In the past scientists have busied themselves with calculations to determine how long this universe of ours will last; how long until the sun will grow cold. But the latest word of best accredited scientists is to the effect that the universe is self-perpetrating—an indestructible and eternal cosmos. And is it a strange thing if it be the aim of Him who made it to bring forth here a race of immortals? Would any lesser aim justify the investment God has made in our earth, His patience in all the past, His great love revealed in Jesus Christ! How vast the conception!—S. S. Lappin.

A Time for Soul Building

It is the New Year. Before us unrolls the record of twelve new months, a record as yet unstained and unblotted by our mistakes. This is a time when good intentions and resolutions flourish, and when the word begin comes into its own. It is "a time to build up," as the scriptures state it. It is a fine season to think of soul building.

God is the Great Builder. We are divinely told that "he that built all things is God," and that "ye are God's building." Christ, the great Teacher, taught men to build themselves in charity, love, hope, faith, and helpfulness. God has builded. Christ has builded. We are potential builders.

It is easy to think of building material things, but not quite so easy to think of building souls of men and women. Nevertheless the thinkers of the ages have given much time to the consideration of the processes of soul building, and all have conceded the high desirability and the Christliness of lifting ourselves and others by so building. One poet has put his feelings into these words: "Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul."

Building means growth, construction, a rising from what we are to what we hope to become. It can not stand still; it can not go backwards. It rises steadily from a sure foundation to a beautiful superstructure. And when we think of building and soul together, the new year takes on purposefulness and life and expression. We of the church know that Christ calls for helpers, friends, and builders, not gossips, critics, and knockers. He has said: "Ye are my friends, if you do whatsoever I command you." He is calling now. Are we answering him in spirit and action? Does that something within us too sublime for words assure us that we are daily accepting His invitation, "Come unto me, all ye—" and do we know the truth of his promise, "I will come to you"?

The New Year—and opportunity to build. Do we appreciate them? Are we doing our best? Are we soul building? The materials surround us. They are for us to use. Longfellow puts it this way:

For the structure that we raise,
Time is with materials filled;
Our todays and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.

Today the church needs builders, many artisans in soul stuff, strong, dependable, and true. It asks you during the year to build and to forget all those things which do not contribute to building. It depends on you.

"Build today, then, strong and sure,
With a firm and ample base;
And ascending and secure
Shall tomorrow find its place.

"Thus alone can we attain
To those turrets, where the eye
Sees the world as one vast plain,
And one boundless reach of sky."

"One of the Most Significant Movements—"

THE YOUNG PEOPLE ARE HELPING

We have heard of the Kansas City Stake O. B. K. organization. For about three years these young people have endeavored to live their name, "Our Brother's Keeper." They have been first in class work, dramatics, playing ball, holding special services, and giving suppers. All these things have made them known locally. But now the O. B. K.'s have grown into church-wide importance.

On the evening of December 28, they held their fifth initiation and offering service, a ceremony of real obedience and consecration in which more than one hundred and fifty young people (between the ages of thirteen and thirty) checked up their "accounts with God," making their financial statement for the year or paying their tithing.

The O. B. K.'s are alert to the general financial condition of the world and to the particular need of the church. They have studied, and their stake council and representatives have kept them posted. And now this group of young workers is in the midst of a campaign which stresses obedience on the part of all young Latter Day Saints to the laws God has established for the support and upkeep of his kingdom on earth. They are acknowledging their share of church responsibility and preparing to meet it.

A letter in the News of Church and Home Department of this issue, tells us that one hundred and seventy-five O. B. K.'s have filed their inventories for the year and are making arrangements to pay their tithing; that many others are pledged to file their inventories later, and that the campaigners are far from finished with their undertaking. Nearly forty per cent of these young people are tithing, and over thirty per cent have filed inventories. Brother F. M. McDowell, who met with them at their initiation and offering service, has asked them to be pace-setters for a church-wide endeavor among the young people. They have accepted the invitation. They are hard at work. They extend to the young people everywhere the challenge: "Follow us. Let us check up our accounts with God. Let us, the young people of His church, go onward to Zion!"

Letters to the Editor

In this department we are glad to receive and publish letters of interest to our readers.

A Suggestion of Hope

Sometimes if we break a problem up into its parts we find that it isn't nearly as large as it looked to us at first. If we can see our tasks as units and not as an entire problem it often helps us to see that it is not impossible.

And so it is with our task in the church at present. If we can divide the financial problem of the church into units to represent how much each member must give to pay off our indebtedness we find that we are not faced with such a problem after all.

If each member of our church (using the October 31, 1931, figures) were to give twenty cents each week for the coming year the entire indebtedness of the church could be met, or if each member were to give only seven cents per week for one year, the entire budget could be met, or if each member would give one dollar a month for the next twelve months we would raise $1,321,296 or $101,164 more than our entire indebtedness.

Is the task so large? No, not when broken into units to show how much each member should give. Can it be done? There is no question but it can be done. All it requires is a little earnest work and a little sacrifice on our part.

Shortly before Thomas A. Edison died he said: "Be courageous! I have lived a long time. I have seen history repeat itself again and again. I have seen many depressions in business. Always America has emerged from these stronger and more prosperous. Be as brave as your fathers were before you. Have faith! Go forward!"

That would be a good motto for the church to accept at this time: "Be courageous! I have lived a long time. I have seen history repeat itself again and again. I have seen many a trying time in the church. Always the church has emerged from these stronger and more prosperous. Be as brave as your fathers were before you. Have faith! Go forward!"

May we be courageous. May we have faith. May we go forward, is my prayer.

Sincerely,

LEE E. ROOT.

"To Build on a Sure Foundation"

Having read many articles in your columns recently which I very much enjoyed, I wish to express my gratitude. Particularly do I wish to mention three articles that have appealed to me as very timely in view of the conditions under which we are laboring: "What Can Be Done About It?" by C. H. Porter, November 25; "To Your Knees, O Israel," by Joseph Luff, November 18; and "A Declaration of the King's Law," by Kenneth B. Curtis, December 9.

Surely with men who are able to sense the needs of the present, as those articles outline, Zion will yet shine forth in her splendor, the splendor of humility. And even though she pass through some trials will she not emerge therefrom purer and better able to build on a sure foundation?

May we find in the present crisis the strength which we seemingly have heretofore lacked, and out of the present stress may the solution of Zion's problems grow is the prayer of a servant.

Vision Story Contest

Friends of the church publications will be glad to learn that the Vision Short-story Contest which closed on December 31 brought manuscripts from forty-eight writers. Merely a passing glance tells us that many of the stories are very fine, and we look forward to the enjoyment of printing them in the future issues of the magazine. The Word of Wisdom Contest brought us forty manuscripts, which we thought a good total, but this latest contest has set a new mark. And, by the way, we are continuing to publish some of the excellent contributions from that contest.

The reader may be interested in the announcement, on the back page of this issue of the Herald, of some of the features of the January number of Vision. If you have not been reading or taking Vision lately, perhaps you ought to renew your acquaintance with it.

A Place to Work and Serve

As I study conditions as they are today, I am led to have a great desire to encourage the Saints. I am not sure if I can say the things which will most hearten the members, but I have heard of many grand experiences in the gospel work which we love. The gospel is everything to me—it is life and happiness. I would gladly give my life if I might get all of my friends to see and believe.

I feel that there is a place for me to work and serve in his cause, and though at present I am denied church privileges, I feel that conditions will improve. I obtain much instruction and pleasure from reading the Herald. And I would add to its cheer and lessons anything I could to gladden my brothers and sisters.

Brothers A. D. McCall and Ben Jernigan called on me and said that the Saints were considering arranging to run a bus from Brewton to Dixonville in order that the members might go to church. I do hope this will be carried out. It will mean much to the Saints of this community.

MRS. PATSY PEEVY.

Go Forward!

Saints, shall we not buckle on the full gospel armor and unitedly move forward to do the great task God has for his people?

You may ask, "It is worth while?" My testimony is that God's promises are sure. His work shall triumph. Zion shall be redeemed. It is our privilege to help if we will.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell would say, "Is it right? Is it just to give little and expect much?"

Let us give our bodies a living sacrifice, that his work shall move forward. There is nothing greater before us than there was before the Israelites of old when they were confronted by the Red Sea and behind them advanced the army of Pharaoh. But Moses' command from God was for them to go forward!

A Word of Appreciation

Having been a reader of the Herald for a number of years, I feel it is time that I thanked Herald editors and contributors one and all for their work. When I read what was said of the contributors in the Herald of December 9, it made me realize just a bit what it means in thought and work to put out the articles sent for our consideration. I hope and pray that those who can through knowledge and ability do this work will not become weary in well doing. They give us food for the soul.

The words that come to us from our President, that we may know how he looks at matters, are most helpful. The "Weekly Health Letter" from the church physician and the writings of our teachers on parts of the church books with references, etc., give us new thoughts and helps, and cause us to lift up our heads and rejoice in these latter days.

Did I ever tell you, among the affecting little things one is always seeing in these battlefields, how, on the ground upon which the battle of Bull Run was fought, I saw pretty, pure, delicate flowers growing out of the empty ammunition boxes, and a wild rose thrusting up its graceful head through the top of a broken Union drum, which doubtless sounded its last charge in that battle, and a cunning, scarlet verbena peeping out of a fragment of an exploded shell, in which strange pot it was planted? Wasn't that peace growing out of war? Even so shall the beautiful and graceful ever grow out of the horrid and terrible things that transpire in this changing but ever-advancing world. Nature covers even the battlefield with verdure and bloom. Peace and plenty spring up in the track of devouring campaigns, and all things in nature and society shall work out the progress of mankind.—George Alfred Townsend.

A room without pictures is like a room without windows. Pictures are loopholes of escape to the soul, leading to other scenes and spheres. Pictures are consolers of loneliness; they are books, they are histories and sermons, which we can read without the trouble of turning over the leaves.—Downing.

Prayer for the New Year

I thank thee first for all the gifts
The Old Year brought to me:
The dancing spring, a yellow rose,
A few days by the sea;
Glad gypsy hours in autumn woods,
And restful nights of snow,
And many, many stirring bouts
With clean, blue winds that blow!

I would keep my New Year free
From carelessness and folly,
From little words that prick and sting,
From sinful melancholy. . . .
Free of idle discontent
Which turns the brightest day
Into a stretch of sullen hours
Beneath a sky of gray.

Let me keep it clean as grass
Twinkling after rain;
Happy as the bird that cleaves
A morning sky in twain.
I would learn the tolerance
Of the kindly sun
That shines alike on rich and poor
And heartens everyone.

Give to me the trustfulness
Of the roadside flower
That neither fears the darkening sky
Nor yet the sudden shower.
Strengthen me to do my work
With joy and hardihood,
And may I with each passing day
Know that life is good!

After the Depression—What?

By Leonard Lea

The following is the first of a series of articles by various writers who have been asked by President F. M. McDowell to contribute to an examination of the present depression, its effects, and its future possibilities. Other articles are planned to appear in succeeding issues of the "Herald."

LOST AND FOUND

LOST—Just prior to the world-wide depression, three billion dollars worth of prosperity. Finder please return under any conditions and no questions will be asked. Reward—will promise almost anything finder desires. Return soon to The World.

The above advertisement might appear in some Interplanetary Daily Bulletin, if such an imaginary and fantastic publication could exist.

People hope for the end of the depression and the return of prosperity as farmers hope for rain after a long drouth. They interpret every little upward fluctuation of industry as a sign that the paralysis of business is about to end. The whole world looks forward to that yet unknown time when this period of doubt and fear, privation and unemployment, shall be at an end.

The desire for relief from our present distresses is perfectly natural, and is not in any way to be deplored. But the fact that so much of the world desires only the return of prosperity of the 1929 kind is a cause for some concern. It is not for desiring too much that our present thinking is to be criticized; it is rather for desiring too little.

We are to be criticized for desiring a flood of money rather than national and world-wide welfare; for desiring personal opulence rather than human good; for materialistic rather than altruistic desires.

It may be that out of the trials and uncertainty, the suffering and fear of the present depression, we can learn some lesson of vast importance. We can, if we are in a mood to learn. It is our purpose to do what we can to read the signs which have been so liberally written by the times.

Why Prosperity Did Not Endure

People are still wondering why the prosperous conditions of 1928 and 1929 failed them. It ought not to be hard to understand. It was a false and unjust prosperity. It was false, because it was so largely based on wealth which existed only on paper. It was unjust, because it was gained without labor or honest value. Our prosperity was like the wealth which—according to an old story—was acquired by two Israelites who were wrecked on an island; these two, the story tells us, became millionaires through trading their clothing back and forth to each other; but there was no actual wealth to back the fortunes they had made, and they were rescued from the island poorer than they had landed. In very much the same manner we, the people of these United States, were cast upon the Island of Prosperity, and proceeding with all the brightness which characterizes a nation that is naturally smart, quickly traded ourselves into some astonishing fortunes which have since been found quite evanescent. There were no actual values behind the great rise in the prices of stocks, bonds, and other securities during the boom days. Prices were raised high by the artificial demands created by people making wild purchases expecting to become wealthy by selling them at still higher prices. For a time it looked as if we were actually able to cheat the economic balance of the world, and a good many foolish people thought they could.

Such a prosperity, naturally, was doomed.

Our Punishment an Inevitable Result of Our Excesses

School boys used to cry, as they threw a handful of dust or a cup of water into the air, "What goes up comes down!" to the sorrow of the lad who happened to be under it when it came down. People had forgotten the wisdom they had learned on the playground at school. The markets, raised to dizzy heights, were bound to crash; and woe be to those who did not "get out from under."

Millions had been made, on paper, by the rising market. But there was a great deal of actual investment along with the paper profits. When the markets crashed, the paper losses hurt no one, but the losses of real investments were a national calamity, for so great a number of individual losses were bound to affect the nation.

The depression of 1931 was the unavoidable result of the boom of 1928 and 1929. Anybody who wants to get back to those boom days of tinkering with the economic machinery is asking for a repetition of the present calamity. Any inflation is an attempt to cheat established laws, whether it is inflation of currency or inflation of markets. Every dollar that is printed on the press must some day be redeemed with gold, or the government that does the printing will be destroyed. Witness the economic mire into which Germany and Russia plunged; and the difficulty with which other European countries, trying to return to financial stability, extricated themselves. And every time the market soars artificially it must follow with a crash. Every splurge must be paid for in the end. And we are paying for ours.

What Do We Want?

If we had learned anything by our suffering we would not desire a return to the old order of things. Rather we should look for something that would assure better conditions for the world. This thought is expressed in a strong article in the New York Times Magazine (December 27, 1931) by Raymond T. Fosdick:

At this moment, in the midst of our economic depression, we are praying for the return of prosperity. What do we mean by prosperity? Do we mean the shrieking, high-power salesmanship and the fever of stimulated wants that made up the whole of existence before 1929? Do we mean a society of patterned minds in which every man wants whatever his neighbor has, and life is a hectic scramble for gadgets and knick-knacks? It seems to be inconceivable that any one would want to go back to such a condition. There must be something better.

We were all of us caught in a system which was not of our making and which we could not control. Now it has broken down. Are we merely to patch it up so that we can live as we lived before? Surely if prosperity means only houses and furniture and automobiles and radios and telephones and all the other paraphernalia of living—and no life that transcends all these mechanisms—then we should earnestly pray that the blight of prosperity may never return.

Raising the Sights—To Our Ideals

A man can be made a prisoner by a single idea. A single incident of suffering can become a cell of torture, if the victim can think of nothing else.

We became enamoured of our material prosperity, and when it was taken from us we thought we had lost all. Our economic loss, however, is not nearly so tragic as our way of thinking. We have become prisoners to the false idea that we must get back our material prosperity. Perhaps we should not even want it back.

We have forgotten our spiritual values, we have forgotten our ideals. The great things of life, and the most valuable things, still remain untouched. Friends, homes, love, kindness, charity, and the human virtues which make life worth while—these are still in our possession.

We need to raise our sights from the spectacle of our economic disaster to our ideals. We need to look to the future.

It is our ideal, our task, our duty, not to restore prosperity, but to establish the kingdom of God; not to set money in circulation, but to do something to promote justice and equity in human relations.

Let us raise our sights and look at our ideals.

God's Opportunity—and Ours

An old saying is frequently quoted these days: "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." Man is too proud, too stiff-necked, too self-sufficient in good times to listen to the still small voice of the spirit. It is only when he is in trouble that he seeks God.

What was the chance to preach the gospel of the Kingdom to this nation when it was rolling in wealth and reeking with iniquity? We had not the slightest chance of converting a world that had its mind on money and material prosperity.

The prodigal son would never have returned to his father if his money had not run out. It was the taste of the husks which he shared with the foreigner's swine that reminded him of the sweet taste of the food at his father's table. It was his own rags and filth that brought to his mind the memory of the good clothing, the clean linen, and the warm comfort of his father's home. Nothing less than the disaster which he suffered would have brought him back.

We are like that, not only as a nation, but as church people. Our troubles have brought us penitent to our Father's home. This is God's opportunity—and ours. It is his opportunity to bring us back to the gospel principles. It is our opportunity to live our religion and to teach the gospel to the world.

After the Depression—What?

Every other depression has come to some kind of end. When the last farthing of the cost of folly had been paid, normal times returned. It is as probable that this depression will end sometime as it is that the sun will rise tomorrow and that next summer will come. There might be, possibly, some great exception; but the rule has worked a long time.

Is the world to return to its mad pursuit of wealth, its jazzy social life, its loose morals, its flouting of decency and its transgression of the protective conventions of society? Is it to be ruled again by selfishness and greed, supporting a philosophy and practice of parasitism? If it is, there is no such thing as progress, our experience has taught us nothing, and it were better for the race of men to be destroyed from the face of the earth, in order to make room for some better and nobler form of creation.

We feel sure that the world does not stand still, that it does not turn backward. Something different, and we hope something better, is in store for us.

But this something better is not to be had by mere wishing and waiting. If we arrive at better conditions in the world it will be because, under the leadership of the spirit, we obey the laws and follow the path that leads to the kingdom of God.

Stewardships

We believe—and some day our belief will have to be our practice—in stewardships. We believe that a man is responsible to God for the disposition of his property as well as his life. Why should a man's life be bound to God, and his property free? A man's full obligation is not satisfied when he has taken care of the needs of his own family: he must also take an interest in the welfare of his fellow men.

Stewardship is a responsibility to handle both life and property in a manner so that profits and surpluses shall go to the benefit of society as well as of the individual.

Society provides all the conditions and opportunities for man to enjoy the use of property and to seek happiness. The selfish individualism of any man should not permit him to play the hog with the resources that belong to society. Property is never owned, it is only loaned. Men have to leave everything behind them at death when their tenure is ended. Eventually the property finds its way back to the society from which it was received. Then men are responsible to work so as to be a benefit and not a menace to society.

The Work of the Church

It has been said again and again that the work of the church must go on. The work of the church is to improve men and to bring them to a consciousness of their responsibility to God and of their duty to other men; the work of the church is to plan, teach, and foster a social order that will exemplify the working out of the principles of social Christianity in an economic order that will promote justice and equity in human relations and in the distribution of the world's combined production of goods.

We believe that the work of the church must go on, and will go on, to the consummation of the plans and purposes of God.

In conclusion we may quote again from the article by Raymond T. Fosdick, to which we made reference above:

This is not a time for despair; it is a time for hope. We are living in an exhilarating moment in history. We are the privileged witnesses of great events. Out of this suffering and chaos new goals can be set and new landmarks established. In a spirit of high adventure we can strike our tents. The promised land is perhaps not for us, for we may be destined to wander in the wilderness. But our children may yet march into a Canaan that is fairer than this present generation has dared to dream.

Leisure is a beautiful garment, but it will not do for constant wear.—Anonymous.

A Message for the New Year

Radio Address by R. S. Salyards, Sr.

We have just celebrated the Christmas season with its universal spirit of good will and fine wishes for happiness and good cheer. This celebration has not been confined to our own people in these United States, but has been participated in by the people of all nations. The radio has voiced to us the greetings of the people of Europe, Asia, Australia, South America, and we know that the "dark continent" has joined in the celebration of this splendid season of rejoicing. In no other portion of the year does the world join in such universal expression of good will and good cheer. The general population of the world entire forgets its ordinary life of difficulty, labor, and trying scenes; and fathers, mothers, children, relatives, neighbors and friends give full rein to the joyousness of the Christmas season. It grows with the years; it is not something which passes into mere recollection with the decades behind us, but its life, its spirit, its happy felicity continues and increases until its recurrence is anticipated and hailed with a full and free and universal spirit of happiness and genuine good intent.

With our Christmas greetings there is expressed also wishes for a happy New Year. This is rightly so; for the spirit of Christmas does not and can not limit its peace and good will to one day of the year; it is the expression of that which is the deeply-seated and universal element in the heart of man, which, true to itself, has good intent toward every fellow being. "Men are that they might have joy"; human society is founded upon the sentiment and spirit of friendly good will to all. The family, the unit of all nations, of state, of church, of all organizations, has its seat, its origin, in affection and good will. This is a universal, fundamental quality. It indicates that the fountain of life flows from a source that is life-giving and life-sustaining in goodness, kindness, and benevolence. Man can not ignore nor repress these sentiments and be true to himself, be normal, and satisfied and happy; he must give vent and voice to his real, his true and genuine nature, if he is to be content, and abound, and to be really rational in his form and fashion of existing.

Man originated in God; by his elementary constitution he is partaker of the divine nature. Sin, error, and the multiplied forms of selfishness which develop in his carnal state, in his immaturity, in his failure fully to measure up to his possibilities, have to a large degree obscured and hidden the greatness in goodness of which he is capable. But there is "that something" about the Christmas season that awakens within him universal response of his normal nature, his consciousness of the divine, universal appeal of good will toward all.

The Christmas season is a happy awakening to this consciousness. Men lay aside the ordinary cares and burdens and spirit of toiling and endeavor on that day. Their thoughts are of helping, of giving; they freely respond to its awakening of desire to bless by giving; and it is notable that not only immediate families, but the poor and needy are nobly made partakers of the Christmas joy and feasting; that in our cities this spirit of sympathy and kindness toward the poor and unfortunate is growing and increasing everywhere. It has become a fixed feature of our general life; even the criminal in his place of confinement is made to share in the joyous good will and feasting.

We have just passed this day of Christmas celebration, but we can never do away with its spirit and intent. As noted, it is a universal quality, a spirit so aptly and finely defined and expressed by the heavenly message voiced by the angels: "Peace on earth; good will toward men." What could better express it? what more comprehensively state and interpret it? It announced the coming, also the intent and purpose of the Prince of Peace. That is why it appeals so universally to the human heart.

What is behind, what preceded the Christmas season? Man in the beginning received the manifestation of God in the day he was created. We have but limited account of the revelation of God to him; but we have enough to fill out the comprehensive outlines of scripture statements to the effect that, while God created man with the intent and foreknowledge of what he would experience in the course of his probationary development, he left him not without instruction concerning his origin and destiny and the means ordained for his highest attainment and happiness. This knowledge was largely lost; it became dim and beclouded in his consciousness because of failure fully to respond to the divine love and will; but from time to time the universal Father has specially appealed to the race to return to him. "He left himself not without witness" of his overruling existence and providence.

Man tasted the bitter as a result of his departure from God, of his disobedience and corruption of the knowledge imparted to him from the beginning. The religions and civilizations, with their abnormal mysteries and misleading institutions, peculiar to the great nations of the past—these picture to us the life and struggles and handicaps of man without God; of heathenism with its attendant misconceptions, its superstitions, its darkness, its degenerations and mystery which enveloped and beclouded the human mind. Man, losing clear sight of his Maker, was left to experience the results of his own devisings; and those results were made manifest in the varied darkened conceptions of his powers.

In the Golden Age of the Roman Empire, the last and greatest of the ancient world-powers, Christ was born, in the reign of Augustus Cæsar. The old pagan religions, which had given whatever of comfort they could concerning religion and immortality to man, these, also Judaism, had become decadent into lifeless forms and traditions; and there was little or no hope for the race in knowledge of God, so essential to man's nature and development. Skepticism, doubt, and general despair prevailed. Thus, after man had exhausted his theories and inventions concerning life and immortality, the birth of the Prince of life and peace was announced and made the great turning point, the supreme fact and inspiration of human life and history. Christ was born in "the meridian of time," that the world, up to that time without actualized manifestation of him, might look and live and go forward under the inspiration of the world's life and light, its only hope. God himself—not ambitious, vain, carnal man—was manifest in flesh, to be the light of the world, the Redeemer of the race; to be its inspiration, and gradually to lead it onward and upward to higher conditions than it had ever known. The desire of all nations had come.

From the birth of the child in Bethlehem the world has been led onward and forward to purer conceptions and higher conditions. The struggle has been long and the development retarded and contended against by powers of evil and darkness and long-established institutions; but Christ in the truth has slowly and surely continued to subdue contending forces and theories, until now great things have been wrought out in the behalf of human enlightenment and welfare.

Fundamental to this progress has been the true God-idea, the unity of the race as one common family, and therewith the Fatherhood of the "only true and living God," as Creator and Sovereign of the universe. The old paganisms of the semi-civilized and barbarian nations has been driven from its seat of power in the systems of heathenism. One God, the true God, the common Father of all, center and soul of all life, vital to the rational conceptions of the nations, has become the universal concept. Religion, the most potent influence in the life of the race, has been redeemed from that great, misleading superstition. The spirit of man has been enlightened and emancipated from the bondage of great error by this manifestation. Jesus Christ, sent direct from the presence of God himself, has been the means of this significant unveiling of that basic truth, so vital to human welfare and development. That truth has been steadily driving the forces of darkness and ignorance from the minds of the race. With that liberation the human mind has been freed and stimulated to proceed in its work of progressive advancement to higher levels of thought and being. Progress in religion, in morality, in science, and in political freedom has resulted from this great revelation of God as "our Father." Thus Jesus has vindicated his claim to be the captain and leader of man, in that he has succeeded in causing his teaching and philosophy to become the permeating, prevailing thought and inspiration of the world entire; and nations are no longer separated from one another because of their antagonistic religions and ideas nor limited in intercourse by national exclusiveness; but now are moved and being more definitely moved to unity of understanding and undertaking.

The world today is being brought, in its political and social and general life, into greater unity of ideas and understanding and cooperation than ever before; and, we repeat it, Jesus Christ has been and is the ground and cause and sustaining spirit of this great progressive universal movement. Some may decry it and point to the differences which yet remain to be surmounted by the nations in efforts to abolish war and bring about universal peace, to act in larger degree of harmonious concert; but the peace sentiment is constructive and must finally prevail. While strong influences contend and combat the efforts to develop peace and good will, the ideals of peace will continue to be championed by sane and good people of all races, in the face of whatever may manifest itself in opposition. Civilization must attain that status or perish. "Truth is mighty and will prevail"; it is the decree of God himself that "the nations shall learn war no more." It will necessitate the second, personal coming of Christ in his universal reign as King of kings and Lord of lords to realize its universality; but it is the true and only finally prevailing sentiment by which the race must be sustained and led forward in its progress to ultimate happiness.

We therefore bespeak recognition of God, obedience to Christ, as the universal solvent by which good will and peace may be promoted and realized within the heart of mankind among all people. To accomplish that end, human nature must be suffused and tempered by the divine nature, the spirit of Christ. In him God has made the highest appeal to his earthly human family. What he has accomplished in heaven, he wills to establish upon earth—his rule in the hearts of his children; and if humanity shall hear him through his Son, the will of God will be developed and made potent as the moving force that shall move men and women to answer to the Shepherd's fond appeal. To do that is to awaken the soul to noblest ideals, to make answer to the strongest creative forces that can be expressed in all phases of life. We may and can overcome all lesser motivations and conditions, can cause the evil and the ordinary and the merely habitual in human living and being to fade out by holding to the vision of the heavenly and extraordinary as expressed in the life and law of Christ. This is the call of the Son of God to all people in the New Year, to make it a dawning and growing new year in fact.

Humanity lives in true reality to the extent that it heeds this profound, inspirational vision and seeks to make it actuality. The vision retained must become ultimate reality. Its memorials have been dedicated to us in the voices of seers, patriots, deliverers, prophets, and saints who lived for and proclaimed the coming golden age of all peoples. To work for it, to be moved by its passion, to steadfastly endure under its inspiring courage and determination, is to be quickened unto growth and satisfying consciousness of the divine, animating life. Such has been the inspiration of the good and the truly great whose lives have shone out amidst the vicissitudes of the past. To those leaders of thought and action we are indebted for the good and the best in the records and accomplishments of the great past. The present has grown out of the past; we inherit what has been left to us by their agency and ministry. The future must grow out of the present; and so on and on must continue the great unfoldings of development. The things which are seen are temporal; the things which are not seen are eternal. To live in the spirit of Jesus Christ is to discern, to promote, to secure, and to make permanent the happiness designed of God to be attained in all the new years that are to follow.

A Declaration of the King's Law

V.—PITFALLS OF ZION

Following so closely upon the heels of the preceding article on finances, we needs must explain the reason for this topic at this time. Stewardship covers a far wider field than merely that of finances. It seems that since a man's most sensitive spot has become his purse a good name is considered of secondary importance. (Proverbs 22:1.) It is a shame, but a man with means can have a shady character and still retain his standing in society; in other words, it is considered a disgrace to be poor; and because money has such power, it is sometimes heaped like the Tower of Babel in an attempt to place man in heaven. Hence it becomes a sin, and confusion follows, and many stumble. Since Zion is not free of this condition we find her strewn with many ugly pitfalls, and many people stumbling. Therefore it behooves us to consider these things while on the topic of finances.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." (Matthew 24: 35.) "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." (2 Peter 3: 7.)

If this nation, America, had failed to incorporate in its laws the one prohibiting murder, with its punishments, the country would soon be overrun with murderers. In fact, your life would be in danger all the time; but through wisdom it was not neglected by those of judicial standing.

This same illustration may be used in God's work. The devil, realizing that man must learn by experience the things that are God's has placed a stumblingblock before man, and man, in his unlearned weakness, has stumbled blindly on, pitifully wise in his own conceit. Did God forget a certain law? No, but man needs "milk" little by little.

In a recent article on the subject of the evolution of man, we learned God had given man the fullness of his law or word, but man had choked and almost died. In mercy and wisdom God had begun again, and little by little, with "milk" had he nursed him back again to life, even up to now, when Zion, in its temporal form, is being built. "Shall I bring to the birth and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord. Shall I cause to bring forth and shut the womb? saith thy God." (Isaiah 66: 9.)

And even now, is Zion going to choke and die? God forbid. Let us consider the prophecy of Jeremiah 31: 31-34, foretelling the new or second covenant:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

Do you believe it is single in character? No. It has two sides—spiritual and temporal—verbal and written covenants.

May I again quote: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

In wisdom God suffered Christian humanity in its infancy to accept Christ or the new covenant in its verbal form, but reject the temporal or written feature. The Adversary, realizing this, took advantage and jumped in. How glorious was his reign, twelve hundred and sixty years, unmolested; but God, in his mercy, determined to save humanity this time. The spiritual Zion of old had withered for lack of nourishment from the temporal side, however in 1830 A. D. God began again, in patience, to nurse, and again bring to life his people in a new Zion on new ground, in the midst of plenty. Surely from history man in his present state can benefit by the experiences of those gone on. Oh! if he only would! But will he?

Read, please, and understand Ephesians 1: 7-10:

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him.

Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Peter, Paul, John, etc., all were saved by their faith and works in Christ, the second covenant, for Christ is of the order of Melchisedec, the spirit that never dies spiritually, and also which governs that which is temporal. (See Hebrews 8, 9; Zechariah 13: 1; Romans 14: 17-23; 1 Corinthians 3, 4; Philippians 2: 9; Jeremiah 31; and Malachi 3.)

And even now the Adversary has his foot in Zion; if the temporal side ever comes to the front he will go into the pit chained hand and foot, but to all appearances he has got a good chance to win. Will there arise another abominable church? God forbid again.

We quarrel and bicker about nothing. Poor Zion! (Isaiah 66: 8.) She is in pain. Stewardship is formed but will it be born? Will Zion have children according to the fullness of the law? Prophecy says yes. "For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream; then shall ye suck; ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knee." (Isaiah 66: 12.) But first we must forget the goddess of gold. Man can not redeem Zion. It is God who will, for Paul says: "I have planted; Apollos watered, but God gave the increase." (1 Corinthians 3: 6.) However, God is jealous and will not tolerate the idol-worship of gold. Remember the commandments, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

Idolatry! Are you a pagan, trying to worship Christ? But you say, "Who will pay my bills?" Still again you say you believe in Jesus Christ our Savior. The question is, "Do you really? have you faith?"

Imagine the dramatic scene (Isaiah 66). The

The Ear and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—7

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The cochlea, which is a spiral cylindrical tube forming the innermost of the three portions of the labyrinth, is entirely concerned with the hearing. The air is gathered up in the external auditory canal and when it reaches the eardrum, and it sets into motion the little bones, commonly known as "hammer, anvil and stirrup." (These have been mentioned in a former article.) The activity of these little bones, brought about by the vibration of sound, sets in motion the perilymph in the vestibular canal of the cochlea. This motion of the perilymph affects the endolymph in the cochlear duct. The movement of the endolymph agitates hairlike processes of cells in the organ of Corti, which changes this mechanical motion into nerve energy, along nerve fibres of the auditory nerve to the brain centers of hearing, where the nerve impulses are interpreted as sound. The eighth cranial nerve carries the impulses, set up in the organ of Corti, to the brain centers. This nerve may be divided, functionally, into two portions; the auditory nerve, the one that is concerned with hearing; and sickroom; the doctor hurries in, followed by a nurse. In vain the father tries to follow; he is stopped by the closing door. Excited and restless, nervous and anxious, he paces back and forth. "Will Zion, my wife, live? Will the child live? Surely it will be a perfect child." (Stewardship.) And so he ponders and repeats to himself time and time again. He hears the groans of suffering; his heart aches and nervously the Father fingers the door, determined almost to rush in, in the face of that which should not be. But no, he must wait. The child must be born first.

So it is our problem. Have faith. Zion could have been redeemed a hundred years ago but we were not ready, and are we ready yet? Just outside, all hell is open, ready to devour us any day now. Gold will not save us then (Ezekiel 7: 19), for God has moved it far from us. (Ezekiel 7: 20.) (Isaiah 52: 3.) "For ye have sold yourselves for naught, and ye shall be redeemed without money."

So trust in God; keep his commandments; cast out fear and Zion will be redeemed. Do not sleep any longer or you may never know what the kingdom of heaven is like. Even the Prophet Isaiah of old could see us shrouded in slumber, for he starts his fifty-second chapter with, "Awake, awake!"

the vestibular nerve, that transports the messages from the vestibular mechanism. A great deal more might be said concerning the several theories of hearing which have been put forward, but, as no definite conclusions have, as yet, been arrived at, it is of no practical value to speculate upon them in these articles.

Diseases of the internal ear are quite serious and their symptoms may be divided into three classes, namely: tinnitus (noises in the head), vertigo (dizziness), and deafness. These symptoms may occur singly or together, and may vary greatly in severity.

When the auditory nerve is irritated from any cause, where it ends in the cochlea, we will have tinnitus, yet, on the other hand, it may be due to some external cause or reflex irritation without disease of the labyrinth. Usually, when these noises are located in the labyrinth, they may be very intense and continuous, otherwise, they are usually intermittent and only in the latter stage do they become constant and unbearable.

The noises in the ear may be brought about by impacted cerumen (earwax) or a foreign body, of some kind, that has found lodgment in the external ear canal. If one has suppurating ear, acute catarrh, that may have been transmitted from some disease of the nasal structures, noises may be produced by the result of increased blood supply within the labyrinth. Interference with the circulation in these structures may be brought about by some remote constitutional disease: real disease, steriosclerosis, anemia, or some septic focus in the intestine, the excessive use of tobacco, alcohol, etc.

There is another class of patients who are otherwise apparently healthy but who suffer from an exhaustion of nerve fibres, a neurasthenic tendency, and who may be troubled with these noises. It is also an early symptom of brain tumor or aneurysm.

Some poisons generating in the system from such things as a careless diet, infected tonsils, scarlet fever, whooping cough, measles, may damage the nerves of hearing. Or any disease of the brain, such as meningitis, may likewise be a factor. Syphilis is one of the worst and should receive early treatment in order to save a fatal termination. Persons suffering from these diseases should not be up and about, as it is both careless and dangerous. Injuries of various kinds may affect the internal ear, especially fracture of the skull, which may reach the meninges, through infection. Electric shocks, such as lightning, have been known to cause total deafness. In such cases, there is little hope of restoration since the nerves are entirely destroyed. Sudden hemorrhages into the vestibular apparatus or cochlea, often cause partial or total deafness.

