is known to have appeared to the brother of Jared—not as a baby, but as the Creator and the Savior deeply concerned with the spiritual welfare of mankind on this world. I often wonder if the Jehovah we read about in the Old Testament as God, may not have been the Christ.

Remember how the brother of Jared melted sixteen stones out of the rock? He was concerned about having light in his barges as they started across the ocean. He presented the "small stones" to the Lord and prayed he would touch them with the finger of his might that they might shine in their little ships. The Scripture tells that the Lord did touch the stones. When the brother of Jared saw the finger of the Lord, he fell down struck with fear. Finally, because of this man's faith, the Lord appeared to the brother of Jared in his spiritual body and said: "I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold I am Jesus Christ."—Ether 1: 77.

Nephi saw the Christ 600 B.C. in vision, and saw his role as the Savior of the world (I Nephi 3: 53-88). King Benjamin also saw him and prophesied of him (Mosiah 1: 97-105). Alma even named his mother, told where he would be born, and told what would happen to him (Alma 5: 14-23).

WE MUST THINK I repeat, of the Christ, as an adult individual, the Creator of the world. He is directly in charge of our welfare, and is one who senses his responsibility. It was Christ who spoke to Nephi, the grandson of Helaman. You know the story—Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, had spoken of the Christ and how there should be a sign given at the time of his birth in Palestine. As the years passed and the prophecy was not fulfilled, enemies of the church began to mock and persecute the believers in God and Christ. Finally the unbelievers became so powerful and daring that they threatened to kill those who thought the sign would appear. A date was set. If the sign did not appear by this time, the faithful were to be put to death. Nephi was concerned and went out and prayed mightily to his God. And the Lord—this trained, skillful, expert; this Son of God—spoke to Nephi as he prayed and said: "Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world . . . I come to my own, to fulfill all things."—III Nephi 1:12-14. That wasn't a baby talking. Yet he came, this Son of God, this Creator, this genius, in the form of a child. He came to prove that the laws under which we have to live can be obeyed successfully.

The Scriptures tell us that Christ was tempted in all points as we are tempted (Hebrews 4: 15). He came to the earth and went through that experience as a living demonstration that the things he asks of us are not impossible. Sometimes we think they are, but he proved that we too can be victorious if we will follow his plan. The coming of Christ to the world in the form of a little child undoubtedly was a milestone in his life. He had a large number of tasks. This Christ is always busy as he senses the responsibility he has in the world. He is very resolute and determined. He works with the Father continually. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5: 17. Do you suppose that Christ only revaluated his task once a year? He made decisions daily. We have no indication of wavering on his part. He always did the Father's will (John 8: 29), seeking to be profitable to his Father's program and to the stewardship and responsibility he had accepted, to be the Savior of the world. He was true to that trust. He knew his duty. He saw what needed doing and did it.

One can but marvel at Christ's purpose and how well he accomplished it! As he neared the latter part of his life in Palestine, he said, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice."—John 10: 16. This Master Teacher felt a divine passion for souls: "I must preach the kingdom of God . . . for therefore am I sent."—Luke 4: 43. He told "how that he must go to Jerusalem, . . . and be killed" (Matthew 16: 21).

Between his death and resurrection, "he went and preached unto the spirits in prison" (I Peter 3: 19). Because of that visitation and, perhaps, the organization of the priesthood and its teaching down there, thousands may be hearing and accepting the gospel. He also came to America to teach the people here that they, too, might know the plan of salvation. When he left America, he said, "But now I go unto the Father, and also to shew myself unto the lost tribes of Israel, for they are not lost unto the Father."—III Nephi 8: 4. This Christ is a busy fellow. And what resolution he displays!

He is annoyed with people who are lukewarm. He gives his all to help build the kingdom of God, and seeks to enlist our aid. He speaks out against people who are neither hot nor cold (Revelation 3: 15, 16).

I AM INTERESTED in the account of Christ and the rich young ruler. Jesus seemed attracted to the young man. He talked to him a while, but soon realized that the ruler wasn't willing to devote his life to building the kingdom. He was able to recite the law, yet didn't feel it in his heart, and wasn't able to dedicate himself in service. To know the law is not enough. So many people meet Christ, know the Scripture, but will not cast their lot with the Savior. To such a person Christ once said: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." In our daily life we see people who act the same way. They almost resolve to serve God—but not quite.

How often we hear the words "nearly right," "almost successful," "just about got well," "not far" from determining to serve God! Like the four young California people who lost their lives in an automobile wreck. They almost made the turn in the road, driving sixty-five miles an hour, but "not quite." Like the student in the university who thought he could pass his science course without working hard. He wanted to get into a medical school. Then he took the final examination, and "almost" made a passing grade. Nearly every day we read of an airplane which has crashed against a mountain, and the paper says: "Just a few more feet and the pilot would have cleared the top." Almost made it! Most of us have known sick people who were reported to be improving, but suddenly they died. They "nearly" recovered.

We see young people, even Latter Day Saints, who have almost made it in trying to decide between the better and lower life. They could have chosen the upper road but didn't do so. They came so close to the right way, yet missed. I love the life story of Christ; he didn't have any trouble in making up his mind. He knew all things. He was never taken by surprise. He had courage. He had conviction. He always took a stand. Now he expects us to take a stand also, whether it be 1950, 1951, or some other year.

WE NEED PEOPLE with strong wills. Feebleness of will always has been a problem of God. It is also a problem to government. We have facts, but often we do not have the wisdom to use them rightly. One of the hardest things in the world is to get people to make de-isions. This inner struggle is often responsible for nervous breakdowns and mental collapses. The world is not being plagued today by a lot of the old diseases—black plague, rabies, smallpox—we're suffering from mental attitudes—worry, doubt, fear, frustrations, guilty complexes, hate, selfishness, and greed. Wrong thinking is responsible for many of our physical ills.

Biographies are thrilling reading. Most people, sometime during their lives, face a decision or series of decisions. Once made, it rules the rest of life. They can go one way or the other either to assist Christ or to help the powers of evil. We wonder if even Hitler, at a certain point in his life, might not have chosen the other way and have been of service to mankind. What he could have done for Germany and the world if, when the time for decision came, he had resolved to humbly work for universal brotherhood! What if Mussolini had chosen differently, or Lincoln, or Washington? Of course, we can think of ourselves.

I remember an experiment in a chemistry laboratory. Two or three chemicals were poured together in a test tube. After the liquids were allowed to mix, the test tube was given a sharp jar. Immediately some crystals precipitated, but they could not crystallize without the bump. Life is often like that; some little thing separates us from doing good or bad. Sometimes on the way to California, I go over the Continental Divide near Leadville, Colorado. A matter of a distance of a few feet, and the water flows southeastward to the Missouri, then into the Mississippi, and eventually into the Gulf of Mexico. A few feet the other way, it flows down the Colorado River to the Pacific Ocean. Life is like that; so little often separates us from serving God. It may take a shock to bring some people to their senses.

How long do you suppose the prodigal son meditated before he decided to return home? I imagine that many times after he lost his money and friends he "almost" decided to go back to his father. He wondered whether his father still loved him, how he'd be received, and whether he could face the shame of his misspent life. To return appeared too hard, and he got a job feeding pigs. That's a humiliating job for a Jew—feeding swine! Finally he resolved to go home. "I will arise, and go to my father."—Luke 15: 18. That took courage. I wish we all could say that in 1950, "I will arise and go to my Heavenly Father!"

In Italy the story is told that one time Mussolini wanted to capture one of his enemies who had escaped across the border into Switzerland. The dictator sent some of his Fascist police secretly to Switzerland. There they professed friendship with the fugitive, finally luring him unaware over the border between the two nations. There he was seized and killed. So often we stray to the borderline of "the good and the evil life" and are snared by the forces of sin!

PROBABLY THE GREATEST torment we shall have in the life to come is a fresh memory of the rich heritage given us of our homes, our family, our church, and to know that in the crisis we wavered and chose the wrong way (See Alma 8: 101). Yet what joy can be ours in celestial glory to look back and know that we had the courage and the wisdom to make right decisions.

Why is it we don't like to face facts? Why do we put off making a personal inventory of our spiritual progress as long as possible? A doctor once asked the wives of a married couples' class to write on a piece of paper the faults of their husbands. They easily wrote a long list. Then the husbands were asked to list the shortcomings of their wives. They also filled the page. But when the doctor next asked all to make an account of their own faults, they had nothing to write, and merely stared at the doctor in amazement. Christ asks us to examine ourselves, not to shame us, but to show us the possibilities within us.

Growing people always think of future possibilities and potentialities. Engineers are interested in the possibilities of a river for water power. Horticulturists are interested in fruit, land, irrigation, and the possibility of more and better food. Cattlemen are interested in grazing land and the meat which they hope can be grown there. Social workers look at the slums and think of schools, playgrounds, and the opportunity for developing character and personality. Christ looks upon people, knowing what wonderful individuals they could become if they would. We need not have poverty and war. Christ shows the way to brotherhood and peace. This Son of God has pled with us frequently, urging us to build Zion. And always he holds before us the possibilities for good resulting from Zion living. What progress will we make in 1950?

We may expect to learn in the millennium. Christ tells that when he comes "he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5. There's a lot to learn in the millennium, isn't there? Life here, and in eternity is a beautiful thing. What a Master Teacher we have!

THE FIRST TIME one crosses the ocean, he is deeply impressed with the amount of water. Not another ship or anything in sight for days—only water and more water! Yet as one meditates, he realizes that no ship will sink unless the water gets on the inside. That is true of life. We cannot go down unless evil gets inside of us.

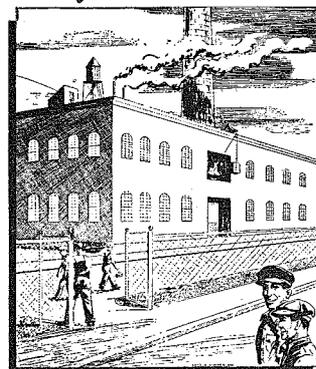

Though Christ returned to his Father and greater tasks, yet he sent us the Holy Spirit. This power of God holds together the atoms; it turns the sunflower toward the east in the morning, and toward the west in the afternoon; it makes our hearts beat and causes us to breath.

What a Christ we have! Well could his Father be proud of him! What courage he has shown down through the centuries! What intelligence! What power of will! What a decider is this Christ, not only in 1950, but every day and every hour! And to think sometimes we waver in our decisions and resolutions! "Tomorrow," the Christ said to Nephi, "I come into the world." He saved the lives of thousands of his followers that day. What of our tomorrow? May we too have a pattern, a destiny, and a purpose. May we not waver, but resolutely and courageously determine tomorrow, next week, all through 1950, to serve God. We will be in good company, for we will be with Christ, and the great of all ages will be at our side engaged in the most glorious task the world has ever known.

Having one's toes trod on is painful business, but it usually acts as a reminder that they are taking up too much room. Let the other fellow get a foothold.—Edith G. Beggs.

A Well-Earned Rest - By Evan A. Fry

LEVI GAMET was born June 3, 1848, at Kaneshville, now Council Bluffs, Iowa. His father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. David M. Gamet, who had been residents of Nauvoo at the time of the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, followed Brigham Young as far as Council Bluffs, but there tired of his rule and dropped out of the organization. His father, an elder in the early church, later removed to Harrison County, near Magnolia, where he secured government land for a farm. In 1857 he sold this farm and moved to Little Sioux, where he purchased a farm of eighty acres and also entered the mercantile business.

Following the Reorganization and the coming of "Young Joseph" to the church in 1860, the elders went to Little Sioux and organized a branch consisting mostly of former members of the original church. Levi, together with his father, mother, and sister Sarah, was baptized into this branch of the church in 1861. Four years later, at the age of 17, he was ordained a priest by D. H. Bays and Hugh Lytle. In this office he labored diligently for fifteen years until his ordination as an elder on June 6, 1880.

In 1867 he married Miss Emma Groshong, who was his faithful companion until her death in 1904. Ten children were born to them. Seven of these are still living: Mrs. Pearl Bailey, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Lena Meuret, Lemmon, South Dakota; Mrs. Anna Harbaugh, Poulso, Washington; Otto Gamet, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Nellie Brumbaugh, Los Angeles, California; Asa Gamet, Torrance, California; and Ezra Gamet, Grants Pass, Oregon.

ON MARCH 7, 1881, Brother Gamet drove a team and wagon equipped with sled runners across the frozen Missouri River and on to Antelope County, Nebraska, taking his two oldest children with him.

After settling a claim, he wrote for the rest of the family to follow by rail to Neligh, the end of the railroad at that time. They built a sod house and assisted the neighbors in building a sod schoolhouse, which was followed by a frame church near Clearwater, Nebraska. Brother Gamet was chosen pastor of that branch, and later district president and bishop's agent. In these positions he traveled over twenty-two counties in Nebraska, and one in South Dakota, serving for many years as conditions demanded and opportunity permitted.

In 1900 he accepted a General Conference appointment and began to devote his entire time to the work of the church. In 1906 he was ordained a Seventy. In the spring of 1920, at the age of seventy-two, Brother Gamet was ordained a high priest, and assigned to the Alabama and Mobile districts. He labored locally for sixteen months in that field, until his superannuation at the conference of 1922. With the exception of the sixteen months in the southeastern states, practically all his active ministry was given in the states of Iowa, Nebraska, and the Dakotas. After his retirement, he served in local ministry in Kansas City Stake as long as his strength permitted.

In 1905 he married Mrs. Eliza Obrist, who passed away in 1929. After an introduction at the 1930 conference, he was married to Mrs. Pearl M. Carr on September 27, 1930. Under her constant skillful and solicitous care, the promise of his patriarchal blessing, "Thy latter days shall be pleasant; the eve time of thy life shall be filled with comfort and consolation," was abundantly fulfilled.

On June 6, 1948, the Grandview Congregation of Kansas City, Kansas, where Brother Gamet had worshiped for many years, joined with other of his friends in both Kansas

City and Independence to pay him tribute on the occasion of his one hundredth birthday, which occurred on June 3. At that time he was believed to be the oldest living member of the priesthood in the church. On October 16, 1949, at the age of 101 years, four months, and thirteen days, Brother Gamet died in the Independence Sanitarium—peacefully as he had been promised, and still firm in the faith he had espoused as a boy. Funeral services were held in the Stone Church on October 19, 1949, in charge of Patriarch Elbert A. Smith, assisted by Elders J. D. Anderson and Evan A. Fry. Burial was in Memorial Park Cemetery in Kansas City, Kansas.

In a short autobiography which he started to write but never finished, Brother Gamet neglects many of the events of his life to make such observations as these: "I have never considered myself a large success as a missionary. I have never baptized many into the church. . . . Some of the elders have sought to make a large record of baptisms. But I never had that ambition. I have sought to teach the full gospel and encourage all to live according to the teaching of the Standard Books. Some have rejoiced in my ministry, and to some there has come the confirmation of the promise of spiritual blessings."

Of his ability as a preacher, he says, "Speaking of preaching, I have never considered myself a large success, yet I know many have rejoiced in listening to my efforts in presenting the truth."

His true and becoming humility and his secret for success may be discerned in these words: "In all my labors, I have tried to live so as to have the guidance of the Holy Spirit in my work. And I can truthfully say that wherever I have accomplished any good thing, the kind Father in heaven is entitled to the larger share of honor."

Blessed Are the Merciful

For they shall obtain mercy - By James Daugherty

WHEREVER THERE HAS been human misery, there has been a certain amount of human pity. Apart from Christ, however, it was never thought of as a motive force to be used in redeeming others' lives and enriching our own. Jesus made mercy a standard for kingdom-building.

The merciful shall obtain mercy. This is a law of divine dealing. God deals with us as we deal with our fellow men. In other words, what we measure to our fellow men shall likewise be measured back to us. In the Old Testament it is said, "With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful, with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright; with the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt shew thyself froward."—Psalm 18: 25, 26. In our Lord's parable in which the servant who had his debt canceled by his master was found to deal unmercifully with his fellow servant who was indebted to him, the remission was canceled, and the old debt fell back upon him (Matthew 18: 23-34). This was given to teach us that God deals with us as we deal with our fellow men. Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." In the prayer he taught his disciples to pray, he said, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will the Father forgive your trespasses."—Matthew 6: 12, 14, 15. These Scriptures show how definitely God deals with us as we deal with our fellow men.

I believe the Master was also telling the church that mercy was an eternal principle of God's nature. Mercy and goodness seem to be married to each other and become the transitive love of God in its twofold relation to the disobedient and also to the obedient. "For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lust and pleasure, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared."—Titus 3:3, 4. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins."—I John 4: 10.

Mercy, then, is the eternal principle of God's nature which leads him to communicate of his own life to those who are like him in moral character. Mercy is also a principle that leads God to seek out the temporal good and eternal salvation of those who live out of harmony with his will.

When he bids us to love our enemies, he bids us only to follow his own example. Our Lord never asks any of his followers to do what he himself would not do. Jesus had already made mercy a part of his way of life before he asked us to make it a part of ours.

MERCY IS A PRINCIPLE of the atonement. Jesus atoned for Adam's sin that cursed the whole race; and we must atone for others' sins if we are to be like him. The guilt which Christ took upon himself by his union with humanity was—not the guilt of personal sin; such guilt belongs to every adult member of the race. Neither was it the guilt of inherited wickedness—solely the guilt of Adam's sin. He atoned only for the original sin from which all other sins have sprung. He did not pay for the wickedness subsequent to the original sin. Christ took to himself the shame of humanity, as a mother takes upon her a daughter's shame, sorrowing and suffering because of it. However, in Christ's case, there was a tie more vital, organic, and profound uniting him to men than ever unites mother and daughter. "For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."—I Timothy 4: 10.

As mercy is a principle of the atonement, when we show mercy to our fellow men in forgiveness, we too are atoning for the sins of our brethren. As we atone for our brother, someone else atones for our sins, and we are forgiven. Mercy is an eternal principle of the kingdom and will lead kingdom-builders to the blessed life. Let us, then, hear the words of the Psalmist David, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. Create in me a clean heart, O Lord; and renew a right Spirit within me."—Psalm 51.

A friendly congregation and a pastor who performs the duties of a genial host make visitors wish to return to our meetings. Read more about this in Garland Tickemyer's article, "How to Influence People and Win Members" in next week's "Herald."

Elder Vivian Sorensen's experience in getting to his South Sea Island Mission following his Conference appointment in 1944 gives some assurance that God interceded in times of extremity.

The place of miracles in religious experience of our times is discussed in Ruby Tinkham's article, "Magic or Miracle."

The building of the temple "in this generation" is discussed by Elder Ray Whiting. This is a debatable topic which brings some new ideas into our literature. Read all of these in the January 16 issue.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTIONS:

1. Is the Communion of bread and wine a renewal of covenant? If so, please cite scriptural proof.

2. Does it bring about remission of sins as some interpret Matthew 26: 24 (Inspired Version) to mean?

3. Is it permissible to partake with other denominations?

4. Is it permissible to serve nonmembers in our congregation?

Kansas.

J. W. J.

ANSWERS:

1. We know of no Scripture which specifically says that partaking of the Communion is a renewing of our covenant with God, though it is often so spoken of in our services. It is not so much a renewal as it is an acknowledgment of the existing covenant and an affirmation that we have done and are willing to continue doing the things our covenant and the law of God require us to do. It is an enacted testimony or a witnessing that we have since last partaking either kept ourselves from those faults and sins which would estrange us from our fellow men and from God, or, having fallen into any such sin, we have followed the law of repentance, and have effected reconciliation, leaving our conscience clear and our souls an acceptable offering to God. The requirement that the emblems are to be partaken of in remembrance of Christ undoubtedly involves more than keeping in mind the fact of his crucifixion and death, and includes remembering his commandments at all times and places. In partaking we are reminded of our covenant to serve him and keep his commandments.

2. Remission of sins comes through repentance and baptism according to the commandment. If there be any sins occurring afterward, the Lord has pledged that they shall be remitted upon repentance and a setting of oneself right before God and his fellow man as is requisite. Conscious sin must be repudiated and removed from the heart in order that the law of forgiveness can apply, and it is our understanding of the law that this process should be completed to the obtaining of forgiveness before one is worthy to partake of the emblems. Matthew's reference to the remission of sins is predicated on the shedding of Christ's blood rather than on the mere act of partaking of the bread and wine.

When the law of reconciliation is fulfilled by man, the Lord is bound to fulfill the promise of forgiveness. He said to Alma:

If he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also; yea, and as oft as my people repent, will I forgive them their trespasses against me.—Mosiah 11: 138, 139.

And Jesus taught his disciples:

Therefore, if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, or if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave thou thy gift before the altar, and go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5: 25, Inspired Version.

In the light of these teachings (and there are more) it is apparent that the Lord requires his children to come to his table with clean hands and pure motives. It is not the place to bring our sins, which should be overcome beforehand. Judas failed in this when the supper was first instituted, and he went away condemned, while the other apostles were commended because they were clean. The essential requirement for partaking of the emblems worthily is unity in righteousness and truth, with God and with each other, which unity can be had only under the new covenant—the gospel.

3. Of the church restored in 1830, the Lord said, "This church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness," its being "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth." In founding this church the Lord acknowledged no others, but made an independent beginning, saying that their ordinances were "dead works," because of which "I have caused this last covenant, and this church to be built up unto me; even as in days of old."—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2; 1: 5; 20: 1.

In view of what the Lord has said and done relative to the setting up of this church, it seems to us highly inconsistent for any member to accept of the Communion, or other ordinance at the hands of another church, thereby acknowledging what the Lord has refused to acknowledge and conceding spiritual life where the Lord has said there is no life. Such a procedure can be only at the expense of the member's loyalty and devotion to Christ and his church, and can but effect a weakening of faith and a confusion of mind. It would be looking backward instead of forward, and drifting toward the world from which the Lord has called us.

4. Inviting or permitting nonmembers (though they are members of other churches) to partake of bread and wine at the Lord's table is far more serious for the one partaking and for the officer who knowingly consents thereto. Jesus, as recorded by Matthew, pointed out that this provision is applicable to "as many as shall believe on my name." Such belief covers nothing less than the full gospel of Christ. His instruction to the Nephites was more explicit:

Behold there shall one be ordained among you, to whom will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name; . . . and ye shall do it in remembrance of my blood, which I have shed for you, that ye may witness unto the Father that ye do always remember me.—III Nephi 8: 32, 40.

Here the Lord very carefully designates which ones are eligible to receive this administration. They are the people of his church—those who believe and are baptized in his name; those who repent and remember the Lord. He allows no latitude for others, but gives another commandment:

Ye shall not suffer anyone knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall administer it, for whose eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul.—III Nephi 8: 60, 61.

The emblems are not withheld from nonmembers in any unkindly spirit, but in mercy and compassion and in consideration of their welfare. The church would gladly administer them to all if the divine law permitted and if good should come to the persons receiving. But the law is orderly; there is a right approach to the Lord's table and there is a wrong approach. The Lord invites all to come to him, but men must come in the divinely appointed way if they would be accepted. The church is to have compassion on the nonmember, to minister to him in appropriate ways, and to pray for him.

Prayer Begins in the Home

By Emma Phillips

ALMOST EVERYONE is fascinated by a picture that shows a small child in his night clothes, kneeling at his bedside in the humble attitude of prayer. Such pictures, in serious or humorous themes, are often used on magazine covers, calendars, and such places where they will catch the attention of the public.

Pictures depicting a complete family at prayer are not as popular, for they apparently do not have as much human interest appeal. But we, who are members of the church belonging to Jesus Christ, realize the value of family prayer. Vision the average Reorganized Latter Day Saint family of father, mother, and children kneeling at prayer, their short, intimate worship service centered about the publication, Daily Bread. Every member of the household takes an active part in that service, for it is only through activity that a member can grow spiritually.

Because of the busy life that even a small child is living these days, it is difficult for most families to kneel together at one time. The father is off to work before the little ones are up, or junior has his supper later than the rest because he delivers papers. Nevertheless, there should be in the daily schedule of each home set times for praying—such as morning, evening, and mealtime. Each individual should also realize that prayer is not a routine matter, but that true prayer is a continuous, living means of spiritual growth.

PRAYER in the home has an influence on every member of the household. If his morning is started by a prayer asking the guidance of God during the day's activities, he is less apt to be annoyed by the behavior of the other members. He does not go around with the proverbial "chip on his shoulder" or his "nerves on edge." If every member of a family feels the importance of prayer, there will be peace and understanding in that household. There will be a home.

I recall hearing a father testify in words similar to these: "I am a man who believes in prayer, but apparently I do most of my praying in church. Yesterday a problem arose, and I felt I must seek God's assistance in solving it. I went to my bedroom and knelt in prayer. My small son came to the door and in a most surprised tone asked, 'Daddy why are you praying here? You aren't in church.'"

To the child, like to the early Israelites, the only true place of prayer was the church. Few individuals have the opportunity for daily prayer in a church. Such opportunities are in the home. Prayer begins in the home.

IT MUST be remembered that the home covers a lot more territory than the house. The house is the building that shelters the units of the home. The house has definite, limited boundaries. The boundaries of the home reach as far as the influence of the home members. War brides who have come to the United States and Canada from England can tell us about the houses in which they lived, but their daily life is a demonstration of the homes in which they lived.

The parents who drive their car through the beauty of a spring countryside leave the house behind, but they take the home with them. They can point out to their children that the glory of God is found in the budding trees and the blue sky. They can sing "Fairest Lord Jesus" with the same reverence as they might have had at a morning devotional.

On the doorway of the Jewish house there is a small emblematic cylinder containing a parchment copy of "the law." When a person enters the house, he touches this container with his fingertips, and then presses his fingers against his lips. This is to remind him to keep the law.

Memories of a prayer can do the same for us. Certain parts of a house can remind us of special prayers that have been said in that part. The houses of Zion will be filled with a congenial atmosphere; the homes of Zion will be bountifully full of prayers.

BECAUSE of the various conditions of homes, it is difficult to state just how the praying should be accomplished. The primary factor at all times is that the prayer should create an atmosphere capable of lifting one to a higher level spiritually. To many of us a prayer is not a prayer unless we kneel. To the Moslem prayer is not prayer unless he folds himself closely together against the ground. To most of us, whether we want to admit it or not, a prayer cannot be genuine unless the body is comfortable. The cramped body and the praying mind are not bosom companions. When the late Sister Blanche Green was in charge of the vacation church schools of Independence, Missouri, she instituted the plan of each leader saying a prayer before she ever got out of bed in the morning.

Neither are the words used in a prayer as important as the atmosphere they help to create. A certain, stanch Reorganized Latter Day Saint's grandfather formed the habit of repeating his blessing of a family meal in these words: "Bless a portion of this food to the use of our bodies." Now the grandson carefully repeats these same words, "Bless a portion of this food to the use of our bodies." Whenever I hear them I wonder which portion of the food is blessed and which is not.

In another household that I visit, the small son always repeats the table blessing, a prayer full of words and phrases far beyond his scope of understanding. Before the completion of a meal, the child and his mother always get into a heated discussion in which the mother shows her superiority by sending the crying child to his room until he "can straighten up." The commotion at the table drowns out even the most minute sacredness that might have been created by the blessing.

AN AMUSING little incident concerns a Catholic friend of mine. Every morning her two small sons have special prayers they must repeat before starting to the parochial school. Until their mother became wise to their plans, they found it very convenient to extend their prayers to such a length that they would miss the bus and thus be late for school.

There are many definitions for the word prayer, but perhaps the simplest and most adequate is that prayer is "talking to God." Prayer should never be a means of preaching to some other person. Prayer should be strictly a communication between humanity and Divinity, not humanity and humanity.

Our homes are the proper places in which to build prayer habits for both children and adults. There has been considerable discussion as to whether the daily sessions of public school should begin with a Bible reading and a prayer. It would be ideal to use this method of worship in public schools if all of our teachers and instructors were properly trained and Christian minded. Imagine the teacher who has spent most of the Sabbath evening in the dance hall trying to explain to a schoolroom of children of various denominations why Jesus, in his example prayer, said we should ask our Heavenly Father not to "lead us into temptation."

Prayer begins in the home that is Zionically minded. The twisted ideas of the world can be shut out of a worship in the home, and the pure, unadulterated ideas of the true faith can predominate.

G. A. BUTTRICK has wisely said, "Prayer is the optic nerve of the soul; we must not cut the nerve." If the optic nerve should be cut, the sight is lost. If prayer is taken from a life, the plan of living is lost. Too many people are under the care of a psychiatrist because their purpose of life has become warped and out of focus with the rest of humanity and with God. People who have not learned to consult the Lord in prayer cannot cope with the doubts and confusions they meet daily.

The person who has learned he should take God into his confidence when he is deciding either small or major problems knows the harmonious way of living. The home in which true prayer, not a form prayer, predominates is a home of peace.

For years newspapers have been carrying articles about juvenile delinquents and about community endeavors that have attempted to curb their misdemeanors. Now we are beginning to realize that children are delinquents because adults have made them that way. Dr. Edward A. Tyler, eminent psychiatrist of the Allegheny County Medical Society in Pennsylvania, recently declared that parents should take psychiatric treatments along with their problem children. The children and adults whose actions conflict with the laws of the land and of humanity usually come from homes where the true value of prayer is not experienced.

The individual who has learned to make prayer his refuge in time of trouble and to thank God for the simple little blessings that come to him is better equipped to meet the problems which confront him daily. The lost temper and the peaceful prayer are so foreign to each other that they cannot dwell together. The person who loses his temper also loses his ability to reason and to pray. Most people consider a temper tantrum merely wrong, but we of the church realize that it is a sin.

A CHRISTIAN does not jealously cling to the knowledge that prayer brings peace and comfort. He wants to share that knowledge with other people and explain to them the solace that comes from it. Every home that produces praying members can produce missionaries.

To be a missionary for the church, one does not have to sail the seas to foreign lands. Anyone who works with Blue Birds, Orioles, Boy Scouts, or Cubs in a branch has before him an open field for missionary work—for teaching prayer where prayer is not known. I have seen girls representing various denominations or no religion at all stand in a Blue Bird friendship circle and say their first prayers. Often these prayers were just single sentences, but they were prayers. Many children have had their first experiences with prayer because of the efforts of a leader who prays in his or her own home.

On many occasions a child who is acquainted with the benefits of prayer will speak to an adult about praying. Recently there appeared in a newspaper an account of a four-year-old child who decided to go to visit his grandmother in another city. When he was finally located, it was found that he had packed in a paper bag some cookies and a Bible. Apparently he realized he needed the cookies to give him physical nourishment and the Bible to give him spiritual strength. It would be impossible to state how many people read that account and were impressed with the fact that this child came from a home of prayer.

Prayers in the homes of Zion can change the future of the world. Prayers in the homes of Zion can mold the personalities that will influence the thinking of humanity.

We must not say we will have prayers in our homes as soon as it is convenient. The time to begin praying is now. Today we must prepare ourselves to meet the problem of tomorrow by realizing that prayer begins in the home.

Letters

From a Member in Iceland

I bade farewell to my family at the Union Station in Kansas City on Pearl Harbor Day of 1947, and proceeded by train to New York via Chicago, leaving LaGuardia Field on a commercial plane at noon December 9. We covered the approximate 3,000 miles over land and water (including a stop of an hour at Gander, Newfoundland) in about fourteen hours landing at Keflavik Airport, Iceland.

The project we are attached to is the building of a commercial air base. However, inasmuch as Iceland is a halfway point between America and Europe, the airport would probably be used as a military base in case of an international crisis.

During World War II Iceland was used as a training ground for both British and American troops, and today one may see the quonset huts in which the soldiers were billeted in many parts of the island.

Iceland is one of the signatories of the Atlantic Pact and, although disturbed to a considerable extent by the Communistic element, is of democratic ideology dating back centuries.

To many in the states Icelanders are people who live in igloos and feed on blubber. While it is true that a comparatively few years ago these people lived primitively, at present their homes and furnishings compare well with those of our average or better-class homes. They are kept almost spotless, and the people are far more hospitable than many nationalities I have known.

Iceland is situated about a thousand miles north of England and west of Finland, with its northern-most point touching the Arctic circle. However, because the Gulf Stream touches its shores, the prevailing temperatures are more even than in the Temperate Zone. The average temperature in summer is 51.6° Fahrenheit and in winter 26.2° Fahrenheit. Last winter, which was considered the most severe in several decades, gave us almost a continuous storm with the sun shining occasionally.

The western, northern, and eastern shores of the island are quite irregular, creating many fjords or bays. It is in these protected areas the people gather and build up their little towns and farms. The average size of these towns is a few hundred, but some have population of several thousand.

Until quite recently transportation was mostly by means of small horses or ponies, and even now, because of the rugged terrain, these little animals are used. However there are quite a number of cars in possession of townspeople too.

Throughout the interior is a vast wasteland of volcanic lava and ash. In many places this lava is like a turbulent sea which has been frozen and preserved for succeeding ages. Because of prevalent rainfall, the oldest of these lava beds are covered with a moss or lichen, which furnishes pasture for sheep, horses, and a sprinkling of cattle.

As already implied, this is a volcanic island with a chain of mountains on the eastern side running from south to north. Many of these are glacial mountains or jokulls. The largest, Vatnajokull in the southern part of the island, covers some eight thousand square kilometers. The snow line is about sixteen hundred kilometers above sea level.

During the 1,073 years the island has been inhabited, there have been recorded about one hundred eruptions from twenty volcanoes, Mt.

Hekla being the most active with twenty-two eruptions, the last occurring in 1947. These volcanic eruptions have been very destructive at times, sometimes bringing starvation and disease to a large portion of the population.

In the vicinity of the more recently active volcanoes are many hot springs, some emitting poisonous gases while others are alkaline. The Stori Geyser at Haukadal and Grula Geyser at Rekir are the largest and most active. A few years ago some of these hot springs nearest the capital, Reykjavik, were capped and the water piped to the city for use in heating buildings and hothouses in which vegetables, fruits, and flowers are grown.

Iceland is a land of contrasts with rugged yet beautiful scenery. Towering snowcapped mountains rise out of the deep blue of the ocean. Picturesque villages with their colored roofs and distinctly European atmosphere nestle in the valleys of the protected areas. Along with Greenland and other of the Arctic areas, it is called the Land of the Midnight Sun. During the peak of summer, the sun refuses to sink below the horizon during the twenty-four hours of the day. Winter brings short days and long nights and protracted snowstorms propelled by high winds which howl and seem determined to tear the buildings apart. On the base, we live in quonset huts half covered with earth and rock to keep them from blowing away. During the war these offered protection against bombing.

Icelanders originally came from Norway and other Scandinavian countries together with a few Westmen from the British Isles. The Norsemen were pagans worshiping imaginary gods. Some, however, who came from Ireland were Christians and about A.D. 1000, Catholicism was made the state religion. Later, however, the Lutheran Church was adopted by the state and now comprises about 98 per cent of the population. The Catholics still have several nice churches and two splendid hospitals, but their membership is perhaps less than five hundred.

One Sunday while in Reykjavik we stopped on a busy thoroughfare to listen to the Salvation Army carrying its message to the people.

Close by was the armory—a very creditable structure.

In the newest parts of Reykjavik are many fine apartment buildings, each of which accommodates about a dozen families. Other of the cities are building on a similar pattern to make room for their ever-increasing families.

Icelanders have for centuries been aggressive in education. During their earlier periods this took the form of poetry and prose and the writing of sagas. These sagas are indeed interesting and give some idea of the trends of thought of the early nation. However, because of the wide destruction caused by volcanic activity, the nation was brought to a very low level both economically and socially, and much of the original initiative was lost. Undaunted, the more courageous souls carried on, saving their heritage and evolving in these last few decades with much credit to themselves.

In A.D. 930 they established a republic and a parliament called the Atthing, which continued on down through the darkest periods of Europe. In May, 1944, a general referendum was declared for a republican constitution, the people having disengaged themselves from allegiance to Denmark. A majority of 95 per cent chose Sveinn Bjornsson as president of the Republic of Iceland.

There is a splendid school system in effect throughout the island and a university in the capital. Education is compulsory between the ages of seven and fourteen years. The preparatory schools and university are doing much to train young men and women to take their places throughout the world in the fields of science and professional endeavor.

To know these people is to love them. Their simplicity is admirable; they are courteous and most hospitable.

On this base is a chapel used on Sunday morning by Protestant worshippers and Catholics in the afternoon. However, from the thousand Americans which comprise our force, only about twenty or thirty attend.

On Wednesday evening I join a small group which gathers at the home of Major Lee, chief engineer of the project, to study the Scrip-

Ministry in the Home

This is the second in a series of studies prepared under the supervision of the Department of Priesthood Education, published as a study text for use by the members of the priesthood and covers "Ministry in Trouble and Sorrow," "Ministry to the Weak," "Ministry to the Young," and "Ministry to the Faithful."

tures. For several months we discussed the Book of Revelation. Among our number are those who have made an extensive study of biblical history and geography. One man spent several years in Palestine and Egypt. This adds much interest to our studies.

This class consists of some twenty students representing about fifteen different denominations. To be told that such a gathering could go on for months without unpleasant reactions is hardly believable, yet this is what has happened. With the setting for the Apostasy and then the Restoration, I had a perfect opportunity to teach and emphasize over and over again the principles of the gospel of Christ. It was a revelation to these people, and the spirit warmed my heart as their interest held night after night. At some of these sessions a number of representative Icelandic men and women were present; our teachings seemed new and quite strange to them. Still they were much interested and asked many questions. We have worked some at translating an outline of our faith into the Icelandic language and trust before too long to have it completed and in the hands of some of our good Icelandic friends. The fact that it is a very complicated language and difficult to learn has made our task seem very slow.

During these two years away from the states, our vision of the task of the church has broadened and clarified. The problems of a missionary church and the preparation of equipment and personnel to meet the great task looms up before us. The door should be opened wide for trained, devoted, spiritual young men and women to go out to the nations of the world; to live the gospel before them and, loving them, convert them to the truth.

All too long we have hugged the delusive hope that in some miraculous way the great God of heaven would gather the worthy from the four quarters of the earth ready-made for Zion and eternal glory. Men of the ministry, this task was given to the twelve in Christ's time and those called through them to this work. There is no other way yet appointed for its accomplishment.

The world needs preaching, but before effective work in proselyting can be effected in volume, the ministry and the Saints must be clothed with righteousness. This entails study, the application of the philosophy of the kingdom of God, the working out of stewardships, social justice, purity, unity, and brotherly love.

We have long nurtured these high ideals, but because of our unwillingness and slowness to move into this phase of kingdom-building, we have lost immeasurably, and the world also has lost.

My plea, dear Saints, is for Zion—the time for sleeping is past. That the grace of our Heavenly Father, the loving propitiation of our Lord for us, and the unction of his Spirit assist us is my prayer.

A Letter from Venezuela

It is rather an unusual day in Caracas—it is raining. I have always loved the rain, but here it is particularly nice. From my safe, dry place under the colonnade where I am writing, I can watch the raindrops slip through the mango leaves and splash on the tiles of the patio. It is such a soothing, sleepy sound I shall probably go to sleep and never finish this! There isn't a nicer place on a rainy Sunday than an old Spanish colonial house in the heart of Caracas.

The Centro is in one of the few remaining old Spanish houses in Caracas. It is more than 150 years old and is within four blocks of the Plaza Bolivar, which was laid out as the center of the city nearly four hundred years ago. There are two delightful patios, the front one being rather formal with flower beds, a fountain, and a lovely palm tree. The back patio is shaded with mango and palm trees, the trunks of which serve as hosts to orchid plants. Arched colonnades surrounding the patios are roomy enough for outdoor living rooms. All the rooms of the house open upon the colonnades and thus to the patios. There are nearly thirty rooms in the building, including the servants' quarters.

I have been told that it wasn't unusual in the old days to have as many as twelve or fifteen servants to staff these old houses.

We were able to make one wing serve as an apartment for ourselves for the past few months. However, the needs of the Centro for more space are growing, and we have located an apartment near by where we shall move this next week. I'm sure I shall miss my quiet patios on rainy Sundays!

The past six months have been one of the busiest times of our lives, operating an institution that gives English classes to students numbering from 600 to 700 a month, runs a 7,000 volume library, and conducts a cultural program on the side. I taught classes, worked in the library, re-upholstered furniture, typed reports, acted as hostess at social affairs, and did my own work on the side because I couldn't get a maid. We have to arrange for lectures, concerts, art exhibits, movies, and anything dealing with American or Venezuelan culture.

The work is extremely interesting and most of the contacts enjoyable. The American Centro is the largest and most active in the city. There are French, British, and Soviet Centros, and some for Latin-American countries.

The rain has stopped, and the palm tree is making a picture of itself against the blue sky. The children, on roller skates, have taken over the patio, and all peace and quiet have departed. I didn't go to sleep before finishing this, but think I shall do so now. Tomorrow is another busy day.

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who remembered my mother, Phoebe Harwood, in prayer. Her health is improving, but she still needs the prayers of the Saints.

From a Reader of "Daily Bread"

It is hard for me to express what Daily Bread has meant to our family. All four children enjoy reading from it and forming prayers from the prayer seeds it contains. For some time we had searched for something to use in our family worship; I don't know what could have answered the purpose better. We always take time out at the end of day, regardless of the various activities of individual members of the family, to have a Daily Bread devotional.

When we finish using our copies, we pass them on to a nonmember friend. He has said he thinks they are very inspirational and has even mentioned subscribing for the publication. Our pastor often uses Daily Bread illustrations in his sermons.

"You Both Mutually Agree"

By Apostle C. G. Mesley

IN CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE the ideal is reached under our own church covenant. This remarkable document written over a century ago sets up for men and women an equal partnership, under divine approval, in accord with the laws of the land.

With sublime simplicity its statement of marriage fundamentals reads—"You both mutually agree to be each others companion, husband and wife, observing all the legal rights to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?"

This statement of marriage goes back to the original divine conception of marriage—"of one flesh created he them"—to express the unity of two persons in a divinely recognized companionship of an equal partnership.

No form of marriage approaches the ideal or is worthy to persist which does not place the woman beside the man in full equality or which does not hold to a pure and faithful love as the deeper basis of union. Others may have passing interests in companionate marriage, in liberalization of divorce, and concern themselves with such deviations from God's plan. Our church's responsibility is to help and train people to realize divine ideals in a marriage ordained of God.

"You both mutually agree" is but the starting point of a lifelong journey. The wedding ceremony shuts one gate and opens another. All the longings and dreams of the courtship era end while the supreme intimacy of life begins. The married couple start together on a great adventure, radiantly happy, beaming, sure of their love for each other and full of ideals and plans for the future. Before them lies a clear road—not to happiness but to the opportunity of achieving happiness. Love and courtship are full of ideals and high hopes. Because reality rarely measures up to our imagination, marriage sometimes brings shock and disappointment to its participants. They fail to realize that there is always a discrepancy between imagination and reality. If each partner faces this fact, and marriage is planned wisely in the light of all the sound and tested principles of courtship and love, the person he has married most likely will turn out better than, though different from, what his own imagination had pictured. Knowing that a fleeting sense of disappointment is not peculiar to marriage but is a part of every ideal adventure of life, of the church, and of Zion, the marriage partners understandingly set to work to discover new values in each other's personalities. Married happiness, like love, is not something you stumble upon. "Falling" in love is a misleading statement. Love is something we achieve in harmony with the laws of life. We can have happiness in marriage if we are willing to cultivate it, to work hard for it.

YOU BOTH MUTUALLY AGREE"—to share a sacrificial love for each other. Marriage adjustments help to lift everyday decisions above selfishness. We make our little decisions in view of the big decisions that are ours to make. A single girl who loves new shoes may be able to buy all the new shoes she wants. As a partner in marriage, she loves new shoes and, with her mate, loves a cottage home. She couldn't enjoy new shoes if she had them unless her husband was ready to share her delight, and so she chooses to sacrifice her shoes for the needs of their home. Together they make adjustments which give them greater happiness than they could achieve on their own. Partners who love each other set out to discover the fine art of giving without conflict or loss of self-esteem.

Quarrels are undesirable in courtship. They can wreck a home. If one partner is set on being the head of the house, let him so be. The other may be the neck that wags the head. The so-called "head of the house" is an empty honor if the other partner can develop the fine art of influencing the decisions of the head-strong one.

"You both mutually agree"—to avoid letdowns in marriage. If lovers cease to feel they must exert themselves for each other, then they cease to love each other. A young man courting will always open the car door for his beloved. If a married man just lets his wife get in the car on her side while he gets in on his, he is letting down in marriage. Knowing that they have gained each other, husbands and wives do tend to lounge mentally and physically in life's helpful courtesies instead of keeping as mannerly as they were when they were courting. Some relaxation is a good thing for marriage, but it is a mistake for people to let marriage degenerate into a common "easy-old-shoe" acceptance of each other. Each partner needs to keep on his toes with all the expectancy of love to maintain its spontaneity. Successful love in marriage cannot be achieved by either party's taking the other for granted. Marriage should be a perpetual challenge to both. If the wife has a headache, she does not appreciate being told first to take an aspirin. She needs some consideration and loving before the aspirin is recommended. In their business griefs and office worries, husbands need more sympathy than they do ideas and arguments.

The Home Column

YOU BOTH MUTUALLY AGREE—to see the best in each other. Little mannerisms, peculiar voice inflections, or a masculine superiority swagger may be ignored in courtship days. Repeated many times in the close intimacy of marriage, these may become annoying. When one partner expresses that annoyance in an imitated tone of voice, the other may become panic stricken and feel that love is dying. Mature love recognizes that imperfections are a part of everyone's make-up. It also brings the ability to weigh the big against the little things. True love begets a stable confidence that is unafraid of being disturbed by the partner's imperfections. Marriage gives each the opportunity to see the mate more clearly, to see his or her good points that were hidden in the enthusiasms of courtship. Married love is less self-centered. It takes our good points and balances them against our little mannerisms. We love each other in spite of flaws and because of our solid good qualities. In marriage we avoid being oversensitive and looking for hurts that are not intended. If we continually have to handle each other with gloves on, we need to grow up to talk these areas of sensitivity through with each other. Don't be a crybaby in marriage. You will get sympathy once, but after several times, your partner will lose respect for you. Respect is an indispensable attitude in love.

The mutual agreements of marriage expand to cover every phase of life together.

"You both mutually agree"—to share finances together in such a way that the self-respect of each partner is preserved.

"You both mutually agree"—to train your children without conflicts before them as to valid procedure of securing discipline and self-control in these children.

"You both mutually agree"—to continue to share together in common recreation. Each of you may have and enjoy preferences in recreation, but marriage is on unsafe ground when you fail to recreate together.

"You both mutually agree"—to share religious ideals together. A living religious experience together brings convictions and faith that embodies the highest ideals of two individuals sharing their lives together. It binds them together in common purposes. Without this sustaining power, the family is apt to drift apart. Vital religious faith gives faith in life. It colors the whole pattern of living, giving significance to its deeper shades. Life becomes a venture with God. All our actions are colored by the high purpose of living for God and thus for the good of all people. Life is tied up to worthy aims that challenge the best in us. Even good people drift without a challenge. Religion involves the gaining of wisdom and truth. It stimulates the development of love and consideration. All these are qualities that enable people to overcome difficulties of life together. We cannot measure the gain that comes from the stimulation of religion. Life is lived on higher levels because of it, for through religion life is joined to all forces of good. God then becomes a partner in the home and in the marriage.

With Leland Foster Wood we can say:

Happy is the family—

In which God is an unseen partner.

And the religion in the home

Is to treat one another as God treats all mankind— with love unfeigned.

And happy is the family—

that is bound together by inner ties stronger than all marriage laws.

And happy is the family

whose members would still prefer one another if all marriage laws were relaxed.

When they are apart, they still remember the ties that bind their hearts together.

And when they are alone, they are not utterly lonely; for the blending of their lives gives them fellowship.

Pray Always

BY KAY NORMAN BELDIN

Recently I heard my three-year-old daughter crying and apparently scolding something. When I went to see what was causing the commotion, I found she was having trouble getting her wagon turned in a position so she could pull it. When I offered to help her, she said, "I'm a big girl. I can help myself."

I returned to my work, but in a very few minutes I heard her timidly calling, "Mommy." She realized she wasn't quite as big as she thought and that she needed my help after all.

As I pondered over my daughter's problem, I couldn't help noticing how similar it was to many of the problems we grown-up children often experience.

A short time ago I found myself in quite a state of turmoil. The children were failing to respond to my pattern of discipline as they should, and my household budget was doing things I hadn't planned it would. In short, I learned the meaning of "a heavy heart."

After I had spent considerable time trying to determine why things were not going right and had worked myself into a state of remorse, I suddenly realized that all of my problems were caught up in one big mistake. I had failed to ask God's help! Like my daughter, I had felt I was capable of managing by myself.

Although God hadn't actually come and offered his help at this particular time, the Scriptures bear record of his promise to help whenever he is asked. When my daughter refused my assistance, I thought of how much time and trouble she could have saved herself had she only let me help her. In comparison, how much better it would be if we would accept God's help with our problems rather than blundering along, trying to solve them our own way and meanwhile wasting time and effort which could be used in helping to further his plan here on earth.

CHATHAM DISTRICT, CANADA.—During his three-weeks' stay, Bishop J. E. Baldwin visited all eleven branches of the district. In each place he conducted classes and preached sermons. An evening candlelight Communion service was held in Chatham on the last day of his visit. The general themes for the series of sermons and talks were "Life's Stewardships" and the "Financial Law."—Reported by ELDER E. E. SMITH.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—Apostle D. T. Williams preached the first sermon in the new church year. He also lectured to the priesthood on the "Each One Win One" effort.

Branch President L. W. Stiegel has followed up the charge given by Apostle Williams. As a result the "Each One Win One" effort in the Rock Island Branch bore exceptionally good fruit on Sunday, November 27, when there were nine baptisms and on December 4, when seven were baptized, making a total of sixteen baptisms. Of those baptized, nine were adults and seven were children. Two family circles were completed by the baptism of a wife and daughter in one family, and the baptism of a husband in another. Two families were united to the church. Since the branch has entered into the activities of "Each One Win One," it is experiencing a spiritual revival, which we hope will result in a record number of conversions for the church this year. The interest it has caused us to have in others has caused a record attendance in the church school. Due to the increased enrollment, provision to make the building fund a special project this year was made at the annual business meeting to pass the branch budget.

Increased strength has been added to the priesthood through four ordinations which took place on November 27. They were Orville C. Short to the office of elder, Raymond Gamet and Laurel Jordan to the office of priest, and Edward Boyd to the office of deacon.

On December 18, ordinations will be provided for David Shippy and Donald Stiegel to the office of priest, and Paul McKee to the office of teacher, when they are home on their Christmas vacation from Graceland.

The branch is holding monthly potluck suppers under the direction of Warren Hinkle, adult supervisor. The suppers have been well attended, and fine programs have been planned.

At the beginning of this year, there was inaugurated a Religio and sing-spiration service on Sunday evening, with Laurel Jordan and Warren Hinkle in charge. This service is particularly well used by the young people in contributing their gifts and talents. A special feature of the program provides for members of the branch to testify of their conversions into the church. These have been most inspiring.

The junior church has been organized, with Virginia Cessna in charge and Laurel Jordan as pastor.

The choir, under the direction of Jean Hinkle, has expanded its activities to an a cappella chorus and is rendering exceptionally fine music for the Communion service.

The women's department, under the leadership of Helen Stiegel, has four organized circles. They are "The Sorosis Circle" with Rachel Knott, chairman; "The Clara Smith Circle" with Marion Smith, chairman; "The Zion's Friendship Circle" with Helen McAdam, chairman, and "The Women's Auxiliary" with Virginia Short, chairman. Meetings are held twice a month in each circle, and the general group meetings are held quarterly.

The Board of Stewards, under the supervision of George Sharrar and John Stiegel, is installing a new lighting system in the lower auditorium.

Special speakers this church year have been Patriarch W. W. Richards of Davenport, and Elder L. Sager of Maquoketa.

James Joseph, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bissonette, was blessed September 4, by Elders L. W. Stiegel and John Stiegel. There were five generations of the family present in the congregation. Besides the parents there were the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bowen, the great-grandmother, Mrs. Edw. Angell, and the great-great-grandmother, Mrs. Caroline Davis. Another great-great-grandmother, also a member of the church, Mrs. Margaret Angell, resides at Newton. James Joseph is the sixth generation in the church, as the great-great-great grandparents were converted to the church in England when the early missionaries went there. Their names were Archibald and Angell.—Reported by DOROTHY O'LEARY.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.—Mrs. Pauline Arnon, chairman of General Department of Women, was guest speaker at the Women's Institute held November 10 and 11. A Christmas bazaar and dinner was held December 2 by the women's department in the Moose Auditorium. Over 1,100 people were served. It was a big project and required a lot of hard work by many people, but it was worth-while as about $1,200 was cleared. This includes over $500 taken in from the sale of handwork. It is believed that this is the largest number of people ever served by any church here in any one event.

On November 21 Pastor V. D. Ruch baptized three people: a married man, a married woman, and a little girl. This makes a total of fifty-eight baptisms this calendar year.

On November 6 Brother Ruch preached at Omaha. He was also the speaker for the Ministerial Association over the Council Bluffs Radio Station on the morning of November 5.

The Council Bluffs Nonpareil published a long article about Peter H. Heuermann, district president of the Southwest Iowa District, and his son, Lee A. Heuermann. The article was accompanied by a photograph of the two men in their appliance store. They have a father-son partnership in the business.

EVERGREEN, ALABAMA.—At the Lone Star Branch, which was organized in 1866 and claims to be the oldest branch in the south, District President W. J. Breshears conducted a series of services from October 16 to 23. As a result, nine were baptized, all but one being a member of a church family.

Brother Breshears has baptized fifty-eight people since January 1. He is now conducting a survey of baptisms in the district. In addition to the missionary work, he has visited five other congregations and preached eight services, making a total of twenty-six sermons during the month.

Brother Breshears participated in the regional leadership training convention held at Pensacola, Florida, on October 29 and 30. The theme was "Building Better L. D. S. Family Life," as related to the responsibility of every member. The Belleview, Florida, and Robertsdale, Alabama, congregations participated.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.—Pastor H. D. Hintz was the principal speaker at the union Thanksgiving service held by the local Ministers Association. Brother Hintz has been chosen president of the Chico Ministers Association. The branch is making real progress toward a better understanding in the community.

LOCK FOUR BRANCH, PENNSYLVANIA.—Evangelist John R. Grice preached a series of sermons. At the conclusion of the series, three adults were baptized.

STONE CHURCH.—Three children were blessed at the services of December 18. Steven Kenneth York, son of Robert and Doris (Sexton) York from New York was blessed by Elders William Worth, Jr., and Walter Betts. Robert Owen Robinscroft, son of James Robert and Jacqueline Marie (Bills) Robinscroft was blessed by Elder Glaude Smith and Bishop L. F. P. Curry. Janice Ellyn Blum, daughter of Floyd and Winnifred Ann (Carter) Blum was blessed by Apostle Reed Holmes and Elder Glaude Smith.

There were three baptisms: Beverly Ann Blum, Mrs. Richard A. Isaacs and daughter Marian Patricia. Eight people from the Blue Ridge Mission were also baptized.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—An all-day meeting was held on the second anniversary of the Cincinnati Mission, November 6. A history of the mission was given by Elder Claude Barker of Middletown, missionary in charge, followed by a candle-lighting service, "Kindle Fires of Thanksgiving," in charge of Sister Thelma Cline, superintendent of church school. Miss Florine Cline presented a marimba solo following the candle-lighting service. Southern Ohio District missionary, Seventy Loyd Adams, was the instructor for the class period.

Bruce, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Juel Skinner, Latonia, Kentucky, was blessed by Elders Claude Barker and Everett Smith. Preceding the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, special music was presented: "Spirit of God" was sung by Miss Merleen Condon, and "Break Thou the Bread of Life," presented by the Cincinnati Choir under the direction of Sister Wave Condon. This was the first presentation of the Cincinnati choir and we are justly proud.

The afternoon service was held at 2:00 p.m. with the Southern Ohio District President, Elder Floyd T. Rockwell of Dayton, Ohio, the speaker. Miss Lois Rockwell, district music director, was the soloist.—Reported by MRS. E. L. SMITH.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—A council meeting of the district officers and branch pastors for 1949 and 1950 was held on September 25 at the Aurora church in charge of Lloyd Cleveland. The theme for the year was discussed, and the group decided upon the General Church theme, "Make Jesus Your Lord." Plans for the year were discussed, including the possibility of a summertime reunion, missionary services, use of district budget, and plans for work of the departments.

For the council of women an annual week-end institute was planned for November 12 and 13 (later changed to November 19 and 20), a spring institute, and council meetings every quarter. For the work of the children's division, the possibilities of more branches conducting vacation church schools and junior worship services were presented.

Department of religious education goals were given as follows: improving the church school; branch participation in district activities, stressing stewardship for all ages, closer co-ordination of the work of all departments, use of Zion's League Annual, continuing the monthly district bulletin, having local directors meet together during the year, and keeping current in church school lessons. For the young people's division, the use of the new Zion's League Annual was stressed and copies were available for purchase.

It is planned to stress stewardship during the year, particularly the financial observance, with special services and classes planned. A Worker's Conference was set for October 23 at Plano. A spring religious education institute and a youth home-coming were discussed.

A workers' conference was held October 23 at the Plano Church, opening with a devotional by Dr. Russell Rogers. The group adjourned to the lower auditorium where a vacation church school demonstration was given by the children of the Plano Branch under the direction of Sister Ilah Nelson.

Four discussion groups were held—one for the pastors, and three for the department of religious education: adults, young people, and children's workers. Following the supper hour, a joint meeting was held at which time a representative from each group made a report of their meetings. Clarence White, bishop's agent, gave a talk on the financial law. Robert Anderson, book steward, had a supply of books on sale.

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND DISTRICT.—On the week end of November 26 and 27, the youth of the Southern New England District gathered at Providence, Rhode Island, for a "Thanksgiving Festival." The festival began Saturday morning with ping-pong, quoits, and miniature bowling followed by roller-skating in the afternoon. A "Progressive Supper" (each course was served in a different home) afforded an evening of fellowship and fun, climaxed by a short service of song directed by Cathy Fisher, and Thoughts for Meditation, presented by Leonard Garlick and Edwin Cockcroft of Providence, Scott Fisher of Boston, and Jack Vance and Ernest Chesworth of Attleboro, Massachusetts. A duet, "Whispering Hope," was sung by Georgene Garlick of Providence and Dolly Seaver of Onset, Massachusetts.

On Sunday, the church school youth class, entitled "The Thanksgiving Youth College," had themes centered on history, mathematics, sociology, and economics, and religion, and was directed by "Deans" Almer W. Sheehy and Sanford L. Fisher both of the district presidency. The youth-conducted worship service for the branch was opened by greetings from Elder George F. Robley, pastor. Thanksgiving music was given by a youth choir directed by Mrs. Almer Sheehy. Leonard Garlick, district youth leader, introduced the service in which Paul Stoff of Boston spoke on "The Abundant Harvest," and Don Seaver of Onset presented the topic "Thankful Living."

The closing afternoon service with Brothers Almer Sheehy, District President, and Leonard Garlick in charge provided opportunity for expression and dedication by the youth.—Reported by PHYLLISS COWGILL.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.—Representative Carl Le Compt, National Congressman from Iowa, visited the campus last week with his wife. Upon leaving, he donated $250 to the college. Two years ago, Le Compt donated $750 towards the completion of the new tennis courts.

With the largest ensemble of voices in the history of the Oratorio music society, Handel's famous Messiah was presented December 14 in Zimmermann Hall. Accompanied by the Graceland-Lamoni orchestra, the 158 voice chorus under the direction of Henry A. Anderson gave the fifth annual presentation. Featured in the solo spots this year are four singers outside the realm of the 1949-50 student body. Two of the soloists, Bob Rose and May Jorgenson, are recent graduates of Graceland.

Mattie Willis, prominent singer from Michigan, was the soprano soloist. Henry A. Anderson, director of the Oratorio chorus, A Cappella choir, and voice instructor at Graceland, is the tenor soloist.

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—Under the pastorate of Elder J. F. Schofield, who was elected in October, 1948, much good has been accomplished and many happy times of fellowship enjoyed. High Priest D. A. Oakman and Elder F. W. Judd have been counselors to the pastor.

At the business meeting held October 15, 1949, the following were elected: Sister Rose Worth, secretary; Deacon A. Worth, treasurer; Sister A. Wicks, women's department leader; Sister V. Worth, church school director; Elder F. W. Judd, young people's director; Elder D. A. Judd, director of music; Sister L. Oakman, publicity agent and librarian; Priest William Sykes, historian; Sisters R. Worth and F. Tatman, auditors. The Finance and Maintenance Committee were elected as follows: J. F. Schofield, A. Worth, William Lawrence, D. A. Oakman, and Sister J. F. Schofield.

The treasurer's report showed an increase of income during 1948-49. However, heavy expenditure for repairs to the church building will be necessary in the coming year.

The service of dedication of the branch officers, held October 16, brought to all an increased sense of the consecration needed for effective participation in the Lord's work.

Two special periods of missionary activity have been held in 1949. In February, Seventies Glen H. Johnson and Thomas E. Worth visited contacts made by the local priesthood, using the slide projector. In the week of March 7, they held a series nightly of meetings. In November, Elder Johnson worked with the local ministry, and also gave the Sunday addresses for three weeks. These latter dealt with the movement of God as related to the course of history and were highly instructive to all.

As a result of these activities and of consistent efforts by the local priesthood, six candidates were baptized on November 27. These were: Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Adams and son Norman, and Mrs. F. W. Judd. Confirmations took place on December 11. Two other baptisms in 1949 were Leslie F. Lee, and John David Sykes, son of Brother and Sister William Sykes.

The branch was very happy to welcome home their three Graceland students—Sisters Merle North, Alice Gunn (nee Folkes), and Lily Carr. They are also pleased to make the acquaintance of Brother Ray Gunn and little Russell Jay, who with Alice are on a visit. Russell Jay was blessed on October 9.

Graceland has been brought nearer to the minds of the Saints here in several ways this year—particularly by the visit of Dr. Roy Cheville in the summer, whose fine ministry was deeply appreciated. On College Sunday Merle North and Alice Gunn gave papers, and Ray Gunn showed his beautifully colored slides of Graceland. Surprise visitors on this day were Sisters Josephine Skelton and Biloine Whiting. The collections, amounting to £5, were given to the College.

Brother and Sister William Judd (life-long members of the branch) and son Michael sailed for Australia in April. Their association and help are missed, but this is of course the Taree Branch's gain.

Brother and Sister Keith McLaughlin of New South Wales, Australia, were frequent visitors during their European trip, and Brother Keith gave two most interesting talks on the Australian mission. Elder Percy Judd was another Australian visitor. Sister Harding of Toronto visited from Canada.

Two Saturday afternoon rambles followed by vesper services were held during the summer.

The women's department has figured in special services on Mother's Day and July 10. They also held the Ladies' Evening on April 23. At their business meeting on November 17, Sister Freda Schofield was sustained as secretary and Sister Edith Lawrence as treasurer. Sister Nellie Wicks, department leader, has been sick for some weeks, but is slowly improving.

The numbers of this group have increased from time to time during the past few years. Their special project at the moment, besides weekly meetings, is raising funds for new crockery, etc., for the branch.

Zion's League held their business meeting on October 6, 1949, and chose the following officers: Roy D. A. Oakman, president; Frances Castle, vice-president; Lily Carr, secretary; Catherine Judd, treasurer. Sister Rose Worth retired from the presidency after a four year term of devoted service. She was also vice-president for several years. The League members made her a presentation of a book of poetry.

Zion's League Sunday was held on May 15, when they had charge of the services. Early in 1949, the League raised funds for the purchase of a duplicating machine for the branch. In addition to their usual weekly programs they are now helping to raise funds for a new organ.

Children's Day was on Sunday, June 26, with the theme "Let the Children of Zion Honor Their King." On July 11, the annual outing was held, this time to the London zoo. At prize-giving on Sunday, October 9, about thirty children received prizes for good attendance during the year.

The Oriole Circle is now under the leadership of Sister Merle North, and the Blue Birds are cared for by Sisters Jennie Wicks and Edith Lawrence. Brothers Albert Worth and Philip Maloney are making consistent efforts with the Boys' Club.

Since the last branch report to the Herald, three ordinations have taken place as follows: Deacon A. H. Wicks and Roy D. A. Oakman to the office of priest; Philip Maloney to the office of deacon.—Reported by LILY E. A. OAKMAN.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA.—In September Seventy E. Y. Hunker held a series of meetings and used slides to illustrate his sermons.

Brother and Sister Ed Swall visited the branch on December 11, and Brother Swall preached.

There was one baptism during the summer, Gary Nelson, who is now with the armed forces in Guam.

Though few in number the Zion's League is active under the leadership of Jannette Anthony.

The women's department with Kate Rotzien as leader meets once a month at the homes of the members, who take turns presenting a lesson from the Herald or other suitable papers. Brother Hunker spoke at the September meeting, basing his talk on Sister Pauline Arnsen's statement of goals and purposes of the department. At present the women are preparing gifts for the aged and the shut-ins of the town.

A get-together was held recently at the home of Brother and Sister John Murdock shortly after their return from California and Nevada where they spent a couple of months with relatives.—Reported by ALTA KIMBER.

I'm My Neighbor's Teacher - By Aleah Koury

NO MATTER what small action we perform in life, it becomes a stimulus which generally demands some kind of response from someone else. Whether it is a simple statement or a seemingly irrelevant action, it does have a bearing on others. Our social relationships are so intertwined that this response is natural and necessary.

People being imitative (a basic part of the learning process) are inclined to mimic each other. What they learn from you and me depends on what path in life we have decided to follow.

Perhaps you can recall in your own development how you would tend to idolize—especially in your early youth—your mother or father, some famous person, a great doctor, a movie star, a football hero, or some pal. Your admiration was so great, you unconsciously mimicked some personality trait of that person.

We never know when some person, young or old, may be noticing and imitating our actions. Psychologically speaking we remember 10 per cent of what we hear and 40 per cent of what we see. Since people are naturally observant, we must be on our guard at all times so our personalities and characters may be symbolized by good actions. It is a challenge for all of us—and a good one.

REMEMBER in Jesus' Sermon on the Mount he made the memorable statement concerning our actions before others, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city set on a hill cannot be hid. Behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light to all that are in the house. Therefore, let your light so shine before the world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven.

Not long ago I read a story called "Dangerous Imitation." It concerned a young boy who had just begun working in a factory on a metal stamping machine. Being young and ambitious he wanted to make a good impression on the boss. It wasn't long until he realized that the guard on his machine was holding up his speed and looking around he saw that the old-timer working on the machine next to his had removed the guard from his machine. Thinking this was perfectly safe, he removed his also. His speed increased but, not being accustomed to either the machine or the work, he soon caught his fingers in the machinery and had to have his hand amputated. Dangerous imitation!

Here Is the Writer . . .

Aleah Koury is a native of Toronto, Ontario. After his graduation from De LaSalle High School there, he spent two years in the Royal Canadian Army serving as an instructor in the infantry. At the close of the war he entered the University of Toronto from which he received his B.A. degree in June, 1948.

From then until September, 1949, when he went under General Church appointment to Ontario, Canada, he worked as an editor for Consolidated Press in Toronto. He is now in Independence doing art work on missionary literature.

No matter how little direct fault there may be attached to us for what happens to others around us, the real responsibility is ours if our actions cause them to make mistakes or to do things that get them into trouble. It wasn't the direct fault of the experienced operator that the new employee lost a hand; but because he was careless and disobeyed a working rule, his example caused the young man also to disobey and be crippled for life. All around us every day there are many other people whose actions are influenced by ours. None of us can work alone. None of us can honestly excuse ourselves on the grounds that we have no responsibility for what other people do. All our lives are so closely bound together that we must each accept some responsibility for the other fellow.

In some families parents drink and smoke. Children in these families think it is the normal thing for them to do because they see it in someone they look up to—someone who has been their teacher from the time they were born. The children accept these habits as being as natural as eating and sleeping.

From the very beginning of our lives, we play "follow the leader"; therefore it is important that we make Jesus our leader so that those who follow our example will be followers of Jesus too.

My mother recently wrote these words, "Kind words will never die; God knows how deep they lie." Kindness waters the seed of friendship while selfishness harbors ill-will and hard feelings. Treat an animal with love and kindness, and it will love you in return. Be cruel to it, and it will fear and hate you. Human beings are the same.

As servants of God and followers of Christ, we are told not only to be kind of heart and lowly in spirit that we may possess the wisdom of the Lord and the strength of the Spirit, but also to lay aside lightness of speech and manner when standing to declare the word and to study to improve our ministrations, that we may win souls to Christ.

If we follow these simple instructions, we can truly say, "I'm my neighbor's teacher. It is my responsibility to make sure he has a vision of the gospel and an opportunity for betterment because of my teaching and example."

New Horizons

Soul Insurance - By Raymond Holloway

For whosoever will save his life must be willing to lose it for my sake; and whosoever will be willing to lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.—Luke 9:24.

DURING THE RECENT WAR I had opportunity to see this very basic principle of the teaching of Christ put to the test of human experience. I saw a man, who in attempting to save his own life with no regard for the lives of others, go down at sea. I was a member of the crew of the "S. S. Larry Doheny," a tanker with a full cargo of crude oil sailing up the west coast of the United States. A Japanese submarine sighted us at about ten p.m. and at 10:05 p.m. our ship was hit with a torpedo. The "tin fish," as seamen called torpedoes, hit us just a few feet forward of the midship housing. Immediately the ship caught fire. The oil we carried was sprayed over the entire ship, and the whole of the midship section was afire. As we hurried to our lifeboats, the chief engineer went on ahead to the boat deck. He did not wait for the crew or attempt to help in any way to lower the lifeboats into the water. Instead, with his life jacket tucked under his arm, he started down a lifeline into the boat. Although the line was knotted every foot, the oil that had been sprayed on it made it difficult to grasp, and as a result he lost his hold. By this time the boat had been lowered into the water, but when the chief dropped, his head struck the gunwale of the boat, and he was knocked unconscious. He fell out of the boat, and, because he didn't have his life jacket on, sank out of sight. The ship kept going ahead because he had not ordered the engines stopped. That task was taken on by the third assistant engineer. That man reached safety even though he risked his own life for the crew's sake in going back down into the engine room. After return-topside he joined the remainder of the crew, and we boarded the lifeboats. We all had to work together to get the boat away from the burning ship.

Several times the boat would have been swamped or overturned if we had thought only of ourselves, but we worked together and eventually reached safety.

MOST OF US do not think we are in imminent danger of losing our lives. Possibly we are not, but daily we are in danger of losing our souls. I believe that when the Master made the statement quoted at the beginning of this article, he was more interested in men's being able to save their souls than their physical bodies. Human life is important to him, but the soul of man is a thing of even greater importance. Christ came into the world to redeem all souls. "For this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23. We must of a necessity help those about us to save their souls if we are to save our own.

The little energy I expended in pulling an oar of the lifeboat helped to save the lives of seventeen other men. If I had been pulling that oar by myself alone, we would not have survived the experience. So it is in life. The little things we can do to help in this job of saving souls are important. Telling the story of Jesus to someone who does not know him, and the sharing of personal experiences with one who has not known the joy of close fellowship with the Heavenly Father are but little things in our lives. Or we can encourage those who have found this glorious gospel. All of us occasionally become discouraged and need the lift that a close friend can give. Many times souls have been lost because that encouragement has not come at the crucial moment.

Even as I helped those men that night seven years ago to save their physical lives, they in turn helped me to save mine. So it is today; as I assist those around me to find life eternal, I am helped to achieve this high goal also.

Personality and the Letter - By Ella Williams

MOST ASPIRANTS for fame in the field of photography study volumes written on the rules of composition, gradation, high light, and shadow. They laboriously apply all the rules to their picture taking and lo, never a print hangs in a salon exhibition. Day after day they wonder why. Is it the "big name" that counts? Observation readily shows a student of the rules that the salon winners are not strict disciples of the law. Rather their works are striking and intense interpretations of emotion, beauty, and life in all its aspects. The true artists have used the basic rules for a foundation upon which they have built a living medium of expression. The mediocre enthusiasts have spent all their time and energy learning the letter of the law and have failed to see the pulsations of life in their environment.

Scores of pious, well-meaning students of religion delve into the Three Standard Books, gleaning from them every law of living given to man. They learn so well the doctrines and principles of the church that they can call any one of the laws to mind at any given moment. Each day they meet their fellow men in mart and mill, holding steadfast to the rules in their social relations, yet the people with whom they associate fail to see the value of their religion.

Some students pity those who fail to accept the gospel when it is they themselves who should be pitied. They have forgotten to put personality into their lives; hence there is no magnetic interpretation of religion for the unlearned to follow. The Master Artist did not make himself a slave to the law. Today, many centuries since Jesus broke the Pharisee's Sabbath, we remember his philosophy and not their cold, impersonal laws.

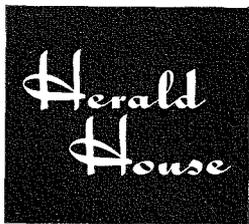

The nations of the world are desperately in need of the "pearl of great price," which we glibly say we hold. We fail to show its beauty to the world when we cover its glow with impersonal law.

The medium of expression more often seen than the photographer's in everyday life is the impersonal law. Can we not prepare our lives for exhibition so that we may interpret the "pearl" to the world?

Opening Service at New Church in Louisville, Kentucky

Notice to Members in Oregon

Lucy Worcester, 1546 West Forty-sixth Street, Los Angeles, California, will appreciate having members who live in or near Eugene, Oregon, call on Sister Elsie Marshall, Eugene Auto Court and Trailer Park, Eugene, Oregon. She has no car and therefore cannot attend services at the Cottage Grove Branch.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Elder Israel Goheen, Gladwin, Michigan, requests prayers that he may recover fully from an operation he had several months ago.

Mrs. Neil Hood requests prayers for her mother, Mrs. Ella Hawkins, Route 3, Kennett, Missouri, who is suffering from high blood pressure.

Mrs. Bob Fallen of Mulhall, Oklahoma, requests prayers for the spiritual guidance of her family and for herself that she might be relieved of the vocal paralyzation which has resulted from her being in an accident. She is an isolated member.

Prayers are requested for G. F. Van Eaton of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, Canada, who is seriously ill at the home of his mother, Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, Yakima, Washington.

WEDDING

Sinclair-Payne

Ruthel Payne, daughter of Mrs. Mary Payne of St. Louis, Missouri, and Vern Alma Sinclair, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Sinclair of Independence, Missouri, were married at the Reorganized Church in St. Louis, Missouri, on December 18. Pastor Frank McDonald performed the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Ann Arbor, Michigan, where the groom is studying music at the University of Michigan.

BIRTHS

A son, Michael Ray, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Manning of St. Louis, Missouri, on August 30.

A daughter, Joyce Ann, was born on October 5 to Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Faulkner of East St. Louis, Illinois. She was blessed on November 6 at St. Charles, Missouri, by Elders F. F. O'Bryan and David Lehman.

DEATHS

DOWNEY.—Grace Pearl, daughter of Joseph and Mary Sweet, was born June 25, 1882, and died December 5, 1949. She was first married to James Sullivan; one daughter was born to them. Several years after Mr. Sullivan's death, she married Charles Downey. She was a loving wife and mother, a friend to all, and a faithful member of the Reorganized Church.

She is survived by her husband, Charles; her daughter, Mrs. Vera Martens; three sisters: Mrs. Lillie Eims, Mrs. Viva Whittington, and Mrs. Winnie Peterson; two brothers: Roy and William Sweet; three grandchildren; and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Persia, Iowa, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Valley View Cemetery.

DETRICK.—Jacob L., was born October 2, 1862, at Nora, Illinois, and died December 6, 1949, at Chico, California. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for many years.

Surviving are four sons: Hale of Chico; D. L. of Elk Grove, California; G. W. of Grants Pass, Oregon; and C. W. of Quincy, California; three daughters: Mrs. Lucylie Clark and Mrs. Ione Stile of Chico; and Mrs. Clara Porter of Richmond, California; one sister, Mrs. Susie Andrews of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; one brother, Phillip Detrick of Waterford, California; twenty-five grandchildren; and twelve great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Brusie Funeral Home in Chico, Elder Dean Hintz officiating. Burial was in the Chico cemetery.

BEARSS.—Jessie Mary, daughter of Benjamin and Annie Green Johnson, was born in St. Thomas, Ontario, on July 27, 1877, and died on December 13, 1949, in the same house where she was born. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 2, 1889, and was a charter member of the St. Thomas Branch. In 1897 she was married to Christopher M. Bearss at Corinth, Ontario, where she spent most of her married life. Mr. Bearss preceded her in death nine years ago. Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Flossie Hoffman of London, Ontario; Mrs. Ray Best of San Francisco, California; Mrs. J. W. Stewart and Mrs. Earl Barrett of St. Thomas; a foster son, James Pearson of Tillsonburg, Ontario; one brother, Edward Johnson of St. Thomas; seven grandchildren; and ten great-grandchildren. Services were held at the Sifton Funeral Home, Elders Frank Gray and A. Cordery officiating. Burial was in the St. Thomas Cemetery.

NEWS AND NOTES

TOPEKA, KANSAS

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp were in Topeka, Kansas, on December 18 to attend the dedication service for the church. The new church building has just been completed.

E. Y. HUNKER HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

E. Y. Hunker returned to his home in Independence on December 16 and expects to remain until about January 12.

Apostle C. George Mesley and Brother Hunker will conduct a series of Schools of Evangelism. They will conduct one-week institutes at Fargo, North Dakota; Boise, Idaho; Calgary, and Edmonton, Alberta; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; week-end institutes at Regina, Saskatchewan, and Winnipeg, Manitoba; and a two-night institute at Fairview, Montana.

Brother Hunker reports that when he visited Kalispell, Montana, last November, two youths were baptized. He also visited Palston, Missoula, and Deer Lodge in the western part of Montana, and Boise and Hagerman in Idaho.

On November 26 and 27 he worked with Philip W. Moore, district president, at the Regional Zion's League Institute. Later he spent a week at Pocatello, engaging in administrative work and in preaching. Brother Moore went to Great Falls, Montana, to preach a series of sermons.

Brother Hunker held a week of services at New Plymouth. Eleven people were baptized at the closing of the week.

On his way home he stopped at Rock River, Wyoming, to visit Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Wight and family.

HANDEL ORATORIO OVER KMBC

The eleventh nation-wide broadcast of Handel's "The Messiah" by the Messiah Choir of Independence, was presented from Hotel Muehlebach in Kansas City on December 18 from 10:30 to midnight, under the direction of Franklyn S. Weddle. It was the thirty-third year for the chorus. There are nearly three hundred members of the chorus. Forty-three members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra played the accompaniment, and Mrs. Bethel Knoche played the organ.

Soloists were Josephine Crinklaw Mader, soprano; Harriett Porter Moore, contralto; Garland E. Tickemyer, tenor, and John Macdonald, bass.

Some of the special guests at the broadcast included Hans Schweiger, director of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and Mrs. Schweiger; Dr. Clarence Decker, president of the University of Kansas City; Blevins Davis, producer; President Israel Smith and Mrs. Smith; President F. Henry Edwards, Bishop Walter Johnson, who gave the invocation, and Mrs. Johnson, Bishop H. L. Livingston and Mrs. Livingston.

Brother Evan Fry remarks about the chorus, "Seldom or never has the chorus been so responsive to Mr. Weddle's direction, or so careful in following the instructions which have been drilled into them during two-and-a-half months of rehearsals."

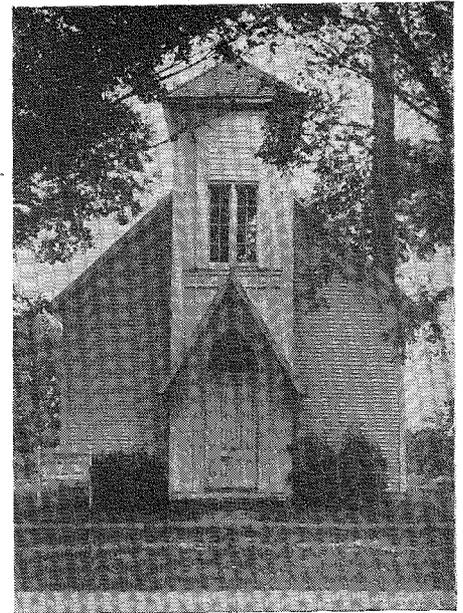

The Osborn, Missouri, Church

OSBORN CONGREGATION was organized as a mission in the fall of 1945. At this time there were only forty-five members, and they held meetings in their homes. They wanted a church, but with so few members the possibility of getting one seemed very slim.

Faith and prayers brought to light what proved to be a happy solution. A depleted church which had been standing idle for eleven years was going to be sold at auction. A committee composed of David Coffman, John Peters, and Earl Piepergerdes was appointed to inspect the property and report its findings. The location was found to be excellent. The lot, 65 by 150 feet, was situated across the street from the well-kept city park. The topography was level; shrubs and trees on the lot were plentiful but in need of attention. The building was of adequate size (thirty by fifty feet), but a fire in years past had left a gaping hole in the roof. There were some doubts about its being worth the work, time, and money needed to repair it.

The mission agreed to have Bishop Earl T. Higdon, a member of the group, bid $500 at the auction. The day before the sale he received divine inspiration to bid $300 instead of $500, which he did, and although the highest bid was $501, the bid of the Saints was accepted because they were leaving the church on the lot.

Work was begun immediately. Forty-four men from the Osborn, Stewartsville, Cameron, and Maple Grove congregations, together with many of the townspeople, reroofed the building in one day. During the winter months there was little done on the building, but with the coming of spring the walls were lathed and plastered, pews and floors were scraped and varnished, and the building completely rewired and painted inside and out. Carpets were laid, and an attractive sign was made for the outside of the church. The entire remodeling cost $1,300. Chairs, pictures, an electric clock, a rug for the rostrum, and many other articles were donated. An oil furnace has since been installed.

PRESIDENT ISRAEL A. SMITH was present for the dedication service held June 30, 1946. At the time of the dedication, there was only one member of the priesthood in the group, Elder David Coffman, who was elected pastor and still serves in that position. There are now seven members of the priesthood and a total of sixty-one members in the congregation. Eleven have been added by baptism, and five families have moved into the area—an average of one new family each year.

Faith, devotion, and a willingness to work are the earmarks of the people who meet in the little white frame building in Osborn. Here is an example of what can be done when all are of one heart and mind.

And inasmuch as my people build an house unto me, in the name of the Lord, . . . my glory shall rest upon it; yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it, and all the pure in heart that shall come into it, shall see God.— Doctrine and Covenants 94:4.

 STORM

The adversities of nature sometimes bring out both the best and the worst in human nature. In more cases it seems to be the best. In the recent sleet storm that visited the city there have been many stalled cars and accidents. As may be expected, feelings are deeply disturbed and sometimes get out of control. One may hear a man addressing a stalled car in language that does nobody any good. But more frequently one will see total strangers helping others with a lift or a push that gets a car going again, and sends people happily on their way.

 A MORNING WALK

President Truman was home for the holidays and went for a walk on Tuesday after Christmas, about the time offices and stores were opening. He is a good walker, and apparently enjoys the exercise and fresh air, as well as the familiar scenes of his home town. But can he take a walk alone or with a friend—like an ordinary citizen? He cannot. Behind him trails a whole procession of men, some of them panting and weary, of Secret Service guards, old acquaintances, Boy Scouts, R.O.T.C.'s, and ex-servicemen. He is halted here and there in his march by local folk who just want to shake hands with the President, and he greets them cordially. Not so the Secret Service lads, whose business is to guard his life, and regard every stranger with suspicion, examining all comers with gimlet-eyed stares. . . . It is a bright day, and the snow is crunchy underfoot. The President wears a friendly smile; it is good, for a few hours, to be free of the cares and routine of his office. He accepts the crowds graciously, though they are continually seeking attention. We hope that when he is at home in the attractive old-fashioned house on Delaware Street, now with its lawn protected from visitors by a new iron fence, he will be able to have some privacy and peace.

 THE DAY AFTER

Some love the excitement of the great holidays. I enjoy the peace of the day after. I celebrate the return to normal. I take pleasure in the descent from the mountaintop, the return to the comfortable plains and the peace of home.

Take Christmas, for example. The day after was a happy one. Celebrating Christmas this year was arranged in an ideal way! Saturday to get ready for it; Sunday to do it; Monday to get over it. Couldn't we have all our holidays that way? I especially enjoyed Monday. Putting away the presents. Saving the pretty boxes, ribbon, and cards. Getting the house cleared up so one can walk through the living room without stepping on something precious or falling over it. The singing "Herald Angels" have gone home. "Silent Night" in its thousand versions over the loud speakers is quiet at last. The insistent call of "Adeste Fideles" has ceased, and the poor "fideles" can get some rest.

And then there is January 2, also. What a wonderful, blissful day. No more tooting horns, no more splitting headache. No more "Happy New Year!" until you want to scream. The drunken drivers are all safely tucked away in the hospitals or morgues (with, alas, their poor victims!) and the world returns to normal again. I love the day after!

By PAUL M. HANSON

This is the new and long-awaited book by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, one of the church's foremost students of archaeology. It tells of his travels in "the land of the feathered serpent" . . . the Book of Mormon lands of Mexico. As such, it is an intensely interesting book, packed with historical facts every church member should know about. Beautifully illustrated, it is also a book which any nonmember would deeply appreciate as a gift. Order your copy of Brother Hanson's new book today . . . just fill in the form below and send to us in Independence.

Sanitarium Day

Pursuant to the action of the last General Conference, the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing Day has been set for Sunday, March 19, 1950.

Inadvertently, this date was incorrectly given as March 26 in the "Herald House Reminder" sent to general appointees, pastors, and book stewards. This date should now be changed to March 19, 1950, in harmony with the Pastor's Handbook.

Your early attention to this date with plans for a special "Sanitarium Day" program and offering will be appreciated. The work of this growing institution of the church is deserving of our best efforts.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Graceland World Fellowship Club

MORE STUDENTS from missions abroad than ever before may be expected to attend Graceland College under terms of a new plan announced recently by President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr. The "Graceland College World Fellowship Fund" offers substantial financial aid to students who come to the college from missions abroad.

President Gleazer describes the Fund as an attempt to equalize educational opportunities between students from the Americas and students from abroad who find it difficult to attend Graceland, owing to currency restrictions and travel expenses. At present $500 is available in the fund for this purpose. The college expects the fund to grow with the addition of gifts from students, from friends of the college, and from alumni.

The college is interested primarily in helping young men and women who plan to return to their own lands to serve, Gleazer emphasized. Aid will be outright grants to the students, and will be substantial enough that the student who can provide for his own transportation to Graceland will be enabled to care for his entire educational cost at Graceland by means of the grant and the opportunities for self-help through student employment available at the college.

The term, "World Fellowship," is intended to identify the interest of church and college in contributing to global unity and brotherhood. It is the hope of college administrators that an ever-increasing number of students from abroad graduating from Graceland and returning to their native lands to serve will make a significant contribution toward that goal.

The $500 already earmarked for the fund was received from the following sources: $200 from the Alumni Association of the college as authorized at a recent meeting of the Alumni Council, $125 from a friend of the college, and $175 contributed by students and friends who attended the recent annual Christmas Vespers at Graceland. In order for the plan to succeed, the college will need substantial gifts annually. The college hopes that alumni, friends, and students will be inspired by the merits of the plan to replenish the World Fellowship Fund each year with generous gifts.

At present, students from forty-one states, Hawaii, Canada, England, and Holland are enrolled at Graceland.

News & Notes

LETTER TO PRESIDENCY

Alma Andrews, pastor of the Bay City Branch in Berkeley, California, reports that Mr. and Mrs. Warren Ellis of Napa have been baptized, and that a sister of Mrs. Ellis expects to be baptized as soon as her husband is well.

About three hundred people attended the illustrated lecture of Apostle Paul M. Hanson at the East Bay Branch meeting held on a Sunday evening of December.

The San Leandro group were encouraged by a visit from Apostle Charles R. Hield. While there Brother Hield visited the site for their new church building.

NEWS FROM APOSTLE DRAPER

Donald E. Harvey reports from Maine that three people were baptized following a series of missionary services in Stonington, and that there is a new opening for church work in Portland, the largest city of Maine.

Almer W. Sheehy has organized Sunday evening cottage prayer meetings in Boston, and expects to establish another congregation there soon. The local priesthood and church members have pledged to support a series of missionary services.

INVITATION TO SINGERS

Franklyn S. Weddle announces that auditions are being given for the 125 voice choir that will sing the "Verdi Requiem" with the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra in March. All who are interested, including Messiah Choir singers, are invited to try for this choir.

FIFTY YEARS IN PRIESTHOOD

Orman Salisbury of Far West Stake became a deacon in 1900, and has served the church for the fifty years in some priesthood capacity. He was baptized in 1889. He has been an elder and a high priest and is at present an evangelist. For several years he was president of Far West Stake.

CHRISTMAS PARTY AT THE AUDITORIUM

Employees at the Auditorium gave a Christmas party in the Laurel Club reception room of the Auditorium on December 30. Dr. F. M. McDowell said the opening prayer. Numbers on the program were a solo, "Oh, Thou That Tellest," by May Jorgensen, accompanied by Mrs. Norma Smith; a story reading of the "Other Wise Man" by Stephen Black, accompanied by Carol Lee Anway; and Christmas carol singing lead by Bishop Leslie Kohlman. Just as lunch was about to be served, Santa Claus, in the person of Charles Graham, came rushing into the room. A string of sleigh bells was about his shoulders, and a large bag of gifts was on his back. There had been an exchange of names previous to the party. After a considerable amount of joking, Santa gave a short talk, shouted "Merry Christmas," and left the room as quickly as he had entered.

Mrs. Norma Smith was in charge of the party. Tree and room decorations were by the Misses Verna D. Savage, Ellis Lotz; and Flora Hallier.

"THE MESSIAH" IN THE AUDITORIUM

Although a sudden snow storm kept many people from attending this performance, a crowd of nearly 2,000 was at the Auditorium Christmas evening to hear "The Messiah." The Messiah Choir was accompanied by the Independence Symphony Orchestra, and directed by Franklyn S. Weddle. Soloists were Elizabeth Wilkinson Vaughan, Jeannette Nichols, Donald Pyper, and Herbert Lively.

Voices of the World

"There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification."

—I Corinthians 14: 10.

A Case of Translation

The above sentence from the writings of Paul presents an interesting problem to the translator. Those who produced the King James Version followed the literal meaning of the original rather closely, as the Emphatic Diaglott reveals. Modern translators find, however, that this treatment divorces the sentence from the rest of the chapter, and they offer a free translation that re-unites the sentence with Paul's discussion of the gift of tongues. The King James Version, like the original, is more picturesque, and better suited to our present purpose.

There are many voices in the world. They call us in many ways, some to salvation and some to destruction. Each voice has its own significance, its own purpose. We hear those voices constantly. It is tragic to see some people blindly following an evil voice to the realms of death.

Demon Voices

That one sentence has held a fascination for me as I have considered its symbolism and thought how it could be presented in a useful way for the people of the church. Then I remembered a passage I read some years ago in a remarkable and beautifully written book on The Gobi Desert by two English women missionaries, Mildred Cable and Francesca French. The following is condensed from a longer passage, but the original words have been preserved:

I was fully aware of the acute terror with which the Chinese regard the Gobi regions. The youth stared. "Demons," he said, "they are the ones who inhabit the Gobi. This place is full of them, and many have heard their voices calling. They call out just as a man would shout if he wanted help, but those who turn away from the track never find anyone, and the next call is always a little farther from the true path, for those voices will lead a man on, but they will never call him back to the right way. Some miss their way and die of thirst, and others are frozen to death in winter blizzards. You do not yet know, Lady, the terrors of that journey. Must you go out into the Gobi?"

"Yes," I said, "I must, for I seek the lost, and some of them are out there."

"Perhaps you have some clue as to where the lost ones are?"

"God who is their Father and mine will lead me to where they are."

The Voice of Sin

The seductive voice of sin was known in the most ancient times. Its first call seems rather near at hand, and safe. The next call is farther away. And it never leads one back, as the Chinese lad observed, to the true path. There is a vivid passage among the Proverbs of Solomon, well worth quoting here:

At the window of my house I looked through my casement, and beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths, a young man devoid of understanding. . . . And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot, and subtil of heart. . . . So she caught him and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him, Come. . . .

He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter. . . . till a dart strike through his liver. . . . and knoweth not that it is for his life.—Proverbs 7: 6-23.

When a cat stalks a bird, it is for the bird's life, whether the bird knows it or not. And so it is when sin stalks a human soul. The principle of sin is a kind of spiritual cannibalism, with the sinner as the victim of his own evil hunger. Sin is spiritual consumption.

C. S. Lewis expressed the difference in the purposes of good and evil toward life. In The Screwtape Letters he presents a pair of devils in correspondence on the business of hell; one writes to the other: "We want cattle who can finally become food; He [God] wants servants who can finally become sons. We want to suck in; He wants to give out. We are empty and would be filled; He is full and flows over." The power of evil consumes its victims.

The Voice of the Master

There are thousands of voices that would speak in every home at the touch of a knob or button of the smallest radio set. The people of the home can tune in to the kind of voice they wish to hear. There are voices for all sorts of purposes, with all kinds of intent—good and bad—toward human life.

There is one voice all men should hear, the voice of Jesus Christ:

If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.—Revelation 3: 20.

He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. . . . and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice. . . . I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.—John 10: 2-4, 14.

As Paul observed, there are many kinds of voices in the world. Some of them, in the words of the Proverbs, are for our life, and some are for our death. The human tragedy is that we are not as wise as the sheep of which Jesus spoke, who knew their shepherd and would not follow the voice of a stranger. So many of us cannot, or will not, distinguish the difference; and people pay with their lives for this failure. It is the work of the shepherd of souls to warn them and inform them, so that, if possible, they may be saved. L. J. L.

Decision and Dedication

M. L. Draper, for the Council of Twelve

NOVEMBER 20, 1949, was a "decision day" when we urged non-member friends to their decisions for Christ and the kingdom. At this writing we do not have complete information on how many souls united with the body of Christ on that day, but we believe it was a goodly number. The size of the group is important to us, but even more important is the quality of the conversion experience and spiritual growth in church fellowship of these baptized. Pastors, nurture carefully these new members of the flock. Put them to work winning someone else. "Each One Win One" now applies to them.

On February 5, 1950, there will be another decision day. Look at the Pastor's Handbook notes for February. The month's theme is "Ratify Your Calling." February 5 is Communion Sunday. What a marvelous opportunity for decision and dedication! The Lord's Supper is a memorial to Jesus and his atoning sacrifice for those who obey him. It challenges us to unity, and as we are all partakers of the one bread, it symbolizes the one body of Christ of which we are members.

As we urge the church to "ratify its calling" and each member to "ratify his calling," let this be a time of reconciliation and renewed fellowship through the Communion. At the same time, let us enlarge and enrich our fellowship through an invitation to interest nonmembers to make their decisions for Christ and his church through baptism.

For February 5, let us set the following goals:

1. Reconciliation on the part of all members for the enriching of our fellowship.
2. Rededication of all. Let each give thought to the demands of membership in the church of Jesus Christ and deepen the spiritual devotion which first led to baptism.
3. Lead prospective members to decision for baptism in a genuine conversion to Christ and his gospel.

We suggest the following order of service for the day—

8:30 a.m.—General Prayer and Testimony Service Theme: "Called to Be Saints"

9:30 (or regular time)—Church School

10:45 a.m.—Communion and Baptismal Service

We suggest that the Communion be served first, followed by the baptism of candidates. These unconfirmed candidates will not be eligible, of course, for Communion on this Sunday, but we suggest that they be invited to attend special classes to be held by the pastor during the following month, at which preparation for the confirmation will be made in discussions about the duties of members, the significance of the laying on of hands, the physical procedures involved in the actual service of confirmation, and in answering questions of the candidates. The Member's Manual may well be used as a text in this class. It is further suggested that the confirmation take place at the Communion service on March 5, the serving of the Communion following the confirmations so that the new members may also partake with the congregation.

With this background of special emphasis during February on the ratification of our calling, rededication, and decision, everyone may be sent out with a special commission during March and the months following to "testify of Him."

Across the Desk

Elder Thomas Worth writes from England:

It is just a year since we returned to England, and I am happy to say that my ministry here now, as before, is well received. A reasonable measure of success attends my missionary work in all its aspects. Many new converts have been added to the church, and many others have been influenced toward us. Saints are revived and strengthened in the faith, and members of the local priesthood are encouraged and reinforced.

In my view, England shows no appreciable signs of improving conditions generally, but she is still a "green and pleasant land."

The approach of Christmas prompts us again to appreciate the spirit of peace and good will abiding deeply within those to whom this season means so much.

Brother Worth's address is 611 Manchester Road, Denton, Manchester, England.

From Brother Franz Beil, Hannover, Germany, December 12:

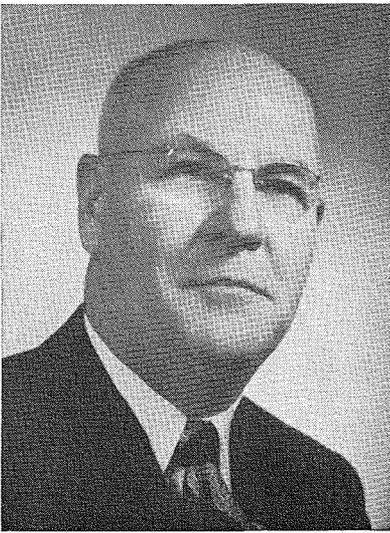

The members of Hannover Branch wish for you and all the members of the church that the Christmas Season may be a time of rejoicing and blessing. May the year of 1950 be one full of richest blessings. May our Heavenly Father always sustain you, to enable you to lead and guide the church so that the work of our God may be carried forward.

From Seventy F. Edward Butterworth, December 8:

For the first time in the history of our mission we have begun to move out in the districts of Tahiti. We are considered a Tuamotuan church here because most of our members live in the Tuamotua. Brother Breckenridge and I have just returned from a month's journey to eight of the lower islands. We are reporting twenty-four baptisms from this short trip. So far as the Tuamotus are concerned, we have reached the saturation point. Most of those who can be baptized have been baptized. Our only work there is to hold our own members and continue to baptize their children.

For new blood we are surveying Tahiti. The Protestants and Catholics are in the majority here. The Tahitian native is of a more pure strain than that of Christ, the Universal Savior

PART II

By D. T. WILLIAMS

I will be thy son and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost.—Lucifer.

AS WE HAVE DISCOVERED in our previous investigation, it is not enough that he who undertakes to save the world shall qualify on one or two or even three points. His qualifications must cover all possible points and constitute in him perfection, not as a theme, but as a reality. This challenge of the Savior to his followers, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," must be something more vital than mere word service. It must be "the word made flesh." And as the one leading a lost world toward salvation, it becomes him to portray the perfection to which he is challenging others.

God's Gift of Freedom

This perfection was natural in the Son of God, as we have seen; but in Lucifer such a claim would have been the uttermost in artificiality. He lacked perfection through his greed for fame, and he lacked, furthermore, in failing to comprehend the rights and responsibilities of agency which God had coupled with the dignity of man. This provision for human liberty, even before the foundations of the earth were laid, was God's gift to man. Lucifer's selfish pride and avaricious appetite for authority were perhaps the chief elements separating him from God, while his insistence that the human spirit should be cast in a mold and cultivated without benefit of freedom was the chief element which would have separated him from mankind. The human spirit, being what it is, will not rest easily under the rude and compelling hand of dictatorship. It was not made by its Creator to this end nor for this purpose.

The Spirit and power of God is the essence of freedom, and those who dwell in his presence must be sons and daughters of liberty, for as Thomas Jefferson said, "God who gave us life, gave us liberty." And again, "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have renounced the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?" Here is the eloquent and sage pronouncement that God is the author of our liberties. The one who would become the Redeemer of mankind, therefore, must be one who could, with full heart and soul, champion this holy freedom for the race of mankind with such shibboleths as "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 32. And again, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8: 36.

Lucifer, Champion of Bondage

Looking now to Lucifer's lack of qualifications for this great saving mission, we discover that the Father of all the spirits of men rejected him, for one reason, because he sought to take away the agency, or freedom, of mankind which God had provided as man's divine right from the very beginning (Genesis 3 and 4). On the other hand, because he gave full recognition to this heaven born principle, Christ found favor in the eyes of his Father and was chosen for the place of service and honor. Lucifer was cast off because of his persistence in an evil course which would have brought into bondage all the children of earth and would have made them sycophants of Satan rather than servants of the Most High God.

Because of this malicious insistence, Lucifer refused to accept the mandate of the heavenly court and set himself in opposition to God in God's own domain. He forged the fires of revolution and sought the infiltration of the divine Host with his pernicious and preconceived self-assertive ideology. Such success attended his efforts that one third of the heavenly population became contaminated by his evil virus. It may be that it was because of his miscomprehension as to where the greater strength lay that he determined to match his ability against the power of God. Or was it that God reached the conclusion that matters had gone as far as they should, and it was time to bring the controversy to a conclusion? Every other right of agency was acknowledged in heaven except this one—the right to take agency away. In this we face danger even now in our own democracies with the infiltration of the totalitarian philosophy which denies the divine right of personality.

War in Heaven

However you may think of this, the battle lines were drawn, the forces were joined, and the conflict decided. Lucifer, who had made at first a verbal bid and then an actual try for the throne of God, found himself defeated and not only cast off, but cast out with those who had thrown themselves without stint into his cause. Concerning the climax of this conflict, Jesus said, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven."—Luke 10: 18. Isaiah gives us this graphic description of the heaven-shaking event:

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning; how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.—Isaiah 14: 12-15.

As Jesus said of one of the ill-fated cities of his day, "Thou Capernaum which art exalted to heaven, shall be thrust down to hell."—Luke 10: 15. So it was with one who tried to set himself above the throne of God. But all this may seem to bring only sorrow to man, for it is related in the revelation that Satan is to come down among men.

And the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child, nor the woman which was the church of God, who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of our God and his Christ. Neither was there place found in heaven for the great dragon, who was cast out; that old serpent called the devil, and also called Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth; and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; For the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. For they have overcome him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; for they loved not their own lives, but kept the testimony even unto death. Therefore, rejoice O heavens, and ye that dwell in them. And after these things I heard another voice saying, Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, yea, and they who dwell upon the islands of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.—Revelation 12: 7-12.

The Age-old Struggle in Our Modern World

This conflict which had its conception in heaven, is a continuing struggle here among men. The theater of war has been changed, but not its purpose nor its disposition. It is a cruel struggle, and the same spirit that initiated it is even here and now the very life and evil genius of it. Here Satan, the prince of apostate angels, is on the side of, and the leader of those who would take away the agency and freedom of mankind. He does not champion the true earthly democracies of men—only those which are falsely called, "The People's Democracies."

The Genghiz Khans, the Attilos, the Xerxes, the Mussolinis, and the Hitlers are all of one stripe with this fallen star of heaven, Lucifer, whose glory robes have become sleazy garments of Sodom. They all seek the one end—the inundation of the human spirit and the engulfing of mankind in the deluge of spiritual and material bondage. Who can read the description of the vermin-ridden concentration camps of premature death in the nations of totalitarianism and not feel abhorrence for such a system dictated of the Devil, where men and women are to all practical purposes buried alive for the reason that they have had the courage to speak up in the face of those who enslave their race? Is it any wonder that God refused to accept this ideology in heaven? Is it any wonder that he cast out those who promulgated such a state of affairs among the heavenly host?

Choose Ye This Day

Here is a legitimate warning to those who tamper with this doctrine of seduction, deception, and death. Those who accept such leadership are not on God's side in this great universal conflict. The spirit of totalitarianism is the spirit of Cain, who killed his brother, and not of Christ who was killed for his brother.

This conflict will go on until those who were cast out of heaven are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death, and those among us who nurture this Satanic philosophy will perish likewise.

O the wisdom of God! his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself; Yea, to that being who beguiled our first parents; Who transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light, and stirreth up the children of men unto secret combinations of murder, and all manner of secret works of darkness.—Book of Mormon, page 106: 19-23.

Between now and this fatal hour there will be time for repentance, a time in which all may turn from Satan to God. Christ came as the atoning power of God, seeking his lost and wandering children. It was from a situation such as is confronting the nations today, which results from a low ebb of spiritual power, that God knew man could never retrieve himself under his own guidance. For this reason he sent our divine guide, his only Son, who, with more power and greater grace than any Hercules, is prepared to show us the way out of Augeas' stables of sin and spiritual filth to the Zion of God and the kingdom of heaven.

However, to accomplish such a tremendous resuscitation of earth's population through the ages, the Son of God had to be willing to suffer any indignity the spirit of Satan operating in men might heap upon him. He had to be willing not only to teach ignorant and stubborn men the way of eternal life, but also if need be, to die for all, the rebellious as well as those valiant in their testimony. Thus by the love of God, Christ seeks to save all who manifest a desire to accept his good office as a mediator between God and these, who, without God's love and Christ's intervention, sin beyond redemption.

This is part of the program to which Lucifer would not have accommodated himself. He wanted the power of compulsion to cast men's souls into an arbitrary mold, the better, as he thought, to rule over them with an iron hand. He would have made men suffer to his purpose rather than suffering for men to God's purpose. This is the spirit of the overlord toward the underling, the spirit of coercion and not the Spirit of Christ.

Because Christ accepted this high and important mission, he had to accept also its implications, its inconveniences and miseries, its pains and disappointments, its Gethsemanes and Calvaries.

The Mystery of Atonement

Perhaps there are those who will find themselves reasoning with some degree of agony in their spirits that they cannot bring themselves to believe a kind and loving Father would want his only Son to endure such a painful and cruel demise as was imposed in death by crucifixion. Those who find their spirits weighted down with such a conception of God's seeming unconcern find themselves pursued from one half-arrived-at conclusion to another and find no rest nor peace in any position they may have reached.

To such we come in sympathetic understanding with their uneasiness of spirit. We, too, have found it difficult to come to such a conclusion as many seem to find their souls at rest in. Did God want his Son crucified? Did he provide for this period of extreme suffering for his Only Begotten simply out of his desire that it should be endured? Or was it a situation thrust into the equation which was after all displeasing to God, but which must be accepted in light of human agency? Let us seek, if we may, the answer to such a dilemma. It would seem that God's intuitive kindness would not allow him to desire such suffering as came to his Son and would prevent him from initiating a plan which would call for such a cruel death as could be foreseen in the crucifixion on Calvary.

Again, it may appear to some that God did connive with evil men to bring to pass the supreme sacrifice of his Only Begotten through an excruciating experience. However, the fact remains God could not conspire with men to do this evil thing to his Son and then condemn as wicked men those who brought to pass his purpose. In such an act there would be no desire or disposition toward justice. A just God could not enter into such a plot and plead innocent of the results while other conspirators were condemned for their perfidy.

What, then, could have been in the mind of God in allowing this sacrifice with such tremendous implication to take place? Let us say that to all these evil events God seems to have given his "assent" but not his "approval." The question may be raised, "If God is omniscient and all-powerful, who are we to discriminate as between his 'assent' and his 'approval'?" Here again is where the agency of man enters into the picture. God imposed a limitation upon his own powers when he granted to mankind freedom of action. Here was a delegation of God's power to man—in other words, his agency. Of this God said (Genesis 3 and 4, Inspired Version), "Satan rebelled against me and sought to destroy the agency of man which I the Lord God had given him."

Under this agency man had the legal, but not the moral, right to do bad as well as good, wrong as well as right. God bestowed this power of choice and self-determination on mankind because he did not want his heaven populated by sycophants and slaves. His desire was for a fellowship of freedom. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." If men were automatons with no sense of agency, this life would be meaningless and purposeless because it would lack any possible development.

Why Christ Had to Suffer

Now let us see why it was that God's Son had to suffer, even when such suffering lacked the "approval" of his divine Father. God had looked down the ages, and even before the foundation of the earth was laid, saw our need and how essential it was that a divine Guide should be provided for lost humanity. He saw what kind of people we would be and foresaw in us the characteristics of those who would countenance no change and who would persecute others because they would be intent through change on bettering our way of life. Undoubtedly God foresaw that man would be so minded as to burn his fellow man at the stake for the sake of his religious convictions and teachings, that he would pour molten lead into the mouths of so-called heretics to shut off their utterances forever. He foresaw that man would enslave his fellow man; in short, he knew that "man's inhumanity to man would make countless millions mourn."

Knowing that the abuse of free agency would bring to man this state of mind, God knew that if his Son came to men with his (God's) plan of salvation it would be so different from the traditions of his time that most men would set themselves adamantly against it. It would be to them an innovation and an unauthorized religion, something to be persecuted to the death. Therefore, he foresaw that the same characteristics that dictated the burning of men at the stake would dictate also the cruel death of his only Son. Not because he wanted it so, or plotted with wicked men to bring to pass, but because men had become so wicked they sought to defeat the purposes of God, who was seeking only their salvation.

Yet God, with all these elements in the equation, could not be God in the true sense of the term and take away from men their right of agency he "had given them." He who was able to see the end from the beginning would know how to meet such an exigency without reversing his plan and thus making men slaves.

How God Met the Emergency

How, then, was God to meet such a critical situation and turn seeming defeat into triumph? The principle upon which the Great Judge acted is set forth with these words in Psalm 76: 10: "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee." Here is the promise that not only man's virtues, his goodness and kindness, his love and justice will praise God, but that God will even turn man's wrath to his praise and purpose. It was not an act of virtue, but of wrath, which killed his Son. It was not an act upon which he placed the stamp of his approval, but one to which he assented because to refuse consent would negate the agency, or freedom, he had given men in his original, creative act.

Therefore, to defeat the sinful purpose of sinful men inspired by Lucifer, who was still fighting his battle of rebellion, God determined to take this fact of his Son's sacrifice and make it a part of his plan of atonement. God's will, as it were, was forced in the issue, because of the fact that man was free to do either good or evil according as he chose. Still, God's plan must not fail, for the sake of those who, though they were not rebellious, would be without the guidance of the Son and therefore lost forever. In fact, it was and is God's divine purpose to bring all men, even those who are rebellious, if they will but repent, to the reality of eternal salvation.

In all this the life of Christ became not only a life of precepts, but also a life of examples. Again, "The word became flesh." He not only "spoke," he "did." He not only said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another," but he related this beautiful and essential element of divine philosophy to human need: "Greater love hath no man than this, that he giveth his life for his friends." Jesus did not talk for elementary effect, but enunciating this principle of divine affection, he went forth bravely to its fulfillment.

The Spirit of Atonement in the Church

Truly it can be said, "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16. Just as surely it is manifest that the Son truly "so loved the world" that he gave himself as a voluntary sacrifice for its salvation. This divine sense of sacrifice and atonement in both the Father and the Son must have its reflection in the church. His church is the body of Christ on earth. If it is to be truly his, it must be subject to such influences and desires as impelled the Father and the Son to implement the way of salvation for us through the avenue of personal sacrifice. If we would be elements in his atonement, we, too, as members of his body, must be willing to sacrifice for his cause.

Many good people have become concerned over the word atonement. It sounds mysterious to many, yet, there is nothing in it to give alarm. From the linguistic point of view, it is the conjunction of several small and comparatively unimportant Anglo-Saxon words, not one of which is mysterious or alarming in itself. "At"—you have no trouble, I dare say, with this little one-syllable word. "One" is another word of about equal importance. I am sure that such an insignificant unit of the English language does not strain your credulity. One more word image, "ment." This may be a little more difficult if you were asked to give a definition of it. But surely it is not among the profound elements of your vocabulary. Now put these three words on a parallel line, and then slide them together to form a compound word. What do we have? "Atonement." It is God's will and purpose to bring mankind to a unity, or an at-one-ment, with himself through the ministry of sacrifice and service in his Son Jesus Christ and by man's obedience to the gospel of his salvation. The greatest mystery in the atonement is not the untimely death of Christ brought to pass by evil men, but rather the great and eternal love in the hearts of God and his Son. This lengthens out their patience and the bounds of their affection from the first heavenly council to the salvation of the last distraught soul who is willing to accept this means of eternal hope.

How to Influence People and Win Members

By GARLAND E. TICKEMYER

A MAN entered a department store to make a purchase. He stepped up to a counter and scrutinized the articles, looked on the racks and shelves, searching for the article he wanted. Failing to find it, he looked hopefully about for a clerk who would help him. He saw a few people wandering about the store and surmised that they were customers like himself. There was a larger number of people, evidently clerks, who were gathered in small groups in various parts of the store. They were engaged in friendly conversation and were obviously enjoying each other's association.

After waiting patiently for a reasonable period of time, the prospective customer decided the clerks weren't interested in him. With a few uncomplimentary thoughts about an establishment that was so poorly managed and so little interested in selling its goods, he started for the door. Here he was pleasantly surprised but a little puzzled. The manager of the store was standing at the door. With a pleasant smile on his face, he was shaking hands with the customers, as they left the building and was urging them to come back again. The customer felt a little better toward the store but wondered why the manager didn't fire the clerks and get a group of good salesmen on the floor.

Of course this isn't a true story—at least it didn't happen in a store. However, it does happen every Sunday in some churches and with results that are almost as disastrous to church growth as they would be to a business establishment.

The pastor of a Latter Day Saint church is the manager of a business that has a product which must be sold to prospective customers. His greeting before and after the service will create a friendly atmosphere. The real job of selling, however, must be done by the clerks on the floor. In the case of the church, these salesmen are the priesthood and regular members of the congregation.

It Costs to Attract Customers

The owner of the largest automobile business in the city of Los Angeles pays huge sums of money to attract people to his establishment. He estimates that it costs him $40.00 for every prospective buyer who steps across his threshold. He hires only expert salesmen on the principle that since he pays so much to get people to look at his cars, he cannot afford to lose sales for want of good salesmen.

Sunday is the principal day of the church. On this day it contacts the largest number of prospective members. These prospects are generally favorably inclined or they wouldn't come. What a tragedy it is that the priesthood, who should be our most expert salesmen, and the members, who also have a responsibility, are sometimes found engaged in visiting with friends, renewing old acquaintances and neglecting their primary responsibility of winning the newcomer to active participation in the church.

Friendliness Wins Friends

The friendliness of a congregation is the most accurate measurement of its missionary zeal. Observe a branch that is indifferent to its inactive members and cold to the visiting stranger and you will see a congregation that is self-satisfied and unproductive. An analysis of its records will reveal a small percentage of baptisms, mostly children, and an attendance average of less than one third of its membership.

Large congregations are particularly susceptible to the disease of unfriendliness. Three conditions aggravate it. First, there are so many people that the individual is lost in the crowd, and regular members are more interested in seeing their friends than in welcoming the stranger. Second, the congregation usually has a fairly good attendance, and the need for additional members and workers is not so apparent. Third, large congregations are likely to come to expect a professional leadership from their pastors, especially when the pastor is a general church appointee. The task of seeking out the wayward and welcoming the newcomer is left to him. The job is too big for one man to do, so it isn't done.

Since loss of missionary zeal, with concurrent indifference to the visiting stranger, is more the rule than the exception in congregations that are large, wisdom would dictate that numbers beyond 300 to 500 should be siphoned off into new congregations. The condition of the branch will generally be healthier when a need is felt for more church school teachers, more departmental leaders, and more priesthood than when a congregation has so many workers it is not concerned about discovering and training new ones.

The Pastor as Host

Even under the most unfavorable conditions as to branch size, however, the spirit of friendliness can be cultivated. It is certainly the pastor's responsibility to serve as the official host.

Some of our members have said this was following the "sectarian churches" or that the minister was just looking for compliments on his sermon. This is thoughtless and unkind criticism. Why should other ministers be more courteous than ours? While some people feel they must say words of commendation for the good received, no comment on the sermon is called for, and it is better that none be made unless it is sincere. A warm handclasp and friendly nod brings the minister just a little closer to the congregation. The least he can do is to stand at the door at the conclusion of the service and shake hands with both members and visitors. Members should be aware of the importance of this duty and avoid discussing personal problems with him while he is performing his duty as a host to the congregation.

Priesthood Members Have Host Responsibilities

The host responsibility should not be left to the pastor alone, however. It is actually the responsibility of every member and particularly of the priesthood. Priesthood members are called to be shepherds of the flock and evangelists of the gospel. The regular services of the church provide one of the best opportunities for them to perform this important ministry. If, however, they regard themselves simply as attendants at the service and spend their time talking to their friends, they are neglecting their office.

Are You a Good Salesman?

We give a great deal of thought and spend considerable money in choosing church locations and erecting buildings that will attract the favorable interest of nonmembers. We are concerned that our church name, program, and message shall be well publicized in the newspapers, by radio, by word of mouth, and through the distribution of pamphlets. What are we going to do with these people when they visit our churches? Will they go away unimpressed because they were not well received? Are you a good salesman for the church?

His Arm Is Not Shortened - By VIVIAN SORENSEN

RECENTLY, while reading some of the evidences of divine intervention in the lives of our early missionaries, I began to think of God's miraculous intervention in opening up the way for my wife and me to fulfill our missionary appointment to the Society Islands. Realizing that an account of this might be a valuable testimony to the fact that "his arm is not shortened" in these modern days, I humbly submit this testimony as an evidence of the goodness of God, who never gives us a commandment without providing the means for us to complete the task.

We were appointed by the General Conference of 1944 to labor in the Society Islands Mission. This would have been a comparatively easy matter prior to the war but owing to complications arising from France's capitulation and the unrest in the French possessions, together with the extreme shortage of shipping between Australia and Tahiti, the possibility of our arriving at our destination seemed hopeless.

Futile negotiations with the French consul in Sydney would have made us despair had there not been that abiding assurance of the Spirit of God to buoy us up during the long months of waiting. Tenaciously we clung to the statement in modern revelation, "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." When the opportunity opened up for us to go to New Zealand on a passenger ship, we accepted not knowing with any degree of certainty what our chances would be of getting from there to Tahiti. We realized, however, that New Zealand was 1,200 miles closer to our appointed field than Australia, and so we sought permission from Apostle C. G. Mesley (who was 500 miles away at the time) to proceed. He granted our request and advised us to remain firm in our faith that all would be accomplished in due time. Last minute army priority reservations on the ship almost forced us off the passenger list, but after we presented our case to the manager of the steamship company, he kept our names on the list although fifty others were struck off at that time. We believe that our many fervent prayers helped to influence him in making this decision.

Bidding farewell to our native land was not easy as we had no assurance we would return again, but the call of our mission and the thrill of adventure compensated somewhat for that.

THREE-AND-A-HALF DAYS of sailing across the "stormy Tasman" brought us to Aotea Roa, "land of the long white cloud," or New Zealand. Our arrival at the mission headquarters in Auckland was fortuitous for Brother and Sister Floyd Potter, then in charge at New Zealand. Because of their strenuous work and the incompatible climate, both were in poor health. After living with them for a short time, we were able to relieve them, and they returned to Australia where their health soon improved.

For nine long months we negotiated with the French consul and the shipping authorities for visas and transportation, but without success. Despair and doubt often assailed us, but somehow we felt an "inner peace" that spoke with gentle assurance to our souls.

Our worldly possessions had been forwarded to Tahiti just after our leaving Australia, and little whispers of "wild goose chase" reached our ears from time to time from those less firm in their conviction. Elder Edward Butterworth had also been negotiating for us in Tahiti but had met with refusals at every turn to grant us a visa.

Whenever I had occasion to go into Auckland, I would walk down to the waterfront. As I gazed longingly at the majestic ships from all parts of the world, I would lift my heart in prayer to Him who is ruler over all, asking him amid my tears to open up the way that we might serve his church as appointed by his servants. Little did I dream how literally my desires would be fulfilled.

Hearing one day that a phosphate ship was unloading at the quay and would be returning to the island of Makatea (120 miles northeast of Tahiti) I decided to ask the captain if there were any possibilities of our obtaining passage to Makatea. It was with some degree of trepidation that I approached him, as I had been informed by the phosphate company that no women passengers would be allowed on their ships because they were "tramp steamers" and had no passenger accommodations. The captain was in his sixties, a typical English gentleman. He invited me into his cabin, and we discussed the whole matter of visas and transport. I assured him that we had not yet procured the visas but hoped to do so soon and solicited his assistance in transporting us to our destination. He was most sympathetic but said that his ship was no place for a woman and that the food was not even edible at times. He added, however, that if we wished to rough it and he could find two officers willing to vacate their cabin for us, we could come. This was on Monday morning; he said that the ship would be sailing on Thursday, and that we would have to present ourselves with passports on the evening of Wednesday.

WE MADE FEVERISH PREPARATIONS to be ready, sending numerous cables in an effort to secure the all-important visas, but Tuesday came and went with no results. Wednesday, however, dawned with a ray of hope in that a go-slow strike was contemplated by the wharf laborers. This would retard the unloading of the ship. Personally I don't like strikes, but here was one that I actually prayed for as we needed extra time to procure the visas. The strike did develop, and the unloading of the ship was retarded to about one third of its former speed. Thursday faded into history with still no visa in hand although we did receive a most heart-warming cable from Brother Butterworth at 9:00 p.m. on that day saying that permission had been granted by the governor. Friday morning we called the French Consul in Wellington and received the heart-rending statement that he had no official cable from Tahiti. He promised, however, that if he received it, he would instruct his agent in Auckland to visa our passports.

On Friday morning the captain informed me that he would be sailing at 7:00 a.m. Saturday and that we must be on board by 9:00 o'clock that evening. One can well imagine the fervor of our prayers, because we realized that if we missed that ship, it would probably be many months before another such opportunity would come our way. Here it seemed was the way open for our passage, the permission had been granted in Tahiti, but the visa still was delayed. Nevertheless the calm inner assurance did not leave us, and upon again phoning the consul, he stated that the official cable had arrived, and he would immediately phone the Auckland agent instructing him to visa our passports.

We thought the climax had passed, and we were already feeling lighthearted when the phone rang, and Captain Jones' voice bade me come quickly to the ship as he had bad news for me. Again a sense of frustration assailed us, but the assurance of divine love still hovered over us. The captain informed me that our cabin had been commandeered by the phosphate company for an official and his wife who were arriving by plane from Australia that day and were to proceed to Makatea. He was most apologetic, but declared he was powerless to prevent their coming. He finally suggested that we approach certain other officers to vacate their cabin for us. It appears that the entire crew was sympathetic, and two other men readily volunteered to give us their cabin.

Many of the faithful Auckland Saints accompanied us to the wharf despite the biting wind and rain. We had learned to love those people during our nine months stay with them, and we have since found that one of the greatest trials of a missionary's life is the continual parting with people he has learned to love.

WE HAD AN EXCELLENT VOYAGE, spending much time with the captain and our fellow passengers. Sister Sorensen was treated with every respect by the crew, and we both received useful instruction in navigation from the officers.

The captain was loathe to part with us at Tahiti, but he hove to outside of the pass. After refusing to accept any passage money except $21 for food, he bade us good-by, and we promised to write him. We stepped into the small French Customs launch, and soon the good ship, "Samokla," was a mere speck on the horizon.

Getting to the pass through mountainous seas in that little pilot boat was a memorable nightmare. Rocking, tilting, rolling, plunging, and rearing—there isn't an action known to man (except flying) that the boat didn't sample. We were standing on the unprotected deck beside our luggage, and had it not been for the hand of God we would have been washed overboard. Seeing our dilemma, a French officer, who, we later learned, was the mayor of Papeete, assisted us into the tiny cabin where we found protection from the spray and wind. Once through the pass in the coral reef and in the calm lagoon our troubles were over. We strained our eyes to see if there were any natives on the wharf ahead of us. It was not long before we were able to distinguish dozens of dusky faces looking intently toward the launch, and then we saw two white people on bicycles riding along the wharf. We rightly guessed them to be Brother and Sister Butterworth. Willing hands helped us ashore and amid cries of Ia ora na and much handshaking we introduced ourselves to the Butterworths and our native brethren and sisters.

So ended what to us has been a most amazing example of God's watch care and intervention on behalf of his servants.

All through our three and a half years labor on the islands, we never once felt forsaken but were conscious of the presence of God's love comforting, helping, and cheering us through our most trying and difficult moments.

A Lesson From Church History

By EMMA SMITH KENNEDY

AS A CHILD I heard little of the history of the early church. In our home the fate of Joseph Smith and his followers was seldom mentioned. I learned early in life that my father's childhood had been robbed of paternal love and guidance; this often caused me to pity him.

When I moved to Independence, I heard all about that part of church history. I heard of the Saints being gathered together on the north side of the square and ordered to move out, and how they went, leaving all they had except what they could carry with them. As I grew to womanhood I found I had no pity but a feeling of contempt. These people had received the greatest gift of God to man, yet they had fallen away. What a blessing for anyone to be able to talk to the Father through his Son and be heard and answered. Why should God allow this to come to them? I wondered, "Were they brave people or weaklings?" I could hardly picture these Saints walking out and leaving all they could not carry.

As a young married woman, I had one splendid neighbor, Aunt Sally. Although her skin was dark, she proved to be an angel to me. Aunt Sally often came to my aid in my home, and as she worked, she told me of her own people and many other things. She it was who told me of the value of wild greens. Coming one morning with a pan of freshly picked ones, she turned them over and over talking all the time. "Now, honey, dis here's dandelion—good for spring tonic. Dis wid de blue stem is dock. But, honey, pick the curly leaves, 'cause dat ole yellor dock ain't good. No, Mam, it aint."

She told me, too, of the stories her granny told her about the "Mormon folks." She told of how the Saints were forced to the north side of the square, ordered to leave town and never come back. After they left, the townspeople went into their homes and took whatever they wanted of what was left behind. In one home they found the table set and food on the table. I could not understand how such things could be if the Saints were serving God. Why should they submit to such? In my heart there was a lingering fear that this might be our fate too. I never spoke of it, but it was there always.

THEN ONE DAY I read with a new light Doctrine and Covenants 98, paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, of the sins, weakness, pride, and boastfulness of those people. I wondered how anyone bearing the name of Saint could forget the prize he had been given. A great and marvelous thing had happened. The priesthood had been restored to the earth. Yet these people had forgotten or willfully turned to the world. "They shall be mine in that day when I gather my jewels." They had polluted the very land that had been chosen for the beautiful city, the latter day Zion. Then I read, "Notwithstanding their sins, I will have compassion," and the spirit filled my soul. They truly suffered—they lost their homes; they were publicly shamed; some died—because the Lord had need to purify his church. His hand was withheld to let suffering, sorrow, and want humble his followers and rid the church of all that was not honest in it. Here was an example for the people in my day to heed. My heart was melted with pity for those of the early church—not for the ones who boasted or sought to gain the world's favor, but for those who proved faithful through that dark day of the church. With such an example, dare we fail? Can we blind ourselves with the thought that such will never come to us? God is no respecter of persons. While we may not gather on the north side of the square and be ordered to leave town, we may find that the Lord has become weary of our follies, worldly desires, and uselessness. We must seek to share this beautiful faith preserved at so great a price by those Saints of early days.

Read and reread why trials came to those who gathered on the north side of the square. Then with a prayer in your heart ask yourself, "Am I worthy to live in Zion while the early Saints were not allowed to stay?"

No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love.— Doctrine and Covenants 11:4.

Good Is Where You Find It

There is no life so humble that, if it be true and genuinely human and obedient to God, it may not hope to shed some of his light. There is no life so meager that the greatest and wisest of us can afford to despise it. We cannot know at what moment it may flash forth with the life of God.

Magic or Miracle?

By RUBY TINKHAM

YOU ARE TREMBLING on the brink of a steep precipice, and the raging winds of indecision are howling mournfully around you. On the twisting paths below there are no lighted signposts, no helpful pilgrims, nothing but a torturous ascent that has drained you of every resource you possessed. Where you had thought to find illuminating radiance, there is only a blacker gloom. Where you had hoped for compassionate release, there is only increasing pressure. You teeter dangerously near the edge as the thick shadows wrap themselves around you like a huge boa ensnaring its helpless victim. Then you fall to your knees with the agonizing cry, "Oh, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Could this be you?

Are you sorely troubled? Is the problem facing you so great that despair will inevitably follow if you make a bad decision? Will you be hurt? Will others suffer? Will God's plans be disrupted if you hesitate? Perhaps you know this road well because you have traveled it many times before, and it never changes.

"Now," you tell yourself, "as never before in my whole life, now, I need a miracle. Why doesn't God answer my prayers? Why doesn't he see my great need? What kind of a God am I giving my allegiance to, who ignores me when I need him most? Where is this Savior who led his people through ages past by miraculous methods and now refuses me one single miracle? Dare I believe that he is the same yesterday, today, and forever? Dare I believe that he is a God of miracles at all?"

You flounder in the intricate web of indecision, unbelief, and self-pity. And the greatest miracle of all times is there before you, breathlessly waiting for you to open your mind and lay hold on it.

You are the only creature in all of creation so constituted as to think, speak, and act on your own volition. And were you just now asking God to take that miraculous power away from you and give you something less?

Think back—how many times have you resented your earthly parents for telling you what you had to do when you knew you could decide better for yourself? Do you think your Heavenly Father is going to deprive you of the most magnificent gift he saved for the very last of creation and made in his own image?

WHEN I WAS A little girl I was fascinated by magic. I would sit enthralled before the skill and artistry of a clever magician—the dexterous card tricks, the innumerable colored scarves which came out of his sleeve, the timid white rabbits that hopped from his hat, the empty boxes, now full, and then empty again. But somehow even then I knew I was being deceived. I was sure the rabbits had to be fed and kept somewhere and that the scarves had to be folded many times to fit the sleeve.

Today I almost asked God to do the same thing for me. I practically asked him, because the going was a little rough, to magically smooth things out and make it easy for me to decide what to do. That he refused only proves he is still the same intelligent, loving God he always has been.

He is so concerned about me that he refuses to let me live on my immature level but insists that I grow up to his. Where I would turn to some easier way, he will entice or grieve me, if necessary, into making new progress. Then he invites me to turn and look at the magic I asked for. My vision, increased by his guiding wisdom, enables me to see that what I wanted was "fancy scarves and white rabbits out of a hat"—something that momentarily brings relief and then leaves me with no resources to stand on.

Wisely he turns my eyes in upon myself and shows me the miracle I asked for. Magic is only an illusion—a vision caught and held for a moment, something unreal, ordered, and planned with consummate skill to confuse and perplex. But miracles are wonderful transformations from a lesser state into a higher one. Magic lasts only long enough to bewilder and astound. Miracles usually effect some permanent changes which last through all eternity. Christ was never in any sense a great magician. His miracles had high purposes which endured.

I am glad that my God is not haply engaged in practicing tricks of magic, that he is too vitally absorbed in performing miracles. For the miracle is always in the change—the change from sickness to health, from lunacy to sanity, from indifference to dedication, from ignorance to knowledge. Are they any less miracles because some occur in seconds while others take years? Is a miracle minimized because one man receives his physical sight instantly and another needs several years to regain his spiritual vision? Which is actually the greater and more lasting miracle?

YOU CAN be the miracle you are asking for. You may already possess the power you seek from God—use it. You can grow and change as often as you wish. Would anyone wise enough to order the miracle of physical growth neglect the more important phases of spiritual growth? Would a magnanimous God who created a beautiful world to appeal to our senses fail to provide stimulants for our souls? That decision you are about to make is a glorious challenge. Rejoice in it; lift your voice in praise, and the shackles will fall off, and you shall walk away from your prison house free. As long as the decisions remain tough, you are thinking and growing. You are changing from a little person into a mature one. YOU ARE PERFORMING A MIRACLE!

It Takes Unity

YOUR BODY is an example of unity. When all parts work together properly there is good health and satisfaction. When one part does not function properly, the disorder is felt by the rest of your body. Your feet may not be one of the vital organs of your body, but if they are tired and sore, your complete body will feel tired and sore. A tooth is a very small part of your head, but when it aches, the pain seems to fill your whole head. Every part of your body must do its share toward making you healthy. There must be unity.

If you are to be a good steward, all of your behavior must point toward making you a good steward. You and only you know whether or not every one of your efforts are united to make you a better steward. The woman who teaches a church school class and helps in the women's department, yet spends most of her money on the "latest styles" is not united in her effort to be a good steward. Regardless how much a man might do for the church, he is not a good steward as long as he can not control his temper. Are your efforts united to be of service to the church?

The Temple - By RAY WHITING

A Department for Debatable Topics

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors

ONE OF THE GREAT EXPERIENCES anticipated by all Latter Day Saints is the building of the temple of the Lord in Independence, Jackson County, Missouri. Early in the church a revelation was given (Doctrine and Covenants 83) which says in part:

The word of the Lord concerning his church . . . the gathering . . . the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built, beginning at the Temple Lot which is appointed by the finger of the Lord in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, Jr. . . . Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord. . . .

And in paragraph 6 of this same section, the Lord reasserts that "an acceptable offering" shall be made "in the house of the Lord, which house shall be built unto the Lord in this generation upon the consecrated spot as I have appointed."

Here are two clear-cut statements of the Lord declaring without equivocation that "an house" shall be built unto the Lord on the consecrated spot in this generation. Doctrine and Covenants 1:7 states: "Search these commandments for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."

THERE MAY BE DIFFERENCES of opinion in regard to the length of a generation. Some have said that a generation is one hundred years; others have said it is a hundred and twenty years. It was taught by the early Reorganized elders that a generation was a hundred years. The Book of Mormon, pages 466-467, makes it very plain how the Lord reckoned time in the Nephite history.

Behold, I perceive that this very people, the Nephites, . . . in four hundred years from the time that Jesus Christ shall manifest himself unto them, shall dwindle in unbelief . . . because they shall sin against so great light and knowledge; yea, I say unto you, that from that day, even the fourth generation shall not all pass away, before this great iniquity shall come.

erations. One hundred years would be one generation. Therefore, it was quite generally believed that by the close of the generation, or by 1930, the temple would be built.

However, as we began to approach 1930, some advocated the idea that perhaps the Lord either extended the time or had reference to the temple which was built at Kirtland. By reading paragraphs 1 and 2 of Section 83, one can readily see that he would have to do a lot of twisting of the English language to believe that God would speak so definitely of the "Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri," and in the very next breath refer instantly to Kirtland Temple, without the slightest indication whatsoever of a change of subject matter. Section 107:15 takes care of this. The Lord, referring to the efforts of the early Saints in Independence to build the temple but being driven out, said: "Therefore, for this cause have I accepted the offerings of those whom I commanded to build up a city and a house unto my name in Jackson County, Missouri, and were hindered by their enemies."

This shows conclusively that the temple or "house" referred to in Section 83 was to be built in Independence, Missouri. The Lord excuses the early Saints for not building the temple in their day, but he in no wise infers that the city or the temple shall not be built according to schedule. Not in any way does he withdraw his promise of "an house" "in this generation." He says only that he will "require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men."

He does not say he will not require that the temple shall be built on the consecrated spot in this generation. This statement still stands, for the prophecies and promises "shall all be fulfilled." Did not the Lord say at the time these "sons of men" had been hindered (Section 98:4), "Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in my hands; be still and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place." And a very important part of Zion is that house or temple in which the sons of Moses and Aaron shall make their offering. Nowhere is there the slightest indication that the promise was withdrawn that said "which temple shall be reared in this generation."

BUT HOW MARVELOUS are the works of God! His ways are past finding out, for as the promises concerning the gathering of the Saints who were driven out found fulfillment in the Reorganization, even so through the same church has God worked to his glory and for our good. About 1922 the prophet of God's church promoted the building of an auditorium. Very wisely he refrained from calling it "the temple." Nevertheless, the church proceeded, not without much criticism, fun-making, and unkindness, which must have been saddening to the great man upon whom the burden rested. A great ledge of rock was discovered at the very place the Auditorium was to rest. Steadily the building progressed until at the very close of "this generation," "an house" was built unto the Lord, on the consecrated spot, by the right people, in the right time, just at the close of the first hundred years. This generation did not "all pass away" until an house was built upon the consecrated spot. It was built, but not fully completed. It housed the Centennial Conference of the church of Jesus Christ in the very celebration of the closing of "this generation." The prophecy and promise were fulfilled before the very face and eyes of the people, yet many did not see it.

The statement is further made that "a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house." This cloud was not to be the mist of which the clouds of the sky are composed, but the "glory of the Lord." This, we are told, is intelligence. And the cloud was not to hover over the outside of the house, but to "fill the house." At the Centennial Conference many classes were held, the voice of some instructor could be heard from top to bottom. Instruction—the intelligence of the Lord—literally filled the house and has continued at every Conference since.

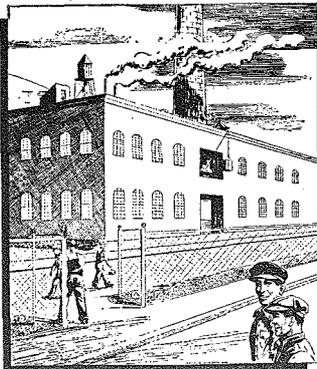

TO SOME this article will perhaps be a surprise, but has not God worked like this in the past in fulfilling his promises? Just before the birth of Christ, many were looking for the Messiah. There was the hope that some spectacular event would occur and a great man arise and declare himself as the Anointed. Instead, a young woman gave birth to a babe in a manger, and the child grew and fulfilled every promise and prophecy concerning the Messiah, yet the masses did not recognize him. Before the Angel of the Restoration came, wise men again were looking for a demonstration of God's power and a movement of light and power. But a humble farmer boy went into the woods and met God. This lad did all and more than those men dreamed of. He fulfilled the prophecies of Isaiah and of Daniel and others. Yet the masses killed him as they blindly crucified Christ.

After the Saints had been driven out of Independence, the Lord promised that those who were driven out would return; that God would raise a man like unto Moses to lead the scattered Saints back to rebuild these waste places, "and so shall the redemption be." This the Lord did through the leadership of "Young Joseph" in the lifetime of those who were driven out as he promised. Yet men do not comprehend it, and some are still looking for the coming of the "Moses man," the one "mighty and strong." They are still looking into the future for the "redemption of Zion."

The fulfillment of the promise of the "Temple" has been looked to by every brand of Latter Day Saint. I have heard some say: "We can tell which is the right church, because the one that builds the temple will be the church of God." And through the years men have clung to their little ways, thinking to limit God to their ideas. But now for almost a quarter of a century "an house" has been built "on the consecrated spot" by the right people and "in this generation" in which the promise was made. Once more the Reorganization stands out as THE church through which God has worked and is working. None other even make the claim.

QUESTION:

Who are the ones that go to paradise? Will there be others there besides Latter Day Saints?

Missouri

E. H.

ANSWER:

At least one sinner—a man who confessed that it was just to crucify him for his malefactions—went to paradise. (Luke 23: 43).

The Apostle Paul said he knew a man (whether "saint or sinner," he does not reveal) who "was caught up into paradise"—to which place he refers as "the third heaven" (II Corinthians 12: 4).

Alma (chapter 19, verses 43 and 44) says "the spirits of the righteous" are received into paradise—a statement which reveals nothing respecting the nonrighteous. Surely the malefactor who went to paradise was nonrighteous.

St. John, The Divine, said, "to him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Revelation 2:7.

If there are overcomers who are not Latter Day Saints; if there are nonmembers who are righteous; if the thief on the cross was not a Latter Day Saint; and if former-day saints are adjudged as Latter Day Saints are, surely there will be others in paradise besides Latter Day Saints.

In forming opinions respecting the destinations of Latter Day Saints, much testimony should be taken into consideration—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, for instance.

Matthew 8: 11 and chapter 25, and other scriptural passages have implications (even though everyone may not apprehend them) respecting the ones that go to paradise. For surely those who "inherit the kingdom" inherit a "paradise."

While church affiliations are important, they are meaningless without the right quality of human life (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2 and section 76). Indeed the lot of a man hereafter may be much better than the fate of his church here (Revelation 2).

QUESTIONS:

1. Does the church approve of administering by proxy?

2. If an elder is called upon to administer and has no oil, can water be consecrated and used?

Calif.

F. G.

ANSWER:

1. It is fair to assume this question refers to administration for the healing of the sick. In that light I answer, No!

There are many texts in the Bible bearing on this subject. All speak of laying on of hands. This cannot be done in absentia. Both parties must be together. No more could one administer to the sick without the sick being present than one could be confirmed a member by proxy. The afflicted may be ministered to in various ways by many people. But administration is something different; it is a form of ordinance.

2. To my knowledge there is nothing in the law to warrant or even suggest such a practice. I should most certainly never do it. There are many references in the Bible and some in the Doctrine and Covenants touching the healing of the sick by laying on of hands without any reference to the use of oil in anointing. But there is no word encouraging the blessing of water to be used instead of oil.

QUESTION:

Are all men who are not worthy of celestial glory gathered in the prison house to be taught the gospel?

Missouri

E. H.

ANSWER:

Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7; 76: 6 and (especially) 85:28, and Isaiah 42: 7, indicate that even some who "inherit" celestial glory (when they become "worthy" I do not know) are "gathered together [with others] in the prison house."

The talk about "paradise or prison-house" sounds like the talk about "heaven or hell." If everyone must go to either one or the other, the answer to the question is a categorical "yes"; for it is certain that not every man is "worthy of celestial glory."

Celebrate Golden Wedding

Pastor and Mrs. Peter S. Whalley of San Diego, California, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on December 18. They were married in Blackburn, Lancashire, England, but in 1902 decided to make their home in the United States. Three years later, in Attleboro, Massachusetts, they joined the Reorganized Church. Brother Whalley has served as pastor of many branches. In addition to his ministry in the United States, he spent sixteen years under General Church appointment in England and two years in Canada.

The Whalleys' formula for happiness is working together for God wherever they are needed.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—At the baptism services held November 27 in the Kewanee Church, three were baptized: Joe Ellen Dutton, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Dutton; John Borah and his daughter Sue Borah. Elder J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois, performed the baptisms. Elders William Shotton, Raymond G. Wrigley, pastor, William H. A. Norris, and J. O. Dutton officiated at the confirmation. The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Clyde Noren of Peoria was blessed by Elder Raymond G. Wrigley.

The special goal of the entire branch is the raising of sufficient funds to begin the erection of a church building in the near future. At the annual branch business meeting, the women's department gave $700 to the building fund. A bazaar and chili supper netted $350. Two women each gave $100 toward the fund. The total amount at present is $3,047.

Under the leadership of Melvin Duke, church school director, the Zion's League is active, and the young people are alert and interested in home entertainment and in district activities. On December 18 at the Peoria Women's Club Building the Zion's League put on the play based on Charles Dickens' "Christmas Carol." They were rewarded by a large and interested audience.—Reported by GLADYS L. HEGWOOD.

MEDFORD, OREGON.—Brother J. L. Verhei from Portland officiated at the organization of a mission to be known as the Rogue Valley Mission. Twenty-six Saints met at the Adventist Church for all-day services. Benediction was said by James Davidson. Sister J. L. Verhei was in charge of the church school.

After a noon-hour luncheon served at the home of Brother and Sister J. Davidson, everyone returned to the church. At the first afternoon service, Talbert and Irene Murphy of Grants Pass were baptized by Elder James Davidson. They were confirmed by Elders Ted Shuld and J. L. Verhei. Following this, the Communion was served.

The group was organized into a mission, and the following officers were elected: James Davidson, pastor and building committee (one year); Harry Spintig, church school superintendent and church treasurer; Gladys Spintig, church secretary and social activity leader; William Correy, building committee (two years); Wanda Correy, historian; Florence Davidson, women's department leader; Helen Davidson, treasurer of church school; Talbert Murphy, building committee (three years); Irene Murphy, publicity and librarian; Harley Davidson, secretary of church school; and Sister Sommer, auditor.—Reported by MAUDE CORREY.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—District President Charles Neff has appointed the following men to serve in the presidency of the district, subject to the approval of the next conference. They will comprise a district counsel, whose official capacity will be to formulate and set in action activities of the district. They are Elders Guy Riley, Albert Livingston, C. B. Constance, and Carl T. Self.

So many attended the Zion's League hay-ride party on November 25 that two wagons were necessary to hold all of them. After the ride, everyone went to the church where hot chili and doughnuts were served by Mrs. Ferguson and Mrs. Harpster.

Sharon Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace B. Sharp, was blessed November 11 by Elders B. M. Anderson and C. B. Constance.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON. — Zion's League meets twice each month. Merle Foster, assisted by Larry Roberts and Winston Insee, has organized a team which plays in the Inter-church Basketball League. On December 17, the Zion's League sponsored a swimming party at the Y.M.C.A. and a party which followed at the church.

Once each month the women's group meets at the church for an all day meeting. There is time for a devotional, a speaker on a missionary subject, a class, and a workshop period. All of the members of the branch and their families are invited to the church at 6 o'clock on this day for a potluck dinner and a family fellowship which follows. Some of our inquiring friends have attended these fellowship services. Opal Wolfgram is president of the women's department. The second meeting of the month of the women's department is scheduled in one of the homes where special attention is given to guests. On December 15 Sister Carl Oliver entertained the club in her home with a Christmas party.

Once a month the branch plans a Family Night which begins with a 6 o'clock dinner at the church, followed by a social hour. This provides an opportunity for the members to invite friends to the church home to meet the church family.

The church school is growing steadily. Sister Luella Foster has built a strong program which is attracting children. On Sunday evenings Sister Foster teaches a class, "Overviews of the Book of Mormon."

A group of fifteen people compose a choir which rehearses regularly under the leadership of Fern Gage.

Each week there is an advertisement in the local newspaper announcing the services. A telephone in the church has been an added convenience to the members and a means of keeping the name of the church before the public.

Throughout the schedule of activities, there is a growing evangelistic spirit. Richard Landis Foster was baptized by the pastor on December 4, making the sixth new member since the beginning of the church year.—Reported by ELLIOTT GILBERTS, Pastor.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—The winter district conference was held in Mobile, Alabama, December 10, 11. The attendance was approximately 800, the largest winter conference the Gulf States District has experienced. President Israel A. Smith was in attendance and with District President W. J. Breshears and Mobile Pastor J. A. Pray made a tour of most of the district following the conference, inspecting property and visiting with the Saints. President Smith preached at services conducted at Escatawpa, Mississippi; Pensacola, Florida, and McKenzie, Alabama.

The conference opened at 10 o'clock on Saturday morning with a record attendance, more than three hundred persons being present. The theme of the conference was, "Serve Where You Are," and the Saturday morning activities were a worship service at 10 a.m. and a general class taught by the district president at 11 a.m. Saturday afternoon was devoted to departmental workshops directed by the departmental officers. The attendance was very good with each branch being well represented.

The conference music was directed by Mr. Gwynne Odom, who is district director of music. Anna Mae Lavinghouse and Miss Martha Salter played the organ.

The Mobile Branch women prepared all the meals and served the banquet on Saturday evening, in the Mobile Branch's recently completed recreational hall, to more than 200 persons.

President Israel A. Smith was the banquet speaker. On December 11 he gave a radio address over station WKAB, Mobile, at 8:15 a.m. and the conference address at 11:00 o'clock.

At the district business meeting, thirty-six general conference delegates were elected as follows: Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Breshears, Mr. and Mrs. Jack A. Pray, Mr. and Mrs. Ben L. Jernigan, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Odom, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Bovee, Mr. and Mrs. Albert G. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Tipton, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. V. R. Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. Brewton Greene, Mrs. J. G. Barnes, Bruce C. Jones, L. G. Sellers, George F. Rogers, H. E. Jennings, Mrs. Evie Sellers, Mrs. W. N. Sellers, E. D. Dixon, Mrs. R. L. Booker, Gilbert Steiner, John C. Gowey, Mrs. M. L. Salter, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Brooks.—Reported by LEE IRA McDONALD.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—The Zion's League Council met on December 11, at the home of Melvin Fowler of Springfield, Illinois, to plan a program for the year for the district Zion's League.

The following branch representatives were present: Beardstown—Berneice Anderson, president; Randall Hart, Zion's League supervisor; Jeanne Hart, secretary; Springfield—Jack Washburn, president; Sue France, secretary; Melvin Fowler, leader; Decatur—William Spicer, leader; Taylorville—Drucilla Sloan, secretary; Delmar Sloan, leader; Norma Chernoski.

District President Arthur Henson, E. E. Thomas, district treasurer, and Bill Banfield, district supervisor of religious education presented the total district program and showed how the League activities should tie in with it.

The opening session of the Workshop was a worship service, followed by a business meeting where it was attempted to set up purposes and objectives of district League work. A committee was appointed to find a suitable location for a youth camp to be used by the Central Illinois Zion's Leagues in the spring of 1950. Plans were made for a district "powwow" centered around the Book of Mormon for the week end of February 11 and 12, 1950.

The Workshop closed with a consecration service.

ESCONDIDO, CALIFORNIA. — Seventy George A. Njeim conducted a series of meetings from February 13 to 18. Apostle Charles R. Hield visited the branch and preached a sermon. From October 30 to November 4, Patriarch William Patterson conducted a series of meetings. John W. Rushton has also visited the branch and preached a sermon.

Church school and preaching services are held every Sunday, and prayer meeting every Wednesday evening.

Four adults and three children were baptized, and six babies were blessed during the year.—Reported by MARY L. WING.

LAMONI, IOWA.—Work on the new church has been temporarily halted by the winter weather. Practically all the footings have been poured with cement. The sub-basement walls and the west wall of the basement have been erected, and some pouring has been done on the south. The erection of the southwest wall eliminates the danger of caving banks.

Charles Hyde is in charge of the donated labor for the building. The women of the branch furnished warm lunches to the men while they were working evenings.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Activities for the whole branch sponsored by separate departments of the branch were held in early December, with the double purpose of providing an evening's entertainment and raising money to meet the branch budget.

December 2 the Zion's League "Forty-niner's Minstrel" was given to an overflow crowd of 285 in the lower auditorium of the church. The show, completely original, was written and directed by Leaguers Herb and Jeannette Tourville and Dan Fox.

One week later, December 9, a dinner and bazaar were held in the lower auditorium. In spite of bad weather, the event was well attended. The women's department now meets the first Thursday of each month. The schedule of each meeting includes classwork at 10:30 a.m., conducted by the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, luncheon at noon, and a program in the afternoon presented by members of the department and built on the theme for the year, "Individual Consecration."—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON. — Christmas festivities started on December 18 at 11 o'clock when the choir presented a cantata, "Chimes of the Holy Night," directed by Fern Gage. Soloists were Thelma Roberts, Neva Willett, Agnes Johnson, Nedra Inslee, Merle Foster, Roy Stearns, Joe Skoor, and Opal Wolfgram.

The Messiah Choir of Independence, which sang over CBS on December 18, was advertised in the local newspaper, and cards were sent to friends of the church. The event provided excellent missionary material.

The children presented a program on December 22, which was directed by Winston Inslee and Luella Foster. Forty children participated. The first part of the program consisted of a beautiful pageant of the nativity. There were new costumes and colored lights. After a period of songs and recitations, Santa Claus (who closely resembled Pete Johnson) appeared with his Zion's League helpers to distribute the treats and gifts.

On Christmas Day Elder Carl Oliver delivered the sermon at 11 o'clock. Merle Foster sang, "The Heavenly Song," and Elliott Gilberts played a violin solo, "O Holy Night."—Reported by ELLIOTT GILBERTS, Pastor.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—Dana Marjorie Tift, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Tift, of Cranston, Rhode Island, and Patricia Ann Santini, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald P. Santini, of Edgewood, Rhode Island, were blessed at the Providence Branch on December 2. Elders George F. Robley and Edmund M. Brown officiated.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

Have We Lost the Way?

By MRS. WILLARD PHELPS

WE OFTEN HEAR, "It doesn't matter what church we belong to, we're all going to the same place." There is truth in that, but here I sit in the thumb of Michigan and desire to go to visit friends in California. The roads near my home go east, west, north, and south. Perhaps it wouldn't matter where I start—I could reach California someday—but I might be too late to see the people I intend to visit.

The same is true of our purpose of life. We may go the way we desire—God has given us that choice, and Christ has made it possible for us "to get there" even if we have to be shown the way after death—but we may be too late to see the Savior when he comes. We may not be able to live in Zion or receive the full reward and glory.

God has provided the way and carefully outlined it with signposts to direct us. He gave directions to Adam and Noah for the people of their times; after the way was lost, he sent Christ, and in 1830 Joseph Smith was given the specific directions. If we disregard these, we may arrive too late.

We should select the right road early in life and travel it carefully, so that each day's journey will add to our treasures in heaven. Time is important if we are to reap the full benefit and receive the highest reward awaiting us. Christ has pointed out the way for us to follow. Adam was carried down into the water and baptized. Christ was baptized of John by immersion. Many people since have taken it upon themselves to call other rites baptism, but each time God restores the true gospel, it is the same.

Receiving the Holy Comforter is important too. Even when Christ was on earth people were baptized without expecting this. We can't travel far on the highway of successful living without this important companion.

HAVE WE LOST THE WAY? Have we forgotten the real road to everlasting life? So many things along the road detract our attention. A neighbor stops by for a visit. The visit turns to gossip. We are off the road. We should turn each opportunity into showing someone the Christ way. Maybe we should smile sincerely and tell our neighbor what act another has done that is good. We must never forget that Christ said, let him without sin cast the first stone. If we had traveled Christ's highway far enough and well enough, if we were without sin, we would be too good for this earth. But we still have a duty here—to make the way pleasant for others.

As we listen to the radio, we may be entertained by the "something for nothing" quiz programs. Maybe they stop our progress on the King's Highway when we should be baking cookies for the poor family down the street. If a neighbor comes in and our radio is on, we may be advertising our religion by the programs we select. God says we should study, do our own tasks, and work with our hands. Maybe the cookies would be better if the radio were off so we could accompany our baking with study, reflection, prayer, and planning. Our advertising for Zion might get better results if we become examples of pure living.

The way may be steep and rocky, but God is ever present to give us strength. Perhaps we take the easy way each day and do not need or ask for extra strength. Christ is beckoning for us to climb up and over to the other side of the hill—to make progress by using what talents he gives us. We should advance daily. If we don't, we may be lost, for we can't stand still. The army of God moves on, and we must move with it or be left behind.

Maybe a friend has lost the way. Let us be ready to help him find it. A helping hand or a cheery word may bring him back.

WHEN WE, THE WOMEN of the church, meet, we should watch the signs. Christ meets us. All criticism should be made with a smile and be purely constructive. The meeting is a Zionite gathering for study and friendship. Although women of the church often raise funds for worthy projects, money isn't the main item. Without spiritual progress, money loses its value. Whenever real progress is being made on the road to better living, physical support is usually assured. When a nonmember is in attendance, she sees the group setting an example of Zionite living, and it should not be "just like any other ladies' aid."

When our children step out the door for school, play, or other errand, they should be ready to walk with the King.

We need to practice walking with the Master in our homes. Christ told Martha she was "careful and troubled about many things, but one thing was needful." Our floors should not be so clean we cannot let a neighbor child (or our own) in to see our Zionite living in process.

We may regularly take a neighbor to church. Perhaps she doesn't have a car, or a church home, and would be happy to attend. Her first "no" should not discourage other invitations. Perhaps after we ask her regularly each week for a few times,

The Fulfilling of Love — By ADDIE SPAULDING STOWELL

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—I Corinthians 13: 13.

WE READ in I John 4: 16 that God is love. If God is love, then his power is love, and love was the creating factor in forming the heavens and the earth. God proved his love by sending his Son into the world to redeem humanity from the fall and to establish a way or philosophy by which we may all live.

Paul, a believer and promulgator of the philosophy of Jesus, enumerates three attributes in that realm of love—faith, hope, and charity—and he makes bold the statement that charity is the greatest of the three.

Could it be possible that charity is greater than faith? The Scripture teaches that without faith it is impossible to please God. But Paul says though one might have faith to remove mountains and have not charity, he is nothing. Let us try to analyze Paul's meaning of this statement. Paul enumerates many and wonderful gifts, but he always comes back to the statement that charity is the greatest of all.

Taking for granted that charity is an attribute in the realm of love, let us try to evaluate its true meaning.

WE MAY GIVE a great amount of money or material things to those less fortunate than ourselves. Wealthy people give much of their she'll expect it and eventually say "yes."

LET US NOT LOSE THE WAY. Let us take the road God has laid for us, following each signpost he has placed. We must be alert at each turn, ever willing to help, but persistently pushing forward. Let us bear our burdens and shoulder our share of responsibility, so our family and neighbors may have a fair chance to reach the final goal with us. Thus we may all receive the highest glory.

fortune to help society in different ways. In passing from this life a few leave great sums to establish libraries or found homes or other charitable enterprises. In our humbler walks of life, we may give a poor beggar enough money to buy a meal, or we may sacrifice our all to some worthy cause. Webster's dictionary says this is charity. But is it because we love the beggar that we give him the dime, or is it just to get rid of him because he bothers us? Is it because we love the cause that we give so much to it, or is it because we do not want to be outdone by the other fellow?

Paul sets us clear on the matter when he makes the statement: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor; though I give my body to be burned and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." This is not the kind of charity Paul is writing about, although Webster calls it such.

THERE MUST BE A MEANING to the term charity as designated by Paul that we must grasp if we would possess the greatest gift and bring salvation to our souls. The Scriptures tell us that charity covers a multitude of sins.

Quoting Paul again, "Charity suffereth long and is kind."

From this statement I would not take Paul's meaning as physical suffering but an emotional suffering which gives us distress because of the injustices that may be meted out to us, and we should be kind toward the offender.

Perhaps someone has done wrong, either directly or indirectly affecting us. The fact we must understand is that evil is in the world. Although God created the world and its inhabitants by the power of love, because of disobedience, Satan was cast down to earth, and we have the opposite of love which is hate. This hate may cause individuals to do many things that will cause us mental suffering, but to such we must be kind and long suffering. We must pray for those who spitefully use us. Jesus was a perfect example of this kind of charity when he said, "Father, forgive them." Our hearts may be overflowing with love for others, and yet we shall not have charity for their mistakes.

We often hear it said in a divorce trial: "I love my husband (or wife) but I just can't put up with what he (or she) does." In other words, the one seeking a divorce has no charity or forgiveness for the mistakes of his or her companion. That could be one example of what Paul meant when he said we should be kind and long-suffering.

JESUS HAS SAID that if someone smites us on one cheek, we should turn the other cheek and give him an opportunity to smite it also. A turning of the cheek could make a turning point in the life of the transgressor so that he would turn from his unrighteous ways. The human race is born with an inner emotion that may be touched by the turning of the cheek or by doing good for evil.

To have charity we must envy no one, and we must not be "puffed up" over some success which has come our way. Above all things, we should think no evil. This may be a hard thing to control. Thoughts will come, but we can banish them before they have time to fester and grow. Although the outward evidence may be so plainly established there is no room for doubt, we do not know the heart of the wrongdoer—what his motive may have been or his great temptation.

We should refrain from thoughts that lessen our love for the offender. If we withhold our charity, he may never find the means of saving his soul.

As works is the fulfillment of faith, so charity is the fulfillment of love.

Missionary Experiences

Many happy experiences have been mine through 1949. I now share some of these with you in the hope that you will be helped by them.

In laboring in my assigned field I have sensed the presence of the Spirit of God in confirming the work of witnessing for Christ and his truth. This culminated in an unusually fine way recently in Idaho.

Idaho District is a rich field for missionary endeavor. In February, 1949, an excellent series was enjoyed by the Boise Branch. This congregation, under the energetic pastorship of Cecil Gilmore, has made fine growth. Following the work of the series, several fine prospects were baptized. We have been truly glad for this.

The pastor to the isolated Saints in the Idaho District is Elder Harry S. Fry. He is ably and willingly assisted by his good wife. Brother and Sister Fry made contact with a few Saints in the vicinity of New Plymouth, Idaho. Here they found Sister Myrtle Shippy and her four daughters, also Brother and Sister Freeman. The daughters of Sister Shippy have families, and it was with this nucleus that Brother Fry opened a church school in September. Interest and response were good and developed to the point where they could maintain a good attendance in the basement structure of a new Community Hall now being constructed.

This provided an adequate meeting place for the series we held December 4 to 11. On Sunday afternoon, December 11, through the kindness of Reverend Jones, pastor of the First Christian Church of Caldwell, Idaho, we were granted the use of the beautiful baptismal font in the fine new church that denomination is constructing. The eleven persons baptized united three family circles in the membership of the Reorganized Church. These families were the William Nelsons (father, son, and daughter), the Burton Partons ((father, two sons, and two daughters) and the Muriel Nelsons (a daughter and two sons). The baptism of these people establishes a good nucleus for our work at New Plymouth.