Deafness causes an immense economic loss, and Religion and Science

By James E. Bishop

It has been freely asserted that there is no conflict between science and religion and some have gone so far as to say that scientific men make their inventions by the spirit of inspiration. The least that may be said about such statements is, they are very imprudent and exceedingly misleading. There ought not to be conflict between science and religion, but the fact is that there has been unrelenting warfare between them; and it will continue as long as scientific men stress human invention and deny divine revelation, and as long as religious people stress divine revelation and deny human invention.

There are many distinctions between the methods of religion and science. Religion proceeds from the whole to the parts. Science proceeds from the parts to the whole. Religion walks by faith, science by electric light. Religion emphasizes confidence and hope, science stresses knowledge and intellect. Religion tends to venerate the past and immerse itself in dogmas, rituals and symbols. Science is critical of the past and analytical and skeptical towards dogma, ritual and symbols. Science extols human invention and tends to deny or explain away divine revelation. Religion emphasizes divine revelation and seems to be afraid that science will explain away the basis of belief in divine revelation. Some followers of scientists believe that such a job has been done; and David Straus, Ernest Haeckel, John most cases could be prevented, if care were given in time. Education is the only bright hope to save these unfortunates from such a calamity. Middle-ear catarrh or catarrhal deafness, probably better known as chronic progressive middle-ear deafness, is usually an infection that travels to the middle ear from the nose or throat. Sometimes these bacteria are absorbed by the lining membrane of the nose, into the blood stream, and carried to adenoid tissues or tonsils, then through the Eustachian tube to the middle ear.

To a certain extent, this condition can properly be called a childhood disease, since it frequently has its start in tonsils, adenoids, etc., with the resultant running ears, which are usually poorly cared for, and sometimes no attempt is made at all. During childhood, it may pass by without any apparent inconvenience until it appears again at the ages of twenty-five or thirty.

Watson and others believe that they have done that very thing.

It is well to remember that there are various kinds of religion and that the followers of Christ can be both believers in divine revelation and scientific methods. Perhaps it is quite true that persons and social life can only be integrated and progressive when all the distinctions between science and religion are held together in a systematic and harmonious working whole.

History has witnessed a tremendous conflict between religion and science. The two classical exponents of that conflict are John W. Draper and A. D. White.

Draper took the radical position that religion was a hinderance to progress and that the key to progress was science. He was like Comte, who in clearing the ground for his sociology and positivism concluded that the standard of excellence and progress, and the most exact thing with which a man could deal was mathematics. He therefore divided the past into two eras. First, there was the age of mysticism and religion, second the age of philosophy and speculation; and now we were emerging into the age of scientific positivism. However, after years of thinking he concluded that man must have religion and before he died, tried to work out a usable religion. And while Draper denied the efficacy of religion and extolled science as the only method of progress and light, made the following observation: "But, that I may not be misunderstood I here, at the outset, emphatically distinguish between Christianity and ecclesiastical organization. The former is the gift of God; the latter are the products of human exigencies, and therefore open to criticism, or if need be, to condemnation." (Intellectual Development of Europe, volume 1, page 267.) In his work, The Conflict of Science and Religion, he did not hesitate to condemn and when he was through there was very little left of a religious nature.

A. D. White took a different point of view than Draper and the title of his monumental work was The Warfare of Science and Theology. He maintained that religion was good but that the theologians were mostly wrong.

White was associated with Ezra Cornell in the establishment of the Cornell University. There were many influences at work trying to get sectarian religion to dominate the foundation and development of that educational system. Ezra Cornell was Quaker. But White took the position that "the college should not be under the control of politics or a single religious sect and that its curriculum should emphasize pure science and a liberal interpretation of literature." This brought White into conflict with many leaders. He had to take the platform and wrote a pamphlet on the subject. Later he wrote a small book. Subsequently he worked for the government and finally held the post of United States Ambassador to Germany. In Berlin he had access to the great library and completed his work which was published in two volumes. He showed that each of the sciences was born against opposition from religious sources. The church men had no mercy on any men who advocated anything that was in conflict with their notions. Their notion was made up of classical teaching and childish interpretation of the scriptures. The instance of Galileo's persecution by churchmen is well known. Not only were churchmen in opposition to frank investigation, but the methods that they used of healing bodily and mental sickness were abominable and their ideas of the universe and of God were, in many instances, of the same kind and clearly a misrepresentation of Jesus and the prophets.

If such religion was the product of authority it is no wonder that men struggled for emancipation and that finally the ordinary man turned from the picture in disgust. As we consider the problem of science and its relation to religion we are impelled to think of the personnel, the products and methods of that sphere of activity. If one should take a vote among the scientists on their attitude toward religion what would be the result? Professor Leuba has done that very thing. The results of his inquiry should make one very cautious about defining the relation of science and religion.

Leuba set out a definition of religion as viewed by scientific men. This definition of religion may be summed up as: The teaching that there is a personal God, who has revealed the way of truth and salvation and with whom the human soul may have communion; and the teaching of personal immortality. Without doubt these are Christian ideas and the teaching of the Christian church. Leuba claims that science can not be reconciled to such religious ideas. In taking his vote on the issue among scientific men he divided them according to their special fields, as historians, physical scientists, biological scientists, sociologists and psychologists. He then divided them in greater and lesser scientists. In this division and in his selection of men, it appears that Leuba was perfectly impartial. Of the greater scientists in history only 32.9% believed in the religious idea of God; in physical sciences only 34.8%; in biological 16.9%; in sociological science only 19.4%; and among the psychologists 13.2%. Among all of them faith in personal immortality rates about the same. Among the lesser scientists the ratio is somewhat higher. Leuba took the names published in Catell's American Men of Science.

From the above report it is clear that the majority of men in American scientific life find no evidence of God in science. Professor Leuba was not too strict in the religious idea of God, for the following description is strictly biblical and Christian, "The God of the religions may well be regarded as the author of the laws of nature, but he must, in addition, be conceived as hearing man, feeling with him, and as responding to his needs and supplications by an action outside or beyond [so far as man's knowledge is concerned.—J. E. B.] these laws. Otherwise theism becomes pantheism or deism" (The Forum, September, 1927). To one who has had experience in the gospel of Christ there is no surprise that science does not reveal God. God would not be God if such was the plan. For in comparison with religion science is practically modern. If God were going to leave the question of eternal salvation to science there would be millions of souls that would have come and gone without hearing a thing of science. The gospel of Christ stands or falls on its own merits. It saved before sociology and psychology were thought of. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation unto all those that believe."

The discovery of America, of printing, gunpowder, the telephone, the telegraph, steam, and electricity, are some of the products of science. And each has had tremendous influence in transforming the physical world. But there has been very little transformation of the social world. Plato had significant ideas for educating the youth of Greece in order that men may become intelligent and good. So did Christ. If all practiced the "Golden Rule" what a different world this would be! This rule can be practiced and to do so men should be regenerated. This can be done. Jesus said, "Except a man be born of the water and the spirit he can not see the kingdom of God." What a man can not see or perceive for him does not exist. Man never made a science that would produce a second birth and a regeneration. God has. He has had plenty of witnesses also.

The chief witness of God is Christ. After Jesus comes the corporate manifestation of righteousness in the church.

The methods of science are observation and experiment. These methods are extended and refined by the use of instruments. There is nothing in these methods that are contrary to the injunction, subdue the earth, grow and increase, etc. These methods are in harmony with the warning of Jesus when he said, "If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

The conflict between science and religion will cease when men of science will see the beauty of the gospel and when the followers of Christ will see the value of the methods of science. The conflict will be over when personality will hold in balance divine revelation and human invention.

Religion and science are two phases of reality. Both are needed in the redemption of Zion. We are to seek learning by study and faith. No man is a student without adopting the scientific attitude. There is no faith without revealed religion. Zion will need faith and science. Increased control is needed in regard to health, service, industry, general social conditions. There will be new developments in physics and chemistry. There will be more knowledge of man and his environment. Religion and science will play their part in the accomplishment.

Is It a Matter of Sacrifice?

By J. E. Vanderwood

Reflecting upon the present economic condition of the world and the church, I did a little calculating with a view of seeing what would be required of us in the way of sacrifice to lift the one burden of responsibility that is at present resting upon us. I was actually astonished when I saw what a small matter it would be to meet a great portion of our indebtedness if we were really dedicated to the cause that has been intrusted to us. In reading the report of the church statistician in a recent number of the Herald, I noticed that the membership of the church was listed as being something over one hundred and nine thousand. While this is not a very large number it is quite surprising to see what a few pennies from each one would amount to in the course of a year's time. And I am wondering how fully we are converted to the philosophy of Christ, and how willing we are to give ourselves to the furthering of the work among mankind.

It is not an uncommon thing to hear people speak of sacrifice, and I am wondering just what they mean by it at times. It is one thing to talk, and it is quite another thing to demonstrate our confidence in the work of the church by putting our best into it. I just wonder at times what we call sacrifice. It is a question whether we are really willing to make sacrifice or whether we are simply trying to make excuse for our failure to present ourselves a living sacrifice unto God. What does it all mean anyhow? How seriously do we take this matter? Are we really devoted to the cause or are we just trying to fool ourselves into believing that we are doing what we can? I know the Lord does not expect the impossible, nor the unreasonable, from any of us. He simply asks that we do what we can. The highest tribute ever paid any one by the Master was that which he said about Mary, "She hath done what she could." What a wonderful thing it would be if he could say this of all of us. Whether or not this can be said of us is to be determined largely by us. Mary did not hesitate to do all within her power for the benefit of the Master; she gave the best she had and did it ungrudgingly and unstintingly. The Master, too, recognized her willingness in this matter, and he commended her, saying, "Wherever this gospel shall be preached in all the world, this shall be told as a memorial of her." The one interesting thing about this is that Mary gave all she had for the anointing of the body of Christ, and there isn't anything said about sacrifice in connection with it.

What I wish to say here is this, a very small sacrifice on the part of each would make a very liberal provision for the present need of the body of Christ, the church. Suppose we would devote ourselves to the cause sufficiently to be willing to deny ourselves one meal each week, and give this a nominal cost of twenty cents, what would we have? There are fifty-two weeks in the year, and twenty times fifty-two equal ten hundred forty, $10.40; this is not a great deal of money, it is true, but when we multiply this by one hundred nine thousand we have a nice little sum of one million forty-one thousand eight hundred dollars, $1,041,800. This would be quite a substantial amount to be placed in the hands of the Bishopric, and the sacrifice would be so nominal that it need not be mentioned. The word of inspiration to the Psalmist was, "Gather my saints together unto me, they that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Surely the spirit of sacrifice is commendable, and it will enable us to find God and to share in his most excellent benefits.

As I weigh the matter I am wondering whether it is a matter of sacrifice, or whether it is not rather a matter of a need of obedience on the part of the people who call themselves after the name of the Lord. The Prophet Samuel told King Saul that, "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken is better than the fat of rams." I wonder if it would not also be a wholesome thing if we would hearken a little more carefully to the requirements of the law that God has given for our government, and for our salvation? There is one thing quite certain and that is that no one need be expecting an inheritance in Zion who has not been willing to make sacrifice for the forwarding of the work of the church, and he who is not willing and obedient shall not be accounted worthy to stand. We read in latter day revelation: "Behold, the Lord requires the heart and a willing mind; the willing and the obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days." Surely we need not deceive ourselves, nor need we hope for that which is beyond us. He only shall share in the benefits of the gospel who has put himself into it.

If we were obedient to the requirements of the Lord we would be able to move forward the cause of Zion in mighty power. And come to think of it as we should, we discover that this is the only way in which the cause of Zion can be forwarded. The question then is, what are we willing to do, and what are we going to do? There is nothing to be gained by complaining and finding fault, nothing can be gained by delay, so the only thing open for us is the forward course, and the further question is how fully are we committed to the one and all-important task of redeeming Zion? It will demand the best there is in us, and it will at the same time make of us a people worthy to enjoy the blessings of the Lord. There need be no doubts arise, for the only thing that will help us in the accomplishment of our work is the spirit of consecration and devotion to the cause of the Master. He who will put his best in the undertaking will share in the best here and hereafter. May the Master sustain and comfort his people give them courage to go forward.

A Simple Test of Devotion

By A. B. Phillips

Great souls are most often revealed in emergencies and times of great stress. It is at such times also that the church membership will manifest the true measure of its faith and devotion. Thus it may happen that some who were little noted when everything went favorably in the church, become prominent and loyal supporters in times of stress and doubt. Others who had once seemed to be devoted when all was well, may in some cases offer only objections or excuses when the church seeks their aid in times of testing. In such times the church learns some of its most valuable lessons, and in the past it has been able to use these experiences toward greater and more consecrated ends.

The church is now experiencing what may prove to be the most critical period of its existence. Our serious financial stress is increased by cross currents affecting the attitude of some, and under these conditions due to combined causes the church finds some of its members spiritually depressed. Those truly consecrated to God will not slacken efforts at this time, but will try to increase them. The problems now confronting us can not be solved by failing to support the church in its times of stress, but will be likely to make them more difficult of solution. Your full devotion and support now will not only help us out of our financial difficulties, but will also put the church in better shape to deal with various serious matters.

Every Saint can easily weigh the measure of his devotion to the church in the following manner. For every dollar, quarter, dime, nickel, or penny spent for something not really necessary, set aside an equal amount at the same time for the church. Do this every day faithfully, and when at the church turn it over to the financial officer. Make this a rule of life, and you will prove that you love God as much as you do your luxuries and nonessential things. If anyone finds this too great a sacrifice of pleasure, let him ponder seriously upon his spiritual state and ask God to help him.

As an aid to this method of determining loyalty to God and his work, a small purse may be obtained at the ten-cent store, in which should be placed all money thus set apart for the Lord. This will prevent mixing of funds, and will show at any time how much has been saved for the church. Of course it will also show that you have spent an equal amount for nonessentials, and will prove an excellent way to determine whether or not you are wasting too much money on such things. The funds you thus save for the Lord should be turned over as an offering, and should not at any time be paid as tithes. Tithing is a debt you owe to God, and to pay it is a mark of honesty, but it does not measure true devotion.

Other Methods Suggested

If you prefer, you may measure your devotion by repressing your unnecessary wants (see Doctrine and Covenants 130:7), and in each instance set aside the amount you have thus refrained from spending for yourself and offer it to the Lord instead. Some feel that this is a better way and more in keeping with the Spirit's advice to the church, and that it better expresses the law of sacrifice. It will also doubtless prove to be a more thrifty method of regulating expenditures, and as it requires only about one half as much money, it is recommended to those whose funds are easily exhausted.

Those who are not satisfied with either of these measures of devotion may prefer to offer to the Lord both the amount saved by repressing unnecessary wants and an equal amount added to it. This would represent the entire amount that would have been spent and set aside for the Lord if the method first suggested had been followed. Only those whose love for the work of God is unusual, and who sacrifice for it with pleasure, can easily observe this method regularly with perseverance. But their reward is great in heaven, and their peace is great on earth.

Sacrifice clubs and experience meetings have been formed at times by earnest workers of other faiths, in order to assist their cause, and to increase results of efforts being made. Let us also manifest "a faith that will not shrink," and offer to God a devotion of which we shall be glad to remember when we at last are called before his throne.

Kansas City Young People Pledge to Support the Church

O. B. K.'s Hold Fifth Initiation and Offering Service

When the financial needs of the general church were made known the young people of Kansas City whose representative body is the Stake O. B. K. Council, they felt that they wanted and needed to participate in a concerted effort to carry their share of the load. After consulting with stake and general church officials and discussing the problem in their council meetings, it was decided that there was only one legitimate way to build the kingdom and that that way had been clearly outlined in the standard books of the church.

The church studied the work that had already been done and found that a little effort had increased the number of local young people tithepayers from 165 in 1929 to 217 in 1930. However, they were amazed to learn that only 25 out of 550 young people had filed inventories. So December was set apart as inventory month and, cooperating with the stake bishopric, bishop's agents and pastors, the campaign was started.

Inventories became the subject of the hour. There were announcements, special classes, Sunday school discussions, personal letters, and mass meetings. Brother F. M. McDowell met with the council and addressed a mass meeting, and on each occasion the project received a unanimous vote of support.

Personal visits were made by pastors and solicitors, and the workers were kept in touch with the results. Special young people inventory blanks were used.

December 28 was set as the night when the inventories should be gathered and the results tabulated. A lovely service was arranged for this occasion. Central church had been tastefully decorated with tiers of Christmas trees (obtained at little cost after Christmas Day), and white candelabra. Two hundred and fifty young people sat in sections reserved for their congregations, and the gallery was open to spectators.

The first part of the service was arranged as an initiation service for those who desired to become active members of the O. B. K. organization. Thirty-two were introduced, pledged, welcomed, and enrolled at this time. Then while Brother George Anway led the singing of "Just as I Am, Thine Own to Be," the guests and the council president took their seats at a long table on the platform. Immediately in front of the table, on a dais of black velvet, stood a large urn. George Anway introduced the second part of the service by singing "Onward to Zion." Then George Mesley told the story of the great urn in the City Beautiful, where the people who labored therein passed by the urn on which was inscribed "From each according to his ability, unto each according to his needs," and deposited liberally of their earnings. The city became the master city of the world. When they hugged to their bosoms their earnings, crying, "This is mine. With my own hands I earned it. This is mine," the city crumbled into ruins and the place where it once stood became known as the Valley of Shriveled Hearts.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards took up the theme of the urn's inscription and gave a strong address. After this, those who were at the table passed by the urn and deposited therein their tithing or financial statement, and then, group by group, the young people came forward to cast in their "accounts with God," until over one hundred and fifty had passed by the urn. As they retired to their seats, each one lighted a taper from the altar of service and each group counselor, with a pledge of continued service, lit a candle for his group.

When all had passed by the urn the whole room was filled with the light of many little tapers. The congregation rose to sing "I Would Be True," and President F. M. McDowell, in a fitting and reverent manner, dedicated the hour and the lives of those present to the ongoing work of the church.

The effort for obedience to God's law did not end with this service. Those who filed inventories (175 for the year) are making arrangements to pay their tithing. Many pledged themselves to file later. Bishop Skinner plans that this program will be carried on until everyone in the stake has had the opportunity to know the law and obey it.

At the outset of the campaign President McDowell asked us to be pace-setters for a similar church-wide endeavor. While nearly forty per cent of our young people are tithing and over thirty per cent have filed inventories, we feel that there is still much to be done. This is the work of God. Any pace that is set for such a work can not be true till it matches the perfection of the work to which we have pledged our allegiance.

1324 South Cheyenne Street

Tulsa Branch faces the new year with a forward outlook. In ordinary times there is no group of Saints in the church more loyal, more consecrated, more faithful, and more united than this group of God's children, but these are not ordinary times. With more than thirty of our wage earners not working, with business conditions generally depressed, with the fear with which humanity faces the future—a fear partially, at least, transmitted to those of the household of the faith, with the uncertainty of those in trouble, and with appeals coming from the church, there has prevailed in our midst a spirit of uncertainty and doubt not to mention gloom. Several things have recently happened, however, to dispel this spirit and to bring us the optimism and joy which rightfully belongs to those blessed with God's Spirit.

First, I would like to mention a two-week series of missionary meetings held here. Brother Ellis Rathbun, released last February, has been in Tulsa for some time, endeavoring to locate here. Taking advantage of his presence, we asked his assistance in preaching a series of old-time missionary sermons. He readily consented. We secured a store building free, placed in it sixty folding chairs from our church school, and began with a crowd of sixty-three the first evening. Brother Joe Richardson and his brother, Irvin, and their father, John O. Skinner, were responsible in securing the building. Ella and May Richardson, with the help of some of the other women, cleaned the floor and windows.

Brother Rathbun started his meetings with a sermon on "Our Conception and Need of God"; from there he went directly into the fundamental beliefs of our church. I firmly believe there is nothing like a few good, old-fashioned missionary sermons now and then to bring a renewal of the Spirit of God to his people. For two weeks, through a changing and wet season, Brother Rathbun held his crowd, which after the fourth night was compelled to move into a larger building. There are five who attended every night, who, we believe, are ready for baptism. There are others of our own people, for some time indifferent to the pearl of great price, who have renewed their allegiance, and are now regularly attending church. The invitation to return and hold another meeting was extended not only by our people but also by the owner of the store building, a nonmember. We considered the meeting a success in every way, and a new spiritual power in the branch membership is the result.

Second, I would tell of the visits of Bishop L. F. P. Curry and the splendid talk he gave while doing some work here in line with his business. He left a splendid impression on these people, not only of his ability in the work for the church which he has undertaken, but also of his consecration and sincerity. We are grieved to learn that the officers of the Oil Well Supply Company are to be moved to Fort Worth, Texas. This move will make Brother Curry's visits to Tulsa less frequent.

Third, I would mention the annual election of officers of Tulsa Branch, held December 10. This meeting began with a supper which lasted from six o'clock until seven thirty. Then a forty-five minute play was given by the Temple Builders. Business session and election followed. The spirit of peace and good fellowship prevailed throughout the service, and without criticism or argument new officers were elected and a number of recommendations coming from the branch president and his associate, O. A. McDowell, were adopted.

The treasurer's report was particularly encouraging inasmuch as it showed that we had been able to pay in the last year $1,601.25 on the church building indebtedness and interest besides $2,431.42 for other items including $827.88 in tithes sent to the Bishop of the church. Our total income for the eleven months of the year was $4,104.51. This was a remarkable showing in view of the conditions of business generally and the price of oil in this part of the country particularly, also when we consider that Tulsa Branch has had the budget system only since January, 1928. Many of our people had not been able to make their promised payments in full either to the building fund or the expense of conducting services, but they were more than gratified to know, with the reading of this report, that God's hand has been over us, and that in spite of adverse conditions, we as a people have prospered in church work.

The fourth and last thing that has brought an optimistic outlook to the new year, is the program of instruction and service laid out for the branch during December, January, and February. Our calendar includes gospel sermons, a Christmas program and cantata, a sacrifice offering service, a watch night party, the installation of newly-elected officers, communion service, an organ recital, a musical program by the choir, and district conference. The last named will be held February 20 and 21, and Brothers G. Leslie DeLapp and E. J. Gleazer have promised to be with us. A busy people are a happy people and this is particularly so when that work is God's work.

J. E. LANCASTER.

Lennox, California

Morning and evening services were enjoyed December 20, and the Sunday school had fair attendance, its session in charge of Sister Woods, the superintendent. Elder W. J. Nuckles, pastor, delivered the morning sermon which was a skillful interpretation of scriptural teachings, applied to present-day conditions. In the evening at six fifteen the youths' fellowship hour included a program of musical numbers and a playlet by two members of the senior class. The regular Book of Mormon Class, conducted by Brother Nuckles, then met. Brother W. J. Menzes gave a short talk on faith in the evening hour, this being his first time in the pulpit.

The Christmas program was held December 22, the church being nearly filled in spite of rainy weather. Brother Nuckles delivered the opening address. The committee worked diligently to make the entertainment a success. Each one present received a treat from the Christmas tree.

On December 20, Clifford Eugene Steffins, infant son of Brother and Sister Steffins passed away at Haythorne, California. He was a sweet, winning child and will be missed by all who knew him. Brother Eli Bronson, of Central Branch, Los Angeles, officiated at the funeral. Interment was in Pacific Crest Cemetery. Both parents are members of the church.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

The Thanksgiving season was appropriately observed throughout this district, and now the Saints are remembering the birthday of our Lord with sacrifice and service.

Hagerman Branch

Not long ago the pastor conducted one more into the kingdom, Brother Earl Player. This baptism completed another family circle.

The department of recreation and expression held a social time a short while ago which was well attended. It took the form of a Negro minstrel, and a number of nonmembers expressed themselves as having enjoyed a wonderful time.

Hagerman Branch had the pleasure of the help of Brother Kress and family for a short time. They were en route from Centralia, Washington, to Independence. Brother Kress occupied the pulpit one night and visited at the Silas Condit home, continuing the journey the following morning. Brother Kress was one of the missionaries who was called in from the field because of the lack of funds to continue his work.

Elder O. W. Okerlind was here from October 22 until November 2 during which time he held a series of meetings. There was good attendance, a number of nonmembers being present. His sermons were much enjoyed.

In the afternoon of November 1, the Saints met at the home of Sister Lucinda Hendrickson, to help celebrate her seventy-sixth birthday. A program of songs, readings, and short talks was given after which refreshments were served.

The women are busy. They gave a chicken dinner at the city hall December 1.

About one hundred attended the Halloween party October 30. A program, games and contest helped the merrymakers to pass the evening.

With the return of winter weather we are holding cottage prayer meetings, and find them more adapted to the climate and branch conditions.

Blackfoot Branch

Meetings here were few during the month of November, Brother and Sister Jennings, the only Saints who live in town, being away for the winter. The rest of the congregation is scattered and it is hard to get the members together. Nevertheless each one is trying to keep himself right with his Master.

In October Sister Doris Eggleston, who will be remembered by Idaho members as Doris Jennings, of Pocatello, and her husband, drove to Blackfoot. They took Brother and Sister Jennings home with them. The Saints had a short visit with Brother and Sister Eggleston and were glad to hear that they are active in the work of their branch. Brother Eggleston was baptized by Elder R. C. Chambers of Los Angeles, formerly of Rupert.

Filer Branch

The district missionary was here November 15 and delivered two instructive discourses on the needs of today. He stressed the need of complying with the natural, physical, and spiritual laws that we might develop the minds of Saints who can and will cooperate for the welfare of the church as well as the individual.

The branch solicitor, Brother Vernon Winegar, was able to be back with us early in the month of November after a forced absence on account of illness. Brother and Sister James Winegar spent a few days the middle of the month at Magic Hot Springs in hope of benefit to Sister Winegar's health.

Rupert Branch

Little Bobbie Daniels, son of Brother T. C. Daniels and grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Daniels, passed away in November at the home of his grandparents. He was laid to rest on a Sunday afternoon, following services conducted by Arthur Condit at the Saints' church here. Elder W. A. Connell gave the funeral talk. Interment was in the Burley Cemetery beside the little lad's mother who died last December. Besides his father and grandparents, there survive Bobby's two sisters, Jean, eight years old, and Virgie four, a brother, Jack, six, and many other relatives and friends.

Each Sunday morning the young people hold an early prayer meeting.

The adult class is studying the Message of the Book of Mormon quarterly.

A group of young people gave a farewell party for Howard Hudson at the Storey home the latter part of October. Brother Hudson has gone to Weiser where he was joined the middle of November by his mother, Sister Sarah Hudson.

News of the death of George Chambers, son of Brother and Sister R. C. Chambers, now living in Los Angeles, saddened this branch.

The women of the branch surprised Sister Mary Plowman and presented her a beautiful quilt.

Boise Branch

Apostle M. A. McConley visited this branch Sunday and Monday, December 6 and 7. His talks helped us greatly.

This branch holds services regularly, Sunday school, preaching service and choral service on Sunday, prayer meetings on Wednesday, department of recreation and expression on Friday. All visitors to Boise are invited to worship with us.

Every Friday night in the service of the department of recreation and expression the older people's class studies the Book of Mormon, and the young people are studying etiquette. Juniors are learning about the church from the church history.

Pastor John Cato returned from his mining expedition in the Boise Basin and was present November 21, occupying the hour with the theme, "Thanksgiving." He reports much snow in the basin this year and said he was forced to abandon his mining venture until spring because the cold had prevented them from making a fall clean-up of the flume.

The Christmas pageant, under the direction of Sister Jackson, received much rehearsing before the final presentation. The program consisted of tableaux, solos, and chorus numbers. It was one of the big events in branch activities.

The women's department, led by Sister Bullock, is working each Thursday. They are making a quilt which will be sold to help pay the church debt of this branch.

News from District Missionary Okerlind

Several weeks ago I held a good meeting at Hagerman and enjoyed the association of the members. They know how to merge the activities of old and young to make them profitable and enjoyable.

Was called to Council for the purpose of baptism. Three were to have been baptized, but two were prevented at this time. Brother Marion Prideaux was baptized at the Starkey Hot Springs, the font being donated by people there. One man from Cambridge attended the baptism and gave me an invitation to come to his home to hold services next summer.

During the week of November 15 to 21, we held services at Rupert. This series was closed by an all-day meeting on Sunday when the district officers met in consultation over the sacrifice campaign.

From Rupert I went to Wyoming for a season of missionary work prior to going home for Christmas.

Far West Stake

Richmond Branch

Richmond Branch is making sure progress. The priesthood members are active in visitation and many tireless workers are carrying on the work at this branch. The attendance at all meetings is very good and regular. A fine group of young people helps to make up the congregations.

On Monday night, December 14, a branch business meeting was held with the result that Brother William G. Hamann was reelected as pastor for 1932, with Oscar Case and A. McPeck as counselors.

A short Christmas program was given Sunday evening, December 20, at which time the Christmas offerings were given.

Several have been sick but are improved. Brother Hamann and Brother Graybill's little son are on the road to recovery.

Cameron Branch

There was a splendid increase in attendance at our mid-week prayer services during the month of December, and these were among the outstanding prayer meetings for the year 1931.

The church choir was well represented in the Christmas community cantata that was rendered on the evening of December 13 at the Christian Church. This cantata was made up of singers chosen from the choirs of the various churches in the community.

On Thursday, December 17, the annual Christmas party of the C. S. S. group of the department of women was held at the home of Lottie Daniel, leader. Instead of following the usual custom of exchanging gifts, each one brought some offering of food that was placed in a basket and distributed to a needy family for Christmas dinner.

A large and appreciative audience witnessed the pageant, "Balancing the Christmas Ledger," on Sunday evening, December 20. All those participating, ranging from old Father Time down to the smallest Penny, acted their parts very creditably, and another very beautiful lesson on sharing and giving was presented.

Sunday, December 27, at the eleven o'clock hour, we were privileged to listen to a splendid sermon from a member of the stake high council, Elder L. A. Keck, of Saint Joseph.

First Saint Joseph Church

The spirit which seemed to prevail at First Church during the holiday season was one of sacrifice and giving. At nearly all of the class parties instead of following the usual custom of exchanging gifts, the money was brought and sacrificed as an offering. Many families also sacrificed gifts to each other and gave birthday gifts to Christ.

In harmony with this spirit of sacrifice, the children voted to sacrifice their usual Christmas treat, and give their offerings to Christ whose birthday we celebrated. The treasurer gave the department the amount usually spent for treats. This was divided among the children who put it in their little Christmas envelopes. For two weeks previous to Christmas the children brought pennies, nickels and dimes for their envelopes.

When the time came Sunday night, December 20, to give their offerings of service as well as of money, it was an enthusiastic group who presented a Christmas pageant to a large audience and gave their offerings to the Christ-child in the manger. As they marched around, leaving their gifts at the altar, they were learning a lesson of giving which hours and hours of teaching could not make quite so clear to them. The gifts of the children alone totaled over sixteen dollars in money but who can measure the real value?

With about fifty children seated on the platform around him, Elder Ward A. Hougas gave a brief talk after which the offertory was taken.

The Sunday following Christmas another Christmas service was held. Elder Ward A. Hougas gave an illustrated lecture on "The Christmas Spirit," assisted by the junior choir. This splendid lecture and the songs sung by these young people combined to make the evening's service worth while as well as enjoyable.

The O. T. Z.'s, a young people's organization, met Tuesday night, December 29, for election of officers for 1932 and a social time. There was a good representation from most of the young people's classes. An enjoyable evening was spent. As a result of the election, the following officers will serve during 1932: President, Helen R. Beadnall; vice president, Harold Sleezer, and secretary-treasurer, Alma Hale.

People from the four groups in Saint Joseph met at First Church Sunday morning, January 3, for the regular, quarterly, amalgamated sacrament service. A very large crowd attended this first sacrament service of the new year.

Ward A. Hougas, pastor of First Church, began a new series of Sunday night sermons Sunday, January 3, with a fitting subject for the New Year, "The Open Road."

First Church is happy to have its associate pastor, Elder Howard C. Timm, back again after a serious illness which kept him away from services for nearly six weeks. The sincerest wishes of the Saints are for his complete and speedy recovery of strength and health.

Toronto, Canada

December 23.—Last week was a busy one in the branch. It started with the regular sessions on Sunday, Elder Grant St. John, speaker in the evening. Monday evening the church history class held its last session for the year, having completed the first volume of the Church History.

Tuesday evening, December 15, the "reverse dinner" was held in the lower auditorium. The department of men looked after the catering, Gerald Parfitt getting the organization together and Milton McLachrie acting as the chef in the kitchen with many able assistants. The waiters and the kitchen help were dressed in white coats. The guest speaker was Mrs. Rose Henderson who spoke on "Peace." It was arranged that the ladies have full charge of the speaking. Miss Vida Taylor was chairman. Mrs. Fay McLean and Mrs. Alice McLean, respectively, moved and seconded the vote of thanks to the guest speaker. Bishop A. F. McLean and Pastor J. L. Prentice in white uniforms served the head table, and the dinner sponsored by the men was considered a real success. The men are organized now and are just finding out what they can do. You will hear more from them later.

Thursday evening the department of women assembled in quarterly meeting when the captains of the twelve groups reported the activities for the three months. They collected the required five hundred dollars, making a total of two thousand for the year. It was their objective to pay the interest on the mortgage, and they went over the top. Mrs. Mary Wilson, the supervisor, and the department are to be congratulated.

The same evening the regular monthly meeting of the Priesthood of Toronto Branch was held in the church parlor at which the subject was "The Sacrament."

The Christmas tree entertainment for the junior department was held Friday evening, and judging from the attendance, was quite an attraction. The appearance of Santa Claus, of course, was the climax.

Then last Sunday morning the church school put on White Sunday and a play and tableau entitled "The Babe in the Manger," which many consider one of the best lessons we have had for some time. This play, because of requests, will be reproduced New Year's Eve in the church at 10 p. m.

It will be a part of the watch night service until twelve o'clock.

Elder Wilson was the speaker last Sunday night.

Next Sunday evening the choir is having special Christmas music, and Elder James Pycocock is to be the speaker.

We will have the anniversary services of the opening of our church, Sunday, January 17, at which time we expect some general officers of the church present. The department of men have set fifteen hundred dollars as their objective, to be raised by them by that date.

Mikado, Michigan

Since the last letter from this branch to the Herald, the Saints have had the pleasure of a visit from Elder Amos Guy, of Hillman, whose sermon was the subject of conversations among the people here for some time.

Apostle D. T. Williams recently met with us, giving the third of the series of lectures which he is delivering at a number of points in the district. We are always glad to welcome ministers and friends of the gospel to our little church.

Most of our sick are recovering and again able to attend services. Brother and Sister James Sloan have moved into the home of Brother and Sister Benjamin Moore, where they can help care for Sister Moore who has been an invalid for some time. She is slowly recovering.

We are informed that Brother Melvin Smith is slowly recovering, but hope Herald readers will continue to pray in his behalf. Sister Richard Stewart is at home again although not able to attend church.

Pastor M. J. McGuire is making his home with his uncle, Albert Procmier.

The annual branch election was recently held, and resulted in the choice of several new officers for the year.

The Christmas entertainment occurred December 22 at 8.30 p. m., and considering the late hour at which preparations for the program were begun, it was good. Our hearts ache when we see so large a group of young people as we have in Mikado without musical training when we can readily detect good voices among them.

Several weeks ago Sister Fanny McGuire Argoyle, generally known as Grandma McGuire, suffered a stroke on the right side. But she is now able to again be around the house.

We have been having unusually warm weather this month. December 23 a young brother killed two snakes, something unheard of here for this time of year, and December 24 we had a thunder shower which was followed by a light snow.

A District Conference in England

The southern district conference convened at Enfield, Middlesex, Saturday and Sunday, November 28 and 29, and proved a spiritual feast to all who attended. It opened with a short business session at six o'clock Saturday evening, followed by a display by the local Health and Strength Club in charge of Elder J. A. Judd. Refreshments were served and at eight forty-five the Enfield Branch Orchestra, assisted by various artists, gave a short but enjoyable concert.

The Sunday sessions commenced at ten o'clock in the morning with a prayer service in charge of Elder J. A. Judd, assisted by Elders H. Hailstone and D. A. Judd. The Spirit blessed all who attended to a great degree. At eleven o'clock came the preaching service in charge of Bishop A. T. Trapp with Elder J. W. Worth as the speaker. His address inspired us to greater confidence in God and his work.

Refreshments were served at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The church school assembled in the new church at three o'clock in the afternoon with Sister E. Judd, local superintendent, in charge, and a splendid program was enjoyed. At the same time the ministry met at the home of Elder

J. Judd to hear Bishop A. T. Trapp explain much of the church program relative to the present day crisis.

Tea was served at five o'clock in the afternoon.

The Saints reassembled at six fifteen and joined heartily in the singing of a few hymns under the leadership of the district chorister, W. T. Goullee. At six thirty commenced the preaching service in charge of Elder J. W. Worth, the speaker being the district president, Elder J. A. Judd. His talk added much to what had already been given, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

A short Fellowship service proved a fitting climax to the Conference, many testimonies to the goodness of God being given.

The Saints send greetings to all.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The Independence girls' chorus, directed by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, gave a half hour's sacred concert Sunday night, and Apostle F. Henry Edward was the speaker. Our choir was absent from this service, being at the Malvern Hill Church, where they were invited to present the Christmas cantata, "Peace on Earth," by E. K. Heyser, which was presented in the Central Church on the evening of December 20.

Prayer, meditation, scripture reading, and the sacrament message by Brother S. S. Sandy made memorable our first communion hour of 1932. A large crowd entered wholeheartedly into the worship.

The basket ball league resumed play on Monday night. Central boys met and defeated Liberty Street boys.

Grandview Church

The Laurel Club, under direction of Sister P. J. Brose, held its semi-annual bazaar December 3, in a vacant store room on one of the business streets of the city. A lunch was served at noon and a chicken dinner in the evening. A sum of one hundred and fifty dollars was cleared and turned in to the bishop, to be applied on the church building fund. An amount of two hundred and eighty dollars was turned in earlier in the year.

Last week P. J. Brose returned home from the hospital, where he has had a slow but satisfactory recovery from burns he received in a steam explosion December 2, while at his work.

Three names were added by baptism to the church membership during December: Gladys Stevens and daughter, Marguerite, and John Crimmins.

The La-Da-Sa Women's Club, with a membership of twenty-five, which had its beginning in September, 1931, chose November as money raising month. Each member pledged herself to earn ten dollars and various ways were used such as selling whole wheat bread and breakfast food, white bread, doughnuts, cakes, cookies, pies, Christmas cards and candy, laundering, sewing, painting, driving a taxi, and giving concerts, plays, etc. A dinner was given at the end of the month for the club members and their husbands. The money was turned in, and three hundred and fifty dollars was presented to Bishop C. A. Skinner, three hundred dollars to apply on the church debt and fifty dollars to be an offering to the church. Sister C. D. Jellings is president of the club.

The choir, under direction of Lester Fowler, rendered the cantata, "Hail Messiah," Sunday evening, December 20. It was well received by a large audience.

The primary department gave a play on Christmas Eve, "Adopted by Santa Claus," after which Santa himself made his annual visit and distributed a treat to the children.

The Gleaners Class was entertained with a New Year's party at the home of Sister Alma Warren, and 1932 was given a hearty welcome.

The first sacrament service of the year was attended by a good audience and the first sermon of the year was delivered by Elder J. A. Gardner, of Independence, Missouri.

Gladstone Church

The Christmas program was presented Sunday evening, December 20. There was an excellent attendance of Saints to witness this performance largely given by the children and young people. The program consisted of recitations, vocal and piano solos, and the young people's choir sang Christmas carols. A play, "Going Home for Christmas," was presented.

The speaker the morning of December 27, was Elder Lester C. Connelly whose discourse was based on the statement in Psalm 122: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord."

Patriarch Ammon White, of Independence, was the evening speaker and gave sound counsel and advice.

Fourth Church

From November 8 to December 27, Fourth congregation heard the following speakers: Pastor J. O. Worden, H. J. Bullard, Curtis Vernon, Marion Sneed, L. E. Babcock, Julian Gough, and U. W. Greene. Elder W. O. Hands gave two slide lectures. All these sermons were interesting.

November 15 and 22 Sister Vada Allen, a former Grace-land student, gave some entertaining talks in story form to the young people assembled at the family service early Sunday morning. Tyra Lueking, also an accomplished story teller, related some beautiful stories at the same hour Sunday, December 13, "The Birth of Jesus," and others.

The O. B. K.'s gave a play, "The Dust of the Road," November 19, to a crowded house. This was given at Central Church in the stake dramatic contest. Another play was given in pantomime, "Why the Chimes Rang," December 23.

The Sunday school class of eleven boys, taught by Brother Babcock, received a beautifully engraved cup as a trophy for perfect attendance last year.

The Progressive Club, composed of women, meets every Thursday in the church for class work.

Quindaro Church

The marriage of Miss Alberta Hartman, daughter of Mrs. Martin Rust, and Mr. Paul Duley was solemnized at the church at eight o'clock Thanksgiving night, Pastor H. A. Higgins officiating. Emily Foley sang, "I Love You Truly," and Eola Hawkins played the piano. Mendelssohn's Wedding March was played as the bridal party entered, Otis Swart accompanying on the violin. Miss Dorothy Halverson was maid of honor, and Miss Mona Gross and Miss Elsie King were bridesmaids; Bonnie June Collins acted as flower girl. Mr. Perry Rogers was best man, and groomsmen were Mr. Harold Mitchell and Mr. Earl Kane. Mr. and Mrs. Duley are at home to their friends at 1139 Greeley Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas.

The women of the senior department gave their annual chicken dinner December 10. This was well patronized, and netted a good sum for the church.

A special program in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Grandma McIntyre was had November 9. Sister McIntyre is well in body and is a staunch Latter Day Saint beloved by many.

The junior department, under the leadership of Sister Higgins, gave the Christmas worship program entitled "Christmas Day in the Morning," by Miss Vesta Towner. The special feature of this service was the "white gift" of fruits, foods, and clothing for the needy. A good supply was collected. Baskets were made up, and all the needy of the branch were supplied.

The cantata, "The World's Redeemer," by Fred Holton, was sung by the choir at eight o'clock, under the direction of Otis Swart.

New members of this congregation are Brother Irvin and Sister Lois Luke of Aurora, Illinois. We are glad to welcome this consecrated young couple.

Brother George Mesley addressed the O. B. K. group last Sunday night.

Independence

Harmony and agreement characterized the quarterly conference in Zion, held Monday night at the Stone Church. The election of delegates to General Conference was the chief item of business. This year Independence is entitled to fifty-nine delegates, and one hundred and six nominations were made by the conference. Tellers did not complete their count of ballots in time to get the list of those elected into the present issue of the Herald; the list will appear in next week's Herald, according to the provision of the conference.

President F. M. Smith, President F. M. McDowell, and Pastor J. F. Sheehy were in charge of the meeting, and secretaries were Miss Ruby Johnson and G. G. Lewis. A crowd representative of all the congregations in the center place assembled, in spite of unfavorable weather, to transact local affairs. The opening hymn was "Redeemer of Israel," Mrs. Sunshine Beck at the organ.

The local choice of pastors was approved by the conference as follows: Pastor in Zion, J. F. Sheehy; Second Church, A. K. Dillee; Walnut Park, Samuel C. Smith; Liberty Street, John R. Lentell; Enoch Hill, H. L. Barto; Englewood, D. S. McNamara; Gudgeon Park, Walter Chapman; East Independence, Frank Minton. The name of J. Stanley Kelley was approved as bishop's agent, and that of G. G. Lewis as director of Religious Education in Independence. Reports from the pastor, bishop's agent, director of Religious Education, director of women, and several quorums were read and approved.

Toward the close of the evening Apostles Roy S. Budd, Clyde F. Ellis, and F. Henry Edwards were requested by the chairman to tell briefly of the spirit and activities of the Saints in their respective fields of labor.

Stone Church

The Stone Church congregation formally recognized the beginning of a new year at a largely attended communion service Sunday morning, presided over by the three members of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishop A. Carmichael. Assisting these in charge were Elders H. G. Barto, J. S. Kelley, J. F. Sheehy, G. G. Lewis, and R. T. Cooper.

In the oblation talk Brother Carmichael stressed the thought that we, at the beginning of the year, are privileged to witness to the world our Christ-like professions by helping those in need of material things; that, whatever our own interests and ambitions, we can not afford to forget our needy brother.

Defining a covenant as a vow sacredly or religiously made to do a certain thing, President Frederick M. Smith gave emphasis to the significance of our covenant with Christ and our opportunity to better keep this covenant. As a resolution for the new year, he suggested that each one of us determine to do better, and as an aid in keeping this resolution, he offered this slogan: "Hear no evil. See no evil. Speak no evil." In other words, during 1932, we are to look for the good in all things. He predicted that the coming year will be a crucial year in the history of the church; that everybody will be tested. In order to pass these tests, he admonished the Saints to faithfulness, frankness, and friendliness.

For a scripture lesson President Elbert A. Smith read "The Voice of Warning" from Doctrine and Covenants 1, "The Voice of Promise," Doctrine and Covenants 36:12, and "The Voice of Admonition," from Luke 21.

The singing of familiar hymns, prayer, meditation, the serving of the emblems, the association of hundreds of others in worship, and the spirit of peace made this, the first general service of the year, outstanding in the memory of those present.

It was announced at the close of the church school session Sunday morning that the school's Christmas offering fund for 1931 amounted to almost fourteen hundred dollars. No special emphasis was placed upon the collection of this fund during the past twelve months, but each Sunday the boys and girls have been happy to "help the church" with their nickels and dimes. The Y. K. T. Class, of the adult division, has been outstanding in its contributions to this fund.

Sunday afternoon at two thirty while a priesthood prayer meeting for the ministry in Independence, was being conducted in the main auditorium of the Stone Church, a general prayer service was held downstairs.

An ordination service for the presidents and counselors of the priests' quorums was held in the basement room of the church at 4.30 p. m. Sunday.

"Let There Be Light," was the theme of President F. M. McDowell's New Year sermon, delivered at the Stone Church Sunday evening. This theme he named as his wish, his hope, his plea, and his pledge for the new year.

He called attention to a definition of the light of Christ and the price of that light—the "cost of seeing." Then he turned that light on our present civilization, social and industrial order, moral code, and finally on the church itself.

"Let the church of 1932 speak," he urged. "Let it have foresight as well as insight. Let it not only record but make history this year. Let it speak on the godlessness of war, on the paganism of our social order, on the sinfulness of sin. Let it reaffirm its convictions. Let it proclaim again its standard of values, and make clear its fundamental task."

This being the first Sunday of the month, the Stone Church Choir furnished the evening's musical program, singing two anthems under the direction of Paul N. Craig. Mrs. S. A. Burgess sang a pleasing solo. Elder William Bath was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Amos T. Higdon.

The Independence Sanitarium Patroness Society recently held its election for the year. Its official staff for 1932 stands as follows: President, Ethel H. L. Loosemore; vice president, Mrs. Tonnahill; secretary, Mrs. C. Edgerton; treasurer, Mrs. Fred Rauch, and historian, Mrs. L. E. Hills. The society expects to accomplish many helpful things this year.

The first wedding of the new year was that of Miss Vaughny C. Reese, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Q. Reese, of Independence, and Chester H. Burnham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Burnham, also of Independence. It took place just as the clock struck twelve on New Year's Eve, ushering in the new year. The ceremony was said at the home of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Reese, Elder John F. Sheehy officiating. Preceding the ceremony a male quartet composed of Roderick May, Robert Crawford, Duane Swalley, and Edward Cronenbold, sang "Love's Old, Sweet Song," and "I Love You Truly," accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Paul N. Craig who also played the Lohengrin wedding march. The bride was attended by Miss Phyllis Dobson and Miss Clarice Burnham, sister of the bridegroom. Millard Dawson, of Independence, and Laurel Murphy, of Holden, Missouri, attended the bridegroom. Then followed a reception for about forty guests. The bridal couple will be at home in Independence.

Englewood Church

A fitting climax to the work of 1931 came on the last Sunday when at the close of the church school session, the curtains that had obscured the baptismal font, were flung open disclosing a background of white relieved by the greenery of vines and potted ferns. Quiet music was played on the organ by Sister Alta Hougas, and the congregation was led in appropriate hymns by Stella Howery. After the opening prayer and while the children were preparing for baptism, Sister Hougas sang "The Sweet Story of Old." Brother and Sister Glen Closson came forward with their infant daughter who was blessed by Elders Perry Hiles and John Ely. She was given the name Shirley Joan.

Nine boys and girls, candidates for baptism, were then led from the vestibule to the altar by Elders Hiles and Howery who were clothed in white. Pastor D. S. McNamara was waiting at the altar to receive and seat each boy and girl. He then invited the relatives to places with the children on the rostrum.

"Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," was sung by the congregation, then Elders Hiles and Howery officiated in the ordinance of baptism. The rostrum was then rearranged, the eldership of the branch taking their places with the boys and girls to be confirmed. Elder John Ely addressed the children briefly, and they were confirmed in the following order: Marilyn Logsdon, Miriam Logsdon, Maxine Webb, Donald Webb, Rosella Stover, Virginia Bopra, Harold Welch, Donald Gould, and Richard Howery. Elders officiating were John Ely, Perry Hiles, Earl Moore, Leonard White, Roy Howery, E. G. Hougas, and D. S. McNamara.

Elder A. G. Hougas was the evening speaker. Sister Grace Kelley sang a solo.

The church was almost too small to hold the congregation which assembled for the sacrament service January 3. Certainly we need room. Elder Earl Moore made the pre-sacramental talk and greatly renewed our courage and determination for the work of the year before us. The Saints came fasting and praying for Mrs. Carl Reich, a woman not yet a member who has been sorely afflicted for a number of years. While the congregation continued in prayer for her, after the passing of the emblems to the priesthood, Elders D. S. McNamara and A. G. Hougas, went to her home and administered to her. Her daughter, Helen, has attended this Sunday school for several years.

The Saints were made very happy at the announcement Sunday that Sister Mildred Kelley, for whom we have been fasting and praying, was able to be brought home from the Sanitarium. We pray for her complete recovery in the near future.

Some of the brothers have been unemployed much of the past year, but we have been encouraged by their testimonies and cheerful attitude through their trials. We feel that the Lord has been near us, and hope that we shall maintain the courage, hope, and cheer expressed in the testimonies Sunday.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the evening speaker Sunday, delivering a discourse which did much to give courage to all present.

The pastor's slogan for the year ahead is "Complete the family circle."

Apostle J. F. Curtis was unexpectedly called to Canada, and, therefore, could not open the series of missionary meetings announced last week. Brother J. A. Gillen will begin the services at this church next Sunday night. Everyone is invited to come and share with us his fine sermons.

Enoch Hill Church

The Christmas program was held on Sunday evening, December 20, a pageant being presented. The performance portrayed the life of Christ from the annunciation to the present, showing the gospel restored in latter days and the Saints going up before the throne of God with their sacrifices and offerings.

The Religio, discontinued for the holiday season, will soon be resumed.

The sacrament service Sunday morning was largely attended and the Saints enjoyed a profitable season of worship.

Elder C. K. Greene was the evening speaker taking his text from Job 32: 8, 9. His theme thought was: "If we keep the laws of God, he will shower his blessings upon us."

East Independence Church

Recently the pastor baptized four of the children of this congregation at Spring Branch Church, Doris Lee Thatcher, Theodore O'Neil, Lucile E. Story, and Joseph Christensen.

The women of the group had a successful bake and gift sale, the proceeds being wisely used, we think, for branch and general church work.

A pleasing Christmas program was given the evening of December 20, each department of the church school presenting a short play. Two of these plays were the original work of Alta Dutton and Rena Friend.

On the family night, held once each month, the young people's division held a debate on the question, "Resolved That Modern Inventions Are Necessary to the Progress of Humanity." The judges declared the negative side the winners.

Election of branch officers resulted in the reelection of most of the workers. Brother A. H. Christensen, former pastor, finds it necessary to leave this vicinity, and so Brother Frank Minton was chosen by the members to preside as pastor during the coming year. He has chosen Brother Christensen as his assistant as long as he can be here. Cornelious Edgerton was reelected church school director; T. W. Thatcher, bishop's agent and custodian; Sister J. Friend, musical director. Brother Frank Minton reappointed Sister Iva Edgerton supervisor of women and branch correspondent; Sister Elizabeth Friend, pianist. Brother Cornelious Edgerton reappointed T. W. Thatcher assistant Sunday school superintendent; Richard Smith, secretary; Emma Christensen, chorister; Mildred Wagner, pianist. Sister Iva Edgerton is head of the adult division; Sister Emma Christensen of the young people's division, and Sister Alta Dutton, junior department.

Miss Lulu Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Thomas, and Gilbert Prior, of Independence, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Prior, of Los Angeles, California, were married at eight o'clock New Year's Eve at the church, Elder Harvey Minton reading the ceremony. The bride was attended by Miss Helen Parker as maid of honor and Miss Modena Snow as bridesmaid. A reception followed the wedding at the church. Mr. and Mrs. Prior will be at home with the bride's parents on the Spring Branch Road.

Holden Stake

Atherton Church

Quite a number of the Saints of this branch attended the stake conference at Holden and participated in a joint choir of the various branches which sang "The Holy City," accompanied by Orlando Nace's orchestra.

Since this group last heard from a faithful sister, Mrs. Joe Pichler, has passed to the great beyond. She left behind a wonderful example of patience and endurance exhibited during severe affliction.

The young people who have organized a dramatic club under the direction of Sister Ann Koehler, recently gave an interesting play depicting the return of the prodigal son. It was ably presented to an appreciative audience.

Preparations for Christmas were many and everyone was busy.

Those who have lately occupied the pulpit are Otho Clark who preached on the text, "Seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." Brother Myron Holman used as a text, "Knock and open." Brother Gomer Wells spoke to us about keeping our brains alive and active. Bishop J. A. Koehler talked on a recent Sunday morning on "The Truth Shall Make You Free." That evening we listened to one who is always welcome in our midst, Brother J. E. Martin, of Independence. His theme thought was that we must not put off the Lord's work, but do it now. In the song service which preceded the hour, he led up to his sermon message by a careful selection of hymn themes.

Marshall Church

Three more candidates were baptized November 29, making seven baptized by Brother May and confirmed by Brothers May and Harold Thayer. A thing making for unity of spirit was the congregational singing led by Brother May and his guitar each evening. Attendance was good up to and including the last service which was Sunday night, December 6.

Elder J. Charles May gave his last heart-to-heart talk to the Saints at the sacrament meeting Sunday morning, December 6. Two new members were spoken to under the dictation of the Spirit. A meeting never to be forgotten was enjoyed. Six of the new members were present. The seventh had gone to her home in southwestern Missouri. Some of the sheep who have been out in the cold were present.

London, Ontario

This branch has been called upon to mourn the passing of Sister Edith Smith, daughter of Brother and Sister J. Armstrong. She passed away in Nova Scotia, and the body was brought to London. Bishop J. C. Dent conducted the service, being assisted by Pastor J. E. MacGregor. Sister Smith had been an active worker among the young people of this branch, and the Saints in general deeply regret her demise.

At the last regular meeting of the branch Elder J. E. MacGregor was chosen pastor for the coming year with Elders W. A. Hardey and J. F. Winegarden counselors. Brother Arlo Hodgson is secretary, Brother H. Ward, treasurer, and F. J. Timbrell, financial secretary. The finance committee is composed of J. Vasbinder, T. G. Timbrell, C. Alford, J. E. MacGregor, J. F. Winegarden, F. J. Timbrell, H. Ward, and W. A. Hardey. Elder Frank Gray will conduct the church school activities. Sister Dorothy Abell was chosen organist, and Sister Madeleine Timbrell, chorister.

At the regular meeting of the Laurel Club, Sister Alda Gallagher was chosen president for the year, Sister L. Winegarden, first vice president, and Sister Jean Harris, second vice president. Sister L. Latt will act as secretary, and Sister Erma Maker, treasurer. Sister Ward is family visitor. The members of the club waited upon Sister Vasbinder, their retiring president, presenting her an address of gratitude and a beautiful necklace as a token of respect and thanks for the services of a number of years.

Elder Lawrence Campbell and wife, of Windsor, were here at the church school session on a recent Sunday. They were also making a call at Saint Thomas.

The church school Christmas entertainment was successfully carried out this year under the direction of Elder F. Gray and assistants. Quite a lengthy program was given by the children after which they received prizes and treats.

Our Departed Ones

JONES.—Elvin M. Jones, son of Elder William P. Jones, was born at Malad, Idaho, December 31, 1906; was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 7, 1920; died at Malad, December 17, 1931. Two brothers, Thomas, and Floyd, preceded him in death. Surviving are his parents, one brother, William Jones, jr., and one sister, Mrs. Mary Pieper, both of Malad, besides many other relatives and friends. He had suffered from diabetes for three years though he was not confined to his bed much of the time. He never complained but cheerfully went about the affairs of life as he was able. Elder A. M. Chase conducted the funeral and though the day was very snowy, the church was filled and many followed the hearse to the cemetery, and not only in this but in other ways testified of their sympathy and love for him and the family.

WHITING.—Lurett was born at Silver Creek, Iowa, March 8, 1849, and passed from this life December 24, 1931, at his home in Independence. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by I. N. Roberts at Clitherall, Minnesota, July 1, 1901, and confirmed by Elders Roberts and Omans. He was ordained an elder in 1901, by T. C. Kelley. October 27, 1870, he married Miss Eleanor Gould, at Clitherall, Minnesota. To them were born five children. Two preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn, his wife, two daughters: Mrs. J. F. Rotzien, of Fargo, North Dakota, and Mrs. F. E. Mollison, of Independence; one son, Laurence Curtiss Whiting, of Hibbing, Minnesota; eleven grandchildren; two great-grandchildren; one brother, Chauncey Whiting, Clitherall, and two sisters: Mrs. Lucy Rosenkranz, of Clitherall, and Mrs. Ann Barnhardt, of Independence. His twin brother preceded him in death more than a year.

SALTER.—Margaret Harriette Dralle was born March 24, 1900, in Chicago, Illinois, and with her parents moved to Rockton, Illinois, in 1908. Two years later they moved to Beloit, Wisconsin. She married James A. Salter, of Waco, Texas, and they made their home in Texas except one year spent in Rockton, Illinois, and occasional visits to her early home. Her father and mother preceded her in death. She died at Wichita Falls, Texas, December 11, 1931, leaving to mourn, her husband, one brother, John S. Dralle; two sisters, Mrs. Clifford Fields, and Mary Schicker; three nephews, two nieces, many other relatives and friends. The funeral was held in Beloit, Wisconsin. Interment was in Beloit Cemetery. She was baptized into the church in early life and attended services when she could; also attended other church services when not able to worship with the Saints.

Philosophy is at once the most sublime and the most trivial of human pursuits. It works in the minutest crannies and it opens out the widest vistas. It bakes no bread, as has been said, but it can inspire our souls with courage, and no one of us can get along without the far-flashing beams of light it sends over the world's perspectives.—William James.

Younger Members Are Helping

Last week's Herald carried an account in the news department of an inspiring initiation and offering service, the fifth of its kind to be held by the O. B. K.'s of Kansas City Stake. It was made the occasion, among other things, for the culmination of a month's campaign for the filing of inventories and the payment of tithing by the young people. Those who did not read the account should look for it in last week's issue. It is an example which offers suggestions for other groups of young people in the church.

This week's Herald contains an account of the tithing and sacrifice offerings of an organized class belonging to the Stone Church of Independence. The Y. K. T. class has made a long and honorable record for itself in attendance, in furnishing teachers for other classes, and in carrying out a program of study and social activities. Now the class has entered enthusiastically into the task of tithing its resources and aiding the church.

These two groups of younger church members deserve high commendation. Undoubtedly other groups of young people among the branches of the church have likewise made worthy contributions to the church. We should be glad to hear of them.

"Let Us Sing Number—"

Brethren, shall we not go on in so great a cause? Go forward and not backward. Courage, brethren; and on, on to the victory! Let your hearts rejoice, and be exceeding glad. Let the earth break forth into singing.—Doctrine and Covenants 110: 22.

Have you ever pictured to yourself the happy condition which will exist when "the earth shall break forth in singing"? Imagine the whole world singing! When that time comes, people will not have time for war and dishonesty, gossip and backbiting. They will be busy singing the songs of Zion, and, as a consequence, love, understanding and righteousness will rule the nations.

"Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness," are the words of the Psalmist. And the Bible has many things to say of singing and singers.

A familiar hymn of latter days gives us this invitation:

Come, ye that love the Lord,
And let your joys be known;
Join in a song with sweet accord,
And thus surround the throne.

Few of us realize the soul building quality of song, else we would sing more. A recent experience reminded me how much song can mean to those whose lives are singularly eventless, those who are sick, those who are shutin. I had the privilege of taking a group of twenty-nine young people to an institution where are housed several hundred aged and unfortunate. The singers were young and inexperienced, and their performance was far from perfect, but they were thrilled with the thought of being able to bring those shutins a message of cheer through their singing. Their voices throbbed with love and sympathy. We went from ward to ward singing to men and women whose faces were wreathed in smiles, whose eyes sparkled with appreciation. Some wept for joy. Some followed us hungrily, and when we left expressions of gratitude were many. "You have helped all of us," said the warden. "Come back. Come back any time for you are most welcome."

I am wondering who profited the more, listeners or singers.

There is something deep and fine and spiritual in the song which comes from the heart. Prophets have taught this. Poets have written about it. Singing draws souls together for a rare kind of communion; it is one of the vehicles of worship. And the congregation which has the blessing of song is twice blessed—those who sing are blessed, and those who listen are blessed.

Singing is like smiling—you can't begin to measure the effects until you try it, and when you begin to sing, you are too busy to consider how far-reaching is your song. The songs of the Saints are beautiful, and I believe all of us would be happier if we sang more. This is a good time to begin singing. Let us make this a year in which we sing our way through our problems.

Sing unto God, ye kingdoms of the earth; O sing praises unto the Lord.—Psalms 68: 32.

A Word of Encouragement

We appreciate the fact that the Saints everywhere are waiting for word concerning the outcome of our two months sacrifice effort. It is too early to give accurate information regarding our receipts and expenditures but we can give some few facts which we believe will be of considerable interest and satisfaction to those who have shared so willingly and devotedly in this task.

Although it is probable that our income will not total the amount set forth as our needs, yet it is already apparent that the most pressing obligations will be met. We have already made disbursements during November, December, and thus far in January which are approximately as follows:

PRINCIPAL PAYMENTS:

Accounts, mortgages and notes payable	$16,000.00
Bonds payable	17,000.00
Total	$33,000.00

INTEREST 29,000.00

BUDGET ITEMS:

Family allowances	29,000.00
Elders' expenses	3,300.00
Miscellaneous—including aid,
Saints' Homes, Graceland College,
Administrative expenses, etc.	14,000.00
	46,300.00
Total	$108,300.00

The bonds payable include the first principal payment on the Auditorium of $15,000.00. The balance covers General Church Bonds turned in as offerings.

The interest includes $8,375.00 on the Auditorium bonds; about $9,000.00 on the General Church Bond thirty to five o'clock. The program is in charge of Mrs. Sunshine Beck, with T. A. Beck announcing, and U. W. Greene speaking.

Every Sunday night at ten, with the exception of the second Sunday in each month, Bishop A. B. Philips preaches a doctrinal sermon. This is the regular missionary service. The musical program is provided by the Stone Church Choir, the Ladies' Chorus, and the Wahdemna Choral Club. On the second Sunday night of each month the Kansas City Central Church provides the speaker and the musical program.

issue; $5,800.00 on Graceland Endowment Bonds, and miscellaneous interest on notes and mortgages.

The family allowance item includes a payment of about $9,000.00 which will be in the mail by the time this issue of the Herald is published. The other items are self explanatory.

The income for October was a little over $23,000.00, and for November $46,000.00, or a total of $69,000.00, leaving an amount of $69,000.00 needed for December if our objective is to be reached. As already stated, some of the reports are still outstanding for December.

When we give consideration to the serious economic condition prevailing throughout the entire country we feel that the Saints should rejoice in the knowledge that we have been as successful in our endeavor as now seems apparent.

We wish, however, to call attention to the need for continued cooperation throughout the entire church. We are starting on the first year of our debt reduction program. We have set our goal for a total reduction in our debt during 1932 of approximately $192,000.00. We appreciate the desire on the part of the Saints to speed up the program already set forth and the Presiding Bishopric is giving careful consideration to a program which will be within the range of achievement and at the same time shorten the period already suggested.

It is advisable, however, that the appropriation already approved of $481,461.17, (which includes the $192,000.00 above referred to) for the year 1932, should be the first step in our program. We are proceeding on that basis and quotas will be sent to each district in the near future. This means an average monthly income of over $40,000.00 during 1932. We believe it can be raised. We are asking for the same splendid cooperation given during November and December. Together we have climbed the first mountain—now for the long steady pull.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By G. L. DELAPP.

There is an Arabian tale of a ship whose pilot unfortunately steered into the too close vicinity of a magnetic mountain. The nails were all attracted, the planks fell asunder, and total wreck ensued. So, many a man, sailing in the vessel of his belief, comes in contact with some system of philosophic or theological thought, which, like the magnetic mountains, draws out the connecting and riveting points of his faith, and his whole ship, himself sprawling among the severed timbers, lies scattered wide on the tossing sea.—Peter Bayne.

Reflections

THE cover quotation this week gives us, in a few words, an apt and true justification of philosophy. Certainly if such a case can be made for that study, an even better case can be made for religion. Religion may not turn the wheels of industry, but it teaches those who govern the turning wheels of industry to do so for the benefit of mankind; religion does not stay the hand of death, but it enables one to face even death with courage, faith, and trust; religion can not force men who prefer to be base to live the good life, but it gives to all thinking men a set of values and ideals that inspires them to want to live the good life.

CHANNING POLLOCK has long advocated and encouraged clean drama. The whole country has probably seen "The Fool" either on the legitimate stage or in the movie version. Just recently, following a long run in New York City, his new play, "The House Beautiful," has taken to "the road" and has appeared in Kansas City. It was well received by large and enthusiastic audiences, who seemed to see in it what the author tried to put in it—something more than drama: a right estimate of good living. Good living, the play would tell us, is not so much the result of money or power, as it is the result of righteousness and sanity and faithfulness. Ideals may not be profitable, and they may cost many a sacrifice to maintain them; but, when pitted against commercialism and greed, they eventually win. He who gives himself to live for an ideal may suffer some stripes, but in the end he has the peace of a clear conscience, the satisfaction of having done his duty, and the respect of his family and friends.

BUT we wonder about the play. Is it true to life to represent goodness as incompetent? Are the righteous men always unsuccessful? Does one have to be a crook to amount to anything in the world? We believe not. And, moreover, we can point to specific instances that prove that these things are not so. Good men are not necessarily weaklings: they can be and are strong. In fact, the best men are the strongest men. In the end they are the wisest men. And all through life we believe that it can be demonstrated that they are the happiest men. Goodness is creative and self-sustaining. It builds us and it builds others. When all the accounts of life are in, goodness pays, and it makes men and women strong.

WAS Jesus less happy because of his sacrifice than those who took his life? We think not. When we think of those last terrible, agonizing hours on the cross, we sense the shadow of pain over his whole life. But to think of him as an unhappy person is a mistake. In the company of his friends he must have passed many happy hours. In doing good and healing the sick who flocked to him he must have taken great comfort and satisfaction. In his teaching, and in the exercise of his great powers he must have felt that joy which comes in the high moments of exaltation to the preacher, the scientist, the inventor when they are at their best. He lived always in the company of noble thoughts of great good. Could his slayers be happy men? They lived as the companions of murderous thoughts, or hate, or revenge. All in all, Jesus must have been the happiest man of his times, simply because he was imbued with victorious goodness. His slayers had nothing but animosity that was doomed to defeat.

JAPAN has invaded Manchuria. Japan says that this is purely a defense measure. It seems to us to be a pretty vigorous defense. An invasion is an invasion, no matter under what circumstances. Germany offered the same excuse for invading Belgium. We wonder if Japan should not take a lesson from what happened to Germany? Little Belgium is still there, but those who were responsible for Germany's mistake have suffered for it. The trouble is that so many millions of innocent, honest, and helpless people were made to suffer horribly for that act of official ruthlessness.

What the future may hold for China no one can tell certainly. But circumstances point to the probability that so numerous a race of people, once aroused to a national consciousness, will be a formidable foe, and a world power to be reckoned with. There may then be a China that will call for a costly accounting for her present wrongs and humiliations, at the hands of her neighbors and other nations. Injustice begets violence, and further injustice.

IN THE FACE of this situation, is the League of Nations to remain impotent? Is it to be simply a mask for the dominant world powers that have always controlled world affairs? It was one of the purposes of the League to protect the rights of weak and poorly organized people against the encroachments of strong and military governments. We still look for something to establish an organization that will promote the Christian ideal, world peace. Apparently the League is not that organization. Then we must look further for something else. But we must never cease looking, working, and praying that the spirit of Christ may come to reign over the people of the whole world, and govern their relations in justice and peace.

The International Significance of the Depression

The following is the second of a series of articles by various writers concerning the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. We are glad to present this contribution by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Other articles will follow soon.—Editors.

By Paul M. Hanson

Myriads of people today are asking, "What is coming next?" All classes are in deep trouble; not only the employed, but the employer, manufacturer, farmer, holder of bonds, banker, and salesman. Nor is anxiety confined to any one nation. With national boundaries more or less artificial, no nation can fully escape the depression. Distance has been well nigh obliterated by modern methods of transportation. The whole world knows almost instantly what is going on in its midst. What the United States is now suffering, Great Britain, Germany, and some other countries have been experiencing in an exaggerated form for a number of years. The world is in pain.

For this condition of affairs, called by President Herbert Hoover the "greatest crisis the world has ever known," there is an adequate cause. Every effect has a cause. All things are governed by law. This fact must not be overlooked. Too often the causes of an abnormal condition, a malady, a crisis, a depression, are not diligently and definitely sought. This means that the affliction may be successively experienced.

There is one good thing about a crisis, it induces hard thinking. Some minds can not, or are not disposed to grasp the meaning of a principle until it in operation directly affects themselves. A depression develops imagination on the part of some who can not ordinarily see from another person's position. It sets a larger part of the brain in motion. It is an unobscured announcement to all in practical form that some things have been going wrong. The voices of prophets have been ignored, or there were no prophets.

Suffering, in manifold forms, will be as widespread as the depression is far-reaching.

We have been living in a jazz age; there has been reckless spending of borrowed money; enormous debts have been contracted. Senator William E. Borah, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, recently declared: "While millions are on the verge of starvation, growing restless and ugly, nearly $5,000,000,000 is being annually expended for armaments and from eighty per cent to eighty-five per cent of all taxes extorted from the people go for war purposes." There was a vast post-war dislocation of industry. But it is a state of mind that produces the jazz age, issues bonds to cover deficits, contracts huge debts, and builds up armaments. This is not all.

What of the suicides, numerous murders, economic injustice, five or six million men out of work in the United States alone, in the midst of plenty, excessive control and power concentrated in a few hands, floods of civic unrighteousness, and "lovers of pleasures, more than lovers of God"?

It is essential that any kind of satisfaction with such a state of affairs should be shaken to the center.

Is it not better to be forced by the fruitage of loose, unsound, uneconomic, unbrotherly, and unrighteous procedure, to basic thinking, than to be permitted to complacently drift in a current sweeping to irremedial ruin?

How quickly the world's laughter is turned into mourning!

The present world depression is a world-wide moving red signal that a wrong course has been chosen and followed, and that destruction lies ahead unless proper adjustments are made. The biggest fact in the world is God. It, therefore, follows that not the least of the changes necessary is an adjustment to the spirit and mind of the Supreme Being. There must be accuracy in thought, in feeling, and in doing, in all the realms of human relationships. Multitudinous warning signals have long been in motion, but as a rule have been heedlessly passed by.

Tremendous forces have been liberated in the world. Man is restless where a spark of heavenly light in his soul is restrained in expression; inalienable rights are sensed as sacred; the dignity of man's divine pedigree asserts itself; the divine in man resists injustice in whatever form it appears; and there is a yearning for a state of society manifesting the abundant life revealed through the Prince of Peace born in Bethlehem.

Never in human history perhaps was there a more open door to the nations for the message of the church of God, than today. Spain has emerged from priestly domination to republican freedom; there is religious liberty. A like freedom abounds in many of the European countries. There is a feeling among mankind that industrial, financial, political, and religious systems have proved inadequate; and there is an encouraging readiness on the part of the nations to respond to qualified message bearers, ambassadors of Christ. They await the functioning of the church whose calling is to provide buoyancy of spirit, cheer, and help in their hour of need.

The world has learned from recent events that it is possible to pass quickly from a feast to a famine. It has discovered that in years of plenty there may be unappreciation of bountiful gifts and forgetfulness of the future. The depression has developed within many a feeling of dependency, inspiring them to voice the prayer: "Give us this day our daily bread." Back of money, material possessions, government, human efforts, and the universe, is something else!

History is full of crises; but the present world depression, more than any preceding one, leaves an extensive impression of the inadequacy of human powers alone in coping with the complex problems of human life.

To salvage civilization there must be a widespread and thorough awakening of spiritual forces—it is the existence of such that gives whatever security is possessed.