Several other people in that community are interested and investigating the message of Christ and the great Restoration Work. Some of them, we believe, will become regular attendants at our church school there.

I was conscious of the sustaining movement of the Holy Spirit while conducting this series, and was again made aware of the outreach of God in drawing souls to himself. There was an exceptional degree of unity in this series. Brother and Sister Fry drove from Boise each day to render assistance, and their support was helpful.

What could make a happier Christmas than the giving of oneself to Christ on the conditions of his gospel? Surely this will be a wonderful Christmas tide for these people who have allied themselves with the Savior. For them the significance of God's gift to mankind is far richer than ever before.

Thus we see that when the Christlike passion for souls motivates our members, and they prayerfully and diligently labor with Christ, people can be won to the Master in a dedication of their lives to his cause. Again we are reminded of Christ's words to his servants in these latter days: "Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 2.

Let all of us be more diligent in joining with God and Christ in the work of helping to bring souls to them.

From an Isolated Member

I look forward to receiving the Herald every week; it is my only preacher and teacher. Although I am isolated, I recently received some ministry which has meant a great deal to me. Brother John Cunningham of Dayton, Ohio, came to my home while I was ill. After praying for me, he left and the next day returned with Elders Wolfe and Glenn Givens who administered to me.

I enjoy hearing from other members even though I do not get to worship with them. Their letters have been a real blessing to me. I tell the gospel story to all who will listen. I hope the time will soon come when more will listen.

To those who have trials, I say, take them to God. When in doubt, go to him; when all looks dark, pray to him. His grace is sufficient for all.

FLORENCE WILLIAMS.

Greenwood, West Virginia

Note of Thanks

I wish to thank all who have sent Heralds and tracts to me. My sons have helped me to distribute them. Several persons have expressed a desire to attend our services, but we have no church here. We hope someday to have one.

Letter of Testimony

I am very grateful for the blessings God has seen fit to bestow upon me. He has helped me to overcome my weaknesses and has healed my body. I was relieved of cancer and have been protected during storms. God has sent rain for my fields and gardens when they needed it. He has kept me from drowning when I could not have saved myself by my own power.

I hope other Saints will be privileged to enjoy such blessings as have been mine.

Note of Appreciation

I wish to thank all who have sent me books and quarterlies. We appreciate them very much and use them to the best of our knowledge. Incidentally the children referred to in my last letter to the Herald are not small children but teen-agers.

Asks For Prayers

I am happy to be receiving Daily Bread. It is a joy and comfort to me. I lend my copies to friends to read also.

This summer I had the privilege of attending several meetings in Saskatoon. This was a royal treat for me since I have been isolated so long. I hope the time will soon come when my dear ones and I can go to church often and enjoy the fellowship of Saints.

I am not well and it is hard for me to get around. I ask the Saints to remember me in prayer that, if it be God's will, I may receive a blessing.

I have been isolated from the church most of the time since I was baptized in 1922, but I have never regretted my affiliation. I know I have weaknesses, but my greatest desire in life is to be worthy of the name I bear. I enjoy reading the Herald and pass them on to my friends when I have finished with them. Since I cannot worship with members of my own faith, I attend the Methodist Church, where I teach in the church school, sing in the choir, and help in the women's society. I often base my talks at women's meetings on articles I read in the Herald. I have tried to explain the gospel to others here, but most of them prefer to believe that one church is as good as another. Recently I was talking to a young man about the Restoration. I asked him if he lost something and someone tried to make another item like the one he lost would the facsimile be the same. He replied that it would not. Then I told him that the gospel was like that—the original had to be restored after it was lost. He agreed, but went no further.

I am praying that I might become better able to help others see the light before I leave Cuba. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

HERALD HOUSE HAS CHRISTMAS PARTY

A dinner party was given by the "Herald" on December 16 at the South Chrysler Church with Leonard Lea as master of ceremonies. Many guests were present. Mrs. Essie Isenhardt led in the group singing of carols.

A parody on "The Night Before Christmas" was given by Mrs. Dolly Budd and written by Mrs. Essie Isenhardt mentioning the names of various employees. A male quartet composed of Herman Johnson, Gilbert Gordon, Merle Harford, and Chris Hartshorn sang two humorous selections, and two Christmas numbers. Mrs. Lucille Lea sang two solos, with Mrs. Naomi Russell as accompanist. Marvin McDole showed Christmas filmstrips and colored slides while recorded music was being played.

At the conclusion of a short talk by Kenneth Graham, each employee was presented with a fruit cake. The program was in charge of Mrs. Helen Thomas, Miss Lillie Jennings, and Mrs. Essie Isenhardt. The committee for decorating was Mrs. Melba Allen and Miss June Robb.

WHITE MASQUE PRESENTATION

During the Christmas week, the White Masque Players presented Maeterlinck's play, "The Blue Bird," under the sponsorship of the Independence Junior Service League. The play was given each evening in the auditorium of the local high school from December 26 through December 30, with a matinee performance on December 28.

Stephen A. Black, Associate Radio Pastor, assisted by his wife, Lea, was director of the play. A cast of over sixty people participated. A double cast was used for many of the characters in the play.

Honor Roll

Sixty-one Graceland students from eighteen states, Hawaii, Canada, and Holland attained a grade point average of 3.00 or above to be listed on the honor roll for scholarship as first quarter grades were announced at Graceland recently. To receive a 3.00 grade point average, a student's marks must average a B. Men students edged out the women for top honors. Thirty-five men and twenty-six women made the honor roll. However, 353 men and only 221 women are enrolled. Of the sixty-one on the honor list, twenty are freshmen (354 enrolled), and forty-one are sophomores (220 enrolled).

Students like the new playshop. It used to be Graceland's repair and maintenance shop, where everything from furniture to fountains was reconditioned. Before that it was a gymnasium. Today speech classes meet daily in the newly-painted rose-colored room, and recently the public had a chance to see it in use as the Graceland Players' presented Ibsen's "Ghosts" to sell-out audiences. Verdict for both play and playshop: Elegant! . . . The Lamoni-Graceland Orchestra had a busy pre-Christmas holiday week. It was on the air over WHO, Des Moines, with the Des Moines church choir and members of the Graceland A Cappella in a presentation of Handel's The Messiah on Sunday night, December 11 and joined the Graceland Oratorio Society for a campus performance of the same oratorio on Wednesday. Soloists for the campus performance in Zimmermann Hall were Mrs. Mattie Willis, soprano, of Battle Creek, Michigan; Miss May Jorgensen, '49, alto, of Independence, Missouri; Bob Rose, '48, baritone, of Des Moines; and Henry Anderson, tenor, a member of the Graceland music faculty. . . . An unheralded Yellow Jacket basketball squad has pulled the surprise of the year by losing only one game—the first one, against Burlington—in five starts (the situation up to January 6). Thirteen more games and two tournaments remain on the schedule. . . . The Graceland faculty all-star volleyball squad, which participated with Kansas City and Des Moines Y.M.C.A. team in a volleyball exhibition at Graceland last year, was given twenty-seventh rating in the United States College volleyball ranking! The Graceland mentors outranked, among others, Iowa University, which placed thirty-sixth in the ratings. The National Amateur Athletic Union, which chooses the United States Olympic teams made the rankings.

Student Center

When students returned to the Graceland campus on January 2 following their Christmas recess they knew the joy of a dream come true. The new Memorial Student Center was ready for their daily use.

Constructed of brick, steel, pumice-block, and wood, the building is a memorial to men and women of the church and alumni of the college who served their countries in World War II. It contains a large auditorium area which serves as the main lounge and social center of the college, a post office, bookstore, snack shop, smaller lounge, stage, council room, and office for the Graceland activities' director. Graceland "fellowship" meetings and other church services, assemblies, and all-school parties will be held in the auditorium portion of the Center.

Architecture and furnishings for the building are modern. Chancel furniture for use in the stage area has been especially designed by David B. Runnells of Kansas City, one of America's best-known young modern architects and designers, who was also the architect for the building.

Plans are now under way for the official dedication of the structure which will take place at Graceland, Sunday, February 5. That same day the college will hold open house for all visitors and will provide guide service through new campus improvements including the new service building which provides central heating and maintenance facilities for the college, the new library room in Briggs Hall which covers the entire third floor of that building, the new little theater called the "Playshop" located in the old heating plant, and the newly-decorated and remodeled dining hall and food service department in Walker Hall.

The first student assembly for the Student Center was held Tuesday, January 3; the first fellowship, January 4; and the first Sunday service, January 8, with President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., as speaker.

Why Isn't Zion Redeemed?

By DOROTHY EASTWOOD

AT THE 1947 General Conference, Israel A. Smith answered this question with these God-given words: "The work of preparation and perfection of my Saints goes slowly, and Zion conditions are no farther away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies"

And it seems, generally speaking, that the work is progressing as slowly now as when these words were spoken three years ago.

Much that has been done since then has been about as firm as a house built on the shifting sands of a desert. Words alone do not take deep roots, but falling on the air are carried off in the first burst of wind.

How can Zion be redeemed? By removing the condition mentioned in God's stipulation as to the time of Zion, when the people are Zion. And how can that be brought about? Many ideas have been tried and failed. It's time for another suggestion. Perhaps putting more Latter Day Saintism into practice in everyday living and less into talking is the desired solution.

In one of the larger universities of the nation, a Latter Day Saint girl, firm in her belief of the rightness of her church, found her roommate to be equally firm in her Lutheran belief. Discussions and arguments caused a stormy existence for several months. Finally, to make life more pleasant, they made a pact refusing to discuss religion.

The church girl was interested in a young man she had met at Grace-land. During the year she became sure of her love for him and his for her, and so they were engaged. During this time she and her roommate—as girls will—discussed love, marriage, and the ideal home. The Latter Day Saint spoke of many things typical of a Latter Day Saint home and marriage—things cherished as part of the business of being a good member. Before the year was over, the Lutheran girl asked about her roommate's church, saying that with ideals such as these, the church must have something of great value.

In this case the application of Latter Day Saint belief in everyday problems of life did much more to open the heart of a girl than words on doctrine and organization.

IT TAKES FAITH IN GOD and a firm belief in the doctrines of his church to put Latter Day Saintism into practice. It demands knowledge of the doctrine, and that sets forth one of the requirements of a good Saint—study.

In an office in Independence, a young man of no particular religion but a deep thinker, and a young woman, a Latter Day Saint, found themselves deep in a discussion of religion. The young man had studied the Bible, combined things he had read elsewhere with his own thinking, and arrived at certain logical conclusions. Some differed enormously from the girl's, but she was at a loss to be as logical as he concerning her ideas. She just believed and had only a few concrete facts here and there to substantiate her ideas. She needed to study to be able to put her religion into practice. The young man admired certain things about her—her clean language and habits—and in conversation discovered some of her ideas concerning politics, racial equality, and other problems. All these reflected her church belief, and the young man knew it. She was practicing Latter Day Saintism so that it was visible, but the young man was one who demanded reasons for things, and she could not supply satisfactory answers. She had done only half a job of instilling her religion into life.

Two requirements for putting Latter Day Saintism into practice then are knowledge of why those things which the church believes are right, not merely being satisfied with doing them because the church says "do" or "don't"; and a firm belief in those ideas in order to make their practice a vibrant, enthusiastic action rather than a lackadaisical attitude about the whole thing.

WHAT ARE THE CHARACTERISTICS of one who applies his religion to his living?

First of all, he can be recognized by his clean habits. No bad language slips into his conversation, nor does he drink or smoke. His appearance is always neat and clean.

In his business relations he never tries to make an extra dollar at the expense of someone else. And no matter what his job may be, he does the best he can at it.

He is always alert to learning. He is versed in world affairs. He reads on many subjects and uses good English. This is minor, but it shows to the world that he is not backward and unlearned.

Being obedient to the laws of God means also being obedient to the laws of the land. A good Saint is a good citizen, an informed voter, an active participant in civic affairs.

The virtues of Christianity so often spoken of are also characteristic of a conscientious member. He will practice temperance, patience, humility, diligence, brotherly kindness, sincerity, charity, integrity, honesty, and politeness in his everyday life.

Other characteristics of Zion living take place within the heart.

A Latter Day Saint home should be peaceful, well-ordered, clean, and happy. It should impress the visitor as having an atmosphere of love. The man and wife should be companionable and true to each other, with a close tie between themselves and the children—a tie born of mutual respect and love. God is always an unseen guest in such a home.

In the field of stewardship, putting Latter Day Saintism into practice means filing a financial statement regularly, paying tithing, and making liberal offerings. It also includes using talents in service to God.

A GOOD SAINT is a regular church attender. This includes Wednesday and Sunday nights as well as Sunday morning. And being a good church attender includes setting those days aside and letting no other activities interfere. The good Saint also finds some job he can do in the church.

The most vital requirements for Sainthood are, "Love the Lord thy God . . . Love thy neighbor as thyself." This means a genuine concern for all people. It must be sincere and heartfelt. A love such as this is expressed in many ways. Its greatest example is the love of Christ.

One more quality typical of all good Latter Day Saints is a bright, optimistic outlook on life. For this gospel is one of joy which leaves a song in the heart of its believers.

With each action keep in mind how you would feel "if Christ came back today" and you were to meet him face to face. Could you look straight at him and say you have done your best? That is the test of Latter Day Saintism in practice. Pick your pattern, the life of Christ, and then do your best to follow it. Every member who puts his religion into life brings Zion one person closer to reality.

The Reward of Patience

By MARILYN WOODS

THE OTHER NIGHT I was enjoying some recorded music. The lively violin solo by Fritz Kreisler was a pleasure to hear. It was followed, however, by the first movement of a Tchaikowsky symphony. After the rousing Kreisler piece, it was difficult for me to settle down and get in the mood for the first slow-moving bars of the symphony. The mental assertion that I needed to relearn the patience of listening led to a chain of thoughts.

As the symphony progressed it created out of those first faraway sounding notes and chords a rich melody, building itself up to a deeply stirring harmonic drama, capable of giving lasting good and satisfaction. While the music proceeded, my thoughts endeavored to keep apace.

Of course, the symphony had to begin cautiously. "It isn't 'draggy,'" came the reprimand of my musical conscience. "It is something which possesses true greatness. This symphony has as eternal a value as man can create. It has the power to cause both musician and listener to become creative, each in his own way." Snatches of exhortations buried somewhere in memory's tomb were resurrected by these irresistible strains of melody . . . "Rome wasn't built in a day" . . . "One cannot rush into the presence of God" . . . Yes, all things really great and lasting begin slowly, in a small way. . . . "A stone cut out of the mountain shall roll forth until it has filled the whole earth."

The music reached those great swells that carry away mind and imagination on its crest as the waves of the sea carry away ships and men.

It was worth settling down and waiting for, worth exercising again the patience of true listening. That patience is easily lost in the everyday sounds of hurried gossip, rushing wheels, light jukebox jingles in accompaniment to a quickly gulped lunch, but it takes only a little effort and a little waiting to regain it.

NEITHER IS IT HARD to forget the patience of true prayer, that watchful, earnest waiting to enter into the presence of God. Too often, perhaps, we try to say "hello" to God in that same casual way we greet an acquaintance in passing. Those cheerful greetings, heart warming as they are in their proper place, wouldn't take the place of long satisfying conversations enjoyed by old friends.

The music stopped. It was time to go out in the cold again, but I have been warmed by the flame of immortal music . . . the reward of patience.

Time and Music

Not without design does God write the music of our lives. Be it ours to learn the time, and not be discouraged at the rests. If we say sadly to ourselves, "There is no music in a rest," let us not forget "there is the making of music in it." The making of music is often a slow and painful process in this life. How patiently God works to teach us! How long he waits for us to learn the lesson!

the Tuamotus, and is also on a higher educational plane. As Horahitu puts it, "We are faced with barriers as difficult to surmount as these mountains which surround us, which have developed almost as long."

We have been going to Paea for two months and have the groundwork laid for a new mission there. This district is about twenty miles from Papeete. We have an assembly building there of native materials which will hold about two hundred people. At the dedication of the building, we counted nearly two thousand, mostly from the district of Paea. About fourteen young people have asked for baptism, but we prefer to give them a series of sermons and lectures first. We are going again tonight to teach them some Christmas carols for caroling in the district. In conversation with the owner of the property where the Protestant church is erected, I learned that he was interested in our church. We will baptize him and his wife this Christmas. He has offered us a piece of property for our church at Paea.

Last Sunday another Chinese girl about twenty-five years of age was baptized. This makes a total of seven young Chinese who have been baptized. Here is another rich field in which the Mormons far exceed us. They are distributing Bibles and a short history of their church in Chinese. This is a big factor in their success among the Chinese. It was our church that baptized the first Chinese and made a move toward getting literature for missionary work at least three years ago. We are still waiting for this literature. Our only hope now, in order to counteract this setback, is to get a young Chinese missionary in here for a year to two—one who speaks the Chinese language. This all sounds fantastic when you read it in the confines of the walls of the Auditorium, but when you are facing the enemy on the firing line it makes sense.

Brother Breckenridge will no doubt inform you of our harvest home festival success here at Taronā. The total income for the day was over 15,000 francs. On the day scheduled for the program, we received a request from the new Deputy to France, chosen by the population at this last election, to permit him to visit our services. He with his company of thirty or more followers came to services and were received by Taronā. The orchestra performed unusually well. We are still hearing good reports about the service.

We have been asked by the director of affairs at the hospital to come again this year and sing carols in the hospital. We instituted this four years ago, and it has proved a marvelous thing for the church. This year, however, we have been asked to give two nights' service; one night singing carols in the individual rooms, and the second night to give a concert (orchestra) out in the yard. The rooms are all built so they can see the enclosed yard. It's a lovely place for a concert. The Governor and his wife have been invited to attend. If he does, it will be a red-letter day for us. We expect to appear in our Graceland College uniforms for the first time at that concert.

We are thrilled with the response and opportunities opening up on every hand. May the Lord continue to direct both you and us in the work of the Master.

From Elder Allen J. Breckenridge,
December 7:

Brother Butterworth and I returned November 17 from a successful trip to the Tuamotua. This was my first journey to the outer islands. We visited nine branches on eight islands. There were twenty-six baptized, some blessed and ordained, and we were able to straighten the enrollment records out which are in poor order in most of the branches. On many of these islands, ours is practically the only church represented and almost everyone is a member: therefore, there is not a lot of missionary work to be done except to save our own children, which we seem to be doing quite well. Our trip to the islands was made in fairly large ships; however, between the islands themselves we journeyed on little sailboats which averaged about twenty-five feet in length. The Tahitians are very good sailors; and although we often traveled all night without compass and sometimes without stars, we always arrived at the next island without trouble.

The work here in Tahiti itself is progressing well. It is apparent to me that most of our missionary work at present will be in Tahiti. We have tremendous possibilities here. We opened a new mission in Paea, a district of Tahiti. It promises to be very successful. While we were in the Tuamotus, the natives built an assembly hall which we dedicated on our return. Of the 1,500 attending, 90 per cent were nonmembers. We have in mind to open other missions as time goes on. Our present difficulty centers around the fact that we have few leaders who know well the message of the church.

Attendance at Taronā is very good. We are continuing to have capacity to overcapacity congregations. The first of the year I am starting a priesthood instruction class to teach methods of evangelism and the basic message of the church. This should help us to take advantage of the large nonmember attendance at Taronā and the missionary possibilities in other places of Tahiti. I should like to start cottage meetings in Papeete later on.

LAVERY.—Alvin, was born May 20, 1866, in Lapeer County, Michigan, and died December 23, 1949, at the hospital in Corunna, Michigan. He was married in 1901 to Mrs. Margaret Campbell, and in 1910 was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. He is survived by his wife and a son George of Corunna.

CULP.—Harve, was born January 1, 1877, and died October 13, 1949. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on May 9, 1909, and was a charter member of the Portsmouth (Nauvoo), Ohio, Branch. He held the office of teacher. After the death of his first wife, he married Elizabeth Hill on February 7, 1948, and both enrolled in the McDermott, Ohio, Branch.

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth; three daughters: Theima Coburn of Franklin Furnace, Ohio; Ruth Holsinger and Madge Bennett of Columbus, Ohio; and three sons: Clayton of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Richard of Columbus; and William of the Army.

STROH.—Alta L., daughter of Bradford and Ann E. Corless, was born on June 21, 1858, in Branch County, Michigan, and died December 14, 1949, at Coldwater, Michigan. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church when she was eight, and for eighty-three years was a devoted member. On January 1, 1878, she was married to Samuel Stroh, who died on October 3, 1920. A son William also preceded her in death.

She is survived by a daughter Ethel S. Gallagher with whom she made her home; a daughter-in-law, Catherine Stroh; and a grandson, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Funeral services were held at the Shattuck-Livermore Mortuary, Elder Wayne Crandall officiating. Burial was in Lakeview Cemetery, Quincy, Michigan.

KENNEDY.—Emily, was born in 1876 at Ontario and died at Vancouver, British Columbia, (date of death not given). She was baptized into the Reorganized Church over fifty-two years ago, and was one of the original members of the church in British Columbia. Her first husband, Elder Isaac McMullen, died in 1937. In 1943 she was married to W. A. Kennedy, who survives her. She also leaves one grandson. Funeral services were conducted at the Mount Pleasant Mortuary, Elders J. F. Curtis, C. C. Taylor, and Edwin Spargo officiating. Interment was in Ocean View Cemetery.

DUCKWORTH.—Evelyn Isabel, was born at Victoria, British Columbia, in 1910 and died at her home in Vancouver, British Columbia, (date of death not given). She was baptized into the Reorganized Church by J. J. Cornish in 1917 and on October 12, 1928, was married to Ivan Duckworth, who survives her. She also leaves a son Clyde; and her stepfather and mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Kennedy. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Edwin Spargo, C. C. Taylor, and George E. Miller. Burial was in the Ocean View Cemetery.

ATWOOD.—Vivian Estell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Buller, was born June 23, 1917, in Lewistown, Montana, and died December 21, 1949, at Sioux City, Iowa, of burns received when a stove exploded. She was married to Chet Atwood in 1942. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1933. She is survived by her husband; her parents of Parker, South Dakota; one brother; and five sisters. Services were held at the Manning Funeral Home, Elder C. E. Burnett officiating. Interment was in the Sioux City Cemetery.

HENDERSON.—Lettie, was born October 9, 1874, at San Juan Bautista, California, and died at her home in Salinas, California, December 18, 1949. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1930, and for many years was engaged in the work of the church. At the time of her death, she was teacher of the primary class in the church school held in her home in Salinas.

She is survived by her husband, Orval Henderson; two daughters, Mrs. Dora Brookins and Mrs. Vera Emerick; five sons, Ray J. Ward, Roy F. Ward, Clifford Ward, Everett Ward, and Floyd Ward; one sister, Mrs. Kinnie Hannay; sixteen grandchildren, and seven great grandchildren. P.S.

* A NEW KIND OF WEEK

While you are arranging your plans to celebrate "National Turnip Week," "Cheese, Eggs, and Dairy Products Week," and others, how would you like a new one to work on? This one came out of an informal editorial confab recently: "National Be-Kind-to-Editors Week." We suggest Sunday, March 26, to Saturday, April 1, for its observance, with high festivities and awards on the last day. The Order of the Wooden Petunia will be given to the child who writes the best essay on "Why Editors Should Not Be Persecuted." During this week it will be unfair to write insulting letters to the editors. No gripes, no criticisms, no bad poetry, no obituaries (except those of our most troublesome critics) will be accepted. Well . . . impractical as it may seem, we can hope, can't we?

* QUOTE

"There are no hopeless situations; there are only men who have grown hopeless about them."
—From a European letter.

* HAIR

Uncle Joe thinks it's nice that he has been able to keep his hair, but he wishes it didn't look like something out of an old mattress.

* FIGHTING TALK

Our friend was telling about the latest meeting of her club. "We had our fight last night," she said, "and I was ashamed of us. If I didn't know better, I'd almost feel like dropping out of the club. They called it a business meeting, but I call it a fight!"

Many a person has had to make a decision whether it is better to "suffer the slings and arrows" of contumacious language and remain a part of an organization, or to take umbrage and, departing in it, leave the fighters to their own futile and sadistic devices.

One of the ironical facts of cultural life is that some of the most vicious fighting is done in groups where the most charming and talented people meet, though it is not always they who do the fighting, but often those who like to be with them.

We should recognize that people interested in music, the arts, and cultural subjects are possessed of keen discrimination and sharper differences of taste than others. They take things very seriously, and sometimes emotionally. These things are important, too, because ways of thinking and patterns of life and behavior grow out of them.

It is perhaps not unfair to say that we need tolerance in our cultural groups and organizations more than anywhere else, because these people are leaders. They should try harder, for the good of community life, to get along with each other. And they should realize that, no matter how great their differences of opinion may be, they have more in common that unites them than differences that separate them. A fight at a business meeting is not good for them nor for the larger society they are endeavoring to serve. There is a common ground on which all can work together for a cause that is greater than any personal interest.

* The successful people are those who learn how to build real foundations under their day-dreams.

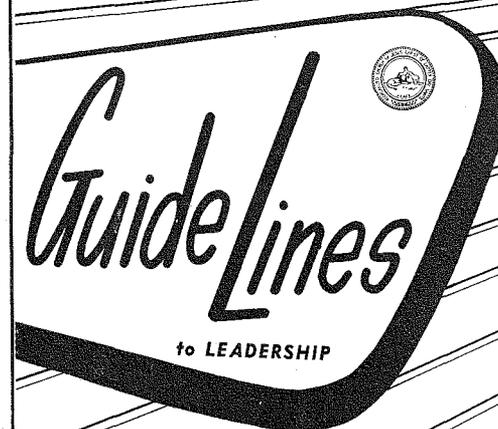

* I find that many strangers will act like old friends if I smile and say "Hello!"

Sanitarium Day

THE SECOND ANNUAL SANITARIUM DAY has been set for Sunday, March 19, 1950. Plans should now be matured for local observance of the day.

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital and the associated School of Nursing are institutions of the church which reflect the spirit of the Restoration Movement and are inseparably connected with the achievement of our fundamental purposes. It is not possible to think of the advancement of our Cause without including in that prophetic picture such institutions as these. Here we give service on a high professional level and at the same time prepare our young women for continuing and extending that service. And in doing these things, we also give direction to the desire to serve which is characteristic of our people.

The Sanitarium and the School of Nursing do not exist as proselyting agencies. They are service and educational institutions. But they have a significant place in our total missionary effort. Many people who do not belong to the church receive favorable impressions of our work through the contacts made at the Sanitarium in times of peculiar need. Many others are attracted by the good work done in institutions or in homes by nurses trained at the Sanitarium School of Nursing.

Remember March 19. Support these key church institutions financially and by your faith and prayers.

Introducing...

ELBERT A. SMITH (page 5) was introduced on June 20, 1949.

EMMY (BRAUN) BAIER, Nurnberg, Germany, (page 8) was born in Nurnberg, where she was educated. In 1928, while employed in London, England, she married George Baier. They have one daughter: Audrey, fourteen.

She was employed as a translator by the press agencies for a number of years. In 1945 she returned to Nurnberg with her family, and heard the gospel while acting as translator for our missionaries. She was baptized in 1948, and is now serving as women's leader of the branch over which her husband presides.

KAY McNEIL (page 10) is a pen name—the writer prefers it this way.

GERALD GABRIEL (page 13) was introduced on April 23, 1949.

PAUL RICHARD SMITH, Toledo, Ohio, (page 21) was born April 10, 1913, in Toledo, where he was graduated from high school and took night courses at the university, studying in the field of industrial electronics.

In 1940 he was married to Ruth Isabel Thompson. They have two girls: Sandra Kay, 8; and Marcia Gayle, 5.

Brother Smith has been employed as service electrician since 1940, and for the past four years has also acted as consultant to an inventors' service company. He is a member of the Amateur Radio Emergency Corps, and received a public service citation for his work during the Ohio River flood of 1937.

He is a priest and teacher of the senior adult class.

WORSHIP SUGGESTIONS

The January-February issue of "Guide Lines to Leadership" contains the church school worship outlines. Some inquiry has come in about this. Hereafter the "Herald" will not carry these worship suggestions as they will be featured in "Guide Lines."

GIFT TO THE SANITARIUM

Mr. and Mrs. Lowell White presented a sum of five hundred dollars to the Independence Sanitarium for the purchase of a Sanborn Electrocardiograph. Mr. White is the son of the late patriarch, Ammon White.

CELEBRATES EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

C. I. Carpenter, mailing and shipping clerk at the Auditorium, celebrated his eightieth birthday on December 30. Over sixty of those years have been devoted to church work.

In 1910 he was editor of the "Elders' Bulletin." In 1918 he was ordained president of the First Quorum of Elders in Independence, and a year later was ordained a high priest. He has served as president of the Central Illinois District and president of the Northwestern Kansas District.

His wife is Acting Church Statistician.

STONE CHURCH

At 11:00 p.m. on December 24, the Cantantina Chorus held its annual Christmas program in the Stone Church. Mrs. Kathryn Westwood was the director, Miss Bonnabelle Nelson (now Mrs. Warren Chelline) was the pianist, and Mrs. Irene Wolfe was the organist. Those taking part in the program, which was written by Mrs. Naomi Russell, were Miss Bernie Fleeharty, Carl Mesle, and little Sherry Mesle.

President F. Henry Edwards gave the pastoral address for both the 8:15 and the 11:00 Communion services on the first day of the year. President Israel A. Smith gave the invocations and benedictions at both services. Elder Glaude A. Smith, pastor of Stone Church, spoke briefly on the significance of the Communion.

Mrs. Melba Marie Manning was baptized on New Year's Day by Elder F. Bolinger and confirmed by Elders Glaude Smith and C. C. Talcott.

"MESSIAH" RESPONSE

Many letters have been received in response to the request that was printed in the "Herald" recently. These letters, often coming from miles away from Independence, tell how clearly the broadcast was heard in many districts. Excerpts from these letters are filed at the KMBC station in Kansas City. Franklyn Weddle hopes to receive more letters containing comments about the radio presentation of "The Messiah."

YULETIDE CONFERENCE

Zion's Leaguers and their friends participated in the Fifth Annual Yuletide Conference on December 29, 30, and 31 at the Stone Church. The program was planned by the City-wide Zion's League Cabinet. Kenneth Green is the president of this cabinet.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was resource leader of the conference. Following a talk by Apostle Reed M. Holmes on "The Enrichment of Worship," Apostle Gleazer conducted a worship service. Elder Don Lents, Sanitarium Chaplain, gave the opening talk on Friday morning. Apostle C. G. Mesley was in charge of a "campfire" program in which the Leaguers sat informally on the floor of the Stone Church

The Chosen Few

“Many are called, but few are chosen.” —Matthew 22: 14.

The Wrong Idea

An officer in a local congregation was asking a member to attend a series of priesthood meetings.

“I know as much as the instructors do,” the man said gloomily, “and anyway, there isn’t much use of studying, because they won’t ask me to do anything.”

This brother has the wrong idea on both points. Perhaps he does know as much as the instructors, but it is doubtful. People have different thoughts and different experiences, and that is what gives infinite variety to our contacts with others. We may know as much, but we know different things. One writer said “I have learned something from every person I have ever met.” The more intelligent people are, the more they learn. It is a mark of dullness not to be able to learn from others.

The other mistake is the idea that one must wait to be asked before he can serve. The Doctrine and Covenants has an emphatic bit of counsel on that point:

Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; . . . But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Section 58: 6.

Some men think that the only place to serve is in the church, preaching or praying or presiding at meetings. If they are not asked to do this (and sometimes they are not qualified for it), they will not do anything. They forget the great need of ministry and service in visiting the sick, the discouraged, and those who are weak in the faith.

Our hymn 211 expresses the real idea of ministerial service:

Send me forth, O blessed Master!

There are souls in sorrow bowed,
Send me forth to homes of want
And homes of care.

Let any man who waits to be asked to work go out into the homes of the people and see the need of service there. Let the active minister ask him to go along and see for himself. One would need to be as cold and indifferent as a stone not to be moved by the want and distress to be found in many homes. It is not alone in missionary work, but in pastoral work too, that ministry is greatly needed.

Jesus said, “The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.”

Knowledge That Serves

Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, once told a critic, “I am using all that I know in the service of God. How about you?” We have had many good men in the church who have lived by that rule.

Brother Irby Mundy didn’t wait for anybody to ask him to go and visit hundreds of scattered church people and give them cheer and encouragement. Nobody asked him to bring numbers of them to General Conference. He did it of his own accord. He has had many blessings in this service, and his name is known for good all over the church.

When Brother E. W. Lloyd was retired by his company with a pension, he said, “Good! Now I can give all my time to the work of the church.” He didn’t wait for an appointment. He went out seeking those who have not been to church, administering to the sick, taking supplies to the needy, praying with those who have fallen into error, and giving encouragement to all he met. One wealthy man gave him a drawing account for funds to help the needy. In the spirit of the commandment, he has gone about doing good, and telling the gospel story.

C. Ed. Miller continued running the Graphic Arts Bureau for years (after his superannuation) on a volunteer basis, making materials for missionaries and preserving historical pictures. Bishop C. J. Hunt and Gomer R. Wells have served as guides at the Auditorium ever since their superannuation, contacting thousands of people who never heard of the church before. Frederick A. Smith, formerly President of the Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Evangelist, has kept on accepting calls to preach, minister, and travel. But few of our men have quit working at the age of retirement. Most of them have kept on working.

There are rich rewards for such ministry, and these men have found happiness in their service. In these fields, particularly in the ministry to the home, there is room for all who wish to work. “Ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart. . . . If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work.”—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

Many are called, but few are chosen. Those who are called have the opportunity. The chosen ones are those who choose to serve and go to work at it. In every congregation, in every district, there are members by the hundred who need to be visited, given encouragement, and helped. They need someone to take an interest in them, pray with them over their problems, counsel them, and invite them to the services of the church. Who needs to be asked to work, when the white fields, ready to harvest, lie before them?

Rules of Order

AT THE General Conference of 1876, the church authorized the issuance of the Book of Rules of Order and Debate. This was revised in 1891 and again in 1904 and 1916. In 1922 the church published a book on parliamentary procedure which bore the original title, but this did not deal with certain matters which had been covered in the earlier issues. It may therefore be argued that the statements in the 1916 edition, which are not covered in the later edition dealing with parliamentary law or by subsequent conference action, still have authority among us.

Since the statements under consideration are of administrative importance but do not reflect our current practice, up-to-date statements have been prepared by the authority of the First Presidency, and these are to be published under the following headings:

- I. Church Organization, Purpose, and Membership
- II. A Theocratic Democracy
- III. Conferences and Assembly
- IV. Rules of Representation
- V. Stakes
- VI. Districts
- VII. Branches

The phrasing of the Book of Rules of Order and Debate has been retained wherever possible.

The Presidency especially invites administrative officers to consider these statements and to furnish the Presidency with any comments or criticisms they think will be helpful as a prelude to whatever action General Conference may take in this connection.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

I. Church Organization, Purpose, and Membership

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST was "regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandment of God," on April 6, 1830. This was in fulfillment of commandments "given to Joseph Smith, Jr., who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was also called of God an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand: and this according to the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be all glory both now and for ever."¹

THE RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL was heralded in these terms:

A marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.²

and

Keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion; seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.³

THE EARLY ELDERS BORE TESTIMONY to the world:

That the Holy Scriptures are true, and that God does inspire men and call them to his holy work in this age and generation, as well as in generations of old, thereby showing that he is the same God yesterday, to-day, and for ever.⁴

And we know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God.⁵

THOSE WHO RECEIVED THIS TESTIMONY were received into the church in harmony with the following instructions:

No one can be received into the church of Christ unless he has arrived unto the years of accountability before God, and is capable of repentance.⁶

and

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirit, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.⁷

THE CHURCH CONTINUES TO FUNCTION in harmony with these principles:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toil-eth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.⁸

1. Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1
2. 4: 1
3. 6: 3
4. 17: 2
5. 17: 6
6. 17: 20
7. 17: 7
8. 119: 8

Teacher-Nurse Needed

The Independence Sanitarium needs a registered nurse who is qualified to teach medical and surgical disease nursing in the Sanitarium School of Nursing. Any among our membership who will consider a connection with the Sanitarium for this purpose are kindly requested to write to me as president of the Sanitarium Board of Trustees.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

The Three Books

A sermon given at the Stone Church

By ELBERT A. SMITH

IN THE OLD DAYS in Nauvoo District, we had a brother who was somewhat eccentric, as most of us are at times, only he was a bit more so—all the time. He attended every district conference and reunion, talked in every prayer meeting, and usually began his testimony after this formula: "I had no assurance that I would be here but I am here, and why am I here?" I listened attentively, but I never did find out why he was there. However, the question is a pertinent one for us to ask ourselves under a variety of circumstances.

Why are you here this morning? I do not ask the question superficially as to why you are here in the Stone Church, but why are you here, most of you, as adherents to, and believers in, the Restoration Movement? You might be with the congregations of some other people more wealthy, more popular. I think you are here because you have some deep-seated convictions regarding this work. You have found in it what you cannot find anywhere else. It is to you all that the term, "Restoration Movement," means.

I think we do well to cherish these deep-seated convictions. This church brought to us the gospel as it was taught in former years. Under its ministry and by its authority we were spiritually born again. If we lose these convictions or throw them aside or permit them to dwindle away, we are somewhat in the situation of the little girl who was bound for her first day of school. Her father gave her a note stating the date and place of her birth. She presented herself to the schoolteacher in tears, saying, "I have lost my excuse for being born."

Apostle F. M. Sheehy used to speak in a semi-jocular way about

"the vernacular of the redeemed." He had reference to some of our Latter Day Saint idioms and figures of speech which may not mean anything to other people. If I were addressing a congregation of Protestants or Catholics not conversant with our beliefs, and should announce for my theme, "The Three Books," it would have no meaning for them. "The world is full of books. To what three books does he refer?" they would ask. In your mind the theme immediately registers, and you know I speak of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

I am dealing with one of our most unique beliefs—that regarding the Scriptures. Others have one book of Scriptures; we have three. This matter goes away down deep into the roots of our history and our beliefs, deep down into our convictions concerning continued revelation and an open canon of Scripture. It is most distinctive and unique in the modern Christian world.

The Bible

I speak of the Bible first—for one reason, because we had it first. Back in 1820 while Joseph Smith was reading the Bible prayerfully and studiously, he came to this commandment with promise: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1: 5. Stirred and inspired by this Scripture, Joseph went to the woods to pray and received his first vision. Out of the Bible, accompanied by the Spirit, came the inspiration that led to the dawning of the Restoration Movement.

Long ago the Bible was kept in chains in cathedrals. There were few Bibles, and they were chained for security. However, they were to be read only by the priesthood. Today there are no chains on the Bible, but there is dust on it in many homes. Still it remains the best seller in an age of best-selling. It has gone, we are told, into a thousand languages and dialects. No other book in the history of the world has reached so many peoples.

I do not think we need to unnecessarily depreciate or deride the King James Version. As already noted, words from that version of the Bible inspired Joseph at the beginning of our history. That version was used by him during all his remaining life and ministry. It was used by this church when its early missionaries went out to many lands and made their converts. It is still used by us in missionary work with congregations who accept that version as their standard of evidence and are not yet ready to accept the Inspired Version.

The King James Version is a masterpiece of literature, its dignity and majesty not being equaled by any other book in the English language. John Dryden said that if every other book in the English language were lost, the Bible alone would be sufficient to show the extent of the beauty and power of the English language at its best.

UNLIKE SOME CHURCHES we have never affirmed the “inerrancy of the Bible.” And after all I have said, it yet remains a fact that there are errors in the King James Version—some of them grievous errors, reflecting on the character of God himself. We have never held that the Bible is infallible and without error. Our belief is that “it contains the word of God.” It also contains the words of men like the advisers of Job, who clouded counsel “by words without knowledge.” It contains the words of Cain, who was a murderer; of Jezebel, who was a very unlovely person; the words of Judas Iscariot; and even the words of Satan himself. But it contains also the words of the prophets and the apostles and Christ. It brings to men the will of God.

Because of errors, imperfections, and lost portions of the Scripture, Joseph Smith was commanded to prepare the Inspired Version of the Bible as we have it. (See Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5; 90: 12.) He began this work in June, 1830, and completed it in July, 1833. But the book was not published until 1867.

The Lord gave promise that these Scriptures as given should be preserved in safety (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15). During the dark and cloudy days following the death of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum, the Scriptures were entrusted to the care and protection of Emma Smith, widow of the prophet. Evidently the Lord regarded her and not Brigham Young as a safe custodian. She surrendered them to the Reorganized Church, and they were published. Evidently the Lord considered this church and not some other a safe place for the preservation of those Scriptures as he had promised.

The Inspired Version corrected numerous errors and, by direct revelation, restored some portions that had been lost. It is usually referred to as the “Inspired Version” rather than the “Inspired Translation.” Joseph used the King James Version in his work, making corrections as he was inspired to do, but retaining in most of the chapters the language of that Version. On the back of a copy of the latest edition of this book I notice the title, “Holy Scriptures, Inspired Version” and on the title page, “The Holy Scriptures, an Inspired Revision of the Authorized Version.” The authorized version referred to is the King James Version.

I may note only a very few of the improvements made in the Inspired Version; for example, from the King James Version: “The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him.” —I Samuel 16: 14. That is strange language—“an evil spirit from the Lord.” The Inspired Version renders it “an evil spirit which was not of the Lord troubled him.”

Again in the King James Version, “shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause.” Probably a considerable number of lawyers of a certain type and certain judges open to bribery would find that a most pleasing rendition. A poor man would have nothing to offer them, no matter how just his cause. The Inspired Version, I am sure, would appeal to reputable lawyers and incorruptible judges of whom, thank God, we still have many. This rendition reads: “Neither shalt thou countenance a wicked man in his cause.”

In the King James Version, Deuteronomy 14: 21, we read: “Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien; for thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God.” Here is the absurdity in that rendition, that being “an holy people” they might not eat an animal that had died of itself, but they could give it to the stranger or sell it to the foreigner. The Inspired Version reads, “Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give it to the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat of it; or thou mayest not sell it to an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.”

Passing on to the New Testament in the King James Bible, Matthew 13: 12, we read: “For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.” I have never been able to figure out how we could take from a man that which he does not have. Even God himself could not do that. The Inspired Version has the splendid rendition: “Whosoever receiveth, to him shall be given and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath” (verses 10, 11).

In the King James Version, Corinthians 10: 24, we read: “Let no man seek his own, but every man another’s wealth.” Probably that would appeal to a great many business men and especially to gangsters and racketeers whose whole energy is devoted to seeking the wealth of other people. The Inspired Version reads, “Let no man seek therefore his own but every man another’s good.”

If you care to know of other improvements made in the Inspired Version, you may obtain from the Herald Publishing House the book, The Three Bibles Compared, by Bishop A. B. Phillips. The price is fifty cents.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants

This book is unique in modern religious literature. It is, in fact, the open canon of Scripture. No man had authority or power to close the canon of Scripture against further revelation. An attempt to do so was made, but God did not recognize that authority.

Here is one unique difference between the Restoration Movement and other churches. No other people I know of claim to receive the word of God through the prophet and add it to the open canon of Scripture. Even our friends in Utah have received no revelation to add to their book of Doctrine and Covenants since they set foot upon the soil of Utah.

The book of Doctrine and Covenants contains the revelations given to Joseph Smith and those given through his successors in the Presidency and prophetic office up to and including the latest revelation coming to the church through President Israel A. Smith.

The book of Doctrine and Covenants is justified by its contents. Its prophecies have been fulfilled as, for example, the one in the first section: "The hour is not yet but is nigh at hand when peace shall be taken from the earth." This revelation was given in November, 1831. For some time it appeared as though the prophet had erred. That century closed and the present one dawned with a prevalent belief in the minds of men that permanent peace had been insured. Most of the great nations of the earth had entered into a compact. They had established the Hague Tribunal and agreed to settle their differences by arbitration. The twentieth century dawned with bright hopes in the minds of the "wise men" of the times that the world had entered upon an era of permanent peace; but time justified the prophet. Peace was taken from the earth, and it has not yet returned.

There are sections in this book containing profound truth which we ourselves have not fully evaluated, for example, Section 85. Then there is the wonderful testimony in Section 76.

And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father.

No other modern religious literature contains a comparable testimony.

It would take a series of sermons to deal in detail with my theme. I do not pretend to deal with it adequately in all its phases. I am chiefly concerned with the place these three books have in our belief and church economy.

The Book of Mormon

Certainly the Book of Mormon is one of the most challenging features of the Restoration Movement. I think we need to present it to the unbelieving world with considerable wisdom and diplomacy, not just fling it at people. Yet in our missionary endeavor, it may well prove to be the entering wedge when sermons on every other theme have failed to register.

Luther prepared a version of the Bible, making translations into German. It is said he developed doubt about the canonicity of some of the books of the Bible. He came to question whether or not they were indeed inspired. According to a statement in the book entitled The Bible by Dodds, this is the test Luther developed: "Luther's direct test of canonicity, then is—Does the book in question occupy itself with Christ, or does it not?"

The Book of Mormon from cover to cover occupies itself with Christ. The preface declares that its purpose is "to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ." The closing plea of the Book of Mormon, from Moroni's farewell, reads "Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness."

Between these two statements we find the story of the visit of Jesus to the Nephites in this western world—the story of his teaching, his ministry, his deeds, and the organization of his people in this part of the world. It is said that years ago Robert G. Ingersoll, noted infidel, was addressing a congress of Christian ministers. He said to them, "Your God, the Christian God, was ignorant of the existence of America until Columbus told him of it." They had no answer to the challenge. The Book of Mormon answers it. Columbus did not tell God about America. God told Columbus about it.

I have read the translations of letters Columbus wrote to the court of Spain and to some of his religious mentors, and they indicate beyond question of doubt that Columbus thought he was divinely inspired and led on his voyage of discovery. The world was not like an apple cut in two with God sending apostles and prophets and revelations to the Old World and remaining entirely ignorant of or indifferent to the New World. The Book of Mormon tells the story of his ministry and leadership to successive civilizations in America. The ruined cities of the old western world confirm the testimony of the Book of Mormon.

There is a challenge to us to study the book, its historical, ethical, moral, and doctrinal contents. What does it teach about God and Christ? What about the problems of life? What about marriage? What about America? What about the use of wealth? What about church doctrine and many other vital questions?

There is a challenge to study supporting proofs of the Book of Mormon. This challenge should register in the minds of our young people, particularly those college and university men who have learned how to study and to engage in research work systematically and intelligently. Such young men and women may aspire to become known as authorities in the matter of archaeology in relation to the story of the Book of Mormon. The proofs are there. Brethren Paul M. Hanson and H. I. Velt have done good work, but the literature in relation to the Book of Mormon coming from our own press is yet too meager. Where are the young people who will respond to this challenge?

When the Book of Mormon is compared with the Bible, some people are disturbed because its language is not as grammatical nor beautiful as that of the King James Version of the Bible. Be it remembered that fifty-four scholars, the greatest of their age and masters of the English language, spent three years at the task of translating the Bible in the finest English language at their command. Had we, for ex-

THE LATEST STATISTICS regarding the growth of the Reorganized Church in Germany show a higher proportionate increase than any other mission in the whole world.

These are sober facts. What lies behind them? Why is the increase such a big one? What has caused all these people to flock to a gospel never heard of before?

The war and its aftermath has left millions of people in Germany homeless, separated from their loved ones, and bereft of all their belongings. Beliefs were uprooted. Ideals, once held to be good and true, were suddenly shown to be false; and the millions of men and women who had believed in them were left stranded without anything to hold on.

It was a long story of human suffering, hardship, disillusionment, pain, and sorrow. But at the same time it is a story of the desire to find something bigger and better, something more enduring than the shattered idols which had so far been the center of the lives of millions.

THERE IS THE CASE of Brother and Sister A. (typical of many cases, since nearly every German family has gone through the soul-searing experiences of days and nights under enemy bombing). They are ordinary people, hard-working, careful in their spending and honest. They were proud to have achieved their one great ambition—to have a comfortable home of their own. It had not been easy to get it, for economic conditions in Germany had been far from good since the First World War, and the currency reform of the early twenties had done away with all money reserves.

Brother and Sister A. had borne up wonderfully well under the strain and the trials of the war. When large-scale bombing started in earnest, day and night they bore it—knowing it would do them no good to complain.

Then came the one night they will never forget. It did not seem any different from all the other nights they had spent in the air-raid shelter, listening to the crashing of the bombs drawing nearer and the booming of the anti-aircraft guns. It was different, however, for there was one bomb which did not go amiss. It came down on their house—their treasured home—tearing everything down as it went.

It was then that Brother and Sister A. sought comfort from their Father in heaven. The ground was prepared for the seed of the gospel, and when the message did come to them, it found open hearts and willing ears.

SISTER B. is still a young woman. She has two children, but she has not seen her husband since he was on leave at Christmas, 1944. He left for his unit on the Eastern front, but nothing had been heard of him for nearly four years. Sister B. is a brave woman. She would not give up hope until in October, 1948, she got a curt, official note informing her that her husband had died of typhoid fever in August, 1945, in a prisoner-of-war camp in Yugoslavia.

Life suddenly lost all meaning for her. If it had not been for the fact that she had to work in order to feed and clothe her children, I do not know what would have become of her. But she worked without zest. Life was empty.

One Sunday morning a friend asked her to church. She came, and she has been coming ever since. She no longer buries herself in her own grief. She has learned to live according to God's command: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." She shares in the work, as she shares in the joy and the sorrow of her neighbor.

For her the church has in truth become "the church of the warm hearts; the church that heals hurt lives."

THEN THERE IS THE CASE of the family from Silesia, that part of Germany now under Polish rule. These are fine, stalwart people.

They had been hard-working and thrifty all their lives. Before the war the father was an artisan, and the mother cared for a patch of field, a cow, and perhaps a few chickens with the help of her two sons and a daughter. Then came the war. The father was drafted, the mother left by herself to look, as best she could, after her children and the home. Hard work and anxiety for her husband filled her days until in 1945 the climax came. The Russians were coming.

What happened after that is by no means outstanding, measured by conditions then prevailing. The older boy, then sixteen, was taken away and sent to work in a mine. The girl, barely more than a child at that time, does not care to divulge her memories. The mother and the youngest boy were driven from their home.

After a long period of being pushed about—in camps, on the road, in the midst of thousands of others who shared their fate—they felt forsaken by God and the world. They lost all belief in God, arguing that if there were a Father in heaven, he could not possibly permit such cruelty and suffering.

At long last the family was united again. And then one day these people heard of the gospel.

They saw that there still was love, and brotherhood, and human kindness. Once distrustful of everything and everybody around them, they suddenly saw with their own eyes the evidence of the existence of one great community of brothers and sisters stretching out a hand across the sea to help them, to lift them up.

Perhaps it was the material help extended to them which first gave them back their belief in their fellow men and in the everlasting love and kindness of a Heavenly Father.

They were baptized. Today they are among the stoutest defenders of our faith, ready to help those in need and happy in the knowledge of having found the right way.

BROTHER X. and his wife came from a town in the industrial area of the Czech-populated eastern part of the Sudetenland. They and their fourteen year old son are cultured, well-bred people. Brother X. was once the headmaster of a boys' school in his home town; Sister X was a teacher. They had a nice home, and nice friends. Life was good to live.

Despite the war, fate seemed to be kind to them. Air-raids in that part of the country were comparatively few and far between, and everything went smoothly until the war drew to a close.

With the retreating of the German army, conditions changed rapidly. Every vestige of law and order disappeared. It seemed as if suddenly everything low and base in human nature had become uppermost, and it found its victims in such men and women as these who had so far been respected and well-regarded.

Then the Russians moved in. Brother X. was arrested and put in a camp.

It is best not to go into details about the months that followed. What happened in that camp happened anywhere in the Sudetenland: men were humiliated, tormented, beaten to death. Others died of starvation and exposure.

When Brother X. finally got away, he was a human wreck. Sister X. in the meantime had been driven from her home. The little boy had been ill with scarlet fever when his mother carried him on her back (the only luggage she took with her) through woods and fields, avoiding the highways for fear of being caught by a Czech guard and sent to a camp. Then she crossed the border into Bavaria, a distance of a few hundred miles. It was a year and a half before Brother X. found his family again.

Something seemed to have been broken in the hearts of those people. All the ideals of human kindness, love to one's country, culture, decency—where were they? Where was God to allow such things to happen?

And life was by no means easy yet, especially for refugees in overpopulated, impoverished Germany. The man was in poor health, without a job. The child was only slowly recovering from the effects of his illness. And the mother had to look on how the starvation diet of German ration cards only made matters worse. She did the best she could. She scrubbed floors in people's houses, darned socks, did any odd job that came her way in order to eke out a scanty living.

Then the husband found a job as night watchman. And there he met the brother from Silesia. Through him they first heard about the church and what it stood for.

Now they have found an ideal again—different from the one they had before, but a much better one.

In August, 1949, Brother and Sister X. were baptized together with their son. They are now helping to carry on the great work of building Zion.

SISTER R. lived in Riga. She was born in Lithuania of German parents. Her childhood memories are bright, happy ones.

In 1934 she married a Lithuanian, a captain in the army, who had previously studied law in Russia. In 1935 a daughter was born to them. They had a happy life until in 1940 Mr. R. was arrested by the Russians and killed. Sister R. escaped with her child.

She found a job in Pomerania, where she worked and saved, and eventually succeeded in building up a new home.

In 1943 she accepted an offer for a job as secretary and interpreter in a chemical factory in Kiew (Russia), giving her child into the care of her only brother and his wife. When Kiew was recaptured by the Russians, Sister R. returned.

Then she fell ill and had to be taken to a hospital. As time went on, the military situation became more and more uncertain. The Russians were pouring into the eastern parts of Germany.

The hospital in which Sister R. was lying ill, had to be evacuated. It was winter, and bad conditions of transport were undecipherable. This, plus the uncertainty about the fate of her child made Sister R. almost lose her reason.

After she got well enough, she set out in search of her child. It took her long to find it. Somewhere near Berlin her brother had taken refuge, and with him were his wife and Sister R.'s little girl.

Then the Russians came to the little town near Berlin, too. For nine months Sister R. lived with her child under Russian rule, until she could bear it no longer. Leaving the few scanty possessions behind that she had salvaged she started again on her journey west.

Sister R. had never been deeply religious, and during all her trials and sufferings she did not once turn to her Creator for help. She rather accused God of being unjust for making her suffer so much.

One day she heard of an American missionary coming to the little place where she had found abode. It was more curiosity than anything else which made her attend the meeting, and she had no intention to go again. But how different it all came!

She sat and listened to the words of the gospel—the words of love. She saw the close link which tied the members of that little community with people half across the world. She learned of brothers and sisters across the ocean who tried to help heal the wounds the war had inflicted.

The icy crust which seemed to have lain around her heart began to melt away. She recognized her own frailty, her own mistakes, and at the same time the all-encompassing love and kindness of our Heavenly Father.

She went again and again. And when the next baptismal service took place, Sister R. was among those who made their covenant with God. Today she knows that she had to go through all the various stages of despair and suffering in order to become receptive for this gospel which embodies love, brotherhood, decency, and all that is good. Her doubts are at rest now, and she is happy to be one of the great community of God's children.

BROTHER Y had spent many years abroad and he had married in a foreign country. Whoever has lived far from home will understand what happened to him.

His country and everything connected with it grew ever more beautiful in his memory the longer he was separated from it. It grew so beautiful that he came to love it intensely. He defended it—sometimes against his own better judgment—in anything and everything it did.

He became a member of the National Socialist Party in that foreign country and held a prominent position in it. When war broke out, he was interned.

Life in an internment camp is not easy anywhere. When the war was over, Brother Y. and his wife were sent back to Germany. He arrived disillusioned and without means. The whole world seemed to have tumbled about his ears. His downfall, perhaps, had been deeper than that of many others. For him socialism had been a creed. He had seen it from a distance, glorified, not realizing that, like all man-made creeds it had the failings of man.

Then he heard of the gospel. His heart had been yearning for something bigger and better than the idea he had believed in. Now he had found it!

The mental agonies and disillusionment he had been going through made him receptive for the doctrines of the church, and today he and his wife are finding deep satisfaction in the work they help to carry forward.

THESE ARE but a few examples of the countless ones I could give. They all differ in detail, yet they are essentially the same.

Before I conclude, I want to add my own testimony. I know that suffering prepared my family and me for the gospel. For we have gone through experiences similar to those I have described. We have lived abroad. We know what it means to love our country and to be disillusioned. We have spent torturous hours in air-raid cellars, and have come out, as if by miracle, safe and sound to see all our worldly possessions gone.

Our daughter was sick when we had to go, and I carried all our possessions in a small suitcase.

My husband was in a prisoner-of-war camp where he saw comrades being carried out day after day, dead from starvation. He himself was near death.

Yet are not those sufferings to be

The New State of Israel

LIKE MOST LATTER DAY SAINTS, I have always been interested in the land of Palestine. Prophetic utterances of the early Restoration Movement are replete with promises that the Lord was about to set his hand again to restore scattered Israel. I can remember many sermons in my childhood built around the theme of the signs to accompany the fulfillment of some of these prophecies. The "former and latter rains" were often spoken of, and after such a sermon the congregation would often sing:

The morning breaks, the shadows flee,
Lo, Zion's standard is unfurled,
The dawning of a brighter day,
Majestic rises o'er the world.

The Gentile fullness now comes in,
And Israel's blessings are at hand.
Lo, Judah's remnant, cleansed from sin,
Shall in their promised Canaan stand.

When Parley P. Pratt wrote the words of this song, there was little enough in the land of Palestine to justify such emphatic promises. Jerusalem, although picturesque and interesting to the traveler who was in search of shrines, was sunk in medieval debris—physically, mentally, and spiritually. The place where the great industrial city of Tel Aviv now stands was a waste of shifting sand. The desert which comprised a greater portion of the country melted imperceptibly into the barren wilderness of the Arabs, and much of the Judean hill country was eroded and barren.

It Should Strengthen Us

There are many points of similarity between Israel's present struggle and that of our fathers. We are all thrilled as we read of the faith which surmounted hardship, persecution, mob violence, and defied death. For years I have carried a picture in my mind gleaned from Lucy Smith's history of the young man Joseph, who, having escaped once more from his enemies, met his mother in the doorway. It was night, but there seems to have been enough light on his face that in imagination, I can see the vigor of his personality, as starry-eyed and breathless he declares: "Mother, there is a God in heaven, and I know it."

I have another mental image of the prophet grown older, saying good-by to his wife for the last time. "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am calm as the summer morning."

Now I would like to present a picture of three young men of Israel before their nation was recognized by any of the great powers.

They were all under twenty years of age. They had not killed anyone nor committed any atrocious crime, but they had been apprehended for taking part in the political activities of the underground. When, at the conclusion of their trial, they were given the unexpectedly harsh sentence of hanging, there was a moment of stunned silence, then the youths sprang to attention. "Their shoulders squared, their heads up, standing rigid, they burst into the Hatikvah, their national anthem. The audience behind them now sprang to their feet and sang with them." Tears streamed down the faces of relatives and friends as they sang. An older man, father of one of the boys, sang in a high, heart-broken treble. There was no grief on the faces of the doomed boys. The song ended, and they turned to gaze upon the audience, eyes shining, smiles on their lips. They clasped their hands above their heads in a "gesture of solidarity," and repeatedly shouted "Shalom!" (peace). (Description taken from The Birth of Israel.)

Yes, we can look with understanding upon this nation which has been reborn so quickly through a baptism of blood and tears.

"The Birth of Israel"

In a book published by Alfred A. Knopf, Incorporated, Señor Jorge García Granados tells of the dramatic events leading up to the recognition of Israel as a separate state. The book has already had three printings and being an eye-witness account is so well-written and authentic, that it is worthy of a place in anyone's library.

Since he was a member of the Special Committee on Palestine, appointed by the United Nations to make a report and recommendations based upon actual findings, he had access to many facts unobtainable by the ordinary observer.

His grandfather, Miguel García-Granados, was president of Guatemala in 1871. In spite of the fact that he was born of a well-known, conservative Catholic family, he was militantly interested in social reform and worked continually for social betterment. He proclaimed the separation of church and state, "and asserted that right of birth made no man superior to another." Now the people of Guatemala celebrate the thirtieth of June as a national holiday, with great ceremony placing wreaths of flowers at the base of his statue.

However, the present Señor Granados who has carried on in the tradition of his ancestor, has had troubles of his own. Many of his contemporaries still believe that the Guatemalan peasant is little better than an animal, capable of bearing physical burdens and incapable of higher intellectual pursuits or refined emotions. But he soon saw that, far from being a mere beast, the poor Indian was a very downtrodden and inhumanly exploited being. He became zealously engaged in drives for social reforms and was accordingly persecuted and imprisoned on numerous occasions. Once he had to flee the country. One does not wonder that in the present liberal regime in Guatemala, Señor Granados stands high in the estimation of the government.

The Political Situation

In this brief article, I prefer to pass lightly over the political events leading up to the recognition of Israel. Doubtless many mistakes were made by many nations, but because Great Britain had the immediate oversight of the situation, there has been a tendency to place blame for many events upon the British. While I am not at all in sympathy with some of the things which transpired in Palestine at the time of the occupation, I would certainly hesitate to blame the British for all of them or to judge the occupying power in any way. Remembering British principles of fair play and love of justice, the strength of character, industry, and brilliance which have rendered the nation a stabilizing force in a largely chaotic world, I would prefer not to pass judgment. Perhaps we can never judge contemporary events justly; it often takes the passing of years to bring a true perspective. It is sufficient for the purpose of this article to state that in spite of last minute maneuvers of "certain British and pro-Arab oil interests, including certain officials of the American government" to keep the Jewish state from coming into existence, that state was proclaimed and recognized at once by the United States Government.

Incidentally, in reading this book one gets an intimate glance of the workings of the United Nations and the great pressures brought to bear upon delegates and committees by various economic and political interests.

"The Powerful Agricultural Communes"

First let us distinguish between the "commune" of Israel, and the kolkhoz of Russia. The commune in Israel is self-governing, a true democracy. At least once a year, or as often as one half the members ask for it, there is a general assembly which decides upon important issues and elects officers. The object is to provide a more abundant and economically secure living for the individual member; to farm the land more efficiently (60 per cent of farming in Palestine is said to be accomplished communally since Palestine is highly mechanized and the individual could not compete successfully alone); to create surpluses and reserves so they can bring others to Palestine and help them establish themselves; and for various other good purposes.

Individuals do not handle much money, since there is little or no need for it. While married couples live in rooms or cottages alone and can bring food from the communal dining room and eat it at home if they wish, as a rule everyone eats in the general dining hall. Here an abundance of good, nourishing food is served—whole grain bread, fresh butter and other dairy products, meat, eggs, fresh fruits and vegetables. One can also obtain special articles of food if he feels the need, such as sweets and soft drinks. There is no set rule that all receive exactly the same—each gets the things he needs, or thinks he needs, within reason.

They also receive free clothing, the men dressing much alike, the women having a liberal choice of apparel.

"We give to each according to his needs," the investigators were told, "and this is the principle practiced in all phases of communal life. Since there are no salaries, the highest official lives exactly like the humblest worker."

Cost of health service also comes from the common fund, no individual financing his own; and Palestine has a fine system of dispensaries and hospitals. Each settlement or group of settlements has a doctor.

Children are supervised and taught by experts practically from birth, and at sixteen are finished with high school. They can then choose what vocation they wish to follow. If they wish to be farmers, they are sent to an agricultural school, after which they return to contribute their skills to the community. If they wish to follow some other trade or profession, the community fund is drawn upon to send them to the university. Thus the parents do not need to worry about the future welfare of their children.

People often wish to visit in other communities, and means are also provided for this. When a man or woman wants to go to the city, he is sent out appropriately dressed and provided with money. In addition, each worker is provided with such things as toothbrushes and toilet articles as he needs them. He is also given a small yearly allowance for special things he may want.

There is such a feeling of brotherhood and group loyalty that few ever overstep their rights. Most people are careful to ask for no more than they need.

The housing problem is met in various ways. In the early stages of a settlement, people may even live in tents for a while. Sometimes families live separately, cottages being clustered together in small groups. It seems that most often, the single men have one large dormitory; the single women another, while the married couples are provided with separate rooms. Children are cared for by experts in nurseries and schools. Showers and plumbing are in two large buildings in the community, one for the men, the other for women.

Each able-bodied member contributes his labor to the kibbutz, which is another name for the commune. The day begins at dawn, except for those workers who are to go to more distant fields. These leave on their horses before daybreak, carrying their breakfasts with them.

The principal meal at noon is served in the communal dining room. Work is resumed at two o'clock with a short break at four for tea. Work ends at five. There are afternoon showers, and children wait for their parents at the entrance of the bath houses. Before and after the evening meal, the settlers can do as they like—read in the library, play with their children, listen to the radio, or discuss world events. Thus they live simply and happily.

The large dining hall is also used for entertainments. Sometimes the programs and other recreational features are produced by the settlers themselves; at other times traveling artists and lecturers appear.

Señor Granados speaks as do others when they talk of the kibbutzim: all observers are thrilled by the evident financial and social success of the communes which apparently have passed the stage of experimentation and are here to stay.

In a few short sentences they can be contrasted with the Russian kolkhoz.

In Russia:

The system is compulsory.

The rules and regulations are handed down from the state which has supreme control.

The individual is exploited for the state.

In Palestine:

The system is completely voluntary. The individual can resign if he desires (though he seldom does).

The system is truly democratic: regulations and rules are enacted by means of popular assembly and administered by officials elected by popular vote.

The assembly of voters meets at least once each year or whenever half of the people desire it.

There is absolutely no hierarchy. The elected officials do their share of manual labor in the fields or shops. There is nothing to wound the ego of anyone, thus solving one of the most baffling of psychological problems.

The commune has solved the problem of liberty plus security.

A Blueprint

Señor Granados calls the Kibbutzim a "blueprint for many lands," and dreams of the day when some form of the system can be applied to his own countrymen, who lived communally before the conquering white men came.

Members of the committee visited several of these communes. Seventeen of them had been established in the Negev Desert. The men chose to visit Revivim, the name meaning "dewdrops." "We live here," explained one of the workers, "by the sweat of our brows, and the dew that drops from God's heaven."

It seemed incredible that anything could live in that desert. Their cars stirred the yellow dust, and it settled over their bodies like a stifling cloud.

Then in the distance, a mirage appeared. A glittering blue opal of fresh water rose before our eyes. Under a harsh metallic sky it shone and sparkled like a huge jewel in the hot desert. It was water, fresh sweet water, the reservoir of the settlement. Then a collection of low, one-story white cement structures, surrounded by barbed wire with a fortress-like tower of stone in the center, came into view, and we were at Revivim.—The Birth of Israel, page 86.

Here they found, in sharp contrast to the hot desert sands, a soft carpet of grass and shrubbery, and a few yards farther on, the large orchards and truck gardens, rich with fruit and vegetables. There were olive and pomegranate and plum orchards and young date palms. The workers had begun to establish a canning industry. There was a large surplus of fruit, and they canned this and sold it to the cities.

These young Jews had built all this in four years. They had studied the situation and found that in April, and again in October and November there were sudden swift showers. These showers had through the years worn great gullies in the land. They built their reservoir, paved a number of the gullies and guided the rainwater into their lake instead of allowing it to soak immediately into the thirsty desert soil. Thus they had an abundance of sweet water for irrigation, drinking and sanitary purposes through the long, dry seasons.

Another visit took the members of the committee to Beth Haaravah, "the House in the Wilderness," where another collective farm had been developed by the resourcefulness and industry of young Jews. Seen in its setting of poisonous, salty desert, this seemed a miracle. No one had dreamed before that the sterile, Dead Sea area could be made to produce. They had been forced to wash the soil to rid it of excess salt. They used water from the Jordan River, a half mile away. They would build ridges of earth around an area and fill it with water, repeating the operation several times, until the salt had been carried from the soil. Then there had to be some organic matter supplied before they could grow anything. So they built shallow, artificial ponds and stocked them with fish. These fish became a fine addition to their diet and deposited a rich layer of fertilizer on the bottoms of the ponds. After several months, the fish were moved to new lakes, and the soil of the old ones was made ready for cultivation. It was a devious process, demanding patience and industry, but these people did it, and even the desert around the poisonous Dead Sea was beginning to "blossom as the rose."

Kiryat Anavim was an older settlement. In 1920, a small group of newcomers leased some land in the barren, eroded hill country. They had little or no experience in agriculture and very little money. At first they lived in tents. Zionist organizations loaned them money with which to start the commune, and an agricultural expert advised them how to proceed. The hills were terraced, and experimentations were carried on with fifty-two kinds of grape seeds until four varieties were found which gave satisfactory results. Grafting imported fruits on native ones, the workers developed excellent apricot and apple orchards. Members of this commune are very proud of the fact that they have been able to produce the "best fruit in Palestine." They are proud also of being the first to show that the eroded "hill lands which had been productive in Bible days could be made productive again." The commune is now vigorous and well-to-do, having long since paid back all borrowed money.

The members have an impressive dairy and have carried on interesting experiments in cattle breeding and milk production. The same is true of poultry. They are not far from their goal of averaging from 250 to 300 eggs per year per hen, for their flock of 4,000.

"Their milk is marketed through a co-operative distributing agency which covers all Palestine."

One of the most interesting things about the hundreds of these communes is that so many are conducted by young Jews who, though idealistic and dedicated with almost religious fervor to their task, are also practical and thoroughly businesslike.

The second impressive thing is that they not only care for their own, giving their children every opportunity and their aged loving attention, but reach out their hands to help others. It is to these communes that the orphans of the concentration camps are often sent. These refugees, sometimes pitifully warped in body and spirit, and sometimes bearing in their flesh the infamous branding of the camp number, are placed in separate schools and classes so they will not have to compete with the hardy youth who have grown up in the friendly atmosphere of the commune. Here they are nourished tenderly until the smile comes again to their lips. This one commune cares for and teaches nineteen girls and seventeen boys, all of late teen age.

The third impressive thing is that communes are becoming, or in many cases already are, rich and powerful with the prestige that a money surplus brings. It brings to mind the people of Book of Mormon days, who "did not set their hearts on riches," but who helped all who needed anything; thus they were blessed and became rich, "yea, even richer than they who were outside the church."

Other Observations

Having taken so much space in discussing this interesting phase of Palestinian life, I will not be able to discuss the cities. For a description of Tel Aviv, the industrial and cultural center of Israel, a modern city of 200,000 inhabitants, I must refer you to the book itself and current literature. The upsurge of the arts, the theater, and the progress in industrial life is a story no less absorbing than that of the communes. "Indeed," says Señor Granados, "the techniques and experience of all Europe had been brought here in this melting pot of world Jewry, and we begin to comprehend what a tremendous future this city could have."

He thinks that eventually the whole of Palestine may be almost fully industrialized, with raw materials being obtained for distribution, processing, and manufacture from the Arabs whose vast territory may be utilized and developed on the pattern of the kibbutzim. Thus the two countries may be at peace with each other, trading and trafficking for the mutual benefit of each.

The government of Palestine is necessarily experimenting in certain phases, but it is functioning along the lines of enlightened democracy. Not all the people care for the communal system. They are trying to achieve a state where both liberty and economic security can be enjoyed. Some are working co-operatively. Others work alone in individual projects.

The morale of the citizenry and army is something only imagined by propagandists, but never quite achieved by them. I refer you to an article in the October Atlantic Monthly, "Israel, Young Blood and Old," by George Biddle. This article is worth reading and re-reading. I was especially interested in his description of the hour-long parade of the troops. They are young, seasoned, hard, but different than any he had ever seen—they wear a look of happiness and consecration. His description recalled the 2,060 young sons of Helaman's day. It is interesting to note that the backbone of the tough young soldiery who won the war for Israel came from the communes.

Another interesting side light on the democratic outlook of the new state of Israel can be witnessed in the operation of the state department and their foreign service. No Jew had previous diplomatic experience. This organization of around 12,000 persons, composed of former collective farmers, writers, artists, lawyers, etc., made some mistakes at the beginning but learned rapidly and today is functioning smoothly as an old and well-established agency, according to Francis Ofner, special correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor from Tel Aviv. All members are young, only a few being over thirty-five years of age. They have cut red tape to a minimum. Israel's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Moshe Sharret, believes strongly in informal democracy. Mr. Sharret can speak eight languages fluently, including Hebrew. He is well-educated, cultured, and friendly.

Mr. Ofner tells this story to illustrate the spirit that prevails among these workers. Dr. Bunche, after attending a meeting with Mr. Sharret and his staff, amazed some of them by stating that he now knew how to say "Your Excellency," in Hebrew. "Israel's surprised citizens hurried to explain that there is no such term in Hebrew." Dr. Bunche thought that the words: Shma Moshe, meant "Your Excellency," since the staff members always used those words when addressing Mr. Sharret. "Oh, no," Dr. Bunche was told, "Shma Moshe is the Hebrew equivalent for the American, 'Say, Joe.'"

Selecting a farm for the farm family - By GERALD GABRIEL

IN BOONE COUNTY a study was made of land ownership and how the owners were able to purchase their farms. Only 2 per cent made the down payments from money earned on the farm, the others had received it through inheritance or employment in some other occupation. To start farming today, considerable capital and experience are required. It has been estimated that even an experienced farmer needs $4,000 to $8,000 to start farming if he rents, $14,000 if he buys, and $18,000 to $30,000 if he buys near a large city. Very few have this amount of money saved, and those who do hesitate to invest so large an amount in a farm.

A common mistake made by purchasers is to buy a run-down farm (which of course is less a bargain than the high priced, productive farm) and then try to build it up. Under normal conditions, it is estimated that nature can replace an inch of topsoil every 600 years; with the help of good farming practices, this can be speeded up considerably, but even then it will be a costly venture. The buildings and other improvements can seldom be made as economically as they can be purchased already on the farm. There is also danger of purchasing an over-improved farm.

Borrowing Policy

If an individual is not able to finance the purchase of a farm, he may be able to get it financed. The order of his investments should be the basic stock, feed, and machinery; then he should rent a good farm. If he has more money, he should not invest in additional stock. If he has any funds left, they should be invested in the land. If he is young, energetic, and in good health, under normal conditions he can afford to go into debt for the basic breeding stock, but should not exceed one third of the cost. On the additional stock he may borrow up to two thirds of the cost, but should not borrow more than 68 per cent of the land value. Capital borrowed to finance the purchasing of land usually requires a lower rate of interest than that borrowed for operation of enterprises, therefore, if capital is limited, the first item to borrow for should be the land. Money borrowed on the land—coupled with an operating plan that will maintain the farm and its productivity—can be financed on a relatively safe basis of one third to one half of its productive value. The farmer should be encouraged to carry life insurance sufficient to cover his indebtedness. If he is a good manager and prices are favorable, and if he can make good purchases and is willing to sacrifice on living standards, he may of necessity go safely beyond this. With limited capital, he should invest in those enterprises which are favorable, give quick returns (dairy, poultry, and hogs) and practice intensive rather than extensive enterprises of a low risk.

Type of Farming for the Farm Family

Experience and finance are the greatest factors in selecting a farm. Their importance is probably in the order named. Experience is essential before one starts to farm even though he has adequate finances. In working as a hired laborer or tenant, many of his ideas will see reality, and he will be brought face to face with some of the hazards and hardships of farming. Here he will find his likes and dislikes before investing in something that he may not like and in which he may not be successful. This experience should be as nearly like the type of farming he will do and as nearly as possible the same physical features. In

Crop	Acres	Yield per acre	Total yield	Rental rate	Normal price	Landlord share
Corn	50	40 bu.	2000 bu.	1/2-1000 bu.	$.70	$ 700.00
Oats	50	35 bu.	1750 bu.	2/5-700 bu.	.35	245.00
Wheat	25	18 bu.	450 bu.	2/5-180 bu.	.90	162.00
Clover	75	1 ton	75 ton	1/2-37.5 ton	12.00	450.00
Pasture	80	$2 (rental rate)	$160	all $160	2.00	160.00

proving to himself that he has what it takes, what he likes, and what he can do, he will know whether or not he wants to invest in a permanent farm. Finances or the ability to borrow will be the next limiting factor. The type of farming he is to do should be worked out on paper (making generous allowances for crop failures, price decline, etc.) before he proceeds to invest.

The community chosen for and by the farm family must also coincide with the type of farming chosen. Land of high value can be better used in grain, while the lower valued land is used for pasture.

Appraising the Farm for the Farm Family

After the type of community has been chosen to harmonize with the type of farming and the farm family, a list of prospective farms should be made available. These farms should all be considered and each factor carefully weighed. The farm that looks to be a good buy may prove to be a poor one. The general prosperity of the area may be a good index for the first look, but even here a potential buyer can be "fooled." The money invested in a farm or prospective farm may have come from other sources or types of farming or crops that were once suitable, but now are becoming obsolete or overcrowded. There are many ways to appraise a farm. We shall discuss one that we consider suitable for our purpose.

The productive value should be considered first, for here is the main source of income. The productive value should be measured over a long-time value of crops and what is considered a normal price period. Productive value can be estimated if a record is kept for the various fields of production. If one has not been kept, then talking to neighbors, county agent, or others may bring the necessary information. Productive value is based upon these four factors: (1) normal rotation of crops, (2) normal or average yield, (3) normal rates of rent, (4) normal or average price for crop or livestock grown. Perhaps it may be better understood by presenting the following example of a 280 acre farm.

LANDLORD'S EXPENSES
Taxes	$ 196.00
Insurance	26.00
Repair and depreciation	251.00
Fence repair	60.00
Seeds	50.00
Fertilizers	132.00
Management fee	150.00
Hay bailer and thresher	112.00
Total	$ 976.00

Gross farm income for landlord	$1717.00
Landlord's expense	976.00
Net farm income for the landlord	$ 741.00

Capitalized rate of interest in the community
—5 per cent
 $741 \div .05 = $14,820$ the productive value of the farm.

After the productive values have been estimated, other factors that should be taken into consideration are:

1. Location in reference to roads, transportation, etc.
2. Utilities available—electricity, telephone, fuel
3. Hazards—hailstorms, floods, diseases, insects, bad weeds, etc.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Bible commentators submit evidence to show that Isaiah 40-55 was written fifty years after Lehi left Jerusalem. The Book of Mormon quotes Isaiah, chapters 48-51 as part of the Scripture brought from Jerusalem by Lehi, 600 B. C. Explain this conflict.
Washington L. S. R.

ANSWER:

Bible criticism and the Book of Mormon relative to the authorship and date of the Book of Isaiah are in such sharp conflict that they cannot be reconciled.

Modern criticism contends that the real Isaiah wrote the first thirty-nine chapters, with some minor exceptions, and that some other author or authors wrote the remainder many years after the death of the prophet, after the destruction of Jerusalem which occurred 586 B. C. Little is known of Isaiah though the book begins with the statement that he prophesied in the days of Uzziah, Jothan, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, from which it is estimated that his life covered from about 738 B. C. to 690 B. C. The latter part of the book, chapters 40 to 66, is supposed to have been written by a later author, sometimes referred to as a "second Isaiah," with some portions of that written by still others, and added to Isaiah's work. The earliest estimated date of completion of the book being 538 B. C., over 150 years after the probable date of Isaiah's death, and about forty-eight years after the Jews were taken captive to Babylon. Some hold that chapters 56 to 66 were written by a third author about 450 B. C., or about sixty-six years after the return.

The Book of Mormon records that Nephi at the time of leaving Jerusalem with his father, Lehi, 600 B. C., procured a religious history of the Jews which included the book of Isaiah, which he brought to America. Judging by the many references and quotations made by the Nephite historians as given in the Book of Mormon, Isaiah's book as brought from Jerusalem must have been practically the same as is found in our Bibles today with the possible exception of the last twelve chapters: the Book of Mormon gives no quotations from chapters 55 to 66. According to this testimony, therefore, the Book of Isaiah must have been completed prior to 600 B. C. when it was brought from Jerusalem.

Nephi and Jacob quote from the first part, chapters 2 to 14 and 29, and from the second part they and Jesus quote chapters 48 to 54, the division being made according to Bible criticism. Contrary to modern criticism, Jesus quoted from chapters 52 to 54 giving a strong testimony of indorsement both of Isaiah and his words in saying,

A commandment I give unto you, that ye search these things diligently, for great are the words of Isaiah. For surely he spake as touching all things concerning my people which are of the house of Israel; therefore it must needs be that he must speak also to the gentiles.—III Nephi 10: 27.

And when the words of the prophet Isaiah shall be fulfilled, which say, Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion.—III Nephi 7: 43.

Here Jesus attributes the latter part of the book of Isaiah to that prophet, the same part which critics say was written by some other author at a date long after Isaiah's death. He calls them the words of Isaiah. It is possible that the writings of Isaiah were compiled and perhaps redated by one other than himself, either an amanuensis under his direction, or by some scribe after his death, but this work must have been done before 600 B. C. and before the captivity. The position of the Book of Mormon is not that the work is identical with that which came from the hand of Isaiah, neither is it ours, but that the prophecies therein are the work of Isaiah and not that of unknown persons who wrote after many of the prophecies were fulfilled or supposedly fulfilled.

In contrast with Bible criticism on this point, the Book of Mormon testimony is simple, straightforward, affirmative, and constructive. It sustains the testimony of the Bible. The Lord has said of it in latter day revelation: "I do not bring it to destroy that which you have received [The Bible] but to build it up."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 12.

And to this word we may well give heed.

QUESTION:

In the discussion over circumcision in Acts 15, where James said, "Hearken unto me," does that mean he had more authority than Peter, or that he was the president of the church at that time?

Oklahoma

ANSWER:

In the twelfth chapter of Acts, the experience of Peter being delivered from prison by an angel is recorded. When released he went to the house of Mary where a group of people were praying. After telling of his miraculous release, he said, "Go show these things unto James, and to the brethren" (verse 17).

Several writers refer to James, the Lord's brother, as the First Bishop, which literally means "overseer," as will be seen from the following:

Next, for the church at Jerusalem: it is unanimously believed by all ancient writers, that James, the Lord's brother, was the first bishop thereof. St. Jerome says that he was ordained by the apostles immediately after our Lord's crucifixion. Epiphanius calls him, therefore, the first bishop; the first to whom Christ committed his own throne upon earth.

Chrysostom says he was made bishop by Christ himself; both by Christ and the apostles. In like manner, Eusebius always speaks of him under that character, as first bishop of Jerusalem, ordained by the apostles. This opinion is shared by Hegeppus, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, all cited by Eusebius. To whom we may add St. Austin, who styles John, bishop of Jerusalem, St. James's successor, and possessor of the chair wherein he sat as first bishop of the place. And it is remarkable that Clemens, one of the most ancient of these writers, says this was designed as a peculiar honor to St. James, in regard that he was the brother of Christ: for though our Savior usually gave the preference to Peter and John, and James his brother, yet none of those contended about this honor, but chose this James, surnamed Justus, to be the bishop of the place; where he lived a saint, and died a martyr.—Antiquities of the Christian Church, by Bingham, Book II, Chapter 11.

From these facts as well as the Scripture referred to in the question, it seems evident that James' position would be the same as that of president—"the overseer."

QUESTION:

What first led to the establishment of the church at Kirtland?

ANSWER:

The first extensive missionary journey was undertaken by Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt, and Peter Whitmer, all very young men, with Ziba Peterson, in the autumn of 1830. The favorable reception they received around Kirtland, resulting in baptisms and new openings, brought about the establishment of the church there in December of that year.

ample, a literal translation of the epistles of Peter, the fisherman, it is probable that they would read something like some pages from the Book of Mormon. It is not at all probable that the writings of Peter, and other of the apostles, were altogether as polished and perfect as they appear in the King James Version.

The writers of the Book of Mormon were pioneers in a new land. They had little time for and they made no attempt at artistry. In fact, they apologized for their errors. Mormon wrote: "Condemn me not because of mine imperfections; neither my father because of his imperfections; neither them who have written before him."

Yet many admire the Book of Mormon for its simplicity and directness. They respond to the words of Nephi who said, "I glory in plainness; I glory in truth." Some years ago the Columbia Broadcasting System sent out a pamphlet to its announcers and others interested in broadcasting. This pamphlet advised the use of simple, plain English, mostly short words, short sentences, easily understood by the hearers. The pamphlet even preferred midwest English. Plainness and simplicity were rated above superficial polish.

The Three Books Our Constitutional Law

Early in his Presidency, Joseph Smith prepared a series of articles on the policy of the Reorganization. On this particular theme he said:

To insist that the laws to govern the church are found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; that whatever is contained in those books as doctrine for the salvation of man, is the doctrine of the church; that whatever is taught to the church as doctrine, not in accordance with . . . those books is not the doctrine of the church, . . . that the scriptures are to all men for guidance, and that Latter Day Saints are not privileged to disregard that guidance, and that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are Scripture to Latter Day Saints.—Church History, Volume 3, page 684.

Brother Joseph was fond of the proverb, "A threefold cord is not easily broken." A single cord might be broken. Three strong cords closely bound together are much stronger. This harmonized with the Scripture, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every truth be established." We have the testimony and witness of the written word in these three books.

Jesus said, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me."

I saw President Joseph Smith in his old age, when he was blind, come to the pulpit in the brick church in Lamoni and grope around with his hands until he had collected the three books and put them one on top of another in the form of a pyramid—The Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. He then placed his hands upon the three books and said, "Brethren, they say that 'seeing is believing,' but feeling is the naked truth." Deep down in his soul he felt that in these three books there was the truth which had guided him in his personal and public life through a half century of his presidency in the church. He felt that in them was the truth that would save the church and the families of the church and individuals who would choose to live by it.

We are commanded to read good books. There are many good books coming from the press, but it is a mistake to neglect the books of the ages while we read "the book of the month." What was the book of the month one year ago? It is forgotten. Let us give our chief attention to the books of the centuries—the books that deal with eternal truth.

1950 - The Best Year Yet

A RECENT motion picture adapted from a best seller carried this title, "The Best Years of Our Lives." While it referred to the age of youth as being the best, this year, 1950, can be the best year of our lives if we choose to make it so, whatever our age happens to be.

Past years should have brought us a measure of increased knowledge and some perfected skills to take into this half of the century which is beginning, and surely the events of the day should urge us on to accomplish the goals set.

Other tools have been left us by our parents, and these can make up a part of our working kit. Such basic values as simplicity of living and sincere faith will go a long way to help us. There are some things, however, which should be discarded. Remember the high, button shoes, the long, dragging skirts sweeping the dust before them, the gingerbread trimming on homes, the ornate copies of period furniture, and the clutter indoors? But there was an appreciation of the beauty of the work of one's own hands. Needlework was a part of every girl's training. Boys were taught the use of tools and took great pride in handling fine woods.

Honesty, too, was an outstanding quality. Men were true to their word and prided themselves on giving good measure, a full-day's work, a baker's dozen, a heaped bushel. Thrift, if not inborn, was cultivated. Money was relegated to its proper place as being necessary but not of first importance. Women took great pride in homemaking. Jobs were done thoroughly. If a recipe called for the butter and sugar to be creamed, there was no short-cut. Religion had an important part in the lives of the people, and all respectable people went to church.

THESE QUALITIES are necessary and should be added to our working kit if 1950 is to be the best year yet, but they are not enough. All conscientious Christians are trying to develop these same attributes. We must do more. The first step is to weigh accurately past achievements and measure them against our main purpose, which is to further the interests and program of the church. If we can honestly say that we have added a little to its progress, we can mark a plus sign to our credit.

The next step is to decide what we want most to see come to pass in the lives of our families, friends, and neighbors. After this decision will come the test. Do we want it to a sufficient degree to be willing to work so that it can be accomplished?

Few of us need to be convinced that the Master's way is the best way and that growth and happiness and satisfaction are the results of compliance with his laws. The trouble is that we find it difficult to put off the gratification of some pleasure in an effort to make the future more satisfying. This, after all, is a simple test of adulthood. The first lesson of discipleship taught by Christ was if anyone would follow him, he should deny himself.

The year 1950 will be fruitful if we can make the decisions to serve others and consecrate our talents to the task to which we have been called. We have the choice of drawing the curtains around our lives and living to ourselves, but to survive we must reach out. The Dead Sea is dead because the waters that flow into it are confined. The Sea of Galilee, close by, is a living stream because it is constantly being refreshed by the waters that come into it and then flow out.

We must live well this new year God has given us.

The Call to Friendly Visiting

By DOLLA BOHALL

THERE ARE SEVERAL Scripture gems I like to think of as calls to friendly visiting. One of the finest is taken from the life of Jesus. As we know, the four histories of his life are brief. They tell us little, when we would like to know much. However, this one characteristic of Jesus was so outstanding that Apostle Luke recorded it:

And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man. —Luke 2: 52.

This leads us to believe that Jesus not only pleased his Heavenly Father, but also his fellow men. We too can be near to God and receive his grace, while also being near to our friends and finding favor with them. Someone has wisely said that we can reach up only in proportion to the measure we reach out. Jesus increased in wisdom, and we must increase our wisdom through study, prayer, and experience to better understand God and his children.

From the Bible we have the words of Jesus to his disciples, in the writing of Saint John:

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

Jesus desired that life should be pleasant; yet he knew there would be tribulations. He wanted us to meet our tribulations cheerfully and overcome them. The friendly visitor must set out to meet situations cheerfully, in spite of the ills she may encounter.

FROM THE Book of Mormon, we receive this call through Amulek:

Let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.

And now behold, my brethren, I say unto you, Do not suppose that this is all; for after ye have done all these things, if ye turn away the needy, and the naked, and visit not the sick and afflicted, and impart of your substance if ye have, to those who stand in need; I say unto you, If ye do not any of these things, behold your prayer is vain, and availeth you nothing, and ye are as hypocrites who do deny the faith; Therefore if ye do not remember to be charitable, ye are as dross, which the refiners do cast out, (it being of no worth,) and is trodden under the foot of men.—Alma 12: 222-226.

This emphasizes the importance of friendly visiting. It also gives us a clue as to one reason our prayers may not be answered. It makes us aware of how little we are worth if we fail to share or express friendliness toward another.

FROM PRESENT-DAY revelation we have the following commandment given in 1829 (This revelation was meaningful and important, for this was the fourth time it had been given in the same wording to the early Saints.):

Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive, if you will knock it shall be opened unto you.—Doctrine and Covenants 12: 2.

In another revelation we are given this bit of wisdom:

For, behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward.

But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with a doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58:6.

Past Experience

Experience in friendly visiting has been self-rewarding to those who have undertaken this part of the Master's work. We have found satisfaction beyond expression. We have visited for the sake of just being friendly. We have visited that our friends might know that as a church we are a friendly people. We have visited that we might share our hope in the gospel. We have visited in an effort to encourage weak or fallen friends. We have gone into homes to help alleviate the ills of those in need. All this has given us joy immeasurable. In short, we have been attempting to let our light shine through our friendly visiting and as a result have won the interest of many of our friends to the church because of our friendliness.

Today's Call

Today the call comes to go into the homes of our neighbors and friends and witness for Christ. This demands more than just being neighborly. It calls for our deep concern, our pure love, our true anxiety for souls, and our humble prayers. This together with the personal requirements, is expressed in latter-day revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 4:

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day; therefore, if ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white ready to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.

Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.

From this we gain the following requirements for friendly visiting:

1. Having a desire to help.
2. Loving each other and the church.
3. Being an example of a godly person at all times.
4. Seeking wisdom through study.
5. Having faith in other people.
6. Visiting with a cheerful, hopeful attitude.
7. Having charity and kindness for others.
8. Being diligent and constant yet temperate in one's efforts.
9. Being humble and prayerful in the work.
10. Being willing to serve now "for the field is white."

The Reward

If the reward were all we receive here on earth, it would still be of profit to us. If we must give thought to reward, this assurance comes to us in the Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3.

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth. And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

This seems to indicate that both souls will be saved—the one who is converted and the one who helps bring about the conversion.

We are homemakers, yet we are called to be friendly visitors. This does not mean we must be either a homemaker or a friendly visitor; we must be both. However, we do not work alone; we have God to help us. With the coming of the new year, let us be ready to join the forces of the friendly visitors who are already at work.

She married James Reid, then a member of the Territorial Governor's Cabinet. This added to her life many interesting social obligations.

Her first love—her church and its simple life—brought its reward in the baptism of her husband. They moved from Honolulu to California in 1943 and now live in San Lorenzo. They are members of the San Leandro Mission of the East Bay Branch. This year she was elected director of dramatics for the mission and is also church school pianist. Her heart is full of love for all people. Wherever there is a piano, Leilani will be found surrounded by a happy, singing group. She particularly likes to sing the songs of the Islands, and clings to her native style of cooking, which delights her friends.

In her own words, "Moving to California has been my greatest blessing. I feel I have accomplished my mission in life. I have really learned to cook, sew, can, and keep a house spic and span.—And talk about Hawaiian hospitality! I have found the same reception with all the new friends and neighbors here in California. If any members come our way, our home is welcome to them. My one desire is that my companion and I will be faithful to God's cause to the very end of our lives."

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—A district conference was held December 10 and 11 at Fayette City, Pennsylvania. Seventy Merle P. Guthrie was present. The theme of the conference was "Our Gift."

The first meeting was held Saturday afternoon by the department of women. Mrs. Ruth Snider, district leader, was in charge. Saturday evening a program was given by the Zion's League. At this time the priesthood met with Seventy Merle Guthrie in the basement of the church.

Sunday's activities included a fellowship service at 9:15, following this, a sermon at 11:00 by Seventy Merle Guthrie. In the afternoon Elder Donald R. Ross, district church school director, met with the teachers. At 2:30 a musical program was given under the direction of Mrs. Margaret Raisbeck.

During the conference the ordination of Samuel Coughenouer to the office of deacon was approved. The ordination will take place December 18.—Reported by DOROTHY RAISBECK.

RIO GRANDE VALLEY, TEXAS.—Brother Darrell Wilson baptized three children of the Rio Grande Valley Junior Department November 20. The candidates were: Jimmy Best, Patrick, and Katharine Otis. Pastor Gene Bowden was in charge of the service.

Gene Bowden and Assistant Pastor J. E. Wilder confirmed these new members the following Sunday, November 27.—Reported by CARLEE J. WILSON.

PROTON STATION, ONTARIO.—On October 16, Robert Black was called to the office of elder, and William Goheen to the office of deacon. These ordinations took place November 13 by Elders Gordon Farrow, Alex Cadwell, Robert Farthing, and W. P. Ellis.

On November 18 the young people of the church presented a minstrel show.—Reported by MRS. DELL BLACK.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—On January 1 fifty Saints met to organize a mission. John Stiegel moved and Charles Shippy seconded the motion for organization. The vote was unanimous. The Davenport Branch was disorganized in 1933.

Lyle W. Woodstock, district president of the Rock Island District, presided over the meeting and introduced Apostle D. T. Williams, missionary in charge. Brother Williams presented the greetings from the First Presidency and the church in general. Brothers Charles Shippy and Fred Bevan were made assistants to the district president.

Apostle D. T. Williams was in charge of the Communion service. Those assisting were E. R. Williams, Lyle W. Woodstock, John Stiegel, Fred Bevan, Charles Shippy, Warren Hinkle, David Shippy, B. A. Howard, and George Shippy.

Convenient and comfortable rooms have been loaned to the Saints for their meetings by the Lend-A-Hand Club. An offering of $36.40 and an oblation offering of $32.65 were taken at the 10 o'clock service.

L. Rhoads, publicity agent; and Charlie Turley, church school superintendent.

Zion's League officers for the coming year are Opal Woods, president; Viola Riley, vice-president; Arlie M. Puckett, secretary-treasurer; and Carolyn Rhoads, pianist.

The Southern Ohio District Zion's League rally was held December 11. Seventy Loyd Adams and Elder Wayne Wuse supervised the program, the theme being, "We Explore the Church." Dinner was served by the branch to one hundred members and friends.

On December 4 Mrs. Mary Crum, Rhea Ruth Rhoads, Norma Ann and Linda Rhoads were baptized. They were confirmed the following Wednesday evening.—Reported by VELMA L. RHOADS.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—The First Church council met December 11 with Brother and Sister Loren McDole. On December 18 the College Students had a smorgasborg at the home of Don Leland.

The sale of our church building was approved December 4. Arrangements will be completed soon for the church to be vacated.

The children presented a Christmas program at the church on December 23. They were treated by the branch.

The La-Da-Sa Club met in the church. Each member brought a gift for the nursery.

The basketball team plays each week with other churches.—Reported by JESSIE EARL.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA. — Fifty-eight people were baptized during 1949. A second site for the new church was purchased for $20,000, and the first site was sold at a profit of at least $1,000. The building fund was increased by $30,158.45. During the last four years the branch has raised $118,728.

STONE CHURCH. — Theresa Denice, daughter of Bert H. and Eleanor (Moorman) Sartwell, was blessed on January 8 by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Clyde Hastings.

Constance Lee Austin, daughter of Billy A. and Evelyn Lorraine (Lunguetz) Austin was blessed on January 4 by Elders Glaude A. Smith and E. E. Stonger.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT. — Seventy Merle Guthrie has worked with the District President Robert E. Rodgers and counselors Elders Samuel Zonker and Wayne Wilson in organizing official visits to the various branches in the district, conducting conference and departmental meetings.

The ministry of the district has been strengthened by the calls and ordination of ten brethren to the priesthood in the past three months. Those ordained are: elders: Cletus R. Swick of Clarksburg and Leonard G. Pack of Beckley; priests: Lawrence Phillips of Clarksburg, Henry Simon of Fairview, Hubert Hinkle of Beckley, Carl Anderson of Clarksburg, Harold McFarland of Wheeling; teacher: Charles Dobbs of Fairview; deacons: James Swick of Clarksburg, and Frank Sampson of Fairview.

The following officers were elected: Elder Clyde S. Rice of Parkersburg, church school director; Sister May R. Griffin of Parkersburg, secretary-treasurer, historian, and non-resident supervisor; Sister Blanche Martin of Wheeling, women's department leader; Lawrence Phillips of Clarksburg, young people's leader; Margaret C. Pack of Beckley, reporter; Anna Schoenian of Moundsville, chorister; Delores Klukas of Moundsville, assistant chorister; and Cheon Marlene of Moundsville, pianist.—Reported by MARGARET C. PACK.

We Need a New Name for the Blue Bird Program

By EDNA EASTER

YES, WE ARE very well satisfied with the name Blue Birds, yet we hope to be able to find another name that will be liked even better.

For some time we have known a change should be made out of courtesy to the Camp Fire organization, which since 1913 has called the program for younger girls the Blue Bird program. It was several years later that our church began its Blue Bird organization. In fairness to those in the church who selected this name, we wish to state we are very certain it was adopted without knowledge that the Camp Fire organization had already been using it.

Camp Fire officials have been very courteous with us all these years, even though they recognize they have priority on the name. Relationships with them have been excellent. At present the requirements of our program are being revised, and a new book will be printed. We think this an opportune time to make a change in the name.

We need help on the selection of a new name and invite suggestions from all: Blue Bird Girls, Oriole Girls, girls in the national organizations, boys and girls' leaders, and others.

The new name should sound pleasing. Try it in such combinations as: — girls; — program; — awards; — activities, etc. It should be easy for young girls to pronounce, spell, and understand. The new name need not be restricted to a bird even though the older girls' program is the Oriole program. If a bird is chosen, it should be one of good habits. The starling, for instance, has a beautiful name but is noisy and destructive to other bird life.

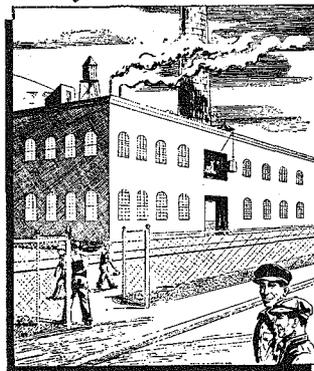

The Blue Bird uniform, at present, is bright blue, with red and white collar. The uniform is very attractive and should be retained, if possible. If however, it has to be changed, it should harmonize satisfactorily with the Oriole uniform which is jade green with orange tie.

What is your suggestion for a name? Even though you may think it isn't very good, send it in. It may have greater possibilities than you think. If you have ideas on uniforms, symbolism of the name, or other suggestions, please include these also. Address a post card or letter to

Department of Religious Education
The Auditorium
Independence, Missouri

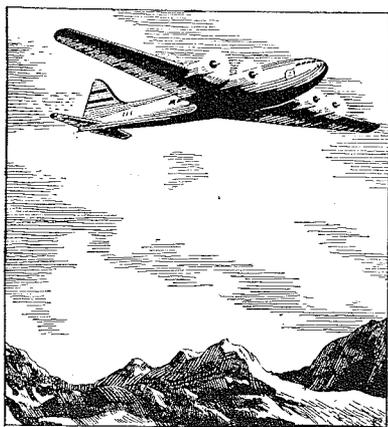

May God be with us in the selection of a new name. May his work go forward in the lives of the many young girls of our church, and may the girls' activity program assist the parents and the church to that end.

A RIBBON OF CONCRETE, shimmering in the autumn sun, fell away beneath the broad wings of the transcontinental airliner as the powerful, surging engines drew us through the broad expanse of cloud-filled blue toward a destination far away. Molecules of air parted to give passage and support to the gleaming silver planes that provided bouyancy to an intricate mass of man's wizardry and enabled us to speed to distant points in a matter of minutes over the same terrain that blocked the passage of the open and Conestoga wagons requiring months and miles of hardships. As the clouds formed marching lines on the ever-broadening expanse of the horizon, the dull drone of mighty engines lulled the complacent passengers to an anesthetic state. The scene was broken by the patchwork of the fields below, tinted by the autumnal Hand, and the serene orderliness of villages and towns which lay, tiny as an infinitesimal fairyland, amidst the brilliance of October and belied, from our vantage, the scurrying people who inhabited them. Now and then a silvery ribbon slid across the greensward as a courier tracing his path by the light of a flaming torch brought a message of peace or summons to a sleeping countryside.

The plane droned on and the square of the window formed the screen over which passed a never-ceasing panorama testifying to the presence of an eternal Creator capable of devising law and order in the complexity of the universe and of breathing into it the spark which science has never been able to synthesize—life. Upon the transforming spectral of the earth the sun shone so many miles away that man could travel years at a speed of 186,000 miles a second and yet not reach it. The very atmosphere about us formed the medium through which wind currents flowed setting up pressures and aiding evaporation and condensation that give rain to a thirsty earth and snow to harassed motorists.

AS THE EVIDENCES of might passed in review through wonder and beauty-numbed eyes to a grasping mind came the eternal question. "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" Job fought with the same question and found his reward. With unconquerable courage, he fought to find the answer to the question of why the righteous must suffer. He rebelled for a time against the unreasonableness of fate which threatened to reduce him to poverty and ignominy at a time when, in terms of the world, he had "everything." Here was a righteous man suffering. "Evidently there must be some sin of which he is guilty," pleaded Yophar, Bildad, and Eliphaz. Out of the stillness came the voice of God telling the suffering Job of a great conception of the universe and his relation to it. Job found his God again, not in answer to a Christmas-candy-for-being-good way, but in a larger spiritual fellowship which saw that mankind's errors were often responsible for the suffering of the individual as well as sin in a personal sense. A humble, searching Job found not an answer to a question in argument, but as his soul in humility and repentance in the presence of the works of God became infused and responsive to the movings of God's Spirit, he came to the larger realization that the fellowship of the Spirit itself could lead men to walk with a God they could not always understand nor fathom; and from that walk would come the strengthening power of the spirit to lead them on to new truth. The three friends who wished to help were "miserable comforters" in comparison to the kindling power of God. Platitudes are always poor substitutes for power of life.

WHILE THUS REVIEWING these philosophical musings, I saw the stewardess coming with the noon meal while we were high above the verdant prairies of the vast Middle West. Stewardess . . . stewardess . . . steward! The word came in interesting perspective in the light of the panoramic musings which were transpiring with each turn of the giant propellers. Stewards, that was it; God had made us stewards—those who watch over and care for the property of another—over the vast creation which was speeding past in myriads of beauty and wonder. As Job had been a steward, so were we. Stewardship, then, was to be one of the unique fundamentals of the Restoration. This is where we fitted into the pattern of the universe—not man the individual, but man the species. All men collectively were to be stewards over a portion of the total of Creation. Certainly not a new finding, but one which each individual must make before the compliance with order can be fulfilled. Cain and Abel found it; the people of Judah found and forgot it; people of modern day must find it in the Zionite process of the Restoration. The Zionite community will find no one suffering as Job because of the sins of others, for as consecrated stewards in the kingdom,

When Thou Art Converted

By PAUL R. SMITH

ONE OF THE STOCK-IN-TRADE PHRASES of the old-time preachers was "Get converted." The term was rather loosely applied to all persons who claimed to have been touched by the Spirit. Today it has fallen into disuse to a great extent, and only now and then is it brought to our attention.

On our big electrical lines of today, we have power converters or transformers that take the power off the lines carrying thousands of volts and transforms it into low potential energy which can be used in our homes to do our washing, and a hundred other jobs we used to do by hand.

Being converted in the spiritual sense is similar to this in many respects. One who is truly converted is able to tap the limitless reservoir of spiritual power and change that power into suitable energy which will shine out in the darkness of the world with a radiance incomparable to anything in the realm of carnal experience.

ONE OF THE TRULY GREAT STORIES of being converted comes from the Scriptures, and, strangely enough, it concerns one of Jesus' own disciples, Peter. You will remember how Jesus, walking along the seashore, saw Peter and Andrew putting a net into the sea. He spoke to them and said, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." And they left their nets and followed him. What is strange about that story? Nothing, perhaps, except that Peter wasn't converted at all, at least not at that time. He became one of the disciples and followed Jesus about from place to place, trying to be like him, hoping to be able to perform some of the great miracles his master did. Peter was the impatient one, always ready to act on any suggestion and, as so many of us, always willing to give lip service to his Lord, yet slow to do the things he knew in his heart he should do.

Perhaps Peter thought he had come a long way from his fishing nets. Jesus had made of him a fisher of men, as he said he would. After all the glorious experiences he had known, surely Peter thought he was the one to give counsel. Probably it was deflating for him to sit at the table with the rest of the twelve and have the Master turn to him and say, "Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift the children of the kingdom as wheat. But I have prayed for you, that your faith fail not, and when you are converted, strengthen your brethren."—Luke 22: 31, 32.

He thought of the miles they had walked together from town to town, the many miracles, and the time Jesus had bid him come to meet him on the water. Yes, his faith had failed there, but at least he had at that time exercised more faith than any of the other disciples. That was a long time ago, and he had learned much since then. Now, why should the Master be so concerned about his faith? And being converted? He must be joking! Would he have followed this long had he not been converted? Could it be possible?

And so Peter replied, "Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death."

But the Lord, knowing Peter, saw that even though his intentions were good, he could not stand a real test.

THEY LEFT that supper, and the soldiers came and took Jesus away, and Peter, bewildered by all that was happening, followed afar off. The realities of life moved in upon the scene and crowded out the memories of their conversation earlier in the evening. Busy with his own thoughts, he scarcely knew what was going on about him until he was observed by others in the crowd who questioned him. Here he was alone—without a soul to help defend the cause. No telling what this mob might do. Jesus was in the judgment hall and wouldn't know anything about his conduct, so it might be better, considering the circumstances, to be just an onlooker. "Know him?" "No, not I." And not until the third denial when the cock crowed did the memory of their conversation flood his mind, and he realized how truly Jesus had spoken—how little he really knew Jesus. Peter went out and wept bitterly.

He wept, not so much because he had denied his Lord, but because, for the first time in his life, he was made dynamically aware of the depth and fullness of God's love, and he knew what Jesus meant when He said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." For the first time he saw himself as God saw him—poor, weak, and frail in spiritual stature. He knew then that Jesus saw all this in him and still loved him, still wanted him to be an apostle, an ambassador of the kingdom, and with it came the realization that even on his way to the cross, Christ was not so much concerned about himself as he was this poor, thoughtless disciple. Such love, expressed in this manner, brought him down to the depths of humility and transformed him into a useful servant.

IT WAS NOT until after the resurrection of Jesus that the final act of transformation was accomplished. John tells us of another dinner the disciples had with their Master when he again turned to Peter and said, "Peter, lovest thou me?" He knew now what love meant. How could he answer such a question? Could he ever forget that lesson of love? "Lovest thou me?" Feeling this divine love burning deep within his own soul and being a little afraid that the Master might not think he had learned his lesson, he said, "Thou knowest that I love thee." Peter had been converted.

But this was not enough. There was a responsibility attached to the knowledge he now possessed. "Feed my sheep. Feed my lambs. Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

In effect, Christ was saying, "Peter, you know now what divine love is. I have revealed it to you; my Father in heaven has revealed it to you. Now you go out and become a living revelation of this kind of love to the world, a world that is dying—burning its heart out for an expression of this kind of love. It will not be easy; you will go through Gethsemane, and it will cost you more than you ever thought you could pay—position, prestige, material wealth, maybe even cost your life—but it will be worth it."

So Peter and the other disciples went out and did as they were commanded. He later wrote in his second epistle to the church:

For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

Thus from the poor fisherman of Galilee came one of the greatest testimonies of the Scriptures, "We saw, we heard, and we know these things to be true."

Peter had been converted.

A Work for Us

"Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in," are words from an exultant song of Isaiah. Are we "keepers of the truth"? Was not the Book of Mormon given in part for the purpose of converting the Jews?

That not all of the Jews will embrace our religion nor any other Christian sect is obvious from the statement that when Jesus comes to Mount Olivet, and the Jews see him, they are going to be amazed and sorrowful because of the wounds in his hands. But there will be some who will hear, especially if we go forward in zeal and fervor to carry out our social philosophies in practice rather than in word only. If we could say to them:

"We are doing all you are doing. We are cherishing our aged, caring for our widows and orphans, our poor and sick. We give every child an equal opportunity, taking care of his personality, making sure that his spirit is not warped and his mind made bitter, if he has to have a little more help than others.

"We have been able to do this because of the revelation of God to us. Firstly he called upon the rich and the learned and together we prepared, as you have done, a feast of fat things for the poor and unfortunate.

"But we have this more than you have and would share it with you. We have the voice of your own brethren whispering low from the dust."

blessed? Were they not sent to make us see true values? Have they not opened our minds and hearts for the everlasting word?

"Behold, the field is ripe, already to harvest. . . ."

This prophecy was never more true than in the case of the German people. Fate has dealt cruel blows to most of them. It has shaken them out of their indifference and shown them the need for something big and strong and beautiful to become the pivot of their lives.

And what could serve this end better than the teachings of our church? The church "as large as the ideals of our Master himself." The church that embodies love, kindness, truth, and beauty.

Yes, suffering has helped to spread the gospel, but something else has too. The example of our brothers and sisters in America, who have shown by their actions that religion to them meant not just lip service but living the great commandments of Christ.

This is, in my opinion, the explanation for the quick growth of the church in Germany. May it keep on growing, bringing peace and happiness to all people.

each individual will make his own agreement with the order and process of the universe so that all creation lives and functions in a manner which produces an exalted companionship between God and mankind. All things in the physical universe aid man in his never-ending search to define and understand the Creator and his purpose. All of man is so constructed as to place man in a position to receive the enlightenment of the Spirit of creation as it works in them toward the emblem of creature perfection.

In all of the aspects of religion, none is so vital as this cognizance of stewardship and its consecrated practice in everyday living. Zion waits upon the men and women of the kingdom to make the best and most efficient use of time, talents, and economic possessions. The peace of the world waits upon men to open the stewardship of the heart of responsive motivation by the Spirit of God, the universal, immutable Creator. The experience of enlightenment comes in moments of exaltation; the problem of stewardship remains that of transferring the motivation of inspiration into the deeds of common occurrence which give untarnished evidence of the source of the motivation and give other men the desire to seek for themselves the fountain of unending joy, peace, happiness, and prosperity not because of a reward for righteousness but because the spiritual fellowship so richly shared with the Creator is reward enough in itself to enable men to overcome the sin and unhappiness which they and others strew in the paths of mankind.

As stewards of the latter days, we might do well to make the Savior our guide and adopt for our motto this sentence by the French churchman, Fénelon: "The smallest things become great when God requires them of us."

4. Improvements—adequate size, nature and location, state of repair, well, pond, etc.
5. Physical factors—topography, shape of fields, woods, state of erosion, presence of rocks, gulleys, etc.
6. Natural resources—coal, timber, and woods.
7. General efficiency compared with that of neighborhood (this can greatly influence the productive value already figured).
8. Home uses.
 - (a) House and yard adequate—in good repair, desirable type, location and arrangement.
 - (b) Church and schools—these are very important.
 - (c) Nuisances—odors from dumps, near night clubs, etc.
 - (d) Recreational and scenic values.
9. Bonded indebtedness of the areas—(a factor often overlooked).
 - (a) School, drainage, or levee.

Other values to be taken into consideration with productive values are normal or basic values and the present value; however, the productive value is most reliable for future payments.

SOME THINGS TO REMEMBER

It is usually cheaper to purchase farms with good buildings, fences, and other improvements than to put them there after buying. The same is true of fertility. Level topography is desirable for machinery. The average cost of terracing is approximately $20 per acre. If the land is in need of terracing, contouring pays good dividends but should be taken into consideration when purchasing the farm. If the land is valued at $80 per acre it will cost approximately $100 per acre by the time it has been terraced. The average pond in Missouri costs approximately $250 and has been estimated by the farmers themselves to be worth $500 or double the cost—this is an excellent investment.

SPECIAL THINGS TO WATCH FOR

1. Rough, poor land is usually overvalued.
2. Farms of low fertility in highly fertile areas are usually overvalued.
3. Good farms in run-down areas are often undervalued.

Helping the new farmer to get a right start will influence greatly the life cycle of the rural church. Helping tenant farmers to own their own farms through proper buying will determine the value of the community.

 PENS

The editor's hobby is pens. Among the gifts that appeared in his Christmas stocking was a ball point pen with three noses, each a different color. The writer selects a color, pushes a button, and the tip appears, ready for action. There is blue for gains, red for losses, and green for the times when nobody knows what it is. . . . It would be nice to carry, but the editor is afraid of it. The last time he got a ball pointer it exploded and left the mark of the beast all over his shirt pocket. Ink is something of which a little bit goes a very long way, especially in the wrong direction.

 SOULS THAT SEE

Two inspiring letters have come to the office from contributors to "Stepping Stones." Both have lost their eyesight. Sister Jennie Elliott of Kansas City, whose work has appeared in the "Herald" writes, "I am so glad you are letting me write for you, and I am glad you think I have talent for it. Maybe I can do some good that way. I have so little of everything to give but time."

Iva May Speed of Salem, Oregon, lost her sight in an accident when she was eight years old. She attended a state school, where she was prepared for a new way of life, and was able to return to high school and finished with regular classes. After holding a job for some time she will go to college next fall. Of her school she writes, "One of the most important things we learned there, I think, was to get along with people. We had Eskimos, Indians, Chinese, and Negroes as well as white children for classmates. Because we were 'all in the same boat,' we found it easy to learn the lesson of tolerance, and made many lasting friendships."

It is good that when such people have lost their sight, God is able to give them power that "their souls may see."

 THE TIE THAT BINDS

These are the months that the gentlemen you know are wearing the ties they received for Christmas. In spite of the wretched patterns and bold color clashes the stores offered last fall, the ladies managed to make some rather fine selections for the men. . . . Uncle Joe received only two this Christmas, which surprised him. But he is thankful that one of them is something he can dare to wear to church!

 MUSIC

The radio philharmonic orchestra, on a recent Sunday, played two beautiful pieces, a concerto and a symphony by Schumann. That was heavenly. There was a little time left in which they played a modern noisy decomposition that sounded like an accident in a boiler factory. And that was . . . will you supply your own words, please? We are still living in hope that somebody will explain it so we can like it. Is there a difference between noise made by an orchestra, and that made by an angry cat or a small boy playing with junk?

Even so, modern music is superior to the "bebop" and "woo-woo" often heard on popular programs. We wish that more and more of our people would listen to the better programs of classical music. Good musical taste is one of the marks of ascending cultural and spiritual values in the individual.

"Pray for Me"

In each issue of the Herald there is one or more requests for prayers. To the casual reader this may seem formal and unimportant. When our own loved ones are stricken and medical science admits defeat, all the casualness and formality suddenly is gone. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Should we wait till we are forced to our knees to join this prayer union? The selfishness of those who do may rise to taunt them.

Why not join the group of the faithful who consciously and regularly help to carry our brother's burden through prayer. "Pray for me" may thus become a chain of love and power. Each prayer will be a link to hold us tighter to our fellow men and to our Heavenly Father.

Introducing...

JOY DUANE ANDERSON, Kansas City, Missouri, (page 5) was born in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, in 1915. He was baptized in Independence, Missouri, in 1923. In 1942 he married Marna Jayne Holmes. They have two daughters: Marlys Joy, 3, and Janis Elaine, 1.

He received his secondary education at Joplin Junior College and Kansas City University and took extension work with the University of Iowa. His hobbies are woodwork, pen and pencil drawing, and water coloring.

He was ordained a priest in 1939, an elder in 1940, a seventy in 1944, and a high priest in 1946. He was under appointment as a missionary from October, 1940, to 1942; then was appointed pastor at Cameron, Missouri, where he remained until he was transferred to the Joplin, Missouri, pastorate in June, 1944. He labored there until his appointment as President of Kansas City Stake, where he has been since May 12, 1946.

WARD A. HOUGAS, Denver, Colorado, (page 10) was born in Henderson, Iowa, in 1895. He graduated from the Macedonia (Iowa) High School in 1911; from Graceland in 1915; and received his B.S. degree from Iowa State College in 1917. He has since taken work in agriculture and journalism at Central Missouri State College; Missouri University; and Hamilton College of Law (extension) in Chicago. His hobby is photography.

In his youth he did farm work, then in turn became banker, editor, Herald Manager, and General Conference appointee. He was part owner, as well as editor of the Holyoke, Colorado, Enterprise from 1925 to 1930. He managed the Herald Publishing House from 1932 to 1936, was president of Far West Stake from 1930 to 1934, and president of Central Missouri Stake from 1944 to 1949. He is now president of the Eastern Colorado District. Since 1932 he has been President of the Quorum of High Priests.

WILFORD GARR WINHOLTZ, Chicago, Illinois, (page 13) was born in Ogden, Utah, in 1917. He was graduated from the Ogden High School in 1934 and from Weber Junior College in 1936. He received his B.S. in Engineering from the University of Utah in 1938; and his M.S. in City Planning and Industrial Relations from Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in 1943. He continued his graduate study at Harvard University in 1943, and in the Kansas City Art Institute and University of Kansas City in 1944 and 1945. Since 1947 he has worked at the University of Chicago toward a Doctor's Degree in Planning.

In 1942 he married Beulah Verena Madsen. They have two children: Wilford, Jr., 5, and Lynn Ann, 3.

Brother Winholtz holds membership in several clubs, including the American Society of Planning Officials, the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Society of Military Engineers; and two national fraternities. He is the youngest member of the Board of Governors of the City Club of Chicago.

He was ordained an elder in 1939 and served as counselor to the Utah District President and pastor of the Provo Branch. He has been pastor of the Central Chicago Branch since 1948.

News & Notes

BISHOP KOEHLER

Bishop J. A. Koehler visited Butler and Rich Hill, Missouri, on December 31 and January 1. He spoke to the priesthood at Rich Hill concerning the special financial emphases program the branch will have during the month of January. He attended the Communion service in Butler, and preached there on the evening of January 1.

IMPORTANT MEETINGS

Because most of the apostles are in Independence attending the Quorum of Twelve Session, two meetings of the Joint Council have been held during the week of January 2.

PRESIDENT AND MRS. EDWARDS

The Stake Priesthood Conference was held in Lamoni on January 8. President Edwards conducted a class on "Ministry Includes Our Own Home." Mrs. Edwards taught a class of wives of the priesthood members on the subject, "We Share Our Husbands' Ministry."

APOSTLE HANSON IN LAMONI

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, president of the Quorum of Twelve, showed Kodachrome slides in the Coliseum in Lamoni on the evening of January 8. The slides about archaeology were taken on his recent trip to South America. The subject for the evening's talk was "In the Land of the Incas."

ABOUT JAPAN

Richard D. Yennie, who acted as a Japanese interpreter for both British and American occupational authorities in World War II, spoke in the evening of January 8 at the Englewood Church. Mr. Yennie spoke on the topic, "Japan As I Saw It." He displayed many of the interesting relics he had brought home to Independence from Japan.

PRIESTHOOD COMMUNION SERVICE

On January 10, 440 members of the priesthood in Independence attended the Communion service held in the Stone Church. This meeting, the largest gathering of local priesthood members, was held at the conclusion of the Melchisedec and Aaronic training schools. Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke on the theme, "This Do in Remembrance of Me."

TITHEPAYERS

The Bishopric reports that this week finds the tithepayers service department very busy making the final count of the tithing statements for 1949. The original goal of 12,000 statement filers has been exceeded by at least several hundred. The announcement of the total count of the statements received for 1949 is expected to be announced soon.

RELIGIOUS SURVEY

Elder Glaude A. Smith, pastor of the Stone Church, is chairman of the committee that will handle the survey of Independence on January 22 when there will be a nation-wide religious survey. The census is being sponsored by the Independence Ministerial Alliance. The Alliance held its monthly breakfast meeting at the Women's Center on January 10.

ELDER EVAN FRY

The "Independence Examiner" of Independence, Missouri, carried a lengthy article about Elder Evan Fry. It told about his church and radio work, and about his many community activities. It said, "His outstanding characteristic is described as a willingness to go to great lengths to help people with their problems when most folk would not care to be bothered with them."

Ratify Your Calling

God calls us, not in recognition of what we are, but in hope of what we may become.

All Are Called

Our February theme reminds us that we occasionally find members who think that only members of the priesthood are called into the service of God, and that the others may rely upon them to carry the burdens and take care of the responsibilities. That this is not the intention of God is attested by the inspired utterances and writings given through his servants in both ancient and modern times. Paul made this clear to the Corinthian saints:

To them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord.—I Corinthians 1: 2.

In the latter days, the words of the Lord have been given to us by the voice of prophecy:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Here the divine intention is again made clear. Those who are engaged in secular life are called as truly as those who give full time to the work of the church. The word all is completely inclusive, taking in both ministry and membership, men and women.

The Meaning of the Call

The call of God is not only a summons to work and service, it is an invitation to a high privilege and a great happiness. John exclaimed:

Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God.—I John 3: 1.

Peter wrote,

According as his divine power hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue.—II Peter 1: 2, 3.

Paul said,

Among whom are ye also the called of Jesus Christ . . . beloved of God, called to be saints.—Romans 1: 6, 7.

These are not the orders of a master to his servants. They are the calls of a loving Heavenly Father to his wandering children to come home to him.

Our Responsibilities

God expects his children, as any earthly parent would, to grow into maturity in the normal way. He wants us to have character, richness of personality, and a capacity for useful service. Parents rejoice when their children grow up to noble, useful citizenship. So does God. In a world where there is so much to be done for so many of his children, he looks forward to the time when we can and will gladly assist him. It is the child's privilege to reward the parent who has given all to him. So Peter said, Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall.—II Peter 1: 10.

Moffatt translates the passage thus:

So be the more eager, brothers, to ratify your calling and election.

It is with this that we are concerned: that the members of the church shall "ratify" their calling in the way God intended. Our "calling" is a covenant which God offers to us, in which he promises to give the love and care of an all-powerful Father to us. We can ratify that covenant by accepting his guidance and protection, and entering into his service.

How We May Ratify

God calls us, not in recognition of what we are, but in hope of what we may become.

He gave us the capacity to grow—to become, as John said, "power to become the sons of God" (John 1: 12).

It was in reference to this fact that Paul made the statement, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ."—Philippians 3: 14.

First, we can accept the call. We acknowledge God to be our father. We submit ourselves to his protection from the powers of darkness and destruction in the universe, and from the evil that is in this world. We accept God's defense and take refuge in his love.

Second, we undertake to prepare ourselves in the training and perfecting of our talents so we shall be able to engage in a skillful way in the work he has for us to do.

Third, as soon as possible in the course of our development, we begin to serve. We do not wait for the completion of our learning, for we shall be learning all the rest of our lives. We serve while training. We are not like those who are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (II Timothy 3: 7).

This Hour in History

The forces of the kingdom of God are matching their strength against the greatest powers of destruction, physical and spiritual, ever known to man. What shall we contribute to the titanic struggle that is even now taking place, and that is preparing before us in the immediate future? Let it not be said that we stood on the side lines, or fought on the wrong side, when that battle is done. For the cause of righteousness is counting its forces, and our destiny will depend upon whose colors we wear. L. J. L.

Accommodations at General Conference
April 2-9, Inclusive

The General Conference Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Housing Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Those who desire the Housing Committee to make arrangements for rooms should mail their letters to the Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following details are required:

1. Name of each person in party.
2. Number rooms required.
3. Day of arrival.
4. Length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, whether willing to share a room.
6. Whether a delegate to the Conference.

As a word of caution, may we suggest that persons arriving for Conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By F. Henry Edwards.

COMPARATIVE REPORT ON GENERAL CHURCH INCOME FOR ELEVEN MONTHS, 1948 AND 1949

We are submitting herewith the following comparative report of General Church Income for Eleven Months, for the years 1948 and 1949:

	1948	1949	January 3, 1950 Gain or (Loss)
January	$127,693.99	$147,928.49	$ 20,234.50
February	106,159.28	105,070.09	(1,089.19)
March	82,942.45	87,931.32	4,988.87
April	75,303.15	83,542.28	8,239.13
May	78,055.03	72,177.66	(5,877.37)
June	79,502.20	63,925.78	(15,576.42)
July	62,837.97	76,336.83	13,498.86
August	69,936.63	62,457.49	(7,479.14)
September	65,602.29	73,514.76	7,912.47
October	79,132.75	87,964.03	8,831.28
November	85,704.55	80,400.99	(5,303.56)
	$912,870.29	$941,249.72	$ 28,379.43

While it will be some little time before the books are closed for the year, it would appear that the income for 1949 will approximate that of 1948.

G. L. DELAPP,
Presiding Bishopric.

This report is late but not untimely I trust.

During the late months of last year, I was away from Independence almost every week end. As a result, routine and other office cares mounted until I gradually found myself quite incapable of keeping these "logs" up to date.

Tulsa

In my last, I told about the dedication at Skiatook on October 16, where we had a very enjoyable time.

Since there was no evening service scheduled at Skiatook, by prearrangement with Elder Victor J. Witte, district president and pastor at Tulsa, Brother Witte, Bishop L. W. Kohlman, and I returned to Tulsa where the few hours before train departure were well spent.

First we had refreshments at Brother Witte's home, with a number of the Saints as guests, then we went to the church. There the junior choir gave ministry of song; Brother Witte was in charge of the meeting, Bishop Kohlman assisted, and I addressed a crowded house on a special Latter Day Saint subject.

This was my first visit to the branch at Tulsa, and I was favorably impressed with the church building and its facilities. There I met many old friends and the sons and daughters of some who have passed to the beyond, among them some of the grandchildren of Hudson Harder who lived at Lamoni when I was a boy.

I entrained near midnight and was home in the morning.

Owendale Dedication

My next appointment took me up into the "thumb" of Michigan. This required an early departure from home. Going via Chicago and Port Huron, I was met at Port Huron by Elder Warren Chelline, pastor of the church there, and Elder J. C. Phillips, district president. During our visit, Brother Chelline asked me to officiate at his wedding. After dinner Brother Phillips drove me to Sandusky where I spent the night at the home of Sister Finkbeiner and her husband. Sister Finkbeiner was a Booth; her mother was a Campbell. Mr. Finkbeiner is not a member, but gives liberally of his time and means. He is mayor of Sandusky. I was pleased to get acquainted with these good people and their two interesting children.

After an early breakfast, I was away again with Elder Phillips, this time to

The Hereafter

By J. D. ANDERSON

OF ALL THE GREAT STATEMENTS of Scripture, few are any more inspiring and productive of hope than this one: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23. According to Joseph Smith, these words were spoken to Moses as part of a great revelation which was concerned with the purposes of God and the creation of men. We find them most heartening and comforting, for they reassure us that God's chief business is the eventual destiny of man. If we accept this Scripture as being an accurate expression of the heart of God, we should attempt to comprehend its meaning more fully.

Immortality

Immortality is the quality or state of being immortal, or not enduring death. Death, according to the Scriptures, is the separation of body and spirit, the division of spirit and element. Thus it brings about a cessation of physical sensation, action, and consciousness, but the Scriptures declare that some degree of sensation and consciousness is experienced in the bodiless state we shall know between death and the resurrection. Yet, there is to be no complete satisfaction or fullness of joy as long as we are in a bodiless condition.

There are many who now hold that the concept of the resurrection which offers hope of being reunited with our bodies, even though in a glorified form, is a doctrine borrowed from paganism. These people believe that those who hold to such a concept of the resurrection are immature and unenlightened. Their idea is that the resurrection is a spiritual quickening and nothing more. I cannot accept any such spiritualization of the clear revelation concerning the resurrection, for I see in Scripture clear evidence to support the concept of dualism as far as man's make-up is concerned, whether he be mortal or immortal. In the Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5, this dualism is set forth in these words: "Man was also in the beginning with God Man is spirit. The elements are eternal, and spirit and element inseparably connected receiveth a fullness of joy. And when separated, man cannot receive a fullness of joy." Apparently there is a form of spiritual existence, but for complete joy and happiness men must await the day when their spirits shall be inseparably united with a glorious but nevertheless material body which is formed of the eternal elements of the universe, which form is indestructible. In section 85 of the Doctrine and Covenants we find these words: "The spirit and the body is the soul of man, and the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul." And even though, in paragraph 6, we are told that the righteous shall rise again with a spiritual body, this term cannot be interpreted in the light of all the other Scriptures to mean that this body is without real form or substance, for that statement is immediately followed by "They who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was the natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened."

Alma taught his sons this same principle:

The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame For it is requisite that all things shall be restored to their proper order. Behold, it is requisite and just, according to the power and resurrection of Christ that the soul of man shall be restored to its body. And every part of the body shall be restored to itself.—Alma 19: 58-65.

In the Book of Mormon, II Nephi 6: 6, 7, we find these words: "Ye know that our flesh must waste away and die; nevertheless, in our bodies, we shall see God."

Apostle Paul declared:

But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.—I Corinthians 15: 13, 14, 52, 53.

While I do not believe that our glorified body must contain the identical elements of which our body is composed at the time of death, I do believe we will experience a material resurrection.

Space would not permit the quotation of all the passages which have to do with the resurrection, telling how we shall rise from the dead and our bodies shall come out of the grave to be united with our spirits. We close the evidence on this point with a reference to the appearances that Jesus made to the Jews and the Nephites. Luke tells us that when Jesus arose from the dead, he appeared to his disciples, and said to them:

Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, Why are you troubled, Why do thoughts arise in your heart? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I, myself. Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as you see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet. And while they yet wondered and believed not for joy, he said unto them, have ye here any meat? They gave him a piece of broiled fish and a honeycomb. And he took it and did eat before them.—Luke 24: 35-42.

Of Jesus' appearance to the Nephites, we find this account written:

And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto them, saying, Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints of the nails in my hands, and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world. And it came to pass that the multitude went forth, and thrust their hands into his side, and did feel the prints of the nails in his hands and in his feet. And this they did do, going forth one by one, until all had gone forth, and did see with their eyes, and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety, and did bear record, that it was he of whom it was written by the prophets, should come.—Book of Mormon, III Nephi 5: 14-16.

We become increasingly thankful for these clear, positive statements that Jesus truly did rise from the dead, and that the change which came over his body did not render it incorporeal even though it had escaped the natural limitations of human flesh. As for those immaterialists who explain away even this evidence by saying that Jesus had to reveal himself to people in terms of their own beliefs or comprehensions, we leave this question. If this belief in a material resurrection is the fallacy of a materially minded people, why would the Lord go to such ends to so firmly establish a fallacy? I submit that it is easier to do away with the whole doctrine of the resurrection than it is to do away with its material aspects.

Eternal Life

We now turn to the term, "eternal life," as used in the opening quotation. This is not just a repetition of the thought contained in the word immortality. The dictionary defines "eternal" as "that of infinite duration," and the word, life is defined (in the respect it is used here) as "a way or manner of living." If we put these two together, we get this definition: "Eternal life is a way or manner of living which is of infinite duration." Eternal life is a way which will endure forever; that is, it is built upon the basic principles of eternal existence. It is in harmony with the basic nature of the universe, with the nature of God.

Further light is thrown on this term in section 18 of the Doctrine and Covenants. In referring to eternal punishment, God explains: "Eternal punishment is God's punishment, endless punishment is God's punishment." This surely applies to eternal life also—eternal life is God's life—thus the phrase eternal life has to do more with the quality of life than its duration. In other words, to the extent that any man is privileged to share the life of God, to that extent he will enjoy eternal life.

God's purpose for men might be restated as follows: This is the work and glory of God, to bring man to a condition where spirit and element (body) are joined in an inseparable, incorruptible union, where man has unending capabilities for sensation and action as well as consciousness, and where he is morally capable of sharing God's life to the fullest possible extent.

Salvation

There is considerable loose usage of the term, "salvation." Some speak of it as though it referred alone to the act whereby man is preserved from the torments of hell and is thus assured of a place in the heavenly realm. Others use it in referring to the whole process of lifting man from the clutches of sin and, through the work of redemption and regeneration, transforming him into a perfect son of God.

As a church we have taken issue with many people who have said we are saved by grace and not by our works or deeds. Supporting our position, we quoted many references showing we shall be judged for deeds done in the body. There has been confusion on both sides of this discussion. Those who advocate that we are saved by grace alone have failed to see that "to be saved," as wonderful as it is, does not by any means give us an irrevocable passport to celestial glory.

Those who use the term "salvation" as though it meant spiritual perfection and celestial glory have failed to see that salvation refers to the process of redemption, whereby men are redeemed from the fall, and from the consequences of their own personal sin, being brought forth through the resurrection of the Lord Jesus to stand before God to be judged. They also fail to comprehend that the man who inherits the lowest glory is saved from eternal banishment just as is the man who inherits celestial glory, though his reward is less and he does suffer in hell first. Section 76, paragraph 4 informs us that all men shall be saved from the second death except "the sons of perdition." The sons of perdition are those who have received the power of the Holy Ghost, have known Christ and then have turned against him, crucifying him unto themselves and putting him to an open shame. All the others are to be saved, or to be brought forth "by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and glory of the Lamb."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. As Apostle Paul says,

Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he has built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burnt, he shall suffer loss, but he himself may be saved, yet so as by fire.—I Corinthians 3: 13-15.

Even all the multitudes who shall be turned into hell shall eventually be saved, once they have through suffering and repentance been purged of their sins. Thus nearly all men shall eventually be saved, but their glory will be determined by the extent of their devotion, righteousness, and trustworthiness.

This might be illustrated in the following way: Women who are particular in their preserving of food will sort a basket of apples or peaches into three or four grades, depending on the soundness and the beauty of it. They will preserve all the fruit which can be saved, each according to its quality. One could not accurately say that the first grade was any better saved or preserved than the poorer grade. Each is preserved in a manner that accords with its quality, and the purpose to which it shall be put.

If we look at salvation in this light, it is not wrong to say we are saved by grace and not by works. For we are truly saved by grace upon our earnest repentance and acceptance of Christ's way. We shall be judged and rewarded on the basis of our deeds or our heartfelt motives which we were unable to express in deeds.

Perhaps the greatest stumbling block in the path of those who believe in salvation by grace is the assumption that one cannot fall from grace, or that "once saved, always saved." Scriptures are quite clear on this, that one may fall from grace (Hebrew 6: 4-6; Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4). In fact, the only ones who shall not ultimately be saved—those over whom the second death has power—are the ones who have experienced the saving grace, received the power of the Holy Ghost, and been born again, and then turned away into wickedness, crucifying the Lord afresh and putting him to an open shame. These are the sons of perdition. Thus, all men, regardless of race, color, or creed, will eventually experience the saving grace. A few foolish ones will fall from grace and suffer the torments of the second death.

Suffering

The immediate foregoing will seem to be a dangerous doctrine to those who depend upon the horror of a never-ending torment to frighten people into conversion. It will appear as at least a blasphemous twisting of Scripture to many who have understood that God's attitude toward our salvation is "now or never." And others may conclude that we as a church do not believe the wicked will suffer for their sins.

We do believe the unrepentant wicked will suffer in hell. Yet we do not believe their suffering will be endless or without corrective purposes. Some even think there may be an end to the suffering of the sons of perdition—those who have sinned against light until they are exposed to the full demands of the law of justice and are to suffer the second death. There is apparently no pardon for them; they must endure the full sentence, pay the uttermost farthing. Joseph Smith was told, "the end thereof, . . . no man knows" (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4). Whether this means there will be a cessation of their intense misery we cannot say. It seems that such a belief is consistent with the revealed nature of God. For surely the only purpose God could have in not casting such persons into merciful oblivion, rather than the lake of fire, is that at least in some far-distant age even they might be willing to be reclaimed to some degree of eternal life and happiness.

It is necessary to keep in mind the nature of God as revealed in Jesus Christ if one is to rightly interpret the isolated statements of the prophets concerning any phase of the hereafter, for any piecemeal mechanical interpretation will lead us into erroneous conclusions. The apostle to the Gentiles laid down the premise for our discussion on punishment:

Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. . . . we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us . . . for they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.—Hebrews 12: 6-11.

Since God loves us, it is inconceivable he would cause us to suffer for any other end than our eventual welfare. Men may delight in the meaningless suffering of their fellows, and even Christians (?) may find satisfaction in the contemplation of the suffering of the ungodly, but not God, who is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world."—John 3: 17. On the contrary, God suffers with us and for us. He suffers with us regardless of how bad we become and whether or not we are repentant. He suffers for us that we might not have to endure the full penalty if we will only repent. Atonement through the suffering of Jesus Christ is a great mystery, but it is irrevocably set forth in the revelations. And the result of it will be available eventually to the souls in hell upon their repentance and fulfillment of the suffering necessary to purge their sins. That is, they will be pardoned in due time according to the Lord's wisdom and mercy providing they are willing, of course; for salvation will be forced upon no man.

The nature of this suffering is mental and spiritual, not physical. The physical body is laid in the grave, the spirit of a wicked man goes to hell to suffer remorse, regret, and guilt. This suffering is so intense that it has been referred to as hell fire; everlasting fire; outer darkness, where there is weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; a place of torment; and the pit. Jesus tells in the parable of Lazarus and the rich man how the rich man says, "I am tormented in this flame."—Luke 16: 29. However, if one interprets this literally, what will he do with the Scripture concerning outer darkness? Obviously a literal interpretation is untenable, but this in no way casts doubt on the warning that the wicked will suffer. God warned Martin Harris of the early church:

I command you to repent—repent, lest I smite you by the rod of my mouth, and by my wrath, and by my anger, and your suffering be sore—how sore you know not! how exquisite you know not! Yea, how hard to bear you know not! For behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all that they might not suffer, if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit.—Doctrine and Covenants 18.

Suffering in hell for a wasted life, if not an overtly wicked one, will be most excruciating even though not physical. And yet the extent or degree of punishment will be relative to the degree of informed willfulness involved in one's sinning. Jesus told Nicodemus:

This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.—John 3: 19.

At another time he said:

That servant who knew his Lord's will, and prepared not for his Lord's coming, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not his Lord's will, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required.—Luke 12: 56, 57.

What could be more just than this? Our punishment is to be conditioned by our rebellion against the knowledge of light and truth which we have or are clearly able to have. Willful or negligent ignorance of the law will hardly be an acceptable excuse.

Rewards

To the question, Why is man? Lehi of old gave this answer: "Men are that they might have joy."—II Nephi 1: 115. Perhaps nowhere else in Scripture is this stated so clearly. However, the import of all the revelations of God supports this statement. All of the revelations point man toward the way of righteousness, which is set forth as the way of happiness, and warn him against the way of wickedness, which is labeled as the way of unhappiness and misery.

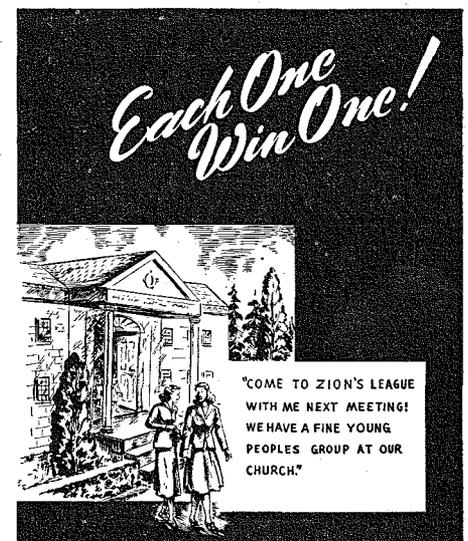

Now we would not suggest there is no pleasure found in the ways of disobedience and unrighteousness, for this could not be supported. It is apparent to any who engage in sinful activities or to anyone who observes others engaging in them that there is pleasure and delight found there; however, there is no fullness of joy or abiding happiness, and these indulgences in sin are attended and followed by dissatisfaction, feelings of unworthiness, bitterness, and despair.

Many have supposed the divine goal for men is that they might be righteous. This, I believe, is true. However, I think it is not the ultimate goal, but rather the means to the goal of eternal happiness. The word happy seldom appears in the Bible, and "happiness" almost never. Yet there are other words which express the meaning of happiness, such as blessedness or blessed, glorious or glory. One definition of glory is "celestial bliss." One meaning of the word blessed is "enjoying, or pertaining to, spiritual happiness." Perhaps the Beatitudes could well have been translated, "Happy is the man," instead of "Blessed is the man."

Even though God's goal for us is our eternal happiness, our personal goals toward which we should individually work must be something other than this. We must not go about selfishly seeking our own happiness, rather our purpose in life should be to lose ourselves in the work of bringing happiness to others. While our blissful condition is to be the chief product of God's great plan, this same bliss will be a by-product of our unselfish service to our fellow men. In saying that happiness is a by-product of Christian service, I am implying that eternal happiness is also a result of continuing Christian service—that is, in the hereafter we shall find true happiness only in further service.

The parable of the talents teaches us this truth, for those who had been faithful in serving their Lord were given greater opportunity for service, and in this they were to find joy. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Matthew 25: 21. This point of view is opposed to the one many Christian-professing people have held—that heavenly bliss is a passive state of rest and blessed idleness. Such a passive interpretation is not acceptable, for it is out of harmony with the whole spirit of the gospel and the facts of life as we know them.

How I Learned to Build Branches

By HUBERT CASE

EIGHT MILES southwest of Calumet, Oklahoma, lived a little country doctor. Dr. Powell was a great benefactor to the whole community in the early days of the settlement in Oklahoma, a man of ability who had a great love for people. One mile north of him lived his brother-in-law, A. W. Sanders. Brother and Sister Sanders were community-builders, too. Mrs. Sanders was as fine a nurse as her brother was a doctor.

All the early missionaries in those days knew these good people and frequently visited their home, trying to get the neighbors out for preaching services, but this was a difficult task as prejudice ran high in those days. After a few years I told them never to ask me back there to preach until the whole community was ripe for the gospel. One year later Brother Sanders wrote me to come, for the people were ready. I had appointments ahead but took time to go and preach one sermon.

Brother Sanders had been elected superintendent of a union Sunday school, and everybody was indeed ready to hear us. I announced I would begin a series of meetings four weeks from that day. During the next four weeks we did a lot of praying in preparation for what followed. The house was packed full from the first sermon. Interest increased as one sermon led naturally to the next. After fifty sermons, we baptized sixty people. The Spirit of the Lord was poured out fully, and they drank deeply at the fountain of life. This is as God has ordained it should be so people will have a real understanding of the message before coming into his kingdom. The few Saints living there were praying and visiting continually so that every Sunday we had baptismal services. After the third Sunday we made it a point to have some other missionary or priesthood member from that area with us; these men made a good contribution. I remember Brethren Yates, Dillon, and Simmons who helped, but our greatest help was by power of the Lord.

AS MY INTEREST GREW, the promise of Jesus was fulfilled, and we knew it. Truly Jesus said, "No one cometh unto me except the Father who sent me draw him." This was so evident night after night that we could discern the ones who were being drawn to come into the kingdom. One evening I noticed a man who came in late. The house was crowded so he took a seat directly ahead of me. I glanced at him and saw tears in his eyes as he listened with profound interest. As soon as the meeting was over, he came up and shook hands with me saying, "I like that; I will be back to hear you again." His name was John Bliss. His two daughters had been invited there by Brother and Sister Tom Lane, and they had asked their father, who had not been to church in twenty years, to come just once. All of them continued to attend services and were soon baptized. Mr. services and were soon baptized. This was the beginning of many branches which with God's help, we built in Oklahoma and elsewhere.

YEARS AFTER THAT series, Sister Connell asked me if I knew what had brought her into the church? I said that I did not. "Well," she answered, "it was the testimony I bore every night. I knew that this was the true church and that Jesus lives and speaks to his people today." At that meeting I had learned the great secret of conversion and building for God and his work. Brother Sanders was one of the best men to visit and talk the gospel I have ever been with. He was an expert fireside preacher, and he knew many of the Indians. I learned in later years when I was doing work among the Indians that they had confidence in him as a neighbor. Many miracles occurred during that meeting for the Lord is true to every one of his promises and confirms the word with signs following as he did in Bible times. Where we do our part in humility, the Lord will always do his part in every meeting we hold, for he is more interested in the salvation of souls than we will ever know how to be.

Before this experience, I would stay one or two weeks in a place and, just as people were beginning to believe we would run to another place and repeat the experience, leaving those good people for some other church to come along and reap the harvest.

NOW THE YOUNG LAMANITES, children of those we baptized thirty to forty years ago, are begging us to come and baptize them. Shall we heed the call?

I could cite many instances of the above plan and how literally people enjoy seeing the building up of God's work. The missionary should continue until the people get a knowledge of what the church stands for, and what is required of them as citizens of the kingdom of God.

The greatest meeting I ever held among the Omaha Indians lasted ninety days, and we baptized so many that there are still three hundred of them there after thirty years. Many have died, and others have moved to the cities to get work. We held these meetings in tents and cottages for a number of years, and the people were ripe for the gospel. During the three month's series, we would baptize twenty to twenty-five each Sunday. In my whole life I have never seen such interest. Elder P. R. Burton and I would both preach a short sermon each night then some man would arise and give his name for baptism and others would follow, volunteering their desires to follow the Lord and do his will.

Official Rules of Order

Continued

The second section of the proposed Rules of Order as explained in last week's Herald follows. Administrative officers especially are urged to send the Presidency their comments or criticisms preliminary to General Conference action.—Editor

II. A THEOCRATIC DEMOCRACY

THE CHURCH, as defined by the late President Joseph Smith, is a theocratic democracy—not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin.¹ By this we mean that the church was brought into being by command of God, is guided and administered by his authority, is sustained by the light of his Spirit, and exists for his purposes; but that notwithstanding the primary rights of Divinity in his church, our Heavenly Father has committed to the Saints an important share in the responsibilities of governing his church under him.

Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith.²

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH is by divine authority through priesthood.³ It should be noted that the government of the church is through priesthood, not by priesthood. The distinction is important. Ministers must first of all be disciples. They must learn the will of God and make this their own. In no other way can their claim to divine authority become rich and meaningful. This is clearly written into the law of the church. For example, an important revelation concerning the functions of the presiding quorums is followed by this instruction:

The decisions of these quorums, or either of them, are to be made in all righteousness, in holiness and lowliness of heart, meekness and long-suffering, and in faith and virtue and knowledge; temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, because the promise is, if these things abound in them, they shall not be unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord. And in case that any decision of these quorums is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church.⁴

THE REALITY AND EXTENT of priesthood authority are indicated in such statements as the following:

Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.⁵

Note also the following statement from President Joseph Smith III.

Whatever God commands men to do, the command carries with it the authority to do the thing commanded to be done. When the church was instituted . . . the Melchisedec priesthood was conferred for the last time before the second and final coming of Christ . . . This priesthood so conferred was endowed with all the rights, privileges, and authority to bring forth the church of Christ, conduct its expansion and watch over its development and welfare until the coming of Christ to bring his work to a triumphant and glorious consummation.⁶

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH includes administrative, legislative, and judicial functions. There are also other ministerial functions such as those of the evangelist and other members of the standing ministry. However, for the sake of convenience these may be regarded as contributory ministries within the administrative field.

ADMINISTRATION is through members of the priesthood, acting according to their several callings and with the consent of the church. These may be grouped as follows:

THE PRESIDENCY, who administer the affairs of the entire church.⁷

THE TWELVE, who direct the missionary work of the church with the members of the Seventy as their chief assistants, and who represent the Presidency as chief presiding officers in organized fields.⁸

STAKE, DISTRICT, AND BRANCH PRESIDENTS, who direct the work in their respective areas.⁹

BISHOPS, who administer the temporal affairs of the church.¹⁰

THE RIGHTS OF THE BODY are safeguarded under the law as follows:

By the guidance of the Holy Spirit in calling members to the priesthood.

"Every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains him."¹¹

By the requirement that "no person is to be ordained to any office in this church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that church";¹²

By the right of approval and recall which rests with the people who are asked to sustain general church leaders at General Conference, and local leaders at local conferences and business meetings.

By the requirement that all things shall be done with due regard for duties and privileges of other ministers, and in harmony with the legislative enactments of the body.

By the special provisions of the law. For example, that General Conference must approve the budget according to which general church funds are expended.

By the distribution of authority and responsibility within the church.¹³

By our growing understanding that—for the good of all—properly selected administrative officers must be allowed to do their work without undue interference, subject always to the provisions made to cover special situations.¹⁴

LEGISLATION is considered and enacted in General Conference, stake and district conferences, and branch business meetings. These assemblies meet at the call of the responsible administrative officers, and at times and places determined by the bodies concerned.

Every such assembly has authority to legislate for those it represents as long as it does not usurp rights lawfully centered elsewhere. For example, no branch business meeting can legislate for the district, such as requiring certain acts on the part of district officers; no branch or district can enact binding legislation on matters of general church importance, such as setting up the conditions of church membership; and no branch business meeting or district, stake, or General Conference can change the basic law of the church, such as the law concerning the mode of baptism.

It should also be remembered that no legislative body can rightfully take to itself administrative or judicial functions such as initiating calls to the priesthood, or trying a church member accused of transgression. These matters are specifically centered elsewhere, as is required by the necessities of good organization.

JUDGMENT: All members of the church have right of access to the courts of the church for advice, protection, or redress. Elders' Courts are available throughout the church and are the courts of original jurisdiction where no bishop's courts can be had conveniently.

Bishop's Courts have original jurisdiction or hear appeals from elders' courts.

High Councils may have original jurisdiction and may hear appeals from Bishop's courts. However, the First Presidency or stake presidencies "have power to determine whether any such case, as may be appealed, is justly entitled to a rehearing, after examining the appeal and the evidences and statements accompanying it."¹⁵

In addition to the foregoing, we call attention to the following letter addressed to district and branch presidents on August 4, 1947, by President J. F. Garver:

It is perhaps our good fortune that not many elders have a great deal of experience as members of elders' courts. But because of this it is difficult to find experienced men for service on courts when circumstances require them to be held. As a result we find that

Relationship of the United States

EDITORIAL NOTE: The General Conference of 1947 appointed a committee on Indian Welfare, and this committee was continued by the General Conference of 1948. Among the reports coming to the committee from its members is the attached on "The Relationship of the United States Government to the Indians," which was prepared by Elder Ward A. Hougas. We believe this will be of general interest to the readers of the "Herald."

THERE ARE VERY FEW subjects in the history and law of the United States on which the views of the public are more at variance or erroneous. One group looks upon the Indian as a vanishing race—his lands steadily dwindling—restricted to hunting, and no longer permitted to take to the warpath. He is pictured as being denied the rights of citizenship and being forced to subsist on rations furnished by the government. It is also supposed that he is not allowed to sign his name without the approval of a reservation superintendent.

Facts revealed by government literature proclaim a different story. Indians are probably the most rapidly increasing racial group in our population today. The total area of Indian lands has been slowly but steadily increasing for the past seven years at least. The Indian is now making a very significant and vital contribution to American art and craftsmanship. All native Indians are citizens, entitled to all the rights and bound by all the obligations of such citizenship. Some, of course, still have equitable interests in tribal property which they cannot alienate. However, they share this disability with a large number of non-Indian citizens.

The fact that Indians do have legal rights is a matter of limited consequence in many cases, because they do not know or realize they have such rights. The body of Indian law is based upon more than 4,000 treaties and statutes and upon thousands of judicial decisions and administrative rulings extending over a century and a half. The complexity of the situation is such that ignorance exists even in what would otherwise be well-informed quarters. Little has been done to codify or even compile this mass of law into usable form.

ONE BIG EVENT stands out in Indian history. It may some day be looked upon as "emancipation day" for the Indian. This is April 28, 1934—the day on which President Franklin D. Roosevelt urged the passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act. His recommendation became law on June 14, 1934. In his message of support, he made the following statement:

The Wheeler-Howard bill embodies the basic and broad principles of the administration for a new standard of dealing between the Federal Government and its Indian wards. It is, in the main, a measure of justice that is long overdue. We can and should, without further delay, extend to the Indians the fundamental rights of political liberty and local self-government and the opportunities of education and economic assistance that they require in order to attain a wholesome American life. This is but the obligation of honor of a powerful nation toward a people living among us and dependent upon our protection.

Certainly the continuance of autocratic rule, by a Federal department, over the lives of more than 200,000 citizens of the Nation is incompatible with American ideals of liberty. It is also destructive of the character and self-respect of a great race.

The continued application of the allotment laws, under which Indian wards have lost more than two thirds of their reservation lands, while the costs of Federal administration of these lands have steadily mounted, must be terminated.

Indians throughout the country have been stirred to a new hope. They say they stand at the end of the old trail. Certainly the figures of impoverishment and disease point to their impending extinction, as a race, unless basic changes in their conditions of life are effected.

I do not think such changes can be devised and carried out without the active co-operation of the Indians themselves.

The Wheeler-Howard bill offers the basis for such co-operation. It allows the Indian people to take an active and responsible part in the solution of their own problems.

The statement of the late President Roosevelt calls for some attempt at an evaluation of this past history of the Federal Government and its Indian wards. While our Indian population is a very small minority here in the states, it must be kept in mind that south of the Rio Grande there are thirty million Indians. Pure-blooded Indians are the major population of Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, and Peru. Their history has been better in many ways than our own Indian history. South of the Rio Grande, the Indians are the center of national power and are steadily growing into more significant peoples.

For about a century the government dealt separately with the various Indian tribes on the basis of their treaties, and the laws of each tribe were set up and determined on an individual basis. Most of these treaties are still in force and reflect in the present efforts at standardization of Indian laws. They vary greatly in their treatment of different tribes, according to peculiar tribal habits and customs.

IN 1871 CONGRESS prohibited the further making of treaties. From then on Indian affairs were continued by "agreements" rather than by treaties. The actual difference between the two forms was small and consisted primarily in the fact that agreements necessitated the concurrence of both of the houses of Congress, whereas the treaties were considered only by the Senate. This proved to be something of a period of awakening to the needs of the Indians, yet it was not until 1887 that what is known as the allotment period began.

From 1887 until 1933 there developed a tendency to impose a uniform pattern of laws upon all tribes. This policy ran counter to the many private and personal rights of the various tribes which has been guaranteed by previous treaties.

Tremendous and widespread resentment developed among the In-Government and the Indians

By WARD A. HOUGAS

dians and found champions in powerful men of both Indian and non-Indian groups. In 1928 the Senate authorized its committee on Indian affairs to conduct a thorough investigation of the situation. The resulting survey brought to light many of the existing evils.

Upon passage of the Wheeler-Howard law on June 18, 1934, more than one hundred tribes took advantage of the opportunity for a measure of self-government and adopted their own constitution for such. Practically all of the regulations of the Indian Service now have been made subject to the provisions of these tribal constitutions and ordinances. This means that most of the Indian law is now made for and, to a large part, by diverse groups with divergent economic interests, political institutions, and levels of cultural attainment.

IN ATTEMPTING to interpret the present condition of the Indian situation we must keep in mind four leading principles: (1) The equality of races; (2) tribal self-government; (3) sovereignty in Indian affairs; and (4) governmental protection of Indians. A few words concerning these principles may be in order:

1. POLITICAL EQUALITY: In spite of the prevalent impression to the contrary, all Indians born in the United States are citizens of the United States and of the state in which they reside. As citizens they are entitled to the rights of suffrage guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment. They also have the right to hold office, to sue, make contracts, and enjoy all the civil liberties guaranteed to their fellow citizens.

2. TRIBAL SELF-GOVERNMENT. Indian tribes have all the powers of self-government of any sovereignty except in so far as those powers have been modified or repealed by an act of Congress or treaty. As a result of the application of this principle, in large fields of criminal and civil law, and particularly over questions of tribal membership, inheritance, tribal taxation, tribal property, domestic relations, and the form of tribal governing, authorities have, to the present time, the force of law.

3. FEDERAL SOVEREIGNTY. Federal power has generally been invoked in matters arising out of commerce with the Indian tribes. In the broader sense this term has been used to include all transactions by which Indians sought to dispose of land or other property in exchange for money, liquor, munitions, or other products of the white man's civilization. The growth of the commerce clause has meant the expansion of federal power in Indian affairs at the expense of state power. This tendency has given rise to some rather serious complications in the endeavor to administer Indian law on an equitable basis.

As a rule, though there are some exceptions, Indians living on an Indian reservation are not subject to state law. This is especially true in the fields of criminal law and taxation. Under the General Allotment Act when tribal lands become individualized, the individual parcels are inherited according to state laws.

4. GOVERNMENTAL PROTECTION OF INDIANS. The theory of Indian laws is that the government is serving as a protector of a minority group. In actual operation many have felt that just the opposite was true and that the Indian laws made possible systematic plundering of the Indian's resources. It appears that protection was and is most needed against the professional trader and the settler.

FOUR PROBLEMS of federal Indian law have developed through the years. These might be enumerated as follows: (1) the regulation of Indian traders, (2) controlling the disposition of Indian land, (3) the protection of that land against trespass, (4) the control of the liquor traffic. These problems, in turn, have developed more complications. The regulation of the traders for instance has evolved from a group of professional traders to an almost unlimited number of shopkeepers in the towns and cities that have sprung up near the reservations (to say nothing of the multitude of mail-order houses). New forms of trespass have been figured out and discovered, some of which have not yet been dealt with.

CONCLUSIONS

1. The depth and extent of existing legislation should be recognized. It is inadequate and faulty, yet it does show signs of rapidly becoming more refined and workable.

2. The passage of the Wheeler-Howard Act did mark the beginning of a new era for the Indian, an era that is yet too young to be judged very accurately. Educational processes are slow among most tribes.

3. The old laws that have been technically repealed still have a powerful influence in that many situations which arise have not as yet been covered by new statutes and must be determined on the basis of older laws.

4. The next ten years will probably so completely revolutionize the relationship of the federal and state governments to the Indians that there will be but little left of the old, and now rapidly vanishing, system.

5. It seems that there is little if anything at the present time that should seriously complicate any reasonable effort of the church to assist or work with the Indians either economically or spiritually.

6. Such restrictions, if any, will probably be the result of tribal regulations, and contacts can probably be negotiated directly with the tribal authorities of the Indians in question.

Christ the Radical - By WILFORD G. WINHOLTZ

A department for debatable topics. The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

The Challenge

Christ was a radical with a radical message! A true follower can be no less!

The one who will seek to understand the message here presented will find the keynote to the general ineffectiveness of Christian churches today. The indictment is a serious one. All professing the Christian religion ought to be genuinely concerned. These charges have been made by many sources, and the implications drawn against those professing Christianity are not based upon the casual observation nor the subjective opinion of a few individuals. On the other hand, we now have at our finger tips the objective, factual data and statistical analyses of many local and nation-wide surveys upon which the indictment is based and substantiated.¹

The shroud of hypocrisy which today covers so-called Christians and their institutions ought to be ripped off and tolerated no further. The time has come (in fact, it is past due) for all who WILL to realize and demonstrate the true meaning of Christianity on the basis that one's action program must have a consistent and positive relationship between word and deed. For to say and profess one thing and then to deny it in action is to demonstrate hypocrisy and the kinship with the "tinkling cymbal" and the "sounding brass"—"by their fruits [actions and deeds] ye shall know them," not by what they say.

Someday we as individuals and as a church institution must be willing to meet the challenge that some things in life are worth fighting for and dying for if need be:

Break not my commandments for to save your lives; for whosoever will save his life in this world, shall lose it in the world to come.