With the lines of cleavage between light and darkness becoming more sharply drawn, it means not only that the forces of evil will be more ably marshaled, but also there will be on the earth a spiritual renaissance.

The Lord Jesus said that prior to his coming with "power and great glory" to the earth in the last days, there should be "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Gloomy, indeed, would be the picture were the reason not given: For, the powers of heaven shall be shaken!

There can not be "upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity" and "men's hearts failing them for fear," without an accompanying general depression. But because of God's hand that would be in many of the events of the world significance, the divine counsel is: "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." (Luke 21: 28, 31.)

From the time the "powers of heaven shall be shaken," tremendous forces will continue to be put in motion among men until the kingdom of God is established, divinely decreed from the beginning.

It is written: "And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." (Haggai 2: 7.)

"For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Habakkuk 2: 14.)

Prophetic Warnings in Latter Day Revelation

By Elbert A. Smith

I.—A WARNING TO AMERICA

In the Book of Mormon, America is presented as a choice land of promise, a land of liberty; but the liberty and blessing are to be continued only on condition of righteousness. Concerning the inhabitants, this statement is made:

Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity: if so, it shall be because of iniquity.—Second Nephi 1: 11-13.

The following is even more explicit:

And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fullness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity; for behold, this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God.—Ether 1: 31, 32.

There is an arresting note in those prophetic warnings. America was to be free, to prosper, to be blessed—unless and until the people should lapse into iniquity.

Lincoln on "Our Point of Danger"

Abraham Lincoln, the greatest man ever to rise up through American politics to the high estate of world statesmanship, once said:

At what point shall we expect the approach of danger? Shall we expect some trans-Atlantic military giant to step the ocean and crush us at a blow? Never! All the armies of Europe, Asia and Africa combined, with all the treasures of the earth (our own excepted) in their military chest with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not, by force, take a drink from the Ohio, or make a track on the Blue Ridge, in a trial of a thousand years. At what point, then, is this approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us, it must spring up amongst us. It can not come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freemen, we must live through all time or die by suicide.

Lincoln's warning sounds prophetic; and no doubt he had a deep and penetrating insight into the very soul and life of his country.

The fathers of America were God-fearing men. The Pilgrim Fathers, whose spirit was breathed into her institutions, came over-seas, not seeking gold or adventure, as most men come to new worlds, but rather seeking God. They were admonished by their aged pastor, John Robinson, as they embarked, to hold themselves ready in the new world to receive the continued revelations of God as they might in the future be made known. They may have been too austere and rigid in some of their attitudes; but they had those basic qualities of soul, those fundamental beliefs that make great men and women, that must underlie citizenship to ensure the safety of the nations. They were industrious, law-abiding, temperate, faithful to the marriage covenant, virtuous, and honest. All of those traits grew out of a deep religious conviction.

Their spirit continued throughout the early years of the republic. As the constitutional assembly came together to draft the Constitution of the United States, George Washington said to the assembled delegates, "Gentlemen, the event is in the hands of God." That utterance breathed the very spirit of the Book of Mormon utterances—that God should guide America's destiny—"The event is in the hands of God."

A Sad Change

Alas, there has come a change since the days of our fathers. The hold of religion upon the populace as a whole has been greatly weakened. Many are turned atheist. With the loss of a belief in God and a hereafter, there has come an inevitable weakening of the sense of responsibility. Those who acknowledge no responsibility to God soon cease to acknowledge responsibility to man and man-made laws. Those who expect no future life have little incentive to duty in this life. Our biggest and proudest cities are most notorious for their crime. In New York City during a period of about four months of the present year, forty-three innocent bystanders were shot down by gangsters' bullets in street battles. And that despite the fact that during 1930 the city spent fifty-five million dollars in the fight against crime. We have entered upon an era of lawlessness. It is evident everywhere. An era of violence and crimes, of violence shocking in the extreme. An era of gang murders, "of bigger and better murders," of graft and greed, of "racketeering," banditry, dishonesty and dishonor. Respect is lost for the marriage covenant. Immorality is widespread. The foundations of the home are assailed.

No longer can it be said that only a few preachers or narrow-minded prudists are alarmed at these conditions. Jurists, educators, business men, statesmen, fill the press with their warnings—warnings unheeded, for the more part. So astute a business observer as Roger Babson some years ago, when conditions were better than now, wrote that America had erected a sky-towering superstructure of material things, and must soon reinforce the foundations with righteousness and justice or the whole structure would fall.

Perhaps the most biting arraignment recently published comes from Colonel Henry W. Anderson, Virginia lawyer, and member of the Wickersham Commission appointed by President Hoover to study crime conditions and the general question of law enforcement. He is quoted in the Literary Digest for August 29, as follows:

The American people acquired in its virgin state what is in many respects the most favored and fruitful area of the world's surface. They have existed as an independent people for only the short period of one hundred and fifty years. Within this time they have destroyed the original occupants of the soil, or driven them from their lands with little regard for their rights.

They have converted substantially all of this great area, with its immense natural resources, from public into private ownership.

They have exploited these resources for private gain to an extent which, in some instances, at least, already threatens exhaustion.

They have created the widest spread between the extremes of wealth and poverty existing in the Western world.

They have developed degrading slums in the cities and ignorant, underprivileged areas in the rural districts, which stand as menaces to social health and dangers of social order.

They have created the largest body of laws and the most complex system of government now in existence as restraints and controls upon individual and social conduct, but every stage in their development has been characterized by a large and ever-increasing degree of lawlessness and crime.

What Lesson for Us

What lesson is there then for us in the Book of Mormon warning? We must conclude that the best and only sure defense of the country is in righteousness; not in great armies and navies, aeroplanes, machine guns, and poison gases. He is the best patriot who maintains in his own home and seeks to maintain in the community a high level of righteousness. We are renewed in our conviction that no more vital and worth-while commission ever came to a people than that given to us to "cry repentance to this generation." The first and greatest task laid upon the church was to preach the gospel—faith in God, repentance from sin, regeneration, preparation for the coming of Christ. That is our best contribution to the welfare and salvation of America—or any other land. We should not slight that task for other tasks that are of secondary importance.

Certainly we are living at a point in history when changes of a sweeping nature are in the making. The world has outgrown its old framework, and the cracks and fissures which are now appearing in the social and economic structure seem to indicate the breaking up of one era and the starting point of another. Apparently we have arrived at one of those crucial periods—like the Renaissance and the Reformation—when old ideas and values no longer serve, and new intellectual scaffolding and new social controls have to be built on the ashes of what has gone.—Raymond T. Fosdick, New York Times Magazine, 12-27-31.

The Ear and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—8

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

There are cases of deafness that come on in a comparatively short time, following the removal of teeth. This is brought about by an unnatural position where the lower jaw is attached to the bony skull. Its close proximity to the middle ear is the cause—the malposition encroaching upon the neighboring tissues and nerves. If neglected, it will gradually grow worse, but if properly treated by a dentist, it usually clears up in a comparatively short time.

When infection occurs from the nose and finds its way up through the Eustachian tube, it produces an inflammation, which, if neglected, will produce various noises in the ear, such as hissing, buzzing, or a sense of fullness, with slight pains. These are warning signals that loss of hearing will result if the individual does not seek relief as early as possible. If neglected too long, the long continuous inflammation will finally cause complete deafness. Early detection and preventative measures are urgently important. Fortunately, the public has become aroused to the necessity of examining the school children's hearing, and if parents are sufficiently intelligent, nearly all defects may be cured by a competent specialist. There is a symptom known as tinnitus, or noises in the ear—a buzzing or singing sound—which is quite troublesome to the patient, and in some cases, there is an increased resonance of the voice, to such an extent that the patient imagines he is talking in a loud voice, and in consequence shuns conversation. Many of these cases, in fact, most of them, are due to alterations in blood pressure, goiter, brain conditions, and middle-ear disease. In some cases a great deal may be accomplished by treatment, but in some cases nothing can be done to stop the noise. Both ears may be affected, but one is usually affected before the other.

Vertigo, or dizziness, is a symptom that usually occurs in the earlier stages of progressive deafness. The sensation may be a slight swimming in the head, or in some cases, may be so severe as to cause the patient to fall suddenly. Many cases of sufficient severity are accompanied by nausea and vomiting, this may be accompanied by tinnitus and a feeling of tightness in the head, or neuralgic attacks up the side of the head and over the mastoid region.

Cases of unusual severity are sensitive to loud noises, which in some cases causes actual pain in the ear. Music, in these cases, often produces disagreeable sensations, the notes being heard too high or too low. One of the most unfavorable symptoms is the ability to hear better in a noise, as when traveling in a motor bus or railway train.

A very common disease, of an hereditary nature, is otosclerosis, which usually begins between the ages of twenty and thirty, but may be found in much younger individuals. Its cause is very uncertain and when it occurs in young persons, it may be possibly due to inherited syphilis. It is believed by some that it is related in some manner with gout, chronic rheumatism, tuberculosis and rickets. Pregnancy and parturition, especially in anemic women often hastens the course of the disease. The treatment consists in improving the general health of the individual and it must not be forgotten that there may be some septic focus of infection in some parts of the body. Medicines have done well in some cases, together with X-rays and other electrical treatments, but unfortunately, the prognosis is very bad. Mental and physical strain, in every form, must be avoided. The younger the patient, as a rule, the more rapid is the course of the disease, and as the disease progresses, neuralgia and headache will come.

Mouth spray and "pocket handkerchief" deafness is quite common. Too vigorous use of the handkerchief, and the improper blowing of the nose, causing the Eustachian tube to open too frequently, infecting them with disease germs, together with great pressure upon the eardrums, has been the cause of a great deal of preventable deafness. Long continued middle-ear deafness, resulting from diseased teeth, adenoids, tonsils, lightning shocks, meningitis and syphilis may, if left untreated, result in nerve deafness, brought about by deterioration of the nerves of hearing, through lack of function. A person who has partially or totally become deaf from middle-ear disease, looks about frantically for some help in continuing his occupation. One in this condition of mind falls an easy victim to various forms of quackery, especially from the "money back" offers, found in the advertising columns of almost any daily paper. There are some ear instruments that are a great help to the deaf, but before buying one, ear tests should be made to find out if the individual can be aided by such a device. In some cases they confuse rather than help. Some are undoubtedly great aids. Where they prove helpful, they are a great source of satisfaction to these unfortunates. It is well for this class of individuals to consult their family physician and find out from him, who is a competent specialist and who can give dependable knowledge.

Autobiography

By James Franklin Mintun

I.—INFLUENCE OF INHERITANCE AND EARLY ENVIRONMENT

My father's name was Jacob Mintun. His father died at Montrose, Iowa, leaving a family of two sons, John and Jacob (my father), and three daughters, Lucinda, Maria and Mary. Because their home was in such close proximity to Nauvoo, they were well acquainted with the Saints and their character, and they were all somewhat favorably inclined toward the Saints as a people, although none ever became members of the church. My Uncle John, after his marriage, lived but a short distance from Nauvoo, I believe at Montrose, Iowa, and was well acquainted with Joseph Smith. He was a dealer in fine horses. I have heard him relate an incident in the life of Joseph Smith and his association with him that left a life-long impression on him. It seems that Joseph Smith was acquainted with his business of handling fine horses, and some of the horses that he possessed. At one time a celebration was held at Montrose, Iowa, on July Fourth, and Joseph Smith was chosen to act as marshall of the day, and came to my Uncle John to secure the use of a large black horse to ride during the celebration while acting as marshall. My uncle informed him that the horse was somewhat vicious and hard to handle; but Joseph Smith told him that he would risk himself if he would risk the horse, so an agreement was entered into, and the horse was used. To the surprise of my uncle the horse responded to every wish of Joseph Smith willingly, and acted, so my uncle said, seemingly proud of the opportunity to be in the employ of such a man, and that Joseph Smith seemed to have a quieting influence over the horse. My uncle often spoke of this event and what a noble looking man Joseph Smith was. The telling of this event, and the favorable impression it made on my uncle had a favorable effect on me. This event, with the friendliness of my father, towards the Saints and their faith, together with the fact that the family have only favorable expressions to make concerning the Saints, and all of them having such an excellent opportunity of knowing them, accentuated this feeling. My grandmother Mintun, when visiting us, would attend the preaching of the early elders of the church at and near Magnolia, where my father then lived, and although a strict Methodist would often say, especially when hearing Brother W. W. Blair, "What an excellent Methodist sermon he preached!"

On my mother's side of the family conditions were still more favorable to influence me to accept the claims of the elders of the Reorganized Church. My mother's father, Emery Willard Lamb, was born just east of Fayette, Seneca County, New York, and her mother was born in Phelps Township, Ontario County, New York, close to Palmyra, and the Hill Cumorah. Her maiden name was Mary Follett. It was there that it is said my mother was born, and near there where Joseph Smith's family lived in Manchester Township, Ontario County. My grandparents were married in that vicinity, March 4, 1832, and settled in Lyons Township, Wayne County. Near there in the same county lived Jonathan Follett, my great-grandfather, and Alpheus Gifford, both of whom were interested in religious questions, and would meet to study the scriptures together, and while thus engaged, and before Joseph Smith was moved to make inquiry concerning which church was right, but in the same year, Mr. Gifford had a dream. The next morning he made a visit to Jonathan Follett, to tell his dream. The dream was:

He saw a large and beautiful building, in which there were many tiers of seats arranged one above the other; and that there were many people in the building occupying the seats; and that he, Mr. Gifford, was sitting in one of the seats, in a seat considerably elevated, but not the highest. Mr. Follett then gave this interpretation to the dream: The building represented the true church of Christ soon to come forth; and that the tiers of seats in that building represented the various offices in that building or church; that Gifford sitting in one of the seats indicated that he would live to see that church and to enter it, and occupy one of the offices in that church. It is said that Jonathan Follett died before the church was organized in 1830, but that Mr. Gifford lived to be an elder in the church and to do much good in spreading the light of the gospel to others, among whom there were two who afterwards became apostles in the church in 1835, Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball.

My grandparents moved from New York to Ohio, and in 1844 started for Nauvoo, Illinois, but when they got into Indiana, they heard of the trouble at Nauvoo, and stopped there near Fort Wayne, till 1852, when they started to Utah. They came as far as Council Bluffs, Iowa, when they heard of the introduction of polygamy, and fully decided to go no further west for the reason given by my uncle, that "we had no use for those evil things." They settled near Council Bluffs, till in the fall of 1853, when they visited Harrison County, and decided to settle there. My father and mother were married in 1852, and with my mother's people went to Harrison County, in Raglan Township, where the early elders came preaching, and my mother was baptized in 1862, and from that date I was more or less associated with the Latter Day Saints and their gatherings in preaching and prayer services. My father would attend many of the services, and showed favors to the ministry by entertaining them and contributing to their necessities, yet he was greatly attracted to the dances that were held in the neighborhood, and to which many of the membership, I am sorry to say, gathered and took part. Some dances were held at the homes of the members of the church, following the custom of the church while at Nauvoo, and which has been continually practiced by those who followed Brigham Young to Utah, which practice was engaged in at Council Bluffs. To these dances my mother was not attracted. She thought they were not in harmony with the Spirit of Christ, and spiritually harmful; so my father, to have company with him, would take me to the dance when I was about ten years of age, and he then taught me how to dance, in which I took great delight. Although I would go with my father to the dance I would accompany my mother to the prayer services, which were then held at the homes of the Saints, most of whom lived in log houses. During these services I have heard the gift of prophecy, and the gift of tongues in prophetic utterances, which were interpreted, and also in song. With all these gifts I sensed a power that I could not ascribe to any other source than the good source, which made me think frequently of God and his promises as presented by the early elders in their sermons. However, the dances attracted me so that I put off what I felt at several times was my duty, to become a member of the church. I was also at a very early age taken to the billiard and pool room which was generally associated with a saloon, and while I had no inclination to use intoxicating drinks, I was somewhat fascinated with the games of pool and billiards. Because of these worldly practices I was prevented in making my decision to enter the church until I was married, at about the age of twenty-two. The effects on my father and others whom I had seen under the influence of liquor caused me to hate the stuff, and at an early date I became a strong advocate of temperance, both in public and in private.

When I would hear some of the elders preach there was a spiritual force that accompanied the preaching that would cause me to feel a power that I could never fully forget, which had the effect of drawing me away from worldly influences and causing me to forsake these practices, and finally to desire to become what God wished me to. Associated with a remembrance of this influence was the patient manner in which my mother endured many adverse conditions in the home and in her physical infirmities, that had a most powerful influence over me, for I could never quite understand how she could take pleasure in enduring many of her trials, and with thanksgiving and praise continue without complaint to live the life she did, unless God was with her. I knew that to continue in my worldly way was wrong, although I was greatly fascinated with my associations. I felt many times like making the change to be more like my mother, for the better example that I would be presenting to my associates.

Having heard related the things which I have recorded, and felt the better environments mentioned, has enabled me to make my decision to forego all worldly pleasure and consecrate my life to the church and its work. But before I decided to enter the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I made a careful examination of the faiths of the Congregationalists, and the Methodists, at both of which I attended Sunday school during my early childhood, where I was taught by some very spiritually minded teachers. I also learned of the Seventh-Day Adventist faith which I had heard preached in our neighborhood for many nights at a time; and many things were presented that, so far as I then could understand, were in agreement with the Bible, which I had always been taught was a standard by which to try all religious teachings and beliefs. With this, too, I compared the teachings of the Latter Day Saint elders. During this time of investigation I was in correspondence with an aunt, a sister of my mother, who was a member of the Congregationalists, and very bitterly prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints, because of what the family found had been, and was being at that time taught by Brigham Young and those who followed him. The effects of this caused all my mother's younger sisters to turn away from the teaching of the Latter Day Saints. This was the older sister next to my mother. She was very religiously inclined, and fully persuaded that the Congregationalists were right, and that the Latter Day Saints were wrong. For that reason her correspondence was very condemnatory of the claims of the Latter Day Saints, and she would send me books and printed articles that represented many things unfavorable to the faith of the Saints. One book she sent was How's Mormonism Unveiled. I thought favorably of my aunt and her devotion, and read carefully all that she sent, but when I had finished reading and analyzing this book I remember I wrote to her that if she had another book of the same nature to send for me to read, I would be surely convinced that the Saints were right. It so misrepresented

Like water, business reflects. Nothing is finer than the effect of active, honest, productive business on a community. The morale of the people, the spirit with which they go about their work—in fact, their very life—can be affected by their business. If it is good—fine; but terrible otherwise. For untold suffering can result from poor business. Now the question is asked, why does it occupy such a prominent position in society? Because the first great temporal law given to man was, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground." (Genesis 3:19.) Now stewardship is not a plan to evade that law by any means, but rather to place man in the business wherein he was called, for he will then enjoy it and be a real benefit to society. Further, there is no law from heaven saying any business plan shall be made with gold or silver as a medium of setting values or exchange. That is man's idea—not God's. Please realize that point because that is the heart of all trouble sented the teachings of the Latter Day Saints, and would misquote what was contained in the Book of Mormon, and contradict itself to make a case against the belief of the Saints that it more than ever convinced me that the Saints were right or such methods would not be used against them. So during this investigation, which occupied several months, I kept myself away from worldly sports, and in the meantime was married to Mary Eliza Knight who was not a member of any church, but fully sympathized with me in my conclusions that I had made in my investigation. About this time Brother M. H. Forscutt came to Magnolia, and held a series of services, which fully convinced her that the faith of the Saints was correct, and she wished to be baptized, which we both were.

in business. No one man or group of men has any right to say or tie up business so that other men can not work (Doctrine and Covenants 49:3) because those that do not work, sin, and can not eat the bread of those who work. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:12.) Still further, no one man or group of men, can say what kind of business a man will do in life, or what portion of meat he will receive for that work. Consider childbirth. No man or group of men regulate the number of males and females that come into this world, and man's temporal work when governed by divine laws regulate all compensations. In short, dictation or the setting of values, was never given to any one man or group of men. Each man has his free agency, and is subject to the regulating Spirit of God in stewardship.

Now consider this point we have come to the first division in our series of studies on stewardship. That is the clear distinction between man's private life and his business life. If this distinction is ignored, entanglements will follow that will ultimately speak for failure. Therefore, we will say temporalities are divided into two great classes of equal importance: domestic and business.

Leaving the domestic side for the present, we will endeavor to map out in general a man's business career. First, let us consider one great angle from which to look at community stewardship in business. We are told in prophecy, that the lofty looks of man shall be humbled; their high towers, the high mountains, their ships, all their pleasant pictures, in fact everything that is lofty will be brought low. (Isaiah 2.) While in contrast the lowly will be exalted, the victory to the weak and all things small made large, and only God to be the head. This thought of the high brought low, and the low raised is in countless prophecies throughout the scriptures. These prophecies present one great angle that will start mankind toward the road to success when thoroughly understood. It means everything will be opposite to what it is now. As the modernistic youth might say "Things will run backwards," but in reality it is things as they are now that are running backwards. So whatever our troubles are today the remedy will be in just the opposite. Observe whether that be the case. First, Zion is to be redeemed without money. (Isaiah 52:3.) Second, in man's economic regime of today he is free in every sense of the word; however, this freedom unlimited is proving his downfall. But in stewardship man is required to sign a written covenant. Third, man today builds his foundation of business according to his own convictions which are of the dust. "For dust thou art." (Genesis 3:19.) But according to God's plan, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." (Matthew 7: 24, 25.) Therefore, things are to be vice versa, and henceforth the world will be controlled from the spiritual and not the earthly standpoint.

Now, where is God and where is man? Where is the earth and where are the heavens in the order of things? For we are told there is no beginning and no ending, no bottom or height. (Ecclesiastes 1: 1-11.) Man must needs have a starting point; otherwise it would be like throwing dirt in a bottomless pit, you would never fill it. "But Jesus said unto him, follow me; and let the dead bury their dead." (Matthew 8: 22.) He has showed us the rock and it is neither up or down nor to this side or that, but in the center (Luke 11: 7) or within. Therefore, we must needs find a key to unlock the door and enter, for all mankind is anxious to see what awaits man in God's kingdom, for there we will find how to go about our Father's business, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matthew 16: 19.)

So we learn we can not enter into this peace or do our Father's work, but first we make a written covenant, and as is the case in marriage you never really know what it is until after you are pronounced man and wife; so likewise in stewardship. This we must do before God will bless us as stewards.

An Imaginary Scene

From now on let us consider that I am addressing only stewards, and all else are looking in through the window. And believe it or not, there's a big storm outside. The poor sorrowful looking faces pressed against the glass pitifully watching with hungry eyes, and watering mouths the delicious food set out in bountiful lots, they envy the cozy fire that is cheerily burning in the big fireplace of love, while all, about, the stewards are busily engaged in one task or another, whistling as they work.

"Why are they so happy?" whispers one poor chilly soul without. "Because they are about their Father's business," returned another, having just found the keys.

"Well," whimpered still another, trying to keep a tiny stream of icy water from running down his back, "How do they know what their work is? Did some one tell them?"

"Positively not!" came the quick retort. However, that is a secret; yet on the other hand it isn't.

"Well," went on a weary one, "I am at a total loss to guess that secret, or even know what you mean."

The one with the key smiled. "For your sakes, and your sakes only, I'll tell you. Then I'll be going inside. After you get the key and enter in you go to the Patriarch of the church and receive a blessing. (1 Timothy 4: 14.) Every member of this church that takes upon himself at least a verbal covenant by going into the waters of baptism is entitled to such a blessing. Its fulfillment, however, will be made when you make the written or temporal covenant in becoming a steward. It merely signifies obedience. This blessing is in writing and was inspired by God. It contains warnings for individuals, usually their weak and strong points, what they are to avoid in life and how to go about finding what their calling is in life, or what their talents are. No earthly soul can really tell you what your talents or calling are. And further, it is not up to you as the individual to decide for yourself as is the case in man's present economic plan. God only knows what your work is and he only will tell you. As usual, the blessing closes with the rewards God will give you in return if you will start and trust him regardless of your bills, not letting your imagination rule, but keeping your feet on the ground; then you will find all your wants and needs more than taken care of, and plenty for surplus. Although you may not know who you are helping in this world, yet you will feel the beauty of society, the warm bonds of love and a strong desire to do more for your fellow man, in that you will give offerings and find yourselves with many more talents than you realized at first. God has promised then to come in power and happiness that you never dreamed of, and somehow or other you gradually will forget to worry where your next meal is coming from; and you will not find anyone dictating to you, but your agency will continue with you. However, remember your patriarchal blessing is your guide; it tells you what to do. Follow it and don't lay it on a shelf to be covered with dust, but read it ever so often and study it and pray over it, and ask God to open the way before you, that you want to help, you want to be a builder in Zion; you want to help your fellow man. Ask that God of heaven will help you, keep your feet on the ground for many have been led away by vain imaginations and become lost. (Romans 1: 21.) And lastly, remember what Christ said when his disciples awoke him in fear of a rough and tossing sea, 'Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?' " (Matthew 8: 26.)

The one with the key finished his talk, and for a moment all stood silently staring at him in surprise. The rain was pounding harder, while in the distance

The Gifts of the Gospel

By A. B. Phillips

PART THREE

The Power of Faith

Before the marvels of the present age became realities it was necessary for many people to have visions and to believe in them. It was by faith that such men finally triumphed over obstacles which seemed insurmountable. Few people who lived in the time of Christ thought it possible that the words of the Crucified could live to encircle the earth. The grandeur of his vision was far beyond the power of their unbelieving minds to comprehend, but today those words of long ago pierce our souls to the depth, and we know that his message has changed the outlook of the whole world.

We offer no apology for believing in the spiritual gifts promised in the gospel of our Lord. They are to be received through faith and obedience to God. And faith is not that kind of assurance which insists upon human desire being gratified even though it conflicts with divine wisdom, but faith is implicit confidence and trust in God, his goodness, and his wisdom and love. The faith of Christ was supreme when he prayed to the Father: "not my will, but thine be done." It is this faith that may remove mountains.

There is no promise of Christ more clearly stated in the scriptures than the promise of spiritual gifts through the Holy Spirit to those who become his followers. To believe in him is to believe in the promises which he gave, and the degree of our faith in him is measured by the extent of our faith in his word. Though we may not understand the magnitude of his power, the joy of his promise is ours, the low moan of a wind could be heard, rising. A shudder of fear ran through the group.

"It's growing worse," groaned one, looking over his shoulder.

"Yes," retorted the one with the keys, "I think it is time I was leaving. I hope you fellows will follow."

With that he stepped forward to the door, applied the key, unlocked the door and disappeared in the lighted interior. The low moan of wind grew to a howl, the rain was turning to sleet as the night fell like a heavy blanket on the cold, dripping world.

(Study carefully Matthew 11:25, and chapters 13-25.)

for he assures us: "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Man and His Needs Today

It may be urged that the needs of people today are not the same as were those of the long ago, and that the spiritual gifts are therefore no longer needed. But it is not a fact that all of the needs of today are different from those of the past. The spiritual needs of man are always fundamentally the same, and his preparation for the gift of eternal life must still produce his regeneration and cause him to put on the Christ character. It is this result which the Holy Spirit will produce in those who receive and live the gospel.

It is true that in this age of machinery, invention, and discovery we do many things that were never done before, and different ways of doing things have been adopted. But man himself remains essentially the same, both in physical and spiritual respects. His characteristics remain the same as they were thousands of years ago, with the same capacity for love, hate, fear, desire, generosity, greed, honor, dishonor, and remorse that his ancestors possessed. So far as physical traits are concerned also, man is still the same as he was in prior ages.

With reference to the gifts of the gospel we may note that they are designed to reach these fundamental human needs. In spite of the splendid advancement made in medical fields, the gift of healing is needed as much today as it was in the age when Luke the "beloved physician" was numbered among the followers of Christ. There are still thousands of sufferers all around us whom modern skill fails to relieve. The gift of prophecy and revelation from God may still find a great field of usefulness, for after thousands of years there are still many errors abounding in the world. We still need an infinite wisdom to guide us into the heavenly kingdom, and divine power to inspire us for the great task of life's preparation for the world to come. In fact, the old gospel is needed today in every respect as surely as it was needed in the past.

The Ceasing of Spiritual Gifts

Occasionally it has been suggested that, inasmuch as Paul informs us that the gifts are to cease, it may not have been intended that they should be given after the New Testament age. This notion is opposed by important facts, each of which is sufficient to clearly refute such a conclusion. It is disproved by the text itself, for the very scripture used to support the idea that the gifts are to cease in the New Testament age tells us when they are to cease. The language of Paul is as follows:

Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail, whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—1 Corinthians 13: 8-10, 12.

A careful reading of these words will clearly show that prophecy, tongues, and knowledge are to be done away when that which is perfect is come. They are evidently to continue until then, otherwise they could not be done away at that time. The time when that which is perfect will come is the time when we shall see "face to face," when knowledge in part shall be done away, and we shall know as we are known. This clearly refers to the coming reign of Christ when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Paul here tells us that we know in part, and we prophesy in part, but when perfect knowledge covers the earth under the glorious reign of Christ we shall no longer need the gifts of prophecy, tongues, and partial knowledge. This clearly implies that we shall need them until that day shall come.

The scriptures which promise the gospel gifts to men do not limit that promise to any nation or age of the world prior to the millennial reign. It is extended to "all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," including "every creature" of "them that believe." We have already shown that it included the Gentiles, who received its fulfillment in such amazing power that even Peter and his astonished brothers were convinced. Jesus himself declared that this promise extends "even unto the end of the world," to all who "observe all things whatsoever" he has commanded.

Gifts Continued After the First Century

History also shows that the gospel gifts have been received in the church many times since the New Testament age. Historians of recognized standing specifically refer to remarkable instances during the centuries succeeding the apostolic period. The works of Irenæus, who died early in the third century, are quoted by Eusebius, the historian of the fourth century, in which are recorded instances of healing the sick, prophecy, tongues, casting out demons, and even raising the dead to life. (See Eusebius, book 5, chapter 7.) He also quotes the historian Miltiades, who refers to the teaching of one of the apostles that "the gift of prophecy should be in all the church until the coming of the Lord," which proves that this promise of the scriptures was still cherished.

The historian Mosheim states that the rapid spread of Christianity in the second century is largely ascribed "to the miracles wrought by Christians." (Part 1, chapter 1.) In the third century he also mentions "the curing of diseases and other miracles which very many Christians still performed" (part 1, chapter 1), and records several instances in the fourth century. While there were some miraculous gifts manifested in the fifth and sixth centuries, many counterfeits also arose through the designs of wicked men. The farther the church strayed from Christ the more rare became these precious gifts from him, which is significant of their holy nature.

These references have been confined more particularly to those gifts which are of a miraculous nature, but the promise of spiritual gifts is by no means confined to them. The gifts of divine wisdom, knowledge, faith, and discerning of spirits, included in the promise of the scriptures, are equally essential to the church. They are all needed today as surely as they were needed when the promise was given, and the followers of Christ are still authorized to desire them and to receive them for promoting the kingdom of God.

Fruitage of the Gospel Gifts

In all of the works of God we may see the wisdom of divine purpose, if we but seek his ways sincerely. Every page of nature's book is inscribed with the marvels of his design, and human experience itself unfolds to us the purpose of the Almighty will. Every gift of God is given to aid that glorious purpose, and he who employs each gift according to its intended use will eventually be crowned with the glory of celestial life. The gifts of the gospel are among the means by which God will aid us to attain that supreme estate, if we will but receive them worthily and apply them faithfully.

God delights to bestow these gifts upon us to the extent that they are beneficial. But it is our responsibility to see that every gift received shall bear such fruit as will commend us to him. Indeed, this is the badge of our discipleship, without which we can not abide in him or retain the assurance of his promises. Jesus emphasizes this truth by saying:

If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15: 7, 8.

No one can abide in Christ who is not devoted to him, neither can the Savior's words abide in one who does not respond to the teaching of his words. Early in his ministry Jesus warned his disciples against the religion of those who "say, and do not."

The true test was simply but solemnly decreed in his admonition to them:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 7: 21.

These and other scriptures clearly show that the gifts of the Spirit are designed to create in man a new life. His very salvation depends upon this, for Jesus declared that without it no man can "enter into the kingdom of God." The gifts of the Spirit will cause us to do the "works of the Spirit." Otherwise our profession is in vain, and the work of salvation can not be accomplished in our lives. There is no uncertainty of meaning in the warning of Paul: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." The effects of the Spirit in his life are indicated with equal plainness:

Walk as children of light; for the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth; proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.—Ephesians 5: 8-10.

The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts.—Galatians 5: 22-24.

Testimony of the Restoration

During the past century particular attention has been drawn to the subject of the gifts of the gospel, from the fact that the rise of the Church of the Latter Day Saints was marked by many remarkable manifestations of the spiritual gifts. The gifts of healing, prophecy, tongues, the interpretation of tongues, discerning of spirits, revelation, words of wisdom, and other spiritual experiences were received by thousands who obeyed the gospel as taught by the ministers representing the new movement, often called the Restoration Movement.

It is claimed that the Restoration Movement was brought forth by divine direction. During the so-called Dark Ages many of the gospel teachings became obscured and lost to the religious world, and by the church appear to have ceased. Inspired men of Bible days had foretold the time when these precious teachings would be restored and would be accompanied by a restoration of the miraculous gifts which the followers of Christ received in New Testament days. In fulfillment of these promises of scripture the Latter Day Saints' Church arose with men divinely called and commissioned to preach the restored gospel to all the world.

In the light of the restored gospel many truths are now pointed out which had become lost through the conflicting teachings of many faiths. With the rise of this movement came the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in remarkable power, including the gifts of healing, prophecy, tongues, and other manifestations such as characterized the work of God in ancient times. By divine revelation the Lord directed the new movement, its form of organization, ordinances to be observed, and gospel teachings to be restored and taught to all men.

Confirmation of the Church

The new ministry thus called of God were sent out to preach the fullness of the gospel, with the promise that their righteous ministrations to the honest in heart would be confirmed by the gifts of the Holy Spirit as in times of old. Those who received the message were first organized as a church in 1830, and from that time onward the witness of God through the gifts of the Holy Spirit has testified to the divinity of his work.

From the beginning of the new movement the spiritual gifts have been experienced in the church, and are considered to be an essential and precious part of the Savior's message and plan for the blessing of those who believe in him. They are to be cherished reverently and in faith, not as spectacular allurements to impel belief, but as confirmations of his promise to those who believe. They also strengthen, encourage, and equip the faithful in their mission to the world. All who receive the gospel and live its requirements are entitled to the gift of the Holy Spirit as an abiding Comforter in their daily experience.

The promise of the confirming gifts of the Spirit is so clearly and so fully stated that no one with abiding faith in the scriptures will disparage it. Its importance is emphasized in the caution of Paul: "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant," and in his admonition to "covet earnestly the best gifts." Every true heart will respond in gratitude for the gracious words of Jesus:

If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?—Luke 11: 13.

Reason and Faith Confirmed

Paul tells us that "God was manifest in the flesh." This manifestation reaches both the spiritual and physical needs of man, revealing the true values of life, and offering release from spiritual and physical bondage to those who obey him. The reality of this manifestation made it necessary that man should be able to understand its meaning, for otherwise it could not accomplish its purpose. The God-nature manifested in the flesh must be discernible, or it has not become manifest.

Divinity must be so manifested that it may be recognized by all men, and not simply by those who understand the subtle philosophies of the world, for

Spokane, Washington

Spokane Saints held a branch business meeting October 28, and the installation services the evening of November 1. were very impressive. District President R. H. Porter installed Pastor Alma Andrews who was reelected for the coming year. Sister Ona Andrews represented the church and Sister Carlene Everoth represented an angel. Each had a tall lighted taper. Each of the new officers marched to the altar, accepted his charge, lit his small taper, and resumed his seat.

Elders G. E. Ward and James H. Sage were chosen as counselors to the pastor; Margaret Kenny, director of church school; H. E. Kinney, associate; adult supervisor, Sister Connie Silver; young people's director, Sister Goldie Sage; children's division, Sister Alice Kinne; musical director, Muriel Whiting; branch treasurer, Lloyd Whiting; branch clerk, Orpha Coleman; publicity agent, Millicent Kinney; librarian, Charles Ward; historian, Catherine Porter.

On Sunday, November 8, Apostle F. Henry Edwards gave two wonderful sermons and graphically presented the financial condition of the church.

Evangelist Richard Baldwin, ably assisted by Sister Baldwin, held a two-week series of meetings November 29 to December 10. These meetings were well attended and much enjoyed by the Saints.

Spokane district conference and institute was held December 11, 12, and 13. The class work conducted by F. Henry Edwards was beneficial and instructive. At the conference session new district officers were elected: President, A. C. Martin with Stanley Fout, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and G. E. Ward, Spokane, counselors; secretary, Muriel Whiting; assistant, Irene Bagley; treasurer and bishop's agent, L. E. Holmes, Coeur d'Alene; chorister, Clare Van Eaton, Yakima; director of Religious Education, Gladys Fout, Coeur d'Alene; auditing committee, W. W. Wood, Orpha Coleman and A. J. Weeks, of Spokane. Nine delegates to General Conference were chosen: F. H. Edwards, A. C. Martin, Richard Baldwin, the scriptures inform us that the message is to "all people." Our reason is confirmed in the fact that God revealed himself in the most exalted truths that the human mind can conceive, but which concern the needs of this life as well as of the life to come. Human brotherhood and love are revealed as the perfect foundation of life here, and the gift of the Holy Spirit which guides into all truth connects this life with the perfect life beyond.

To make effective the divine ideal of human conduct, Jesus the Example was manifested to all men. He taught and practiced the healing virtues of the spirit, and also healed the body through which man must use his physical powers for good. God did not forget the needs of the physical man which he himself had created, and which he alone could supply. He manifested his divinity and love in the abundance of his spiritual and physical provisions for us, and thus confirms both our reason and our faith.

Alice Baldwin, Alvin Buckley, Peter Peterson, R. H. Porter, Margaret Kenny, and Lutie Davis.

The ordination of Glen Fordham and Walter Storey to the office of deacon was held at the close of the sacrament service.

The tiny son of Brother and Sister Lloyd Whiting was blessed by Richard Baldwin and A. C. Martin. He is called Raymond Duane.

The conference voted to hold a joint reunion in Seattle next August.

A junior choir of twenty members has been organized under the direction of Faye Walters. This choir, which assists at all sessions of church school, made happy the hearts of many shut-ins by singing carols on Christmas Eve.

A lovely and inspirational program was given by the divisions of church school on Christmas Eve, but a feeling of sadness prevailed due to the sudden and tragic death on December 22, of Sister Alice Kinne who had been a faithful and earnest worker in the children's division. For nineteen years she had been in charge of the primary division of Spokane Branch, and has left an enviable record. Her patience with and love for her fellowmen were outstanding. The profound sympathy of the branch is extended to her bereaved family.

Sister Orpha Coleman has been appointed to fill the position left vacant by Sister Kinne's death.

Death claimed another faithful sister October 8, when Sister Elsie Whiting was suddenly stricken with cerebral hemorrhage.

We pray that we may continue steadfast in unity and faith.

Y. K. T. Class Presents Good Record for the Year

During the first part of 1931, the officers of the Y. K. T. Church School Class took it upon themselves to make a special drive for new members. While they were interested in building up the class, their main object was to reach and help as many young people who were not then attending Sunday school as possible.

One of the first things to increase the interest in the class was the line of study taken up. They decided to study what they called a "Know Your Church" course, and rather than having a regular teacher for this course, have a special speaker for each Sunday. This course of study lacked in continuity of subject matter, but it permitted timely talks to the class by leaders of the church who brought valuable messages of information and inspiration. This was a big factor in maintaining class interest.

Another special feature was a membership contest. The class was divided into two sides. A certain number of points were given each Sunday for each member who was present, also for each visitor who was brought. At the end of a certain length of time, the side having the greatest number of points was entertained by the losing side. The interesting thing about this contest was the fact that after its close the class was able to keep up the interest gained.

For a period of about seven or eight months the class has had some special social affair each month. This has helped in building personal, friendly relations among class members. These social events have been self-supporting.

The Y. K. T. Class was the first organized class to have a booth at the Harvest Home Festival. This booth it had this year. The class was interested in having the booth for the help it would give, but its greatest desire is that next year and following years will find other classes definitely interested in helping at the Festival. The Y. K. T. Class intends to make it a regular part of its program.

On Sunday, October 25, President F. M. McDowell talked to the class, setting forth some of the special needs of the church today, especially along the financial line. A large number of the class was particularly interested in his talk, so they met with Brother McDowell one night during the following week to discuss the matter further. At that time it was suggested that the class have some special speakers to talk to them regarding tithing, offering, special sacrifices, the filing of inventories, etc.

The following two Sundays Elders T. A. Beck and C. B. Woodstock talked, and the class decided to put on a special drive to raise as much money as possible for the needs of the general church. A special letter was given to each member of the class urging him to do his part. On Sunday, November 22, Patriarch F. A. Smith talked to the class and gave some of his experiences in the church, both in his early life and later. This talk of Brother Smith's, although it was not along financial lines, did more to touch the hearts of the members of the class than any other talk they had, and caused them to want to give both financial and personal help in order that the church might meet its needs.

As the result of the special appeals made to the class during the months of November and December, they raised from the class the amount of $728.03 in tithes, offerings, and surplus. In addition to the above amount it may be interesting to know that the Y. K. T. Class raised the amount of $214.19 Christmas offering during the year of 1931, the quota being two hundred dollars.

Kirtland, Ohio

Pastor John L. Cooper, and Elder James E. Bishop, president of Kirtland District, visited in the district during the past month and found the members strong in the faith.

Kirtland's sacrament service for December was marked by a large gathering of the Saints at the Temple.

A young married women's group has been organized under the leadership of Sister Mabel Thomas and Sister Helen Williams, secretary and treasurer. Friendly visitors were chosen whose mission it is to invite others to attend. Meetings will be held every Tuesday at the homes of the members, and different subjects of discussion will be considered. A recent meeting was spent sewing small articles for the bazaar.

The Temple Branch, as we are locally known, held its annual bazaar and supper at the Auditorium Thursday evening, December 10. This year a play was given by members of the Dramatic Club. Workers are happy to report that almost everything offered for sale in the three booths was sold. The Blue Birds, a group of small girls under the mentorship of Sister Alma Curry, sold home-made candy and cakes. The Boy Scouts and Orioles had a booth together. The women's department combined with the younger women and sold many useful household articles.

On this occasion Kirtland Branch had its good-will supper in the interest of the general church. No charge was made, but the sums collected from the offering box, the sales from the bazaar, and the candy sale yielded more than sixty dollars. The women served a good supper.

The play given at this time by the dramatic club was "Christmas Party." Due to the illness of Brother John Collin, director of the club, Sister Anne Holgate took charge and was a competent substitute. She also directed the stage settings. Russell Barnes helped with the curtains and lights. About three hundred saw the performance.

Abul Hassen Gefari, of Teharran, Persia, a young Ohio State student, recently visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. French Roberts. He has a wonderful camera and takes pictures wherever he goes. He took one of the Roberts family sitting by the fireplace about midnight.

Nola Roberts is attending Ohio State University at Columbus, this year, and her brother, Harley, is attending Ohio University at Athens. Harley attended Graceland a few years ago.

Brother and Sister W. E. Householder were among the local singers when the Cleveland Messiah Chorus presented Handel's "Messiah" in the Music Hall of the Public Auditorium.

December 20 High Priest William Patterson delivered an excellent, faith-bearing message supporting the program of the church. In the morning Sister Adeleine Clough sang a solo, "The Gift," by Weatherby, assisted by Sister Agnes Martin. A duet on the same Sunday by Alice Smith and Ruth Davies, "Sleep, Holy Babe," was most pleasing.

A significant work of the young people's choir was the singing of "The Message of Peace," by Dressler, the tenor solo being by Elder George Neville. At the close of the church service a quartet composed of Brother and Sister D. Davies and son, William, and Sister Mabel Thomas, sang "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name."

The Christmas program of the Temple church school was presented at the schoolhouse December 24. The program began with a baby orchestra and continued through the different classes to the juniors. Christmas songs, exercises, recitations, drills, and two playlets were presented. Appropriate Christmas solos were also sung by some of the adult members, and at the close of the program boxes of candy were given to the children. Sister J. L. Cooper, the leader of this program, was its most ardent worker.

Brother and Sister Fred Ebeling recently celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. In the evening their children planned a surprise in which a number of neighbors and friends were invited to help them celebrate.

December 27 Kirtland Branch was fortunate in having present the president of our district, Elder James E. Bishop, and Elder A. E. Anderton, president of Southern Ohio District, and Missionary John R. Grice. Brothers Anderton and Grice delivered fine sermons which inspired the people. They sang a duet "Whispering Hope," arranged by Clyde Willard.

The infant son of Sister Rebecca Patterson was recently blessed at the Temple.

To start the drive for funds for the sacrifice period of December, the women's department gave a chicken supper December 3, the proceeds to be given to the offering fund. The fifty-five dollars collected made a good start. All departments contributed to the sacrifice offering as well as individuals, and the results were gratifying.

Attendance at the communion service for December was good, and many earnest and purposeful testimonies were given.

The women's department met December 10 in the social room of the church for its Christmas party. This was an evening meeting attended by forty members and two visitors. The "mystery girl" was revealed and gifts were exchanged.

The election of officers in the different departments left the working personnel that of last year. R. E. Madden is pastor of the branch, Sister A. H. Nieman, leader of women, and Carl E. Turvey, superintendent of Sunday school.

The Sunday school Christmas entertainment was given the evening of December 23 to the largest crowd in the history of the branch. Recitations, songs, dialogues, and plays were good.

Four attended the Sunday school in 1931 without missing a session, Eilogene Wemlinger, Edna Jackson, Elizabeth Wemlinger, and Vassie Sheets.

Speakers for December were A. H. Nieman, G. H. Kirken-dall, A. E. Anderton, Jacob Halb, J. E. Matthews, R. E. Madden, and Doctor W. B. Reeves.

Dow City, Iowa

The annual business meeting was held in our church basement December 29 at 7.45 p. m. Because the branch is under district supervision, Elder Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan, president of Northwestern Iowa District, was in charge of the service. After a thorough explanation had been made of the new plan of Religious Education, the plan was adopted by the branch. At the recommendation of Brother Gunsolley, the group chose Mrs. Bessie Pearsall superintendent of the church school, and the following supervisors were appointed: Adult division, Nettie Smith; young people's division, Miss Zeta Clothier; children's division, Mrs. Malinda Baber. Brother Fred Baber will continue as pastor until further notice.

A vote of thanks was given Sister Nettie Smith for her efficient services of the past two years as financial clerk. Another work is now hers, and M. A. Pearsall will have charge of the branch finances.

By the efforts of the group, our basement debt has been reduced to one hundred and ten dollars. The project was started last February, and we appreciate the basement room more and more as time goes on.

After thirteen years of service, Mrs. Bessie Pearsall was released from the office of branch clerk. Mrs. La June Griffin was chosen to act in that office.

The Christmas program, given on Christmas Eve, consisted of three playlets in which practically all of the church school children participated: "Santa Visits the Orphanage," "Christmas at Mother's," and "The Story Beautiful."

Brother W. C. Rolls passed to his reward December 7 after an illness of nearly a year. Brother Fred Fry, of Woodbine, conducted the funeral services being assisted by the Reverend Lucius Smith of the Methodist Church. Sister Rolls has the sympathy of numerous friends. They lost their only daughter, Ruby, some years ago.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Officers for the new year began their work the first Sunday of January. We expect these officers to cooperate and bring about the progress which has marked the service of the officers in years gone by, and all of us hope to make 1932 the best year so far in the history of the branch.

Calumet Branch has been fortunate in the last few days in having here Elder E. B. Hull, of Nebraska. He has brought much encouragement to the Saints. Because of illness, he was not able to be with us January 3 during the morning and afternoon services. About four o'clock in the afternoon the young people serenaded him in his room with the hymn "My Times Are in Thy Hands." He was present at the evening service and gave a short talk which consisted for the most part of encouragement to the young people.

Several years ago this branch organized a Religio. There was only a handful of members and friends, but we met regularly and took up the study of the Book of Mormon. We struggled along for some time, but because our scattered few kept dwindling, were compelled to dispense with the organization for a season. Later, we reorganized and now the class has grown to a large, enthusiastic group. Herald Crownover is the director.

During the fall this class was divided into two groups and held a contest on the six principles of the gospel. Now we are again taking up the study of the Book of Mormon. Good attendance and an enjoyable time mark the monthly socials of our organization. Every year we have a Christmas party, and it has become the custom to draw names and purchase inexpensive gifts to be delivered by Santa Claus during the evening.

This year the young people sent to the Bishop the money usually used for the purchase of the gifts. We made the gifts which were exchanged. There were miniature overalls with red bandanas in the pockets, rag dolls, a handkerchief made and embroidered by a boy, rolling pins, balls and bats, and other articles too numerous to mention. In this way we received much more enjoyment than we have before experienced, and we hope some one was greatly helped by our gift of money.

The young people of this group have happy times but they are not neglecting the serious aspects of our program. A choir has been organized, and hopes to make the music department of the branch an outstanding feature.

We have high hopes for 1932 and through earnest efforts and prayers we expect to make the year memorable.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

The annual business meeting of the branch was held Tuesday evening, December 8. Pastor John D. Carlisle was sustained for his fourth year, and the following officers were reelected: Branch secretary, Minnie Cramer; bishop's agent, Marie Graff; publicity agent, Edna Howells; pianist, Grace Robson; chairman of flower committee, Laura Warner; chorister, Samuel Mansell. Paul Watkins was elected Sunday school superintendent, James Carlisle, librarian, and Elder William L. Goudy was elected young people's superintendent. It was unanimously voted to continue the unified plan of service which has proved a decided success in the past year. Ada Stein was reelected president of the women's department, and chose as her associate officers: Hazel Thomas to be in charge of social activities; Anna Cramer in charge of study work; Veneta Warner, pianist, and Sister Howells, secretary and treasurer.

At the morning church hour, December 20, the primary department of the Sunday school presented a Christmas program, and was given the usual treat. At the evening service, a capacity audience enjoyed the cantata, "Tinsel and Gold," given by the junior and intermediate classes, assisted by the choir. Sisters Nettie Bigler and Anna Cramer and Brother Mansell are to be commended for the success of the evening's performance which disclosed unusual talent.

Members of the above classes enjoyed a New Year's Eve party at the church on Thursday evening. A short program was arranged which included a talk by the young people's superintendent, after which they adjourned to the basement where they enjoyed contests and games. A midnight lunch was served. We are hoping to hear more of this new department in the future.

Brother and Sister Lewis Bigler have returned from a three-week visit with relatives at Independence. They report an excellent trip.

Elders John L. Cooper and James E. Bishop were visitors here December 1. Both were speakers at the evening meeting.

It is expected that Brother Gomer Griffiths will hold meetings here during the latter part of this month.

Sacrament service January 3, was largely attended, and the Sunday school attendance was one hundred thirty-three.

As we stand at the beginning of a new year, we are humbly grateful for the blessings of the past year and in spite of lack of funds and employment, we consider this our banner year in growth and spiritual grace.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

January 5.—The year 1931 is now history. The year before us is filled with golden opportunities, and I trust that we may take advantage of them as they come to each of us. As we look back over the year just passed, we feel very thankful to the heavenly Father for his goodness to us, and wish to place our faith and confidence in him for the future.

Since our last letter to the Herald two more have been added to our number. Sister Charles Nevil was baptized by Pastor Walter Lewis, and Sister Nellie Bradth was baptized by G. W. Robley, the district patriarch. Eight people have been reached during the year, making a total of eighteen new members in less than two years. The Saints are much encouraged in the Lord's work at this place. The branch is in a fine spiritual condition and the new members are earnest in the work, and desire to help in every way in the advancement of the church.

A supper in the church basement December 12, was sponsored by the women's organization and a sum of twenty-five dollars was turned over to the Bishop. Others were made happy by these workers during the Christmas holidays. They are doing a good work although they meet but once each month. With their help we have been able to place a new lighting system in the church, the work being done by Brother Fritz, an electrician.

A fine spirit of unity marked the annual business meeting December 14. Brother W. Lewis was again chosen president of the branch, and we are happy to say that he is sustained by a fine priesthood, each working in his own office.

December 19 the Christmas play, "The Other Wise Man," was given with fine success. This play was requested for this year.

The local congregation responded nobly during the two months of sacrifice, paying tithes and giving offerings. Though employment conditions here are very unfavorable, some having no work at all, the members did all they could to help the church. They are anxious to obey the temporal law.

Prayer services are held in the homes of the Saints and those who are interested in the church. They have been of a spiritually elevating character, and the priesthood have been blessed in their efforts to proclaim the truth.

The Sunday school is growing under the charge of H. A. Cunn, and we also have a mission Sunday school twelve miles from here with a membership of fifteen.

Bloomsburg is fortunate in having Patriarch G. W. Robley as a frequent visitor. He has been a blessing to this branch and has helped build up the work. He preaches in the homes of our neighbors and they are blessed spiritually and temporally. Some are now interested in the gospel and we look forward to their obeying the truth.

Nowata, Oklahoma

January 5.—Nowata Branch has just finished a prosperous year, under the leadership of Branch President O. A. Duncan. Several have been baptized, the Saints greatly strengthened, and some nonmembers have become interested in the restored gospel.

Elder Lee Quick held a series of meetings in June, baptizing five. We enjoy Brother Quick's visits, and look to him as our spiritual father. He started the latter-day work here. In August, Elder Roscoe E. Davey, of Chicago, held three weeks of meetings, baptizing three and leaving several others near the kingdom. This was the outstanding series held in Nowata for several years; the church was well filled each night and much interest was manifested. The Saints were inspired and built up as never before as they listened to Brother Davey's soul-stirring sermons, which impressed the fact that the gospel of our Lord and Master should be so completely rooted in the recesses of our hearts that it would shine out to the world to the glory of God.

In December Elder G. J. Harding, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who was visiting his son Lloyd, of Bartlesville, held a week of meetings. These were inspiring to all especially to those near the kingdom, helping them to more fully realize the truthfulness of the gospel.

God's spirit has been felt in the Sunday school to the extent that one little girl wept to be baptized. We have also been blessed in the Book of Mormon study to the convincing of nonmembers in the class of the divinity of the Nephite record.

The December sacrament service was a spiritual feast. The gift of prophecy was manifest in the meeting, which caused our hearts to give thanksgiving and praise to our heavenly Father for his wonderful love. Truly the Lord has given ear to our fastings and prayers, that this branch may be awakened and become spiritually alive. May we ever be kept humble and faithful, that a great work may yet be done in Nowata.

At the branch business meeting, Elder O. A. Duncan was sustained branch president, also Mrs. W. T. Hayworth as secretary and treasurer. Elder A. J. Bly and Lloyd Harding were elected as counselors to the branch president. W. T. Hayworth was chosen to serve as Sunday school superintendent with Doyle Reich as assistant. Mrs. Lloyd Harding is chorister for the branch, and Mrs. Pearl Chambers for the Sunday school. Mrs. Loraine Couch is pianist for Sunday school. Mrs. A. N. Lumm was chosen publicity agent; Mrs. Charles Groover president of the women's department; Mrs. Pearl Chambers, sponsor for young people. After the officers were elected, Elder Harding gave a fine talk on the responsibilities and duties of the branch officers.

San Bernardino, California

The church school, under the supervision of Sister Ella Harris, has been showing splendid improvement in attendance and class work. Our school has an average attendance of about ninety-five, and every effort is being made for a bigger and better school in 1932.

Sacrament service December 6, was in charge of Pastor W. A. Teagarden, assisted by Brother John Scannell, Brother Logeman, Brother Draper, and Brother Ferguson. This service was well attended and a good spirit was enjoyed.

During the young people's meeting at six thirty in the evening on this particular Sunday, only the junior classes took up regular work. The other classes assembled in the main auditorium for a talk by the pastor on the new plan of Religious Education. It is to be decided by the branch at the next regular business meeting whether they should adopt this new plan in full in 1932.

The sermon at 7.30 p. m. was by John Scannell, who took for his subject "Why We Keep Sunday as the Sabbath." Brother Scannell used a chart of the Egyptian calendar to illustrate his sermon.

Cabinet meeting was held at the church in charge of the pastor December 7. This cabinet meeting is held the first Monday in each month and is attended by all members of the priesthood, officers, and teachers of all departments in the branch. Here a good many questions and outlines of the work are discussed before being presented to the branch.

The dramatic class meets every Tuesday night under the direction of Sister Leola Nice. This department is showing improvement. They have organized and are known as the "Gleed Players."

The Orchestra is meeting every Friday night under the leadership of Sister Jessie Nichols.

Owing to the Dramatic Class's meeting on Tuesday night, the Temple Builder Girls, under the supervision of Sister Hattie Tait, are meeting only twice a month, on Monday nights.

On December 13 the church school was held as usual at nine thirty, followed by the sermon at eleven by Doctor A. W. Teel, of Los Angeles, the church physician. The fifth chapter of James was his scripture lesson. The sermon in the evening was by Brother F. J. Lacey, pastor of the branch at Ontario, California.

The Young People's department meets every Sunday evening at six thirty under the leadership of Dorothy Elkins.

Church school December 20, had an attendance of one hundred three. At the eleven o'clock hour, the choir under the direction of Frank Anthony, gave its Christmas cantata, "The Music of Bethlehem," which was well rendered. The work of the choir under Brother Anthony's direction is progressing.

At 6.45 in the evening, the dramatic class, or the "Gleed Players," gave the Christmas play, "Joshua's Gift." This was well presented, and shows the wonderful assistance Sister Nice has been to our branch in the dramatic work. At 7.30 p. m. the Christmas sermon was given by Pastor W. A. Teagarden.

Wednesday, December 23, was children's night. This Christmas program was rendered by the children of the kindergarten, primary and junior classes of the church school. Then followed a Christmas treat for the children. The junior auditorium was beautifully decorated to represent a snow scene around the Christmas tree with its colored lights.

Church school was held as usual at 9.30 a. m. December 27, followed by the eleven o'clock sermon by Brother George Wixom. Brother Wixom has been on a mission to Texas and is spending the holidays with his family in San Bernardino.

At 6.30 p. m. the junior choir, under the direction of Sister Anna Bronson, gave its Christmas cantata. This choir of sixteen children is also showing splendid improvement, and will be a good help to our services. The evening sermon was by our pastor, who read the fifteenth chapter of Saint John.

Thursday evening, December 31, a New Year's Eve party was held in the junior auditorium. This was a party where the entire branch, old and young, were invited. Several musical numbers and stunts were enjoyed after which refreshments were served. Then the crowd assembled into the main auditorium where a prayer service was held until midnight, or the ushering in of the new year.

Independence

In accordance with the provision of the last quarterly conference in Zion, which convened Monday, January 4, we here print the names of the fifty-nine delegates elected to represent Independence at the General Conference in April: Harry G. Barto, Herbert L. Barto, T. A. Beck, Mrs. T. A. Beck, J. A. Becker, R. S. Budd, Mrs. R. S. Budd, A. Carmichael, Mrs. A. Carmichael, Nat Carmichael, Walter Chapman, J. E. Cleveland, J. F. Curtis, Mrs. Mollie Davis, G. L. DeLapp, Mrs. G. L. DeLapp, A. K. Dillee, G. W. Eastwood, F. Henry Edwards, Mrs. F. Henry Edwards, Clyde F. Ellis, J. A. Gillen, E. J. Gleazer, U. W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, Amos T. Higdon, Mrs. E. L. Kelley, Stanley Kelley, C. C. Koehler, Mrs. C. C. Koehler, Leonard Lea, J. R. Lentell, Mrs. J. R. Lentell, G. G. Lewis, Mrs. G. G. Lewis, Floyd M. McDowell, Mrs. Floyd M. McDowell, W. A. McDowell, D. S. McNamara, Frank Minton, H. V. Minton, Leta Moriarty, Orlando Nace, Carroll Olson, A. B. Phillips, Mrs. A. B. Phillips, Walter Self, John F. Sheehy, P. A. Sherman, Mark Siegfried, Elbert A. Smith, Mrs. Elbert A. Smith, F. A. Smith, F. M. Smith, H. O. Smith, Samuel C. Smith, Henry Stahl, Ammon White, and C. B. Woodstock.

The hotly contested games of the Latter Day Saint Basketball League have claimed the interest and loyal support of a large number of Kansas City and Independence ball fans. This league includes three teams from Kansas City churches, Central, Chelsea, and Gladstone, and three from Independence, the Criterion Class of the Stone Church, Liberty Street, and Walnut Park. Games are played each Monday night at the Woodland School gymnasium, Kansas City. The half way mark of the league's activities has been reached and the standing, including the games of January 11, is as follows:

Liberty Street	4	1
Central	4	1
Chelsea	4	1
Gladstone	2	3
Walnut Park	1	4
Criterion	0	5

Last Thursday night marked the opening of the basketball season for the Auditorium Basketball League. Six teams of Independence boys, from sixteen to twenty years of age, have entered. Games will be played each Thursday night at seven, eight, and nine o'clock. The teams of the league represent practically every branch of the church in the city, and as a consequence, a representative crowd of supporters is expected to witness the games.

The young people's council of Independence met Sunday afternoon to consider plans for the launching of a file-your-inventory campaign among the younger church members. General Conference plans for the young people were discussed, and plans for the play contest of Independence were made more complete.

Stone Church

"Where Are We Going?" was the theme of Bishop L. F. P. Curry, the Sunday morning speaker. "The church in its original state had four purposes," he said; "First, to restore the authority of the priesthood; second, to restore the ordinances and everlasting covenant of God; third, to evangelize the world, and fourth, to gather the people of God into a Zionic society." It is his belief that the first two purposes have been achieved but that the last two remain largely in the future—they are for us to do. Each generation has had its task. In 1830, chosen workers achieved the Restoration; in 1860, the Reorganization. The task of the present generation is the Redemption.

"Gloria in Excelsis" and "O Love Divine," two anthems, were sung by the Stone Church Choir. A male quartet composed of Roderick May, Duane Swalley, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold, sang a pleasing number. Elder H. G. Barto presided over the service, assisted by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp.

This was Financial Sunday in Independence. The second Sunday in each month is set aside as a day on which the Saints are asked to give special thought to church finances.

Elder G. G. Lewis interested a congregation of about two hundred and fifty junior and intermediate boys and girls Sunday morning, with an illustrated lecture on Australia. This lecture was given in the lower auditorium of the church at eleven o'clock. The junior pastor, Elder Will Bolinger, and the superintendent, Mrs. Ray Moler, regularly have charge of these eleven o'clock junior services. On this Sunday Miss Ina Hattey directed the music and Mrs. J. R. Lentell played the piano.

"The church and the world are not in need of light," declared Apostle R. S. Budd in his Sunday evening sermon, "but of sight. Our problem is that of training our eyes that we may see the Almighty God." "Except a man be born again, he can not see—" was the text used by Brother Budd, who stressed the need of faith and true repentance which determine the effectiveness of the light we have.

A spirited song service preceded the sermon, G. G. Lewis directing, Earl Audet at the organ. Elder Ephraim Brown assisted Brother Lewis in charge of the service.

The Stone Church Ladies Aid Society is glad to be able to report its work for the year, 1931: Met fifty-one times, quilted fifteen big quilts and four baby quilts, tied one comfort. By the work of their needles these women earned, during the twelve months, almost one hundred and forty dollars. Mrs. William Pooler is president of the society; vice president, Mrs. Margaret Craig; secretary, Miss Ida May Brown, and treasurer, Mrs. J. F. Weston.

About thirty girls of the class taught by Mrs. Pearl W. Moriarty, and some singers picked from other classes of the junior young people's department of the church school, spent two hours Sunday afternoon singing to the inmates of the County Home. Five men of the congregation kindly offered their cars to convey the girls to the home, and accompanied the singers from ward to ward. This afternoon of giving cheer to the aged and unfortunate will long be remembered by the girls whose class motto is: "Inasmuch as you have done unto the least of these . . . ye have done unto me."

Second Church

Officers for the coming year have been appointed since our last report. Elder A. K. Dillee, who has worked tirelessly for the good of the branch, was again placed in charge.

Other officers are: William Inman, assistant pastor and bishop's agent; Delbert Whiting, custodian; Charles Binger, janitor.

Roy Settles was appointed director of the church school. Mrs. Golsie Wisemore is in charge of the adult department of the school; Mrs. Grace Nave, of the intermediate and junior departments; Mrs. Katherine Inman of the primary department, with Mrs. Agnes Edmonds and Miss Lillie Hansen assistants. Miss Carmen Guthrie is secretary with Miss Faye Hulse assistant.

The general condition of Second Church is quite satisfactory. The sacrifice offering for the month of December far exceeded expectations.

The activities of the young people deserve special mention. They have weekly prayer meetings which heretofore have been held at the home of Brother and Sister Roy Settles. This week, however, the meeting is at the home of Brother and Sister A. K. Dillee. Attendance and interest in these meetings is an inspiration to older persons.

The young people meet for class work each Sunday evening at six thirty at the church. There are two classes in dramatics. One, a senior class, is taught by Lora Weir. The younger class is in charge of Roy Settles. A class for the study of Doctrine and Covenants is under the direction of Mrs. Charles Koehler.

The Christmas entertainment was given by the young people and was held the Sunday evening preceding Christmas. The entire program was excellent. A special feature was a play which was appropriate to the occasion. The final number was a candle light service, with the choir singing Christmas carols.

Miss Ethel Carbaugh has been appointed a member of the young people's council.

Sister Viola Totty, a faithful worker in the primary department of the school, has been quite ill at her home and at present is but slightly improved.

The funeral of Sister Mary Dutton, who died at her home on West South Avenue, was held in the church last Saturday at 2.30 p. m.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker Sunday morning and Brother Woodstock occupied the stand in the evening.

Walnut Park Church

The sacrament service January 3, was in charge of Pastor Samuel C. Smith. Previous to the passing of the emblems Randall James, son of Apostle Clyde F. and Sister Dana Ellis, was blessed by James W. Davis and C. K. Greene.

At the evening service Elder G. G. Lewis spoke of the early church at Kirtland, designating that time as being the period of consolidation. He gave a vivid description of the Temple. One of the things which favorably impressed him during his visit at that place was the decorum of the congregation. No whispering or confusion is permitted within the assembly room. Here is found reverence for the house of God.

The historical drama, "The Church at Kirtland," was then presented by actors of this congregation. Eighteen members of the priesthood, conducted by Irwin Moorman, sang three numbers which were especially appropriate for the program.

The choir, directed by Sister Minnie Dobson, sang the anthem, "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," at eleven o'clock last Sunday morning, Carlotta Norman taking the solo. Drexel Mollison, our talented young musician, played the piano.

In his sermon Pastor Samuel C. Smith made a strong appeal to the Saints to examine themselves to ascertain what there is in their lives which is hindering them from living close to God. His advice was to "get right with God and to cease to find fault with others." During this service Stanley and May Price, of Kansas City, presented their son, Stanley Hale jr., for a blessing. This was given by William T. Gard and J. T. Phillips.

Brother and Sister Benjamin Bean have been chosen to take charge of the junior church work during the coming year.

Bishop A. B. Phillips, on Sunday evening, spoke on the subject of Zion being the hope of the ages. This was followed by the historical "Conversation" on the same subject.

Liberty Street Church

The past few weeks have been busy weeks for Liberty Street congregation. Attendance and devotion is on the increase at practically all the services and other activities of the branch. The spirit of willingness and unity is in evidence among the workers, and the new year promises to be one of unusual growth in numbers and spirituality.

The annual election of officers and appointment of assistants resulted as follows: Pastor, John R. Lentell; superintendent of church school, Harry W. Blake; first assistant and superintendent of junior-intermediate department, John Zion; superintendent of senior young people and adult department, C. A. Mills; superintendent of beginner-primary department, Mrs. Harland McConnell; song-leader for primary department, Dorothy Peek; in charge of pre-school class, Mrs. Mack Curtis; general school secretary, Miss Marie Hobbs; secretary junior-intermediates, Frances Grenawalt; secretary of beginner-primary department, Mary Ethel Cool; bishop's agent, W. C. Patrick; custodian, John Zion; musical director, Fred Friend; director of adult orchestra, Alfred Waters; supervisor of women, Mrs. C. L. Latta; in charge of young people's activities and recreation, Cecil Walker, Miss Mabel Tignor, and Elbert Mock. Mrs. Elbert Mock was re-appointed captain of the Girl Scouts.

The average attendance of the church school for the last year was slightly over two hundred, and two hundred and forty-seven were present the second Sunday of the new year. With the Spirit of the Master and twenty-five consecrated teachers in our midst, we bend our efforts toward the goal of Christianized souls.

The church was almost completely filled for the sacrament service of the month. Apostle E. J. Gleazer and wife attended the service, and he made a helpful talk.

Pastor Lentell preached a forceful sermon on the financial duties of the membership on Financial Sunday. He made it plain that nonmembers are entitled to the blessings of the Lord if they obey his laws, not forgetting his law of tithing. In the evening Elder Calvin Rich preached on the subject of laws and the wisdom of obedience to them.

The young people from Enoch Hill Church gave a fine program at the six o'clock service of the young people. About one hundred and fifty were present.

Spring Branch Church

The installation of branch officers was held Sunday evening at eight o'clock, January 3. The following officers were installed: J. E. Cleveland began his third year as pastor; Robert Fish, assistant pastor; Maurice Jacobson, bishop's agent and custodian; music director, Mrs. Nelson. Brother Cleveland gave a short talk presenting his hopes and desires for the new year, and each new officer made a brief talk on his work for the year.

The church school and other officers are: Al Tankard succeeds himself as the superintendent of the school; assistant superintendent, J. S. Andes; secretary, Mrs. Tankard; chorister and dramatic leader, Irene Roberts; recreational leader, leader of the young people's department, and junior pastor, Kenneth Davis; superintendent of adults and supervisor of the women's department, Mrs. Robert Fish; superintendent of cradle department, Ethel Peer; superintendent of juniors, Mrs. Dixon; superintendent of primary department, Mrs. Jessie Smith.

The branch mourns the passing of Mrs. W. F. Resch, who died at her home Wednesday morning following a long illness. She was a faithful worker and will be sorely missed by members of the branch. The funeral was held at the Stone Church last Friday at ten o'clock. Bishop C. J. Hunt was in charge assisted by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. Interment was in Lexington, Missouri.

On Sunday, January 10, Elder Cleveland talked on "Our Financial Duty to the Church."

Elder T. A. Beck was the speaker in the evening, giving a splendid talk on "Serving the Lord in 1932."

Enoch Hill Church

There was good attendance at the church school Sunday morning, C. E. Beal in charge. The elephant contest is nearing an end. One side has only eight more patches before its elephant is covered, and the other side is not far behind. It is hard to speculate which team will win.

Pastor Herbert L. Barto occupied the morning preaching hour Sunday, discussing the theme, "Tithing." "Tithing is a debt we owe," he said. "It is not an offering. Offerings are given, but we pay tithing." He also said that having paid the one tenth does not relieve us of all responsibility in regard to the nine tenths—we are still stewards over that and are held accountable as to the use or abuse of it.

Sunday afternoon the officers and teachers of the church school held a profitable meeting. Many problems were discussed. Mrs. Effie Mae Winegar gave an instructive talk on church school management.

Elder O. W. Okerlind filled the evening preaching hour, his subject being "A Living Faith." He read as scripture lesson Matthew 7: 13-29. "If there is one thing we need more than any other," he declared, "to carry us through the trying year ahead, it is a living faith."

Grandview Church

On last Sunday the Saints were favored with an inspiring sermon in the morning from Elder J. W. A. Bailey, of Independence. His subject was "Zion—the Government of God Among Men." He said that Zion would be a reality when God's people know the truth, because it will make us free from all error. In the evening Brother Bailey used stereopticon slides to illustrate his lecture on the symbolism of the gospel of Christ. He called attention to many symbols of Christ—the Lamb of God, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Lily of the valley, the bright and morning Star, the Rose of Sharon. He presented interesting facts about Solomon's temple—its geometrical features and other factors which made it the most wonderful building in the world; its monetary cost; its occupancy of but thirty-three years, and finally its total destruction after the passing of the Savior from this earth.

Argentine Church

Elder Levi Gamet was the morning speaker, and Elder J. E. Vanderwood occupied the sacred desk at seven forty-five.

Several have lately been seriously ill. Brother Charles Bragg and Sister Pauline Fox have returned from the Independence Sanitarium, where both underwent appendicitis operations which were successfully performed by the staff of that splendid institution.

The father of Sister Henry Gunion recently passed away at Chicago. Sister Gunion went to Chicago for the funeral, but before she returned, Joseph Gunion who lived in Kentucky, a brother of Henry Gunion, was called to the other shore by death. This family has experienced much loss and sorrow in the past year. Last spring Brother and Sister Gunion's son, Ray, passed away.

The two weeks' meeting held by J. Charles May, closed December 20. The wonderful sermons were enjoyed by Saints and nonmembers. Brother May, like Paul, did not shun to declare to his hearers all the counsel of God. The special music each evening by Brother May, was enjoyed. We had fair crowds considering the weather.

The women's department has been meeting with Sister Mary Barron to spend the day quilting.

Frank Martin, little son of Brother and Sister Henry Savage, was blessed December 13, by J. Charles May and James Duffey.

Sister William Hutchinson, who was injured recently, was able to be at church Sunday, and teach her class of little folks.