And whosoever will lose his life in this world, for my sake, shall find it in the world to come.

Timidity and do-nothing programs in defense of the status quo have too long ruled in the realm and name of Christian social action. Nothing but wishful thinking and false hope can defend the general inactivity of Christian people in this wakening generation. Failure to take action and make a stand is still the sin of omission. Actions (or the lack of them) still speak louder than words. And, "you can't fool all the people all the time." Today, more and more American young people are throwing the church to the winds because they are realizing that the pious teachings of the churches have no genuine relationship to positive actions in deed.

The challenge before us is well summed up in the text of a familiar hymn which, like many good hymns, is not too often sung with true conviction:

God send us men whose aim 'twill be,
Not to defend some ancient creed,
But to live out the laws of right,
In every thought and word and deed.

God send us men alert and quick,
His lofty precepts to translate,
Until the laws of right become,
The laws and habits of the state.

God send us men of steadfast will,
Patient, courageous, strong and true,
With vision clear and mind equipped,
His will to learn, his work to do.

God send us men with hearts ablaze,
All truth to love, all wrong to hate,
These are the patriots nations need,
These are the bulwarks of the state.

Introductory

With a concern for the kingdom and the establishment of Zion in this generation rather than in some vague, far-distant generation of make-believe, I have been probing for fundamentals essential to progress. In so doing, I (and others) have rediscovered something of the nature of Christ quite contrary to the traditional Sunday school teachings of a lop-sided "gentle Jesus, meek and mild." The rediscovery has been "Christ the RADICAL" in deed as well as in word. There is irrefutable evidence that the Christ was considered a most dangerous radical as he went about upsetting traditional practices and teachings, giving a new law, performing miracles, associating with the "undesirables," and fearlessly combating the arguments of lawyers and leaders who sought to trap him.

The oft-repeated Christian virtues—meekness, gentleness, patience, tolerance, and long-suffering are important, but equally important are the Christian Action Virtues—courage, boldness, and fearlessness—with true humility and charity pervading them all. Ought not every Christian virtue be present to some degree as each situation might call for a particular combination of virtues under a given circumstance—gentle but firm, kind but courageous, humble but fearless, etc.? All too many have learned only of a one-sided Jesus, meek and mild. And this is demonstrated clearly in the masses of lives being lived and attitudes of people being expressed through Christian institutions that not only fail to lead but often urgently oppose needed social reforms which are in harmony with Christian teachings. One of the most serious of these indictments, for example, stands out in the un-Christian practice of segregated churches from one end of the nation to the other as a living testimony of the denial of the basic Christian concept of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Need one enumerate the multitude of detailed courses of action necessary to implement such a social reform in all of our communities? Compare this record, if you will, with the life and teachings of Christ. "Hypocrites!" was a word he freely flung in noting similar conditions involving those who professed one thing but did another—and quite often the very opposite.

The Jesus of the New Testament shook the very foundations of the existing and accepted ways of living, both by his teachings and by his daily actions for social reform. Many things were radically wrong in Christ's day, and it took a radical with a radical message to meet the needs of the situation. In his firm and uncompromising stand for righteousness, and his equally firm and uncompromising denunciation of evil wherever he discovered it, Christ became a dangerous enemy in the eyes of those who sought to defend and maintain the status quo. In his unflinching and unequivocal approach he proclaimed his message letting "the chips fall where they may." The very stupid attitude of "not hurting anybody's feelings" was no part of him in such circumstances. In the course of events we find him accusing some as a generation of vipers, denouncing others as hypocrites, blind guides, blind Pharisees, and calling still others as murderers. His primary concern was not in accumulating a large following, for he knew that one with God was a majority. His primary concern was righteousness.

The building of God's kingdom is dependent upon quality—not quantity. In a social movement, quality might be an accompanying result of seeking quantity but the likelihood is very slight; whereas quantity might well be an accompanying result from seeking quality. Where is our effort and emphasis being placed today?

And so we are finding with the waking of the present generation in comparing, questioning, and challenging the status quo of do-nothing programs that there is a wide gap separating "what is" from "what ought to be" on Christ's standards of action. Either we must be willing to admit that we are living in the best of all possible worlds, or we must be willing to make a progressive and aggressive righteous stand on any and all issues no matter how controversial or radical such may be if our actions are to have any significant meaning at all. Persecution may follow, not as an objective to achieve, but rather as something which cannot be avoided in an unrighteous world. To remain silent, or to oppose positive action, is to acquiesce to the forces of evil and the sin of omission. The false security and quietude of "not disturbing anyone" may be reassuring to some, but it cannot be accepted as a Christian standard. The one indictment which held against the Christ was that "he stirreth up the people," and his every act affirmed it.

The challenge of God through Christ his Son to man was to "Come, follow me" and be of service by serving your fellow men. No one can rightly deny that the price of true Christian service may require the supreme sacrifice. And to those who still believe in compromise, let us remember that in Christ there was no compromise. And to those who will continue to say, "What good can you do if you're dead?" let us again remember the Christ and his short three years of ministry. If he hadn't been so courageous, bold, and fearless in his uncompromising stand, who can say that he couldn't have lived to a ripe old age in useful service. Christ was guided by what was right, not by expediencies or the so-called "practical thing to do." Whatever we do, let us keep our sense of values in the right priority.

What Is a Radical?

There was a time in America, particularly back in the days of Jefferson and before, when the term radical could be applied and received by a person as a compliment. Today's picture, which associates the term radical almost exclusively with subversive activities, is a sad commentary on modern-day society. In our present methods of witch-hunting and slandering, it would seem to be the next step lower than a Communist (and few know what a Communist really is).

If we are to get to the roots of the issue for a common understanding, we must turn to the fundamentals of a common definition of terms. On this Webster's dictionary offers the following:

RADICAL: pertaining to the root or origin; original; reaching to the principles; fundamental; thorough-going; extreme.

What more appropriate and descriptive word could so accurately and characteristically identify Jesus, The Christ, and his social message? What more fitting word could identify the early activities of the Restoration Movement, or the early history of these United States, or any significant social reform? Where are the radicals today? They have been virtually purged from existence. How many Christian radicals do you know who are willing to take a stand on the issues of the day in an honest and forthright manner, guided only by a code of ethics truly Christian, even if such a stand might mean unpopularity and persecution in our own generation as it has in previous generations?

One writer has aptly expressed in general terms something of the nature of our present situation as follows:

There are many Liberals who claim the same objectives in life which characterize the philosophy of the Radical, but there are many clear lines of distinction between Radicals and Liberals. Time need not be wasted on Conservatives, since time itself will take care of them. There is a tremendous significance to that common saying that a man is a Radical at twenty-one, a Liberal at thirty-one, and a Conservative at forty. The young man of twenty-one still has certain burning ideals. He still has faith in life and hope in progress. He is still naive enough not to have acquired a vested material interest and the attendant suspicions of any social change which might jeopardize it. He still has not "matured" to the point of being practical and compromising. He still hasn't reached the point of believing that "all men are created equal" is nice in theory but taboo in practice. He has not become civilized to the point of assimilating all the prejudices and hate which permeate so large a portion of our lives. He still has some of the simplicity and decency of the child. He still likes and actually expects to be liked in return. He still is not filled with the virus of driving personal ambition, with sophistication and its accompanying constellation of rationalizations, and with a cynicism which is a cover-up for the deep fear of the future. He is a brave young man whose life is not cluttered up with prejudices and fears. He is a Radical. Radicals always remain young in spite of the passage of years.²

This quotation introduces an interesting and significant scale of classifications, "a Radical at twenty-one, a Liberal at thirty-one, and a Conservative at forty," to which I should like to add as a fourth, "a Reactionary at fifty"—and retain the expression that a person is just as old as he feels and acts.

For a clarification of these terms we turn again to Webster:

LIBERAL: an advocate of freedom from restraint, especially in politics and religion; a member of a party which advocates progressive reform.

CONSERVATIVE: tending to preserve; preservative, inclining to keep up old institutions, customs, and the like; having a tendency to uphold and preserve entire the institutions of a country, both civil and ecclesiastical; opposed to radical changes or innovations.

REACTIONARY: action or tendency to revert from a present to a previous condition; in politics, a tendency to revert from a more to a less advanced policy.

It is important to note that these definitions are used to indicate various roles of action toward social reform—the Radical being the best, and the Reactionary being the worst. However, it should be noted that the role of a Radical does not preclude him from taking what is "good" from the lesser roles. For example, it is consistent and logical that a Radical "conserve" that which is worth conserving, and that if there is anything "good" which has been dropped in the past and worth going back for, he should do so. Please note though that the reverse is not true. It is not consistent, for example, that a Reactionary can partially play the role of a Conservative, or a Liberal, or a Radical.

Where does our action record stand as Christians dedicated to the service of our fellow men? Where does our church stand as a Christian institution dedicated to the service of our community and mankind throughout the world?

The Radical Nature of Christ

One distinguished author has stated this matter briefly as follows:

The words of Jesus have the rugged fiber of the cypress tree and the jagged edge of the crosscut saw. Nothing but an excessive familiarity with his words or an insulated ignorance can keep us from perceiving this rigorous element. His language is extreme—extravagant. Hyperbole, antithesis, and paradox mark his style. His figures of speech are crammed with energy. Explosive as hand grenades, they are tossed into the crowds that listen. A tremendous vigor, an exuberant vitality, surges through his words.

Professor E. J. Goodspeed used to quote a saying of G. K. Chesterton's applied to this quality in the words of Jesus: "The words of Jesus," said Chesterton, "are gigantesque." This is the most appropriate of all adjectives for the sayings of Jesus. They are the sayings of a giant—freighted down with tremendous weight and looked with explosive power.

The attempts to remove the rigorous element from Jesus' language fail because this rigorousness is neither rhetoric nor ornament; it is not a veneer upon the surface of his message but the natural grain of the wood. It was not designed to attract an audience, but to convey his message. If the rigorous nature of Jesus' words cannot be explained away on technical grounds, then they must mean something in the true meaning of that word.³

A brief reference to one of the writers of the New Testament is sufficient to bring out the radical nature of Christ's teachings. In considering these teachings of Christ, we find that he was a teacher who never delivered a lecture; a preacher who never preached a sermon; but in terms of answering questions, in telling stories, and in a variety of epigrams and paradoxes, he revealed his message in a striking and lasting manner. In noting the following passages from Matthew, it is well to keep in mind that Jesus was speaking to a rather strict moral and religious people (judged on their standards), but quite obviously he was far from satisfied or impressed.

In a day when it was customary to swear oaths in respect to the sanctity of various parts of the temple, Jesus demanded an honesty so absolute—a “Yes” or a “No”—that an oath would be unnecessary.

The existing law forbade committing adultery, but Jesus added, “I say unto you that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her in his heart already.”

Jesus also instructed that in lieu of “an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth,” that “Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also”; and that “If any man will sue thee at law, and take away thy coat, let him have it; and if he sue thee again, let him have thy cloak also”; and “Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him a mile; and whosoever shall compel thee to go with him twain, thou shalt go with him twain.”

Jesus’ strict interpretation of allegiance and service was that “No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.”

In the spreading of his message he said:

Go ye into the world, and care not for the world; for the world will hate you, and will persecute you and will turn you out of their synagogues. Nevertheless, ye shall go forth from house to house, teaching the people; and I will go before you. And your heavenly Father will provide for you, whatsoever things ye need for food, what you shall eat; and for raiment, what ye shall wear or put on. Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall drink, what ye shall eat; nor yet for your bodies, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

Jesus also said, “Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill, shall be in danger of judgment of God. But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother, shall be in danger of his judgment.”

But perhaps the most revealing of all his statements was:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you . . . For if ye love only them which love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans the same? . . . Ye are therefore commanded to be perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect.

In this wholehearted and undeviating allegiance to God, he called all forth to “seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you.” And if in the attainment of this objective “thy right eye offend thee” and thereby stand in the way of the kingdom, then “pluck it out,” and “if thy right hand offend thee,” similarly then “cut it off.”

The “extremes” of the above passages blend also with such references to an individual worrying about the speck in his brother’s eye while he had a “beam” in his own. There is also true meaning in the statement concerning the rich man’s trying to get into the kingdom as being easier than a camel getting through the eye of a needle (and this notwithstanding some who have searched out archaeological and other sources to get the eye of the needle up to the size of a small gate in the wall of Jerusalem where a camel could get through if one pushed hard enough). The message rings true as stated in these radical teachings. Christ’s teachings were not conventional nor commonplace. Should his teachings be less radical for our day? Is there the slightest justification to water all of his statements down to the point of meeting today’s standard of being “practical”?

The Radical Nature of the Restoration

To any student of the New Testament, the above statements ring true in the context of radicalism. And how much more consistently do they ring true to Latter Day Saints with the additional message of the Restoration. Will we find passages from the Doctrine and Covenants any less rigorous or less radical?

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenants.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

Section 32 contains the following:

Open ye your ears and hearken to the voice of the Lord your God, whose word is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder the joints and marrow, soul and spirit; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

In the tenth chapter of Matthew we find the following parallel:

Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; and a man’s foes will be they of his own household. He who loveth father and mother more than me, is not worthy of me; and he who loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he who taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He who seeketh to save his life shall lose it; and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

When the young lad Joseph Smith went to the woods to pray, he was instructed not to join any existing church—all were wrong to the extent that they had strayed from original Christianity. In the course of events which followed in young Joseph’s life, he was instructed to organize a radically different church—one which was patterned after the original church based upon the basic fundamentals and principles of Christ’s teachings.

Additional strikingly radical concepts of the Restored Church included such teachings as a “Zion gathering,” the “consecration of surplus,” and the philosophy of individual and group “stewardships.”

The zeal, vigor, and consecration which characterized the early years of the Latter Day Saint church were a vital asset for motivation to the “cause,” but there was a large gap in the educational conditioning of a large majority to the task at hand. Today, with over one hundred years of the educational process behind us, we note that the pendulum has swung to the other extreme. Today there is need of a rigorous program for the Gathering which will once again challenge the people and motivate them with a zeal and vigor and a consecration worthy to the task of raising an ensign of peace to the nations of the world.

The Role of the Radical for Our Day

In conclusion, the foregoing could be summarized, except that it is already the summary of a summary, but there is need of a recapitulation of certain points as a guide to action in our day.

The faith of a radical is bound up with deep-seated convictions that the things which should be can be. Should be because they measure up to the standards of Christ in ministering to the needs of suffering humanity. “If God be for us, who can be against us?” We are still to be judged some day by what we have done, not by what we were going to do.

A Christian radical is one who is dedicated to loving people not only in his mind, but also in his heart and more specifically in deed. Too often our Liberal friends, not to mention the others farther down the scale, like people only in their minds. Thus they talk only in passionate terms for such things as equal rights to all minority groups; better housing for all those who need it, and the clearing of our slums; they protest against the poll tax, lynchings, segregation, anti-Semitism and other inhuman practices. But as we turn the spotlight of Christ's standards upon them, these words of good intent are accompanied by such actions as shrinking from sitting with a Negro on a public conveyance or in a public meeting, belonging to organizations which bar others of minority groups, who "like minority groups" but don't want to live by them, who believe in various campaigns and drives but fail to make any sacrifice financial or otherwise toward the real achievement of expressed objectives. In short we ought to be aware of lip service only.

Liberals are hesitant to act because, so they say, they want to be impartial and objective, knowing that each question or issue has two sides, and thus they spend their lives trying to discover bits of evidence to substantiate their inactivity. The radical, on the other hand, is grounded in the basic fundamentals of Christian Democracy to the extent that he can make up his mind on a basic issue and stand firm in his conviction and decision for action and sacrifice for a cause that is just.

The liberal will always be saying, "I agree with your objectives, but I disagree with your methods." However he will never have a better method to offer, except perhaps his five-hundred-year process of do-nothing and make-believe that everything will turn out all right in time. The perennial caution of the "old guard" (those who cling to the past and what is) is, "Take it easy; take it easy; Rome wasn't built in a day; you'll accomplish more by taking it easy." Well, if we are sincere and consistent and logical in our reasoning, we will have to apply only the same caution which Christ did—"he stirreth up the people," not as an objective, primarily, but as a consequence of proclaiming his message fearlessly. Is the so-called wisdom of man greater than the wisdom of Jesus?

Every significant advance of social reform has stemmed from the work of radicals. The very nature of such reform makes it so—getting down to the roots and fundamentals of issues. Radicals give themselves to the cause. Liberals give only a small portion, and do so at practically no inconvenience to their existing life pattern.

Which shall be our way, and the way of our church and organizations with which we affiliate? Is it the way of Christ the Radical?

Do you believe that some things in life are worth fighting for and worth dying for? Christ did. He promised a rugged life to those who followed him—a life of unpopularity and persecution. He said that one could only save his life by losing it for righteousness' sake. Such a life pattern, however, was to be the true way of happiness and the achievement of life's satisfactions. Quality, not quantity, was the keynote of his message. Straight and narrow is the way and few there are who find it. Will you be one who finds it? Will you deny it if it is too radical? Most people have, but Christ is still calling for those who will take up their cross and follow him.

Consider the Little Things

By MRS. WILLIAM WORTH, JR.

THE NEW YEAR is well on its way. We are getting settled down to a regular routine after the hustle and bustle of the holiday season. Perhaps some of our resolutions have been broken already—we made them without giving much thought to them. Others will stay with us because we thought them over carefully before making them. Someone has said, “Resolutions are made to be broken,” but let us make at least one or two good resolutions and work to the end that they shall be of worth to us and others.

Two such resolutions for this year might be “Do well the little things,” and “Have consideration for others.” Our lives are made up of little things. Not often do we get a chance to do a really great deed. It is very encouraging to meet people who find genuine happiness in doing the little things that mean so much for others. We must do the small things that come our way every day and remember that true greatness comes by being great in the little things we do.

A story is told of an old king who became concerned over his people because they were growing more and more selfish every day. At last the good king thought he would find out if even one remained who would help his fellow man along the highway which went past his palace. The king took a bag, put a large sum of gold in it, and went out one night on the roadway in front of his palace. There he dug a hole and put the bag in it. He did not cover the hole with dirt, but instead placed a stone over it. He rushed back into the palace to take up his watch of the roadway. All day he watched from behind a curtained window as travelers passed. When they came to the rock, they looked down at it, then made their way around it rather than stoop to move the stone from their way. Perhaps they were in a hurry or just didn't want to do anything for their fellow men. “They are too selfish to be of service to their fellow men or to their master,” observed the king. The next morning he went out and stood in the way, stopping them as they came along. When a large crowd had gathered, he pushed the stone away, and picked up the bag of gold. “This,” he said, “could have been yours had you stooped to push the stone out of the way.”

Some may feel that the stones we find in our pathway will not disturb anyone, or we are too busy to be bothered. Let's not forget, however, that there are young people who are coming after us, following in our footsteps, who might be thrown from the pathway of righteousness because we detoured around a rough place in our daily journey. We should not be content in sitting idly by waiting for the big things only. Instead let us pass on to youth the knowledge we have gathered through the years of living close to God and the experience gained through doing the little things along the way. The chasms that have been as nothing to us might be pitfalls for younger travelers. Let our lives serve as bridges for them in their times of doubt and indecision.

We have but to look around us and see the many times we have been helped by the thoughtfulness of others. They have lived lives doing kindly deeds, saying encouraging words, expecting no reward for their services. We, too, can choose what we do with our daily lives. We can draw aside and live in seclusion, or we can choose the toiler's part and labor for and with our Master, doing good to those about us. Yes, we have our choice.

MANY YEARS AGO a gentleman wanted to build a fine house. He went to a friend who was a good carpenter. He told him of his desire to build a beautiful and sturdy home. He laid the plans before the carpenter and explained the kind of material he wished used. The carpenter said he would have the building done in a certain length of time and proceeded with the work. The gentleman went on a trip while the building was in progress. The carpenter ordered the material, but instead of buying the quality of material specified, he thought, “I can erect this house for less money by using cheaper material. It will answer the same purpose and will save money.” So he proceeded to construct a “second-best” house. The foundation and undercover parts were not first-class material. When he came to the finishing, he used the quality of material the specifications called for. At last the building was completed, and the gentleman saw the finished product. It looked fine from the outside. He turned to the carpenter and said, “My friend, the building is yours. You may have it as a home for your wife and family.” Imagine the feeling of regret in the heart of the carpenter. “If I had only known it was to have been mine I would have used the best of material, but now it is too late.”

Little things? Yes, but let us do even the little things with the best materials, thoughts, and skills we have, because in so doing we are building better lives for ourselves and laying a firmer foundation for the lives of those around us. Let us be faithful over the little things entrusted to our care so that we may find favor with our Heavenly Father and be worthy of a greater trust in his kingdom.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

MOST OF US have had enough of fancy food during the holiday season, so, although the magazines have not entirely forgotten foods, such articles and recipes are much less alluring than in the last few months. Much more interesting and appealing are the many articles in January magazines which inspire one to personal or community achievement.

"If You're in a Rut, Climb Out," Woman's Day, is an excellent tonic for the start of a new year. If you are ever bored by the sameness of your life and activities, this will give you a boost in the right direction.

"How Much Should We Control Our Children's Behavior?" Woman's Day, guides parents to a middle-ground course between overrestriction and overindulgence.

"How to Refinish a Floor," American Home, pictures and gives details for each step in this job if you wish to attempt it for yourself.

"How to Buy a Bargain," American Home, tells the housewife how to judge what is and is not a bargain before she sees it, thus saving time and money.

"Simple Care of the Sick," American Home, will be a valuable help to anyone who has an invalid to care for. Many labor-saving ideas are suggested.

"In-Between Window Garden," American Home, is the freshest, newest idea in home decoration in current magazines. You will have to read it to find out what it is.

"The Truth About Teen-age Skin Trouble," Family Circle, gives the latest word from a doctor who has studied both the emotional and physical sides of the problem.

"How to Get Along With Women," Ladies' Home Journal, is an article that all husbands should read—and use. Wives, can you manage that subtly and unobtrusively?

"Always Home for One More," Ladies' Home Journal, is an inspiring account of a man and wife with love to spare.

"How to Handle Quarrels," Woman's Home Companion, discusses the causes of disagreements, how to recognize the causes, and how to make them constructive.

"Before Your Operation," Woman's Home Companion, helps one to understand what happens and why, and thus dispels fear.

"Be Glad You're Free to Laugh," American Magazine, points out a freedom all Americans should cherish, but one of which we seldom think.

"When and How to Say No," Parents' Magazine, says that children need parents who are neither dictatorial nor indecisive. It will help you examine your own methods.

"Discipline for the Older Child," Parents' Magazine, is an excellent discussion for parents of children who are approaching adolescence or have reached it. The author stresses the importance of respecting the child's right to grow up.

"If It's Glasses for Your Child," Parents' Magazine, tells how one very small child learned to wear them gladly.

"Seven Hundred Fifty Children Saved," McCall's Magazine, relates how two men are responsible for a child health program in their town that required no outside governmental aid. It is a workable plan for any town.

New Beginnings

By Louise Wrigley

WITH WIDE BROWN EYES my six-week-old son looks up at me as I hold him. Those solemn eyes seem to ask, "What are you going to do with me?"

It is not a question for a light or hasty answer, nor for a light or hasty attitude. Here is a new beginning for me . . . a new life, the value of which I must never forget or underestimate. Here is another opportunity—only one of many which I have had and shall have again. Where I have made mistakes with my first son, perhaps I can avoid some of them with my second. It's a challenge to my experience. Have I truly learned anything from it?

God certainly must have trusted parents; and parenthood as he planned it is a deep and fulfilling experience. What a pity it sometimes goes awry. Yet almost all of our plans and purposes get off balance now and then. We do things we regret. We handle situations unwisely. We speak ill-advisedly. Perhaps that is why God gives us all new beginnings.

Parents are not the sole recipients of this loving kindness and understanding. Everyone is given many chances. We do not always recognize these chances because they come in many guises, sometimes even masquerading as misfortunes. However, there are also opportunities so common that we fail to take note of them or make them significant in our everyday lives.

In the new dawn, the new week, the new friend, the new life, and the new place to work he offers us a fresh start. In the covenant of baptism and the remembrance and renewal of that covenant each Communion Sunday, we see God's beautiful plan of encouragement and inspiration. How can anyone realize these things and yet doubt that God is forgiving and is trying with all his heart to help his children. No stern and forbidding God could offer us so many chances to make good and do good. It is only a kind and loving Father who could truly forgive and grant us so many wonderful, new beginnings.

QUESTION:

Why is it that the following passages harmonize in the King James version of the Bible, and do not harmonize in the Inspired Version?

1. Psalm 104: 14—Hebrews 1: 7
 2. Matthew 11: 27 (28 in Inspired Version)—Luke 10: 22 (23 in Inspired Version).
 3. Matthew 13: 5—Mark 4: 5.
 4. Isaiah 65: 1—Romans 10: 20.
- Alberta D. W.

ANSWER:

1. The Inspired Version renders these passages as follows:

Who maketh his angels spirits; and his ministers a flaming fire. And of the angels he saith, Angels are ministering spirits.

The first of these is practically the same as the passages in the King James or Authorized Version. The change is in the clause, "Angels are ministering spirits," and by no means creates a contradiction, but a variation of the statement by David. At the same time it creates harmony with the last verse in the same chapter which says:

Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.—Hebrews 1: 14.

What the intent of the Spirit was in prompting this change we may not know, but the text contains deep truth which harmonizes with and supports the later teaching of the author.

2. These texts, as given in the Inspired Version, read:

Matthew: All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and they to whom the Son will reveal himself; they shall see the Father also.

Luke: All things are delivered to me of my Father; and no man knoweth that the Son is the Father, and the Father is the Son, but him to whom the Son will reveal it.

While the texts vary, they do not conflict, the second being somewhat more explicit than the first. Both raise the point touching the personality of the Father and Son, Matthew's form of it assuming a unity of personality, and Luke's asserting it. Both affirm the inability of man to discover the nature of that truth by the rational mind, and both affirm the power of the Son to reveal it to whomsoever he wills. Matthew leaves the implication that by Christ's revealing himself he will thereby reveal the Father also, while Luke's implication is that to know the one is to know both. We see no conflict of teaching here. (For further comment by Jesus on the identity of Father and Son, read John 14: 7-9).

3. These texts in the two versions touching the seed which fell upon stony ground vary but slightly in form and practically none in meaning. The evangelists, writing of the same things, seldom or never express them in identical language, but each, even when quoting the words of the Lord, gave those words as he understood or remembered them. Ancient literary standards were not so exacting as those of today.

4. There is a seeming conflict in these texts as given in the Inspired Version, but only seeming when we read them in connection with their context. They read:

Isaiah: I am found of them that seek after me. I give unto all them that ask of me: I am not found of them that sought me not, or inquired not after me.

Romans: I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not for me.

The inspired rendering of Isaiah's statement is based on principle, and applies to all individuals, agreeing with Jesus' teaching to "ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find." That in Romans is spoken, not as a doctrinal principle, but as a fact of history of which the author was well aware, being expressed in the past tense. It has reference to the Gentile world, as may be seen by reading two preceding and one succeeding chapters. When Israel rejected Christ and his gospel, the Lord sent the message to the Gentile world which had not looked for him nor asked for his gospel. Many believed and found Christ and his salvation. Both texts are true and consistent according to the application intended.

Owendale. A short history of the church at this place was recently published in the Herald.

After a fellowship meeting, I preached at 10:45; Pastor Frank Shuefelt was in charge. Dinner was served in the lower auditorium by the women of the area.

At 1:30 p.m. an overflow congregation witnessed the dedicatory services. Elder Shuefelt was in charge, assisted by Elder Phillips. The choir performed well, and there was special music. I addressed the audience on the subject, "Altars and the Special Work of the Church."

Apostle Oakman was busy elsewhere and could not attend these services, but was scheduled to speak at late afternoon and evening meetings.

Here I met Saints with familiar names: the Muirs, McKenzies, Weavers, Harders, Campbells, and others—long-time members or descendants of early-day Saints.

Detroit

Brother Earl W. McIntosh of Detroit, by arrangement with Elder Blair McClain who is in charge of the Detroit area, was at the dedication services. At 3:00 o'clock we were on our way—and it was quite a "way"—to Detroit.

Here the district conference was in session, and we arrived about an hour before the business meeting was adjourned. In this way I was privileged to witness Elder McClain in action as a presiding officer and was well pleased with his performance. Here, also, dinner was served by the women.

While Brother McClain and I were eating, Sister O. W. Slasor, who is in charge of the women's work in the Detroit area, found me and intrusted to my care and keeping a gift for my companion from the women of Detroit. It was a fine pen and pencil set which Sister Smith prizes very much.

Choral and special music initiated the 7:30 evening service in charge of Elder McClain. I spoke on the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith. Elders William Garnier and S. C. Sharer assisted. The congregation overflowed into the lower rooms.

At the close of this service Elder James E. Bishop, on behalf of himself and about thirty others of the brethren, gave me a complete pen and pencil set in a fine case. For the first time I find myself carrying complete writing equipment: pen, ball point, and pencil.

Detroit Area

I accepted Brother McClain's request and remained at Detroit for the night, being again a guest in his home. His boys are developing into men very fast, and I was pleased to learn one of them has become a student at Graceland College.

On Monday Brother McClain took me over much of the area under his supervision, and I was gratified to note the material progress of the Saints at Detroit.

At noon I was en route home via Chicago. I arrived in Independence safely on Tuesday, October 25, and found all well.

some excellent opportunities for ministry are lost and, now and again, the law of the church is improperly administered.

In view of the foregoing, we are making the following suggestions for your consideration:

- (1) In districts or branches, where a branch or district bishop is available, it should be the rule to refer all initial court actions to him.
- (2) Where there is no branch or district bishop, or competent high priests or elders available, a statement of the general nature of the charges may be sent to the First Presidency with a request for information concerning bishops, high priests, or elders who may be had to compose a court.
- (3) When the charges are such as might involve expulsion from the church, members of the Presidency will do their utmost to make available a bishop to preside over the court.
- (4) In all cases the Presidency will endeavor to suggest competent court members.

It is not intended that the Presidency shall become responsible for the selection of Bishops' and elders' courts, but rather that branch and district presidents shall be advised of the most experienced court members available, and that the selection shall be made by them on the basis of this information.

Briefs

KALISPELL, MONTANA.—The first missionary services were held in September, when Elder Philip Moore of Spokane, Washington, conducted a two-weeks series. He illustrated several sermons with slides. There is an enrollment of sixty-two members, and we had an average attendance of thirty for the year. Ninety-one guests visited here in 1949.

The main objective of this group is to build a new church. At present it is necessary to hold meetings in a building that is twenty by twenty feet in size.

Seventy E. Y. Hunker met with us in November and baptized two young boys, Barry and Roderick Dobson of Cutbank, Montana.

Officers for the new year are Joseph W. Minthorn, branch president; Paul N. Hovey, church school director; Dollie Anderson, women's department leader; Violet Rasmussen, assistant leader of women's department; Lola Levitt, music director; Bonnie Minthorn, pianist; Dena Levitt, secretary and young people's leader; and Reva Stratton, librarian.—Reported by ELSIE L. MINTHORN.

WALTHILL, NEBRASKA.—The annual branch business meeting, September 16, elected: Elder Lester Hunt, pastor; Bessie Taylor, secretary; George Taylor, treasurer; Mazie Wingett, church school director and book steward; Leroy Hunt, Zion's League leader; Gertrude Gatrost, historian; Dolly Hunt, music director and church school secretary; Hazel Hunt, women's leader and branch reporter.

On November 5 the women's department held a chicken supper which was quite successful.

On October 9 twenty-one Saints from Tabor and Glenwood, Iowa, and from Fremont, Nebraska, were visitors. Lester Hunt, pastor of Tabor, Iowa, was guest speaker in the morning service. A basket lunch was served at the L. W. Hunt home in Walthill.

"Anniversary Night" was held November 13 to celebrate the thirty-second anniversary of the branch. A history was read by Mrs. Roy Gatrost; short talks were given by former pastors; special music was by the Decatur and Walthill young people.

December 4 was an eventful day. Leroy Hunt was ordained teacher by Elders Albert Livingston and Charles Neff. Five children were blessed, Rozanna and Marlow, children of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Anderson; Linda May and Alice Faye, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Means; and Terry Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Edgington. Evangelist Roland Scott of Omaha was also present for services of the day. He gave two patriarchal blessings.

The Christmas program was presented December 22.

Miss Madonna Hunt was home from Graceland College for the holidays.—Reported by HAZEL HUNT.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.—A Christmas banquet was held in the church basement on the evening of December 27. The event was in keeping with the holiday season and was sponsored by the young adult group and the choir members. Our special guest and speaker was President Israel A. Smith. About 115 persons attended the event and dined in a festival atmosphere under Christmas bells and in candlelight.

The program consisted of the invocation by Elder Burr Bronson, the pastor; the welcome by Miss Metta Anderson; a vocal trio, "The Peanut Song," by Mrs. C. L. Petre, Mrs. W. A. Hamilton, and Mrs. G. R. Macrae; two vocal solos, "Winter Wonderland," by Miss Bernice Lambkin, and "He Shall Feed His Flock," from Handel's The Messiah by Mrs. Lela Lee.

After the President's Christmas message, he was presented with a gift from the Holden Branch. It was a painting by Mrs. Corbett Thompson. In closing all sang "Silent Night" and the benediction was given by Elder Charles Robinson.—Reported by JAMES CHRISTENSON.

OMAHA INDIAN MISSION, MACY, NEBRASKA.—The Mission Church was opened again to the Indian Saints on July 17. Church school was held in the afternoon. District President Albert Livingston spoke at the late afternoon service. At a business meeting Brother Livingston appointed Elder Lester Hunt to have temporary charge of the mission. Those chosen to assist with the classwork were Miss Mazie Wingett, Mr. and Mrs. George Taylor, Mrs. Hunt, and John Schlotman of Walthill, Nebraska, Mr. and Mrs. Bern Case, near the mission; Mrs. Dick Tyndall, near Macy; and Mrs. Mary Mitchell, Macy. There was an attendance of forty-one.

The Communion service held August 6 was attended by forty-two.

Services were held August 21 on the Omaha Indian Pow Wow Grounds. Elder Clem Evans of Sioux City, Iowa, was the guest speaker. Music was furnished by the Indian women.

On September 4 a basket dinner was given in honor of the young people leaving for school. Madonna Hunt and John Schlotman went to Graceland. Misses Glenna and Vivian Mitchell, Eunice Walker, Laura Faye Tyndall went to Haskell school near Lawrence, Kansas.

Mrs. Mary McCauley of Macy, and Miss Alberta Rave, a blind Indian, of Winnebago, were baptized in the Missouri River by Elder L. W. Hunt on September 18. During the confirmation service, which followed the baptismal service, District President A. Livingston spoke in prophecy to the seventy-five people present.

District women's leader Hazel Hunt met with the Indian women at the home of Sister Lizzie Springer, October 18, to help them organize a women's department. On the same day the women sponsored a program and box social in the lower auditorium of the church.

On October 30 there was an attendance of eighty for a dinner served in the lower auditorium after services by the daughters of Brother Alex Essau in memory of their mother's birthday. She died in 1947.

On Christmas night a program was presented by the young people. Treats were donated by the women's department. Many gifts (sent from Independence) were presented to the children.

Some of those assisting with the work with the Indians are Albert Livingston, Guy Riley, and Carl Self of Omaha; Harold Newton and family of Fremont, Nebraska; Oscar Case and Henry Rowland of Independence, Missouri; C. D. Hunt and Lester Hunt of Glenwood, Iowa.—Reported by ELDER LESTER HUNT.

YUMA, COLORADO.—A dedication service for the new church building was held December 4, with President Israel A. Smith as speaker of the day. Other visiting ministers were Ward A. Hougas of Denver, I. A. Reynolds of Ft. Morgan, J. D. Curtis of Colorado Springs, J. R. Grayhill and Byron Grayhill of Goodland, Kansas, Harold Fitzwater of Champion, Nebraska, Kenneth Ingram of Goodland, Kansas, and Irby Mundy of Colorado Springs. Approximately 140 people attended the services, including many from visiting branches.—Reported by MRS. FLOYD MURPHY.

Salesmanship and Self-Analysis

I WORK in the sales department of a growing company, where I am constantly exposed to sales talk. This company demands a very high type salesmanship based on honesty, knowledge, vision, enthusiasm, courage, tact, poise, health, and loyalty. Those who are chosen to represent it realize that their intelligence and conduct will reflect on the company, and sales will go up or down in direct proportion. The success of this or any other business depends on the sales of its products or services.

This reminds me of God's business—the evangelization of the world through the church. It's interesting to think of the progress of our church on the plane of salesmanship. The priesthood must, of course, be God's sales staff, but every member is a "junior salesman." More than that, God requires "specialty" salesmen who possess qualities of a higher degree than most men. It is our task to present "a way of life." Training for this position should begin early in life. At the age of twelve, Jesus was preparing himself to be about his Father's business. It was at this time his parents took him to the pass-over feast held once a year in Jerusalem. A day of travel passed on their return home before they missed him from the caravan. Then with anxious hearts Mary and Joseph turned back to Jerusalem to search for him. They were astonished to find him sitting in the midst of learned men, and when Mary admonished him, he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

IT IS OUR EARNEST belief that God's work supersedes everything else in this world. Since this is true, it is imperative that we cultivate ourselves in ability and knowledge to present the gospel to others. We would do well to cultivate the qualities a manufacturing concern desires in its representatives. One of the first of these is the ability to secure the attention, interest, and confidence of those with whom we come in contact. We must learn to replace our mental laziness with initiative, a quality of resourcefulness—the ability to create opportunities to help

Jane Brunson is a graduate of Butler High School, Vandalia, Ohio, class of 1944. The following year she was married to Wally Brunson of Independence, Missouri, and through him became interested in the church. She was baptized in June, 1948, and is now serving as church school director of The Plains, Ohio, Branch. She is employed as secretary to the director of sales training of the McBee Company in Athens, Ohio. Her husband is also an employee of this company.

others to know about God and to understand his precepts. A resourceful servant is one who has learned to apply his daily lessons (experiences) to situations far removed from that in which they were first witnessed. We can best develop initiative by constantly increasing our background of knowledge of God's laws.

Industry is another quality to be considered. A really industrious person gives attention to work in the order of its importance. Our most important task is to help other people find God. Jesus said, "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." We must be inspired to work effectively. Poorly directed effort is not much better than laziness.

Today, more than ever, knowledge of facts forms the basis for decision. This makes it necessary for us to have a thorough knowledge of the Three Standard Books, and of general problems of this modern day. Together with this knowledge we must use wisdom, the power that enables us to apply knowledge advantageously. Before we can be good representatives, we must know what God expects of his people and also what he offers them. We can never reach a saturation point in this respect. No one man yet has complete mastery of the entire range of the Lord's revelations. The time we take to study the personalities of those about us will pay ample dividends, for it will enable us to approach them intelligently. It is equally important to pick out specific facts on which to convince the prospect of his need for Jesus Christ.

Just as in the business world, one of the most important qualities of God's people is honesty. This involves more than straight dealing in financial affairs. A man's first obligation is to be honest with himself. A given problem cannot be corrected until its existence is recognized, nor can faults or weaknesses be eliminated from our lives if we are possessed by self-satisfaction.

WHEN WE ACKNOWLEDGE our membership in the church of Jesus Christ, we may be its only representatives to many persons. Our reputation, our habits, our self-control, and our reliability must always justify their trust in us. In sincerity, sobriety, and decency we must see that we reflect only credit, never discredit, upon this church.

New Horizons

When we have gathered to ourselves a full meaning of the gospel, we are able to visualize in our minds a practicable, godly way of life. Our task then is to communicate this vision to others.

The quality of confidence or faith is important, too. A good salesman must be confident of the benefits his customer may derive from using the product he is selling. The same holds true in selling the gospel. If we show a lack of faith in what we teach, our prospects lose confidence in us and in the way of life we are proposing to them. We must bear in mind that confidence is contagious.

Enthusiasm is confidence in action. This is a most essential attribute. It is the spark of life that fires all the other commendable characteristics into one effective whole. Take the missionary for instance—one who is truly enthusiastic. He talks as if he means what he says, for he does mean every word. He loves his work. He'd rather be selling the advantages of the gospel than doing anything else.

The missionary must impart his enthusiasm to those with whom he comes in contact, or his ministry will not be successful. However, true enthusiasm is not superficial; rather it is an honest and steady reflection of the missionary's whole-hearted interest in God's work. No prospect can long continue in contact with an enthusiastic missionary without actually catching some of the enthusiasm for the gospel.

COURAGE is another trait that should not be overlooked. It makes us attempt things which appear difficult. A man may have numerous commendable characteristics, but unless he has the courage to use them, to go where they can be used most effectively, and to meet problems squarely as they arise, they will be of little value to him. We often meet situations in which we must use courage to make the right decision. We must decide whether to go where we are most needed and can offer the most assistance or where we will be most graciously accepted —the path of least resistance. Frequent check-ups on our actions and attitudes can be profitable. However, it takes courage of the finest kind to analyze our defects and ferret out their cause. There is little reason why a servant of God should lack courage, for he knows he represents One who is supremely powerful and whose work is perfection.

Back of the confidence and courage of a good Latter Day Saint, you will find self-respect. The man who does not respect himself cannot expect others to respect him or his beliefs. In the eyes of most people in our communities, we are the church. Their opinion of the church will be formed largely from their judgment of us—of our personal habits and the company we keep. Self-respect will show in the little details of our appearance. In this matter cleanliness and neatness are exceedingly important.

Tact is another quality to be considered. The investments we make toward good manners are most profitable; yet good manners are only the outward sign of courtesy. A talent for tact is a definite asset in any walk of life. It is that instinctive consideration for the other person extended to include appreciation of his or her differing point of view, mode of thought, and eccentricities. Tact, you might say, is good judgment. It enables us to say the right thing at the right time. Lack of it usually reveals ignorance, thoughtlessness, and selfishness. A salesman must always be able to differentiate between weakness and tactfulness. We cannot let ourselves be "eased out" of a situation which calls for persistence. It is the driving force that spurs us on to new knowledge, ability, and success.

Poise is another desirable point of salesmanship. It is easily discerned in Jesus. He was never at a loss for the right thing to do or say. This poise is a quality which enables us to appear at ease in any situation. The absence of it will cause us to become confused and do or say things which ordinarily we would not. This quality can be acquired most readily through observation and association with those who have poise.

LET US CONSIDER our physical bodies next. Good health and vigor are essential. Our bodies are just as much a gift of God as the spiritual part of our beings and should be cared for accordingly. When one is physically run down, mental fatigue usually follows in normal sequence. Physical deficiencies reduce the effectiveness of our lives. A healthy body is better fitted to cope with obstacles. A sickly, nervous person cannot exert personal magnetism or radiate the enthusiasm which is so necessary to the success of a "specialty" representative, whether he be a salesman for a manufacturing concern or God. Illness has a tendency to make one self-centered. Above all things, we must refrain from boring others with a rehearsal of our ills. General health is within the individual's control. There are certain rules which will insure it, given a body that is free from organic defects. The fundamentals of good health are right thinking, correct eating, plenty of exercise, sufficient sleep, and avoiding all forms of excess. It is our duty to our Creator as well as ourselves to see that this vitality is constantly renewed and to keep our mental and physical activities well balanced. The old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," still holds true. All faith and no work has the same effect on a Christian.

Keep an open mind. Welcome constructive criticism and suggestions from any sincere source. If we observe and develop the salesman's qualities in our daily lives we shall all be better representatives of God.

In self-examination take no account of yourself by your thoughts and resolutions in the days of religion and solemnity; examine how it is with you in the days of ordinary conversation and in the circumstances of secular employment.

FELLOWSHIP DINNER

A fellowship dinner was given January 6 by the Omaha, Nebraska, Branch in honor of Patriarch R. W. Scott. Brother Scott, who has given many years of service to the people of Nebraska, was leaving to make his home with his daughters in Independence and in Seminole, Oklahoma. The Presidency sent this message to be read at the dinner: "Fully appreciating the feelings of the Omaha Saints in losing their patriarch, the Presidency join them in wishing Brother Scott every happiness in his new environment. We know he fully deserves the choice place you accord to him in your hearts. Your loss is partially our gain, and Independence welcomes him with open arms."

ON APPROVED LIST

The Independence Sanitarium and Hospital has been placed on the approved list, according to the annual survey of hospitals made by the American College of Surgeons. About three thousand of the hospitals of United States and Canada have been placed on this list. The school of nursing of the hospital has been accredited by the State Board of Nurse Examiners.

President Israel A. Smith is governing board president of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, while the chief of staff is Richard Twyman, M.D., and the administrator is Miss Gertrude E. Copeland.

According to the records of Miss Mabel Faulkner, supervisor of the baby department, babies were born at the average rate of one hundred a month during 1949. During the first nine days of January there were thirty-seven born in the Sanitarium. The department can accommodate thirty-one mothers and thirty-six babies at one time.

CHRISTMAS INVITATION IN JAPANESE

High Priest Howard Miller sent Apostle Charles R. Hield a copy of the Christmas announcement that was used by the Kalihi Branch in Honolulu to invite members and friends to attend the cantata, "Angelic Tidings." The announcement stated that this would be the first Christmas at the church's new location. Part of the invitation was written in English, and part in Japanese.

TO GERMAN POST

Chaplain Floyd H. Engstrom (Captain, United States Army) and his wife will sail for Germany about February 5. Previous to this he was stationed at Camp Chaffee in Arkansas. He expects to be stationed in Germany about three years. On a former trip to Germany, Elder Engstrom contacted many Saints there. He plans on doing the same this time.

NEWS FROM GULF STATES DISTRICT

A letter received by the Presidency states that District President W. J. Breshears has personally baptized fifty-eight people during 1949 in the Gulf States District.

Local ministers are being trained for missionary work. Several new church buildings are now under construction in the district.

APOSTLE GLEAZER IN LAMONI

Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke at the 11:00 service in the Lamoni Coliseum on January 8 on the subject, "By Your Hands I Will Work." He also gave the Communion address at the service held in the Coliseum in the afternoon.

CORRECTION

In the January 2 issue of this column it was incorrectly stated that Bishop Walter N. Johnson visited Warrensburg, Missouri, on December 11. Brother Johnson visited Columbia, Missouri. Student Hale McCord, Jr., is in charge of the Columbia group.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Fred B. Shumate, 1125 Lincoln Avenue, Loveland, Colorado, asks the Saints to fast and pray for him that he may not lose his hearing. He is an elder and feels that his work will be hampered if he becomes totally deaf.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Curtis Haviland, 414 West Third Avenue, Seattle 99, Washington, that she may regain her health. She was just recently baptized into the church.

Prayers are requested for Aron Gentry, Route 2, Jacksonville, Arkansas, (a nonmember) who is partially paralyzed because of a brain tumor. At present he is unable to provide a living for his wife and family.

Anna Samuel, Lapeer State Home, Cottage 30, Lapeer, Michigan, asks for the continued prayers of the Saints.

Prayers are requested for Mrs. Olive Titus, a patient at a mental institution in Stockton, California. Before her affliction she was a devoted worker in the church.

ENGAGEMENTS

Jones-Ballantyne

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Ballantyne of Dore, North Dakota, announce the engagement of their daughter, Rubie Joy, to George Irving Jones of Fairview, Montana. The wedding will take place on June 8 at the Reorganized Church in Fairview.

Young-Whiting

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Whiting of Independence, Missouri, announce the engagement of their daughter, Bilcine, to Mr. George Patrick Young, Jr., of Butler, Pennsylvania. The wedding has been set for early spring.

WEDDINGS

Swails-Beitz

Joyce Darlene Beitz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Beitz of Muscatine, Iowa, and Kenneth Jay Swails, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Swails of Clarksdale, Missouri, were married December 27 at the First Baptist Church in Muscatine. Elder Norman Hinckers of Stewartville, Missouri, read the double-ring ceremony. Mrs. Swails is a graduate of Graceland College and the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing (class of '49). Mr. Swails, also a graduate of Graceland, is attending Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, where they are making their home.

Currier-Gummow

Nellie Ann Gummow and Clarence Irwin Currier were married on December 4 at the Reorganized Church in Salem, Oregon. Elder Charles H. Asher officiated.

BIRTHS

A daughter, Colleen Lynn, was born on April 21, 1949, to Veryle L. and Virginia Browne of Port Huron, Michigan.

DEATHS

MORRIS.—Lizzie, daughter of Martin V. and Mary Pierce, was born on September 7, 1878, in Barton County, Missouri, and died November 29, 1949, at her farm home near Ava, Missouri. She was married to J. E. Morris on January 27, 1901; six children were born to them, three dying in infancy. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 8, 1913, and served as secretary of the Ava Branch for over thirty years.

She is survived by her husband of the home; two sons: Eldon of Ava and Hugh of Leeton, Missouri; a daughter, Inez Deatwage, also of Leeton; thirteen grandchildren; and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Klinkingbeard Mortuary in Ava by J. W. Davis, Carl E. Freeman, and A. M. Baker. Burial was in Turkey Creek Cemetery.

NEILL.—John Robert, son of David and Rosa Neill, was born March 9, 1887, at River Falls, Wisconsin, and died January 8, 1950, at Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on April 17, 1904, was ordained a deacon on December 4, 1904; a priest on August 7, 1910; and an elder on September 23, 1917. On February 24, 1910, he was married to Myrtle Gunsolley; three children were born to them. Brother Neill was very active in church work, having served as pastor of the Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Branch, president of the Southern Saskatchewan District, and group elder at Walnut Park Church in Independence, Missouri. He had made his home in Independence since 1942 and was an employee of the Viking Refrigerator Company.

He is survived by his wife, Myrtle; a son, Floyd, of the home; two daughters: Dorothy of the home and Mrs. Helen Shanley of Stitzer, Wisconsin; three brothers: Joseph D. and William M. of Independence, and Henry T. of Lizard Lake, Saskatchewan; three sisters: Mrs. Mary Sulz of Golden Prairie, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Elizabeth Jenson and Mrs. Jennie Leavens, both of Weyburn; and two grandchildren.

BLACK.—Fred C., son of Alex and Martha Roundy Black, was born on June 9, 1873, in Gallands Grove, Iowa, and died December 23, 1949, at Porter Sanitarium in Denver, Colorado. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight. In 1898 he moved to Denver, Colorado, and was married to Bertha R. Thompson on August 31, 1903.

He is survived by his wife; a sister, Mrs. Minnie Keairnes of Dow City, Iowa; and two brothers: Curtis of Logan, Iowa, and Clayton of Woodbine, Iowa. Funeral services were held at the Moore Mortuary, Elders E. J. Williams and Ernest Crownover officiating. Burial was in Crown Hill Cemetery.

DIGGLE.—Jeanette, was born April 27, 1861, in Lafayette County, Wisconsin, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sarah Ratigan, in Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 2, 1950. She was married to William E. Diggle on October 2, 1879; thirteen children were born to them. Four of them preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on November 27, 1918, and remained strong in the faith until her death.

Those children who survive are five daughters: Mrs. Sarah Ratigan; Mrs. Fred Peterson, Neola, Iowa; Mrs. Mae Carey, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Edna O'Neill, San Bernardino, California; Mrs. O. T. Olson, Alhambra, California; and four sons: Floyd of Council Bluffs, Orson of San Bernardino, James of Bakersfield, California; and Tom of Claremont, California. She also leaves a sister, Mrs. Louise Honeywell, Logan, Iowa; twenty-six grandchildren, and twenty-two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian Church at Neola, Iowa, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in the Neola cemetery.

SIEBERT.—Sarah E., daughter of Reuben and Candace Gabler, was born at Red Rock, Iowa, November 21, 1870, and died December 21, 1949, at her home in Rich Hill, Missouri. She was married on July 29, 1888, to Peter Siebert, who preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since her youth and was always a strong defender of the faith.

She is survived by two sons: Gerald E. of the home and Melvin of Independence, Missouri; four daughters: Mrs. Elma Audet of the home; Mrs. Lula Harford of Independence; Mrs. Candace Wickham and Mrs. Ruby Jones of Kansas City, Missouri; eleven grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Rich Hill on December 24. Burial was in Green Lawn Cemetery.

ATKINSON.—William Henry, son of William Harvey and Mary Atkinson, was born October 20, 1872, near Mt. Moriah, Missouri, and died December 29, 1949, at his home in Osawatimie, Kansas. On August 28, 1893, he married Anna Atkinson; three children were born to them. Mrs. Atkinson, a son, and daughter preceded him in death. In January, 1936, he married Mrs. Lillie Bray. From 1917 until 1940, the year of his retirement, he was in the mercantile business. Although he joined the Methodist Church in his youth and was active in that organization many years, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 8, 1937, remaining a devoted worker until his death. He also belonged to the Masonic Lodge.

He is survived by his wife, Lillie, of the home; a daughter, Maud Augusta of Osawatimie; three sisters; four grandchildren; five step-children; and ten step-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the Methodist Church in Osawatimie, Elders J. O. Rennie and Guy Cadwell officiating.

 THE REAL NEWS

Every weekday, immediately following the church "Morning Devotions" on KMBC, there are two farm broadcasts that are exceedingly interesting. I mention them because I know them best. It could apply elsewhere.

The fact that farmers are keenly concerned about prices links them with the whole economic structure of the nation and with the markets of the world. Farm commentators know this and keep well informed on legislation and world trade as well as on current problems of soil, crops, and livestock. As a consequence they dispense some of the most important and significant information and news that may be heard on any radio programs. The language they talk, of course, is homespun, but these men know their business. They speak for the man on the soil rather than for the man on the street; and of the two it seems that the man on the soil is the better-informed citizen.

Consider the patten on other newscasts: politics, crime, accident, scandal, divorce, war, international relations—some of it important, most of it insignificant. . . . Many city workers came from the farm. They are behind the times. Yet they know that all social, commercial, and industrial life depends ultimately upon agriculture.

I like the calm reasonableness, the sanity and practical sense of farm commentators—their honest facing of risk and disaster, of life and its problems. If I should never plant another row of lettuce, nor ever see a field of wheat again, I would still see the products on some table every day, and what the farm commentators have to say would still be very important to me.

 GYPSY HOMES

The oyster anchored to his rock and the office worker tied to his job look with envy at the wanderer who may freely go where he will. A sign like "New York" or "Los Angeles" on the front of a bus can make the slave of duty sick with longing.

The "foot-loose and fancy-free" fraternity (and sorority, too) are often represented in the parking spaces near the Auditorium. Visitors from everywhere appear, with many modes of travel.

At conferences and other times there are always a few house trailers—tiny bits of domestic coziness, tabloid-sized for mobility. Most familiar of the visiting vehicles is the cheerful red truck with the canvas prairie schooner top in which Brother Irby Mundy travels, a friendly combination of the boots and saddle days with the machine age.

A new personally built gypsy home appeared on the lot recently. Something like a trailer cabin was built over a standard auto chassis. No trailer at all—it was in a single efficient unit. The master of this roving castle sat in a swivel chair in front, complacently reading a magazine. Through starched curtains one could see his lady moving around a tiny cookstove and a worktable. Dinner was preparing, with a delicious odor of steak and potatoes filtering out. A distinctly "Ummm!" atmosphere that made drools. How nice it would be to have a job that would take you everywhere and tie you nowhere!

Introducing...

JAMES PYCOCK, Walkerville, Ontario, (page 5) was born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1879. He was baptized in Toronto, Ontario, in 1897. He married Elizabeth M. McClean in 1910. They have two daughters: Bethene Elizabeth (Mrs. J. C. Bavington), and Isabelle M. (Mrs. Lloyd Hall). A daughter, Lois, died in 1929.

Following his elementary school training, he continued his education by correspondence work for a number of years. His hobbies are travel, history, and ethnology. His special interests are writing and public speaking. He has been a member of the Prohibition Alliance, World Religious Education Society, Boy Scout Association, and several ministerial associations.

Brother Pycock began his priesthood responsibilities as a priest; he was ordained an elder in 1904, and a seventy in 1906. From 1905 to 1932 he was under General Conference appointment. From 1937 to 1941 he was in charge of Kirtland Temple. He then became pastor of the Windsor Branch from 1941 to 1946, and is now counselor to the president of the Detroit-Windsor District. As early as 1922 he preached over the radio in Winnipeg and from Hamilton in the winter of 1936-1937.

CONRAD H. BOOTON, Council Bluffs, Iowa, (page 14) was born on November 2, 1898. On his father's side he came from a long line of Methodist ministers; his mother's people were old-time Latter Day Saints. His grandfather was an elder associated with Joseph the Martyr. His grandmother was born by the roadside in the church migration of the early spring of 1837. Her parents settled in Nauvoo sometime between 1840 and 1843.

At the age of nine Brother Booton lost his right foot in a railroad accident, and during his younger years knew much hardship. His secondary education was obtained by night school and correspondence courses which took him beyond a high school education. In addition to the social sciences, he has followed such interests as astronomy, salesmanship, and commercial history. He has studied both instrumental and vocal music. Brother Booton is an avid reader and has read the Doctrine and Covenants through "at least eight times and the Book of Mormon forty-one times."

Since his baptism in 1920, he has taught many classes, and at the present time is teaching three Book of Mormon classes. His hobbies are collecting canes, Indian pictures, and records of master singers.

He married Dorothy Elizabeth Steffen in 1927.

He is a member of the Lion's Club and Chamber of Commerce. He owns and operates a printing and letter service shop.

ZELLA M. (MRS. V. D.) RUCH, Council Bluffs, Iowa, (page 16) was born at Huntsville, Missouri, and baptized at Bevier. She was graduated from the Huntsville High School and attended Graceland in 1920-1921, studying with the class of religious education.

She married Verner Delbert Ruch in 1913. They have one daughter, Velma, now an instructor at Graceland College.

Sister Ruch was valedictorian in high school. Her hobbies are music, teaching, sewing, interior decoration, and flower gardening.

Before joining the church she was an active member of the Baptist Church. After becoming a Latter Day Saint, Sister Ruch, assisted by her husband, started a Sunday school in their home. After Brother Ruch's ordination, they also held preaching services there. In 1921 Brother Ruch went under missionary appointment and served a total of twelve years on two different missions to Scandinavia. Sister Ruch accompanied him and labored in the church school and women's work.

She has written stories for the quarterlies and church papers and taught in a summer vacation school at the Campus, in leadership training courses, reunions, and women's department institutes. She is now supervisor of women and has fourteen circles with many projects functioning in Council Bluffs.

Sister Ruch has also been active in civic organizations. She was recording secretary for the Tulsa Council of Churches for several years. She is a member of the Federated Women's Club and served as leader of the American Home Department two years. She frequently gives lectures before P.T.A. groups, civic clubs, and other church organizations.

News & Notes

SANITARIUM NEWS

Dr. Beth Reimer of San Diego was a recent Sanitarium visitor. In answer to a question about how the Sanitarium compares with hospitals of similar capacity, Dr. Reimer replied, "The Sanitarium has more equipment and is more modern than is usual in hospitals of its size."

APOSTLE GLEAZER

A large number of young people were among those present when Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke to the Stewartville, Missouri, Branch on January 15.

Brother Gleazer spoke at the Englewood Church at the 11:00 service of Sunday 22. In the evening of Sunday 15, he spoke at the Walnut Park Church to a record number of people.

HERALD IN HOLLAND

Two copies of "Der Deutsche Herald" were received at the Herald Publishing House. This paper is printed in the German language in Rotterdam, Holland. The work is in charge of Eugene A Theys. Others working on the paper are Kurt Zacharias, Hetty Zacharias, Kurt Schenk, and Erich Huhold.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, spent the week of January 15 to January 22 on the campus at Graceland College. He reports a most stimulating and profitable experience.

The theme for the religious activities of the campus for January centered around the man power of the church. On successive Sunday mornings, Dr. McDowell addressed the faculty and student body on the subjects, "Needs Around the Church" and "Man Power for the Great Adventure." He participated in the student-faculty fellowship service devoted to the theme, "Power—Is There a Price?" addressed a youth leadership class of eighty-five members, a priesthood class, joined in fellowship social with members of the faculty and their wives, married men of the priesthood and their wives, and the sixty-five young men of the priesthood on the campus; also a priesthood fellowship built around the theme, "The Power of Togetherness."

Of special significance were his personal interviews with the sixty-five ordained men on the campus—personal interviews of one-half hour each in length. Intelligence, devotion to the church, and anxiety to be about their Father's business were manifest throughout on the part of the representative group of young men coming from all sections of the church. Here, indeed, is a prophecy of the achievement of our goals.

NEWS FROM PRESIDENT SMITH

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, president emeritus of the Order of Evangelists, was eighty-eight years old on January 19. The brother is in excellent health, in possession of all his faculties, with a remarkable memory of the things he has done and seen. We congratulate him and pray his life may be extended for his good works. His address is 11718 Winner Road, Independence, Missouri.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths lingers in illness at his home in Kirtland, Ohio, rapidly approaching his ninety-fourth birthday anniversary. His address is R.F.D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

A Co-operative Project

FEBRUARY 1 marked the first anniversary of my appointment as managing editor. The work has been much more pleasant than I had anticipated. I'll admit that the thought of meeting a "deadline" for copy every week frightened me at first. However, I've found that all editorial work has one thing in common, whether it is for a quarterly, monthly, or weekly: we need to do only one day's work at a time.

Being a "yearling" does not qualify me to speak from experience nor to become reminiscent. Yet editing the Saints' Herald is essentially a co-operative project. Never before have I been so dependent on so many people. The raw material with which the editor works (no puns, please) comes largely from varied and unknown sources. Our contributors expect no pay and write only as the spirit moves them. Yet this has worked out quite satisfactorily because so many in this church love the Lord's kingdom and are moved by the spirit of service and testimony.

"Lacked Ye Any Thing?"

Jesus once reminded his disciples that God helps those who will try. He has too much invested in this church to let us down if we will go on in faith.

When I sent you without purse and scrip, or shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, I say unto you again, He who hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip; and he who hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one. For I say unto you, This that is written must yet be accomplished in me.—Luke 22: 35-37.

I have been greatly pleased that the need for articles has been so well supplied and came about as needed. We ended the year with much more material and a better quality than we had at the start. Why this is so I do not know. There is no evidence that personal sympathy nor favor played any part, but I am truly grateful and believe the Lord has blessed those who have thus served the church.

Variety Needed

It is true that we have asked some of our writers to work on assigned topics so as to keep a better balance in our subject matter. Some of our best writers are very busy people. Unless they are urged to contribute on a specific subject at a certain date, they never find time to write for publication. The church becomes richer because we keep these people conscious of its literary needs. Most of the articles and letters making up the Herald each week, however, are there because the writers were full of their subject and wanted to share their ideas.

The many letters which have expressed appreciation for the Herald have been heartening. The fact that there has been scarcely any complaint has been surprising. This is not inferring that we are in danger of the woe Jesus pronounced, "when all men shall speak well of you." Perhaps 98 per cent of our subscribers say nothing about its contents—they are tolerant and understanding. They know our material must be varied to suit a wide age-span and those at various ages of spiritual growth. Our only guarantee is that each issue will contain much that is of interest to all. This causes us to reject or hold some articles lest we overwork some subjects or areas of interest only to a minority. Most of the rejections, however, are due to poor literary quality which editorial help cannot remedy. Many of our contributors have had little formal training as writers, but they have studied and observed until they can express what they have to say clearly and concisely. It is an art which does not come with an impulsive desire nor with a mere faith without works.

The Regular Features

A few people deserve much credit for some of our popular unsigned columns. The "Home Column" is supervised by Mrs. Pauline J. Arnson, Chairman of the General Council of Women, and her associates. They are deeply concerned with the church-wide problem of building Zionic homes. Most of these articles are of interest to fathers, priesthood members, and young people as well as to mothers. The theme, "Better Homes," should really appeal to all.

"New Horizons" is designed for youth appeal. Its contributors are young people who discuss subjects which concern youth. This column is supervised by Mrs. Naomi Russell, editorial assistant.

"News and Notes" are reported and edited by Mrs. Emma M. Phillips. Each week she goes to the Auditorium and interviews members of the general church staff who are available. These men willingly break their routine to talk with her so the whole church can learn through this column the happenings in their fields of responsibility.

That back-page column under the simple heading, "P.S." reflects the mood of the Associate Editor, Leonard J. Lea. It is spicy, sometimes whimsical, but always thoughtful and stimulating.

"Introducing" and "Future Features" are written by the managing editor. These do not appear every week because each of the feature writers in some issues have already been introduced, or suitable space may not be available to give a glimpse of good things to come.

"Question Time" has proved a popular column. So popular, in fact, that the panel has not been able to keep up with its current demands. Our debt of gratitude is greatest to those panel members whose patient research and careful effort have made this column possible.

Rules of Order

Continued

This is the third section of the proposed Rules of Order as explained in the Herald of January 23, 1950. Administrative officers again are urged to send the Presidency their comments or criticisms preliminary to General Conference action.—Editor

III. CONFERENCES AND ASSEMBLIES

CONFERENCES ARE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES of the church. They may be regular or special. Regular conferences may be held annually, semi-annually, or otherwise, as agreed upon by those who constitute their membership. They may represent the church at large, missions, stakes, or districts, and bear names accordingly, as General Conferences, mission conferences, stake conferences, or district conferences. They are subject to the jurisdiction of the First Presidency, ministers in charge, stake presidents, and district presidents.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE is a convocation of the general authorities of the church, empowered to act for the entire church. All general officers of the church may attend, and delegates may be appointed for districts and for such branches as are not included in district organizations. These delegates may present such questions as they may have been specially instructed to offer, or as they may think to be wise, and may ask consideration and decision thereon.

MEMBERS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY. A General Assembly of the authorities of the church is a convocation of the priesthood organized as quorums. This is the highest and only authoritative body known to the church as an Assembly.

WHO PRESIDES. In the General Conference and in a General Assembly, the First Presidency should preside, pending action by the body; and in case of the absence or disqualification of the First Presidency, the President of the Quorum of Twelve and his associates of the Twelve should so function.

STAKE AND DISTRICT CONFERENCES are regular gatherings authorized by the general authorities concerned or by stakes or districts or their presiding officers. They have to do with the common interests of the branches and church members within the specified areas.

SPECIAL CONFERENCES may be called by ministers in charge of missions, stakes, or districts. The purpose of the call may be to meet some exigency either in the fields of labor of those calling them, or for the temporary purposes of their ministry where no previous organization has been effected.

WHERE NO PREVIOUS ORGANIZATION HAS BEEN EFFECTED, members of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy take precedence in that order, or in harmony with their specific assignments (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9).

Books Needed

If any of our members have copies of the Journal of Discourses, Millennial Star (from Volume 23 on), Juvenile Instructor (Volume 20), or "Utah Commentaries on the Doctrine and Covenants," we would like to know for what price they can be purchased.

Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing Now Accepting Applications for Enrollment for September, 1950, Class By Nelle Morgan, R.N., Director of Nurses

Accommodations for forty new students for the September, 1950, class will be available, and young women who are interested in nursing as a vocation are urged to make application for enrollment now. Funds are on hand for student loans for those applicants needing financial aid in meeting the fees and expenses.

To enroll, the prospective student must be between seventeen and one-half and thirty-five years of age, a graduate of an accredited high school, in good health, and of good moral character.

Student nurses at the Sanitarium are an unusually high type—the kind with whom church girls should associate. The school administration receives many compliments upon the attitude and ability of these students.

Last year 7,310 sick persons were cared for at the Sanitarium. These patients all received care from the seventy-three students enrolled in the nursing school. A staff of fifty-nine registered nurses are employed to care for the patients and to help with the education of the students.

Enrollment in the Sanitarium School of Nursing gives a young woman an opportunity to serve her fellow men and her church as she learns. Graduation gives her the opportunity to earn an adequate living.

Information about the school and application blanks may be obtained by sending a penny post card to Miss Nelle Morgan, R.N., Director of Nurses, Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, Independence, Missouri. Ask for the Nursing Packet.

Brother and Sister Harold I. Velt are in Mexico with Elder Harold D. Smith, wife and son, of Nauvoo, on a tour of the ruins in that country. A note dated January 10 from Brother Velt says:

Brother and Sister Smith and son arrived safely with us after a wonderful journey, and we have spent two days visiting the marvelous ruins already. We are all in good health and enjoying everything immensely. Expect to be joined by Irvin Petz and wife (of California) Thursday and to have their company for the remainder of the tour. We are having a lot of fun talking Spanish, and so far have had no great difficulty in getting by.

The following excerpts are from recent letters written by F. Edward Butterworth and Allen Breckenridge, appointees to French Oceania.

We have set the pace for radio programs in Tahiti, as we were the first to get a church program on the local station. The Messiah broadcast made it possible for us to get on the air. We were thrilled to hear it so clearly out here in the Pacific. You can't imagine how much this meant to us.

Our Taronia orchestra appeared in uniform for the first time on Christmas Eve when we gave a twenty-minute program at the hospital. We were given a place of honor opposite the Governor and his aides. We furnished the Governor with a supply of programs on church letterhead stationary printed in French. He complimented us on our appearance and the quality of our music. We consider this one of the high lights of our experiences in Tahiti.

The girls' chorus has caroled at the hospital for several years. We are the only organization which enters into this kind of activity. It is having a marvelous missionary effect. The chorus caroled for Dr. Wurfel (our church physician although he is a nonmember). When Dr. and Mrs. Wurfel came out in the yard to greet the girls, Mrs. Wurfel had tears in her eyes and could hardly speak for several minutes. We have since learned that three Mormon elders were in the house while the girls sang.

Baptisms are on the increase throughout the mission. For the first time in our history, we have passed the 2,000 membership mark.

A Fundamental of Latter Day Saintism - By JAMES PYCOCK

We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgressions.

We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

IT WOULD BE HARD to explain as much truth in fewer words than is contained in the foregoing declaration, written by Joseph the Prophet in the "Epitome of Faith."

No other creed proclaims the fact of man's sin and the means of his redemption in more concise and explicit, yet comprehensive language. It makes this foundation belief self-explanatory.

However clearly this principle is presented, experience teaches us that this essential doctrine is apt to be crowded out of the prominent place its importance demands. Sometimes the vision of it is obscured by giving too much emphasis to subsidiary principles that are not as indispensable as man's being made conscious of the reality of sin and aware of the remedy prescribed.

With that in mind I shall attempt to bring out some aspects that appear to be both expressed and implied in that stated as our belief, and to discover, if possible, just what constitutes sin and what is decreed by God for the remission of man's transgression.

"Say nothing but repentance to this generation" (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 4) does not mean that repentance is the only legitimate subject for our preaching, teaching, or writing, but its important position demands that everything we discuss should contain the theme of repentance running through its delivery in a way calculated to help improve the life and character of the hearer or reader. This can be done without even mentioning the word repentance.

These statements of our belief deal with sins—the wrongs for which we are personally responsible. They do not mention error, mistakes, or shortcomings; even if wrong, these may not be sins. They refer to actual sins that originate in the depraved spirit of man.

THE MOTIVE of the wrongdoer determines whether his act was a sin or merely a mistake. Jesus taught that men could go far as, "whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service" (John 16: 2). The Apostle James wrote, "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (4: 17).

Sin is more than ignorance, error, or falling from grace in an unguarded moment. It is the determination to do whatever man is convinced is wrong. Sin is the treachery of the human heart that grows and develops in the decaying process of selfishness.

Sin is a violation of conscience, whereby man comes in apostasy with himself. A mere abandonment of belief and doctrine once held sacred until man comes to believe he was mistaken is not a sin. It is a sin when that act constitutes a defiance of his conscience.

Man's conscience—itself a subject of education and susceptible to environment—may be mistaken; however man's attitude toward anything which convinces him certain things are true, determines his honesty or otherwise. The conscience is a part of the Divine in man available for his use in this world. Like the church of Jesus Christ, although of divine origin, it may not always represent the Lord, but it is still the most reliable agent of God's will. Sin is a voluntary violation and disregard of what man understands to be the law of God. The sinner thus treats Divinity as contemptible.

Jesus locates sin in the heart of man. "But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies, these are the things that defile a man."—Matthew 15: 18-20. The Apostle James expresses the same idea in different words: "But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."—James 1: 14, 15. If the heart is wrong, all is wrong. Sin is evil made alive by a depraved spirit.

THE BODY CANNOT sin. It is but the instrument through which the intentions and decisions of the spirit are manifested. The spirit can sin even if the body does not disclose the sin. Jesus taught that a man can commit adultery and murder in his heart, though no outward act was performed (Matthew 5: 21, 22, 28). The element of sin had its birth and growth in the heart. It sometimes grows in the hearts for months, or even years, before it develops sufficiently for the body to produce it to the world in words and actions. At other times it has its birth, life, and death entirely in the spirit. When the germs of sin are sown in the fertile soil or enriched by lust, the selfish, depraved will of the sinner feeds on those wicked germs until opportunity, fortified by temptation, provides a demonstration through the "outward man." Temptation did not put sin into the heart any more than the Indian fakir deposits the snake in the pit that his pipe draws out, but both are enticed to appear. Temptation provides the allurements which the sin awaits.

While God is the personification of merciful leniency to the innocent wrongdoer, he cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance (Doctrine and Covenants 1:5). The evil one may be a victim without guile. The sinner is never deceived—he decides to perform what he is assured is wicked. An innocent man may be taken in by receiving counterfeit money, and pass it on to some one else, after which it is used by thousands of others who believe it is genuine; but the man who makes it is not deceived, he knows it is spurious. The man who creates sin in his heart is never taken unaware by his iniquity.

Jesus accepted sin as a fact in the normal man's experience; he also accepted the challenge it presented to him. He recognized it as deliberate contradiction of God's revealed will for humanity. Anything is sin to the man whose conscience accuses him. It is a willful act against what is understood to be right. This is the sin for which man must account.

WE COULD HAVE no sin if man inevitably had to go wrong. If that were true, it would be the sin of the Creator who made man's wicked course unavoidable by the way he constructed his nature. There would be no sound foundation for a righteous life if man were expected to use a freedom he does not possess to turn from sin that he has no power to escape.

The endowment of free agency makes man responsible for his decisions. He is thus made an imperial being in the realm of his spirit. He has the right to answer "Yes," to his Creator, and "No" to the Lord who commands him. He may say "I will," or "I will not," to either good or evil.

This agency intrusts him with a spiritual democracy that allows him to make his own mistakes and commit his own sins. He is thereby accountable for his transgressions.

Freedom of choice makes him the master of his own will, and the sole one having the exclusive right to determine his destiny. If anyone else could commit sin that would be charged to another, or obey any doctrine or ordinance that could be credited to someone else, it would violate and undermine the whole principle of free agency. No one has the right to invade the spiritual autonomy of another.

Man cannot justify his sins by making the excuse attributed to David, "Behold I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me."—Psalm 51:5. Sin is not inherited. Adam could not bequeath it to his posterity. The statement, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son," (Ezekiel 18:20) is in harmony with common sense as well as being sound doctrine. (Please read the whole chapter.) No man's sin ever exists in the heart of anyone else; it is created in his own soul. It was brought into existence by his own decision. Decisions cannot be inherited. If it were possible that man could be conceived or born in sin, that could only affect the body, which can neither sin or repent. Sin is a product of the spirit that is not "born of woman."

IF SIN were inherited by the spirit of man, right back to Adam, then it could also be traced to God, "the father of our spirits" (Hebrews 12:9). This is unthinkable. If Adam did not inherit sin, neither do his descendants. If Adam created sin in his own heart, then it is created in the heart of every other individual.

Man does not inherit his parents' traits acquired by them during their own lives, even in the body; much less the characteristics of the spirit of which his father and mother are not the parents.

The law of inheritance makes no distinction between good and evil. Man does not inherit anything on the principle that it is either right or wrong. If he did, his free agency would mean little. Both good and evil must have equal access to man's attention and consideration if he is to have an unbiased choice.

If man did inherit Adam's sin, he should also inherit his repentance and remission of sins—especially that sin referred to in the Inspired Version: "And the Lord said unto Adam, behold I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden."—Genesis 6:55. How could that which would no longer exist follow through Adam's posterity? It would mean that he who committed the sin was pardoned, while all others who had it thrust upon them by inheritance would pay the penalty. Surely that is not a true picture of a God of love. The theory that man inherits the sin of Adam, but not his redemption, is untenable. He cannot inherit either.

Man is by nature and descent a child of God, not the devil's offspring whom God is trying to capture by his gospel. Sin makes man abnormal. This would be untrue if he were born in sin, for then sin would be his natural element. Man becomes normal when freed from sin.

If sin is inherent in mankind and not found in Jesus, it is difficult to believe what the apostles wrote of him. We are given to understand when Christ came to earth he made man's limitation his own:

For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted.—Hebrews 2:16-18.

This could not be true if Jesus escaped any handicap of sin by which his brethren were incumbered from birth. If he did not inherit any evil or sin and we did, how meaningless are his words, "Come follow me." When we understand he started from where we must begin, with human limitations, we are encouraged to try. Neither Jesus nor anyone else ever carried an involuntary burden of inherited sin. Christ was without sin, not because of his inheritance, but because he resisted temptation.

SATAN BROUGHT his sin with him into the world. Adam was the first man in the world to create sin in his heart. His sin originated in his spirit, and he became the world's first sinner. (Technically Eve sinned first.) Adam did not bring any sin into being but his own, nor did he create the conditions of sin for all his posterity. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered in the world and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all men have sinned."—Romans 5:12. In the same way that death passed on Adam because he sinned, so it passed on all other men because they sinned.

God is not the author of sin in that it forms for him a personal experience, nor that his will is equally fulfilled through human sin and human obedience. Man originates his own sin.

The gift of God that culminated in the atonement by Christ must have been prompted by supreme love at its greatest source, in its superlative strength, its loftiest purpose, and its widest sphere. The motive was love, the method sacrifice, the intention salvation.

We are not informed if the Lord felt any responsibility for the happiness of man whom he had placed in the world upright, and who had voluntarily committed the sin that precipitated all humanity into a dilemma from which it knew no way of escape. God's love for the world is the only motive mentioned that inspired this greatest of all sacrificial acts. The whole transaction was without compulsion, there being no law that demanded it, nor precedent that sanctioned it. Certainly man had nothing to attract it.

The objective of this sacrifice was the salvation of the world. Christ did not suffer and die for any particular family, some special group, a favored nation or race, nor for the world at any particular time. Nothing less than all the people who have, are, or will live on this earth, as long as it is the home of mankind, was sufficient for the supreme sacrifice of its creator.

"Whosoever will" makes salvation limited only to those who will. Even in the tragic occurrence of a lost world that might become as "a brand plucked out of the fire," man still retains his free agency to accept or reject.

Such a sacrifice cannot be reduced and brought within man's limited comprehension. Man's love reaches its greatest height when he lays down his life for his friends (John 15: 13). Jesus, however, limited within man's limitations, laid down his life for his enemies (Romans 5: 8). It is possible that man has not yet reached the absolute love of which he is capable.

To be an example the Son of God came manward and represented his Father among the people, and also was a representative of humanity by becoming subject to all the events of human life in order to qualify as a witness, leader, and commander. He had to come up from the ranks. He entered into the meaning of man's blighting sins by the engagement of his personal intentions, and became one with man in his spiritual needs, so he could guide man to become one with him in spiritual power.

To understand mankind's problems he "became sin for us." Even though Jesus knew no sin, he entered into the lives of those whom he would redeem from sin. In spiritual sympathy he became a sinner to lead a world out of sin.

Jesus lived a life that pointed the way toward freedom from sin, yet his death revealed the fate deserved by the unrepentant sinner. In his agony on the cross, Christ made man's tragedy his own; so man could avoid that tragic occurrence and make eternal life his own.

Through his atonement, Christ comprehended being cruelly wronged by the treachery of his trusted friends. This caused him to seek relief from the extreme torture awaiting him through his usual avenue of prayer. This most earnest of all prayers for his very life was answered with "No" instead of "Yes." His infamous trial ended in the most cruel sentence his tormentors could desire.

Golgotha cannot help becoming a hill of agony in man's own soul as he remembers how the Son of God suffered so that man might see the awfulness of the sin from which he could be saved.

When men realize what it cost Jesus Christ to make plain the plan of salvation, the fact of the atonement is no longer abstract but vividly alive. Man's salvation is predicated on reciprocal surrender. Jesus' part is to give himself without reserve; man's part is to surrender himself to God.

THE CONSCIOUSNESS of guilt is the heaviest of all loads. This knowledge is important. It is the most potent fact of all the stimulating agencies that direct the sinner toward release from his iniquity. It is the compelling force which makes him anxious to accept any means that promises salvation. It prompts him to inquire, "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" When informed what he must do to be saved—something he perceives to be true—man allows his sense of guilt to spur him on to obedience.

One who does not feel the burden of guilt will not be interested in any plan to relieve it. It is only when he feels the pain of spiritual illness and the weight of his responsibility that he will be interested in the message that he may become free. It is a waste of time to quote the terms of salvation to one who does not want it.

The fact that the rich man in hell could not shake off the memory of his inhuman treatment of Lazarus impelled him to pray for any relief, however small or temporary. What could be more tauntingly bitter, calculated to harrow up his guilty soul, than to hear Abraham say, "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, likewise Lazarus evil things, but now he is comforted and thou art tormented." How thankful he would be to forget, to feel no compunctious heart-throbs, if only for a moment. The memory of guilt keeps the violator of divine law alive to the fact of his culpability until he finds rest in repentance.

Complacency characterizes the one whose memory recalls no occasion of guilt. The Pharisee who entered the temple to pray with himself was unaware of any offense he committed against God. He did not concede any need of pardon that the Lord could grant. He washed his hands of any relationship with the publican whom he held in disdain. He exhibited an attitude of superiority in that he assumed a position of a creditor instead of a debtor to God. This is the natural assumption of one who considers sin as something apart from his make-up.

On the contrary the publican was fully conscious of his guilt. With downcast eyes he admitted being a sinner in need of divine clemency, not even worthy to ask for forgiveness once, only to plead humbly for mercy. He looked upon sin seriously, fully cognizant of his iniquities. "I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."—Luke 18: 14.

THOSE WHO ENGENDER an attitude of love toward God, as did the humble publican, make ideal candidates for salvation. They would line up with those who "gladly received his word" to obey the doctrine of Jesus Christ. "My son, give me thy heart" (Proverbs 23: 26) would be a statement acknowledged by obedience from all those who seek a remission of sins.

No one can give something as precious as his heart without having great love for the receiver of such a priceless gift. Jesus classed the act of loving God and one's fellow man as himself as the greatest commandments of the law, which commandments have not been displaced by anything in the gospel (Matthew 22: 37-40; I John 4: 7-11). Strange as it may seem, few if any of the religious creeds give the principle of love the important place in their doctrines that Jesus gave it in his teachings. It is not only the foundation upon which all the other principles are built, but also the bond in which all the children of God have equal fellowship with each other and with their Heavenly Father.

Love is the primary vital element that gives life to the doctrines of faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, as well as all the other doctrines and ordinances of the church. It is that which gives value to every part of the gospel of Christ.

The one who loves God will demonstrate a vital faith in every principle of salvation. He will repent and forsake his sins. He will forgive others as a prelude to his own forgiveness. He will be baptized, not only into the church, but also will "put on Jesus Christ" and become a citizen of the kingdom.

Love, not duty, will be the stimulus that leads man to accept the great truth of his accountability for his own sins, and be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. This will lead him to the perfection of ultimate truth. It is something within his reach.

Climbing the High Hill

(Cerro de Las Ojas) - By ROY WELDON

SINCE RETURNING from my recent trip to South America, I have been asked by a number of people if I felt the results of the trip were worth the money spent and the hardships endured. In answering, I would like to ask, "How much money would you spend and how far would you travel for such an experience as I am about to relate?" I would also like to express my appreciation to all those who remembered Brother Francis Anderson and me in their prayers as we journeyed to the continent south of us.

There is a city in Ecuador called Manta. Explorers have reported finding a large stone table and chairs on the top of a high hill near this city. Some writers have referred to it as an "Inca Seat of Justice." The Book of Mormon records the fact that the arch-criminal, Nehor, was taken to the top of the Hill Manti and there executed (Alma 1: 22, 23). It also indicates a court of justice was atop the Hill Manti and that the district of Manti was in the southern part of the province of Zarahemla, situated along the seashore (West Sea) close to the boundaries of the Lamanites. (See references under word Manti in Book of Mormon index.)

While in South America I received several letters from Brother C. Ed Miller, urging me to visit this remote archeological site. We arrived at the high hill north of Manta at about 11:00 o'clock in the morning. We had disembarked from one of the trucks that ply the highway between Manta and some coastal towns to the north. There were a few native huts near by. From one of these we obtained a guide who agreed to direct us through the jungle to the top of the noted hill, Cerro de Las Ojas. We were at the equator and near sea level in a very damp climate. The air was quite humid, and the day was hot. Although referred to as a hill, Cerro de Las Ojas is really a mountain.

DURING THE ASCENT, it was necessary for us to pause and rest frequently. When we reached the top, after about three hours of toil and perspiration, both of us were in a state of exhaustion. Brother Anderson was so exhausted that it seemed advisable he should attempt to go any further. Our guide indicated that the great stone chairs we desired to see were about two miles further on along the ridge of the mountain. He said, however, that there was no trail from our side and that it would be necessary to descend the mountain (on the opposite side from our ascent) to the home of one Marcus Delgado, from which there was a trail through the jungle leading upward to the site of the stone seats. It was then about 2:00 p.m. Our guide informed us that it was too late to go to the site and return before dusk. He did say, however, that it would be possible for us to descend to the home of Marcus Delgado that day—a distance of about twelve kilometers. A native boy from a near-by hut estimated the distance to be only ten kilometers. Since I had come a long way to see the site of the stone seats, I felt I could not turn back.

After some discussion, it was agreed that Brother Anderson would return to the coastal highway with our guide, while the native lad would direct me through the maze of jungle trails to the home of Marcus Delgado. As I followed my guide mile after mile down the steep mountain trail, I comforted myself with the thought that there would surely be some other trail or road back to the highway, and that, therefore, it would not be necessary to negotiate the steep difficult ascent when I returned. I supposed, also, it would be possible to obtain a night's lodging so I might continue my journey on the morrow.

In due time we arrived at the home of Señor Marcus Delgado. He received me very kindly. As he was the owner of the mountain on which the stone chairs were found, and spoke Spanish clearly and distinctly, I quickly obtained the information I desired.

Señor Delgado informed me that he was not equipped to give me a night's lodging, and that the best way to return was by the same trail I had come.

A FEELING OF DEPRESSION immediately spread over me when I heard these words. I had already spent my physical resources for that day. In addition, I had not completely recovered from the effects of strenuous mountain climbing among the staircase farms in the high altitudes of the Andes at Ollantaytambo, Peru. My plight seemed further aggravated by the statement of Señor Delgado that this was the worst season of the year for mosquitos and that it was advisable to get out of the jungle before nightfall. Coming down the mountain in the afternoon, I remembered passing through deeply shaded areas where I could hear the subdued hum of countless myriads of mosquitoes. When I slowed up to investigate the hum, they immediately descended on me. I remembered too that this region is a hotbed for the dreaded yellow fever as well as other jungle maladies.

It was now late afternoon, and it would take continuous and rapid hiking to retrace our steps before nightfall.

As I bade Señor Delgado adios and turned to follow my youthful guide on the return trip over the mountain, it was with the expectation that this would be one of the most grueling experiences of my entire life. We had scarcely begun our journey when I discovered that something phenomenal was happening to me. All sense of fatigue and physical inadequacy disappeared, and a complete transformation came over me. Instead of weakness, I seemed to have inexhaustible physical energy and strength. Immediately my memory went back to the days of my youth when my vigor and vitality seemed to know no bounds. As my mind turned to the cause of this rapid change, there came a surge of the Spirit of the Lord over me; I knew he was with me, and that he had come to my rescue. In words of truth and soberness, I testify that mile after mile I followed my energetic guide up the mountain, and although there were stretches of it comparable to climbing a stairway, at no time did I get out of breath, and not once was it necessary for me to ask my guide to stop and let me rest. It was an ecstatic experience climaxed only when we reached the top in time to see the sun descending on the western horizon of the vast Pacific Ocean off the coast of Ecuador. It was there on the top of the mountain that the experience reached its supreme fullness, as the Lord revealed to me that I had had a taste of the power and joy and strength that men shall have in their resurrected state.

"Surely eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the mind of man those things the Lord hath prepared for those who love him and serve him and keep his commandments." If men only knew what awaits them in the kingdom of God, they would surely give all they have and are and ever hope to be to the building of that kingdom.

As the months have passed since this vivid experience, my mind has returned again and again to the high hill at Manta.

It only remained for the inspiring and quickening influence of a fine reunion worship service to flood my soul with the deep and prophetic significance of this mountaintop experience.

Climbing the Mountain of the Lord's House

For many years, even for decades, the Lord has visited his servants and, under the influence and power of his spirit, his people have been warned again and again that time is growing short, and that untoward conditions shall soon overtake the world. The season is far advanced, the day is far spent; and few are the grains of sand that remain in the hour glass. Still there is time for his people to climb to higher places before that which stands at the door shall break in upon them, if they shall give diligent heed to his counsel and commence to move forward, keeping commandment upon commandment, climbing upward step by step, making repentance upon repentance, mounting higher and higher, making consecration upon consecration, attaining height upon height until they shall come to the top of the mountain, to Zion and the realization of his glorious purposes in them.

Does the thing that the Lord asks seem to be too hard or the mountain too high or the way too steep? Does the Lord ask of his people that which he is not prepared to empower them to accomplish? If he is willing to strengthen a man that he might climb a physical mountain and escape physical danger and have a testimony of his goodness, how much more will he strengthen all those who set themselves to climb the mountain of his house. Surely after the mightiest mountains of the Andes and the Rockies have long since departed, the mountain of his house shall still stand. The high places of love, virtue, and brotherhood are eternal, and all who climb to occupy these high places shall be eternal also, for they shall live forever.

It is possible even for the weakest ones, and those who have trampled upon his counsel for years, if they will now turn to him with full purpose of heart, they may climb rapidly upward, for the Lord shall come unto all such and strengthen them by the power of his spirit, as they continue to climb upward. He shall send angels to take them by the hand to help them over the rough, steep places. And when they reach the top of the mountain, the Lord shall come forth to meet them and shall lead them into the city. Then he shall lead them through the city that they may look beyond into the vast millennial valley, and see the Father's house and the wedding feast that have been prepared. They shall see the tables and that which is spread upon them and the servants and the guests and all the appointments. Then their souls shall melt within them, for they shall remember the wasted years; years that some have spent slumbering, relaxing, and taking their ease in the lowlands of physical satisfaction; years that some have spent wandering in the jungles of selfishness and sin, searching for the fruits of carnal delight and worldly wealth; years that some have spent in the valley of self-justification, seeking to justify their own lethargy and shortcomings and sins because of the transgressions and failings of their brothers and sisters in the church.

O that his people would come out of their hiding place and witness to the world by word and deed that they are his sons and his daughters, for in that day, the Lord shall make bare his holy arm before the nations.

He is willing to give to his people blessings of healing and guidance, but the greater blessings await the day that his people climb to those high places where he can use them in reaching forth in ministry to millions who are waiting for the light of his church to shine forth.

The hour has come for the lifting of the curtain on the final great drama of the ages, for the realization of that for which the prophets and holy men of old have dreamed and yearned, and toward which the centuries have been rolling.

The hour has come for the fulfilling of the words of the Prophet Isaiah concerning Zion: "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest until the righteousness thereof goes forth as brightness and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth"—a lamp whose light shall shine forth to the nations that walk in darkness; a lamp whose light shall penetrate even to the farthest reaches of the dark valleys of unbelief and misery and despair, that all those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, truth, and peace may see to arise and come to their Lord and Savior that their souls might be fed, and they might drink of the fountains of eternal life.

A History of Scouting

By EMMA M. PHILLIPS

National Boy Scout Week—February 5-13

MANY YEARS AGO in England, a young man, Lord Baden-Powell, was interested in the construction of bridges. He did not realize he was destined for far greater work—a work that would aid the whole world. In order to serve his homeland of England during the Boer War, he went to the west coast of Africa to organize and direct the native army scouts. His work there was admirable in every respect. It was during this Boer War that the idea of organizing boys of England into Boy Scout organizations formulated in his mind. Many plans and rules were made. Later, upon application, it was found necessary to change and alter some of these to suit the occasion. One of the first cheerfulness rules read, "A Scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances." The term circumstances, was found to have such a broad meaning that it became confusing. The law was changed to read "under all difficulties." But Lord Baden-Powell's belief that loyalty begins at home was never altered. The Boy Scout organization flourished and grew beyond all the expectations of the young Englishman.

In 1910 the knowledge of the organization was brought to the United States in a rather unusual and unique way. William D. Boyce, Chicago traveler and publisher, was visiting in London, England. One of those much-talked-about fogs settled over the city. This fog made it very difficult for him to locate the place where he wanted to go. The address was in such a remote part of old London that it would have been difficult to find even on a clear day. But this was a foggy, dull day, and although the street lights were on, their light was of meager value. Even inhabitants of the neighborhood had to be careful to walk in the right direction. William Boyce wandered from building to building trying to read the address numbers.

He was encouraged when a boy of about ten asked him, "May I be of service to you?" Mr. Boyce assured him he could. He told the boy the address of the place he wanted to go to. Instead of pointing out the direction, the boy saluted and said, "Come with me, Sir." Slightly bewildered at the willingness, Mr. Boyce followed him to the desired address. Mr. Boyce reached into his pocket and produced a shilling in payment for the favor. The boy promptly drew back, exclaiming, "Oh, no, Sir, I am a Scout." The American looked at him in a surprised manner

From Darkness to Light - By LEONA HANDS

IT WAS CLOSE to midnight before Mary Taylor wearily laid aside her crutches and prepared for bed. She should do something about getting to bed earlier, she thought undecidedly. But then, what did it matter? She could not sleep anyway. To turn and toss in wakefulness, tormented by the thoughts of hopelessness and despair that flooded her mind, offered no inducement to retire early.

Since the accident that had made her a cripple, trouble seemed to have become her constant companion. Not that Mary Taylor ever backed away from trouble. She was of sturdy pioneer stock, not afraid of privation and hard work; but now she faced a problem which seemed to have no solution.

ONE OF A FAMILY of eleven children, with a mother in poor health, Mary Taylor learned to work hard early in her life. She was also the second oldest girl, which meant that she must share the responsibility of working and caring for the younger ones. However busy life on the farm became, it was never a hardship because it was the kind of work she loved doing. Too, Mary Taylor had a way of planning her tasks so she could "work rings around most women," as her family often remarked.

After she married and moved to the city, she was soon as busy as ever with her own family. Money was scarce, and she found it necessary to supplement the family income by baking bread and making fried cakes. These found a ready market in the homes and stores in the neighborhood. Still it required all her ingenuity to make ends meet. With all her frugality there were times when, unknown to her children, she herself went hungry. Determined that her five children should have a happy home life, she kept her troubles to herself, and happiness made its abode in the little home.

Somehow they would have managed had it not been for the accident that had left her with a broken leg and ankle, putting her in the hospital in a cast for eight long weeks. Five doctors told Mary Taylor she would never walk again. She accepted the verdict undaunted in spirit, secretly vowing that in time she would show them all how wrong doctors could be.

When the ambulance came to take her home, she was dismayed to find that, during her absence, the family had moved to a new location. In a new neighborhood, among strangers, Mary Taylor was very much alone. Soon she was devoting her entire attention to learning how to use the crutches a good friend had loaned her. But for the first time in her life, she became acquainted with worry; as the weeks rolled into months, it became all too clear that the doctors were right. She could not walk without the crutches. Neither did her strength return to her.

STARING SLEEPLESSLY into the darkness, Mary Taylor made a decision—she would take her life. It was the only way she could help her children. Her father and mother would take them on the farm to live and give them good care and the best of food. Yes, that was the solution. The river was only a short distance away—the swift current would soon carry her into the lake and her disappearance would be complete. No one would know what had become of her. Tomorrow she would go to the river, she decided, and some time later fell into a troubled sleep.

Quite suddenly she seemed to be standing on the bank of the river. Why, it was exactly where she had contemplated going the following day, yet something was different. It was the water, muddy and troubled—so different from its usual placid blueness. While she pondered over this discovery, a voice spoke out of the stillness. "Look!" it commanded. Immediately she lifted her head to look up the river. A beautiful white ship was leaving the lake waters, sailing into the river directly toward her. As it drew nearer, the portholes opened, and white doves flew out in all directions. The waters grew calm and quiet as the ship approached and miraculously were restored to their natural blueness. Then, as the boat came opposite her the heavens opened wide, each side rolling back as in the manner of a scroll and, wonder of wonders, the Lord Jesus appeared! Looking down at her in tender compassion, he extended both arms, smiled at her for a long moment, and then the vision faded.

MARY TAYLOR awoke suddenly. It was daylight. Her mind still filled with the beautiful vision, she arose, dressed and walked to the kitchen. New strength and vigor filled her body. All worry and distress had fled, and she felt a lightness of spirit that thrilled her very soul. With amazement she discovered that she had walked into the kitchen alone! The crutches were still beside the bed where she had placed them the night before.

"Thank you, God, oh, thank you!" she murmured brokenly, "I shall never doubt you again!" Tears of gratitude flowed down her face unheeded at the realization of what the miracle would mean to her and her children in the days that lay ahead.

After school was out that day, she called one of the older children and sent a note to an old neighbor asking her to call. When the friend arrived, Mary Taylor told of the great blessing that had come to her, and then asked the friend's assistance in finding some work, which help was gladly promised. Soon there was more work than she could do, and her financial difficulties disappeared.

During this time Mary Taylor often thought of the vision. The beautiful white ship, the doves, the Lord appearing in the heavens—what did it all mean? She prayed that somehow, someday, she would know.

SEVERAL MONTHS PASSED, and one day her sister and husband came to pay a visit. Their whole conversation was of a new way of life, of the gospel of Jesus Christ restored in its fullness. Mary Taylor listened to the gospel story. The promise of visions and blessings in the Restoration Movement touched an answering chord in her heart. She attended a church service with them and often said later she was converted on hearing the first sermon. Easter Sunday found her entering the waters of baptism in the very place in the river she had seen the vision.

Six months later the opportunity came for her to attend a district conference with her sister and brother-in-law. As is still the custom in some districts today, the conference opened with a prayer and testimony service. During the course of the meeting, a brother arose and under the influence of the Holy Spirit, gave the interpretation of Mary Taylor's vision. The ship, he declared, was the gospel of Jesus, coming into her life, while the doves were the emissaries (priesthood members) sent out with its message. Christ's appearance in the heavens at the exact moment the ship came to her side was to give her the evidence that this was his gospel, bringing light and healing.

Mary Taylor grows old, but to this day, she loves to tell the story of the vision that changed her life, bringing her the blessing of renewed health and strength—and most beautiful of all, the light of the gospel in its fullness. Little wonder her favorite hymn is "My Faith Looks Up to Thee!"

An Acknowledgment to John Whitmer

One of the Eight Witnesses of the Book of Mormon

By C. J. HUNT

JOHN WHITMER, a younger brother of David Whitmer, was born August 27, 1802, and baptized in June, 1829. Together with seven other selected men, he saw and handled the golden plates in 1829, from which the Book of Mormon was translated by use of the Urim and Thummim. The Prophet Joseph Smith showed the plates to the Eight Witnesses, and they gave their signed testimonies for publication to the world as recorded in the first pages of the Book of Mormon.

We are creditably informed that John Whitmer assisted the Prophet Joseph and Oliver Cowdery as scribe in the final preparation of the Book of Mormon manuscript for publication. In June, 1829, he was called by revelation to do missionary work. (See Doctrine and Covenants 13.)

This talented servant was designated by the Lord in March, 1831, to be historian of the church and served in that capacity several years, devoting time while preaching and traveling from place to place, "copying, selecting, and obtaining all things which shall be for the good of the church, and for the rising generations that shall grow up on the land of Zion to possess it from generation to generation, for ever and ever" (Doctrine and Covenants 69). In April of 1903, historical writings made by him were presented by the Whitmer relatives to President Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church.

At a very sacred and special council of church officials held in Independence, Missouri, in May, 1832, it was deemed advisable that a Book of Commandments (forerunner of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants) containing revelations to the church by Joseph Smith be printed. The important work of selecting the revelations for this new book was entrusted to Elders William W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer.

IT WAS DURING 1833 that John Whitmer and five other faithful brethren, while trying to establish permanent homes for the Saints in Jackson County, Missouri, met strong opposition from prejudiced, unyielding enemies. The principal trouble was that the Saints did not believe in slavery. Rather than lose their homes and other possessions, John Whitmer and the five church leaders offered themselves a ransom for the church, being willing even to die if that would appease the anger of the mobs. However, the infuriated enemies dispossessed the Saints of their rightful holdings, and drove them from Jackson County, after which John Whitmer returned to Kirtland, Ohio (Church History, Volume I, pages 316, 317).

As one of the capable, trusted servants of the church, John Whitmer was appointed assistant president of a high council in Clay County, Missouri, on July 3, 1834. Two years later, at Kirtland, Ohio, he held a like position. In May, 1835, he was entrusted with the editorship of the Messenger and Advocate for the church.

Concluding his years of service as editor of this publication (Volume III, page 287), he said: "I would do injustice to my own feelings if I did not here notice still further the work of the Lord in these last days. The revelations and commandments given to us are, in my estimation, equally true with the Book of Mormon, and equally necessary for salvation. It is necessary to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God; and I know that the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, contain the revealed will of heaven. I further know that God will continue to reveal himself to his church and people until he has gathered his elect into his fold and prepared them to dwell in his presence."—Church History, Volume I, pages 581, 582.

NEAR THE CLOSE of 1837, John Whitmer returned to Missouri to make his home. One Sunday afternoon in April, 1922, two other elders and I visited the farm home of the late Elder John Whitmer. The residence, built in 1857, was a half mile from the Temple Lot in Caldwell County, Missouri. At the time of our visit, his widowed daughter Mrs. Johnson and her daughter lived in the home. After a short testimonial service held in the room where John Whitmer died in 1878, Sister Johnson invited us into an adjacent room where a large painting of her father was hung above the century-old walnut dresser. While viewing the portrait, I said: "His face is that of an honest man." Before his death he had said that his "testimony recorded in the Book of Mormon was, is, and will be true henceforth and forever." During this short interesting interview, the aged daughter spoke feelingly of her noble parent. Wiping tears from her face, she said, "My father was an honest, truth-loving man."

The Ministry of Power: Its Nature and Function

PART II

THE IDEA of revelation of God to man is not unreasonable. Sir Frederick Anderson has said: "A God who could not make himself known to man would not be divine, and a God who would not reveal himself to man could not be moral." This conclusion is supported by the psychologist, William James: "We and God have business with each other; and in opening ourselves to his influence, our highest destiny is fulfilled."—Varieties of Religious Experiences, page 517.

So Tennyson could say with scientific and philosophic support:

Speak to Him' thou for he hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet—
Closer is he than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.
—The Higher Pantheism, stanza 6.

THIS POWER or energy or influence—the Spirit of God which is the subject of this study—must be of the nature of God. Consequently this power must be "personal," not an impersonal force or influence, but a divine Person. We must ever keep in mind that neither in Greek nor Latin are there equivalents for what we mean when we speak of "person," and that the limitation of our understanding and terms disqualifies us from speaking dogmatically about God's personality. In the history of our knowledge of God, the "idea" of God is an evolution, a growth, a development, the end of which is not yet.

So, with our belief in Jesus Christ as the second person of the Trinity, the "Word," "the Reason," "God manifest in Flesh," the consciousness of his deity is a conception which through experience and revelation has grown with the passing years. So with the Holy Spirit. In the Bible, the study of the science of comparative religion, and the experience of the saints and mystics of all ages, stimulated by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, we witness the growing of men's understanding touching the things of God. This is summarized by the author of the "Letter to the Hebrews," quoted from the American Revised Version:

In many and various ways God spoke of old to our fathers by the prophets; but in these last days he has spoken to us by a Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the world, he reflects the glory of God and bears the very stamp of his nature, upholding the universe by the word of his power.—Hebrews 1: 1-3.

In the Old Testament, the Hebrews usually thought of the Spirit as an influence or energy, which was impersonal, in keeping with their monotheistic idea of God—"The Lord our God is one Lord." This, of course, was their reason for not accepting the deity of Jesus Christ, though today some of the Jews believe him to have been a prophet and outstanding rabbi.

The consciousness of the deity of Christ developed in the experience of the church, and the history of the creeds reflects the bitter conflicts in the clashes of minds until something like agreement was reached; so it was with the Holy Spirit. This development can be traced in the New Testament, and it was continued throughout the history of the church. In the third century of the Christian Era, Paul, bishop of Samosata—a brilliant scholar but morally a disagreeable man, and a favorite courtier of Queen Zenobia of Palmyra—was deposed from his office because he denied the divinity of Christ and taught "adoptionism." He regarded the Holy Spirit as an influence or exertion of divine energy. He became, indirectly, the parent of an intellectual school, of which Arianism was the fruit. It was this heresy which gave rise to the Council of Nicaea in A.D. 325. Finally Bishop Paul declared that there was no Trinity, that Jesus was not divine, and that the Holy Spirit was merely an influence moving out from God—the energy of God exerted upon other people. This heresy was repudiated by the church at Nicaea.

ABOUT THE TIME of the Reformation in the sixteenth century Laelius Socinus and his nephew, Faustus Socinus, two Italian theologians and rationalists revived the theory. They also denied the Trinity, the personality of the Devil, the natural depravity of man, vicarious atonement, and the eternity of punishment. While the great mass of Christian people refused to accept these so-called heresies, many were influenced by their teachings and came to think of the Holy Spirit as an influence and to speak of him as such. Under the teaching of such beliefs, the translators of the Authorized Version of the New Testament were influenced, and some of the pronouns referring to the Holy Spirit were translated in the neuter; as for instance in Romans 8: 16 and 26. But in the revival of the truth as to the personality of the Holy Spirit in comparatively recent times, both the English and American Revised Versions, substituted the masculine pronouns.

By JOHN W. RUSHTON

Now we must say something of the Christian doctrine of the "Trinity" in order to have some understanding of the nature of the Holy Spirit. We cannot attempt to deal exhaustively with this subject. However, those who are "teachers and doctors" (Ephesians 4: 7-13) of the church should have some elementary ideas of this primary item of our Christian faith in God. There is vast literature by the outstanding theologians and scholars of the Christian faith dealing with this profound and sublime subject. These writings are available to all in rich measure.

THE APPROACH to this aspect of our study is undertaken in deep humility and reverence, having in mind the prayer of St. Anselm:

Lord, I acknowledge and thank thee that thou hast created me in this thine image, in order that I may be mindful of thee, may conceive of thee, and love thee; but that image has been so consumed and wasted away by vices, and obscured by the smoke of wrong-doing, that it cannot achieve that for which it was made, except thou renew it and create it anew. I do not endeavor, O Lord, to penetrate thy sublimity, for in no wise do I compare my understanding with that; but I long to understand in some degree thy truth, which my heart believes and loves. For I do not seek to understand that I may believe, but I believe in order to understand. For this also I believe that unless I believed, I should not understand.

Bishop Charles Gore in his volume, Belief in Christ, speaks of the doctrine of the Trinity in this way:

We very earnestly seek to know whether—apart from subtle differences—the traditional Christian doctrine of one God as existing in three persons, Father, Son, and Spirit, is for us believable. It is to that I must address myself, without raising any question of ecclesiastical authority.—Page 248.

The Bishop goes on to argue as follows:

The doctrine of the Trinity is clearly here—implicitly certainly, and in great measure explicit—in the New Testament, especially in St. Paul and in St. John. It emerged simply in the process of believing in Christ as the Son of God incarnate and in the realized activity of the Holy Spirit—the Spirit of God received from the ascended Christ. I do not think my readers can question this. To believe in Christ as the first Christians came to believe in him, involves us necessarily in the thought of God as not a solitary monad. There in the ultimate Being is Father and Son—Son and his Word or self-expression. There already is the distinction of persons. Perhaps we should have been disposed to think of the Spirit as only the influence or activity of God in the souls of men. But we must acknowledge that this will not account for the language of the New Testament or the language of Christ, if we believe that he really uttered the discourses in the Fourth Gospel, which it is very hard to ascribe to any lower speaker. Certainly the first Christians felt themselves in their relations with the Holy Spirit as in contact with a person, and so spoke of him.—Pages 248, 249.

Bishop Gore then gives his reasons why the doctrine of the Trinity commends itself to him because of the light it throws upon some otherwise dark problems.

1. It enables us to think of God as in himself—"the living God"—apart from and independent of creation. He does not live and love alone. He is alive with the fullest in will, reason, and love. His own being involves in itself a relationship of persons. In this doctrine based upon the self-disclosure of God himself, we are relieved to find ourselves authorized to think of God as a movement of life in which the Father is eternally expressing himself and knowing and being known, loving and being loved, in the Son and in the Spirit. There is at once the fullness of life in God, for the one eternal being is a fellowship of persons, one with an intense unity, but alive with the movement of a perfect life. I could not have discovered the Trinity. But it is the disclosure of it which enables me to think about God with any satisfaction as alive and personal in himself.

2. With the advancing scale of life the more complex the organism becomes. When I admit the disclosure of the Trinity—that is multiplicity in unity—it is only what I should expect in the perfect absolute being. I can dimly conceive how there in the eternal Word and the Spirit was the counterpart, under conditions of eternity and perfection, of all that wealth of life which is gradually evolved on a lower plane in the process of creation.

3. Again, only when I am a believer in the Trinity do I seem to lose the sense of bewilderment which the old thinkers of Greece experienced in bringing the One, the Unchangeable, and the Eternal, into any relation to a world of which the very being lies in movement and change. The moving world and the unchanging, immobile God seemed not merely to belong to different grades of being, but to be in no possible relation to one another. Does not creation involve movement? Does not God move in the moving world which he sustains in being, and live in its life? But now I am delivered from all this horrible imagination of a God who is absolute immobility. For God is eternally alive—eternally moving out into self-expression. He has the whole movement of absolute life within himself. Thus to create and to begin to live and act on the lower plane of gradual and progressive creation is no unnatural thought to associate with a God who eternally is life in himself, because there is in him what is dimly described as the eternal generation of the Son and the procession of the Spirit.

4. Finally, is it not a delight to believe that the ultimate reality is not monotonous unity, but a unity which contains in itself a fellowship of persons—one with a unity which can never be realized among human persons, but which at the same time assures us that personality and personal life essentially involve fellowship. In man personality emerges out of fellowship and always involves fellowship. The idea of personality as primarily individual and fundamentally selfish we have learned to be false. It is only in fellowship we begin to realize ourselves, and the more widely we expand into fellowship the more we realize ourselves. And it is with delight that we see the ground of this law in the Supreme. For there the eternal being is fellowship. There is no priority in him of unity to multiplicity, and no priority of multiplicity to unity. The Eternal is one in many and many in one—one God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost.—Ibid., pages 249-253.

Dr. Charles W. Lowry of Harvard in his book Trinity and Christian Devotion says:

The central contention, or rather announcement and claim, of Christianity is that the God of the universe has by his own act and Word shown himself to be, not principally power, though he is that, or chiefly knowledge and wisdom, though he is both, but essential and eternal Love, . . . What is the doctrine of the Trinity, and what is its connection with the good announcement of Christianity that the Creator and Monarch of the World is a God of Love.—Page 101.

for he did not understand the word as the boy had used it. When he heard it explained that Scouts never accept payment for favors, the American inquired, "What do you mean by scout?" The boy continued his explanation, telling about the wonderful opportunities the organization gave all boys. Noting the growing enthusiasm of Mr. Boyce, the Scout volunteered to show him to the office of the organization.

THE SCOUT waited while Mr. Boyce completed his business at the place they had found. Then together they went to the office of Lord Baden-Powell, where the Scout left him. Mr. William Boyce of Chicago and Lord Baden-Powell of England talked long and enthusiastically about the Boy Scout organization. The American gathered all possible information and determined to start a similar organization in the United States.

When he returned home, he was able to interest many influential people in the organization. On February 8, 1910, a meeting was held and the movement set underway. Since then, that date has been observed as the birthday of the Boy Scouts of America and is set aside as a special celebration by them.

No one knows the name of the boy who was more than willing to do his good deed. He has become "The Unknown Scout." In May, 1926, the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America honored this Unknown English Scout. A large statue of a buffalo—similar to the Silver Buffalo Award for distinguished service to boyhood—was presented to England. It has this inscription on it: To the Unknown Scout Whose Faithfulness in the Performance of the "Daily Good Turn" Brought the Scout Movement to the United States of America. The statue was set up in Gilwell Park in England. The Prince of Wales gave the acceptance speech before a large audience of interested spectators.

THERE IS AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT given by a young lady who was visiting the Holy Land. She had visited Bethany, the place where Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead. The inhabitants of the village did not believe in doing favors. When the small ragged children posed for pictures, they expected a coin in payment. If the payment was not large enough, they would scream insults at the young woman. She finally realized she must pay for every favor she asked.

But one day the unusual happened. She went to visit Ain Karin, the place where John the Baptist is supposed to have been born. When she got off the bus, a boy of about twelve offered to carry her bag. He was an Arab and could speak only a few words of English. His name was Mohammed and his religion was Mohammedanism. He spoke about a Christian missionary who was teaching him to speak English. When they reached their place of destination, the young woman offered the coin she was accustomed to paying for such services. Instead of accepting, the young Arab shook his head, "No coin, lady. This Mohammed is Boy Scout."

The Land Shadowing With Wings

By Conrad H. Booton

BECAUSE I feel it necessary to clear up any erroneous ideas which might have resulted from my recent article on this subject, I would like to say that when I speak of the "land shadowing with wings," I am not referring to Joseph's Land "the land of promise."

Some readers might have gathered that when I discredit the idea of America's being the land shadowing with wings, I am also saying America is not the promised land.

I do not say this at all, for I believe with all my heart that America is the promised land—the land God gave to the seed of Joseph for an inheritance, the land of the Restoration and the place where the New Jerusalem shall be established at the end of time.

Therefore I unhesitatingly distinguish between the two lands in the following manner:

The Book of Mormon states that the Jews understood the manner by which the holy prophets prophesied.

Yea, and my soul delighteth in words of Isaiah, for I came out from Jerusalem, and mine eyes hath beheld the things of the Jews, and I know that the Jews do understand the things of the prophets, and there is none other people that understand the things which were spoken unto the Jews, like unto them, save it be that they are taught after the manner of the things of the Jews.—Book of Mormon 139: 8.

If this be true, then Isaiah was not prophesying about the Land of Joseph (America) for if he had been, the Jews would have known about this land as far back as 700 B.C. They did not know of Joseph's Land, for Christ said that the Jews had not at any time been told of it. The people on the Land of Joseph were the "other sheep" Christ was to visit, but the Jews did not know where those other sheep were located, for Christ had kept it hidden from them.

And behold, this is the land of your inheritance; and the Father hath given it unto you.

And not at any time hath the Father given me commandment that I should tell it unto your brethren at Jerusalem; neither at any time hath the Father given me commandment, that I should tell unto them concerning the other tribes of the house of Israel, whom the Father hath led away out of the land.

This much did the Father command me, that I should tell unto them, that other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

And now because of stiff-neckedness and unbelief, they understood not my word; therefore I was commanded to say no more of the Father concerning this thing unto them.

But, verily, I say unto you, that the Father hath commanded me, and I tell it unto you, that ye were separated from among them because of their iniquity; therefore it is because of their iniquity, that they know not of you.

And verily, I say unto you again, that the other tribes hath the Father separated from them; and it is because of their iniquity, that they know not of them.

And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

And they understood me not, for they supposed it had been the Gentiles; for they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching;

And they understood me not that I said they shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice; that I should not manifest myself unto them, save it were by the Holy Ghost.—Book of Mormon 644: 14-22.

THE QUESTION is—Did Isaiah tell the Jews of the location and people of Joseph's Land 700 B.C., or was it kept secret from the Jews as Christ said it had been?

If we say Isaiah was prophesying concerning the destruction of the Jaredites, who as some suppose were inhabiting a "land shadowing with wings," then he was telling where the land was located. If this be the case, the Jews would have known where the land was, for Nephi said they understood the prophets, but this was not the case, for not at any time had the location of Joseph's Land been revealed to any people other than those colonies who were brought to it by the hand of the Lord.

Wherefore, I, Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord.—Book of Mormon 78: 10.

And behold, it is wisdom that this land should be kept as yet from the knowledge of other nations;

For, behold, many nations would overrun the land, that there would be no place for an inheritance.

Wherefore, I, Lehi, have obtained a promise, that inasmuch as those whom the Lord God shall bring out of the land of Jerusalem shall keep his commandments, they shall prosper upon the face of this land;

And they shall be kept from all other nations, that they may possess this land unto themselves.

And if it so be that they shall keep his commandments, they shall be blessed upon the face of this land.

And there shall be none to molest them, nor to take away the land of their inheritance; and they shall dwell safely for ever.—Book of Mormon 78: 16-21.

Thus we see, that Joseph's Land and the Land Shadowing With Wings were different. One was a land of promise; the other was a land cursed by a woe put upon it by the Assyrians.

The Land of Promise was never to be cursed, but was blessed shortly after the flood and was to be blessed forever.

For behold, they rejected all the words of Ether; for he truly told them of all things, from the beginning of man; and that after the waters had receded from off the face of this land, it became a choice land above all other lands, a chosen land of the Lord.—Book of Mormon 750: 2.

But unto the righteous, it shall be blessed for ever.—Book of Mormon 78: 15.

But the Land Shadowing With Wings was not a blessed land, for God was against it and the Holy Prophet bore witness of it.

We also add that it was impossible for the Jaredites to be the people who were to be "scattered and peeled" as is spoken of in Isaiah 18: 2, for the Jaredites were never scattered, they were a house divided against itself, which division eventually caused their destruction, but they were never scattered, but the Scriptures tell us of a people that was scattered, that people was the House of Israel which was to be gathered from its scattered condition when the Lord would set his hand the second time to gather Israel from its long dispersion.

Again we would like to make it very clear, that when we say America is not the Land Shadowing With Wings, we are not saying it is not the Promised Land to Joseph's seed, for that is exactly what it is—especially North America where the New Jerusalem is to be located (Book of Mormon 750: 1-13).

The Zeal of Winning Souls

Lyman Wight records in his journal that from the date of his ordination, November 20, 1830, to June 14, 1831, he traveled six hundred miles in Ohio and Pennsylvania, baptized three hundred and ninety-three persons, and organized eight churches.—Church History, Volume I, page 183.

QUESTION:

Doctrine and Covenants 28:1 says, "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer," and in verse 13 we have the words "Mine Only Begotten." This seems to be a peculiar statement, as it appears that Christ is calling himself his "Only Begotten." Please explain.

Associated with this is the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 45 in which Christ says he made the foundation of the earth, that he is Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. Also in Doctrine and Covenants 54, "Alpha and Omega that was crucified for the sins of the world."

Other Book of Mormon references are, I Nephi 1:87, 88; Ether 1:107, 108; Mosiah 5:44, 45.

Also references in the Bible are John 14:6-12; Genesis 7:59-67.

J. A. B.

ANSWER:

No inconsistency is involved in this question. The revelation starts out with "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ," but in verse 12 we have this statement, "Behold I say unto you, that I, the Lord God gave Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death"; then in verse 13 this last speaker says "mine only begotten."

Christ was in the beginning with God, and as part of the Godhead was equal with God. John 1:1-3: "In the Beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

II Nephi 5:40: "And they shall know that the Lord is God, the Holy one of Israel."

John 1:3: "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." See also Colossians 1:16, he himself declared that he is Alpha and Omega.

"The revelation of John, a servant of God, which was given unto him of Jesus Christ, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass."—Revelation 1:1. "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord who is, who was, and who is to come, the Almighty."—Verse 8. See also chapter 22:13.

Christ is referred to by various appellations: Colossians 2:9 states he is the fullness of the Godhead bodily. II Nephi 5:40, "And they shall know that the Lord is God, the Holy One of Israel." He is referred to both as the Father and the Son in Ether 1:77: "Behold I am Jesus Christ. I am the Father and the Son." Luke 10:23 (Inspired Version) states: "No man knoweth that the Son is the Father and the Father is the Son, but he to whom the Son will reveal it." Mosiah 8:28-31 offers this:

I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people, and because he dwelleth in the flesh, he shall be called the Son of God; and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son; the Father because he was conceived by the power of God; the Son because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and the Son; and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and earth.

See also Ether 1:101.

Thus occupying in this capacity of Father, Son, Creator and Redeemer, Lord and Savior, Christ might speak at one time in one capacity and further along in another.

As an elder in the church, at times I may speak as an individual, but when sent with the authority of the church and by the church, I speak for the church. Matthew mentions some to whom it was not given to know the mysteries of the kingdom. This may be one of them which the finite mind has not the capacity to fully understand. If our study and education continue on in the world to come, of necessity there will be much to learn, and the relationship between God and Christ may then become clear to us.

QUESTION:

I understand some of the Saints are using consecrated oil in salads and cooking. I have always felt that the oil after being blessed is rather sacred, and I set it on a shelf where it will not be confused with other oil. Am I right in this feeling?
Calif.

Mrs. J. P.

ANSWER:

It is my opinion consecrated oil should not be used for any purpose other than the healing of the sick—either in administration or taking it for medicinal purposes with prayer and in a consecrated mood. Certainly it should carry with it something of a setting apart from "common to holy uses" when it is consecrated.

There is nothing in the law about it that I know of, but it has never been used for common purposes in our household for over fifty years to my knowledge.

M. H. SIEGFRIED.

QUESTION:

Does any text of Scripture indicate that baptism is a saving ordinance?

ANSWER:

Several texts so indicate, such as John 3:5, which declares that without it one cannot enter the kingdom; and I Peter 3:21, which states that baptism "doth also now save us." Jesus also said, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

But nowhere does the record tell us that baptism alone, regardless of any other thing, will save any person. Baptism is a saving ordinance in the sense that it is an act of obedience, faith, and desire to do God's will. We are also told that we are saved by hope (Romans 8:24), by grace (Ephesians 2:5), by the name of Christ (Acts 4:12), by the gospel (I Corinthians 15:1, 2), and by obedience (Hebrews 5:9). To love and serve God are the essentials of salvation, and this is impossible unless we heed his commands.

QUESTION:

Is the use of tobacco condemned by revelation? Or is it simply by vote of conference?

ANSWER:

Two revelations given to the church condemn the use of tobacco, and five resolutions of Conference deal with the subject, in two of which it is ordered that no man be given Conference appointment who is addicted to its use, and that its use by any member be discouraged. The revelations state on this point:

Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle.—Doctrine and Covenants 86:1.

Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

No Place Like Home - By MRS. V. D. RUCH

TAKE A WALK in any part of your home town, and you will see houses along the street—small houses, big houses, hotels, apartments, quonset huts, and even shacks along the river, if you have a river. Some of them are palaces, and some are hovels. Yet every one of these places to someone is home—supposedly the dearest place on earth. What is it that makes people everywhere sing with such depth of feeling, “Be it ever so humble, there’s no place like home”?

Is a house a home? What is a house anyway? In an editorial recently, Brother Leonard Lea said, “A house is simply a little part of the world which a man encloses in order to control the climate. There, if he has a good roof, he can escape rain; with the aid of a furnace, he can avoid the winter’s cold; and if his house is very modern, he can turn on another machine to take some of the sting out of summer’s heat. With insulation, storm windows, and a humidifier, he can make his own climate.” In other words, a house is a shelter from the wind, rain, snow, and summer sun.

You build this roof and four walls—a bundle of brick or stone or wood—and you call it home. What is it you guard there so carefully with a lock and fastened doors? Is it possessions, comfort, fine furnishings, food in abundance? Is it merely roof and room, or is it more than shelter from the weather and the furnishings you find within those walls? It may be lovely furniture, a shelf of books, pictures on the wall, or windows with curtains white and straight. It may be Dad’s old armchair in the usual place, a corner for toys, or Mother’s little old rocker with the sewing basket close by. It may mean candlelit tables with gleaming silver, lustrous china, linen, or fine lace. Or perhaps it is just a small kitchen table with a homespun cloth and a hearty welcome for friends who come to call. It could be shining sunlight spilling through the kitchen door, lying in a pool on a freshly scrubbed floor, with the delicious odor of freshly baked bread, or the aroma from the old cook jar.

Perhaps the word home brings visions of hollyhocks in bloom or roses by the door, with children romping here and there. It may mean sitting on the porch at night when all the tasks are done, just resting or talking with the neighbor over the garden wall. And then, when night falls, it brings the bedtime story and little children kneeling, speaking low in evening prayer. There’s the old family Bible and hearts lifted in praise to the Giver of life and love and happiness. Home is not merely roof and room!

HAVE YOU peace and security in your home? Is it a place where your children love to be and are loathe to leave; where there is wise discipline, love, freedom, and understanding? Have you remembrances of firesides and the fellowship you found there—of experiences at the family altar that led your heart to the holy mountain? Have you a place where God lives with you and inspires you to do his will and become like him? Have you beauty that leads you to the heart of him who is the Creator of all beauty? When you stand beside the loved one God has taken, have you faith that sustains and strengthens and points to the greater home beyond? Home does “hold within its shelter all of life I know”—all the joys the soul has treasured blended with all the heart has known of sadness through the years.

A home is shelter from the weather, but it is shelter from the greater storms of life, too. I think Abraham discovered this secret many years ago. He moved from his old home to a new place. There “he pitched his tent . . . and there he built an altar unto the Lord.”—Genesis 12: 8. Here was a tent for his body and an altar for his soul! In building Christian homes we must have both—a place to live and something to live by and for. It is not a question of one or the other. We must have both. A home is not simply a shelter, neither is it simply an altar. It would be sorrowful indeed if we had no roof over our heads. We do not always pay enough attention to this phase of our homes. Every family deserves a home of its own. Let us look more carefully to the pitching of our tents!

EVERY FAMILY needs shelter from the storm, but it is the altar and not the tent that will bring security against the greatest storms of life. Once upon a time a foolish man built his house upon the sand, “And the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall thereof.” He had not founded his house upon a rock. And Christ said, “Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not” is like unto that man. No matter how securely we pitch our tents, we cannot be safe from the great storms of life unless we build an altar to the Lord. We need this security and our children need it too.

Our Christian home has a rich heritage; yet, in spite of this, we seem to have lost our way. If we are alert to facts, we must know that the home is on trial for its very life. Five hundred thousand homes are broken yearly. In addition to this there are thousands more that come near the edge of disruption, and there are many, many more that are going on at a small rate of efficiency as far as happiness is concerned. Far too many homes have become mere dressing stations or eating stands.

There is a typical story of a modern girl who said to a real estate agent who was trying to sell her a house: "A home? Why do I need a home? I was born in a hospital, educated in a college, courted in an automobile, and married in a church. I live out of the delicatessen and paper bags. I spend my mornings on the golf course, my afternoons at the bridge table, and my evenings at the movies. And when I die I will be buried from the undertaker's. All I need is a garage."

What is back of a philosophy like this? First of all, God has been left out of the picture. In the very beginning he instituted family life and meant for it a rich heritage. He invested a part of himself in it, and we must build with him if we fulfill the measure of our creation. God is the creator of us all and of the world in which we live. He made all things good, and man was the crowning work of his creation. He gave him dominion over all and power to subdue the earth. Yet he looked upon man and saw that he was lonely. It was not good for him to live alone.

IN DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 29 we learn that man shall have "one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made." Could we not conclude then that marriage is a part of God's plan for the salvation of the human race? The very continuity of the race depends upon it. However, God was interested not only in the population of the earth but in the kind of people brought forth. He also designed that men and women might become his sons and daughters. "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23. Could anything less than a Christian pattern of marriage—a partnership (with each other and God) "until death do us part" bring to pass this part of God's great plan for the human race? It is no hit and miss affair. It is a moral act, made so by God, and human laws can never make moral what God does not approve. Any nation declines when its marriage laws become corrupt. Upon us, as builders of Zion, rests the security of the nations. May God help us to lift up the ensign and measure up to the end of our creation. Many of us have also forgotten the laws of God, neglecting to bring up our children in light and truth. We have been given divine commandments for right living; those we ourselves should obey and teach diligently to our children.

HOME IS VERY DEAR TO ME. It isn't just a place. It is a condition, an atmosphere, memories, a heritage, and a responsibility. It is a part of God's calling. It stretches over the miles and is carried in the heart. It is passed on from generation to generation. It never dies. My mother has been gone for over thirty-five years, yet in memory she still lives with me. She continues to exert her influence in many of the things I do and say. It was she who taught me to love the Christ and to want to dedicate myself to him and trust my life to his keeping. The most precious memory of my childhood is kneeling at mother's knee every night for my evening prayer. She would throw her arm around me, drawing me close to her and to God. Between us there was an intimacy that encouraged confidence; I was never afraid to tell her my inmost secrets because I always knew she would understand.

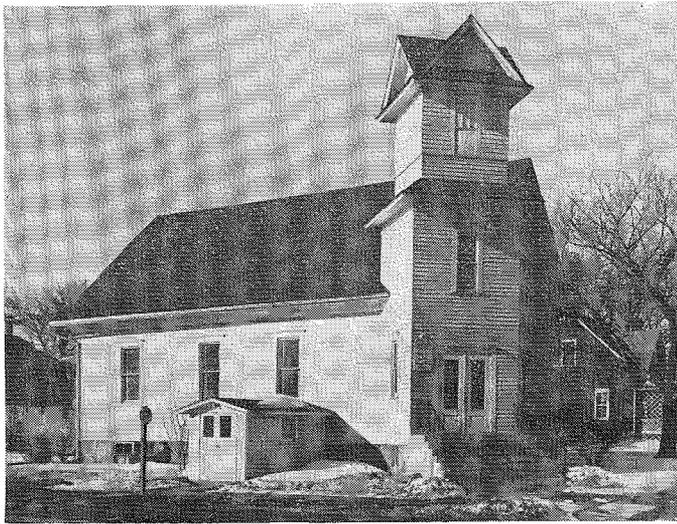

Another pleasant memory is of prayer time on Sunday evening when our whole family of seven lined up to offer supplications. This was another tie to bind us together. How families need that togetherness today! Sunday was a sacred day at our house, and we were taught to keep it holy. I never felt I was being deprived of any pleasure because of this family observance. I know it has yielded rich rewards in my life. It remains a habit with me still.

My mother took me to church school when I was just a little babe. Prayer meeting was a part of that schedule, too. It was such a strong habit that, even as a young girl, I never thought of going to school parties or other festivities held on Wednesday evening. I may have missed some passing pleasure at those parties (and it wasn't always easy to say "no") but those prayer services built up a tower of strength within me that has helped sustain me through the years. I have often thanked God for this habit I developed in my childhood. Now I do not have to waste energy deciding whether I shall go to church on Sunday and to prayer meeting on Wednesday evening. I know I will go there if I go anywhere. This habit is as much a part of my life as eating three meals a day. "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

THERE ARE MANY other rich things my childhood home has given me, but I cannot take time to tell them all. But that home—a very humble one I assure you—has given me a rich heritage that nothing can take away. It has also passed on to me the responsibility of giving this heritage to another generation, along with whatever I have been able to build upon the foundation that was given to me. All through the years the passionate desire of my heart has been to do my part in helping make our home Zion. Each year finds me striving harder toward that goal. With you I want to help raise this ensign to the nation. It isn't an easy task, but it is so heart-warming and satisfying! And—it is challenging to be engaged in the great task of helping to build the kingdom of God on earth.

THE CHARITON, IOWA, CHURCH

THE CHARITON, IOWA, BRANCH was organized November 8, 1914. Elder John Smith presided at the organization meeting held in the Lucas County courthouse. He was assisted by John F. Garver. Elder L. W. Moffet, now of Pleasanton, Iowa, was chosen as the first presiding elder of the branch and served in this capacity for several years.

The Saints met for a short time in the courthouse, after which they held meetings in the Strand Theater and then in the basement of the library. However, they were not satisfied to meet under these conditions permanently. As early as May, 1915, a committee was appointed to look into the possibilities of building or buying a house of worship. It is interesting to note in their report that material for a building thirty-six by forty by fourteen feet could be bought for $920.

In July, 1915, a building fund was set up. The raising of money wasn't an easy task, but there was a constant striving on the part of the members to have a church home.

The lot where the church now stands was purchased in 1916. At the time it was not a very desirable location, but it has since developed into a very fine neighborhood for a church. It is only three blocks from the public square. A paved highway runs along the east side of the church and a paved street is on the north. The best city park and playground in town is just across the street.

In June, 1917, building began and by fall, services were being held in it although it was still unfinished. It was a matter of years before the church was fully completed.

The upper auditorium seats 140 people and has space for a twenty-five voice choir. With solid oak pews, Venetian blinds, and two-toned walls it makes a beautiful place to worship.

Plans are underway now to add four classrooms. These are needed to accommodate the steady growth the branch has made in the past several years. Membership has more than doubled since 1940.

Chariton, a town of about 6,000 people, is in a good trade area and has several small industries. In the early days of the branch, most of the Saints were coal miners. Time proved this to be an unstable condition, for when the mines closed down, the branch almost disbanded. Today's members engage in various methods of making a living.

The Chariton Branch is the second largest branch in Lamoni Stake. John W. Blackstock has been pastor for the past fifteen years. JOHN W. BLACKSTOCK

Briefs

THAMESVILLE, ONTARIO.—On November 20 the Wabash Branch held an anniversary service to commemorate the fiftieth year since the church building was built. The branch had been organized sometime before that. Apostle Percy E. Farrow, the guest speaker, was in charge of the 9:30 service. District President E. E. Smith spoke at the 11:00 o'clock service.

Preaching at the 2:30 and 7:30 services was by Apostle Farrow. Special choir music was under the direction of Sister Marianna Badder with Sister Grace Jackson as pianist. The Tuesday night following the anniversary, a chicken supper was served by the sisters of the branch. Around four hundred attended. The work is moving forward.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Coincident with the first St. Louis district conference of the new year was the first visit to the district by Bishop Walter N. Johnson, who addressed three of the meetings. The conference was held at St. Louis Branch January 14 and 15 on the theme "Freely Give."

At the main Sunday morning service, Bishop Johnson reviewed briefly some of the crises which have faced the Reorganized Church and then went on to urge a re-assessment of the aims of the Reorganization and a greater compliance with the church law on the part of its members. At an earlier hour he had spoken to the men's meeting, along with Bishop's Agent Russell Archibald. At the closing service of the conference Sunday afternoon, he again addressed the full congregation in a meeting conducted by the young people of the district. Attendance reached 472 at the morning preaching service.

Saturday night at the business meeting, the following sixteen were chosen from among twenty-six candidates to be the district's delegates at General Conference: Clarence Archibald, Mathel Archibald, Audrey Clark, Benjamin Clark, Leona Counts, Charles Fletcher, E. J. Gleazer, Ellen Goetz, Tom Gough, Frank McDonald, Winsome McDonald, Fred Mottashed, Aileen Nordyke, Dalton Nordyke, Charles Remington, and Irene Wehrli.—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—Three babies were blessed recently. Nancy Lee, daughter of Norman and Harriet (Dickinson) Pyle was blessed by Elders Don Lents and Ephraim Brown; Catherine Theris, daughter of Glen I. and Irene (Hollis) Smith was blessed by Elders Glaude Smith and Lewis J. Richards. John Wayne, son of Paul M. and Bernice (Harford) Gerber was blessed by Glaude Smith and Bishop Cackler.

The Teen-Age Zion's League gave a chili supper on January 14. Proceeds from the supper will be put in the fund for the educational building that is to be erected near the Stone Church.

Miss Verlea Duncan was baptized on New Year's Day by Elder L. J. Richards. She was confirmed by Brother Richards and Elder Eldron Robison.

BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.—One of the most successful years in the history of the branch has just been completed. On April 3 the thirty-fifth anniversary of the branch was celebrated by all-day meeting at the church. The women's department served dinner and supper. Visitors were present from Scranton, Archbald, and Philadelphia. The honored guest of the day was Elder H. A. Cunningham who was instrumental in organizing the branch in 1914.

Pastor W. H. Lewis has followed up the charge given by Apostle D. T. Williams, and as a result the "Each one win one" effort has borne exceptionally good fruit. On November 27 five people were baptized. The same day the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Ben Mowery was blessed.

During the past summer John Shaffer, Jr., was ordained a deacon. Henry Shaffer was ordained a priest, and J. Elwyn Vaughan was ordained an elder.

A young men's Bible class of about fifteen members has been organized. Because of increased attendance, plans are being made to enlarge the church building.

In September thirty-five young people took a bus trip to Deer Park to attend the youth rally. The women's department earned over $100 to pay the bus fare. The children earned $6.00 for this enterprise by selling cookies, peanuts and dishcloths.

J. T. Conway, district president, William Guthrie, district missionary, and D. O. Chesworth, district bishop have been visitors. On October 9 Patriarch Willard Hield visited and gave many blessings. Sister Hield spoke to the women's department.

The annual business meeting was held in September, and these officers were elected: W. H. Lewis, pastor; Mrs. Roy Shaffer, secretary; Roy Shaffer, treasurer; John Shaffer, church school director; Henry Shaffer, assistant; Gloria Fritz, secretary and treasurer of church school; Harold Fritz, assistant secretary and treasurer of church school; Mrs. Alice Clugston, children's supervisor and chorister; Mrs. Harold Fritz, women's leader, publicity agent, and book steward; Beatrice Kelchner, pianist; and Elwyn Vaughan, young people's supervisor.

The women's department are studying Each One Win One. They meet once a week and are having penny suppers, selling Jello and birthday calendars to help the building fund. They have an average attendance of fifteen. More than one hundred now attend the church school. Nineteen young people had perfect attendance for 1949.

On December 25 the young people gave the play "No Room in the Inn."—Reported by MRS. HAROLD FRITZ.

CRESCENT, IOWA.—The branch business meeting was held September 15 with Elders M. A. Smith, H. M. Butler, and George McKeown in charge.

Officers elected for the coming year are H. M. Butler, pastor; William Holly, treasurer and building custodian; Mary Butler, secretary; Elizabeth Smith, women's leader; Robert Smith, music director; Jesse Mason, young people's leader; Vena Estes, historian; and Evelyn Wilson, publicity agent.

On October 9 Jesse Mason was ordained a priest.

Margaret Jo Anway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Anway, of Bellingham, Washington; and Nancy Jo DeWaele, daughter of Mrs. Mildred DeWaele of Crescent, were baptized on June 27 at Council Bluffs, Iowa. They were confirmed on July 1 at Crescent.

William Lennox, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Lennox Morrison, Jr., was blessed July 25 by Elders H. M. Butler and George McKeown.

During the summer months, the exterior of the church was painted and a new roof put on.

On September 18, Sister Vena Estes resigned as church school leader of the children's department after fifteen years of service. Evelyn Wilson became the new leader.

On November 8 a home harvest festival dinner and bazaar was held.

Brother H. M. Butler resigned on November 6 as pastor, and on November 13 Brother George McKeown was recommended by the district president, P. H. Heuermann, and voted in by the members as pastor.

During December a reception was held in honor of all nonmembers who donated and gave their service to help with the dinner and bazaar.

The children's department gave their annual Christmas program on December 19. Santa made his appearance and there were treats for all.

The regular midweek prayer meetings are being held at the homes during the winter months to save fuel.

New folding chairs have been purchased to be used for special occasions.—Reported by EVELYN WILSON.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT. The District young people's banquet was held on December 10 at the Mission Church. Talks were given by Lloyd Cleveland on "How to Study," Robert Anderson on "Worship," Sumner Walker on "Recreation," and Richard Wildermuth on "Service." Following the program a discussion period was held in the upper auditorium.

On November 26 Dr. Roy Cheville of Graceland College spoke at Mission Church. At the 10 o'clock service of November 27, Professor Ray Zinser conducted a panel on "Church Youth in World Fellowship," assisted by two Graceland students, Hendrik Compier of Rotterdam, Holland, and David Kaleikau of Honolulu, Hawaii. Dr. Cheville spoke at the 11 o'clock service. At the close of this service, Robert Anderson was ordained an Elder by Dr. Cheville and Richard Wildermuth.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON.—Pastor Paul Fishel is striving that this branch maintain consistent spiritual growth. Recently, Priest Roy Keiser was ordained an elder. He and Elder Walter Webberley are counselors to the pastor. Three young men, Melvin Chapman, Bob Taylor, and Darrell Moreland were ordained priests and deacon, respectively. Brother Taylor is a Graceland graduate from Canton, Missouri. A program of priesthood visiting and cottage meetings is being started, with the help of these young men.

The interior of the church building was remodeled and decorated this past year, also the exterior was repainted. A building fund has been started, as additional space is needed.

During the Christmas season, the Vancouver and Camas Branch choirs combined to present the cantata, "Babe of Bethlehem." The Book of Mormon play, "Other Sheep I Have," was given at the same time.—Reported by RUBY FISHEL.

Easter Cantatas

Radiant Morning

For mixed voices, simple yet qualitative music that can be easily worked up by the small, inexperienced group of singers. Has dignity and real beauty. Price, 40c

The Living Redeemer

This cantata provides for a narrator whose reading supplies the desired continuity. It is not beyond the ability of the average volunteer choir, but will require more rehearsal time than others of its type. With song and story, this cantata builds upon the dramatic events leading to the Crucifixion, concluding with the thrilling choral number, "Immanuel Victorious." Price, 40c

The First Easter

An effective instrumental prelude and choral number precedes the story which alternates with vocal selections throughout the cantata. The reading of the story may be omitted at the option of the director. Price, 20c

The Victorious Christ

In song and story, this tuneful cantata portrays the occurrences of the resurrection and is not difficult nor lengthy—only 8 vocal numbers in all, consisting of solos, duets, quartets, and four-part chorus numbers, yet it conveys a complete Easter message. Price each, 20c; $2 a dozen

Immanuel Victorious

An Easter cantata for women's voices plus a narrator. Beautiful in its simplicity. Price, 20c

The Golden Dawn—The Prince of Life

The popularity of these story cantatas is due to the attractive simplicity of the music and the faithfulness of the lyrics to the great message of salvation. Volunteer choirs with only average voices find in this material charming numbers which are within the range of their ability. Price each, 20c; $2 a dozen

So Long Remembered

By ALICE CROSSAN

HE DIDN'T HEAR Mary come into the room. She must have come in very quietly, and seeing him with his head in his hands, deep in thought, would probably have gone out again just as quietly had not her meticulous eye observed the crushed shirt on the floor behind the bureau. That white shirt she had ironed herself, to be sure that for once it would be right—it was such work to do it up properly, and little enough he cared about what she did for him or even what people thought of him. Wearing wrinkled shirts—it was more than she could bear!

"Abe!"

He looked up.

"For pity's sake—look at that shirt you're supposed to take with you. You make me simply furious! All the time I spent ironing it so for once in your life you'd look like a gentleman—and there it is!" she burst out.

The President of the United States raised his head a bit and looked at his outraged wife. Slowly he uncrossed his long legs, got out of the chair, and picked up the offending piece of apparel.

"I'm sorry, Mary," he began in a soothing voice, "I guess I just didn't see it—knocked it off the bureau when I opened the drawer to get out some paper." He gave it a couple of awkward whacks with his big hand, then laid it gently on the high, white bed.

But Mary was not to be soothed. "That won't help now," she cried, snatching the shirt up from where he had laid it. "You can't possibly wear this. Oh, Abe," she said impetuously, turning to look at him with reproach, "why won't you take better care of your clothes? Why won't you be a little more careful of your appearance? Even if you are the President, people criticize your looks. Don't you care?" she finished in exasperation.

"It'll make you even more furious, Mary," said her husband in a voice touched with humor, "but I guess I'll always be a Kentucky boy. I guess I just plain get too interested in people and things to worry a whole lot about clothes.

I'm sorry, but that's just about how it is."

Mrs. Lincoln made no reply. She swept out of the room, head high, shirt secure under her arm, and an injured expression on her face.

ABE SAT DOWN AGAIN and tried to forget the whole unpleasant incident. He was supposed to be writing a speech. There was going to be a dedication ceremony at Gettysburg the following day, and, although he had been given short notice and was not even the main speaker on the program, he thought he ought to be getting something down on paper. He had been thinking about the speech for days, and of only one thing was he certain—that was that his speech would be short. Now he began to try to form in his mind some sort of beginning for what he was to say at this solemn occasion. Should it be a formal statement of some sort, "As President of the United States, I hereby dedicate—" or should it be something more direct and simple, more of what he actually felt? He sighed deeply. There had been such a great number of casualties at Gettysburg, and so recently. This was November—it must have been in August that the worst fighting was going on. There had been so many deaths there that the citizens had decided some sort of general burial spot should be consecrated. David Wills, his good friend who had invited him to spend the time he was in Gettysburg with him and his family, had first conceived the idea. Then it had been taken up with enthusiasm by Mayor F. W. Lincoln, his own kinsman who lived in Boston, and who was such a great organizer that in a very short time, out of that one idea had sprung, full-grown like Pallas Athene from the brain of Zeus, an establishment known as the National Soldiers Cemetery, which would be financed by the several states making burials there.

Lincoln gave another huge sigh, and drew some wavy lines through what he had written on the paper. It was no use. He couldn't think of a beginning that suited him, now. He would try to think of something definite on the trip down by train. He would be alone then and would have time to think.

HIS THOUGHTS turned guiltily back to the scene of a moment before. Why was it that his every move had the power to annoy Mary to such a degree? fleetingly he wondered again, as he had so many times, what life might have been like had he married someone else—Mary

Owen—or Ann Rutledge. But he put these thoughts out of his mind, as being unworthy of him, knowing that he loved his wife dearly. It was true that Mary did not understand him—but then he supposed he did not understand her either. They seemed to be always in conflict about something. She said he spoiled the children. Only the day before, Tad had brought the young twin goats into the house, in fact into the very room in which the Secretary of State was having tea with him. Mary had been mortified and angry with him because he had laughed. He guessed he was ruining the children. But he found it difficult to scold them—he had never been able to stand any kind of suffering or hardship, be it to fallen baby birds or runaway Negro slaves. He supposed this was a fault in his character. Mary seemed to believe so. He guessed, also, that his lack of interest in dress was a fault he might do well to remedy. Mary had said something about people being critical of him, even though he was President. Well, he thought that must be true enough. For instance, this Gettysburg dedication. The committee had been slow to ask him to speak—and he suspected that the only reason they finally had asked him was because of his position. The President of the United States had to be accorded some dignity. They had selected Edward Everett as the orator for the occasion. Everett was a good speaker. Lincoln had heard and admired him. Thinking of the speeches he had heard Everett deliver, he was more than ever sure that his own speech should be brief.

Lincoln got out of his chair and prepared to pack his case for the trip that evening. He would have to see about getting some more shirts to take with him. Maybe his appearance had had something to do with his not being asked to make the principal address. The thought was disconcerting after Mary's remarks, but only for a moment. He forgot it in his unwillingness to do what he must shortly do—go downstairs and see Mary about some other shirts.

THE TRAIN WAS SLOW and the trip was rough, but the chief executive was so occupied with his thoughts that he did not notice the physical aspects of the journey. He was not especially eager to go to Gettysburg, for he knew it was no longer an attractive place, after the battle. He disliked sorrow, personal or otherwise, but he was determined not to run away from it. If he must make a dedication speech at the cemetery, that was what he intended to do.

From his inner pocket he drew out a scrap of paper. It was the back of an envelope—an old letter that must have been in the pocket of his black coat since the last occasion he had worn it. He really must get something definite down for the speech.

For some reason which he could not explain, the words of the Lord's Prayer kept running through his mind. He liked their completeness. "Thy kingdom come." "Thy will be done." "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." He wished he might be able to state his own case as clearly and as much "without vain repetitions." But how should he begin? He had had trouble with the beginning every time he settled down to write.

Suddenly he had a big idea. "Four-score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation," he wrote hastily, lest his thoughts get ahead of his scrawl, "conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

Mr. Lincoln read over what he had written. A long smile crossed his lean, homely face. This was what he had wanted. In a fever of excitement, he went on across the back of the envelope.

"Now we are engaged in a great Civil War." His heart was heavy as he wrote this—heavy for all the sorrows of the nation, for the Union, and for the black men who had in part brought about the struggle that was going on. He had written, and he had said that the Union was uppermost in his thoughts. This he believed. But in his thoughts, too, more than he dared confess, was the issue of slavery. And he knew that he wished in his heart there was no such thing as slavery in a land as beautiful as America, where all men were to have been created free and equal.

He wrote on, swiftly, now that he had begun, and it seemed to him that all the things he had tentatively written down before were meaningless, hollow, compared to what he was writing now. He came to the last phrase, "that this nation shall have a new birth of freedom," and he stopped and carefully read it over. There was something lacking in it, but he did not know exactly what he wished to add. He went on. What would be a good statement with which to close his comments? He thought of the words he had recently underlined in a pamphlet, which had appealed to him. "Democracy is direct self-government over all the people, for all the people, by all the people."

The train gave a series of lurches and diminished its speed. The busy man raised his head to glance out the window and saw that the town was Gettysburg.

Wherever he looked there were signs of the war. He especially noticed the trees. Their limbs were torn, and they stood leafless and dying amid the wreckage.

LINCOLN STUFFED THE ENVELOPE hastily into his pocket and began to gather up his things, for he knew Mr. Wills would be waiting for him at the station. There would be much to do. Ceremony. Always ceremony. Many people would be at the station, hoping to catch a glimpse of the President.

It was the same way, he found without surprise, at the home of his friend and host. Scarcely had dinner started when there was a clamor outdoors, and people were calling for a few words from the President. Wearily, but fully aware of the duty that bound him, he went to the door, looked at the crowd, and made the first Gettysburg address.

He said, "I appear before you, my fellow citizens, merely to thank you for this compliment. The inference is a very fair one that you would hear me for a little while at least, were I to commence to make a speech. I do not appear before you for the purpose of doing so, and for several substantial reasons. The most substantial of these is that I have no speech to make. In my position it is somewhat important that I should not say any foolish things. It very often happens that the only way to help it is to say nothing at all. Believing that is my present position for this evening, I must beg of you to excuse me from addressing you further."¹

Next morning's ride to the cemetery was solemn, and became even more so as the little group of whom Lincoln was a part drew near to the speakers' platform. It was about forty feet square, and it faced away from the cemetery, the President noted with relief, so that the people who came to hear what was to be said would not be standing on ground where the gallant soldiers lay buried. He noted that there were many newly-made mounds and crude markers. It was obvious that burials were being made day after day as the hastily prepared graves were discovered and opened and the bodies were transferred to the more hallowed spot. The whole thing, the appearance of the city, the solemnity of the occasion, the infinitely sad expressions upon the faces of the throng, many of whom were recent mourners, struck the President to the heart. He saw the sun was shining, and that God had made it as beautiful a day as possible, and he was comforted.

"Edward Everett is a marvelous speaker," he said, turning to Mr. Wills and making an effort to be cheerful. "I have heard him before, and I admire his manner very much. This will be a speech long-remembered."

Mr. Wills agreed, but his eyes were roving over the crowd, and it was to be expected that his mind also roved. Mr. Wills had two young sons in the army.

They sat with the other dignitaries under the warm November sunshine on the decorated platform for what seemed to Mr. Lincoln a long time. He looked down at his booted feet several times—thinking that if Mary were here she would be protesting about the film of dust which had settled on them—and waited until it was his turn to rise and say the few words he had prepared. There was one part of the speech that still bothered him. He supposed it didn't make much difference to anyone except himself, but it did not sound quite complete as it was, "That this nation shall have a new birth of freedom." Still, what could be done?

He had not much longer to ponder the problem. Amidst a volley of applause, Everett found his chair, and Lincoln arose and moved to the center of the platform. While he stood waiting for the applause to die down so he might properly begin, he heard the chance remarks of some who were standing near by.

"Not much to look at, eh?" a man questioned his companion.

"Wonder what he'll have to say—after a speech like that," commented another voice.

"It's just as Mary says, I'm always criticized," thought the President, but he accepted both comments with the same touch of humor that was his weapon against Mary's wrath.

He began to speak.

IN THE AUDIENCE, a photographer began laboriously to set up his equipment, hoping for a picture of the President of the United States. He was not paying the slightest attention to what was being said, but was concentrating all his talents upon the camera.

"That we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain," said the calm, slow voice, "that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom. That this government, of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

The President of the United States sat down.

Seated, he raised his eyes ever so slightly into the sunlight, and what he whispered was very nearly a prayer. "Just what it needed, Lord," he said softly, "This nation, under God, shall have its new birth of freedom. That is what I wanted to say."

New Horizons

Having adjusted the mechanism with care, the photographer looked up earnestly at the platform so as to get the President in direct focus. To his astonishment, no one was standing there. The applause had begun again, and he could now see Mr. Lincoln casually seating himself beside the other speakers arranged on the platform. He mopped his brow in frustration. This picture would have been something to show his children and maybe even his grandchildren. Maybe Lincoln wouldn't be so famous, as time went by, but at least now he was President, and you didn't see the President of the United States every day.

"Finished already," muttered the chagrined photographer. "I didn't hear a word he said. Well, it couldn't have been much of a speech, anyway. It didn't last over two minutes!"

APOSTLES BACK IN FIELD

The Quorum of Twelve completed their council meeting on January 12. This was a special meeting which gave attention to a number of papers that had been prepared by the Apostles. These papers discussed the various fields of church procedure in regard to the Quorum of Twelve and gave an over-all survey of the work being accomplished. One day during the session, the Presidency and Bishopric were entertained at dinner. Members of the quorum have returned to their fields.

BISHOP IN ST. LOUIS

Bishop Walter N. Johnson attended the district conference in St. Louis on January 14 and 15. On Saturday he worked in association with Brother Russell Archibald, bishop's agent for the district.

JOSEPH SMITH PAINTING

When the Jackson County (Missouri) Historical Society met on October 18 last, a short paper on Joseph Smith was read by Miss Marilyn Miller. The society through its president, General E. M. Stayton, extended an invitation to the church to provide an oil portrait of Joseph Smith to be hung in the Independence Memorial Building. This picture has been finished, its being a copy of the original portrait in our possession which some artist (unknown by name) made from life. The work has been done by Harold Bullard, formerly of Independence, now of Ness City, Kansas, and it will be presented to the Historical Society on February 3. President Israel A. Smith will present it, and General Stayton, on behalf of the Society, will accept it. Invitations to members of the Society and others have been sent out for this occasion.

DES MOINES

Apostle D. T. Williams and Bishop G. L. DeLapp attended financial observance day in Des Moines on January 15. Financial statements and contributions were brought by members to the church. On the evening of January 14, the workers met at the house of Bishop Steven Robinson for a social evening.

Brothers Williams and DeLapp also visited the new mission at West Des Moines on January 14. They saw the church building that has just been purchased for $1,650.00. Elder Bill Castings is the pastor. Evangelist Henry Castings, father of the pastor, presented a two-week series of sermons for the opening.

ZION'S LEAGUE

A library has been established at the Auditorium for members of the Zion's League in Independence. The library, when complete, will contain many small pamphlets on subjects of interest to the young people. The library will be taken to youth camp for the benefit of those attending.

APOSTLE WILLIAMS GUEST SPEAKER

A $25,000 building in the downtown district of Knoxville, Iowa, has been completed for service. The congregation has been worshipping in a basement church for several years. Elder Robert Gunlock, a psychiatrist at a large veterans' hospital in Knoxville, is the pastor. Apostle D. T. Williams was guest speaker on January 8 when the new auditorium was opened.

MEN'S CLUB

Elder Albert A. Scherer spoke at the Men's Club in the Auditorium on January 16. Over a hundred people attended and found his talk about Holland inspiring and interesting. At the end of the talk those present were permitted to ask questions.

MUSIC

On January 12 and 13 Franklyn S. Weddle visited Graceland College. He was guest speaker at the assembly on Thursday, and on Friday he spoke twice in the chapel.

NEWS FROM WEST CENTRAL STATES

Evangelist Ray Whiting visited the Quorum of Twelve office on January 17. He reports that he began a two-week series of services in Tulsa, Oklahoma, on New Year's Day, and that at the conclusion of the series, twelve people were baptized. The branch is expanding, and new openings are being made. It is expected that prayer meetings and church school will soon be started in the outlying districts.

Brother Whiting also reports that he held a two-week class on missionary work in Hammon. Of the twenty-three people who gave their names for baptism, all but one had been contacted by local members and priesthood. Recently seven more people have given their names for baptism.

Future Features

The theme of "Zion" is close to every Latter Day Saint heart. A sermon "Our of Zion" by Apostle Draper will appear in our next issue. A challenge to faith is dramatically put to us in Ruby Tinkham's article, "Make Me Believe." Our obligation as church members for good government is stressed by Bessie Taylor in the article, "Our Church and the Ideal State." A serial based on the life and church work of Gilbert J. Waller will begin in the March 6 issue. Lillie Jennings presents these articles under the title, "Missionary Businessman."

A son, Allan James, was born on January 8 to Mr. and Mrs. James D. Wardle of Salt Lake City, Utah. Mrs. Wardle is the former Betty E. Forsythe.

A daughter, Karen Marie, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Pitchford of Topeka, Kansas, on October 18.

DEATHS

GOULDSMITH.—Claude L., son of Joseph B. and Emma Shaw Gouldsmith, was born May 5, 1869, at Ashland, Nebraska, and died December 16, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church as a young man, and on December 7, 1895, was ordained to the Aaronic priesthood by Mark H. Forscutt. He was married on May 1, 1900, to Emma E. Nelson, who survives him.

Besides his wife he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Mary Bryan of Tulsa, Oklahoma; a brother, Raymond Gouldsmith of Independence, Missouri; and a sister, Mrs. Agnes Heath of Lamar, Missouri. A son, Nelson, died last May. Funeral services were conducted at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, by Patriarch H. A. Higgins and Elder Glaude Smith. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PACKER.—Ronald, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Packer, died December 11, 1949, in Toronto, Ontario, at the age of eight. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by his father and received his first Communion in the hospital on December 4, seven days before his death. Funeral services were conducted by Pastor John F. Sheehy.

KOEHLER.—Esther Magdalene, daughter of Olas and Mathilde Tandberg, was born in Akron, Ohio, on July 23, 1896, and died January 4, 1950, in Independence, Missouri. Shortly after her birth, the family moved to Toledo, Ohio, where she was baptized into the Reorganized Church on August 9, 1906. Six years later she came to Independence, Missouri, with her parents. In July, 1931, she was married to Charles F. Koehler. A member of Stone Church congregation, she gave much of her time to church school work. She was also musically talented.

She is survived by her husband, Charles, of the home; a daughter, Mrs. Geraldine L. Bradley, Kansas City, Missouri; a sister, Mrs. Mabel Short, Independence, and three brothers: Hans Tandberg, St. Louis, Missouri; L. G. Tandberg, Puente, California; and Stewart Tandberg, Brooklyn, New York. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CARLSON.—Bertha Harvey, daughter of John J. and Anne Stratten Harvey, was born August 6, 1884, at Kansas City, Kansas, and died at her home in Three Forks, Montana, on August 8, 1949. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on March 18, 1894, and was a faithful member throughout her life. In 1923 she was married to William A. Carlson. She is survived by her husband; a daughter, Wilma Higginbotham of Phoenix, Arizona; a son, Clifford Carlson of Bozeman, Montana; three sisters: Mrs. Bessie Jarvis of Boicourt, Kansas; Mrs. Eva Christgen and Mrs. Anne Peterson of Kansas City, Kansas; two brothers: Fred C. Harvey of Kansas City, Kansas, and William H. Harvey of St. Clair Shores, Michigan; and two grandchildren. Services were held in the Dokken, Nelson, and Kippen Funeral Home, Elders Harvey Eliason and Joseph Beck officiating. Interment was in Sunset Hills Cemetery, Bozeman.

COUSINS.—Fred, son of Thomas and Eliza Cousins, was born on March 14, 1877, at Clay Cross, England, and died October 8, 1949, at the Independence Sanitarium. He came to America in 1904, first settling at Bevier, Missouri. He then moved to Moorcroft, Wyoming, returning many years later to Missouri and making his home at Grain Valley. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 4, 1894, in England. On December 10, 1899, he was ordained a deacon, on January 9, 1929, a priest, and on December 16, of the same year an elder. During the time he lived at Grain Valley he served as a teacher in the Blue Springs Branch. On March 15, 1897, he was married to Fanny Wilmott in Chesterfield, England, who survives him.