Sister June Shedd, who attends college at Warrensburg, Missouri, spent the holidays with home folks.

Blue Springs

The first Sunday of December the sacrament service was very well attended. In the evening Brother R. J. Stark preached. His subject was "Desire," and the text, "There is a way that seemeth right unto man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death."

On the second Sunday, Brother O. W. Sarratt preached in the morning on faith. He made the twenty-third Psalm very clear. In the evening Brother A. Campbell talked. There were slides on the "Life of Christ," and he commented on these, bringing out the point of Peace.

On the third Sunday, we had a Christmas program by the primaries and juniors, in charge of Sister Roy Martin, assisted by Sister O. H. Halfhill, and Brother G. Phillips, in charge of the junior department. It was a good program.

In the evening Brother G. Phillips preached, his text being, "For unto us is born this day, in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord."

On December 18 the young people, in charge of their leader, Brother C. Joice, went to the home of Brother and Sister R. J. Stark, and had a charivari on Robert and Ethel Stark, junior. They were presented with gifts and had a fine time.

On the fourth Sunday of the month Brother D. Spease preached, his text being, "What God sendeth forth shall not return unto him void." In the evening Brother Edward Oglevie stressed the fact that we should take the church in our business affairs, and show forth the gospel in all our dealings.

On the last day of the old year the young folks under the leadership of Brother C. Joice, held a watch party at the hall. They report a very joyous time.

This branch is small but we are proud of the attendance at the Wednesday evening prayer services.

Bates City

The marriage of Miss Esther McCollum, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. McCollum, to Alma C. Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Davis, Oak Grove, Missouri, took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harold W. Hattey, Bates City, Missouri, last Friday. The double ring ceremony was performed by Elder Harold W. Hattey, pastor of Bates City Branch, beneath an arch of blue and white. Miss Betty Lou Hattey sang "Love's Old Sweet Song" and Mrs. Harold W. Hattey sang "I Love You Truly," Mrs. Don Cox playing the accompaniments and the wedding march. Miss Meta Butler of Blue Springs attended the bride and Frank Stevens of Bunceton, Missouri, acted as best man. Jean Marian Hattey was the flower girl. A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are at home with Mr. and Mrs. Hattey in Bates City.

Graceland News

The Ship Graceland

On the morning of January 6, a notice of the first fellowship service for 1932 was posted on the bulletin board in the Ad Building. Boys and girls coming and going stopped to look at the attractive poster upon which was mounted a ship. Beneath the ship three questions were penned. "To what ports are you sailing?" "Who are your mates?" "By what compass are you guided?"

The little poster was effective, and that evening many thoughtful-eyed students quietly gathered in the chapel to determine their course for the new year. As Roy Chevillie introduced the theme he renewed the questions given on the poster, and mentioned some of the ports he wished to make, the type of people he wished for mates, and something of the compass by which he would be guided. The students followed, naming their hopes for the year. Most of them expressed the desire to make some port in "Church Service," this year. The thought of having mates who are equally desirous of reaching these same ports was joyously expressed by others. All recognized that we sometimes drift below our objective point and must later redouble our efforts in Life's Stream in order to reach the desired goal. The teachings of our parents, of our teachers, and of our church leaders were named as points on the compass by which we should be guided. Many expressed the desire to follow the course set for us by the Great Captain, without trying to sail east when he wishes us to sail west.

A feeling that we were mates, sailing to the same Ideal Port, under the guidance of the Master Pilot prevailed in the chapel as the meeting was closed by singing "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me." The Graceland Ship is launched for 1932.

Apostle J. F. Garver Lectures

On Wednesday morning, January 6, Apostle Garver delivered the first of a series of three lectures in the chapel, taking as his subject "Character" and dividing it into three phases, "Why?" "What?" and "How?"

Speaking on "Why Character?" he began with the statement that a nation's destiny is in its character, and cited as an illustration, the biblical account of the lifting of the Midianite oppression by the efforts of Gideon and his three hundred picked men. A man's destiny is also in his character; as the man is so are his institutions, for no institution can be higher than its founder. Character is for ever growing; its course may be altered but can not be stayed; it grows apace with the things it feeds upon. Stressing the fact that as we do today, so we tend to do tomorrow, the speaker recalled incidents, at once amusing and tragic, of those whom he had known in his Graceland school days who had refused to rely upon their own efforts and stand upon their own feet. Looking at the failures that these people had made of their lives, one might be at a loss for an explanation unless he had known them in their school days, for the tactics that enabled them to "get by" their professors sometimes would not enable them to "get by" in life when thrown upon their own resources. In conclusion, Brother Garver asked a number of thought-provoking questions: "Are you dominating or dominated?" "Do you get by your professors or by yourself?" "Do you choose your pastimes, or do they choose you?" "Do you choose your associates or are you chosen?" "What are you doing?" "Where are you going?" Graceland College is justified only by the contribution that it can make to the building of desirable characters in the youth of the church. Character! Why? Because he who is without character is poor despite everything else that he may possess, but he who has character, and little or nothing else, possesses untold wealth.

Summing up the "What of Character?" lecture, Brother Garver said that education is, "the normal unfoldment of what has been infolded," that character is the developed, stabilized, discriminating will, the ability to stand on one's own feet in a world of daily toil, trial and temptation. It is more than goodness. It is the power to be good and stay good. It calls for persistence in following a carefully chosen path and fidelity to some worthy cause. And the basis of it lies in honest thinking, something that demands the highest type of courage. Personal reactions are the index to character, for it is not what life does to us that counts, but our reactions to those incidents. Something new and striking was the reading of Saint Paul's master essay on love with the word "character" used synonymously. "Character," he concluded, "is the 'summum bonum' of human and divine endeavor."

Opening his lecture on "Character; How?" on Friday morning, Apostle Garver re-emphasized the statement that character is the determiner of destiny. Character is builded and every one builds his own; no other can do it for him. We are not required to imitate others in that building. In character building we must build from what we are to what we ought to be, and this character takes form only under the hot hammer-beats of life's experiences. Character is nowhere so well revealed as under adversity. This is evidenced by the life of the Nazarene who turned his cross into a flaming symbol to lead mankind.

Character demands intelligent will; some have too few wills, others have too many and are constantly turned about by the varying winds of experience. Will must be strengthened and moulded in conformity with the will of God. Character comes, therefore, by personal endeavor rightly directed. It is a matter of growth by the process of trial and error. Character becomes a mother of selection. We may take the small evils and nurture them until they grow powerful and terrible, or we may take the good and nurture it, until it fills our whole life.

Character is built through habit formation. We are what we think, what we feel, and what we do. Perhaps the most inspiring and hopeful thing about us is that it has been given to us to become the sons of God, and this can be accomplished only by the wise selection of the best from our companions, ideals, reading, homes and church, and through it all, we must maintain our self-respect. We build securely who build character on the same foundation as that of our fathers in the church. We must advert to the life-giving principles of our fathers, the first of which is faith, the dynamic of all human endeavor. The second is repentance, which is the basic law of adjustment. It is conformity to growing knowledge and this ability to repent is one of the noblest attributes of man. We must advert to the power of prayer which clarifies our vision and propels us forward. We must believe in the willingness and power of God to help by the power of the Holy Spirit. Our destiny is in our hands, and anything less than the best is unworthy of our homes, our religion, our institutions and our forefathers.

This closes the third series of lectures. The first of the series was given by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and the second by Elder Ward A. Hougas. The interest shown by these men in giving their time and energy to the preparation and delivery of these lectures is greatly appreciated by the student body. The student body is looking forward to the next series which will be presented by President F. M. McDowell on February 8, 9, and 10.

Life on the College Hill during holiday vacation was very quiet. Nearly all the students went to the homes of their parents or friends. This year one girl (two girls part of the time) and fifteen boys stayed. Everyone was busy nearly all the time. However, it was a great contrast to the hurry and scurry and constant buzz of the whole student body. Very poor roads made College Hill seem even more isolated than it would otherwise have been, but in spite of the quiet and seeming isolation of the campus, the students who stayed were not lonely. Because of closer association they became better acquainted during the two weeks of vacation than

Conference Notices

The conference of Eastern Michigan District, to elect delegates to the General Conference of 1932, will convene with the Valley Center Branch, January 24, 1932. Hours of services are: Prayer meeting, 9.30 a. m.; preaching, 11; business session, 2 p. m.—Myron A. Carr, district president.

Conference Minutes

NORTHWESTERN IOWA.—The Saints of Northwestern Iowa District met with the Saints at Logan, Iowa, December 5 and 6, in conference work. The Saturday morning session was opened at nine thirty with prayer service, presided over by E. Y. Hunker and Charles J. Smith. The attendance was small, due to very unfavorable weather. Business session followed at eleven o'clock in the morning and two thirty in the afternoon, presided over by District President Gerald Gunsolley and Apostle J. F. Garver. The time was taken up in reading of reports. Bishop Adams reported that, regardless of the depressed conditions, the Saints who had contributed, had done extremely well. From January 1 to December 1, 1931, the receipts totalled $11,442.86; only a small per cent of our membership, however, are observing the financial law. Bishop Adams, district treasurer, reports as follows: Balance on hand and receipts up to December 1, $223.04; disbursements for district expense, $192.95; balance $30.79. The district budget for 1932 was adopted to the amount of $200. Recommendations of ordinations were presented to the conference from Missouri Valley Branch: Brother Charles Skinner to office of priest; Brother Earl Hirst to office of teacher, Brother Roy Shoemate to the office of deacon. The conference concurred in the recommendations, and the ordinations were provided for. The following delegates were chosen to represent this district at the General Conference in April, 1932: George Meggers, Charles J. Smith, E. Y. Hunker, Gus Putbrece, Guy Johnson, Mrs. Guy Johnson, Cecel Burnett, Mrs. Gus Putbrece, Gerald Gunsolley, Mrs. Gerald Gunsolley, Bishop W. R. Adams, Mrs. W. R. Adams, T. O. Strand, Howard Reynolds, Chester Davis, Mrs. Chester Davis, Mrs. Pearl VanEaton, E. B. Purcell, George M. Vandell, William Chambers, Mrs. E. B. Purcell, George Carlile, Mark Jensen, M. O. Meyers, Elvin Baughman, Mrs. George Meggers, Mrs. Howard Reynolds, and Fred Fry. Brother Gunsolley presented the following resolutions to the conference, and after much discussion they were adopted: 1. Whereas we find in certain of our branches members of the priesthood indifferent to the obligations of this office under which they have pledged to function in the ministry of the church, and even in some instances indifferent to the obligation of Sainthood, therefore, be it resolved, that shall such continue in this conduct and failure to qualify and to function, after careful effort has been made to revive them to the type of ministry necessary to push this work forward, they be required to surrender their license; and be it further resolved, that it is the opinion of this conference that ordained ministers of the church may be expected to be reasonably regular in their attendance at the services, diligent in labor among the Saints, faithful in support of the church, and in their ministrations in support of its policies and practices; and be it further resolved, that the ordination of men to the ministry be done in harmony with the foregoing principles. 2. Whereas the Lord has spoken to the priesthood and told them to avoid the use of tobacco (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3), therefore, be it resolved that any member of the priesthood, after being duly labored with in the proper spirit, and still being desirous of continuing the use of tobacco, that he be required to surrender his license. The result of the election of district officers was as follows: District president, Gerald Gunsolley; district secretary, Mrs. W. R. Adams; district chorister, Mrs. Ruth Gunsolley; superintendent of Religious Education, Mrs. Bertha VanEaton; sustained as bishop, Bishop W. R. Adams. The business session adjourned to meet again at seven they would have in a much longer time while school was in session. All the boys stayed in Marietta Hall. The many pranks and jokes played on each other made life interesting for them. Most of the evenings were spent in playing games or listening to the radio or both. Much more time was spent, too, in reading and sleeping than ordinarily. Mother Brooks managed the commissary with the help of some of the boys who are working for their board. Others of the remaining students worked in other parts of the college. There were several very entertaining parties given for the students who remained in Lamoni.

Christmas Day was bright and sunshiny although cool enough so that winter coats were not too warm. Since most of the boys were invited to the homes of their Lamoni friends for Christmas dinner, the "turkey" was served the following Sunday, and a regular dinner was served on Christmas. Christmas evening Mother Brooks was presented a gift from the remaining students.

All in all, in spite of occasional pangs of homesickness, the vacation was enjoyable and refreshing, and the students are ready for another hard attempt at college work.

thirty to enjoy the message Brother E. Y. Hunker had for the Saints. His theme was "The Social-Economic Conditions in the Church and in the World." Sunday morning at nine thirty the Saints met in prayer service in charge of Brothers Garver, DeLapp, and Gunsolley. The theme, "Spirit of Love and Sacrifice," was carried out in the service. A splendid service was enjoyed. The spirit of prophecy came through Brother Garver to the Saints and words of council to Brother Salisbury. The service was largely attended. Apostle Garver occupied the eleven o'clock hour, his text was "Watchman, what of the night?" He stressed the task that is before the church—the need of great preparation now to meet the test of the future when prosperity and wealth return to the church. Bishop DeDapp occupied the two o'clock hour. A large and appreciated audience greeted him. In his discourse he stressed not only paying the debt, but a program that will insure future security of the church by providing reserves. An offering was taken at the close of the service for helping defray conference expenses. It amounted to $26.36. At seven thirty Brother C. J. Smith preached the closing sermon of the conference. His text being "Ye must be born again." We were glad to have Brothers DeLapp, Garver, Hunker, and Smith with us. Their messages to the Saints were encouraging, and we must be continuously about the Master's business. There is no place to lay aside the gospel armor, for the door of opportunity is open to us as never before in the history of the church. The work of the church will go forward.

Marriages

LaLONE-KEEHLER.—Miss Mary Ellen LaLone and Mr. Walter Keehler, of Cheboygan Branch in northern Michigan, had a lovely church wedding October 24, 1931. Their families and relatives were the only ones present. The ceremony was performed by Alfred C. Keehler.

Our Departed Ones

CUNNINGHAM.—Calvin Cue Cunningham, son of Henry and Lenora Cunningham, was born September 26, 1906. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 2, 1930. Died December 22, 1931. One brother, Reed Cunningham, preceded him in death October 3, 1929. He is survived by his parents, his wife, a baby daughter, one niece, two nephews, and many friends. Interment was in the cemetery at Burley, Idaho. The sermon was by Elder A. M. Chase.

BAUMGARTEL.—Otto Baumgartel was born in Saxon, Germany, January 12, 1846. Departed this life at his home in Howard, Kansas, December 21, 1931, leaving to mourn his wife, three children: Mrs. Cora Richardson, of Howard; Mrs. Allie Brant, of Winfield, and Lee Baumgartel, of Severy, Kansas; nine grandchildren, and two great-grandsons. In 1872, he went to Kansas, settling on a claim on Indian Creek, a pioneer of the early days. Moved to Howard in 1908. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by W. S. Loar in 1873; was ordained an elder some years later. He was firm in his convictions, faithful to the church, and zealous in his love of God and man. Mr. Baumgartel was a devoted husband and father, a man of cheerful disposition, kind and thoughtful. He exemplified the life of the Master. The funeral was held December 22, and interment was in Grace Lawn Cemetery.

OUR BROTHER'S KEEPER

One of the hopeful and constructive factors emerging from the bitter experiences of this third winter of the Great Depression is an increasing national social consciousness. This is expressed in the widespread organization of relief into intelligent social agencies and in many a private friendly deed. We are, it seems, in a very real sense our brother's keeper.—Henry Goddard Leach.

Chorus of Six Hundred Will Give "Messiah" at General Conference

A chorus of six hundred oratorio singers will present Handel's famous composition, "The Messiah," to the seventy-fifth General Conference of the church the afternoon of April 10. Patriarch J. T. Gresty, composer of the oratorio, "The Course of Time," and probably the greatest musician the church has yet produced, will direct the production. This will be the first time so large a chorus has presented "The Messiah" to the General Conference, accompanied by an orchestra.

Musicians over the church should begin now to prepare to help in this the big musical feature of the conference. All Messiah singers and those who sang in the chorus which presented the oratorio, "The Course of Time," to the Centennial Conference are invited to practice and prepare to assist in this performance of "The Messiah."

Those purchasing new books should be sure to get the Ditson edition.

The following choruses will be sung: No. 4, "And the Glory of the Lord"; No. 12, "For Unto Us a Child Is Born"; No. 17, "Glory to God"; No. 22, "Behold the Lamb of God"; No. 24, "Surely He Hath Borne Our Grievs"; No. 33, "Lift Up Your Heads"; No. 44, "Hallelujah"; No. 53, "Worthy Is the Lamb"; and the "Amen Chorus."

The orchestra which will accompany the chorus, under the direction of Brother Gresty, will be composed of the Auditorium Orchestra reinforced by instrumentalists from over the church. The time for preparing this production is short, and all musicians who wish to take part, should begin rehearsals at once. Watch the Herald for further announcements concerning this General Conference event.

Winners in "Vision" Short-story Contest

Our readers who have been interested in the Vision Short-story contest will be anxious to know the results of the judges' decision. Because it will be a little while before the February issue of the magazine is printed we are taking this means of giving the notice.

The First Prize was won by Della Braidwood Haberlein, with her story, "The Still Small Voice." Second Prize was taken by "Smiley's Lady," written by Winifred M. Milner. And Third Prize went to Grace B. Keairnes for her story, "A Star and a Cloud."

We are delighted with the quality and loveliness of these and other stories that were received in the contest. They will give us excellent material for the pages of Vision for months to come. L. L.

Our Brother's Keeper

In times of prosperity we become proud, extravagant, selfish, and reckless. In times of adversity we become humble, cautious and charitable. The spectacle of luxury hardens the human heart, the sight of misery and suffering generally makes people kind.

Strange that within a little while, a world that seemed to be striving to learn and to go the ways of Sodom and Gomorrah has learned repentance and kindness. People are concerned about each other, and in the midst of universal trouble one finds humanity rising to new heights of generosity and idealism. Men have returned to the ancient requirement that they regard themselves as their brother's keeper, whatever that brother's circumstances may be.

Anon, in times of national excess, the prophets cry out at the wickedness of humanity; anon, in times of a national crisis, when people demonstrate greatness of heart, soul, and mind, the prophets laud men's goodness.

Now, witnessing the success of the charitable efforts, the concern everywhere manifested about human need and suffering, one dares again to entertain good hopes for the world. L. L.

The National Significance of the Depression

By John W. Rushton

The following is the third of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. We are glad to present this thoughtful contribution by the author, who is able to see our domestic difficulties from an international viewpoint, a viewpoint which Americans have great need to understand.—Editors.

Now we are quite sure that America is involved in the all but universal depression which is challenging the present civilization. For a long time before the war and all during the war, and since the so-called Peace of Versailles, up to the "Black Friday" of 1929, America thought, or tried to think, that there was no actual relationship between herself and the other nations. We had a superiority complex, a self-satisfaction, an unsympathetic indifference to other nations which even our participation in the war did not eliminate. Of course we were not the only ones guilty of such national egotism, but the common tragedy of war had been much closer and infinitely more real to the others than to us. While they were "bleeding white" on the battlefields of Europe and Asia, our casualties were scarcely more than we kill every year with our modern "Juggernauts," the automobiles. While other nations poured out their treasure we became rich; so, whereas in 1916 we were a debtor nation, from thence on we, dramatically, almost overnight, became the creditor nation of the world. Today the United States has owing to her (actual funded debts) $11,522,354,000, and investments in foreign countries sufficient to bring the amount up to over fifty billions of dollars. Compared with the vast majority of other nations the American standard of living seemed to be luxurious in the extreme. That this was not altogether without ground was witnessed to by some of our wisest American statesmen and business men who went to Europe on different missions in connection with the stabilizing of the general situation, who told us on their return, in measured and impressive language, that Americans must either make it possible for others to have a similar standard, or otherwise we should have to bring our standard down to one similar to theirs. This was resented very vigorously and some think, rather callously. Up to October of 1929 the vociferous prophets including many familiar names in politics, commerce and education as well as religion, beginning with the late President Harding and coming down to President Hoover, made the burden of their pronouncements the prosperity of the country and the astounding success of the American nation. Besides gave—"the reasons why that prosperity was going to continue for ever and ever in the United States, whatever might happen to the shabbier, and more pedestrian parts of the world." In many instances the same ones have been and still are predicting the passing of this depression and that it can not continue much longer. Not a few have time and again set the date for the return of prosperity with the same facetious courage of the Seventh Day Adventist millenarian.

Well, there can be no question now that much as some of us tried to ignore the fact of international solidarity and would turn our backs upon other nations "to let them stew in their own juice," the depression is here and has included our own United States at last in its tentacles.

The questions which are now concerning us are, What caused it? What does it mean? What can we do to remedy it? And for some of us there is still another question—and that is, Shall we be contented merely with the return of prosperity and once more prostrate ourselves at the shrine of the modern god "Success" or shall it mean for us the end of this world or "age" and the coming in of the new age? What shall be the essential meaning of this crisis and how shall we body forth that meaning in the future?

One thing the depression has done is to show how woefully in America we are lacking in clear thinking. Secondly, the tragic lack of unity in purpose and methods. These "United States" are a long way from being a unity in all that is essential, vital and real in a democracy. How little we have been willing or perhaps able to understand the past, and how indifferent we have been to the future is seen in the demoralization which came upon the nation with the crash in 1929. The "leadership" of the nation politically, financially, educationally and religiously are quite at sea with regards to diagnosis and prescription alike. In the meantime we have the "Pollyannas" who apply the ostrich-like philosophy that what they do not see—"isn't"—and the rampant optimists who are telling us that "prosperity is just around the corner," but do not say which, and whose caperings turn one vertiginous; then we have the Jeremiahs whose lachrymose pessimism sees nothing but catastrophic calamity, who even "complain" of "feeling well." Surely, if this is not panic it approaches to bewilderment and is a serious challenge to the mass intelligence which we claim as a national characteristic.

Let us remind ourselves that real and acute as the depression is, it is not the first time America has been so afflicted, nor is depression indigenous to the United States. History abounds with such experiences among all peoples in all times. In fact they seem to be marks of punctuation in the story of our racial progress. They mean the end of the road soft and easy because of instinct and habit, and the reaching of some crisis demanding the functioning of reason and enterprise to open new doors, pioneer the way into new continents of opportunity, the commencement of a new volume of the "Book of Life."

The great war has been blamed for the present state of affairs. This is only in a measure true. The war but accentuated and accelerated the inevitable movement from the customary and accepted to the challenge of new problems which our inventions, growing needs and culture had already brought into being. Progress is always by way of obstacles and difficulties as intimated by Isaiah—"I will make all my mountains a way." Mountains of the impossible and difficult are the chosen route of heroes. The real leaders of men refuse the usual and familiar and gladly follow the light of vision no matter where it leads or what may be the destination. America as a nation began its career with that sort of daring, and the "Pilgrim Fathers," like Abraham, "went out not knowing whither they went." This was a glorious "adventure in youth" and in the brief years since then and now we have seen the miracle of the ages in that the adolescent youth among the nations of the earth now holds in its hands the glory, power and dominion of the earth. The question is, What will America do with this gift of God? With the vision of youth, the prophecy of adventure in her veins America will accept the challenge we know, and while with all prophets and leaders she will be a "disturber of the peace," it will be only the breaking up and scattering of the eagle's nest and the forcing of the fledglings to find their own wings.

One of the keenest minds in Great Britain, if not the world, has said recently:

The advance of civilization is not likely to be more of a "walk-over" in the future than it has in the past. It has never been a "walk-over." Hard fighting against heavy odds has accompanied every step of advance, and I see no prospect whatever that these conditions, so congenial to man as a danger-facing animal, will be relaxed in the future. . . . The history of an advancing civilization is the history of a crisis perpetually faced and mastered, its fortunes becoming more critical, and not less, with every step of the advance. A civilization which has no crisis to face is a contradiction of terms.—Dr. L. P. Jacks.

The depression should have some meaning for us and perhaps we may venture to suggest some things in the light of the experiences through which we are passing.

It is clear that money, possessions, luxuries and material ease are not sufficient insurance against misery and unhappiness. The saying of the Christ comes to mind very vividly, "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God." America must learn that her destiny is not secure because of riches. What Tawney calls "an acquisitive society" is concerned with "rights and properties" rather than with human "welfare and relations." The nation's real wealth is not in gold, acres and luxury but in the increasing number of happy and contented people.

We must learn that our commerce and industry are not to be employed as the agencies for the piling up of personal fortunes or corporate profits, producing the tragic spectacle that may be seen in many of our cities today; where one man in the days of depression can pile up forty million dollars of profits while in that same city one person dies every six hours of literal starvation. But, there must be recognized the responsibility of trusteeship in this field of human endeavor as stated by Tawney: (1) Industrial organization shall render the best service to the satisfaction of those whom it serves. No function or service, no pay! (2) Those who control and direct organization shall be responsible to those who are directed and governed.

This leads us to consider the glaring truculency and injustice of modern educational ideals which are taught in our academic institutions and then carried out into practical life with such tragic results in every way. "Any person who has not made his economic independency by the time he is fifty years of age must be registered as a failure. The productive period of ordinary life is from twenty-five to forty-five. Consequently in this mad scramble for success we are urged to "get while getting is good." No matter "how" but "get."

The depression shows us in terms of unemployment, starvation and suicide—besides the terrible scandal of racketeering, criminal grafting which permeates society from top to bottom and converts our government, jurisprudence and public life into a spectacle of shame—that we need to change our ideals of citizenship. America shall no longer be esteemed as a great opportunity to make personal wealth and individual gains. No more shall the standard of American worth-whileness be the "Almighty Dollar" no matter how secured; but rather we shall take Viscount Bryce's standard of a citizenry in a democracy worthy of the name: First, intelligence to understand the needs of my country and my relationship to my fellows; second, self-control to enable the individual to subordinate his own will and interests to the will and interests of the whole; and third, conscience which shall create a sense of responsibility on the part of the governors to the governed.

Perhaps another thing the depression should teach us in America, and that is we are spending too much time, energy and money in commercial sport, luxuries and sensual pleasures. It may not be pleasant to keep in mind Lecky's analysis of the downfall of the Roman Empire. But it will be profitable: The sensuality of life, and the gladiatorial shows. When people become more interested in ease, pleasure, gratification of their lower appetites and brutalize their leisure time, then degeneracy can not be avoided. Chastity, sportsmanship, industry, and devotion to spiritual ideals alone can guarantee the life and power of a nation. Our commercialization of sport, easy ideas of sex, passion for luxury and ease, the feverish quest for thrills and sensationalism are in their very nature demoralizing. It may be well to remember that "sorrow drives men to prayer"; and if the depression is making us aware that material possessions, and the surfeiting of the flesh with every conceivable gratification still is leaving the essential part of man—his spirit, which is the Divine breath, unfed and in danger of starvation, it will be worth while to have suffered.

Another thing the depression is bringing home to us is the fact of racial solidarity. That God has made of "one blood all nations of the earth." And, "when one member suffers all suffer with it." That one does not have the right to be rich and satisfied as long as there are those who are involuntary poor or miserable.

The depression shows up the eternal truth of the Galilean's teaching again: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Perhaps we might consider the catalogue of American tendencies as stated by James Truslow Adams in light of the depression and decide whether we will choose these or choose rather the "way of the Lord":

These trends are the substitution of self-expression for self-discipline; of the concept of prosperity for that of liberty; of restlessness for rest; of spending for saving; of show for solidity; of desire for the new or novel in place of affection for the old and tried; of dependence for self-reliance; of gregariousness for solitude; of luxury for simplicity; of ostentation for restraint; of success for integrity; of national for local; of easy generosity for wise giving; of preferring impression to thoughts; facts to ideas; of democracy for aristocracy; of the mediocre for the excellent.

Finally, we fervently believe America has capacity for God and deep down her responses are spiritual. As the nation of destiny it must be that America will turn to her God and through the depression there will come a spiritual awakening. I will close with two verses of Mr. Saint John Adcock:

Break thou my heart, dear Lord, lest I should die,
The world's gross business has so husked and grown
Round it, and dulled and deadened it, that I—
Once touched by sorrows other lives have known—
I cannot even feel the griefs that are mine own:

Thus living, but as thy dumb creatures do,
Careless, estranged from tears and inward smart,
This stark indifference subtly stealing through Numbs and has cramped my life in every part,
And I shall die, dear Lord, unless thou break my heart.

The Present Age Condemned

I am not saying, of course, that automobiles and radio sets are bad. What I am saying is that the acquisition and use of all these things engross us in such passionate concentration that life for most people is robbed of meaning, of dignity and of the possibility of beauty. Our generation is witnessing a head-on collision between the driving necessities of machine industry, on the one hand, and on the other the possibility of the good life. We have maneuvered ourselves—or we have been maneuvered by our machines—into a position where the very existence of our civilization seems to depend upon our capacity to consume.

But no great civilization can be built on the ideal of consumption as the chief end of man. There can be no bright future for a race that uses means as ends. Today, as in all previous generations, there is the same fundamental incompatibility between the things of the world and the things of the spirit.

Consequently ours is an age that would stand condemned by all the foremost teachers and prophets from the beginning of history. Socrates would riddle it with scorn; Plato and Aristotle would dismiss it as unworthy; Jesus of Nazareth would have none of it; Confucius, Buddha, Lao-Tsze—there is not a spiritual leader whose judgment we profess to revere to whom our acquisitive civilization would not seem repellent and unclean.—Raymond T. Fosdick, in the New York Times Magazine.

This Week's Best Saying

Sometimes the Lord must punish us, and at the time we think we are being terribly abused; but we find out later that his way was best. It took me a long time to discover that my father loved me just as much in the woodshed as he did in the parlor.—Quoted rather freely from a sermon by Roy S. Budd.

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you . . . that where I am, there ye may be also.—Words of Jesus.

Let There Be Light

By F. M. McDowell

(A Sermon Delivered at the Stone Church, January 3, 1932. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

I have chosen to read as a scripture lesson a few verses from the First Epistle of John:

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. . . . He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes. . . . Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever. . . . Let that therefore abide in you, which ye heard from the beginning. If that which we have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. . . . For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. . . . My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.

I would like to associate with this scripture some short selected passages from the 85th section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

This is the light of Christ, the light of truth, which light shineth. . . . And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is the same light that quickeneth your understanding; the light which is in all things, which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed, which is the power of God. . . . That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected by law. That which abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself and willetth to abide in sin can not be sanctified by law; therefore such must remain filthy still. . . . Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and justice continueth her course. When this light shineth in darkness, darkness comprehends it not until ye are quickened by the power of God; then you will know that I am the true light, the spirit of truth. If your eye be single to my glory, your whole body shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that which is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, prepare yourselves; purify your hearts; entangle not yourselves in sin, but abide ye in the liberty wherewith ye are made free.

The Light of Christ

The light of which I speak tonight, the light which I hope for the church, the light which I pledge myself at this New Year's time to endeavor to bring to my own soul, is the light of Christ. Something of the richness of the meaning of his light is portrayed by the following words: intelligence, truth, peace, love, faith, hope, confidence, tolerance, justice. Such is the light of Christ. These words spell light. These words mean light. They are the light of life. They are the light of Christ.

The absence of this light is darkness. The depth of this darkness may be described as follows: ignorance, falsehood, contention, fear, hate, distress, intolerance, injustice, lust. These words spell darkness. These words mean darkness. These words are darkness—the darkness of hell, the darkness of death. Back of that assertion is the testimony of the travail of men as recorded in the pages of history.

The light of Christ is cumulative. The Doctrine and Covenants says: "Intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; virtue loveth virtue," and the Psalmist David said, "In thy light shall we see light."

The light of Christ is creative. It heals, unifies, encourages, builds, discovers, achieves, cleanses, purifies, uplifts. When we possess this light we see all things differently. To walk in this light means to walk with intelligence, yet with faith; to search after truth in the spirit of truth; to seek justice and peace; it means to walk in fellowship with God and man; to love others as God loves us; to express that love in trust and obedience, in confidence, in tolerance, and in self-sacrificing service.

To define the light of Christ in words, the world has found to be a simple matter. The very expressions used have been so oft repeated that they seem trite and unconvincing. "Love"—how easily we mouth the word and how far we are from comprehending its meaning to say nothing about being able and willing to apply it in our human relationships. The world has found it easy to talk about "the way"; it has not yet been willing to follow in that way. Tragedy of tragedies! Shall the church fail here? Shall we mouth the words that define the light of Christ and still walk in darkness? God forbid!

At What Price the Light?

What is the price of the light of Christ? I was delighted last Sunday night, as you no doubt were, with the beautiful little drama presented from this platform entitled, He Came Seeing. I was particularly impressed with the significance of the closing lines. Joab, as you will remember, had been healed. His sight had been restored, and because he came testifying that the light had come to him, the San-hedrin declared him an outcast and warned his friends and relatives that they should have nothing to do with him. When Joab finally comprehended the price he had paid, when the meaning of his loneliness came to him, he threw up his hands exclaiming, "I did not know that seeing cost so high a price."

How little we do know about the price of seeing; the price of achieving clearness of spiritual vision, the price of allegiance to the light; the price of purging our own souls of the sin that causes us to walk in darkness; the price of walking the way of Christ.

The price of allegiance? Ask those who know. Ask Jesus, who set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem. Ask the early disciples, some of whom were boiled in oil. Ask the early Saints who worshiped in the catacombs and when they were captured were thrown to starving lions. Ask David Livingstone who made the light penetrate the darkest recesses of darkest Africa. Ask Joseph and Hyrum and Emma. They knew well the cost of "seeing" the light.

Turning the Light Upon the World of Today

The purpose of this effort is not to discuss in detail the nature and meaning of the light of Christ, but rather to turn the penetrating rays of that light upon the world and upon the church of the present day. It is the purpose of the light of Christ to purify, to cleanse, to redeem, to lead men into all truth. It is its purpose to bring light out of darkness. It seeks to pierce life in all its aspects, individual and social, both condemning, uplifting, challenging and cleansing.

In a critical time like this it is necessary to possess the light of Christ, not only that it may reveal our shortcomings, but that we may fairly evaluate our virtues and our achievements. The gloom of depression and discouragement is not the light of Christ. Under such a spirit of darkness we are likely to be unfair in our evaluation of the worth-while achievements of man and the abiding values of our present-day civilization.

Some Worthy Achievements

Without any attempt at making a complete list of the worth-while achievements of the present age, I mention only a few examples. One walks in darkness indeed if he is not able to appreciate the wonderful educational opportunities of the present day. In 1914 only one in ten of the children of our country had an opportunity to go to high school. In 1931, one in every two had such a privilege. In 1914 one out of every thirty-three of our young people had a chance to go to college, and in 1931, one out of every six. In a comparatively short time, as time is measured, institutions of learning have sprung up by the thousands, bringing to the doors of the poor as well as of the rich the privilege of securing an education. Many a poor lad now attends high school in buildings that excel from every point of view those available to the student of Harvard and Yale a century ago.

Scientific achievements have transformed this world into one of magic. What once appeared to be a highly fictitious dream, now has become commonplace. What once was thought of only as a luxury is now enjoyed in the humblest home. The machine age has made and remade our industrial order until it bears none of the characteristics of our industrial life a generation ago.

Of the fifty-five major inventions of American history, all but two have been given to the world since 1820, or since the time of the first vision of Joseph Smith. One third of all the startling inventions of America have been produced since 1900. Two million patents have been issued by the United States Patent Office in a century.

One might mention the victory of the science of medicine over disease. My mother buried three of her brothers in one week. All had died of diphtheria. A community permitting such a thing today would be guilty of criminal stupidity. One by one many of the greatest enemies of the health and happiness of men have surrendered to the advance guards in the field of medical research. The story of that advance contains all the romance, intriguing mystery and courageous heroism of the best novels.

It would be easy to add to the list of our achievements if we had time or if such were our purpose. The light of Christ should help us see and appreciate, and above all, wisely use the products which have been made possible as men have cooperated with God and obeyed his laws.

Our Social Sins

The light of Christ searches out not only our virtues and achievements, but our sins as well, both our individual and collective sins. It pierces the heart of our social order and challenges wherever men are found to be yet walking in ways of darkness.

What does the light of Christ, for example, have to say about war? When President Harding met at the wharf in New York the bodies of the boys who had died in France, he declared: "This must never be again." You remember, I am sure, our high resolves and splendid idealisms. "This must never be again" were the words upon every lip, in the heart of every intelligent Christian citizen.

Yet according to President Hoover: "The world expenditure on all arms is now nearly five billions of dollars yearly, an increase of about 70 per cent over that previous to the great war. We stand today with nearly 5,500,000 men actively under arms and 20,000,000 more in reserve. Because of fear and inability of nations to cooperate in mutual reductions, these vast forces, greatly exceeding those of the pre-war period, still are to be demobilized, even though twelve years have passed since the Armistice was signed."

The editor of the Christian Herald commenting upon this statement says: "In a nutshell you have the reason for much of the suffering endured by millions of people within recent years. Last year, at a time when countless thousands of people were walking the streets of the world in quest of work, when wives and little children were starving, when governments were tottering on the brink of economic disaster, the nation spent five billion dollars on armaments!"

What does the light of Christ have to say about this procedure? The annual expenditures for our army and navy in 1890 were sixty-six million dollars, in 1900 one hundred million, in 1914, three hundred and fourteen million, and in 1931, eight hundred and thirty-eight million dollars. When you and I were children, the cost of war in this country was one million dollars a week, and now we are spending two million dollars a day. During this quiet Sabbath day while we worshiped, our nation spent for past, present and future wars two million dollars, more than the total debt of our church. New York City needs this winter eighteen million dollars to keep her citizens from starving to death, while our country is spending sixty-six per cent of its total income for past, present and future wars. What does the light of Christ have to say in regard to this procedure? Is the church that bears his name ready to speak? What will be the attitude of our church in 1932? Will we be even passively interested in the disarmament conference of February next? Is there even a shadow of doubt in the minds of any as to what the attitude of this church should be?

Is America Pagan?

An official of the American Federation of Labor testified before a committee of the Senate that we now have 7,500,000 unemployed men in the United States; that the loss in wages and salaries in 1931 is eighteen billion dollars. He concluded his testimony with the words: "The spectre of starvation is drawing nearer all the time."

A cartoon recently published presents a wretched room in a tenement, obviously under-nourished children; a desolate woman; a haggard man, sitting unshod, while through the open door of the tenement comes a child with a worn pair of shoes in her hand, saying: "My daddy says you can use his shoes to look for work today, 'cause he's sick and doesn't need them." The imagination of a cartoonist? No. A prominent social worker testifies that this incident actually did happen.

What does the light of Christ have to say about an economic order where women and children starve in the midst of plenty? What should the church of Christ have to say about a social order that boasts of its ability to turn everything to gold and then starves in the glitter of that gold?

If we are actuated by the light of Christ, what should be our attitude towards our moral order? Frederick Allen, in his book, Only Yesterday, says:

The decade from 1919 to 1929, a decade of jazz, of an orgy of greed on the stock market, of mass production, of phenomenal automobile production reaching six million cars per year, of high-pressure salesmanship persuading us to buy a new auto each year and be "fair to the wife" by possessing two cars, of radio and ballyhoo, of Teapot Dome scandals, and invasion of the "Ohio gang" into national politics, of tax refunds by Mr. Mellon reaching three billion dollars, of tax reductions for the rich, of bigger and bigger football stadia, of the rise of the tabloids, of the capitulation of municipalities to gang rule, of the three-ringed circus of sex, crime and sport to beguile the leisure of an empty-headed multitude—in short, of the complete triumph of vulgarity and superficiality.

The editor of a leading religious magazine, commenting upon the above, says: "Never again will a nation more vividly reduce to an absurdity the idea that happiness is to be had through the satisfaction of desire."

Has the church of 1932 anything to say about our social order? Is there any relationship between the call to establish Zion and the needs of the world today? Is the kingdom of justice and righteousness, the society of God's good will, the solution to the problems of the present day?

What of Ourselves?

Shall we have the courage to let the light of Christ fall where it will, revealing our own individual and collective sins? Revealing perhaps the mistakes both of officials and members?

There are a good many charges and counter-charges in circulation today. The membership have pointed out the faults of officials and it has been easy to find them. We now return the compliment with the suggestion that many if not all of the mistakes which have characterized the work of the officials may be found among the membership as well. The members, for example, complain because the church has gone in debt and yet when a call goes out to the membership to help the church out of debt, it is found that they in turn have so managed or mis-managed their individual affairs that they, too, are burdened with debt. If the church has spent beyond its means, it is equally true that many of our members have lived extravagantly and have burdened themselves with obligations.

What does the light of Christ reveal? Does it reveal that we are still pagan at heart in spite of our claims? Does it reveal our motives are hate, gain, self, power, prestige, and popularity? Are these the things we seek? Are we still putting our trust in the treasures of this earth? Do we still expect victory through the use of carnal weapons—might and power? Do we still endeavor to worship both God and man? Are our gods such that “see not, neither hear nor know?” Is our standard of values and level of conduct no higher than that of those who make no pretence of religion?

If prosperity should be ushered in tomorrow, would we return like swine to the wallow? Would we follow the rabble into another drunken orgy of spending, thinking that in the satisfaction of desires one may find life? We talk about the lessons of the depression. I wonder if, after all, we have learned our lesson.

As the newspapers suggest that prosperity is just around the corner, I imagine I can hear some one smacking his lips. Can it be possible that we are beginning at once to think of the things we can buy and the desires which can be satisfied when prosperity returns? No doubt our shabby old car will look ten times worse then than it does now, our radios will be found surprisingly out of date, and of course we shall have to have some new curtains and some over-stuffed furniture for the parlor. Seriously, Saints, I am fearful of the return to prosperity until we have learned our lesson.

What of the Church?

What of the church of 1932? There is need of some clear thinking here. The light of Christ will help us in the proper evaluation of our achievements as well as in pointing out our needs and limitations.

There are some who talk about going back to the good old times. It is not the first time in history that men have talked that way. It is not the first time that it will be tried. It will not be the first time that such an attempt will have failed, for it is psychologically impossible to go back where we once were. The World War, for example, so changed the world that it is folly to talk about going back to prewar conditions. We can not destroy the products of our inventions and of science, and even if we could, our minds and lives have been so changed by their use that the mental attitudes and points of view of yesterday are for ever gone. We can not go back. There is only one direction of travel for us and that is forward.

A similar mistake is made by those who seem to want to have us admit that everything we have done for the past fifteen or twenty-five years has been a mistake. For example, a man whom I love and whose judgment I usually respect, said recently that he thought the church had made a mistake in ever establishing Graceland College. He said it always had been a mistake and would continue to be. While I respect this brother, I can not for a moment agree with him. I have seen too much of the transformation of life and character on the part of the youth of our church within Graceland walls to ever accept the point of view of the brother. You can not make me believe that our feeble efforts to train our children in the fear and admonition of the Lord has been a mistake. You can not make me believe that we have been wrong in trying to improve our church school and train its leaders, or in trying to improve the quality of our worship, making it more beautiful and challenging. You can not make me believe that we will have to take back all the efforts we have made in a quarter of a century towards the development of personal righteousness of the Saints. No! We are not going to repent of everything we have done. In a great majority of instances what has been done has been done in harmony with the program of God and in the interests of the building of Zion.

Let There Be Light

Let there be light in the church of 1932. Let there be prophetic light. A church that is to be prophetic must not only have foresight, it must have insight. It must not only read the meaning of events, it must change events. It must not only make note of passing events, but it must direct the course of coming events. It must not only record history, it must make history.

Let there be light. Let the church speak in no uncertain terms, without apology or equivocation.

(1) Let it fearlessly proclaim to the world the ethics of the mind of Christ which is now so splendidly vindicated by the experiences of history. Let it in no respect condone the ethics of power and greed and gain.

(2) Let the church in no uncertain terms proclaim the Godlessness of war. “They that take up the sword shall perish by the sword.” Is there any intelligent being under the sound of my voice that will assert in the light of the experiences of 1931 that any nation won the World War? Do you think anybody can win a war? Do you think anybody will ever win a war? Do you think that any problem can ever be solved by war?

As far as your speaker is concerned, and he is trying to weigh his words with care and to count the cost, this church in the event of another war must take a far stronger stand than it ever has before. Ten thousand ministers of other denominations have pledged themselves to never again from their pulpit render support to war. It is their feeling that such would be unpatriotic, unchristian, ungodly. Is it not time for the church that bears the name of Christ to speak for the Prince of Peace?

(3) Let the church of 1932 challenge the paganism of our social order. The members of our church must be led to see the absolute viciousness of a system of economic life which makes possible periodic periods of starvation in the midst of plenty. Is there any doubt, can there be any doubt, ought there to be any uncertainty as to the program of this church? The god of greed, profit, and money making has failed us. Its philosophy has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The handwriting on the wall needs no translation. He who runs may read. Is the church of 1932 going to apologize for the angel message—"From every man according to his ability, and to every man according to his need"? What about the command to seek first to establish the righteousness of God? Shall the church emerge from this depression apologetic? Will it be content with mere attempts to placate or offer superficial remedies for the injustice of our social order? Are we not now fully aware that the inherent evils of our social system were just as much in operation during the so-called era of prosperity of 1929 as during the period of the depression through which we are now passing? Do we not now know that there is something inherently and fundamentally wrong with our present social and economic order.

(4) Let the church speak with something of its old-time power on the sinfulness of sin. There is a good deal of cheap talk today about sin being out of date, a good deal of sentiment to the effect that the word "sin" is too harsh and that some softer, term should be substituted. I am not going to quarrel with you tonight about the name. It is the existence of the fact with which I am concerned. We all know that there are practices, individual and social which damn mankind both body and soul. These practices are sinful. Let the church speak out against such practices in no uncertain terms and with no apology wherever and by whomsoever such sins are committed. There is no use beating around the bush. Let the church speak out against sin.

(5) Let the church speak with certainty about its enduring convictions. The church had its origin one hundred years ago with the formulation of certain fundamental religious convictions. It expressed them to the world fearlessly. Its leaders gave their lives in their support. Let the church of 1932 express its religious conviction in no uncertain terms. What are these convictions? God is. He speaks today. He is at work in his world today. We are his children. Christ is his Son. Men are the children of God, colaborers with him. Righteousness and the kingdom of God's good will must finally prevail. This church is commissioned by God to carry out that task. Let the church of 1932 shout these convictions from the housetops.

(6) Let the church fearlessly proclaim Christ's standard of values and conduct. Let it set up that life is sacred, that the kingdom of God comes first, that righteousness and justice must prevail. Let the welfare of humanity, not the accumulation of things or the gratifications of lust be the standard. Why should we permit the street corners or the brothel to furnish us our patterns for moral conduct? Why should our young people meekly follow the way of the herd, sacrificing their own standards of decency because other ways of life are more popular? Must not the church take a stand here?

(7) Let the church of 1932 bring into clear perspective its fundamental tasks. These are the evangelizing of the world and the establishing of Zion. Again we mouth the words and promptly go to sleep feeling that we have solved the problem when we have but named it. Evangelize the world? We have hardly scratched the surface. Establish Zion? We often talk about Zion and frequently find ourselves opposed to the first steps toward that goal. There are six thousand, two hundred Saints in Independence. Have you tossed on your pillow a single night as you have thought of the staggering task of moulding such a body of people, excellent as they are, into the kingdom of God? Oh the teachers, ministers, pastors, lessons, hours of preparation and prayer that will be necessary to build Zion out of the group of people that have gathered here. Let the church speak with clarity certainty and definiteness about its fundamental tasks.

(8) Let the leaders of the church through fasting and prayer and friendly discussion arrive at a common understanding of the goals of which I speak. Let them with all the intelligence at their disposal formulate in commonly accepted terms our immediate tasks. Let these tasks be stated in concrete terms and arrange in sequence. Let them with determination and with patience, with wisdom and with love administer the affairs of the church so that step by step these goals shall be attained.

I am not using idle words. I know whereof I speak. The church needs such a program: it must have such a program. There needs to be less talk about "Zion" in one big word and more about the concrete steps necessary for its attainment. We need to outline our program in detail and have the courage, faith and patience to follow that course.

Let the leaders, at whatever personal cost, demonstrate to those expecting to follow that they consider the cause which they have espoused to be the greatest cause in all the world. Let them remember that the weapons of this warfare must be the weapons of the Spirit and not the carnal tools of might and power.

In closing permit me to say that it is my firm belief that such a church will not lack funds for its annual budget. Such a church will not have to worry long about its debts. Such a church will soon rehabilitate its missionary list. It will no longer be lacking in missionary power, or spiritual fervor. It will captivate and hold its youth. Such a church will find its conference of 1932 one of the most wonderful in its history because its ministry and members will have in a measure at least transcended all manner of petty selfishness. Such a church would pray for light, but it would already have experienced a great measure of that light. It would pray for more light and would hope that such light would not be limited to the establishment or disestablishment of certain officers. It would pray for prophetic light, light equal to the task of leading the world out of its darkest hour, light equal to the task of directing the people of God in their great unfinished task, light that would somehow command the courage of all to follow it, for I still insist that we do not know how much "seeing" will cost us.

My New Year's wish, my New Year's hope, my New Year's plea, my New Year's pledge is summed up in the four words, "Let there be light" in the church of the living God in 1932.

One of the pleasing things which comes with this period of reconstruction is a new appraisal of spiritual values. The churches are given a chance to analyze and find out just what things in their practice are really essential to the welfare of the Kingdom of God. The churches have been notoriously materially minded. They have talked of spiritual qualities, but have measured their own progress by material wealth. The churches are not quite so sure now that this is a fair standard of measurement.—William H. Leach, in Church Management.

The Warning Voice in Modern Revelation

II.—AGAINST POLYGAMY AND VARIOUS MODERN FORMS OF MORE OR LESS FREE LOVE.

By Elbert A. Smith

It used to be an axiom that all roads lead to Rome. Today all roads lead to Reno, for those who wish to go that way; and many there are who walk therein. "Change partners and all promenade" seems to be the favorite call in the modern dance of life. Anciently polygamy multiplied martial responsibilities, but at least made them more or less permanent, which, after all is only to say that while polygamy was wrong; the devil has improved somewhat on his methods.

It is not at all probable that when for the first time the early Saints read the Book of Mormon, it ever occurred to them that there was any warning to the church in the admonition against polygamy:

Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Jacob 2: 36.

In all probability they considered this warning addressed solely to the Nephite people and it did not occur to them that any other system than monogamy would ever be urged upon their attention. However, time revealed the fact that there was indeed a warning to the church couched in the language that we have quoted.

Subsequently the warning was again given to them in different language. As early as January, 1831, they were told:

And now I show unto you a mystery, a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass even your destruction, in process of time.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4.

They were warned against the mysterious thing to be had in secret chambers calculated to bring about their destruction, not immediately, but "in process of time." To escape that result, they were commanded to go to Ohio where a law would be given them that would preserve them as a righteous people:

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless; wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7.

When they had gathered to Ohio the law, thus promised, was revealed to them and among other things this commandment was given: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else."—(Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.)

It was twenty years later that Brigham Young introduced publicly to the attention of the people in Utah the doctrine of polygamy. He asserted that it had been practiced in secret for a number of years—"in secret chambers." He based his authority upon an alleged revelation which he claimed came to Joseph Smith and which he said he had kept in a secret place in his own desk. He declared, "I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not." (Millennial Star, Volume 16, page 31.) This doctrine he sought to make a part of the gospel law. Those who rejected it would be damned; those who accepted it would be exalted throughout the eternal ages. Had the Saints but heeded the warning given them in the Book of Mormon and so emphatically repeated in the revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants: "Thou shalt never have been led into this great evil which brought condemnation upon thousands of them and reproach upon the name of the whole church.

Fortunately there were those, even the leaders and members of the reorganization movement, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who did heed that warning. By it and through it they avoided and escaped the evil of polygamy and set their faces against it like flint.

We marvel now that so many failed to heed the plain warning set forth on this question in modern revelation. So far as polygamy is concerned the day seems to be past when the warning is needed. The late President Joseph Smith told us several times that the church would never again be led astray on that question. But it is to be remembered that the warning was broad in character and covered much more than the question of Utah Mormon polygamy. "There shall not any man among you have save it be but one wife, and concubines he shall have none." Every conceivable system of extra martial relations was thus condemned, and the question was put in its affirmative form in the revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else." In the same revelation adultery, the spirit of which has swept through the land, was condemned and the people were warned against it.

Today we find the marriage tie held lightly and all manner of philosophies being advocated to undermine its sanctity and overthrow the foundation of the monogamic form. Divorces are rather freely given almost everywhere in America, while the flood tide still flows through the divorce court at El Reno at the estimated present rate of about five thousand a year. Only forty-two days are required there in residence to obtain a divorce and those forty-two days may be whiled away in gambling, drinking, and dissolute night parties of all forms, so that progressive polygamy has become easy.

Again, such systems as trial marriage and companionate marriage seek to throw a sort of legal sanctity over those who still shrink from too open free love, but crave a degree of license. Such systems are for those who have no fundamental confidence in the permanency of marriage. They do not expect or intend to be loyal to their covenants and so beforehand desire an avenue of escape to be prepared—an easy way out.

Then too there are thousands teaching utter disregard for law, either human or divine, as touching sexual relationship. Having lost faith in God and the hereafter, such teachers hold that one is justified in obtaining the greatest amount of pleasure in the brief moment of life that is granted to the individual; there is no occasion to resort to marriage with its entangling alliances and responsibilities, for the spirit of this doctrine is to escape responsibility. Thus a flood of evil is let loose in the land against which the church should be on guard; not that the church is in danger of falling into such doctrines, but that she may protect the individual members against them. The best protection is found in an emphatic and persistent educational declaration of the sanctity and beauty of the marriage system and covenant.

The scriptural system of marriage, of one man and one woman united for life to be successful, demands certain characteristics of the soul, such as stability, loyalty, fidelity, honesty, and virtue. Where such characteristics are lacking in the populace the marriage covenant can not be protected or the home preserved, and it is idle under those conditions to rail against the evils of divorce. The only remedy so far as we are concerned is to set the continuous and persistent example of loyalty to the marriage covenant and in our preaching to the world to teach those qualities of character which make successful marriage possible. We must "cry repentance to this generation" and teach the way of life and of righteousness in and through which lasting homes and permanent unions may be established. Our teaching should be mainly affirmative, setting forth the beauty and righteousness and practicality of the scriptural system of marriage on which the Christian home is based.

Look up and not down,
Look forward and not back,
Look out and not in—and Lend a hand.

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—1

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The eye is one of the most important organs of the body. Without sight one is almost helpless. No blind person can possibly survive without aid. The eye, and the other special senses, are the windows of the soul. They give the individual information concerning his environment, which is constantly explored, from birth to death, by their important functions.

The optic nerve is the only nerve in the body that is exposed sufficiently to actually be seen. Education is largely accomplished by the ever-changing retinal pictures that are constantly before us. Eighty-five per cent of our knowledge is gained through the eye. Education depends, principally, upon pictures, visual impressions, illustrations, and the printed word. Effectiveness of the spoken word rests largely upon the visual memory. Indeed, the conservation of vision is second only to the conservation of life itself. It is one of the most vital of all the public health problems.

Much has been done in the United States to lessen the industrial hazards of blindness of which the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness deserves special praise for the splendid work they have done; but there are others, too, who must not be forgotten, who have aided in this great work. These are certain hospitals and local agencies, including many progressive industries; but all has not been done yet that should be done to conserve vision, for needless preventive visual damage is being done daily, for half of the total blindness, and one half of all the partial blindness, now existing, could have been prevented. It is not only a problem of all the nation, but it is of great economic importance because of the fact that thirteen out of fourteen blind people in the United States are partly, or wholly dependent upon others for support.

Public education along these lines, in which the church should take part, could deal successfully with this great problem. The articles that are to follow on the conservation of vision will deal briefly with the major causes of preventable blindness.

Of the total cases of blindness in the United States, fifteen per cent is attributed to industrial accidents, because of the lack of safety devices on the farm, or in the smaller manufacturing establishments. They are also found in the field and forest, construction work and railroads.

Accidental injuries to the eyes, causing partial, or total blindness, is rated at about two thousand, or one per cent of all such injuries. The most hazardous of all accidents is caused by penetrating wounds—the result of stone, wood, or flying bits of metal.

VII—TALENTS AND THEIR CONSECRATION

By Kenneth B. Curtis

Note: The reader will please remember that authoritative statements concerning stewardship may come only from the officers of the church. The author of these articles is presenting the matter for consideration and discussion. Other views and statements may be presented in these columns if of sufficient interest to our readers.—Editors.

In a previous article, "Business Reflections," we discovered a secret, that of using our patriarchal blessing as a guide in finding our talents in life. (1 Timothy 4: 14.) Also the kingdom of God on earth will be governed differently from earthly kingdoms. Still further we discovered man's starting point or foundation in the order of all things of God, since there is no beginning nor ending, and all else is vanity, is on the rock Jesus, laid, and that it is found within; but this place is bounded by walls with a small gate, the gate being narrow and hard to find. (3 Nephi 13: 11.) However, when found we needs must have the keys (Matthew 16: 19) which we also secured in the previous article. Having applied these keys, as in the case of a marriage, we find ourselves inside, standing behind this gate rather than in front. Surely if all things so far have been done as God has commanded, there will be a deep feeling of satisfaction that comes only from obedience to the most high God. We are really counted then as one of his children, in whose heart his law has been written, fighting with the weapon of love to set up his great majestic kingdom on earth; as he has promised God will protect and bless for ever more. (Isaiah 51: 7-8.)

So consider yourself on the inside, ready to start on your life work. The keys I suggest you hand to your neighbor. Remember, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." (Proverbs 1: 7.) You are not foolproof but weak, and will need to call continually to the Lord in prayer for help, so as to continue in obedience unto the end to be saved. As marriages are broken, so will stewardship fail, and men will be turned out, but never when they seek the Lord continually in all humility, striving to obey his word. However, it is written:

And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity can not enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey; and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment. And he saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him. (Isaiah 59: 14-16.)

So hold tight even if the ship does rock and God will rescue you.

The number of talents each person is gifted with is not for man to know. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." (1 Timothy 4: 14. Please note 1 Timothy 4: 15, 16.) "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." (Philippians 2: 12, 13.) "Now if we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered." (Romans 8: 26.) Then how much less could a group of men suggest a vocation for another, in order to benefit the group as a whole, when they can only see the outside of the situation themselves. That is, if a man does not even know what all his wants and needs are, how could he ever hope to do or suggest all things necessary to help the group. It is impossible. As the world is governed today from a material standpoint, then the kingdom of God, to be opposite, must be governed from a spiritual standpoint.

So with our guide in hand (patriarchal blessing) and our feet on the foundation Jesus laid we will win, and have the satisfaction of seeing the salvation of God on earth. Remember man can not redeem Zion for one will plant; another water, but God will redeem or make grow. (1 Corinthians 3: 6.)

So far we have learned the gospel of Christ was divided into two parts—spiritual and temporal; and that the temporal part was in turn divided into two parts, man's private and business life. Now we are ready to consider still another division in the business part of man's life. As mentioned before this distinction must be made; otherwise we will find ourselves entangled with possible failures. This division is man's talents (calling) and his work. The talents are his spiritual guide in business to direct his daily work. Man in God's kingdom will not choose his vocation and follow another as is now usually the case. In fact, he will not choose his career at all. He will follow the leadings of his spiritual calling (talents) and that will be suggested by his blessing; but in order to start that spiritual train of thought, one will needs seek the Lord in prayer and study. As is written, "Seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." (Luke 12: 31.) Therefore, in all we do and say, if we are to improve our talents, yea, if we are to gain more talents (Matthew 25) we will need call upon the Lord continually. For you will find your patriarchal blessing is based upon certain fundamental principles which the study of this word will make plain and simple; otherwise, your blessing will be almost like that of a sealed book; you will not be able to understand it clearly. Further, the big thought to remember is obedience.

It has been suggested by some that after a day's work, man is supposed to have time to work out his talents to better humanity. That is backward. Look at it from the other side. After man has spent the day working at his calling (talents, salvation) he must have rest, relaxation; he must mingle with society as much as possible to broaden and expand, to gain talents from the "rest side" of life, to benefit society from that angle.

Consider the motor car. It is used for work and for pleasure, to benefit man, and also it is used for crime and vice to waylay man. So will be found in the case of a man's body. It was made to work and please society, also it can be used for crime and vice, to ruin mankind. Therefore you will find talents in all that you do in life to govern you and make your life a real benefit to society and you yourself will gain real happiness.

Now this brings us face to face with the realization that man's business life is very closely related to his domestic and private life. Still, they must be kept separate and in order to do so that entanglements will not follow, a map will be needed because all the little ins and outs of a boundary line between two countries without a diagram would soon become confusing. Therefore a map with our guide (blessing) is necessary to build from. (Note: Diagram will appear in next issue.)

To start the diagram at the top of the page would be violating what has been set forth as to where God is. So, taking a sheet of clean, white paper, draw a one-inch circle in the center and write therein, "The Gospel of Christ," etc. See diagram number one which is complete as far as we will study in this series of stewardship articles. Note the dotted line that carries the thought from God in the center out in different directions or angles into all the different phases which pertain to a man's life. Also note the shape the diagram takes on, always enlarging in the form of a ball with each phase being equally balanced on the opposite side. No one knows the ultimate size the ball will take, or how many new phases will be added. As your talents are not known, so your ultimate size can not be com-prehended. This thought in connection with the diagram suggests the solar systems of the stars in the heavens. Also that all things work in cycles or circles, and every one knows a true circle has no ends. Meditate, study, "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counsellor?" (Romans 11: 33, 34.) It behooves us then to humble ourselves before God in order that God may place us where we are most needed and where we will be most useful. You can see that without marriages or covenants to bind together, how fragile and lopsided the motions of things would be. It is said each man has his own solar system, and that system must not clash with other systems or even within themselves. God wants everything to be orderly.

And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; and they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and wants.—Mosiah 9: 62-64.

Money is the medium of exchange today. If a man receives money from his fellow man for that which God gave him in talent form, he is not giving anything. The same applies to all natural resources. They were given to him, but he traded them for cash. This in turn will buy something else he did not have. As far as it goes the plan is legitimate. (Ezekiel 7: 20.) But upon receipt of the money it gives him power that was never meant for any man to have except those whose calling was of such nature. Further, money after once made, can be substituted for work, thereby allowing those who gain it to evade the first great commandment of work. (Genesis 3: 19.)

In a previous article, it was mentioned God's plan is just the opposite to man's, "and judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off." (Isaiah 59: 14.) God will, however, use a medium of exchange but not that of money. (Isaiah 52: 3.) Is a pound of sugar traded for a pound of coffee necessarily an opposite system? Is there any part in the Bible that suggests a possible system? Consider Joseph feeding and supplying his brothers in Egypt (Genesis 47: 11, 12) during a famine. The thought that Zion's plan of stewardship can not be started without money shows lack of faith in God. The big point is there must be some different method of exchange brought up. If God has given us the fullness of his word, and community stewardship is included, and he has prophesied Zion will be redeemed without money, it is up to us to search the Scriptures until we find an exchange.

In Doctrine and Covenants, God says:

Behold, here is wisdom, also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even a hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God. (81: 4.)

Study it, read it more than once, then ask yourself, "What do I get out of it?" Does it suggest a method of exchange? Read Genesis 47: 11, 12. Consider this point, if I had the talent to make brooms, mops, dusters, rakes, hoes, shovels, etc., and another man had a truck farm wherein he raised vegetables and such products as are necessary for the table, while still another man was gifted with the art of working in all manner of wood, cabinet-making, furniture and so on; still others were gifted in stone-working; others clocks, cutlery, pottery, etc., and others in the raising of cattle, sheep for wool, cows for milking; in fact if a community existed and was busily engaged in the works of producing all of one another's needs and wants, and money was not used as an exchange, surely we all agree the method of merely trading one thing for another is out of the question.

How could one receive his needs and wants in return for what he could do? The answer is simple, but if you love the jingle of money it will never work. Read this carefully; instead of money or gold as a medium of exchange, in man's life, God has ordained the storehouse. You get whatever you need, so long as it is within reason. You ask for your amount. No one doles it out to you. (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 12.) If you have a bigger appetite today than you had yesterday or you may wish to improve your home or your business, simply ask for what you want, show your pass or membership and sin not, and no one can say no. That's God's command. Then, in return for this service, whatever you can make or do with your talents, bring and give to the storehouse. John Doe, your neighbor, has nothing to do with what you make or give. However, if he wants a part of it in his home, or to use in his business, he may go to the storehouse and get it. Further, the storehouse method of exchange permits no man to gain power over his fellow man. For man in the gospel of Christ has been bought with the price of Christ's blood, and he is admonished not to be the servants of men but of God. (1 Corinthians 7: 23.) Therefore, if your plumbing leaks you could not hire a plumber with money, as is now done, but through the storehouse agent the plumber in the community would be notified. He rather than material form to the storehouse, for the benefit of his fellow men. The same would be true with doctors, nurses, carpenters, brick masons, etc. The storehouse is God's medium of exchange between men because he says all are to be equal, not in possessions, but in power and rights. If I want a new chair and the next fellow does not, we are both satisfied if I get it, and we are both still considered equal, for he has the same privilege I had.

So, then, every one of us shall give account of himself to God. Owe no man anything, but to love one another, for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. (Romans 13 and 19.)

Autobiography

II.—MY EARLY EXPERIENCES IN THE CHURCH

By James Franklin Mintun

The history of the baptism of myself and wife was associated with a peculiar incident. As before recorded my wife was not a member of any church when we were married on April 1, 1877, yet was not prejudiced against any church; and I had never heard her express herself as being favorable to one church more than to another. However, she had heard several sermons by the ministers of the Latter Day Saints, and had heard much of the conversation I had had with her mother in canvassing the doctrines of the church.

In the month of July, of this year, 1877, Elder M. H. Forscutt was holding a series of preaching services at the Saints' church in Magnolia, Iowa, as previously referred to, and wife and I were in attendance a part of the time. On Sunday, July 22, we were on our way to my father's to go with him and family to these services. I was led to tell my wife that I was convinced that the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, Church was in accord with the Bible, and I felt desirous of being baptized, and requested to know what she thought about being baptized also. She said, "You go ahead and be baptized if you think that is what you ought to do." I replied, "I would like very much that you should be baptized when I am, and I will wait till you have made further investigation." She had thought that she did not understand the object of baptism quite well enough. This closed our conversation, and I dismissed it from my mind, as I was sure that when she was fully prepared she would let me know, so that we could be baptized at the same time.

We heard an excellent sermon at eleven o'clock, preached by Brother Forscutt, but although baptismal services were announced for two thirty in the afternoon of that day, I never thought of saying any more to my wife about baptism till she mentioned it. I went to the place where my hat was left, and was, in my way, having a social time speaking to all that I met; but when I came to where my wife was, she said, "Shall we go home and get a change of clothing and return and be baptized? I am ready." I was surprised, yet happy, and we were that day baptized into the church for which we have given our lives since, when opportunity was open to us, and for which I still stand as ready to give my life as while she was living.

We were confirmed that evening, and when the hands were laid upon my head, I felt a power that thrilled through my entire being, which gave joy to my soul and convinced me that God had approved of my feeble offering, and was pleased to acknowledge that I was his child. I was promised among other blessings that I should be the means in the hands of God in bring many into the church—a promise that has been literally fulfilled.

Overcoming Family Prejudice

The bitter prejudice of my wife's mother was, if anything, greater than it had been before, and manifest quite frequently. She would carry it so far that when I would answer her inquiries by some scriptural quotation, she would become quite angry, so much so that she would for a time leave the house. My thought was to convince her of the truthfulness of the faith of the Saints. Our conversation would almost always begin when I would enter the house after being engaged in labor during the day, during which time she would read the Bible, and conclude that some question she would ask would puzzle me to answer. But when answered, she would always take the answer to be in accord with the faith of the Saints. Sometimes I would have to make an investigation to know whether I gave the answer that would lead her to better understand what the correct faith of the Saints was. At first she was so prejudiced, that wife and I decided that it would be unwise to return thanks at the table, for she accused me of offering "Mormon" prayers. This went on for several weeks. Once when we were away from home, those who entertained us requested me to return thanks. From this time we always asked a blessing on the food before we partook. We were living with her after our marriage by mutual agreement, she being an invalid, and my wife her only girl at home. She did not manifest a willingness that we should have family prayer before retiring, at the altar, but we would have our prayers at the bedside to avoid giving any offense justifiably, in her estimation.

During one of our conversations on religious subjects about this time, I was led, as I believed then, by the Spirit of God to say to her, "Mother, within one year you will be a member of the church you are now opposing." This caused her to be vexed, and she accused me of being excited and several other conditions that were unpleasant for both my wife and me, but we said nothing, only for her to consider well her opposition and consider well what God would have her do. God took a peculiar way of convincing her, and assisting her to overcome her prejudices against the Saints and their belief. One day she was on her way to visit an old acquaintance some little distance from the home, and when she was nearing the house she had to go over the fence instead of going through a gate, by going up several steps, then stepping over a board, and down on the other side of the fence. In stepping over the board at the top of the fence, she stumbled and fell and broke one of her shoulders. With this injury she suffered much for weeks. The pain was so great that she could not sleep. We were at this time holding our family worship morning and evening, but so great was her prejudice that she would not ask for prayers, although she was a believer in prayer, but not the prayer of a "Mormon," as she called me. She would say when suffering severely, "Others have been relieved by prayer, I don't see why I can't be." I was led one evening to offer special prayer for her relief, and felt the Spirit's witness that she would be relieved, and I thus expressed myself to her before retiring, "You will rest tonight." In the morning she told us that she had slept all night, and that "If I had been administered to by the elders, I would have to confess that was the cause of my relief." I took this occasion of informing her of the many ways that God could give relief besides through the administration of the elders. The pain never returned, but she gradually grew better, and the shoulder grew stronger till it was strong again.

This experience did not remove her prejudice, but in a short time she was opposing by word the Saints and their doctrines as much at times as she had ever done, and it did not appear that she would come into the church with faith in its truthfulness. But some weeks after this, just following our evening prayer, she was expressing herself very bitterly against the doctrines of the church, when I was again led, as I believed by the Spirit, to say to her, "You will soon suffer another fall resulting in an injury like the previous one, and then if you do not humble yourself and cease your opposition to the church, after being relieved, which you will be, you will suffer a serious affliction of the body, from which you will not be relieved until you will humble yourself, and consent to obey the gospel."

A short time after this I was in attendance at a district conference at Magnolia, about four miles from where we lived, and upon my return home my wife met me at the door, and told me that her mother had fallen and broken the other shoulder much like the previous injury. We were living in the timber and there were small limbs lying on the ground, and as was her custom, she was walking in front of the house when she stubbed her toe and fell. When my wife reached her to help her up, she said to her, "I wonder if Frank has been praying that I should kill myself?" From this injury she was suffering so severely that sweat was standing out on her face when I went to the bed where she was lying. I smiled and said that I was sorry that this should occur, but she thought I was smiling as a result of what my wife had told me that she had said, and she said so. I said to her, "Shall I go for the elders tonight that you may be relieved?" She said, "No, not tonight." She suffered all night severely. When I went to her bed in the early morning I said, "Mother, I am going for the elders before the time of the morning session of conference," and she smiled her assent. I brought them, telling them her strong prejudices, so they went into the timber near the house and had a season of prayer before going into the house. They then administered to her, and immediately the pain all left her shoulder and arm, and from that time she suffered no pain, but her shoulder grew stronger, until it was well as before. Even this did not fully convince her that God was with this church more than any other, but she would say that the prayers of the elders gave her relief, but it was because they were good men, and not because they had any more authority than any other good man. These brethren were Elders Magnus Fyrando and William Chambers.

It was only a week or two till the same opposing spirit got hold of her, and she was abusing the Saints for something, quite bitterly. During the fall of this same year, 1879, about four weeks before the time of the semi-annual conference at Gallands Grove, she suffered intensely from an inward tumor, and so serious became her condition in a few days that the neighbors who came to see her, would say to my wife and me when they were leaving, "Your mother is not long for this world." But wife and I felt differently, and we continued our preparation to attend the conference. In a day or so, when I was by her side, she said, "What do you think I should do? I can not live long in this condition." I was prompted by the Spirit, not my own, to say immediately, "If you will get the consent of your mind to go with us to the conference, and there will listen to the preaching of the word, and without prejudice make your decision, and are convinced that the word is of God and the people assembled are the people of God, that you will then be baptized, you will be relieved of your physical illness, and be able to get ready and go with us to the conference." This conversation was after noon, and during the afternoon I would drop in to where she was lying to see how she was. At one time she turned to me and said, "I have the consent of my mind to do as you have said." I then told her, "You will be healed." In about an hour the tumor came from her, and strange as it may seem, the next morning she was sitting up and sewing on some article she was getting ready to use at the conference. Within four weeks she rode about twenty miles and was at the conference. She, Mary H. Knight, was baptized September 11, 1879, while at this conference, by T. W. Chatburn.

Ordination and Beginning Experience

Soon after my baptism in 1877 a Sunday school was organized at the schoolhouse in our neighborhood, and I was chosen its superintendent; and on May 5, 1878, a branch known as the Pleasant View Branch was organized at the same place, several of the members of the Magnolia Branch withdrawing to join this organization. I was then chosen its secretary, and was also ordained to the office of elder. I felt the gift to minister then resting upon me, and in three weeks I preached my first sermon from the text found in Matthew 11:28. I thought that I had in mind sufficient to occupy the time, but I found myself talked out in about fifteen minutes, and I closed. I had felt well while I occupied, but the sudden closing was a surprise. From this date I occupied from once to three times in the various schoolhouses within the vicinity of fifteen miles, and felt encouraged because of the help that God gave me.