He also leaves four daughters: Mrs. Willis Myers, Flat Valley, Saskatchewan; Mrs. Patrick Curtis, Helena, Montana; Mrs. Clarence F. Savage, Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Craig Baxley, Dallas, Texas; five sons: Harry, Chadron, Nebraska; Boyd E., Raymond, and Charles, Kansas City, Missouri; and Roy, Casper, Wyoming; two brothers, William and Charles Cousins of Chesterfield; sixteen grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Stone Church in Independence. Elder L. F. P. Curry gave the sermon, assisted by Elders Harold Constance and Glaude Smith. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

* "MESSIAH" IN TAHITI

Those who listened to "The Messiah" just before Christmas will remember the beautiful rendition of "Comfort Ye, My People," by tenor soloist Garland E. Tickemyer.

According to a letter from F. E. Butterworth, our missionary in the Society Islands, that solo didn't bring much comfort to a saloon keeper in Papeete. He writes:

"The local radio station is located in Quinn's beer parlor, so it necessitated our darkening the doorway several times recently. The music director at Quinn's informed us that "The Messiah" was bound to injure his business, because the first tenor solo sent out the invitation, 'Come-for-Tea.'"

We can't say we're sorry. If "The Messiah" will cut down the liquor business, we like it all the better.

* REFUGEES FROM CIVILIZATION

Papers are carrying an amusing story of seven persons—one a woman—who are sailing away to the Windward Islands because they are "just a little bit fed up on civilization," and "want to get away from people." That's wacky, collecting a crowd to get away from people!

... We've read of other such expeditions. They usually end in sunburn, spider bites, disillusionment, and bad temper. If the folks succeed in getting back to civilization alive, they hate each other. ... Why should these seven try to get away from the world? They've had all the best of it: culture, education, travel, comfort, and the friendship of kings and great people. They know nothing of toil, grinding poverty, and privation, as the little people of the world know it. ... In one way they're smart. This isn't final. They're trying it four months. They'll be back for tooth-paste, new styles, magazines, shows, a visit to the beauty shop, and some dental work.

* BAD DREAMS

A letter from Brother Glum, the prophet of doom, informs us that the world is coming to an end, and that some of us are going to get a rather close singe in the process. Somebody is always trying to take the joy out of life and scare us to death. Reminds us of what Job said to his three melancholy visitors: "Thou scarest me with dreams, and terrifiest me through visions: so that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life."—7: 14, 15.

... Why do people like to make these predictions of calamity? Generally, because they are unhappy. Life has used them badly, and they feel like retaliating. Impotent to do any real harm to the heartless world, they look to the future, imagine a change of situation, and try to call angry gods to their aid. Be sorry for them, for they are suffering. But do not take their predictions seriously.

* If you spend fifty years of your life working in an office, chances are that you will use as much as ten years of it raising and lowering a window to make up for the erratic behavior of a radiator.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer

The need for divine guidance is ever apparent and has always been recognized by the church. In view of the demands and the urgency of the forthcoming General Conference which will convene Sunday, April 2, we feel it is well to request the Saints throughout the world to pray and to join in fasting from the morning and noon meals, Sunday, March 5, or such part of that period as is consistent with duties and health. Let us bear in mind the work of the Conference, the church, and the kingdom, as we diligently seek the Father's blessing.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

BELATED CREDIT LINE

The photograph which appeared on the front cover of the January 16 issue of the Herald did not carry a credit line because the picture became separated from the letter that came with it, and the editors were unable to determine who had sent it. Our thanks go to Dale F. Wheeler of Puyallup, Washington.

WORSHIP SUGGESTIONS IN "GUIDE LINES"

The new and expanded Guide Lines to Leadership carries the monthly worship suggestions for church school workers. The March and April issue is in the mail this week. Worship suggestions will not appear in the Herald columns hereafter.

Introducing...

M. L. DRAPER (page 5) was introduced May 21, 1949.

LUCIEN PERRY HOLLAND, Indianapolis, Indiana, (page 8) was born in 1888 at Madison, New York, and was baptized in Indianapolis in 1943. He married Ernestine Gabor in 1917. They have two children: Robert P. and Doris R.

Brother Holland received his formal training in the Madison high school. Until 1909 he followed the watchmaking trade, and since that time has been in the laundry and cleaning business.

In his youth he was a member of the Congregational Church. As a young man he joined the Elks and Knights of Pythias, but has not been a member of these since 1917.

He likes to read and is especially interested in history. He holds the offices of deacon, branch solicitor, and branch treasurer.

RUBY TINKHAM (page 10) was introduced April 16, 1949.

BESSIE TAYLOR (page 13) was introduced July 25, 1949.

News & Notes

CONFERENCE IN ZION

President F. H. Edwards, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Bishop Harold Cackler, Elder Charles Graham, and Elder Glaude Smith assisted President Israel A. Smith while he was in charge of the conference in Zion held in the Stone Church on January 30.

At the meeting ninety-five delegates were selected for General Conference. A budget of $142,000 was approved by the four hundred people present. The names of twenty-two men were recommended and approved for ordination in the priesthood. Mrs. Henry R. Rowland read a report on the activities of the Campus Shop for 1949. The statistical report on the baptisms, deaths, and transfers showed an increase of 124 members of the church in Zion. A grant of $7,500 was approved to the Enoch Hill congregation for their building program.

FINANCIAL EMPHASIS

Bishop L. W. Kohlman preached at the morning service of January 29 at Mapleton, Kansas, and at the evening service of the same day at Fort Scott, Kansas. His talks climaxed the special emphasis that had been placed on the financial law during the month of January.

BOARD MEETING

Graceland College Board of Directors held a regular meeting January 29 at the home of Dr. Charles Grabske in Independence. Those present were Dr. Lawrence Brockway of Ann Arbor, Michigan; Verne Deskin of Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Blanche Mesley, Dr. Charles Grabske, A. Neal Deaver, Bishop Walter Johnson and Dr. F. M. McDowell, chairman, of Independence, Missouri.

Reports were made concerning the progress of the building program for the Memorial Student Center and the service building (eating center) now partially completed. Reports were also made concerning the construction of a new dormitory for men. The annual report of the president of the college was read and approved. A preview of the tentative budget of 1950 and 1951 was given.

MUSIC

A male chorus of twenty-five singers is practicing every Monday evening for their presentation of Brahms Alto Rhapsody. Harriet Porter Moore, who was contralto soloist for the Messiah broadcast will sing a number with them.

A notice has been received from the income tax department stating that any gift made to the Community Music Association will be tax free.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS

A letter to the First Presidency from the wife of Gomer T. Griffiths states that he has shown no improvement. He has suffered considerably during the last few weeks and seldom has relief from pain. The prayers of the Saints are solicited in his behalf.

NEW CHURCH AT LAMONI

A gift of one hundred dollars has been received by Bishop Landsberg for the building fund of the new church from Mrs. E. C. McCook, of Pendleton, Oregon. The gift is in memory of her parents, John and Lucy Foreman, lifelong members of the church. Although Mrs. McCook has lived in the west for many years, she is still interested in Lamoni, Iowa.

Save Us, Lord, From Ourselves!

"A hydrogen bomb of ten kilograms would thus be equal to 1,600,000 tons of TNT. . . . while the fusion of 100 kilograms of hydrogen would yield the power of 800 Hiroshima-type bombs. Such a bomb would devastate an area of 300 to 400 square miles."—From a news dispatch.

Keep Your Nightmares Ready

After reading the above note from the papers, you may take the atom bomb out of your nightmares. You won't have to worry about it any more. It is obsolete. But keep your nightmares handy, because you will need them now more than ever. Almost any day you may have to hitch them up for the last drive over the hill to the asylum or perhaps to total oblivion.

Scientists have been busy again inventing blessings for the human race. They are now ready to invent a new one that will solve all our problems and settle all our troubles—by eliminating us! Perhaps it is the only sure way.

The Hydrogen Bomb

From the above brief description, borrowed from a newspaper, we obtain a vague preliminary idea, a sinister and macabre warning of what the latest weapon, in process of creation for our military master-minds, is to be like. Keep an ear open at your radio, watch your paper, and you will soon know all about it. It sometimes has appeared to be our custom to give all our military secrets away.

No hydrogen bomb has ever been made by man. But scientists think they know how it can be done. Like the atom bomb project, this will be too big and costly for private enterprise. Only a government that can tax and spend will be able to finance it. We will have to pay for this thing—or at least go in debt for it—before it blows us to pieces and burns us to cinders.

Reports indicate that the hydrogen bomb, if and when it is made, will operate as the sun does. Some scientists believe that the sun, by a process of fusion, converts hydrogen atoms into helium, releasing tremendous quantities of power in the process. In the hydrogen bomb, an attempt will be made to reproduce this process on the earth, under controlled conditions.

Chemistry, the science most resourceful in amazing surprises, tells us (again according to the papers) that each gram of hydrogen converted into helium releases 25 million kilowatt hours of energy. This incredible amount of power is equal to that of 20,000 tons of TNT.

Words of Prophecy

In any time of calamity, some people think it helps to say, "I told you so!" Others take satisfaction in finding predictions for events in the Bible. The prophets, apparently, have foreseen and have warned us:

The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.—II Peter 3: 10.

And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat.—Revelation 16: 8, 9.

The explosion and the heat of the atomic bomb are described there, and perhaps also of the hydrogen bomb. Both operate in the realm of atomic physics. We could not imagine anything worse than the atom bomb.

Then science invented bacteriological warfare and the hydrogen bomb. What next?

In view of our experience with the atom bomb, is it any use for us to produce the hydrogen bomb?

The enemy had his people in our organization. A scientist sold atomic secrets. A woman stole plans and delivered them. Newspapers printed everything they could. And high officers even shipped some of the material to the enemy. Is it any surprise that the enemy has now made his own atom bomb? And is this experience to be repeated with the hydrogen bomb?

A new weapon is an advantage for only a very short time, until the enemy gets it. Then both sides have to make defenses against it. In this case, there seems to be no adequate defense. From the hydrogen bomb there may be no escape.

The Wrong Track

Many people of Christian faith have a strong conviction that we are on the wrong track, that we are making a great and tragic mistake. We have failed to make peace. We are failing in our preparations for war.

Bombs and weapons have not given us security, nor are they likely to do so. The only way we can be safe in this world is to be friends to others and make them our friends through the gospel of Christ. Militarism has always failed and always will fail.

There is a better way—the Christian way. Christ admonished his disciples that it was better to have an understanding with an opponent than to get into greater trouble with him (Matthew 5: 25, Goodspeed version). The enemy will not quit trying to destroy us until we quit trying to destroy him. If God is to save us, let us give his way a fair trial.

Valued Member of Sanitarium Board Dies

Roger T. Sermon, mayor of Independence, Missouri, for the past twenty-six years, died of a heart attack on the evening of January 23. He also had served as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital for twenty years. When it was decided that the hospital should be made a joint church and community objective, the by-laws of the board were amended to include both the mayor and the eastern judge of the county court as ex officio members. During his period of service, Mayor Sermon attended board meetings consistently, often at a sacrifice of his time. His influence was particularly welcomed during the war when a grant in aid from the federal government for construction purposes at the hospital was procured. The undersigned and members of the hospital board attended the mayor's funeral which was held January 26 at the Memorial Building in Independence.

Accommodations at General Conference April 2-9 Inclusive

The General Conference Housing Committee requests that all visitors to Independence during Conference who can make private arrangements for rooms do so as early as possible. This will assist the Housing Committee and will avoid much correspondence. Those who desire the Housing Committee to make arrangements for rooms should mail their letters to the Housing Committee, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following details are required:

1. Name of each person in party.
2. Number rooms required.
3. Day of arrival.

4. Length of stay in Independence.
5. If alone, whether willing to share a room.
6. Whether a delegate to the Conference.

As a word of caution, may we suggest that persons arriving for Conference without reservations for sleeping accommodations will find it difficult to secure rooms in or near Independence.

Lincoln

I shared ministry with Apostle Daniel T. Williams on my next assignment, which was at a conference of the Southern Nebraska District in Lincoln on Sunday, October 30.

Learning that Brother and Sister Benjamin M. Anderson of Omaha would drive to Lincoln on the morning of the thirtieth, I stopped at Omaha on Saturday and was the overnight guest at the home of my sister and her good husband. The trip was uneventful, Brother Ben carefully "herding" their Studebaker over the intervening miles. They have a daughter at Lincoln, Sister Norman Prucha, and were scheduled to visit for two or three days with her, the son-in-law, and their two lovely children.

Brother Williams addressed the church school at 9:45, and I spoke at 11:00 o'clock on the Restoration. District President Clarence Williams, a cousin of Apostle Williams, was in charge of the conference.

At two o'clock I again spoke, this time on the Book of Mormon. Brother Williams occupied in the evening.

It was midnight when Brother Williams and I boarded a Burlington train for Kansas City, arriving early Monday morning. We enjoyed our joint labors and trust we helped our brethren.

Missouri State Historical Society

For many years President Frederick M. Smith was one of the trustees of the State Historical Society. After his death, quite to my surprise, I was selected to serve in the same capacity. I had attended the state meeting in the fall of 1948. The 1949 meeting was held on November 4 at the University Library in Columbia, Missouri. General Edward M. Stayton, Mr. William Southern, Judge Henry A. Bundschu, and myself, all of Independence, were in attendance. I drove down with Sister Smith, and we both enjoyed the meeting very much, especially the banquet at which Doctor Jordan of the University of Minnesota, and Doctor Lord, director of the Wisconsin State Historical Society, spoke. An oil portrait of Thomas Jefferson, presumably painted by the renowned George Calab Bingham, was presented to the Society.

We reached home by early evening. My next engagement was in Utah.

Provo

Last summer two young men visited my office and introduced themselves. They were James Everett and Richard Nies, both of Provo, Utah, and both students in Brigham Young University there. The former is also pastor of the branch there.

Some time later I received an invitation to visit them on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of Provo Branch. I accepted, and as a result had a fine experience in the "valley of the mountains."

I left home on Wednesday, November 9, arriving at Provo early on the twelfth. I was met by the two brethren named. James lives with his widowed mother, and Richard and his wife Elizabeth occupy the parsonage or "church home" close to the Provo chapel.

After breakfast at the Nies home, I was driven around the city and had a close-up of the Brigham Young Campus. Then, finding we had time, we drove to Salt Lake City where we met a number of our members, also calling to pay our respects to President George Albert Smith and his counselor, President Donald O. McKay.

We also took occasion to visit the famous tabernacle and listen to an organ recital by Doctor Asper.

One reason for arriving on Friday was that our brethren had applied successfully for the use of the Provo Tabernacle (Mormon). This is a historic building, having been in existence for a long time. The pulpit is at the top row of several rows of seats or long benches (upholstered) which are occupied on ordinary occasions by the priesthood. The meeting had been well advertised, and a group of our singers added their contribution of gospel hymns. They were located higher up and back of the speaker. It was estimated that about six hundred fifty were present. Counting our members as being possibly a hundred, I spoke to about five hundred fifty other persons, probably all Mormons.

We appreciated the opportunity to hold this meeting and while we entertain sharp differences of opinion as to certain doctrines and practices, I deemed it appropriate to consider matters on which we all might well agree. So after an introduction by Paster Everett and a humble prayer

Out of Zion

From a sermon preached at the Campus, Independence, Missouri, on August 28, 1949.

By APOSTLE MAURICE DRAPER

"... out of Zion shall go forth the law. . . ."—Isaiah 2:3

IN 1923 a very important meeting was held at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago. Attending this meeting were nine of the world's most successful financiers. Those present were:

- The president of the largest independent steel company
- The president of the largest utility company
- The president of the largest gas company
- The greatest wheat speculator
- The president of the New York Stock Exchange
- A member of the President's cabinet
- The greatest "bear" in Wall Street
- Head of the world's greatest monopoly
- President of the Bank of International Settlements

Certainly we must admit that here were gathered a group of the world's most successful men—at least men who had found the secret of "making money." Twenty-five years later, let's see where these men were:

The president of the largest independent steel company—Charles Schwab—died bankrupt and lived on borrowed money for five years before his death.

The president of the greatest utility company—Samuel Insull—died a fugitive from justice and penniless in a foreign land.

The president of the largest gas company—Howard Hopson—had gone insane.

The greatest wheat speculator—Arthur Cotton—died abroad insolvent.

The president of the New York Stock Exchange—Richard Whitney—was recently released from Sing Sing Penitentiary.

The member of the President's Cabinet—Albert Fall—was pardoned from prison so he could die at home.

The greatest "bear" in Wall Street—Jesse Livermore—died a suicide.

The head of the greatest monopoly—Ivor Krueger—died a suicide.

The president of the Bank of International Settlements—Leon Fraser—died a suicide.

All these men learned well the art of making money, but not one of them learned how to live.

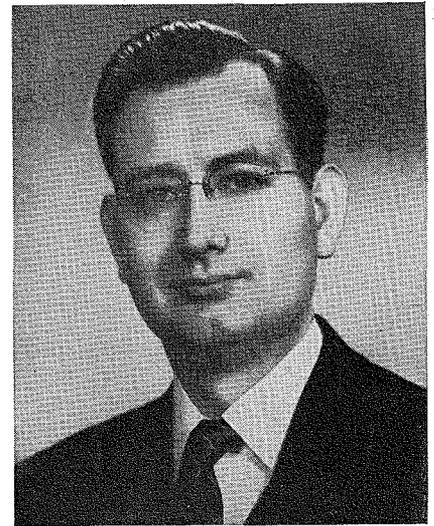

(Copied with permission of the Detroit Board of Commerce, Detroit, Michigan.)

THESE MEN STAND as representatives of multitudes who have not yet learned how to live. Among them are people of good intentions whose charitable works are more than offset by the wastes of conflict and confusion in their lives because they have not learned the basic issues of living. Men do not know these issues because they do not know themselves. And they can know themselves only in the measure that they know God! For man is made in the image of this eternal being.

It is difficult to define Deity. Words fail us. Demonstrations are partial and limited. God gave the best descriptions of himself, both in human language and by demonstration. He said to Moses, "I Am." Also, "I Am That I Am."¹ Is this a play on words? Far from it! This is the most profound description of Deity ever given in a mortal tongue.

God is being. There is no existence apart from him. Every lesser being exists in him. "In him we live, and move, and have our being."² He is cause and sustainer of everything. He may contemplate every order of being, every self-conscious entity, and consider them as orders and ranks within his own being. "I Am."

Moreover, there is no cause for existence outside God. He is his own reason for existing. He depends on no external cause. His very essence is existence; therefore he is eternal. Since he exists for himself, depends upon no external cause, and contains reason and end and purpose within his own being, he says, "I Am that I Am." What better definition of Deity is there? Infinite, eternal, all-encompassing intelligence and personality—this is God—existing for himself and containing all things.

IN THE IMAGE of this Eternal Being man is created. "God creates, not that there may be witnesses who shall render him his due glory, but beings who shall rejoice in it as he rejoices in it himself and who, participating in his being, participate at the same time in his beatitude. It is not therefore for himself, but for us, that God seeks his glory, it is not to gain it, for he possesses it already, nor to increase it, for already it is perfect, but to communicate it to us."³ God desires some analogues of himself, capable of sharing the glory and joy of his nature. Being totally unselfish, he desires an infinite number of such beings. "Worlds without number" he creates, and "as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come."⁴ "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."⁵

Man is made for divine fellowship. God's nature, so far as we can understand it, determines that man is fundamentally godlike. No man understands humanity and its ills until he first understands this. Then he sees that any behavior which denies this basic intention of Deity damns him. The attitude out of which this behavior stems is "sin." Sinful men prefer themselves and their selfish wants to the very nature and purpose of their existence, which is fellowship with the Almighty. The only remedy for "sin" is divine communion. Only in this does man become aware of his own true nature. Only as man understands God, being in his presence, does he come to understand himself.

This underlies every principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every doctrine is a principle of fellowship with the Creator. Every ordinance is a form of communicative worship. The functions of the priesthood are designed for leadership in divine fellowship. The ordained man is to lead his people into the presence of God. The principles of stewardship and the Zion program are all designed to reveal and confirm in human personality the powers of heaven and the personality of God.

God is a social being. The attributes of godliness exist between the members of the godhead, not merely in a single person. God is love. But is the expression of love possible unless there shall be a lover and a beloved? And if one person be both, to the exclusion of all others, he is an atrocity of selfishness? For a single God-person to love himself with an infinite love is repulsive even to the human heart. But God is the "three-in-one."⁶ This is a mystery which few men, if any at all, can understand. Nevertheless, though the Trinity is itself a mystery, this concept of God revealed by Jesus explains more and enhances to a greater degree all the rest of the gospel message than any other concept. God is love.⁷ Yes, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, three persons, love each other! God is kind. The Father is kind to the Son, and they are both kind to the Holy Spirit, who is in turn kind to them. These are the mutual attributes of the persons within the eternal godhead. Subsisting as they do between persons, they are compatible with the total unselfishness which is also a divine attribute.

NOW LET US CONSIDER ZION in terms of the social nature of God. Jesus is the human incarnation of God in the personal sense. He reveals the nature of Deity as an individual—the kind of individual who can participate in the fellowship of the godhead. But this revelation achieves consummation only as the fellowship itself is revealed. For this purpose Jesus taught, preached, and lived in terms of the kingdom of God on earth. "Thy kingdom come" is not only a part of the Lord's prayer; it is the heart of Christian ministry. "Seek first the kingdom of God" is not merely a commandment; it is the motivation in the heart of God for fellowship with his creatures.

As Jesus is the personal revelation of God in human terms, so the Zion-city of the kingdom of God is the social revelation of God in human terms. The kingdom of God without the ministry of Jesus is an unattainable dream! But the ministry of Jesus without the kingdom is a tragic, purposeless, defeated struggle! No individual can reveal the Godhead—not even Jesus. He is the personal incarnation. But there must be a social incarnation. Zion reveals the social Deity! Just as the attributes of godliness exist between the members of the Godhead, so must these attributes exist between the members of the Zion community. If the world needs the divine revelation of the God-man, Jesus, certainly it needs also the divine revelation of the Godhead-society, Zion. It is like God to send his Son, and like the Son to come, so that men may have an understandable revelation of divine personality as a pattern for personal response to life. It is also like God to make a revelation such as is Zion.

THERE IS NO PERSONAL SALVATION nor any personal Savior in the popular sense. Jesus does not save individuals. Even if an individual is lifted out of his generation as the only person worthy of salvation in his time, his salvation results from the development of the attributes of Divinity in his relations with his fellows, ungodly though they may be, and it consists of fellowship with the social Deity and others like himself. "It takes at least two people and God to live the gospel of Jesus Christ."⁸ Between them there may be developed the fellowship which originally exists in the godhead. This is the kingdom of God. Salvation is an experience of communion and fellowship. Without Zion there is no salvation in the truest sense.

As an instrument of salvation, Zion must participate in the Messianic spirit. It must prophesy the world as it ought to be. It must be a social Messiah. Out of the life of Jesus flows the prophetic spirit that reveals men as they ought to be, and which helps them to attain that goal. "Out of Zion" must go forth a testimony of social fellowship, a spirit of social regeneration which will reveal industrial and civic processes, economic and social affairs as they ought to be, and help men achieve this condition. Out of Zion must go forth the example of moral soundness—of economic equity—of social peace—of civic righteousness by which the world may be judged. How can God judge among the nations except there shall be a standard of judgment? Zion is that standard! Jesus is our personal standard—judgment is his. Zion is our social standard—judgment is hers.

This is not to be merely a verbal testimony. For men to understand godliness, the word had to become flesh. This is the testimony of a way of life—a powerful social movement with divine authority which will lead men to beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks.⁹

THE MESSIANIC SPIRIT is one of sacrificial ministry. Jesus did not come to the world merely for his own sake. He did not suffer and

This is the fourth section of the proposed Rules of Order explained in the "Herald" of January 23.—Editor

IV. RULES OF REPRESENTATION

EX OFFICIO MEMBERS OF GENERAL CONFERENCE. All members of the Melchisedec priesthood are ex officio members of General Conference and are entitled to voice and vote in General Conference when present.

DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE. Organized districts are authorized to appoint, at their conference next preceding the sitting of General Conference, delegates to General Conference who shall be entitled to represent said districts. Delegates are members of the General Conference to which they are appointed and are entitled to voice and vote at its sessions.

THE CHOICE OF DELEGATES. The choice and appointment of delegates to General Conference shall be made by a majority of those present and voting at a regular session of the district conference, or, if a special conference, at a session of which due notice shall have been given as to time and place. At any conferences, regular or special, it is desirable that a statement of any important business affecting the district and likely to be presented shall be included in the call for the Conference, so that these matters may be properly discussed, and any desired instructions may be given to the delegates selected.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR ELIGIBILITY. The only qualification for eligibility as delegate from district to General Conference shall be membership and good standing in the church.

BASIC OF REPRESENTATION. Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every one hundred members of said district, and one vote in Conference for each delegate to which the district is entitled.

The enrollment upon which representation at General Conference shall be determined in various stakes and districts and for branches in unorganized territory, shall be the total membership thereof as indicated by the monthly balance in the office of the Department of Statistics, based upon reports obtained up to the close of the month preceding the conference at which the delegates are elected.

The Credentials Committee shall certify delegates to General Conference, up to the proper number to which the district is entitled, in the order in which delegates are registered with the Credentials Committee by the district officers.

RULES AND RESTRICTIONS OF DELEGATE VOTING. The delegates present at Conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district for which they are delegates.

In case of a divergence of views among the members of any delegation (the full delegation not being present) the delegation shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district, but this vote shall be divided in the same proportion as the members of the delegation are divided.

No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same Conference, more than twenty delegate votes, and in case of division to cast a majority and minority vote.

REPRESENTATION OF BRANCHES NOT IN DISTRICTS. Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district shall be entitled to at least one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as other delegates. When the membership of such a branch exceeds 100, that branch shall be entitled to one delegate for each 100 members.

RULES FOR CHOOSING BRANCH DELEGATES. The rules governing the choice of delegates representing districts shall apply in the selection of delegates representing branches in unorganized areas, save only that the selection of these branch delegates shall be made in regular branch business meeting or in special business meetings of which due notice shall have been given as to time and place.

CERTIFICATION OF DELEGATES. Delegates shall be entitled to act as such as hereinbefore provided upon registering with the Credentials Committee, who shall have been supplied with a certified list of delegates, bearing the signatures of the district president and district secretary; or, if they represent branches in unorganized territory, upon registering with the credentials committee who shall have been supplied with a certified list of delegates bearing the signatures of the branch president and secretary.

ALTERNATE DELEGATES. The selection of alternate delegates by stakes, districts, or by branches in unorganized areas is disallowed by General Conference action.

INSTRUCTING DELEGATES: NUMBER OF VOTES TO BE CAST BY; TIE VOTES, ETC. In all cases of grave importance, affecting the polity and faith of the Church, districts and branches in unorganized areas may instruct delegates to cast a majority and minority vote. But in no case shall the number of the votes cast by any delegates so instructed exceed the number to which the district appointing shall be entitled, as hereinbefore provided.

In case of a tie in districts, or in branches in unorganized areas, on questions presented to them, certified to said delegates, the votes of said districts or branches in General Conference shall be cast in equal numbers by the delegates.

ORGANIZATION AND MEMBERSHIP OF DELEGATE DISTRICT CONFERENCES. Districts may organize their sessions of conference in harmony with the above rules, by providing for delegate conferences, in which the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every members (the number to be fixed by the district) in each branch. Districts may constitute priests, teachers, and deacons as members of their conferences, as well as the elders, if they choose.

Has Christianity Failed?

By LUCIEN HOLLAND

Based on a sermon given at Indianapolis, Indiana.

And when he [Barnabas] had found him [Saul] he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.—Acts 11:26.

ACCORDING TO WEBSTER; Christianity is the precepts and doctrine taught by Christ. This Christ is the originator and the founder of Christianity, and you and I have taken on the name of Christians as followers of him. Now I should like to present two questions: "Has Christianity failed?" and "Has Christianity been tried?"

Occasionally we still see a man or woman in uniform. This is a reminder that we have just emerged from a world conflict, leaving untold agonies, demoralizing peoples and governments, and destroying the ethics of civilization along with the social, moral, and political environment of literally the whole continent which was the birthplace and cradle of Christianity. Some thirty years ago a similar situation existed. I wonder if in another quarter century history will repeat itself and bring about another conflict, leaving even more chaos than now confronts mankind. Such a thing is possible; according to many students of political philosophy it is inevitable. It is a fact that since the Civil War, peace has not been universal. Somewhere in the world since 1861 there has been conflict. Such a world is sick, very sick. Any person who feels a sense of moral responsibility—a desire concerning the destiny of man—becomes disturbed. He looks for answers, and in the course of his attempts to analyze these problems, he considers the One who said, "I am the way." But if Jesus is the way of life, if he has all the answers, how do we account for the fact that the entire Christian part of the nations of the world were involved in the last war? How do we reconcile the present cold war in Europe and the disturbing events throughout the world with the biblical history which has been handed down to us that we might live the way of Christ? How can we justify the love of political power, wealth, and pleasure in preference to the love of brotherhood as taught by Christ in his every act during his earthly ministry?

This is no attempt to claim that our civilization has not advanced since the pre-Christian Era. Technically, there's no comparison. Even in the social realm there's been some advancement, but can anyone say he detects either in the moral structure or the spirit of modern civilization the qualities that can save us? Can he find anywhere in the world the conditions and the powers and events which are commensurate with the promises of Jesus? Can he point to them and say "There Christianity is working effectively enough to save the world"? It is true that there are some examples of this quality to be found in the annals of history? Almost everyone, I think, knows the story of Damon and Pythias, wherein Damon offered up his life for his friend who had been imprisoned and condemned to death. Greater love hath no man than he give up his life for another. A recent example is the attempt to save the life of Kathy Fiscus. Men braved death in an effort to save another without thought of self. But these are just isolated examples. We can't use them as a united effort to exemplify Christian ideas.

Christmas and Easter are the two events nearly all so-called Christians recognize by attending church. Can this be called Christianity at work? Can we be Christians on one or two occasions and serve mammon the rest of the year?

Let's ask ourselves the question the guardian angel put to the followers of Christ when they came to the tomb on the morning after he was resurrected. "What came ye here to find" this morning? If our attendance is born of wanting to find the way of life as taught by Jesus, then we are indeed Christians, but if we come through custom or curiosity or pride, then indeed we are facing a time of accounting. We seem to be faced with the acceptance of one of two alternatives. Christianity has certainly failed thus far, or Christianity has not been tried. Has Christianity failed, broken down, and proved impotent to cope with the problems of modern man and modern civilization? We might be inclined to say "yes" if we didn't stop to study the situation. A student of mathematics may manipulate the principles in such a way as to get a result which is wrong. This does not mean that mathematical principles have failed. It merely means the student has failed to apply the laws of mathematics accurately. If Christianity seems to have failed, perhaps it's because we have neglected to study or have wrongly applied the elementary principles.

Many people are disinterested. Their attitude is, "Oh, we have studied the fundamentals in church school, and we've heard them preached all our lives. We want to discuss something more advanced." That's the same mistake the student of mathematics often makes. Would it not be better for these people to ask, "Are we experiencing the fundamentals? What are the first principles?"

John the Baptist, in announcing the mission of Christ, had only one theme, and he harped on it constantly. "He shall baptize you with fire and the Holy Ghost." Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John the Beloved were all so impressed by this statement that you will find it recorded in each of the four Gospels. Jesus emphasized it in his Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5: 4) "And they shall be visited with fire and the Holy Ghost." It was the first thing he taught when he appeared to the Nephites on this continent. He provided water baptism and authorized certain men to perform the ordinance. Then he taught them about the Holy Ghost. Added to these is the modern revelation, "He that receiveth my gospel receiveth me, and he that receiveth not my gospel receiveth not me. And this is my gospel: repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism by fire and the Holy Ghost."—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 2.

Receiving the baptism of fire means experiencing, not just being able to talk about it or recite doctrine. Adam in the beginning was baptized by water, and the Spirit of God descended on him, then a voice out of heaven said, "Thou art baptized with fire and the Holy Ghost." This is the record of the Father and the Son. It has been basic in all dispensations; it still is in force and always will be.

Have we failed in some simple elementary principle? Let us guard against the tendency to answer too hastily. It is in just such fundamental situations that errors are made because of assumptions, jumping to conclusions, haste, and unwillingness to stop and consider critically something that seems very obvious. What did Jesus mean by fire? Often people say, "I think Jesus meant . . ." But wait—opinion is not conclusive. A better answer would be, "I think . . . because I have experienced

. . . ." On numerous occasions throughout the Scriptures fire was used as a testimony of God's power. The Lord appeared to Moses in a burning bush. Nebuchadnezzar put three men in a burning furnace, but when he looked in, there were four figures walking around, apparently unharmed by the fire. At the day of Pentecost, tongues of fire rested on all the disciples. There is a record of Nephi's and Lehi's being encircled by fire while in the Lamanite prison so that their enemies couldn't enter. Whether or not these experiences were with fire as you and I know it is problematical. Certainly it seemed like fire to the participants. However, they found that the flames did not harm them. These were wonderful experiences and, according to the Bible, the matter of kingdom-building followed them. Most of us have not as yet had such experiences. If these are what Jesus described in his baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, then—to use a slang expression: "We've missed the boat."

IF ALL THIS HOLDS true, then Christianity has not failed, because it has not been tried in our time. It has not been put into the test of experience. What can we do about it? Faith, repentance, and humility must be re-examined from a new viewpoint. They must be experienced. We may have sung about or prayed for or preached of or discussed all the fundamentals there are—but have we experienced them? If we only heard about a thing—its size or beauty—its interest to us is only relative because we haven't had any physical or spiritual experiences with it. We might look at water and say it's cold because it looks cold, but the swimmer who is actually in the water knows it is cold. We must have actual experiences to know that we know. Jesus said that those who believe on his word shall be baptized by fire and the Holy Ghost. His word must not be subject to temporizing or jumping at conclusions. We must find out what Jesus means by repentance, not what our friends or ministers think he means. We must find out by belief, and we must experience that belief, that faith, that repentance. Christianity has not failed. Jesus' way of life is just as potent today as ever, and it always will be. The baptism of fire, when experienced by all Saints in his church, will overcome the world where strife and greed and compromise now dominate. Unless the people who profess to be Christians receive and experience this baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, we soon may see our boys in uniform again—a stinging reminder of the impotence of man who temporizes with Christ and abrogates his stewardship for worldly abundance. If such a conflict should come, it could well be the end of civilization as we now know it.

Jesus said, "I am the way." If we have faith, repent, and experience these things as well as think about them, Christianity will not fail. Through adherence to elementary fundamentals and first principles in finding the answers to the problems of life, we shall be able not only to think and talk but also to experience the conditions of the way of life, and the kingdom of God which, up to now, has been only a figure of speech will be a reality.

Make Me Believe - By RUBY TINKHAM

PART THREE

MIKE SAT on the back steps and let the warm spring sunshine soak through his light shirt. Inside the house he could hear Mary rattling pans and running water, and he inhaled deeply the rich aroma of chocolate cake that floated out tantalizingly on each soft breeze. There was nothing like it—Saturday afternoon was the best day in the whole week. Now if it just weren't for Sunday morning.

He got up lazily, stuck his hands in his pockets and ambled around the house. Mary's irises were doing pretty well and the other flowers were coming up, too. He stopped and grinned. Flowers didn't really have a chance with two husky boys busy growing up. Bet Roy Rogers never knew how many times Trigger had hunted Indians around the Ferrel house.

Mike paused and looked the yard over. Jack had been cutting the corners again on his bicycle, and that big bare space over there beneath the maple was where Donny's trapeze went up every spring.

Now take Herb's yard next door. It always looked like an advertisement for a landscape architect. There was old Herb now, out there digging again. Mike crossed the grass leisurely and stopped beside the gray haired man down on his knees gently loosening the dirt around some peonies.

"Hi, Herb, see you're at it again."

"Hello, Mike. Yes, I want these peonies and those irises over there to bloom in time for Decoration Day."

Mike leaned against the house and watched the breeze nod the heads of a bed of fat yellow jonquils. "Say, Herb, those jonquils are the biggest I've ever seen. What did you feed them?"

Herb straightened up with a grimace and took out a blue handkerchief and wiped his lined face. There was no answering cheerfulness in his voice, "I tried to hold them back this year, Mike, so Carrie could have some for the church for Easter. Now they're blooming their heads off."

Mike watched the bent figure work in silence for a few minutes and then spoke kindly. "Sure is nice the way you keep the church supplied with flowers, Herb. Mary's always talking about how beautiful they look. Ever see them inside?"

Herb grunted and dug fiercely. "I don't go to church, Mike, you know that. Haven't gone since Letty was killed right here in front of the house by that crazy driver five years ago."

Mike paused sympathetically and then spoke quietly, "You think that was God's fault?"

The thin man stopped abruptly and answered vehemently, "Sure, I know it was. He could have saved her if he'd wanted to. Letty was only five. She didn't know to watch out for drunken fools driving on two wheels."

Mike looked over at the bicycle against the side of his own house, and his heart swelled with pity. "I think I know how you feel, Herb. Must be hard for Carrie too, especially with other people's kids all around her."

"Carrie keeps going to church, says it helps her. She keeps praying for me too, but it won't do no good because I ain't never going back. She's got some idea now about adopting one of them war orphans. Says old Doc Brown thinks it would be just the thing for us to do. Well, I ain't doing it. Letty's gone, and I ain't raising nobody else's kid if I can't have my own."

Herb moved angrily to the other side of the walk and Mike followed speaking quietly, "It might help Carrie a lot. A woman gets awful lonely without kids around."

"Carrie don't get no lonelier than me. She can stand it if I can."

Mike whirled around and started back across the yard; then he stopped determinedly. "I think maybe you're right at that, Herb. It would be a shame to have a kid in here running over the grass and maybe stepping on the flowers and breaking off the shrubs. The house wouldn't be so quiet and peaceful either. The doors would probably get slammed, and there'd be someone yelling 'Dad, why don't you fix this for me?' And every time you'd sit down to the table, he'd be noisy and always asking you questions as if you were God himself. I guess you're right, man, it would be a lot of trouble and expense to take in some poor little kid that God hated so much he took away his parents." Mike turned his back and crossed the yard in big manly strides. He could feel Herb's astonished gaze boring into his back, but he kept on going until he reached his own kitchen door.

MARY WAS SPOONING huge mounds of white icing on the chocolate cake when Mike stepped in the door. He sat down across the table from her and waited patiently for her to notice him. She smiled and handed him the pan and spoon while she put the finishing touches on with a knife.

Mike paused between mouthfuls and said remorsefully, "You know, Mary, I think I've just stuck my nose into something that doesn't really concern me. But I couldn't help it. Everytime I see Carrie making over somebody else's kids I feel bad. And when Herb said she wanted to take this war orphan, and he wouldn't let her, I guess I lost my head."

Mary stopped still and there was concern in her fine blue eyes. "Oh, Mike, you didn't. They're really such fine people, and Carrie has had such hopes. I wouldn't want to spoil things for her, Mike, that's all she's talked about this past month. I think Dr. Brown is helping her. He's been over there several times lately. What did you say?"

Mike squirmed uneasily and then grinned like a small boy caught-stealing cookies. "Well, I didn't say anything until Herb said he wasn't going to take in anybody else's kid when he couldn't have his own. Do you know he blames God because Letty got run over?"

"Yes, I know. It's too bad but—what did you say?"

"Well, after he said he wouldn't have another kid around, I told him maybe he was right, that it would mean a lot of noise, and his yard would get torn up, and someone would probably call him Dad, and then I walked off."

"Oh, Mike, you really had me scared for a minute. I know how much this means to Carrie. I only hope what you said sinks in and makes him think a little bit."

Mike walked over to the sink with the pan. When he spoke he was serious. "Tell me something, dear, if Donny had died two years ago when he had pneumonia, would you have blamed God and refused to go to church anymore?"

She walked over beside him and slipped her hand under his arm. "You know I wouldn't have, darling. Of course it never even occurred to me that Donny might die, but still I wouldn't have blamed God."

Mike stood there silently as if in deep thought. "But still you did think God had something to do with his getting well, didn't you?"

"Yes, I know he did. I feel that God is infinitely wise; there are times when we make mistakes, but he loves us and forgives us and gives us new opportunities. Then there are other times when we make mistakes that in his wisdom he can see it is better if we suffer for them because out of suffering will come new understanding and growth. Maybe I'm not putting this very well, but you know as well as I do that the man who ran over Letty has never touched a drop of liquor since, even though the child ran right in front of him, and he couldn't have stopped drunk or sober. You also know that Herb never grew a thing in his life until after Letty was gone, and now look at that yard. Another thing—you remember how particular Carrie used to be about the house and Letty's clothes? Well now she wants to throw her house open to any child and love it too."

Mike looked at Mary in surprise. "You mean you think this whole thing was a good idea? That Letty's death was really the best thing?"

There was sorrow in Mary's voice when she answered: "No, Mike, I never see death in that light, but this was an unfortunate man-made accident. Yet, if we look at it closely enough, we can see that God has been busy picking up the pieces and trying lovingly to build something worth-while out of them. Remember, God didn't seem to think that death was too bad for his only son."

She sighed. "We both know that any child who comes into that home now will find better parents and a richer companionship than Letty might have had."

MIKE SQUEEZED HER HAND and walked back over to the table where the cake sat in all its glory. He grinned at her and then picked up the knife. "I think you could bribe me into going to church tomorrow if you let me cut my own piece of cake now."

She smiled and took the knife out of his big hand. "Nothing doing. I'll give you boys all an even break at supper time. Besides I'm not bribing you to go to church any more. Dr. Brown says to just let you alone, and you'll come yourself."

Mike backed off in mock consternation. "And just when did you and Dr. Brown start cooking up conspiracies against me?"

Mary grinned impishly and countered with, "Wouldn't you like to know, Mr. Mastermind?" And then seriously, "No, Mike, I just happened to run into him on the street the other day, and he asked about you. He's really interested in you I can tell."

"I suppose he suggested that you get me started back to church again, huh?"

"No, I did the suggesting, and he said to let you alone. He said you were doing all right, that you were solving your problems in your own way, and that it would be better not to force or persuade you into doing anything you weren't ready to do. Then he said a strange thing, He said, 'I only hope the church is as ready for Mike when he comes as Mike is for the church.'"

Mike walked to the door and stopped.

"You know the more I get to know that old guy the better I like him."

Mary laughed with sheer happiness. "That's funny, dear. He said the same thing about you."

Then Mike's voice came back troubled. "What would you say, dear, if I told you I heard that Dr. Brown used to be quite a shady character?"

Mary paused and answered slowly, "I don't know. I guess I'd just have to respect him all the more for the fine person he is today."

Her husband pushed the question a little farther. "Sure, but you know how most people are. They say, 'I won't go to church as long as that old hypocrite is running things!' How about that?"

Mary's tone took on a stronger note. "Sure I know. Lots of people like to excuse their own little sins by comparing them with someone else's, but after all, the church exists primarily for the sinners. The truly righteous people are too humble to make comparisons, and the self-righteous—well, aren't they in pretty grave danger themselves?" Her voice dropped to pleading. "I wish you would speak to Jack. He thinks he's getting too big to go to church any more. He wants to stay at home on Sunday as you do."

Mike opened the door and tossed the words back over his shoulder. "O.K., honey, I'll have a little talk with him this evening. I guess a fellow does feel pretty big when he's going on ten." He swung off the porch and started toward Chuck's garage.

MIKE GRINNED as he turned the corner. Chuck had both feet clamped firmly on a tire and was wrestling with a tool that kept slipping sideways out of his hand.

"Hi-ya, having tire trouble?"

Chuck gave him a lopsided grin and pushed his cap back with a greasy hand. "Hi, I think I've got a slow leak in this thing. Sometimes it stays up for a week, and then maybe it'll go flat in a couple of hours. Could be the valve."

Chuck kicked a small wooden box over to Mike and he sat down. He knew better than to offer any help. Chuck pried happily, and Mike watched him contentedly.

"You know, Mike, if there's one thing I don't like it's tire trouble, especially on Sundays. The way we tear around here on Sunday mornings getting ready for church—" he shook his head and laughed good-naturedly. "It's like a mad house."

"Do you mind going to church, Chuck?"

"Oh, it's not so bad. Vi likes to go and take the kids. She can't drive, so I sorta tag along too."

He had the tire off now and was holding the tube in his hands, scanning it closely. Every so often he would wet his finger, rub a little place, and shake his head.

"What I really meant, Chuck, was do you get anything out of going?"

"Well, it's like this. When I was overseas, I got into some pretty tough places, and I kinda promised God that if I got back home, I'd make it right with him. And I ain't figuring on breaking my promise."

Chuck plunged the tube into a bucket of water and held it there, watching for air bubbles. Mike was quiet so long that he asked without turning, "Something bothering you, Mike?"

Mike sighed and answered slowly, "I don't know. I can't seem to figure some things out. I used to go to church all the time, and then suddenly I just couldn't see any sense in it, so I quit."

Chuck lifted his head, "Now it's bothering you, huh?"

"Well, yes, it does. Mary wants me to go. The boys need to go, and somehow or other I feel like it is the right thing to do, but still—"

"You believe in God, don't you?"

Mike smiled at Chuck's consternation and nodded his head affirmatively, "Of course, I believe in God. But there are so many churches and creeds, and everyone thinks he's right—"

Chuck laid the tube down and wiped his hands on his grimy coveralls. He reached in his pocket and pulled out the inevitable package of gum and, offering some to Mike, took two sticks for himself.

"Mike, you know I ain't very clever with words. Now, if it was an automobile that's different—Vi says all my brains are in my hands—but anyway I figure it like this: Churches are a lot like cars. There's lots of different kinds and models, but they all got to have the same thing to make 'em go—a motor. Keep that tuned up, and you don't need to worry none."

There was the sound of running feet and Jack burst around the corner covered with mud from head to foot and dangling a frog by one leg. "Look, Dad, I got the biggest one of all. Isn't he a beauty? Can I keep him, Dad, can I?"

Mike took the frog and laid his arm across the boy's shoulders. "Boy, he's a dandy. Makes me hungry just to look at him."

"Oh, gee, Dad, we can't eat him; he's a pet. Can't I keep him, please?"

"No, we won't eat him, Jack, but you'll have to talk to your mother about keeping him. Women are funny about frogs and worms and things. Here, you take him. Right now I think you and I had better mix it up with a little soap and water. See you around, Chuck."

THEY LEFT THE GARAGE and strolled back across the yard. "Gee I sure hope Mom lets me keep him. He's the biggest one in the whole troupe. Do you think she'll care really?"

Mike steered the boy gently toward the basement and pointed to the wash basin and soap. "Here, I'll fix some water in this tub for him until we see what your mother says. You see how much of that mud you can get off before supper."

Jack plunged into the hot water and started scrubbing his arms. Mike sat down on the basement steps and waited.

"Jack, your mother says you don't want to go to Sunday school any more; is that right?"

"Oh, gee, Dad, I'm getting too big for church. Church is for old people and kids like Donny. I want to stay home with you."

"Listen, Jack, when I was your age, I went to church every Sunday. Your grandma was pretty strict about things. Besides it makes your mother happy."

Jack hung his head and dried his hands slowly. "But, gee, most of the fellows just go when they want to, not every Sunday. And, gee whiz, Dad, you don't go at all."

Mike stared thoughtfully at the floor and spoke carefully. "You know how it is, Jack, to get lost out in the woods? A fellow has to get his compass out and find out which way he's going. Well, in a way, I got lost, Jack, and I had to stop and find out which way I was going. I think I have it pretty well figured out now, and I'll be going back one of these days. You go along with your mother 'cause it makes her feel good to have a man with her when she goes to church."

"Sure, Dad, I know what you mean. Mom's swell. She's always saying it gives her new strength when she goes to church. But it's kinda funny too, she still can't hit a ball across the yard."

Mike grinned and grabbed the boy around the shoulders. He wanted to shout, but he didn't dare. "Listen, Jack, there are two kinds of strength. There's the kind that sends a ball out into center field and carries you around three bases, and then there's another kind that keeps you from arguing with the referee or cheating about the score. See what I mean?"

Jack nodded his head solemnly. His father slapped him on the back and continued humorously, "And just don't ever get it into your head that your mother hasn't got plenty of the second kind. She can lick us any day in the week without even half trying."

And then he added under his breath. "In fact I think she has licked me without even trying at all!" (The End.)

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Our ministers describe and name the various parts of the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream until they come to the toes. A few have named the ten kingdoms represented by the toes, but others ignore them. Can an authoritative answer be given as to which kingdoms the toes represent?

Iowa

ANSWER:

We do not think so. Many learned men have attempted it and made lists which are not in agreement. Many kings arose and fell both before and after the fall of the imperial government of the Western Roman Empire in A.D. 476, and it would be difficult to select any ten of them to correspond with certainty with the ten toes of the image or the ten horns of the beast. Furthermore, the eastern or Grecian half of the empire did not fall with the west, but continued until 1452 when it fell to the Turks, this half representing one of the legs, feet, and toes of the image. If we insist upon a detailed exactness in the parallel between the image and the empire, five of the kingdoms should be placed with the East; but all ten are usually given as belonging to the West. Daniel, in both chapters II and VII merely mentions the toes and horns without mentioning ten kingdoms, so we wonder if students of prophecy have not given more prominence to the ten kingdom idea than the prophet intended. It is a mooted question which has not been determined after centuries of discussion.

CHARLES FRY.

QUESTION:

Is it the belief of the church that these kingdoms were in existence in 1830 at the time of the organization of the church, and that the prophecy, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," had reference to these particular kings or kingdoms?

Iowa

W.M.N.

ANSWER:

Officially the church has made no pronouncement upon this point, which involves no doctrine, policy, or rule of action, but is a matter of interpretation of history and prophecy. It is not requisite that the church should pronounce upon such matters, neither would it be wise, since every man is left to work out his own conclusions as he may. It is our personal opinion that the expression, "In the days of these kings," has reference to the period covered by the symbol of the image, or that otherwise known as "the gentile times," extending from Nebuchadnezzar to the "fall of Babylon." At any time down to the end of this period, we shall be "in the days of these kings."

The setting of the statement concerning the setting up of the kingdom of God (Daniel 2:44) suggests the time to be at or about the end of the period. This view is supported by many other prophets since the kingdom was established to supplant the falling kingdom of "Babylon," these two great events involving the transfer of dominion from the old to the new, the reverse of what transpired when the last remnant of the Kingdom of Israel-Judah came to its end in 586 B.C., at which time Nebuchadnezzar came to the Babylonian throne and began the gentile dominion. The symbolic image clearly indicated the ultimate end of that rule. Micah (4:8) wrote that the dominion and the kingdom would return to "the daughter of Jerusalem" in the last days, of which many other prophets have spoken. The day is yet to come, though we believe it is near.

We see nothing in Daniel's prophecy requiring the synchronous existence of all the kingdoms of the Babylonian succession at the time of the fall. Babylon today is more than civil government; it includes the world-wide political, civil, social, economic, and religious systems and customs which all the nations of Babylon have built up and left as the accumulated heritage of mankind, and which is so saturated with evil as to be unacceptable to the kingdom of God. The good therein, of which there is much, will be preserved. The change is to bring in the day of peace and righteousness, of justice and equity, of which the Scriptures abundantly speak (See Doctrine and Covenants 1:3; 34:3; 84:1; 108:4; Revelation 17:3-5).

Our Church and State Ideal

By BESSIE TAYLOR

WE LATTER DAY SAINTS are the possessors of two great heritages, our church and our American Government. In both are the seeds of freedom. It is well for us to pause occasionally and consider the significance of our democracy and our theocracy. The histories of both are closely interwoven. To trace the origin of the major concepts, principles, doctrines, and laws which characterize the two, reveals the growth of democratic and Zionite ideals.

At the time our constitution was written, democracy was not held in high repute. The privileged and propertied classes were deeply suspicious of the doctrine, for they felt that in a system of "majority rule" the people might easily use their power to attack the privilege of the wealthy. Walt Whitman poetically pictured America as the "Great Democratic Experiment" of how much liberty society would bear. The Revolutionary War was in every sense revolutionary. The Declaration of Independence proclaimed the great basic political beliefs which were revolutionary at the time:

Man is endowed by his Creator with certain inalienable rights, among them there are life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men.

To further guarantee these rights, our forefathers, before leaving that Philadelphia conference in 1787, added the "Bill of Rights" which placed personal liberties beyond the reach of popular majority and denied the federal government the power to interfere with certain personal rights and freedoms. Provision also was made for amendments. No, Democracy did not come easy to America. New leaders and new movements have continually arisen to remind us again and again of our American tradition.

Democracy cannot be understood if it is pictured solely as a political or economic system. Underlying all else, democracy must be a moral code, or it will not be effective. Herbert Agar in Pursuit of Happiness says there are three parts to the democratic ideal. First and most important is the spiritual affirmation. This includes the beliefs concerning the rights of man and his relationship with others and to the government. Second is the economic order which demands that we work, that we have business, enterprise, and industry, homes, cash, and land. It is built on the precept of peace and industry. Third, and least important, is the political machinery necessary to put it into effect. This third part is the only one which fully exists.

LIBERTY means more than the traditional freedom of license. Liberty is not absolute, nor is it in a vacuum; it is hedged about by the competing rights of others and the demand of social welfare. Ex-president Herbert Hoover in Challenge to Liberty says, Liberty is far more than the independence of a nation. It is not a catalog of political rights. It is a thing of the spirit . . . to be free to worship, to think, to hold opinion, to speak without fears . . . free to challenge wrong and oppression with surety of justice. Liberty conceives that the mind and spirit of men can be free only if the individual is free to choose his own calling, to develop his talents, to win and keep a home sacred from intrusion, to rear his children in security. He must be free to earn, to spend, to save, to accumulate property that may give protection in old age and to loved ones.

This concept of freedom is caught up in the words of the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 98:10 which concludes, "It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose. . . ."

Christianity and liberty are inseparable. Alma tells us (page 469) that Amalickiah sought to destroy the church of God and the foundation of liberty which God had granted. The government of the Nephites was established by the voice of the people. Doctrine and Covenants 36:7 says, "And in the Garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency." Maintaining this agency has been an age-long struggle.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY is inseparably connected with the theory of progress. Individuals must be free to advance new ideas and try new methods if a higher type of civilization is to be attained. We approach the truth only by a slow, laborious process in which competition between opposing views gradually eliminates error. Liberty for the individual is necessary if we are to realize the Zionite ideal of personal responsibility and the democratic ideal of self-government. Men cannot be morally accountable for their conduct or politically self-governing unless they possess the degree of freedom from external control which individual liberty connotes. Furthermore, individuals must have the privilege to enjoy the benefits of society and be able to contribute to its progress. The opportunity for employment, access to education, housing, health, recreation, and transportation must be provided with disregard for race, color, creed, or origin. Without this freedom, the individual is deprived of the chance to develop his potentialities. The group also suffers through the loss of contributions which might have been made by persons excluded from the main channels of social, economical, and religious activities.

Freedom in a civilized society is always founded on law enforced by the government. Freedom in the absence of law is anarchy. President Truman at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington in 1947, said,

We must make the Federal Government a friendly, vigilant defender of the rights and equalities of all Americans . . . our national government must show the way . . . We can not be content with a Civil Liberties Program which emphasizes only the need of protection against the possibility of tyranny by the government . . . We must keep moving forward, with new concepts of civil rights to safeguard our heritage. The extension of civil rights today means not protection of the people against the government, but protection of the people by the government.

Rousseau, 187 years ago in The Social Contract said, "Might and force are war, not law . . . subjugation of the vanquished is continual war . . . force made the first slave, and has kept all others as such."

This great heritage of freedom and equality for all men awaits complete realization. The basic moral principle of both our government and church is that all men are created equal as well as free. Stemming from this principle is the obligation to build institutions that will guarantee equality of opportunity to all men. Without this equality, freedom becomes an illusion. The only aristocracy consistent with a free way of life is an aristocracy of talent and achievement, the quality of personal character and social contribution. This concept of equality has no resemblance to the totalitarian idea of human uniformity or regimentation. We hate the arrogance which makes one man say he will respect another man as his equal only if he is of his race, his religion, his party, or his social level. Under our government and our church law, men are morally equal and free to be different.

AMERICA has been populated by immigrants from many nations. All have shaped with their hands, minds, and hearts the character of our national life. The cultural diversity of the United States has flavored the whole political, economical, and social development of the nation. Our science, art, music, philosophy, and industry have been formed and enriched by peoples throughout the world. The dominant majority in the United States are Caucasian, English speaking, Protestant, and of comparatively distant Anglo-Saxon or European background. Groups whose color makes them more easily identified are set apart from the dominant majority. Negroes are by far the largest minority group. Today one in every ten Americans is a Negro. The oldest minority groups are the Indians, Mexicans, and Hispanos. Of lesser numbers are the Chinese and Japanese. Our population also includes the inhabitants of areas administered by the United States: Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, The Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific, and the Panama Canal Zone. More than 2,500,000 people live in these dependent areas. They include Caucasians, Negroes, Asian, Eskimos, Indians, Polynesians, and Micronesians.

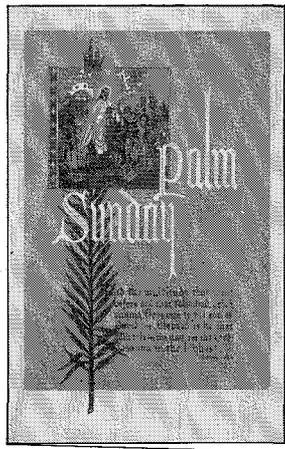

In no nation have people come as close to the ideal of freedom and equality as in our own. Our American heritage of freedom and equality has given us prestige among the nations, but there is still plenty room for improvement. Our history reveals that the gulf is wide between ideals and practice. We have had human slavery, religious persecution, mob violence, and ugly prejudices.

The three chief threats to our liberty today may be reduced to propaganda, class-struggle, and vigilante movements. As citizens and church members, our responsibilities are to be alert and guard this sacred heritage. To be alert involves study. It also involves the establishment of right relationships. We cannot live without affecting others, and others cannot live without affecting us. It behooves every one of us to acquaint ourselves with all good books, languages, tongues, and people. Just as the national program of civil rights moves forward on three fronts: the legislative, executive, and judicial, so shall the church move forward on its three fronts: the social, economic, and spiritual. With this great responsibility is great opportunity. For moral, economic, and international reasons we must not fail. May God help us!

Need for Free Church Literature

While on vacation recently I had several "lay-overs" between busses. At the various depots I looked for free reading material and found five denominations represented—but not our church.

It would be a good thing for Latter Day Saints to take their Heralds and other church publications to their local depots and libraries. Another way to get church materials before the reading public is to ask often for specific publications at the library. Most libraries have a special fund for the purchasing of much-requested books.

From an Isolated Member

It has been a long time since we were able to worship with others of our faith. Those who have this opportunity for fellowship should be deeply grateful for it. However, the Lord is still with us, even though we are isolated. Three years ago my companion had a brain hemorrhage and for a while was like one dead. I prayed fervently that he would not be taken, and his life was spared. He had also lost most of the vision in his left eye, and that too was restored. Although he cannot exert himself, he has been given strength to work about our humble home. Last week he suffered a fainting spell which left him with a severe pain at the base of his brain. I ask the Saints to pray for him that he may be relieved.

We invite the members of Phoenix Branch and any others who may be in this vicinity to visit us or write to us.

Old "Heralds" Wanted

I should like to obtain four copies of Heralds printed in 1938. They are for February 19, May 7, 21 and 28. These contain parts of a story I would like a friend to read; I have all except these four issues.

We live about twenty-five miles from Vinita, Oklahoma, where a small group of Saints hold meetings. We hunger for fellowship with other members and would appreciate hearing from our friends in Independence, especially Emma Bullard and Sister Dobson.

Recovery After an Accident

As I read the testimonies in the Herald, I am reminded of the blessings I have received.

In December, 1930, I was in an automobile accident. The doctor said I had a fractured skull and didn't think I would recover. However, I was taken to the hospital where X rays revealed that many of the bones in my face had been broken, including eight fractures in the roof of my mouth. By night my face had swollen until it was hard and black. The next day my mother came to the hospital and asked me if she could rub some consecrated oil on my face. I nodded consent, for I was unable to open my mouth to speak. As she prayerfully applied the oil, comfort came, and I was able to sleep. When I awoke much of the blood had drained from my face and I began to improve. Eight days later I was taken to surgery for necessary "repairs" and again received a blessing.

This is just one of many times God has come to my rescue. I work as a car inspector in the railroad yards, and often it seems the Lord has pushed me out of the way of moving cars.

Please pray for my mother, Mrs. Nora Johnson of Blue Rapids, Kansas, that she may regain her health and continue to serve the church. She is women's leader and senior class teacher in the church school. I also ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may continue to help promote God's work.

From a Herald Reader in Ontario

I was happy to see the picture of pioneers of the Restoration in the December 5 Herald. We have a large, framed picture like this in our church but did not know the names of all the persons in it until this Herald arrived. I also enjoyed reading the article by C. Ed Miller on "The Land Shadowing With Wings," and E. Y. Hunker's experience in Stockholm. Another joy of the month past was being able to hear The Messiah on the evening of December 18.

The church papers have always been in our home. I wish all the Saints could realize the spiritual strength and encouragement these can bring.

May we all face the new year with the confidence born of inner peace.

Thanks From England

We wish to express through the Herald our sincere gratitude to the Saints in Portland, Oregon; Cincinnati, Ohio; and Sarnia, Ontario, for sending us food parcels for our church school party. The look of delight on the faces of the children (and adults) upon seeing such a wonderful spread would have repaid these good American Saints for their gift. This is to say thanks from all the Warrington members.

Sunday Afternoon Prayer Service at Stone Church

I wonder how many Saints in Independence have attended one of the Sunday afternoon prayer services at Stone Church. I learned to love these meetings in my youth, and I still find the calm spirit of the Master present at them. Recently, when the elder in charge asked if there were any for whom prayers should be offered, I was surprised to hear requests for people in other states and even foreign countries. Then I began thinking of all the sick and afflicted not represented there who would appreciate the prayers of the Saints. I offered a silent prayer for them, wishing that all in the church could know of their suffering and pray for them too. Many of us, even here in the Center Place, underestimate the power of united prayer. Surely it helps to know that others are petitioning the Almighty at the same time we are.

Once when the burden that was mine to carry seemed too heavy to bear, I heard a voice say, "Go to your sister in the faith and tell her your sorrow." "But who, Lord," I asked, "would want to hear my troubles?" Twice again the voice spoke telling me to go, so I did. When I felt this good woman's motherly arms about me, I found strength to carry on. Prayer for others can bring this same kind of comfort.

Wherever people meet together in prayer, God meets with them; but those who go only to listen, will go away unfed. I like to walk into a fellowship meeting with prayer in my heart, refraining from talking to others until after the service. The Holy Spirit does not often come where there is noise and confusion. If we could go thinking of and praying for others, here and abroad, much good could be accomplished. We should also remember the missionaries as well as the sick and burdened ones.

We could make the Sunday afternoon prayer service an altar at which prayers for people everywhere are offered up. It would help those who are not able to worship in Zion to know that they are in our hearts and can count on us to supplicate the throne of grace for them. Distance or color or race should mean nothing. Others could pray at the same time, even though they are not present. Surely if we would do this the sick would be healed, the blind made to see, the lame to walk, and the weak ones strengthened.

Appreciates "The Messiah"

I wish to express my sincere appreciation to the Herald for publicity given The Messiah and to Franklyn Weddle for conducting such a splendid performance. I plan to hear it each year as long as I am able to. Reception this Christmas was very good. We listened to Station KMOX, St. Louis, Missouri.

Letter of Testimony

As a small child I lived with my parents and brother in Dinamita, Durango, Mexico. There were few people from the States there, and the only church in town was Catholic. My mother, a Reorganized Latter Day Saint, taught the gospel to my brother and me, reading to us every day from the Scripture and telling us about the church. One day I decided to climb to the top of a small mountain near our house and there pray to know more about God and his will for me. As I neared the summit, I felt a great sense of peace and joy. Looking up at the heavens and then at the valley below, I realized how great God is and how good he had been to me. My spiritual eyes were opened. Perhaps that is the trouble with many today—they are spiritually blind.

Later we moved from Mexico to Carthage, Missouri, where I attended high school. I was lonesome in this new environment until I asked God to help me overcome my timidity. One night as I was studying alone, I felt a presence in the room with me. I was frightened until I noticed a heavenly personage before me. His eyes and hair were dark, his robe a brilliant white, and his face extremely bright. As I stared unbelievably at him he said, "Be not afraid, for I am with you." Then he disappeared. This experience has always been a great comfort to me.

My brother and I were baptized at the Stone Church in Independence on Easter Sunday, 1942. It was a day I shall never forget. God has been very good to me, and I pray that I, with others, may "win one" for him.

I shall be happy to correspond with other members.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—A project was held on New Year's Eve to stimulate participation in the financial law. Bishop Monte Lasater and his wife were honored guests. Bishop Lasater assisted those needing help with their inventories during the afternoon. At this time those so desiring turned in their annual statements to the branch solicitor, Harold Johnson, and to Bishop Lasater.

After a ham dinner served by the women's department a group consisting of Gayle Scafe, tuba; George Clark and Elliott Gilberts, saxophones; John Gilberts, sousaphone; and Dick Gilberts, clarinet, presented a group of band numbers. Later the Gilberts family with George Clark, clarinet, presented a group of string selections with the bass viol, violin, clarinet, and piano. The Jensen family from Marysville (parents and eight children) brought their musical instruments and played and sang several sacred numbers. Several other young people assisted the Jensen family with instrumental music. Dickie Foster sang a solo, accompanied by Tommy Foster on the piano; and Merle Foster, accompanied by Fern Gage, sang "Some Day," by Byron Doty. A stewardship skit, "Systematics," was presented by Luella Foster, Helen Gilberts, and Ted Wolfgram.

Pastor Elliott Gilberts lead the group in a period of worship, using a group of colored slides depicting the life of Christ. Bishop Lasater gave an inspiring and brotherly talk and as the hour approached midnight, the new year found the Everett Saints re-dedicating their lives to active service in the months to come.—Reported by ELLIOTT GILBERTS.

WIARTON, ONTARIO.—The following leaders were chosen for the year 1949-50: Garnet Farrow, pastor; Aubrey Mason, Zion's League supervisor; Sister Eula Farrow, women's department leader; John Bradley, church school director; Rosalind Reid, junior church school director.

Six young men were recently ordained: Aubrey Mason, Ivan Thompson, John Bradley to priests; Leighton Robinson to teacher; Moroni Johnston and Ronald Yager to deacon.

The Owen Sound church was used for a baptismal service September 4. Mrs. Lillian Robinson, Harry Dance, and Carol Farrow were baptized by Elder Garnet Farrow. As a result, two family circles were completed.

An adult study group was organized last spring which meets each Tuesday in the different members' homes. The branch adopted the book steward plan, and Helen Farrow is in charge of the display.

Brother and Sister Ivan Thompson's active support is missed since they moved to Lion's Head.

The branch was saddened recently by the passing of Elder A. W. Davis, retired railroader, who with Sister Davis had resided here for the past twelve years.

Brother and Sister James Prescott celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Christmas Day. In honor of the occasion, they were presented with a table lamp from the branch. Elder and Mrs. D. B. Perkins celebrated their fifty-fourth wedding anniversary on Christmas also. On the same day Brother and Sister Williams Rydall celebrated their forty-sixth wedding anniversary. All are lifelong members of the branch.

The children's department presented a Christmas concert on December 20.

Young people's early morning prayer services are held almost every month. There is an average attendance of fourteen.

The Zion's League sponsored an outdoor skating party on December 30. Zion's Leaguers are beginning to study "Each One Win One" in their Friday evening meetings.

A group of twelve people compose a choir which rehearses regularly under the leadership of Sister Mabel Farrow.

The women's department meets in the different homes one afternoon a month. They are studying "New Vistas." Two quilts have been made and sold.

The public library has given a subscription to the Saints' Herald by the Zion's League as a missionary effort.

Missionary J. H. Yager was home for the Christmas season and preached a challenging New Year's Day sermon stressing the importance of living uprightly each moment of each day in the coming year.—Reported by JEAN BRADLEY.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Elders Linden E. Wheeler, H. E. Davenport, R. F. Moore, and H. H. Davenport officiated at the ordination service held November 6. C. A. Green was ordained to the office of elder; Warren A. Wilson and Roy E. Clark to the office of priest; Frank Tey to the office of teacher.

Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lawson; George Robert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Clark, and Richard Franklin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roger F. Moore were blessed recently by Elders Linden E. Wheeler, R. F. Moore, Z. Z. Renfroe, and C. A. Green.

The installation of the women's department officers was very impressive. The rostrum was decorated with baskets of ferns and white gladioli and white candles in candelabra. Mrs. I. D. Wages is the leader. The department has sponsored a chili supper and traveling basket for the branch budget. A Christmas party for the branch on December 20 started with an exchange of gifts and singing of Christmas carols, after which H. E. Williams showed colored pictures of the life of Christ. The women meet twice a month, one day meeting and one evening meeting.

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe held a two-week series beginning December 4. The attendance was very good with six to twelve nonmembers at most of the services. Since Elder Renfroe's services, the branch is having prayer meetings on Sunday evenings. This is being well supported by the Saints, and the meetings are of a high spiritual order.

Evelyn Logan, the new Zion's League leader, is assisted by Thelma Mottashed. The Leaguers held a Halloween party at which they displayed and took orders for Christmas cards. A Christmas party was held December 22.

The church directory with a city map enclosed designating the locations of each member has been placed in the hands of each family. This fine contribution was through the efforts of Glenn W. Fordham.

A tableau of the birth of Christ, visit of the Wise Men, and adoration of the shepherds was given by the children's department December 18 in the main auditorium. After the program the children returned to their classrooms for gifts and treats.

Glenn W. Fordham is conducting a junior church once a month.

On the evening of December 18 the choir presented the cantata, "King of Kings," by Dr. J. B. Herbert, with Merle Hollenberger directing and Alma Estes at the organ.

Students home for the holidays were Billie Broliu from Graceland and Donald Everett from Texas University.

Pastor Linden C. Wheeler gave the sermon on Christmas Day in which he reviewed the mission and life of Christ.—Reported by CHATTIE EVERETT.

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICHIGAN.—The Lock City Branch held its annual business meeting in September, and the following officers were elected: Harry Van Dusen, pastor; William Frost, church school director; Sister Elizabeth Brown, women's department leader; Sister Buelah McKiddie, secretary; Hazel Van Dusen, young people's leader; John Tomlinson, treasurer and deacon in charge and Orval King, book steward and reporter.

Apostle Percy Farrow was in charge of the Workers Conference and Priesthood Institute that was held December 9, 10, and 11. He was assisted by Bishop Joseph Baldwin and District President Rex Stowe. Considering the time of year and the spread-out area of the district (about four hundred miles), the meeting was well attended.

The conference began on December 9 with a sermon by Brother Farrow, and a get-together after the sermon. A banquet was held in the church basement on December 11. A vote of thanks was given the women's department for the meal they served. Classwork was conducted December 10 and 11.

On January 29 an all-day meeting will be held in Soo, Ontario. Delegates for General Conference will be chosen at this meeting.—Reported by ORVAL KING.

HAGERMAN, IDAHO.—A new oak floor has been laid through the entire church building. The walls have also received a new coat of paint. Just thirty-three years ago, work was started on the building of the church.

On December 18 the women's choir under the direction of Sister Velma Carlson presented the Christmas Cantata, "The Holy City." On December 23 the Christmas program was given. The junior department presented songs, poems, and readings. The young adult group gave the play, "The Empty Room."

The young men of the priesthood are holding cottage meetings, and have been using the slides, "I will build my church." The new Book of Mormon slides have been received and will be used soon. Those doing this work are Elders Lysle Gilmore and Gomer Condit, Priest Floyd Winegar and Deacon Dana Gilmore. A new slide projector has been purchased for the work.—Reported by REVERIA CONDIT.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—On January 8, three young men gave challenging talks. Neil Nixon spoke on "What I Expect of My Church"; Don Treiber, "What My Church Expects of Me"; Clyde Zonker, Jr., "Workers Together With God."

Linda Sue, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Maloney; Kathy Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Weaver; and Arthur, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Smith were blessed by Elders Robert Rodgers, John Treiber, Williard Allen, and Otto Melcher.

On January 15, Lawrence Phillips, district youth leader, of Clarksburg met with the Wellsburg young people and reorganized the Zion's League. Officers elected were Roy Givens, president; Don Treiber, vice-president; Delores Staffelins, secretary, and Neil Nixon, treasurer.—Reported by LEONA HANES.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS.—At a special service held October 16 in honor of Mrs. Emma Mobley, leader of the women's department for twenty years, a plaque was dedicated to her memory. The plaque and her picture were placed in the dining hall that she helped secure and prepare for church use.

Pastor A. J. Jones was in charge of this special service. The plaque was unveiled by Sisters Minni and Evelyn Biolastoski of Weir.

Dedicatory prayer was by John Blackmore, district president. Lee Quick was the guest speaker. Others taking part in the program were John Jones, B. F. Kyser of Miami, Sister Deane Edwards of Lawton, Oklahoma, Aaron C. Butler of Weir, and Sister T. W. Bath.

Lee Mobley, husband of Sister Mobley, and her children and grandchildren were present at the service.

The department of women at Weir was hostess to the women in central part of Spring River District on December 16 at their annual Christmas party. Sister T. W. Bath, district women's leader, was in charge. The theme of the meeting was "Joy in the Birth of Christ." John Blackmore spoke on "Birth and Nature of Christ in the Zion Home." After the lunch was served in the aid rooms, there was an exchange of white elephant gifts. Eighty women attended, and an offering of forty-three dollars was made by them. A business meeting was held in the afternoon at the church. As a project the women decided to buy chairs for the dining hall at reunion grounds.

Three classes were held. Sister Bath taught the leaders and officers. Sister Blackmore taught friendly visitors and cradle roll workers. Sister Heller spoke on the subject, "Study Guide." A lecture was given by Sister Deane Edwards from Lawton, Oklahoma, on the subject, "What of My Kingdom."—Reported by A. J. JONES.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI.—On Decision Day, November 20, Mrs. Vera Baldwin and her two children, Leroy and Sandra, were baptized. Dale Crown, pastor, officiated. District President Donald Kyser was the guest speaker both morning and evening. At the 8 o'clock service, Dana Floyd Crown, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Crown, was blessed. Elders C. C. Martin and Donald Kyser officiated.

Elder Donald Kyser was also the guest speaker at the special services on the evenings of November 21 and 22.

A box social sponsored by the men, was held in the basement of the church on November 29. The purpose was to raise money to meet the district quota. About $25.00 over our quota was raised.

"The First Christmas" was presented on December 23, directed by Marie Hawley. An adult choir assisted under the direction of Ruth Main LeNeve.

The men have been working on the church building, hoping soon to lay a new floor and also to redecorate the interior of the church.

In their effort to assist in increasing the building fund, the women's department is serving the Y.M.C.A. board once a month.

The two small sons of Mr. and Mrs. Junior Beckford of Riverside, California, were blessed on the morning of January 1. Elders Dale Crown and C. C. Martin officiated.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO.—Miss Chaturi Vaswani, a native of Pakistan spoke to the combined women's groups of the branch on January 9. She spoke on the subject, "The Hindu Religion and Beliefs." Miss Vaswani belongs to a reformed Hindu sect called the Sikhs. The talk was followed by a most enlightening discussion period, during which time the speaker answered questions posed by the group. At the close of the discussion, Miss Vaswani was thanked by one of the group and presented with three tracts outlining our beliefs.—Reported by B. M. FARROW.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—For the past three months, the Cincinnati Mission has invited other Southern Ohio Branches to visit and present evening services. Brother and Sister Russel Rockwell with a number of the young people from Middletown, Ohio, were the guests for November. They gave a playlet, followed by musical numbers by the Zion's League choir and a sermonette by Brother Rockwell, pastor of the Middletown Branch.

The morning of December 18 the Cincinnati choir presented their first Christmas cantata directed by Sister Wave Condon. Miss Loraine Smith and Miss Merlene Condon were the soloists. Miss Florine Cline rendered special music on the marimba.

For the evening services of December 18, out-of-town guests were the women's chorus of Dayton, Ohio, Branch who presented an evening of special Christmas music. The Dayton women's chorus is directed by Miss Lois Rockwell, Southern Ohio District music director.

On January 9 six people were baptized: Ralph and Louise McCaulou, and son Charles, Evelyn Smith, Juel and Joyce Skinner. Confirmation service was held January 15 followed by a worship service, "Witnessing for Christ," presented by the Columbus, Ohio, young people, in charge of Priest Jerry Glandon.

Recent guest speakers in Cincinnati have been Brother W. H. Hooten of Springfield, Ohio, and Brother W. G. Burwell of Louisville, Kentucky. Anyone knowing of members located in or around Cincinnati, please contact the Cincinnati Mission—Reported by JOSEPHINE SMITH.

by Brother Nies, I canvassed the evidences that Joseph Smith was even "more than a prophet."

At the close all who desired to meet me were invited to come forward. Two or three hundred, I think, did come up front. I shook hands with them and engaged in pleasant conversation. As usual among Latter Day Saints, there was some curiosity, I suppose, as to what kind of a person I, the grandson of the Prophet, was. But there were no aspersions on either side, though one Mormon, a lawyer, engaged Brethren Everett and Nies in controversy over some of the issues.

Saturday afternoon there was open house at the church. Both the chapel and the church home have been redecorated; and though the chapel is small, both structures have a creditable appearance. Two children were baptized in the afternoon and confirmed on Sunday.

At the evening service I was allowed to relax and listen to one who has lately come to us, Alfred H. Yale of Ogden, Utah. He is pastor of the small group there. This young man of pleasing personality has been a student of divinity and had experience as a minister of another faith. He has already a remarkable grasp on the spirit and genius of our work. His pulpit manners reflected his previous training. He spoke on matters specifically Latter Day Saint in character under the subject, "The Words and Promises of the Lord."

Two services were held on Sunday, November 13: a prayer service in charge of the mission supervisor, Elder Russell F. Ralston, and District President Ralph Briggs, both of Salt Lake City.

I spoke at 11:00 o'clock, with James Everett in charge, assisted by Elder James Wardle of Salt Lake City, and Brother Ralston.

A rededication service was held in the afternoon. The speakers were Norma Hope and James Everett of Provo; Russell F. Ralston and myself.

After this service I was visited by Mr. Smoot, postmaster at Salt Lake City, and his wife; and by a Mr. and Mrs. Smith. He is a descendant of Hyrum Smith and she a daughter of Doctor Francis W. Brown, who is in charge of the Central States Mission of the Mormon Church.

As in many places, at Provo I found that the wells of faith in our movement have been kept open by a few valiant members who refused to be overborne by a powerful and dominant church organization. Many now will remember them and call them blessed. Space does not permit the inclusion of all their names.

The two children who were baptized at Provo and confirmed on Sunday were Alice Mary Curtis and John David Curtis of Wellington, Utah. Sister Lalone Curtis brought her children to Provo for these services although her husband, Harmon Curtis, had died only a few days before. A younger daughter, Dorothy Jean, was blessed while at Provo.

On Sunday afternoon I went with Elder Ralston and family to Salt Lake City where I stayed until Monday evening, visiting the Saints and also inspecting our properties there and at Ogden. At the latter place we visited Sister Alfred Yale (nee Winholtz) and children.

On invitation Elder Ralston and I again visited President Smith at Mormon Church headquarters; we lunched with Wilford Wood of Woods Cross, Utah, and a small circle of friends, including Doctor Romney, former mission president at Independence, Mr. Murray Stewart, and Doctor Widtsoe, all, of course, members of the dominant church. Our conversation was friendly and animated, all of us carefully avoiding controversial matters.

District President Ralph Briggs, formerly of Spokane and now of Salt Lake City, is a grandson of Silas Briggs, who was a younger brother of Jason W. and Edmund C. Briggs, early members of the Quorum of Twelve of the Reorganization.

On Monday night I left for home, feeling I had helped minister to our members in the valleys of Utah.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

How Can I Teach My Child

To tell the truth?

To keep his promises?

To become a morally wholesome person?

WE ALL AGREE THAT the best way to teach is by doing. If I desire my children to speak the truth and keep their promises, I must of necessity always speak the truth and keep my promises. We can look about and see people on every hand who fail to practice this. There are broken promises, unfaithfulness, falsehoods, fibs, white lies, kidding, and even malicious lying.

The meaning of truth is "Conformity to rules, standard, model, pattern or ideal. A fact as the object of correct belief; reality." Therefore, if I am to know how to teach, I first must know what to teach. I must study the standard, or God's word as found in the Three Standard Books of the church. Why is this so hard to do? We live in a day of many distractions. Attractive magazines come into our homes, and beautiful pictures allure and tempt us. Although I don't find pictures in any of the Three Standard Books, I read them because they contain the ways and means for my salvation. According to my interpretation of the vision of Lehi and Nephi, unless I grasp firmly the rod of iron—the Word of God—I will lose my way to the tree—the love of God. No one insists that I do this. It is voluntary, born of a desire within my own heart. When there is open to us so much hope, joy, and deep satisfaction in obtaining this knowledge, shouldn't we be more diligent in our study?

Many people have had an opportunity to gain a higher education since the war. This is a good thing if their yearning for spiritual enlightenment advances in proportion to their academic accomplishments.

The Book of Mormon says, "To be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God." I am in favor of education—the right kind. The Psalmist warns, "The wisdom of their wise shall perish and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid." I fear that these today who are placing their trust in the wisdom of the wise of this world, will regret their error. I was told to pray that I might keep my thinking straight. Our Three Standard Books are still the best guide in helping solve everyday problems.

Why do you love God? He is truth, and he is always the same. No one can flatter him. He will not tolerate deception or trickery. He makes promises and provides ways whereby we can keep them. Our reward is sure, also our punishments. I love God because he first loved me. Since I must teach, I must interpret God to my children. I will teach them that they must abide by the truth or suffer the consequences. Since we—the mothers—are the first teachers our children have, let us be teachers of the truth, believing and practicing this virtue daily in our lives. This is a serious responsibility, as there are many voices trying to call us away from our first duty.

I would much rather talk about God and his truth, but I cannot ignore the fact that there is a devil, the father of all lies, who is trying to lead the children of God away. A liar is "one who intentionally utters a falsehood." Lying is one of the greatest sins, and liars will not come forth in the first resurrection. The Bible very plainly says, "Thou shalt not lie. He that lieth and will not repent shall be cast out." We must teach our children that it is wrong to lie, to tell fibs, to speak half-truths, to give misleading information, to deceive, to trick, to exaggerate, to make excuses. The Lord did not qualify liars but said, "All liars and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone which is the second death."—Doctrine and Covenants 63:5. One of the best ways to teach my child to tell the truth is to hold before him the promises God has made to those who abide by his word and also teach him the consequences if he fails.

WHAT IS YOUR ATTITUDE toward one who has previously lied to you? Are you willing to depend on him? The story of the boy tending the sheep who cried, "Wolf, wolf," too often offers a good lesson.

Do you always tell the truth? I remember an old-time missionary saying over and over, "You mothers say what you mean and mean what you say." This is very basic in teaching the truth. Could it be the world is in the condition it is because the inhabitants are not truthful? Treaties don't mean much; certainly promises or agreements cannot be depended upon.

Do you have your child tell the man at the door that mama is sick? Do you say your child is twelve when he has passed his thirteenth birthday in order to get him in on half rates? How do you answer your child when he questions you concerning the story of life? I believe an act is either right or wrong. Truth is always right. Morals are being broken down and disregarded. The world is trying to make right out of wrong; watch for half-truths—they are deceptive. Satan is trying to make the alluring things of the world seem so right that without the help of God we cannot decide what is truth and what is not. Our choice many times has to be between the better and the best. The world has much good to offer—we cannot discount that—but without the help of the Lord and the interpretation of his word, we will not be able to judge accurately. Many have tried it alone and have failed. The usual tendency is to let down bars, lower standards, and go the way of the world. The reason we are teaching truth in the first place is that we are striving to reach the goals of eternal life, celestial glory, and of being privileged to reign with the Father and the Son. Parents must learn these truths first because they are the ones who interpret the law to their children. Young mothers say they are too busy to study; older mothers are too weary. But all are admonished to study and teach these truths to the children.

Now behold, there are two thousand of those young men who entered into this covenant, and took their weapons of war to defend their country . . . and they were all young men, and they were exceeding valiant for courage, and also for strength and activity; but behold, this was not all: they were men who were true at all times in whatsoever they were entrusted; they had been taught to keep the commandments of God, and to walk uprightly before him.—Alma 24: 74-77.

The following is a check list for parents:

1. What is your attitude concerning administration for sick? What do you do when your children get sick? What does our church teach concerning divine healing?

2. What is your attitude concerning prayer? Do you believe God is, that he lives today, that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him? Do you pray with your children, teaching them to take their problems to God?

3. What is your attitude toward prayer meeting and church attendance? Is it just for the older people? Is it being outmoded? Do you attend? Do you take your children, or do you feel they must stay home and do their homework, yet allow them to go to movies?

4. What is your attitude toward members of the priesthood? Are they men of God to you, or are you forever harping about their shortcomings rather than praying they will be blessed in their ministry?

5. What is your attitude toward developing talents to give back to the Lord in service to his church? Many develop talents, but the church doesn't receive the benefits.

6. What is your attitude toward your children's associates? Many lives have been spiritually wrecked because of bad associations. Are you just standing by doing nothing about this important phase?

7. What are your ambitions for your children? Analyze them. Every parent has some. Remember each soul who has been placed in your charge is from God, and he expects some returns. This is a parent's greatest stewardship.

8. What is your attitude toward children helping in the home? If they are not taught to assume responsibility along home lines, they can hardly be expected to want to serve God.

9. What is your attitude toward keeping promises? Do your "yeas" mean "yea" and your "nays" mean "nay"? Do you give your children promised rewards and punishments? If not, you are being untrue.

10. What is your attitude toward worldly pleasure? Since you are the first interpreter of Christ to your children, you need constantly to remind yourselves who you are, and whom you serve. How do you feel concerning cardplaying, dancing, smoking, drinking, movies, music, radio programs, fashions in clothing, et cetera?

11. What is your attitude toward quarreling and speaking disrespectfully to other members of the family?

Neither will ye suffer that they transgress the laws of God, and fight and quarrel one with another, and serve the devil, who is the master of sin, or who is the evil spirit which hath been spoken of by our fathers; he being an enemy to all righteousness; but ye will teach them to walk in the ways of truth and soberness; ye will teach them to love one another, and to serve one another.—Mosiah 2: 14, 15.

12. What is your attitude concerning your children's being baptized when eight years old? Some think this is too young, but the Lord says:

Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord, and the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

SOMEONE HAS SAID we are at our best when we are on our knees in prayer. May we live more nearly as we pray. Since the hope of the future of the church lies within our homes may we, with the help of our Heavenly Father, be given the courage and power to always teach the truth, speak the truth, and live the truth in our daily lives that it might be said as in days of old, "We do not doubt our mothers knew."

I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes

By CARL MESLE

AS A YOUNG BOY I used to hike to the “west” hill where in the summer we camped, and in the winter we skied and tobogganed. We enjoyed that great hill and the many other hills around our small city which was in the valley.

One beautiful morning in early spring, while looking from the west hill northward across the wide valley, I was able to see, miles away, the still snow-capped tops of the Adirondack mountains. I yearned to explore them.

In the years that followed, I came to know those beautiful mountains intimately. With my parents I explored them on automobile camping trips. Our Scout camp was located in their foothills, and through Scouting I joined other Scouts in canoeing trips which took us into many out-of-the-way places and gave us opportunity to climb to the top of a number of rugged peaks. I came to love those mountains and the rich experiences they provided.

After college I found my first employment in the profession of my choice in a large, dirty city in a flat section of the country. My job required that I live and work largely in the depressing atmosphere of this city. I often worked day and night for weeks at a time. And so it was that whenever I had an opportunity to break away and return to my home country, I did so. As I approached the hills of home, there would grow upon me a new appreciation of the one hundred twenty-first Psalm, “I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.” In the few days at home I would find the relaxation and strength necessary to prepare me for a new bout with my job.

On the way back I realized I had passed through several areas of hilly country before reaching home. In those hills I found that I had not experienced quite the same thrill I did in my own, and then I realized it was not only the physical hills which stimulated me, but the reminders of those “mountaintop” experiences which the hills of home held for me. It was these which helped give me comfort and balance sufficient to tide me over the valley of depression.

AS I HAVE GONE in later life from one area to another and into and out of the Army and have seen something of how the “other half” lives, I have been awakened to a new appreciation of the value of the spiritual experiences which have been mine in my home and church. Through the influence of my parents and the little branch I attended, and in which I was led to take an active part, I was building foundations that later became the basis for mountaintop experiences in the realm of my spiritual life. Attendance with my parents at district conferences, institutes, and reunions provided rich experiences which helped tie me to the good things of life and tide me over the valleys of temptation when I was away from those influences. Like many another boy, I didn’t always want to go to reunions or conferences, but wise parents made the decision for me and then had the pleasure of watching me pull away only with reluctance when these special occasions ended.

As I look back at those high-light experiences of my youth, I can thank my parents and my church for providing me with them, even against my will. Such experiences didn’t seem so important at the time, as I presumed that every fellow had the same opportunities. Now as I look about me at the tragedies exposed in so many lives, I realize how fortunate

AFTER TWO YEARS of full-time ministry in Independence, I can look back upon them as one of the richest periods of my life—a period spent among talented, able, devoted people, both young and old. Nowhere in the world would I expect to find a richer fellowship with as great a number of people.

At the same time I have known a share of heartbreaking experiences, for I have seen young and old wander from this fellowship to highly dangerous places. We have young men of promise who have become involved in theft, children sleeping in the yard because there isn’t enough room in the house, and young girls becoming mothers without husbands.

If it is true that we are a part of all we have been and done, then in each of these tragic cases there must be something missing. Somehow in the moments of weakness to which we are all subject, these young people lacked a source of help and strength which might have carried them over the tragedies and unhappy experience into which they have fallen. In trying to determine the factors which lead one person to a happy, useful life and another to tragedy, I decided that a review of my own experiences might help.

New Horizons

I was and how few there were who had those same advantages. Nor do I have to look very far into the lives of some of my former associates outside of these experiences, whom I often envied and respected for their particular abilities, to see the abundance of tragedy which has entered their lives because of the lack of real mountaintop experiences that might have carried them over the valleys and bogs in which many of them are now trapped. For everyone who is enjoying a happy, fruitful life, there is another who has fallen into the blind alley of purposeless living. Some have even resorted to suicide.

TODAY AS I MEET literally hundreds of young people of our church, I am constantly reminded of the crying need for the solid foundations that can be created only in a home filled with the spirit of Christian love—homes wherein religious experiences are built into children's lives, and where religion is not something apart from everyday life. As I come to know more and more young people in Independence, I find myself increasingly able to accurately describe their home life and family background before actually seeing their homes or meeting their parents. And as I see large numbers of young people with so many fine potentialities, I recognize the importance of the influence of the home upon the future of the church and of the great need in all sections for adequate ministry to the home by the priesthood.

It is hard to build real mountaintop experiences in the lives of those people whose foundations are weak, but the church does offer excellent resources to provide every qualified young person with mountaintop spiritual experiences.

First there are the regular church activities which often lead to climactic experiences in one's own religious backyard. For example, in one of our weeks of activity celebrating the Restoration Festival, we planned in Independence both city-wide and local activities for our Zion's Leaguers. At the end of this week, one girl looking back said she had found the richest experiences of all the events of that celebration in a prayer meeting with her fellow Leaguers in her own congregation.

There are also many special activities such as district conferences or district youth conferences where young people may find a greater warmth of fellowship in the large numbers of their own areas.

Reunions offer one of the richest opportunities for peak spiritual experiences of any similar activity in the church, with the possible exception of youth camps, which are designed specifically to meet both the physical and spiritual needs of youth. One teen-age girl who went to camp against her own will reported to her parents at the end of the week that she had never known a week to go so fast and she never wanted to miss such experiences as long as she was eligible.

The coming General Conference will also provide an opportunity for many young people to reach a new understanding of the purposes of God for mankind.

Students with a firm foundation usually find life at Graceland College an almost continuous mountaintop experience, while others with flaws in their moral or spiritual foundation may be unmoved.

WE TOO OFTEN FAIL to realize that every good life represents a series of successful battles against periods of depression and temptation. The good and abundant life Christ spoke of does not just happen; it must be earned. The message of Christ gives us the rules of successful and happy living, while the church provides us with the opportunities for building firm foundations and lofty experiences. We can meet the problems and dangerous temptations of life more successfully and have a greater assurance of overcoming them if we have built into our lives the spiritual experiences which will permit us to feel we can "lift up our eyes unto the hills" and find there an ever-present source of strength.

Viewpoint

By Alice Zion Buckley

IT IS OUR GOOD FORTUNE to live near enough to San Francisco to be in that city quite often. Several times a week we drive there for church or to see our friends. As we go over the top of Twin Peaks and look toward the east, we see the whole panorama of the Bay Area. Here and there are hills covered with houses and street curving in a most intriguing pattern. Further east we see the bay as it divides city from city and mountains from sea. Further yet we can, on a clear day, recognize Mount Diablo and its hills. To the west we see the fringes of the ocean, and on an extremely clear day we can see the Farallon Islands some fourteen miles away.

When the fog begins to roll in over the peaks, it comes first in cloudlike layers. From our vantage point, we can see both above and below. Later, as it becomes denser, we are above or below, depending on how high we travel in our car. Returning from the church we may seem to be fogged in by damp, cold clouds only to ride a few blocks and find stars.

Then as the fog really settles for the night, we have to turn on our fog lights and crawl along to keep from colliding with other cars.

One night as we were going to the city, we saw a cloud about a half mile wide and a couple of miles long settled directly over Market Street. Ed, my husband, looked a long time, and so did I. Then we had a rather unusual thought. Throughout the city it was a starlit night except to the Market Street inhabitants. Next morning everyone would speak of the stars, but those who lived on Market Street would talk of the heavy fog. "You know, Alice," said my husband, "it all depends on your point of view. You can stay on Market Street and grope in the fog or move out and have stars in your eyes."

die for his glory. He was not resurrected in the display of that glory for gain. He had his glory before he came to the world.¹⁰ He needed no salvation; he was already God, the Son. The ministry was by the Son, but it was for men. So it is with Zion. It is not for her builders, nor for her own sake that she is built. Zion is not for Latter Day Saints. Any who attempt to build Zion for their own sakes are doomed to failure by their misconception of her noble purpose. Zion is by Latter Day Saints, but for the sin-sick world. Zion is the center of testimonial revelation—the incarnation of that to which we testify. Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."¹¹ It must also be true that he who really sees Zion shall see the social revelation of the godhead—and as Zion grows in power and in the beauty of her perfection, the social God shall be increasingly apparent in her life. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."¹²

RELIGIOUS CENSUS SURVEY

Of the 26,000 people contacted in Independence during the religious census, 7,700 were members of this church. Every RLDS congregation had representatives helping with the survey. About 2,000 members of the church in the Center Place who live outside of Independence were not reached by this survey.

WINTER HOLIDAY

About 160 Zion's Leaguers attended the two sessions of the "Winter Holiday" that was held at Gardner Lake during January. They enjoyed such amusements as volleyball, softball, a new game called Punt and Run, group games, and a tug-of-war. The first session of the Winter Holiday was held for the teen-age Zion's League. The second session was for the older members of Zion's League.

The closing worship service of the second session was held before the large fireplace in the lodge building. This service developed into a spontaneous prayer meeting in which the young people were mindful of Paul Fraccascia, one of their number who is critically ill in a hospital.

General supervision of the Winter Holiday was by Carl Mesle, leader of young people in Zion. Parents, who assisted with the transportation to and from camp, were invited to participate in the activities.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

An elder in Michigan requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of a recent convert who seems to have become disinterested and for his family. He also asks for prayers for one who is in need of both a physical and spiritual blessing.

BIRTHS

A son, Leslie Kent, was born on December 31 to Mr. and Mrs. Niles L. Powers of Denver, Colorado. Mrs. Powers, the former LaDon York, attended Graceland in 1936-37.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Charles Filter of Littleton, Colorado, announce the birth of a son, Douglas Charles, born January 10. Mrs. Filter is the former Jeanne Finch of Des Moines, Iowa.

DEATHS

DOOLEY.—Ernest B., was born September 28, 1876, in Indianapolis, Indiana, and died January 17, 1950, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was married on January 29, 1906, to Hattley A. Luff, daughter of Joseph and Janet Luff; one son was born to them. Mr. Dooley was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on February 25, 1923.

He is survived by his wife; two sons: Roy B. of Independence and Frank (by a former marriage) of Macon, Georgia. Services were held at the Speaks Funeral Home, Elder Charles Edmunds and Hallie Rice officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

VAN EATON.—Guy Franklin, was born August 20, 1878, at Magnolia, Iowa, and died at the home of his mother Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, and sister Claire Van Eaton, in Yakima, Washington, on January 9, 1950, after several months of illness. He held the office of elder and was pastor of the branch in Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, where he had resided for the past thirty-four years. He was also a past member of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Saskatchewan and was very active in civic and community affairs.

He is survived by his mother; his wife Flavel; five sons: Bruce and James of Shellbrook; Howard of Yakima; Wallace of Sedalia, Missouri; and Jack of Los Angeles; three daughters: Antoinette Van Eaton of Yakima; Mrs. Shirley Denton of Shellbrook; and Mrs. Frances Jo Bishop of Biggar, Saskatchewan; three brothers: Gurney of Eatonville, Washington; Harry of Wenatchee, Washington; and Benjamin of Sunnyside, Washington; three sisters: Clair and Mrs. Lorena Nutley of Yakima and Mrs. Rose Clisby of Seattle, Washington; and fifteen grandchildren.  GREETINGS!

There are times in a person's life when the question, "How are you?" is impertinent. One just doesn't feel like telling.

One man, when asked, replied, "Do you really want to know, or shall I give you the usual stuff?" Another said, "I don't feel like discussing that now." The greater said, "Excuse it, please. I withdraw the question."

To millions who use it, "How are you?" is just a greeting. We don't really wish to know. We like to hear the conventional "Fine!" whether it is true or not.

One wise man says, "Greetings!" to his friends. It contains the basic recognition of personality which is the essence of polite life. It asks nothing; it keeps its nose out of your business. It doesn't smother you with good wishes you know can't come true. There is no silly optimism, no Dale Carnegie stuff in it. It means the same thing as the bobbie-soxer's "Hi!" only there is a dash of matinee, grand opera, and Broadway in it. . . . But when another chap sauced it up, "Greetings and felicitations!" his friend clutched his pocket-book, looked for an exit, and fled, muttering.

"Good morning," and "Good evening," are still standard, but "Good day" sounds like a quaint Victorian bark. These have no reference to the weather, as so many mistakenly think. They mean, "A good morning to you," etc. It's all right to wish a person a good day, isn't it?

I favor the return of the religious element to our greetings. "Good bye" is a contraction for the antique form, "God be with ye." The Spanish have "Adios," which means "(Go) with God," as also the French have "Adieu." Consider the generous sincerity of Paul's greeting, "Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." That's good for writing, too long for speech.

The Hawaiians have contributed the beautiful and gracious "Aloha!" which has a charming sound on their lips, but falls flat from Caucasian tongues because we don't have the spirit of Aloha in our hearts. It is a change of heart we need before we can use that one.

"God bless you" is a good farewell for Christians, but you couldn't use it for everybody. Brother John Mervin of Papeete opened his conference address with "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen!" in Tahitian, and Brother Eddie Butterworth says all the Island speakers begin that way. Wouldn't it be good for all preachers to do that?

I am looking for a really good greeting for a Christian to use when meeting a friend. I am willing to depart from the conventions. Does anybody have some good suggestions? I am afraid I have overlooked some that are already there waiting for me. How about, "The peace of God to you"—or just "Peace!"?

 ALUMINUM IS SAFE

Some people have been afraid to cook food in aluminum utensils because of a fear that it would cause some kind of harm. The Department of Agriculture and the United States Public Health Service which have received many inquiries, state that aluminum ware is safe for ordinary cooking, quoting the American Medical Association and British Ministry of Health. Aluminum is present in ordinary drinking water, and in most foods, raw and cooked.

Write a Tract

THE PERFECT TRACT has not yet been written. However, much of lasting good has resulted from an intelligent use of the kind of tracts that people like you and I have written. Yet there is much more to be done; the work must be hastened. Possibly some new types of tracts should be written to reach people who are not attracted to the traditional chapter and verse approach to religious faith.

You could help in this field of service by writing a 350 to 450 word message. Try to capture the "customer viewpoint." Put your heart into winning some real friend rather than trying to convince John Q. Public. What kind of a tract does the housewife need, or the clerk in the store, the farmer, or the factory worker? Try to put yourself in the place of one of these people and say the thing which might catch your interest if you stood where he or she does.

We have in mind to print a four-page tract, three by five inches in size, carrying an illustration or attractive design on the cover page. True, one can't say much in four hundred words about the church. But neither can you get some people to read much about religion until their interest has been thoroughly aroused. These tracts should be interest-getters only. Just stress two or three points and leave a taste for more in the reader's mouth.

Won't you set yourself to this task now—not next week or next month? You will find it excellent discipline in thinking and writing which will mean personal growth to you and may help to win one or even a thousand. Send your contributions to The Editors, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Introducing...

WALTER N. JOHNSON, Independence, Missouri, (page 7) was born in New South Wales, Australia, on May 4, 1905. He was baptized in 1916. He received his elementary education in Australia, and in 1930 came to the United States to attend Graceland College. Here he completed his academic training as well as the first two years of college, then went on to receive his B. A. degree in the University of Chicago School of Business in 1937. While at Graceland he received a gold seal "studentship" in 1934 and a scholarship in 1935.

Brother Johnson received a General Conference appointment in 1938 and served as pastor of Boston Branch for two years. From 1940 to 1944 he was bishop of Kansas City Stake, and the next two years he was assistant to the Presiding Bishopric. Since 1946 he has been counselor to Bishop DeLapp.

WARD A. HOUGAS (page 10) was introduced January 30, 1950.

PHYLLIS ANN CARMICHAEL (Mrs. David B.) Orange, California, (page 13) was born in Los Angeles and has lived in that community most of her life. She was married to Bishop David Carmichael in 1921. They have two sons: Dr. David B. and Douglas W.

Sister Carmichael was graduated from the Glendale Union High School in 1917 (an honor student all four years) and attended Santa Ana College for one year after her marriage. She worked on the Los Angeles Examiner staff for three years before her marriage. She is serving on the governing board of the Santa Ana Community Players, has a life membership in the Santa Ana High School Dramatics Club, and is a Gray Lady in the Red Cross. She is also historian of the Santa Ana Branch and of the Southern California District. Her hobbies are gardening, creative writing, and dramatics.

(PEARL) MABLE WILLIAMS CRAYNE, Los Angeles, California, (page 16) was born in Mt. Ayr, Iowa, and baptized at Lamoni by Joseph Smith. Her husband, Charles E. Crayne, died in 1934. She has three children: Major Bruce A., Lloyd O., and Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Gardner (Betty). Sister Crayne's mother love is shown by the fact that she adopted a four-month-old girl and reared her to maturity. She died in 1929 and left a son, whom Sister Crayne also brought up.

She was graduated from Lamoni high school and took a business course several years later in Los Angeles. She was employed for three years in a Kansas City doctor's office and owned and operated a store in Kansas City, Kansas, for five years. For three years she managed a telephone office and was cashier of the Auto Club of Southern California for more than twenty-three years until her retirement in 1947.

She is a member of the Spanish-American Veterans' Auxiliary. Her hobbies are stamp collecting and flower gardening. Her special interest is writing. She has been a frequent contributor to church publications. Two of her plays have been published.

A NEW PRESS

The "Herald" has its first new press since moving to Independence in 1921. It is a Miller-Simplex, fully automatic, which will carry a twenty by twenty-six inch sheet. It is rated at 4,500 impressions per hour and will do much of the work formerly done by the Miehle automatic which operates at 1,900 impressions per hour, and is fifty per cent faster than the Kelly press which once belonged to the Ensign Publishing Company and is still in use.

PORTRAIT PRESENTATION

At a special public meeting of the Jackson County Historical Society on February 3, President Israel Smith presented a painting of Joseph Smith, founder of the church, to the society. The picture is a copy of a portrait painted about 1843 by an unknown artist. The copy was made by Dr. Harold Bullard, Ness City, Kansas. The painting will hang in the trophy room of the Memorial building in Independence.

The presentation service was held in the lobby of the Memorial building. General E. M. Stayton, president of the society, accepted the painting. Among those present were three grandchildren of Joseph Smith: President Smith, Mrs. Emma Kennedy, and Frederick A. Smith; and a great-granddaughter, Mrs. Georgia Warfield. The invocation and benediction for the service were given by Glaude Smith, pastor of the Stone Church.

BIRTHDAY OF THE PRESIDENT

On February 5 the Stone Church Women's Department held their annual birthday celebration in honor of the president of the church. Mrs. William Worth and other hostesses were in charge of the open house, held at the Women's Center. About 250 guests shared the birthday cake and signed the decorative guest book. This book, with its hammered brass cover, was made by Mrs. Leslie Kohlman. President and Mrs. Smith met many acquaintances at this celebration.

President Smith spent February 2, his birthday, working in his office as usual.

NEWS FROM APOSTLE WILLIAMS

The branch at Blue Rapids, Kansas, sent $1,100 to the Presiding Bishopric to be kept in trust for some major project which the branch and the apostle in charge at a future date may determine.

The new mission at Davenport, Iowa, is making great success. Members have established a building fund and are looking toward the time when they will be able to build a church.

According to a letter received from Pastor C. E. Burnett, seven people have recently been baptized in Sioux City, Iowa.

RICH HILL DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Apostle E. J. Gleazer attended the conference that was held February 5 at Rich Hill, Missouri. So many people attended the 11:00 preaching service that it was impossible to find seats for them. The morning prayer meeting and the afternoon business meeting were also crowded. In addition to the election of delegates, the district voted to contribute $1,000 toward the building of a caretaker's home on the Racine reunion grounds. It was understood that the Spring River District will contribute $2,000 for the same purpose.

MUSIC

Rehearsals are being held every Sunday afternoon for those who will sing Verdi's "Requiem" with the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra on March 7 and 8.

The Brotherhood of Man

International Brotherhood Week, February 19-25

The Divided Human Race

It has been said by many writers in recent years that the human race faces the possibility of destroying itself. Mass suicide is not a new concept, though there is more talk about it than action. We can leave the statement for what it is worth. There is often a little hysteria among those who write and speak. At present, they blame our peril on the atom bomb, first the uranium type, now the new hydrogen type. Among barbaric tribes, when men want to excuse a murder, they naïvely blame the weapon rather than the man. So we do today.

Presuming ourselves to be of adult mentality, let us try to see the truth in this matter. The real danger is not in the atom bomb, but in the hate, fear, and death in our minds and hearts. We fear a criminal carrying a gun, but honest people do not fear a policeman carrying the same kind of a gun. It is the criminal intent, not the weapon that is the origin of danger. When people have hate and murder in their minds they will use anything for a weapon. It does not help to remove the weapon. The trouble can be cured only by removing the hate. We should try to work on the right thing.

Ours is a divided world. It is split asunder with hatreds and fears arising out of differences in race, nationality, religion, and commercial and industrial rivalry. What we need now is something to bridge the great chasms and abysses between the divisions in our world society. We need Wendell Willkie's "One World."

Our United Inheritance

The unity of all mankind has been simply and beautifully stated in the Scriptures:

God that made the world and all things therein . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.—Acts 17: 24, 26.

Paul was addressing an audience at Athens, one of the most cultured and cosmopolitan cities of the ancient world. Though it was Greek, it was also a great international meeting place. It was there, in the most enlightened spot on the earth at that time, that he chose to de-

A Day of Fasting and Prayer

The need for divine guidance is ever apparent and has always been recognized by the church. In view of the demands and the urgency of the forthcoming General Conference which will convene Sunday, April 2, we feel it is well to request the Saints throughout the world to pray and to join in fasting from the morning and noon meals, Sunday, March 5, or such part of that period as is consistent with duties and health. Let us bear in mind the work of the Conference, the church, and the kingdom, as we diligently seek the Father's blessing.

The First Presidency,

clare the brotherhood of man. He could not have picked a more significant place, unless it had been Rome, where the doctrine would have been heresy.

So far as our spiritual and intellectual inheritance is concerned, we have a common bond. God made all of us. We are of one original source, of one blood. We are equally God's children. There are people who think, honestly but mistakenly, that one race is better than another, that one has greater rights than another, that there is an official inequality, approved by the Creator, which makes some inferior and some superior. This falsehood has caused a great deal of trouble, suffering, and injustice in the world, and it always will as long as there are people to be deceived and people to be hurt by it. The doctrine of inequality is an instrument of evil for the destruction of the world. So far as races and nations are concerned, there are no inferiors, no superiors. No one has a right to look at another man or woman and say, "I am better." Jesus condemned the attitude of the Pharisee.

Likeness and Differences

There are differences in people, of course, as anyone can see. But differences between individuals are greater than those between groups. There are good and bad, wise and foolish, educated and ignorant among all nations, races, and groups. The most significant differences are not the inherited traits of body, but the cultivated qualities of mind and spirit. These are the really important differences, and they are subject to our control. Color and race have nothing to do with them.

In the arts, in culture, in science, and education, each race and nation, through its cultural treasures and through its distinguished individuals, make a unique contribution to our world-wide welfare and happiness. We are grateful for these things and thankful to the people who have brought them to us.

Our Brotherhood

In the earliest apostolic times, the church of Christ was to include peoples of all races and nations of that part of the world. Jesus declared the principle of brotherhood to his disciples: "All ye are brethren."—

Across the Desk

In a recent letter Elder E. Y. Hunker writes:

Brother Phillip Moore baptized eight at the conclusion of a series of missionary meetings in Pocatello, Idaho, January 25. The work appears to be moving forward in the Idaho District and holds promise for future developments.

From a recent letter from Elder Glen H. Johnson, Rotterdam, Holland:

Now that another Conference is approaching, we are praying that the Lord will bless the church when we learn his will and seek to do it. May you be satisfied with the leadings you receive for the good of the church and the glory of God.

We are carrying on over here. We love the people with whom we associate and have been blessed in our ministry to them. I think the most satisfying knowledge we have had is that God is moving to bring to pass his purposes in the earth, and that the church is called to leaven the conditions of earth by preaching the gospel of the kingdom and building of Zion. The problems of the church are not separate from the conditions of the nations of the world. We pray that in God's own due time, men shall be free to hear the fullness of the gospel of Zion both by precept and example. There is no doubt in my mind now that the gathering and building of Zion must be in America. And I say this out of great respect for the democratizing conditions existing in other nations and the good done by noble men all over the world. It is a very interesting experience to see conditions from another angle. I guess that is the value of another point of view.

Official

Notice of Church School and Church Music Workshop

We call attention of the church to the church school and church music workshop to be held on the Graceland College campus, Lamoni, Iowa, June 5-11. Attendance is urged at this General Church activity sponsored by the Department of Religious Education and the Department of Music under the direction of Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Elder Franklyn S. Weddle, respectively.

Services of a well-qualified staff, assisted by a number of visiting instructors who are specialists in related fields, have been secured. The schedule of activities includes worship and discussion of the principles and procedures of public worship; music in worship, hymnology; organ materials, children's and adult choir materials, church school music materials and methods, audio-visual demonstrations and discussions, church school seminar, and recreation.

The complete registration fee of $30 for the week covers room and board, study materials, and instructional costs. Additional information may be obtained from the Departments of Religious Education Music, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Rules of Order

The fifth section of the proposed Rules of Order as explained in the "Herald" of January 23. Administrative officers are urged to send to the Presidency their comments or criticisms preliminary to General Conference action.—Editor.

V. BRANCHES

ORGANIZATION OF BRANCHES. Branches are the primary congregational organizations of the church and may be formed by proper authority wherever six or more members in good standing are resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom is an elder, a priest, a teacher, or a deacon.

When branches and districts are organized, they should be so organized by direction of the conferences, or by the personal presence and direction of the Twelve, or some member of that quorum who may be in charge, if practicable; or, if a branch, by the president of the district with the consent, knowledge, and direction of the missionary in charge, when circumstances prevent the missionary in charge being present.¹

PERMANENT BRANCH OFFICERS. All persons who are to have official status in organized branches should be chosen by vote properly taken at a regular meeting of such branch, or at one specially called for that purpose, of which due notice shall have been given.

COMPLETE BRANCH ORGANIZATION. A branch is said to be fully organized when it has a presiding elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. There may also be a secretary or secretaries chosen, who may or may not be ordained ministers.

BRANCH BUSINESS MEETINGS

WHAT MAY BE DISCUSSED. The members of a branch assembled in a branch business meeting may transact any business pertaining to the welfare of the branch, subject only to the rule that it is not proper for these meetings to act on matters of law or church government other than those especially defining what shall be branch action in given cases.

WHO SHALL PRESIDE. The branch president presides over the branch business meeting by right of his office. At his request, or in his absence, his counselors may preside. Members of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, or the district presidency who may be present, may be asked to preside as a courtesy or in view of special circumstances. But, as a general rule, the branch president should preside unless otherwise determined by vote of those present at the meeting, or by courtesy of the local minister who might otherwise have assumed the chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER TO ENFORCE ORDER. It is the duty of the presiding officer to bring to the attention of the body such matters as may require its consideration or action; to enforce observance of the rules of order with decorum and propriety; to secure, so far as he is able, a due respect and regard for

The Inspired Scriptures - By CHRIS B. HARTSHORN

MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH have a mighty tool for kingdom-building in the Inspired Version. Like some who have written the editors, we cannot understand why it is not used more by our contributors and preachers. Perhaps not enough of us appreciate its value as a help to the student and as evidence of the divinity of the Restoration Movement. Let us consider it from these points of view.

In the early days of my ministry, I carried the Authorized Version into the pulpit but only after close comparison with the Inspired Version. To rely on and quote from a translation which had not been corrected by the direction of the Holy Spirit was to me an inexcusable blunder. My reasons for carrying the Authorized Version was that the print was much more readable, and the India paper used made the volume only half the size of the Inspired Version; then, too, I had been influenced by the missionaries who claimed that it was easier to convince "the world" when we used "their Bible."

Regardless of virtue which once existed for these arguments, they should be re-examined. The printing of the 1944 and subsequent editions of the Inspired Version gave us just as readable a text as one could want. A new edition now available on the best, domestic, Bible paper, similar to that used in the Doctrine and Covenants, has reduced it to a handy size. Because of the popularity of modern versions in common use today, very few will longer question a quotation as being "different from my Bible."

At one time the argument was constantly thrown at us that by correcting the Bible, as well as by presenting the Book of Mormon as Scriptures, we were guilty of a sin which would add all the plagues of the Book of Revelation (22:18) for we were "adding to the Bible." However, this reasoning lost its force as knowledge of how we got our Scriptures became better known by Bible students. The old attitude towards the Bible, based on II Timothy 3:16, "All Scripture is given of God, and is profitable for doctrine," has now been rather generally accepted as a mistranslation. The Inspired Version corrects this to read, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine." With this translation, we find agreement in the English and American Revised Versions, Emphatic Diaglott, Murdock's Syriac, and Twentieth Century, Revised.

IN WRITING to the Saints at Corinth, Paul once said, "And I think also that I have the Spirit of God."—I Corinthians 7:40. It is quite evident that Paul would never claim plenary inspiration for the Bible from "cover to cover." The Bible contains the words of the devil (Luke 4:3); of Job's tormentors, who did the devil's work; and much which is purely historical (II Chronicles 25:1). Several books are mentioned in the Bible which cannot be found in the canon nor among the apochryphal books (See II Chronicles 9:29, 12:15, and 20:34).

Many people who were reared in Christian homes have lived long enough to be disturbed in their childish thinking about where Christmas gifts, babies, and the Bible came from. Even when we were old enough to know better, we hated to give up our childhood myths about them. Some still cling to the notion that the Bible came in a leather-bound package direct from heaven. However, the truth needs no lie nor apologies to support it, and only the truth will make us free, sure, powerful servants of God.

John's testimony about the record of Jesus is in point:

And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.—John 20:30, 31.

In the book, Three Bibles Compared, Elder A. B. Phillips points out:

For centuries no general agreement existed as to which books were inspired and worthy to form part of the sacred canon of Scripture . . . Jewish students also disagreed as to the authenticity or inspiration of such books as Ecclesiastes, Esther, Ruth, Proverbs, Ezekiel, and the Song of Solomon . . . Various New Testament books were also in dispute for several centuries . . . They include Hebrews, James, II and III John, Jude, and Revelation. Some of the books were rejected at first, and the Synod of Damascus (A.D. 382) appears to have been the first church council to adopt the New Testament as we have it now.

People who are acquainted with the facts already presented in this article are not apt to raise the issue of "adding to the Scripture" and blast out at the Prophet Joseph Smith for presenting the "Inspired Version" of the Scriptures. They may question it in the spirit of Nathaniel, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?"—John 1:46. Philip had the right answer, "Come and see." Let people judge the merits of the book—its inspiration—by a comparison with the work of scholarship in existence in 1833 when Joseph completed the Inspired Version.

LET US EXAMINE a few of the passages of Scripture as translated in the Authorized Version (1607-11) and compare these with the version given by Joseph Smith and later versions.

Matthew 13:12 ". . . but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." This is contradictory and impossible. It should read: “. . . But whosoever continueth not to receive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.”—Verse 11, Inspired Version. The Three Bible Compared quotes the Twentieth Century and Centenary versions as concurring: “but whosoever does not retain, from him shall be taken away even what he has.”

Luke 17: 21 “. . . behold the kingdom of God is within you.” This has been corrected to read: “For, behold, the kingdom of God has already come unto you.” The difference here is far-reaching. Those using the Authorized Version have been telling the world for years that the “kingdom is in your heart.” They have persuaded men to believe that salvation is only a matter of “getting your heart right with God.”

Jesus had a different concept of the kingdom of God. It is something that men collectively can work at (Matthew 11: 12ff.).

It was a program Jesus initiated:

Then said Jesus unto them. The law and the prophets testify of me; yea, and all the prophets who have written, even until John, have foretold of these days. Since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man who seeketh truth presseth into it.—Luke 16:17, 18.

The Emphatic Diaglott renders Luke 17:21 “. . . . The kingdom of God comes not with outward show.” Noyes and Centenary render it “For the kingdom of God is now in your midst,” while the Twentieth Century version says: “the kingdom of God is already among you.”

I Corinthians 10:24 reads, “Let no man seek his own, but another’s wealth.” It may surprise some to know where this idea, which is so popular today, came from. Trying to get other people’s money by fair means or foul perhaps antedates Paul’s time, but it is not Christian. The command, “Thou shalt not covet,” still holds. The Inspired Version renders this passage: “Let no man seek therefore his own, but every man another’s good.” With this rendition at least eight modern versions agree.

Hebrews 11:1 says, “Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.” Joseph Smith corrected this to say, “Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.”

The Revised Standard Version (1945) renders this practically the same: “Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen.” To have substance, faith would have to have reality and element. The Three Bibles Compared, page 15, quotes seven other versions which agree with the Inspired.

James 1:2: “My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations.” The Inspired Version corrects the last word to read “afflictions.” James would be quite inconsistent to praise temptations for he later says, “Blessed is the man that resisteth temptation But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed.”—Verses 12,14. Moffatt renders this, “Greet it as pure joy my brothers, when you come across any sort of trial.” With this the Weymouth, Murdock, and Goodspeed versions agree.

I John 3:9: “Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.” This is a great text for sanctificationists, but it is contrary to human experience and to the Scriptures. This same version (King James) has Paul say, “When I would do good, evil is present with me.”—Romans 7:21. Joseph corrected I John 3:9 to say: “Whosoever is born of God doth not continue in sin; for the Spirit of God remaineth in him; and he cannot continue in sin, because he is born of God.” The Centenary agrees with that: “Whosoever is a child of God cannot go on sinning because his seed is abiding in him; and he cannot go on sinning because he is a child of God.” It is similarly rendered in The Revised Standard, Diaglott, Murdock, Twentieth Century, Weymouth, and the Centenary versions.

WE COULD MULTIPLY such illustrations a hundredfold, but that would become tedious. This much leads us to the conclusion we set out to reach. Joseph Smith, Jr., was not a scholar and never claimed any superior knowledge of the Bible. His only claim was simple: that God used him as a humble instrument to confound the wise (I Corinthians 1:27). All of the other versions we have cited which confirm the changes made by Joseph were published after 1867, the date the Inspired Version was printed. It is not necessary to imply that the modern translators used the Inspired text. Let us accept their claims to the best scholarship at face value. “The sixty-four dollar question” is: “How did Joseph Smith know the corrections to make?”

P. Marion Simms, in The Bible From the Beginning, 1925, does not answer the question, but he does make some interesting observations:

This much, at least, may be said of many of the changed readings found in the Bible of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints: Its author had the courage deliberately to alter the text and make it say clearly what many Bible students succeed in getting by theological legerdemain.—Page 145.

Later he added:

Had these additions proved the doctrinal positions of his church, the explanation would seem easy, but they do not seem to serve any denominational or sectarian purpose.—Page 293.

In the publication of our lesson courses, we quote the Inspired Version almost exclusively. The same is true of Daily Bread. It has most of the advantages of the scholarship of later versions, while retaining the style of the incomparable King James or Authorized version. The Reorganized Church has a real offering to students of religion in the Inspired Version.

New Record in Tithing Statement Filers

By W. N. JOHNSON

Member of Presiding Bishopric

LAST YEAR 12,776 church members living in the United States, Canada, and Hawaii filed tithing statements in the office of the Presiding Bishopric. The previous record of 10,329 established in 1948 was thus exceeded by a large margin. The original goal of 11,500 for 1949 was raised to 12,000 during the year, and this goal was reached by November 30. An unusually large number of tithing statements received in the closing months of the year brought the church to this record level of achievement.

Ninety per cent of the districts show numerical gains in tithing statement filers over the preceding year. The percentage of members filing statements is not yet available, but it is apparent that more than 10 per cent of the membership in the domestic field filed during 1949. This compares with 7.99 per cent in 1947 and 8.7 per cent in 1948.

It should be noted that the count is kept on tithing statement filers, not on tithing statements received. A First Tithing Statement or an Annual Tithing Statement for 1948 bearing the signature of husband and wife and received at headquarters during the year 1949 is counted as two, although actually only one statement is received. On the other hand, an individual bringing his accounting up to date by filing statements for the years 1944 to 1948 inclusive is counted as one statement filer, although he may actually send in five separate tithing statements. In this way accurate figures are secured on the degree of participation on the part of membership in every district in the church.

THE QUESTION, "What has been gained?" might well be raised. It takes considerable time and effort on the part of the individual to complete a tithing statement. A tremendous amount of work is done by solicitors, agents, and bishops throughout the church in teaching the law, assisting individuals to file statements and mailing these statements to headquarters, where the Presiding Bishopric's office carries on the task of checking, correcting, filing, counting, and corresponding on these statements.

One very immediate and practical result of these additional statements has been that additional funds have come to the church. Many of the First Tithing Statements filed during 1949 brought very substantial contributions to the church. In view of the fact that the church always has needs beyond its financial power to meet, this added income is of vital significance.

Beyond this it can safely be assumed that the church has gained new spiritual and moral strength. Many members needed to make this commitment to the work of God. The filing of tithing statements and the payment of tithing evidences a growing understanding of the requirements of stewardship and increased devotion to the cause of the church. The actual sharing of our material wealth with the church cannot help but give us greater interest and concern in this work in which we have now invested part of our productive time.

THE CHURCH must always be concerned in the development of individual personality and character, and the chief value of these additional tithing statements is perhaps to be found in the testimony of those individuals who have participated. It is found in the life of the sister who filed a First Tithing Statement and as she completed paying the several hundred dollars tithing due at the end of the year, testified of the rich blessings and satisfaction she had enjoyed in this effort and expressed her intention of giving an additional offering to the church. The abiding gains are to be found with the church member who filed a First Tithing Statement, and after making one of the largest single contributions received by the church in 1949 expressed deep happiness at being able to do this for the work of God.

Part of the real test of the value of the financial law will be found in the lives of boys and girls who under the wise guidance of parents and priesthood have sensed something of the importance of the management of their money in the program of the church. Some of these youngsters have had the rich feeling of really belonging to the church of God as their small tithing payments have linked them with the work of the church in the Society Islands, Hawaii, or the European Mission. Repeatedly we have received letters of appreciation from those we had reminded that their tithing statements were now delinquent and were being awaited in our office. We have the testimony also of those who feel a sense of peace and spiritual well-being after their accounting had been completed. If the church had not benefited by a single dollar in these additional tithing statements, it would still be stronger because it had won new converts to the basic elements of stewardship.

The church has long believed that every man is accountable to God as a steward over material possessions, and the accounting is a point of beginning in the discharge of this stewardship responsibility. This is a day of promise as the church goes beyond believing and talking about

The Sanitarium Board of Trustees

Introducing the Personnel

By GERTRUDE COPELAND, R.N.
Superintendent

Editor's Note: March 19 has been set apart throughout the church as "Sanitarium Day." This is in accordance with the action of General Conference and the announcement of the First Presidency which appeared in the "Saints' Herald" of January 23, 1950. We believe that our readers will be interested in the men who are responsible for the administrative policies of this major church institution.

Introduction

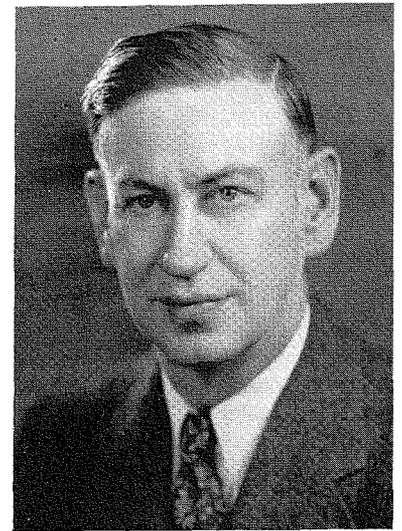

Members of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital Board of Trustees have served as the management and control body of the hospital and school of nursing since 1909. The first board was made up of Elders Frederick M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, Joseph Luff, George H. Hilliard, George E. Harrington, Roderick May, and Ellis Short. President Frederick M. Smith was the first Chairman of the Board and remained so until his death in March, 1946. Brother Harrington was secretary of the original board, and Bishop Kelley was treasurer. Of those many men of the church who have given time and energies to the management of the hospital, President Frederick M. Smith served the longest.

At the General Conference of 1920, the Articles of Incorporation were revised to provide that the members of the First Presidency, the members of the Presiding Bishopric, and the Church Physician should constitute the Board of the Hospital. This arrangement continued until 1929 when the Articles were amended to provide that the Mayor of Independence and the Judge of the Eastern District of Jackson County Court be ex officio members of the Board.

President Israel A. Smith Chairman of the Board

President Smith first became a hospital trustee when he was appointed a member of the Presiding Bishopric on June 16, 1920. He served for five years at that time and returned to the Board as a member of the First Presidency in October, 1938, serving as vice-president. Following the death of President Frederick M. Smith, President Israel Smith was chosen as Chairman of the Board, and he continues to occupy this position with dignity and effectiveness. His leadership during the years of his presidency has been a source of stimulation, and his legal training and church heritage enable him to make many contributions of unique value to both the hospital and school of nursing.

The Late Rodger T. Sermon

With Bishop DeLapp he maintains important contacts with city, state, and federal authorities. These have resulted in many benefits for both the Sanitarium and the school of nursing.

President F. Henry Edwards

For many years prior to his selection as a member of the First Presidency, while he was yet a member of the Quorum of Twelve, Brother Edwards was closely associated with the First Presidency and became well acquainted with the work carried on at the hospital and school of nursing. He became a member of the Hospital Board and Trustees in April, 1946, and was selected vice-chairman after the death of President Garver in April, 1949.

Brother Edwards' counsel and consideration on the part of problems concerning patients of the hospital and his intimate interest in the growth of the institution are reflected in his work on committees within the Board. He is a member of the School of Nursing Committee and Sanitarium Day Fund Committee of the Board. His counsel and advice are always given in the best interests of the health program of the church.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp

Bishop DeLapp came to the Board as one of the trustees at a crucial time in the history of the institution. This was in April, 1931. At that time he was selected Secretary of the Board, which position he has filled with distinction since that time except for one term served by Bishop Livingston.

While Bishop DeLapp has given service of great value throughout his tenure of office, those who have been most closely associated with him remember with special appreciation the magnificent contribution he made in connection with the erection and equipment of the present hospital building. His wise and experienced concern for this important church institution is felt in every meeting of the Board, and particularly in the development of sound-working relationships with the medical staff and others carrying administrative responsibility in both the hospital and school of nursing.

Bishop Henry Livingston

Bishop Livingston has been a member of the Board since April, 1940, and has served as Hospital and School of Nursing Treasurer. He has given unselfishly of his time and counsel and growing experience in matters having to do with setting up policies and solving specific problems incident to the operation of a hospital and a school of nursing. He is a member of the School of Nursing Committee and is careful and wise in counsel. He is greatly valued by the other members of the Board.

Bishop Walter N. Johnson

Bishop Johnson first became affiliated with the Sanitarium and School of Nursing as co-ordinator of institutional activities under the Presiding Bishopric. His work at that time involved the co-ordination of hospital, printing house, and college activities within the economic program of the Presiding Bishopric. He became a permanent member of the Board with the conference action of April 14, 1946, at which time he became a counselor to the Presiding Bishop. Soon after this appointment, Bishop Johnson became Assistant Secretary of the Board under Bishop DeLapp, which position he still retains. He is a member of the Sanitarium Day Fund Committee and Sanitarium Day Observance Committee in addition to being responsible for the study of recent proposed expansion projects within the hospital.

Bishop Johnson's good judgment and influences are felt in many areas of operations of the Sanitarium and School of Nursing.

Dr. Charles F. Grabske

Dr. Grabske, while Assistant Church Physician, met with the Board on many occasions over a period of years before his selection as Church Physician in 1946, at which time he became an official member. Since then his influence in the Board has been sound and constructive. As might be expected, he is primarily concerned in the setting and maintenance of high medical and nursing standards. He has shown a particularly keen desire that the Sanitarium shall further the work of the church by the sheer excellence of the service given here, including the spiritual ministry of the Chaplain.

Dr. Grabske's triple responsibility as Church Physician, Board member, and member of the Sanitarium Medical Staff brings him into contact with many phases of hospital and nursing life and enables him to serve in numerous ways.

The Late Mayor Roger T. Sermon

Mayor Sermon gave the longest continuous period of service to the Board of any present member, and it is to be regretted that his untimely death on January 23 cut short this counsel and good judgment which has characterized his contributions to the Board. He came to the board in May, 1930, at the beginning of the plans for the construction of the new hospital building of seven floors. He served continuously as a member of this group for practically twenty years.

For two years—August 12, 1930, until January, 1932—Mayor Sermon served as vice-chairman of the Board, and in all relations of the hospital to the community and beyond, his influence has been felt for good. The Board is sorry to lose him.

Judge William Randall

Judge Randall, a resident of Independence, became a member of the Hospital Board of Trustees upon his election in November, 1946, as Judge of the Jackson County Court for the Eastern District. He met with the board for the first time in January, 1947. Since then decisions having to do with community, county, and medical staff relations have been influenced by his experience and good judgment in the matter of hospital administration. Judge Randall is the fifth judge of the Jackson County Court to sit on the Board of Trustees since the revision of the Hospital Board organization in 1930, and he has given freely of his time to attend meetings. He is a valuable member.

This Little World of Ours

Synopsis of a lecture delivered at the International Brotherhood Convocation at Central Missouri State College, Warrensburg, Missouri, on February 24, 1949.

By WARD A. HOUGAS

THE WORLD IS SHRINKING. In another generation or two, it will be one big community whether or not we wish it to be and whether or not we are ready for it. When the late Wendell Willke wrote his One World, he marked the beginning of a new era in human thought. This is World Brotherhood Week, and we pause to gain a better understanding of its implications.

During the recent war our young men and women went to North Africa and there met the Negro, the Berber, and other of the Near-east civilizations. Others went to China, India, the Solomons—where dwell the “strong-haired Melanesians”—on to Australia, and to practically every point on the globe. In a way this was no new experience for Americans. In these United States we are used to a mixture of races. We know that often there is conflict, yet we are trying to learn to live peacefully together. The future of democracy depends upon our being able to do so.

Our history goes back to the beginning of time. Regardless of what concept one may have regarding creation, the Bible story of Adam and Eve as common parents finds its counterpart in science claiming a common origin of man. In the Book of Acts it is written that all nations were created “of one blood.” The intricate make-up of the human body with its curious anatomy and abilities testifies to this truth.

Every man, for example, regardless of race or color, normally has just so many teeth—and not only the same number but the same division: so many front teeth, so many canine, so many molars. Would this just happen in a world created by chance?

Likewise all races are similarly outfitted biologically. All can either plow or fight.

Racial differences are limited to such nonessentials as color, hair, eyes, head, nose shape, et cetera. Differences as great as these exist within each race. This morning as I look over the auditorium, I see some who are thin and some who are plump, some tall and some short, some with dark hair and some with light hair—and some with no hair.

ONE OF THE GREATEST ADVENTURES in the world was the spread of the human race from somewhere in Asia to the tip of Africa, the British Isles, America, down to Cape Horn, the islands of the Pacific, Australia, and on. These people were few in numbers. They lived in isolation, and each developed according to the conditions under which he was forced to struggle for life. Those along the equator found they had different needs than those of the Arctic circle. Different emphases were placed on different things, and the human race continued to grow.

Came the day when the population of the world was great enough that these isolated groups began to discover each other. Different groups seemed queer to others. With the beginning of world travel, men began to classify civilization by skin color. Little did they realize that even the pigmentation of the skin which caused the different classifications was common to all and varied only in degrees in which it was present.

Scientists tell us that differences in color are caused mainly by two chemicals, carotene, which gives a yellowish tinge, and melanin, which runs into browns and even black. The interesting thing is that every living person has both chemicals in his system. The only thing that determines whether one is white, black, yellow, or red is the proportion of these chemicals. In other words, all nations really were created of one blood.

Hitler talked of his “pure Aryan” stock. Sometimes he seemed to mean blond Europeans, including Scandinavians; sometimes Germans, either blond or brunette; and sometimes all political pals, even Japanese. It really had no meaning racially, from a standpoint of linguistics or on any other basis. Race prejudice thrives on a feeling of superiority. “I’m superior—I was born that way” is the basis of an ideology that demands a scapegoat upon which to heap its persecution. On this theory the Jews were called upon to bear the brunt of Hitler hatreds.

IN OUR OWN LAND we tend to turn to the colored people as scapegoats. Sometimes it is the Indian tribes. We hear much talk, even in our democratic U. S. of the inferiority of the colored people, and many believe it. Even many Christians, including Latter Day Saints, feed their souls on this hate-provoking doctrine. Intelligence tests by the United States Army during the war showed many peculiar things. For instance the white enrollees from four southern states had an average I. Q. of 41.25 to 41.55. Yet up in New England the Negro enrollees from four states showed a record of 45.02 to 49.50. We are reminded of the old axiom from the common law, “That which proves too much proves nothing.”

The fact remains that whatever differences arise they come not because people are from the North or South, or because they are white or black; but because of differences in income, education, culture, and beliefs. Children with top scores turn up among Whites, Negroes, Mexicans, and Orientals in about the same proportion as their advantages might suggest. Christians need to realize this and to acknowledge that the much talked-of problems are not a matter of race but opportunity.

Hitler also boasted of the "racial soul" of his "pure Aryans." Do different races have better character than others because of racial differences? When Hitler desired to develop a generation of professional murderers he did not depend on the "racial soul" of his people but set up all sorts of training camps to bring about his purpose. The sanctity of the home and the marriage bond and most everything else that was decent were discarded to achieve what he desired.

I AM CONCERNED primarily in two things. First, what does race prejudice do to the one discriminated against, and what does it do to the one who discriminates?

Those discriminated against grow up in fear. I have spent quite a little time among the Navajo Indians. Let me tell you about them. There are 55,000 of them—citizens of the United States—living down on the desolate Painted Desert. What chance do they have? Look at those patient sad-faced mothers.

They know that about six times as many of their children will die before they become a year old as those of their white friends. They know that eight times as many of them will eventually die of tuberculosis—and this in an area where others go to get over the disease. Only one in five will ever get inside a schoolhouse. Go into their hogans—mud huts without furniture or equipment. What chance does any child from such a home have? Those tall, silent fathers know of these inequities, and come what may, the best they can expect is an annual income of less than $88 per capita—about the equivalent of a week's wage for an ordinary skilled laborer. What do these conditions do to Navajo children? What chance do they have to become what we demand of them? Is it because they are red, or is it because they are forced into such degradation and poverty that they have little chance or hope in the future?

I am not demanding an equality of "things"—not even among white people. I am suggesting that the only solution lies in our coming to understand more of what is meant by an equality of opportunity. I am against intermarriage of races—but I am for an equality of opportunity that will make possible the development of people of all races.

When does a person become color-conscious? On our vacant lots the children from my end of town play ball. "Blackie" who comes from the colored family down in the ravine is as popular a player as any. One of these days "Blackie" will grow up to be "George," and by that time he will know he is black. When and how does he learn? Is it anything natural, or is it the outgrowth of our warped thinking? Is it not quite probable that, in the light of eternity, we are hurting ourselves more than we are hurting "Blackie"?

MANY AGENCIES are working on the problems of race prejudice. Churches, foundations, and councils join in a new effort to interpret life on a basis other than that of prejudice. The Master Teacher once said (Matthew 23:25), "Woe unto you scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites! For ye make clean the outside of the cup . . . but within it is full of extortion and excess." We need to cleanse the inside of the cup. As long as our racial problems of the Indian and the Negro flutter in the faces of the nations of the world, we impress peoples but little when we cry out against the slave labor of Russia.

The nation is working at it. Many organizations are working at it. The churches are working at it. Now we individually need to work at it in our own attitude. I spent two years at one of Iowa's great colleges where religion was at low ebb and where at times, it seemed the devil drew straws to see which of us he would pinch off each day. There I met a big Negro by the name of Paul Kain. Our first acquaintance was in the State House in Des Moines. We had competed, with a number of others, in a contest in which I happened to come out winner. The others of the team congratulated me and finally came Paul Kain. He bowed and said simply, "Mista, I congratulate you." I reached out my hand instinctively only to discover that his right hand was behind him. When he saw my hand, out came his, and mine was soon lost in his big handclasp. I became a close friend of this man.

We graduated the same spring. In a student body of over 6,000 he ranked in the high ten. A few days before commencement he met me on the campus and said, "Hougas, it looks like I won't get a job; you see I'm black." I knew many inferior students in his same field who already had fat jobs contracted, yet Paul Kain was jobless—because he was black.

We held convocations in the large gymnasium so as to seat the entire group. Paul always sat across the main floor from me. I used to look at him as we stood and sang "My country, 'tis of thee, Sweet land of liberty." What did it mean to him even though he was a citizen of this land? He couldn't eat where I ate. He couldn't worship where I worshiped. He wasn't even free to get a job.

Next Sunday if Paul Kain should find his way into your Communion service and you should stand and sing that grand old hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love" would Paul still be conscious he was black? The future of democracy rests primarily on our being able to whip the problem of race prejudice within ourselves.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

When and where was the Sermon on the Mount preached?

ANSWER:

It is generally believed that this remarkable sermon was given on the high plateau country near Capernaum in Galilee. The word mountain (Matthew 5:1) may properly be interpreted to mean either "mount" or "hill." It was probably early in Jesus' ministry after his twelve disciples had been chosen, four of whom are specifically mentioned before then. This also seems to accord with the record as given by Luke, if we recognize his account of the Master's teaching as being concerned with the same occasion. A. B. PHILLIPS.

QUESTION:

1. Did Jesus say Judas was a son of perdition?

2. Are the original twelve to judge Israel, including Judas?

3. Does the Most Holy Order refer to the Aaronic priesthood or the Melchisedec priesthood?

Missouri

Mrs. S. G. W.

ANSWER:

1. The term, perdition, signifies the state of one who is utterly lost or in ruin. Jesus clearly applies this term to Judas in John 17:12. Jesus is praying to the Father on behalf of the apostles and says in the verse indicated: "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled." Again in John 6:70 we find: "Jesus answered them; Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve."

2. I Nephi 3:114 has an angel of the Lord speaking to Nephi and saying: "The angel spake unto me, saying, Behold the twelve disciples of the Lamb, who are chosen to minister unto thy seed. And he said unto me, Thou rememberest the twelve apostles of the Lamb? Behold they are they who shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel: Wherefore, the twelve ministers of thy seed shall be judged of them; for ye are of the house of Israel; and these twelve ministers whom thou beholdest, shall judge thy seed."

Matthew 19:28 reads: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Now the above quotations are very clear and specific. Most of us are rather definite in our demand for a strict interpretation of the Scriptures, yet I cannot find myself giving any credence to the idea that one whom Jesus called a devil and the son of perdition should have any part in this great tribunal. I have not the slightest idea who may take the place of Judas in this matter, but I am convinced that Judas will not function as a judge of Israel.

3. The Most Holy Order refers to the Melchisedec priesthood. In Doctrine and Covenants 83:3, we read: "The Lord confirmed a priesthood also upon Aaron and his seed throughout all their generations, which priesthood continueth and abideth forever, with the priesthood which is after the holiest order of God." There are therefore two priesthoods and the Most Holy Order refers to the greater only. It was this priesthood over which Christ presided. It is to this that Psalm 110:4 refers: "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." D. B. SORDEN.

QUESTION:

Will it be possible to sin during the Millennium?

ANSWER:

Several facts appear to indicate that sin will not be an impossibility during the millennial reign, at least on some portions of the earth. For instance, we have the following words:

I say unto you, that when the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:6.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall not die, but shall live to be an hundred years old; but the sinner, living to be an hundred years old, shall be accursed.—Isaiah 65:20, Inspired Version.

And when the thousand years are expired,

Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth.—Revelation 20:7, 8.

Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye.—Doctrine and Covenants 43:7.

From these texts and some others involving the question, it seems clear that men will retain their agency during the millennial period, though seemingly not subject to the temptations of Satan until its close. At the coming of Christ, children will be living on earth who are too young to know sin. It appears that children will grow up to manhood and "live to be a hundred years old," and if sinners, they shall be accursed. There is no proof, I think, that sin will actually be absent from the lives of all men before the close of the period named, though this is not made very clear textually. The children of the redeemed "shall grow up without sin unto salvation" (Doctrine and Covenants 45:10); but of other children living in the period, it is not said.

QUESTION:

Must we pay tithes on all our oblations that we give the church?

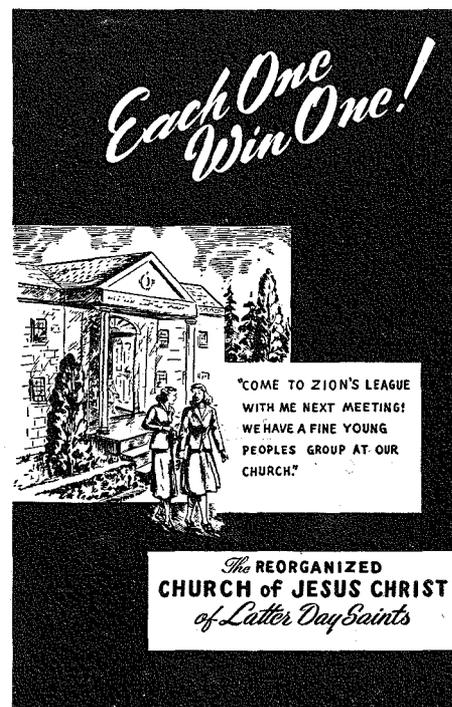

Indiana

R. F. B.

ANSWER:

Yes. Oblation offerings are made out of the increase, and since we pay tithing on the increase, all oblation offerings would be tithed. Oblation comes under the category of offerings which are paid out of the nine tenths of increase and follows the payment of the tithe.

"The Eyes of the Lord are Upon the Righteous" —Psalm 34: 15

High lights from the life of Louis J. Ostertag

IT WAS EVENING in the quiet French town of Elbeuf in the year of 1902. Louis Joseph Ostertag, seven years old, was slowly saying the rosary. The good Sister nodded with approval; then, when he had finished, she tucked him into bed and said a kind good night. The little boy closed his eyes and listened intently until he no longer could hear the soft rustle of her black robes. Then quickly he slipped out from under the covers. Kneeling down, he prayed quietly to God in his own childlike Protestant fashion. Satisfied now that all would be well with him, he got back into bed and went comfortably to sleep. The devout nun was only temporarily in his home, nursing his mother through a serious illness, and he knew he must not offend her. But, despite her firm insistence, he wanted his prayers to be his own. He was always to remember this experience—first the confusion in his mind and then the relief when he had finally worked out an answer that would satisfy his conscience. "The child is father to the man," and with this little boy, as with most children, the pattern of his life was beginning very early to take shape.

His parents, newcomers to Elbeuf, were of the Lutheran faith as were many others in the little Catholic town. Henry Ostertag, the boy's father, had been born in Bischwiller in Alsace; when the city came under German authority, those who wished to remain French were allowed to leave. These people were all weavers by trade, and many of them had moved down into Elbeuf, in Normandy, attracted by a famous spring of water there. This water had such a high iron content that when used in making dyes for cloth, it gave an especially beautiful luster, known to weavers all over Europe.

Here in Elbeuf, on May 4, 1895, Louis Joseph Ostertag was born. After the French custom, he was sent to school at the age of three years, and at eleven entered the Ecole Superieure. Then he spent one year at a trade school learning to weave tapestry. Just after his graduation, when he was fourteen years old, his family made a momentous decision that was to change the whole course of his life. They decided to leave Elbeuf and move to the United States.

Some years before this time, Henry Ostertag's brother-in-law had migrated to America and settled in Philadelphia. A skilled weaver, he obtained work in a tapestry mill. Soon he was writing to the family, urging Henry to come to this new land of opportunity.

THE DECISION MADE, Henry and young Louis Joseph sailed from Le Havre in August, 1909, leaving the rest of the family, for the time being, in Elbeuf. The excitement and thrill of arriving in New York was clouded by such an unfortunate happening that the two immigrants were nearly deported. Some time during the voyages, a thief had entered their cabin and stolen all their money. Now without funds, immigration laws would not permit their stay in the United States. But Henry's brother-in-law was contacted and at once came to New York to help them out of their difficulty. In Philadelphia both father and son obtained work in a carpet mill. But these were depression years in America, and work was scarce, wages were low and everything cost more than in France. None-the-less Henry Ostertag had decided definitely that he wanted to stay, and he wrote for his wife, Louise, to bring the two younger children with her to the United States. In September of that year, they were re-united and the great adventure of becoming Americans really began.

Everything was different in this new life, and the language was particularly difficult. Louis started to night school at once, and since he learned rapidly, was soon able to help his mother with the shopping and other family responsibilities.

About two years after their arrival in Philadelphia, a little neighbor girl asked Louis's sister, Madeleine, to go with her to Sunday school. The church was only two blocks away, and so the mother consented. The little girl explained that she belonged to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, but the name meant nothing to Madeleine. After a while however, when she found that she liked going to the Sunday school, she persuaded Louis to come with her.

Surely God's hand must have been over these good people, directing them to America and to the church. Yet seemingly very small and insignificant events were to lead to their conversion. Louis began attending Sunday school with his sister and was invited to join a "research class," as it was called, which met each Sunday afternoon. Here a group of boys about Louis' age, were studying church history and doctrines. Louis became an attentive member of the class, and here the foundation for his belief in the church was securely laid. Among these boys was a young lad recently come from Ireland who had joined the church about two years earlier. He was Edmund Gleazer and his fervor, coupled with an enthusiastic personality, was to have a deep effect upon the shy French boy. They became close friends—a friendship that has continued throughout their adult years. Then, too, the pastor, W. W. Smith, was to stimulate interest by calling upon the family and establishing a very friendly feeling.

THE DAY CAME when Louis and Madeleine made a solemn decision. They went together to their mother and made the announcement:

"Mama, nous voulons etre baptize"
"Alors pourquoi?" she asked them.
"Par-ce-que nous croyons que c'est l'eglise de Jesus Christ," Louis told her firmly.

She did not understand the doctrines of the church, but then there was much in America she did not understand. She wanted only good things for her children, and reasoned that to worship God is good. So she gave her consent, and on Children's Day, June 9, 1912, Louis Joseph and Madeleine were baptized. Something of the truth and goodness they had become acquainted with must have been clearly reflected in their young lives, for in about a year, their father also joined the church. Some time later the mother and younger children accepted membership responsibility and all members of the family were together in the gospel.

Louis took his membership seriously and continued to study with interest and increasing conviction. On August 6, 1916, he was ordained a priest under the hands of Elder J. August Koehler and began his church ministry in Philadelphia.

He was a tall young man now, just under six feet, with humorous dark eyes, an inherent love of people, and a Frenchman's enjoyment of social gatherings. In good health, well-adjusted to American ways, his friends and interests were primarily in the church.

Then, in 1917, the United States was involved in war. This tragic event was to change many lives, including that of Louis Ostertag. He returned to his native France but as a citizen of another country and in that country's uniform. Saint Mihiel Sector, Argonne, Metz—to many people today these are half-forgotten words. Not to Louis—he was to know these places well, with an intimate, painful knowledge. Yet it was here, in the midst of war, that he was to have such an outstanding spiritual experience that the memory of it has never faded.

IT IS BEST TOLD in his own words.

One night during the First World War, while on duty in No Man's Land, I felt a great heavenly power such as I had never felt before. I was literally lifted off the ground! My mind was opened to the knowledge of things as they pertain to the kingdom of God, and thus I learned many things I could not have known except by the power of the Holy Ghost. It was a new and strange experience—one that I cannot forget. Later, when I returned to America, while attending a reunion at Deer Park, Pennsylvania, I told one of the missionaries about it. He listened attentively, but made no comment at the time. Several days later he called me to his tent, then told me that he had prayed about this matter and the Lord, in answer to his prayer, made known to him that I had experienced the power of the Resurrection—the lifting power of Jesus Christ.

As a sergeant in Company C, 56th Infantry, Seventh Div., he returned to America when the war was over with his lungs blackened by mustard gas and suffering from battle fatigue. It was apparent that he would never again be a physically well man. But after his discharge from the hospital, he faced his altered situation and determined to prepare himself to live as normally as possible. He entered Drexel Institute of Technology in Philadelphia, receiving his B.S. in mechanical engineering in 1926. Then he served for two years as an engineer for the Philadelphia Electric Co., but his health was so seriously impaired that he could not continue the work.

A GAIN A SEEMINGLY casual event was to direct his life into a fuller and richer field of service. It was in 1928 while President Frederick M. Smith was visiting Brother Albert N. Hoxie in Philadelphia that Louis was invited over for the evening. While the three men were visiting together, President Smith turned and said unexpectedly, "Louis, would you be willing to go out to Arizona and help with the church work? You could kill two birds with one stone there—recover your health and at the same time serve the church."

This was a serious decision to consider, particularly as he was not to go out as a General Church appointee. However, Louis took President Smith's suggestion—he went to Phoenix, Arizona, and was shortly devoting his full time to the work of the branch. It was to be the beginning of a life completely dedicated to the service of God. In the years to come the church was to know him as a faithful and intelligent minister, and God was to call upon him for ever greater responsibility. October 17, 1928, he was ordained an elder by Apostle Frank Curtis; on November 7, 1937, a high priest by Apostle E. J. Gleazer; and on October 19, 1948, an evangelist by Apostle Charles Hield.

On November 17, 1928, he was married to Madeline Clark, whom he had met while on a visit to Graceland College where she was a student. A New Englander with a strong sense of church responsibility, Mrs. Ostertag has always been a devoted assistant to her husband in his work.

WHILE IN Phoenix Louis had a remarkable spiritual experience. He says:

One night, very late, I awakened with a sense of urgency. I felt I should go to Glendale, Arizona, and visit some of the Saints there. Madeline and I arose early and started out, traveling as if impelled by the Spirit of God. Upon arrival at the home of one of the members, we learned that a brother in the church, who suffered from arthritis, had taken two bichloride of mercury tablets instead of two aspirins. He was at the point of death and although a doctor had given first aid, little hope was held for his recovery. I visited this brother at once and under the influence of the Spirit asked him if he believed the sixteenth chapter of Mark, especially the verse, "and they shall drink deadly things and it shall not hurt them"? His answer was that he did believe what was written. I administered to him then with the feeling that the Holy Spirit was present to bless this afflicted man. He fully recovered and without any ill effect afterwards. This has been a testimony of the power of God, not only to me but to many of the congregation of Phoenix.

After serving for five and a half years as pastor in Phoenix, he and Madeline moved to Santa Ana, California, at the suggestion of his boyhood friend, E. J. Gleazer, then apostle-in-charge of the Pacific Mission. His health began to show definite improvement, and he was able to serve the church with increasing effectiveness. After seven years as pastor of the Santa Ana Branch, he was elected president of the Southern California District. For another seven years he was to hold this office; they were busy years filled with the routine of preaching, teaching, and visiting. Added to this were the countless details of administrative responsibility.

In these years of service in the Southern California District, he became a real friend to the Saints. To nearly everyone he is "Louie"—pronounced after the French fashion—and to many of the children, "Uncle Louie." When Apostle Charles Hield came out to take charge of the Pacific Mission, he remarked with amused surprise, "Louie not only knows the names of all the children in the district, he even knows the names of their dogs and cats."

Since his call to the office of evangelist, he and Madeline have made Santa Ana their permanent home. With preaching, visiting the sick, and giving patriarchal blessings, he has found a life rich in spiritual ministry. His experiences have given him a strong sense of God's watch care over his children as individuals, and of his continuous help in preparing men and women for the work he wants them to do.

"In looking back," Louis says, "it seems that every experience I have known has helped to prepare me for the work of an evangelist. Not only in my mature years but as a child God's hand has been over me, even, I firmly believe, in directing my parents to come to America that we might know his church."

Because his life has been motivated by an impelling desire to serve God, he has learned to put "first things first." In such a life there is inspiration for all others who have accepted responsibility in helping to build the kingdom of God here on earth.

PHYLLIS CARMICHAEL.

Letters

Two Shillings for God

Many years before I found this work, I prayed that God would lead me to his people. I also asked him to choose my companion in life for me, and for a time left it at that. About three or four years after that prayer, I found my wife and courted her for seven years before we were married.

Six years after our marriage, I found the church. This is how it came about. Since I was a boy of twelve I had been interested in religion, but I became so discouraged after a while with some things in the church I attended that I did not attend for quite a time. One day I felt a good spirit come over me and thought I would try again, but then some misfortune came my way. Work became slack, and I was forced to look for new employment. At last I got a job which paid eighteen shillings a week. At work one day I met a member of the Reorganized Church. He saw that I was interested in religion, so we had a talk. One particular thing he said that interested me was that he had the Holy Ghost. At this time he was chewing smoking tobacco and drinking. I said to him, "I have not received the Holy Ghost, and if God has given it to you, I am going to ask him why he has not given it to me." I thought I was entitled to this gift, for I was working hard, in my way, to do good to my fellow men. In all weather I used to go out street-preaching, sometimes with the water dripping from my clothes.

I wanted to find out more about the Holy Ghost he was talking of. He had promised to meet me and take me to the Saints' meeting place, but he did not come. "Never mind," I said to myself, "I will find out about this Holy Ghost." The next week he promised again to meet me outside the little room where the Saints worshiped. I went, but he was not there. A girl was standing by the door, and I asked her whether this man was inside, and she told me he was. Then I asked her a few things about the church, and she told me.

One of the things she mentioned was tithing. As an illustration she explained that if I had a pound left after I had bought all I needed, I should have to give two shillings to the Lord. I had just found a job at eighteen shillings a week, so I had little to give. Seventeen shillings went to my wife, and a shilling for my own pocket. If I joined this church, I should have to pay one penny tithing out of my shilling. But I was struck to my very soul about the matter, for I could see that it was absolutely fair; God only expected you to pay if you had an increase. So I told the young lady that if I were to find a pound, I would give the Lord two shillings, although I did not belong to the church.

I went up to the little room, but I found no Holy Ghost. When I looked up to the ceiling, however, I noticed a square hole. Now the man had told me that the Holy Ghost came in tongues of fire and rested on the heads of the Saints. So small wonder that I looked with interest at the hole. "Ah, that is where your Holy Ghost comes from," I thought. The next morning when the man asked how I liked the meeting, I began talking about that hole in the ceiling!

A week later I was on my way to the meeting again when I found a golden sovereign right opposite the little room! It had been run over by a passing tram car, so I took it to a jeweler's, but as it was damaged I received only eighteen shillings for it. Here came the rest. "Well, Lord," I said, "I picked up my pound—although I got only eighteen shillings for it—nevertheless I am going to give you your two shillings." So I gave the young lady in whose presence I had made my promise the two shillings for tithing. She did not want to take it because I did not belong to the church, but I realized I belonged to God. The next day, going round the corner of a street, I picked up two shillings, so after all the Lord made up the right amount to me.

Fast Every Tuesday

Some time ago when quite a number of the DeKalb, Illinois, Saints were ill, those who were well decided to set each Tuesday aside as a day for fasting and praying. The idea grew and now Tuesdays are still being observed for remembering the afflicted, both of the congregation and elsewhere. We are now contemplating adding Thursday as a fast day also.

We are writing this because we believe others will want to join us in the project. We feel that more prayers ascending to the throne of mercy will bring greater results.

Note of Thanks

I would like to thank all of the members and friends of the church for their interest and prayers for me during my recent illness. My health improved rapidly after returning from Holland, enabling me to carry a moderate schedule of activities. I can now look forward to an assignment to full-time missionary work at the coming General Conference.

While I am able to resume my work, I still need and ask for your prayers that my health may continue to be good enough to enable me to carry on the work which has been entrusted to me.

Appreciates Winholtz Article

I read with interest the article by Wilford G. Winholtz, "Christ the Radical." We are in need of more radicals. Had I not been one I would never have joined this church—it was not so easy in the 90's as it is now. Many of us who were baptized then did not even see an elder again for years. I was called a radical for joining, but I preferred that to being an apostate.

This gospel is for all. Christ received all nations, and a good Christian will love all people. On the battle field, all men's blood is the same color.

Let us move forward in 1950 in unity and oneness of purpose, continuing in prayer and good deeds.

HERALD HOUSE

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Potential Presidents - By Mabel Williams Crayne

ONLY A WOVEN WIRE fence separated them as they stood eyeing each other curiously. Finally George Washington Clark, age four, broke the silence. "Is your face dirty?" he asked timidly.

Abraham Lincoln Johnson, also age four, laughed and showed teeth as white as milk. "Naw," he said, "my face ain't dirty. My Mommie, she washed me good all over. Is you sick?"

"No," answered Georgie, "I'm not sick. My Daddy says I just need ex'cise, but Muvver says I gotta' have rest. What makes your hair and face all the same color?"

"Oh, Boy," laughed Abie, "I guess you jes' don't know you is the same all over. You jes' aint no color a' tall. My Mommie told me God made me, and he loves little boys wif color."

Georgie thought this over for a moment, then scratched his blond curls. "My Muvver told me that God loves ever'body. Don't you 'spose he loves us both even if we is funny?"

Abie laughed uproariously at this and made the last words into a sing-song refrain. "We is funny! We is funny!"

Georgie's eyes brightened, and he shouted and laughed with his new friend. "We is funny! We is funny!"

INSIDE THE HOUSE Mrs. Harvey Clark, known to her friends as Marie, had been busy all morning cleaning cupboards, and was not aware that new tenants had moved in next door. It was a corner lot, and the house faced on the other street. Georgie had always been such a quiet child that she could not understand the noise she now heard. Looking out the bedroom window she saw the boys, still separated by the wire fence, dancing up and down shrieking something at each other. At the same time a dark-skinned man came around to the back of the house. With her usually pretty mouth drawn into a severe straight line, she went to the telephone and called her husband's store. When he answered she said, "Harvey, can you come home for a little while? I need to talk with you. No, there is no one sick. No, I can't wait until lunch time. You know you are always late. It is something we must decide right now, and it won't wait. All right, come as soon as you can."

When Harvey Clark drove up in front of the house, he gave a peculiar shrill whistle and Georgie shrieked, "Daddy! Daddy! My Daddy has come home," and ran to the front yard. The little boy on the other side of the fence kept pace, and they arrived together.

Harvey swung his small son to his broad shoulders as Georgie shouted, "Look, Daddy! See the little boy. He's a gonna be my brother. You 'member? You said you might get me a little brother, but I want Abie. He's funny."

Harvey turned and smiled at the child and was rewarded by seeing the little face break into a smile that was all sunshine.

"Sure he's funny," he said to Georgie, "and so are you, Small Fry. You stay here with him until I go in to see your mother."

MARIE MET HIM at the door. "Well, Harvey," she said, "it has happened. Now, what are we going to do about it?"

"Do about what?" he asked. He knew what she meant and was only stalling for time. The former tenants of the house next door had lived there many years and had no children. Marie had been apprehensive ever since they moved away. She was a good woman in her way—she went to church regularly and taught a class of small boys, her own son included. No matter what she was doing, young George was uppermost in her mind. She insisted that he have only the best of companions so that his sweetness would remain unspoiled. Harvey had given up pleading for a normal life for the boy, for she just couldn't understand.

"Marie," he said, "let's face it. I know you wanted a little girl, but for goodness sake stop trying to make one out of our son. You smother every natural impulse the boy has. We can't go on like this."

"But, Harvey," said Marie, "this child is—"

Harvey interrupted, "The happiness on Georgie's face was enough for me. He just now told me that he wanted the boy for his brother, and I say, let him have him. Have you seen his mother?"

"No, I haven't," answered Marie with a show of impatience, "and I don't—"

"Careful, my girl, careful," cautioned Harvey. "Don't say anything you'll be sorry for. Even without seeing her I'll wager she will be a good friend and neighbor. Maybe it will make you feel better when I tell you that I knew they were moving in. In fact, I told Doctor Johnson about this house."

"Did you say Doctor Johnson?" asked Marie in a puzzled tone.

"Yes," said Harvey, "he has just moved here from Chicago and has fine references from there. He has his office upstairs over my store. From the equipment he moved in, it looks as though he is going to han-de his own X ray and everything. We named our son for a great man, Marie, and Doctor Johnson has done the same. Now let's work together to uphold the principles these famous men have lived and died for."

The Home Column

Harvey waited for some expression from Marie, but she remained silent. With a sigh he turned to go, saying, "Don't bother to fix lunch for me. I'll have something sent in. In the meantime, commune with your soul and see what you find there." He went out the door without a backward look.

MARIE WAS STUNNED. Harvey had never asserted himself like this. She sat down and tried to think things through—to commune with her soul. After a while the tears came. They seemed to wash away the hurt and bring a clearer vision. She prayed, "Dear Lord, forgive this little shriveled up soul of mine and help it to grow. Make me worthy to have so much of thy love and care. Give me wisdom and tolerance as my neighbor and I strive to teach little George Washington and little Abraham Lincoln how to find the better way of life."

She mused, "Abraham Lincoln was a homely man, but his soul was kind and beautiful. He struggled up from poverty to be the leader of our nation and set men free. I don't know but what this little boy may do something just as great."

That night Harvey worked until after Georgie had been put to bed. When he came home, he was carrying a honey-colored puppy in his arms. He stopped just inside the door. "Marie," he said softly, "this is up to you. A customer brought him in, and I couldn't resist. If you don't want him, I'll take him over to the Doctor, and he will keep him on his side of the fence."

Marie came to him and put her warm, smooth cheek against his, "Oh, Harvey, I do want him. And I want you and George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. Let's put a gate in the wire fence."

Thoughts on Gardening

SPRING WILL SOON BE HERE. Even with drifts of white cold outside the door, I notice the lilac buds are already beginning to swell, and the knobby red buds of the maple are getting their ruffles. Guess we all look forward to spring—a fresh start, a chance to begin again and do better.

Yesterday I cut off a few branches of lilac and maple. In the sunny south window they look cheerful in my great-grandmother's Englishware pitcher. I like to watch the leaves open. The maple start out red, gradually turning greener as they open until they are all green with just a trace of red around the edges. The lilacs are a refreshing clean color.

Reading haphazardly through the Great Book, I came across the story of Jeremiah telling the exiled Children of Israel to "plant gardens and eat the fruit of them." It caught my interest, and I began hunting more information about gardening in Bible times. I found that the word garden was derived from a Persian word meaning paradise. When we plant a garden, we can reach back 2,000 years to Bible days. It is with a garden that the Bible begins in Genesis, and ends in Revelation with a vision of trees bearing fruit. A man was often buried in his garden; thus it served him both in life and death. Gardens were used for many activities besides growing food. Sometimes they were the scene of forbidden sacrifices surviving heathen worship. Often a garden served as the pleasant gathering place for friends or a haven of rest for some weary wayfarer. Jesus frequently went into the garden to pray and rest. It was in the Garden of Gethsemane he made his great decision, and in another garden—that of Joseph of Arimathea—that his body was laid in a sepulcher.

Plants played a significant role in Bible days. As they clothed the land of Palestine with rich verdure, they also clothed the thoughts and speeches of the prophets and leaders. They were the symbols through which spiritual ideas could be translated. Thinking about it in this way, a garden is sort of a spiritual place. Winifred Mary Letts once wrote:

That God once loved a garden
We learn in Holy writ
And seeing gardens in the spring
I well can credit it.

From My Garden

By James F. Keir

In my garden of beautiful thoughts are some that have been planted there by my friends. I want to share them with you.

The first was planted by Leonard Lea. "In the presence of Noble Thoughts a man's mind will grow."

Many times I have felt the blood tingle in my veins as I have entertained wholesome thoughts. They are uplifting, inspiring, and health-giving. They furnish a channel through which the spirit of God may flow.

The second was planted by John Garver.

"Do not smother your wife with hugs and kisses and then let her carry in the wood."

Love finds its expression only in action. When not so expressed, love dies. Our greatest happiness is found in what we do for others and not in what they do for us.

The third was planted by my friend, John Rushton.

"The power of Christ is the power of an ascending life."

He who attaches himself to Christ finds himself walking in the pathway that leads upward. There is in him a constant reaching up to gather the choicest fruit from the Tree of Life. Love of God and Love of Man is generated by intimate association with Christ. Only by knowing him intimately can we become valiant witnesses for him.

A New Library Room

The new main library room at Graceland has won popular approval of students. The Graceland library has had several locations in the past fifty years, but the one best known by the greatest number of students is on the third floor of Briggs Hall. For many years the entire area on the east side of the third floor hall was the library. More recently the major portion of the west side of the hall has been utilized also as library area. But the change made last summer has done the most to make the library of greatest use to the greatest number of students.

Planned by a faculty library committee with the counsel of a leading library planner, the new Graceland library is one vast hall, covering the entire third floor of Briggs. Gone are the partitions which made the long center hall separating the two main parts of the library. Now students reach a landing at the north end of the third floor and immediately enter one of the large wood and glass doors leading into the library.

Gone, too, is the old library system in which a student presented his book needs to a library assistant who procured the book for the student. Now much like the practice in self-service grocery stores, the student has familiarized himself with the locations of books on shelves placed conveniently throughout the entire library area and waits on himself. If he wants to take a book home to his room, he checks it out as he leaves the library.

Added features are a browsing area with easy chairs for the student who wants to go book-exploring, and a faculty corner with similar chairs where the faculty may find professional literature in the field of education.

Annual Alumni Gift

Graceland alumni have been responding liberally to the appeal of the First Annual Alumni Gift for Graceland. In the first phase of the campaign the Independence, Missouri, alumni alone contributed more than $500 to the fund. Center Place alumni are expected to give more than twice that amount as the drive swings into its second phase in February. Several years ago $500 would have been the total amount expected from alumni throughout the world toward a project in any one year.

The Annual Alumni Gift is a new departure in fund-raising for Graceland. In other years alumni have donated to a certain project and have paid annual dues. Now dues have been eliminated as well as projects. Under the new plan, the alumnus who is loyal to Graceland and desires to further a part of the program which makes Graceland truly great will contribute annually to the college much as he would to the Community Chest or the Red Cross in his own community. The alumnus has an opportunity to indicate how he wants his gift used, but he gives with the understanding that his gift is unrestricted as to use. The decision on how the fund thus obtained will be used is made at the end of the alumni year in October.

Most colleges and universities in America have similar annual fund drives. Gifts obtained from alumni in this way are used to further such college essentials as gift scholarships, the building program, increases in teachers' salaries, and development of research. Annually millions of dollars are contributed to American colleges in this way.

Her Editorial Wins

Jane Cook, a freshman from Providence, Rhode Island, was the winner of a recent contest among Graceland freshmen to pick outstanding editorials for the Graceland Tower, student newspaper. The title of her editorial was "Co-operation Must Be Our Library Policy." The contest was sponsored by the Student Publications Board which governs policies of the student newspaper and yearbook. The English department assisted the board in conducting the competition.

Faculty in the News

President Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., of Graceland College was recently made a member of the Executive Board of the Council of North Central Junior Colleges. Junior colleges in twenty states of the North Central region belong to the council.

Deam Ferris, teacher of biology and natural science and director of audiovisual services at Graceland, is the author of an article appearing in the November issue of The Scientific Monthly. Title of the six-page illustrated piece is "Photography as a Basic Research Tool."

R. Edwin Browne, Graceland's Director of Public Relations and Alumni Secretary, has been named chairman of district eight of the American College Public Relations Association. The district includes most of the colleges and universities in a six-state area: Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, North and South Dakota.

ESCONDIDO, CALIFORNIA.—On January 16, Pastor Peter S. Whalley presided at a business meeting to elect officers for 1950.

Before the business meeting, two children, Alta Lorretta Page, and Alfred Laurie Page, were blessed.

Officers elected for this year were Benjamin Sanders, assistant pastor; Mrs. Kenneth Arkley, secretary and music director; Mrs. Viola Bogue, director of religious education; Newell Martin, treasurer; Mrs. Mary Wing, women's department leader; Kenneth Arkley and L. K. Day, auditors; Mrs. Newell Martin and Mrs. Benjamin Sanders, Zion's League leaders; and Benjamin Sanders, reporter.

Following the business, a potluck dinner was enjoyed.—Reported by BENJAMIN SANDERS.

SHERRILL, NEW YORK.—Thirty-nine morning services were held during 1949, and on two different Sundays, meetings were held with the Syracuse Branch.

The last week of November, Brother William Guthrie preached a series of sermons. An average of fifty-six people attended. Following this series two people were baptized in Rome, New York.

The Messiah, broadcast from Kansas City, could be heard very clearly on the radio by people of the branch.

The women's department are studying the Book of Mormon. The Story of the Church is also being used in a study class.—Reported by MARY L. MESLE.

KITSILANO, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—During the last six months of 1949, three children—Joan Hale, Marilyn Peterson, and Heather Allish; and three adults—Norman Winter, Bo Peterson, and Esther Winter were baptized.

On November 20 an ordination service was held in the Legion Hall. District President Samuel G. Clark was in charge of this service, assisted by Elders Norman Morrison and Stanley Taylor, Teacher Bert Embleton and Priest H. Stanbridge. The men ordained were Clifford Taylor, elder; Norman Winter, priest; Norman Allish, teacher; and Glen Thornley, deacon.

The annual Christmas tree and entertainment was held December 17. The children presented a program, and Brother Clifford Taylor showed slides on the "Other Wise Men." Gifts and treats were distributed among the children.—From The District Challenger.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—The priesthood and their families recently gathered at the home of Pastor Francis M. Bishop to give him a surprise birthday party. They reviewed his life in skit form and then each one told of one of his experiences with him.

On Christmas morning the junior department of the church school gave "a birthday party for Jesus." They each brought something wrapped in white to send overseas; then took a piece of Jesus' birthday cake home to share with someone.

Springfield Branch is happy because one of its dreams is coming true—that of building a mission. The mission is now being built. They are working hard, giving up their spare time to help construct the building. The roof is on now.

Brother M. P. Baker and three girls from the Lebanon area were here January 1, 1950, for a very impressive baptismal service at 2:00. Nancy Scott was baptized by Brother Baker, Wilma Spinnett and Marilyn Whittaker were baptized by Brother A. E. Starks. They were confirmed the same day, by Elders Starks and Baker.

Pauline Garritt was also baptized at the Springfield church by Brother F. M. Bishop on January 15. She is from Buffalo. She was confirmed by Brothers Bishop and Starks.

Sunday, January 23, Bill M. Bayless spoke on "Race Relations." He invited a colored quartet to sing at the service. The Duncan quartet is Roseann, Louise, Bob, and Howard Duncan.—Reported by BARBARA BERRIDGE BAYLESS.

VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—A special missionary series was held for six Sunday nights starting with the first Sunday in November. Elder Edwin Spargo was the speaker for this series. Charts and other illustrations were used.

The adult division under the leadership of Brother Charles Hutton held a surprise party at the home of Sister Mogg.

Charles Stanbridge, junior church pastor, recently presented a number of beautiful framed religious pictures to winners among the children in their recent contest which included, attendance, behavior, bringing a friend, and other such things. Brother and Sister Stanbridge have given much of their time, money, and talent to further the work of the church among the children.

Dick Mogg, formerly of Chilliwack, was recently ordained a deacon.—From The District Challenger.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—Nancy Joyce, infant daughter of Alma and Ruth Piedt was blessed by Pastor J. A. Gendron.

Seventy E. A. Ledsworth delivered a series of six illustrated lectures from January 8 to 15 inclusive. In spite of the cold weather, the attendance was good. Following the services Elder Ledsworth baptized three adults, Charles Reginal Bright, Mrs. Dorothy Ellen Bright, and Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Greig.

Apostle C. George Mesley and Seventy E. Y. Hunker will conduct a School of Evangelism in February. The annual youth rally will be held on February 25 and 26.—MRS. C. E. DIGGLE.

ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS.—At the annual business meeting held January 11, these officers were elected: George Sinclair, pastor; Don Seaner and Ismael Rogerson, counselors; Mae Cowgill, secretary; Addie Sears, treasurer; Lillian M. Wilcox, organist and church custodian; Phylliss Cowgill, church school director; and F. A. Roberts, publicity agent.

A committee was appointed to consider improvements on the chapel.—Reported by FREDERIC W. ROBERTS.

WALNUT PARK, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.—The evening of December 4, the Girls' Choir, directed by Winifred Dillee, sang special numbers. The following Sunday evening, December 11, the Zion's League choir, directed by Allene Lucas, sang for the congregation.

The women's department held their mass meeting at the church December 15. The Daughters of Zion held a Christmas party in the basement of the church on December 16. On December 17, the Zion's League went to Gardner Lake for the annual Winter Holiday. Zion's League presented a Christmas play for the branch on December 18, and went Christmas caroling on December 21. A gift service was held December 25 at which the juniors, primaries, and Girls' Choir sang. Harry Black, a Graceland College student who comes from England, gave a solo at this service also.

Visiting speakers for the month of December were: Elders Glaude A. Smith and C. V. Graham. Babies blessed were Karl Elmer Cox, William Jamard Cox, and Russell Wayne McCarroll. Baptisms for the year of 1949 totaled fifty-one.

On January 5 Walnut Park was host to the city-wide women's department for a mass meeting. Most outstanding news for the branch was the application for tithing envelopes by 100 Zion's Leaguers and 105 junior stewards. Approximately sixty members of the congregation participated in the city-wide religious survey, January 22.

Children blessed in January were Kathleen Yvonne Horne, daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Horne; Barbara Ann Hiatt, daughter of Brother and Sister William Hiatt; Judy Annette Taylor, daughter of Brother and Sister Albert Taylor.

Guest speakers have been Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe, Bishop H. L. Livingston, Seventy E. Y. Hunker, Apostle E. J. Gleazer; Elder W. E. Wakeman, and Elder Orlin Crownover.—Reported by MRS. ELLA WILLIAMS.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—On January 8 Mrs. Sarah Barber was honored on the occasion of her ninetieth birthday. She was brought to the altar and presented with a gift from the Leader Group of the women's department by Mrs. Bertha Rumery. A certificate of honor from the branch was presented by Mrs. Florence Fisher. At ninety years of age, Mrs. Barber is active and attends church services regularly.

Apostle Reed Holmes visited the congregation on January 18. The cottage meeting leaders are Urban Black, Eugene Carter, Ralph Hardy, Edgar Woodward, and Pastor A. W. Sheehy assisted by Sanford L. Fisher and John W. Foster.

Two pictures that have recently been given to the branch by Sister Florence Fisher have been placed in the lower auditorium. One picture, which is of the Nauvoo Temple was retouched and cleaned by Arthur Beverage. Leonard Graham paid to have the glass and frame of the picture repaired.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—Joseph E. Baldwin, bishop of Ontario, was guest speaker on Inventory Day, January 15. The first service at 10:00 a.m. was a prayer and fellowship meeting, with Pastor Oliver in charge and Bishop Baldwin presenting the exhortation. At 11:00 a.m. the adult church school was dispensed with, and Church School Director U. E. Essery asked Bishop Baldwin to talk on the "Law of Stewardship." Brother Baldwin made a very fine presentation to a large group in attendance. This acted as preparation for the "Inventory Service" which was held at 7:00 p.m. Zion's League prepared the program under the direction of Leslie W. Hill, young people's supervisor. The service theme was "My Stewardship." Each member of the League participated by presenting short talks on the various aspects of stewardships. Pastor Oliver was in charge assisted by two League members, Priest Cameron Jay and Teacher Harry Horsley. Bishop Baldwin presented a challenge to the membership in regards to their compliance with the Financial Law. The membership and Zion's League then came to the altar and presented to the bishop their Financial Reports for 1949.

It was noted by Bishop Baldwin, that the Hamilton Branch had increased the number of tithepayers by twelve over the 1948 total as well as contributing $100 more than 1948. The ministry of Bishop Baldwin was of high standard and assisted in a large way in the making of Inventory Day one long to be remembered in Hamilton Branch. We plan to hold another such service next January.

Out of fifty-one present at this service, three were nonmembers, of the remaining forty-eight, many were husband and wife yet there were filed 24 statements and 6 in process of being filed. This is considered to be excellent, and is an indication of the willingness of the membership to comply with the financial law.

On February 19 Hamilton will celebrate its forty-ninth anniversary as a branch of the church. In February 1901, the late R. C. Evans came to Hamilton and organized the local branch. Not one of the original members present on that day are alive today. Elder Carl Muir of London will be our guest speaker. We hope it will be a repeat order of the fine experiences of the Inventory Day in every respect.—Reported by MAX KETTLEWELL.

VINITA, OKLAHOMA.—A group of church members have been holding meetings since last April. There has been an average attendance of thirty-five at these meetings. Elder C. D. Wilson, the Fairland pastor, and Elder Lea Lamons are in charge. Some of the members come forty miles to attend the services.—LELA PARKHURST.

CORRECTION.—Two errors appeared in the Wichita, Kansas, "Briefs" on page 18 of the January 2, 1950, issue of The Saints' Herald. E. E. Wilson should have read J. J. Wilson; and Floyd A. Bedwell should have read Ellis L. Bedwell.—Reported by MARIAN L. MANUEL.

THE MARBLE STEPS to the right of the great Basilica of St. Peter were crowded with Christmas pilgrims. From early morning until late in the evening, the devout of Rome's Catholic shivered on the cold stairs leading to the apartments of His Holiness Pope Pius XII, hoping for a rewarding glimpse of the hierarchy of the Roman church on its way to pay Christmas homage to the Pope. For this was the second day of the Holy Year, the year of the Great Return, the second of 365 days when a visit to the churches of Rome would wipe away all sins. Other Catholics than Italians were taking advantage of this opportunity. Jostling each other on the steps were pilgrims from half a dozen European countries, a few even from America.

I looked at my watch and saw that we were early. The official summons in my hand said that the pope would receive Signorina Biloine Whiting in a special audience at 11:30 a.m., and it was now barely 11:15. Not twenty-four hours had passed since the summons had been delivered to our pension, six floors above the Via dell Corso. It had come Christmas afternoon by a Papal courier who insisted on personally placing the missive in my hands and having me sign for it like a special delivery letter. I had almost given up hope of receiving a summons. Earlier in the week I had laid my credentials before Franklin Gowen, assistant to Myron Taylor, who is the special representative from President Truman to the Vatican. His promise to get me an audience when no general audiences were being given had been encouraging, but as the days went by and no summons arrived, I decided that with Christmas and the Holy Year, the Pope was too busy to see non-Catholic journalists. Then, two days before we were to leave Rome, the summons came and precipitated almost as much excitement among the Italian maids as it did in us.

One maid, after carefully examining the Papal crest on the letterhead, undertook to instruct me on what to wear. A black veil was imperative, she insisted, as were hose, long sleeves, and a high neckline. However, it was my friend and traveling companion, Jo Skelton, who came across with the only concrete offer of help. I could wear her black hat, she said, and carry her dark gloves. Dressed in my borrowed respectability, we were leaving the pension when the maid stopped us at the door to loan me her crucifix. In her halting English, liberally sprinkled with Italian, she asked me to invoke the Pope's blessing on it. I'm afraid that I received the religious symbol a bit gingerly, but later I was glad I had it. The cool metal was something to hold on to . . .

THE THRONG on the steps had not dispersed while we waited, so leaving my unseemly red coat with Jo, who was to await me outside, I pushed my way through the crowd to the Swiss guards at the top of the steps. The guard in his yellow, blue, and red costume designed by Michelangelo lowered his medieval spear long enough to let me pass into a long hall lined with benches on which lounged other guards, all in the bloused knee breeches and pointed silver helmets of the Swiss guards. The captain at a desk examined my summons before leading me to an elevator within the Vatican. We rose three floors to stop at the edge of a courtyard lined with fragments of statues. The elevator operator motioned for me to cross the courtyard and enter a doorway on the far side. There I was met by a resplendent Papal lackey in a coat and knee breeches of red damask. He eyed Jo's saucy black hat a bit skeptically and asked me in English if I had a black veil. Since it was quite obvious that I did not, he added that a veil wasn't absolutely necessary and motioned for me to follow him.

Although I tried to keep track of the rooms through which we passed in solemn procession, I soon lost count, for each was more breath-takingly beautiful than the one before. Although the only furnishings in any of the rooms were a few chairs or a table against the wall, they did not seem empty because of the beauty of the wall hangings and the ornateness of the carved ceilings. Guards in each room sprang to attention as we paraded through, saluting the lackey and bowing to me. And in each berlains in the full-dress uniform of a Spanish officer of two centuries ago with a black coat, sword, white ruff, and a golden chain. In another room were noble guards made up of members of royal Italian families. They wore top boots, white breeches, helmets with plumes and horsetails, scarlet tunics with gilt shoulder straps, the whole covered by a long white cape. In still another chamber gendarmes in high black busbies were on duty.

The final room was larger than the preceding ones and was lined from floor to gilt ceiling in red tapestry. Around the room were straight-backed chairs on which sat eleven very uncomfortable and nervous Americans. I was the twelfth.

The bells in St. Peter's rang out 11:30 as I took my seat beside a diplomat in black morning coat and white tie. But I was in plenty of time, for with all the ceremony of opening the Holy Door and inaugurating the Holy Year, the Pope was not to receive us until almost noon.

THE HOLY DOOR had been opened almost forty-eight hours before, attended by an impressive array of foreign dignitaries, diplomats accredited to the Holy See, cardinals, and a few laymen of the church who received pilgrim passes. At 10:00 a. m. the Pope, believed by four hundred million people to be the Vicar of Christ, struck with a golden hammer the wall sealing the Holy Door and cried, "Open the Door of Justice for me."

The choir chanted, "I will enter and confess to God."

The Pope struck again and intoned, "I shall enter thy house, Oh, Lord. I shall worship in thy temple."

A third time he struck. "Open the door, for God is with us."

Then the wall was torn away, washed with Holy Water, and the Pope knelt praying while the choir sang, "All the earth exults in God."

"This is the Door of God," the Pope chanted. Holding a crucifix and a golden candle draped in white linen, the Pope stepped through the Holy Door, thus opening the year of the "great pardon and of the great return."

The first Holy Year on record, according to the Rome Daily American, was a surprising event, and the most surprised person of all was the man who proclaimed it, Pope Boniface VIII. The Christian world had reached a high degree of chaos by 1300, and there was general fear that things would get worse. Then, on the first of January, 1300, crowds began to gather at St. Peter's Basilica. No one seemed to know why the crowds gathered, but rumor went around that the Pope was about to proclaim a Holy Year with a general remission of sins. Day after day the crowds grew. A puzzled Pope Boniface sent researchers to look through church records to find if there had ever been a Holy Year. The researchers reported no sign of one. This went on for nearly two months with the crowds reporting they had heard of a Holy Year and a great pardon.

On February 22, Pope Boniface decided to settle matters. From a pulpit set up at San Giovanni in Laterano, he read the Papal Bull proclaiming the first Holy Year. He decreed that to acquire indulgence, the faithful of Rome must visit St. Peter's and St. Paul's thirty times. Foreigners were required to visit the two basilicas only fifteen times.

Pope Alexander VI, who was not above fighting bulls personally in the square before St. Peter's, must be credited with instituting the ceremony of the Holy Door.

WE TWELVE AMERICANS had been waiting for twenty minutes with what calmness we could muster when the Master of the Household in a black cassock with purple trim and a wide purple mantle came in and called the roll. Finding us all nervously present, he ushered us into the adjoining room where the audience with the Pope was to take place. This room was smaller than the waiting room and was dominated by a red throne on a raised platform. Opposite the throne against the wall was a large ebony cross on which hung an ivory figure of Christ crucified, his feet resting on a realistic skull of ebony. Two marble tables with blue turquoise vases and a few chairs completed the furnishings. The room the guards were different.

One room was guarded by chamberlains. The Master of the Household arranged us around the room against the wall according to a chart he had previously made, and after making certain that we were standing in our proper places he told us to wait.

Protocol of the Vatican decrees that everyone kneel when the Pope enters the room. Catholics usually kneel a second time and perform a triple reverence when the Pope is presented to them and kiss the Papal ring. At the American Embassy I had been instructed to address him as "Your Holiness." I was contemplating the Papal seal in the rug and rehearsing my little speech when the woman next to me suddenly whispered, "I'm glad I don't have a picture of the inside of my stomach." I was going to offer her my crucifix to hold when I noticed at least twenty rosaries and several large crucifixes in her hand. Apparently she too had been waylaid by the maids of her household.

And then he came. The first I became aware of his presence was the sudden kneeling of everyone in the room. We all remained on our knees until motioned to our feet by the Master of the Household. I rose to find Pope Pius regarding me with what might have been amusement at the awkwardness of my genuflection.

Although we talked for three or four minutes I have little recollection of what was said. The Pope spoke excellent English in a soft low voice, though he had some difficulty understanding me. I remember noticing that he was wearing a white ermine-trimmed cassock and white skull cap. He looked all of his seventy-four years and seemed ascetic to the point of frailty. As he turned to leave me he slipped a medal into my hand and asked a blessing upon myself, my family, and all of my friends. Then he extended his hand, palm down, for me to kiss his ring. I remembered to take a good look at the famed ring, a ruby engraved with a Papal symbol, and then took his hand and shook it.

CARDINAL EURENIO PACELLI became Pope Pius XII March 2, 1939, with the pronouncing of the magic words, "Receive the tiara adorned with three crowns and know that thou art Father of princes and kings, Rector of the world, Vicar of our Savior Jesus Christ."

Despite such a pompous beginning, the Pope leads a strenuous, tight, and monotonous life. He breakfasts on black coffee and "dunked" bread, shaves with an electric razor, says mass in a private chapel next to the library, and lunches alone on egg-nog. Afternoons he takes long strenuous walks in the Vatican gardens and exercises in his gym next to his bedrooms. His telephone is of solid gold and was designed by Marconi himself. His number is 101, although no one but the Secretary of State may call him without special permission.

Although my visit to the Pope was prompted mainly by curiosity and a desire to write a story about the man who speaks for God, approximately 2,000,000 non-Italians will visit the city of the Vatican this year firm in the belief that there is some power in that walled city and its benign little ruler that can open the very gates of heaven. To make their visit easier, the Vatican has prepared a Pilgrim's Envelope containing a prayer book, identification card, guide book to Rome, and a Holy Year badge and medal. The identification card is to help the pilgrim over modern barriers and will be honored in some countries as a passport and will allow the bearer a reduction on train fares and admissions to Italian art galleries and museums. Already thirty thousand pilgrims have arrived in Rome, a few to see the Pope, but most to kiss the foot of St. Peter in the Basilica, confident that they have been purified and sanctified in the Holy Year of the Great Return and the Great Pardon.

Matthew 23: 8. And John was to give emphasis to the principle of love that would unite them: "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."—I John 3: 14.

"Abideth in death." Our world abides in death today because of a lack of love, because we do not understand brotherhood.

What We Can Do

What can we do about brotherhood? World-wide brotherhood must begin at home if it is to reach the world. We have our minority groups, and we have not been kind to them. We have made them unhappy and uncomfortable. We have been cruel to them. We must change, or suffer. We must respect them and their rights, and their dignity as human beings. We cannot promote brotherhood throughout the world, we can never have peace, until we assure brotherhood here at home. L. J. L.

stewardship to the practicing of stewardship of possessions on the part of many more individuals.

THE GOAL OF 15,000 TITHING STATEMENT FILERS HAS BEEN SET FOR 1950. While the tithing statements are coming to mean more to the church each year, increased numbers of statements are not of themselves of primary importance. It is tremendously important that insight into the real nature of stewardship is demonstrated in increasing measure as church members assume stewardship responsibilities today by making the accounting.

Here is an opportunity for all to participate in the work of God as he has directed us in latter-day revelation, and members everywhere are called to give willing and generous obedience to the financial law of the church.

DEATHS

CODDINGTON.—James Riley, son of William and Malinda Coddington, was born May 29, 1876, near Waco, Iowa, and died December 28, 1949, at a hospital in Albany, Oregon, following seven months of illness. In the fall of 1885 he and his parents moved to Alexander, Kansas, in a covered wagon; it was here he grew to manhood. On July 29, 1907, he was married to Mary E. Anthony, a widow; five children were born to them. After the death of a son, Dan, they moved to Albany, where Mr. Coddington spent the remainder of his life. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1910.

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Lucie; three sons: Theodore, Arthur, and Gene; a stepson, L. V. Anthony; a brother, John Coddington of Fredonia, Kansas; and two sisters: Mrs. Eva Teeters and Mrs. May Thompson of Independence, Missouri. Burial was in Willamette Memorial Park.

BROANER.—Martha, was born December 4, 1853, at Taylorville, Kansas, and died January 19, 1950, at Mapleton, Kansas. She was married on May 10, 1874, to Henry Broaner, who preceded her in death forty-four years ago. Although she was reared a Methodist, she was converted to the Restored Gospel in 1891. For the past twenty-six years, she had made her home with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Graham, at Mapleton.

She is survived by 214 descendants: nine children, fifty-nine grandchildren, 123 great-grandchildren, and twenty-five great-great-grandchildren. Three daughters and a son preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Mapleton, Lee Quick and A. B. Dennis officiating.

CROWNOVER.—Eric Douglas, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Crownover of Coulee Dam, Washington, was born on January 7, 1950, and died the same day. Funeral services were conducted at the Merager Mortuary, Elder L. N. Johnson officiating. Burial was in the Almira, Washington, cemetery. The parents and two sisters, Pamela and Dola, survive.

CONNER.—Lieutenant Peter Bentham, son of Peter Gates and Elizabeth Bentham Conner, was born June 5, 1921, and was killed in January, 1944, in an airplane accident at Arraca, Gold Coast, Africa. He attended public school in Sherrard, Illinois, and was a student at Western State Teacher's College in Macomb, Illinois, before enlisting in the Army Air Corps. He took his training in Texas and Georgia, becoming a medium bomber pilot. Later in his military career, he received the Air Medal and Distinguished Flying Cross for spending 310 hours in the air and completing fifty successful missions in India and China. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since boyhood.

He is survived by his father, P. G. Conner of Sherrard. Military services were held January 20, 1950, at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Illinois, Elder Lyle Woodstock officiating. Burial was in the national cemetery on the island.

BOUD.—William Clegg, was born August 4, 1877, at Keokuk, Iowa, and died at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs on January 25, 1950. He was graduated from a jewelers and watchmakers school when he was nineteen and followed that trade throughout his life. Eight years ago he moved to Council Bluffs where he was employed by the Kulesh Jewelry Store. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 23, 1948.

He is survived by his wife, Iris, of Council Bluffs; a daughter, Mrs. William Marchino of Long Beach, California; two sisters: Mrs. O. A. Kabrick of St. Peter, Minnesota, and Mrs. W. Patton of San Jose, California; and one grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Memorial Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

HILL.—Mary Ione, daughter of David and Florence Gamet, was born at Lamoni, Iowa, on October 6, 1920, and died at her home in Cameron, Missouri, on January 27, 1950. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church at the age of eight. On January 12, 1941, she was married to George E. Hill, Jr.; two children were born to them. She was operated on last June at Mayo Clinic and returned several times for treatment. She was very patient in her affliction and died peacefully.

She leaves her husband; a son, Terry Don, seven; and a daughter, Connie Sue, ten months. Funeral services were held at the Christian Church in Cameron, Elders Robert Farnham and Marvin Fry officiating. Interment was in Floral Hills Gardens, Kansas City, Missouri.

 YOUR READING

Reading tastes and intellectual standards of the American public are improving, if one may judge by book purchases last year. Nonfiction outsold fiction by an impressive percentage. Among the nonfiction best sellers were "The Seven Storey Mountain," by Thomas Merton; "The Greatest Story Ever Told," by Fulton Oursler; and "Peace of Soul," by Fulton J. Sheen; all in the religious field. The best selling novel was also religious, "The Big Fisherman," by Lloyd Douglas. . . . P. S. has a favorite, "Answer Without Ceasing," by Margaret Lee Runbeck, which deals with answers to prayer. It is a book that should appeal to all classes, from the university intelligentsia to the humble readers who make no literary pretensions.

 ARE YOU SAVED?

Some people have been worried by the statement in Revelation, chapter 14, about the 144,000 persons who have the "Father's name written in their foreheads," thinking that out of all earth's millions of people, these are the only ones who will be saved.

That is a mistake. The 144,000, apparently, are only the choir, for they will be learning a new song.

In chapter 7, John tells, after he saw the 144,000 of the children of Israel, how "After this I beheld a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. . . . These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." So, if we behave ourselves, there should be room for us too.

 DOG DAYS

Life is a cheerful proposition for a dog. He always has his clothes on, and is always ready to go someplace. He is like the king's court jester: he is kept for entertainment, and the deeper worries of his master never touch him at all. Think of all the things which bother us that mean nothing whatever to a dog: clocks (especially time clocks), schedules, speaking engagements, styles, public opinion, the international crisis, stomach ulcers, adolescence, religion, jobs (here you may add most of your troubles). His only real problem is created by the "itch-hikers that travel with him, and he can sit down and give them a good scratching any time he wishes.

 NOT MAD

Some time ago there was a big row in the baseball circles of a large eastern city. A lot of ball players and officials were very unhappy with each other. Newspaper reporters got hold of it and fanned the flames of trouble by interviewing the men to see what they had to say and then printing it in the papers. People who "couldn't take it were dishing it out" in liberal portions.

Reporters finally reached one man who had managed to keep his lips buttoned. They queried and prodded him. "I ain't mad at nobody," he surlied at them, and then stopped talking.

Ungrammatical, but a good piece of business. Couldn't we all take a lesson from it? A fine New Year's resolution would be, "I'm not going to be mad at anybody this year."

Everyone Vote

1950 is to be a political year. The citizens of the United States will choose thirty-six senators and all members of the House of Representatives, as well as many state and city officials. So now, early in the year and before our plea can be thought of as favoring any specific party or candidate, we say to the members of the church who are also American citizens: "Be sure to exercise your franchise. Everybody vote." And what we say to members of the church in the United States we say, in principle, to members of the church everywhere: "Everyone vote."

There are some among us who regard politics as a sordid affair. In many places and on many occasions, this may be true. But it is not necessarily true. It is true only insofar as politicians are sordid persons; only insofar as the business of government is left entirely to selfish men or is given only spasmodic attention by men of good will.

The Saints were admonished long ago that "honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2. We have been impressed that for our people today this means more than appears from a casual reading. Honest and good and wise men should be sought out diligently and upheld steadfastly. And as part of our diligent searching some should look steadily and honestly into their own hearts and lives to see if, perchance, they now qualify as such men; or if they can so qualify by diligent, sustained, and devoted effort.

Citizens discharge an important function when they exercise their franchise with intelligent understanding. But some must go further than this. If politics is to be redeemed, some among us must be willing to work in the precincts and wards and on committees, and to get out the votes, as well as to head the tickets. Surely, for some of us, this is included in the obligation of diligence so reasonably laid upon us.

One of the marks of the Zionically motivated citizen is his eagerness to be of both immediate and continuing service to his fellow men. Here is a notable area for such service. Many can and should make distinguished contributions in local, state, and national affairs. Everyone should vote.

Latter Day Saints Are Dependable

General Conference housing reservations are coming in every day. Many nonmember homes have been made available because of local press notices and personal solicitations from neighbors. Every year some of these reservations are not used because of last minute changes, and this has caused ill will for the church in general.

It is well to "play safe" and make your reservation if you have any intention of coming, but it is important that you cancel your reservation promptly when you learn you cannot attend Conference. Should this happen in the last three or four days, telegraph the Housing Committee so the place may be made available to others or so the hostess is released from further obligations to the committee.

News & Notes

MOVING TO INDEPENDENCE

President Israel A. Smith announces that Apostle W. Wallace Smith and his family have left their home in Portland, Oregon, and plan to make their home in the vicinity of Zion. Their furniture and household supplies have been sent to Independence.

APOSTLE PERCY E. FARROW

On the first week end of February, the Pittsburg and Wellsburg, Ontario, congregations were visited by Brother Farrow. He took part in the ordination of Brother Rodgers to the office of evangelist.

Sister Farrow is in the St. Joseph's Hospital in Sarnia, Ontario, where she has undergone a serious operation. She is improving now and gaining back her health.

APOSTLE E. J. GLEAZER

On February 12 members of the Lamon Stake elected their delegates for the General Conference. The guest speaker for the occasion was Apostle E. J. Gleazer who spoke to the conference on the theme, "Live for the Kingdom." The Lamon Stake is one of the ten areas under his supervision.

NEWS FROM APOSTLE MAURICE L. DRAPER

Bishop D. O. Chesworth held a series of preaching services ending February 5 in the Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, Branch. Brother Chesworth is now speaking in Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Brother Draper held meetings in Niagara Falls, New York, from January 29 to February 5. A large audience attended the inspiring services.

The last of January Brother Draper and the local priesthood made a re-location survey of the Brooklyn Branch. The people were eager and willing to co-operate.

Brother Almer W. Sheehy reports that members in Boston are supporting the Sunday evening cottage meetings that are carried on by the local priesthood.

Brother Donald E. Harvey held a series of preaching services in Beals, Maine. The branch is gaining in interest and members.

Members in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, have just purchased a $19,000 brick building for housing the Northeast Mission congregation.

PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE

Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, and Seventy J. H. Yager conducted a priesthood institute for the Kentucky and Tennessee District at Memphis, Tennessee, February 10, 11, 12. They report a small but enthusiastic gathering. The time was filled with classwork, worship services, and an unusually high quality of social fellowship among the priesthood and their wives. Memphis Saints are to be congratulated on their beautiful new church building and its equipment, also upon their unusually fine opportunities for evangelism.

HIGH RANKING

Twelve nurses represented the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital when graduates from twenty-six schools of Nursing in Missouri took the State Board examination in October. These nurses had a very high ranking, none falling below sixth place in any subject and averaging third and fourth in most subjects. The Independence nurses were competing with two university schools and five schools that have a college affiliation.

Testify of Him

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." — John 1: 29

John's Testimony

John the Baptist knew that Jesus was to be his successor. He recognized that Jesus was to be incomparably greater than himself. In a human way, he could easily have been jealous. He could have resisted. But he knew better. He yielded everything to his Lord.

He gave the world a great declaration concerning Jesus: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Jesus came in a literal sense to take away the sin of the world with the gospel of righteousness. He brought faith in God, and the cleansing of body and soul in the waters of baptism. He gave men a fresh start by relieving them of the burden of mistakes and sin clinging to them from the past.

Peter's Testimony

Many rumors had arisen concerning Jesus in the days of his ministry. Some of them came to his ears. He knew that his disciples were hearing them, possibly were influenced by them. He questioned them to see what they knew and thought. They repeated what they had heard in public, many things far from the truth.

Then Jesus shot a quick question at them: "But whom say ye that I am?" What was their testimony?

Peter replied instantly, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

That is the knowledge that we need of him. That is the testimony that we should bear to the world concerning him.

Paul's Testimony

"Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ."—Acts 18: 5.

It must have been difficult for Paul to bear his testimony for Christ, because it had not been very long since he was testifying before the same people, in the same places, against Christ. Conditions were formidable. He was alienating his old friends. His new brothers and sisters in the gospel feared him and distrusted him for a time. He might betray them. His conversion might not last. Yet his testimony was eventually to reach more people than all the rest. He was "pressed in the spirit" to bear this testimony.

The need for divine guidance is ever apparent and has always been recognized by the church. In view of the demands and the urgency of the forthcoming General Conference which will convene Sunday, April 2, we feel it is well to request the Saints throughout the world to pray and to join in fasting from the morning and noon meals, Sunday, March 5, or such part of that period as is consistent with duties and health. Let us bear in mind the work of the Conference, the church, and the kingdom, as we diligently seek the Father's blessing.

The Disciples' Testimony

"And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem."—Acts 8: 25.

In the early days of the church, the gospel was a working proposition. The disciples got out and went to work. They traveled. They visited in the villages. Wherever they met people, they told them the gospel story. They "kept going."

Everywhere they went, they found sincere and honest souls, ready to believe and accept the message. That is what we find today.

You can't fill your net every time you drop it into the water, nor can you expect to catch all the fish in the sea. But you can put the net out, and take the catch that God gives you.

Testimony of the Scriptures

In addressing the Jews, who did not yet believe in him, Jesus said, "You pore over the Scriptures, for you think that you will find eternal life in them, and these very Scriptures testify to me."—John 5: 39 (Goodspeed version).

We can study the Scriptures to find the testimony of Jesus for ourselves. Then we can carry that testimony to others.

God's Testimony

Jesus went to John the Baptist to obey the ordinance requiring baptism; when he arose out of the water, a wonderful experience came to him. The Spirit of God descended upon him, "And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." That was God's testimony for Jesus.

Testimony of Latter Days

The great testimony of Christ given by Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon is contained in the Doctrine and Covenants (76: 3), "The record we bear is the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who is the Son, . . . for we saw him, even on the

The sixth section of the proposed Rules of Order as explained in the "Herald" of January 23. Administrative officers are urged to send the Presidency their comments or criticisms preliminary to General Conference action.—Editor.

VI—DISTRICTS

DISTRICT ORGANIZATION. Districts should be organized by direction of the conferences, or by the personal presence and direction of the Twelve, or some member of that quorum who may be in charge, if practicable. Due notice must be sent or be made available to all who are interested, explaining the purpose, time, and place of meeting. At the appointed time and place the branches may meet en masse or by delegates. If by delegates, the delegates must have been appointed previously by the branches desiring to be represented, and due notice of the meeting to elect them and the object thereof must also have been made public.

EFFECTING DISTRICT ORGANIZATION. Upon assembling in pursuance of the announcement made by the authorities concerned,¹ the responsible minister (a member of the Presidency, the apostle in the field, or a deputy) shall conduct such opening exercises as his judgment indicates. The reasons for the proposed organization shall then be stated, and a motion approving the proposed action shall be sought. If such a motion is offered and adopted, those assembled shall proceed to make choice of one of their number to act as president of the district, whose duty it shall be to have supervisory charge of the several congregations and nonresident members forming the district. One or two counselors may also be chosen if deemed advisable, and a secretary; the organization will then be complete.

Yet, notwithstanding the statement herein made that the appointments of a president, with counselors and secretary, are said to make the district organization complete, should the growth of a district be such as to render the appointment of additional officers necessary also, nothing in this section shall be construed as interdicting such appointments, provided they be within the law, or not subversive of any well-established usage thereof.

When the officers who have been elected shall have taken their places, the assembly may proceed to the consideration of any business necessary to be done, or adjourn to a given time and place for further deliberation.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES are authorized to transact business relating to the maintenance and spread of the work within the district boundaries, but subject always to the resolutions of General Conference and to the advice of the general authorities in matters committed to these authorities under the law.

WHO SHALL PRESIDE. The district president should preside over the district conference by right of his office. At his request, or in his absence, his counselors may preside. Members of the First Presidency or Quorum of Twelve may be asked to preside as a courtesy or in view of special circumstances. But, as a general rule, the district president should preside unless otherwise determined by vote of those present at the meeting, or as a courtesy extended to one of the general authorities who may be present.

DUTY OF THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the presiding officer to bring to the attention of the conference such matters as require the consideration or action of the body; to enforce observance of the rules of order with decorum and propriety; and to secure, as far as he is able, a due respect and regard for the laws governing the church as contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

AN APPROPRIATE ORDER OF PROCEEDINGS in a district conference is as follows:

- Opening service
- Election of presiding officers
 - Unless this is covered by earlier conference action
- Reading of the minutes of the preceding conference
- Reports, communications, and suggestions from the presiding officer
- Communications or reports from the First Presidency, the minister in charge or his assistant, the Presiding Bishopric, or other general church officers should have precedent in this order
- Reports of the officers of the district, other than the presiding officer
- Reports of standing committees
- Reports of special committees
- Business made the special order of the meeting
- Unfinished business
- New business
- Business deferred subject to call
- Action concerning the time and place of the next meeting
- Adjournment.

Across the Desk

From Almer W. Sheehy, pastor at Boston, Massachusetts:

We have entered the year 1950 in unity, love, and missionary endeavor. The motto, "Each one win one," has been adopted. We anticipate a number of converts and missions. We have five cottage meetings in progress now from which we hope to build several missions, then branches. This is in the Greater Boston area.

The ministry of Apostle Draper has been very helpful. His direction has been wise, and his encouragement and enthusiasm are excellent.

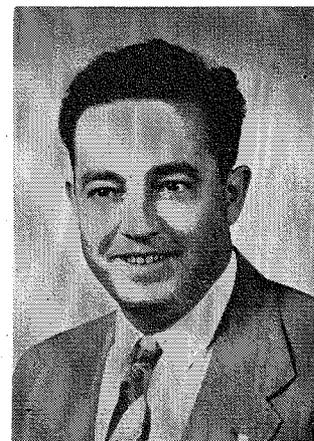

Bishop Chesworth has done well not only in guiding us along temporal lines but in bringing a rich spiritual ministry.

A letter from Elder Frank A. Fry, English Mission:

The work of the past year has been strenuous but enjoyable. There has been a quickening response to the missionary phase of our program. Teamwork between the departments of the branches,

"See That Ye Be Not Troubled"

By GERALD GABRIEL

OPTIMISTS TODAY who contend, "The world is growing better with age," have a much different outlook than the majority of people. The pessimist, on the other hand, thinking in negative terms, allows the optimist to occupy the front row, because of the friendships and joys he finds in being cheerful.

Let us face facts. Those things threatening our happiness—our security—are the things that are most troubling; hence, they cause us to adopt a pessimistic attitude. When we read Matthew 24:25, the words, "wars and rumors of wars," stand out in bold black letters. Then we continue to the thirteenth verse and find "for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." Allow us to point from history that wars are our greatest threat to security. They have been increasing in numbers and destructive force, and periods of peace are being shortened with each succeeding generation. (See Restoration, by Elbert A. Smith, pages 231, 232.) Now a destructive force which can easily be unleashed in another war is capable of destroying civilization.

We read a few more words from the thirtieth verse, "There shall be famine and pestilence and earthquakes in divers places." We reason again from facts. History shows that economics and social conditions tend to run in cycles—eighteen months, three and one-half years, nine years, and fifty years in length. The dark threatening lines running along the graph become more drastic as we increase in civilization. Famine, a major threat to our economic security, finds itself on the graph for every half century. We are not too greatly concerned about pestilence for we now have DDT, Chloradane, and other chemicals that are quite effective in the control of pests.

The following table of information comes from the United States History Cost and Casualties of Wars.

In this last conflict the British had 1,246,025 casualties; German and Italian casualties totaled 8,567,583; the Japanese eastern casualties were 1,500,464. (You will find this in-

WHAT IS IT ALL ABOUT?

If we begin reading at the first of the chapter, we find Christ leaving the temple. This magnificent building made of green and white marble with a gold-plated front was unfinished as it had been since 516 B.C. when it was partially restored after its destruction in 586 B.C. Even though unfinished it was a beautiful building, often compared to the white caps on the sea, or to a snow-capped mountain with blue sky for a background. From the temple Christ walked to a place on Mount Olive where he sat overlooking the site of the temple. It was here his disciples had followed him to ask two questions which they considered paramount. These were "When shall the destruction of the temple be?" and "What is the sign of thy coming?" Had Jesus answered one question at a time the understanding of his answers would have been clear today. He referred to the two events in his answers—one being typical of the other. Luke attempts to divide these answers and in some respects helps clarify the issue.

"WHEN SHALL THE TEMPLE BE DESTROYED?"

We know from history that this same temple was demolished in the time of Caesar (i.e., Titus) on the ninth day of Ab (July-August) in A.D. 70. However, these were the signs to be fulfilled before the temple would fall again. (1) Many shall come saying, "I am Christ."¹ Among these false Christs were Simon Magus, Menander, and Dositheus, who appeared before A.D. 46. (2) Wars and commotions²—three threats of war fell upon the nation before A.D. 70. These were made by Caligula, Claudius, and Nero. The death of Caligula prevented his accomplishing his mission (see Matthew 24: 19, 20). There were some 50,000 Jews killed when the Greeks and Syrians joined forces against them—20,000 were slaughtered in one hour at Caesarea. (3) Famines, pestilences, and earthquakes³ left their mark on the land before A.D. 70. Thirteen years of famine visited the land from A.D. 41 to 54, leaving its toll of death and suffering from starvation. Pests visited the land a number of times before the fall of the temple, and earthquakes were numerous in Asia, being most destructive in the "Promised Land." (4) Persecution of the Saints⁴ had already set in and continued until the apostasy. Many of the disciples, including eleven of the apostles, gave their lives for His name's sake. (5) The abomination of desolation spoken of by the prophet Daniel,⁵ or when Jerusalem was trodden down with the Gentiles,⁶ came to pass about A.D. 66 or 67, when the Zealots captured and turned the temple into a camp. One may be misled here since the abomination of desolation spoken by the prophet Daniel had already occurred. Christ was speaking to the disciples in language they already understood—their history of only a few hundred years. The description of those conditions which were coming again just prior to the fall of the temple is described in Matthew 24: 13-19 and Luke 21: 19-23.

This instant flight is better described in the first book of Maccabees of the Apocrypha. The chosen people had been captured by the Gentiles. In turn they had made a covenant to follow the ordinances of the Gentiles—forsaking the Holy Covenant and selling themselves to do evil. This abomination of desolation set in about the year 170 B.C. when Antiochus had entered into the sacred sanctuary, took the golden altar, the candlestick, and robbed the temple in general of its sacred things. Then he "made a great slaughter" of the people of Palestine. "The virgins and young men were made feeble, and the beauty of the women was changed." "Every bridegroom took up lamentation; she that sat in the marriage chamber was in heaviness . . . the house of Jacob was clothed with shame." The king made a gesture of peace and, while the people were in their highest hopes of relief, he jumped in to destroy many more and to take more spoils and finally set the remaining on fire. About B.C. 168 these conquerors "builded an abomination of desolation upon the altar and in the cities of Judah on every side they builded idol altars . . . and the women that had circumcised their children they put to death . . . and they hanged their babies about their necks." Later some of the chosen rebelled against the commandments of the gentile king, and fled into the wilderness where they were overtaken on the Sabbath day by the soldiers of the gentile king. Thousands of men, women, and children were slaughtered—thus came the reminder of the Sabbath day predicted in Matthew 24: 17ff.

It should be brought to our attention that these people were under the Mosaic law. The prophesies of Christ found in Matthew and Luke were given after the Mosaic law had been done away with. Christ was telling these people of the things their forefathers had suffered some 200 to 300 years before. Now history was to repeat itself—the cycle was coming around again—this time was to be prior to the destruction of the temple which fell in A.D. 70.

The cycle was to include false Christs, wars, and commotions, famines, pestilences, and persecution of the saints. They were warned to "see that ye are not troubled" for these must come to pass before "the second coming."

"WHAT IS THE SIGN OF THY COMING?"

Like the answer to the first question, these same things were to happen to the chosen people again in other cycles just as they did in the days prior to the life of Christ and immediately following his death and before the destruction of the temple. That is, there would be false christs, false prophets,⁷ nation would rise against nation, kingdom against kingdom, and famine, pestilences, earthquakes, and again the abomination of desolation.⁸ In addition to these things were others which would be even more dreadful.

(1) These were to be only the beginning of sorrow; these were to be only the beginning of great tribulation which would befall the chosen people. This prophecy has been in the process of fulfillment since that day and reached unprecedented heights during the last war when these people were used as human guinea pigs and were slaughtered in great numbers, being driven from one encampment to another. (2) Iniquity was to abound and the love of many to wax cold.⁹ This condition has also run in cycles, and perusal of the daily news leads one to believe that condition exists today with the upward trend in crime, especially in juvenile and sex cases. It has found its way into families in which the paternal love has waxed cold leaving children to die or suffer.

(3) Men's hearts fail them because of fear.¹⁰ This too has been cyclic in nature and is on the increase as our civilization advances. It has not, however, reached its height as it will in "perilous times." (4) "The Earth and waters are to be troubled."¹¹ This probably refers to geological and climatic disturbances which are also cyclic in nature. (5) There is to be "distress of nations with perplexities."¹² It seems as we advance in political theories and practices that this condition should not exist, but no time in history has it been more true than at present. There are complications at home with labor unions and other pressure groups. With our foreign relations and bewildering policies the outlook is certainly confusing. The evil are to gather with the elect in Zion.¹³ How well is this understood by those in responsible positions in the Center Place. Even with this condition we are not to be troubled, for the wheat and the tares will in time be separated. (7) The gospel is to be preached to all the world for a witness. The gospel is now being preached to parts of the world, but not yet for a witness. This part of the sign we have yet to see fulfilled. (8) The signs in the sun, moon, and stars will probably accompany the second coming.¹⁴

There is a time spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 45:13 about which we all need to be greatly concerned. That time is now—the time of preparation of the place of safety when the wicked shall fight against their neighbors—when Zion "shall be the only people [not nation] that shall not be at war with another." This modern day revelation denotes a time when strife and commotion shall be so great that even the law enforcement officers of our (now) organized governments will not be effective; a period when every man shall be for himself, and when total disorganization of industrial, economic, and social life is everywhere, except in Zion. We need not be troubled if we have prepared for that day.

Should we ever allow ourselves with such admonishment to ask, "What is the use?" It would seem that our primary concern is our whole-hearted support in "building the kingdom for a witness"—never being diverted by these forecast conditions which will and must continue to come. If we are his disciples let us heed this warning:

Let my disciples therefore take heed to themselves, lest any time their hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, drunkenness, and cares of this life, and that day come upon them unawares. For as a snare it shall come on all them who dwell on the face of the whole earth. And what I say unto one, I say unto all, watch ye therefore, and pray always, and keep my commandments, that ye may be counted worthy to escape all these things which shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man when he shall come clothed in the glory of his father.¹⁵

Building

"Rome was not built in a day." Yet it was built day by day. So it is in life—in daily living and the building up of character. In any great project someone plans, and others give their labor and strength to fulfill the dream.

Life is made up of everyday little things—petty duties, which in themselves may seem unimportant—in virtues which may seem minor: kindness, patience, understanding, integrity.

At times progress is slow. We get impatient with delays and frequent vexations. We are striving hard to reach our goal; yet at times we slip back to our starting point. We humbly vow we will do today what we put off yesterday. Yet today passes, and it remains undone.

Life is very confusing. We know what we should do. We strive to do it. Still there is always something else we have failed to do. Perhaps we try to "build in a day," and not day by day. Let us make every minute of each day count for the most, doing all we can for that day. "Time is running out," someone has said, but in the busy rush of living, let us not forget to take time for a quiet talk with our Heavenly Father each day that in the noise and commotion of bewildered minds we can hear God speak.

No, Rome was not built in a day; yet it was built day by day. So shall Christian lives—Zionite lives—be built, and so shall the kingdom of God be builded on earth.

The Ministry of Power:

Its Nature and Function - Part III

By JOHN W. RUSHTON

WHEN THE APOSTLE PAUL states the nature of gospel proclaimed by himself and fellow ministers in the well-known language of Thessalonians, "for our gospel came to you not only in word, but also in power and in the Holy Spirit and with full conviction," (I Thessalonians 1: 5) he was evidently speaking of that power of which he speaks when he gives the analogy: "For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man, which is in him?"—I Corinthians 2: 11. Then follows the statement: "Even so the things of God none knoweth save the Spirit of God."—I Corinthians 2: 11, 10. Here the words clearly reveal the Holy Spirit is the seat of the divine consciousness. "The Eternal Spirit knows the things of the eternal Godhead." "The Spirit searches everything, even the depths of God." This "Power," besides being the seat of consciousness, is also the "Spirit of revelation." We will pursue this thought in discussing the functions or ministries of the Holy Spirit. For the nature of power or influence is demonstrated in the activities or functions by which power is manifested. St. Paul writes, ". . . things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, and which entered not into the heart of man . . . unto us God revealed them through the Spirit."—I Corinthians 2: 9, 10.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan summarizes:

The statement may thus be made in brief words. There is one God. There are three Persons within the Unity. The Holy Spirit is third in position, forever proceeding from the Father, through the mediation of the Son. The Holy Spirit is the consciousness of God and therefore the Revealer of God.—The Spirit of God, pages 27-29.

In this connection let us consider the words of Dr. Lowry:

The Infinite Being of God must be strictly inconceivable to us. But there is no other way in which to portray at all the nature of God in whom reason and Christian faith together compel us to believe. The Father is God; Jesus Christ is God; the Holy Spirit is God. Here are the three Divine Persons, faces, or media of manifestation, and the centers of consciousness. And since there is but one God, the Three must be so united as to constitute one Being. There are three Persons but one God, one Lord. It is this God who has ever been and will ever continue to be the Object of Christian worship and devotion.

Perhaps in human personality (finite and therefore inferior to Divine personality) we have a shadow of the Divine. Man is a tripartite, being spirit, soul, or mind, and body. In the Godhead is the essential creative love of the Father; Jesus Christ is "God manifest in flesh"; and the Holy Spirit is Divine consciousness—the pervading and continuous activity of the Godhead.

WE ARE NOW CONCERNED with identifying "the Power of God" by which his purpose can be achieved and by which the ministry of the church will be effectively accomplished. In the words and the works of Jesus Christ, and later in the life and experiences of the disciples, we can discern the nature of the power in its manifestations. What is done reveals what the nature is. In Christian theology, the Godhead is revealed as Unity in Trinity and in this is recognized the inevitable mystery which enshrouds this final challenge to human intelligence. But this is no reason why we should decline the effort to understand. Huxley protested he was not so foolish as to reject Christianity because it is mysterious. "The mysteries of the church are child's play compared with the mysteries of nature. The doctrine of the Trinity is not more puzzling than the necessary antinomies of physical speculation." Quoted from Bishop Gore's Belief in Christ, page 232.

With profound reverence we admit the incomprehensibility of the divine nature because of our human limitation, but we are deeply grateful for the revelation which God has given of himself "through divers ways and prophets." So, accepting the anthropomorphic concept in that man is created in the "likeness" or "image" of God, we do not interpret this to mean that God is in the likeness or image of man. And, in speaking of God as personality, we must mean that which is above and beyond what we have in mind when we speak of human personality. Perhaps supra-personality may better describe what we mean. However, as before emphasized, humanity has capacity for God and possesses attributes which are similar to those of the Divine and so relate man to the spiritual order. The universal testimony is that while man cannot see God, he feels his presence.

This quotation from Wordsworth will find echoes in many minds:

sense sublime

Of something far more deeply interfused
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns
And the round ocean and the living air
And the blue sky, and in the minds of man—
A motion and a spirit which impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.

—TINTERN ABBEY.

AS THE CONSCIOUSNESS of the divinity of Christ developed in the Christian church, so that now it is accepted "He has the value of God," in the same manner through thought, meditation, and revelation adapted to needs and capacities, it became the conviction that the Holy Spirit, in activities, grace, and the varieties of energy, was indeed the consciousness of God, the divine Essence, at work in and through the experiences of his church, which "is his body"—the continuance of the "Incarnation." All of which is contained in the exquisite summation of St. Paul's benediction: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with you all."—II Corinthians 13: 14. This divine power—the essential nature of God—described in the Book of Mormon as "the pure love of Christ" is that which fuses all into fellowship, oneness, and unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, blending the whole into a symphony of beauty in which all discordancies are lost and unitary parts are shaped into a symmetrical whole.

We sense the deep meaning of St. Paul's witness, which was living experience and not theological:

Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is there is freedom. And we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another; for this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit.—II Corinthians 3: 17, 18.

This word, glory, is a symbol of spiritual value for which we do not have an adequate definition. The way it is used by our Lord and in the sacred Scriptures we know it has deep significance. I once heard the late Dr. J. H. Jowett say that he had found what to him was the most satisfying definition in an old Puritan commentary which, as nearly as I now remember was something as follows: "Glory is the bloom of character. That state of ripeness which is perfect." So glory means that bloom or radiance of perfect character we associate with God. Having the "mind of Christ" was the experience possible for the true Christian and this could not mean less than loving what Christ loved, knowing what Christ knew, and willing what Christ willed. We can better appreciate St. Paul's testimony to Timothy, "The Lord stood by me and put his strength into me" (II Timothy 4: 17, 18), and, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."—Galatians 2: 20.

This power which energized God's children, the grace of the Lord, Jesus Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost, which unifies all in the "fellowship of the Holy Spirit," is something more than unconscious force "comparable to electricity." Dr. H. B. Streeter writes: "Power means ability to effect a purpose consciously entertained; it is meaningless if applied to a force which has not capacity of initiation or self-direction."—Reality, page 144.

The universe is an expression of mind, and thought is a function of life. And Dr. Streeter concludes: "The category of personality is not only the most religiously inspiring that we can apply to the power behind the universe, it is also intellectually the least inadequate."—Ibid., 133.

Can the Spirit, Power, or Grace of God be properly classified as a lifeless energy? Can the familiar "fruits," manifestations, or ministries be so regarded without doing violence to language? If lifeless then certainly they are amoral and without value, unless the power of life shall direct and control. It is obvious that we must think and speak of the ministry of the Holy Spirit as a living, directing, choosing, and morally responsible power.

AS WE NOW CONSIDER the functions or normal activities of the Holy Spirit let us keep in mind the four things contained within the realm of personality: will, intelligence, power, and capacity for love. In the Gospel of St. John we have our Lord's systematic teaching concerning the Holy Spirit. It is the "paraclete" usually interpreted "advocate" or "counselor." This is the title of a person, as is Comforter (see St. John 14: 26; 15: 26; 16: 8-13). In speaking of the Paraclete in not a single instance does Jesus use a word which can be construed as indicating he thought of the Holy Spirit as an influence.

"He shall teach."
 "He shall bear witness."
 "He shall convict."
 "He shall guide."

Again, in the Gospel of St. John 3: 1-15, regeneration is the work of the Holy Spirit.

In Romans 8: 11 St. Paul taught that the Resurrection is the result of the Holy Spirit.

In Genesis the creation is shown to be the result of the Holy Spirit's "moving" or "brooding."

Creation, regeneration, and the resurrection are all the result of the Holy Spirit's activity.

Consider also the solemn warning as to the manner of treating the Holy Spirit, as found in Matthew 12: 31 and 32; Mark 3: 29; and Luke 12: 8-12. What Jesus describes as "eternal sin" is turning back upon the work and mission of the Holy Spirit. Christ's words may be rejected and the sins of men forgiven, but there can be no forgiveness for rejecting the teaching of the Spirit. Sin is an attitude of rebellion against a person—God—and cannot be thought of in connection with an impersonal force. Surely it is not an exaggeration to say that to speak of the Holy Spirit as an impersonal force "is to evacuate language of its meaning."

We have not yet been successful in identifying the forces and energies of nature except through their functions and activities. So with this Supreme Power, we reverently analyze the catalogue of functions, activities, or ministries as they are experienced and recorded in our Scriptures and then ask whether these can be classified as belonging to lifeless, unmoral forces or influences, or regarded as being expressions of intelligence, love, and will which constitute infinite personality?

WE CONCLUDE that the Power which is so urgently needed by the church and her ministry is the living power of the Personal God, who is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and by whose Spirit we are transformed into his sons and made joint heirs with him. Without this power our ministry withers, our words are profitless, and all our efforts at reform are futile. And again we think of Matthew Arnold's description of the devitalized church without the Spirit of God upon whose threshold is the word Ichabod, meaning "The glory of the Lord hath departed from thee."

Her frame still stands without a breach
 When life and warmth are fled.
 And still she speaks her wonted speech
 But every word is dead.

We cannot galvanize the church by any sort of substitute power. The breath of the living God must be breathed into her or she will be but a marionette mechanically activated outside herself, not a living organism pulsing with divine life. As light fills and transcends the rainbow, so God must fill and transcend his church by his spiritual Presence. Without indwelling power, life, grace, and unifying fellowship, the church would be an automaton, a museum piece rather than the Spiritual dynamo needed to make the universe the habitation of God.

How significant the language of the Acts of the Apostles which speaks repeatedly of the work and ministry of those early Christians whose achievements were esteemed as "wonders" and whose powers met every challenge and gradually established indisputable victory throughout the then known world—"They were all filled with the Holy Spirit." This history is truly the epic of the ministry of superhuman enthusiasm. Grecian philosophy, Roman jurisprudence and power of organization, and the traditional religion of the Hebrews all surrendered to these crusaders of the Spirit. They gave a new word to the world's tongues enthusiasm, en meaning "with," Theos, meaning "God"—literally God-possessed. They were God-possessed men, and in them God was again "incarnated."

In St. Paul's "Hymn of Love" he shows how all the antiphonies of the Spirit's activities finally blend into the love, which is the life of God himself. The parts are absorbed in the whole. With Tolstoi we can say,

Where love is, there God is.

Let Your Light Shine - By VERDA E. BRYANT

I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 8: 12.

A FRIEND OF MINE once told me that one of her first impressions of Independence was the fireflies which appeared in the spring evenings. There were no fireflies in her home town in Colorado, and she had never before seen one.

In my home state of Nebraska, I can remember in my childhood that the occasional fireflies found there intrigued us children. When one of those magical flying flashlights would come into the yard, it was a signal for us to try to catch it. The flashing light would beckon us on, but often we would lose sight of it during its interval of darkness, and we would have to wait until it flashed its light on again so we would know its location and resume our chase. Squeamish as I was about bugs, no firefly ever suffered because of my chasing it.

Then we moved to Ohio where there are so many more of these lightning bugs and behind our house in an empty lot hundreds of these flashing lights brightened the spring evening.

Later we moved to Tennessee, which seemed to be the "center place" for fireflies. A spring evening was not complete without a walk down the valley to see these flying miracles. The whole meadow would be aglow as though lighted by a magical, subdued light. It often seemed that if we could stand in the midst of that meadow the light would be sufficient to read by.

Many times as I looked across that meadow I observed, "If Latter Day Saints would just have the light of a lightning bug, what a glow we would make in the world!"

LIKE THE FIREFLY there are some parts of the world where there are no Latter Day Saints, and other parts where there are so few that they are an oddity to be wondered about. From that extreme we go to areas where our members are concentrated, as in the "Center Place" and the stakes, where people are so accustomed to being surrounded by Latter Day Saints that they pay little or no attention to them.

What would happen if each Latter Day Saint throughout the world would produce as much of a spiritual light as the lightning bug's phosphorescent glow?

Jesus said, "I give unto you to be the light of the world . . . let your light so shine before this world that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." —Matthew 5: 16, 18, Inspired Version.

The Lord, speaking through the prophet Joseph Smith, said, "If your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you." —Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18.

"If your eye be single to my glory" —that is, if our first and most important task is to serve him!

THERE IS A STORY told of a soldier in the Civil War, who took with him his kit of watchmaker's tools when he went into the army. While in camp he did considerable business. Then one day, when the order came to prepare for battle, he looked around in dismay and exclaimed, "Why, I can't possibly go; I have twelve watches to repair which I have promised to have ready by Saturday night!" He had enlisted in the army for an important task—to serve his country—yet when called upon to do just that, he could think of nothing but the other work which hindered his call to service.

When we made our covenant with God in the waters of baptism, we promised to serve him, but he has given us our free agency and will not bind us to that promise. The amount of light in us depends upon whether or not and to what degree we serve him.

SOMETIMES we flatter ourselves that we are doing God's work when actually we are only giving our second best, forgetting the responsibility which accompanied our promise to serve him. Then when we ask God's blessing upon our work, we think he has failed us because he hasn't blessed our second best efforts.

Each of us sheds light in direct proportion to his work. If we just attend church school and church, we flash only a speck of a light and then drop into a lengthy period of darkness. If we help a neighbor, the flash of light is a bit longer, and the period of darkness is a bit shorter, and so on until the point is reached when the "eye is single to my glory" and there is no darkness.

In our very humanness, most of us at best will shed light only intermittently, but with effort and the acceptance of our responsibilities, we can make that interval of light longer and shorten our period of darkness.

Each of us has been called upon to witness for Christ—to "Each One Win One"—and this is our responsibility to serve him. We may be sure that God will bless us in our work, in direct proportion to our acceptance of that responsibility. We need his blessing, and we should not fail to recognize and give thanks for that blessing when it comes. He will lighten our burdens, help our routine work to run smoother, and enable us to accomplish our goals if we will put our best efforts into our work.

If all Latter Day Saints in the whole world, 140,000 strong, would shed their intermittent lights, even half the time, what a glow we could make!

Sylvester Garner Starts a Train of Thought

DURING A VISIT, an old time friend, Sylvester Garner, of Sunland, California, told me some of the experiences of his grandfather and grandmother (the Daniel Rawsons) in Missouri in the days of mob violence. This was in 1833. The mob came to their house in or near Independence. The wife was sick in bed, but the mob leaders picked up the mattress on which she lay, carried her to the front yard, threw her into the farm wagon, and bade the husband and wife to be off. They were not allowed to take with them food of any kind. They made camp that night near a mill, but the miller refused to sell them flour or corn meal. Finally he agreed to sell them some "shorts" saying, "That's what we feed hogs, and what's good enough for hogs is good enough for Mormons."

That night the marvelous display of "falling stars" occurred; it was so wonderful that it struck terror to many hearts. The miller was frightened and told the Lord that if his life were spared, he would sell the "Mormons" anything they might need. In the morning, he was as good as his word.

Bishop Partridge wrote a description of the spectacle as he witnessed it about four o'clock on the morning of November 13, 1833. In part he wrote:

In Zion, all heaven seemed enwrapped in splendid fireworks, as if every star in the broad expanse had been suddenly hurled from its course and sent lawless through the wilds of ether The appearance was beautiful, grand, and sublime beyond all description. . . . to enchant and entertain the Saints and terrify and awe the sinners on earth.—Church History, Volume I, page 363.

In Zion

IT IS DIFFICULT NOW to comprehend the depth of animosity against the Saints in those early days. This hatred grew in intensity, aided and abetted by the governor of Missouri, until it reached a climax under the orders of Governor Boggs: "The Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State."

The underlying causes of ill will and misunderstanding were found in religious, political, and class prejudices. Those prejudices were best stated by our antagonists of that period. A committee of citizens of Clay County adopted resolutions on June 29, 1836, covering their objections on class and political grounds:

These are some of the reasons why these people have become objects of the deepest hatred and detestation to many of our citizens. They are Eastern men, whose manners, habits, customs, and even dialect are essentially different from our own; they are nonslaveholders, and opposed to slavery, which, in this peculiar period when abolition has reared its deformed and haggard visage in our land is well calculated to excite deep and abiding prejudices in any community where slavery is tolerated and practiced.—Church History, Volume II, page 58.

At a somewhat earlier date, leaders of the mob in Jackson County drew up a document which set forth their prejudices against us on religious grounds:

It is more than two years since the first of these fanatics or knaves (for one or the other they undoubtedly are) made their first appearance amongst us, and pretending as they did and now do to hold personal communication and converse face to face with the most high God; to receive communications and revelations direct from heaven; to heal the sick by laying on hands; and, in short, to perform all the wonder-working miracles wrought by the inspired apostles and prophets of old

They openly blaspheme the most high God and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven, by pretending to speak unknown tongues by direct inspiration, and by diverse pretenses derogatory of God and religion, and to the utter subversion of human reason.—Church History, Volume I, pages 313, 314.

Fortunately, today it is no longer considered grounds for "extermination" to believe in divine healing. Members of many churches have espoused that doctrine. It is not even a crime to believe in revelation. It is not a grievous offense to have come from "down East." Traditionally three Wise Men came from the East—probably their dialect, manners, dress, and customs seemed outlandish to the people they visited. It is not even a misdemeanor to be opposed to slavery. Some very good citizens, including one Abe Lincoln, were abolitionists.

It is a matter of great satisfaction that the prejudice and hostility at one time existing against us in Missouri have largely disappeared. Thousands of our people live safely and peaceably as respected citizens in Independence and surrounding territory.

In 1838 Governor Boggs of Missouri decreed that all of our people must be driven from the state or exterminated. Exactly one hundred years later, in 1938, another governor of Missouri, Governor Stark, came to our Auditorium and speaking to our people in the presence of state and city officials asked us to help him "make Missouri a better state in which to live."

In a general election of 1943 to select delegates to rewrite the antiquated constitution of Missouri, Israel A. Smith, grandson of the founder of the church, and now its president, was one of two delegates elected to represent the Senatorial District which included Kansas City and Independence. This to help make Missouri "a better state in which to live."

O unhappy shade of Governor Boggs, could he have looked in upon that convention or even revisited his old home in Independence, and observed a governor of his State, and at a later date the President of the United States, happy to use the rostrum of our Auditorium from which to address the people of the state upon national and international affairs—using it as a rostrum from which to plead for tolerance, justice, and religious and political liberty.

We may forget and forgive Governor Boggs. He must have been the victim of strange spiritual perversions, unchristian and un-American, which goaded him to sentence a whole people to banishment or death without trial.

Reverting now to the plea voiced by Governor Stark, our fundamental and enduring convictions that will help us to make Missouri "a better state in which to live" are exactly as they were in 1838. Today they are better recognized, due largely to the clean and honorable lives, the fair dealing, and the good citizenship of many of our people, and to the grace and favor of God, for which let us be duly grateful.

Teaches in a Methodist Church

The nearest Latter Day Saint congregation is fifty miles from where we live, but we go there on Communion Sundays. The rest of the time we attend the Methodist Church here in Los Fresnos. I have been teaching the young men's church school class, and it aroused so much interest that the minister asked me to speak to the congregation. Having been a Methodist myself once, I know about how to address the people. I first spoke on the coming kingdom of God, and then on man's duty to God. I have never enjoyed greater liberty. The good Lord gave me one reference right after another, and I quoted chapter and verse without having to look them up. Some of the members have invited me to their homes for further discussion. I wish I could remain here as many seem to be hungering for the gospel. For a state as large as Texas, we are doing very little missionary work. The field is white for harvest, but where are the reapers?

I have distributed a lot of "Angel Message" tracts, Heralds, and other church literature. If any elders ever happen to be in this area, they will be very welcome. There is a world of opportunity here.

Blessed Are They -

which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled.

IN BOLD OUTLINES, our Lord set forth the qualities of citizenship in his kingdom. He used the greatest impulse of the human race as a test for kingdom building. The kingdom of God must have our all if it is to be effective in the lives of its builders. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness; and all of these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6: 38.

Everyone knows what appetite is, what hunger and thirst mean. Christ had already experienced it in the flesh as well as spirit. When he spent forty days in the wilderness without food or water, he undoubtedly knew the true meaning of hunger and thirst. It is a strong craving that must be satisfied or we perish. One cannot forget he is hungry or thirsty. The flesh demands food and water to live. I imagine Christ was tempted in his mind a number of times to satisfy the ache of his flesh, and received relief only when he fully surrendered himself to the Spirit of God.

Daniel knew what it meant to hunger and thirst until he came into the presence of Deity. He took no pleasant bread nor meat nor wine in his mouth for three full weeks (Daniel 10: 3). He was finally rewarded for the sacrifice of his flesh by a visitation of a heavenly personage who delivered him the desired message.

Jesus desired his disciples to realize the cost of producing the kingdom of heaven on the earth. It cannot be a passive desire; it demands all we have plus additional help from above to establish righteousness on the earth.

In the words of David, "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God; for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"

TO HUNGER AND THIRST does not mean the desires of the flesh alone; there are also appetites for other things. These are manifested in sports as well as a desire for home or business. I have seen men deny themselves of food, pleasure, and luxuries to win a game their hearts were set on. I have also seen that same hunger and thirst in men who wanted a home. They have denied themselves of many small pleasures so their one great desire might be realized.

It is like the pearl of great price. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field, the which when a man hath found he . . . selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man seeking goodly pearls; Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it."—Matthew 13: 44-46.

This is what may truly be called hunger and thirst. And such is the appetite for righteousness of the citizens that will possess our Lord's kingdom.

Let us who have been commissioned with the responsibility of building God's kingdom in these last days hunger and thirst after righteousness, for we shall surely be filled. To the extent that we are filled, we shall be satisfied to serve with what abilities we possess in establishing righteousness upon the earth.

Jesus said: "Ye believe in God; believe also in me." We, then, who believe in Christ must accept his teaching. If he were satisfied in his own soul that those who hunger and thirst after righteousness would be filled, shall not we accept it also?

It is pledged to us that the day will come when the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of righteousness and meekness and truth shall be established. Blessed are they that here and now hunger and thirst after righteousness in themselves and for the world's sake, for they shall be filled.

When Discouraged - GEORGE NJEIM.

AN EXCEEDINGLY wealthy man on his deathbed called his only son, gave him a parting admonition, and left him all his earthly goods. Among other things he warned him against sin and evil companions, and told him that if he should ever lose his riches and his friends and become discouraged to the point of taking his own life, to go to Room No. Nine. This room was never to be opened until that moment was reached. Like many other youths, the lad ignored his father's advice and lived riotously. Soon his wealth disappeared and the friends went with it. In his desperation he remembered Room No. Nine. As he opened the door, to his amazement, he found nothing but a rope hanging from the ceiling and a chair. The boy was thankful for the wisdom of his father, climbed upon the chair, tied the rope around his neck, and jumped. The loosely held-together ceiling collapsed under the weight, and sent down an avalanche of hidden money. From that time on the boy began to live by his father's advice.

Our world is a world of multiple temptations and has a way of taking from us our sacred heritage. In its place it promises wealth, fame, and the enjoyment of carnal desires. Our educational system builds within us a false sense of security and elevates the ego to such an extent that we become self-worshippers. These promises, however, are not lasting. Hardly do we reach middle age until we begin to feel the disappointments and defeats of life. Those who have not felt the let-down may take a look at civilization. It is going to pieces. Our discouragements become so great we feel as if life is not worth living. When that stage is reached, let us think of Room No. Nine. This room is more than a family altar. It should be the church, the word of God, the secret closet and the fellowship of the Saints. The Heavenly Father always has hidden blessings for those who are in utter despair and yet continue to seek his grace.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTIONS:

- (1) Are the law of Moses and the Ten Commandments one and the same?
- (2) Which carnal law did Christ nail to the cross?
- (3) Does the world need to honor and obey the Ten Commandments today?
Sask. J.A.

ANSWERS:

(1) No. The Ten Commandments are only part of the law of Moses, which embraces (a) many laws of persons—for instance, laws respecting master and slave; (b) criminal laws—laws respecting illicit sex relations and punishments for crimes; (c) judicial and constitutional laws—respecting the form, constitution, and method of governments; and (d) ecclesiastical and ceremonial laws—laws respecting priestly offices.

(2) Only the laws that were given to Israel (a) because of her cultural lag and the effects of slavery upon her personality—of which much is recorded in Leviticus, and (b) because of her singular civil needs or peculiar national circumstances.

There can be no “nailing to the cross” of any law which exists because of racial needs: laws which represent that which accords with the requirements of man’s very nature; laws that represent the necessary relations arising from the very nature of things cannot be abrogated—in which relation see Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1-12.

(3) Yes, for hardly one of those laws has been “fulfilled” (Matthew 5: 17-19 A. V.) as witness the present lot of man.

QUESTION:

When the times of the Gentiles is fulfilled, and the fullness of the everlasting gospel is taken from the Gentiles to the Jews, will Protestantism and sectarianism have any part in converting the Jews?
South Dakota C.R.B.

ANSWER:

It is possible that the best elements of Protestantism—belief in the Scriptures and in Christ—may act as a stimulant; whereas sectarianism with its narrow-minded bigotry may be a deterrent.

According to the parable of the sower and the seed, there has to be a period of preparation; good ground has to be prepared for the seed, which is the word of God (Luke 8: 11).

In his first significant religious experience, Joseph Smith was confronted with Protestantism and sectarianism. The revival meetings he attended had all the virtues of Protestantism at the beginning. The Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians were working together; but toward the close of the meeting they quarreled about claiming the converts, and terminated the meetings in the vices of sectarianism. This repelled the young man and set him thinking. In that attitude he read James 1: 5, 6: “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven of the wind and tossed.” That statement appealed to him with light and power, and it became the Word of God to him.

The sequence of events in conversation is stated by Paul in Romans 10: 12-17, as follows:

For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call on him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things. But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God.

The virtues of Protestantism will have considerably lessened with the fulfilling of the time of the Gentiles, and under the special power of the gospel, it will not be needed and will play no part in converting the Jews, other than its historical role in having helped to preserve the Scriptures.

The Book of Mormon has a role to play in preparing the Jews for the reception of the Word of God. “And behold they [words of the Book of Mormon] shall go forth unto the unbelieving Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.”—Page 699, verse 41.

When the special messengers turn from the Gentiles and go to the Jews, at the command of God, he will work a great and marvelous work among the children of men; a work which shall be everlasting, either on the one hand to peace and life eternal or unto the deliverance of them to the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, unto their being brought down into captivity and also unto destruction, both temporally and spiritually, according to the captivity of the devil, of which I have spoken.—Book of Mormon, pages 39, 40, verses 214-216.

If there is a single factor in conversion, whether of Jews or Gentiles, it is the Word of God, which is full of life and power. It is sufficient unto itself and the purposes for which it was designed.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

QUESTION:

According to I Corinthians 15: 42ff., will the resurrected, incorruptible, and spiritual body have blood in it?
Michigan M.D.J.

ANSWER:

The question respects an interpretation of I Corinthians 15, and nothing else; and I Corinthians does not answer that question.

To answer it one must make a logical analysis of this passage. This is difficult, if not impossible, for the reason that it provides no premises from which to draw inferences—on the question of blood in resurrected bodies. It is an admixture of more than a dozen specific questions.

Verse 50 comes closest to an implication respecting that question; and it is not close, because it says only that “flesh and blood” cannot inherit the kingdom. This does not imply anything respecting flesh without blood, no matter what our speculations may be—notwithstanding it is recorded elsewhere (Luke 24: 39) that “a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have”—after the resurrection of the body. It is the “spirit” that inherits the kingdom—which Paul said is “righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.”

An Author Expresses Regrets

Ardyth Kennelly (Mrs. Egon V. Ullman), author of The Peaceable Kingdom, was recently challenged by President Israel A. Smith for imputing the origin of polygamy in the church to Joseph Smith the Prophet. She expressed regret and said "I did not mean to offend anybody."

Then she gave this judgment which has been held by members of the Reorganization for a century:

It is too bad the impression is so widespread that he was the instigator of polygamy if, as you say, he was not. So much church history has been written, both by members and non-members of the Mormon Church, giving a contrary view, that a reader of these matters comes to assume that such must have been the case.

Persistent efforts are being made to correct the misinformation in encyclopedias and textbooks by supplying the publications with accredited data. It will take many years to root it out entirely, for rich and powerful interests in the West as well as public clamor for the sensational makes tough opposition. We think however that patient persistence in a reasonable approach to the publishers and writers will win.

A book review in the Des Moines Sunday Register of January 8, 1950, gave Apostle Paul M. Hanson an opportunity to get the "Open Forum" editor to publish the following article under the title, "Joseph Smith No Polygamist."

CHURCH OFFICIAL TELLS ABOUT THE PROPHET

(from Des Moines Sunday Register.)

In a review of the book, The Peaceable Kingdom, appearing on the Open Forum page, January 1, 1950, it is stated: "When the Mormon prophet envisioned polygamy as desirable."

Because of much public misinformation, many readers would be misled by the above reference to Joseph Smith. It is only fair to this man who has exerted a far-reaching influence in the field of religion, to point out that the doctrine of polygamy was publicly proclaimed and embraced by Brigham Young in the territory of Utah on August 29, 1852. To encourage his followers to accept the new system of marriage, Brigham Young introduced a document claiming it to be a revelation given through the prophet, Joseph Smith, providing for plural marriage. This was eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, and the document was not in his handwriting, nor did it bear his signature.

Only One Wife

No wives other than his well-known wife, Emma, was present and mourned at the funeral of Joseph Smith.

It is significant that none of the descendants of Joseph Smith have ever followed or endorsed the polygamous leadership of Brigham Young.

No child, in addition to those born of his wife, Emma, has ever been produced claiming descent from the prophet.

Three Sacred Books

The church over which Joseph Smith presided until the time of his death (1844), had three books which it accepted as sacred and containing its faith: the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. In the Book of Mormon, translated by the prophet from ancient American records, we read: "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."

The following are quotations from revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, given through Joseph Smith: "Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation."

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."

Marriage Ceremony

And, in the solemnizing of marriage, it is provided in the Doctrine and Covenants that the one officiating shall include these words: "He shall say, calling each by their names: 'You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?' And when they have answered 'Yes,' he shall pronounce them 'husband and wife' in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him."

Thirty-two years after the death of Joseph Smith, this ceremony was taken bodily out of the Doctrine and Covenants and the document providing for plural marriage substituted by authority of Brigham Young.

In the light of these facts and the law above presented which governed the church under the presidency of Joseph Smith until his death, it is not accurate to say "The Mormon prophet envisioned polygamy as desirable."—PAUL M. HANSON, President of the Council of Twelve Apostles, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Herald House INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

The First Book

By M. H. Siegfried

ON DECEMBER 5 there came to my desk a copy of the Missouri Historical Review for October, 1949.

Having no time during the day to peruse the volume, I opened the book a few minutes before dinner, and the first item attracting my attention was headed "Missouri History Not Found in Textbooks" (page 94).

I feel sure Herald readers will find it as interesting as I have. Here it is:

The frontier town of Independence, Missouri, was the site in 1833 of the printing press which turned out the first book printed in that immense territory between St. Louis and the Pacific coast.

Written by Joseph Smith, founder and head of the Mormon Church, the work was titled, A Book of Commandments, for the Government of the Church of Christ, Organized According to Law, on the sixth of April, 1830

The title page bears the inscription: "Zion, published by W. W. Phelps and Company, 1833." Zion was the name by which the Mormons knew Independence when in accordance with a revelation said to have been received by Smith, it was decided in July, 1831, to buy lands and settle in that four-year-old town Establishment of a printing office was among the first things on the agenda. In Cincinnati, W. W. Phelps, having been selected as printer, bought a press and other material for producing a monthly publication, The Evening and the Morning Star

In the meantime, a committee consisting of Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer and Phelps had been selected to edit the revelations for the proposed Book of Commandments. Preparations were almost finished when the printers received a letter on June 25, 1833, signed by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams, saying that it would not be necessary to have the book bound as "they will be sold well without binding"

Within a month, on July 20, 1833, an anti-Mormon mob attacked the printing plant and destroyed nearly all of the printed sheets of the book only three copies of the completed book are known to exist

One of the three known copies of the Commandments is in the William Robertson Coe collection of Western

L'Orchestre Sanito

THE TAHITIANS have their own method of cutting down the long name of the church. The church is universally known throughout the whole of French Oceania as Te Ekaresia Sanito. The word, Sanito, is coined from the root word, Saint, in the official title of the church.

On Christmas eve we appeared En Uniform before the governor, his wife, and many of his staff members at a Christmas program prepared by the officials of the local hospital. In the official journal of Tahiti on the following day we read this notice about the program:

Our compliments to Te Ekaresia Sanito for the lovely program of orchestral music. The orchestra appeared in uniforms of blue and gold and was the central attraction of the evening. We shall look forward to more concerts from L'Orchestre Sanito.

We are deeply indebted to Graceland College for the uniforms it so generously donated to us in 1948.

Americana recently placed in the library of Yale University. The collection was begun in 1910 Now comprising more than 7,000 volumes valued at one and a half million dollars Mormon literature and Mormon imprints are represented by some 900 titles among (which) is a complete set of Times and Seasons, published at Nauvoo, 1839-46, a complete file of the Frontier Guardian, (and) a complete file of the Deseret News, 1860-76

Notwithstanding its historical errors, still it is interesting and historical, and shows that the Spirit of the Restoration was the Spirit of Progress. So may it always be.

I'm Rich - By GRACE CROCKER

IN THE MINDS of many people, being rich consists of a bank account in the thousands or at least well in the hundreds. Since my occupation is that of a schoolteacher, you can readily see that in this way I shall never be wealthy. Perhaps you are wondering in what way, then, I consider myself rich.

I'm rich in friendship. My two years at Graceland made me realize more deeply the value of friends. My concept of God expanded as I met in fellowship with Nellie from Hawaii, Winnogene from Alabama, Beryl from Australia, and Lily from England. Because of the influence these people had in my life and the challenge I found from associating with them, my own desire to serve has become greater. Life seems richer somehow when it awakens within our dormant souls a desire to love our neighbor, and through that love find service to others and to Christ.

THIS SUMMER at youth camp I had the privilege of being leader of the junior church group. A priesthood member and I met in fellowship each morning with the children from five to ten years old. As the week progressed, we tried to bring Zion down to their level of understanding. A child of six stood one morning and offered a prayer that was as soul-inspiring as any I have ever heard. It wasn't a "give-me" prayer as might be expected from one that age, but rather a "thank-you" prayer in which the young worshiper expressed appreciation to God for the birds, the trees, the lake to swim in, and then closed with, "Help us to build Zion, God."

I came away from that service understanding a little more of what Jesus meant when he took a little child into his arms and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." The simplicity and humility expressed in that prayer made me know that for that hour I had walked on a higher plane. It made me wonder, too, in what way I was measuring up and building into my own life Zion qualities so necessary to become a kingdom builder.

LAST SPRING I visited an Indian reservation at Chilocoo, Oklahoma. While there I met Brother and Sister England and their three boys. They invited me to dinner that day. Their house is not rich-looking either inside or out, but I found within it the thing that transforms a house into a home. Life was rich for these people and all who had the opportunity of associating with them. They knew God personally; in their home he wasn't the uninvited guest but rather a good friend whom they asked to be a part of all they did. I don't remember what we had for dinner, but I will never forget the spirit present in the lives of those people.

IT SNOWED the other day—one of those quiet snows I like to get out and walk in and just feel within me the beauty of God. I walked along thinking of many things. Then as the snowflakes kept drifting down, I thought how different each one was. It seemed because of their very whiteness the earth was more pure. I thought, too, of how different each person is; and yet the desire is implanted deep within all people to in some way serve their Creator. I walked back feeling a sense of re-dedication and a deeper determination that in some way, by the kind of life I live, I might help to bring out that desire to serve that lies deep within the lives of others.

The other day as we were waiting for school to start, a little girl put her arms around me and said, "I'm so glad you're my teacher." In that moment I felt as if the whole world were mine. How pleased God must be when we put our hand in his and say to him, "Show me the way, God, I'm so glad you're my teacher."

IN THE SUMMER of 1948, I visited a girl friend in Sacramento for a few weeks. The bus ran within two blocks of the church, and we had to walk the rest of the way. Those walks still stand out in my memory because of one thing. The smiles and hellos I exchanged with the people I met as I walked along. I didn't know any of them personally, yet when I left I felt I had become friends with them through the common language God has given to all people—a smile. Perhaps Jesus meant for us to smile a little more when he said, "Be of good cheer."

Life is rich and challenging because of experiences like these which come only as we live and share in the more abundant way of life with others.

Increasing Interest in the Langer Bill

The most important contributions to current understanding of the temperance issue and the liquor problem have been incorporated in the testimony given at the hearing before the United States Senate Committee on interstate and foreign commerce by those who favor the passage of the Langer Bill to ban liquor advertising across state lines. When the bill was presented, the Senate Chairman announced that ninety-eight witnesses would be heard in a pro and con discussion of the measure. Distillers, brewers, wine-makers, advertising men, and representatives of labor unions associated with the liquor trade made up the list of those opposing the bill. Men and women from forty states appeared in the visitors' gallery to support the measure, and numerous telegrams from industrialists, educators, youth leaders, ministers, scientists, and medical men urged its acceptance. In previous hearings only a few persons outside the Capitol attended. (The Langer Bill was formerly known as the Capper Bill.)

The Home Column

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

FEBRUARY is a short month, and the supply of really outstanding articles seems to be a little short also. Nevertheless, there are many good ones and a few that are excellent.

"What America Means to Me," American Magazine, is a splendid article by a distinguished Negro, Ralph Bunche. His philosophy is thoroughly heart-warming and humbling, and proves that race has nothing to do with one's capacity for culture, wisdom, and loving-kindness.

If you want to do some real thinking, be it agreeing or disagreeing, read "The Road Ahead," Reader's Digest.

Some of the best articles concerning family life are found in Parents' Magazine. "Try a Whole Family Budget" discusses the economic situation and one family's solution. "Help Your Child by Helping Yourself" is excellent for all parents who sometimes feel baffled and unsure—and what parents don't? All new or about-to-be mothers will receive a great deal of help and assurance from "How Life Begins for a Baby."

Are you longing for your long-lost youth? "It's Wonderful Not to Be Eighteen," Good Housekeeping, is just the tonic you need.

For stimulating rug-making ideas, see "Everybody's Making Rugs Today," American Home, and "There Are Lots of Ways to Make Rugs," Woman's Day.

If you've always wanted a John-Frederics hat and couldn't afford it, you can "Make Your Own . . .," also in Woman's Day.

"The Cancer in Our Breast," McCall's, discusses an all-too-prevalent disease.

Every American will realize that the capital city is his responsibility if he reads "Washington—Disgrace to the Nation," Woman's Home Companion.

"Are You Tactless With Teens?" Woman's Home Companion, is a pointed reminder for adults.

Articles For Conference Bazaar

By LaVonne Krickle

Secretary, Needlecraft Society

THE NEEDLECRAFT SOCIETY again solicits the help of all the women of the church to obtain articles for the booth which it will sponsor this coming Conference. Many have visited this booth in the lower Auditorium at previous Conferences. It will be there again this year with attractive articles for sale to apply to the General Church missionary fund.

All kinds of articles are welcomed, but there is always the greatest demand for the following:

Pillow cases

Tea towel sets, dresser sets, and scarves

Aprons of all sizes—small, medium, large, and extra large

Luncheon sets

All kinds of handwork, small, unique, and inexpensive

Hot pads

Will you share in this new endeavor toward missionary work by sending your individual gifts and by encouraging your women's groups to make a combined contribution? Great things can be accomplished when all work together for such a worthy project.

Packages should be sent as soon as possible to:

To My Neighbor

I can't begin to tell you all the things

I thank you for—

The cheerful smile, the kindly deeds

That make you what you are.

I only hope that you can know

How much it's meant to me

To have a neighbor just like you

Whose heart is charity.

The flower bulbs you planted in

My yard one busy day

Bore more than pretty blossoms that

Can wilt and fade away.

For flowers of love they now shall be

And in their blossoms fair

Will be a fresh reminder that

My neighbors really care.

the local priesthood, the pastors, and missionaries has resulted in seventy-five baptisms for 1949. However, four baptisms came so late in the year that they could not be officially recorded for '49."

We are not satisfied with these results and are looking forward to a substantial increase for 1950. It is our firm conviction that this Mission should reach and maintain a 10 per cent annual increase in membership over a period of years if it is to become self-sustaining. To this end we shall work.

The Saints of England are approaching the General Conference with prayerful concern, confident that God will direct in the affairs of the church. Brother and Sister John H. Coggan of Nuneaton and Brother and Sister William Entwistle and sons, Brian and David, of Wigan, have bookings to sail for New York, March 15, on the Queen Mary. We are happy that these fine people will have the opportunity to attend this important gathering of the church and to bring firsthand information of the British Isles Mission.

We look forward to the year ahead and pray that God will in increasing measure find it possible to direct his church through your inspired leadership to the end that Zion, to which so many over here look, may come forth in power and beauty.

Briefs

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—Two new branches were organized in the Gulf States District on February 22 and 29 by Apostle W. Wallace Smith, assisted by District President W. J. Breshears, High Priest W. F. Steiner, Elder J. A. Pray, and Evangelist A. D. McCall.

The new branches are to be known as the Belleview Branch, located near Pensacola, Florida, and the Bayou La Batre Branch, located in the village of Bayou La Batre, Alabama.

Branch officers are as follows: Belleview—Elder L. G. Tipton, pastor; Priest A. J. Sullivan, counselor; Priest Morris Taunton, counselor and director of young people; Elizabeth Powers, secretary; J. C. Dungan, church school director and treasurer; Claudia Tipton, director of music, women's department leader, publicity agent, and book steward; Matilda Powers, historian; and A. J. Sullivan, branch solicitor.

Bayou La Batre—Elder O. O. Tillman, pastor; Priest Alma Tillman, counselor and branch solicitor; Teacher Delbert Tillman, counselor; Audra Tillman, secretary and director of music; Irma Tillman, church school director and historian; Deacon Robert Pendarvis, treasurer; Frank Deakle, director of young people; Lovenia Sutton, women's department leader; Hazel Nelson, publicity agent and book steward.—Reported by W. J. BRESHEARS.

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—The group was organized into a branch January 29. High Priest Joseph Breshears, president of the Gulf States District, made the introductory address. Apostle Wallace Smith, who is in charge of the Southern Mission, presided over the business session.

Zion's League was organized January 9 at the home of Oscar Tillman by Elder Jack A. Pray with thirteen members enrolled. The officers are David Gazzier, president; Donald Tillman, vice president; and Marie Ankerson, secretary-treasurer.—Reported by MRS. HARVEY NELSON.

BELLEVIEW BRANCH, PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—During the organization of the branch Apostle Smith recognized Priest David Donaldson who was ordained to the priesthood 76 years ago, and will be 100 years old his next birthday. Brother Smith reminded him that he perhaps holds the distinction of being the oldest member of the priesthood of the church today. Brother Donaldson is very active and attends church nearly every Sunday. His main trouble now is his sight; it has been failing him for a number of years, so he has some one go with him to keep him from falling. He bears his testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel and is still trying to win another.

This group already had a building with an appropriate educational addition equipped with a Butane heating system.

The grounds are improved by landscaping and by shrubbery and flowering plants. The church is located in a large grove of oaks. The membership soon will be about 100. The branch is beginning with a clean slate, no debt, all having been paid for.

A basket lunch was served outdoors at the noon hour.—Reported by MRS. L. G. TIPTON.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—We not only extend to Sister Douglas W. Cameron our sympathy in her hour of sorrow (her husband died January 26, 1950), but to her we wish to pay tribute for her true devotion to the church. It was through her that her husband became a member of the church. It was because of her love for the church that she permitted her minister husband to be away from home for weeks at a time, while she looked after the home. She shared the gospel with him, and indeed she will share in the reward of the fruits of his labors. Sister Cameron was baptized when she was a little girl thirteen years old. During all these seventy years, she has been a faithful, devoted member of the church. Though she is now eighty-three years old, she is almost always at church on Sunday mornings with a pleasant smile and a kindly greeting to all. God bless you Sister Cameron! We believe Sister Cameron has been a member of the church longer than anyone else now living in Ontario.—Taken from Toronto News.

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.—Deryl Booker, son of Brother and Sister Joseph Booker, was blessed December 18 by Elder T. W. Warehan.

The Young Adults' church school class held a party, January 12, at the home of Brother and Sister R. Greeney. They studied a lesson they had missed in the last quarter. Creative games were played and refreshments were served.—Taken from District News.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—On January 15, Zion's League held a candlelight installation service for the new officers. Each officer gave a short talk explaining his duties. After the service the Leaguers assembled in the lower auditorium for a fellowship hour.

On January 29 twenty-one Leaguers met at the South Omaha Mission for a breakfast get-together and a special service.

On January 18 the mission held its first fellowship dinner.—Taken from Ray-O-Lite.

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS.—September 18 Apostle E. J. Gleazer and District President Arthur Henson attended the meeting for the annual election of officers. Brother Gleazer preached at 11:00 a.m. Seventy James Menzies was the evening speaker.

Election of officers was held at 3:00 p.m. Officers elected were Harold Walker, pastor; Harold Skiles, church school director; Margaret Anderson, women's department leader; Bernice Anderson, Zion's League leader, and Jennie Thomas, music supervisor.

Brother and Sister Randall Hart and two daughters have moved back to Beardstown after living on a farm near Arcola, Ill., the past seventeen years. They recently purchased a farm near Beardstown. Brother Hart has been State President and also National Vice President of the Future Farmers of America and is a member of the Champion Farmer's Organization.

Clarice Marie Anderson and J. D. Young of LaMoure, N. D., were married at the church December 18, both are graduates of Graceland College.

January 8, Lena Brown, of Kinderhook, the women's department leader, met with the women and also organized a separate circle which includes a large group of young people. The young people elected Sister Buelah Hart as leader and Sister Grace Ohrn as co-leader. January 12 the circle met at the home of Sister Hart and elected Sister Helen Ellerman as secretary and Sister Margaret Redshaw as treasurer, and made plans for regular meetings and study.

Six were baptized January 15, Pastor Harold Walker baptized three and Seventy James Menzies baptized three. Confirmation services were held in the evening.

Julie Ann, daughter of Brother and Sister Walker, was blessed recently by High Priest Arthur Henson of Taylorville, Illinois.

A new Hammond electric organ has recently been installed in the church.

Other out-of-town speakers have been Patriarch O. C. Henson of Decatur, Elder R. L. Fulk of Holt, Mo., Elder Jason Daykin of Taylorville, Elder Ogle Thomas of Bluffs, and Brother Swain Marshall of Jacksonville.—Reported by MRS. L. C. JONES.

Polygamy in Israeli

The Des Moines Register recently published an editorial on "Israel's Problem of Polygamy" which is worthy of a good reading, notwithstanding the writer assumes as a fact something very much and well controverted in his references to polygamy in Illinois and Missouri.

Former leaders among the Mormons in Utah knew and openly admitted that polygamy was not the cause of the difficulties in Missouri from 1834 to 1839, and neither was it the cause of bloodshed in Illinois from 1844 to 1846.

With the consent of the Register, we give our readers the benefit of this editorial.

What to do about polygamy? That issue created riots and bloodshed in Illinois and Missouri a century ago, and military rule and delayed statehood in Utah a little later. Now it is confronting the new state of Israel.

There's nothing in the Ten Commandments against polygamy. Abraham, David, and Solomon had more than one wife at a time. So did Christian kings of France in the Dark Ages, and Mormon elders of the heroic age on the frontier.

Monogamy as the only legal form of marriage is a development of the last thousand years of Europe, out of elements in Roman puritanism, Christian asceticism, and Jewish idealism. Actual practice falls considerably short of it everywhere. But everywhere it is reinforced by the normal sex ratio. There just aren't women enough to go around for any very general polygamy unless you condemn many of your males to bachelordom or slaughter.

The Jews of Western Europe legally abolished polygamy about the time Western Christendom began to think seriously of enforcing Roman and Canon laws in the wild barbarian kingdoms. A conference of learned Jewish commentators on the law, called by Rabbi Gershom ben Judah in the 1000's, fixed the rule for Jews in the Frankish and Rhenish lands. They carried it with them when they were driven to Poland a few centuries later by Christian intolerance, and to the whole world when Eastern Europe became the focus of intolerance in the nineteenth century.

Today in Israel, Jews living under Rabbi Gershom's edict find themselves neighbors of Jews from Yemen and Sephardic Jews from the old Turkish empire, who had retained legal polygamy like the Moslems around them. Two Jewish delegates in the Knesset (the Israeli parliament) have two wives each. There are very few Moslem Arabs left in Israel, but these retain the theoretical Moslem right to four wives apiece. In practice, few have more than one.

The old British government of the Palestine mandate solved the conflict of laws by permitting polygamy to Moslems and Oriental Jews, and denying it to Christians and European Jews. That is still the going rule in Israel.

But many Israelites from Gershomite lands are as shocked by polygamy as the Illinois and Missouri farmers of frontier days. Prime Minister Ben-Gurion has announced he will call for a revision of the marriage laws at the next session of parliament.

Even in Moslem and other Oriental countries where polygamy has had continuous legal sanction from time immemorial, the younger generation often regards it as old hat. Every little while some king or prince ostentatiously announces he will have but one wife, or some legislature talks of abolishing the plural privilege.

The non-Western world is in full revolt against Western colonial rule and is very suspicious of capitalism (now on the defensive in the West itself). But Western science, Western machine techniques, Western monogamy and romantic love are still spreading.

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

ZION'S LEAGUE

The Auditorium will be open every Saturday evening for the activity nights that are being held by Zion's Leagues. The activity nights that have been held every Tuesday evening will be discontinued.

The activity night program offers a variety of sports, such as volleyball, basketball, Ping-pong, and shuffleboard. The practice of playing mass games on the gymnasium floor will be continued. These games include dodge ball, three deep, relays, and other circle games.

The art class taught by John Thoman will be held every Saturday evening instead of every Tuesday. The library and browsing room is open on Saturday evenings. A candy concession is operated by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Holsworth.

NATIONAL HONOR

Joe Arthur Taylor, a member of Stone Church congregation, Independence, has been chosen to participate in the "Washington Semester Plan."

According to this plan a college junior spends one semester in the nation's capital studying government and politics under the auspices of the department of social studies at American University, Washington, D. C. Most students selected for this honor come from colleges located in the East, but because of young Taylor's high grades and other college activities as well as his active work in politics, he was chosen from the William Jewell College to represent the Middle West.

Joe Arthur Taylor is the son of A. B. Taylor of the Standing High Council.

PASTOR'S MEETING

The pastors of Zion held a meeting on February 6 in the radio room of Stone Church. Among the things discussed was the city-wide prayer meetings that are to be held in the interest of General Conference. These meetings will be held in the Stone Church, beginning on March 20 and lasting throughout the week. Because the members of all the congregations of Zion are to attend these meetings, a large crowd is expected.

On Good Friday, April 7, special services will be held for the adults from 12:00 to 3:00; for the young people from 2:00 to 3:00; and for the children from 2:00 to 3:00. There will be no General Conference activities until after 3:00 o'clock.

Bishop Harold Cackler discussed the new Social Service Center and the problems that must be overcome before it is ready for use. If enough help can be secured, it is planned to have this building open for business six days each week.

DAY OF BIRTHDAYS

When the High Council held its meeting on February 7, it was noted that two of the men, A. B. Phillips and J. F. Keir, also had birthdays on that date. Brother Phillips was seventy-seven years old. Brother Keir was seventy-four years old. February 7 also marked the birthdate of Charles Dickens, noted English novelist.

GROUP ELDERS MEETING

Stone Church group elders, division leaders, and their wives met January 24 at the Women's Center Building. A covered dish luncheon was served. There was almost a complete membership attendance at this meeting, the second of its kind this year. Elder Glaude Smith spoke at the meeting.

A Form of Godliness - By SHIRLEY MASON

OVER A CENTURY AGO the young prophet, Joseph Smith, received an astounding answer to his petitions regarding what church he should join. We all know he was told to "join none of them," but sometimes it is good to return and review once more the reasons why certain revelations were given. Not infrequently one can discover a more extensive meaning in the seemingly simple words which have been accepted unchallenged.

We find the reason for such an admonition given to young Joseph stated thus "... they have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." This morning I was reminded of these words when I sat with a friend and observed the ritual of another church. Since I myself have belonged to other faiths and know that there is much good to be found in them, I do not attempt to belittle in any way the religions of other people. I simply state that I was reminded of how easy it is for men to lapse into a "form of godliness" but to utterly overlook the power and strength to be gained thereby—the purpose and meaning of helps in worship. It is like becoming so involved in homework that one forgets the purpose in learning various materials. Often we only "go through the motions" of worship; "our hearts are far from him" while lips say, "thy kingdom come." No wonder God frowned upon such meaningless activity.

I wonder if some of this same religious lethargy persists in our own church. Could it be possible that even while the bread and wine are being blessed in our own church, hearts and minds are "far from him"? Do we mechanically comply with other sacraments and ordinances? We might as well be honest with ourselves.

OFTEN I HAVE "sat through" a service (not infrequently a preaching service) and was entirely carried away in fanciful thinking about my work, a project to come, or what I would do when I got home. But I stood when the prayer was offered, I sang "Onward to Zion," I put my dime in the collection plate (no one was aware of the amount), yet these actions belied what was really going on inside me. Of course, no one actually knew of my digression. From all outward manifestations I was doing the saintly act of worship. Only God and I knew I wasn't. No doubt his great heart was grieved because of my actions, for I had "a form of godliness" yet denied the very means by which God communes with men. How could he possibly penetrate my heart with his still small voice when all the while I kept thinking, almost uninterruptedly, "Let's see now: I've got to get my Latin studied today, and I haven't done my American lit yet either. Aunt Emma will be over, so when will I ever get a chance to study? Yesterday I had too much to do, so I had to postpone it until today. Oh, my, thirty more minutes to wait. I wonder what we'll be having for dinner." Then off on delightful speculations of Sunday dinner. Suddenly the last hymn was announced, and I awakened to actuality. I had not heard one word, but—I hastened to reassure myself—Broker Yokel is a poor speaker anyway.

I RECENTLY READ A STORY—a true account—of a man who lived on the coast of Maine, and one summer he decided to start a church school class for children living on an island not far from shore. He took his motorboat and went over to meet them all, and, like a good teacher, he tried to establish a point of contact immediately by talking about something with which the students were familiar. He asked, "How many of you have seen the Atlantic Ocean?" Blank faces stared back at him, and not one hand was raised.

It is difficult to imagine the children's not knowing the name of the ocean, for they had been within sight and sound of it all their lives, but is this not an illustration of what happens in some of our lives? God is ever near and around us—"in him we move and have our being," but often we fail to recognize him.

That is just what happens when I let my mind remain in a wandering state of confusion (anxiety or pleasurable speculation) while I move unconsciously through an ordinance or sacrament in His church. And since I have mentioned my willful departure from a preaching service, I might as well state the thing my heart really knows but which my mind will not always admit: a servant of God in the act of preaching stands in as sacred a place as he would in performing the usually-named sacraments, and he is in no less a position to give spiritual sustenance. Yes, I believe that truth, but I have to keep reminding myself of it.

JUST WHERE do we stand as Christians today in the all-seeing eye

The Visitor - By EMMA M. PHILLIPS

THE VILLAGE STREET that had been so peaceful in the spring sunshine suddenly became full of excitement, for from house to house had gone the report that an angel from heaven was coming to visit a home on this street.

When Sarah heard the report, she thought immediately of her untidy house. Oh, it was no worse than any other house along the street, and her children were no more untidy than any other children of the neighborhood—but for a heavenly visitor, she must have things clean and sparkling. First she would clean the house, and then she would attend to the children. If she cleaned them first, they would be dirty again by the time the heavenly visitor arrived.

No sooner had she grabbed her broom and begun to sweep vigorously than a knock came at the back door. Before she could get to it, a neighbor thrust it open and at the same time called, "Sarah, come quickly. It's my mother again. I think she's having another heart attack." Sarah left her task and ran to the house next door. It was almost two hours before she was able to return to her work.

AGAIN SHE GRABBED her broom and started to work. And again there came a knock on the door. As she opened it, she saw two men standing on the front porch. One man held a baby who was crying as loudly as it could. The other man asked if they might use the phone, for their car had broken down, and they must summon assistance. Sarah pointed out the phone to the man and noticed with a slight frown how his feet left muddy tracks on the floor. Turning to the other man, she suggested, "Let me take the child. It needs the touch of a woman's hand." She held the child close to her, rocking back and forth as she hummed a hymn. The men had not heard the hymn before, and they inquired as to its origin and the church in which she had learned it. Sarah looked at her broom, and then sat down with her uninvited guests. She answered their questions, and as she talked, their interest increased. When the time came for them to leave, they promised to visit her church the following Lord's day.

With a smile of satisfaction, Sarah prepared to return to her work. As she picked up her broom, she heard a faint knock on the back door—so faint that it was hardly audible. When she opened the door, she saw standing on the step a frail little girl who lived in the next block. "I'm hungry," said the child. "My mama is working, and nobody has any time to feed me. Can you give me a cookie?" Within Sarah there arose a bitterness—not for the child, but for the people who had so neglected her. Again the broom was placed in the corner while Sarah went to prepare food for her little visitor. She called her two children in from the yard, and the four of them sat down to a nourishing meal. Sarah smiled as they went back into the yard.

SHE CLEARED the table and piled the dishes into the sink. As she poured the hot water on them, she looked at her broom in the corner and sighed in meager relief because the few dishes would not take much of her time. Then she would clean, diligently clean, her house. Just as she was hanging up the dish towel, and turning toward her broom, the phone rang. "Oh, Sarah," came the excited voice of her friend, "my little son has just fallen out of his swing and bumped his head so badly there is a big lump coming on it. I've got to take him to the doctor. My Blue Bird girls are meeting here today, and now I can't have them. Will you let them meet at your house? Don't bother with a lesson. Just entertain them. Please, Sarah." Sarah, always ready to help, agreed without considering the problem. She hung up the receiver, looked at her broom, and wondered why she had ever made such a hasty agreement.

Hours later she sank wearily into a chair. Her head nodded, her eyes closed, and she fell asleep. As she slept, she dreamed, and into her dream came the heavenly visitor. "Four times," he said, "four times I have been with you today. When you cared for the sick mother, I stood at the head of her bed. When you talked to the men, I sat on the other end of the davenport. At the table I bowed with you and the three children. I met with the Blue Bird band. Your day has brought pleasure to the heart of your Creator. Such days build righteous lives."

of God? Is his heart not as sorely grieved when we continue playing with spiritual tools necessary for the establishing of his kingdom on earth? Christ has told us "the kingdom of God is within." Thus we are admonished to search our own hearts first and fit them for his presence. Outward show of a nonpresent state of righteousness wears the most hypocritical face of all. I can think of no better way to win the disapproval of Him who chased money-changers and pretenders out of God's house. When we unfeelingly move through a service, we are no better than the Pharisee who "prayed unto himself" or the scribes who did "their alms before men to be seen of them." William Dean Howells wrote: [mankind] ". . . has hopelessly endeavored to substitute ceremony for character and creed for life."* Is "a form of godliness" without vindication in actual living once more corrupting the church of Jesus Christ?

She is survived by her husband, John, five children; twenty-one grandchildren; and seventeen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Ward Mortuary in Klamath Falls, Elder Ted Schuld officiating. Interment was in Klamath Memorial Park.

MAYHEW.—Albert, son of Isaac and Marcline Mayhew, was born September 11, 1879, at Elk, South Dakota, and died January 27, 1950, in the Polyclinic Medical Center, at Kansas City, Missouri. As a boy he moved with his family to Minnesota, and from there he went to Canada in 1900 to take up a homestead. In 1903 he was elected director of the school board and province counselor. On April 25, 1909, he was married to Ida Albertina Wertz. The following year they returned to the States, settling in Westby, Montana; five children were born to them here. During his twenty years in Westby, Brother Mayhew served at various times as school board director, director of the Farmer's Grain Elevator, and in other public offices. Because of his interest in the church, he made a trip to Independence, Missouri, in 1924 and purchased a home. Later he bought cotton land at Kennett, and in 1946 purchased a farm near Oak Grove which he was operating with his son at the time of his death.

He is survived by his wife, Ida; two sons: Lawrence E. of Bates City, Missouri, and Leon A. of Medicine Lake, Montana; three daughters: Mrs. Sadie Hein and Mrs. Lillian Kinser of Independence, and Miss Esther Mayhew of Kansas City; a nephew, Derold Wertz of Independence, and a niece, Mrs. Dona Hattey of Bates City, whom the Mayhews reared; five brothers: Isaac of Litchfield, Minnesota; Henry of Lansing, Michigan; George of Vancouver, British Columbia; Peter of El Monte, California; and Joseph of Grandview, Washington; six sisters: Mrs. Rosie Bordleau and Mrs. Vina Jewett of Fargo, North Dakota; Mrs. Josephine Vincent of Duluth, Minnesota; Mrs. Addie Labrie of White Fish, Montana; Mrs. Ella Jewett of Broomhead, Saskatchewan; and Mrs. Mary Chevalier of Chicago, Illinois; twelve grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Walnut Park Reorganized Church in Independence, Elders Fred O. Davies and Lester Haas officiating.

TRAYER.—E. L., Jr., was born in Somerville, Massachusetts, on December 30, 1908, and died in Somerville on January 25, 1950. His boyhood was spent in the Greater Boston area, but in 1928 he left the East to attend Graceland College, where he was elected captain of the Varsity Football team. While there he met Frances Whitcher, who became his wife on October 24, 1930. He operated a cattle-trucking business in addition to having a laundry in Lexington. He was a director of the New Hampshire Truck Owner's Association, secretary of the New Hampshire Horse and Trail Association, and a member of the Lexington Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce. Always devoted to the church, he was ordained a deacon on April 22, 1934, in which office he served until his death.

He is survived by his wife, Frances; a son, E. L. III; a daughter, Sandra Jean; and a sister, Mrs. Audrey T. Hardy. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Somerville, Elder A. W. Sheehy and Ralph E. Herrick officiating. Interment was in Lexington.

 KINDNESS

Even if you only treat a dog kindly, it will make you a better man. Remember that what you do for others helps you grow. When you refuse to help another person in a time of need, you shrink.

You unmarried folk—take a bit of advice. Listen to Precious talking to her mother when she doesn't know you're listening. That's the way she'll talk to you when the honeymoon is over. And, Precious, watch Handsome's face when something goes wrong. Would you like to have him look at you that way after the preacher has tied the knot?

Listen—he may not be rich. He may be a little dumb. And he may not be nearly as good looking as that Curly McLocks of the movies you have such a crush on. But if he is kind, Precious, you take him and be thankful, for you will never regret it.

 SPELLING

P. S. would like to sing the praises of his typewriter, with a few sneers in the chorus. . . . Typewriter is a personality, part gremlin, part poltergeist, with odds and ends of pixy, leprechaun, and troll for good measure. Typewriter has a perverse liking for his own kind of spelling, and often disagrees with the dictionary. . . . P.S.—of course and indubitably—knows how to spell a simple word like "pastor," but Typewriter prefers "pasotr." In the first sentence he wrote "priases," which had to be erased. Any time the word "claim" comes up, he makes it "calim." One could almost make a new language out of this stuff, but who could understand it?

Incidentally, the next invention for the scientists to work on is an automatic electric eraser on every typewriter. Just push the button and, "bzzzzt!" it will be clean again.

 REVISING NATURE

The small begonia is making a brave struggle to bloom in the wan light of a north window, the flowers turning hopeful faces up toward a gray and gloomy January sky. The plant had dropped a covering of old leaves at its feet. In an excess of misguided zeal I removed them, exposing the soft, moist soil beneath. Surely that would help it to perk up.

A few days later it was drooping, and the soil was forming a hard dry crust, though there was moisture beneath. The worst enemies of flowers are human beings. . . . Today, in a mood of repentance, I am clipping off a few old leaves and covering the soil again. Maybe my plant won't die, I hope. Nature seems to prefer her own plans for her smaller children.

Some day we may learn not to tamper with things so much—not to do so much senseless experimenting and changing conditions for our bodies and souls, giving up the old ways and seeking new ones. Have you ever thought that all the Prodigal Son's troubles came from the fact that he got tired of his home?

 THE FIGHT FOR FREEDOM is an endless battle. Its victories are never final; its defeats are never permanent. Each generation must defend its heritage, for each seeming conquest gives rise to new forces that will attempt to substitute fresh means of oppression for the old. There can be no peace in a world of life and growth—every battle the fathers thought finished will have to be fought anew by their children if they wish to preserve and extend their freedom.—Philip Van Doren Stern.

Notice to 1949 Tithesayers

News & Notes

DURING MARCH, 1950, all members who paid tithing and general offerings during 1949 should receive a "Statement of General Church Contributions" and a copy of "1949 Contributors' Report." In order to avoid unnecessary correspondence, we are again calling attention to the nature of these statements which are mailed annually.

1. The statements to individuals cover officially receipted contributions made to the General Church during the year of 1949. Tithes and offerings of previous years and offerings to branch and district funds are not included.
2. Contributions made by means of collections or special General Church offerings such as oblation, Sanitarium Day, and College Day are credited to the branch, and in all instances in which we have the branch pastor's address, a statement of these offerings will be mailed to the pastor, following the mailing of statements to individual contributors. Where individuals have received receipts for the above-mentioned special fund contributions, these are included on the statement.

Any member making a General Church contribution for which an official receipt was written during 1949 who fails to receive a "Statement of General Church Contributions" during the month of March should write to the Presiding Bishopric, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, giving details of contributions made during the year.

Attention is also called to the specific instructions on the reverse side of the statement, and all assistance given in the correction of errors in these statements will be sincerely appreciated.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By G. L. DeLapp.

"Daily Herald" Reporters

Did you ever try to watch a three-ring circus? That effort is elemental in comparison with trying to cover the activities of our General Conference. The staff editors need some part-time volunteer reporters for the duration of the Conference.

If you can cover some of the morning or evening meetings, classes, or other activities and write up some of the features having church-wide interest, please let us know. Come to the "Daily Herald" Pressroom, Booth Number 2, Lower Auditorium, for an assignment after the afternoon service on Sunday, April 2, or at your earliest opportunity. It will help us to know that you are "ready, willing, and able" to assist. Drop us a line, won't you?

The Saints' Herald is the official publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, and is issued through the offices of Herald Publishing House, 103 South Osage Street, Independence, Missouri. Entered as second-class matter at the post office at Independence, Missouri, under Act of March 3, 1879. Issued weekly at Independence, Missouri. Price, $3.50 per year and $1.75 for six months in advance in the U. S. A., its territories and possessions; Canada, $3.75 per year and $1.90 for six months; other countries, $4.50 per year. Notice of a change of address must be given three weeks ahead of the date that it is to become effective. Accepted for mailing at the special rate of postage provided for in section 1103, Act of October 3, 1917, authorized July 21, 1921. Printed in the United States of America.

AMONG THE HONORED

Brother Don Harding was chosen as the outstanding young man of Council Bluffs for 1949. He was president of the Chamber of Commerce and was quite active in civic affairs.

PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE

Apostle D. T. Williams and F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, conducted a priesthood institute for the ministry of the Rock Island District at Moline, Illinois, February 3 to 5. They conducted classes, panel discussions, group forums, visual aids, a banquet, a prayer service, and a Communion service. They report excellent attendance and interest with practically all of the branches of the district represented. The banquet was attended by priesthood and their wives, 110 in all. Approximately $100.00 worth of educational literature for priesthood was distributed.

VAN NUYS, CALIFORNIA

The metal lath has been put on three sides of the church building, and the stuccoing work has been started.

The first anniversary service was held February 5. Although the weather was bad, there were approximately eighty-five out for morning service.

This group has raised approximately $6,500 during their first year. Five thousand of this amount has gone into the building fund.

MUSIC CONCERT

The third of the 1949-50 season of the Community Music Association and the Independence Symphony Orchestra was held in Memorial Hall on February 19. Guest soloist was Harriett Porter Moore who sang the contralto solo in the radio performance of Handel's "The Messiah" last Christmas. Franklyn S. Weddle, director of the department of music, directed a choir of thirty male voices that sang with the orchestra.

STONE CHURCH TEEN-AGERS

Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke on the subject, "The Object of My Affection," when he was guest speaker at the Valentine Banquet that was given in the Women's Center by the Teen-age Zion's League of Stone Church on February 14. Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Hastings were in charge of the banquet. The mothers of the teen-agers cooked the dinner; the fathers served it. Margaret McKeivitt was in charge of the decorations.

VISIT TO MICHIGAN

President F. H. Edwards spent the week end of February 18, 19 in Detroit, Michigan, and neighboring territory, attending to the local business of the church.

RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS WEEK

Apostles Charles R. Hield and Reed M. Holmes were campus guests at Graceland College during the Religious Emphasis Week that was held from February 11 to 16. The Apostles took part in the many special events that were held during the week.

To show their appreciation, the students and faculty presented each Apostle with large scrapbooks depicting the events and activities of the week. About twenty-five photographs, 10x12 in size, with appropriate captions were in the books.

DISTRICT MEETING

Apostles D. T. Williams and Maurice Draper were leaders and instructors for the Chicago and Northwestern, Illinois, District priesthood institute held February 18 and 19 in Aurora.

A Sacred Trust

THE RIGHT OF FRANCHISE, or voting, in free elections is one of the priceless heritages of American law. It is not exclusively American, however, for there are other countries, as for instance, England, Canada, and Australia, where citizens have a like privilege.

On page two of last week's Herald, the duty was stressed of all qualified citizens first, to vote, and second, to vote intelligently by studying the issues submitted as well as learning what candidates for office are most likely to qualify under their oath of office as capable and conscientious public servants.

There are now many political subdivisions where the Saints by virtue of their numbers can exercise a beneficial influence in public elections. Where such a situation exists, there devolves upon them a grave responsibility to cast their votes always on the side of good government. This responsibility cannot be evaded; with each one it is a personal trust.

Good government does not come about by chance or by the mere fiat of official administrators. Corruption in government is developed through evil and often unseen processes. Eternal vigilance is essential, and careful consideration from time to time is the "installment payment" good citizens must continue to pay as the price of a free government.

From small beginnings in a few central states when our strength was negligible, when we were few in number and widely scattered, our members—even if they had voted as a unit (which never has happened)—could not have been much of a factor in public elections. Many persons not of the church have at times feared the result of a solid Latter Day Saint vote. Strange to say, yet it is a fact, nobody has ever delivered the solid Latter Day Saint vote or the votes of even a majority of them to a single candidate or to any political party. And stranger still, yet true, no official of the church, so far as I am advised, ever attempted to do so. I am convinced any such a proposal would have met and today would be met with disapproval by a great majority of our members. I do not mean to imply that at times some of our own members have not proposed that it be attempted.

AFTER THE RECENT DEATH of Mr. Roger T. Sermon, who was Mayor of Independence for twenty-six years, there was considerable speculation among the leaders of his party as to a candidate to succeed him. The Kansas City Star for the 24th of January carried a front-page article on the subject which contained a paragraph with a special sub-heading which was arresting and caused the writer and others to sense something evidently in the thinking of others but not heretofore in our own political consciousness. In commenting as to the qualifications of a certain candidate who had been designated at a primary for mayor, the Star said:

CHURCH IS A FACTOR

Democratic leaders pointed to two factors as being important in the selection. First was the necessity of finding a candidate acceptable to the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, a powerful group in Independence. Although not a member of that church, it is believed Weatherford will be agreeable to many of its members.

There are times when grave moral issues are involved in elections on which the church (the word used in a generic sense) could well and ought to "take sides," that is, marshal their voting strength in an attempt to win for the side of good morals. There are times when the issues are not too well defined—where perhaps the only important factors are the personalities of the candidates—when it would not be wisdom, in our opinion, to attempt to influence the vote of the members—even if it could be done. Personally I should dislike to attempt such a thing regardless of the issues or personalities involved.

We have been told in effect to seek to put good men into public office. The safest way is to advise our members to study the issues and to learn the character and records of candidates, and leave them to vote as their enlightened judgment leads them without official persuasion or—as might happen or be thought to exist—official duress.

Yet it is obvious, upon thinking about it, that we have become a factor in the growing city of Independence and in the County of Jackson. We believe the church and the leading men of our councils enjoy the confidence of the leading men of state, county, and city government. This influence, much or little, also constitutes a sacred trust. That position of growing confidence and trust must be jealously safeguarded and not put in jeopardy by any ill-advised alignment or one not based on unquestioned moral considerations.

Among the eighteen men of the Joint Council and among our ministry, there is much independence and difference of thought in political matters. I do not know the party to which my own associate belongs. I know some of my associates are Democrats and some are Republicans. I would be unable without inquiry to list their party affiliations. But I can assure Herald readers and our members that no political differences have ever been allowed to jeopardize our most excellent relations, and, God being our helper, I trust they never will interfere with our mutual trust and confidence.

I might, of course, feel others are too partisan; but then, one look at my desk where a party emblem serves as a pencil holder, and methinks the casual observer says, "He must be extremely partisan." Well, two men never differed more politically than if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

FAITHFUL SAINTS have always been concerned about the care of the poor. Our obligation in this connection has been made very clear in Doctrine and Covenants 101:2:

Failure "to impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them" was apparently one of the fundamental reasons why the early Saints did not build Zion (Doctrine and Covenants 102:2).

In the early days of our church, this concern for the poor was expressed in individual and group helpfulness. In our smaller and less-highly organized centers this method is still followed. But such help, while very desirable, sometimes tends to be superficial and spasmodic. It rarely takes into account our basic responsibility for helping the poor to help themselves so that they may no longer be poor. This is probably a major reason for the provision of the law that the Bishop shall search out the poor (Doctrine and Covenants 83:23) and that he shall supervise the distribution of surplus put into his hands by the Saints for the benefit of our less fortunate brothers and sisters (Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 11, 19; 122:6).

As might be expected, the women of the church have proved to be the natural and very helpful aides of the Bishopric in this fundamentally saintly work. In Independence, for example, Sister Henry Rowland and her corps of volunteer workers have made a contribution through the Campus Shop which has aroused the admiration of members of the church from all over the world, a contribution for which the members of the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric have reason to be especially grateful. We sincerely trust that this and parallel supporting ministries will continue unabated.

Generous offerings to the oblation funds collected from every branch in the church have now made it possible for the church to enlarge her ministry to the poor throughout the entire church. A statement explaining this has been prepared by the Presiding Bishopric and is published in this issue of the Herald. We commend it to the attention of the Saints everywhere. As the Bishop points out, although this is an important development, it is not a new movement. It is called for in the law and by the fact of our growth. We hope and expect that in time it will be followed by other developments which will be consistent with it but will improve and enlarge this ministry of brotherhood and extend it throughout the church.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By Israel A. Smith

Development of Our Social Service Center

FROM ITS VERY INCEPTION the church has concerned itself with the care of the poor. In early revelations received by the church, instructions were given relative to the responsibility individuals have to make offerings to relieve the condition of those who through circumstances over which they may have had no control, find themselves in unfortunate situations and lacking the basic necessities of life. At different times the church has attempted through enactment of its General Conferences to make provision for the care of the poor. In 1886 a General Conference Resolution was passed, from which we quote:

Tithing as a law applicable to the church is accepted in the sense set forth by the Savior in the sixteenth chapter of the Gospel recorded by Luke, that we are stewards of our heavenly Father so far as the riches of this world are concerned and that as such we should render an account of our stewardship here; the rendition is in all cases, however, necessarily voluntary on the part of the member complying with the law.

We know of no "consecration" by which individuals are made legal heirs to the kingdom of God, or Church of Christ, when the rewards are apportioned; except, that of a life consecrated to the service of the Master as ordained in his word together with the consecration of properties for the aid of the poor, preaching of the gospel and establishment of the said kingdom, as a member of the same has so to impart. (General Conference Resolution, No. 308, paragraphs 5 and 6.)

Again in 1917 a resolution was adopted pertaining to the oblation:

that every branch should comply with the law by receiving oblations at Sacrament service, as found in Section 59, paragraph 2, and that the amount so received should be placed with the Bishopric in harmony with section 42, paragraph 8. (General Conference Resolution, No. 773, 1917.)

This was further supplemented by action of the General Conference of 1942, which approved the recommendations of the Presiding Bishopric relative to the segregation of oblation funds, from which we quote:

to segregate oblation funds, that they may be used for the purpose of giving temporary aid and benevolences, and at the same time to make possible their use for the permanent rehabilitation of those who have become physically incapacitated or disabled, and who are worthy of the assistance and help of the church.

In view of the foregoing, we are sure that the members of the church will be highly pleased to learn of the project now undertaken in Independence, which is in harmony with previous action and which we feel will be indicative of real progress for the future.

THE SEGREGATION of the oblation funds was part of the total program of the church in the application of the policy to operate on the storehouse principle in the management of its finances. Not only were the oblation funds segregated, but the funds pertaining to specific use were segregated and reserves established. We believe the enactment of this policy laid the foundation for the perfecting of the storehouse organization. While it must be understood that additional organization and widespread functioning of the storehouse awaits the giving of surplus (*) by those in a position to do so, and the development of a people who, through application of the principles of the financial law, have acquired a place in our economic society where they have surplus to consecrate, we nevertheless are in a position to take some initial steps. Even though we must keep in mind that ultimate success is dependent upon our people maintaining a standard of living which permits the acquiring of surplus, we can at this time, as a church and as individuals, make a specific contribution to the solution of some of our immediate problems.

One of the major functions of the storehouse is to "administer to the poor and needy" (Doctrine and Covenants 42). Although the prime medium of exchange in storehouse function is now and shall continue to be money, there may also be a direct exchange of goods and services. The segregation of the oblation from other church funds placed the church in a better position to give limited cash aid direct to needy members, and also some means to establish institutions through which there could flow goods and services from those who have to those who have not. One such institution has been in the process of development for the past several years in Independence, the Center Place. It had a small beginning

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

GILBERT JOHNSON WALLER was next to the youngest in a family of four sons and five daughters who could "point with pride" to the fact that they were descended from the historic Yorkshire Wallers, of whom Edmund Waller, the famous court poet and administrator, was a member. Gilbert was born November 9, 1859. His father, a farmer, lived in a hamlet called Stackhouse, where he raised sheep and cattle near Settle, Yorkshire, England. Both his father William and his mother Ellen were God-fearing people, members of the Church of England. His parents were religious people, his mother especially being very prayerful, so the family was brought up in a godly manner and well-educated.

Gilbert Waller started his education at the Giggleswick National School and finished at the Giggleswick Grammar School (similar to a college), one of the leading places of education in northern England. He was interested in mathematics, chemistry, and languages, and studied Latin, French, and German; on different occasions he received prizes for examinations in the languages he studied. However, he left school at the age of seventeen, being desirous of learning a business rather than going to a university. He took a position with a manufacturing concern in Skipton, a town about fifteen miles from his home.

He was religiously inclined and taught for a time in a Church of England Sunday school. As he grew older, he became dissatisfied with the religion of the Church of England. In his heart at times there came a wish that he might have lived in the days of the apostles with Christ. Frequently the question arose in his mind: "Why can we not enjoy the gospel gifts and blessings as did the church of Christ in his day and in the time of the apostles?" Once while in this frame of mind, he uttered a short prayer which he wrote down in his diary: "Lord, guide me into thy truth."

Sails for the Sandwich Islands

Early in 1882 Gilbert and his eldest brother, Henry, left home for Honolulu, the capital city of what was then known as the Sandwich Islands, now Hawaii Territory. An uncle had written inviting one or more of his nephews to join him in the meat business in Honolulu. The two brothers took positions in their uncle's business. After a few months Gilbert's brother left for the States; the following year his uncle left for the Orient, selling the business to Gilbert. The business was then conducted in the Metropolitan Meat Market located on King Street, the principal street of the city. This same year—1883—Gilbert Waller married Annie Holmes, a young woman to whom he had become engaged before leaving England. He conducted his business alone until about 1887 when he formed a co-partnership with three of the most prominent men in the Islands at that time and called the new enterprise the Metropolitan Meat Company, Limited.

Not being well, he made a trip to San Francisco in a sailing vessel. His wife with their two daughters Henrietta and Ruth accompanied him. After staying a short time in San Francisco, the Waller family went across the bay to Oakland where a friend directed them to a suitable apartment in the home of Attorney H. P. Brown, an elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. One day while Gilbert Waller was engaged in a religious conversation with the elder's wife, who was caring for Mrs. Waller, after she had given birth to her third daughter, Sister Brown said to him, "You go downstairs and talk to my husband."

Learns of the Church

For the first time Gilbert Waller learned of the Reorganized Church. He was surprised to find, separate and distinct from the Mormon Church of Utah, another Church of Latter Day Saints, a church which he was given to understand was the true successor to the original church established by Joseph Smith. On account of the teaching of polygamy, he had never been interested in learning anything about the history or doctrines of the Mormon Church. Finding now that the original church established by Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church condemned polygamy, he became greatly interested. The more he investigated the more interested he became and, being satisfied that he had found what he had prayed for—the truth—he decided to be baptized. His baptism was performed by Elder Lincoln in San Francisco on April 24, 1889. Immediately afterwards he was confirmed.

While reading the Sermon on the Mount as found in the Inspired Version, he was attracted to the promise given by Christ (Matthew 5: 3, 4) regarding the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, promised through obedience to God's word. After being baptized and confirmed, he looked for a fulfillment of that promise. He waited about two weeks, during which he did not receive the promised blessing. Feeling discouraged, he went into a closet and in secret offered the following prayer: "O God, the Father of Abraham, the Father of Isaac, and the Father of Jacob, in the name of Jesus Christ, thine only Begotten, I beseech thee to pour out thy Spirit upon me." He says:

I got no further, but there came immediately the blessing asked for, and in a marvelous manner I was visited with fire and the Holy Ghost and I seemed to be surrounded by a powerful influence. I shall never forget the experience. My feet were now on the rock, and I was satisfied my prayers had been answered. I had found the truth and was now a child in the kingdom of God.

Full of gratitude to my Heavenly Father, I determined to continue studying so I could acquire knowledge that would equip me for usefulness in the church. There was no regularly organized branch in Oakland at that time, but some church meetings were held, which I attended. While there I had the pleasure of meeting with President Joseph Smith, Elder Haws, and others. When Brother Joseph bade me farewell, he said, "Teach the Bible. It always tells."

A short time after this Brother Waller and his family made a trip to England. While he was staying with his mother and the family on a farm in the Lake District of Westmoreland, he studied the church books and read the church papers. He found much useful and valuable information in the Autumn Leaves regarding the work done by faithful servants of God. He noted that those who were carrying on the Master's work were accompanied by the same power that God's servants of old had. This gave him further evidence and confirmation that he was in the true church of Jesus Christ. He determined in his heart that when he returned to Honolulu he would endeavor to assist in the establishment of the Lord's work there.

First Missionary to the Sandwich Islands

In 1890 Elder Haws, who had been appointed at the April General Conference as missionary to the Sandwich Islands, began his labors in the capital city of Honolulu. Although the Conference had authorized another missionary to accompany Brother Haws and assist in the work, a suitable person could not be found, and Elder Haws undertook the work alone. He arrived in Honolulu on September 19 and was temporarily cared for by Gilbert J. Waller, who was still engaged in the meat-packing business in that city.

The same steamer that brought Elder Haws to the Islands also brought two members of the church from California—Brother and Sister Luther—who made their home in Honolulu and assisted Brother Waller and Elder Haws in starting the work.

As the Reorganized Church was practically unknown in Honolulu, they had great difficulty at first in securing a place to hold meetings, the people generally being opposed to anything connected with Mormonism. The efforts to secure any church building, meetinghouse, or school were unavailing. It was quite apparent from the start that the work would have strong opposition from the religious bodies established there. Prominent among these were the Roman Catholics, the Episcopalians, and the so-called "Missionary Party" representatives of the Presbyterian faith on the Islands. Those in charge of the Utah Church, which had a large following among the Hawaiians on the Islands, also proved unfriendly, refusing to permit Elder Haws to preach in their house of worship and endeavoring to prejudice the natives against the Reorganization.

Opposition From the Start

With such opposition arrayed against them at the start, the few who were desirous of establishing the work there realized the need of divine guidance and aid, which was sought and obtained. Indeed, to them it seemed apparent that the Master had been providing for emergencies by bringing a knowledge of the work to one of their number who was possessed of some means and was willing to use the same when necessary for the establishment of the work. As no place could be obtained free for the holding of meetings, it was necessary to rent a hall for the purpose, funds for this and other exigencies being provided by Brother Waller.

A letter in the Saints' Herald, dated February 7, 1891, written by Gilbert Waller breathes the missionary spirit of earnest devotion. From it we learn some of the difficulties in getting the work started.

It seems that myself, and also Brother Haws, have just so much strength given us and no more. Many, many times we have bowed in prayer to the Master, asking for strength to enable us to remain here and work for his cause and kingdom, and our prayers have been answered. We have had to fight every inch of our way here, so the work is slow; but I hope it will stand. Since Elder Haws came we have met almost every day for the purpose of praying together for strength and guidance.

Failing to get any place in which to preach, we took a small room used by a native lawyer as his office, and started a Bible class, which we held two or three evenings in the week. On Sunday afternoons we had a meeting at the home of a native boy who works for me. Though these meetings were poorly attended, still we received strength and encouragement. Being invited by this native lawyer, whose name is Kaulukou (who makes no profession of religion at all), to preach in his office, we arranged to hold service one Sunday evening, when Elder Haws preached to a small number who went away highly pleased. He spoke well. The power of the Spirit was present, and I felt encouraged and strengthened. We met again on two or more Sundays in the same place, and then decided to look around for a larger and more convenient room. All the religious places being closed against us, we succeeded in getting one of the halls from the Odd Fellows' Lodge, where we have had four meetings, both of natives and English-speaking people. Some natives and white people are interested, and one old native man is preparing for baptism. We took the hall for one month, for which we paid fifteen dollars. They have notified us that we cannot have it after this month, but I have the promise of another.

We have had two tracts printed in the native tongue; one is, "The Successor to the Prophetic Office in the Church," pointing out how the apostasy took place under Brigham Young and the distinction between the two churches. I hope they will do much good. The translating and printing of the tracts will cost about two hundred and fifty dollars.

Brother Haws has been very sick at times, but has been helped. A better man could not have been sent to start the work here; he is so well acquainted with the history of the church. Such a knowledge is valuable, particularly among the Utah people here.

A personal letter dated March 12, 1891, had an extract printed in the Saints' Herald. The following paragraph comes from this source:

The elders of the Utah Church have tried to hinder the work by circulating lies about Elder Haws. They have told the natives he was cut off from the church, that he has no authority to preach, and that his lameness was caused by his being shot when plundering or stealing. But lies will not stand, and in the end will only harm them and their cause. Truth will stand and make us free, and we can afford to be liberal with such people, pitying and praying for them, which we do.

Although an ice storm interfered with the attendance, there was good support among those who could be present. The theme for the institute was "Evangelistic Efficiency."

FAR WEST STAKE

Elder Orlin Crownover, assistant to the First Presidency, spoke February 17 at a banquet of priesthood members from Stewartville, Maple Grove, and Osborn, Missouri. These three branches of the Far West Stake are under the direction of Gerald Gabriel. There was almost a hundred per cent attendance of the priesthood. Brother Crownover used as the theme for his talk, "The Open Door."

PRIESTHOOD TRAINING

On February 21 members of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods of the Center Place started another six-weeks' course of study and training. The Melchisedec priesthood, with an attendance of 140, meets in the Liberty Street Church. The Aaronic priesthood, with an attendance of 272, meets in the Stone Church. Elder Dan Sorden is in charge of the Melchisedec School and Bishop Harold Cackler of the Aaronic School.

CLASS FOR FUTURE PRIESTHOOD

A pre-ordination class is being held four times a week in Bartholomew Hall for the twenty-four men who will soon be members of the priesthood. Classes started in the week of February 20 and will continue to March 30. Elder Charles Graham is in charge of the class.

SPECIAL SPEAKER

David E. Dowker, high priest from Detroit, Michigan, preached at the evening services in the Stone Church on February 19. Many of his old friends were present to hear him. He chose as his theme, "A Layman's Calling."

CAPPING SERVICE

Forty student nurses who entered the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing in September, 1949, received their caps February 19 at a special service at the new West College Street Church. Elder A. Neal Deaver, assistant superintendent of the hospital, preached the sermon. Elder Otis Athey, pastor of West College Street Church, was in charge of the service, and was assisted by Elder D. V. Lents, hospital chaplain.

Miss Vida E. Butterworth, R.N., educational director, spoke on "The Significance of the Nurses' Caps." Miss Lorraine Briggs, president of the student body, spoke on "The Significance of the Candle." The student nurse chorus was directed by Miss Anna Marie Smith, accompanied by Miss Eleanor Lenox, R.N.

The presentation of the caps was made by Miss Nelle Morgan, R.N., Director of Nurses. The candlelighting ceremony was in charge of Miss Gertrude Copeland, R.N., Hospital Superintendent.

Among the forty students who have completed the first semester in the School of Nursing are six from the Territory of Hawaii: Alice Michiko Awaya, Evelyn Y. H. Chock, Susie Shizuko Higa, Margaret C. M. Lee, Grace Chizuko Maruo, Alice Tamaye Tagami.

HONOR TO MICHIGAN MAN

J. Charles Mottashed, district president of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, was recently honored by the Society for the Advancement of Management by being given a life membership in the organization. Brother Mottashed received the honor because of his years of experience in the field of management, especially in personnel and motion economy fields. He has written many articles and is known for his talks on management problems.

MORE BAPTISMS

A. W. Sheehy, district president, and Ralph Power, pastor of Attleboro, Massachusetts, participated in the services on February 12 when four people were baptized in Attleboro.

Cottage meetings have been arranged for future work in Attleboro.

INTEREST IN CAMPING

Miss Edna Easter of the Department of Religious Education and Carl Mesle, Director of Church Youth in Zion, attended the National Conference of the American Camping Association held in St. Louis, Missouri, from February 14 to 18.

Sister Easter was one of the resource persons on a panel discussion about family camping. This panel was in charge of T. R. Alexander, Y.M.C.A. leader from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Brother Mesle participated in discussion groups with the leaders of denominational youth camping groups.

WHITE MASQUE PLAYERS

A musical play in four acts, based on the life and music of Stephen Collins Foster, was presented five times in February by the White Masque Players in the Stone Church Little Theater. There was a large attendance every evening of the performance.

Locked Out

By Edith Grace Beggs

IN A SMALL VILLAGE in war-stricken England, during the awful conflict which is now but a memory, there lived a wealthy man.

Much frightened by the air raids, he built for himself a strong and exceedingly comfortable air-raid shelter in his rose garden, and there he would flee—taking his Persian cat with him—when the enemy made a visit.

Time went on as did the blitzing. Babies were blinded, mothers were crazed, and many strong-limbed young men disappeared.

But none of these things troubled Mr. Blank.

The cry of a baby or the haunted look of a mother did not bother him.

As for the war in general, he hadn't made it—"Let those who started it see it through," he would argue.

Thus, during an exceptionally bad air raid, Mr. Blank found himself running, as were many others.

The only difference was that the rest were running in the opposite direction toward a public shelter.

Mr. Blank had been out walking, but was not far from his own garden.

On his way he passed sights which should have melted a heart of stone—sleepy children, crying and clutching scanty apparel closer to their shivering bodies, women with hair dishevelled, men gaunt and pale trying not to look afraid—all running for dear life.

But Mr. Blank, thinking only of his own safety, ran on alone toward his retreat.

After the "all clear" sounded and the wearied villagers emerged from the shelter, they were surprised to see Mr. Blank's Persian cat crying pitifully at the door.

"Blimy! Old Flintheart's cat!" said one of them.

The cat continued to act strangely, crying and running back and forth.

"Looks like she's trying to tell us something," declared another.

They followed the cat to Mr. Blank's garden and there, at the very door of his shelter, they discovered him—dead. He had forgotten his key. What a moral! This selfish man, who had thought only of his own welfare, was killed at the threshold of his shelter because he could not get in. Perhaps if he had been willing to share and had given others keys to his retreat, he would not have found himself locked out.

So it is with the gospel which is our shelter in trying times. We should share it with others, for therein lies our only hope of personal salvation.

Observations of the Sanitarium Chaplain

FREQUENTLY we hear radio and other programs depicting the unusual characteristics in people. People are interesting. Those with whom we associate mold our thinking and daily actions. There are many such people in our business of caring for the ill.

Those we serve are temporarily ill and therefore make many demands upon our time and attentions in a way they will not do when they regain health. All this only helps us appreciate the frailties of the human body and mind and makes us resolve to give them the best possible care.

Many of the people we serve are kind enough to tell us that we have done a good job and to express appreciation for the tender care and many kindnesses rendered them by the nurses. I should like to share with you some of these thoughtful expressions which have come to my attention as Chaplain of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

THERE ARE MANY CASES that humble our souls before God, particularly those who come to us with advanced ailments, the care for which can be left only in God's hands. These folk are quite often the most grateful people we serve, and in their understanding and appreciation for the care they have been given they very often remark, "Thanks for everything. Your ministering counsel has given me courage and consolation, and the work of the nurses has helped me to be as comfortable as possible."

There is the case of the four-year old youngster whose facial features and countenance throughout life might have been mottled to her disfavor as the result of an automobile accident had it not been for surgery applied at the right moment. In five days she was ready to leave the hospital, and today there are hardly any scars to show on the little face that might have been marred for life.

Each young mother is sure she has been given "the most precious child that God could give anybody." From the day of its birth she is happy and begins making plans for the new child and its welfare. This case perhaps describes the pinnacle of happiness and inspiration on the part of those for whom we care.

Then there is the elderly couple, not members of our denomination but good Christian souls who many, many miles from their Louisiana home were found critically injured in an automobile accident which might easily have taken both their lives. After weeks of unconsciousness and other weeks of slow recovery, they were able to return home. Today they write me:

Mr. — and I are very grateful to all of you of the Independence Sanitarium Staff who helped us to survive an accident which seemed destined to take both of our lives. Your kind and sympathetic care over the period of these several weeks will always give us reason to remember you folks and to hold a tender place in our hearts for you. Thanks again.

I would be most inconsiderate not to mention the young mother, a member of another denomination, who was required to remain in the hospital over a Christmas season when she most wanted to be home with her husband and children. From her stay in the Sanitarium over the holidays, she gained a very rich experience she never will forget. As it happened, three other ladies in this hospital room, all in about the same state of recovery and all looking forward to returning home, were talking about their religious convictions. Two of them were Latter Day Saints and the other two were not. From their conversations throughout the days the young mother apparently learned much concerning the Restoration Movement. At the time she left the hospital she said:

I know I am needed at home, but I seem to want to stay here in this room. Associating with these ladies under the spirit of freedom and discussion of religious convictions has been a most heartening experience for me, and I shall try to carry some of it home with me.

Such are the thoughts and meditations of those who feel the Spirit of Christianity as reflected in our church hospital.

I WISH it had been possible for you who read this to have visited two or three times a day with me in the room of little "Susie." Here was a youngster crippled from birth, whose repeated operations had made her a victim of experiences unparalleled in the lives of most children. Yet, at the appearance of the doctors at her bedside, or her parents, the minister, or other friends, Susie had but one reaction—a broad smile. This smile was most contagious, and everybody came to know her as "Smiling Susie." Her first glance at the doctors was as though wanting to ask: "What is it you need to do with me next?"—but this expression was always quickly replaced by the broadest of smiles for all who visited her.

Susie was a real stimulation to me, and I carried her expressions of cheer into the rooms of other patients who found courage in hearing about Susie. It is likely that she will have to have several other operations yet before she becomes the normal child her parents want her to be, but you can rest assured of one thing—Susie will make the best of them all.

There are many other soul-inspiring examples of friendly responses to the physical care and ministering consolation at the Sanitarium which witness to the worth-whileness of this institution and the work it is doing directly and indirectly in spreading the gospel story.

OUR HOSPITAL DAY begins with a fifteen-minute fellowship service for the nurses and nursing students before their duties begin. Here the girls sing Latter Day Saint hymns in the assembly room of the new hospital building. As these hymns from tender voices filter up through the hospital floors, we have reason to believe that not only our day has begun right, but the patients who hear the hymns often voice feelings of encouragement and hope which the singing brings to them. This hope and courage gives the determination to recover from illness which is a strong factor in patient recovery in our hospital.

Some of this hope and courage is shown in the following messages written us by patients who have become well again:

My sojourn there was a most pleasant experience. The very walls of the Sanitarium seemed to breathe the Spirit of God. I recall with pleasant memory hearing the nurses sing at their chapel service early each morning. As the strains of familiar Latter Day Saint hymns and music floated up to my room, they seemed sweeter than usual. By just telling a nurse, one could have access to the Communion on the first Sunday of the month, or to administration whenever desired . . . just being under the care of the Sanitarium personnel was a "tonic" in itself.

* * *

I wish to express my gratitude for the care and service I received while a patient in the Sanitarium. It is always a great pleasure to feel that one can have the sympathy and expert service of our church hospital in times of sickness and distress.

* * *

Mrs. — and I want to express our sincere appreciation for the splendid professional and loving care you gave her. We hope there will be no need on our part very soon for such service, but if and when it is necessary we can think of no finer place to go.

* * *

When entering this institution, I approached it with a mingled feeling of fear and apprehension, but after a few hours my forebodings were completely overcome by the kind and generous treatment I received at the hands of the nurses and doctors. I could write all day and would still be unable to tell of the many little courtesies and deviations from their regular courses of duties the nurses have done for me.

And from nonmembers:

I wish to express to you, the nurses, doctors, and all who are associated with that fine institution, the deep appreciation of my wife and myself, for the splendid treatment we received while there. Never have we been given greater consideration by anyone. I especially pay tribute to the nurses who are always so cheerful and willing to assist those who need their help. The unity that seemed to prevail throughout the institution was most commendable.

* * *

Thank you for the kind treatment I received while in your hospital. If I ever have to go to a hospital again, I hope it can be the Sanitarium. Your girls were so kind and thoughtful and gave me such wonderful care. Please thank them for me.

* * *

I never came in contact with a finer group of women and girls. They are truly outstanding and are a great demonstration to me of what a wonderful training they must have and a reflection of the type of people Latter Day Saints are.

* * *

You will never know how grateful we are to you and your hospital for the grand treatment from your hospital and staff during my husband's stay there, and how very thankful we are to you.

* * *

You should be very proud of your students. I have had considerable hospital experience, and your girls have something I have never found in any other hospital.

* * *

I wish to take this opportunity to express Mrs. —'s and my appreciation for the fine treatment she received while a patient in your hospital. Your staff from the bottom up showed a great deal of interest in her, and I am sure it was a great help to her recovery.

* * *

From a nationally known cardiologist:

I certainly find a wonderful spirit in this hospital. What is it?

* * *

When any member of the family needs hospitalization and you come to the Sanitarium, you sort of drop your worry and burden at the front door. You feel like you are coming home, and you will find good care and understanding here.

* * *

The San. is so much more than I ever expected. The nurses are so able, willing, and good to you in every way.

* * *

When transferred to the care of a doctor in Louisiana who analyzed the medical history of the couple who had been injured in an automobile accident and cared for at the Sanitarium the doctor there said:

You must have been in a very good hospital and had excellent nursing care, or I don't see how you could have made it.

These expressions would easily make a volume of interesting reading. To us these kindly statements of appreciation and faith in the teachings of Latter Day Saintism inspire us with an untiring determination to continue our many efforts for the good of those who are ill and in teaching the work of the church to those who may not know of it.

EASTER MORNING SERVICE - By M. WARREN TAIT

PRELUDE: Music suitable for the Easter theme.

CALL TO WORSHIP:

May the glad dawn of the Easter Morn
Bring joy to thee.
May the calm eve of Easter leave
A peace divine with thee.
May Easter night on thine heart write,
"O Christ, I live for thee."

HYMN: "Christ the Lord Is Risen Today," Saints' Hymnal, No. 164.

OFFERING

NARRATOR:

THE STORY OF EASTER

This morning, let us turn back the pages of time and relive those last eventful days in the life of Christ as the moving story is brought to us in music, song, and the written word. Already Christ has made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. He has cleansed the temple and crowded many precious truths into the last days of teaching his disciples. In the upper room he has shared with them the last supper. As we join Jesus and his disciples, they are going down the path into the garden of Gethsemane.

And Jesus saith to his disciples, "Sit ye here while I go into the garden and pray." He took with him Peter, James and John and began to be sorrowful and sore troubled. Then saith he unto them, "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death. Abide ye here and watch with me." And he went forward a little and fell on his face and prayed

NARRATOR:

AN OLIVE TREE SPEAKS

That night in cool Gethsemane
Christ taught us immortality.
We heard him pray beneath our boughs
And felt his wrestling spirit's vows,
While high upon her ancient hills
Jerusalem, walled in smugness, slept
Nor guessed that her own Savior wept
Beyond the Kedron's full spring rills.

We trembled with his lonely woes,
We longed to crash on all his foes,
We saw his face when he arose—a conqueror!

So for his sake we cannot die,
But from our gnarled, decrepit root
Send up a new and tender shoot
To tell his victory to the sky.
Before our old self bows to earth,
We give a scion olive birth

To witness what we learned that night
When Christ slew death within our sight
And to our hushed Gethsemane Entrusted immortality.

—MADALEINE SWEENEY MILLER

(Quoted by arrangement with Mrs. J. Lane Miller.)

It was that night in the garden of Gethsemane that our Savior cried out, "Abba Father, all things are possible unto thee, remove this cup from me! Howbeit, not what I will, but what thou wilt." The solemn silence which reigned in the garden of Gethsemane during Jesus' midnight vigil with his Heavenly Father was broken by the tumult of the crowd that, led by Judas, entered into the stillness of that midnight hour.

Attracted by the noise, Jesus left the shadowy recesses by a narrow path to meet them. It was there Judas met and kissed his Master, revealing to the Roman soldiers, by this act, the man they were to arrest. No sooner had the traitor completed this act than Jesus said, "Judas betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" But Judas, his act of treachery completed, stepped aside without an answer as the crowd passed on.

THE NINTH HOUR

After the shameful trial in the hall,
The mocking and the scourging and the pain
Of Peter's words; to Herod, and again
To Pilate's judgment seat, the royal pall,
The cross itself, the vinegar and gall;
The thieves close by, discipleship proved vain,
The scoffing crowd, his mother's tears like rain,
There came one moment, bitterest of all.
Yet in that cry, when flesh and spirit failed,
Last effort of the awful way he trod,
Which shook the earth, nor left the temple veiled,
In that exceeding great and bitter cry
Was conquest. The centurion standing by Said, "Truly this man was the Son of God."

"And when the sabbath was passed, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were afrighted. And he saith unto them, Be not afrighted; ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified; he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him."—Mark 16: 1-6.

REMEMBERING CALVARY

Help me to suffer when I would most spare
My human frame with pain and weakness spent;

Help me to receive with open arms nor dare
To flinch at pain, but count myself content,
And all that has been and is to be Help me to bear,
Remembering Calvary.

Help me to leash the hounds of my desire,
Taming them to a more submissive will;
Help me to tune again a broken lyre
And find that there is music in it still.
Help me to do these things all cheerfully,
Nor count the cost,
Remembering Calvary.

Easter Suggestions

A Portrayal of "The Last Supper"

(Note: The following is presented with the hope that it will inspire other groups to arrange for similar presentations. It will be particularly significant if given the week preceding Easter.)

A PROJECT OF SANTA ANA BRANCH

EACH SUMMER at Laguna Beach, California, a "Festival of Arts" is held. Interesting displays of the work of contemporary artists are exhibited and in the evening there is a presentation of the most famous and best-loved pictures, portrayed by living models. In conclusion, Leonardo da Vinci's "The Last Supper" is always given. It is a marvelous reproduction of a great and tragic moment in religious history and is done reverently with careful respect for every detail of the original, which hangs in the refectory of St. Maria delle Grazie in Milan.

A number of Santa Ana Saints attend the festival each year. Last spring some of them began to wonder if it might not be possible to give a similar program at church on some special occasion. Charles Hield, apostle-in-charge of Southern California District, became interested and suggested that the Santa Ana Branch plan something as a project for the coming reunion.

At the time, Ava Carmichael was program director of the branch. She had majored in drama at school, receiving her master's degree in speech and drama at the University of Iowa. Pastor Roy Hewes, knowing her ability, entrusted her with the responsibility of planning a project.

Having attended the art festival, Ava decided it would be quite possible for the men of the Santa Ana Branch to give "The Last Supper." She began a detailed study of the picture. In it, the apostles are in four groups of three each with Jesus as the central figure. Although sitting with his eyes cast down in sorrow, he completely dominates the picture. He has just announced that one of them will betray him. The delicate variations of consternation in the faces of these men who were his closest friends, combined with the grief in the Master's face, are so wonderfully portrayed that the picture is not only Da Vinci's masterpiece but the greatest of many interpretations of this historic moment. There is a fine reproduction of this picture in stained glass at Forest Lawn Memorial Park in Glendale, California. Ava made several trips there in order to fix clearly in her mind the exact colors of the robes worn by the Christ and the apostles. At the public library she found copies of the sketches made by Da Vinci of the models he used for the painting. By studying carefully their facial characteristics, she was later able to make up the cast of the living picture with exact realism. Everybody helped in getting the stage properties together, entering into the project with great enthusiasm. Brother Wayne Hewes made the table and benches; Sister Allie Hewes assisted in working out many details; and the costumes were made by the women of the branch.

The men who were chosen to take part had had no previous training, but they were genuinely interested in making the picture a success and proud to have a share in such an ambitious undertaking. In the cast were three father-and-son groups: Brother Roy Hewes and his sons, Wayne and Jack; Brother James Farley and his sons, William and Alma; and Brother David Carmichael and David, Jr. The other brethren taking part were John Inman, Rodney Engel, Lee Casey, Thanuel Spessard, and Frederick Larsen. One change was made in the cast the second time it was given—Brother Walter Mills, Jr., took the place of Jack Hewes, who could not be present.

After every detail had been carefully worked out, the cast was assembled, placed in correct position and drilled in holding absolutely motionless for the two minutes required for the showing of the picture. The men proved to be good models, and only three rehearsals were necessary.

When the picture was portrayed at the Southern California Reunion, the mood of worship was stimulated by a fine musical program. A solo, "The Lord's Prayer," was sung, and Ava gave a brief reading, telling something of the painting and its history. Then the curtains parted silently, and the audience viewed the picture with deep appreciation, stirred by such authentic realism. With eyes riveted on the sad face of Christ for the first few moments, all seemed to turn instinctively then to that dark figure on his right, the one who would so soon betray him. For the audience it was a beautiful moment of worship—a vivid reminder of the greatness of the price paid by one that all might have the example of a perfect life. For the men of the Santa Ana Branch, it was a satisfying experience to have made a contribution of high artistic merit that, at the same time, had great spiritual value.

Apostle Hield has asked that the picture be a yearly presentation at reunion, and now that Ava has moved to Boston, Sister Allie Hewes will take over the responsibility of direction when the painting is again portrayed.

You Can Quote Me

I was very pleased with Ray Whiting's article, "The Temple." No doubt there will be other letters for and against the idea. I should like to be quoted as believing implicitly that the Auditorium is the Temple.

BEATRICE SHIPPY

Building the Temple

THERE ARE SEVERAL reasons why our present Auditorium, when completed, will not fulfill the purpose of the Temple in Zion. Section 83: 1, 2 of the Doctrine and Covenants specifically states it is to be built in western boundaries of state of Missouri, it is a part of the program of the gathering, it is to be reared in this generation, and this generation shall not all pass away until the building is completed. The Kirtland Temple does not fulfill all four of these points, therefore it cannot be the temple spoken of either.

In the expression, "This generation shall not all pass away," the word generation refers to the length of the life of a man and not a shorter period. It is usually interpreted to mean 100 years. According to this, the temple should have been erected by 1932, as the revelation was given on September 22 and 23, 1832.

Here are some reasons why the temple was not built:

The Saints did not enter into the land the way they were instructed. Disobedience to their instructions brought persecution upon them. They were scattered and thus unable to continue the establishment of Zion at that time. Sections 102: 2 and 98: 1-3 explain quite clearly why this came about.

Due warning had been given the Saints. The following excerpts are from a letter written January 11, 1833, at Kirtland, Ohio:

Our hearts are greatly grieved at the spirit which is breathed, both in your [W. W. Phelps] letter and that of Brother G.....s: that very spirit is wasting the strength of Zion like a pestilence: and if it is not detected and striven from you, it will ripen Zion for the threatened judgments of God All we can say by way of conclusion is, if the fountain of our tears is not dried up, we will still weep for Zion. This from your brother who trembles for Zion and for the wrath of heaven, which awaits her if she repent not.—Times and Seasons, Volume 5, number 22, December 1, 1844.

This quotation shows that the Saints were not prepared to build the temple in Zion. By unfruitful lives, they had squandered their time. They were driven out largely by their own disobedience. Would a loving Heavenly Father hold another generation responsible for their negligence?

However on April 15, 1894, the answer came to the Reorganized Church. Read Section 122: 6 carefully. Note well these expressions: "As if it were given today" and "are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation."

Section 42 contains the basic ethical law to the church which must be complied with if the Saints ever build the temple.

Section 122: 6 is quite inclusive as it refers to the Bishopric, high council, the storehouse, the temple, and "the salvation of my people."

It is quite evident that this covers all which had previously been given on the subjects as not all were mentioned in Section 42.

God granted a moratorium so that the generation starting April 15, 1894, in which case (using 100 years for generation [See Book of Mormon, page 587]) the temple should be erected by 1994.

The interference caused by sinful man during the dark and cloudy day was taken into consideration by a merciful Heavenly Parent. In harmony with this, note the Word of the Lord as given through one of the Presidency on April 7, 1929. (See Saints' Herald for April 17, 1929.) President (now Patriarch) Elbert A. Smith declared:

Be not troubled in your minds by anything that shall occur. Mark this well: I say unto you, the only temple standing on earth today built by the commandment of heaven is in your possession (The Kirtland Temple) and its courts are open to this people, and they have gone into those sacred courts and on many occasions received the pentecostal baptism of my Spirit: and when the time shall come, in my way, and in my hour, and in my manner, which is the way of law and of order, I will command you further concerning the building of my temple in Zion.

(Note: Excavation for the Auditorium started February 2, 1926. The April, 1927, Conference was held in lower Auditorium. On October, 1928, Conference was held in the upper assembly room. Yet Brother Elbert's prophecy mentioning the building of the temple as a future endeavor was not given until April 7, 1929. This confirms the fact that the Auditorium is not the Temple.)

SECTION 94: 3, 4 reveals the fact that the house to be built in Zion should be "like unto the pattern I have given you." This pattern might have been Kirtland Temple or the one referred to in Church History, Volume 1, pages 297, 298. It was not the pattern of the Auditorium.

Of course the Auditorium, along with other buildings, is used as a place of inspired instruction to the ministry until the temple is erected and surely the Spirit of God will bless such instruction until the temple is built, but specifically Section 94: 4 must be applied to the conditions of the temple.

The Auditorium, which contains the General Church offices, is used as a place for general contact, both in a business and social way with those not of the church and so, to some extent, its spiritual condition is beyond our control.

Read Section 94: 4 again carefully and note the requirements for the temple. (Also Section 98: 5.)

I fully believe the building of the Auditorium was divinely directed for the very purpose it is now fulfilling.

The temple may not be a large building, but it will be one that can be used by pure-minded people in their desire for divine revelation from the Heavenly Father.

C. W. CLARK.

Is the Auditorium the Temple?

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 83 states that the temple was to have been erected in "this generation." My Standard Unabridged Dictionary says that a generation is "3. A step of degree in natural descent; also all persons removed in the same degree from an ancestor; hence the body of persons existing at the same time or period, as unto the third generation."

I am nearing my seventieth birthday; I was twenty years old when my son was born; my son was twenty-three when his son was born; and that grandson was twenty-five when his first child was born. Here we have four generations all living within sixty-eight years. It is quite probable that there were four or even five generations living when Joseph Smith made his prediction. (Joseph was twenty-seven at the time.) It would be interesting to learn which of the generations he was referring to.

My dictionary also gives this definition of generation: "4. The average lifetime of persons in a community: commonly estimated as one third of a century." What the Nephites termed a "generation" has no bearing in this case.

WITHOUT LENGTHY reference to the ancients, it is logical to assume that whenever God desired a "house" built to his name, which would be acceptable to him, he gave the commandment to his servants, the prophets, even going to the extent of giving the dimensions he desired and the arrangement of the interior fittings and furnishings. In the early days of the Restoration, we find recorded (Doctrine and Covenants 91) that the Lord commanded his people to make a preliminary survey and prepare to build a "house" or "houses" in Kirtland, Ohio, to his name. Slightly less than a month later, the command to build was given (Doctrine and Covenants 92). The building was erected by much sacrifice and great diligence, and the people were rewarded with great endowments of the Spirit.

Turning further to the record, we find a command (Doctrine and Covenants 107) to build a "house" unto the Lord in Nauvoo. After a lengthy exposition of the needs for such a building, we find these significant words in the last two lines of paragraph 12:

"... my holy house which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name."

Where can we find the command to build the Auditorium as the peculiar type of "house" which we are pleased to term a "temple"? Where can we find the revelation which gives the dimensions, the arrangement of the interior, or the function it was to serve?

I believe there was no such revelation received.

It is quite true that the late prophet, Frederick M. Smith, sensing the need of the people for a convention hall for General Conferences, and later for use in the "gathering," worked unceasingly for the erection of the Auditorium. But it was not planned by command of the Lord as to its size and arrangements; in fact, as it now stands it is not nearly as large as the original plans called for.

I have a scrapbook with every official statement published regarding it, complete with pictures of its progress in construction. In none of these can be found statements that would indicate this building was intended to be the temple.

In fact, nine years after its promotion and a year after its erection there came this "Word of the Lord Concerning the Temple and the Redemption of Zion" which was published in the Herald as "official" (see Herald, Volume 76, Number 16, April 17, 1929): "Be not troubled in your minds by anything that may occur. Mark this well: I say unto you, the only temple standing on earth today, built by the commandment of heaven, is in your possession [the Kirtland Temple] . . . and when the time shall come, in my way, and in my hour, and in my manner, which is the way of law and of order, I will command you further concerning the building of the temple in Zion."

THERE MAY YET BE a question in the minds of some over the wording of Section 83: 1, 2, and a few have even thought that Section 122: 6 might have a bearing on the case. For this reason let us look at the first two paragraphs of Section 83, given on September 22, 23, 1832, at Kirtland, Ohio:

A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant Joseph Smith, Jr. . . . yea the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people . . . and for the gathering of his Saints to stand upon Mt. Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built beginning at the Temple Lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, Jr. . . .

Verily this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house.

The statement in verse 1 that interests us is ". . . which city [New Jerusalem] shall be built, beginning at the Temple lot . . ." It does not say beginning at the Temple, but at the lot upon which a future temple is to be erected. The city is to be built by a gathering of the Saints beginning at this place. This is the statement that confuses some. It would help if we could locate where the gathering began. Let us turn to our church histories.

The church was organized in Palmyra, New York, April 6, 1830. Early that same fall, four missionaries started west to preach to the Indians. One of these, Parley P. Pratt, recalled that a former acquaintance, Sidney Rigdon, was preaching to a congregation of the "Disciple" or "Christian" faith at Kirtland, Ohio. He decided to call upon him and tell him of the Book of Mormon and the Restoration Movement. Sidney Rigdon believed the message, and before the missionaries proceeded on their journey, they had baptized a total of 127 souls. In addition to this Joseph Smith and some fifty families in the winter of 1830 migrated from New York, arriving at Kirtland early in 1831. Thus the gathering was on. Furthermore, for the next seven years Kirtland was the headquarters of the church, and the place from which missionary effort was directed.

This unquestionably locates the "place" of the beginning of the gathering as Kirtland, Ohio. Joseph Smith went west to Missouri and located the temple lot; when he returned to Kirtland, the revelation was given concerning the building of the New Jerusalem, and the gathering, and the temple. In all these statements, we find that the Lord fulfilled his promise given through his prophet. The gathering began at Kirtland—it became known as the "Gateway to Zion"; the command to build a temple in Kirtland was given in 1833—the "this place" of Section 83: 2; the Temple was completed in 1836—in "this generation." The glory of the Lord rested upon it in marvelous spiritual endowments and continues even to this day—so said the Lord in April 7, 1929.

GOD HAS ALSO FULFILLED his word concerning the building of the New Jerusalem. The commencement of the building was literally "at the Temple Lot." The first store of the Saints was on the temple lot, being located approximately where Ketchum's Hardware Store and Shop now stands on West Lexington Street.

Furthermore, its fulfillment continues in that the building of Zion and the administrative work of the church is being done on that same lot in the Auditorium.

As to Section 122: 6, in 1894 when it was given, there was much discussion over the law of tithing and consecration. Some contended that it gave power to the bishops to "tax" the membership, this idea being gained from the changing of the law by Brigham Young and the power the bishops of the Utah Church over their membership. The Lord later told the Saints that Section 42, ". . . is as if it were given today; and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and salvation of my people, are the same to me now as they were in that day when I gave that revelation." He was reminding his church that once he had enunciated a principle it was forever "that with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day." It had nothing to do with the time of building the temple; that command is yet to be received, for "when the time shall come, in my way, and in my hour, and in my manner, which is the way of law and of order, I will command you further concerning the building of the temple in Zion."

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Through whom was President I. A. Smith called?
Missouri H. A.

ANSWER:

Under the law as found in the Doctrine and Covenants of the church, the one who occupies as President and Prophet of the church, and he only, has the right to designate his successor. This was done by the founder of the church in designating his son Joseph Smith III. The latter, in one of the revelations to the church and in other ways, designated his son Frederick M. Smith to be his successor. Likewise President Frederick M. Smith, in a statement to the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, in 1938, indicated that his successor should be Israel A. Smith.

Israel A. Smith

QUESTION:

If President Smith were taken away suddenly, who would operate the church until the Presidency was reorganized?
Missouri H. A.

ANSWER:

Under the rule of the church and according to procedure already established, which was quite fully developed during the lifetime of the late President Joseph Smith, the remaining members of the Presidency would continue to conduct the affairs of the church until the next General Conference, when the Presidency could be reorganized.

When the late President Frederick M. Smith died, his counselors, Brethren L. F. P. Curry and I. A. Smith, carried on the business of the Quorum of the First Presidency until the opening session of the Conference when, "under the law," the Quorum of Twelve Apostles assumed charge until a successor was chosen and ordained.

QUESTION:

How many translations of the Bible are there? Please name them.
Ohio A. C.

ANSWER:

Translations in English in current use include the following:

Authorized, or King James Revised Version
American Revised
Revised Standard of 1946
Emphatic Diaglott
Young's Literal Translation
Douay, or Catholic Version
Inspired Version
Goodspeed's Translation
Century Translation
Moffatt's Translation
Weymouth Translation

There is no end of translations in foreign languages. The British Bible Society up to 1928 had circulated Bibles in 608 languages, and the American Society in 295 languages. Bible societies in various other countries have issued translations also. A recent radio broadcast announced that translations were in preparation in fifty dialects for as many Indian tribes in the Americas. Few modern languages are without a translation of the Scriptures in whole or in part.

QUESTION:

As square dancing is becoming so prominent in the world, is it proper for Latter Day Saints—especially members of the priesthood—to participate in these dances?

Iowa

J. H. C.

ANSWER:

The General Conference of the church has long ago gone on record with respect to public dancing as found in General Conference Resolution No. 317.

Resolved, That the practice of dancing should be discouraged, and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice, as being one likely to lead their minds from Christ and his gospel.

Adopted, April 16, 1886.

Report on "The Messiah" Broadcast

The following quotations are from letters, cards, and telegrams received regarding the radio broadcast of The Messiah presented by the Independence Messiah Choir through the facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System, originating at KMBC, Kansas City, Missouri, on December 18, 1949, 10:30-12:00 p.m. Central Standard Time:

Permit me to say that The Messiah oratorio by your choir last night was excellent in every way and very much enjoyed. Have you a pamphlet, or booklet, giving information on the history of your Messiah Choir that I may have?

ROBERT ERSKINE KERR

Lake Charles, Louisiana

Mrs. Buford and I were thrilled and inspired last night as we listened to The Messiah and more especially as we heard you [Garland Tickemyer] so masterfully and devotedly sing. We want to let you know of our enjoyment and thank you.

D. W. BUFORD

Wichita, Kansas

You have one of the really finest choral groups in the country and that you, yourself, are a conductor of uncommon ability and sincerity of purpose . . . I have never heard "His Yoke Is Easy" sung so cleanly, so lightly, and with such beauty of tone.

JOHN MACDONALD

Chicago, Illinois

Allow me to express my appreciation of your rendering of Handel's Messiah over the air on Christmas day . . . never at any time have I heard it sung so perfectly. It was absolutely beautiful! I phoned up four of my friends to tune in and they all listened. The verdict was unanimous. Thank you a thousand times! May I wish your church and your beautiful choir the best of luck for 1950, and I will certainly try to find a repeat next Christmas if it is at all possible. One more thing, I got the impression that everyone enjoyed his part. There was an atmosphere of happiness all through which was most infectious.

MRS. CATHERINE CONTTI

Montreal, Quebec

I have been listening to the wonderful rendition of The Messiah given by your church choir. It came over the radio as clearly as though we were hearing it in person. The soloists were excellent. It was a very finished performance, and I am glad you called my attention to it.

DR. HUGH H. WEST

Elgin, Illinois

It was the finest chorale work I have heard in a long time and you, Mr. Weddle, are a remarkable conductor . . . I have heard so many comments from friends in New York and points West on the fine chorale work and also on Mrs. Mader's singing.

HARRIET PORTER MOORE

Des Moines, Iowa

Want to thank you for your wonderful rendition of Handel's Messiah last evening. You were fortunate in having such excellent soloists to assist . . . it was a musical treat to remember.

SADIE HANSON

Thurman, Iowa

I enjoyed your usual fine Messiah solos over the air last night. It's always a pleasure to hear you. Congratulations and continued success in your work [to Garland Tickemyer].

HARDIN VAN DEURSEN

Kansas City, Missouri

We got better than two-thirds of The Messiah over KSL from Salt Lake. It was wonderful—nice and clear. This was the first time I have ever been able to hear it on the coast.

RUSSELL J. DENTEL

Vallejo, California

(Wire) Wonderful performance soloists broadcast excellently.

DALLAS PROBERT QUINN

Flint, Michigan

Dear Mr. Tickemyer: You did a really excellent job of singing Sunday night; I have a great admiration for your fine voice and splendid artistry. I have never heard a tenor (and I have sung with most of the good ones) who sang all those passages without a catch breath before the florid part of the phrase.

JOHN MACDONALD

Chicago, Illinois

We heard your broadcast performances of The Messiah from a station in Louisville, Kentucky . . . The total performance was very good—as usual. We enjoyed the contralto soloist especially . . . It was interesting to hear your selection of numbers to be used, and at last, I'm beginning to like the "Amen" at the close of the performance. Congratulations on another fine job!

WILLIAM GRAVES

Lamoni, Iowa

We both have only one sentiment to express regarding this year's Messiah—it was a masterful rendition—the best we have ever heard. . . . From the opening beat of the "Overture" through the last beat of the "Amen" it was the best, I believe, you have ever done.

PHIL MOORE

Spokane, Washington

Listened to all of The Messiah last night and thoroughly enjoyed it. . . . The choral work seemed mighty good to me—good balance and diction. I am sure I have never heard any group do as well. That orchestra certainly came in fine. A most enjoyable broadcast.

ALFRED HITCHCOCK

Bellaire, Texas

This is a late note to let you know that we did listen to The Messiah on December 18. It came through very fine. The tones were clear, and the music was beautiful. You are to be congratulated on the very fine work you have done and the tradition which has been built up for the church. I know there were a great many people who listened in Columbus, and all thoroughly enjoyed hearing this splendid chorus. Please accept our appreciation and also our congratulations.

LUCINDA N. MADDEN, Attorney

Columbus, Ohio

Earnest congratulations to you on the lovely rendition (transcribed) to which I thrilled last Sunday evening. California time was 10:30 to midnight. Tempos were majestic and authoritative and an even balance prevailed throughout. Our capable soprano, Mrs. Mader, improved in each successive solo, and XLV air pleased me explicitly. XX air (Alto) truly delighted me.

MAYNARD KOUNS

National City, California

In appreciation of the performance of The Messiah December 18, we take this means of thanking you.

MRS. C. L. ROOK

Miami, Oklahoma

We are thrilled over The Messiah—wonderful—came in clear to the end. Thanks to all.

CLARA WHEELER

Warrensburg, Missouri

We enjoyed your Messiah very much last Sunday night . . .

HAROLD AND FLORENCE BURTCH

Midland, Michigan

The Messiah was all one could wish for. I liked the contralto. Best of wishes to you.

DR. AND MRS. CHARLES NICKSON, JR.

Independence, Missouri

It was wonderful! Congratulations to you and your choir. It came over WJR this year and was as clear as if we had been sitting in the audience.

ESTHER COTTRILL

Flint, Michigan

The Messiah was heard here in Fort Peck over Station KOMA in Oklahoma City—very clear reception, and it was beautiful. I was thrilled, and the church should be very proud.

MRS. HAROLD H. NORWOOD

Fort Peck, Montana

I wish to thank all taking part in The Messiah, both soloists and choir, and last but not least the director and the orchestra.

IRBY MUNDY

Colorado Springs, Colorado

May I once more send you a word of gratitude for your magnificent performance of the immortal Messiah . . . I know thousands of people in British Columbia listened to this great offering.

FLORENCE ATKINSON

Vancouver, British Columbia

(Wire) The broadcast last night was perfect and enjoyed by all of us.

MR. AND MRS. J. W. STOBAUGH

VIOLA AND MARJORIE

Independence, Missouri

First let me express the feelings of the many in this area who listened to the presentation of The Messiah. Everyone seemed to be of the same opinion—that this year's performance was the best ever. Reception was such that most of the time we felt as though we were in the room with you. The helps sent to the locals for advertising were excellent. I am checking on all the locals to see what they did with the materials. I know that at least three of our branches have reported carried advertising and news articles of the broadcast. I will let you know the use of this material from a district-wide basis as soon as I hear from the other branches.

HARRY L. DOTY

Traverse City, Michigan

Just to let you know that The Messiah broadcast was really wonderful . . . I am glad to report that the reception was good. You might possibly pass the word to Franklyn Weddle that the diction of the chorus was exceptionally good. Altogether it was a fine piece of church advertising—money well spent.

The Nestling - Part I

By WINIFRED MILNER

FIVE-YEAR-OLD TERRY Newman sat up in bed shivering and holding the covers high against his throat. The room was dark, with only a little light coming in through the windows. Terry could hear the doorbell ringing a series of sharp, persistent rings, and Scotty, his small terrier, had jumped off the bed and was barking and growling intermittently in front of the door.

"Quiet, Scotty," Terry whispered through stiff, frightened lips; but Scotty went on barking.

Terry reached out his hand in the dark, feeling for Mommy's pillow. It was cold. That meant she was still singing at the Flor del Plaza Inn where she sang six nights a week.

Someone was pounding on the door now and rattling the knob. Terry tore at the covers, clawing them away from him with his hands. That wasn't Mommy or Mrs. O'Grady who lived in the next apartment. They had keys.

"Terry, wake up and open the door."

Terry didn't know that voice. He dived under the bed and lay flat on his stomach. He could feel his heart pounding against the rug. Maybe a devil was out there or a giant or a witch. Giants and witches ate children.

Then he heard the sound of Mrs. O'Grady's slippers flapping along the hall floor, and he relaxed a little. Mrs. O'Grady always looked in on him when Mommy wasn't home. Scotty had heard her coming too, for he stopped barking and growling and came under the bed where Terry was to sniff at Terry's hair and lick his cheek with a cold tongue.

"Who's there?" Terry heard Mrs. O'Grady ask. "What do you want? Are you trying to wake all the sixty families in this house?" There was a pause and then Mrs. O'Grady's voice again as if she didn't quite believe what she saw. "Why, it's Matty Billingsley. A woman your age ought to be in bed. Francine hasn't come in yet."

"My niece won't be coming home." The old woman began to cry. "She's dead! I've come to fetch the child home with me."

Mrs. O'Grady made a choking sound. "The Lord have mercy—"

"It was a car accident. Stop looking at me as if you think I've lost my mind. The officers found my name and address in Francine's purse and sent for me to identify the body. I've been to the morgue."

"Do you think—?"

"Worry caused it. Her job finished tonight, and she didn't know where she was going to get another one. Her divorce became final today, and we both know she wanted to go back to Jim. She's been sick and depressed. Francine wasn't the kind of girl to be careless about anything, especially her driving, but she drove the car into the subway wall at LaSalle and Broadway. The wall is steel and concrete."

TERRY PUSHED his breath out slowly and relaxed. It was only Grand-aunt out there talking with Mrs. O'Grady. He had been to her house on Long Island lots of times, but he didn't like her, and she didn't like little boys. Terry knew she was all wrong about Mommy. Mommy was sometimes later than this getting home, but she always came. And last night she had told him to go to bed and be a good boy and she would see him in the morning. Well, she always kept her promises. Maybe he should crawl out from under the bed and tell Grand-aunt that Mommy was all right, only if he did Grand-aunt might take him home with her. She had a yard with grasshoppers and butterflies, but it wasn't fun at her house. She made him take off his shoes to sit on the davenport. There was the sound of a key turning in the lock, and Scotty ran out from under the bed to stand at the door and bark again. Then the door opened, and Mrs. O'Grady made Scotty stop barking. The lights were switched on, and the two women stood looking at the empty bed.

"He's gone!" Mrs. O'Grady said. "He was in the bed when I looked not more than an hour ago. He must be hiding somewhere. Terry—Terry lad, where are you?" She made a hasty survey of the premises. "I can't understand it." She came and stood by the bed again. She had on a long white flannel night gown with a man's coat thrown across her shoulders. Her hair was done in curl papers and she looked fatter in the gown than she did in a dress. Terry watched the bulge her stomach made, pressing the nightgown out.

Grand-aunt leaned on her cane and hobbled toward the bed. She looked so old that Terry wondered if she might not be as old as God. He watched them go from room to room, searching carefully this time and calling him. Grand-aunt couldn't walk fast, and the tall feather on her black hat bobbed and bowed each time she took a step with her cane.

Scotty seemed to think they were playing a game. He jumped at the cane until Grand-aunt tapped him with it and made him yelp, then he took the bottom of Mrs. O'Grady's nightgown and chewed and sniffed and shook it until she picked him up and held him.

"I spent good money for cab fare, and now he's gone," Grand-aunt grumbled. "Do you think some of Francine's friends could have heard about the accident and carried him off?"

"Nobody could get in without a key."

"Then we'd better notify the police."

TERRY BEGAN squirming out from under the bed. Mommy wouldn't want a policeman in her house. She didn't even like peddlers who tried to sell things. Policemen would snoop the way Grand-aunt was doing now, the way she always did when Mommy wasn't around. Grand-aunt had found the new cocktail glasses on the little table by their best chair. Mommy's friend Bill had come by just before she went to work, and they had had a drink together. Then they had quarreled, and Mommy had gone off without washing the glasses and putting them away. Now Grand-aunt was smelling and sniffing them. If she broke one Mommy would think he did it, and she was just the one to let her think it.

"Did Francine drink very much?" Grand-aunt asked Mrs. O'Grady.

"It was the restlessness in her. A woman don't stop loving just because a man don't want her. She could have had her pick—look—it's Terry crawling from under the bed." Mrs. O'Grady put Scotty down and grabbed him. Terry wished she would stop kissing and hugging him and acting as if he had really been lost, but then she liked children. She had six and liked them all, even Katy. Katy was seven, and Terry thought she was awfully silly.

Grand-aunt was frowning at him, and he scowled back.

"It isn't nice for little boys to hide," she said. "Find your clothes, and I'll help you put them on. I'm going to take you home with me."

"I can't go home with you. Mommy wants me to stay here." He looked at Mrs. O'Grady, hoping she would speak up for him, but she was getting clean clothes out of his dresser drawers as if she expected him to go along with Grandaunt. He backed away from them and leaned against the bed.

Grandaunt got his clothes and hobbled over to him. Her lips were smiling, but her eyes made Terry feel uncomfortable. "Let's take your pajamas off and put on these nice clean clothes like a good boy."

Terry climbed up on the bed. "Mommy told me to stay here." He didn't want to quarrel with her. She was an old woman, and Mommy said boys must be especially polite to old women, but he wished she would go home. He wanted to go to bed. He was very sleepy.

"Are you going to mind me, Terry?" Grandaunt sounded crosser. He only scowled.

She caught his leg with the crook of her cane as he was moving out of reach, and pulled him toward her. He hadn't expected her to be so strong. He tried to pull himself free, but she grabbed him by the seat of his pajamas and dumped him on his face on the bed. Then she tapped him with the small end of her cane. He had never been treated in such a way, and he caught his breath in fright. He struggled and kicked to get out of her grasp, but she held him with a firm grip. He reached his right hand behind him to grab the cane, and she tapped him again across the fingers, then she swatted him on the seat of his pajamas. He opened his mouth trying to frighten her with loud bawling sounds.

MRS. O'GRADY caught Grandaunt's arm, and the cane made a clattering sound as it struck the floor. "Stop it, Matty . . . stop it, both of you. Let me talk to him. He's a good boy."

Grandaunt was panting from the struggle. Her face worked in anger and self-pity. "Do you think I want him? Children make me nervous. I don't know how to manage them." Her voice rose shrilly. "But he's my relative, and I aim to do right by him."

"I'm sorry for you, and I'm sorry for the lad." Mrs. O'Grady studied her sadly and shook her head.

Terry moved to the middle of the bed. He liked Mrs. O'Grady. He would stay with her until Mommy came. Even if she didn't want him, he would stay with her. He tucked his feet under him, then he saw Mommy's friend Bill standing in the doorway watching them. Bill was holding his hat in his hand. Terry climbed off the bed.

"Hello," said Bill looking at Terry.

"You were making such a racket, I thought you were alone or I would have knocked."

"It's all right," Mrs. O'Grady said. "Come in and shut the—My goodness—" Her voice changed as she looked at him. "What's happened to you? You look sick and done in. You've heard about Francine." She took his arm and helped him into a chair. "Here let me take your hat." She put the hat on the bed and came back to him. "You were in love with her," she said, giving him a sharp bewildered look. There was pity in her eyes.

INSTEAD OF ANSWERING, he thrust a ring box into her hand. Mrs. O'Grady opened it. The box was satin lined. The ring it held was a diamond. "Francine and you?"

He nodded. "But she never did belong to me. She belonged to Jim Newman." His hurt eyes looked straight ahead. "She couldn't get away from him. It was part of her religion. She believed once two people are married, they are married till death. She told me tonight if she married me, it wouldn't be legal in the sight of God, and she gave the ring back. We could have been married today."

"It was Jim Newman who got the divorce," Matty Billingsley reminded him.

"What difference does it make who got it? The marriage was a failure. They hadn't seen each other in months. He hasn't even bothered to see his son. Oh, what's the use—?" Bill's voice trailed off. He slumped further down in his chair as if he would hide from the world and his sorrow.

"Who is to say what is success and what is failure?" Matty Billingsley asked. "Who is to say what makes people do what they do?"

Mrs. O'Grady came and put a hand on Bill's shoulder. "You loved Francine, maybe you will take Terry and raise him as your son."

He sat up suddenly and looked dismayed. Then he gestured wildly with his hands. "Mrs. O'Grady, I couldn't possibly—"

"I can't keep him. I've got six children and another one on the way. You came tonight—"

"My reason for coming was to see that he was being looked after. If I had married Francine, I would have taken Terry, but not now. He isn't my responsibility."

"He's my responsibility," Matty Bill-ingsley said. "Have you got your car outside, Bill?"

"Sure. Want me to drive you home?"

"I sent a telegram to Jim Newman. If he doesn't want Terry, then I do. I want you to drive me to Long Island."

"I'll do that," Bill said. "Get your clothes, Terry, and I'll help you put them on."

TERRY MOVED away from them and leaned against the wall. The command in Bill's voice made him tremble, but he only leaned harder. He had to stay here and wait for Mommy. She wouldn't know where he had gone if he went with Grandaunt. What did children do when big people bossed them? Maybe he could run outside and hide, but it was dark and cold outside; and if he ran away, Bill and Mrs. O'Grady would only run after him and bring him back. He wasn't even sure he could run away from Grandaunt.

"Terry," Bill's voice was sterner this time. "Get your clothes."

"No," Terry said.

Bill made a dive for him. "Get me his clothes," he said to Mrs. O'Grady. She brought the clothes, and Bill began forcing them on. He was strong. Even loud bawling sounds didn't frighten him any.

Mrs. O'Grady said, "I hope his daddy comes for him. You'll never manage him alone, Matty. He needs a man."

Terry's voice grew louder and louder. He was screaming now, and he couldn't stop. He didn't want Daddy, not ever. Mommy didn't like Daddy. They could say over and over that she liked him, but he knew better. Daddy sent a letter and a check every month, and they made Mommy sick. Sometimes she cried and couldn't stop the way he was doing. Only her kind of crying didn't make any noise. Sometimes she would take headache pills and go to bed, and sometimes she would only be cross. Terry hated Daddy. He hoped he would never see him.

Bill loosened his grip, and Terry threw himself down on the floor, kicking and pounding with his fists.

"I can't stand his crying." Grand-aunt tapped the floor with her cane. "Make him stop it. He's making me ill."

Mrs. O'Grady brought Terry's coat and cap, and Bill began shaking him into them. "That does it," he said breathing hard. "Now, I'll carry him out to the car."

Terry scratched and kicked and clawed. "I—won't go! I have to wait—for Mommy!"

Bill shook him. "Listen to me. You've got to believe us when we say Francine isn't coming back here. She's dead."

"She is not."

Grandaunt raised her cane and shook it at him. "Whether you like it or not you are staying in Long Island with me until your daddy comes."

"Wait," Mrs. O'Grady said. "Wait, all of you. Terry listen to me; lad. Shall we leave a note on your mother's pillow, maybe? Then she'll know where you are."

"Yes—leave—a note."

Bill muttered an oath and put him down.

"Tell Mommy—to bring me home—tomorrow."

Scotty put his nose against Terry's hand while Mrs. O'Grady was writing the note. Terry picked him up, hugging him hard. He pressed his face into Scotty's black fur. He had cried so long that his breath came in quick sobbing gasps.

Mrs. O'Grady finished writing the note, and Terry pinned it to the pillow. Then with Scotty in his arms, he let Bill carry him out and put him in the front seat of the car beside Grandaunt. He could feel the wet place on his cheek where Mrs. O'Grady had kissed him. He wished he could be her boy until Mommy came home. Until Mommy came—! He sat up stiffly. Suppose she didn't come? Where would he live? What would he do? Whose boy would he be? He remembered a bird he had owned for an afternoon. He knew how a dead bird felt in his hand. He held the dog against him so hard that Scotty whimpered in protest.

"I don't know why I let you bring that dog," Grandaunt grumbled. "If there is anything I hate, it's a dog in the house."

NEXT MORNING as soon as Terry was up, he asked Grandaunt to call Mommy on the telephone. She said he was being silly, but she dialed Mrs. O'Grady's number and told him to do his own talking. In a little while he heard Mrs. O'Grady's voice.

"I'm Terry," he told her. "I want to talk to Mommy."

"She's not home, Terry."

"When she comes tell her to call me at Grandaunt's."

There was a pause, and then Mrs. O'Grady said, "Laddy, you've got to face facts. Your mamma won't be coming home. The sooner you realize it the better it will be for you."

"Where is she?"

"I don't know. Perhaps the departed ones live on stars."

"Do you know which star?"

"The glory land would be full of stars of different sizes. Big ones for big souls and small ones for small souls, but I have no way to measure the size glory your mother received. Go out and play. I'm sure wherever she is, she wouldn't want you to worry."

Terry hung up. It wasn't like Mommy to leave New York City without telling him. She always told him where she would be even when she went downtown or just across the street to buy groceries or a paper. She had never mentioned wanting a trip to a star. "She should have taken me," Terry confided to Scotty. "I thought California was the place she wanted to go." He went to find Grandaunt. "Do you think living on a star would be as nice as living in California?"

"A star? Fiddlesticks!" Grandaunt retorted. "Eat your breakfast. There are little sausages and a poached egg."

"Mrs. O'Grady says Mommy lives on one. Would it be heaven? Where is heaven?"

"I don't know. I've never been there. Eat your breakfast."

Terry tried to eat, but the food stuck in his throat. Where was heaven? How long did people stay when they went there? Maybe God and the angels wouldn't let Mommy come back at all.

At first Grandaunt tried to make Terry eat, but when she saw how things were with him, she told him to put on his cap and coat and go out into the yard.

the late President Joseph Smith and his long-time associate, Elder William Wallace Blair; but politics were never allowed to disrupt in the least their brotherly regard in the Great Cause. And even families can divide on politics: My father and I in 1912 voted for Taft; Frederick M. voted for Wilson, and Brother Hale W. voted for Roosevelt. Pardon the personal history.

The main point, however, is our own vote may be pivotal. Much may and generally does depend on it. Let us be as fully advised as possible and cast our vote on the side of righteousness as "God gives us to see the right."

Briefs

POCATELLO, IDAHO.—Climaxing a two weeks preaching service and home visiting, District President Phillip Moore, concluded his stay by baptizing eight people. Assisted by Elders Orval J. Baker and Theodore Daniels, the new members were baptized and confirmed in the evening services of January 28.

The mission is expanding, and each month shows a consistent growth in the building fund as well as the membership.—Reported by MELBA RAE BARNETT.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Seventy Merle P. Guthrie completed a two-week series of evangelistic meetings from January 24 to February 5. At the close of the meetings four people were baptized, Jessie Staffilino, baptized by Brother Guthrie; and Oma Joy Melcher, Eugene Chadwell, Jr., and Linda Schupback, baptized by Otto Melcher. Those assisting in the confirmation were Seventy Merle Guthrie, Elders John Treiber, Otto Melcher, Cletus Swick, Samuel Zonker, and Robert Rodgers.—Reported by LEONA HANES.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—Aurora Branch: A play, "My Peace Go With You," written by Charles Homuth, was presented December 18. Those taking part were Mabel and Clarence White, Marvin and Floria Settles, L. Paul Reedy, C. Malcer, Juanita Reedy, and Jo Ette Tater.

A large group attended the turkey dinner and the children's program given at the church on December 23. In addition to the program, Eddie Weber showed moving pictures featuring "The Night Before Christmas."

A Book of Mormon class, taught by Roberta Gregory, meets every Wednesday evening.

DeKalb Branch: Speakers for the past month have been C. C. Simpson, Burdette Heun, and Pastor R. F. Healy. Those who have helped with the music are Frances Gray, Florence Price, Rosalie Blish, Nancy and Gilbert Brook.

DeSelm Branch: On January 1 at a service held in Bradley, Illinois, Pastor Earl Rogers showed slides on "The Church of Christ." In the evening the women's department held its Christmas exchange party at the home of Sister Pearl Pement.

Mission Branch: A Christmas play was given December 26 by the junior department. The adult class gave a play on January 22.

Recent speakers have been Robert Anderson, William Pike, M. J. Anderson, and Victor Eklof. Bishop Earl Higdon of Far West Stake preached two evening sermons.

Plano Branch: The priesthood class has finished its study of "Each One Win One" and has now begun studying A Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants.

During the Christmas holiday week, the women's department sponsored a family night at the church. Mrs. Elmer Nelson was in charge. Mrs. Nellie Blakely was honored on her eightieth birthday at the meeting.—Taken from The Bulletin.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—These officers were elected to serve for 1949-50: C. Leslie Lynch, pastor; Berniece Staffeld, church school director; Elsie Bennett, music director; Mildred Lundeen, women's department leader; Warren Wolfe, Zion's League leader; Robert Porter, junior church leader; Joyce Olson, secretary; and Vernon Lundeen, chairman of the finance committee.

Richard Elvin, son of District President Wesley Elvin, was ordained to the office of deacon.

The women's department sponsored its annual community night supper and bazaar on November 17. This year set a record attendance. A home talent program was given by the music and dramatic departments following the supper. They also sponsored a successful rummage sale on December 15.

A men's club has been organized. Its purpose is to provide greater fellowship among the men. The club recently enjoyed a series of panel discussions on "Economic Zion." Frank Parsons, bishop's agent, acted as moderator. The club's president for this year is Gordon Bennett.

The Zion's League presented a play, "The Lost Church," on December 18. The dramatic leader, Ferne Parsons, plans on using the Leaguers for many more plays and programs. They have enjoyed several fellowship meetings, outings, and house parties with their leader, Warren Wolfe.

The annual Inventory Day was observed on Sunday, January 29. The response to this event was most encouraging, especially from the children and young people.

Several former Gracelanders are attending the University of Minnesota. They are: Ronald Young, Harrison Hatch, Rex Hield, Hollis Olson, Walter Conway, Phyllis Conway, and Lars Granberg. Elder W. E. Connell and family from Fort Collins, Colorado, are also visiting. Brother Connell is in the graduate school of the university. All of these people are taking part in the services of the branch.

The priesthood is ministering on Sundays to the various outlying branches of the Minnesota District. District President Wesley Elvin, and his counselor, High Priest James Thomas, carry the brunt of the work.

The church school director, Berniece Staffeld, is busy with plans for another Vacation Church School. This will be the second year that our branch has had one.

A new organ fund has been established by branch action. An organ committee has been appointed to investigate the different makes of organs and to bring recommendations before the branch.

Several of the Saints in Minneapolis plan on attending the General Conference in April.—Reported by LESLIE LYNCH.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—The adult class has grown in size and was divided into two classes. One class, taught by Mrs. George Mechling, is studying the Book of Mormon quarterlies, and the other class, taught by Donald Savage, is studying the Doctrine and Covenants.

The young men of the church have entered the city-wide basketball league. They play other churches in town and so far have been doing quite well.

The Young Adult Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Ceasebro on January 13.

January 22 was Annual Inventory Day. Harry Niehaus, bishop's agent, had charge of the morning service. His subject was "We Live by the Choices We Make."

The women of the Zion's Circle have been busy with rummage sale, chili supper, sacrifice offering, Christmas offering, bake sales, Christmas cards, growing dollar; netting a sum of $205.77. Mrs. Edith Niehaus is the leader.

The choir has been very faithful in giving its talents under the able leadership of Mrs. Ruth Pfanmiller. Besides a choir number each Sunday morning, a solo is also presented. Some of the recent soloists have been Kenneth Fry, Dot Williams, and Betty Duryea.

A potluck dinner for the three adult classes was well attended on the evening of January 27 in the church basement.

On January 25, a beautiful baptism service was held at the church at which time Mrs. Betty June Duryea, Ladd LaVerne Duryea, and LeRoy Henry Roth were baptized by Elder Francis Schrunk.—Reported by MRS. EUNICE FULTON.

CORRECTION: The "Brief" item that appears on page 17 of the February 13 issue under the heading of Rich Hill should read Fort Scott.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE.

In the land of the feathered serpent

Unto the Least of These

By JOHN C. THOMAN

PAUL AND MARY HUDSON had been happy when Paul was put under general church appointment. His work had been blessed by God's Spirit as he ministered to the Saints in the large city where he had been sent on his first mission. And now their happiness was complete—a hurried call to the doctor, a rush to the hospital, and Paul suddenly found himself standing nervously in the hall of the Metropolitan Hospital outside the Husband's Waiting Room. It was almost three o'clock in the morning. Only a moment before he had turned his wife over to the male interne and an efficient-looking nurse. He had been in such a hurry to get here, and now in the tried and true tradition, he must wait.

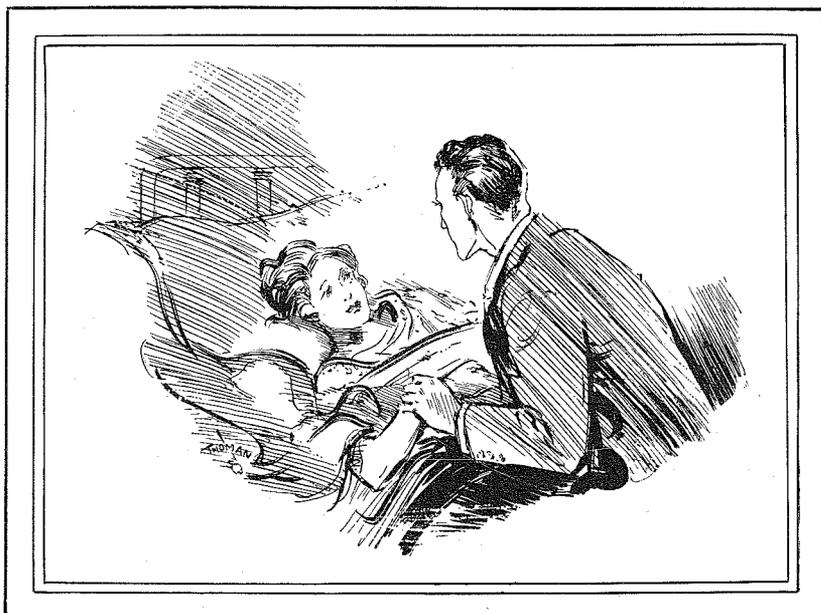

He stepped inside the room and looked about. There were several comfortable chairs, many magazines, and also framed cartoons, each of which poked sly fun at the "expectant father." Over the door a sign read: "We haven't lost a father yet."

There was no answering flicker of amusement in the serious set face of the young minister. Instead his mind went back to the conversation with the interne and the nurse.

"Don't worry!" the interne had said as he had taken his wife's card from the file box. "She will get along fine. Her record indicates an excellent constitution."

"She will surely be all right with Doctor Boynton on the case," the nurse said proudly. "He's really tops in this field."

It was then he had given voice to his own deep faith, as he pressed his wife's hand and stooped to kiss her. "She will be all right because I shall pray every minute," he had stated quietly.

As he straightened up, he caught the quizzical glances that passed between the doctor and nurse. He sighed at the memory, for he realized that to their scientific minds his words must have sounded a bit foolish. As for himself, his was a confidence bolstered by many a fine experience that God hears and answers prayers. Almost daily his prayers had been answered as he had striven with single-minded sincerity to hold up those in need before his Father's throne. And now he would pray for Mary, and God would bless her.

HUMBLY AND EARNESTLY he began to pray, but before he was well-started he heard a noise behind him and arose awkwardly from his knees. He turned to look into the eyes of a tragic-faced woman. Her eyes wore an expression of deep misery. Paul broke the silence, "I'm Paul Hudson," he said, "won't you have a chair?" He waited; the woman entered hesitantly, and wearily sank into one of the big chairs.

"I'm Mrs. Rollins," she said, "and my daughter has just been taken to the delivery room. They sent me here. I am taking the place of the man who should be waiting."

For a moment neither spoke, and then Paul said sympathetically,

"Would you care to tell me about it?"

"Maybe I should tell someone," she sighed. "You see, my daughter and her husband had a quarrel a few months ago and separated. He went to live with his mother, and she came home to me. The worst of it all is that he knows nothing about this—the baby I mean. I tried to tell him about it a month ago and succeeded only in having words with his mother. I hung up without even telling her. They're both such kids and are still so much in love."

Mrs. Rollins began to cry softly. "There's only one thing I know for sure," she added, "my daughter will never forgive him after she's gone through this alone. It's all so tragic. Why didn't I give the boy a chance? Why doesn't someone tell him? After all it is his baby being born. If only someone . . ."

Paul was silent, thinking. That part of his mind which had so lately been engaged in humble supplication was now asleep. Human tragedy was no new story to him. He had been brought into similar situations before. He knew from experience that there are ridiculously simple answers to many such emotional tangles. With a sudden surge of clarity he knew what he must do at once.

"Mrs. Rollins, what is your son-in-law's address?"

She mentioned a street and number and looked at him questioningly. Paul made a mental note of it and reached for his hat and coat.

"You hold the fort; I'll be back as soon as I can." And he was gone.

THE STREETS were deserted as Paul drove along block after block through the dark, sleeping town. As he drove, his mind raced ahead to plan what he might say to an irate mother-in-law and a surprised and incredulous father-to-be.

An hour later as the distant clock struck five, Paul stood a few feet away, while a pale and disheveled young father knelt by the bedside and whispered earnest and contrite promises to a weak but starry-eyed young mother who held a sleeping baby in the crook of her arm.

A hand fell upon Paul's shoulder as he watched. "Come," the nurse said, and led him quietly from the room.

Paul came back with a wrench to other considerations than the narrowly-averted tragedy of these young lives. He came back with a burning sense of fear which surged through his veins like poison. What about Mary? It was all over, and he had not prayed. After having brazenly rejected the claims of science and nature and placed in their stead his boast of a living faith, he had forgotten Mary in her time of need.

The sheeted form on the bed was very still, the face paler than the pillow on which it lay. He knelt beside her and hid his face, too sick with foreboding even to weep. His heart felt like a stone within him, and he was afraid. And then . . .

"Paul," it was the merest whisper. He lifted his head and looked into her face. She was smiling, "How do you like your son?"

It was then he noticed a nurse holding the baby toward him and the young interne standing beside her.

"I told you your wife would be O.K. Her constitution—"the interne began.

"Constitution, nothing!" scoffed

In All Fairness to God

By NAOMI RUSSELL

FEW PEOPLE this side of Mohammedanism are willing to be God's puppets, yet the idea of "Allah wills it" persists in various degrees even among Latter Day Saints.

One good but not very wise woman I used to know developed what she believed to be a fatal ailment. This, she said, was punishment for sins she had committed in her youth. Instead of going to a doctor for diagnosis and treatment, she suffered several years and then died with complete resignation—because it was the will of God. Perhaps medical science wouldn't have been able to cure her, but at least she could have known some relief from the excruciating pain that filled her last days.

Her illness might well have been the result of consistently breaking some physical law over a period of years, but it is unfair to hold God directly responsible for it. If I should develop diabetes yet continue to eat a highly starchy diet and refuse to take insulin, I could expect only extreme discomfort for the remainder of my life. But this would not be divine punishment, and my status hereafter would be no better than if I did the logical thing and took my doctor's advice for treatment. If I live a high-pressure life during my twenties and thirties, I can expect to have heart trouble by the time I reach fifty, but God does not will it so. As far as my heart is concerned, I can spend twenty of my twenty-four hours each day in righteous endeavor or selfish pleasure-seeking, and it will make little difference. If I don't take adequate time out for rest, I know what the "pay-off" will be.

NEITHER CAN I BELIEVE that the color of one's skin is the result of his behavior during pre-existence. Because I am white, some assume that my "spirit" was among the righteous in the first big battle waged in heaven between the forces of good and evil, while the "spirit" of my dark-skinned neighbor was among the patrons of Lucifer. If I could remember anything of that faraway state, I could perhaps see some justice in the theory, but since I haven't the slightest recollection of what I did before I was born to this earth, either reward or punishment here would seem purposeless. Does a parent wait until his child is grown to spank him for playing hookey in the first grade? Would God punish us here for unremembered wrong choices in the life which preceded this one?

Then there is the disputed matter of untimely deaths. Does God plan automobile accidents? Does he direct tornadoes to strike certain towns and miss others? Was the Donora smog disaster predestined to happen? Did some unseen hand lead Kathy Fiscus to step in an unprotected well opening? These and similar tragedies can hardly be ascribed to the "loving Father" we worship unless we place him on the level with back-alley saddists.

It is unfortunate that we tend to limit Deity to the confines of our own warped imaginations. Instead of searching for the perfection that is God and turning our energies toward becoming like him, we often create a kind of deified Frankenstein before whom we spend our lives in fear and frustration. More unfortunate still is the fact that we attempt to frighten others with our self-created monster.

In all fairness to God, let us accept him as the supremacy of goodness—bound by law, certainly, but very just. Anything less is an insult to his intelligence.

the nurse. "It was Dr. Boynton. It was his skill that did it."

She covered the sleeping baby's face carefully and started toward the door but turned to throw a kindly look over her shoulder in Paul's direction. "But maybe it was your prayers, Sir," she said. "Anyway they're both doing fine."

Paul turned back to Mary and her eyes held his, still smiling.

"Mrs. Rollins was here while you were with her daughter and son-in-law and told me what you had done. Paul, I am so proud of you! And don't feel sorry that you weren't with me. Remember the Scripture that reads: 'In as much as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

Paul nodded silently.

"What you did was so wonderful," she continued, "that God knew and understood. I am so thankful to him for our son. So very, very thankful!"

Then she closed her eyes to sleep, and the smile still lingered upon her lips as Paul leaned over to kiss her lightly, then turned and tiptoed out of the room.

Development of Our Social Service Center

and has gone by various names—"The Commodity Shop," "Home Arts and Industries," and "The Campus Shop." It operated first in a room in the Auditorium, then in the basement of Bartholomew Hall, and at the present time is in the old Swope Mansion at 406 South Pleasant, now referred to as the Campus Building. The work has been carried on for the most part by a faithful band of volunteer women workers from all our Independence congregations.

This institution for the care of the poor is now being greatly expanded. From the oblation fund, sufficient money was provided to purchase a large, fireproof building at 310 North Liberty in Independence. In addition to the purchase price, a substantial sum is being spent to renovate the building to make it comfortable and efficient for the particular purpose for which it shall be used. It will be comfortably heated, well-lighted, and adequately-equipped. There are 26,700 square feet of floor space for workrooms, sales-rooms, training classes, and storage. A brief description of the institution and its activities follows:

Name:

Moving from the Campus will necessitate a new name. It shall be known as the Social Service Center (Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints).

Purpose:

(1) To provide good clothing and home furnishings for the poor at nominal cost, or at no cost to needy members of the church, upon order from the Bishop. This will be made possible by volunteer production workers. Although almost all of the work is now being and will continue to be done by volunteer workers, there will be some employment opportunities for handicapped members of the church who are unable to secure employment elsewhere because of their handicap.

(2) To provide opportunity for expansion, involving other goods and services such as canning and storage of foods, employment bureau service, etc.

Organization:

The institution is under the supervision of the Bishopric. The organization is and will be made up for the most part from volunteer workers, although some full-time personnel will be necessary such as a manager, book-keeper, and maintenance man. The able assistance of Sister Henry Rowland and her corps of women workers will continue to be essential to its success. The departments will be organized much as they are at present, although the new building facilities will necessitate some changes, and there will be opportunity for many more volunteer workers.

Function:

Clothing, furniture, paper, and other salvage is picked up by truck from people of the community who are willing to give. Regular routes will soon be mapped out and followed on specific days.

Materials are repaired, remade, cleaned, and pressed by volunteer workers and offered for sale at nominal prices. Many people not of the church give materials to the institution, and our service to the poor of the community is to sell these renovated necessities at a price made possible only through volunteer labor. Members of the church needing help may secure necessary clothing and furnishings without charge upon request of the Bishop in Zion or his agents in the various congregations. Requests from areas outside the Center Place should be sent to the Presiding Bishopric's office through the regular channels of bishopric organization.

At the present time, the institution functions only one day per week. In the new location it is hoped that it can eventually be operated six days per week. This will depend upon the response our membership gives to this greater co-operative effort to assist the poor. If all probability, a certain number of workers will be requested from each congregation on specific days. Some definite planning and perhaps some measure of sacrifice may be involved.

The institution is nonprofit. All funds received from sale of goods go to sustain the institution and directly benefit the poor.

While for the present this seems to be confined in its operations to Zion and the stakes, there are possibilities for extension of its services throughout many of the large centers of the church. This, however, will require careful planning and organization, but in the meantime where there has been an accumulation of clothing that could be shipped to this institution, it is in order to do so, as its benefits go far beyond those in this immediate area.

In the last few years the church has spent $65,000 in sending commodities, foodstuff, and clothing to needy Saints in Europe. As most of the clothing was donated, it is not included in the cost, but a total of over eighty tons of food and clothing was sent. Undoubtedly additional needs will have to be met. Here, then, is one institution which merits the support of the entire church, and one which may well form a nucleus for further development in this field of social service which is so much a part of our church philosophy.

The immediate supervision of this project is under the Bishop in Zion, Harold W. Cackler, and it will receive the close supervision of the Presiding Bishopric, in conjunction with the First Presidency and other General Church officers concerned.

Books Wanted

Mrs. Lois Ernsberger, 317 East Lovett Street, Charlotte, Michigan, would like to purchase a copy of Kueffer's Stories of Our Hymns. Please write stating condition and price of book before sending.

Request for Prayers

Prayers are requested for Elder Carl Karlson, V. Porsgrunn, Norway, who has lost the sight of one eye and the other, although operated on, is being covered with cataract. He is further handicapped by increasing deafness. He desires to be healed, if it is God's will, so that he may be of service to his family and church. He hopes to be able to help as translator for visiting missionaries. (Request submitted by Mrs. Peter Muceus, 1335 North Magnolia Avenue, Modesto, California.)

DEATHS

THOMAS.—Emma, daughter of Sarah E. Wiltse and Isaac Bogue, was born November 12, 1859, near Saginaw, Michigan, and died January 8, 1950, at Lamoni, Iowa. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 24, 1877, and in August 1881, was married to Oscar Thomas. Three sons were born to them; all three died within a two-week period leaving the home lonely and empty. Later the Thomases took three motherless children to rear: Hattie, Martha, and George Hiltbrand. All three remained in the Thomas home throughout the years and were on hand when Sister Thomas died. Her husband preceded her in death in 1920. The funeral service was conducted by Elders Arthur Lane and Robert Farnham at Lamoni. Burial was in the family plot at Rose Hill Cemetery.

GARRETT.—Jennie L., daughter of William and Mary Simmons, was born at Lee's Summit, Missouri, on April 30, 1893, and died at Phoenix, Arizona, on December 27, 1949. She was married to George Elmer Garrett on September 11, 1913; five children were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eight years old.

She is survived by her husband, George; four daughters: Mrs. Mary Lightfoot of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Dorothy Ross of Phoenix; Mrs. Henrietta Allen of Independence, Missouri; and Mrs. Alice Vanderburg of Lenexa, Kansas; a son, George Dan, of Kansas City; her mother, Mrs. Mary Simmons Louderbeck of Kansas City; three sisters: Rose of Lee's Summit; Daisy of Kansas City; and Mary of Oregon; a brother, Herbert of Pleasant Hill, Missouri; and twelve grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Wilbert W. Wood at the A. L. Moore Memory Chapel at Phoenix. Interment was in Greenwood Memorial Park, Phoenix.

CAMERON.—Douglas W., was born on June 5, 1855, and died January 26, 1950, at the Queen Elizabeth Hospital in Toronto, Ontario. He was an elder in the Reorganized Church and used every opportunity to best advantage in presenting the gospel. He was actively engaged in ministerial work until his ninety-third year.

He is survived by his wife, Annie Hamilton Cameron; and two daughters: Mrs. M. Waish of Hobbs, New Mexico, and Mrs. Harvey Brooks of Toronto. Another daughter, Maude, preceded him in death several years ago. Funeral services were held at Mount Forest, Ontario, Elders J. F. Sheehy and F. C. LeFevre officiating. Interment was in the Maplewood Cemetery.

CARBALLEY.—Olive M., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Harding, was born in Crescent Township, Iowa, on June 21, 1863, and died on February 3, 1950, in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Her parents were pioneer settlers in the Council Bluffs area, and she was a lifelong resident there. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 5, 1882, and also held membership in the Rebekah Lodge.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Mari Vest of Council Bluffs, and four grandchildren. Services were held at the Woodring Funeral Home in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in Crescent Cemetery.

SHORT.—Caroline, was born at Neola, Iowa, on March 22, 1877, and died after a brief illness on January 30, 1950, at the Jennie Edmondson Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for about sixteen years.

She is survived by her husband, William Short of Neola; four daughters: Mrs. Laura Felton of Neola; Mrs. Lodena Berge of Ashland, Nebraska; Mrs. Lila Meadows of Concord, California; and Mrs. Lola Stuhr of Washougal, Washington; a son Loren Short of Minden, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Alice Carlson of Woodbine, Iowa, and Mrs. Elva Bennett of Neola; a brother, Albert Spears of Neola; a foster-brother, Byron Stoker of Boulder City, Nevada; and ten grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian Church in Neola, Elder V. D. Ruch and the Reverend Feaver officiating. Burial was in Valley View Cemetery near Persia, Iowa.

Sanitarium Day Is Sunday, March 19

The people of the church have been asked (Herald of January 23, 1950) to give financial and spiritual support to our Hospital and its School of Nursing on this Sunday. In this connection read the chaplain's message in this issue.

AGAINST WASTE

Because of my youthful training to "clean up your plate," I find it harder to keep up my dieting habits while "eating out." Then I look at my friends and am reminded of my own overhanging waistline, and my resolve is strengthened. Somewhere I've heard that "It is better for the garbage collector to carry the waste than for me to carry it around my waist."

It is easy for me to forget, but nature counts every little calorie. I may think "This time doesn't count," but I know very well that it will appear on the bathroom scale next morning.

Fat and wealth are very different. Wealth is hard to get, easy to lose; but fat is easy to get, hard to lose.

The doctor will tell you: "The longer the waistline, the shorter the life line."

A BAD CODE

A heavy fog id Hobe Towd this bordig. Bad for the sidus. Bide are all stobbed ubb. Phnff. I subbose id is od accoud of the fog. Phnff. Could hardly see by way to worg. Phnff.

Ad the corder by the labpost I saw two sbooks. Wud said to the other, "Going sub-where?" "Doe," he reblied, "I lige id here!" Phnff.

FUEL

The country-wide coal shortage, due to the strikes, will bring suffering to many people. Home-owners may have to use every source of heat, however small. There is a way of burning old newspapers in a fireplace that will help.

Make a neat pile of the papers about five inches thick (more may cause trouble) with all the folded edges on one side. Place this at a slight angle, upright against the back of the fireplace, with the folded edges up. Light it, and it will burn steadily, with no flash flame such as occurs with loose papers. As the black charred parts curl downward and stifle the flame, loosen them with a poker very slightly to admit air, and they will provide a red glowing heat. With occasional attention, the papers will give a warm flame about two hours. Do not disturb them too much or the fire is spoiled. Magazines do not make a good fire because the paper contains too much clay and casein.

 THINKING AND WRITING

Thinking is what Winston Churchill described, during the last war, as "the ceaseless searching of the mind for ways and means."

For the writer, thinking is conducting a long inquiry in the mind, or with it, concerning the thought and organization of an article, or about the characters of a story, what they do, and why they do it.

If the search is intensive enough and long enough, it is amazing what rich resources the mind will discover within itself, and what inventiveness it will display in creative effort.

The secret is to set the will as a taskmaster over the mind. For the mind is a lazy, comfort-loving thing that will not work unless it is pushed.

This search itself is the difficult, and sometimes the exhausting and annoying part of writing. It often makes the tired and irritated writer determine to give up his task and change to something else.

But when he is rested, he is tempted again by the new vistas and the promise of interesting experiences to which his imagination invites him by leaving a strange door slightly ajar, and permitting him to peek through it.

Are You a Delegate ?

SOON THE DISTRICTS and branches in unorganized territory will be selecting their delegates to the 1950 General Conference. These people who wear the badge of Conference membership are to represent their constituency, and should, in turn, be representative of them. The quality of the work done next April will depend on their judgment, their understanding, and their spirituality. The whole is the sum of its parts. All of the divine light which this Conference enjoys will be filtered through the minds of men and women who compose it.

These considerations do not always influence the actual selection of our representatives, however. There is no point in nominating someone who for personal reasons cannot go. Therefore the first question asked by the district president will likely be: "Who plans to go to Conference?" At some point in the proceedings, someone may ask this none-too-subtle question, "Don't the elders become ex officio members of the Conference?"

Then there are Brother and Sister Rafferty who were converted from Catholicism at last winter's missionary meetings who are planning to go. "By all means they should be delegates," some say. Now, we are for the Rafferty's going to Conference, but is it fair to them to ask them to sit in judgment on the serious business which delegates must frequently decide. No man's judgment is better than his information. These may be exceptionally capable members, but we should not expect too much from them in one year.

You may feel safe when you watch how your pastor or district president votes and follow his lead, and perhaps you will not be far off the right course. But are you a real delegate?

Introducing...

CLYDE S. JOHNSON, Leavenworth, Kansas, (page 13) was born in Knobnoster, Missouri, in 1909 and was baptized in Warrensburg in 1928.

He married Birdene Raschke in 1934. They have three daughters: Marilee, 14; Betty Ann, 10; Anita, 8.

Brother Johnson was graduated from Warrensburg High School in 1929, and attended the Central Missouri State College at Warrensburg, from which he received his B.S. degree in education in 1938. From 1947 to 1949 he attended the State Teachers College at Emporia, Kansas, working toward his master's degree.

His hobby is refinishing antiques, and he is especially interested in vocational business education. He has taught school from 1932 to the present time and is now head of the business department of the Leavenworth Senior High School. He holds membership in both national and state teachers' associations.

Brother Johnson was ordained a priest in 1934 and an elder in 1945. At present he is pastor of the Leavenworth congregation.

ROLAND C. LAMBKIN, Warrensburg, Missouri, (page 21) was born in Clitherall, Minnesota, in 1915 and was baptized in Glenwood, Iowa, in 1923.

He married Nellie Robinson in 1940. They have two sons and two daughters: Ronald Eugene, 8; Byrne Reed, 2; Linda Carol, 6; Betty Sue, 1.

Brother Lambkin was graduated from the Waterloo High School in Illinois in 1932. He has taken advanced education in the Finley Engineering School of Kansas City and Central Missouri State College at Warrensburg.

His hobbies are music and writing. He is a journeyman electrician and sales representative. In the Warrensburg Branch he teaches a junior high class which has been asked to give a visual aids demonstration at the coming General Conference.

News & Notes

EASTERN TRIP

President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp are on a trip to New York and to Washington, D. C., in the interest of the church.

NEWS FROM FLOYD McDOWELL

The Arkansas and Louisiana District priesthood institute was held in Hot Springs on February 17, 18, 19. Brother McDowell taught classes. Wives of the priesthood and church members were invited to attend the fellowship supper.

Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop Harold Cackler, and Brother McDowell attended the priesthood held in Des Moines, Iowa, on February 24, 25, and 26. In spite of inclement weather, there was a large attendance. A banquet was held Saturday evening. Des Moines is Brother Cackler's "home town."

On February 20, 21, 23, 27, and 28 Brother McDowell held priesthood classes in Kansas City Stake. Two classes were held each evening. Subjects studied were "Building L.D.S. Family Life" and "The Ministry of Counseling."

Brother McDowell says there is a deep interest in the new priesthood literature, and that a large amount has been distributed in every place where a priesthood institute is held.

ATTEND INSTITUTE

John Darling, Associate Director of Religious Education; Chris B. Hartshorn, Managing Editor of the Herald Publishing House; Kenneth L. Graham, Manager of the Herald Publishing House; and Mrs. Jeanne Miller, Assistant to the Manager of the Herald Publishing House attended the International Council of Religious Education held during the week of February 12 in Columbus, Ohio.

While there Brother Darling preached Sunday morning, February 12, at Second Church and Sunday evening at First Church. Brother Hartshorn spoke at the Sunday morning 11:00 o'clock service at First Church and at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting at Second Church.

CONFERENCE FOR YOUTH

Carl Mesle, Supervisor of Young People in Zion, was guest speaker on February 19 at the Northwest Iowa District Young People's Conference held in Moorhead, Iowa. Clifford Cole, district president, was in charge of the conference. He was assisted by Glen McDole, district young people's leader.

Brother Mesle spoke at the 11:00 o'clock service, and in the afternoon, he showed slides about Independence. The slides, provided by C. Ed. Miller, stressed the work the young people are doing in Zion.

ALBIA, IOWA

Elder John W. Blackstock, pastor of Chariton, Iowa, is holding a successful series of services at Albia, Iowa. Three have been baptized, and many have shown an interest in the church.

On Tithing Sunday, February 5, fifty-four tithing statements were filed and $671 given to the church. The branch is showing good and consistent gain in number of statement filers.

PHOTOGRAPH

About two hundred people who were baptized into the church in Zion during 1949 met in the afternoon of February 26 in front of the Stone Church to have a mass picture taken. Marvin McDole was the photographer. The picture is to be used for General Conference and missionary purposes.

The Woman in White

The church-wide collection on Sanitarium Day, March 19, is for the benefit of the School of Nursing. More and better trained nurses are needed for the expanding services of the hospital, keeping pace with the population of a growing city.

A War Goes On

The Sanitarium is a sector in a world-wide battlefield. It is a part of the great war that has been going on since the beginning of scientific medicine—the war against disease and death, the enemies of mankind. It is a war in which there is no surrender, no truce, no furlough, no armistice. As long as there is the slightest chance, the hospital opposes death.

In the Sanitarium, this war against disease and death is carried on with the most modern weapons obtainable—and new weapons are always being forged in the laboratories of science. Better nursing is a part of that program.

It costs something to save a life. When our families are involved, we do not set a low price.

Sanitarium Services

A little folder, "Your Care Is Our Business," reveals the following information about the work of the Sanitarium in 1949: patients served in the hospital, 7,310; students enrolled, 73; babies born, 1,207; children treated, 1,165; accident cases, 2,431.

About 2,100 persons called for administration by the elders. Four hundred persons made inquiries about the church. Six persons were converted, that are known, and there may have been others.

Your contribution on the collection plate on Sunday, March 19, will help the church to carry on the important work at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. Some fine girl you know should become a "woman in white." Wouldn't you like to help her do it?

A Symbol of Life

Everybody knows the woman in white. The uniform of the nurse is recognized and honored everywhere in the world. She often labors far "beyond the call of duty," and people love and respect her accordingly.

When we are sick, the doctor's visits are brief, for he must see many patients. It is the nurse who takes care of us most of the time. She answers our calls and takes care of our needs.

The white uniform of the nurse is for many reasons a beautiful garment. A tradition of service goes with it. It is a symbol of life.

The Nurse at Your Side

When one is coming out of the anesthetic after an operation, struggling out of the deep sleep of unconsciousness, the first person he sees is the nurse. She stands beside the bed, ready to give help and a word of encouragement.

It is not easy for the hospital to keep her there. Graduate nurses command good incomes in private practice. Young men fall in love with them, and make attractive talk about home and companionship. A good nurse can be an excellent wife and mother. The hospital staff is depleted by business and matrimony. A constant recruiting and educational program is necessary.

Unfailing Light

Day and night, week after week, year after year, the Sanitarium is always ready. On each floor, at the nurses' station, there is a light that never goes out. Somebody is always in charge with her helpers, watching over the sick.

That light is a symbol of the unceasing vigilance and faithfulness with which the sick are watched and tended. Such care can be provided only because individual women have given up lives of comfort and ease for lives of service in a great cause. Great service always requires a sacrifice, but it brings its rewards too.

In every institution people come and go, and a hospital is no exception. A fine, modern hospital must train its own nurses if it is to operate with a full staff.

The School of Nursing

So important a part of the Sanitarium is the School of Nursing that it has been decided to devote the church-wide Sanitarium Day collection to it. Certain developments are desired: the improvement of laboratory and educational facilities, provision for a larger freshman class next September, a broader program of religious and recreational activities for students, a larger library and study facilities, and further training for instructors.

All this will make the school stronger and improve the qualifications of the graduates.

Our Radio Application

On December 14 last the Hearing Examiner who took testimony on our application in 1948 filed with the Federal Communications Commission his Initial Decision recommending that our application be denied.

Since then we have been in correspondence with our attorneys in Washington and after being advised as to the resulting status and the law, and with the concurrence of the Joint Council of Presidency, Council of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, we directed them to appeal from the report of the Examiner, which has been done.

From an examination of the petition filed within recent days our council has asked the Commission "to remand to the Hearing Examiner the Initial Decision . . . with instructions."

It appears that the Hearing Examiner found that while "the proposal of the Reorganized Church is in all other respects acceptable, its application must be denied at this time because of the presently undetermined applicability of the First Amendment [U. S. Constitution] to licensing radio stations for religious purposes." This question, it appears, is pending before the commission in another case.

Our attorneys object to the action of the Hearing Examiner in withholding "final conclusions because of the pendency of rule-making proceedings, not a part of the issues in this case," and declare his action in recommending that the application be denied is "contrary to all concepts of lawful procedure."

Briefly stated, they contend his duty was to make a decision within the issues and the facts developed in the hearings, and that he had no right to go beyond them in his recommendations.

The prayer for relief is "(1) That the Commission remand to the Hearing Examiner the Initial Decision . . . with instructions that a decision with definitive conclusions on all issues be adopted, and (2) For such other relief as to the Commission seems just."

It is an interesting fact that the Hearing Examiner in his Initial Decision recommended "a denial of the application of the Kansas City Broadcasting Company, Inc., [Reverend Zimmerman and associates] on the merits of the case." (Italics ours.) This application was heard at the time we were heard. We have been informed this company has appealed from this action of the Hearing Examiner.

Thus the matter stands with good prospects, in our opinion, for favorable action, though the Act of Congress (Communications Act of 1934, as amended) may require action of the coming General Conference in order to comply with certain minor but nonetheless operative provisions.

On behalf of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric,

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Let's Make it a Singing Conference

WHEN YOU RECEIVE your Conference copy of the Little Hymnal this April, you will be delighted to note that it contains a section of new hymns. These are from the new Youth Hymnal which is now in the hands of the publishers and which we expect to be available to the church by Conference time. This new material consists of entirely new hymns—words and music—new music to words now in use by the church—and some new words set to music which is already familiar.

The section of all new material contains:

"A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" and "God of Our Fathers, Whose Almighty Hand," two well-known hymns; "All Things Are Thine," a stewardship hymn; and "Come, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," a hymn suitable for confirmation or ordination.

Dr. Roy A. Cheville wrote the words for "All Things Are Thine," and Franklyn S. Weddle wrote the music. The music for "Come, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost" won the first prize in a hymn contest sponsored a few years ago by the Independence Music Club. William E. Butler of Enfield, England, was the composer of this music.

The hymns with new music to words which we now use are more numerous: The music for "O Jesus! the Giver," number 31, has been changed from "Sweet Afton" to a tune written by Bradshaw. Number 361, "Jesus, Mighty King in Zion," is now set to an old Psalm tune instead of the folk music tune, "Go Tell Aunt Rhodie." The Communion hymn, "O God, th' Eternal Father," number 384, has discarded the inappropriate tune so long used and is now set to the "Passion Chorale" tune with which it has a beautiful affinity. "Book of Mormon, Hid for Ages" is newly set to music by William Monk, with which it is much better suited. That wonderful Restoration hymn, "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly," number 412, has been set to a straight hymn-style harmonization to make it more suitable for congregational use, keeping the same tune. Another Restoration hymn, "Ye Wondering Nations," number 417, which, because of its musical setting, is seldom used, has more suitable music; and "Onward to Zion," number 436, has a new musical setting which is more in keeping with the spirit of the words than the Stephen Foster love song now used. President Frederick M. Smith, author of the words, had written to several musicians in a search for more suitable music for his hymn, and had several times expressed the wish that such could be found.

Two new hymns using music already in the Saints' Hymnal are "Hast Thou Heard It" by Dr. Roy A. Cheville with the music for number 344 in the Hymnal ("Hark! the Voice of Jesus Calling"), and "Open

Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing an Educational Institution

By CHARLES F. GRABSKE, M.D., Church Physician

A SENIOR GIRL in high school watches February drop back into the past and sees March racing well up to April. A few days in May, perhaps some token hours in June, and school days at home will be over and gone. Then what shall she do? Most young women, along with their fathers and their mothers, hope there may be yet more time for preparation to meet the years ahead, perhaps full fifty of them—filled with rich satisfaction—not desolate with only lean, infrequent joys marred by repeated frustrations.

Preparedness tends to bring the desirable things. That is the reason the secondary school is so often followed by more education. Of this there are many kinds. There are colleges to teach the liberal arts, others to instruct in the technical skills and in engineering, and still others to train for the vocations.

Our Sanitarium has a School of Nursing. It gives instruction in the liberal arts, but, moreover, trains in skills and in the specialized subject matter that enables the learner to use this education as a profession, adaptable in earning a living. In some ways it resembles a medical school. Physicians and nurses alike are required to study such materials as English, psychology, and sociology as background, and certain professional subjects—anatomy, physiology, pathology and therapeutics—as particular fields in their own specialized work. Again, a school of nursing is like a seminary. Both nurses and ministers must love people and wish to help them. Technical skill alone in the one and but flowered eloquence in the other are alike futile, barren, and unwanted.

A COLLEGE of liberal arts provides a curriculum that enriches life by introducing its students to many phases of our culture. All this material is presented to make living more meaningful and to provide it with more zest, color, and flavor. Any school without some such offerings would seem in effect to desert its votaries, substituting some less desirable, more earthy object of attention. Some institutions must be so classified, limiting the horizons of their graduates, sacrificing the more abundant life to the acquirement of mere skills attendant on making a living. Since it is by no means undesirable to know how to earn a living, it would seem well to include in a course preparing for life, a training that would gain such a necessary knowledge. In both of these lines a good school of nursing provides instruction. Indeed, to be a fully competent nurse, a girl must be an interesting companion. She must be one naturally attentive to the world in which she lives and the doings of its people. The daily news and what lies back of the news will be attractive to the nurse who helps the sick one escape the boredom imposed on him by his illness and the incarceration in his own sickroom. A knowledge of literature, history, and the sciences are tools in the art of nursing. Elementary courses in such subjects should rightfully be included in the curriculum of a school preparing for superior nursing.

THE SANITARIUM SCHOOL requires that young women entering training come prepared by the high schools with at least fifteen units of study satisfactorily completed in such fundamentals as English, mathematics, sciences, social studies, and foreign languages. This provides a most desirable foundation for the nurses' education. Such beginnings are continued on with instruction in psychology, sociology, social problems, chemistry, anatomy, physiology, pathology, pharmacology, and various clinical and purely professional materials. The nurse in training continues on with her cultural development as she gathers to herself special subject matter designed to bring background and understanding to her future specialized life of service.

These courses are presented by a faculty of some twenty-six teachers. They include Miss Vida Butterworth, Director of Education, who is one of a family of Saints long interested in promoting the better things of life. Her father, Charles E. Butterworth, was for nearly forty years a missionary of the church. A brother was a member of one of Graceland's earliest classes and was for years Dean of Rural Education at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. Miss Butterworth, a Sanitarium graduate of 1929, holds the degree of Master of Arts in Nursing Education from Columbia University, New York. There are four other graduate nurses who teach full time. Twelve others teach part time, serving other times as supervisors in the hospital itself. Besides these, classes are taught by Chaplin Elder Don Lents, who serves the church full time in the Sanitarium. Nine physicians on the Sanitarium Staff teach classes of students. The Physician to the Church has taught a class in the school for the past twenty-one years. The Superintendent of the Hospital, Miss Gertrude Copeland, has given of her rich experience and counsel to classes of nurses continuously for the last quarter century. These part-time teachers, some of whom are not nurses themselves, bring points of view quite different from such as might be brought by those who see by the light of a nurse's life and experience. They enrich the student nurse immeasurably by bringing this nonprofessional yet pertinent point of view to bear upon her development.

Of course the didactic instruction is implemented here as in other modern schools by the laboratories. Chemistry, nursing arts, dietetics, and neurobiology are given reality and meaning in such workshops. Our library is one of the best nurses' libraries in greater Kansas City. It has been well-organized and promoted by Sister Grace Tousley who has given its development a crusading zeal that has been felt with pride, not only within the institution itself, but far out among the branches of the church.

AFFILIATIONS with other specialized hospitals take students away from the Sanitarium many months in the latter period of their training. All are given three months in psychiatry at St. Louis at the City Sanitarium. All are given three months special work in pediatrics at Kansas City's Mercy Hospital for Children. Two months further may be elected by those who wish further training in the care of tuberculosis. This is given at the Robert Koch Hospital in St. Louis.

Outside the school itself are many of the activities to be found in other institutions of advanced learning. The daily chapel experience has a particular flavor here. Presided over by the chaplain, there comes each morning before the day's work begins, a service of song and a short talk by some community leader. Most of the church's chief officers and many of its most sought for speakers have addressed the student body.

The Sanilog, nurses' yearbook, is edited and prepared by them. The San Piper is their monthly paper. Recreational activities, including tennis, volleyball, basketball, and the student choir, along with many other opportunities offered by Independence and near-by Kansas City, fill up the interstices in the time pattern of the girls in the school.

All such is included in the education.

The School of Nursing at General Conference

By VIDA E. BUTTERWORTH, R. N., M. A.

THE WORK of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital goes on during General Conference the same as it does all the rest of the year. It maintains its service for twenty-four hours a day. During Conference the first-aid booth in the Auditorium is maintained by registered nurses who are for the most part alumnae of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing.

A booth is also maintained in the auditorium to show something of the work of the School of Nursing and to give out information to those interested in a nursing course. An educational program is conducted at this booth on matters pertaining to health. This year the health theme is to be diabetes mellitus or "sugar diabetes." There will be posters, pamphlets, and various displays to observe. A short movie will probably be shown several times a day for educational purposes. Information about the Sanitarium, the School of Nursing, the work of the Mothers' Club, and the Patroness Society will be given freely to those who inquire. The 1949-50 Sanilog, the School of Nursing yearbook, will be on sale at the booth.

One of the high lights of Conference, as far as impressiveness and color go, will be the Nurses' Graduation on April 3. Eighteen young women will receive their pins and diplomas at this exercise. Church Physician, C. F. Grabske, M.D., will be the speaker for this occasion. All conference visitors are invited to attend. Following this a reception for the class of 1950 will be held at the Nurses' Home, 1505 West Truman Road.

The hospital will maintain open house each day from 1:00 to 4:30 p.m., with guides to show visitors through the hospital and School of Nursing. A special display of books will be exhibited in the school library. Light refreshments will be served at the end of the tour.

Before and following each General Conference a number of missionaries enter the hospital for laboratory tests, X-ray studies, and observation necessary for diagnosis. This is done to facilitate the work of the physicians who examine General Church appointees to make sure they are in the best possible physical and mental health to carry on their missionary work.

Undoubtedly many student nurses in uniform will be seen about the Auditorium as they attend meetings, Conference classes, and visit with relatives and friends. Classes are dismissed during this week in order to allow more time for such attendance.

Those who attend Conference are invited to visit the Sanitarium and see what an excellent institution the church maintains for service to the people of Zion and others who enter its doors.

The "San" Graduates Speak

Graduates of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing reveal, in letters to Miss Nelle Morgan, R.N., Director of Nurses at the Sanitarium, their thoughts about nursing as a profession and the Sanitarium School of Nursing.

UNITY is one of the outstanding characteristics of student and graduate nurses at the "San." For three years the students live in the homelike atmosphere of the Nurses' Home, and they develop a love for, and a sincere interest in, each other. During these three years of close association, the students gain an idealism which carries over into their professional and personal lives.

After they graduate and leave the nursing school, they keep in touch with their Alma Mater by writing to tell what positions they hold, when and whom they marry, when their babies are born, and so on.

The desire to give service is the force which has caused the "San" nurses to enter the profession of nursing. They express it in different ways, but all of their remarks point to this basic desire. Some of them have this desire created within them by someone they love, as did our first graduate, Miss Ina Cockerton. Miss Cockerton was the only student in the class of 1912. After thirty-eight years of nursing, she is still serving and finds joy in this service. She says:

As a child I was always nursing my cat and dog when they were sick. My aunt, Mrs. Esther Cockerton Gates, was a graduate nurse, and I thought she was wonderful. As I grew older I decided to become a nurse like Aunt Esther. I enjoyed my training and have been very happy in my work.

Those of us who are acquainted with Miss Cockerton and have worked with her know she always served willingly and that her joy in so doing inspired many a younger nurse.

Helen A. Weeks, graduate of the class of 1923 and now in charge of Resthaven, the church-sponsored home for aged women, says:

I chose to be a nurse because I have always liked people, and I like to use my hands. I had always lived as an "isolated Saint," and I came to the San not only to receive a nursing education, but also to have close association with the church.

Miss Weeks has now dedicated her life to service in the church as well as in nursing.

Alice Anson, class of 1926, now a director of nurses in Watseka, Illinois, says:

There were three factors that I considered essential in making my choice of a career. These were: (1) It must be work that would enable me to render the greatest service to the greatest number of people. (2) It must be work that would not be monotonous routine, but would offer new experiences from day to day. (3) It must be work that would enable me to be financially independent. After much thought and prayer, I chose nursing as the career most likely to meet those essentials. I have never regretted my choice.

Miss Anson's achievements are proof of her wisdom in selection.

MANY OF THE GRADUATES express a feeling of security in the preparation they have received in the School of Nursing, which enables them to meet the demands of their positions or the demands of their homes as wives and mothers.

Vera Gamet Njeim, class of 1930, now the wife of Seventy George Njeim, says:

Looking back I have often rejoiced that I chose the "San" for my nursing school. I became intimately acquainted with our own church institution. I acquired skills of hand and mind which have enabled me to nurse many fine people, and later my own family, through serious illness. During the recent war, I was especially thankful I could be self-reliant in professional nursing. Even my neighbors were bolstered by the fact that a nurse was there among them and ready to assist should illness strike. The precision, the order, the sound general knowledge of the working of our physical body and its needs, which are learned in a good nursing course, are priceless assets to the young woman who desires to become a homemaker or a friend to humanity. No thrill in the world compares with the feeling of exalted happiness which comes to a nurse who has successfully assisted in bringing a life out of the valley of death. The San is an institution; institutions, like individuals, have their shortcomings, but I feel that the San is peculiarly fitted to educate our Latter Day Saint girls. The high moral quality of the personnel will influence their lives for good, and the education compares most favorably with that of nurses I have met wherever I have gone.

Margaret Chapman Esler, class of 1930, who is now a school nurse in the Kansas City, Missouri, public schools, says:

I feel that the San nurses are qualified to go any place in the world and serve. They not only make good nurses, but are good mothers and good leaders in the church and the community.

Margaret Wiley, class of 1919, now physical therapist at the School for Crippled Children in Kansas City, Missouri, says:

Nursing education can be used as a steppingstone into the allied professions, such as physical therapy which is a method of treating disease and injury with the aid of physical agents. A background in nursing is an invaluable asset to one who becomes a physical therapist. My education received at the San has surely been helpful to me.

Alma Rowden Power, class of 1930, who is now assistant superintendent of the Texas Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children in Dallas, says:

I entered nursing because I wanted to serve humanity. I enrolled at the San because it was a church institution. I shall always be proud of it and thankful for my experience there. I appreciate the ideals of the San and the first lesson I learned there, which was that the patient comes first. Good bedside nursing is the foundation of all nursing, and the untiring efforts of the instructors to teach an excellent course holding forth such ideals is an experience I shall long remember. I would not exchange my knowledge of nursing, learned at the San, for anything.

Martha Criley, class of 1934, who is now a nurse anesthetist at Wesley Hospital, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, writes:

My days at the "San" are among my best memories. The foundations laid there, both spiritual and professional, have been invaluable to me. The work, the play, and the friendship of the other students and the interest of the teaching staff have made me happy that I am a graduate of the "San."

Helen V. Hinde, class of 1947, who is now studying for her Bachelor of Science degree at Dubuque University, Dubuque, Iowa, says:

While on affiliation at other hospitals during my school days, I was continually aware of the thoroughness with which we had been taught in our home school. In my experience I found that we nurses from the "San" were as well prepared, and often better prepared, than nurses from other schools. Since I have entered college, I have been even more aware of the fact that the teachers at the "San" provided me with a thorough background for advanced work. I owe much to the "San," not only for the education I received, but also for the friendliness and personal interest shown me by members of the staff. Through the kindness of instructors, I found my moments of discouragement lightened. It is refreshing to find an institution where the training is professional but does not lose the human touch.

Mrs. Maxine Yahnig Evans, class of 1942, who is now a staff nurse at the Eskimo Boarding School and Village, White Mountain, Alaska, writes:

I have always considered it a privilege to have gone to school at the "San." It was a source of great happiness to work with the fine group of girls, staff personnel, and patients there. Since graduation, while working in other hospitals, I have looked back at my own nursing school with proud respect and appreciation.

ALL OF THE GRADUATES do not leave Independence. Many of them marry and make their homes here. Many of them dedicate their lives to service in the church hospital and the school of nursing. "Bedside Nursing," to quote Mrs. Power again, "is the foundation of all nursing," and many of our graduates stay to render this important service here.

Carmen Luke, class of 1920, a private duty nurse caring for the individual critically ill patient, is one of those who has remained at the "San." She says:

After many years of private duty nursing I have no regrets about becoming a nurse. Nursing is a profession dedicated to helping other human beings to live better. It gives a nurse deep satisfaction to know she has helped someone along the way. Changes have taken place in the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, but that same full co-operation between the students and the faculty exists that was there when I was a student. There is present a spiritual influence which contributes to the building of character and gives a real purpose to life.

Catherine Auther, class of 1945, now night nurse on the sixth floor of the "San," says:

I had always admired nurses and found joy in helping those who needed care, so I decided to be a nurse. Nursing at the San has given me self-confidence and poise. It has helped me to meet people much more easily.

Mabel Faulkner, class of 1932, now maternity supervisor at the "San," says:

I was a schoolteacher, but I had been interested in nursing as well as teaching. I had settled into teaching until I met a Latter Day Saint and became interested in the church. After discussing the church principles with her, I decided I wanted to learn more about it, and since I was also interested in nursing I came to the "San." Three years later, I became an R. N., and a member of the Reorganized Church. Through the years I have grown professionally, and my faith has increased. I have always been happy that I chose to come to Independence.

Miss Faulkner is devotedly rendering valuable service in the maternity department at the "San."

Young women come to the San, graduate, become registered nurses, and then return to their various communities to give service. Christianine Torsch Howery, class of 1947, expressed her feelings about the San in this little poem:

TO THE "SAN"

You're a refuge planned by God on high
To be a friend to the passers-by
From north to south, from east to west,
Your walls give promise of peace and rest.

You're a light on a hill that shall penetrate

And call your students from every state
To live in fellowship and understand
Mortals and God walking hand in hand.
Each year's sunrise over your dewy lawn
Finds new students here and the old ones gone

While the spirit of the "San" goes on and on.

These Things We Would Do

ON JANUARY 10, 1950, the School of Nursing was forty years old. These forty years have brought many changes and much progress. The school has grown in numbers of students, and the physical plant has been expanded. The teaching staff has been increased to meet the demands of the larger school. However, as we enter into 1950 there is much to be done, a good deal of which calls for an increase in the budget. The present budget will enable the school to operate on a limited basis. If we are to improve facilities, to replace worn-out equipment and purchase new equipment, we must have additional funds.

The immediate needs of the school—those not provided for in the present budget—can be met if the 1950 "San Day" merits the assistance and support of all church members. These needs can be listed in a small space, but the purchase of them will require a considerable sum. Some of the needs for the school year of 1950-51 are:

- A hood for the chemistry laboratory—approximate cost $125.00
 - 6 new microscopes, $225.00 each
 - A set of Frohse Anatomy Charts, $135.00
 - A heart model, $35.00
 - 3 movie films on nursing subjects, $50.00 to $100.00 each
 - A new piano for the chapel
 - More library space
- The "San" students are receiving a good nursing education with present facilities. Each year their work compares very favorably with that of students from the other nursing schools in Missouri. Their achievements in the last state examinations, given by the Missouri State Board of Nurse Examiners, were especially good. They were competing with students from twenty-five schools in Missouri, of which two are university schools and five have collegiate affiliations. Our graduates placed second in medical nursing, third in psychiatric nursing, fourth in pediatric nursing, fifth in surgical, obstetrical, and communicable disease nursing. In all of the examinations, they ranked in the upper 25 per cent.

PRESENT SCHOOL FACILITIES are becoming crowded. Ultimately we will need living quarters for student nurses. We need a chapel; we need an auditorium and gymnasium; we need larger laboratories; we need another lecture room; we need a larger library.

We have never had a real school building. The time is fast approaching when serious thought should be given to this need if we, as a church, are going to maintain an accredited school of nursing with which our church girls will be proud to ally themselves.

Those of us who have consecrated our lives to service here in the Church Hospital and School of Nursing appreciate the interest and co-operation of the general church, and pray that our work here will merit the continuation of that interest and support.

The Essence of "San" Day

By A. NEAL DEAVER

THE SANITARIUM, our church hospital, came into being through divine revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 127) in 1909, at which time it was to be established as "a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted." It was originally thought to be a "convalescent" home for our church people, but with no other hospital facilities available in Independence, the public soon began asking for modern hospital care, and the institution fast grew into a general hospital. A successful hospital must have good nurses, and consequently the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing came into being in 1910 for the purpose of educating young women to be competent nurses.

A rather romantic story could be told of the past forty years of interesting experiences in the lives of the four hundred nurses who have been graduated from the "San." Their services have been rich in traditions of the "San," and many are the patients who have taken time to voice their praise of the care they have received at the hands of "San"-trained nurses. (See Chaplain Donald V. Lents' article, Saints' Herald, March 6.) These testimonies of church members and nonmembers give witness to the excellent care these young nurses have given during past years.

Our School of Nursing Has Accomplished a Great Work for the Church During 1949

The largest freshman class ever to enroll for nursing at the Sanitarium (forty-three) came to the "San" last September. This class is outstanding also in the large percentage of Reorganized Latter Day Saint membership represented.

This gave us a total of seventy-three students in the school who helped us care for the following numbers of patients in 1949:

7,310 patients were served by the hospital during the year. Of these, 1,207 were babies born there, 1,165 were children treated at different times; and 2,431 were highway and other accident cases cared for in the hospital's emergency and first-aid department.

From the standpoint of direct good to the church by the activities of the Sanitarium, several interesting observations can be made. In the first place, the hospital chaplain, Elder Donald V. Lents, a full-time church appointee assigned to the hospital, has presented the story of the Restoration to many who otherwise might never have heard of it. His telling of the story has been quietly but effectively done. Through him and others of the priesthood who visit the Sanitarium regularly, approximately 2,100 patients were administered to during the year. Something like 400 patients asked about the church and its teachings; six of these were baptized. Many other contacts favorable to the church were made as a result of these associations.

Help Us Maintain a Good School of Nursing . . .

Those who are closest to the operations of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital and the School of Nursing are convinced that a good school of nursing is a real asset to the church because:

1. The Sanitarium provides tender, loving care for those who need the care of a good hospital.
2. The Hospital and School of Nursing actually serve as an active missionary arm of the church.
3. Church girls who are interested in the profession of nursing should have a good education in a Latter Day Saint environment.
4. The Sanitarium and School of Nursing have a big part to play in the future health program of the church.

What We Did With 1949 "San" Day Funds . . .

We wish to thank all our friends throughout the world for their generous response to our first Sanitarium Day Fund Drive. Out of this fund we have purchased two microscopes and other equipment for the School of Nursing, including one set of Powers Atomic Chemistry Models and nine chemistry film strips.

A new asphalt tile floor has been laid in the dietetic laboratory, and new fluorescent lights have been installed in all the students' rooms in the Nurses' Home.

From this fund $421.86 was spent in 1949 for books and periodicals for the library. Two thousand dollars was set up as a reserve from which to meet unpredictable needs.

A new instructor has been added to the faculty of the School of Nursing, and we are sending other instructors to universities to secure their degrees in nursing education. One attends summer school at Kansas City University; another is attending the February to June semester in the same university; and another attended Columbia University in New York City for a three weeks' course in nursing education.

The Long Period of Service of the Directors of the School Lend Stability to the Institution . . .

Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, R. N., formerly of Philadelphia, has successfully directed the activities of the church hospital for the last twenty-seven years and she, with an active Board of Trustees, has been responsible for its rapid and continuous growth to the present time. Miss Copeland was also Director of the School of Nursing until 1942.

Miss Nelle Morgan, R. N., Director of the School for the past six years, and Miss Vida E. Butterworth, R. N., M. A., Educational Director for the past seventeen years, are largely responsible for the present high standing of the school.

You Can Help Too . . .

Sunday, March 19, is Sanitarium Day. As provided by the last General Conference, this will be the second annual observation throughout all branches for the benefit of our own School of Nursing.

The campaign last year was very successful. A total of $12,430.87 was donated to make possible better teaching facilities in this institution. Many beyond the reach of "San Day" sermons were touched with the needs presented and sent in their own donations of $10.00 to $500.00 direct to the hospital to help with the program of the school.

One sister in Nebraska sent the liberal sum of $500.00. A brother in Independence sent us $100.00. A friend from Florida donated $500.00 for a much-needed piece of equipment. There were numerous gifts of $5.00 to $50.00 from many states to help in this cause. After our drive was almost ended, the medical staff of the hospital donated $1,580.00. This made our 1949 drive a success for sure.

The Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing is deserving of the best you can do for it in the way of financial support. We are depending on you on March 19.

Official

Let's Make it a Singing Conference

My Eyes, O Lord," also by Dr. Cheville, set to the music of number 70 ("Break Thou the Bread of Life").

Many of these new hymn arrangements will be used at the various Conference meetings. The Little Hymnal will contain the music for those for which the new music is unfamiliar. It is hoped that this Conference use will stimulate the use of these hymns throughout the church.

THE INDEPENDENCE MESSIAH CHOIR will sing two numbers from The Messiah for the two Communion services on April 2, opening day of Conference, and will join with singers from the Messiah Choirs of Metropolitan Los Angeles, Des Moines District, Detroit, and Graceland to present the Easter section of The Messiah on Good Friday evening, April 7. The Independence Symphony Orchestra and strings from the Graceland College Orchestra will play for this performance.

The Graceland A Cappella Choir will sing in the balcony for the Communion services and will give a concert on the first Sunday afternoon preceding the preaching service.

The Stone Church Choir will sing for the preaching on the first Sunday evening.

On Tuesday evening in the Auditorium the dress rehearsal for The Messiah is scheduled.

Ample time before preaching services is being provided for congregational singing.

"The Ministry of Music" is the general topic for daily classwork at 8:30 a.m. in the choir room. One class period will be devoted to the purpose of announcing and explaining a new General Church Music Department development of an Affiliated Music Club setup which will be made available to any local branch of the church that desires to have such a music club. The Independence Music Club has given invaluable assistance in working out the details for this new General Church service to branch music.

Another class period will be devoted to methods and materials for church school music from preschool through junior age, three to twelve.

Let each one who attends Conference this year enter wholeheartedly into the musical part of our corporate worship. We can indeed make this a "Singing Conference" if we all worship by singing in the congregations and by participating in the learning of these new hymns.

Religious Award Program for Canadian Girl Guides

THE CANADIAN COUNCIL of the Girl Guides Association in a meeting on January 11 of this year completed plans for and authorized the use of a religious award program for the girls who are members of the Girl Guides organization.

Since 1945 our church has been in regular correspondence with the Girl Guides Association relative to the establishment of a religious award program for Girl Guides. The Association, since that time, has held several executive and committee meetings, progressive steps have been completed, and during the January meeting, final plans were made.

General provisions of the program are similar to those of the "Religion and Life" award program for the Boy Scouts of Canada and the "God and Country" award for the Boy Scouts of the United States. Requirements are to be set up by each denomination in accordance with its own specifications. The respective church is responsible for supervising the work of its own girls.

Our church will use requirements identical with those of the "Light of Life" program now in effect with the Oriole, Girl Scout, Camp Fire, and similar organizations in the United States. However, the Girl Guides award will be called the "Religion and Life" award by all denominations. With our church, six certificate awards will be presented, the sixth completing the requirements for the "Religion and Life" emblem. A minimum of one year's work is required, one month each for the first and second awards, two months each for the third and fourth awards, and three months each for the fifth and sixth awards. A total of 150 hours of service to the church is necessary.

The award will be a circular felt emblem to be worn on the "right breast immediately above center of pocket." Its design will show the words Girl Guides, and the Greek letters Alpha and Omega. Our church first had asked permission to use the "Light of Life" pin as the award for a religious award program with Girl Guides. While this request was not granted, we are very glad that the Canadian girls will be using identical requirements as the girls in the States.

The pastor of the local church will have authority to supervise the work of the girls of his branch, and to certify service hours and other requirements as completed. Enrollment blanks and complete information may be obtained from the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Copies of our requirements and other brief information will be printed in an early issue of the Canadian Guide, the leaders' magazine.

We wish to express appreciation to the Canadian Girl Guides Association for its good work through many committee and executive meetings over a period of years which have resulted in making available this award program.

All pastors who have Girl Guides in their branches, and parents of Girl Guides are urged to investigate the possibilities for religious study, growth, and service in this new "Religion and Life" program for Girl Guides.

Note: Canadian girls who are members of the Oriole program may, as now, continue to receive the "Light of Life" pin of our church upon completing the requirements.

Correction

Sister Della Ingoldsby of Independence sends us a correction for the spelling of a name quoted from the autobiography of J. J. Cornish in the Herald of December 26, 1949, page 7. Brother Cornish wrote (Into the Latter Day Light, page 18), "I was confirmed by Arthur Leverton, Myron Haskins, and (I think) Norman Blakeslee." Sister Ingoldsby informs us that the name was Blakeley.

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Two

ON MONDAY, March 23, 1891, Brethren Haws and Waller, together with a few Hawaiians, had an audience at the palace with Queen Liliuokalani, composer of words and music of "Aloha Oe." During this visit they had an opportunity to present some of the teachings of our church and also to point out the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction.

The first baptisms took place on April 4, when three natives who had been attending the church services for some time were baptized by Elder Haws.

In his report to the General Conference of that year, among other things, Elder Haws had the following to say:

I found Brother G. J. Waller, who has been a helper, in conjunction with Brother and Sister Luther, both spiritually and temporally We have had 20,000 tracts printed: one is on baptism; the other is a compilation of evidence showing the difference between us and the Utah Church. They are printed in the native tongue, for which Brother Waller has paid.

On Sunday, June 7, G. J. Waller was ordained to the office of elder, as recommended by the General Conference, which had been held that year at Kirtland, Ohio. July 5 he was appointed bishop's agent in the Sandwich Islands by E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop. On August 2, by direction of Elder Haws, the members, now numbering twenty, were organized into a branch with Elder Waller as president. The condition of the work at this time was very encouraging.

Elder Haws continued his work in Honolulu under great difficulties until about the middle of December when, owing to the serious condition of his health, he was compelled to leave for home. He sailed for San Francisco on December 17, entrusting the work of the mission to Elder G. J. Waller, who was willing to take charge but felt his inability and realized his need for divine guidance and aid.

In April, 1892, encouragement was given to the Honolulu Branch in a letter received by Brother Waller from President Joseph Smith and his counselor, W. W. Blair. The letter closed with:

The Spirit testifies: Lift up the voice; cry aloud and spare not. Thy thoughts shall be as the strong wind, thy speech as the steady current of the stream. The spirit of carefulness and wisdom shall be with thee in the way, and thy feet shall be led into safe paths. Trust ye in the Lord.

BROTHER WALLER'S FIRST SERMON was preached on an occasion when Brother Haws, after speaking for a few minutes, had to discontinue and leave the meeting. At another time when Brother Waller was preaching, he felt he was not enjoying the Spirit in power as he had expected. He stopped after declaring this to the members and drew their attention to the instruction given in Doctrine and Covenants 42:5. The members were disappointed, for they were pleased with his address. He realized after this that he was expecting too much help from the Lord.

New Missionary Arrives

On September 7, Elder J. C. Clapp of the Seventy, who had been appointed missionary in charge at the General Conference, arrived.

The year 1893 opened with troublous times for Honolulu. For some months past there had prevailed a feeling of dissatisfaction with Queen Liliuokalani on account of the highhanded manner in which she had endeavored to conduct the affairs of the kingdom. During January the most prominent and influential white people of Honolulu were planning to bring about the downfall of the monarchy. This was accomplished that same month. American bluejackets and marines were landed from the "U.S.S. Boston" on Monday evening, January 16, and, through a misunderstanding, occupied the hall used by the Saints for services. This act aroused the feelings of the Hawaiian portion of our congregation, and the bitterness cherished by them against the whites, especially Americans, interfered very much with the work for some time to come.

The Hawaiians were downcast because of the overthrow of the monarchy, and prayers were freely offered up by them for the restoration of the queen. Many members of the branch were, no doubt, annoyed and offended because the presiding elder, Brother Waller, did not pray for her restoration or appoint a day of fasting and prayer for such a purpose. At this time several of the Hawaiians became lukewarm toward the church and later left it.

ON MARCH 6 arrangements were made with Brother J. M. Poepoe for the translation into Hawaiian of the Doctrine and Covenants. Part of the revelations had been translated previously by Brother Poepoe, but to insure their correctness they were retranslated into English and read off to Brother Clapp who compared them with the original English version.

In his report to the April General Conference of 1893, Elder Clapp said:

Perhaps we would have had the Doctrine and Covenants completed by this time had it not been for the revolution that has taken place here. I wrote Brother David Dancer in regard to the printing of the book, and found that we could get the work done here cheaper than there. So Brother Waller made arrangements to have five hundred copies printed and bound. A part of the printing is already done.

Because of the peculiar conditions which prevailed in the city of Honolulu and on the Islands in general, it became more difficult to prosecute the work. Less interest was manifested toward the gospel by the Hawaiians, who still felt angry over the overthrow of the monarchy. The prospects were such as to discourage Elder Clapp, who began to feel that it would be best for him to return to the States. He set forth his views in his report to the General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa, in April, 1894:

I have labored to the best of my ability, but thus far my work has been confined to the city of Honolulu. The revolution that took place directly after my arrival has been a great hindrance to us, as the natives feel that they have suffered a great wrong in the overthrow of their monarchy. The whites are annexationists, being organized into clubs and leagues of different kinds, holding meetings nearly every night. We are standing, as it were, over a smoldering volcano, which may burst forth at any hour. Of course we have no fears for our personal safety while we can see the Stars and Strips floating from the masts of our warships that lie in the harbor, and the brown mouths of the great guns frowning from the vessels' sides. We deplore the need of such protection. We are here to advocate the claims of the Prince of Peace, and to bear his banner.

So far the results of our labors have not been as satisfactory as we could have wished. What we may be able to do when the political difficulties are settled we cannot tell. It is an easy matter to baptize, but to bring them up to a proper spiritual standing is a difficult matter.

Brother Waller is a godly man and in every way qualified for any place that his services are required and is worthy the fullest confidence of the Saints. Notwithstanding his great press of business, he is always at his post, bearing aloft the banner of King Immanuel. He can easily find the way to his pocket when the work of the Lord is in need, and his wise counsels can always be beneficial to anyone associated with him in the ministry.

Brother Waller in Charge

At the General Conference G. J. Waller was appointed in charge of the mission. The departure of Elder Clapp for the States threw the burden of the work of the mission on the shoulders of Brother Waller, who found it difficult to keep it alive, owing to the instability of many of the Hawaiian members who were dissatisfied with the government and bitter against the white race generally. However, there were a few who loved the work and upheld Elder Waller in his efforts to keep it moving. He continued translating the Doctrine and Covenants, which was published in September, 1895.

A GAIN CHURCH SERVICES were disrupted as cholera broke out in Honolulu during the month of August. The following extracts from a letter written by Brother Waller about this time and published in the Saints' Herald (Volume 42, page 685) contain information relative to the work and conditions in Honolulu:

So far this has been a year of trial for Honolulu, and events have interfered with our progress. First we had the revolution early in the year, which upset business and everything else. We were unable to hold services, and the natives remained for some time in a restless condition. Now, we have the cholera to contend with, and, although it has not been epidemic, we have had enough to upset business and to interfere with our church meetings, which were stopped altogether for a time. Now we are allowed one a week, on Sunday mornings. Under these conditions it is impossible to make much headway, but I trust passing through these trials has humbled us and increased our faith in the Lord and his work. I know it has made me more anxious to labor for the spread of the gospel. I hope also that these trials have done something toward preparing the hearts of others here for the reception of the gospel teachings. So far none of our members have been taken with the cholera, though they have been living right in the midst of it.

When prevented from meeting together recently with the members on account of the cholera, I addressed a letter through one of the native papers to the members of my flock, exhorting them to faithfulness and diligence in keeping God's word, and speaking of the opportunity that they now had of letting their light shine by living the lives of Saints of God and by sustaining those in the government who were doing their utmost to stamp out the cholera by improvement of sanitary conditions and other means. I also asked them to devote a certain Thursday to fasting and prayer. In an editorial the following day in a native paper the church received commendation for its course, and the paper mentioned that we were the first and only ones to do it so far.

The Friendly Church - By CLYDE JOHNSON

UNTIL RECENTLY I had always considered our own church people unusually friendly. Now, somehow I feel this is not the case in all of our branches. We tend to make choices in life as a result of comparisons. We seek warm-hearted people for our friends, we choose the professional group that makes us feel at home, and we have reason to believe that many are won to the church because of a general "attitude" of friendliness and sincere interest shown by the people who represent that particular church group. The absence of this important element of our missionary program may lose to the church many potential members.

At various times, different families of our own local branch have made trips to larger branches, anticipating "something superior" to that which could be realized in our own small congregation. Almost invariably those people come back amazed and disappointed at the "coolness" of such branches. Frequent comments are: "Why, not a soul spoke to me other than my own relatives"; "The people didn't seem to care whether or not you spoke"; "The pastor didn't even speak to us"; "We were not introduced in church school class."

When our own people come back with such remarks, what are we to suppose a stranger to the church might think? It may be the answer to that question so often asked, "What happened to the couple who used to come to services?" We should not only strive to interest and stimulate those outside the household of faith but also maintain and strengthen the ties of brotherhood of those who are already members of the church. As indicated in the pamphlet Each One Win One: "Some seem to think that those who have accepted the gospel are already saved, and that any further need for it would apply only to those untouched by the miracle of its power."

OUT OF THE LOVE OF GOD for the souls of men was born the gospel of the kingdom. True missionary zeal is a natural outgrowth of man's passionate concern for the souls of his fellow men—the stranger, the lonely, the poor, the learned, and the unlearned—for all.

In attending a sales meeting of a nationally-known utility company, I noted that three steps in a successful sale were stressed: (1) interest, (2) justification, and (3) action. Much could be said for these steps in the presentation of the gospel message. I am primarily interested in the first step because it is so fundamental in our church work. To be effective it must be flavored with an atmosphere of friendliness. Can we imagine Christ's serving without a sincere interest in the people? Holding a service is not necessarily serving the people. People who are not fully receptive to a message from the pulpit may respond to the personal approach through a firm handshake, a hearty welcome, and concern for their welfare.

We are told in the Book of Mormon that when Enos was converted, his first change was shown by his great concern for his brethren (Enos 1:12). Certainly our old-time Saints did not leave this out of their formula for evangelism. I do not mean to infer that a mere friendly gesture is all that is required; but it must come first. Certainly in our relationship with the people who bear the name of the Savior we expect all the gospel has to offer, not just cold facts, well-planned services, smartly dressed people, and beautiful buildings. Other denominations have this and even more. We must be careful lest we don that "form of godliness" spoken of in the Scriptures.

THE SPIRIT OF PERSONAL INTEREST and friendship expresses itself in many ways. When a minister occupies the pulpit, he is entitled to certain privileges as well as obligations. Surely all of us realize the strength that comes to us by having the visiting minister come into our homes. In a small congregation, especially, this privilege should be accepted by various families of the branch. Any family that does not feel the desire to extend an invitation occasionally to such servants of the Lord somehow has failed to realize an obligation as well as the benefits in greater spiritual maturity that can be realized from such experiences shared with the honorable men of the church.

Some have said that a large branch is the "burial ground for the priesthood." The same could be true for lay members and potential converts to the church. This possibility remains a constant challenge to the church. No congregation should be so large that it cannot adequately serve its people—at the services and in the homes. If proper distribution of responsibilities is made by the pastor, if members of the priesthood co-operate efficiently, if genuine love is in the hearts of those divinely commissioned to serve, then no such accusation need be made in any of our branches.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Please explain I Corinthians 7:14: "For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband; else were your children unclean; but now are they holy." Does this mean the unbelieving will be saved?

Oklahoma Mrs. J. M. A.

ANSWER:

This verse is understood best when the context is taken into consideration. The advice is to believers that are married to unbelievers and is contained in verses 12 to 16. It also must be remembered that Saint Paul was giving his own opinion and was not speaking by divine command (verse 12).

The meaning of sanctification—and that in a loose sense—is dedication. The sanctification of the unbelieving companion by the believing is an outward sanctification, not an inward one. It is not based on the indwelling of the Holy Spirit or on the dedication of the unbeliever to the cause of Christ.

The unbelieving husband, knowing quite well the cause his believing companion had espoused, and knowing what that meant at a time when the Christian cause was suffering from Jewish legalism and Roman imperialism, in adhering to his companion might have been sanctified because outwardly he adhered to his wife's cause. However, that did not mean that he was saved, but there is possibility that he might have been saved if he continued to live with his wife. Paul mentions this in verse 16.

George A. Njeim.

QUESTION:

What do we believe about children who die before reaching the age of accountability—as to their responsibility or opportunity for accepting the gospel after death? Do they have a period of probation in the prison house or elsewhere in which they must be accountable for the teachings of Jesus as do those who grow up to maturity? Should they not have the same opportunity to work out their salvation as others?

Michigan

L. I. T.

ANSWER:

Children are born into the world innocent, and if they die before reaching the age of accountability, they die innocent and are saved, for the Lord has said, "Little children are holy, being sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ." They "are redeemed from the foundation of the world through mine Only Begotten" (See Doctrine and Covenants 90:6; 74:3; 28:13). Being without personal sin and guilt, "little children need no repentance, neither baptism," but are "alive in Christ," and in their innocence are acceptable in the kingdom of God without repentance or correction. The reformatory sufferings of the prison house, which result only from sin, do not apply to them for they have no sin. As to their inherited evil, that is removed in common with that of all men by the atonement of Christ through their death and resurrection.

The gospel is adaptable to the varying needs of human life; innocent infants, who because of early death never have the opportunity of "working out their salvation" as others have, have no need to do so, for they are saved. They never have been outside of Christ—never lost. The only recovery for them is from the physical death which Christ secures to them, "For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost, and to call sinners to repentance; but these little ones have no need of repentance, and I will save them." Why some attain salvation without struggling up from sin we do not know. "All my judgments are not known unto men." But we are assured that God deals equitably and justly with all, "Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." (See Matthew 18:11, I. V.; Doctrine and Covenants 28:8; Revelation 15:3. Read Moroni 8).

Report on "The Messiah" Broadcast

Congratulations to the entire group for an outstanding broadcast performance.

WARREN H. CHELLINE
Port Huron, Michigan

Words cannot express our appreciation of this beautiful and inspiring work. In spite of a previous desire to leave around 11:30, we found ourselves all gathered around the radio and sat through to the conclusion, which was at 1:00 o'clock, then we spent fifteen or twenty minutes discussing it. After that we had a long drive home to Cranston through heavy rain. Not that the three of us are authorities on choral work, but, as you probably know, our chorus has done many fine things and, naturally, a number of us make a pilgrimage to Boston to hear the famous Handel and Haydn Society (at $3.60 each) and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In spite of giving them full credit for a notable job, their interpretations are far from the perfection that was manifested in your rendition. Our director enjoyed the work tremendously, and Mr. Hadley was constantly pointing out the fine points from the broadcast angle, concluding that the engineers who handled the broadcast were masters at their work, transmitting to us every detail just as it was rendered. If you have any literature concerning the chorus or the work, we would appreciate very much receiving it, and again, congratulations on being a part of such a wonderful organization. Truly, it must be inspiring to be a part of work that is for such a noble cause. (From a letter to Herman Chelline).

WALLACE ANDERSON
Providence, Rhode Island

My compliments on another fine presentation of The Messiah . . . my best regards to you, your soloists, and your chorus. May you have many, many more successful experiences. Thanks for a really nice evening.

DEL SEARS
Omaha, Nebraska

It was wonderful, and I enjoyed every minute of it. We heard it through KLZ in Denver. It was transcribed and broadcast over our local station, KVOR, on the following Monday night.

MRS. DARRELL BROWN
Denver, Colorado

Just a note to offer my congratulations on the outstanding performance of The Messiah on nationwide hookup over CBS last night. It was as fine a performance as I have ever heard any place. You are really to be congratulated on this splendid presentation . . .

R. W. SWITZER
Chicago, Illinois

I am listening to the broadcast of your 1949 Messiah and want to let you know what a real pleasure it is to have heard it so beautifully read. Your choice of tempo throughout is most satisfying, alive, and, shall we say, thoroughly "American." The chorus sounds splendid this year, with a more mature soprano quality than I recall in last year's group. . . . The soloists all did their usual creditable job, and, of course, the orchestra was satisfactory. It seems to me the 90-minute radio period is almost an ideal length for radio presentation, and your timing was perfect.

HARDIN VAN DEURSEN
Kansas City, Missouri

I hasten to write my annual fan letter—the only fan letter I write—in appreciation of your performance of The Messiah last night. We particularly enjoyed the work of Josephine Crinklaw Mader. She has a very lovely voice and fine artistic appreciation of what she is doing . . . The other soloists were also very fine, particularly Mr. Macdonald . . . Your complete command of the chorus was something I can witness nowhere else . . . I hope to hear this again and again.

MARVIN D. POWER
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

I just want to take this opportunity to tell you how much we enjoyed your wonderful broadcast of The Messiah. I went upstairs and listened on the radio and it came in perfectly, and I also took the liberty of looking in the ballroom. It was with quite a great deal of enjoyment that I watched this.

C. P. GEBERT
Kansas City, Missouri

Heard The Messiah last night over WMBD, a local station. It was well done. . . . Hope you continue so I can hear it again in 1950.

DR. G. H. EDLER
Peoria, Illinois

Have been listening to your very fine rendition of The Messiah. Congratulations! The soloists were fine. Let the good work go on.

MRS. LAURA M. HOBBIE
Topeka, Kansas

Just a line to say the Messiah Chorus and orchestra were wonderful—the best yet. Every soloist's voice was clear. Never has any music on the air been any better. That was the finest. May God bless you in your work.

J. A. WILLIAMS
Springfield, Illinois

To Director Franklyn S. Weddle, Solists, and Chorus: Thanks for such a fine rendition of the Messiah—reception was excellent here in Berkeley. I enjoyed it very much and extend my sincere wishes to all. Enjoyed the excellent solos—and chorus.

MARION VRANG
Berkeley, California

I would like to express my appreciation for the splendid rendition you gave us last evening of the Messiah. It was a most fitting manner in which to usher in the Christmas season. The soloists, chorus, and orchestra were splendid. Let's have it again next year.

WILLA M. GEIDEL
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

As we sit and listen to the Messiah Choir it sounds great. Brother Tickemyer's voice sounds wonderful, and the Philharmonic Orchestra is just fine. All the soloists are grand. The program is coming in clearly.

J. A. WILLIAMS
Springfield, Illinois

Just listened to the Messiah and it was really inspiring. The interpretation was impressive and the precision good. Your soloists always seem to be the best, and in the complicated choral parts, the chorus seemed so sure. The Philharmonic members must be a joy to conduct. It sounds as if they really know the music and can play it.

DORIS GRAY
Davenport, Iowa

We listened to the broadcast again this year and enjoyed every note of it.

FERNE LIPP
Denver, Colorado

Must write to let you know how much I enjoyed the Messiah. . . . It was beautiful. Hope I can hear it again next year.

MRS. THELMA S. GIBSON
Richmond, California

When I turned to your station (KFAB, Omaha) this last Sunday, December 18, to hear the symphony, I was agreeably surprised to learn of your broadcast of the Messiah by that choir from Independence, Missouri. That was by far the best broadcast I have heard in many a year, and I commend you. Is there any information available about this choir such as a Sunday supplement of your newspaper? No one out here has heard of it. Have you by any chance, recorded that magnificent music? Thank you for a truly great one and a half hour of music.

FERN C. AAGAARD
Helena, Montana

Your presentation of the Messiah last night was very excellent—thank you for this great contribution to our happiness.

L. R. LYNCH
Tulsa, Oklahoma

Thought perhaps you would be interested to know the Messiah was not carried by any local station, but came in good on our radio over Stations WADC and WCAU.

R. WALLACE
Cleveland, Ohio

Last night at 10:30 we listened to your Messiah. We thank you for it. The singing and music uplifted our spiritual being. It is a great service.

AUSTIN E. GRIFFITHS
Seattle, Washington

I haven't words adequate to express my appreciation of the Messiah rendered Sunday night. It was soul-lifting.

MRS. A. E. GOODELL
Kansas City, Missouri

We listened to the Messiah last night and hasten to send a line of congratulations to you. It was excellent. We had twenty people around our fire, and everyone of them enjoyed it very much! The orchestra seemed outstanding to us. We especially enjoyed the bass solo with the trumpet—it was thrilling. I believe "Behold the Lamb" was the favorite chorus number here, though it was hard to choose one.

FAE GARDNER
Omaha, Nebraska

We surely enjoyed the Messiah. It was all superior.

CHARLES and MABEL HYDE
Lamoni, Iowa

Thank you for a superb performance of the Messiah. The soloists were in fine voice. The chorus work was wonderfully directed and performed. I only wish we could have such performances oftener.

MRS. M. BLACKFORD
Lewistown, Montana

The performance was beautiful, and I particularly enjoyed the chorus "His Yoke Is Easy, and His Burden Light." I have come to look forward to this broadcast each year and only wish that there were more opportunities to hear works of this type performed in the same manner. My congratulations on a beautifully executed performance.

(To be Continued.)

The Nestling - Part 2

By WINIFRED MILNER

TERRY STOOD WITH SCOTTY under a maple tree that was brilliantly decked in autumn colors and pushed his feet into bright leaves that had fallen on the grass. He measured the distance between earth and sky with his eyes and wondered if an airplane could go as high as the stars. He wished he could leave Grandaut's. He didn't like it here. He wouldn't even like it if she gave him the whole yard and added a swing. Where would he and Scotty live if Mommy didn't come back? Mrs. O'Grady didn't want them. Bill didn't want them, and he hated Daddy more than he hated Grandaut.

A grasshopper came hopping through the grass. Terry made a quick motion with his hand and caught it by the leg. He pushed it down into his hand, feeling it move and struggle. He lifted his fingers a little and looked at the grasshopper's big eyes. "Who do you live with, grasshopper—grasshopper?"

A lady was coming in at the back gate. Terry stood up with the grasshopper buried in his tightly closed fist.

"Is Miss Billingsley home, Sonny?" the lady asked him.

"Yes."

Terry followed her toward the porch. He saw Grandaut open the door and let her in. He sat down on the porch steps with Scotty and peeked at the grasshopper. He listened to the women talk, not paying much attention to them until he heard Grandaut mention his mother's name.

"You've heard Francine sing, Mrs. Foster. How did you like her voice?"

"Very good. Beautiful coloratura voice. Much too good for the Flor del Plaza Inn. Hadn't she been trained for opera? I thought you told me—"

"She was going to be a Metropolitan star!" Matty Billingsley laughed awkwardly. "Her friends thought she would make opera. You know yourself how pretty Francine was, and what a nice personality she had. Francine was good, but I never did say she would succeed."

"But why? She worked hard."

"Did you ever try to break into the arts? Music, singing, painting—it's all the same. You have to be good, and then you wait—and hope—and work—and hunt for the right people to help you. Many artists break their hearts struggling for success. We can't blame Francine—"

"She didn't have to sing in a cheap place like the Flor del Plaza," Mrs. Foster said.

"How many singing jobs are there? Jim supported Terry, but she had to support herself and pay the rent."

"She could have stayed with Jim."

"Maybe. It was Jim who got the divorce, not Francine. And it's Jim who is getting married to some other woman." Matty Billingsley came to the door and looked out at Terry. "Oh, there you are. I just wanted to see where you were and what you were doing." She went back inside and closed the door again. "One thing I can tell you about Francine. She may have left Jim because she wanted to sing and he didn't want her to; but she didn't go crying back when the singing didn't go the way she'd planned. She left him on his farm in Kansas where he probably thinks the Flor del Plaza is something like grand opera." There was a pause, and then she said, "Her job ended at midnight last night. The divorce became final yesterday, and I'm sure she was still in love with Jim. She was sick—"

"Francine wouldn't—?"

"The officers say she was driving so fast when she hit the steel and concrete wall that death was instant. It wasn't like Francine to drive fast at any time."

TERRY REACHED into his hand and pinched off the head of the grasshopper. The quivering was gone out of it now. It lay still. "You are dead, old grasshopper." He tried to make it move. He shook it and breathed on it. He turned it over and over, then he ran and buried it under the peony bush. He was trembling and crying softly to himself.

The earth under the peony bush was soft and moist, and digging in the ground felt good to his hands. The sun was warm on his back. He began to make a cellar. Then he found some sticks and small stones and began to make a city. He worked hard. He was making heaven, Mommy's city on Mrs. O'Grady's star. He didn't know when Mrs. Foster went home.

Grandaut called him in to eat lunch, but he couldn't eat. Every bite he took stuck in his throat the way it had done at breakfast. Grandaut made him take a nap, saying it would be good for him, and he knew she wanted him out of her way. It was nearly night when he and Scotty went out to the peony bush again, and he began working on his city. He had just got going good when Grand-aut came out and said, "Terry, your daddy called from LaGuardia field. You'll see him in a little while. Come, you must bathe and change your clothes."

Terry was making a dirt fence around Mommy's house. He went on working. When he patted the dirt, some of the fence fell down.

"Come, Terry."

Terry didn't move. He didn't want to see Daddy. He wanted him to go back to Kansas. Then Terry felt himself being lifted off the ground. He didn't think Grandaut could carry him and walk without her cane, but he discovered that she was strong enough to drag him, and that she was rough. When he struggled, she hurt him. The next thing he knew he was in the bathroom, and she had him in the tub scrubbing him with a washrag. He fought against her while she washed his hair and ears, feeling a sort of pleasure in the way it disturbed her. Once, when the bath was over, she popped his bottom hard because he wouldn't stand still while she put on his clothes. He remembered the whipping she had given him with her cane and decided it was easier to do what she said than to struggle against her. The doorbell rang while she was combing his hair, but she waited to finish him before she went to open the door.

HE HEARD GRANDAUT'S VOICE sounding glad the way Mommy's did when he had done something particularly nice to please her. He shut the bathroom door and stood against it, but even with the door closed he could hear the sound of voices.

They talked a long time, and he pretended it was Mommy and that she had brought an airplane to take them to Mrs. O'Grady's star. He put the lid down on the toilet seat and climbed up, then with his tongue against his teeth, he made the sound of a motor. He and Mommy had visited stars and the sun and moon when Grandaut finally opened the bathroom door.

"Terry, come to see your daddy."

"No."

"I've had enough nonsense. Come, or I'll lock the bathroom door and keep you here as many days as you have fingers."

"I don't like him."

"Of course you like him."

He moved the fingers of his right hand and then his left, trying to think what it would be like shut up in a room for so long. She would do it. He remembered her roughness when she had dragged him from the yard. He stood up and followed her, shuffling his feet behind her down the hall. Once inside the living room, he stopped and stood with his back against the wall, eyeing the man who didn't like Mommy.

The man was sitting in Grand aunt's big green chair with a magazine held in front of his face, and he was wiping tears from his eyes with a clean, white handkerchief. Terry had the feeling that he was crying about Mommy—only why should he cry about her when he didn't like her?

When Grand aunt came into the room, he stood up and smiled and tried to act as if he hadn't been crying. He was taller than Bill. His dark hair looked as if Grand aunt had just combed it, his shoes seemed new, and his suit was pressed.

Grand aunt said, "This is Terry."

"Hello," said the man.

Terry scowled.

Grand aunt said, "I'll leave you two to get acquainted while I put dinner on the table. Everything is about ready. I didn't know it was so late."

WHEN SHE HAD GONE, Daddy said, "You are bigger than I thought you would be. Next year you'll go to school."

Terry took a couple of steps backward and leaned against the wall. He stretched himself up as tall as he could, then he hunched down and sat on his feet, remembering that Mommy didn't like this man.

Daddy grinned and sat down in the green chair. "You are a fine boy," he said and picked up the magazine. "I hope we will be good friends."

Terry put a hand on each shoe and rocked back and forth. He and Daddy were not going to be friends. He would be so naughty that Daddy would go away and hate him. He went over and climbed on the davenport and began jumping up and down.

Daddy looked at him without frowning. "Does Grand aunt let you do that?"

Terry went on jumping, but Daddy didn't look at him again. He only read the magazine.

Terry stopped jumping and sat down on the davenport. He was going to have to think of something else, something worse.

Grand aunt came and called them to dinner. "You two aren't making much noise."

Daddy smiled broadly. "We're sort of strangers. It takes a while to get acquainted."

They followed her into the dining room. Terry hadn't eaten for two meals, and now the smell of food and the sight of a good dinner made him suddenly hungry. They sat down, and he reached out his hand to help himself.

"Wait for grace, and then I'll help you," Grand aunt said. "Bow your head the way you did for breakfast and lunch." She turned to daddy. "I don't believe the child knows how to pray, Jim. Francine was so busy—"

"I do, too." Terry felt that Grand aunt's tone was saying things about Mommy. He had never said grace, he didn't know any words, but he had to show Grand aunt that he could pray. His face grew hot, his knees shook together, but he jerked his head down, and the words came out in a sudden rush a little louder than he had meant them to be. "Oh, Lord, what a world, what a world. Amen." In triumph then he lifted his head. Grand aunt was smiling into her napkin. Daddy's napkin rolled off his lap, and he stooped to pick it up, then he was looking at Terry with the kind of look Mommy had when he had done something extra fine.

TERRY LOOKED AWAY. He couldn't be friends with Daddy. Grand aunt filled his plate, and Terry began eating very fast.

Grand aunt said to Daddy, "Tell me about your farm, Jim. Will Terry have a nice time there?"

"I'll say he will," Daddy said, smiling at Terry. "He's going to own a mamma pig with baby pigs, a pony, and two calves. He'll have a swimming pond and a place to fish, and I'm going to teach him how to row a boat."

Terry's face was growing hot. He wished he could have the pony and calves and pigs. He had never seen a swimming pond or rowed a boat, but he wasn't going.

"I need a boy to help me make garden and plant fields and hoe."

"I have to stay with Mommy," Terry said.

"My sister Peg and her husband Joe live on the farm, too, and Peg said if I brought you back with me, Terry, she would make you some gingerbread boys with raisin eyes, and take you nutting in the woods, and show you how to roast corn and potatoes on an outdoor fire. She doesn't have any little boys and girls of her own."

Terry choked on a mouthful of meat. "I'm going to live with Mommy," he said when he could stop coughing. He wasn't going, but he had to stop looking at Daddy because he liked the way he smiled and the kindness in his eyes, and the gentle tones in his voice.

"I think you should take him to the mortuary, Jim. It's nonsense the way he refuses to accept the fact that she is dead."

TERRY PICKED UP HIS MILK, intending to drink it, but Grand aunt was looking at Daddy, and Daddy was looking at him hard. The blouse Terry had on was open at the neck. While Daddy was looking, Terry pulled the neck of his blouse and undershirt away from his body and dumped the milk. He could feel it flow cold against his stomach and roll down to wet his legs. The glass had been full and now it was empty. It was a bad thing he had done, wasting a glass of milk and spoiling his clothes. It was worse than jumping on the davenport with his shoes on. He waited, his eyes challenging Daddy's across the table. A grin spread over Daddy's face. He winked at Terry and hid his face in his napkin for a moment before he went on talking to Grand aunt as if nothing had happened.

Terry picked up his fork and began eating his meat. Daddy hadn't scolded him or told on him. Mommy would have spanked him for doing such a bad thing.

When Grand aunt looked at Terry again, she noticed that his milk was gone. "Why, Terry, what a nice boy to drink all your milk. Here, I'll give you some more." She filled his glass again.

Terry and Daddy exchanged glances. Daddy chuckled and Terry scowled. He picked up the filled glass. Two glasses was half as much milk as Mommy bought in a day. Milk cost lots of money. Mommy said it was not a thing to waste. When Grand aunt went to the kitchen to carry out the plates, Terry poured the second glass of milk down his neck.

"Do you like to be wet?" Daddy's voice was very kind.

Grand aunt was coming in from the kitchen carrying an apple pie. "Who is wet?" Then she looked and saw the place under the chair where Terry's milk had run through his clothes onto the floor. "Why, Terry—"

Terry got up from his chair and ran into the bedroom where he had napped that afternoon. He flung himself down on the floor because he couldn't lie on the bed in wet clothes. His shoulders heaved, but he kept the sound of his sobbing low in his throat. He liked Daddy—he did—he did. It was a bad thing liking someone Mommy didn't like. His mouth made a kind of chant over the sickness that lumped in his throat. "I—want Mommy. I—want—Mommy."

A SHADOW CROSSED his doorway. It was Daddy coming into the room. Terry turned his face toward the wall. "I—want—Mommy."

"So do I, Son." The kindness Terry liked was in his voice.

Terry sat up and faced him. "You don't even like her."

"Of course I do."

"She doesn't like you."

Daddy squatted on the floor beside him. "You are only a little boy, but maybe you are old enough to understand some things. I am sure your mother liked me very much." He pulled a chair around and sat where he could look down at Terry. "Did she ever tell you how we became friends?"

"Maybe," Terry said, "but I don't think so."

"It happened during the war. A German shot me, and Uncle Sam sent me back to the United States. I was in a hospital at Camp Robbins."

"Did you kill the German?"

"That is another story. This one is about your mother. She came to the hospital to sing for the soldiers. She was beautiful, and she had a beautiful voice."

Sure. Terry knew that. She was prettier than anybody, and she had the best voice in the world.

"I followed her from ward to ward trying to find out her name and where she lived. Now and then a nurse would say to me, 'You ought to be in bed, Jim Newman. You shouldn't be up,' but I couldn't go to bed until your mother gave me permission to see her again."

"And then you got married." Terry came and stood beside his chair.

"I loved her so much that I didn't even ask her if she would like living on a farm. You see, Terry, I had been trained to be a farmer—farming was all I knew. But your mother was a lady with a beautiful singing voice."

TERRY LEANED HIS HEAD against Daddy's sleeve, and Daddy stroked his hair with his other hand. "At first she seemed to like Kansas. She taught singing in the village and made enough money to go to Kansas City every week for a voice lesson under a fine teacher. You were born, and we were a happy family."

"Did you like me?"

"We loved you very much. When you were a year old, your mother did some singing with a small opera company. She appeared as Marguerite in Faust, Papagena in the Magic Flute, and Mimi in La Boheme. Someday you will hear these operas I hope. Her teacher and the critics thought she should go to New York to study. Your mother wanted me to sell the farm and go with her."

"So you sold it."

"No, I was selfish and kept it. We weren't happy that year because I was trying to make her into a farmer's wife. I didn't realize how much she wanted to be a singer. One evening when I came in from the fields, you and she had gone to New York City."

"You mean we ran away?"

"Not exactly. But you didn't come back to Kansas to live with me anymore. She wanted New York City, and I wanted the farm. I went once to see if she wanted to live on the farm with me, but she didn't. After that all we did was quarrel about it."

Terry leaned against Daddy's knee, and Daddy's arm snuggled him. Daddy seemed to be talking more to himself than to Terry now, and Terry didn't understand all he said.

"Sometimes two people can love each other very much, and hurt each other by being proud and stubborn and unfair. In our letters we wrote back and forth, she pretended she was making a big success, and now Grandaunt tells me about her disappointments. I pretended I could get along without her because I thought she didn't want me. I even pretended there was another woman when I learned she was going to marry Bill. How could two people be so blind!"

TERRY STOOD VERY STILL, leaning against Daddy's coat. The roughness felt good, the cleanness, the smell that was Daddy—different smell than Mommy, but he liked it. He was thinking so hard that a frown appeared between his eyes. He and Mommy had run away from Daddy. They had run away to New York City, and they had never gone back. Now Mommy had run away to Mrs. O'Grady's star.

"Daddy," he said, "could you find Mommy for me?"

"How, son?"

"Mrs. O'Grady says she has gone to live on a star."

"I'm afraid I wouldn't know about that."

"Could you tell which star is hers?"

Daddy shook his head. "No, I'm afraid I don't know much about stars and heaven and death. Grandaunt would be a better one to tell you."

"No." Terry took Daddy by the hand. "Come outside with me."

They walked hand in hand out into the night. The moon was full, and the stars cast bright shadows on the house and trees and grass. Terry's voice sounded a little awed by the world's bigness. "Which star would you say is hers?"

"I'm not sure she is on a star, but if she is, it would be the brightest most shining star we can see. You point it out, Son. I'm sure it will be the right one."

Terry searched the heavens. There was a star by the moon that winked and blinked and hurt his eyes with its brightness. He lifted his arm, pointing it out. Then, pulling himself up as tall as he could and holding the star's radiance with his eyes, he said solemnly, "Mommy, I'm going to stay with Daddy until you come for me. We'll be waiting for you in Kansas. You know which farm it is. Daddy and I love you very much."

He looked at Daddy. Daddy was gazing at the star, and his face looked as if he had found Mommy, too.

"Goodnight, Mommy," Terry whispered.

And Daddy repeated after him in a tone that made Terry kiss his hand, "Goodnight, Francine."

ENGLAND

Each year the Metals Division of the Imperial Chemical Industries of Birmingham holds public speaking competitions for employees. In 1949 Elder Madoc Morgan was judged a good second. This year he was awarded first place and presented with a silver cup.

This news was received in a letter sent to the First Presidency by Frank A. Fry. Brother Fry writes, "We congratulate Brother Madoc on his success and pray that his ministry of preaching and Scripture reading will further enrich the lives of his hearers."

ORGAN REPAIRED

The organ in the Stone Church is being cleaned, adjusted, and revoiced by W. A. Brummer. This work will be completed, and the organ will be ready for use at General Conference time.

CONFERENCE PREPARATION

Registration for General Conference will begin at 1 p.m., on April 1, at the Auditorium.

A new telephone switchboard with additional trunk lines and several pay phones will be installed to accommodate those attending conference.

The ceiling and supporting columns of the lower auditorium are being painted. The loud speaker system is being made ready for the Conference.

The entrances to the offices of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric are being improved with additional plaster work and the laying of new carpets.

Buildings other than the Auditorium that will be used to accommodate the Conference visitors will be the Stone Church, South Chrysler Church, West College Street Church, Englewood Church, Kansas Street Church, Bartholomew Hall, and the Memorial Hall.

Briefs

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS.—On January 24 a special service of musical selections was held by candlelight. The histories of five hymns and their authors were given.

While the hymn, "Met in Thy Sacred Name," was played on the organ by Sister Perry Tomlinson, candles were lighted by Donald Vredenberg; then the electric lights were turned off. Prayer was offered by one of the former pastors, Elder Frank Freeze of Kansas City, Kansas.

The history of the first hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," and the writer, W. W. Phelps, was given by Sister Linley Dorsey after which Sister Elsa Cotter sang it.

The history of the late President Frederick M. Smith and the hymn, "Come, Oh, Come, Sweet Comforter," was given by Pastor Clyde Johnson and sung as a duet by Sister Evelyn McIntyre and Brother Ernest Roberson of Independence, Missouri.

The hymn, "Beauty of Hill and of Dale," written by David Smith, was given by Brother Lloyd Seibert, a former pastor, and sung as a duet by Brother and Sister Lloyd Seibert of Liberty, Missouri.

The history of Brother Joseph Luff and "Admonition" was given by Brother Perry Tomlinson and sung by Sister Frank Freeze.

Last and seemingly the most beloved, "The Old, Old Path," written by Sister Vida Smith. A brief history of her life and how she came to write this hymn was given by Sister Meritt Gardner who was permitted to attend Graceland while Sister Smith was Dean of Women there. This hymn was sung by Sister Norma Stickney and Evelyn McIntyre.

"Consecration" was sung by the congregation. Closing prayer was by Elder Lloyd Seibert. The spiritual experience of each member and guest seemed unmeasurable. Learning the true history of these hymns and something of the background of the writer makes us grateful to God for the talents he has given.

After the benediction a social hour was held in honor of Mr. and Sister Scott Stickney of Joseph, Oregon, formerly of Leavenworth, Kansas.—Reported by FLOSSIE TOMLINSON.

ESCONDIDO, CALIFORNIA.—In a special service, held Sunday night, February 19, in San Diego, Rodney Johnson, of San Diego was ordained to the office of deacon, Newell Martin of Escondido to the office of teacher, and Benjamin Sanders to the office of elder. Elders Wilbur Gillen, George Johnson, and Robert Hada were the spokesmen.

After this service, Alfred Richard Page, Anita Marie Page, Anita Margaret Page, and Dian Rochell Martin were baptized by Elder Benjamin Sanders.

Confirmation services were held in Escondido on the following Wednesday evening by Elders Peter S. Whalley, Robert Hada, and Benjamin Sanders.—Reported by BENJAMIN SANDERS.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—Apostle Percy E. Farrow visited the Pittsburgh Branch and preached February 6. The service was well attended both by members and non-members.—Reported by GLADYS L. OMOHUNDRO.

WINFIELD, KANSAS.—Recently the Winfield and Arkansas City, Kansas, Branches were amalgamated. With the consent of both the Kansas district president and apostle in charge, the amalgamation was made in hopes that the work of the church would be advanced in the area. Since there was a suitable church building already located in Winfield, the Saints from Arkansas City and surrounding area are now worshipping there.

Elder John Hufford, Winfield Branch president for the past eight years, has recently been transferred by his company to Eureka, Kansas. Elder C. S. Gose, Arkansas City Branch president for the past five years, has been appointed president of the Winfield Branch.

The amalgamation of these two branches has resulted in a membership enrollment of fifty-five for the Winfield Branch.

On December 8, a large group of women from various places in the Kansas District and parts of Oklahoma, met in the banquet room of an Arkansas City, Kansas, cafe. High lights of the day's activities included a noon luncheon; a special program of numbers from each women's department represented; resumes by departmental leaders pertaining to the goals and objectives of their respective departments, past and future; the value of yearbooks, their content, etc.; and various other subjects equally important to the women's work. Mrs. D. S. Gose is district women's leader.—Reported by C. S. GOSE.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.—Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith was the speaker November 27 and December 4. He was in Pittsburg visiting his son Dr. and Mrs. R. G. Smith.

Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, was the speaker December 18. Elder A. Orlin Crownover, Independence, Missouri, was the speaker at 11 o'clock on Christmas day. Elder J. Arthur Davis, also of Independence, was guest speaker Sunday evening, February 12.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Summers held open house December 16, their tenth wedding anniversary.

In January the Two-by-Twos, a young people's organization, presented a play, "Solid Rock," taken from the book by Gladys Mae Walter. It was arranged in play form by Maurine Crownover. Eldon Hart directed the play. Shirley Colyer furnished piano music between acts. A capacity audience was present.

Don Guinee and family have moved to Moline, Kansas, where he is teaching music in the schools.

A Graceland graduate, Dale Swall, a music major, has enrolled at the city college and is already active in Pittsburg Branch.

Sister J. D. Moorehouse died on February 8. She had been partly paralyzed and had been unable to speak for twelve years. Pastor T. W. Bath was in charge of the funeral, February 10.

Mrs. T. W. Bath was hostess to the combined women's groups of the church at her home, February 2. Miss Cecil Scott, a young colored woman, made a talk concerning the school for colored women which she recently attended at Nashville, Tennessee.—Reported by ESTHER HELLER.

SOUTHWEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The Southwest District Conference was held at the First San Antonio Branch on February 3, 4, and 5. The conference was opened with a "kick-off" program sponsored by the young women's group.

On February 4 prayer service and general class were held in the morning. Lunch was served in the Educational Building at noon with a business meeting following. Supper was served. A song service was held before the evening service when Apostle W. W. Smith was the speaker.

On February 5 a prayer and Communion service followed the evening service when Elder Z. Z. Renfroe was the speaker. Dinner was served in the Educational Building after which the conference was dismissed.—Reported by MARGARET GALBRAITH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—At the annual business meeting of First Branch held on September 7, these officers were elected: J. L. Berry, pastor; F. E. Jett and F. P. Hall associates; Mrs. A. F. Holder, secretary; F. P. Hall, treasurer; Mrs. F. P. Hall, adult supervisor; Floyd Hubble, church school director; Janet Hall, children's supervisor; Mrs. Newt Sheppard, women's leader; A. M. Gatrost, young people's supervisor; and Emma Jackson, music director.

Speakers for the month were: H. E. Winegar, F. E. Jett, J. L. Berry, and G. F. Galbraith. Francis Holmes was the out-of-town speaker.

Margaret Smith of Pearsall was baptized on Decision Day by Elder F. P. Hall and confirmed by Elders H. E. Winegar and J. L. Berry.

Brother Ray Whiting held a week's meetings in December.

Elder Z. Z. Renfroe held a two weeks' missionary series in January, at this time Sister Audrey Hegwood was baptized.—Reported by MARGARET GALBRAITH.

ATTLEBORO, MASSACHUSETTS.—On November 20, Sylvia Power, Jacqueline Mossberg, Mrs. Helen MacDonald, Eugene Barton, and Roger Barney were baptized. February 12 Cynthia Cash, Sandra MacDonald, Irene Ploettner, and Mrs. Celia Mossberg were baptized.

The branch decided at the semi-annual business meeting, December 28, to try to add $5,000 to the building fund by June, 1951.

A special emphasis was made during the month of January on "Keep the Financial Law," climaxing in an "Inventory and Financial Statement Filing Day." This was held January 22, at which Bishop D. O. Chesworth was the speaker.

The Zion's League, in its project of improving the backyard of the church, have succeeded in erecting a chain-link fence, and have the yard filled in. All the organizations of the branch have contributed toward the expense of this. These include the Laurel Club, the Loyettes, the Mary E. Rogers class, and the Equi Club.

The branch observed its 46th anniversary on February 11 with its annual roll call supper. Deacon Roy M. Churchill was general chairman. Miss Florence Siddall was supper chairman. District President Almer Sheehy and Mrs. Sheehy were special guests.

The pulpit has been occupied by the pastor, Elder Ralph Power, District President Almer Sheehy, Bishop Donald O. Chesworth, Priest Harold Cash, Jr., Priest Herbert Moore, Jr., Teacher Frederick S. Moore, and Deacon Harold Cash, Sr.—Reported by HERBERT A. MOORE, Jr.

YAKIMA, WASHINGTON.—A special dinner was held at the home of Dr. Claire Van Eaton for Shirley, Sam, and Ronnie Evans. They are leaving soon for Davenport, Iowa, where Sam will enter the Palmer School of Chiropractic.

On November 13 Jean Whitney, George Whitney, and Glen Banks were baptized. Confirmation followed the baptismal services.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Terry, Frederick, and Gwendolyn, children of Mr. and Mrs. Lemon (nee Ella Cole) were blessed January 15 by Elders B. H. Hewitt and James Wilson.

Sister Edith Nicol has been appointed supervisor of the friendly visitors of the women's department.—Taken from the Toronto News.

Why Study?

By GLADYS OMOHUNDRO

*The more you know, the more you forget,
The more you forget, the less you know,
The less you know, the less you forget,
The less you forget, the more you know,
So why study?*

SUCH IS THE lazy person's excuse for getting out of work, but it does present a good question . . . why study? If you ask a high school or college student why he studies, he will probably say "to get a good grade, of course." But what about the rest of us? In his second letter to Timothy, Paul said, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." That certainly applies to everyone. If you want a good grade from the Master Teacher on the Great Examination Day, you'd better start studying now instead of cramming at the last minute. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.

As young people we should be especially interested in studying our church. It won't be long until a great deal of the responsibility of church work will be up to us. However, preparing ourselves for future church responsibilities isn't the only reason we should study. Have you ever had an opportunity to talk to a friend about the church and have him ask you some questions you couldn't answer? Embarrassing, isn't it? And think how your friend feels when you can't explain your own church to him. We should be able to explain these things, not just because it is our duty, but because we have an assurance within ourselves that this is the true church of Jesus Christ and because we want to share our conviction with others. Truly the church does offer us something wonderful . . . more light and truth, more happiness, a greater purpose in life than we can find anywhere else in the world. Just think how comparatively few young people have had the opportunities we've had of hearing the fullness of the gospel and of helping to establish the kingdom of God here on the earth.

As I go to work in the morning, I often think there are only about forty chances out of one and one-half million that I will even see another Latter Day Saint during the day, which means that nearly every person I meet is a prospective convert. If I am going to do something about evangelizing the world and establishing Zion, I have a pretty big job on hand, haven't I?

Here Is the Writer

Gladys Omohundro is a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. She is a graduate of Avonworth High School and the secretarial division of the Pittsburgh Institute of Aeronautics. At present she is employed as secretary to the purchasing agent of a well-known Pittsburgh firm. The greatest part of her leisure time is spent studying the organ and keeping in touch with the young people who are away at college. A few years ago she came in contact with the church and was baptized in June, 1949. Recently she was elected secretary of the church school and Pittsburgh Branch reporter for the "Herald."

All of us have a tremendous task, and we'd better start thinking how to budget our time for study. First of all, we should select a definite time of day. This, of course, will depend on each individual's daily itinerary. However, experts have advised that early in the morning (after a good night's rest) one's body and mind are refreshed and will be more receptive to study. Then too, early morning study leaves the rest of the day for reflecting on the things one has read. For the person who gets out "on the wrong side of bed" this would present an ideal time to study and, better yet, to change his ways. If morning study doesn't fit into the schedule, any time of day will do if one observes it regularly in a quiet atmosphere where his thoughts won't be interrupted.

At this point I might suggest that we don't confine ourselves to individual study. Group study has its good points too. A study course in the church school or Zion's League can be most helpful. In this way everyone present can add something to the discussion and each can benefit from the other's experiences. In our branch we have a study session every Sunday evening, everyone in the group taking turn in leading the discussion. The lessons are usually rather long and involved, so questions are assigned to different people who look up references pertaining to the questions. In this way we exchange our ideas and accomplish more than we would by studying the book individually. Occasionally we get involved in some heated discussions and stray away from the point. It is up to the discussion leader to bring us back to the subject. There are two definite regulations for this class—to start on time and finish on time. This plan has met with enthusiasm and success in our branch—maybe you would like to try it too.

WHAT SHALL WE STUDY? I might just say, "The Three Standard Books," and let it go at that. Of course, it is very important that we study them, but they aren't enough. The Herald Publishing House offers a wonderful selection of good books. It is remarkable how many people have devoted their lives and talents to writing books so that the understanding of others might be enriched. All we have to do to profit by this research is to read. The church publishes the Herald every week and

Daily Bread every month. These publications should be "musts" on your reading list. There are other recommendations in the Herald for periodical reading. Other church books make good reading, too. You might check with your "book steward" to see what would interest you the most. There are also excellent books by writers who do not belong to our church, such as E. Stanley Jones and Sholem Asch. The Herald Publishing House carries quite a number of these books.

If we expect to do a good job in winning our friends, we must have a sympathetic and thorough understanding of how they feel about religion. If we are able to talk about books and authors from denominations outside our own, our "prospects" will probably feel more at home. Many nonmember authors may have ideas that conflict with the teachings of the church, but we must remember to take them for what they are worth to us. Prove all things . . . hold fast that which is good.

Church conferences and reunions also present opportunities for study. There you may associate with missionaries, apostles, patriarchs, and others who have specialized in various fields of religion. Naturally you can't remember everything you hear, so it will be well worth your while to take notes that you can later put in a permanent notebook. You will be surprised how often you will want to refer to them.

WE HAVE DISCUSSED several whys, whens, and ways of study. But unless we consider one more aspect, our study will count for little.

Humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks. Cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day and evening . . . But this is not all; ye must pour out your souls in your closets, and in your secret places . . . And when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare and also for the welfare of those who are around you.—Alma 16: 219-222.

The Spirit of Truth

By ROLAND C. LAMBKIN

Ye were also in the beginning with the Father, that which is spirit, even the spirit of truth; and truth is a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were and as they are to come.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

MY FRIEND Clarence told me about an old man of his acquaintance. "The old man has just bought a radio—his first one. He believes the radio is here to stay," laughed Clarence. The incident and Clarence's remark are a significant comment on the American attitude toward the truth. Many, many people live in the world today who are unwilling to accept things that have come to stay, but in America such a person is an oddity. A characteristic of Americans is their acceptance of things not only as they are and were, but as they are to come.

The Savior deems truth to be a knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to be. This is America's creed too. Your neighbor's boisterous boy (or your own) is one of the best-informed individuals on earth as to what is to be. Daily we are taught in school, by newspaper, by radio. We, by American heritage, accept as fact an untried future. If truth is a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come, and whatsoever is more or less than this is the spirit of that wicked one, surely the spirit of truth pervades our continent.

SOME TRUTHS as important to the future of America as any yet discovered lie with Latter Day Saints, unadvertized, unproved to truth-loving people. This is to our deep shame. It should be the burden of our hearts today. People commissioned of God, as is this nation, should know about it. It is their right, with their characteristic love of truth, to have the truth.

How then shall we make known this truth? Does a scientist with a new truth go about the country pleading, "Believe my thesis! Believe me! It's true!" Does the designer with a new plane go about the country with a blueprint pleading, "Believe me, it will fly"? No, the scientist with a new theory marshals fact upon fact, sometimes over years of experiment until anyone observing his truth has an irrefutable proof—a knowledge of the thing as it is. The designer makes his contraption. He flies it. And we know it flies. Should we not also add proof and proof upon proof, experiment upon experiment until to America we can take our gospel in truth?

I SUGGESTED THIS to a brother the other day. He expressed an attitude widely held by Latter Day Saints. Absolute proof would not be good. It would gather into the fold too many people not converted. Walking by faith is required in order to build a faithful people. Absolute proof robs a man. Make the Latter Day Saint gospel THE gospel by some irrefutable proof of the Book of Mormon, and the army of the Lord would be overcome by the froth attracted to its standards.

Could our attitude be wrong? Could it be that faith is not faith without evidence? (Hebrews 11: 1.) Could it be that truth is knowledge? (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.) Could we be wrong in asking a truth-loving nation to believe something we are too soul-lazy to prove? Are we too prone to work out our thesis and cry "Believe!" without a laboratory test? Can we fly our blueprint? Can we? Can we find room in our schools and churches for the converts when we do!

A Writers' Gathering

Those who create our church publications will have an opportunity to meet and get acquainted at this General Conference. The Conference Program will show the time and place as Wednesday, April 5, 4:15 p.m. in the Auditorium choir room.

Haven't you often wondered how the author of some article looks? You can't avoid forming some imaginary picture of him or her. Well, you may be in for some surprises. But come along. The editors want to meet you, and you will want to meet us and each other. Distinctions will not be made by which publication you helped nor how much you wrote. You're all in the family, and we want to see you in person. C.B.H.

Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing and Educational Institution

tional institution we call the School of Nursing of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital. At graduation a nurse is granted a diploma certifying the successful completion of a recognized course of training in the nursing arts and skills. If the work in Independence has been preceded by an articulated one-year pre-nursing course at Graceland College, she is granted a diploma from that institution along with the degree of Associate in Arts.

FAR RICHER, however, than these are the rewards that lie in the years beyond graduation. This is a vocation always needed by people; it is even more in demand when troubles and depressions force other workers to idleness. When nurses leave the hospital for homes of their own, they may always have a profession which on occasion may be used to help the new home through a financial crisis or when an additional income would be very helpful in reaching a desired goal. In wartimes our nurses served our country and its boys in a way that only trained women could serve.

Most of all there comes a deep feeling of satisfaction in giving efficient help and aid to those who suffer whether they be in hospital or at home, whether it be in helping to give the very best of care for the loved ones in one's own family or advising and directing others in the home branch or the local community. Nothing can replace the consciousness of being worth-while when suffering or death threaten. To "know how" in either case is most stimulating. To have an "educated heart" is fully as important as to have "a heart to do." It makes one proud to have the foresight to prepare for such an opportunity.

All this is included in the educational institution we call the School of Nursing of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer D. Hampton of Kidder, Missouri, announce the birth of twin daughters, Eva Lee and Neva Marie, born February 11. Mrs. Hampton is the former Katie Trotter of St. Joseph, Missouri.

A daughter, Dinah Sue, was born on December 17 to Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Ross of Phoenix, Arizona.

A daughter, Cynthia Jane, was born on January 12 to Mr. and Mrs. Gene Farmer at the Burke Street Hospital in Fort Scott, Kansas. Mrs. Farmer is the former Betty Jane Martin.

A daughter, Sharon Kay, was born on January 20 to Mr. and Mrs. John Gorker of Manhattan, Kansas. Mrs. Gorker, the former Virginia Padgett, attended Graceland in 1945-46.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Lefeuve announce the birth of a son, Frederick Russell, born February 23 at Toronto, Ontario.

A son, Robert Bruce, was born on January 26 to Elder and Mrs. R. W. Bunch of Wichita Falls, Texas. Elder Bunch is counselor to the pastor at Davidson, Oklahoma.

DEATHS

KEARNEY.—Willis Walton, son of Clarence Harvey and Martha Waldorf Kearney, was born September 15, 1869, at Mt. Gilead, Ohio, and died January 30, 1950, at Clinton, Missouri. As a child he moved with his parents to Plano, Illinois, and later to Lamoni, Iowa. It was here that he united with the Reorganized Church and learned the printing trade at the Herald Publishing House. The next move was to a farm in Arkansas, and then to Nevada, Missouri, where he again went into the printing business. On April 12, 1896, at Nevada he was married to Ermina Perkins. In 1907 they made their home in Clinton, Missouri, where Brother Kearney was employed by the Clinton Eye. He held this position for thirty-six years, retiring only after he had suffered a stroke. He liked to write and contributed often to the church publications; he also did pen and ink sketches.

He is survived by his wife, Ermina; a daughter, Orpha of the home; a son, Hugh of Springfield, Missouri; three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Elder E. P. Darnell at the Consalus Funeral Home. Interment was in the Englewood Cemetery.

FRONKIER.—Viola, was born at Smithville, Missouri, on September 15, 1868, and died at a hospital in Ponca City, Oklahoma (date of death not given). In 1886 she was married to William Cassidy and moved to Washunga. In 1910 she married Ben Fronkier who preceded her in death in 1930. Since last September she had made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Hazel Parker in Kaw City, Oklahoma.

Surviving are two sons: Leonard Cassidy of Collinsville, Illinois, and Harold Cassidy of Palo Alto, California; three daughters: Mrs. Cleo Beretz of Nowata, Oklahoma; Mrs. W. E. Verner of Renton, Washington; and Mrs. Hazel Parker; a sister, Mrs. Nell McAdams of Kansas City, Missouri; two brothers: Tom Ingram of Kansas City, Missouri, and Ed Ingram of Mulhall, Oklahoma; twenty-two grandchildren, thirty-one great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. Funeral services were conducted at the Methodist Church, E. R. Stephens and Victor J. Witte officiating.

CONN.—Clarence Edmond, son of Isaac and Louisa Fletcher Conn, was born November 3, 1878, and died January 25, 1950, at Independence, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 3, 1904, and on August 18 of that year was married to Clara E. Siegfried at Adrian, Illinois. In 1920 they moved to Independence where they continued to live the remainder of their life together. Brother Conn was an employee of the Missouri Pacific Railroad until his retirement in 1947. He is survived by his wife, Clara, and three sisters: Miss Ivy B. Conn and Mrs. Oia Beers of Zanesville, and Mrs. Mary I. Fink of Yorktown, Indiana. Funeral services were conducted by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KEMMISH.—Charles William, was born August 5, 1865, in Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died February 4, 1950, at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs. He was married on January 24, 1886, to Rose Lee Hildreth; seven children were born to them. Mrs. Kemmish died on May 20, 1945, just a few months before their sixtieth wedding anniversary. Two children also preceded their father in death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 4, 1887.

Surviving are two sons, Charles Arthur of Council Bluffs and William H. of Persia, Iowa; three daughters: Mrs. Nina G. Vredenberg of Middleton, Missouri; Mrs. Pearl Hayworth and Mrs. Nella E. M. Satrapa of Council Bluffs; a brother, Nathan Kemmish of Opportunity, Washington; twelve grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Council Bluffs with Elder V. D. Ruch in charge. Burial was in Valley View Cemetery near Persia.

SMITH.—Ernest Finley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ira Smith, was born December 12, 1892, at Franklin, Nebraska, and died November 14, 1949, at Hermosa Beach, California. He was married to Leona D. Stiles in 1942 at Los Angeles, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church at Lennox in 1946. He is survived by his wife, Leona, of Hermosa Beach, and his mother, Mrs. Ida Horton Smith of Franklin. Funeral services were held at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd in Hermosa Beach, Elders Herbert R. Blakeman and Glenn Holmes officiating. Interment was in the Franklin, Nebraska, cemetery.

 THEY READ MURDER MYSTERIES

Try this sometime. Go visit some humble person who never had a chance at an education. Look on his bookshelves, and you will find something that will improve his mind: philosophy, history, religion, and science.

Then go and visit a person who has been pumped full of all the education he can hold. What will you find on his bookshelves? Murder mysteries, probably.

Can you understand why some of your finest friends—persons of education, culture, and refinement—like these cheap dreadful stories? Business and professional people, teachers, even ministers, are victims of this depravity. Why?

You can ask them, but they don't know. They say, "I like 'em!"

To find the truth, dig into psychiatry. These good people have basically primitive and savage natures like anybody else. If they had been raised in trees instead of libraries, they would be carrying clubs instead of books. A club fits the hand so much better than a book does.

Being civilized is respectable, but dull. Culture is stuffy. Education is a bore. Refinement is exasperating when you would rather jump and holler to relieve your feelings. They get fed up, they long to kill, they yearn for the scent of hot blood, they would like to see somebody tortured. But, being nice people, they can't. What to do? They can read about it. They get vicarious satisfaction out of the gory descriptions of crime and violence. They feel fine afterward.

A news story told of a woman who shot her husband. A reporter asked, "How did you feel after you shot him?" She replied instantly, "I felt hungry!"

Well, this explanation is plausible, isn't it? Let them refute it if they can!

 TO A CERTAIN MANUFACTURER:

For years I have used your Dopey Headache Powders for all my headaches. They are the best I have used because they are the only ones I ever tried. I was completely satisfied until I heard the singing commercial on your radio program, which gave me a pain in the neck. Every time I look at the bottle, it reminds me of that silly commercial, and I feel worse. This is to let you know I am taking my headaches elsewhere until you get a new formula for that commercial.

Cordially yours,
P. S.

 CAREERS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

At this time of year young people are thinking of the work they will do when they finish college. Some may be interested in the type of work that has occupied Brother and Sister Wayne Simmons for some years. They are at Caracas, Venezuela, where Brother Simmons is in charge of the "Centro" for the United States Government. This is a cultural and educational center sponsored by the Department of State to promote knowledge and understanding of our country among our neighbors to the South, and to build good will. Certain educational qualifications, good health, and ability to meet and understand people are necessary. A career of this kind requires one to be out of this country for considerable periods of time, but there are many compensations. Details may be obtained by writing the Department of State, Washington, D. C.

Tighten Up Your Hoops

A revival started in a country community, and at the first service while all the congregation seemed cold and indifferent, one faithful, honest, old fellow seemed to be overflowing with joy. At the close of the service he walked along with his neighbors with tears of joy in his radiant face. As he shook hands with them as they parted, the full measure of his rejoicing was evident.

One neighbor said to him, "John, how is it that you seem so full of religion and all the rest of us feel so cold and empty?" The old man replied, "I learned a lesson from the rain. During a long dry spell some time ago the cisterns were all empty, and there was no water except at the big spring two miles away. We had to haul whatever water was required. Then a fine shower of rain came and I had barrels under all the gutters around my house to catch the water, but when the rain had ceased I found my barrels empty. They had dried out during the fine weather, the cracks had opened up and not a barrel would hold a drop of water. I lost the rain and it taught me a lesson. The next time I saw a sign of rain, I took my barrels up to the big spring and soaked them until every hoop was tight. Then I set them under the drippings and when the rain came every barrel was running over full of water.

"I heard this revival was coming. I took my old dried up soul every day to the woods and prayed God to let the Spirit come down on me and tighten up the hoops. This morning, bless the Lord, I was ready, and when the refreshing shower came it filled me to overflowing."

Go to the fountain, brother, and "tighten up your hoops."

Notice to 1949 Tithers

DURING MARCH, 1950, all members who paid tithing and general offerings during 1949 should receive a "Statement of General Church Contributions" and a copy of "1949 Contributors' Report." In order to avoid unnecessary correspondence, we are again calling attention to the nature of these statements which are mailed annually.

1. The statements to individuals cover officially receipted contributions made to the General Church during the year of 1949. Tithes and offerings of previous years and offerings to branch and district funds are not included.
2. Contributions made by means of collections or special General Church offerings such as oblations, Sanitarium Day, and College Day are credited to the branch, and in all instances in which we have the branch pastor's address, a statement of these offerings will be mailed to the pastor, following the mailing of statements to individual contributors. Where individuals have received receipts for the above-mentioned special fund contributions, these are included on the statement.

Any member making a General Church contribution for which an official receipt was written during 1949 who fails to receive a "Statement of General Church Contributions" during the month of March should write to the Presiding Bishopric, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, giving details of contributions made during the year.

Attention is also called to the specific instructions on the reverse side of the statement, and all assistance given in the correction of errors in these statements will be sincerely appreciated.

ORDINATION

Carl Mesle, Supervisor of Young People in Zion, was ordained a High Priest at the 11:00 service of March 5 at the Stone Church by Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder Charles Graham, pastor in Zion. The ordination took place at the close of the Communion service. Homer Gatchett sang a solo immediately before and after the ordination service.

YOUTH IN ZION

Several young people of Independence are representing the church by winning honors in competitive events entered into by the local high school, William Chrisman.

For a number of years the school has been competing in a debate contest with other schools. Because the William Chrisman team earned first place recognition for seven consecutive years, it was awarded the Missouri State National Forensic league trophy for permanent keeping. Four of the ten members on the debate team were R. L. D. S. young people: Delores Tandy, Celia Fry, Marian Robinson, and Dave Leonard. Marian Robinson placed first in the girl's extemporaneous class; David Leonard placed first in the humorous declamation class, and Celia Fry placed first in the original oratory class.

The rifle team of the William Chrisman high school competed in the Camp Perry Mid-west Indoor Rifle Meet against forty-two universities and high schools. It won second place. On this team of four young men are three church youths: Frank Jennings, Carlin Talcott, and George Lund. Cadet Lt. Col. Lund accepted the trophy on behalf of the Chrisman unit.

Among fifty students taking part in a one-act play contest, two R. L. D. S. youths won honors. Charles Hield was named the best actor, and Jerry Sherman was named the second best actor.

In an oratorical contest sponsored by the American Legion, K. Curtis won first place in two preliminary competitions. This qualified him to enter the West Central Missouri oratorical contest. He won third place. The theme of his discussion was "Our Constitution, the American Ship of Freedom."

Of the twelve students on the scholastic honor list of the William Chrisman high school, five are R. L. D. S. members. They are Carol Collins, Lucille McCormick, Shirley Rondonanski, Barbara Petre, and Tyra Phillips.

HAWAIIAN NEWS

The "Hilo Tribune Herald," a newspaper published in Hilo, Hawaii, recently carried an article about five young men who were honored by the Hilo Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Among them was Elder James N. Kemp, pastor of the church at Hilo. He was selected by the city of Hilo as the most outstanding man in the city. Brother Kemp is very active in the musical enterprises of the city.

Brother Kemp has recently baptized eight persons, five of them belonging to the new Waiakea Kai Japanese mission.

THE COLLEGE BUDGET

The Graceland College Board of Trustees met March 5 at the home of A. Neal Deaver to consider and approve 1950-51 budget. One of the major matters under consideration was the retirement program for members of the college faculty.

The board gave official recognition to the day of fast by a period of prayer. All seven members of the board were present.

A Random Harvest of Thoughts

"The thoughts of many hearts may be revealed"

—Luke 2:35

With Other Tongues

A beautiful thought is found in something Paul quoted from Isaiah, "With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people."—I Corinthians 14: 21. Every people in the world has some approach to the truth, some understanding of the universe and God.

Take these for examples: the great sculpture of Michelangelo, an Italian; the poetry of Shakespeare and Milton, Englishmen; the music of Bach, Handel, and Beethoven, Germans; the science of Albert Einstein, a Jew; the prose of Tolstoi, a Russian; the songs of Franz Schubert, an Austrian; the paintings of John Steuart Curry, Grant Wood, and Thomas Hart Benton, Americans; the voice of Marian Anderson and the discoveries of George Washington Carver, Negroes. Volumes could be filled in this way, including every race and people.

We cannot shut anybody out, or we shall miss some important part of God's revelation of truth and beauty to his children of all races around the world.

Consider the great talents that many countries have gained because Hitler was so foolish as to persecute the Jews and drive them away. He lost his war when he sent them to fight on the side of democracy in other lands.

You Pay for the Drinks!

Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin, President of the W.C.T.U., reveals that it costs the Commonwealth of Massachusetts from $60 to $100 to collect $13 in alcoholic beverage taxes. Statistics are not available in other states, but they would probably reveal a comparable result.

In other words, every time a man steps up to the bar to buy a drink, everytime a woman sits down in a swank lounge to order a cocktail, you help to pay the bill!

You pay it in taxes. You pay it in wrecks on the highways and in the streets. You pay in drunken assaults on women and children. You pay in the cost of crime, in overflowing jails and crowded courts. You may never take a drink, but you pay and pay and pay.

Think of that, friend, when you size up the candidates, and when you go to the polls to vote.

Nationalization in America?

So many of the great strikes, like the recent trouble in coal, cannot be settled without government intervention. The miners and operators usually need outside help. When this contract expires they will have all this trouble to go through again.

But do those determined men see the end of the path they are treading from where they are now? If they cannot manage their affairs, the government may some day take over in the public interest.

This is the path to the nationalization of an industry. It may be visionary to look so far ahead. But it may not be very far away. As was said in France before the Reign of Terror: "It is later than you think."

Is nationalization what the miners want? Is it what the operators want? Is it what the American people want? It is time to think.

Want it or not, we are facing that possibility. When we wake up, it may be too late.

The Face of Judas

The trial of Klaus Fuchs, atomic scientist, in London's Old Bailey court on March 1, points a finger at the basic trouble of our imperiled world.

The most terrible thing produced in our generation is not the atomic bomb, but a man like this who worked on it.

Distinguished novelist Rebecca West wrote of Fuchs at his trial: "This man really was immensely gifted. But morally and politically he was an imbecile." His confession was "full of cloudy emotion and complete disregard of moral values."

His picture shows something like a Dresden china doll head, with the beady-bright eyes of a bird that learns everything, understands nothing, and will do anything.

Is this, perhaps, the face of Judas?

British kindness received him as a political refugee escaping death. British money educated him. British honor gave him a great opportunity. British innocence trusted him. And he rewarded them with treason.

To repeat, the most terrible thing created in this generation is a kind of men—and this refers not to an individual, but a type—with no moral values, no religion, no sense of honor, a man with the mind of a machine and the soul of a (there seems to be no recognized literary substitute for this slang word) goon.

Nothing in this world can make us safe except a universal understanding and acceptance of moral and spiritual principles. People can be rendered harmless only by putting them in jail, killing them, or converting them to righteousness.

General Conference Program, Sunday, April 2

WE EARNESTLY SOLICIT the co-operation of the Saints of Independence and the Stakes, and of Conference visitors generally, in the Conference activities for Sunday, April 2. This is particularly necessary because we have again found it advisable to plan for two Communion services in The Auditorium.

Saints from Independence and vicinity are urged to attend the earlier Communion service which will begin at 7:45 a.m. This service should conclude about 9:45 a.m., and a preaching service will be held at 10:15 a.m. at the Stone Church. Elder John W. Rushton will preach.

This arrangement not only will give assistance to Conference visitors who are driving in on Sunday morning and want to have opportunity to attend the later Communion service, but it also will permit local Saints who have guests to get home a little earlier in preparation for the noon meal.

A general prayer meeting will be held at the Stone Church, 8:30 to 9:45 a.m. and will be planned with visiting Saints in mind.

The second Communion service will commence at 10:00 a.m. The program of the two Communion services will be identical.

There will be a memorial service in the Stone Church at 2:00 p.m. Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith will be in charge.

The Graceland A Cappella concert at 2:45 p.m. will be an integral part of the preaching service at which President Israel A. Smith will give his Conference message.

There will be congregational singing at 7:30 p.m. at The Auditorium as a prelude to preaching by G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop.

General Conference Announcements

ALL TEACHERS AND DEACONS who plan to assist in the General Conference Communion services are asked to be at The Auditorium, Thursday, March 30, at 7:30 p.m. They will report to J. E. Campbell, who will be in charge of their work and direct the rehearsal for the Communion service. The teachers and deacons will spend Saturday, April 1, preparing the emblems and will close with a brief prayer and fellowship service at 7:30 p.m. All teachers and deacons who attend the Conference are asked to register at the deacons' booth in the foyer of The Auditorium.

The priests who are to assist with the Communion service will rehearse at The Auditorium, Friday, March 31, at 7:30 p.m. Those arriving in Independence after the rehearsal, who wish to participate in the service, are asked to leave their names and local addresses at the information desk in the foyer of The Auditorium. Elders Henry W. Stahl and William Worth, Jr., will again direct the priests at the Communion service.

Registration will begin at 1:00 p.m. Saturday, April 1, at Booth 7 on the lower level in The Auditorium.

At 8:00 p.m. a youth mixer will be held at College Street Church for all Conference young people.

The Conference Choir rehearsal will be at 8:15 p.m. in The Auditorium.

To Canadian Book Stewards and Customers

We are pleased to advise that under date of March 2, the Customs and Excise Division of the Canadian Department of National Revenue has advised us that the book by Apostle Hanson, entitled, "In the Land of the Feathered Serpent," may enter Canada "free of customs duty and exempt from the consumption or sales tax as a book for the promotion of religion."

Should your local customs office question this in any way, please refer them to the Division of Customs and Excise, Department of National Revenue, Ottawa, with a specific reference to file No. 4185-44.

This is furnished for your information, due to the fact that certain of our Canadian Book Stewards have experienced difficulty in obtaining entry of this particular book.

Mailing of Tithing Payments

It is recommended that tithing and general offerings be made through the regularly appointed solicitors in the branches and bishop's agents or bishops of the various stakes and districts.

However, when these officers are not available and contributions are mailed to headquarters, the remittances should be by check, postal note, or money order made payable to the Presiding Bishopric, and the letter addressed to THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, THE AUDITORIUM, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Across the Desk

Apostle Mesley on February 5 wrote from Calgary:

I arrived in Calgary after a long battle with the weather. Since leaving Independence with E. Y. Hunker, we have been battling storms and temperatures that ranged down to -61° , with plenty at -45 to -27° , etc., and trains many hours late.

I left Richland, Washington, by bus at 6 a.m., Thursday; came up to Spokane for a service and work, and then caught the Spokane-International at 11:59 p.m. Thursday. It was a terrific mixed goods train buffeted by a blizzard that ranged all through Southern Alberta. I transferred at Yalk to a C.P.R. train with coal-oil lamps and a pot-bellied stove in one corner. It was a record low in transportation. We headed for Crows Nest Pass, but ran into a snowdrift. Fortunately we were able to get out and started backing. This kept on for five hours until we reached Cranbrook. Then, after many delays, the C.P.R. finally flew all paying passengers out to Calgary.

My Canadian clergy permit had not arrived, so I was among the "paying" passengers and got across the Rockies by plane. Fifty-eight hours of travel without sleep or possibilities of rest left me pretty cold, tired, and dirty.

The School of Evangelism at Calgary began yesterday with a fine response. Brother Hunker will join me from Boise, but he cannot make it up here (unless he flies) until midnight Tuesday. And there is plenty of D. V. [God willing] in that schedule. The weather has been below zero for 56 days in Calgary, but has moderated to 16° above yesterday and today.

Foundation of the Church

IN ANY DISCUSSION of the functions of the Quorum of Twelve, it must be borne in mind that the institution of the church is a basic consideration. Our Lord founded a visible society, not by accident or according to afterthought. The church was to be his body on earth. It was an extension of the Incarnation of his divine life in human society. The church was not an organization of baptized believers who were directed toward the accomplishment of some social ideal. It was an organism—a body. This distinction is important and has consequences when consideration is given to the function of the Twelve. If the church was merely an aggregation of organized believers combined to produce social change or reformation, then there would be no inherent reason why the form of organization should not change from age to age to meet changing social conditions in which it might find itself. If, however, the church was and is, as we believe, a functioning body to bring forth the inherent life of Christ within it—a likeness being found in natural birth—then there can be no question but that the body of Christ is one body with a continuing ministry and a changeless, characteristic organism.

It is not necessary to labor this point except to note in passing that there is ample evidence in the witness of the New Testament and the ante-Nicene Fathers, that a unique body,

The Apostolic Function in the Early Centuries

By ARTHUR A. OAKMAN

Part of a lecture delivered before the distinctive and visible, was founded by the ministry of Christ, into which men might be incorporated and find divine life. The form of the church was not due to any secular influence; Christian writers show no trace of such influence. All the ideas of "The Church" were derived from Judaism, not from the pagans. Again and again it is affirmed "No man hath God for his Father who hath not the church for his mother." This affirmation indicates the nature of the church.

The church, as a body then, has for its analogue, according to Paul, the human body. Each organ, while being distinct and different, has existence and being only as it is saturated by and functions in the life of the whole. In consideration, therefore, all apostolic functions must of necessity be understood in relationship to the function, first, of the church as a whole, and second, of the other associated and mutually functioning organs of the body. There is no significance to a Council of Twelve if no one believes apostolic testimony. There is indeed no significance to the church as a whole unless it bears relationship to the functioning of the divine spirit in the world outside it, which is a province of the kingdom of God. I make this point deliberately and at some length because I believe that of all the councils in the church, we should have an appreciation and knowledge of the body as a whole.

Christ's church was brought forth and made visible as people were begotten sons and daughters of God through the ordinances instituted and given by him.

Christ also, in bearing witness of the truth and thus giving his life to people who were obedient, instituted in this visible society officials who were to function, under his guidance and direction, in the extension, growth, development, and ultimate glory of the church. It cannot be overemphasized that Christ is the head of the church, and, although there are areas of official responsibility in a social way in which men are responsible one to another, there are other areas within each soul where minister and member must answer a good conscience towards God. We must not enter here into the realm of theology or philosophy but simply point out that a sense of the continuing direction coming from the Invisible Head is a primary and basic consideration in the Christian ministry.

It seems that as a church we do not have as lively and as keen a sense of this principle as we might well have. And it is emphasized here in the hope that we can again capture a feeling of divine superintendence which shall stabilize and control our mutual relationships.

The Institution of the Apostolate

We will not here take the time to speak of the steps by which Jesus selected, trained, disciplined, and endowed his first Twelve. That would be a very enlightening and inspiring investigation. But having in mind what we have said concerning the church, it would be well to inquire as to what constitutes an apostle. In the early day, it was understood that the basic qualification of an apostle was that he should have "seen the Lord." In Paul's rehearsal of the Epiphanies he says, "And, last of all, he was seen of me, as one born out of due time." These men were "eye witnesses of his majesty." A moment's reflection will serve to show that this seeing was but incidentally related to his fleshly life upon the earth. Hundreds and thousands looked on Jesus while he was in the flesh, but never saw (understood) him. To be seen, in the sense here suggested, meant that one appreciated Jesus—as Christ—the Son of God, the Anointed One, the Savior. "Seeing" transpired at Caesarea Philippi when Christ asked his disciples, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" He was then probing to see if the mystery of his person had penetrated to the foundations of personality which he had laid in them on the morn of creation. When ultimately Peter confessed and, in a flash of inspired insight which caught up and interpreted his three years of association with Christ, said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," he was credited immediately with the appellation, "Blessed." It had been given to him to know, by the divine Father, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God. The medium of this revelation is never the thinker but always the seer. An apostle is a seer. "Brethren, it is your business to see Jesus Christ."—O. Cowdery.

It is interesting to note what followed in this experience at Caesarea Philippi; "Thou shalt be called Cephias which is, by interpretation a seer, or a stone (John 1: 42 Inspired Version). . . . And upon this rock I will build my church." Peter and the rest were to serve in the new Israel the same purpose that the Urim and Thummim had served to the old. They were to be the revealers of the will of God. Upon this impregnable foundation—that which qualified men to be prophets and seers by confession of Jesus Christ—was the church to be built. As Christ had been sent, so in turn he sent them. It is not easy to gauge the significance of this experience at Caesarea Philippi. But it is clear that through association with Christ there had been given to these men a divine gift. This gift qualified them to be apostles. The apostleship is a gift, given by God and received by whom he wills, and is honored and made effective as men use it with wisdom and discretion and according to the terms laid down by the Giver of the gift, and inherent in its nature.

A. The nature of the apostolic gift

There is a tendency in our day to discredit preaching. That tendency has been manifest in our church. It is well for us to be reminded that the most significant experience of former days, resulting in unparalleled extension of the Christian church, stemmed from a sermon. The first exercise of the apostolic gift was by Peter on the day of Pentecost. Before Pentecost, the disciples had a knowledge of the facts of the life of Jesus. They had knowledge also by undeniable proofs that Jesus had risen from the dead. But with all these facts, and with a certainty of this knowledge within them, they had yet to wait for a divine endowment. What a lesson for us today! Facts and knowledges must even now be sanctified in a fellowship of mutual communion and exalted by divine power before the Twelve will be ready to enter fully into their ministry. Those early Twelve turned the world upside down after their Pentecost! We might well exclaim, "When, where, and how shall ours come?"

It is the nature of an apostle possessed of his apostolic gift to be a preacher. I do not use this term to convey necessarily the idea of oratory. There have been many orators who have not been preachers. A preacher is one who bears witness and conveys to the soul of his hearers the attitudes and characteristics of the person about whom he bears testimony. The Apostle who does not bear witness (testifies, preaches) loses his gift. It is the function of this gift to witness, and in testimony to quicken faith with its attendant spirit of repentance in the soul of the listener. It is wise to know also, that this quickening process is not primarily related to philosophy or education. The ultimate questions of philosophy and education are the primary affirmations of faith. Christianity bears record of facts in the universe and in history which can be revealed only by God. They cannot be arrived at unaided and unassisted by human reasonings. But when once the gift is given, and the facts are appreciated, new light is thrown on philosophy and education which they themselves find impossible to gain.

Why have I labored this point? You will say this is not related to the functions of the Council of Twelve! If any are tempted to say this, I reply, It is not only related to the functions of the Twelve, either individually or as a council, it is the basic and primary function of that Quorum. Unless it is given first place in our considerations, we shall have neither the wisdom nor the wit to rightfully evaluate any other procedure with which we have to do.

There is no warrant for any assumption that the gift of the apostleship is limited to twelve men in the quorum. The possession of the knowledge that Jesus Christ is the son of God and was crucified for the sins of the world makes a man an apostle—one sent. But it is evident that in the early day there was a distinction which limited the idea of an apostle to a member of the Twelve. However, we cannot legitimately read back into the New Testament the facts we know now concerning church order and procedure. The New Testament is not a textbook in church polity or government. Any apostolic function is there but adumbrated.

B. The executive functions of the early Twelve

(a) The office of an apostle.

According to Paul, it appears that an apostle is one who, having seen Christ after his resurrection, has become qualified to witness to that fact. He believed that he received his commission through no hand of mediation. However, Acts 13: 1-3 indicates that Paul and Barnabas were ordained by the laying on of hands, which Paul undoubtedly viewed as no more than a recognition by the church of a commission he had already received from the Lord. This indicates common consent later outlined in section 27 of our Doctrine and Covenants. It was an authoritative mission with the authoritative element looming largely in Paul's thinking as being necessary for a sustained evangelistic ministry (Romans 10: 15). The function was primarily to proclaim the gospel (I Corinthians 1: 17; 9: 14; I Thessalonians 2: 4-9; I Timothy 2: 7). He was also a steward of the mysteries of God, (I Corinthians 4: 1; Ephesians 3: 1-13) and in this sense was an administrator of the divine revelations, which had been disclosed from the councils of God and declared through the Incarnation.

There is no question but that the office of an apostle was a "unique blending of lofty authority and total submission." Paul could proclaim nothing of his own; he could not alter, innovate upon, or embellish the Word of God which constituted the message. He was the "slave of Christ." Upon a number of occasions he distinguishes between his own judgment and the revelation of the Lord. (Romans 1: 1; I Corinthians 4: 1; I Corinthians 7: 6, 10, 12, 25 and 40.) He must be faithful to Christ (I Corinthians 4: 2).

On the other hand his apostolic ministry gave him authority, even plenary authority, to teach and to govern. Christ's message was not a disembodied ideal to be cast to the mercies of every whim and passing opinion and entrusted to a social club; it was to be the foundation upon which every new branch of the church was to be founded. The apostle was the founder and the ruler of churches. He possessed a common tradition of doctrine and practice and claimed from the church the type of obedience required of affectionate children by their spiritual Father. It was a ministry of reconciliation. (II Thessalonians 3: 14; 2: 15; I Corinthians 4: 14-21, and 9, 16, 34; II Corinthians 8: 10, and 10: 8. See especially I Corinthians 14: 36; 4: 17, 9: 16, 17, and II Corinthians 13: 3.)

It is evident that Paul felt himself able, under the movements of his apostolic office, to deliver persistent offenders to condign punishment (I Timothy 1: 20). He also rebukes the church at Corinth for not having excommunicated an incestuous man. He exhorts the church to deliver this man over to the destruction of the flesh under Satan, that thereby he might learn repentance and "his spirit be saved in the day of the Lord." In another place we find Paul dealing with a penitent brother; could it be the same one mentioned in II Corinthians 2: 5-11? Let us suppose so. The punishment was inflicted by the community under the initiative of the apostle and, under his initiative also, after penitence, forgiveness was assigned to the community.

The apostle, then, had power to bring authority to bear on the details of the life of a single congregation and even upon individuals. But he has as well the "care of all the churches."

(b) The local ministry.

There is clearly evident in the New Testament a distinction between the catholic authority of the apostle and the local authority of the "presidents who labor amongst" the saints (I Thessalonians 5: 12). They are to be "esteemed very highly." There were presidents, ministers, and teachers among the Romans (Romans 12: 6-8). Deaconesses are also mentioned. There appears to be no regional organization of the Christians at Rome (See Romans 16: 5, 10, 11, 15). When we pass from Rome back to Corinth, a much more rigid and complete organization had been effected. Here there were presidents, ministers, and teachers and other ministries together with a long list of spiritual gifts with apostles, prophets, teachers, rulers, helpers, ministers of mercy, et cetera, no class of which was self-constituted. But it appears that all these spiritual gifts and offices were mediated through apostolic function (Romans 1: 11; Acts 8: 14).

In the Epistles of St. Paul, particularly Ephesians, the local and standing ministers of the church are more clearly defined, "and he gave some to be apostles and some prophets, some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." The general ministry has been identified by Chrysostom as prophets and apostles, while the local ministry consists of pastors and teachers with whom are associated the bishops and deacons (Philippians 1: 1).

The word "bishop" used in the New Testament has nothing to do with what we now associate with that term. The "episcopus" (bishop) is also called "presbyter." It should be equated with what we now know as elder or president, and the words superintendent or commissioner. These ministers have assigned to them in St. James, a ministry of healing (James 14: 4-6). They are the elders of the church.

Summary

The Apostles are empowered by Christ and inspired by the spirit to be:

- A. Witnesses of Christ's resurrection.
- B. Stewards of the divine mysteries.
- C. Ambassadors and ministers in the ministry of reconciliation.

They must minister the word which becomes the basis of a covenant upon which the churches are organized. The Apostles act in founding and governing the churches. They administer discipline, and disseminate a ministry of redemptive grace, initiating these ministries to the churches they have organized. They administer the chief sacraments: baptism, the Lord's Supper, and the laying on of hands, although they do not appear to do this exclusively. They are the ordainers of the official ministry in the churches through the laying on of hands which communicates the gift of the Holy Ghost.

They have a universal ministry—not localized, but general.

Again let us state that the exact divisions of the ministers of the church are not defined in the New Testament and, bearing in mind its nature, we should not expect such definitions of functions to appear in the written word. There is also no clear definition of the form which the ministry of the future was to take. Perhaps this is accounted for by the prevalent belief which was also widespread of the immanent return of our Lord in glory. Many early ministers appear to have changed their minds on this point, and as the years lengthened into decades, no doubt ministry of the church was expanded, although not characteristically altered.

It is quite easy to read back into the text conceptions which we have acquired since 1830. So far as possible, I have tried to eliminate such misconception, but it is difficult to do. There is no mention in the New Testament of First Presidency as such, although there is recognition given in Paul's letters to Peter, James, and John who "seemed to be pillars" (Galatians 2: 9).

Again we have a glimpse of James rendering a decision at Jerusalem when a controverted matter had been thoroughly discussed. Whether this "sentence" of James indicated that he, by virtue of lineage being the Lord's half brother, took charge of the church at Jerusalem is not clear, and any assertion that such was the case stems from the tendency to read back into the record conceptions which we have acquired later. All the historians and writers in the middle of the second century represent the Lord's brother as a bishop (Roman Catholic sense). This James was not apparently one of the Twelve, and there is no record that he received his authority from the apostles. It is interesting to suggest that authority might have been given to him when Christ appeared to him after the Resurrection (I Corinthians 15: 7). The best authority speaks of James as "succeeding to the government of the church with the apostles." "James," says Hegesippus, "receives the church in succession with the apostles" (Eusebius 2: 23). In the apostolic conference at Jerusalem, he spake with decisive authority and undoubtedly presided at this apostolic conference. When he was put to death for "breaking the law" just before the siege of Jerusalem, Symeon was elected to take his place. It must be remembered that Symeon, like James, was a relative of Jesus Christ. As an interesting comment, I quote:

After the martyrdom of James and the taking of Jerusalem which immediately ensued, it is recorded that those of the Apostles and of the Lord's disciples who were still alive came together from all parts with those who were related to our Lord [italics mine]; for of them also there were still several alive; and that they all held conference together as to whom they ought to select as worthy to succeed James. And that they all, with one mind, approved of Symeon, the son of Clopas . . . as worthy of the throne of the community there, who was a cousin, as they say, of the Savior. For Hegesippus relates that Clopas was a brother of Joseph.—Eusebius 3: 11.

Let's Talk the Gathering - Part 1

By J. A. KOEHLER

A FEW WEEKS AGO one of my superiors expressed the wish that I would write something about the Gathering. So to that wish you may charge this article. But I am in a spot. For, as Brother J. W. Rushton once said in beginning a discourse on a related subject, "I hardly know how to arrange the subject matter before me, such a multiplicity of ideas present themselves in almost chaotic profusion."

Many things are tied up with the Gathering—many involvements, complements, and correlatives: the purchase of lands, the allotment of inheritances, the appointment of stewardships, the "organization of my people"—ever so many questions and problems. And unless the Gathering is understood in these relations, it is not understood at all. That is why I say, "Let's talk the Gathering; let's do some mental reconnoitering, investigating, probing; let's put our heads together, if perchance we may clear up both the general idea of the Gathering and the specific ideas it involves."

See, in this relation, Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21 in particular—all following references, unless otherwise indicated, are to Doctrine and Covenants. There is much testimony that is not referred to in this article.

It has been said, "A wink to a blind horse is as good as a nod to a mule." This article is not written for "mules," but for "the elect." If a "horse" should read it, I hope he will not be too blind, because Herald space is not plentiful enough to admit of all the talking (in print) that needs to be done about the Gathering.

I shall try to enumerate (clearly and intelligently, I hope) the main questions involved in the Gathering. One of my aims is to engender an awareness that the Gathering is not child's play but something which can be consummated only by kingdom-building men—the kind of men for whom this church was designed to be a social laboratory. (In the parlance of Restoration, the word "church" has at least four specific meanings—see 17: 6, 11, 13, 25 and 51: 3, 5 in particular.)

A Fearsome Fact

In no relation is personality more puzzling than in religion. If split personalities are causes of ruination anywhere, it is in religion. Religion, more than anything else, is a mixture of sense and nonsense, rationality and superstition. In religion some of the best physical-world thinkers in history have had little use for reason (in this relation see 50: 4-6). In religion untold millions have said, respecting the number of "teeth" in the mouth of a "horse," "If the horse does not agree with 'Aristotle,' the horse is wrong!"

In religion we accept ideas second-hand. In religion preperception is a hindrance to perception—especially to conception. In religion we use words, even terms, indefinitely, indiscriminately, uncritically, without much real thought. Often we do not speak the same language—even within our own church—notwithstanding we use the same words. So we have a confusion of ideas (ideas about the Gathering being our momentary concern), even within the church. Not a delectable fact, but one that needs to be faced in its nakedness.

Flocking Together

"Birds of a feather flock together." Even birds seem to have some consciousness of kind, so they flock together—not sparrows with hawks, but "birds of a feather."

Whatever the reason, the more requisite close co-operation is to the well-being of a species of beings and the more conscious those beings are of their kind, the greater is the impulsion to flock together.

"My sheep" in particular have that impulsion. For they, more than any other beings, must promote the well-being of their souls or achieve salvation in the kingdom of God, through a singular kind of close co-operation in vital affairs: specifically, economic affairs (77: 1; 81: 4; 100: 2; 101: 2). There is no "religious" people to whom the flocking together—the Gathering—is so requisite to the well-being of the soul, as to the people of Restoration. That is the best kind of reason for talking the Gathering, isn't it?

To a Great Purpose

There are many good reasons for moving from one place to another. With some Latter Day Saints, particularly in the early days of the church, the reason was to procure better places of temporary residence. In many instances today, the purpose is to attend church oftener, to come into better school privileges, to find better employment or business opportunities, or to be near relatives, and so on. For the most part those are private affairs. And however important they may be, they are not what Restoration calls a great purpose.

Some purposes are not so good—as when a man moves to the stakes or the Center Place merely to "feather his nest" or to save his own financial skin. In my opinion such persons have no claim to services rendered currently by bishops, et al., to members of the church who desire to move into the regions round about for reasons of the kind mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

But that is incidental. What is fundamental is this: the Gathering is to the purpose of bringing forth and establishing a great cause that is grounded in moral considerations—the cause of Zion (6: 1, 3; 10: 1, 3; 11: 1, 3; 12: 1, 3). "The" Gathering—which needs to be distinguished from "a" gathering—is to forward Restoration—the restoration of that which "God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." "The" Gathering is to a very great purpose. It matters not that others do not believe this; it matters only that converts to the Restoration do.

The Gathering, then, is not merely a moving of many church members to one locality or place of residence; it is not a mere concentration of Latter Day Saints. It is not a mere shifting of population such as took place, for instance, when gold was discovered in California; or when Oklahoma Territory was opened to settlement; or when Latter Day Saints moved from Ohio to Missouri; or when the trek to Utah was engineered. It is not merely a commingling of "birds of a feather"; much less is it a commingling of birds of many feathers to no common purpose whatever.

I hope none will misinterpret this language. I do not say that changing places of residence may not be a kind of gathering—a kind which may be beneficial in many ways. Rather I say that mere congregating or "gathering" into "the regions round about" is not "the" Gathering—as some have learned at great cost and to their disappointment. Nor do I say that some of our commonplace gathering may not be turned into "the" gathering. It is not impossible; it may be that an ordinary gathering which has taken place here or there may prove to have been necessary to the acquisition of a land on which "the" gathering will someday have been consummated. Indeed, such gathering (which has benefited not a few members of the church) may have revealed part of the method-pattern—the modus operandi—for the consolidation, under the changed “conditions surrounding the work,” of the land upon which to build the City (48: 2; 36: 12 and much more, including 128: 1). But that is a question for consideration later on.

City-Building

The Gathering is comparable to the process of assembling musicians to perform a symphony—in the case of the redemption of Zion, a social symphony—except that the performance of the social symphony begins, on a small scale, as soon as the Gathering begins.

That social symphony is called “a city.” It is a civilization, a community, an order, or system of administration of the economic affairs of a people. It is the kind of city that Enoch built—a dwelling together in righteousness—the prototype of the city which Restoration is to build; the city, perhaps, for which Abram looked. In any case it is “a city out of which our God shall shine,” which is to be an embodiment, incarnation, or implementation of his will (27: 3; 36: 12; 42: 3; 48: 2; 57: 1; 83: 1, 2; 101: 6; 107: 15; Isaiah 62: 12; Hebrews 11: 10). The Gathering is a city-building action.

That city-building is at once a land-redeeming affair which places a land in right relations to persons. It is an action which encloses a territory within an alien territory, an enclavement—an action which establishes a mode (in present circumstances, limited) of internal economic self-governance. This is clearly implied in Sections 51 and 101 and other places. The Gathering is correlated to land-redeeming.

That city-building is a process of selective social reintegration under kingdom-building mentorship. That is what the Gathering is: a process of selective social reintegration.

Truth-Proving

Exemplification and emulation—both personal and social—are processes through which “the kingdoms of this world [are to] become kingdoms of our God and of his Christ.” That is the meaning of The Call of Abram: the call to bless all nations through the accomplishment of a people. That is the meaning of the prophecy of the coming kingdom (see Isaiah 2: 1-5, for instance). And that is the meaning of 94: 5 and 102: 9.

To the genius of true Bible religion as to the genius of science, proof of the truth is “performance under controlled conditions,” for instance when it is proved that a certain idea of feeding poultry or of growing wheat will work as none have been able to make other ideas work. Jesus said that the proof of the truth is to be provided through its implementation (John 7:31, 32). And it will be good news to “all nations” when the proof of that truth has been published. (Matthew 24: 14; Isaiah 2: 3; 9: 6, 7; Revelation 19: 6, in the light of chapter 18.) That proof of the truth is to be provided through Restoration’s selective social reintegration, so that the Gathering is part of Bible religion’s latter-day process of truth-proving.

A People-forming Action

In this article, a people means “the whole body of persons who compose a community”; and a community means “the people who reside in one locality and are subject to the same laws.”—Standard Dictionary.

Real restoration, said its prophet, is an epochal development within the framework of true Bible religion (26: 2; 84: 3; and Acts 3: 21). (By true Bible religion I mean prophetic, not priestly, Judaism and Messianic, not other kinds of Christianity.) The essence and crux of true restoration is the essence and crux of the religion of which it is a phase: true Bible religion.

Surely the observant reader of the Old Testament has noted the numerous passages respecting “my people,” “his people,” “this people,” “thy people,” etc; and references to “the house” and “household” of Israel—which means a people.

All this dates back to the first commandment of God to man—the first chapter of Genesis, particularly verse 28. That commandment respects the business of peoples, for it is the business of peoples to regulate matrimony and industry by law or to have dominion in those relations.

All human history, all historic ups and downs of mankind, argue conclusively that the fates and fortunes of man (see 77: 1 in particular) are conditioned in the manner in which peoples conduct the business of man under God: the human-living-together business. That truth cries out today as it never did before—except, perhaps, in the Dark Ages when even the “ears” of the church did not hear that cry. So the voice of Restoration never proclaimed a more certain truth than this: “To advance the cause which ye have espoused,” “there must be an organization of my people”—a people to be formed through the Gathering.

Bible-People-forming

The people of Enoch was the first true people-forming under the mentorship of the genius of true Bible religion—the first true people of record in the Bible (Genesis 6 and 7, Inspired Version). The particulars of the gathering of that people are not given. It is recorded only that enough persons were converted through the preaching of Enoch (evidently the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom) to form a people. So a city was built; a system of administration of the economic affairs of a community was instituted. In this relation see 44: 2.

Every people—in the sense in which that word is used in this article—is at once a community, a city, a government, a true society, “a body of persons who reside in one locality and are subject to the same laws.”

To the Latter Day Saint Church there is no more significant Scripture than the Enoch-city narrative (found only in the Inspired Version of the Bible) because:

(1) It says that the will of God is for implementation in a community;

(2) That Enoch-City is the prototype of Restoration’s goal, and

(3) It holds that that accomplishment of a people, that “Zion,” that mode of economic self-governance, is the highest expression of true religion—the most extraordinary, successful, flawless, finished kingdom-building of record; in that stage of the march of civilization, it was a consummate doing of the will of God, the best exemplification of that which Bible religion is all about.

So significant to Restoration is that narrative that its most revealing passages are incorporated in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. See section 36 and the captions of sections 77 and 81.

That city-building represents the best recorded correlation of the two determinants in human affairs: personality and society. It represents the kind of improvement that takes place in society when personality is improved; and, in turn, the kind of improvement in personality that takes place when society is improved: the alternate relations of cause and effect that exist between personal and social amelioration: the two elements in civilization. See, in this relation, 102: 2, 3; 77: 1; 81: 4; 94: 5; John 3: 5; and Malachi 4.

The second recorded instance of Bible-people-forming—which, like the others, is significant to Restoration—is the call of Abram: a household-forming affair. That people was formed through the processes of selection and isolation, as anyone may see by contemplating the narrative.

In that "call" one thing is to be noted: that people was formed by the process of genetic aggregation, whereas Latter Day Israel is to be formed of the "elect . . . through sanctification of the spirit" (I Peter 1: 2). In the Gathering, the elect are to be assembled to "the place of the City" from "the four quarters of the earth" (36: 12). Revelation 14: 6-8 may have relation to that gathering. But in all instances of people-forming, the basis of selection was (and, in the case of the Gathering in the last days, is to be) a distinctive like-mindedness or like-spiritedness. Every Bible people was formed through some kind of "flocking together" of "birds of a [peculiar] feather."

But the significance of the Abramic-household-forming is this: its purpose is the purpose of Restoration's gathering, which is that a people may do a great work, which is to be "a blessing to all nations."

And surely, by now, we should know the nature of that work. For the experience of the whole human race witnesses that there can be but one means of promoting the peace, prosperity, and happiness of peoples; namely, an orderly, efficient, and just government. In this relation see Isaiah 9: 6, 7; 2: 1-5; Daniel 2; chapter 18 of Revelation, and verse 6 of chapter 19; Matthew 24: 14, and Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9 and 94: 5. It all adds up to this: true Bible religion on its highest level is people-forming.

The third true Bible people of record was established (more than "formed") through an exodus, an emancipation, and an adventure in self-governance—through the "organization" of what had been but "a mass" of persons, slaves, bondsmen, residing in one locality. This was a kind of restitution of a "religious" people to the status of a "true" people—if the "household" of Abram, Isaac, and Jacob had ever been a true people. A true people is independent of others in the conduct of its own internal affairs (77: 3 in the light of the context: the whole section).

The land of Egypt was the jurisdiction of the Pharaohs at that time. Every true people has a land of its own; it has territorial jurisdiction. So, to restore or establish Israel as a people it was necessary to come into possession of a land—in that instance Canaan was the land. That is why, in these last days, the elect persons who are to form an elect people are to gather to a land of their own; to the place of the city (36: 12; 42: 3, 10; 45: 12; 48: 2; 57: 1, 4; 58: 3, 7, 12; 63: 8, 10, 12, 13; 72: 3; 83: 2; 98: 9, 10; 100: 5; 108: 4).

But the significance of the restitution of Israel to the status of a true people is this: it proclaims the necessity of forming a people to implement the truth of Bible religion, or to establish the kingdom of God in its civil mode (56: 6; 58: 4; 65: 1; 72: 5; 100: 6; 102: 9).

That is to be the last great development within the framework of Bible religion. And to promote that development it is necessary, in these latter days, to consummate the gathering. See particularly 44: 2—"that ye may be enabled to keep my laws."

It may be that the people-forming endeavors of the centuries by the genius of prophetic Judaism is that which Jesus had in mind when he said, "How often would I have gathered your children." For in the Roman Empire in that day the formation of a people through selective social reintegration of any kind was taboo. (Vatican City represents an enclave within another "Roman" Empire at a much later time.) During the reign of Augustus Caesar "the stone" could hardly have been cut out of the mountain without hands (Daniel 2) as it may in the days of "these kingdoms"; as it seems to have been "cut out" in the days of Enoch. "How often would I have gathered your children," in all probability, if not certainly, harks back to other days. But that lamentation is a manifestation of the people-forming desire of the genius of true religion.

It can be maintained from the witness of church history that there appeared to be a central government office at Jerusalem to which the apostles addressed themselves in times of crisis. Further than this, it would not be wise to go. Paul says that Christ "set in the church his apostles . . ." Bear in mind that the word "apostle" is not limited to members of the Twelve. This word "apostle" could well apply to members of the First Presidency. Joseph Smith, the Martyr, was called an apostle; and in the revelation of 1946, where reference is made to John F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards, it is stated that "their apostleship is extended in Presidency."

Conclusion

The church is an organism—begotten, not made—which embodies the revelation of Jesus Christ. The apostolic authority is held in conjunction with the functioning of this organism. The church's most distinctive operation is "to bear witness of the truth," for the purpose of "saving the world." The Apostles are witnessing ministers, universal in their scope, who have the stewardship of conserving, strengthening, extending, and making effective the witness of the church. Beyond this generalization, one ought not to go, recognizing, however, that this designation of function amounts to a master conception which illustrates every other apostolic function, both of former and latter days.

NOTE: Attention is called to The Church and the Ministry by Dr. Charles Gore, because this book manifests a sterling scholarship for which our own church should be exceedingly grateful.

Trends in Camping

Two general observations: Most of the camps held at present are for children through the junior high ages. There are very few youths or "co-ed" camps for the senior high ages. There are very, very few family camps (as our reunions). A few Y.M.C.A.'s conduct family camps with a recreational and "interest" program. The Salvation Army has its mother-children camps. Most persons attending this session were seeking information on family camping possibilities and procedures.

During a session on interracial co-ed camping, the question was raised as to the dangers of acquaintanceships leading to a desire for marriage. Several persons who had had up to 50 per cent Negro campers over a period of years expressed their opinions that there were no dangers. The individuals "were personality problems first or those situations probably would not have developed." It was mentioned that Roosevelt College, with its thousands of students, had this problem develop only once, and the couple was talked out of marriage through a presentation of the difficulties and hazards. All persons said the interracial activities should be a by-product, not an end. If one Negro leader, or a few Negro campers were brought into a white camp, an unnatural situation would be presented for both Negro and white. Interracial camping should grow out of a natural situation—neighborhood groups, etc.

We express again our appreciation for the opportunity of attending the convention, and pray we may use the knowledges received for the benefit of all.

Trends in Camping - By Edna Easter and Carl Mehl

A report on the national convention of the American Camping Association held in St. Louis, Missouri, February 15-18.

IT WAS A REAL OPPORTUNITY to be able to join some six hundred other persons interested in camping at the national convention of the American Camping Association held in St. Louis in February. We shall attempt to share the information we received there with those in the church who are responsible for organizing and conducting camp activities.

Five general sessions were held, interspersed with a series of discussions. In each of these discussion periods, from six to twenty groups were meeting simultaneously. With the exception of the series on "Protestant Church Camping," we chose different groups so as to receive the most from the convention. About seventy-five of the nation's outstanding camp leaders conducted the sessions, with approximately 150 other persons serving as resource reporters in specialized areas. (Edna Easter acted as one of three resource leaders on "Family Camping.")

Reverend Malcolm MacMillan of St. Louis, Chairman of the Committee on Spiritual Emphasis of the American Camping Association, in discussing the present increase in church camping and the anticipated growth of school camping, made this challenging statement:

"Our churches must move ahead rapidly to establish themselves in the field of camping or the expansion of school camping is going to find religion shut out of camping as it is shut out of the school program."

Mrs. Francis Bishop, an active member of our Springfield, Missouri, congregation who has had a wide experience in camping (including service as director of the Camp Fire Girl Camp in the Springfield area), served as a resource leader for the discussion on music and also acted as pianist for the convention singing (which was led by Larry Eisenberg of the General Board of Education of the Methodist Church).

THREE NEEDS were mentioned repeatedly in the various sessions and by many of the leaders: (1) the need for decentralization of camp programming, (2) opportunities for democratic planning by the campers, and (3) the necessity for giving each camper a feeling of security. These overlap to an extent, and other needs are related to them. It may be of interest to elaborate somewhat on these trends in thinking:

Decentralization: Keep working groups small, from six to eight campers with one counselor, with the campers of each group having a great deal of freedom in planning their program separate from the entire camp. One speaker paraphrased the camper loss through en masse scheduling, "People, people everywhere, and not a friend to talk with."

Learning to live together, not participation in scheduled classes, is the camp objective. The program is the working together, selecting activities, planning menus, figuring costs, cooking meals, sharing work and play. All activities should be related to this learning to live together. (Some modifications are necessary for co-ed camping, the major emphasis of camping in our church at the present time.)

Closely related to this were the many suggestions (requests, almost) for the elimination of all badges and camp awards. "We must do the things that count and then not count them." "Efforts and enthusiasm are to be our guiding motives." The struggle and competition in earning badges and other awards, it was felt, defeated the purposes of camp.

The democratic process: Campers should be allowed as far as possible to do much of their own planning. The program should never be planned completely by the leaders and simply handed to the camper. All emphasized the importance of a flexible program, to be changed from day to day according to the campers' wishes, the weather, etc.

Competent leadership: To lead this type of camp, counselors must be more mature, better trained, better qualified. The democratic process cannot be carried through "with a group of young, amateur, emotional, immature counselors." Present pre-camp training (during the year) and pre-camp training (on the site just before the opening of the camp) were characterized as being entirely inadequate in most cases.

Relieving tensions: The camp as a place for relieving tensions was mentioned almost constantly. The elimination of awards contributes toward this end. Camp life should be unhurried, relaxing. "I'd like to see all the clocks thrown out of the camp and give the camps back to the children, to be on their own as much as possible . . . run some risks, but do them safely."

Feeling of security: Present-day campers have never known a normal life. The camps must provide this feeling of security while the boys and girls are in camp. This is one of the reasons for decentralized camps (small groups), so that a few campers can get well-acquainted with their particular leaders. The closer the camps are held to the mother-daughter, father-son relationship, the better it will be for the campers.

Outdoor living: "We move into a camp situation and still leave the trees, birds, et cetera, more or less an untouched subject." "We develop a slum in the out of doors." The necessity for an appreciation of natural resources was stressed. "If we don't wake up and conserve some of our resources, there won't be a Christian civilization at all." So-called "nature study" in which the instructor required the camper to collect and identify hundreds of flowers or leaves (the leader supplying the names) was denounced. Rather, the campers were to be encouraged to explore, to observe, to learn for themselves—if no more than to observe the number of legs of an insect, its color, what it seemed to be doing, its habitat—then, under the supervision of a nature leader who assists them in doing their own learning, to identify what they have found. Study of the interrelationships of life was considered very important, both for conservation and for appreciation.

Spiritual values: "Too many of us are afraid to bring religion, an appreciation of God, into the camp program. We don't realize how much it means to girls and boys even though they do not mention it." "The Bible has a definite place in camp." "In the center of the church camping program is the concept of the Christian community and experience in Christian living." "We are living in a cut-flower civilization—we have cut our civilization off from its roots. We have made it so far, but it cannot last." "We have been watering it [doctrine] down so much anyone can take it." We can have unity without conformity. An interesting observation was expressed, "Often those working in agencies have permitted their work to take the place of their church. These secular agencies are not the church and cannot take the place of the church." "Even our schools substitute Americanism for spiritual foundation."

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part Three

IN OCTOBER, 1895, a Hawaiian brother, J. M. Poepoe, aided by Brother Waller, began the translation of the Book of Mormon into the Hawaiian language.

For some time Elder Waller had been contemplating moving his family to the States as he was desirous of bringing up his children where better educational advantages could be had. With this object in view, his wife and children left for California in April, 1896, Elder Waller intending to join them later on.

However, when the report from the General Conference was received, Elder Waller found that the way was not opening as he expected, for he was again appointed in charge of the mission, and no one was sent to assist him. Feeling dissatisfied, he resolved to make the matter a subject of prayer and sought divine guidance, pouring out his soul in humble prayer to the Lord, asking that if the Lord would not make it known to him, He would be good enough to do so through the Prophet of the church, to whom Elder Waller wrote a letter.

A short time after this a letter dated August 27, 1896, was received from President Smith. The following instructions were given by the Spirit:

Say unto my servant, Gilbert: Be not doubtful, but contented. Abide in the Islands yet for a time. Thine efforts and thy labors are seen and accepted. Thy presence and thine admonition, precept and example are needed; and thy counsel required that my work in the Islands may be kept with the flock. Be faithful as thou art earnest, and thy work shall be blessed unto thyself and to many. Put thine energies toward the mission, not neglecting thy business, and thou shalt be pleased with thy progress; and when the time comes, thou wilt be able to leave the work of the mission in the hands of suitable servants, called thereto by my voice. Visit the United States if it be pleasing to thee, but keep thy family with thee; they will need thy care and guidance. Amen.

The following extracts from President Smith's letter are also interesting:

Whenever thinking of the mission and its needs, the thought that you were to leave there has been quite irreconcilable. It so seemed to me that the Lord has planted you there for a purpose, and with a view to the work there. To me the idea that such was the case, has in some way always made your leaving there under the existing conditions obnoxious (for the want of a better word).

I have been permitted, constrained, to write as above, and when you shall read, your mind will perceive and your heart be glad. My counsel, in view of this, is that you put the idea of coming to the States to settle away for awhile; and, relieved of the agitation and perplexity of thinking about it, put renewed attention and thought into your business and the work there. It has seemed to me almost from the start that the Lord's hand was in the matter of your hearing and accepting the work. And I have so often been impressed with the fact of your being at Honolulu as of divine origin, that it has grown upon me to a conviction. We, that is, the church and work, do not need you here; though we should gladly welcome you if you come; but the work does need you there; and I am satisfied it is the will of the Master as well.

This instruction greatly comforted Elder Waller, who made up his mind to remain in the Islands with his family.

Book of Mormon Completed

In October, 1898, the translation of the Book of Mormon was finished. On November 9, this Hawaiian edition was published. It gave the church an opportunity to get the Book of Mormon and the gospel before the people of the Islands, which, through annexation to the United States had become a part of the Land of Joseph.

Under date of November 9, Brother Waller wrote the following letter which was published in the Saints' Herald, Volume 45, page 774:

An edition of the Book of Mormon [Hawaiian] was issued by the Utah Church about 1852, but that has now run out, and for the five hundred copies we are now issuing we ought to be able to find a ready sale among the numerous Hawaiian members of the Utah Church, unless they refuse to buy, as seems to have been the case with the Book of Covenants, which was published a few years ago.

Well, I am thankful that the work is finished. I hope that if not now the time will soon come when the Hawaiians will appreciate what has been done for them. I felt it was the duty of the church to provide them with the translation of this book in their own tongue so that they might have an opportunity to read the record of the Nephites themselves, and I hope and look for an extension of the work as a result. If the Master approves and accepts it, I shall feel amply rewarded for what I have done in connection with it.

All that I feel I need say in connection with my labors in getting out this edition, in the work of translation and other matters, is that I have noticed that the same power that was made manifest in opposition to this work when it was first started was active here, trying to discourage and delay; while on the other hand the wisdom and power of the Lord were plainly shown forth in meeting emergencies and providing a translator when otherwise it seemed it would have been almost impossible to have completed the work, at any rate for a very long time.

On November 17, Elder U. W. Greene arrived and at once started his ministry in the city of Honolulu. His efforts gave a new impetus to the work, and considerable interest was aroused among some of the English-speaking people of the city. After the missionary had endeavored to plant the work in different places on the Island of Oahu, it was thought best to try to establish the work in Hilo, the largest town on the Island of Hawaii; whither Elder Greene and G. K. Poepoe, a native priesthood member, went towards the end of the year.

The Plague

In December the bubonic plague broke out in Honolulu. Consequently, business generally was very seriously interfered with. It was also impossible for some weeks to hold church services. Businessmen assisted in inspection work in Honolulu, Brother Waller's district being Waikiki. He was authorized as an agent for the Board of Health to perform the duties of sanitary inspector in the district of Honolulu. The appointment was made by the president of the Board of Health and approved by the Minister of the Interior.

Part of a letter from Brother Waller, written at Honolulu on January 23, 1899, and printed in the Saints' Herald, Volume 47, page 104, is quoted here:

By this mail I am sending you a newspaper containing the account of the burning of a portion of our city, occupied principally by Chinese and Japanese. My former letter informed you of the existence of bubonic plague. The Board of Health has been for the past weeks fighting against the pestilence, and is still burning infected houses wherever new cases are found. Business is demoralized, and the strain upon the community has at times been intense.

Brethren Greene and Poepoe returned from Hilo last week as they were afraid, on account of existing conditions there, that they might be shut off entirely from communication with Honolulu. Brother Greene is at present staying at my house and is helping me by doing inspecting work among the houses in the neighborhood. It is impossible to do any missionary work as churches are closed and no one is allowed to go from the city into the country districts without a pass from the Board of Health.

Saturday last was a day that will be long remembered in Honolulu. It is fortunate that the Japanese and Chinese in the quarantine districts that were burned did not start a riot. You may imagine what a difficult task it was to control about five thousand Asiatics when homes and goods were being burned, and keep them from breaking through into the unquarantined parts of the city. It was sad to see the crowds of men, women, and little children, hungry and homeless, walking through the streets guarded by men armed with guns and clubs. Some of the Chinese women with their little feet could scarcely walk and had to be assisted by the men. It makes one's heart feel sad to witness such scenes, and makes one long for Zion's redemption. Oh, may it come speedily!

One can, after passing through scenes of this kind, readily understand how easy it will be for the whole world to be put in commotion, and the prophecies fulfilled. It deeply impresses a Latter Day Saint that it is necessary above all things for each one to live his religion. I firmly believe that nothing but the power of God can enable an individual to pass without fear through the times that seem to be ahead of us. One needs the Spirit's presence to enable him to be cheerful and to preserve equanimity of mind under such conditions.

I am thankful that, under these trials, I have the precious hope which comes to those who obey the gospel. My wife would like to leave with the children for California; but the Lord directed me to stay here for a time, and to keep my family with me, and I am going to follow his counsel.

I should very much like to be present at the coming General Conference, but am afraid it is impossible for me to get off. Elder Greene will probably be there, as he seems anxious to return, and if things continue here like this, he will not be able to carry on any missionary work; so I think it is perhaps best for him to leave.

In talking with him the other day I said if delegates could be sent from a good many branches where conditions prevailed such as they are here, it would insure a good conference, as men sent from such places would undoubtedly be humble and prayerful and anxious to do the Lord's will, no matter what it might be.

God's Protection

On February 15, 1900, Brother Waller wrote a letter to the Herald, Volume 47, page 147, from which the following is extracted:

I am glad to report the situation is much improved; we have had no cases of plague for several days in Honolulu. However, it has made its appearance in Maui and Hawaii. We are all well, I am thankful to say. None of our members so far have been attacked by the disease; and also in our business none of the men had the disease. This is encouraging and tends to increase one's faith in God's promises, for one cannot fail to see in it the protecting hand of a loving Father.

To Brother Waller wonderful protection was extended, for before it was known that the bubonic plague was in Honolulu, numbers of rats, which carry and spread the disease, were dying, some being found in the meat cold storage rooms of the Metropolitan Meat Market, adjoining Brother Waller's office in which he spent much time each day. Near the market, an Oriental man died. Brother Waller visited his room, not knowing until the doctors so reported that the man had died a victim of the plague.

This year Elder Waller was again appointed in charge of the mission, and the work was carried on by him and Elder Ingham, who was found to be a capable, worthy, faithful assistant. Elder Greene left in March.

During the prevalence of the plague in Honolulu, while Elder Waller was doing inspection work among the Japanese, his attention was drawn to some Japanese children he found who could speak English very well. He determined, therefore, to make an effort to start a Sunday school among them. Finding that they were willing to be taught, Brother Waller started the school at his own home early in 1900. The Japanese children attending were taught from the Gospel Quarterly, primary grade, and made satisfactory progress, being very attentive and studious.

Broadcasting and Bread-casting

By GRACE L. KRAHL

AS THE STORY GOES, a small boy wrote a letter to his teacher and intended to sign it, "Your little friend," but inadvertently he omitted the letter "r" in the word "friend," which made him a little fiend.

There is a difference of just one letter in the terms, broadcasting and bread-casting, but there is an interesting difference in their meaning. One refers to "talking," the other to "doing."

One is the transmission of sounds forming words of intelligence for the public; the other is the expression of the human heart in deeds.

Broadcasting is the result of technical training, bread-casting is the adventure of faith in human kindness. Broadcasting is invaluable, but good will and benevolence are of still greater importance. For what would this old world be without the "milk of human kindness."

Solomon in his old age gave us some sagacious observations on life. Said he:

Cast thy bread upon the waters for thou shalt find it after many days He that observeth the wind shall not sow and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap In the morning sow thy seed and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that or whether they shall both be alike good.

This wisdom should disarm us of all doubt as to its origin, for it only preceded the teachings of the Christ whose life on earth was spent in anxious concern for others. He who gave little thought to his own welfare, having neither place to lay his head, nor certainty of foot, has waited these "many days" for the response of the world to his goodness.

READERS of the Kansas City Star may recall the incident of an ill-clad youth who twenty-two years ago stepped into the city hall of a southern town one cold, winter night. Firemen and policemen were huddled around a stove, joking and laughing, and at first did not see the lad until he asked, "May I warm in here?" They promptly made a place for him near the stove. "Hungry?" "Yes," he said "I'm hungry." "Have you a place to sleep?" "No sir." They gave him food and a comfortable bed, and in the morning after a warm breakfast he went on his way.

On January 1, 1950, a well-dressed man walked into the same city hall and smilingly said to a group of new officers, "Twenty-two years ago as a boy I was befriended here. Do you have any project on hand in the city that requires money?" One spoke up and named a plan they had in mind for a recreation camp for the city employees. "But we don't expect—" he wavered. "I know," said the stranger as he handed $500 to the spokesman. "I've wanted to do this for a long time." He was afterward identified as a prosperous businessman of the South.

A mother one day finding herself in need of some hose prepared to go shopping. She had hardly reached the store of her choice when she was stopped by a young girl who asked her if she could direct her to the address she had on a slip of paper. The woman looked at it and knew the streets the girl should take to reach the residence indicated, but it was a very long way from where they were—too far to walk and carry a suitcase. So she called a cab, paid the fare, and sent the girl on her way. The woman went home without the hose, but with a warm sense of having done what was right.

"What is there in it?" is a common phrase among people looking for returns on any proposition which requires money. A profit on an investment is justifiable—but there are some intangible returns on good deeds that will, one day, weigh heavily in God's balances.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Does the statement in Doctrine and Covenants 28: 3 that "the twelve which were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand, at the day of my coming, in a pillar of fire, being clothed with robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads," etc., mean that eventually Judas Iscariot will be forgiven?

Missouri

L. J.

ANSWER:

No. Such a conclusion can be reached only by inference; the text itself, when considered with other Scripture relating to Judas, does not justify such inference.

By his call to the apostleship, Judas was given equal opportunity for service and for a place of honor in the kingdom of God with the other apostles. During his years of association with Jesus, he must have gained an intimate knowledge of the Lord, his divinity and his mission, yet Judas turned to sin which grew upon him with the years and culminated in the betrayal. Long before the end, he was known to his brethren as a thief (John 12: 6). Upon a later occasion Jesus didn't hesitate to state plainly to the twelve that "one of you is a devil." He referred to Judas whose disloyalty and disaffection had been showing for some time. Judas' course was qualifying him for the final act of betrayal, probably the greatest act of sin the world has ever known.

Judas' sin, all the way through, was against the greater light. No man of earth had a fuller opportunity of knowing the truth than he, yet he drifted away to a terrible climax by which he became "a son of perdition" (John 17: 12), which means that he had voluntarily surrendered himself so completely to evil that the Spirit of the Lord had forever departed from him. He had sinned against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no forgiveness in this world or in the next. Jesus said he had better never have been born, and Judas evidently reached the same conclusion when he destroyed his own life.

The question is sufficiently answered in Acts 1:20-26 where it is said that Judas "fell" from his office and went to his own place; and that from others who "have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John unto that same day that he was taken up from us," Matthias was chosen with the approval of the church and of the Lord to take the vacated office, whereby he became entitled to all the promises Judas had forfeited. He was "numbered with the eleven apostles."

One great fact should be remembered as covering all, viz., that the promises of God are always conditional, being dependent for their fulfillment upon the faithfulness and worthiness of those receiving them. "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 21: 3.

Charles Fry

QUESTION:

The Book of Acts (5: 30; 10: 39; 13: 29) refers to Christ on a "tree." Please tell the first use of the cross arms being used and by whom.

Ohio

A. C.

ANSWER:

As a means of execution the cross is of very ancient date, the beginnings of which are unknown. References found in Genesis 40: 10; Deuteronomy 21: 22; Joshua 8: 29; 10: 26; and Esther 7: 10, are understood to mean crucifixion on a cross, the same as those in Acts. The cross was used anciently by Oriental nations. The Carthaginians used it, and it is probable that the Romans adopted it from them. While at times a single post was used, it was generally supplied with a cross beam, either across the top like a capital "T," or fastened a little below the top as the cross of Calvary. As to when cross arms were first used we find no information, though it is likely they came into use with the adoption of crucifixion as a method of execution.

Sketches From the Life of Jane Stuart MacDonald

Jane Stuart was born in Bengier, Ireland, on May 22, 1838, and was baptized a member of the Latter Day Saint Church at the age of twelve in the sea between Salcots and Stinson, Scotland. When she was seventeen, she and her mother and three sisters sailed for America. From Boston, Massachusetts, they went to Salt Lake City, Utah, with the first handcart company. With the other 350 people in the company, they suffered many privations and hardships. Those who survived reached Salt Lake City in September, 1855. A month later Jane was married to Alex MacDonald.

These people had worked hard to pay for their immigration to Zion and were disappointed to discover the difference in doctrine of the church in Utah and the church in Scotland. Secretly they made plans to return to Illinois, and in 1856 a small group led by Alex MacDonald left Salt Lake City. Many exciting adventures were theirs as they traveled through Indian territory. Once as Jane was preparing Scotch scones she looked up and saw a redskin watching her. When she put them in a sack to take outside, he grabbed her wrist, took the scones, and ran back into the woods before she could tell anyone what had happened. During the episode she had been too frightened to scream. Another Indian, upon seeing her husband's checked shirt, wanted to trade his buffalo robe for it. After the swap was made, he was so pleased with the shirt that he put it on and—wearing nothing but his newly-acquired checks—began running out across the plains. Jane and her family made good use of the buffalo robe.

The little band reached Illinois and settled in a mining camp about two and a half miles from Alton. Eleven children were born to Jane and Alex. Four of them died in childhood, and Alex passed away in 1894. Three years later Jane and her children moved to Godfrey, and in 1905 to Alton. Here a few faithful Saints met in homes to carry on the work of the Reorganization. Jane had been accepted into the church on her original baptism in Scotland. Later she received her patriarchal blessing, the promises of which were fulfilled before she died on February 27, 1921. She is buried in Oakwood Cemetery, Upper Alton, Illinois.

Letter of Appreciation From a New Member

It has been almost three years since I requested prayers in the Herald. I wish to thank all who remembered me with cards and letters and in prayer. Since then I and my two daughters have become members of the Reorganized Church. My grandfather, M. E. Roberts told me the gospel story. He sent me The Angel Message, the Herald, The Call at Evening, and other church literature. At that time I could hardly see to read a newspaper, but when I began reading church books, my sight seemed perfect. This is just one of the happy experiences I have had since finding the true church.

My husband is not yet a member. Please pray for us.

Wants to Correspond With Members

I did not have the privilege of being reared in a Latter Day Saint home, but when I did find the true church, I was shown in vision that it was God's work. Recently, when I became discouraged, I was reminded of the wonderful experiences I had been permitted to have. Another time when I was feeling depressed, a voice spoke to me. I said, "Lord, I did not know you were so near." He answered, "I have not forsaken you but have watched over you and protected you even when you did not know it." I hope I will live in such a way that he will always be with me. I would like to live in a neighborhood where there are other Saints. I shall appreciate hearing from any members who care to write as I am very lonely. Please pray that I will be blessed financially as I am having difficulty paying my bills.

Prayers Requested By Member in Texas

I enjoy reading the Herald, especially the letters. There are a few Saints here in Lamesa who meet at our home on Sunday and Wednesday evening. I am thankful that the Lord has made it possible for his work to be taught in our home. I shall appreciate having other members pray that those not of the faith who attend our services will see fit to accept it, and that those who do belong will continue steadfast in their belief. I also ask prayers for the spiritual welfare of my family. My husband and I were baptized in 1934 by Brother T. B. Sharp. We shall be happy to hear from other members.

From an Isolated Widow

I want to thank all the contributors to the Herald for making it such a helpful publication. Since I am isolated and cannot attend church on Sunday, I read the Herald from cover to cover and then reread the best articles. I have lived in Utah the past twelve years, and the nearest branch, Provo, is eighty-seven miles away, so I don't get to go very often. The past five years have been difficult; my husband suffered a long illness before his death. It helps to know, though, that God's promises are true and he is always near to help us in time of trial. I do not like to see my four children growing up without church privileges, and I am praying a way will open up for us to move closer to a branch soon.

I shall appreciate hearing from any members who care to write.

From an Isolated Member in Texas

On September 11 we moved to Littlefield, Texas, from Oklahoma, and I would like to contact any other Saints who may live in this vicinity. My husband does not belong to the church, but both he and our oldest son are interested. If there are elders who are willing to come to this city, we would be happy to open our home for cottage meetings.

I also ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my companion and I may receive a physical blessing. I have been told I should have an operation, but perhaps God will see fit to heal me.

Briefs

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—The annual business meeting elected Fred Moore, pastor; Robert Brigham, adult supervisor; Richard Schlafer, supervisor of young people; Eva Moore, children's supervisor; Ester Brigham director of church school; Leah Miller, supervisor of women's department; Margaret Bender, branch secretary, and Carl Wirth, financial agent.

On November 19 the women's department had a bazaar and bake sale which netted $150.

On December 19 the church school presented the Christmas program. At the close of the program, the children marched to the altar on which was a scene of the nativity and presented their white gift offering as their gift to Christ. The deacons then waited upon the adults for their offering.

Two young people from the branch are attending Graceland, Evelyn Brigham and Marian Kuinzi.

The guest speakers this year have been Evangelist Harry Wasson of Janesville, Carl Heaviland, pastor of Milwaukee, and Frank Mussell, district president.

The regular midweek prayer meeting is being held at homes during the winter months. Robert Brigham is the teacher of a Book of Mormon class that meets every Sunday evening. The women's department meets twice a month and are studying "Home Beautiful."

On February 10 the Zion's League had a chili supper at the church, after which they gave a humorous entertainment. Three young men who are attending the University are regular attendants at church. They are Glenn Price of Lincoln, Nebraska; Robert Flanders of Independence, Missouri, and Norman Fernauer of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

On February 12 Brother and Sister Bernie Taylor held open house for Sister Taylor's parents, Brother and Sister Clyde Richardson on their fiftieth wedding anniversary.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—The spring conference of the West Virginia District was held February 4 and 5.

Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Seventy Merle Guthrie were present and gave inspirational messages and counsel to the conference.

Elder Robert E. Rodgers of Wellsburg, who for the past several years has faithfully served this district as president, was ordained to the office of High Priest and Patriarch. He was released from other church administrative duties and highly commended for the excellent work he has done in the district.

Elder Samuel Zonker of Wellsburg, who served as one of the district president's counselors, was unanimously chosen to succeed Elder Rodgers as district president. For several years he has been an untiring worker in behalf of the district church interests and is well qualified for his new office. In choosing his two counselors, he retained Elder Wayne Wilson of Parkersburg, who has ably served in this capacity for several years, and appointed Elder Otto Melchor of Wellsburg, as his other counselor. Elder Melchor is bishop's agent for this district and has given valuable service to the church.

Twelve delegates to General Conference were elected during the business session: P. E. Farrow, Merle Guthrie, Robert E. Rodgers, Samuel Zonker, Genevieve Zonker, Clyde Zonker, Otto Melchor, Raymond Martin, Blanche Martin, Leonard Pack, Hubert Hinkle, and Homer Gunn.—Reported by MARGARET C. PACK.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—At a district conference held recently at Wellsburg, West Virginia, Brother Robert E. Rodgers resigned as district president, having been called and ordained to a higher office in the priesthood. Brother Samuel M. Zonker, Wellsburg, West Virginia, was elected to fill the unexpired term. Counselors elected to serve with him are Wayne Wilson and Otto Melcher.

VERMONT HEIGHTS MISSION, LOS ANGELES.—About two and a half years ago, approximately twelve members of the Central Los Angeles Branch who live in the southwest area met together to study the Book of Mormon one night each week in their homes. About this time Elder Garland Tickemyer made a survey of the rapidly expanding areas around Los Angeles to ascertain the prospects for establishing missions in the various sections. So one Sunday morning soon after, the little group which had been meeting to study the Book of Mormon met at the home of Sister Olivette Ball, under the direction of Brother Tickemyer with Elder W. W. Powers as pastor, to begin the mission of Vermont Heights. There were about twenty adults and fifteen children that Sunday morning. As the group outgrew Sister Ball's home, they met in the Townsend Hall, which though roomier, had its difficulties in that there was but a curtain to divide the "sanctuary" from the junior church. As soon as possible they found more adequate quarters in the Roofers' Hall, where there were rooms for both classwork and the church worship. Furniture, and a piano were donated by Sister Laura Markman, Brother and Sister Kelly Brake and others, and money was raised for essentials. Brother Raymond Loar, assisted by many others, has worked on building fund projects and they have raised a considerable amount of funds toward a new church for the group in the future.

Several of the young men were called to offices of the priesthood. Clifford Saxton was ordained to the office of elder, and Stanley Propst to the office of deacon, and later Raymond Loar to the office of deacon, and Oliver Dimmitt to the office of teacher.

A department of women was started under the leadership of Sister Laura Markman and Maggie Gray. In the new election of officers, Sister Virgie Loar was elected to succeed these able ladies with the promise of their help in assisting her.

The goal of building a church is ever before the mission. At present they have raised around $1,400, and have more than doubled the congregation.

Visiting ministers have been F. A. Smith, Paul M. Hanson, John Rushton, Charles Hield, Louis Ostertag, Garland Tickemyer, and others of the California area.

The music department is under the direction of Sister Bessie Covalt assisted by her daughter, Erleta.

Zion's League was at first under the leadership of Brother and Sister Clifford Saxton, who were succeeded by Brother and Sister Walter Powers. Brother Walter Walden is in charge of the junior church. Teachers and speakers are William Hall, Walter Walden, William Waibel, Walter Powers, W. W. Powers, pastor, and until his death last fall, John T. Scott.

Brother and Sister Stanley Propst keep the building clean and have charge of the book and church publication desk. Brother Raymond Loar prepares the bulletin for each Sunday. Sister Dorothea Loar is the church secretary. Brother Oliver Dimmitt is the treasurer and Bishop's solicitor. Brother Charles Thornton is in charge of building material and labor, Mrs. Madge Thornton is hostess. Sisters Laura Markman and Jennie Brake are friendly visitors.—Reported by Ruth Dimmitt.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.—January 23, the Zion's Leagues of the Nauvoo District were guests of the Burlington, Iowa, League at a skating party with over forty young people in attendance.

On February 18 and 19, the District Zion's Leagues held their annual "Frost Frolic" in Fort Madison, Iowa, with about thirty-five young people in attendance. The frolic began Saturday afternoon with registration at the church, followed by a potluck supper and entertainment, under the direction of Ft. Madison's League leader, Edward McKiernan. The young people stayed in private homes for the night. Sunday morning a fellowship service was conducted by Melvin E. Francis, pastor of the branch, assisted by Brother Max Hromek. The morning worship service, under the direction of Betty Tripp, district League supervisor, was presented by the young people from the various branches. The theme for this service was, "Jesus Calls Us to Be Workers for Him."

A special young people's class was taught by Brother McKiernan following the theme, "A Peculiar People." Brother Arnold Ourth, pastor of the Nauvoo, Illinois, Branch, spoke during the preaching hour on "Attitudes."

Concluding the week-end festivities was the dinner meal served by the women of the Fort Madison Branch.

A week end is being planned at Burlington, Iowa, in commemoration of the Restoration of the Church in April.—Reported by BETTY TRIPP.

CHICAGO AND NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICTS.—Priesthood members from the two districts met in Aurora February 18 and 19, for a Bi-district Priesthood Institute. Apostles D. T. Williams and Maurice Draper were in charge of the services, assisted by District Presidents J. C. Stuart of Chicago and Lloyd E. Cleveland of Northeastern Illinois.

The institute was well attended from both districts in spite of inclement weather. Classes which were taught by Apostle Draper centered around the general theme of evangelism. Apostle Williams delivered the sermon at the eleven o'clock worship hour on Sunday morning. The closing session on Sunday afternoon was a dedication service with Apostle Williams in charge.

On February 19, morning classes were held for the women. The first class period on Vacation Church School work was in charge of the Department of Religious Education, planned by Miss Roberta Gregory and Mrs. Irah Nelson of Northeastern Illinois District, and Mrs. Hattie Bell of Chicago District. The second class session covering the work of the Department of Women was in charge of Mrs. Cleo Settles of Northeastern Illinois District.

Meals were served by the Aurora council of women.

Bishop Earl T. Higdon of Far West Stake spent the week of January 15-22 conducting classwork relating to the financial law and Zionic problems throughout the Northeastern Illinois District. Branches visited were Deselm, Plano, Mission, Aurora, and Forrest. The week was designated as Financial Observance Week.—Reported by LLOYD E. CLEVELAND, District President.

SEATTLE FIRST CHURCH, WASHINGTON.—A talent festival and hobby show given February 17 in the P. I. Auditorium was well attended. Over thirty talent features and over twenty-five hobby exhibits were shown. Paul Wellington, pastor, was master of ceremonies.

The La-Da-Sa Luncheon was held at the home of Gertrude Clark. Sister Eva Lundeen, district women's leader, gave a review covering work of the past three years. Mrs. Louise Wrigley gave several book reviews.

Three men have accepted priesthood callings: Victor Hastings to priest, Wayne Smith to teacher, Joseph Johnson to deacon.

Mrs. Eleanor Gibson, wife of Warren Gibson, died January 15. Elder Charles Powers preached the funeral sermon.—Reported by JESSIE EARL.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT, PENNSYLVANIA.—The District Priesthood Institute and Conference was held February 10, 11, and 12 at Pittsburgh. Priesthood classes were conducted Friday evening and all day Saturday under the direction of Seventy Merle Guthrie.

A fellowship service was held Sunday morning. Brother Guthrie spoke at the 11:00 service. A musical program and a short business session was held in the afternoon.

At this time the following delegates were elected to General Conference: D. R. Ross, Arthur Warner, Wilford Gaskill, Tom Morgan, T. Freland, Samuel Caughenour, and Isabelle Chapman. Reported by DOROTHY RAISBECK.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA. — Emerson A. Link was officially appointed bishop's agent for the Northeast Nebraska District, and began the duties of the office on February 15.

Seventy-five men attended the banquet held at the beginning of the priesthood institute. Following the banquet, Bishop Walter Johnson conducted a class. On Sunday morning a prayer meeting was held, followed by church school. All adults were invited to attend the class that was taught by Brother Johnson at the church school hour. Apostle D. T. Williams was the speaker at the morning worship service. The theme of the institute was "Evangelism and Church Finance."

On February 5 Henry Hughson was baptized by Elder Claude Carter of Plattsmouth. On the same day Billy, Gilbert, and Mary Williams were baptized by Elder Albert Livingston.—Taken from Ray-O-Lite.

WINFIELD, KANSAS.—Two young members of the church were presented with Eagle awards, January 10, in a Boy Scout Court of Honor held at the Chilocco Indian School located in north-central Oklahoma. Receiving the awards were George and Sequoyah England, son and nephew, respectively, of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil England.

George and Sequoyah, both fourteen years of age, are members of the freshman class at the school. Sequoyah is class president, while George is class representative on the student council. Both are members of the Honor Society. Both boys are of Indian decent, being quarter-blood Cherokees. Virgil England, father of George, holds the office of priest and is employed by the Chilocco Indian School as Instructor of Printing.

Another son of the Englands, Leon, is also an active Scout and a church member.

The Englands are active members of the branch and are well known throughout the Kansas, Oklahoma, and Spring River districts.—Reported by C. S. GOSE.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA. — A Builder's Club has been formed by people who are interested in helping with the building projects of the district. During October, November, and December, 1,353 hours of work were donated to the Van Nuys building. Workers from Van Nuys gave 970 of these hours and workers from other branches gave 383 hours. Ralph Root of Lennox is in charge of the club.

These men were approved for ordination at the last district conference: Manford Ralston to elder; Marvin E. Moore, Orville James, and Robert Johnson to priests; Donald Johnson and Lew Gene Davis to deacons.

A survey is being made of the district to determine whether the need is great enough to justify making efforts to establish a church rest home for the aged on the west coast.—Taken from Los Angeles Metropolitan District News.

DENVER, COLORADO. — The Zion's League sponsored a very unique "Brotherhood Banquet" on February 16 under the direction of Barnett W. Berridge, League director and David Shupe, League president. Following a very fine meal, five foreign students from the University of Denver responded to the challenge of Pastor Ward A. Hougas. Speakers included: James Leroy Johnson, Negro from St. Louis; Antonio Pun Kay of Ica, Peru; Abdul Majid Zoobi, Deravi, Syria; Paul Tuan, Shanghai, China, and Leo Rattner, Vienna, Austria. "Man, One Family" was shown as a sound movie at the vesper service on the preceding Sunday and set the stage for the discussions. The guest speakers were also present for the vesper service and occupied places on the platform.—Reported by WARD HOUGAS.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—The new mission has completed its first month of activities. An average attendance of sixty-six Saints attended a Communion service and preaching services with Seventy F. C. Bevan, Elder Charles Shippy, Elder Lyle Woodstock, and Evangelist W. W. Richards as speakers.

The following officers have been appointed to serve the mission under the direction of Rock Island District President Elder L. W. Woodstock; Elder E. R. Williams, counselor; Seventy F. C. Bevan, mission assistant; Elder Charles Shippy, mission assistant; Mrs. B. A. Howard, secretary; Deacon George C. Shippy, treasurer; Miss Etta Cosner, church school director; Mrs. George C. Shippy, supervisor of the women's department; Mr. Warren A. Hinkle, director of social activities.

Officers of the women's department are Mrs. Eul Blackledge, assistant leader; Mrs. Charles Shippy, secretary; Mrs. Vina Gray, treasurer; Doris Gray, director of music; Mrs. Warren J. Hinkle and Miss Jeanne Hinkle, assistant music directors; Mrs. Ora Lindsay, Mrs. Laura Felio, and Mrs. Bernard O'Leary, program committee; Mrs. Warren A. Hinkle, Mrs. Stanley Maslowski, Mrs. Dorothy Englehardt, ways and means committee. There were 23 present at the first meeting. An executive meeting was held a week later and tentative plans set for the next few months. These include regular class sessions twice a month, studying Book of Mormon Studies; two craft classes a month as well as extra activities, such as stork showers, mother-daughter banquet, a woman's day, several bake sales, and other projects, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the building fund.

A group of Orioles was organized with Mrs. Frank Steinecke as monitor, and they are meeting twice a month.

Prayer services were started, and attendance averaged 22 for the month.

Mimeographed programs are prepared each Sunday by Elder O. E. Lindsay.

Income has been fine and is showing a gain over expenditures. Thirty-six new Hymnals were purchased as well as a number of church school supplies. A building fund has been established, and for the first month $9.00 was contributed.

The priesthood is doing a great deal of visiting, and the response has been fine from those visited.—Reported by MRS. GEORGE C. SHIPPY.

Samuel Powers Memorial Service, Beloit, Wisconsin

JANUARY 22, 1950

By Alma May Brookover

AT THE OPENING of the church school hour the main auditorium was nearly filled with Saints and friends representing branches throughout the Wisconsin district, who came to honor the memory of the late Apostle Samuel Powers, pioneer of the Reorganization and early member of Beloit Branch.

Elder Carl Heaviland of Milwaukee was instructor of the combined classes. He said that perhaps the branches and groups around Beloit were fortunate at the time of Joseph's death in being somewhat removed from church headquarters because they were not so readily influenced by the things which happened as those who lived in Nauvoo. These people did not consider that Christ's church had been removed because the prophet had been martyred. They continued to teach the same doctrine, elect officers, and carry on as before, feeling that they still belonged to the church which was organized in 1830. They believed in the promise of God that in his own due time a leader of the seed of Joseph Smith would be called and ordained, and they would accept no other leadership, except temporarily, but continued to wait, remaining faithful to the doctrine and teachings of the church.

The 11:00 o'clock service opened with a call to worship by Pastor Clyde Funk. The congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel," and Patriarch H. A. Wasson gave the invocation. Then followed an anthem by the girls' chorus, after which Apostle Arthur Oakman delivered the memorial address.

Mrs. Agnes Millen, a granddaughter of Samuel Powers, was introduced by Alma Brookover, historian of the Beloit Branch. Mrs. Millen gave an interesting talk, including a genealogy of the Powers family from 1066.

The service concluded with a prayer by Apostle Arthur Oakman, at the grave of Apostle Powers in the Afton Cemetery, and the placing of a wreath on the grave by a grandson, Samuel Powers.

The home and grave of Apostle Samuel Powers, together with the home of Brother Henry Pease and the Jason W. Briggs property, were recently located by Alma Brookover, branch historian. The Samuel Powers memorial service is the first of several historical projects planned by the Beloit Branch.

NOTE—The Herald of September 19, 1949, carried a cover picture and story of Apostle Powers.—Editors.

Women Who Pioneered - By Mrs. J. Charles Mottashed

Given at Flint, Michigan, at a Vesper Service, January 8, 1950

I AM VERY GRATEFUL for the histories of the past. Many times I have been helped over what seemed to be a problem by reading and pondering over the experiences of women who were in the same position I seemed to be in. I like to think that the women in the Bible and in the Book of Mormon were much like the women of today, with many of the same problems. These women were married to stalwart men who pioneered, and because they realized the sacredness of their marriage vow, they went along and in their quiet manner helped to prepare the way for all of us.

The Book of Mormon tells us that before Christ was born, a prominent man named Lehi came to the American continent. He and his wife, Sariah, had four sons. In a vision, Lehi was told to leave his native land Jerusalem and was given the route to follow to cross the ocean. When he took his family "into the wilderness," he had to abandon everything he owned, for he could take very little with him. On the way to the promised land, while wandering about between Jerusalem and on the Pacific Ocean, Lehi's family was increased by two more sons. The vision he had received from the Lord caused him to leave his comfortable home for the life of a pioneer. He had many experiences that were difficult, and many times, we are told, Sariah was discouraged and felt that her husband was visionary, but she never murmured. On the occasion when their sons returned from Jerusalem with the brass plates (our Old Testament) her son, Nephi, wrote: "My mother Sariah was exceedingly glad, for she truly had mourned because of us." Sariah (like any of us mothers) thought they had perished; she complained to her husband that he should not have sent them; she doubted his vision and thought her sons were lost, but when they returned, 'tis written, "our mother was comforted."

I do not believe Sariah failed to support her husband spiritually. I like to think of her still hoping and trusting for their sons return, probably with much less knowledge of God's orders than her husband had. I see her growing discouraged with tasks they tried, and I see him comforting her. I like the admission of God's hand, "For when we returned our mother was comforted."

I look at Sariah—she may not have had the faith in God her husband had, maybe not so much knowledge either, but she accepted the trials and wended her way on to become one of the pioneer women on the American Continent.

I LIKE TO READ about Abish, a Lamanite, although she was not a Christian. You recall that when the missionary Ammon went among the Lamanites under a special urge to convert them, he preached the gospel to the king who, after hearing the gospel and believing it, was overcome by the Spirit and power of God. The queen believed and was overcome also, and there was confusion until Abish the maid came. She was aware of the conversion of her king and queen and desired to share this happiness with the rest of the people, so she hurried from house to house to announce the conversion of the royal family and ask the Lamanites to come and see; but when they came and saw, they were angry. They demanded to know the cause. They shouted that the Nephite stranger was responsible for the turmoil. Abish knew it was due to the power of the Lord who was working with the prostrate forms of the king and queen, and she was able to help persuade the royal family to accept Christianity. The story of Abish is an example of courage recorded to help encourage us.

Let us look at the king's wife, although we do not know her name. We read that she was attentive to the king and watched through the night to revive him. Then we have the record of the king's confession to her. When he was revived, he took her by the hand and said: "Blessed be the name of God and blessed art thou, for as surely as thou livest I have seen my Redeemer, who shall come forth and be born of a woman and redeem all those who will believe on his name." His was a true conversion. The queen also declared her faith by exclaiming, "Oh, blessed Jesus who has saved me from an awful hell. . . . Oh, blessed God, have mercy on these people."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of Sister Lydia Supry, as recorded in the Autumn Leaves of January, 1896, is of interest too. Lydia was born on May 18, 1831. Her parents, Alonzo and Sara Goodrich, were married in New York state in 1825 and left immediately for the territory of Michigan to make their home. They came by way of the Great Lakes and took up a homestead in what was afterwards called Oakland County, a few miles from Pontiac. In that day, Michigan was mostly a wilderness, and Detroit was then a small French trading town. Sara and Alonzo took up some land and immediately began clearing it. Here Lydia and four other children were born. When

Lydia was about four years of age, her father became dissatisfied with the location of their home and wanted to push farther west. His brother and another family by the name of Smith had moved near him. After much consideration, Alonzo and his brother decided to go on horseback to DeWitt, in Clinton County. After looking things over, they found 160 acres of land they desired to have.

It took Lydia's father a year to build a small log house; then he started back to move his family. On their return, they took with them fruit and provisions enough for a year. This was in the fall, and much had to be done to the house to make it comfortable for the winter. In the spring, they commenced clearing the land. When their provisions began to run low, Lydia's father left to get food at Pontiac, the nearest trading post. There was quite a settlement of friendly Indians near, and the Goodrich family was able to obtain venison and fish by giving them some staple groceries. As soon as the father returned with the provisions, he began to build a small schoolhouse on the corner of his land. Later, when new neighbors named Smith moved in, a small building near the school was built for a church. Many ministers passed through and held meetings in the building. The Goodrich family was religious, observed the Sabbath, and put into action each day the instruction to "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

At nineteen, Lydia married a young man, Peter Supry, who had come to assist her father in building a home. They moved to Lansing, where later their son was born. Lydia read her Bible and took great comfort in praying. When a revival meeting was held by a religious group, she joined that church. She asked to be baptized by immersion but was told that this was not necessary. Although she was happy in her new religion and experienced a degree of peace and comfort, she often felt that this new religion "was not the full gospel of Jesus."

When their son was eight, they adopted a little girl, Ida, and their life seemed ideal until Peter's health failed. After his death she could find no comfort in the words of the minister and for many years stayed away from church. When her son was almost grown, an accident befell him. Lydia realized that his life had been spared, and her interest in religion was renewed because of her gratefulness to God for this blessing.

She now desired to travel and organize Sunday schools, and while visiting an old friend, Mrs. Stafford in Lansing, heard that she had found a new gospel. Lydia went with her to hear a sermon. Elder Rathburn of the Reorganized Church was the speaker, and Lydia was thrilled with the divine message. Elder Rathburn invited her to visit them. She enjoyed reading the Book of Mormon, and the explanations she learned of the Bible were wonderful to her. At last she had found the church with the authoritative priesthood, and on October 8, 1884, she was baptized. Lydia never stopped until she retraced her steps and interested many people in this church in the towns she had visited several years before. She was instrumental in carrying the gospel to Newago, Muskegon, St. Johns, and Ovid. Her testimony was that she knew the church to be of divine origin and the everlasting gospel that is to be preached before the second coming of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. She fully realized she was living in the "hastening time" and always had her lamp trimmed and burning.

It May Be Later Than We Think - By Lucy Goode McDowell

WHILE THIS IS ADDRESSED particularly to those residing in Independence as they prepare to greet Conference visitors, the suggestions can be followed by others.

It may seem a bit too early and the edges of the weather not quite inviting enough to think about working in our yards, but even by the time this reaches the printer "it will be later than you think." The spring birds are already singing in the trees; crocuses and jonquils are pushing their little green tips to the sun; even the moths have begun their annual destructive course up our trees—and General Conference is only days away.

We have not often written for the Herald about the needed outdoor preparation for Conference. To this city come people from all over the world to see us, our churches, our homes, and to witness a richer way of life. Although the interiors of our homes are made ready to welcome guests, the yards which greet our visitors first are slighted. In Independence, there is no general city beautification program, although there are many garden clubs doing good work. However, if all of us became yard-conscious, our city could be worthy of being designated the "city beautiful." Providing no ice or snow storms precede conference, we shall need only three days' work outside a few simple rules to make our yards attractive.

It is too early to uncover very much, but we can begin by removing all the twigs and branches that have fallen during the winter. We should pick up all trash and papers which have escaped the incinerator on winter days and remove some of the leaves so that the work of the real clean-up day in May will be less arduous. Early shrubs—flowering quince, forsythia, and spirea—should not be pruned but saved for forcing so that there can be flowers indoors. The front lawn should be raked and the sod edged away from the walks. Small trees and shrubs may be aerated by digging a circle around each and turning the sod over. The shrub should then be fed some fertilizer. This guarantees more abundant flowers in the spring.

This tailoring and good barbering will make our yards smile back at us and at all our guests. The front yard will look so trim we will want to go to the back yard and give it the same treatment. Many a hurried breakfast by the kitchen window will be made happier by the view that greets the eye, even if no one but the family sees it; and we shall be much more ready for the day's worship for having made our yards more beautiful.

Remember: "In your town, on your street, your place is you."

Let's all get to work on our yards while there is yet time. "It may be later than you think." May we truly be able to say, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

What's in It for Me?

By NORA MOSER

This church with the too-long name. What's in it for me? I got along so far without it. What good will it do me?

But this is the only true church—
Yeah, that's what they all say. How do you know it is?

This is the gospel restored to the earth in the last days. God spoke to Joseph Smith, and we are the legal and lineal successors of the church he founded in 1830.

So God spoke to Joe Smith, did he? Mebbe so and mebbe not so. Lots of people who see things and hear voices are slightly off in the upper story. What proof you got better than that?

The Restoration was foretold in the Bible. It says in Isaiah—

Look, you can't prove anything to me by the Bible. The Bible is just words in a book. You think I believe everything I read in print?

We have authority. In the apostasy the authority of the priesthood was taken from the earth, and then it was restored through Joseph Smith. No other priesthood has the right to act in the name of God.

Authority—sounds to me like the divine right of kings. It's been a few hundred years already since people fell for that stuff.

And revelation. We believe that God still speaks to us today, through the president of the church.

He does, eh? What's he say? What's the latest word from the great white throne?

Why the revelation at last General Conference was mostly about calling some new men to be apostles, and the quorum of twelve is to stay closer to the Center Place.

That's not exactly world-shaking. It doesn't affect anybody but a few people in your church organization. Besides, most outfits get along pretty good without God appointing the board of directors. What I would like to know is what God thinks about the United Nations and the atom bomb and health insurance and what to do about Russia and the divorce rate. I don't think your revelation is much good to me.

We have the record of how the Indians got to this hemisphere and that Jesus visited them, and we are finding archaeological evidence which supports our position.

Now that is an interesting theory. You might tell me some more about it sometime. But it's only ancient history after all, and I am still trying to find out what's in it for me.

You're interested in going to heaven and having eternal life, aren't you?

Oh, you claim nobody goes to heaven but you Latter Day Saints? You're leaving an awful lot of people out in the heat.

Wait; it isn't all that bad. We are taught that only those who have obeyed the whole gospel will enjoy the full glory of God, but there are lesser degrees of glory for those who obeyed according to the partial light they had.

Well, I must admit that is an improvement over a straight open-and-shut proposition of either heaven or hell and no in-between. But I am not a bit sure I believe in life after death, anyway. That's not here and now. What good would your church do me next month or next year? What are you getting out of it?

I wouldn't even be here except for the church. My parents met through the church. They went to live in Independence, Missouri, because of the church, and there are lots of worse places they could have lived. Because of the church, they trained themselves and me in clean habits and a Christian code of right and wrong.

They established me in the widespread community of Latter Day Saints. My best friends are in the church. I think more of the church people than I do of some of my blood relatives. When I have moved to a new town, the church members there always accepted me at once, helped me find a place to stay, and did anything else they could for me.

Through the influence of church people I went to Graceland College. I probably would not have gone to college at all, otherwise. There I made new and dear freinds. There I grew into more mature ideas about people and religion and God. At Graceland I saw my way clear to continue my education. At the university I was still with Grace-landers and came to know many from other years than mine. Now I want to teach others some of the things I have learned.

Listen to my friend who works with young people:

Maybe it's just that I like being a big frog in a little puddle, but I believe there is more opportunity for personal development and achievement in my church, small and struggling as it is, than in a big, slick-running organization. I came up gradually, being given small responsibilities in church school and Zion's League. I wasn't bright or outstanding in any respect and would never have been noticed in a large group where many had talents. But our group was small, and I had to take my turn at doing and growing. I knew I was needed and that I could fulfill the need.

In this mass-produced world, with workers as interchangeable in their jobs as the parts of Ford cars, with mass information, mass entertainment, and standardized tastes, the uniqueness of the human individual is glossed over until it is almost lost. The church is one of the few places where the Christian ideal of individual human worth is still expressed. The decision to join the church is a matter of personal choice, marked with appropriate ceremony. The church body values each member for himself alone without regard for his worldly status.

The Reorganized Latter Day Saints enroll less than one tenth of one per cent of the population of the United States. We have a long way to go. That is why each individual is so badly needed. We have a long uphill pull. If we were already over the crest of the hill, if we were one of the two or three largest denominations in the country, it would be easy and probably correct to feel that there is nothing for little insignificant me to do in the church. But it isn't nearly as much fun to coast as to struggle.

Mountain climbing is a great sport, but who ever heard anyone rave about walking down a gentle slope? If you want only to receive, we can't do much for you, but if you want to work always a little beyond your capacity, you came to the right place.

On the other hand, it would be easy for some people to say we have accomplished so little in 120 years that it is no use to go on. In 1830 it looked as if all that was necessary for Zion was to settle a community of people out west on new land. Today life is much more complicated. Comparative isolation cannot be maintained, as the Amish and other communities are finding out. It may be that too many of our people still picture an 1830 Zion in their minds. We need a picture of a workable 1950 Zion. That picture will be a huge jigsaw, with pieces furnished by specialists in many fields. Then it will take a lot of work to put the pieces together.

Impossible? Take too long? A Jewish Zionist wouldn't say so. It took almost two thousand years, but today there is a State of Israel.

Whatever You Are

BY RUTH MIDGORDEN GOODWIN

HE SAT IN THE LOUNGE of the student center, a newspaper obscuring everything but his legs stretched straight in front of him. He was what people call a typical college student. And, since no one can say what a typical college student is, maybe he was. At any rate, though he seemed absorbed in the comic page, his mind wasn't there.

Coal strike—threatened shutdown of the steel industry—scandal in Hollywood—huge federal spending and too many government workers—failure of the East and West to get along—the hydrogen bomb. "What is the answer? Rather, what can I do that will make any difference at all in the mad hodgepodge of world conditions?" he thought.

The measured ticktock, ticktock of the grandfather's clock across the room disturbed him. "Time is running out. Will we humans continue in our thoughtless, selfish, avaricious way until we bring a horrible catastrophe upon ourselves?" He sat brooding, as people will, about the immensity of the problems before this and succeeding generations.

Then the ticking of the clock recalled to him another clock that ticked its patient way, with musical chiming of the hours, through prayer meetings at home. "And I'm grateful to be here tonight, thankful to God that he has helped me to be a better person this day." It was the testimony of a sister who strove to be patient. "I'm thankful that things are as well as they are," spoke another for whom life had never been a bed of roses. "I'm glad to be able to do a little bit toward building God's kingdom," from a man unlearned in books but one who, with love and loyalty, lit the fires and swept the church.

The grandfather's clock ticked on—measured, yes, but now he thought of its tones as steady and sure. "Serve where you are—serve where you are."

"And be the best of whatever you are," he added thoughtfully. "No one of us can do less if we sense our significance as a creation of God. It's all the people, great and small, consistently doing their best for God, not allowing themselves the respite of over-discouragement or despair because of impending catastrophe, who will build the kingdom. No matter who or what we are—if we do the utmost where we are and keep trying harder, never satisfied with our accomplishments, we'll do it yet."

The clock chimed the hour. "But the time is now—not tomorrow nor next year. Earnestly, diligently I must work now so my progress will be steady and sure as the progress of the clock's hands around its face."

Report on the "Messiah" Broadcast

Thanks for the fine rendition of the Messiah last evening . . .

GALEN C. THURSTON
Valley City, North Dakota

Your last night's rendition of the Messiah came in grand here—fine in every way. Best I ever heard. Congratulations to you and the rest of the artists.

WARREN MCELWAIN
Yacaipa, California

The Messiah was broadcast from KLZ, Denver, Sunday night. It was fine, especially the two women soloists. The orchestral accompaniments were exceptionally good.

MALCOLM BARROWS
Denver, Colorado

I want to tell you how much I enjoyed the Messiah last evening. To me the performance seemed almost perfect. "Unto Us a Son Is Born" was simply beautiful. Independence should be very proud and happy of being capable of producing such a performance.

LILLIAN FARRELL
Independence, Missouri

We can't resist writing to tell you how very wonderful the Messiah presentation was this year . . . this year it was superb.

EMMA SNEAD BRADY
Mason City, Iowa

A group of us gathered together to listen to the Messiah last Sunday night. As spokesman may I say that it was superb. The reception was perfect (WGH, Chicago), and the performance was truly a worship experience on a high plane.

MRS. H. T. STRAND
Creston, Iowa

My thanks to you and your singers for tonight's beautiful performance of the Messiah. I not only heard your broadcast through our local station but was fortunate later in getting to listen to a transcription of it through a Los Angeles station. Please extend my thanks to each of your group. My gratitude is also yours.

MRS. K. E. HEDER
Jackson, Mississippi

We enjoyed the Messiah to the fullest. We appreciate the choruses and other parts not usually heard. Keep up the good work.

DR. E. G. CHINLUND and FAMILY
Omaha, Nebraska

We thoroughly enjoyed hearing the Messiah again.

C. LESLIE LYNCH
Minneapolis, Minnesota

We listened to the rendition of the Messiah last night as carried over WJR, Detroit, and enjoyed it very much. The solos and choruses were all very good, and we were glad to stay up till 1:00 a.m. to listen. You and the chorus are to be complimented.

ARTHUR H. DEROSE
Flint, Michigan

I can't begin to tell you how wonderful the rendition of the Messiah was last night. I thought it was the best I ever heard anywhere.

The choral work was lovely—well trained in pitch. I enjoyed every bit of it. Thank you all. The reception was perfect.

DORIS ANDERSON FREDRICK
Orlando, Florida

The broadcast of the Messiah was, as it's always been, truly great and inspiring

RUBYJO WILBANKS
Spearman, Texas

KNX carried the broadcast in its entirety, and it was splendid—meticulous in every detail. The chorus thrilled us to tears.

CHARLES A. BRACKENBURY
Los Angeles, California

We surely did enjoy hearing the Messiah broadcast last night over Station WJR, Detroit. It came through fine and was an outstanding contribution.

J. CHARLES MOTTASHED
Belding, Michigan

It was our family's great pleasure to listen to the rendition of the Messiah by your chorus and the Kansas City Philharmonic last night, and I just want you to know how thoroughly inspiring the program was. From start to finish, chorus, solos, and orchestra were superior. It was one of the finest renditions of this great oratorio we have ever heard . . . this is a thank-you note from Wisconsin for giving to us such a beautiful program.

ERNEST A. MAY
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Thank you for another fine performance of the Messiah.

GEORGE K. SHOEMAKER
Columbia, Missouri

I must say that it was very beautiful; the soloists were perfect, and the choral group was excellent. All in all it was worth sitting up and listening to until midnight. I would like to know if it would be acceptable to your organization if I forwarded the names of people who listened to your program, whom I have notified of your concert, and your organization would forward them next year an announcement similar to mine? Please notify me, and I will send you the names of the organizations or people who listened last night. Thanks again for an hour and a half of wonderful singing which was furnished by choir, choir director, orchestra, organist, and soloists.

ARNOLD W. FIEBER
Menomonee Falls, Wisconsin

Just a few lines to tell you how very much we enjoyed your broadcast of the Messiah. . . . it was lovely.

EVA and ADOLPH LUNDEEN
Bremerton, Washington

We heard the Messiah last Sunday, which you presented so beautifully and directed so capably. We hope to hear your presentation for many years to come.

MRS. LEO G. VASSAR
MRS. LEAH KAAKE
Flint, Michigan

Our holiday season has been enriched by your beautiful rendition of the Messiah last night. The chorus was excellent. I thoroughly enjoyed it. We were transported from the everyday cares through your great performance.

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Anstey of Lansing, Michigan, announce the birth of a daughter, Joy Gaylene, born February 14.

DEATHS

Obituaries should be sent in promptly by friends and relatives. They will be printed free as soon as space permits. In fairness to all, the editors reserve the right to cut the message to two hundred words.

VAIL.—Katherine Virginia, daughter of Frank and Kate Busche, was born in Cass County, Nebraska, on July 22, 1867, and died January 18, 1950, at Los Angeles, California. In 1910 she was married to Frank S. Hewitt; six children were born to this union. Following Mr. Hewitt's death, she married C. Mullan. Mr. Mullan also died, and in September, 1936, she married W. Lemuel Vail. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fourteen years.

She is survived by her husband, Lemuel; five daughters: Mrs. Ella Calvin, Los Angeles; Mrs. Evelyn Phillips, Oskaloosa, Iowa; Mrs. Laura Best, Lincoln, Nebraska; Mrs. Florence Myers, Pasadena, California; and Mrs. Jeraldine Gourley, Huntington Park, California; a son, Renselear Hewitt, Rockville, Nebraska; sixteen grandchildren; twelve great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. Funeral services were conducted at the Utter-McKinley Chapel in Los Angeles, Elders T. R. Beil and Garland E. Tickemyer officiating. Interment was in the Inglewood, California, cemetery.

ROBERTSON.—Myrtle Ann, daughter of John and Susann Funderburg, was born at McFall, Missouri, on August 28, 1881, and died at her home near Huron, Kansas, on October 3, 1949. She was married to Stephen F. Robertson on January 7, 1898; twelve children were born to them. She had been a member of the church since 1899 and lived to see all but one of her children baptized. Two sons, Lloyd and Melvin, preceded her in death.

She leaves her husband; five sons: Lawrence C. of Atchison, Kansas; Frank W. of Oskaloosa, Kansas; John O. of Parsons, Kansas; Ava of San Diego, California; and Gerald H. of the United States Navy; five daughters: Mrs. Martha Plummer of St. Joseph, Missouri; Mrs. Thelma Fultz of Huron, Kansas; Mrs. Sylvia Moore of Denton, Kansas; Mrs. Anna McAmis and Mrs. Myrtle Spiva of Atchison; twenty-eight grandchildren; one great-grandchild; two sisters: Mrs. Etta Smith of Toledo, Ohio, and Mrs. Emily Powell of Wathena, Kansas; the three brothers: Henry (address unknown), Hudson of Albany, Missouri, and Elmer of Boise, Idaho. Funeral services were held at the E. R. Sidenfaden Chapel in St. Joseph, Elder O. Salisbury officiating. Interment was in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, St. Joseph.

WILDERMUTH.—Jennie May, daughter of Charles and Eveline Clink Rex, was born March 30, 1878, at Sublette, Illinois, and died February 7, 1950, at St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital in Aurora, Illinois, following two weeks of illness. She was married to Lester O. Wildermuth on December 16, 1896; three children were born to them. On February 14, 1897, she united with the Reorganized Church. She was a faithful companion to her missionary husband. "Sister Jennie," as she was affectionately called, never tired of working for the church she loved. She was deeply interested in her home, too, and made all who entered it welcome.

She is survived by her husband, Lester; two sons: Bishop Jerome F. of Cleveland, Ohio, and Elder Richard, pastor of the Plano, Illinois, Branch; and seven grandchildren. Another son, Elder Charles Wildermuth, a former pastor of the Sandwich, Illinois, Branch, preceded her in death. Funeral services were held at the Stone Church in Plano. Elder J. O. Dutton, assisted by Arnold J. Settles, officiated. Interment was in the Plano cemetery.

BOOTH.—Minnie Laura, was born June 24, 1863, at Hartford, Vermont, and died December 4, 1949, at Independence, Missouri. As a small girl she moved with her family to Iowa and was baptized at the age of twelve by Elder S. H. Gurley at Fayette, Iowa. When she was eighteen, she married John Cranwell at Chicago who died the following year. Later she was married to Clarence Booth; one son was born to them. He preceded his mother in death four years ago. Since 1927 she had made her home with her sister, Mrs. Maude Lum, in Independence.

She is survived by her sister, Maude; a brother, Charles Culver; three grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff conducted the funeral service. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PANKEY.—Nevada, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ansel Ames, died January 20, 1950, in California. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 3, 1881, and gave many years of devoted service to the church. She was first married to David L. Johnson; three children were born to them. Following the death of Mr. Johnson she married Henry S. Pankey of Santa Ana who died on February 8, 1949. Her health had been poor for several years.

Surviving are three children: Darius F. and Murreel Johnson of Los Angeles, California, and Mrs. Olive K. Lytle of Santa Ana. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John W. Rushton. Interment was in the Redlands, California, cemetery.

 INCENDIARIES

Smoking may not make a man stupid, but there is no proof that it will make him brighter. When a man lights up, his mind goes on a vacation, and the cigarette takes charge. Consider some of the dumb things people do. . . . They toss lighted cigarette butts into waste baskets and set their own offices afire. They start forest fires, grass blazes, and gasoline explosions. They go to sleep with lighted cigarettes in their mouths and set the bed afire. They burn holes in the furniture, fireplace mantels, in linoleum and rugs. They scratch matches on beautiful marble surfaces and leave ugly scars. They choke women and children blowing the smoke about. . . . Paraphrase an old proverb and you get this: "The road to hell is strewn with cigarette butts." . . . All right, Dante, fix up a special place in Inferno for these people, so they don't burn the whole place down!

 INSPIRATION

If you are feeling low about the chances of civilization, if you are in doubt about our country's chance of survival, read this. It may help you:

Drew Pearson's column in the February 6 papers, "Capitol Prayer Circle," is a revelation of the faith of some men in high office in our government. A group of Democrats and Republicans, forgetting political differences, met for a breakfast, at which a senator said grace, and the discussion turned to religion afterward. Here are some of the statements: "We must balance our planning with spirituality"—Senator Stennis. "I know we must adhere to the ideals of Christianity before we can have lasting peace"—Chief Justice Vinson. "No country or civilization can last unless it is founded on Christian values"—Justice Clark. If more of the rank and file will look to God for guidance, the spirit of faith will reach through the nation and sustain our leaders, who, after all, follow us in many things.

 REGRET is an appalling waste of energy; you can't build on it; it's only good for wallowing in.—Katherine Mansfield.

 STORM

When the fringe of the recent blizzard swept over our part of these prairies, Marvin McDole, a native of Washington, exclaimed, "The cold is bad enough without the wind rubbing it in!"

 CAN YOU REMEMBER?

Can you remember away back when we used to laugh at our European friends for eating five times a day? We mounted our superiority complexes and orated, "We get along with three meals a day!"

Ha! That's what we'd like people to believe. But here's the real truth of it. There's hardly a businessman any more that doesn't go out for his midmorning snack, a glass of milk or a cup of coffee with a sweet roll, and again in the afternoon with a piece of pie or a sandwich. And what is that but a meal? The housewife at home goes out to the kitchen for a nibble at ten and four. The children clamor for bread-and-jelly, or peanut butter. And what are those but extra meals? Many Americans eat five times a day, and more.

The fun has gone out of that joke since so many people in the world can't even get one good meal a day. And here in America we are planning to destroy surplus potatoes!

Which Meeting Shall I Attend?

THE DELEGATES and Conference visitors have one problem which cannot be solved before they arrive. Bringing the right clothes to suit the April weather is difficult but possible of solution. But you have to study the program offerings before you can decide on your own schedule of meetings. The Conference Program will not be available before the time of registration.

A casual look at the program manuscript indicates that you will have from three to thirteen choices each hour during the forenoon Monday through Saturday. You will have some difficult choices to make and had better not wait till the hour of meeting to select your courses. There will be a strong temptation to procrastinate, hoping someone will do or say something that will help you "make up your mind."

The editor has no rule of thumb to offer; nothing we can say here will relieve you from the "wear and tear of original thought." It may be of some ultimate value, however, to suggest that each course has been planned with a definite purpose in mind. This purpose should be the controlling factor in your final choice. Sampling of two or three courses on successive days is likely to end in frustration and to violate the purpose conceived by the policy makers in setting up the courses. It should not depend on where your friends or associates are going; it should be determined by your need and your purpose in your service to the church.

Finally, do not lament, "It is so hard to know which meeting I should attend." Make your choices according to your own best judgment and stick by them. "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." Too many people refuse to discipline their minds by making intelligent choices for themselves; they make their choices by default. They drop in at the handiest place because they refuse to perform the discipline of planning.

Regardless of how much or how little of the Conference you attend this year, make the most of it by an intelligent and purposeful use of your time. No one else has the facts to make as wise a choice of its values for you as you have. The first juvenile philosophical judgment I remember struggling with was, "Whom do you love the better, your father or your mother?" It is to be hoped that no one who struggles with the Conference program will have such a difficult choice. After all, we're supposed to be adults.

Latter Day Saints Are Dependable

General Conference housing reservations are coming in every day. Many nonmember homes have been made available because of local press notices and personal solicitations from neighbors. Every year some of these reservations are not used because of last minute changes, and this has caused ill will for the church in general.

It is well to "play safe" and make your reservation if you have any intention of coming, but it is important that you cancel your reservation promptly when you learn you cannot attend Conference. Should this happen in the last three or four days, telegraph the Housing Committee so the place may be made available to others or so the hostess is released from further obligations to the committee.

News & Notes

GRACELAND COLLEGE

The new Memorial Student Center was dedicated and ground was broken for the new dormitory for men in a special ceremony on the campus, March 12. This $90,000 structure is a memorial to Graceland students and to members of the church who fought in World War II. The dormitory is designed to house 150 men. The student enrollment of 550 at Graceland this year is double the amount it was five years ago.

President F. H. Edwards turned the first spade of frozen earth in the ground-breaking ceremonies. Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., president of Graceland, gave a dedicatory address.

Miss Barbara McFarlane, who was graduated from Graceland in 1949, gave one of the principle addresses at the dedication services.

MISSIONARIES IN ZION

Approximately sixty men attended the monthly meeting of the City-wide Missionary Group when it met March 10. Three men demonstrated sets of visual aid slides that can be used in cottage meetings. The slides were on the theme: I will build my church. The men present discussed means and methods of furthering missionary work and for getting prospects. Elder W. E. Wakeman assisted Elder Charles Graham with the meeting.

ZION'S LEAGUE

Thirteen boys' teams and four girls' teams took part in the R. L. D. S. Basketball Tourney held in The Auditorium. No trophy was given. Leadership was all volunteer.

The R. L. D. S. Basketball Tourney is held following the regular basketball tournament that is sponsored by the Y. M. C. A. Only teams from Zion's Leagues participate.

COLORED MISSION

Elder Ray Whiting held a series of missionary services in the new church building for colored Saints in Pensacola, Florida. Elder Bruce C. Jones, pastor of the Pensacola Branch, and Priest William T. Blue, who is in charge of the colored mission, assisted Brother Whiting. About fifteen Saints and three nonmembers attended the meeting.

Six people have recently been baptized at Orlando, Florida.

NEW BUILDING

The first unit of the Wichita, Kansas, church has been completed, and the lower auditorium is in use. The fireproof structure is reinforced concrete with natural stone exterior. Elder Myron F. LaPointe, pastor, says the building will cost only about $60,000 because of the volunteer labor being used.

The newly completed auditorium seats three hundred people. Nursery quarters off the main sanctuary has a double plate glass front to allow mothers to see as well as hear the services.

One feature of the building will be a large circular art glass window at the front of the church, depicting the church emblem.

Members of the building committee are Elder LaPointe, chairman; Ralston F. Jennings, Virgil E. Weaver, Earl L. Sheppard, Frank R. Westwood, Chester R. Richards, and Mrs. Clyde C. Jaquith. The building is expected to be completed by November.

Let the Team Pull Together

"Awake to Union and Be One." —April Theme

Concerning Teams

We were looking at some beautiful animals at the horse show. Most of them were in top condition, alert and intelligent in appearance. A few were nervous, overtrained, and troublesome. One, despite the gay ribbons in his mane, was asleep and his lower lip sagged like an empty sack. His owner would have felt disgraced.

An experienced horseman commented, "Horses are so much like people!"

It may be questionable whether a horse should appear in an editorial, but if he can teach us something we may let him in. Since we are on the subject, we introduce Goldy, a sorrel gelding who faithfully consumed his hay and oats to no very good purpose. He was gentle, except on the subject of his personal privileges. He was distinctly slow-motion. No matter how slowly the team moved, he clopped along reluctantly. He didn't like the feel of a collar on his shoulder, and he always gave it plenty of air. His tugs were slack, and the doubletree bumped his hocks, but he didn't care. We used a whip, but it frightened the other horses. We tried a goad for quietness, but he kicked the footboard off the driver's seat. He wouldn't pull his share anywhere. You could work him solo, but it took all your attention. A draft horse is a poor thing if he can't work with a team.

Eventually, Goldy finished his career in a box of cat-meat, a bottle of glue, and some nice leather goods. His "finest hour" was the time of his death. You have observed, perchance, some human parallels.

God's Team

A few great tasks can be done by individuals. But most of life's work calls for good teams. The production of a book, the running of a school, the successful operation of a business, the preaching of the gospel in all the world, the building of Zion—all these things require teamwork of a high order. To succeed in such tasks, we must be like the early disciples:

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul.
—Acts 4: 32.

Our theme for the month comes from Hymn 204, and it seems appropriate to quote the whole fourth stanza:

Awake to union and be one,
Or, saith the Lord, "Ye are not mine!"
Yea, like the Father and the Son,
Let all the saints in union join.

The last two lines obviously refer to the prayer of Jesus in the seventeenth chapter of John. The example of harmony in the relationship between God and Christ is held up for emulation by the disciples and the people of the church.

We serve God when we work with the gospel team. When we stand idle or make trouble, we are serving the enemy.

You have known people who had trouble and made trouble all their lives. They were a handicap, even when they were for you. Their most meritorious service to the community comes when, at long last, they serve as the subject of an obituary.

Are You on the Team?

Our April theme is basically a call for teamwork. It is a call for our people to work together by thinking, feeling, praying, and establishing their purposes together.

The greatness of the prayer of Jesus in the seventeenth chapter of John lies in its wonderful concept of the harmony that can exist among the children of God:

That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us. . . . I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one.

At any big football game, there are eleven men on a team, and a string of substitutes on the side lines. The assembled thousands in the grandstands and bleachers are merely witnesses. They are for or against the team. You know how much and how little they can contribute to either defeat or victory.

If somebody on the team is angry, if he is jealous of the captain or the quarterback, or if he has been bribed, he can cause the defeat of his own team.

Satan, you know, got his start that way. He was on God's team, but he became selfish. They gave him a chance, but he wouldn't play ball. Finally, he had to turn in his suit. He has been wearing a different set of wings and playing with a different outfit ever since.

Are you on the team? Are you for it or against it? Are you merely a spectator in the great struggle between life and death? There is no number limit on God's team. You can play on his side. There is room for all in the Army of the Lord.

And the way things have been going lately, it seems that the Lord's side needs help.

General Conference Program, Sunday, April 2

WE EARNESTLY SOLICIT the co-operation of the Saints of Independence and the Stakes, and of Conference visitors generally, in the Conference activities for Sunday, April 2. This is particularly necessary because we have again found it advisable to plan for two Communion services in The Auditorium.

Saints from Independence and vicinity are urged to attend the earlier Communion service which will begin at 7:45 a.m. This service should conclude about 9:45 a.m., and a preaching service will be held at 10:15 a.m. at the Stone Church. Elder John W. Rushton will preach.

This arrangement not only will give assistance to Conference visitors who are driving in on Sunday morning and want to have opportunity to attend the later Communion service, but it also will permit local Saints who have guests to get home a little earlier in preparation for the noon meal.

A general prayer meeting will be held at the Stone Church, 8:30 to 9:45 a.m. and will be planned with visiting Saints in mind.

The second Communion service will commence at 10:00 a.m. The program of the two Communion services will be identical.

There will be a memorial service in the Stone Church at 2:00 p.m. Presiding Evangelist Elbert A. Smith will be in charge.

The Graceland A Cappella concert at 2:45 p.m. will be an integral part of the preaching service at which President Israel A. Smith will give his Conference message.

There will be congregational singing at 7:30 p.m. at The Auditorium as a prelude to preaching by G. Leslie DeLapp, Presiding Bishop.

Mailing of Tithing Payments

It is recommended that tithing and general offerings be made through the regularly appointed solicitors in the branches and bishop's agents or bishops of the various stakes and districts.

However, when these officers are not available and contributions are mailed to headquarters, the remittances should be by check, postal note, or money order made payable to the Presiding Bishopric, and the letter addressed to THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, THE AUDITORIUM, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Across the Desk

The following is from a letter dated February 20, 1950, written by Brother Virgil J. Billings to Apostle Arthur Oakman:

Yesterday ended the three week effort at Pontiac, Michigan. I enjoyed the work there, which consisted of a two weeks' preaching series and a week of visiting and follow-up cottage meeting work. The preaching series continued to show good interest right through. Not counting the Sunday mornings, the attendance averaged 134. A total of seventy-three adult nonmembers came out to the services. There was a warm feeling of the Spirit of God and rich fraternity. I feel that the branch is left with a greater desire to move forward in building the kingdom.

Yesterday was a good day. We had an early baptismal service at which five united with the church. At the 11:00 a.m. service the baptism of the Holy Spirit came. I believe the people who attended that service will never forget the good spirit present. Four others are to be baptized in two weeks, when another baptismal service is planned.

During my three weeks there, I visited every nonmember who came out to church. Some I visited a number of times. It was a lot of work, but I enjoyed seeing people become interested in the church program. Much of the success of that series is due to the good work done by the pastor and the local priesthood in preparing for the effort. The real success of the effort will depend on the follow-up that is carried on by members of the local priesthood. I left them a list of at least seventy good prospects who need ministry.

Travelogs

Miami, Oklahoma

By invitation of Elder John Blackmore, District President of the Spring River District, I left home on Saturday, November 19, stopped at Joplin overnight where I was the guest of Brother and Sister Blackmore, and on the twentieth went by auto (Blackmore's) to Miami.

Here I preached to a large congregation overflowing into the lower rooms, Brother Blackmore being in charge; afterwards I was a luncheon guest at the home of Pastor Kyser.

Springfield, Missouri

In the afternoon I left in charge of Pastor Francis M. Bishop for Springfield, Missouri. The party consisted of Brother and Sister Bishop, Brother and Sister Clifford Brown, the latter driving, and myself.

We reached Springfield in time to have evening meal at the Bishop home. Then to our church where I was greeted by an overflow audience. A musical program had been provided, and I spoke, as I recollect, on the Book of Mormon. I met a number of old friends here, among them John A. Dowker and wife, and E. J. Short, Jr., and wife. The latter took me to their country home near Republic for the night.

This experience was an enjoyable one, for I have known Mr. Short a long time. He is not a member of our church, but his wife Dorothy, a daughter of Reuben Atkins and wife of Independence, has been a life-long member. They have an interesting and comfortable home where I relaxed for the night.

Reinforced by a fine breakfast on Monday (November 21) I was taken to the Springfield airport, taking a plane at 11:00 o'clock. One hour later I was in Kansas City—and then again home.

What Is Unique About Latter Day Saints ?

By DR. EVAN V. SHUTE

A sermon delivered at Central Chicago church on December 11, 1949, in conjunction with the week-end institute on ministry to college people.

The Spirit saith further: That these organizations contemplated in the law may be effected and the benefits to be derived therefrom be enjoyed by the Saints, in such enjoyment they can not withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them; yet it is incumbent upon the Saints while reaping the benefits of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organizations as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8, 9.

SAINTS ALWAYS HAVE BEEN and always must be unique, because in any age holiness is no common thing. True Saints, however, are devoted as well as saintly. They are alert and uplifted. They have an air about them of pleasant goodness. They are an experience to meet. They are a challenge, and they are a solace because, obviously, they are in some sense liason men between God and humanity. They are unique people, humbly aware of their role in life. They testify that the good life can be realized now, that certain renunciations bring more gain than loss, that the top values are not cheap values, and that enduring happiness lies on their side of the scale, not necessarily in Bob Hope laughter, but in enduring joys!

In 1830 the Lord set himself again to a very ancient task—that of selecting a people. Some of the people he selected were as ordinary as you and I; some were as bold and enduring as Joseph Smith; some were as eloquent as Sidney Rigdon; some were as self-effacing as Oliver Cowdery; some were as wise and as persistent as Emma Smith. He had selected people before. He selected the Jews to be a vehicle race for his message. He selected King David's line. He selected the courtier Isaiah. He selected the farmer Amos, and John the forerunner. He even selected the zealot Paul. Not all of these selections in their own time were obviously wise; some of them we have our doubts about still, but on the whole it's amazing how well the selections have worked out. It's astonishing how few of these men really failed their Master. His purposes have been magnificently served over the centuries by people whom he selected. It may be that they can be magnificently served again by us.

BEING SELECTED by God is both an honor beyond praise and a responsibility beyond calculation. It admits of no escape, because he is "The Hound of Heaven"—if you remember Thompson's poem. God pursues us all always; he never relents. He gives men silly and wonderful tasks: to bear aloft his incredible banners, to move "all the world"—nothing less, to walk the unasked and usually thankless mile, to turn the other cheek, to be of stout heart when the heavens are falling. If a man can accept such challenges, he becomes invincible, though often defeated, and incorrigibly hopeful in the face of all sorts of ruin and despair because there is this characteristic of God's alliance that at least the other party in the yoke never fails. But his alliance has one big drawback—his bugles never sound "retreat." His purposes go on. If you don't go on you are left behind, but his purposes go on. That's perhaps one of the most unique features of associating with the Almighty, that in him there is no shadow of turning. In us there are impulses to turn back. In him there is no turning, and if we do not company with him, we are left behind.

Now the course of history bears out these conclusions. Many mighty and ruthless powers have been arrayed against God, but where are they now? In our lifetime we have seen one of the greatest challenges to his power go down. So many great men since Herod, who scorned him, have gone down. How dead they are! So many philosophers have propounded better schemes, more practicable and realizable ideals. All those schemes of theirs remain forever cheap by comparison with his, because time has a very ruthless and savage way with his enemies and scoffers. They disappear. So few remain in any age who struggle for his ways to the end. But his ways remain an irrefutable challenge. Everything else the world sloughs off like last year's hats, the baseball scores of past seasons, the heroes of the Confederacy, or the names of the Indians who fought against Cortez. But Jesus' ideas remain. Their permanence is our enduring challenge.

Saints are unique, therefore, because in the first place he chooses them, and whom he chooses either were unique at first or become the fit objects of his choice. Nearness to Jesus makes people unique. A few laborious and humble fishermen in Galilee leave the whole world in their debt for centuries thereafter, merely because they accompanied with Jesus, not because of anything that was within them. He shone upon Joseph Smith, and Joseph Smith's message has altered all our thinking. You can't escape it, though you may try. Some of you he may choose for a great endowment, and in your wake, we may follow to unique and wonderful achievements, but in order to do that you must become sufficiently unique.

HAD ANYONE IN OUR CHURCH thirty years ago, we'll say, been asked, "What makes this church unique or distinctive?" he would probably have answered, "Well, one of two things, or both. The restoration of Christ's primitive and original doctrine or of the primitive and original Christian gifts." Almost certainly he would have chosen either or both of these items as being our church's distinctive and unique challenge.

These still are features which are unique in the Christian world today, although I don't think their distinction is quite as obvious now in our lives. For example, the greatest instances of God's intervention in healing that have come under my eyes have not occurred where any onlooker might have anticipated they would occur, nor yet have they brought forth in the subsequent lives of those people the surpassing fruitage one might have expected. That's always puzzled me and still does. And yet I shouldn't be puzzled too much, for I doubt if any of us know more of Christ's doctrine than that disciple knew who betrayed him to detention or to castigation (I don't think to death). I don't believe we know more of His doctrine than did James, his brother, who bitterly opposed the extension of the Christian mission to the Gentiles. I don't think we know much more of that teaching than did Brigham Young, under whose reputation we still suffer, but who in his early years adventured into England in penury on a mission that very few of us are brave enough to undertake now. We are warned that "the devils believe and tremble." And although I'm willing to concede that doctrine gives us an understandable and rational basis for our Christian thought and helps us to understand Christ's methods and clarifies and elaborates the studious aspects of our theology, I think it does little to modify our lives—very little. At least that has been my experience. I think that obedience to our ritual provides an opportunity for some of us to demonstrate our devoutness, but I don't feel for a moment that it is full Christian living any more than a course in seamanship makes you an admiral, or a year in the anatomy laboratory fits you to wield a surgeon's knife.

I'M SURE THAT BAPTISM which really remits sin, given to a fit candidate, administered by an authorized elder, must be something unique in this world, until sin again sets its sights on us, and we either submit or struggle vainly to escape. I'm sure that the Communion, administered by properly constituted authority, taken by properly repentant persons, enables one to periodically regain his lost estate. It brings a man safely home until once again he has to go out over the wasteland and face the searchlights of sin which may blind him. I'm sure that the laying on of authorized hands is something unique in the world, as well as the astounding promise that goes with it, but the unremarkable character of most of our subsequent lives indicates that the potency of the Holy Spirit promised to us was never realized or else that we got a teaspoon full when we should have had a brimming glass. So few of us are really "raised up." If we were, it would be more obvious that we are a "risen" people.

I think, therefore, that the Saints make contact with unique and wonderful opportunities but that these are too seldom realized in our lives, because "the world is too much with us, late and soon."

The same thing can be said of our distinctive views about conversion after death, about the opportunities and progress opened to us in the life hereafter as well as to our roles and duties there. These are unique beliefs, but very seldom is their uniqueness translated into terms of living in my experience.

During this week-end institute we have been studying some of the unique opportunities in Zion as they can be realized in distinct channels of work. Zion is still a unique belief in our day, although it might not have been had Marx and Engels or Lenin and Trotsky been more charitable men, or if Stalin were a more loving character.

What are the unique features of Zion (until the world catches up with us there, too)? Zion fundamentally has several attributes:

- (a) It is a place located by God.
- (b) It is a people selected by God who remain loyal to him.
- (c) It represents a voluntary communal effort by those people in that place.
- (d) It represents theocratic guidance in this effort.
- (e) It demands the abolition of personal gain beyond necessities and "just wants."
- (f) It demands the abolition of personal glorification.

(g) It demands an effort focused on the glory of God in this world for his schemes now.

Many of the features of this program are unique now, although some have been sensed before. Attempts have actually been made toward their realization—attempts quite outside the schemes of our own church. I'm disposed to think that all of these ideals will be embraced, however, only when men are driven to them in the death throes of our society. Actually, we think of them now in moments of emergency, rather than at all times. We think of them during coal strikes and atom bomb raids. It could be that finally the criterion of what a Saint is will be the person who can live and survive and perform in the Zion community. It might be that all who can't do this will not be regarded as Saints and will drift or fall away.

MOST MILITARY MEN and physicists may concede that perhaps now is the "hastening time." And it could be that the time for studying and looking into the realization of Zion is now. It is with such a conviction that I come to this meeting. I've tried to point out that having unique ideals does not make us unique or at least perceptibly so. We have held that opinion too long. It is only the translation of these ideals that makes us different or better. I can dream forever of braving machine gun bullets, but I'm no hero until I do it. I can entertain the dream that I will dive into the clutches of a drowning man to rescue him, but I'm not a brave rescuer until I've actually performed that feat. I can imagine myself a Shelly or a Robinson Jeffers, but I'm not either of them until I've written their lines. That is why I think there is a limit to the amount of training we have to have before we undertake Zion.

Some of you may know that in the last war the Canadian army in England was the best and longest trained unit there. For a time it was the only unit capable of defending England against attack. But the greatest difficulty was that it trained too long. It grew stale. Finally, something desperate was required, and so this little corps was thrown against Dieppe. The Canadians were badly beaten there, and had to retreat in disorder, but it is likely that Dieppe made Normandy and Casablanca possible. One cannot find out how to land on Normandy, perhaps, without experiencing a defeat at Dieppe. If this is understood, one does not worry too much about the loss at Dieppe, because there must be forerunners, even forerunners who lose their heads.

IT HAS OCCURRED TO ME that at this point in our church's history, our great difficulty is that the world has caught up with us in so many features which were once our distinctive property. Our distinctions are no longer quite distinct even to us. Therefore, we must now make the next move—the perfection of conduct which is Zion—or be absorbed by the world and become just another little sect.

May I ask you, without any irreverence, if you do not think that in our time the progress of medicine has almost nullified much of the need for the gift of healing? In your experience and practice now, you who are devout Saints, do you not call for penicillin whereas twenty years ago you would have called for the administration of the elders? Has not the progress of medicine in your own recent lives almost cut out of your thinking 50 per cent of the need you once felt for the gift of healing and the administration to the sick?

Our educational facilities have broadened a great deal. Has not the gift of knowledge which you once hoped and prayed would fill your speakers' mouths been at least partially acquired? Has not the need for that gift of knowledge somehow become smaller in your eyes since so many of the men who occupy your pulpits now have a better command of the language, better cohesion of thought, broader avenues of thinking and experience upon which to draw? Just why should God supply the details of grammar and history?

I think of this simple illustration. When I was a boy and was given a fifty pound weight to lift, surely I was justified in saying, "Lord, here is something I can scarcely do. Help me lift this great weight." I would be justified in expecting the Lord to help me. But now I am bigger, and I have played on a few college teams. Presumably, I have some muscle left. I have a 125 pound weight to lift now. Am I justified in saying, "Lord, I know I can easily lift this, but will you help me lift it?" It could be that such comes within the range of blasphemy. Surely the Lord would not heed such a foolish prayer. Why should he? He knows I can lift 125 pounds by myself without excess strain.

I read Life magazine and see that the prophecies of Vannevar Busch and Oppenheimer are now repeating the warnings that Joseph Smith gave us one hundred years ago. Do we need to be warned any longer that the Lord is summoning us to action by dreadful trumpets in the air? I can get that from Oppenheimer, or I know it myself. The Chicago Tribune will tell me that. So, is it not true that in so many aspects of our teaching which were once unique, the world has caught up with us? If we're going to remain unique, bearers of a unique message, a unique people, must we not make the next great step in our faith? That great step is Zion. Perhaps we should make it now before somebody else makes it.

IN THE LAST ANALYSIS the practice of Zion (not the talking about it—I'm tired of that), the actual practice of Zion, has become our most unique message now and our most urgent necessity. That is where we should address our best talents, our best planners, our men with ideas, our most practical men of af-

Let's Talk the Gathering - Part 2

Selection

By J. A. KOEHLER

WE PASS ON, now, from a general idea to specific ideas involved, the first being that of selectivity.

The gathering is of the elect—the Zion-minded. No everlasting marble mansion can be built of shale, nor can it be built of limestone. Any maestro knows better than to assemble a mass of “frog-croakers” for the purpose of rendering, let us say, the Messiah. It takes accomplished musicians to honor Handel through implementing the score of that oratorio—in which relation see 77: 2. “Frog-croakers” are not elected to and “chosen” for that task. To implement the score of the social symphony, which the genius of Restoration denominated “the cause of Zion,” is not the calling of Babylonian merchants. It is not the calling of the double-minded, the half-hearted, the cold-footed. It is not the calling of any, whatever their capacities or abilities, whose single aim is not to bring forth and establish that cause (4: 1; 11: 4; 17: 7; 42: 7; 58: 3; 85: 21; 94: 3, 5; 102: 2, 3; 128: 1). That is why the Gathering is a process of selection.

The identification of the elect through their reactions to the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom (28: 2) is a gathering preliminary. So also, to a considerable degree, is the maturation of the concept of Zion—102: 3, for instance. There are other preliminaries, too, which we shall mention shortly—preliminaries to which we have not yet attended.

Common Ground

“Can two walk together except they be agreed?” Not if their disagreements seem to be vital or fundamental. Not if they disrespect the terms of association or the social contract. Not if they are constitutional.

In the case of the Gathering, there must be moral agreement plus if it is to be Zion-redeeming. For “the government” is to be established not only with “justice,” but also with “judgment.” There are practical affairs as well as theoretical, on which two must be agreed, if they are truly to walk together—to “dwell together in unity.”

The record of divorces bears testimony to this truth. So does the (dis) United Nations, and the Reorganization, and even “1925.” There is abundant testimony to the truth that a social house which is divided against itself “cannot stand” (Mark 3: 24). Zion-redeeming through the Gathering plus is not that kind of house-building (77: 1; Isaiah 9: 6, 7; Daniel 2, and much else).

And don't overlook this truth: it matters whether two are agreed respecting the right as against the wrong, and the good as against the bad. In the Gathering this is momentous.

“The gifts of God” to men are not all the same. They differ both in kind and in number. There are both one-talented and ten-talented men. For man is constituted, psychically as well as physically, for a division of labor. In the Gathering it is important that we should be inclined, in our habitual mode of regarding persons and things, to personal freedom, within the social purpose, to assure to all freedom of opportunity to employ their talents (81: 4). We must not be irritable, disquieted, fault-finding—in mental disagreement—because others do not manage their stewardships precisely as we would.

To illustrate what I am trying to say: Specific ideas respecting the location of the gridiron, the seating capacity of the stadium, ideas of publicity, hotel accommodations, and business and finance do not comprise the common ground in which the persons who compose the squad must meet if they are to play the game of football successfully. The common ground is certain convictions respecting the rules of the game, a vision of the team in action, or of the plays in which each is expected to do his part, plus ability (which is greater in some and lesser in others) to play the game according to established rules and customs, plus a will to play the game that way—all this adds up to “mental unity.” Call it like-spirit-edness, if you prefer. Fundamental sameness of emotion, cognition, and will—that is mental unity. “The Lord called his people Zion” because they were like that (36: 2). That is the common ground on which the gathered must meet—to be Zion.

Mental disunity has ever been a wrecker of social houses, societies, civilizations. Look into “the mouth of the horse” (85: 21); consult our own record of performance in particular, and say whether or not it bears witness to that truth. Let us have a care, then, about mental unity when we resolve to do “something” about the Gathering.

Weight for the wagon
We'll all take a ride

It is natural, I suppose, that the disadvantaged, the downtrodden, the careworn, and the oppressed should be most anxious to “take a ride”—whether on “the wagon” of Zion, or some other kind of wagon. Thus far it has been some other kind. Many of those who feel more fortunate may not “learn obedience” (102: 2) until the fates of the less fortunate stare them in the face.

But “weight for the wagon” is not the remedy for the miseries of humanity that arise from the maladjustments of society. We should know that by now. In some circumstances, to wait is infinitely wiser than to add weight (102: 2).

I do not say that “the rich and learned” (the both learned and rich), and especially “the wise and the noble,” should “wait for the wagon,” because if they only wait, there will be no “wagon.” There is something for Zion-redeeming competents to do even while they wait—perhaps for good reasons; otherwise they would not be wise. I say only that if those who are not ready for the Gathering “corner the wagon,” instead of taking a ride, they may be “taken for a ride” as in earlier days.

Order Versus Chaos

It seems to me that both reason and experience, as well as the scriptures, testify that there is a proper order of the Gathering (58: 3). I am eye witness to some of the consequences of reversing that order—witness to the consequences of attempting only “a” gathering, in too large part of those only who wish to “take a ride.” If there is any doubt about the truth of this “order” idea, the doubter should contemplate both our early and late history.

I do not see how the principle of selectivity can be applied so as to redeem Zion (except with waste of time, money, effort, and at the cost of confusion, disappointment, and bitterness) if the proper order of the Gathering is not observed. For there is basic preparation to be made for the Gathering which only “the rich and the learned, the wise and the noble” are able to make. See 58: 3; 63: 8; 98: 10; 102: 3; and 128: 3, 4 in particular.

The Church the Agency

Churches, or religious instrumentalities, are formed for different purposes—the purpose of the Salvation Army (which is a good purpose) being very different from that of the High Church (which some say is not so good). They exist to satisfy wants of various personalities or of people on different levels of human progress. The Latter Day Saint Church was formed—designed to be composed and constituted—for the doing of a very extraordinary work: “to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion” (6: 1, 3; 10: 1, 3; 11: 1, 3; 12: 1, 3). Its task is to organize a people, or to organize the kingdom in its civil mode (100: 6; 102: 9)—the mode of its existence in Enoch’s day the mode contemplated in the call of Abram and anticipated by him (review that narrative, if necessary); the mode in which Moses, et al., endeavored to establish it. The church of Restoration is a true people-forming church. No other modern church has said, “There must be an organization of a true people to advance the cause which it has espoused” (77: 1).

That is why part of the peculiar, distinctive, singular, and extraordinary task of the Latter Day Saint Church is to promote the Gathering (42: 3, 10; 45: 14; 48: 2; 57: 1; 58: 12; 63: 8; 83: 2; 98: 9, 10; 108: 4).

Of course, this church has offices to perform—correlated offices—in addition to, antecedent to, and subsequent to the Gathering. It has distinctive evangelizing and other educational offices to perform (85: 21; 94: 3, 5; and 102: 3). Let us not forget: there are things to be done before the Gathering can be accomplished. And let us—the church—not neglect to do them.

The Land of the City

The procurement of many places of residence here and there is a private affair, even though the church renders valuable services in that relation. The purchase of the site of the city is a public affair, even though individuals severally may help the church to attain that object, indirectly, piecemeal, or otherwise (38: 8; 45: 10, 12; 48: 2; 57: 1, 4; 58: 7, 10, 11; 63: 10, 12, 13; 72: 3; 98: 9, 10; 100: 5). The hope of Latter Day Saints respecting “the Center Place” needs hardly be mentioned. It is not something to be gossiping about. That is a hope which, for the present, must be deferred, it seems to me, notwithstanding present tenures of some of that land should prove to be of great advantage, do what we may about the Gathering.

I have driven many thousands of miles exploring the city-land possibilities. To me, opportunities to procure a land for that purpose are plentiful enough. But this again is something not to gossip about. For I know of nothing in the nature of man which requires that the city must be built on a given spot.

There is something in the circumstances of our being, however, which makes it necessary to purchase the land for the city. Principally, there is the heterogeneity or moral incompatibility of populations; the indissolubility of the economic tangle; the limitations of the state in a warring world; and other things. There are circumstances and situations even which make the building of the city, the proof of the truth, the exemplification of a right ordering of human relations, or of a rightly constituted society, the best, the least costly, and the surest “way out”—if not the only way.

We have referred to Restoration’s “keys to the kingdom,” to its idea of selective social reintegration under the mentorship of statesmen prophets. The location of the city and the procurement of the land on which to institute that social order involves many problems which, because of wholly new circumstances, have come to be difficult of solution. The land and the city involve some questions to which the best minds of the church may not be able to find all the answers except through consultation with some of the world’s wise men. It is a question to which the best men must give serious thought, respecting which hasty conclusions are taboo. This question respects the necessary preliminary to the Gathering.

Money and Finance

Which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he has sufficient to finish it.—Luke 14: 28.

In 1833 the prophet of Restoration said, “There is even now in store a sufficient, yea, even an abundance to redeem Zion . . .”—98: 10IF.

A church that had enough “in store” to build Nauvoo in 1839 surely could have done some permanent Zion-redeeming in 1833. But that if. What momentous questions it raises respecting the Gathering—our momentary concern being questions of money and finance. See, in this relation, 58: 7; 63: 10, 13; 72: 3; 101: 2; 102: 3.

A number of so-called “Zion-redeeming” financial schemes have been devised and employed to no Zion-redeeming purpose whatever. Why do men who say that “it must needs be done in mine own way” (100:2) ape the merchants of Babylon in their monetary affairs? Is Zioniac financial cloth woven of the same warp and woof as Babylonian? What is more ruinous than Babylonian finance? And how is it possible to “come out of her . . . that ye be not partakers of her sins and . . . receive not of her plagues” the while we bend our knees before her financial altar? If we are not sold on Zioniac finance, is it possible that we are ready for the Gathering?

In the Gathering there are many settlements of property affairs in general, and of monetary affairs in particular, to be made. These settlements must honor the rights of both persons and peoples if they are to be Zion-redeeming. There is some trusting, by both persons and peoples, to be done also. These settlements must be binding in law. I would not attempt to enumerate all the particulars; I do not even know them. But surely when we look for the answers to such questions, we must be certain that the Gathering is something which only real “men” can engineer or consummate.

I have seen too many attempts to build “towers” by men who did not even know that it was necessary to sit down first and count the cost. I never saw their towers; but I have seen their ruins.

Latter Day Saints made one tower-building attempt when they had hardly enough money in hand to pay for one section of city-building land—which is insufficient for any Zioniac tower-building. Still it may have been possible in that day, or in those circumstances that the pre-emption and exploitation by aliens to the cause of adjoining lands needed to finish that “tower” may not have endangered the enterprise. But are dangers the only occasion for promoting the Gathering with judgment? Dangers are on every hand. We do not need to procrastinate on account of them.

What do you suppose it would cost (in money only) to gather only 500 families to “the place of the city,” to establish them in their inheritances, to lay an economic foundation that will not fall when the waves of national crises beat upon it? Would ten million dollars be sufficient? Two spokes can’t make a wagon (102: 9). Financing the Gathering is not child’s play, not by “a long chalk.”

Let us not forget, it is “forbidden” to get in debt to “thine enemies” (64: 6). And, if I mistake not, there are men who would give their right arms, almost, to prevent the establishment of the Cause of Zion. But, on the other hand—and this is what counts—surely there are enough “elect” to assure the success of a well-considered endeavor to consummate the Gathering.

There are many questions: who? when? how? where? involved in the Gathering. While I do not question that it is a settled design, I do doubt the answers that have been given to some of these specific questions. But I shall mention only three more Gathering questions.

Physical Planning

A well-planned residence is a counterpart of the family ideal—dining room, living room, and all, match the idea of domestic fellowship. We may place the doghouse in the back end of the lot, but we would not place the kitchen and the cradle there. It would be incongruous to do that.

That is as true in respect to a community—especially “the perfection of beauty” community—as in respect to a family. For a Zion community is an economic fellowship (38: 5; 81: 4; 101: 12; 119: 8; and much else). Zion is a dwelling together “in unity.” So Zion physical planning—much of which needs to be done in preparation for the Gathering—is a counterpart of Zion “psychical” planning.

The revision of education alone, so that children will be trained to faithful citizenship—trained to usefulness in order for true education to go on indefinitely—involves the making of economic arrangements suited to that purpose. That and many other matters must be taken into account in blueprinting the physical plant in preparation for the Gathering.

Homes should be located so as to avoid present wastes of time, money, and material in going here and there and everywhere. A Zion minded man does not want to be shelved because his usefulness has diminished twenty-five or fifty degrees, or even more. He does not want to live by the sweat of other men’s faces, even when he grows older, so long as he is able to seek the interest of his neighbor through productivity—either of commodities or of services. There are not a few such matters that need to be taken into consideration in the physical planning that should be done in preparation for the Gathering. Let’s give them some consideration. Let’s do some talking that is not so commonplace—some talking about the Gathering.

Specialists in Collaboration

You go to a physician for medical ideas, do you not? And to a businessman for business advice? And to a real farmer for farming advice? And to a real ethicist for moral advice? There are even technological trends on which Zion-planners need to be advised—if their preparation for the Gathering is to be made with judgment.

When the architect planned the new Independence Sanitarium he consulted the surgeon about the location and appointments of the operating room, for instance. Architects must use that much judgment if they wish to be in demand. There are many things, each of which affects the planning of other things, that must be well considered, some of them from necessity, in preparation for the Gathering.

Now Zion-redeeming, and specifically the Gathering, calls for a collaboration of specialists who know what Zion-redeeming is all about. For the church—which in this relation has much of the meaning expressed in 128: 3—may have the keys to the kingdom, it may know the principles on which Zion-redeeming must proceed. Still it needs the advice of specialists as conditioning its use of those keys to unlock the door of entrance into that kingdom—civil engineer specialists, industrial and business engineer specialists, and others. And all these need to put their heads together for the purpose of perfecting the total planning for the Gathering.

Restoration has its dream house, and the Restoration church needs consummate dream house consultants, for the church is the instrument of the Gathering.

Using What We Have

Independence should be able to do much to assure the consummation of the Gathering. For one may live outside the walls of the city and be party to its affairs. And this is one of the questions that bears heavily today in Gathering-planning. Maple Grove could provide the place for the city. And many a Saint residing not very distant from a place of the Gathering could collaborate with the city so as to assure not only its successful building but his own well-being. This may sound like riddles to some who have not done much of the right kind of talking about the Gathering. But those who have done it should know what this talk is all about. For “a wink to a blind horse is as good as a nod to a mule.”

Prophetic Cautions

The prophet of Restoration admonished his people against haste in the Gathering (58: 2) as he did against undue delay. He cautioned them against casting their “pearls before swine”—against gossiping about matters of which some have no appreciation. He cautioned them against preaching “tenets” (18: 4). He cautioned them against trying to construct the towers of Zion with unsuitable material and untempered mortar. He cautioned them against half-heartedness. He cautioned them against foolishness of all kinds (50: 4-6)—particularly foolishness respecting the Gathering. These cautions have stood the test of time. Some of the language of the prophet may be poor, but the basic ideas he endeavored to make articulate were rich—very much weightier than the ideas of the literati of his day. Don’t overlook that, you critics of Doctrine and Covenants diction.

A renucleation within Restoration (Section 128) was made necessary through failure to do things according to the pattern. Let’s talk about the Gathering in ways that we have never talked before, if perchance we may forestall a necessity for another renucleation. For if the message of Restoration—not all of that which has been “said about” that message—is divine, one day a people will arise to consummate that gathering. And we may be that people.

ston in his car to St. Joseph where we met with the priesthood of the Far West Stake. We were, in a way, onlookers. President Jennings made no demands on us, and we enjoyed the occasion very much, noting with much satisfaction the growth of stake officials, the development of some new talent of much promise. The proceedings continued into the afternoon, with a break at high noon for a dinner.

Brother Livingston and I greatly enjoyed this ministry without assignment.

Yuma Dedication

December 4 last was a happy day for the Yuma Branch and the Eastern Colorado District, for on that day was dedicated the church at Yuma. This city is not a large place, and most of the Burlington trains are not scheduled to stop here. So I had to go right through Yuma on a fast train and get off at Akron, some twenty miles west, where I was met by Elder W. A. Hougas. Soon, however, we were in Yuma.

Brother Hougas and I had breakfast with Brother and Sister Korf. Sister Korf is an active worker in the church school department.

The church here is what I would consider a very adequate plant for church purposes and reflects the sturdiness of the membership. It was originally a school building which the Saints bought when the school district outgrew it, and will very nicely take care of the needs of the congregation there.

District President Ward A. Hougas presided at the special services in which the pastor, Walter Lutz, Frank Buchanan, the children’s chorus, and the Yuma choir took part.

I presented some thoughts on the angel’s message which had been preached and would continue to be heralded there.

Pastor Lutz made a presentation talk, handing me the deed to the property, as also the key to the edifice which I accepted on behalf of the Presiding Bishop, and delivering the key to the deacon in charge, Brother Frank Buchanan.

Elder J. D. Curtis gave the prayer of dedication, and benediction was offered by Elder and Bishop's Agent (Ft. Morgan) W. A. Reynolds.

Dinner was served by the women to all present, and I think every branch in the district was represented.

Among those present whom I had known in years past was Brother Loren Truman. Loren was one of the three sons of George Truman, an early day resident of Lamoni, Iowa. Another son, Roy, lives in Independence. These boys were made orphans early in life by the death of their father, and Loren, who lives in Wray, Colorado, told me he had lately lost his wife, and one of his sons lives in Independence. Loren has a voice of good quality and rendered two songs during the service.

After the fine dinner, I left with Brother Reynolds and family for Fort Morgan where I was able to take an earlier train for home, arriving Monday morning, December 5. All well at home.

My commitments did not allow a very long stay, however, as I was scheduled to be in Mobile on the tenth for a district conference. I looked forward to this with interest since circumstances had prevented me from attending the Brewton, Alabama, reunion in July.

Mobile District

For a long time I had been desirous of visiting our churches in the Southeastern Mission. Years ago, when engaged in the law business, I had twice visited one section in Florida where I was delighted with the climate. Since that time I have visited California where climatic conditions are pleasant; but I maintain a judicial attitude and do not take sides in the ancient controversy.

However, on this journey, which began on December 9, my itinerary did not take me to the "peninsula"; Pensacola and Milton were the only places in Florida included in our plans.

I left on Friday afternoon on the Kansas City Southern, billeted on their finest train, Southern Belle, arriving at New Orleans in time to take one on the Louisville and Nashville that brought me safely and on time to Mobile, Alabama. There I was met by District President W. J. Breshears. The Gulf States district conference was under way at the time of my arrival. It is called the "winter conference," but to me it seemed like a summer meeting. The weather was mild, the doors of the church and of homes open without discomfort.

An afternoon workshop was in progress: District School Director R. L. Booker, Director of Women Lula Jernigan, District Leader of Young People J. A. Pray (pastor at Mobile), District

Director of Music Gwynne Odom, Sister W. J. Breshears, and others had charge of different departmental "workshops."

Evening came, and in the upper annex (in last stage of completion—visible evidence of the fine administrative efforts of Elder A. O. Crownover and his successor, Elder Pray) was held the annual banquet served by the Mobile Branch. The presiding genius of this occasion was Elder W. F. Steiner, who presided with tact and put everybody at ease, though I always am a little nervous in advance of any speaking engagement.

The district was well represented, over seven hundred having registered. I was impressed that the Saints of the area were being endowed with greater spiritual power, which was an inspiration to me as I addressed them rather briefly at the banquet.

I was domiciled here at the home of Brother and Sister Brewton Green, and enjoyed being in their home and getting acquainted with the family.

It had been arranged by Brother Breshears, the energetic district president, for me to give a five-minute radio talk on Station WKAB, Mobile, on Sunday morning, December 11, which I had forgotten and for which I made some preparation about midnight preceding, after Franklin Steiner, who has conducted our church radio programs on WKAB for some years, told me I had been advertised to be "on the air." Well, I used most of the five minutes allotted. Brother Steiner, who was in charge, and a very fine chorus of our singers used the rest of the quarter hour, and on the whole we were told the program was a success.

At the 10:45 Sunday morning service I was the speaker, with Brother Breshears in charge, Elders Pray, Steiner, and A. D. McCall assisting.

The singing was led by Sister Anna Mae Lavinghouse, director, and Gwynne Odom sang.

Dinner was served by the women, and in the afternoon the business meeting was held.

I was pleased to have the opportunity to observe Elder Breshears in action. He presided over the business session flanked by his able counselors, W. F. Steiner and Ben L. Jernigan, the latter of Brewton. Brother Breshears has a good grasp on the knack of presiding, made no observable slips of any kind, and gave evidence of keeping in mind the immediate questions.

At this conference I was pleased to get acquainted with hundreds, and to greet some old friends, among them Elder N. L. Booker, former missionary. Later in the week I saw him again at Mackenzie, Alabama.

The adjournment of the conference marked the beginning of some unusual activity. Brother Breshears supplied me with a memorandum which aids memory: Between four o'clock on Sunday the eleventh and four o'clock on Wednesday the fourteenth, when I took train at New Orleans for Kansas City, we visited the following places: Escatawpa, Pascagoula, Van Cleave, and Biloxi, Mississippi; Bayou la Batre, Robertsedale, Belleview, Pensacola, Coldwater, and Berrydale, Florida; Alaflo Branch at Dixonville, Brewton, Evergreen, and Mackenzie, Alabama.

Sunday evening meal was at Brother and Sister A. N. Barnes, after which I spoke to a well-filled church, the old one, since the new and larger structure, close at hand, was not quite completed at the time.

Sunday night, our party consisting of Elders Breshears and Pray, stayed in Pascagoula at the home of Pastor and Sister J. L. Barlow. After breakfast on Monday, Brother Barlow showed us the church property there. It is one of the finest church plants we have, having been secured from the government after the war. It is commodious and will be adequate, I am sure, for many years.

At Van Cleave we met former appointee, Elder A. G. Miller, visited Sister H. E. Jennings, a widow, who bore testimony for Jesus, and where we offered a prayer for her welfare.

At Bayou la Batre we had an excellent sea food dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Emory Powell, Elder Oscar Tillman and his daughter, Audrey, also being guests. We inspected Brother Powell's yacht, and found ourselves wishing we could "go a-fishing." We met here also, Alma Tillman, priest, and Robert Pendarvis, deacon.

Monday night found us at Pensacola: supper at the Breshears' home, where I met the two Breshears' sons, Donald and Robert, and where I was domiciled for the night.

Before going to the church here, where I spoke, we—Brethren Breshears, Pray and I—met with a group of about twenty colored members at the home of Brother and Sister Booker. Priest W. T. Blue is pastoring this group. He is a contractor and builder, and his mission has begun the erection of their own church (which we inspected the next day). At the Booker home we engaged somewhat informally in conversation, and before leaving offered prayer for these humble believers in the Restoration. The laws of Alabama are unusually restrictive as to mixed congregations, hence the necessity of a separate church.

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

PART IV

As the work seemed to drag among the Hawaiians, and as the English-speaking people did not seem to interest themselves in the gospel message, Elder Waller felt anxious to move out among some other nationalities. In writing to President Smith before the General Conference of 1901, Elder Waller asked if arrangements could be made for the publication of suitable tracts in the Portuguese, Japanese, and Chinese languages. He also asked if it were possible for Alexander H. Smith to visit the Islands.

When, therefore, the revelation (Section 125) was received, giving instruction about the printing of tracts in the Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and at the same time instructing that Alexander H. Smith visit the islands of the sea and Australia, the brethren in Hawaii felt encouraged, as it showed that while they appeared to be making no progress and prospects seemed discouraging, yet their hearts were in touch with the spirit of the work, and they felt glad and rejoiced.

Because Elder Waller was directed to continue in charge of the work by the General Conference of April, 1901, and no one was sent to labor in the Islands, he thought it best to proceed at once with the publication of Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese tracts, since there were many people of these nationalities in Honolulu and other parts of the Islands. He therefore corresponded with President Smith on the subject, and as a result the members of the church were requested to assist in the work by writing suitable tracts and forwarding them to Elder Waller.

On June 8, 1901, G. J. Waller was appointed church historian for the Sandwich Islands Mission.

During August a tract suitable for publication among the Chinese was received from Brother Robert M. Elvin of Lamoni, Iowa. His letter showed that the Spirit of the Lord had been directing, for he testified that between four and five o'clock in the morning he had dreamed of the outline and at once got up to write it down.

Arrangements were made for the translation of Brother Elvin's tract into Chinese, and in the month of November, ten thousand copies of the tract were published. During that same month, a Chinese merchant of Honolulu who had read one of the tracts came to our Sunday school, and through him arrangements were made for teaching a class of Chinese at an Anglo-Chinese academy in the city. The man said that he and others among his people were seeking for information relative to the truth and were praying to God for guidance.

During November G. J. Waller left for a visit to California. Elder Ingham was in charge of the mission during his absence. While in California, Brother Waller was ordained to the office of high priest as had been recommended by a resolution of the General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa, on April, 1898.

On January 1, 1902, he returned to Honolulu, finding the work had been well cared for by Elder Ingham during his absence.

At the April, 1902, General Conference held in Lamoni, Iowa, Elder Waller was again appointed in charge of the mission, and Elder David A. Anderson of Lamoni was assigned to labor with him.

In May, 1902 Presiding Patriarch Alexander H. Smith arrived in Honolulu, en route home from a trip to Australia. The first patriarchal blessings of the Reorganized Church in Honolulu were bestowed upon this visit. In the blessings given the Hawaiians, the patriarch was led to tell them that they were descendants of Manasseh. Brother Waller was told that he was of Ephraim, and, among other things that he was "called upon still to abide here and be as an anchor to the work that is now being done, and has been done."

Through the patriarchal blessing he received, Brother Waller was greatly comforted, encouraged, and strengthened spiritually. We quote from his blessing:

He has watched over thee, has blessed thee, and opened up the way before thee, notwithstanding thou hast had to walk often not knowing what the next day would bring forth; not seeing, having to walk in faith; and not in the path which thou wouldst design and order of thyself. But the providences of God have been ordered for thee. The Lord has watched over thy pathway. He has led thee and directed thee to the accomplishment of a work that is praiseworthy, and he will bless thee. He will prosper thee and surround thee by the influences of his divine protection.

Notwithstanding there have been trials, there have been seasons when it seemed that thou couldst hardly overcome and pass through them, yet these trials have been beneficial to thee, and thou hast been enabled to see the hand of the Lord in his providences that have been extended to thee and thine.

Now, I bless thee, dear brother, and tell thee to prosecute the work that is in thy hands, that has been given thee, being obedient to the counsel of the Spirit, and those words that have been directed by the servant of the Lord, and thou shalt be prospered. There will come a time when there will be a change, and when that change comes be prepared to enter in and take advantage of it, and the Lord will lead thee and open the way before thee. Thou art called upon still to abide here and be as an anchor to the work that is now being done, and has been done. The Lord will stay thy hands and comfort thee. He will give thee for thy labor an award in the great day when he shall come to make up his jewels. Trust in the Lord. Do not be easily moved by the frailties of men. Remember that man is but human, and sometimes intensely human, and desirous of satisfying self and justifying self in all his actions. Do not let the actions of those, even of thy brethren, that do not seem to harmonize with that which is true and correct as thou dost understand it, trouble thy peace of mind. Do not worry over this but be faithful in the discharge of thy own duties, and thy own service to the Lord, and thou shalt feel that innocence of sin, that innocence of offense, that shall be to thee a source of deep comfort and consolation.

Elder David A. Anderson, who had been appointed as a missionary to the Islands, arrived in July with Sister Anderson. He started on his work at once, his efforts being for a time confined to Honolulu. Sister Anderson was a valuable aid in the church school work. In October a church school class was started in one of the districts of Honolulu called Kapalama by Elders Anderson and Ingham. While they taught this class each Sunday afternoon, Sister Anderson and Brother Waller with one of his daughters taught the classes of Japanese and Hawaiian children at the Waikiki church school, whose scholars then numbered twenty.

In 1903, as the time for holding General Conference was approaching, Elder Waller, the missionary-in-charge, wrote the First Presidency, stating that his plan for conducting the work during the coming year would be to have Brother and Sister Anderson travel from place to place on the different islands. He also urged the publishing of tracts in Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese in accordance with the instructions given in a recent revelation. Later, after learning that Brother Anderson would like an additional missionary sent to help him, Brother Waller wrote the First Presidency again making this request.

However, when the Conference news was received, it was learned that Elder Anderson had been appointed to the new field of British Columbia and Washington, and that Elder Waller had been appointed in charge of the Hawaiian Mission without any help.

Believing that it would be of great benefit to the work in Honolulu and in other islands if the church had a meetinghouse of its own, Brother Waller secured a suitable lot conveniently located on the principal street of the city. To aid in the project, the Bishop of the church, after having the matter brought to his notice, agreed to allow some of the tithing funds in the hands of the bishop's agent at Honolulu to be used for the purchase of the lot. Besides this means of finance, a subscription list for the church building was started.

While the year's work did not result in any increase in membership, yet Brother Waller felt that spiritually the members of the Honolulu Branch were in better condition than ever before. Their determination to move forward in harmony with the will of the Master as revealed in his Word, and their willingness to make sacrifices for the benefit of the work, was encouraging and comforting to him.

On May 11, 1904, Elder Waller again received notice of his appointment as missionary-in-charge of the mission for another year.

During August, he spent a short vacation on the Island of Molokai, where he became acquainted with a few Hawaiian families, some of whom manifested an interest in the work and wished to read the Book of Mormon. Two copies of this book in Hawaiian were forwarded to them upon the elder's return.

On September 28, Elder Waller went on a business trip to San Francisco where he spent four days. During his absence, Elder Ingham attended to the branch work. While on his visit to San Francisco, Brother Waller attended a prayer meeting of the Oakland Branch at which Sister Terry, wife of the pastor, spoke by the Spirit and commended Brother Waller for attending the meeting. She said the Lord had been with him in his trials and afflictions. He also was urged to be very steadfast, as God designed to make of him a shining light.

A few days after his return from San Francisco, Elder Waller was nominated by the Territorial Democratic Committee as a candidate for the Senate of the Island of Oahu. He ran for office but was defeated together with all the other Democratic candidates throughout the Territory in the election held November 8.

On Thursday, April 13, 1905, he appeared before the Federal Grand Jury to answer questions relative to the teachings and practices of the Utah Church there. The object of the inquiry was to find out whether or not polygamy was practiced in the islands by the members of that church.

Early in May Elder Waller received a full account of the General Conference which stated that he had been reappointed missionary-in-charge, and that no other missionaries had been appointed to labor there during the coming year.

In the latter part of the month of August, Elder Waller, together with members of his family who were en route to England via San Francisco, visited the volcano of Kilauea on the Island of Hawaii. In the town of Hilo he met an isolated member of the church named Daniel Oo, with whom he had an opportunity of conversing on religious conditions in that town. Elder Waller sympathized with the brother in his loneliness, encouraging him to continue faithful with the hope that ere long some officer of the church might be sent there to establish the work.

On February 14, 1906, Elder Waller was appointed a member of the Board of Prison Inspectors for the First Judicial Circuit by Acting Governor Atkinson. The appointment was favorably commented on by the Honolulu papers.

The Kansas City Journal of April 19, 1906, a copy of which came to Honolulu in May gave the information that G. J. Waller had again been appointed missionary-in-charge of the Hawaiian Territory (mission number thirteen) and that Elder J. D. White, of Independence, Missouri, had also been appointed to labor there. A letter from the church secretary confirmed this report, as did later issues of the Herald and Ensign. On July 28, Elder White and his family arrived.

As the result of correspondence between Elder G. J. Waller and President Joseph Smith, a Japanese tract written by Elder Ingham was approved for publication. Those in charge of the work in Hawaii were authorized to write such tracts as in their judgment the situation might demand and put them into circulation for the work in the Islands.

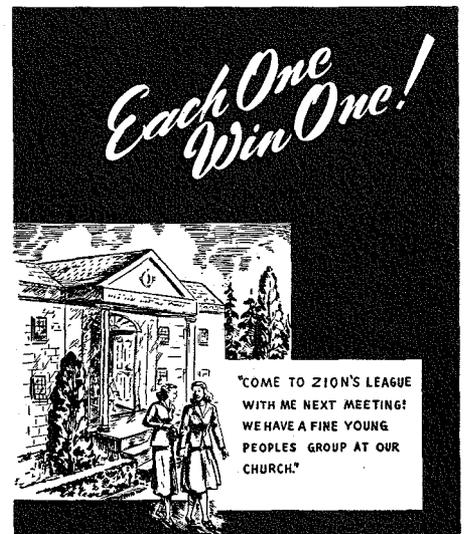

Brother Waller prepared some lessons for the study of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to be used in the sisters' prayer meeting. These were translated into Hawaiian by Sister Kanui, who was later assisted by Sister Maria Piltz.

In answer to inquiry concerning his remaining in the Islands and the locating of his wife and children who for some months had been living in Leipzig, Germany, Elder Waller received the direction he sought in a letter from President Smith on October 9, 1906. The instruction given was to the effect that Elder Waller, having been sufficiently heedful of advice previously given with regard to his remaining in the Islands in the interest of the church, was absolved from further obligation in that regard and at liberty to follow the dictation of his own desire and business wisdom in the matter.

On October 25, Elder Waller wrote to Bishop Kelley for advice relative to the locating of his family and himself in or near Independence, Missouri. He felt impressed to write to Bishop Kelley after giving prayerful consideration to the instruction received in President Smith's letters, together with certain promises made to him in his patriarchal blessing. A favorable reply was later received from Bishop Kelley. While Elder Waller was considering the matter, the promise made to him by the Spirit when he was quite young in the work, through Brethren Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, was forcibly brought to mind. It was as follows: "The Spirit of carefulness and of wisdom shall be with thee in the way, and thy feet shall be led into safe paths. Trust ye in the Lord."

Rules of Order

The seventh section of the proposed Rules of Order as explained in the "Herald" of January 23. Administrative officers are urged to send the Presidency their comments or criticisms preliminary to General Conference action.—EDITOR

VII. STAKES

STAKES ARE FORMED in major centers of gathering for more complete systematizing and honoring of the law of Christ in both spiritual and temporal affairs than is possible in branches and districts. The law states that they are "for the curtains, or the strength of Zion."¹ They are not necessarily contiguous (Kirtland and Nauvoo were not adjacent to each other or to the Center Place).

STAKES ARE ORGANIZED on recommendation of the First Presidency and approved by the Joint Council of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, then by General Conference, and by the members of the proposed stake.

In approaching the organization of stakes, following factors are considered:

1. The availability of sufficient members of the church
2. Of mature experience in the church
3. Living in close proximity to a given center
4. Including a sufficient number of ministers of genuinely high priestly caliber to provide personnel for the presiding councils
5. With a sufficiently stable industrial or agricultural background to guarantee permanence
6. And with the possibility of definitely relating the contribution to be made in the area to the advancement of the Zion program

A FULLY-ORGANIZED STAKE includes the stake presidency, the stake high council, the stake bishopric, a secretary, and recorder. The stake presidency consists of a president and two counselors, all of whom are high priests. The stake high council is composed of twelve high priests presided over by the stake presidency. The stake bishopric consists of the stake bishop and his two counselors. All of these are ordained and set apart to their respective ministries by the imposition of hands.

THE STAKE PRESIDENCY presides over the stake and so has immediate charge and oversight of all spiritual activities within the stake and is responsible for the welfare and spiritual discipline of all church members within the confines of the stake, subject to the advice and direction of the general spiritual authorities of the church.

THE STAKE HIGH COUNCIL serves as an advisory board in both spiritual and temporal matters within the stake at the request of the stake presidency or stake bishopric. This high council is also the highest judicial body in the stake. It has both original and appellate jurisdiction. Appeals are taken to the stake high council from the stake bishop's court in cases which have not been settled by that court to the satisfaction of the parties.

THE STAKE BISHOP is the chief financial officer within the stake, having immediate charge and oversight of general church finances and properties, subject to the advice and direction of the Presiding Bishopric as trustees.² If the stake bishop is also chosen to have supervision of purely stake finances—as is customary—he has the same relation to the stake presidency in this connection as do the other stake officers. The stake bishop is also a judicial officer, the stake bishop's court having original jurisdiction in cases of a local character within the stake. Appeals from the decision of the stake bishop's court are made to the high council of the stake.

The duties of the recorder and secretary of the stake parallel those of like officers in branches and districts.

A STAKE MAY CONTAIN a number of branches organized according to the usual pattern, or its various congregations may be regarded as parts of the total stake structure. But whatever the form of organization (which varies according to local circumstances and conference actions), it should be recognized that a stake is expressly organized to form a well-integrated whole under high priestly leadership, and the form of organization adopted within the stake should be that considered most readily adaptable to the unity, fraternity, strength, and enlightenment of the stake as a whole.

IF FROM ANY CAUSE A VACANCY OCCURS in the office of stake president or stake bishop, the First Presidency presents to the Joint Council of the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric its recommendation concerning the filling of such vacancy and, upon approval by the council, this recommendation is presented to the stake conference for consideration and approval. If such approval is had, the necessary ordination or ordinations are authorized.

The Scriptures and the church articles and covenants, with the rules adopted by the church for the conduct of business and in the guidance of its officers and assemblies, guide the transaction of business within a stake.

Report on "The Messiah" Broadcast

We are still thrilling to the beauty of the Messiah as given to us Sunday night. KLZ of Denver, our nearest CBS station, had a delayed broadcast one hour later. It brought us new awareness of the beauty of "Behold the Lamb of God."

MRS. CLIFFORD C. CABLE
Fort Collins, Colorado

We listened to the Messiah broadcast on Sunday night over a Richmond, Virginia, station. It came in very fine, and we thoroughly enjoyed listening to it. One would think Garland Tickemyer was right in the room—his voice sounded so natural, likewise the other soloists. It was an excellent rendition.

PERCY E. FARROW
Port Huron, Michigan

I must be sure to write and tell you how much I enjoyed your broadcast. It came over WJR, which made the reception very good. The orchestra was especially fine, particularly the violins. I didn't know at the outset whether I would be able to stay wide awake for your broadcast, but I didn't have any trouble at all. The soloists were all very good—especially the tenor. The orchestra and chorus were very fine.

WALTER BLOCH
Flint, Michigan

We listened and enjoyed the Messiah so much.

FERNE NELSON
Moorehead, Minnesota

I want to express to you and those under your direction our sincere appreciation and to thank you for your very fine production of the Messiah. We heard it over WBBM (Chicago) and then heard the delayed broadcast from Minneapolis. It was by far the best production of it I've ever heard. The soloists were excellent; the chorus exceptionally well balanced "and of one accord."

MRS. LAURENCE PACK
Beckley, West Virginia

Please accept my sincere congratulations on the splendid performance of the Messiah which you and the Independence Messiah Chorus and soloists gave us last night. It was the finest musical treat I have had in a long time. I was amazed at the technique of the chorus and the seeming ease by which the singers used that technique to make the work vital and alive. Such a clarity of technique and rhythmic perfection is expected of the soloists (and they were fine) but for me, the chorus "stole the show." The same meticulous care as to dynamics and balance was very evident throughout the entire performance—a remarkable achievement—it extended from the orchestra right through, it seemed, to every member of the chorus. I was thrilled with it for many reasons, including the happy fact that the message of the work was given forth meaningfully, clearly, and artistically. Please accept my congratulations on a job well done.

HAROLD NEAL
Toronto, Ontario, Canada

It was one of the most inspiring performances I have ever listened to.

MARY MCLENNAN
Flint, Michigan

The reception was wonderful . . . it was a beautiful broadcast. Your soprano was especially good.

ELEANOR VORCE
New York, New York

We heard the Messiah over KOIN here in Portland by transcription. The solo parts were wonderful, the chorus well-balanced and directed. Thank you for sharing this music with us.

MR. and MRS. HARLEY EMMONS
Portland, Oregon

Our thanks for a truly wonderful presentation of Handel's triumphant Messiah. It beautifully ushered in the Christmas season for us. I am only sorry that this was the first year we heard you present it. The soloists were superb, and all the choruses were beautifully rendered. We shall be awaiting your twelfth radio presentation.

MRS. LOWELL HOLMGREN
Negaunee, Michigan

The chorus sang as one voice, the orchestra at times seemed exceptionally soft. The soloists all were very good; their diction was so clear. The chorus, "For Unto Us a Child Is Born," was perfect. Altogether it was excellent throughout.

ADELINE and CHARLINE HARRIS
Brooklyn, New York

We want you to know how wonderful your music was received here last Sunday night at the late hour of 11:30. There was nothing but praise by those who heard it.

LEONARD and EDNA REDD
Flint, Michigan

Let me congratulate you for the wonderful performance of the Messiah last night. This is the first really fine performance of this great oratorio that I have heard since coming to Texas nearly four years ago. Your performance last night was greatly enjoyed. The soprano solos were particularly fine . . . my heartiest congratulations for the great performance by the chorus, soloists, and orchestra.

G. LEWIS DOLL
San Antonio, Texas

A number of our friends who heard the broadcast have expressed their enjoyment and warm admiration for the quality of the choir; so I want to pass the praise along to where it is due. I think you did a splendid job with both chorus and orchestra.

CHARLES DENNY
Kansas City, Missouri

We want to thank you for the very beautiful broadcast of the Messiah. We agreed that your 280 voices were beautiful—such precision and blending!

IRENE and JOHN THOMAS
Mount Prospect, Illinois

Congratulations to you, your choir, and orchestra for the splendid Messiah program. It came in fine through WJR, Detroit.

WELDON BENNETTS
Fenton, Michigan

Just listened to your beautiful service of the Messiah over CBS.

DOROTHY WOOD
Hollywood, California

Now listening to the Messiah Choir of your organization. May I express my thanks to the splendid soloists and chorus for such a rare musical treat. The "Hallelujah" chorus is outstanding I think. Am hearing the program through KLOU and KMOX.

V. W. BRADBURY
New Orleans, Louisiana

I marveled at being able to understand everything that was sung, and I heard others say the same thing. I appreciated the presentation of the Messiah and hope it will continue to be given over the national hookup. Thanks again, for it was a great rendition.

ROGER FOSTER
San Gabriel, California

LONDON DISTRICT, ONTARIO.

Twenty-three people made their decision to be baptized following the four-week series of cottage meetings held in Stratford, Delhi, Corinth, St. Thomas, and London. From January 16 to February 10, twenty-three cottage meetings were conducted by Harry Doty, Lloyd Adams, Louis Zonker, and William Williams under the leadership of James Daugherty. A total of one hundred and twenty nonmembers were contacted. Assistance in the series was also given by Bishop Joseph Baldwin and Elder James Phillips.

This missionary series was planned several months ago by Apostles P. E. Farrow and Arthur Oakman and District President C. E. Muir. Each appointee was equipped with visual aids which proved to be of immeasurable help in making plain the gospel message.

As a climax to this total effort, an Institute on Evangelism was conducted in London on February 11 and 12 which included classwork, a baptismal service, a general prayer meeting, and sermons by Apostles Arthur Oakman and P. E. Farrow, and a special district conference conducted by the district president.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Bishop H. L. Livingston and Apostle D. T. Williams spent two days of February in the Chicago District in the interest of securing locations for building future churches. The building committee studied maps showing the location of church families, chief transportation lines, proposed highways, stable land areas, etc. Visits were made to several communities in which the new buildings could be located. A meeting was held in Independence by the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Apostle Williams in which the matter was discussed further. Several decisions were reached.—Taken from The Chicago District News.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—District Conference was held February 26. District President Charles Neff presided over the business meeting and preached at the 11:00 o'clock hour. A report of district activities was given. An amount for the reunion fund was voted upon and approved. The names of R. E. Goold and Wesley Ballinger were presented and approved for ordination to the office of elder. The name of Richard Oehring was approved for ordination to the office of deacon.

Official delegates to General Conference are Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Goold, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Neff, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Link, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wellman, Carl Self, C. B. Constance, Glen Clark, and H. A. Merchant.—Taken from Ray-O-Lite.

WALTHILL, NEBRASKA.—Elder G. Wayne Smith held missionary-cottage meetings for two weeks, February 5-19.

A baptismal service was held February 17. Those baptized were Zella Riggs, Margaret Riggs, Joan Anderson, and her daughter, Earlene. All live in Walthill. Confirmation service was held at the church the following Sunday afternoon. District President Charles Neff of Omaha was in charge. He was assisted by C. B. Constance, G. Riley, E. Link, and G. Clark of Omaha, and by Bern Case of Decatur, Nebraska.

Elder E. B. Constance was the speaker at the 11:00 o'clock service of February 19.—Reported by HAZEL HUNT.

THE SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—District President S. R. Coleman was in charge of the special conference held February 19 at Mt. Vernon, Illinois. Missionary John T. Puckett of Independence, Missouri, was present. The theme of the conference was "Ratify Your Calling."

Sunday's activities included a fellowship service and a sermon by Brother Coleman. There was also special singing by the Flora, Illinois, Branch under the direction of Mrs. S. R. Coleman. A basket lunch was eaten at the noon hour.

At the business meeting held in the afternoon a trio from Marion, Illinois, sang. Three priesthood recommendations were approved by the district: Ralph Wilson Rockett for priest, George Wolfe of Mt. Vernon Branch for teacher, and Carl Harl of Springerton Branch for deacon. Delegates selected for General Conference were: District President and Mrs. S. R. Coleman, Chas. Wesner, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Colvin, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Colvin, Glenna Jackson, Lewis Deselms, Alva Henson, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Brown, B. R. Yokum, and Lowell Wilson. An adjustment was made on the district budget. Mrs. Myrta Choati was introduced by Brother Coleman as the new district women's leader.—Reported by MRS. RUBY ELLIS.

MT. VERNON, ILLINOIS.—In November Patriarch Henry Castings held a series of evangelistic sermons and gave nine patriarchal blessings.

Mt. Vernon was host to the Southeastern Illinois district conference held November 19 and 20. Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Missionary S. R. Coleman were in attendance.

At the 11:00 service of December 11 the babies of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd McKinney and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Rockett were blessed. At the December 11 evening service, Lowell Wilson of Flora, Illinois, was the speaker.

On December 18 the children's department presented a Christmas program at the 11:00 o'clock hour. Elder Ed Colvin of Flora, Illinois, was the speaker in the evening.

The women's department sponsored a chicken supper on December 22. The annual Christmas party and gift exchange was held on December 23. On Christmas evening Pastor W. W. Colvin showed slides of "The Birth and Childhood of Christ."

Each week there is an advertisement in the local newspaper, and radio station WMIX announces the services. A telephone in the church has been an added convenience to the members and a means of keeping the name of the church before the public.

Zion's League meets each Sunday evening. George Wolfe, assisted by Ralph Rockett, has organized a team which plays on the church basketball league.

Throughout the schedule of activities, there is a growing evangelistic spirit.—Reported by MRS. RUBY ELLIS.

ST. CHARLES, MISSOURI.—The old church property has been sold and was taken over by its new owner on February 28. The Saints have held services in the building since 1918. They have been in need of a new and larger building for some time. Elder F. F. O'Bryan, pastor, and his wife have been serving the people for the past sixteen years, and it has always been their desire to see the people in St. Charles have a new church. They, along with the members, have worked hard and now this desire is being fulfilled.

They are rushing the necessary alterations so the local group will be ready for Seventy James S. Menzies who will hold missionary services, March 8 to 20.

On March 19, a special dedicatory prayer service will be held at 10:00 o'clock. Apostle E. J. Gleazer from Independence, Missouri, will be guest speaker at the 11:00 service the same morning.

The afternoon will be devoted to a musical, and a talk by District President C. L. Archibald of St. Louis. The evening service will be conducted by Seventy James S. Menzies.—Reported by FLORENCE HOLLANDER.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—A School of Evangelism under the theme "Each One Win One" was held February 19 to 26 inclusive. Instructors were Apostle C. G. Mesley and Seventy Ernest Ledsworth. Apostle Mesley discussed the 1950 missionary motivation, policy, procedure and approaches of those who witness for Christ.

Seventy Ledsworth explained the history, doctrines, and organization of other denominations.

A panel discussion on "Winning a Member," led by Priest Ken Fisher, and an experience meeting were featured on each Sunday. Mrs. Elizabeth Greig, Charles Bright, and Mrs. Elizabeth Bright were confirmed on February 26 by Elders J. A. Gendron, E. L. Bowerman, and Aylmer Powell.

Delegates chosen for General Conference were Seventy Ernest Ledsworth, Elder E. L. Bowerman, Priests Dan Laverty and Ambrose Skinner, Mrs. Dan Laverty, and Mrs. C. E. Diggle.

The annual "Youth's Rally" was held in Saskatoon on February 25 and 26 under the auspices of the District Zion's League. The theme chosen was "Youth Tells the Story." Fellowship service on Saturday morning was followed by classes. Business and recreation occupied the afternoon. The Daughters of Zion catered for a banquet which was attended by over one hundred. Sunday began with Communion service. The young people then met in the large auditorium where two services were held. Apostle Mesley was the speaker.—Reported by MRS. C. E. DIGGLE.

ESCANABA, MICHIGAN.—On March 5 baptismal services were held with the Gladstone Branch. A young woman from the Wells Branch was baptized. Rex Stowe, pastor of Gladstone Branch, baptized a child. The confirmation took place at the evening service of the same day.

After the evening service, Brother Stowe and others went to the home of Brother Joseph Johnson to administer to him.—Reported by A. M. BOOMER.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA.—District conference was held February 18 and 19. Over 150 people from Texas and Oklahoma attended. Meals were served at the church. The church is well equipped with a kitchen and dining room.

Brother Aleah Koury preached the Saturday evening sermon. At the business meeting held Sunday morning, Apostle Reed Holmes ordained Paul Carrow to office of priest, and Elder Limb of Buffalo, Oklahoma, ordained Max Riding to the office of deacon. Brother Carrow is the son of Pastor Ray Carrow. Brother Riding is the grandson of the late Elder E. B. Stafford. Elder Ralph Wilt, district president, gave the charge.

Apostle Holmes gave the sermon at 11:00 o'clock on Sunday. Plans were made to ordain Raymond Carson to the office of elder at the Alton, Texas, Branch.

Elders Ray Carrow and Bob Bunch are teachers of an adult class that meets every Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Carlos Spraggins is in charge of the church school.—Reported by MRS. ALICE SKINNER.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.—Applications from students abroad are arriving at the office of R. E. Browne. Already four applications have come in from Australia, one from Mexico, and one from England. Many are also anticipated from Hawaii and Canada.

Under the direction of Henry Anderson, the forty-voice A Cappella Choir will make a spring concert tour.—The Graceland Tower.

DETROIT-WINDSOR DISTRICT.—The district conference was held at Central Church in Detroit on February 26. The program commenced at 9:30, with a prayer and testimony service supervised by the district presidency: Elders W. Blair McClain, James Pycoc, Alma Grant, associated with Evangelist George Booth. Elder J. Pycoc preached in the 11:00 a.m. worship service.

The afternoon business session was presided over by Elder McClain. Chief items of business were the selection of thirty delegates to represent the district at General Conference. Another item was the approval of the following for ordination: Charles Hitch and Gordon Grant of the Windsor Branch to the office of deacon; Donald Nevels of the Windsor Branch to the office of teacher; Lyle Mousseau of the Detroit Branch and Milton Carswell of the Windsor Branch to the office of priest, and Ira Ben Ferguson of the Azalia Branch to the office of elder. All these were approved by unanimous vote.—Reported by HARRY E. DEPEW.

TAMPA, FLORIDA.—Evangelist Ray Whiting held a series of meetings from January 29 through February 12. There were a number of people who heard of the church for the first time at these services.

People from Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois, have been recent visitors.

Plans are being made to present the Easter Cantata again.

The church is located on the corner of Sterling Street and Memorial Highway.—Reported by ROY MCGAHAGIN.

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.—Elder Ray Ashenburst of Ohio, conducted a two-week series of evangelistic services from February 18 to March 3. Meetings were held both at the church and in the homes. Attendance at two Sunday evening preaching services was eighty each night, with fourteen nonmembers. Slide lectures were given at the church on four evenings, average attendance being forty, with average nonmember attendance of ten.

Due to snow and icy roads, only one slide lecture was given at St. Catharine's mission, thirty miles distant.

At the conclusion of the series, the Men's Club sponsored a dinner at a local restaurant for the women of the branch, after which they were entertained at the church. After the meal, Elder Ashenburst was driven to the train for points north.

A few of the membership are planning to attend General Conference.—Reported by F. ELDON OLIVER.

WICHITA, KANSAS.—Judith Aliene Kelley, daughter of Mrs. Neva M. Kelley, was baptized on December 18 by Elder Myron F. LaPointe, and was confirmed that evening by Elders LaPointe and Ronald E. Manuel. This made a total of 24 baptisms for the year 1949. Robert Leslie Tilden, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Tilden was blessed on November 27 by Elders LaPointe and Earl P. Sheppard. Terrance Michael Teeter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy E. Teeter was blessed on January 8 by Elders LaPointe and Manuel.

The Zion's Home Builders women's group recently had printed a church membership directory, containing the names of all members on the Wichita Branch records. The directory was presented and distributed at a special service on the evening of December 4.

The women's department last year started a "gift for Christ" offering instead of the usual mystery pal exchange. Climaxing the year's activities, a very interesting program on "Family Traditions at Christmas" was presented. Portrayals of customs at Christmas were given, starting with the year 1881.

Elder and Mrs. James W. Wooten celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on December 25, with open house for their many friends.

During the winter months the Wichita Y.M.C.A. has sponsored a city-wide church basketball league. The Wichita Branch has been represented with intermediate and senior boys' teams and a girls' team.

The Zion's Home Builders held a bake sale in one of the downtown stores on February 1, to help defray expenses for bringing the Graceland A Cappella Choir to Wichita in March.

Apostle Reed Holmes was the speaker at morning and evening services on February 5.

The first meeting in the new church was held on February 26. Although the basement is not quite completed, temporary class space has been set up, services are being held, and there has been a good attendance.—Reported by MARIAN MANUEL.

KENNETT, MISSOURI.—New classrooms are being added to the church building. The landscaping is being done through the County Extension Department and the grounds are to be prepared for a county-wide survey by mid-summer.

A class on "The Gathering," by Elder G. L. DeLapp is being conducted by Priest G. L. Malone on Sunday evening from 6:00 to 7:00. There is good attendance at the class.

Elder Don Kaiser held a series of meetings from February 26 to March 5. There was good attendance of members and nonmembers.—Reported by SUE BRANCHE.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist E. R. Carter held missionary services from February 26 to March 5. He preached seven sermons and gave three blessings. Although the weather was very cold and the roads icy, the meetings were well attended. Brother Carter was able to visit in the homes of most of the Saints.

Earlier in the year, District President John W. Banks made three visits to Coleman, preaching, teaching the priesthood, and speaking at a family-night supper sponsored by the Zion's League.—Reported by RAY MOGG and JASON METHNER.

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT.—District conference was held at Springfield, Missouri, February 25, 26. District President John Blackmore was in charge in the absence of the Apostle in charge, E. J. Gleazer, who was ill.

A panel discussion led by Elders Herman Plumb of Carthage, Missouri; Clifford L. Browne, Springfield; B. F. Kyser, Miami, Oklahoma; and T. W. Bath, Pittsburg, Kansas, opened the conference Saturday evening.

During the church school period Sunday morning, Brother Blackmore was in charge of the priesthood; F. M. Bishop, the adult division; Clifford L. Browne and J. Arthur Dixon, young people; and Adena Browne the children's division.

Brother Blackmore preached at eleven o'clock. Robert Dale Tutney was recommended to the office of deacon and John Sparling, teacher; both are from Springfield. Argyle Gross and William Radford of Fairland, Oklahoma, were recommended to the office of deacon. Upon recommendation of the reunion committee, it was voted to raise $2,000 for a caretaker's home on the reunion grounds at Racine, Missouri. An invitation was accepted to hold the next district conference at Miami, Oklahoma.

On March 11 and 12, Spring River District met jointly with Rich Hill District at Pittsburg, Kansas, for a religious education institute. Apostle Reed M. Holmes, the guest speaker, was assisted by Brother John Blackmore in leading some of the discussion periods. Meetings were held in the church and at the Smith Funeral Home. A display of visual aids was held in connection with the meeting.—Reported by LOIS SHIPLEY.

Elder J. F. Mintun Dies

The passing of Brother James Franklin Mintun on March 13, 1950, at the age of ninety-four, brings to a close the career of one of our "old-time" missionaries who ministered to many church people in Iowa in the regions from Council Bluffs to Des Moines and adjacent areas especially, and brought the knowledge of the gospel to many more. He had been a schoolteacher in his earlier years, and he brought his literary talents into the service of the church. He had more than fifty articles published in the Herald alone, as well as writing for other church publications. Although he was superannuated in 1920, he continued to labor in church work as a volunteer, helping in a local capacity whenever possible. His was a kindly personality, and he had many friends throughout the church. At the time of his passing, the church feels a deep appreciation for his life and services.

A Tribute to Willis W. Kearney

A copy of the Clinton Eye (Missouri) for February 2 arrived lately containing a beautiful tribute to Brother W. W. Kearney, who passed away on January 30. He had performed his last work on this paper before his retirement six years ago. Most of his life he was a printer and newspaper publisher, and worked at one time for the Herald Publishing House in the Lamoni days. Readers will remember his writings for the Herald and Stepping Stones, as they will also remember the fine work of his companion, Ermina Perkins Kearney, who survives him.

We remember a fine tribute paid to Brother Kearney by the late President Frederick M. Smith. He was a friendly and noble man, loved people, and especially young folk. We had some good letters from him, and there was always kindness and warmth in his writing.

Food Chats -

By MILDRED NELSON SMITH

IT'S PLANTING TIME. And this spring when you plant, plant a big portion of really good health. Then see to it that you and your family get your full share of the harvest all the year around.

You see, many of those vitamins and minerals we hear so much about do grow. And you can grow extra amounts, especially of some of the vitamins, simply by choosing the right variety to plant.

Take vitamin C, for example. Everybody knows that vitamin C grows in tomatoes, peas, cabbage, lettuce, spinach, broccoli, and dozens of other vegetables, not to mention fruits. But few people know that two heads of cabbage or two plants of tomatoes growing side by side may have vastly different amounts of vitamin C in them.

Of the popular varieties of tomatoes, Marglobe and Bonny Best are both recommended to be grown in Iowa. Marglobe has been a consistent high vitamin C producer in tests. Bonny Best trails with one fifth to one fourth less. Or compare Rutgers and Pritchard, two more popular varieties. The Rutgers leads in vitamin C content by a full one third or more. Its average vitamin C content has been as high or higher than that of Marglobe in tests. Other tomato varieties that have outranked either Marglobe or Rutgers include Farthest North C, Golden Queen, Comet, and Best of All.

Nor is this difference in varieties limited to tomatoes. Many trials have indicated that, in general, early varieties of cabbage, peas, lettuce, and spinach all give extra measure of this important vitamin. Arctic King has been one of the high vitamin C producers among lettuce varieties. Longstanding, a variety of spinach, has averaged nearly three times as much of the vitamin as New Zealand spinach. In studies at the Cornell Experiment Station, Bloomsdale, Summer Savoy and Nobel spinach have had over twice as much vitamin C as Heavy Pack. And from Maine comes reports that Blue Scotch kale carries about twice as much vitamin C as Dwarf Siberian kale.

Among the fruits, apples are a good example of varietal differences. In the midwest, the Willow Twig apple and its sport, Red Willow, have been found to provide almost as much vitamin C as a comparable amount of the popular varieties of tomatoes. This is at least two to three times as much as is found in other varieties of apples grown in the midwest.

OF COURSE, just because you plant Rutgers tomatoes or Longstanding spinach doesn't guarantee that you'll get all the extra vitamin C that should be your portion. Other factors cause wide variations within varieties. For one thing, the amount of light present during ripening of tomatoes or maturing of spinach makes a great difference. The fruit or the leaves exposed to the most light, without sun damage, usually come up with the most of the vitamin at harvest time.

Then after the foods are harvested, it's up to you to see that your family gets its full share of this so carefully-grown vitamin. Most fresh fruits and vegetables, that are not the storing kind, lose vitamin C very rapidly off the plant unless they are refrigerated. So use them soon after they are harvested and refrigerate them until you are ready to use them. If you're buying these fresh things, refuse to purchase any except those stored on ice or refrigerated shelves in the market.

Serve as many of these foods raw as you possibly can. There are some you will want to cook for variety's sake. If you do cook them, leave them as nearly whole as you can, use as little water as you can, cook only until crisp tender, and serve quickly. Do not let them stand in a lukewarm state. Vitamin C just zips away from warm foods. If you can't serve them quickly, chill them and reheat for later serving or serve them in a salad.

Some of these grown vitamins you'll want to store away for winter use. If you freeze either fruits or vegetables, follow reliable directions. Scald the vegetables and cool them before packing, or they'll lose their vitamin C rapidly. Pack all fruits or vegetables in containers that keep the moisture in and the air out. Then freeze quickly and store at zero degrees or colder. If they are stored above zero, the vitamin C slips away quickly during storage; and the higher the temperature, the faster it goes.

EVEN CANNED FOOD will lose vitamin C during storage. To keep as much of it for your family as possible, store canned foods in a cool, dark place. Of course, it's up to you to see that as much food value as possible is present in the canned food too. Follow only up-to-date directions for food preservation. And be sure to use the fairly short processing times now being recommended by your state colleges. Then when you serve the food, serve every bit of the liquid. Chances are that it will have from 35 to 65 per cent of all the water soluble vitamins and minerals in it that were in the food, including the vitamin C.

It is important that you see to it that your family gets its full share of this food nutrient which helps keep gums firm and pink, teeth, bones, and blood vessels strong, speeds healing of wounds, prevents many muscle aches and pains (often called "growing pains") and in many ways adds comfort and a sense of well-being to life while helping the body build resistance to disease. You see, in some of the "growingest" states in the nation, people—farm folk right along with the rest—don't get enough vitamin C foods, not to mention vitamin A and the rest, to keep themselves really healthy. We learned the importance of this after wartime examinations showed so very many of our young men and women physically unfit for military service. In its attempts to learn why, the Quartermaster Corps for the armed forces cooperated with various colleges in making studies of food habits and food preferences of the people. These studies showed some interesting situations.

Take Iowa, for example. Almost everyone in Iowa, according to those studies, really likes tomatoes. They rank as one of the three most popular vegetables. Only 1 per cent of those studied really disliked them for any reason. Yet only about one half of these same people ate enough vitamin C rich foods including tomatoes, oranges, and all the rest, to give them a chance at buoyant good health.

So, when you plant this time, plant to get the most from your work. Then see to it that your family gets all the possible good from the foods you grow.

My Old, Old Path

By RUTH THOMPSON SMITH

If you are like most Latter Day Saints, "The Old, Old Path" is one of your favorite hymns. I'm wondering if you see in your mind's eye, a particular path that you think of whenever you sing the song.

I started down the old, old path when I was just a little girl, holding onto my mother's hand and trusting her to lead me aright. That was just the beginning. The path I knew was a beautiful one to me, full of adventure and pleasant companionship which I was too young to enjoy completely.

This path began at the very bottom step of the old building which was our house of worship, and proceeded down the sidewalk to the little town where I was to grow up. I can see it as plainly as though it were yesterday. As my worn shoes made their way along, the skirt of my red gingham dress swished about my cotton-clad legs and my hair was short—in the Buster Brown style—because that way it could grow much longer before my mother would have to turn barber again. I was happy as I held onto the hand of this lovely mother with the soft curls of hair like a halo about her face. Together we walked down the old path.

We crossed the street by the little gray railroad station with its gay petunias blooming in neat flower boxes and its tall red cannas in white bordered beds, then turned left along the track, kicking the loose stones under our feet. Next we came to the trestle with the wide creek winding its way far below us. Here the path became a bridge with a handrail, and I walked across holding tighter to my mother's hand than ever before. I was frightened by some of the older and braver children who ventured off the path to walk across on the railroad ties with the yawning gaps between each step like some pitfall just waiting the unwary or careless.

Then we were across the bridge and following the narrow old path again with the little band of Saints. Occasionally a small brown lizzard would dart across our path, and my mother would try and console me by saying that it was more afraid of me than I was of it, although I wondered how that was possible because my heart was jumping so very wildly.

After some time the path turned to our right, and we walked down through the dense growth of fennel, goldenrod, and milkweed as high as my head on either side. Then the path widened, and we came into the clearing of a fisherman's little white cottage. Uncle Nathe and Aunt Lizzie sat in the shade of the cottonwood trees waiting for us. Uncle Nathe was another fisherman who had answered Jesus' call to "Follow Me." They rose to meet the approaching Saints, and there was a wonderful spirit of unity and fellowship felt even by the small children.

A great pile of fishing nets lay behind the white house. I liked the smell of fresh tar and beeswax about them. The old, old path didn't end here, but went on a little farther to the clean sandy shore of the beautiful Ohio River. Against the background of the green wooded Kentucky shore across from us, I witnessed something that was an essential part of the old path. My sister was baptized, and I hung behind my mother's skirts when someone later playfully asked me if I didn't want to be baptized too.

When we stood in church and sang, "In this old, old path are my friends most dear, and I walk with them with the angels near," I understood what I was singing about, because I had walked down that path with my friends, and it was very real to me.

The old path as I first knew it remains bright in my memory, and "I fearless walk with the Nazarene," for it has been made "strangely sweet by the touch divine of his blessed feet."

The Willing Spirit

"I know," it cried, "thy kingdom, Lord,
Shall be a lovely place.
I'll be so glad when I can look Upon thy holy face.

"There'll be no sin or sorrowing,
No heartache and no pain.
Oh, what a paradise 'twill be,
When Jesus comes again.

"I want my friends and loved ones all
To hear thy gospel too,
For I believe with all my heart,
Its every word is true.

"Oh, how I long for that great day!
I pray, "Thy kingdom come!"
I'm willing, Lord, to build it, too,
When all my work is done."

DARLENE BOWDEN.

Picked From the Periodicals

BY AARONA BOOKER KOHLMAN

TOPICS REVIEWED for March are many and varied, ranging from everyday life and problems to scholarly research. Everyone should find much of great interest in the March magazines.

"Why the Sun Stood Still," Reader's Digest, is a preview of a book that may turn out to be as epochal as The Origin of Species. Certainly every believer in the miracles of the Bible should read this, and then perhaps the book.

"A Workable Cue to Happiness and Personality," Reader's Digest, gives an eminent psychologist's views on developing one's personality. Read it if you feel your personality can be improved.

"Is War With Russia Inevitable?" Reader's Digest, is a discussion that should be of great interest to every person. In it a counselor of the State Department gives five solid arguments for peace.

If you dislike waiting until someone else can do it, look up "How to Fix Appliance Plugs," American Home, and you can be your own handy man. A companion piece on the next page is "How to Wire a Lamp Socket."

"What Price Serenity?" American Home, is a very short justification for those who like to keep around some seemingly useless objects.

"Handy Man at Home," Ladies' Home Journal, is a good guide to necessary tools, and has many suggestions for making things easier. You'll wonder, of course, "Why didn't I think of that?"

"As Your Children See You," Parents' Magazine, is an excellent tonic for any parent. Try getting a child's-eye view of your home and yourself as a parent.

Another aid to less friction in the home is "How About Neatness and Manners?" Parents' Magazine.

"A Baby Speaks Up," Parents' Magazine, is for pure enjoyment. Don't miss it.

"What a Mother Should Tell Her Daughter," Parents' Magazine, is valuable information for mothers of girls approaching adolescence, and few mothers have really adequate knowledge.

Nine out of ten shoes don't fit, it is claimed, therefore "Do Your Shoes Fit?" Good Housekeeping, is a piece to read and save.

If you'd like to change your hair-style, but don't know how, consult "Master Handbook of 50 New Hair-dos," Good Housekeeping.

"Sex Education Is Not Enough," Woman's Home Companion, suggests some steps that may be taken to prepare couples more adequately for marriage.

The Church and Education

By DOROTHY EASTWOOD

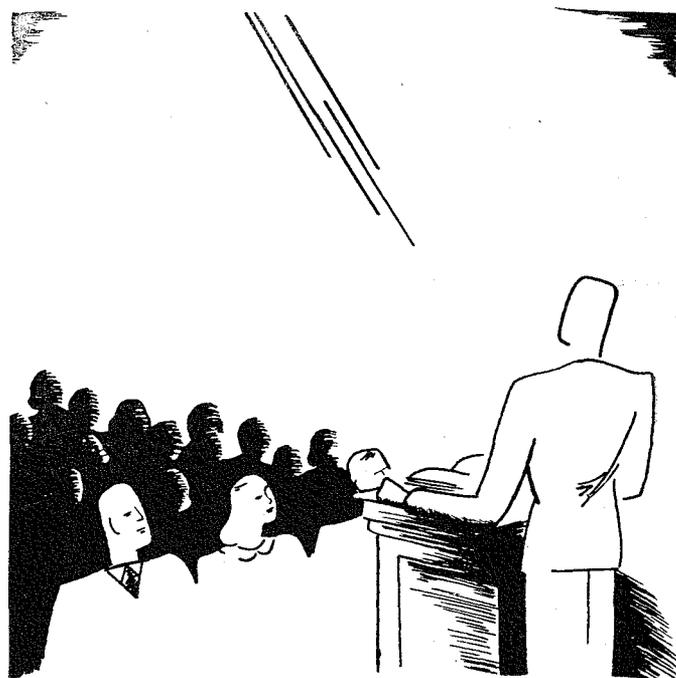

IT WAS ONE of the most wonderful things I have ever saw," said the speaker.

How many times has that occurred in a Latter Day Saint church? Members who know and love the sincere brother making such a grammatical error forget the mistake, but what about the visiting friend from the big Presbyterian church down the street sitting across the aisle? Such an error will be a glaring one to him. He's looking for truth, light, and knowledge. Errors in English as well as errors in facts will block his response to the wonder of the gospel message.

Naturally the most important thing in any sermon or talk is the faith of the speaker in what he is saying, in his own personal character, and in his sincerity. But if those listening to him do not know these things about the speaker, his presentation alone will have to carry him. In other words, if he is to present the latter-day message in its best light to those who would listen, he must be a good representative.

In contrast to statements such as the "I have ever saw," one is the man who is careful of his English, and who is widely read. He can hold any audience, explain what he wishes, and build up no barriers between himself and his listeners. An excellent example is Dr. Lawrence Brockway, pastor at Ann Arbor, Michigan, professor at Michigan University and well known in scientific circles over the world. A few years ago Dr. Brockway spoke during Religious Emphasis Week to several hundred students at Graceland College on the subject, "Science and Religion." These were educated people. His English was such that he irritated no one with obvious errors. He knew his subject and was recognized in his field. Those who listened realized that here was an authority—one to whom they must listen.

BUT EDUCATION is more inclusive than merely the use of correct English. It also means the difference between being a good worker and a drifter. In an office are two stenographers. They both take dictation reasonably well and are medium-speed typists. One of the girls takes her dictation, transcribes her letters, puts up the mail and leaves right on the dot at 5 p.m. The other girl takes her dictation, transcribes her letters and on spare time practices any new words which come up so as to increase her speed. She seems to understand more about the business because she makes it a policy to remember faces and names of people who come in; she also reads about her line of business and in many little ways attempts to do a good job. Bit by bit her employer begins to depend on her, and in time she becomes a private secretary with a jump in pay and prestige. The other girl remains a mediocre steno.

Here is one more example of the need of knowledge. A man loves this church a great deal. He knows a little about its organization, a little about its origin, a little about its doctrine. He has a very good friend he wishes to interest in his church. After their first religious discussion, he is ready to give up the attempt. At every point he is thwarted because he does not know enough about his church to answer his friend's questions. What, then, is the answer? Study—learn—to show thyself approved.

There is a need, if these are fair examples of actual situations, for the church to see that its representatives are equipped to represent it well. This means education. But it can be self-education. Formal college study is not always so important. It is the knowledge gained that counts.

Everyone is a representative of the church whether pastor, member of the priesthood, student in school, or mother in the home. To the people a Latter Day Saint contacts in daily living, he is the diplomatic ambassador of his religion.

THIS CHURCH needs members in the scientific field, in politics, in the professions, in the business world, in the home, in the academic world who are recognized in their fields and considered authorities. These people must carry on their work with integrity, with highest business ethics, and in a Christian manner. Then others observing them will have to say, "Look at Mr.—, the scientist. He's a Latter Day Saint. And there's Mrs.—, the economist, also a Saint. And there are others who are skilled people, and good people. Their church must have something." Oh, what these emissaries can do for their religion!

Not all can be famous, but everyone can be such an emissary, whether he is widely recognized or known by only a few people in his own neighborhood. If he has the reputation of being honest, upright, courageous, sincere, hard working and successful at his job, then he too will be recognized and people will say, "This church must have something."

Zion—every Latter Day Saint's dream—will be composed of people who are skilled at whatever they are doing. Even the most menial task will be done well. But this stewardship of ability must begin now if Zion is ever to become more than a Latter Day Saint dream.

SO FAR the only things mentioned have been in the temporal field. There is also a dearth in the spiritual and doctrinal field, as exemplified by the man unable to tell his friend about the church. Lay members must be so endowed with a love of their church that they will seek to learn of its beliefs and history and so will not be caught in the position of this man. Members must learn to pray, investigate other churches to have a better understanding of their own, and cultivate the gifts of the spirit. This too is education. Zion is as far away as the spiritual condition of the people. In this field, then, there is a wide-open need for education.

WHAT PLACE has the church in filling the cavern of this need? When businesses wish to open up new plants, they train men to do the job. When countries send diplomats to represent them in world relations, they train them. Why, then, does not the church train its representatives?

Many, many times the cry is, "I would go to college if I could afford it." There are often highly intelligent young people who must quit even before finishing high school because they cannot afford to continue. These people are a loss to the church—a loss which could amount to a lot monetarily speaking. Why doesn't the church set up a way for some of these people to continue their work, to take advantage of the intelligence with which God endowed them? Graceland College offers educational opportunities and spiritual opportunities to those who can afford them. What about those who can't afford them, but need them? Couldn't Graceland set up some scholarships as other schools have done? Surely this opportunity to extend training to diplomats of the gospel should not be denied.

In rural areas sometimes there are not educational nor cultural opportunities, in fact there are not even ways of learning about improved farming. Why can't the church set up a system of rural education for adults? Here would be a great opportunity for training diplomats of the gospel.

Why cannot this church make summer use of the facilities of Graceland College to send its representatives to school for academic and spiritual training? They could be taught the rudiments of ministering to the people and also learn the methods of conducting a discussion, of teaching a class, of making a speech that presents its facts, draws a conclusion, presses home its point, and finishes leaving the audience in a favorable attitude.

SPIRITUAL AND DOCTRINAL EDUCATION cannot be denied. More emphasis in church school classes should be laid to learning the doctrines of the church. Zion's Leagues should put more emphasis on learning of the church and perhaps just a little less on sports and having a good time. Orioles and Scouting groups have numerous chances of becoming educated in the spiritual and doctrinal as well as gaining new skills in other departments. And more stress should be laid on the teacher-training program so that those who teach classes are trained to do so. Again they are representing their church and must be equipped to represent well.

If this church is to have its gospel spread to all the world, it will take more than the meager number of men designated as missionaries to do the job. This task will require every man, woman, and child who calls himself or herself a Latter Day Saint. To be good emissaries of the gospel calls for persons equipped with a sincere desire to serve, a humble faith in God, and the message of his church, plus training to present the message in the best possible manner.

The Hypocrite and the Fig Tree

Arise! who drug your doubt in busyness
Look to the end, the whole
If it be false more false is your activity.
The hypocrite stood on the street corner
And prayed at great length,
Busily.

Arise! who drown your discontent in busyness
Will it matter, next year, what you did today?
No more deny your soul in worthless rounds.
The barren fig tree sucked up sap
And spread its leaves beneath the sun,
Busily.

Tuesday, after breakfast at the Bre-shears' home, we were on our way early. We visited Elder A. D. McCall at Milton, the Jernigans at Brewton, inspected the reunion grounds there in company with Ben Jernigan and Pastor Clarence Langham. We paid our respects to Elder J. S. McCall at Berrydale, Elder and Sister E. N. McCall at Dixonville, arriving at Evergreen in time, first, for a sumptuous dinner at the home of Brother and Sister R. C. (Comby) Snowden. Here also were Pastor and Mrs. David Snowden, J. T. Booker and wife (daughter of Comby Snowden) and Sister Ennie Snowden, mother of the Snowden clan.

Secondly, we three placed ourselves in the hands of the Snowden Brothers, barbers extraordinary, where each got not only a haircut and shave, but a treatment situated somewhere between osteopathic and chiropractic.

Raining by this time, we went on to Mackenzie. Here we were billeted at the home of Brother and Sister E. B. Odom. After supper we went to our church where, considering the matter, we were greeted by a good-sized congregation. Elder H. F. Salter, pastor, is in charge of the branch here.

James (Sonny) Odom, a star football player with his high school, headed for Graceland College (I hope), was home assisting his father with the farm chores.

After breakfast, with the rain still falling, our party began the long drive to New Orleans, stopping at Ocean Springs

(I believe) for lunch, and arriving at New Orleans in good time for my train. Still raining.

The Southern Belle got me home safely at ten o'clock on Thursday the fifteenth, and I was soon thereafter at home in Independence.

Hinde, local chairman. These women, known as the Gray Ladies, will meet three times a week for training and study. Classes are taught by Miss Vida E. Butterworth, R.N., educational director.

After the period of training is completed, the women will devote at least one hundred hours a year to the work. The Gray Ladies do such things as arranging flowers, delivering mail, writing letters, and taking charge of the guest desk.

MISSIONARY PROGRESS

Several people were baptized during the month of March in the Far West Stake. Fourteen cottage meetings are held each week in the stake also. The missionary work for 1950 looks very promising.

HELD IN AUDITORIUM

Over eight hundred Girl Scouts of Eastern Jackson County held their first annual area festival, March 10, in the lower level of The Auditorium. Approximately 2,500 persons attended the festival.

In the February 27 issue, the item about Apostle Percy E. Farrow stated that Brother Farrow visited Pittsburg and Wellsburg in Ontario. These cities are not in Ontario. The item should have read Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and Wellsburg, West Virginia.

fairs, our most original and devoted idealists. Unless we do, we are almost inevitably bound to lapse into the role of a small evangelical sect, somewhat precious, quite esoteric, lost in the role that we either dare not or cannot fulfill. That such a possibility would occur, that we could be faced with this possibility of deliberately lying down and failing in this task, was foreseen by the Lord when he warned us long before our day that if we didn't do this job, he would "raise up another people" who both could and would do his will in Zion. The possibility presented itself to his mind originally that this people whom he was selecting would quit. But his bugles blow no retreat. His purposes go onward. Either we do it, or he will find those who will.

I am one of those people who are sincerely assured both that we can and we will establish Zion. It demands, of course, a great effort of will, of sacrifice, of devotion, of perseverance, of obliviousness to ridicule to accomplish such an achievement. One of the eternally astounding things is that you can find people, the right kind of people who will make any sacrifice required. That is why they are always the right kind of people. They are still to be found. There is no shortage. All the things we need, we either possess now or can borrow from God. That is a bank account which is good and is still available.

Our history all points in this one direction like a great arrow, but we must follow the arrow. We cannot always stand at the crossroads and wonder which one to take. We must follow the arrow. Perhaps our church had its Dieppe at Nauvoo. We retreated from Nauvoo with great loss. Our next attempt should be a triumphant D-day landing in Zion. But such an invasion of the well-defended shores of "things-as-they-are" is not for amateurs or cow-

A daughter, Shirley Anne, was born on December 5 to Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Porter of Sibley, Missouri. Mrs. Porter is the former Nadine Cowell of Independence, Missouri.

DEATHS

Obituaries should be sent in promptly by relatives or friends. They will be printed free as soon as space permits. In fairness to all, the editors reserve the right to cut the message to two hundred words.

FRANKLIN.—Bertha, daughter of George and Eliza Potts, was born July 24, 1895, in Brooklyn, New York, and died January 29, 1950, at the Independence Sanitarium. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 5, 1904. On March 3, 1924, she was married to Clarence C. Franklin; one son was born to this union. She also had a son by a former marriage. She had made her home in Independence for twenty-eight years and was a member of the Liberty Street congregation.

She is survived by her husband, Clarence; two sons: Walter E. Anderson and Clarence C. Franklin, Jr.; a foster son, Richard Ralston, and a foster daughter, Miss Foresta Franklin, all of Independence; four sisters: Mrs. Benjamin McGuire of Independence; Mrs. Alice Lester of Brooklyn, New York; Mrs. Sara Murray, East Orange, New Jersey; and Mrs. Ethel Hobby, Amityville, New York; and a brother, John Potts, of Springfield, New Jersey. Funeral services were held at the Dixon Kempley Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Elmer R. Hart officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Grace Viola, was born February 26, 1894, in Missouri and died November 21, 1949, in Yakima, Washington. She is survived by her husband, Frank Anderson, Sr.; a daughter, Gladys; and two sons: Frank Jr., and Tom.

WILLIAMS.—Emma Jane, daughter of Angeline and James F. Fleming, was born near Vandalia, Iowa, on October 22, 1868, and died at Runnells, Iowa, on February 4, 1950. In 1897 she was married to Charles M. Williams; five children were born to this union, three of them dying in infancy. She united with the Reorganized Church on August 27, 1905, and was a faithful member until her death.

She is survived by her two sons: Arthur and Fred of Des Moines, Iowa; two sisters: Mrs. Ida Curry of Mitchellville, Iowa, and Mrs. Bertha Rice of Des Moines; two brothers: Ed of Runnells and Harold of Bondurant, Iowa; and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the church in Runnells, Elders Herbert Scott and Clyde E. McDonald officiating. Interment was in the Vandalia cemetery.

SMITH.—Annie Blanche, daughter of Lorenzo and Adriana Johnson French, was born on May 30, 1875, at Jonesport, Maine, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on February 17, 1950. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 2, 1898, and remained faithful to her covenant until her death. She was married to William C. Smith on September 23, 1893; two daughters were born to them. In 1921 they moved to Independence, where they have lived ever since. Their home was always open to missionaries who visited Jonesport, and they were ever eager to testify and minister for Christ among the people.

She is survived by her husband, William, of the home; two daughters: Mrs. Nellie A. Hunker of Independence and Mrs. Madeline L. Giraud of Bryan, Texas; a brother: Lorenzo French of Minneapolis, Minnesota; two half-sisters: Mrs. Maud Woodward and Mrs. Addie Cummings of Lynn, Massachusetts; four grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Donald V. Lents officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LEONARD.—Frederick George, was born March 20, 1878, in Everetts, Michigan, and passed away at his home in Salinas, California, on February 26, 1950. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 23, 1938, and enrolled in the Salinas, California, Branch. He was a member of Blackberry Lodge No. 359, A.F.&A.M., of Elburn, Illinois. He also served many years as a peace officer in Elburn. Although suffering from illness for many years he was an attendant at church services whenever his health would permit and was at all times ready to stand and give a reason for the hope that was within him, and to witness for God and the church.

He is survived by his widow, Winnie G. Leonard, of Salinas, California; two daughters, Miss Winifred Olive Leonard of Salinas, and Mrs. Ione Martin, of Madera, California; and one sister, Mrs. Blanche Fisher, of Aurora, Illinois. Funeral services were held in Salinas, Elder LeRoy E. Harris officiating. Interment was in the I.O.O.F. Cemetery, Salinas.

 YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

A story was printed recently of a big city ball team that was slipping and losing most of its games. The manager was worried. One day he found a book of matches put out by an insurance company. It had this question on its cover, "Is Your Future Secure?"

The manager obtained and sent one of those books to each member of his team. In a little while their playing improved, and they were winning games again.

That applies to religious life, too. We need security, not only in this world, but also in the world to come.

Brother, are you making arrangements for your celestial social security?

Ask yourself, "Is my future secure?"

 ET CETERA

The editors sometimes get a manuscript from a writer with the "et cetera sickness." It is a disease. Sometimes "et ceteras" come two to the paragraph, five to the page. Editorial work consists in going through the script and knocking them out right and left with both hands. There ought to be a special flit gun for them, or a new kind of DDT.

Are you a victim of this malady? You have probably had it at some time in your life, as children have measles, mumps, and whooping cough.

They say children and savages are delighted with long lists and collections of things, the more the happier. It is a pure pleasure in quantity. Sinclair Lewis became famous as a realistic novelist simply by making lists of things found in drugstores, groceries, etc. (And there I go!)

Suppose you are writing to impress somebody with all the things or people you know. You list everything in that little basket you call your mind. But you don't want the reader to know you have run out, so you put "et cetera" at the end of your list.

There are various styles of writing it: the Latinist, "et caetera"; the ordinary perfectionist, "et cetera"; the average person, "etc."; your grandfather wrote, "&c."

Well, "that's all there is—there isn't any more." I've shoveled out all I know on this subject, and the little bin of my knowledge is empty. So here is a nice big "Et Cetera."

And if you feel the urge to put a lot of them in your next script, look out! We're coming after you with a flyswatter!

 EDUCATION

An educated person is one who can read a "Stop" sign, and obey it. He watches his speedometer and keeps his car under legal limits.

An educated person is one who can read a "No Smoking" sign and respect the rights of the public it is meant to protect.

An educated person is one who considers the comfort and welfare of others.

An education may be acquired at school, or from life, if one is intelligent.

Many people go through the schools but come out untouched and unimproved. Some of them acquire an education there, but they are the kind who would have learned anyway.

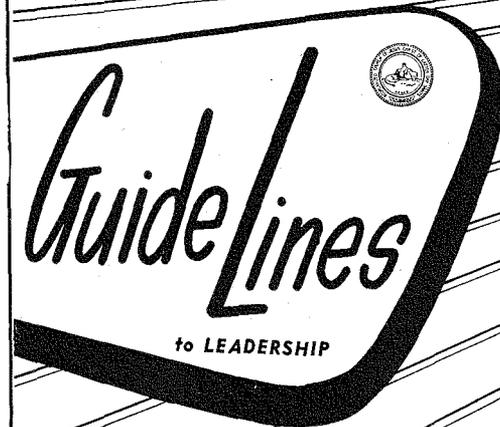

A school is a fountain of wisdom and learning. But many are tethered there who never taste of its waters.

The Church's Birthday

“ON THE SIXTH OF APRIL [1833], in the land of Zion, which was within the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, about eighty official members, together with some unofficial members of the church, met for instruction, and the service of God at the ferry on Big Blue River near the western limits of Jackson County, which is the confines of the State and the United States. It was an early spring, and the leaves and blossoms, like a glimpse at paradise, enlivened and gratified the soul.

“The day was spent in a very agreeable manner, in giving and receiving knowledge which appertained to this last kingdom, it being just eighteen hundred years since the Savior laid down his life that men might have everlasting life, and only three years since the church had come out of the wilderness, preparatory for the last dispensation. Those present had great reason to rejoice; they thought upon the time when this world came into existence and the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy; when Israel ate the ‘passover’ as wailing came up for the loss of the firstborn of Egypt. They felt like the shepherds who watched their flocks by night, when the angelic choir sweetly sang that electrifying strain, ‘Peace on earth and good will to man,’ and the solemnities of eternity rested upon them. This was the first attempt made by the church to celebrate its birthday, and those who professed not our faith talked about it as a strange thing.”—Times and Seasons, Volume V, page 752. (Printed in Church History, Volume I, pages 285, 286.)

Introducing...

LESLIE S. WIGHT, Skokie, Illinois, (page 5) was born in Tuncurry, N.S.W., Australia, in 1889 and baptized in Lamoni in 1907. He was graduated from the high school at Lamoni in 1908 and attended Graceland two years. In 1914 he married Lydia A. Thomas. They have two sons: Gordon Stewart and John Grayson.

Brother Wight is a grandson of Apostle Lyman Wight and a son of J. W. Wight, apostle and patriarch. He has been an active member of the church since 1907, when he was ordained a deacon. He became a priest in 1920, an elder in 1922, a high priest in 1924, and a patriarch in 1947.

He is employed at present as a sales manager in Chicago.

ZEALIA COOK JENNINGS, Independence, Missouri, (page 7) was born in Attica, Kansas, and was baptized in Wichita, Kansas, in 1924. The next year she was married to J. Abner Jennings. They have four children: Mrs. Joanne Raveill, James Charles, Warren Abner, and Joseph.

Sister Jennings was graduated from the high school in McPherson, Kansas, in 1924, and attended Wichita Business College following her graduation.

She is interested in church work and is active in the church school at Walnut Park Congregation. Writing is her hobby.

NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL, Columbus, Ohio, (page 9) was born in Ashland, Kentucky. She is a granddaughter of Patriarch A. B. Kirkendall and a daughter of Elder Gard H. Kirkendall. She was graduated from East High School, Columbus, in 1935 and then attended Ohio State University, receiving her B.Sc. and M.A. degrees from that institution.

She is a member of Pi Lamda Theta, Mu Epsilon, and Kappa Epsilon. She is president-elect of the International Mailbag Club, and a member of the American Association of University Women.

She taught commercial subjects and music in the Ashland, Ohio, High School for five years and was auditor for the U. S. Army Engineers for three years. She is presently employed as an editor.

Sister Kirkendall has been active in several fields of church work for the Columbus Branch and the Southern Ohio District. She is now serving her branch as children's supervisor and organist. She has been writing for church publications for eighteen years.

She likes to travel, and is planning her sixth trip to Mexico this summer to further her interest in archaeology. She writes radio scripts and is now working on a television program. Her writings have appeared in several magazines, mostly of a religious character.

News & Notes

JOINT COUNCIL BEGINS SESSIONS

The Joint Council began its final pre-conference sessions on March 14 in the office of the First Presidency. The Joint Council plans to hold two sessions a day.

The major order of business is the consideration of new men to be appointed to full-time ministry with the church effective this Conference. A number of additions from selected men throughout the church are anticipated. The Council of Twelve is anticipating introducing at the General Conference new visual aid materials for use in evangelism.

New full-time appointees approved by the Council of Twelve will be recommended to the Joint Council. Final approval and assignments to territory will be made by the Joint Council and announced the last day of the General Conference.

MISSOURI VALLEY INSTITUTE

Apostle D. T. Williams and F. M. McDowell conducted a priesthood institute for the Northwest Iowa District at Missouri Valley, Iowa, March 17 to 19. They report good attendance, interest, and participation. Invitations had been sent to the priesthood of Southwest Iowa and Northeast Nebraska, and a good representation from each contributed greatly to the success of the institute. An outstanding contribution was made by Pastors V. D. Ruch of Council Bluffs, Charles Neff of Omaha, Cecil Burnett of Sioux City, Seventy Harold I. Velt, and Dr. H. A. Merchant, who served as workshop leaders. The theme of the institute was, "So You Want to Help Families," built around the new text, "Ministry in the Home."

CHURCH SCHOOL INSTITUTE

Elder John Darling, Associate Director of the Department of Religious Education, was one of the main speakers at the church school institute of the Central Illinois District held March 12 at Taylorville, Illinois. "Lovest Thou Me?" was the theme of the institute. Arthur Hanson, district president, and William Banfield, church school director, were in charge of the institute.

BOSTON PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE

Brother F. M. McDowell, in co-operation with Brother A. W. Sheehy, conducted a priesthood institute for the Southern New England District at Boston, Massachusetts, March 10 to 12. Unusually excellent attendance is reported, as well as the high quality of support, intelligence, and devotion of the men of the priesthood. There were never less than forty-three men in attendance at any of the sessions. The average attendance for Saturday was forty-seven, with one hundred ten priesthood members and their wives at the banquet on Saturday evening. On Sunday the attendance was the largest within the memory of the old-timers in Boston, two hundred eighty-nine upstairs, thirty-one children downstairs, and people sitting on the steps between the two auditoriums.

MUSIC

Franklyn S. Weddle, Director of Music, attended the National Music Teachers' Association convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, on March 2. At the convention he spoke concerning the community music activities of Independence. He also attended two sessions of the Flint-Port Huron District priesthood institute held in Port Huron, Michigan. Brother Weddle left on March 1 and returned to Independence on March 6.

The General Conference of 1950 - April 2 to 9

A Cordial Welcome

Church people at headquarters and in Independence anticipate the chief event of our church life, the General Conference, with as much interest as any who attend it. It is always a pleasure to have company—invited company—coming to see us. The increased tempo of life under the crowding of activities and meetings, the anticipation of what may happen in the course of business, the return of dear friends from other places—all these bring a mood of happiness with these great gatherings.

Welcome, then, to all conference visitors. Housing is short. We are all crowded enough in normal times. It will take a great deal of effort to get everybody located comfortably and satisfactorily, but we think it can be done.

The Mood of the Conference

There is a background of general satisfaction as a setting for this conference. There has been peace and harmony throughout the church. Every appointee has his task before him and has been working with hope and expectation. Projects have been defined and working methods studied. There is a growing body of literature to assist the priesthood in their work. We anticipate that there are other and greater tasks before us. It is satisfying to know that we have been moving along the right road toward our goals.

Feelings of hope are infectious. They come from general officers and touch the hearts of the people everywhere. There is no nervousness at this Conference. We are neither worried nor afraid. What we have experienced in recent times has strengthened our faith. The church is stronger than it has been.

How Conference Grows

Three main functions have been evident in the Conferences of the church from the beginning: worship, instruction (including divine inspiration), and legislation. These three functions are dominant in the Conference today.

Conference has not changed its basic character, but it has developed its services to the people. Our interests and activities have become widely diversified, organization has been developed, and attendance has greatly increased. Worship is now divided into special groups: general, priesthood, youth, and others. Instruction includes many classes now in the field of Religious Education, as well as preaching and other features. Legislation has developed a technique of reporting, explanation of problems, general discussion, and voting. Formal procedures are necessary for larger bodies. But the principles are the same.

Long Preparation

If the visitors and delegates will look through the official General Conference Program and note the hundreds of meetings that have been arranged, the number of people engaged in the services, the places of meeting procured, with many attending problems, they may be able to realize why months of work and preparation upon the part of many persons, both officers and volunteers, have been required.

Every possible effort has been made, with the experience derived from many preceding gatherings, to anticipate the needs and the wants of the people. Emergencies and illness may cause some deviations from the program, but in general it will carry through as planned.

News of the Conference

Full news about the proceedings will be found in the Conference Daily Herald. Information about subscriptions will be found elsewhere in our publication. The Daily will contain all the official reports to the First Presidency, including the important financial report of the Presiding Bishopric, a reporting of daily business and events, principal addresses and summaries of sermons, talks, and lectures. While some of the information may appear later in other publications, it is only the Daily that contains a full report of the Conference. It also includes the official list of appointments.

Forecast

This editorial, naturally, was written long before the time for Conference to meet. News of events must come later.

Conference is like any church meeting, but on a larger scale. The program is planned and printed. The building is prepared and warmed. Staff, speakers, and officers are in place and ready to serve. Musicians are prepared. All the work is done in the trust that the people will come, before a single visitor is in sight. It is all done on faith.

Then the people come. Many of the seats are filled. The hearts of those who have labored are glad that they have not worked in vain.

Naturally, the prayers of the people have been made that this Conference might receive God's blessing and guidance. We can trust him to do his part. If we do ours, all will be well.

Official

Mailing of Tithing Payments

It is recommended that tithing and general offerings be made through the regularly appointed solicitors in the branches and bishop's agents or bishops of the various stakes and districts.

However, when these officers are not available and contributions are mailed to headquarters, the remittances should be by check, postal note, or money order made payable to the Presiding Bishopric, and the letter addressed to THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, THE AUDITORIUM, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Across the Desk

Garland E. Tickemyer writes:

I am pleased to advise you that we have just completed a two-day priesthood institute for men of the Los Angeles district. Each instructor prepared a written lecture ten to eighteen minutes in length covering his subject. These were discussed after the papers were read, and copies were placed in bound booklets for each man.

The lectures were almost uniformly good and, due to the careful preparation on the part of the instructors, we achieved a degree of excellence that I have not seen equaled before, even though I was responsible for organizing and conducting similar schools in Zion for a period of about eight years.

From Apostle D. Blair Jensen, February 20, 1950:

Yesterday it was my pleasant opportunity to be present and participate in the dedication of the church property at Gloucester. Elder Coggan preached in the morning, Brother Fry lectured to the priesthood, and I spoke in the evening.

Some ten years ago—and I believe pretty much through the efforts of Apostle Oakman and Bishop Trapp—this property was purchased for 640 pounds. Much donated labor and additional money have gone into this project. A cash outlay of probably a thousand pounds would cover what has been paid into the property. Brother Coggan loaned the group money in such a way that it could save paying interest, and needless to say all are happy because of this. It was good to observe the considerate tributes that were paid to Brethren Coggan, Oakman, and others for assistance and guidance. It is the hope of this little group to use past efforts as a means to further progress. Right now the people are full of good intentions to make this year a better one in missionary endeavor. I believe they will attain some success. Another house of worship is free from indebtedness, and with this comes security.

Elder Eugene A. Theys, Rotterdam, Holland, February 21:

On February 11 and 12 priesthood members in this mission met together for an institute, and some very fine classwork was done. Elder Anton Compier gave a lecture on "Finance in the Branch and Keeping the Law." Elder Jac de Wild lectured on "Organizing a Branch Program"; Elder Marius van Oorschot on "Tracting and Cottage Meetings"; Seventy Glen H. Johnson on "Missionary Work in the Branch"; and I spoke on "Getting Decisions for Baptism." On Sunday morning the priesthood met for an hour of fellowship and Communion service, and everyone went away feeling strengthened for the missionary work ahead. On the same afternoon Brethren Anton Compier, Jac de Wild, Glen Johnson, and I went up to Utrecht to start our series of missionary meetings. Brethren Compier and de Wild went along as our translators. These men did an excellent job in translating our sermons.

On Monday, March 6, Apostle Jensen and I will leave for a trip into Germany. We will visit all our groups in the American Zone and several in the British Zone. We hope to be back again in Holland around the first of April, then we hope to cover several of our groups in this mission. Reports coming in from our groups in Germany are that they are looking forward to another fine year of missionary activity; some groups already report forthcoming baptismal services to be held soon. We are gradually getting our statistical records cleaned up for the German mission, so perhaps we can give some of our time and energy to other needed things. We are looking forward to good reports of the coming Conference, and we shall remember you brethren and the church in this experience.

A letter from Harry J. Simons, pastor of Warrensburg congregation tells of the fine unity and results of a special business meeting March 8. It was called to consider two specific needs which involved a few hundred dollars expenditure. Inasmuch as the branch already owed $1,400 on an interest-bearing note, many questioned the advisability of going ahead until this debt was paid. After an hour and a half discussion, a very beautiful spirit of unity came over the meeting, as indicated by the following quotation from Brother Simons' letter.

Finally when someone raised the question, "Why should we have any indebtedness at all?" another rose and asked, "Why couldn't it be paid in four months?" Another thought it could be paid in two months and set the first Sunday in May as "Pay the Debt Sunday." All of that prompted one of the brethren to stand and make a motion that "We do not wait longer but that we pay the debt now, immediately." It was promptly seconded by about a half dozen people and approved unanimously with considerable enthusiasm. Immediately one of the brethren came walking to the front and placed on the table before us a $100 bill to start it. Another walked up and counted from his billfold $100 and presented it. Two made out checks for $125 each. Others presented checks and currency for various other amounts. Children brought their offerings. Others made pledges. By the time the meeting closed there was a total of $858.25 in cash and $275 in pledges.

The Spirit which prevailed made many of us think of what must have happened at Kirtland one time. No one came with the idea of paying the debt, but under the Spirit which came, no one could resist. It really made us say, "This is Zion. This is the true spirit of the latter day glory." The next day when some were told about it they too responded. Over $200 in cash came in readily. More than $100 came in on Sunday—some of it from those who had made a pledge on Wednesday.

We are contacting every member of the branch now, and within the next few days expect to have an ample amount to completely eliminate the debt and then move forward on another project.

Just thought you would be interested in hearing about this pleasant experience which came to a few humble people seeking God's guidance and the direction of his Spirit. It came, and they responded.

Zionist Perspective -

By L. S. WIGHT

WHEN JESUS started to build his church, his first need was a group of men on whom he could rely to carry on his work after his ministry ended.

He knew that his first job was to teach. No church building program could be put into effect until those who would be a part of the church could have a thorough understanding of the principles on which the church was to be built. Therefore he started looking for those men who could absorb his teaching and pass it on to others. His invitation to these men was very simple and straightforward. It was merely, "Come, follow me."

He did not say, "Come, worship me." He had no thought of setting himself up as a leader to whom obeisance should be given. It was a simple invitation to go along with him, to suffer with him, and to look for no other reward than that of a job well done. He asked them to give themselves to the job without thought of monetary compensation. He offered no financial reward for the work to be done.

He tried to develop in his apostles the ability to look forward, to set their sights on fundamental things, and to have faith in those things beyond the limits of their understanding. It was inevitable that there would be some dissatisfaction, some murmurings, and some defection. Jesus was dealing with human beings, and the lack of understanding of any program is always evident in varying degrees in some who profess to be followers.

That is true today in our Zionist program, so there should not be too much concern simply because of a lack of uniformity of understanding. But when men lower their sights in regard to the Zionist program so that they lose their perspective, it is time to emphasize the basic ideals in order to help create a better and more uniform understanding of how to make that program effective.

The full import of the work of Jesus did not become evident until after his death and resurrection. When his disciples had the opportunity to know he had been resurrected, their doubts and fears vanished, and they entered into their part of the teaching program with a power previously unknown to them. They lost their fear of death, and they went to work with an earnestness and sincerity that produced results. The church grew until it fell into the hands of those who prostituted it for their own selfish ends, and gradually the spirit on which it had been built entirely disappeared.

WHEN THE TIME CAME for the restoration of the gospel, it was not forced on anyone. It was given to the custody of a young man who had developed to the point where in his own humble way he asked for light. That light was given to him as indeed it will be given to anyone who emulates the Savior and comes in humility of spirit, asking for only a chance to do his part, regardless of what that part may be.

It was on this principle that Jesus built his church. It is on this principle that the Restoration Movement has been made effective in the Reorganization. The men who have given themselves to the church have done so without reservation. They have not said, "Here am I, send me anywhere just so it is in a certain area." They have said, and they still sing year after year, "I'll go where you want me to go." When they do this, they are emulating the Christ who set an example for correct perspective. Their perspective is on the entire job, not merely on their own part in that job which may change from time to time. They have pledged a willingness to make that change when asked to do so by the appointing powers.

The principle of adjustability suggested is not one for church appointees only. It is a principle which must direct the life of every member who would be a part of the Zionist movement. It is not only a principle of Zion, but a principle of life itself. Success in business, inventions, the arts, and professions, in fact in any line of endeavor, has come only to those who have thrown themselves without reservation into the work in which they are interested. This is particularly true in the field of selling. I have seen men come and go by the hundreds. If they "come" to work without this ability to adjust to the job and the willingness to give themselves to it, they soon "go" because they do not have the proper perspective. Zion will be built only by those who have the same kind of perspective Jesus gave to the men with whom he was associated. Those who are not willing to adapt themselves to any given situation and give of themselves unreservedly to the work to which they may be assigned will soon drop out because, although they may be in the midst of a Zionist program, they do not even see it.

THE RESPONSIBILITY of adjusting self to any given need or job is clearly shown in the early instructions regarding Zion in the revelations to the church. For example in Doctrine and Covenants 3:15 we find, "for, behold, I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts; yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely." If they will come! That one word "if" implies the right of choice, but the right of choice carries with it the responsibility of choosing to adjust self to the group, not to come to the group with a demand that the group adjust to some individual idea or desire.

A reading of Section 7 is very enlightening. John the Beloved was given what he asked for without hesitation or reservation, simply because he wanted a special opportunity to serve others without a single thought of self. Peter found trouble because he first wanted to get his kingdom or Zion by requesting assurance that he would be certain to get a chance to be with the Savior. He did not unreservedly offer his services where they would be most needed. He did not think first of giving himself for others. Consequently, he received a rebuke from the Master who had taught that the first principle of life is to "give" life that we might have it eternally. And today it still takes some of us a long time to put this principle into effect in our own lives. If this were not true we would have our Zion now.

Too often Peter's attitude has its counterpart today. While we are wondering why we do not make more progress toward the Zion of our dreams, let's determine which of the two following examples we are copying.

Years ago I heard a man of some influence in the church arise in a rather large prayer service and testify that he expected to see the redemption of Zion. He said the Lord had promised him that he would live to see it. He seemed to think it was a great privilege to be able to tell us that the Lord had given him this promise. But he did not say one word in his testimony about what he was doing or giving to help build Zion. He was expressing only a wish to see or receive the benefits of Zion. He may not have realized it, but he was saying exactly what Peter did when the Master rebuked him for his selfishness. And we all know that Zion can never be built on selfishness. Those who have this attitude toward Zion could live right in the midst of a group of people who are actually building Zion and not see it because of their lack of Zionistic perspective.

But another man whom I am proud to mention by name is one who was the same as a father to me for many years in Minnesota. Charles Lundeen—"Dad," as we called him—emulated John the Beloved as described in section 7 of the Doctrine and Covenants. He gave himself to his church group without any reservation whatsoever. He wanted to do only those things which would minister to their needs. It was frequently suggested to him that, since he had given himself for others for so many years, he ought to be interested in going to Zion to share in the good things there. But he wasn't interested. To him the development of Zion was the building of people, and he wanted to stay with those to whom he had ministered and who revered him for the quality of his life.

He was most happy when he could serve. He could give ministry most effectively in his declining years to those who had been his "children" in the church. He saw and shared in Zion before it was developed because Zion was in him. His whole life was built on giving, not getting, with the result that he was rich in those things which make for Zionistic life.

Another way of saying that the individual must adjust himself to the needs of the group is found in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

The statement, "labor together," means of course, that constant adjustments must be made by the individual to meet the needs of the group. That is true in every walk of life today. It is not some new principle of Zionistic development because it is and always has been a basic truth of life.

WHEN I WAS A YOUNG MAN full of hopes and dreams regarding Zion, I distinctly remember the thought being projected that it is the duty of the church to help individuals find their proper niche—round holes should be provided for round pegs, and square holes for square pegs. One of the fallacies of such Zionistic preaching of past years has been the emphasis on what the "church" must do for those, particularly the young people who want to help develop Zion. Repetition of this thought will weaken the ability of the individual to think clearly of his responsibility to the group. Experience has proved that I would have done much better and would probably have not suffered so many disappointments if I had been trained to think that if there are more round holes than round pegs, and more square pegs than square holes, then it is necessary for some of the square pegs to submit to a little sandpapering in order to reduce the points of the square surface to round edges—to become round pegs instead of square pegs in order to fit the available openings. In other words the individual must be willing to adjust himself to the facts of conditions and to give the best service possible under any conditions in which he finds himself. This is the kind of adjustability of which Jesus was thinking when he suggested that the only way to save life is to give it in service. In other words, if we cannot find what we want, we must make the best of available opportunities by building from where we are. Heman C. Smith used to say, "If you cannot realize the ideal, you must idealize the real."

The evidence of growth in the church indicates clearly that there are increasing numbers of young people who are making this principle the guiding factor of their lives. Regardless of whether they are farmers, businessmen, or students studying for special service, they look on their development, their equipment, or the letters following their names, merely as tools to be used in making effective adjustments so they can participate in a Zionistic movement. At the same time it seems that there are some who are looking to the church to subsidize their abilities by giving them an opportunity to do such work as they want to do. These people are lowering their sights. They do not have the correct Zionistic perspective. Those who apparently fail to think the problem through are sometimes persuaded to support such ideas without realizing that in so doing they are helping to influence a lowering of perspective. They even lend themselves to voting for resolutions which would "force" the church to accede to the demands of some people and do some specific thing they want done. This is probably one of the most serious present-day problems connected with Zion-building.

A FINE EXAMPLE of correct perspective in the history of the church was the goal set to remove the burden of debt during the depression days. As soon as it was realized that we were faced with a real emergency, there were innumerable suggestions of ways and means to reduce the debt. Some of them were published in the Herald. But members of the Bishopric, faced with the responsibility of making the debt reduction program effective, decided to depend only on the operation of divine law which had been given to the church. They raised the vision of all members. Their perspective was on a long-range program which has proved that the best way to get results is to follow the divine law. It was not easy to carry out such a program when the pressure was severe from some groups. But the leaders maintained the standard of divine law and insisted that the time had come for us to recognize that if we are ever to succeed in building our Zion, we can do so only by keeping performance within the limits of that divine law. General Church leaders can see the picture as it affects the whole group. Districts or branches usually view the problem only as it affects them or their own area.

Resolutions from branches and districts often are unacceptable by the General Conference, because they fail to give adequate consideration to all the fac-

He Is Risen! - By Zealia Jennings

IT IS DIFFICULT for the human mind to reach backward over the centuries and realize that there was really a resurrection. Through the years so many myths and fashions have attached themselves to Easter and its celebration that we are scarcely able to recognize the significance of the powerful event. The Easter bonnet, the Easter bunny, the Easter egg roll, Easter lilies, Easter corsage—all these have taken their toll from the true meaning of Easter.

Easter comes simultaneously with the return of spring. Both represent the renewal of life in a dead, winter world. Even the modern cliff-dwellers in high city apartments feel the thrilling surge of new life in the first warm breath of spring. If Easter were only a day to celebrate the change of season, it would be met with great festivity. But Easter means more than that. Perhaps its true meaning is best expressed in the words, "He is risen!" Even though no man saw the actual physical regeneration of Jesus, the truth of this statement brings a constant surge of hope to mankind.

At the time of the Crucifixion there were about one-hundred-twenty souls in the church. A short time later the full strength of the Christian movement was felt. A miraculous transformation came over the little band. Those who had so recently denied Jesus and were indifferent to the promises they had made, and those who were in the depths of despair because they had lost their leader so ignominiously suddenly changed into towers of spiritual strength. The message of their spokesman was: "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth . . . ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up . . . has ascended into the heavens . . . being by the right hand of God exalted."—Acts 2: 14-40.

Those Jews who heard this were pricked in their hearts because they had committed such a thing on one who was now in such an exalted position, and they asked the way to salvation.

Wherever the disciples were forced to flee in those early days of the church, the subject of their message was the same—the Resurrection. Whenever they spoke of the Crucifixion, people were awakened to sympathy and became remorseful because of their sins. But when they spoke of him as a risen Lord, he took on added stature and became "King of kings and Lord of lords." Paul felt the importance of the Resurrection when he said, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."—I Corinthians 15: 14.

Modern religion has a tendency to take a skeptical view of the resurrection of Christ. Many discount it, explain away its miraculous attributes or simply ignore it. They feel they must preach a matter-of-fact religion rather than that which took place two thousand years ago. But they lose sight of the fact that religion began when time began, that the roots of religion are embedded in the truths of all time past, and its influence extends even to life beyond the grave. The crusaders who swept down through Europe to repossess the Holy Land and the missionaries who have gone out to preach have been fired by the deep conviction that man has an immortal soul—a soul which like its Lord's should some day triumph over the grave and possess an incorruptible body. When men lose faith in the miracles of religion, they lose the power to inspire others to live righteously. For what hope is there for one who has no faith in the future?

REVELATION IS ANOTHER EVIDENCE of our risen Lord. There is no way to meet the argument of one who says, "I know he lives, I have seen him." Stephen saw Jesus "standing on the right hand of God" (Acts 7: 55). Paul saw Jesus on the road to Damascus, for he said, "And last of all he was seen of me also, as one born out of due time."—I Corinthians 15: 3-8. In America Nephi bore record that "soon after his ascension into heaven, he did truly manifest himself unto them showing his body unto them, and ministering unto them."—III Nephi 4: 74. In 1832 Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon wrote: "This is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God, and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3. When Joseph Smith III was upon his deathbed and said that he wished to make a statement, all gathered around him expecting some word on the administration in the presidency, but he had a more important testimony to bear. In tones clear and plain, he said he knew that Christ lived because he had seen him.

Many years ago Paul wrote, "But some men will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?"—I Corinthians 15: 35. He answered these questions by explaining that our natural bodies shall be raised as spiritual bodies which have changed from the present corruptible form, subject to disease and destruction, to an incorruptible form. Our earthly bodies shall assume a heavenly state even as Christ put on a glorified or celestial body after his resurrection.

When the disciples were all gathered in an upper room and had closed the door, Jesus suddenly appeared in their midst (John 20: 26). He was able to enter the room without opening the door. He stood upon the shore of the Sea of Tiberias and talked with his disciples who knew him not until he had performed a miracle. Then he said, "A Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."—John 21: 7-12. Indicating that he was not just a spirit but had an immortal and material body also. Finally he was caught up into heaven before their very eyes and ascended as no earthly body could possibly have done; nor was he borne up by a lot of cherubs with flapping wings as is indicated in a quite famous painting of the Ascension.

Paul warns against thinking that the very same body which is placed in the grave shall be resurrected. He says it is like the planting of a grain of wheat. It is not the same kernel which comes forth for harvest but like it—of its same kind (I Corinthians 15: 37, 38). It is a great comfort to know that we may lay down a decrepit, crippled body, or an immature childish one and that, in the resurrection, it will be restored in a state of perfection. All parts "shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame" (Alma 19: 55-57). The spirit which has been changed as the result of the preaching and chastening in the spirit world must have a changed body to comfortably house it.

And so in the statement, "He is risen!" we take comfort and are humbly grateful to our Heavenly Father for the great promise which comes to us in this statement. Because Jesus overcame death, he has left open to us the miracle of life everlasting if we but follow the way so plainly marked by his blessed example.

Council Bluffs Does It Again

A wire just received from Charles F. Putnam says,

"Our goal has been passed. We raised more than twenty five thousand dollars in cash and pledges at our annual dinner tonight (March 24) and more to come in. It was a grand experience and we are humbly, humbly thankful."

Now Is the Hour - By Lottie Clarke Diggle

PERHAPS NEVER IN THE HISTORY of mankind has there been an hour when regrets were so multiplied as in that hour of divine sacrifice which Jesus anticipated from the beginning, over which he prayed and agonized, and for which he endeavored by every means in his power to fortify his followers. Yet each and everyone failed in the hour of testing.

Judas, deaf to the warning of Jesus at the Last Supper and blinded by avarice, betrayed his Lord for a mere pittance; then too late awoke to unutterable anguish and despair. Judas could no longer live with himself and sought merciful oblivion in death.

Peter too was warned and rewarned. After the communion when the disciples accompanied their Master to the Mount of Olives, he said, "All of you shall be offended because of me this night."

Peter protested, saying, "Although all shall be offended yet will not I."

"Ere the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice," Jesus declared.

After passing through his hour of agony in the garden of Gethsemane, Jesus admonished Peter, James, and John to watch and pray, lest they enter into temptation, but to no avail. In the cold, gray dawn when his Master stood alone in the midst of his persecutors, shivering, fearful Peter denied his Lord—not once but again and yet again before the second shrill, awakening crescendo of the crowing cock brought him to a realization of his sin. Peter's hour of opportunity had come, and he had failed the son of God. He wept bitter tears of repentance and thereafter devoted his life to atonement and sacrifice.

THERE IS NO RECORD in biblical history of loyalty other than that of John who stood at the foot of the cross and to whom Jesus entrusted the care of his mother. Hence it is not surprising that before his ascension Jesus said of John the Beloved,

"If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" Nevertheless even John, with James and Peter, slept in Gethsemane while his Lord sweat drops of blood in agonizing anticipation of the ordeal that awaited him.

The Sadducees devoted "the hour" to hatred and calumny, the Pharisees to bigotry and cruelty, and the multitude to mockery and bestial sadism. Is it surprising that as Jesus in his last hour saw the panorama of the ages spread before him, saw the centuries of wandering, of persecution, suffering, and annihilation of the Hebrew people, that in pity and sorrow for his own misguided race he cried out,

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

THE HOUR of opportunity came to the victorious nations after the war of 1914-1918, but vengeance and greed dictated the Treaty of Versailles. As a direct result came Hitlerism and the World War. Again when peace was declared and men looked to the "Big Four" for the peace for which they had fought and bled, revenge reared its ugly head, and the German people were made to pay to the uttermost farthing. The result is that many of the inhabitants of Germany are living on low calorie diets, and little children are slowly dying of malnutrition. Thousands live underground in semi-darkness where the stench is almost unbearable and where children are too weak to climb the stairs to the fresh air.

"When a mother sees her third child dying of slow starvation, when women are raped by the military, when the contents of the last soap factory is burned by order and not only the Diesel engines but the great building which houses them is ruthlessly burned, can one blame the people for bitterness and hatred?" asked a social worker of international repute. The judgment of a just God might well be visited on those responsible for such inhumanity to their fellow beings.

IN THE YEAR 1834, on June 22, at Fishing River the Lord spoke plain words to his people.

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might

Love Versus Ingratitude

When God gave loveliness its birth
He christened it with showers,
Then offered up a gift to earth
In the form of flowers.

He flung the cool depth of the sod
High in the sunkissed breeze—
That man might somehow vision God,
And gave to us the trees.

With crimson face the flowers toss
Where march the sword and gun;
And from the tree, man hewed a cross
And crucified God's son.

have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial Kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial Kingdom; otherwise I can not receive her unto myself.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

The Master warned his disciples to look for another "hour." "In such an hour as ye think not shall the son of man come. Watch and be ready," he admonished.

Are we, who profess to be his followers, going to procrastinate, to postpone the consecration of our lives, our time, and our means until too late? Will the hour of his coming find us without the spiritual oil needed to keep the gospel light burning? Must the hour of his coming find us among the foolish virgins who are so busy with church work that we have no time to live the gospel of Jesus Christ? Are we who are the so-called respectable, honorable, law-abiding church members like the rich young man who kept all the commandments but was told to consecrate his all and follow Christ? He must have been amazed to know he had done so much and yet it availed not. He had kept all the letter of the law, yet lacked the spirit.

"Sell all thou hast, and give to the poor," enjoined the Master, and the young ruler departed sorrowfully.

How history repeats itself! We are regular attendants at church, help with the choir, work on innumerable committees, teach or preach a little, give some money or time, and withal feel a measure of self-righteousness. Is it enough? Are we then followers of Christ who are limiting our sacrifices? Are we measuring our service by our comfort, our pleasure, and our desires?

If the answer is "yes," we are not yet ready to follow our Lord. To follow means to leave all; it means consecration of everything in life, physical, mental, social, and material, for the gospel's sake; it means loving our neighbor as ourselves. It means forgetting vengeance and prejudice, pride, and personal ambition. It means asking ourselves hourly the question, "What would Jesus do in a like situation?"

Only thus shall we abide the hour of Christ's coming. For so great a guerdon, no price could be too high. This is the eleventh hour. Let us "watch and be ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man will come."

What Am I? - By Norma Anne Kirkendall

JUST WOOD—rough with the marks of the saw and chisel upon my sides. I was a tree, not a big and splendid specimen, just a common tree. Common men, not the master woodsmen, came and cut me down. A common man, not a craftsman cabinetmaker, crudely smoothed my sides and shaped me into the desired form. And there I lay . . . with others of my kind, awaiting the various judgments of the rulers. Then came the day when I was moved, a long and torturous trip through the byways of an ancient city. A patient man carried me on his shoulders. He faltered, but together we arrived at the designated spot, and I was hauled aloft. I did not feel the nails as did the one who was mounted upon my crossarms. I did not feel the pain, nor the ignominy, nor the shame. I stood there, with two others of my kind, and even when the man was removed I still stood. It was only when the earth shook that at last I fell to the ground, to become discarded but never forgotten.

What am I? A cross whose day of fame was at Golgotha.

* * * * *

And what am I? When the hills were made I too was formed, a solid, immovable granite mass. Centuries passed, and the winds and the rains cleared away the earth and rubble from my face. Then came men with sharp chisels and heavy bars to dig into my face, producing a roomlike cavity in my side, and smoothing a mammoth stone to seal the door. One evening, just at twilight, came a group of sad, dejected men, bearing with them the body of a companion, wrapped in yards of white death cloth. Lovingly they laid him within my depths. Slowly they pushed back the stone, and my interior became dark and dreary once more. A soldier paced rhythmically back and forth before the entrance way. Then passed much time, and I heard the sound of weeping without. But suddenly the darkness disappeared, and the intense light of a heavenly body filled my inner court, the man who had been sleeping stood, supported by angelic hands; the stone silently rolled from the door, and I heard the words, "Be not afraid, It is I."

What am I? A tomb that could not hold fast a risen Lord.

What am I? Industrious hands planted seed, warm rains watered the earth, and skillful hands plucked my fibers and formed me into a pure white cloth. Portions were cut and men wore me as robes and coverings for their bodies. Some dyed me into brilliant hues, but some preferred the purity of my white and kept me spotless even in the dust-strewn highways. One wore me constantly, for he had not wealth of robes or earthly possessions. Then came the day when rough splinters of a heavy beam cut into my warp and woof, and I felt the salt of tears and sweat begin to saturate my texture. I was roughly handled and I knew my owner was no longer responsible for my safekeeping. It was a cruel spear that rent me, and it was the blood of my owner that flowed forth upon me.

What am I? A robe—a garment for a righteous man.

* * * * *

And what am I? I grew white and pure in a garden. My blossoms have long been used to decorate the homes and hovels of the rich and poor alike. My beauty has been a humble one, yet a great man told others to consider me. He died, and other men have used my blooms and foliage to decorate their meetings of remembrance, and yearly at the springtime small children gaze in awe and say, "Yes, it is Easter Day."

What am I? A lily—a spotless reminder of a perpetual reawakening, of a proved fact that no man or thing ever dies without the hope of again coming forth in greater glory and increased beauty.

* * * * *

Common things—the cross, the tomb, the robe, and the lily. Common men are we; common are our wants, our needs. Common are our thoughts and our ambitions. But uncommon was this Jesus Christ to whom we look today. Uncommon was the risen Savior, example for all common men. Uncommon should be the depth of our emotions on this glorious Easter morn.

An Easter Reverie

By Jennie Z. Elliott

ONCE MORE AT EASTER TIME, by faith I follow Jesus along that road which stretches from Olive's mount beyond Calvary's hill, even to an empty tomb.

For it is by faith that, with the children, my glad hosannas ring while I scatter flowers and palm branches along the way he is to ride in triumph into the Holy City, even to the gates of the temple. By faith, standing within the shadow of a great pillar, I see on his face the very wrath of God as he drives those who would profane it from his Father's house. And there in the temple, I listen as he teaches all who come to him. By faith, I join with him and with his disciples and partake with them of that passover meal which, in his breaking of the bread and blessing of the wine, is changed into the memorial of his body and blood throughout all ages. I go by faith with him and then out into the darkness of Gethsemane's garden, where, hidden by the giant olive trees, I keep with him that long hour's vigil of agonizing prayer, while they that were with him slept. And I can hear him saying unto them, as if in great surprise, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" By faith, in horror, I see him being betrayed by Judas' kiss into the hands of that evil band who have come out after him as after the commonest of criminals. By faith I see him, who has the power to call out twelve legions of angels to his defense, being led away by his captors as a lamb to the slaughter because he opened not his mouth. By faith I am standing with him before Caiaphas and in Pilate's judgment hall. I see him falsely scourged, reviled, and crowned with thorns. By faith I am one of that multitude which follows him to where his cross shall soon arise upon Golgotha's hill. By faith I feel the awful terror of the storm and the darkness shrouding all creation during those crucifixion hours. With Peter and the others, I, by faith, am lost and bewildered when he is laid in Joseph's tomb. And, very early on that first Easter morning, I, too, go with Mary and the other women to roll away the stone that his body may be anointed with precious ointment. By faith I, with them, behold the empty tomb guarded with shining angels. And lingering there in the garden, I see Mary's weeping turned into joy at his one word, "Mary!" By faith my heart burns within me as I meet and talk with him by the Emmaus way.

And again by faith I see that Easter morning, not far distant, when man shall rise from his tomb of hate and war unto a life of eternal love and peace.

Missionary Businessman

A series based on the biographical notes of Gilbert J. Waller

By LILLIE JENNINGS

Part V

ON THE AFTERNOON of January 6, 1907, an opportunity was afforded Elder Waller to visit the home of one of the children (Gardie Harbottle) of the Waikiki Sunday school, who had been prevented from attending her class because of sickness. The opportunity was appreciated because, while instructing the children, he had often wished and prayed that some of their parents might become interested in our work and was hoping that the way might open so this might be brought about. The only other time any of the parents had manifested an interest in the work was at Christmas time when an entertainment was given by the Sunday school children. Elder Waller and Sister Kanui, assistant superintendent of the Waikiki Sunday school, were pleasantly received and took advantage of the opportunity to present some of the gospel teachings. As a result, parents of the child asked that she be administered to. This was done the following day, and the Lord blessed the little one so that she began to recover promptly much to the joy of her parents and other relatives. From this time on, her parents (Isaac and Mary Harbottle) and some other of her relatives showed considerable interest in the work. Two weeks later, a Sunday school was started at their home, and thus after years of labor with the children, the way was opened for some of these older people to join their little ones in learning of the gospel.

On Sunday, August 17, 1907, five persons were baptized; three were young Japanese from Waikiki, who had been members of Elder Waller's Sunday school class for several years. Elder Waller referred to the opening up of the work among the Japanese in one of his letters to Elbert A. Smith, then editor of the Saints' Herald. The letter was published in the issue of September 25.

Of the five baptized last Sunday, three were Japanese, all of whom have been attending our Sunday school for some years; in fact, one of them has been in the Sunday school class since it was first formed in the year 1900. The object in view in starting this Sunday school was to introduce our work among the Japanese. These are the first Japanese who have been baptized into our church here, and we rejoice to see that our labors among them are bearing fruit. We hope their coming into the church will open the way for many others of their race to follow.

Dedication of First Church Building

Through the urging of Elder Waller, President Joseph Smith, accompanied by Elder F. M. Sheehy, came to Honolulu for the dedication of our first church building. The dedication services were held on Sunday morning, October 13. The building, a frame structure located on the mauka side (toward the mountain) of King Street, and the lot and its improvement cost about seven thousand dollars, and there was no debt on the property.

During his stay in the Hawaiian Islands, President Smith had the opportunity of visiting the Mormon settlement at Laie. He was given a cordial reception and accorded permission to preach in the Laie church. The Hawaiians appeared pleased to meet the son of Joseph the Martyr. Elder Waller had charge of the meeting. President Smith spoke on marriage, proving conclusively that the teachings of the Three Books were in support of monogamy and against polygamy. He also cited personal experiences from church history.

Elder F. M. Sheehy remained in the Islands after President Smith's departure. It was his privilege to visit the Mormon church on Punchbowl and speak on the succession to the prophetic office in the church, presenting the position of the Reorganized Church on this question. The meeting was well-attended by members of the Utah congregation, and many of our own church people were present also.

On April 7, 1908, Elder Waller forwarded to Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, a photograph of the late L. L. Rice, through whom the writings of the Reverend Solomon Spaulding known as The Manuscript Found were brought to light, making it possible for our church to publish it to the world. The photograph was secured from Mrs. J. M. Whitney, daughter of Mr. Rice, an old and highly-respected resident of Honolulu.

On May 8 Heralds and Ensigns were received with General Conference news. From these it was learned that Elder F. A. Smith had been placed in charge of the Hawaiian Mission, and that General Conference appointments had been given to Elders Waller and Ingham.

On May 12, Elders Waller and Ingham received their notices of appointment, together with a letter from F. A. Smith, who requested Elder Waller to continue the direction and oversight of the work in Hawaii as hitherto, and suggested that he use Elder Ingham as much as possible and also make use of any others whose services were available.

From a letter by Elder F. A. Smith dated August 11, it was learned that he thought it inadvisable, because of the expense, to visit the territory that year. In a later letter to Elder Waller, he gave this advice:

I think if you nurture the flock you have on your hands now you will do all that could be expected at your hands, so long as you are burdened with the cares of a large business, but do the best you can, and may the Lord bless you in your work.

In September, Elder Waller wrote to F. A. Smith saying that he would like to get away for a three months' vacation to visit his family, then in Europe. Elder Waller asked if arrangements could be made for Elder Clapp, who had been contacted in regard to the matter, to come to the Islands. F. A. Smith answered that the condition of Elder Clapp's health would make it inadvisable for him to come, but that a younger man might be sent. Nothing further was done with this matter as Elder Waller was unable to take the vacation he had contemplated.

During November the territorial and county elections were held; three of the members of our church ran for offices on the Democratic ticket. Elder Waller took an active part in politics, despite objections raised by some of the church members who took the stand that injury to the church work would result. Notwithstanding this opposition, the influence of the elders was felt for good. The Democratic party eliminated liquor from its campaign meetings, and the Republican party followed its example by doing likewise.

At the home of a Mr. Souza, a Portuguese who had become acquainted with our work while living on the Island of Hawaii, Elder Waller began holding weekly meetings. The interest manifested by these people was encouraging to him, and he thought that it might be possible to open the work among the Portuguese. After months of labor among these people Brother Waller baptized three members of the Souza family. Later, still others asked for baptism.

Prohibition Work

Elder Waller was treasurer of the Anti-Saloon League of Hawaii and an earnest advocate of prohibition. At one of the church business meetings in 1909, a committee was appointed to draft a resolution to be forwarded to the church authorities at Independence. The support of the church was solicited on behalf of a bill to be introduced in the Congress of the United States providing for the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic drinks in the Territory of Hawaii. The Hawaiian church members earnestly supported the prohibition and anti-saloon movements, realizing the curse that strong drink had been and continued to be to their race.

Favorable comment was received from President Joseph Smith, who said that Senator Warner of Missouri had promised to investigate the matter, and Congressman Borland had stated that he would be glad to take the matter up and support it. However, the result of a plebiscite ordered by the United States to be taken in the territory was very disappointing to the Saints. The majority of the people were against prohibition.

When Elder Waller attended a meeting of the Ministerial Union of Honolulu, of which he had recently been elected a member, it was gratifying to note the friendly feeling manifested toward him by the ministers of the different churches. The active part he was taking in the Anti-Saloon League as well as in the work being done by the Executive Committee of the Civic Federation, of which he was chairman of the law and order division, brought him into contact with the different ministers of Honolulu, and it was pleasing to note that his efforts were appreciated. One of the prominent ministers quoted Christ's words, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and referred to the change for the better in certain Hawaiians he knew, remarking that there must be good in a work that could produce such results.

A Trip to Europe

In 1910, Elder Waller forwarded the report of the Hawaiian Mission to F. A. Smith with a request that someone be sent to take charge of the work of the mission during his absence. He was planning a vacation of three or four months to visit his family in Europe. A letter received from F. A. Smith written January 18 contained words of encouragement to Elder Waller, and also informed him that his request for someone to take charge of the work during his absence would be taken up with the Presidency and the Twelve. Brother Waller was planning to leave on April 27, but by April 13 no news of an appointment had been received, so he sent a cablegram to Elder Kelley informing him that a missionary should leave San Francisco by April 19 at the latest. His mind was relieved when Bishop Kelley answered via cablegram that missionaries had been appointed and would sail on the date mentioned. In so doing they would reach Honolulu the day before Elder Waller intended to leave.

Upon the arrival of the first missionary, Brother Burton L. McKim, a special business meeting was held to give Elder Waller a chance to resign as president of the branch and have Brother McKim, who held the office of priest, elected to fill the office pending the arrival of the other missionary, Elder Myron A. McConley.

On the eve of their pastor's departure, the members expressed their appreciation of his work by presenting him a gift. They also gave him a gift for his companion. When Elder Waller sailed for San Francisco, a number of his friends and many church members were at the wharf to give him their Aloha. In accordance with the Hawaiian custom, they decked him with leis in such abundance that his face was just visible.

On the third day out, the steamship carrying Elder McConley and his wife was passed. Since both vessels were equipped with wireless, Elder Waller communicated with the missionary and his wife. This aerogram was the first commercial wireless message to be received by the "Manchuria," the vessel upon which the McConleys were sailing. That Sunday on shipboard Elder Waller preached to the passengers, many of whom were residents of Honolulu. He used his time to advantage in bringing the Book of Mormon to their attention.

On the Mainland Elder Waller visited Independence, where he found pleasure in talking with the Saints. He made a brief stay in Lamoni as the guest of Brother Salyards and visited Graceland College, Liberty Home, and the Herald Publishing House. He also had the pleasure of meeting Elbert A. Smith of the Presidency, Church Historian Herman C. Smith, and Presiding Patriarch J. R. Lambert. All of these brethren were pleased to hear of the work in Hawaii and to meet Elder Waller. Passing through Chicago on Sunday he was called upon to address a congregation there which was greatly interested in hearing about what the church was doing in Honolulu.

On August 18, Elder G. J. Waller returned to Honolulu after an absence of nearly five months, the greater part of which was spent with his family in Paris, France. He had also taken advantage of the opportunity to visit his old home in England and had spent a short time in Switzerland and Germany. At Munich, Bavaria, he had the pleasure of spending a few days with his old German teacher, whom he had not seen for over thirty years.

During his travels Elder Waller had not forgotten the work in which he had so long been engaged in the Islands. He wrote personal letters to many of the Saints, urging them to do their duty and support the work during his absence. On the first Sunday after his return, he gave a very interesting discourse telling of religious and social conditions in the various places he had visited, his observations showing the need of Zion and the Gathering. He had returned much improved in health and firmly determined to stand by "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

Tent Meetings

Tent meetings had been conducted by the missionaries during Elder Waller's absence and were continued until Brother McKim sailed for the mainland, where he was assigned to another field of labor. The burden of the regular missionary work fell upon the shoulders of Elder McConley, who was ably assisted by some of the local officers. Elder McConley continued to hold tent services until after election. Then, as great mass meetings were being held almost every night by the different political parties, and as these meetings always featured a brass band and free moving pictures, it was almost useless to try to secure a crowd at religious services.

While on his way to join his family in Europe, Brother Waller purchased a house in Independence, expecting his wife and children to live in it upon their return to America. However, when his son Gilbert was offered a position with the Hawaii Meat Company, the family decided to live in Alameda, California, and the Independence home was sold. His daughter, Christie, taught music a year in Graceland College.

On February 3, 1911, Elder Waller, accompanied by his wife, sailed on a business trip to Australia, leaving Brother and Sister McConley to look after the work in Hawaii. After visiting not only Australia, but also New Zealand and the Fiji Islands, the Wallers returned on March 26. Elder Waller at once resumed active oversight of the work.

In May he started a Sunday school for the Japanese at Kalihi with the assistance of Mr. Uyeda, one of his employees. About this time word was received from the General Conference that Brother and Sister McConley were to continue in Hawaii, and that Brother

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Where in the New Testament is there any evidence that the Aaronic or Melchisedec priesthood was to continue on the earth after Christ?

Kansas

Mrs. M. L.

ANSWER:

There is no direct answer in the writings of the New Testament dealing with the question in so many words. There is, on the other hand, abundant material showing that the priesthood was to continue in the church after Christ, and this conclusion is arrived at by inference.

The meaning of priesthood is explained in Hebrews 5:1. A priest is a man "taken from among men, ordained for men in things pertaining to God," or, to word it differently, in things belonging to or concerning God. The thing that concerns God is our sinful condition. He sent his only Son that we might have life and have it more abundantly. However, no one has the right to take the honor of priesthood to himself. He must be called of God as was Aaron (Hebrews 5:14).

We have no record that Christ used the word priesthood in his teachings. But there is considerable information in the Gospels telling us where Christ called men and ordained them for himself in things pertaining to God, and that this calling of men was to continue until he should come again.

The first reference that Christ called men to so function is found in John 15:16. He called them and ordained them for the purpose of gathering fruit (souls) and that their fruit should remain. These men thus called and ordained became priests working in the priestly office and are known collectively as priesthood.

Another reference is found in Matthew 21:23 to the end. In verse 23 Christ is asked by the chief priests regarding his authority. (Authority and priesthood are synonymous.) "Are you a man called by God from among men to work in things belonging to God, or are you an imposter?" they were asking. There had been those who tried to hoist themselves to priestly authority (Numbers 16:1-10), and the chief priests were not so sure of Christ. That there were men who tried to function in the priestly office without being called of God can be seen from the question Christ asked of them (verses 24-26). John was functioning as a priest. Did heaven approve of his authority, or was he doing it himself? It is from the parable of the wicked husbandmen (verses 33-46) that we get the best answer for priesthood and its continuance. The outstanding points are:

1. God called men to work in the world.
2. They had to give an account of their calling.
3. Twice he sent emissaries for his share, but the emissaries were badly beaten.
4. He finally sent his Son, but they killed him.
5. Violation of authority was detrimental, and the chief priests knew it.
6. The right to represent God was taken from them and given to another people. These people, as we all know now, are the Gentiles, and as long as they continue to be faithful to their pledge, this right or authority or priesthood will continue.

Nowhere, however, is the right of priesthood and its continuity spoken of better than in Luke 12:31-47. The point that makes this lesson interesting is the question asked by Peter. "Speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all?" (verse 41). It is interesting in the light of the assertion made by Protestants that there is no priesthood continuity. The salient points are:

1. There is a household, and there are servants or rulers.
2. These rulers were to "give meat in due season," that is, to feed.

3. Christ did not give the feeding ministry to every one in his church. He gave it to special ones (John 21:15-17), and Peter recognized the elders as doing such (I Peter 5:1-4).

4. This priesthood is intended to continue until Christ comes (verse 37). Its rights can be violated, but woe to the one found so doing. He will be beaten with many stripes and his portion appointed with unbelievers.

Peter is the only one in the New Testament who associates priesthood, in so many words, with the Christian church (I Peter 2:5, 9). Those who object to a special class of priests say that Peter was referring to the believers as a whole. This is not true. Christ, as we saw in Matthew 21, was talking to the chief priests and elders of the Jews (verse 23) and when he said that the "kingdom of God shall be taken from among you [as a nation] and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," he used the kingdom of God, the class of priests, and the nation interchangeably. So Peter used the word nation in the same sense. All the nation of the Jews did not hold the priesthood. This function was the special privilege of Levi and his seed (Hebrews 7:5), but priesthood was in the nation. In this sense also it is mentioned that priesthood was given to the Gentiles. As priesthood was a continuous institution among the Jews until they violated the pledge that priesthood required, so was it to be continuous among the Gentiles as long as they observed its rights.

tors involved, and the interests of people from other places. The expression of the divine mind comes to the people through proper channels for acceptance or rejection. The democratic rights of the people are fully protected in this way. The General Conference must represent the thought and feeling of all members, and work for "the greatest good of the greatest number."

Officers in charge of directing the work of the church leading toward the building of Zion know more about the problems involved than anybody else possibly can. They will consider suggestions and criticisms from members, and from groups, but wisdom and experience must determine whether they accept or reject new ideas. The critic on the sidelines may think he knows more about the job than the men in charge. Like Peter, he wants to run things his own way. But his way could easily be the road to ruin. There is so much he does not know, so much he does not consider. The irresponsible person is always more positive in his manner and speech than the man who knows. The impractical dreamer will promise a multitude of things that the man of experience knows can never be done, and perhaps should not be done. Our people must be careful not to follow zealots in putting pressure on the church to take a course that will lead to disaster.

When the facts are explained to wise and considerate members, they usually understand, and make their contribution in a way that will help and not harm the work.

As previously suggested, one of the heartening things in the church today is the evidence that an increasing number of young people are offering themselves as did John the Beloved and are asking to be used in any way and where they can fit in most effectively. The Hammond Branch in the Chicago district recently arranged for one of the finest demonstrations of this truth which it has been our privilege to see. Sister Mildred Nelson Smith, with her husband, spent a weekend in Hammond in November, 1949. She gave four lectures on the Word of Wisdom: one on Saturday evening, two on Sunday morning, and one on Sunday afternoon. It was an effective series of instructive and interesting lectures. She was able to keep a large congregation alert and interested, even during the Sunday afternoon session. The people responded because she put into her work the same humility shown by John the Beloved. It was the humility of one who wants only to serve. She made us realize that there is a big field of opportunity for service in the so-called simple things of life. Her sights are high. Her perspective is on the Zionic level.

Doctrine and Covenants 12: 4 tells us: "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." But the power of that love, the same as Christ exhibited when he said, "Come, follow me," can be effective only when we make sure that we maintain a very high Zionic perspective.

MULTIPLE PIANO CONCERT

On March 19 about fifteen hundred people attended the two performances of the Multiple Piano Concert held in Memorial Hall in Independence. One of the outstanding features of the concert was a six-piano ensemble by boys about twelve years old. Three of these boys belong to the church, Charles Athey, John Darling, and David Kohlman. Because the concerts were Julia Davis Memorial Concerts, there was no admission charge.

"CAREER DAY"

The local junior high school observed "Career Day" on March 15 by having seventeen speakers address the students on various vocational lines. The program was arranged through the co-operation of the citizenship teachers and the education committee of the American Association of University Women. Among the seventeen speakers, there were six from the church, Miss Nelle Morgan, Mrs. J. F. Frazier, James Moses, Stanley Leonard, Miss Ada Fallon, and Miss Edna Easter.

Elder Blair McClain, President of the Detroit-Windsor District, has passed us the letter which we copy herewith. It indicates the influence of a group of our people with their local broadcasting station. Here is the letter:

Dear Mr. McClain:

It has been some time since I received your letter following the broadcast of The Messiah. I do, however, want you to know that WJR sincerely appreciated the lengths to which you went to advise the members of your church about the broadcast.

As evidence of your efforts, we were flooded with some very excellent comments. I can assure that, barring unforeseen problems, we will look forward to carrying this broadcast annually.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN MITCHELL,
Program Director

Healed Through Administration

Last October I went to surgery in a Kansas City hospital with little hope of recovery since the doctors could assure me of no definite improvement. They helped me in every way they could, but I continued to grow worse. As I began to sink into unconsciousness, I asked for Brother Lloyd of Central Branch to come and administer to me. He came and prayed for me three times on his first visit, and then returned to administer to me the following three days. The doctors were amazed at my recovery, and the nurses and other patients in the ward were surprised, too.

Since then we have received another blessing. My husband, a veteran of the last war, was laid off from work two weeks before Christmas. He searched unsuccessfully for a job until we decided to place an ad in the paper for farm work. Several people contacted us, and we could not decide which offer to accept. We prayed about it, and I was shown in a dream the house and surrounding grounds where we should live. Then I prayed that I would know which man owned the place so we would know whom to go with. This, too, was revealed.

Now we are hoping that transportation will be provided so we can attend church in Bonner Springs, the branch nearest us. We are grateful for God's blessings and rejoice in his promises. Certainly it is true that those who seek do find.

Worth-While Recreation

Many Latter Day Saints spend their leisure time playing cards and dancing. God has told us, "Love not the world and the things that are in the world."—I John 2: 15. Also, "Cast away your idle thoughts and your excess of laughter" (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 19), and "... teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom" (85: 21).

If we could study the books of the church once a week, our branches would grow both in number and in spirituality. We should realize that the pleasures of the world are dim compared to the glories awaiting the faithful. Precious time in which we could learn more about the gospel is being wasted.

My prayer is that God will help us put forth the effort necessary to bring about the wonderful blessings he has for us.

Works With Navajos

I want to express my appreciation to those who write for the Herald and Daily Bread. I am grateful for both of them, for they help to keep me in touch with the church. Without them I am sure I would get discouraged.

I am a matron in a dormitory where 132 Navajo boys live. I have learned to love them almost as my own and would like to present our gospel to them, but of course I am not allowed to teach them anything but housekeeping. I give them Heralds containing articles about the Indians, but I don't know how much they understand as their English is limited.

I am certain that if I could "win one" there would soon be many converted as what one has they all want. When we issue a boy a new pair of levies, the other 131 come running for some too.

They have never had much, but they take to cleanliness and good habits quickly, and are good about attending church. Services are held for both Catholics, and Protestants on Sundays. I often hear them listening to religious programs on the radio too.

A Tribute to Hood River Saints

Last spring a young missionary, Arthur Gibbs, came to Hood River to conduct a series of meetings. A friend invited my daughter to go to church to hear him. She came home very pleased and said, "Mother, you will like them. They make you feel at home." As a result, we decided to join the church and were baptized on June 19. I was the last of four to be immersed, and as I sat waiting to be called, I became aware of a wonderful feeling of peace within. A quiet joy filled my heart, and I felt as though an unseen presence for good stood near, spreading its influence around us.

This testimony would not be complete without a word of appreciation to the pastor and members of Hood River Branch. They have been most helpful to us. May the blessings of God be with us as individuals and as a church.

Mail From Home

Recently we had a very fine prayer service in which the spirit of love and concern for each other seemed to settle over all. The theme was "Giving for Christ." One brother who had served in World War II gave us something to remember. He had been a supply pilot who took food and ammunition to distant islands. His ship carried 4,000 pounds of supplies to boys who had been on starvation rations for a week. When the plane landed, however, the soldiers did not ask for either food or ammunition, but for mail from home. He ended his testimony by saying that when a man is under fire, even mail from home becomes secondary—God's blessing is the thing most needed.

Among the Indians

During the past two years I have made several visits among the Lamanites in Oklahoma and Nebraska. I found the first family I visited "alive" in the church, although its members had been neglected for twenty years. I then visited a mother and father who did not belong to the church but whose children had been baptized by my brother, Hubert, a number of years ago. They asked for baptism, and I was thrilled with the spirit in their home as I asked God's blessing on them. I visited others and was soon preaching to a group, much to my joy and satisfaction. The Holy Spirit rested on me as I spoke, and God's love reached out to them as they listened. Who would dare to withstand the Almighty when he sends his spirit to these downtrodden children of Jacob, whose land the Gentiles have taken from them?

I went to another tribe to conduct services, and one sister asked if she might bear her testimony. I said, "Certainly. That is what I want all to do." She talked in her native tongue, so I asked another of the tribe to tell me what she had said. I was told that when she put her hands on her head she testified that through administration she had been healed of rheumatism. Later, as I sat beside the bed of a sister who was ill, I asked if she would like administration. She answered that she would but was timid about asking for it. Following the administration, she was able to get up—her healing was complete.

These are just a few experiences showing that God is reaching for these people, although they have been neglected for many years by the church. The Lamanites are waiting for the gospel message. Truly the field is ripe.

Teaches in Presbyterian Church

I have been isolated for three years. Shortly after moving here I attended the Presbyterian Church a few times but was disappointed with the services. After that I spent Sunday at home studying the church books. However, with the New Year, I decided to once again go to the Presbyterian church. During the church school lesson, I took an active part in the discussion. After class, the teacher came to me and asked if I would teach the following Sunday. I told her that I was not a member, but she said that didn't matter. The next week we had a wonderful discussion, and one of the women asked to come to my home for a visit. She said she was confused in her thinking and believed I could help straighten her out. Since our talk I am convinced she is searching for something more than her church offers, so I have been giving her the Heralds containing articles I think she will find helpful. I am praying I will be able to bring her to this truth. For the first time since my isolation I see some reason for my being led to this community. I have prayed for wisdom, and my prayers have been answered. There is much work to be done in this locality. Many of the people have never heard of the Reorganized Church although they are surrounded by Mormons. I hope I can prove myself "a workman who needeth not to be ashamed."

I have enjoyed reading the Herald very much. I have had more time to read and concentrate on the articles in it since being in an accident in December, 1948, which necessitated my confinement to the house. I have been under a doctor's care for some time but am getting better. I am grateful for the kindness shown to me during this time. Many friends and loved ones have sent letters. Please continue to pray for me that I may have my health restored and be of use in the branch and district.

Report on "The Messiah" Broadcast

I listen to it each year. Thank you for it. To each and every one of the Messiah Choir, the orchestra, and director, best wishes.

ARTHUR KEY, Jr.

Elmhurst, New York

I enjoyed the Messiah Sunday night.

MARGARET NICHOLAS ASHBAUGH

Attica, Ohio

We were able to hear the whole program. It came in clearly, and we enjoyed it very much.

ADA ALLDREAD

Boyne City, Michigan

Congratulations to you on the magnificent performance of the Messiah on December 18.

MR. and MRS. ARCHIBALD BEGG

Springfield, Massachusetts

The reception here was of the best. We did not miss a word nor a measure. We can say from our hearts "thank you."

FLOYD and ADELE SCHNEIDER

Boyne City, Michigan

We were most happy to have been able to hear the Messiah over KIRO, Seattle, last evening. Our nearest CBS station made a rebroadcast at 10:30 our time. It was a superb performance.

ELLIOTT GILBERTS

Everett, Washington

Just a note to tell you how much we enjoyed the Messiah last night. We received it through KNX on a rebroadcast at 10:30 p.m. We especially enjoyed the chorus "Since by Man Came Death." We hope this is only the first of many such broadcasts here on the coast.

LOIS and ALMA NUNAMAKER

Temple City, California

It was the finest broadcast we have heard this year. The soloists did beautifully. The chorus and orchestra were truly inspiring.

MRS. C. E. NORRIS

Sheffield, Illinois

The Messiah broadcast was excellent. Sincere congratulations.

MRS. JOHN RAISBECK

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

May I take this means to thank and congratulate you on the splendid rendition of the Messiah you presented to the United States and the world at the Christmas season?

CLIFFORD HUNN, and

THE MILWAUKEE CENTURAMA CLUB
Milwaukee 2, Wisconsin

The Messiah came over full, strong, and clear. It was a splendid contribution.

PETER S. WHALLEY

San Diego, California

This is the time of year for acknowledging one's Christmas gifts. Of all I received I truly believe the beautiful rendition of the Messiah will still be ringing with joy in my ears after the other gifts are forgotten. It came over WCCO, Des Moines, clearly and without interruption.

AMY POWELL

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada

It was marvelous. I have never heard you sing more beautifully [To Garland Tickemyer]. The whole performance was superb. Thank you so much.

EMMA MCCONLEY

Independence, Missouri

Saints and friends in the Gulf Coast area were thrilled with the rendition of Handel's Messiah. Station WKRG in Mobile relayed the broadcast and carried the full broadcast from 10:30-12:00 m. When we first contacted the program director we learned that the station director did not intend to carry it, but a little "persuasion" by a few of us changed his mind. More power to you and your splendid corps of co-workers.

J. A. PRAY

Mobile, Alabama

I have been meaning to write to you ever since I heard your broadcast of the Messiah from Hotel Muehlebach. I stayed awake to hear the whole thing and thoroughly enjoyed every note of it! The previous Sunday I had heard our own college (Park College) choir do excerpts from it in our chapel (as we have done for years) but it was a real thrill to hear the whole thing. The soloists were excellent, and the broadcast came through very well indeed. I wanted to thank those responsible for giving so much pleasure to so many by enabling us to hear such a magnificent rendition of this wonderful oratorio.

CONSTANCE VULLIAMY

Parkville, Missouri

The Messiah was excellent. I could get it over WKAB of Mobile, also several other stations. The solos were excellent.

A. G. MILLER

Ocean Springs, Mississippi

The rendition of the Messiah last night was the best I have ever heard, and I must tell you how perfectly it came over the radio. The instruments were so well balanced, I could hardly believe it was over a radio instead of "in person." The voices, too, were lovely. Evidently you have someone who knows about such things absolutely. It is so important that the balance is good. You are to be complimented on the success of this performance. Thank you very much for affording us this wonderful opportunity of hearing once again the Messiah rendered by the Independence singers. I happened to sing in the first one given thirty-three years ago. This performance was "tops" in my opinion.

DORIS ANDERSON FREDRICK

Orlando, Florida

The Messiah was wonderful, the reception good and inspiring. Thanks to everyone for such a marvelous Christmas gift.

MR. and MRS. B. F. WHEELER

Warrensburg, Missouri

Thank you and all who took part in the beautiful rendition of the Messiah Sunday.

RUTH S. GLASS

Tulsa, Oklahoma

It was my good fortune to tune into the CBS last night and hear the Messiah under your direction. The chorus was exceptionally good—the words were understandable, and there was a real tone connected with them. The soloists also were very good, particularly the bass. I have listened to the Messiah for over fifty years but have never heard better work.

MRS. EDMUND J. TYLER

Los Angeles, California

Chorus and orchestra nicely balanced and the soprano soloist outstanding. The aria "And the Trumpet" deserves special mention, both soloist's having beautiful tone and control.

ETHEL HALL

Moosejaw, Saskatchewan, Canada

We want to thank you for the beautiful rendition of the Messiah, which came in very clearly over several of the CBS stations. We got the latter part of it direct from your station (KMBC).

West College Street Church

Sixteenth congregation in the Center Place

THE WEST COLLEGE STREET CONGREGATION was originally in the Stone Church area and is, therefore, a mission of the "mother church." Following its organization as a mission in 1946, the site (1021 West College) was purchased, and the old home which stood on it was razed. The modern church pictured on the cover was erected in 1949.

Approximately 500 persons may be seated in the main chapel. There are fourteen classrooms exclusive of the main auditorium and balcony. The building was designed principally for utility and at the present time is the most compact church plant in Independence. It is wired for a public address system and also for an electric organ which is to be installed in the near future.

The official opening was held on Sunday, December 11. President F. Henry Edwards was the speaker at the 11:00 o'clock service; his subject was "The First Milestone." Others assisting in this service were Glaude A. Smith, pastor of Stone Church; Garland E. Tickemyer, former pastor of Stone Church; H. W. Cackler, bishop in Zion; Odess Athey, local pastor; Joseph White, associate pastor; and C. V. Graham, city-wide pastor. The choir sang, "The Earth Is the Lord's," by Pflueger, and Mrs. William Nichols sang, "He Shall Feed His Flocks," from Handel's Messiah.

A consecration service was held at 2:30 p.m. with Apostle E. J. Gleazer, presiding, assisted by C. V. Graham, Glaude A. Smith, and Odess Athey.

At 7:30 p.m. Apostle Gleazer, minister in charge of this area, spoke on the subject, "Just Another Church." All services were well-attended and enthusiasm was high. The members felt much satisfaction in having accomplished a worthwhile task.

Much credit is due Brother Odess Athey, present pastor, for the development and the erection of the new church as well as the organization of the people into a thriving and growing congregation.

Since the opening of this church, attendance at church school, the preaching services, and the midweek prayer services has been very high. The congregation already consists of 500 members. West College Street Church will make its mark in the Center Place and will add much to the spiritual, moral, and cultural development of the Saints as they move toward the redemption of Zion.

—C. V. GRAHAM.

STONE CHURCH.—Laurel Jewel McArthur, daughter of Joseph Burton and Gracie Lee (Barnes) McArthur was blessed March 12 by Elders Glaude Smith and Howard P. Andersen. The home of Brother and Sister McArthur is in Florida.

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND DISTRICT.—Under the instruction of Dr. F. M. McDowell, Director of Priesthood Education, and District President Almer W. Sheehy, a priesthood institute was held at Boston, Massachusetts, on March 10, 11, followed by a district conference March 12.

Forty-three members of the priesthood attended the Friday evening classes held in the home of Myron Fisher, Jr. The classwork throughout the institute was based on the textbook, "Building Latter Day Saint Family Life."

The Saturday classes were held at the Somerville church. The ministry of the district enjoyed a variety of inspirational meetings during the institute.

Saturday evening a banquet was served in honor of the priesthood and their wives.

The Sunday morning service was a continued worship from 9:00 a.m. to noon. The earlier part of the time was devoted to prayer, testimony, and song. The message of the morning was delivered by Dr. F. M. McDowell.

The conference business session convened Sunday afternoon at 2:30. The Boston Branch recommended to the district conference calls to the priesthood of the following brethren: Paul Stoff and Dr. David Carmichael to office of elder; Arthur Beverage and Dr. Raymond Candage, priests. These calls were approved by the conference. Reports of officers were read and delegates to General Conference were chosen.—Reported by BARBARA SEARS.

LAMONI, IOWA.—Pastor W. E. Shakespeare was in charge of an ordination service in the Evergreen Branch on March 12. At the beginning of the service, he announced to the congregation the calling of two men. Elder Harold Tabor representing the stake presidency gave the address of challenge to the candidates. Brother Alma Heide was ordained by Brethren Tabor and Shakespeare, Brother Tabor acting as spokesman. Brother Walter Lingard was ordained by the same two with Brother Shakespeare acting as spokesman. Elder W. H. Thomas of the branch presidency gave a charge to the congregation.—Reported by IRENE VOGEL.

PENSACOLA, FLORIDA.—On February 26 Evangelist Ray Whiting preached two sermons to a large crowd of Saints and friends.

From February 27 to March 3 he preached a series of services in the new church building of the Negro group. This group is led by Priest W. T. Blue. A long write-up about this group appeared in "The Colored Citizen," a newspaper for Negroes. Priest W. T. Blue is the fifth generation of the Booker family that has belonged to the church.

The attendance of the Pensacola Branch has increased during the first three months of the year.—Reported by J. D. HALL.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—On Labor Day, 1949, at the invitation of the Yakima Branch, thirty-seven young adults met at Bumping Lake at the cabins owned by Claire Van Eaton and B. E. Nutley. It was the hope of that group to organize a district-wide young adult retreat.

On February 25, 1950, the young adults met at the district conference to discuss such a possibility. It was decided that Labor Day week end is the best time to have a retreat; that Bumping Lake, Lake Chelan, Orcas Island, and other places will be investigated as suitable places for the meeting; that the yearly meetings might be held in different localities so as to reach more people; and that children will not be taken to the retreat.—Reported by ROSEMARY SWAYNE.

SEATTLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—With the theme, "What Is That in Thine Hand?" the opening session of the conference was held at 2:00 p.m., February 25. A short worship service precluded the two afternoon classes. Elder Ray Sowers spoke at the service.

The first of the afternoon classes was conducted by Bishop M. E. Lasater on the subject, "Developing Stewardship Philosophy in the Branch." Seventy A. F. Gibbs and Elder Paul Wellington discussed "New and Effective Methods of Evangelism," as the final class of the afternoon.

At 7:00 p.m. Sister Wana McDole, assisted by Sister Elba Crum, led the discussion on the subject, "Learning to Work Together." Sister McDole is the district director of religious education. Group discussions were carried out during this class, and a skit was presented demonstrating autocratic leadership. After the close of this session, a young adult conference was held in the lower auditorium with Al Swayne and Elder Paul Wellington in charge, while the Zion's League presented an interesting program for the adults in the main auditorium.

The Sunday morning services commenced with a prayer service, the theme of which was, "All Are Called According to the Gifts of God Unto Them." Presiding officers were Elder Wellington, Bishop Lasater, Evangelist A. W. Lundeen, and Elder White.

A worship service was conducted by Sister McDole at 9:45 a.m., during which Sister Pauline Bishop sang a solo, the congregation joining in on the last verse. This was followed by a continuation of the class on, "New and Effective Methods of Evangelism."

At the 11:00 o'clock hour, Bishop Lasater spoke on, "Be Ye Also Ready." The First and Second Seattle church choirs combined to furnish special music for this occasion.

During the afternoon business session, these delegates were elected for General Conference: M. E. Lasater, A. F. Gibbs, Paul Wellington, Ray Wellington, Eva Lundeen, A. W. Lundeen, Emma Johnson, P. J. Johnson, Luella Foster, Opal Wolfgram, Marion Smith, Shirley Johnson, Betty Stewart, Paul Duvic, Dick Lade, and G. L. Swenson. At the same meeting Cecil Willis of Olympia and Charles Glover of Bremerton were ordained elders; Wayne Smith of Seattle was ordained a teacher; Ernest Byrd of Bremerton and Robert Johnson of Seattle were ordained deacons; Clyde Curtis of Olympia and Victor Hastings of Seattle were ordained priests. Sister Vera Byrd of Bremerton was elected to the office of district secretary to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Roy Stearns.—Reported by DAISY L. CHRISTIANSEN.

BISMARCK, MISSOURI.—Seventy James S. Menzies held a series of services from February 20 to March 12. From twenty to seventy people attended meetings each evening. At the close of the meetings Mrs. Denver Counts was baptized. The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Counts was blessed. Others would have been baptized if the weather had permitted it. Snow and ice mixed with rain fell most of the last day of the series. Brother Menzies expects to return again soon to Bismarck.—Reported by E. W. DAVIS.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, CANADA.—On February 6 Mrs. Phyllis Graveley, who is employed by the Canadian Government to meet, interview, and place in jobs displaced persons as they arrive from Europe, spoke to the women's department of the branch on the topic "New Canada." As a member of the church and a government executive, she outlined the problems these new Canadians must face: barriers of language, customs, and so on. She asked for them understanding and consideration.

Mrs. Marv Proulx, a former Roman Catholic and enthusiastic convert of ten months, was elected president of the senior group of the women's department last month at their annual election of officers.

About forty young people enjoyed the Zion's League sleighride on February 24. After an evening of romping in the snow, they returned to the warm hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Flegel's home for a "bean feed." Proceeds were added to the building fund.

Evangelist John R. Grice climaxed a two-week series of missionary services on March 12 when five people were baptized. Since the hall where all regular meetings are held has no facilities for a baptismal service, permission was granted to use one of the city's indoor swimming pools on Sunday morning. The candidates for baptism were: Marilyn and Dawn Graveley, daughters of Mrs. Phyllis Graveley; Lois and Donald Flegel, daughter and son of Mr. Herman Flegel and the late Mrs. Flegel; and Harry Farmer.

The new members were confirmed at the 11 o'clock service. Those officiating were Evangelist John R. Grice, Elder A. E. Caldwell, and Elder Wallace Shute.

On the Saturday night before Brother Grice's departure, the branch gathered for a surprise party at which he was the guest of honor.

Elder Wallace Shute is preaching an informative and inspiring series of sermons entitled, "The Authority of the Church." Much study and research have gone into these sermons, and they have been well received by member and nonmember alike.—Reported by B. M. FARROW.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—A "65'er Banquet" honoring members of the St. Louis Branch sixty-five years old or more, was sponsored by the young adult group of the branch on March 3.

Those honored included Mrs. Belva DeLany, Mrs. Annie Jemmett, Mrs. Anna Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Bell, Mrs. Josephine Billinsky, Mrs. Sadie Bourgeret, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Cooke, Will Cawlishaw, Fred Mottashed, Julius Wittstock, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, William Knussman, Mrs. Chloe Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. James Gray. Several others were not able to attend.

The program for the evening included group singing, solo, duet, and quartet numbers accompanied by silhouette pantomimes acted by young adults, and closed with the singing of, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." Attendance was about 180.—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

TUCSON, ARIZONA.—On January 29 Ronald Arthur Mills, son of Brother and Sister Arthur Mills, and Nancy Gay Hartman, daughter of Brother and Sister Leonard Hartman were blessed, Elder A. H. Hartman officiating.

On February 5 Mrs. Lucy Imogene Smith and Mrs. Lucie Laura Smith, a mother and daughter, were baptized. On February 19 they were confirmed. Elder A. H. Hartman was in charge of the services.

On March 5 Bishop J. Stanley Kelley and Bishop David B. Carmichael visited the Tucson Branch for the ordination of George Russel and John Mills as deacons. Bishop Kelley and Elder Hartman were in charge of the service.—Reported by LANETA BERGAN.

NORTHWEST OHIO DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The conference, held in Lima, Ohio, on February 18 and 19, began Saturday evening with a young people's forum. They used as the theme of the conference, "Make Jesus Your Lord." The forum was directed by the district young people's leader, Edgar Robertson of Oak Harbor Branch and by Etelka White of Toledo.

Sunday morning prayer service was in charge of the district president, Alvin C. Wadsworth of Oak Harbor and his two counselors, Floyd Lynn of Toledo and Earl Walker of Lima. A demonstration of aids and methods of teaching were directed by Etelka White during the church school hour. Brother Wadsworth was the speaker during the morning preaching service.

The music department, the women's department, and the priesthood group met in the afternoon and received instruction from their leaders. Since General Conference delegates were elected in the annual conference last October, there was very little business to conduct; thus the semi-annual conference was largely educational. The theme of the Conference was emphasized in every meeting and class. The Lima women's department served dinner at noon in a rented dining hall. This conference was one of the largest ever held in the district, and the Lima Saints were happy to be hosts to the conference in their new church.—ALVIN C. WADSWORTH.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—An ordination service was held March 12. Wesley Ballinger was ordained an elder by Elders Earl Oehring and Charles Neff. Dick Oehring was ordained a deacon by Elders H. A. Merchant and Earl Oehring.

On February 9 a women's meeting was held at the home of Laura Johnson for the purpose of organizing a new unit of the women's department. The name chosen for the group was "Mission Circle." Officers elected are Mrs. John Reed, president; Laura Johnson, vice-president, and Ruth Armbrust, secretary-treasurer. Meetings will be held on the third Thursday of every month.—Ray-O-Lite.

SOMERVILLE, MASSACHUSETTS.—At the district conference business meeting, March 12, these delegates were elected for General Conference: A. W. Sheehy, George Sinclair, Harold Garfield, Vivian Sheehy, Benjamin Leland, George Armison, Phyllis Cowgill, Florence Sinclair, and Calvin Sears.

The priesthood institute of the Southern New England district was held March 10, 11, and 12. On Friday evening the priesthood met at the home of Myron C. Fisher, Jr., in Lexington, to receive instruction and information on current events in the church. Forty-three ordained men were present; probably the largest gathering of this kind ever held in the district. Classes were held Saturday, and specific problems confronting the administration of the priesthood authority were discussed. Dr. Floyd McDowell led these discussions.

Saturday night the priesthood and their wives were entertained at a banquet at the church. One hundred seventeen places were set, fifty-seven ordained men were present. Of these, George Sinclair, who has fifty-three years of service in the priesthood, was the senior guest, although many present had from thirty-five years and upward of continuous duty. Brother McDowell made the principal address. A. W. Sheehy was the toastmaster.—The Announcer.

The Unseen GUEST - By Mrs. Donald V. Lents

THE THOUGHT of making room for Christ in our homes as a member of the family group brings a challenge which every Latter Day Saint home should consider. So many activities and duties occupy our time and thoughts that entirely too many of us push Christ and his teachings into the corner with things "to be done later." And that "later" may never come. If we are to maintain the high quality of Christian living to which our homes are committed, Christ must enter into every phase of family life.

We often speak—and I believe without sufficient thought—of the "Unseen Guest" in our homes. Consider for a moment that a guest is someone who enters our home infrequently—someone for whom we bring out our special china, silver, and even manners. I think we should want Christ to be in our homes in a different capacity from that of a "guest."

Let us think of the status achieved by members of a family living together twenty-four hours a day. In a harmonious family the members learn, through constant association, to be companionable, to have mutual respect and regard for each other, to love in spite of—and many times because of—faults and struggles for success which end in failure, to be helpful, understanding, and cooperative. We wish Christ to be constantly in our homes—truly an elder brother. His companionship is necessary for our homes to be fountains of strength and vitality as we move forward in his work.

DAILY WORSHIP is necessary for all of us—individually and as a family group—to maintain a high level of religious life and to help us reach new levels of spiritual attainment. A consistent prayer life, beginning with the simple, straight-from-the-heart prayers of childhood will help us become conscious of the slightest leadings of God's Spirit. And once we have gained this consciousness, we cannot live without it. Children who have been praying from the time they have been able to utter the simplest words grow into spiritually stalwart men and women—and thus become strong timber for the homes of Zion-building quality.

There is no better way for Latter Day Saint homes to maintain this level of spiritual vitality than by establishing family altar worship, which truly draws the members into communion with the Heavenly Father. The Scriptures abound with advice and warnings regarding the necessity of having the Spirit of God and Christ with us at all times, and we are told over and over again that we must pray to our Heavenly Father concerning all phases of our lives. The Book of Mormon counsels us:

Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks; cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day and evening; yea, cry unto him against the power of your enemies; yea, cry unto him against the devil, who is an enemy to all righteousness. Cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that they may increase. But this it not all; ye must pour out your souls in your closets, and your secret places, and in your wilderness; yea, and when you do not cry unto the Lord, let your hearts be full, drawn out in prayer unto him continually for your welfare, and also for the welfare of those who are around you.—Alma 16: 219-222.

Our consistent, devoted attention to the worship of Christ and his teachings will help our homes attain the standards of good Latter Day Saint homes as set forth in A Church Member's Manual. A saintly home is:

Spiritually adequate
Morally wholesome
Mentally stimulating
Missionary-minded
Artistically satisfying
Socially responsible Physically healthful
Economically sound
Love-centered

REALIZING OUR NEED for making room for Christ in our homes, let us search prayerfully and deeply into the rich heritage of Latter Day Saintism to keep alive the spark of genuine love and appreciation for the church, and devotion to its principles and ministry.

It would be well for us to keep in our hearts each day this "Hymn for a Household":

Lord Christ, beneath thy starry dome
We light this flickering lamp of home,
And where bewildering shadows throng
Uplift our prayer and evensong.
Dost thou, with heaven in thy ken,
Seek still a dwelling-place with men;
Wandering the world in ceaseless quest?
O Man of Nazareth, be our "guest."

Lord Christ, the bird his nest has found
The fox is sheltered in his ground,
But dost thou still this dark earth tread
And have no place to lay thy head?
Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold
That waits thy presence to be blest—
O Man of Nazareth, be our "guest."

Christ's Presence

I find my Lord Jesus cometh not in the precise way that I lay wait for him. He hath a manner of his own. Oh how high are his ways above my ways!

When Jesus Made Wine - By Vida M. Fletcher

TWO INSTANCES related in the Bible have caused considerable concern in the minds of those who would teach the truth about alcoholic drinks. We are living in a time of high-powered propaganda when selfish interests claim the sanction of the highest authorities for their insidious traffics. We have seen Lincoln and Washington pictured in liquor ads and quoted as favoring the use of liquor. The truth is that Lincoln belonged to a temperance society and said that if ever he could, he would hit the traffic and hit it hard; Washington's letters reveal a strong sentiment against the use of alcoholic beverages.

So it is not surprising that the instance of Jesus turning water into wine at the wedding feast in Cana, and the advice of Paul to young Timothy to use a little wine for his stomach's sake, should be seized upon by those who would justify either their own indulgence or the traffic. Since neither Jesus nor Paul would have been willing for their words or acts to be the excuse for drinking liquors, it is time to look into the matter.

Did the prophets of God for many generations warn against strong drink only to see his Son serve it socially in his generation? Or did Jesus use his miraculous powers to make wine because social customs sanctioned it, regardless of its harmful nature? Is it consistent for Jesus to make wine, then tell his followers of today that it is not good for the body? If it is not good for us now, how could it have been good for the people in those days?

A student, Bertha R. Palmer, has made an intensive study of the Bible and the writings of many biblical scholars. She has found that in translating the Bible, there were at least thirteen different words in the original languages translated as "wine" in the English. Some references to drinks or drinking contain warnings, others condemn the use of wine. This might be illustrated thus: if we were to interpret beer, ale, gin, champagne, and orangeade as "wine," we would have a somewhat similar interpretation as the Bible does. There is this exception, however; the process of distillation was not discovered until about A.D. 1500, so the ancient "wines" did not contain as high a percentage of alcohol as do our modern liquors.

SOME BIBLE SCHOLARS contend that all drinks in ancient times were intoxicating, since people knew no process by which to prevent fermentation. Others write of personal experiences with Oriental customs and quote recipes from such ancient writers as Aristotle, Cato, Horace, Pliny, Herodotus, Josephus, Plutarch, and Xenophon, citing at least five processes by which fruits were preserved and kept unfermented. They also mention "wines that do not make the head heavy." These historians show that unfermented drinks were in common use and were designated, "the best wines." These drinks made the heart glad, the face to shine and were counted of great value.

Paul was the forerunner of modern health scientists who endorse the use of fresh fruit juices for digestion and health. That he was no patron of liquor vendors is shown by his teachings. Galatians 5: 19-21 lists drunkenness among the works of the flesh and says, "They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Romans 14: 21 states: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." While Paul may have known nothing of vitamins, he did know that fresh fruit juices were good for the inside of a man.

An interesting example of a fresh fruit beverage being served in Bible times may be found in Genesis 40: 11, 21. Joseph was listening to the butler tell how, in his dream, he did the usual service to Pharaoh. He took fresh grapes and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup and handed it to him. There can be no question about the freshness of that cup of grape juice.

Another instance that invites investigation is the account of Jesus' eating the last supper with his disciples. It says, "He took the cup . . . fruit of the vine." (Matthew 26: 29; Mark 14: 22-25; Luke 22: 15-20.) The vine does not provide alcoholic fruits. Alcohol is the result of decay. Further, at the Passover, only unleavened bread was used; no fermented drink could have been served.

IT DOES NOT SEEM inconsistent to me to be quite sure that the "wine" Jesus made was not of the kind that was harmful to his friends. The guests said it was better than that they first had. In the light of modern research, there is no question about the quality of fresh fruit beverages when compared with alcoholic drinks. One is delicious and healthful, the other "bites" and is harmful. The delicious flavor of fruit juices is a new adventure to many in the field of refreshment. There is such a wide variety of colors and flavors that those who specialize in them find them an endless delight. There is no color or sparkle in wine that cannot be duplicated in fruit beverages. Used with the sparkling glass, lustrous silver, fine damask, or lace, fruit beverages delight the eye, satisfy the palate, and give a sense of gracious hospitality. Guests who have been served thus can go home with clear minds and happy memories of friendly hospitality that has contributed to health and happiness.

Jesus could not have served wine which was harmful to his friends and have been consistent to the teachings of generations before his day or with latter-day revelation. The wine Jesus made was the best—it would not cause anyone to stumble or become offensive.

The Challenge of Calvary

RECENTLY a church school class was discussing God, his personality, and character. The teacher listed on the blackboard the various characteristics as they were mentioned. Every fourth or fifth suggestion by the class could be included under the general heading, "God loves."

This is a fact of our religion. It is no theory or belief, but rather a truth affirmed again and again. The fullest revelation of this love is to be found in the circumstances which culminated in Calvary and the ultimate victory of Christ over the grave.

God has loved us "with an everlasting love"¹ even though from the beginning we have repeatedly refused to obey him. Though Adam knowingly and willingly disobeyed the heavenly command, God sent angelic ministry to restore Adam and his descendants to the divine way. Though the races became so wicked as to hate one another and choose to reject God completely, he chose to save mankind through Noah. Man turned from the Father to crucify his son and enter a condition of utter darkness, yet in this dispensation God has said, "this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."² His ceaseless efforts to accomplish this task are motivated by his passion for our souls. He yearns for us to share with him the glories and happiness of eternal life, just as an earthly father desires for his children the best things of this life.

GOD'S LOVE FOR US has been described as being similar to the love our parents hold for us and the love we, in turn, hold for our children. Sometimes our earthly love is revealed in dramatic and moving ways. During the great depression of the '30's there lived near my home a parent who, though suffering the rigors of sunstroke and subsequently losing forty pounds in ten days, did not cease his efforts for one moment in the attempt to find work and the means thereby to feed his children.

Once during the spring floods in the States, a man left the night shift after eight hours labor to take his turn on the levees. The mounting waters required him to work an additional eight hours before he was free to go home. Upon reaching his rural home he turned up the lane from the main road to the house, physically worn out and ready for bed. Down the drive his wife rushed, frantically waving her arms and shouting to him. She bore the news that their three-year-old daughter had wandered too near an abandoned well and even her light weight had caused the rain-soaked earth to collapse and cast her into it. Furthermore, a large amount of dirt had fallen in upon her. Without a thought for himself, the father began to dig. Through four seemingly endless hours, his tired body responded to the urgency to rescue his daughter.

Such selfless love as this is like in some small measure the all-encompassing love God holds for us, his children. As our Heavenly Father, he has moved at all times to do such as shall make more certain our salvation. After countless manifestations of his love, he moved in the meridian of time to reveal it once again. It is in and through Jesus, the Christ, that the finest and most complete demonstration of God's passion for us is made known.

THIS JESUS, who is the central figure of all of history as the Messiah, came into the world to manifest not only the love that the Father holds for us but his own love for us as well. He would never have endured the rebukes nor revilings at the hands of his tormentors had he not cared for us. It would have been impossible for him to have suffered the physical agony of Calvary if his compassion for us had not been as great as that of God. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."³

The atonement, made by Jesus, was not an afterthought in the plan of God, but an integral part—indeed the major portion—of the revelation of his love and the end to which he will go to win men to his ways. King Benjamin, the good king of early Nephite history, speaking of the means of salvation, says, "The atonement . . . has been prepared from the foundation of the world."⁴ Again, we find John on Patmos Isle, speaking of Jesus as the "lamb slain from the foundation of the world."⁵ The atonement, then, was determined as necessary from the very beginning.

Some have protested that Christ never had to die on Calvary or any other place. The love God and Christ hold for us, combined with the fact that in and of ourselves we could never save our unregenerate souls, necessitated this price.

O remember, remember, my sons, the words which King Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, who shall come; yea, remember that he cometh to redeem the world.⁶

Man had become so deeply ingrained in sin that nothing could redeem him except the willing sacrifice of the Son of God. His eyes had become, and would remain, so scaled by the sins of this mortal life as to make it impossible for them to see the glories of God unless the horror of that sinfulness was dramatically revealed. Man had come so to love and indulge his sins he could never be called to another way of life unless he saw in terms he could understand the passion of God and Christ for him and the extreme to which they would go to redeem him.

TODAY, with only the fragments of recorded history to give us the story of the atonement, we find it difficult to have brought home to us the horror of that day. The record is concise, and the words used quickly dismiss to the casual reader the details of that event. To know that Jesus was beaten does not tell us he was whipped forty times, save one for mercy's sake, with a cat-o-nine-tails. We do not hear the crack of the whip as it bites into his back, nor do we see him sag against the thongs bound to his wrists which truss him up for the whipping, nor do we see his exposed back made red by each lash of the whip. We can only vaguely imagine the intense pain inflicted by the crown of thorns as it was cruelly pressed upon his brow. We can only slightly realize the pain of the nails in his hands and feet and the spear wound in his side.

As each incident of the atonement becomes more real, there is revealed the awfulness of man's sins. Here is seen the terrible pain inflicted upon God as his councils are rejected and his will disobeyed. Here is seen how each and every thing done in contradiction to his will hurts him and causes him anguish of spirit. This is true today just as it was true in Christ's time and as it was from the beginning.

And Enoch said unto the Lord, How is it that thou canst weep, seeing that thou art holy, and from all eternity to all eternity? The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold these thy brethren, they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave unto them their intelligence in the day that I created them. And in the Garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency; and unto thy brethren have I said, and also gave commandment, That they should love one another; and that they should choose me their Father. But, behold, they are without affection, and they hate their own blood.⁷

As we become aware of this heartless treatment inflicted upon the Only Begotten Son of God by those of a former day and the consequence of our sins as they cause God pain and anguish in the face of his all-prevailing love, we are challenged to strive to be brought into oneness with him. It is not God who is reconciled to us and our way by the shedding of Christ's blood, but we who are challenged to be reconciled to him. As we respond to this challenge to bring our lives to "at-onement" with God, Christ atones for our sins.

MANY TIMES we have failed to understand just what that response should be. Some in complete sincerity have cast themselves upon the mercy of God and expect Christ to bear all their sins away. Others have indulged in forms of worship and godliness which, unless they lead to the ultimate development of the soul, are valueless in and of themselves. These people, though sincere, have misunderstood the movement of God in their lives. The experiences of conversion, which should be constantly renewed and should not be considered as a single incident, simply draw us to God's ways—they do not irrevocably win us to him. We are not transformed in one moment from sin-filled creatures to sinless beings simply because we are aware of God's eternal passion. We are the same as before with but this one exception—there is an intense tug at our heart strings to respond affirmatively to God.

As soon as this desire is born or renewed within us, there is enjoined a fierce struggle between what we are and what God wants us to become. The old being of selfishness and lustfulness puts up a titanic struggle to remain. All of us like the "status quo." It's comfortable and doesn't make too many demands, but it resists change and development. Thus we must battle ourselves to become what God desires. Isaiah said it in a slightly different way. "Cease to do evil; learn to do well."⁸ This is the fundamental reason we are not transformed upon our feeling of the tug of God. We have to learn new ways. We must perform deeds that are unfamiliar and unknown. The carriage and wagonmakers had to convert to new ways when the automotive industry became established and put the horse out to pasture. Their conversion wasn't overnight either. Look at a picture of the earliest Ford or Dodge or other make of car and note the surrey-type body in comparison with the modern style of today's automobile.

AS WE LEARN these laws and new ways, we will find the necessity to obey them. Jesus said, "Follow me." We are not only to learn of him but to do as he says. Jesus also said, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man."⁹ An automobile would be of no value to us if, upon learning how to use it, we did nothing about operating it or complying with the driving laws.

Within all of us is the desire to respond to the ways of this world and to carry over some of our old ways into the ways of God. That was tried in pagan Rome when the early church seemingly won its victory in the conversion of Constantine the emperor and subsequently the whole Roman Empire. No compromise could be made with the world and its pagan ways and the church still remain victorious. Just as it compromised and was overcome, so we will be overcome if we try to bring into the divine plan the ways of worldliness. Jesus said, "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other."¹⁰ There must be a complete divorce from the ways of sin and a strict adherence to the ways of God.

This change to new ways is not easy. There are times when we will be about ready to give up the fight and return either to the ways of sinfulness or to settle down into inaction. This is to be expected, for the road has never been mentioned as easy and without its challenges. Speaking of discipleship, Jesus said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."¹¹

We will suffer our own Calvary, the constant battle to win ourselves away from the call of worldliness to obey the will of God. Jesus said, "Now for a man to take up his cross is to deny himself and every worldly lust and keep my commandments."¹² But let us remember as we so accept the challenge of the cross and give ourselves in consecrated and devoted service unto the ways of God, we not only are showing our deep gratitude for his love manifest on the cross, but as well will be winning the battle to be worthy of our own victory over death and the grave to enjoy eternal life in the glory of the celestial kingdom.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. A. E. Campbell, 70 Queen Street, Stratford, Ontario, asks continued prayers for herself and her sister, Mrs. Atkins; both have cataracts. She also requests prayers for her son who has a fractured skull; her grandson who was seriously injured in an automobile accident; and a friend, Mrs. Dance, who has cancer.

Mrs. J. E. Pearson, Box 374, Route 1, Lake Stevens, Washington, requests prayers for the spiritual welfare of her family.

Mrs. Eva Hartrey, Piedmont, Missouri, requests prayers that, if it is God's will, she may be healed of high blood pressure.

Mrs. Louis R. White of Bay Minette, Alabama, requests prayers for her husband and her sister, Mrs. Fannie Mae Hilburn, that they may be healed if it is God's will.

Missionary Businessman

James B. Barrett was to be added to the missionary force.

Brother and Sister Barrett arrived on July 21. After Brother Barrett's arrival, it was agreed that Elder Waller would look after the branch work and leave Elders McConley and Barrett free to interest nonmembers in the work. Both Sister McConley and Sister Barrett rendered valuable assistance in the Sunday school and Religio, and also assisted their husbands in music and clerical work.

The gospel tent which had been used the previous year was packed away when the rainy season arrived in November. During the July following, it was unpacked and found to be mildewed so badly that it was unfit for prolonged service. Mr. and Mrs. George Holt, nonmembers, voluntarily gave thirty dollars toward purchasing canvas to make a new tent. This time the destructive effects of mildew were guarded against by painting the new tent with a borax-sugar-of-lead solution, the recipe for which had been furnished the missionaries by a sea captain, George H. Piltz.

WEDDINGS

Moore-Crutchter

Geneva Fern Crutchter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Crutchter of Oronogo, Missouri, and Martin Moore, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Moore of Opolis, Kansas, were married December 25 at the Reorganized Church in Medoc, Missouri. The double-ring ceremony was performed by William Miller, pastor. The bride is a graduate of Graceland College, class of '48.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Beckwith of Murdo, South Dakota, announce the birth of a son, Kenneth Earl, born February 12. Mrs. Beckwith, the former Doris Thatcher, is a graduate of Graceland College, class of '43.

A daughter, Nancy Gay, was born on December 19 to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hartman of Tucson, Arizona.

A son, Larry Owen, was born on January 18 to Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Harden of Fairhope, Pennsylvania. He was blessed on March 5 by Elders Clarence and Henry Winship at the Lock No. 4 Branch, North Charleroi. Mrs. Harden is the former Georgina Bush.

A daughter, Karen Lynn, was born on February 3, to Lieutenant and Mrs. M. Charles Barrows of Texas City, Texas. The Barrows are being transferred to Alaska in April.

A daughter, Rigena Faye, was born on October 27 to Mr. and Mrs. Eugene T. Wells of Lawrence, Kansas. She was blessed on March 12 by Elders G. R. and Claud Norris. Mrs. Wells is the former Rita Miller of Memphis, Tennessee.

DEATHS

CRANDELL.—Lewis Arnold, son of David C. and Mary Ellen Crandell, was born October 20, 1889, in Grove Township, Shelby County, Iowa, and died at his home in Boone, Iowa, on December 7, 1949. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1898.

He is survived by his wife, Ada, of the home; two sons: Marvin D. of Newton, Iowa, and Eugene A. of Boone; a daughter, Mrs. Alfred Hughes of Kansas City, Missouri; a brother, F. A. Crandell of Plattsmouth, Nebraska; four sisters: Mrs. Catherine Pett of Woodbine, Iowa; Mrs. D. Partridge of Windom, Minnesota; Mrs. Ellen Pennell and Mrs. H. T. Reimer of Independence, Missouri. Elder Asa Smith was in charge of the funeral service held at the Reorganized Church in Boone. Interment was in the Linwood Cemetery, Boone.

HARDING.—Jane, was born on May 17, 1862, at American Fork, Utah, and died March 10, 1950, at the home of her daughter in Independence, Missouri. At an early age she left Utah with her parents, traveling by caravan to Canesville, Iowa (now Council Bluffs). She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 20, 1880, at Crescent, Iowa, and on March 28, 1883, she was married to Samuel Harding; four children were born to them. Mr. Harding and two of the children preceded her in death.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. J. R. Lentell of Independence; a son, Colonel F. C. Harding of the United States Army, stationed at Schenectady, New York; two sisters: Miss Minnie Adams of Council Bluffs and Mrs. L. C. Carstensen of Santa Monica, California; a brother, William Adams of Council Bluffs; four grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the H. W. Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elders Donald V. Lents and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

PARK.—Frank Rollin, was born October 2, 1888, at Runnells, Iowa, and died March 1, 1950, at his home in Runnells. Following graduation from high school, he took a course at I.B.C. and then went to work at the Bank of Runnells. He then became bookkeeper for the Fairview Coal Mine, and in 1910 went to Canada and homesteaded near Kerrobert, Saskatchewan. Returning to Runnells in 1913, he was married to Blanche May Miller on March 5, after which they made their home in Saskatchewan, remaining there until 1927. At that time they moved to Newton, Iowa, and in 1945 they returned again to Runnells, where Brother Park was manager of the branch bank of Hartford Carlisle Savings Bank until his death. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since August 31, 1899, and had served as church school superintendent and teacher. He was also secretary to the cemetery association, treasurer of the school district, and city treasurer. He will be missed by both those in the church and community.