A few months after I had been ordained to the office of an elder, a brother living but a short distance from my home rapped at the door about midnight, and wakened me, and when I opened the door I was greeted with the question, "Dare you lay your hands on my head?" I at once was apprised of the conditions. I sat a chair at the door inviting him to sit down. Then answered his question, "I do not know." I awakened my wife sleeping in the same room, and I breathed a prayer to know what I should do for his relief. I was assured that God would be with me to his relief. So accordingly I administered to him, rebuked the power of evil, and the brother went away feeling relieved. He came to me the next morning and said that he had the best night's rest that he had had in some time. While he was blessed, I had a peculiar experience. Soon after I laid down to rest again, a hand was laid on my throat, cold like it had just been on a cake of ice. I could neither move nor speak, but finally I thought to pray, and I was relieved at once, and then told my wife of my experience. That influence troubled me all night, but did not have the power it had while the hand was on my throat. I have in all such cases had an associate elder with me, for I concluded that in such cases it was better.

A Seventy

At the beginning of the semiannual conference, previous arrangements having already been made, I assisted in organizing the Fourth Quorum of Elders, of which I became the secretary. Before the conference closed I, with several others, was chosen by the members of the Quorum of Seventy, present, to occupy as a Seventy. The only other one now living that was at that time chosen is G. T. Griffiths; others are deceased. After the conference had canvassed the choice of my name, I could not fully decide what my duty was; so I requested to defer further consideration of my name till the next day, that I might seek the Lord to know what my duty was. I was assured through prayer, that I should leave the decision to the action of the conference, and that God would approve of their action, and that God would prepare me for that special work in time. I was ordained the following day, and felt a peace that witnessed that I should begin to make the preparation, and continue this preparation till appointed to labor as a Seventy. I kept this thought constantly in mind, and employed my time consulting the Bible, and at times the other books of the church that I could obtain, prayerfully meditating upon what I read, and storing my mind with the truths which I could understand, believing that out of the abundance of the heart the mouth should speak. I spent my time gardening and teaching in the public schools, and occupying as previously in the schoolhouses in close proximity to my home.

At every conference or semi-annual conference I sent word that I trusted they would not appoint me till those in the field could be with their families properly cared for, and I would continue my preparation till such time as the church would be in a condition to bear a further burden, when I would respond as best that I could. I had become involved in debt through being misled by one in whom I had, and thought I should have, the greatest confidence in a business way. All that I had was taken from me, and I was left some hundreds of dollars in debt, but some of the debt was in the form of notes fraudulently held, concerning which I had assurance from God that in time I would be relieved. When these notes were sued upon the judge ordered them cancelled, for they were not held against me justly. The other indebtedness I was able to pay in several months. However, this left me without a home for my family, and that I believed I should have before I went into the field for my life's work. While thus preparing materially and by study and faith, I moved to Magnolia, Iowa, trading a horse and other property for a small four-room house, needing much

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch

Looking forward to Zion, it is our intention to press on with faith to accomplish the desired goal.

Entering this new year of 1932 with a determination to make progress in spite of the odds that confront us, we met the first Sunday in prayer and sacrament service with a large congregation present. We could not get the expressions of all, but those who did get to speak were hopeful, and expressed their desire to go forward. The meeting ran over the allotted time a half hour before Pastor Eli Bronson could find a place to bring it to a close. All felt renewed in spirit.

The following evening, was our business meeting, election of officers and other matters pertaining to the welfare of the branch. Brother Eli Bronson was unanimously sustained as pastor, also Brother R. T. Knowlton and Doctor A. W. Teel as associate pastors. Almost all of last year's incumbents were either sustained or reelected. We are grateful to and proud of our finance committee for its untiring efforts, and we are happy to say that we passed through 1931 with colors flying and had a small balance with which to start the new year. To prove its faith and optimism, the committee increased the 1932 budget quite materially. We are going to boost all we can.

Besides the Central Los Angeles Branch we have the East Side Branch and four active missions: Pasadena, presided over by Brother Jessé R. Johnson; Van Nuys, presided over by Brother Orlin Hagaman; Lennox, presided over by Brother Joe Knockles, and Glendale, which at the present time is under the care of Brother Bronson, while Brother Chase is enjoying a trip to the East.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell is spending the winter in California, and is kept quite busy giving blessings and preaching in the surrounding missions.

We are happy to have with us Brother Wilson and family, repairing to make it comfortable. We moved there in September, 1880, when I began clerking in a general merchandising store for Elder James M. Harvey, and repairing my little property, out of which I tried to make a home that would be comfortable for the family; should I be called away from home in the ministry, for I felt the responsibility of my calling. I continued clerking till that fall when I was appointed to a mission. During the time that I was clerking for Brother Harvey, I was preaching one or more times each Sunday and also assisting in the Sunday school. Brother Harvey was a very zealous man, and minister, so much so that when a call would come for administration, he would have me go with him, and if some of the customers were in the store he would authorize them to look after the trade till we returned, but if no one was in the store, and the call was quite urgent he would lock the store while we attended to the administration. This increased my zeal, while I did not think it was wise for him to leave his business as he did.

who are taking an active part in services, and are willing workers. Dr. Wilson was chosen as supervisor for the young people's group and Sister Wilson is to act in same capacity over the nursery.

While the matters of business and elections consumed quite a period of time, everyone present seemed to be in a cheerful mood, everything moved along pleasantly and quietly, withal, there were moments of jollity and good-natured repartee that could not be suppressed. Everyone was happy, and all departments were better represented than usual.

The latter part of the year the Mizpahs took charge of a commissary. Each person is expected to bring food stuffs to the church whenever he comes. He places it in the receptacle where it is taken care of and distributed to needy ones. I am confident in saying that more baskets were distributed during the holidays than had ever before been distributed. We are expecting to make this a permanent part of our church work, and hope we may be able to do even better this year, if it is required.

We have a few sick people in our midst who request the prayers of the Saints. Also let us remember to pray for the redemption of Zion and for the welfare of the poor. May God help his people.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Among the resolutions your correspondent has made is one to get the Lincoln news and activities into the Herald each month of 1932. Our readers will be the judge whether or not this good resolution is kept.

We feel that we have been blessed here in Lincoln during the past year. The branch is in a better condition financially than ever before, free from debt; the last payment on the paving debt was paid in December, 1931. There is a nice balance on hand to start the new year. We would not forget that in former years a few carried the heavy burden of debt on our church building and pavement assessments. Some of these members are still in Lincoln, among whom are Brother and Sister McWilliams, Sister Allen, Brother and Sister George Weller, Brother Grover Wall, Brother and Sister Farrar and Sister Blanche Farrar, Sister Muriel Zimmer, and Grandma Horn. Others have moved to other places, or have been called home. Of the ones here, we will say that they have been faithful and now that they can see the results of their labors through the past years, surely it has been worth while. Their hearts have been made glad and the burden lightened the last few years by so many active members moving in to assist. Never before in the history of Lincoln Branch has the priesthood functioned in every capacity as at the present, and the cooperation is inspiring.

The annual branch business meeting was held the evening of December 28. Brother Anderson was re-elected branch president; he chose for his counselors, Brothers Lenox and Poague. Brother Francis Schrunck was re-elected branch clerk, Brother Alvin Pfanmiller, finance clerk; Brother Poague, church school director and chorister; Sister Blanche Farrar, leader of the adult department; Sister Rogene Anderson, young adult leader, and Sister Viola Poague, primary leader.

The women of the branch have been busy and faithful in the work of that department. Sister Hale had charge of the group and was assisted by Sister Anderson. They meet one day each week to sew and quilt. They have turned over $144.10 to the branch in the past year. Sister Anderson has read seven books to the members as they work. They have sponsored several socials and church suppers. The group feels that it has derived much benefit in thus meeting. As many as care to, take their lunch and spend the entire day.

President F. M. Smith and Israel A. Smith spent a few days at the Anderson home during the holidays. They, with Sister Anderson, did some intensive work on the manuscript of Sister Anderson's book of the memoirs of her father, the late President Joseph Smith.

The first Sunday of the new year was observed with a wonderful sacrament service. The meeting was very spiritual and uplifting, and we are sorry many missed such an inspiring time.

Sioux City, Iowa

January 7.—A greater tendency toward cooperation, deeper, richer spiritual experiences, and an increase in financial support by the membership have characterized the activity in Sioux City Branch in recent months.

Through the splendid volunteer service of members and nonmember friends, our building underwent a complete renovation. New paint and paper, a new roof, and new electric fixtures donated by Brother and Sister P. J. Zimmerman, together with the scrubbing and cleaning given every corner, made our house of worship a much more presentable and inspiring church home.

Rally week in September, with every night an interesting activity, was supported by good attendance and marked interest.

Prior to Thanksgiving, Brother E. Y. Hunker conducted a series of meetings which, in spite of inclement weather, was well attended. The quality of Brother Hunker's sermons was sufficient reason for the interest manifest. This, combined with Brother Hunker's splendid personality made each one who came regret the closing of the series. Thanksgiving morning brought a service of Thanksgiving music and a special sermon by Brother Hunker.

On the evening of December 20, a Christmas drama, "The Empty Room," was presented at the church under the direction of Miss Grace Hoadley. A full house witnessed the performance. Raymond Smith, Lawrence Jones, C. J. Smith, Eunice Welch, Bessie Johnson, Genevieve Sands, and Bonnie De Harty, composed the cast. A fifteen minute-organ prelude of Christmas music by Mrs. Sands preceded the play. Marie Johnson, Evelyn Trede, Dorothy De Harty, Lola Jolley, Blanche Smith, and Carl Streeter contributed to the service in a tableau and with music.

Christmas Eve brought the program of songs and recitations presented by the junior church school, under the direction of Sister Bessie Johnson. A Christmas tree and pop corn balls donated by the Riverside Group of Women, made this a pleasant time. The junior church school this year voted to sacrifice the money, which has every year been spent for the candy and nuts given on Christmas Eve, and sent it in to the general church funds.

New Year's Eve long faces and dignity were for a time forgotten as a lively group met for a jolly evening of games and contests followed by refreshments.

The first Sunday of the new year was marked by two inspiring services. The sacrament service in the morning was one when each who took part recalled the blessings of the old year as he resolved to make greater contribution and consecration to the church in this year. The evening hour was occupied with a service for the installation of officers of the new year. This service was in charge of C. J. Smith. Those assisting were: Pastor G. M. Vandel, C. E. Burnett, Mrs. Blanche Haviland, Mrs. Bessie Johnson, Bonnie De Harty, Raymond Smith, Genevieve Sands. Officers unable to be present were George Vandel jr., and Kenneth Smith.

With you, Sioux City Branch wishes to carry on this year with new determination, new consecration, and a growing spiritual experience.

Clinton, Missouri

January 6.—Since it organized a Sunday school in April of 1931, this little group has grown. Our Sunday school organization took place at the home of Brother and Sister Roy Payne on Orchard Street. Since Brother and Sister Payne moved to their farm near Johns City, we have had the good fortune to secure the old Family Theater Building on South Washington, the west corner of the square. We furnish our own fuel and pay the light bill and have no additional charge for the use of the building. On the Tuesday before Christmas the women of the group met with much hot water and cleaning apparatus. About thirty-eight large seats were scrubbed clean, and the floor was made spotless. It was a heavy task for so few, but the Sunday school had a clean home.

On the first Sunday of each month the Saints enjoy sacrament service at 2.30 in the afternoon. Some of the ministry from Post Oak, Missouri, have been so good as to come to help us in these meetings. Brother and Sister Payne and children drove over eighteen miles "home" to meet with us on January 3.

We are now adding a cradle roll or nursery class with Sister Ortha Ravaille as teacher.

The new quarterlies are fine.

December 27 Sister Ruth Hunt was elected librarian to fill the vacancy left by Sister Pansy Payne.

We very much wish to hear a few sermons. Elders who have the time for a few evenings with us will be very welcome. We are happy that we now have a place in which a small band may worship.

We are counting strongly on the help of another family of members which is planning to move to Clinton. We hope others will join us and help to spread the gospel.

Lowbanks, Ontario

January 3.—The church school presented the sacred concert, "The More Abundant Life," to a large audience on December 6. Elder D. Clatworthy took charge and gave a fine sermon. He is a fluent speaker, and his meaning is always clear.

Church school classes continued in the month of December, and we were going to have a Christmas entertainment. The children had practiced well and were ready to give the program when scarlet fever broke out in the public school and the health officers closed the school and the churches. So, of course, we have had no more Sunday services.

But the epidemic is mild and no new cases have developed. It is expected that by January 12 the cards will be taken from the houses, and the people will be able to resume public meetings.

The Saints are well. Not one contracted the disease. But our Sunday school roll includes many nonmembers, and we are waiting until all are well. We have a large school.

We pray for the welfare of the church, and strive to do all we can to help.

Barberton, Ohio

Sunday, January 3, we were pleasantly surprised by the entrance of a Graceland group en route to the college. Members of the party were Hale Vicory, Pauline and William Wilson, Helen Carr, and Don Chesworth. They brought a wonderful spirit with them and were an uplift to the young people in Barberton.

Elder and Sister Hammond, of Akron, were also visitors at the sacrament service. A great degree of the Holy Spirit was made manifest throughout this meeting during the opening remarks given by our young brother, Edward Moier, the special prayer offered by Brother McConaughy, and the many testimonies. We are praying that God will bless his children and that we can more nearly approach the true meaning of those words in our lives.

The young people, under the supervision of Sister Odom, had a watch party New Year's Eve. Seventeen were present.

Plano, Illinois

January 4.—We are starting the year with renewed energy, and expect to do much more for the general church and local work than ever before. The young people are ably carrying on their part.

At a meeting of the workers on yesterday, it was decided to add to present activities a class devoted to the study of the Book of Mormon. This will convene at 5.30 each Sunday evening, and use the quarterly edited by C. B. Woodstock. The women's class has been using these quarterlies at the Sunday morning church school hour, but some who are teachers and officers do not get the benefit at that time.

With the exception of the chorister who has work elsewhere, all branch officers were sustained for another year.

President F. M. Smith met with the Saints here and those of surrounding branches November 27. We were most happy to see him and believe that much good was done and a better understanding of church conditions given.

The quarterly union sacrament service was held here December 20, Brothers Blakely, Malcor, and Turner in charge.

Near the close of the old year the women's class gave a bake sale to help the Christmas offering. Proceeds increased the fund beyond their expectations.

A pageant was given on Christmas Eve to a full house, and the usual treats were distributed to the pupils.

December 27 the adult division gave a pageant, "Mother," which was appealingly presented.

Three aged sisters lately passed away, Amelia Gillman, Loretta Pomeroy, and Pauline Blakely. All were more than eighty years of age and were residents of many years' standing.

Irene Johnson, teaching this year at New Providence, Iowa, was home for the holidays. J. F. Wildermuth and family, of Mansfield, Ohio, were also here visiting his parents. His father, Lester O. Wildermuth, is making a short visit home.

About forty attended the New Year's watch party held at the home of Brother and Sister John Moore. Contests, games, and refreshments caused the time to pass swiftly, and the Saints were soon welcoming in the new year.

Fanning, Kansas

A good feeling prevailed at the annual business meeting December 16. The work of selecting officers for the year was soon done. William Twombly was chosen pastor with James A. Thomas and William Marsh his associates. Fred Marsh was selected church school leader; branch clerk, Sylvia Chestnut; treasurer and custodian of the building, Floyd Mortimer; president of the department of women, Margaret Dittmore; librarian, Samie Twombly.

During the month of November appointments were kept with difficulty and in some cases had to be postponed because of inclement weather.

The Floyd Mortimer family and the Virgil Sheppard family, which have located here in recent months, are proving assets to the branch.

Recent speakers have been Brothers Sheppard, Samuel Twombly, Will Twombly, Fred Marsh, and James Thomas.

The annual Christmas tree and program entertained the members on Christmas Eve. Credit is due the committees in charge and the children who faithfully and willingly practiced.

We are gradually adopting the church school program, and hope to see the time when we can follow it more closely.

The sacrament meeting January 3, was in charge of Brothers Thomas and Mortimer. A peaceful, uplifting spirit was present, prayers were fervent, and testimonies hopeful and cheerful.

The Saints made sacrifices during November and December, and we hope, as a result of this movement, that the church is on a firmer financial basis.

Mallard, Iowa

Although news from this branch has not appeared for three months, this is no sign that the Saints of Mallard have fallen asleep. We are few in numbers but active in attending services. Special programs have been enjoyed on different occasions.

Branch President Benjamin Fish attended the priesthood meeting at Dow City and gave a fine report of it on the following Sunday. He felt he was well paid for attending, and received new light with regard to the church and the duty of its members.

The branch business meeting was held December 30, very few changes being made in the official corps. We trust that each worker will learn to know his duty and do it, that we might be as a unit in helping to build Zion. A general desire to share the work of the church is found in this branch.

Sister C. L. Carmichael was appointed the new publicity agent for Mallard Branch.

Little Benita Fish was baptized November 29, by her father and confirmed by Brother E. L. Edwards, of Pomeroy. We welcome her as a member of the church and pray that she may always keep in mind her covenant.

Velmer and Norman, our Graceland boys, spent their vacation with us. Their talks Sunday morning were gratefully received. Norman spoke on religious life in Lamoni, and Velmer spoke on college life at Graceland. They are very much interested in their work.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

The branch in Council Bluffs is carrying on in the work of building Zion. Many suggestions have been offered for raising the church debt, and Council Bluffs, among others, offered its suggestion, but the Bishopric did not see fit to accept it: nevertheless we did not sit down and say, "If he won't play our way, we won't play." Nearly everyone expressed a willingness to do what he could to help raise the amount of money for which the church had asked.

On November 10 Brother Ray Whiting called a special meeting to get the expressions of the people. All seemed eager to do their part. However, the young folks did not feel satisfied with the idea that nothing definite had been decided, so they asked to have another meeting called for the following week. This was done. In the meantime, they got busy and worked up so much enthusiasm among the young people of the branch that at the second meeting there was something like seven hundred and fifty dollars subscribed.

December 13 we had the pleasure of having President Smith with us. He preached in the morning and gave a wonderful talk, telling of his experiences during his period of recuperation, also giving a detailed account of the financial condition of the church and what was being done to liquidate the church's indebtedness. In the afternoon he gave a fine lecture to the priesthood of Southwestern Iowa and surrounding districts. About seventy-five were present.

Apostle J. F. Garver spoke in the evening.

On Friday evening the young people of Omaha and Council Bluffs, under the leadership of Brother Lee Lamdon, gave a vesper service. A lantern was used to throw the words of Christmas Carols on the screen while all joined in singing them. During the evening there were several musical numbers given by local and visiting young people.

On Wednesday evening, December 23, the play, "A Christmas Gift," was given by members of the choir and church school, directed by Sister Nellie Hall. Attendance was quite large, and the play was well received.

Sunday evening, December 27, was turned over to the choir for a musical and literary program. Besides special music by the full choir, a number of solos, duets, and quartets were rendered. The story, "The Other Wise Man," by Van Dyke, was pleasingly told by Mrs. C. R. Harding.

Independence

An excellent response was given by the Independence Messiah Choir, on Sunday afternoon, to the invitation to be present at the first rehearsal of the General Conference oratorio, "The Messiah." A large number of the choir members presented themselves for the formal opening, and a number of new recruits were passed on by the voice committee. Regular Sunday afternoon rehearsals at the Stone Church will be conducted during the remaining winter and spring months by the director, Paul N. Craig.

January 12 saw the final work done on the roof and coping of the new hospital, and brought to an end the present construction work on the building. "This sees the fulfillment of the promises made when the $25,000 fund was raised September 1," states the Independence Examiner. "The building is now enclosed, the roof on and the doors and windows installed to protect it from the ravages of the elements. The estimate for the work that has just been completed was $32,900. The work was done for approximately $28,000, said Lyle Weeks, superintendent of construction." The building is now locked up until a future building program is worked out.

Stone Church

The Stone Church congregation, seated in the main auditorium of the church at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, enjoyed another highly profitable service. Elder George Mesley, a member of the Kansas City Stake presidency, was the speaker, and his discourse, which presented historical events and personalities of the latter-day church, was much appreciated.

Under the direction of Paul N. Craig the Stone Church Choir sang two anthems, "The Earth Is the Lord's" and "O Gladsome Light." A lovely solo was sung by Mrs. Minetta Isaacks. Miss Lorena Kueffer played the organ.

Downstairs a group of more than a hundred and fifty boys and girls listened to a sermon on "The Good Shepherd," by Priest W. Earl Page, looked at a beautiful painting of Jesus as the Shepherd, sang hymns about the Good Shepherd, and gained a new knowledge of the love and watchcare of Jesus. Elder Will Bolinger, the junior pastor, and Mrs. Hazel Moler, the junior superintendent, were in charge. Mrs. John R. Lentell directed the music.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the evening speaker, giving words of counsel to a large gathering of Saints and friends. Pastor Sheehy presided over the hour, assisted by Bishop C. J. Hunt. Music was supplied by the Æolian Chorus.

The first meeting of the White Masque Players, January 10, in the Wahdemna Choral Club rooms, was highly interesting. An excellent paper on Eugene O'Neil, five-minute biographies, a preview of the plays of the month and a review of Emperor Jones were items of instruction and entertainment. The climax of the program was a review of the play, "Gold," by Mrs. D. S. McNamara, and the dramatization of a scene from the play.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude O. Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Thomas, of Independence, to Paul Dalberg, of Kent, Washington, took place at eight o'clock in the evening January 15, at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, Elder E. A. Thomas, before an altar of smilax, ferns, and potted plants. Before the ceremony Alma Bullard, accompanied by Mrs. Chester Burnham, sang "At Dawning" and "I Love You Truly." Mrs. Burnham played Mendelssohn's Wedding March. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Margaret Thomas. Barbara Louise Henderson, cousin of the bride, carried the ring. Frank R. Sadler attended Mr. Dalberg as best man. The Misses Ethel Thomas, Betty Hammontree, Marjorie Spahr, Ruth Holsworth, Florence Hodges, and Bertha Dawley formed a half-circle around the bridal party and later acted as hostesses at the reception. Mr. and Mrs. Dalberg are at home at 1320 South Logan Street.

Brother George W. Whiting, sixty-two years of age, a retired merchant, died at his home January 12, following an illness of several weeks' duration. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Ellen R. Whiting, of the home; two daughters, Mrs. Leonard Lea and Mrs. Henry A. Lund, of Independence; two brothers: E. E. Whiting and W. W. Whiting, Clitherall, Minnesota, and one sister, Mrs. Harry A. Winters, San Francisco, California. The funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the Carson and Son Funeral Home, in charge of Elder John F. Sheehy. The sermon was by Elder U. W. Greene. Interment was in Mound Grove.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday morning at Walnut Park, January 17, dawned on the Saints as they gathered for their prayer services. These early morning prayer meetings are well attended and much good is derived from them.

The church school at nine thirty, in charge of R. Barnhardt, is growing. Attendance for last Sunday was three hundred and ninety. The school takes this opportunity to send its greetings to Albert Chapman, who until he was transferred to Des Moines, Iowa, was a faithful worker with us, and is missed by everyone.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Pastor Samuel C. Smith, and C. K. Greene delivered a sermon which we feel was directed by the Spirit of the living God. We were exhorted to put on the whole armor of God in these troublous times. The choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "Lead On, O King Eternal."

The evening classes began their work at five forty-five. This meeting is in charge of the young people, and their efforts, especially along lines of program, are to be commended. Mrs. D. S. McNamara addressed the dramatic class. We listened to the Junior High School Orchestra which rendered several good numbers, also a solo by our young brother, Benjamin Bean, junior.

In the absence of Elder R. D. Weaver, scheduled to deliver the sermon but who is very ill at his home, Elder John Taylor spoke to the Saints on the church in the early days prior to the slaying of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum. The choir sang, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and the playlet, "An Hour at Liberty Jail," was presented by young people of this congregation. Every Sunday evening one of President E. A. Smith's "Conversations" is presented to Walnut Park Saints, and is most helpful to our service.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people of Enoch Hill greatly appreciated the splendid talk given them by President F. M. McDowell at their midweek worship service Wednesday evening. His talk inspired them with a greater determination to press on and consecrate their lives anew to the Lord's work.

The Clover-Leaf Four, a Negro male quartet, furnished the entertainment feature at the Friday evening Religio session. Their program of sacred and secular songs was much enjoyed.

Elder Charles S. Warren was the morning speaker last Sunday. In an able discourse he showed how God had directed his people through the ages and how we should depend on him in the present world crisis.

The evening speaker was Elder Fred Cousins, of Wyoming, who read a scripture lesson from Luke 14: 28 and Acts 2: 40. "Counting the Cost" was his theme, and he urged the Saints to live up to their privilege as Saints of latter days and so become a "peculiar" people.

The funeral of Mrs. Emma E. Whitsitt, mother of Elder Robert Whitsitt of this congregation, was held at Enoch Hill church at three o'clock Sunday afternoon. She was eighty-one years of age, and leaves two daughters: Mrs. L. I. Girton, of Kansas City, Kansas, and Mrs. E. C. Richards, Ririe, Idaho; four sons: Willis I. Whitsitt, San Diego, California; Chandaus R. Whitsitt, Enid, Oklahoma; Elmer R. Whitsitt, Chaney, Oklahoma, and Robert E. Whitsitt, of Independence; one sister, Mrs. E. Girton; twenty-two grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Englewood Church

Sunday, January 10, marked the beginning of the missionary effort by Apostle J. A. Gillen, who spoke morning and evening to almost as large congregations as our little basement church can comfortably accommodate. Attendance continued almost to capacity during the week. Brother Gillen has been greatly blessed by the Spirit and the fact that the same crowd comes back to each service gives evidence that the hearers have also been blessed. We feel that much good is being accomplished. The faith of the Saints is being renewed. Nonmembers are being enlightened. Music has been furnished by local and Kansas City musicians. On Sunday evening Brother Ray Bleil gave a group of appropriate vocal solos, Miss Jessie Belle Taylor accompanying at the piano. On Friday night George Anway brought out the Central Kansas City Branch Choir which gave some much appreciated numbers.

Our young sister, Mildred Kelley, wife of Charles Kelley, was called to the other side January 10. She grew up in this district and with her husband was a teacher in the children's division of the church school. The funeral was held at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence, Apostle J. A. Gillen the speaker, and Elder Perry Hiles in charge. A quartet composed of Ina Hattey, Hazel Moler, D. S. McNamara, and Glen Closson, sang, and Dorothy Koehler Waters was the organist. Interment was in Mound Grove. Sister Mildred was twenty-eight years old, and leaves to mourn besides her husband, her father, James H. McChristy, a brother, George W. McChristy, and two sisters: Miss Bernice Stobaugh and Mrs. Emma Adams.

On last Sunday the roster of the officers for 1932 was completed with the exception of chorister who will be elected soon. These were added to those already elected: Roy Howry was chosen to assist Arthur Welch as assistant superintendent of church school; Mrs. Fred Koehler, supervisor of children's division; Mrs. Lyman Fike, superintendent of primaries; Mrs. Roy Howerly, superintendent of beginners; Mrs. Charles Petentler of the nursery; Mrs. A. G. Hougas, pianist; Irene Fike, chorister of the church school, and Mrs. Fred Koehler, branch correspondent.

January 8 Brother and Sister A. G. Hougas and daughter, Dorreen, entertained the choir members and their husbands and wives in honor of the chorister, Mrs. Pauline Arnson. About thirty were present.

The Z. O. A. Class of young married people which for the past year has been taking a course of stewardships under Elder Leonard White, is now studying Lydia Wight's "Religion in the Home," taught by A. G. Hougas. Much interest is being shown and the membership is increasing.

On last Sunday morning Apostle Gillen began the second week of his series. He is at his best and plans to continue throughout the week. Sunday a quartet composed of Mr. and Mrs. Corliss, Mrs. Earl Moore, and Glen Closson sang in the morning. Pauline Arnson contributed a vocal solo, being accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Belle James.

In the evening Brother Gillen met the largest audience yet. Nearly every seat was filled.

The music of Sunday morning services has lately been greatly improved by the work of four boys, Wallace Fike with his oboe, Melvin Fike with his trombone, Elbert McConnell with his cornet, and Elmer Fike with his clarinet. Their help is much appreciated, but we need others. A number of the young members play violins and other instruments, and we are hoping that soon they will join these "faithful few" boys.

Spring Branch Church

The morning prayer meeting at 8.15 January 17, was in charge of Brothers Tankard and A. Peer. A good spirit prevailed.

Elder Earl F. Hoisington was the eleven o'clock speaker, his subject being "Where Are We Going?" He stated that we as a church have been on the road almost one hundred and two years, that we are still preaching the same gospel, and that we have not changed.

Brother Tankard was in charge of the morning church school. Our school is growing with great strides, and the branch's need for more room is very apparent.

A musical program was presented at the evening session of the church school. We missed our young people's class which was giving a play at Mount Washington. The play, "The More Abundant Life," seems to have become very popular since its first presentation at Spring Branch. It was given at Second Church January 3, and the players have other engagements yet to fill.

Elder H. G. Barto was the evening speaker. Choosing his text from 1 Corinthians 13, he talked on faith, hope, and charity. His message was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Weeks are the proud parents of an eight pound daughter, born January 15. Mrs. Weeks is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Farrow.

East Independence Church

A large crowd assembled at the church on New Year's Eve to witness the marriage of Miss Lula Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Thomas, to Gilbert Prior, of California. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion in colors befitting the season. Mrs. A. H. Christensen played the wedding march, assisted on the violins by her husband and son, Ammon. The bride was accompanied by Miss Helen Parker and Miss Modena Snow, and the bridegroom was attended by Cecil Snow and Merle Butler. Ring bearers were Masters Crum and Thomas, nephews of the bride, and flower girls were the little Misses Crum and Thomas, nieces of the bride. Elder H. V. Minton officiated in the double ring ceremony. A reception at the church followed the ceremony and later became a watch party, a large number welcoming the new year. This branch wishes Mr. and Mrs. Prior every happiness and is glad that they are to live in this neighborhood.

Sacrament Sunday was a day of peace, a large congregation reverently partaking of the Lord's Supper.

In the evening Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preached a forceful sermon, emphasizing the plea that the Saints walk worthy the vocation to which they are called.

The second Sunday of the year being Financial Sunday, Pastor Frank Mintun was appointed to speak. He excelled himself, showing deep humility and beautifully expressing the thought that any work accomplished shows the character of the designer. He made a splendid plea that especially the young people make out their inventories and start in designing their life work.

Elder A. H. Christensen started a series of Sunday evening lectures illustrated with the lantern. His general theme is proof of the Book of Mormon from ruins of Central America.

Sunday, January 17, Elder Fred Cousins, of Wyoming, occupied our pulpit, his discourse being humble and forceful and reminding us that we should count the cost of following Christ. Brother Cousins told us of the scattered condition of Wyoming Saints and of their faithfulness in going many miles to carry on the gospel.

Conference Notices

Southern California district conference will convene at Central Church, Thirty-ninth and Grand Avenue, Los Angeles, February 6 and 7. Meals will be served at the church. The scattered Saints over the district are especially invited to attend. President Frederick M. Smith will be present, and will speak Sunday morning and Sunday afternoon. Apostle M. A. McConley and all district officers will be present. Plan to attend and enjoy the association of our people.—W. A. Teagarden, district president.

Arkansas district conference will convene at Bald Knob, Arkansas, February 13 and 14.—Fern Emde, district secretary, Bald Knob, Arkansas.

The conference of Lamoni Stake will be held at the Coliseum, Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, February 7. Following is the program: 9.30 a. m., business meeting and election of delegates for General Conference; 2.30 p. m., illustrated lecture by Apostle Paul M. Hanson; 7.15 communion of the Lord's Supper. Provisions have been made to care for a basket dinner.—Lamoni Stake presidency, by Blair Jensen.

Conference Minutes

SPOKANE.—The business session of the Spokane district conference opened at three o'clock in the afternoon Saturday, December 12, at Spokane, Washington, Apostle F. Henry Edwards presiding. A motion made by Alvin Buckley prevailed that the conference be presided over by Apostle Edwards associated with the district presidency. The minutes of the previous conference session, held in June, 1930, were read and approved. District President R. H. Porter then gave a verbal report of his work in the district and told something of the conditions in the various branches and missions of the district. This report was followed by the reading of the statistical reports for all branches in the district and the non-resident group. Brother Porter was called upon to make a report of the needs of the group of Saints at Ione, Washington, which investigation was authorized by the previous conference. Brother Porter reported that Brother H. H. Cain, of Newport, Washington, had been supervising the work at Ione for some time, and was handling it very successfully. Elder A. C. Martin, district director of Religious Education, then reported on the church school organizations throughout the district. He stated that the new plan of Religious Education was being carried out in nearly all branches in the district, the larger branches, of course, having it more nearly completely organized. Reports of members of the priesthood were read together with reports of branch presidents covering the work being carried on in their respective branches. Spokane Branch recommended for ordination the names of Glen Fordham to the office of deacon, and Walter Storey to the office of priest. By motion both of these recommendations were approved and the ordinations authorized. By action of the Seattle-British Columbia district conference an invitation was extended to Spokane district to join with that district in their 1932 reunion. The matter was presented to the conference, and A. C. Martin moved that the invitation be accepted. The motion was seconded and carried. The election of district officers followed. A. C. Martin was selected as district president, and chose as his counselors Stanley Fout, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and G. E. Ward, of Spokane, who were ratified by motion. Muriel Whiting was reelected to the office of district secretary with Irene Bagley as assistant. L. E. Holmes was sustained as district treasurer. Claire VanEaton was reelected to the office of district chorister, and Gladys Fout was selected as district director of Religious Education. Orpha Coleman and W. W. Wood were chosen to serve on the auditing committee for three and one year respectively. A. J. Weeks has two years yet to serve. I. E. Holmes was sustained as bishop's agent for the district. Evangelist Richard Baldwin then presented the following motion: "We, the members of Spokane District wish to convey to the officers of the church our confidence in them and in the program as outlined for the debt reduction. We pledge our support to do our share in reducing the church debt in as short a time as possible." The motion was seconded and unanimously carried. The following nine delegates were selected to represent Spokane District at the General Conference of 1932: R. H. Porter, R. Baldwin, Alice Baldwin, Peter Peterson, A. C. Martin, F. H. Edwards, Alvin Buckley, Lutie Davis, and Margaret Kenny. A standing vote of thanks was extended to retiring District President R. H. Porter, and the secretary was instructed to prepare a written testimonial to that effect. Apostle Edwards announced that President Smith contemplated making a tour of the Northwest country during the spring months, and Brother Martin moved that Spokane District extend President Smith a special invitation to visit the district and as many branches as possible. The motion was seconded and carried, and the secretary was instructed to convey the invitation to President Smith. The conference then authorized the district treasurer to pay to Sister Alice Baldwin the amount due her for supplies used for work in connection with junior instruction carried on during the conference and institute session. The conference adjourned to meet at the call of the district presidency.

KINNE.—Mary Alice Wilcox, daughter of Elder G. W. and Estella Wilcox, was born December 10, 1893, at Lees Summit, Missouri. She was baptized when eight years old by Elder Moore. Was married August 4, 1912, to L. E. Kinne, at Leaky, Washington, and to them three children were born, two of whom survive: Velya Alice and Carroll Clay. There also live to mourn, her husband, Lylyse, of Spokane; her mother, of Spokane; a sister, Mrs. Grace Huffard, of Puyallup, Washington. She was a faithful worker in the church school, having been in charge of the primary division for nineteen years. She passed away at a local hospital December 22, 1931, her death being caused by gasoline burns. The funeral was held at the Spokane Church, December 26, Elder R. H. Porter in charge. Interment was in Fairmount Cemetery, Spokane.

O'BRIEN.—Annie B. O'Brien died at South Raudon, Nova Scotia, November 11, 1931, after an illness of several months. She was born in 1875, and was baptized by A. H. Parsons April 29, 1889. She always lived at home and was a faithful daughter, sister, and Saint. Surviving are one sister, Martha (Mrs. Walter Haley), a brother, James, at Scotch Village, and two brothers in the old home south of Raudon. She made arrangements for her funeral and calmly awaited the end. Interment was in the cemetery adjoining the Saints' church near her home.

ANDERSON.—Peter Christian Anderson was born July 29, 1845, near Allborg, Denmark, where he grew to manhood. He with his companion was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, July 16, 1877, by Elder Peter N. Brix, who was one of the first missionaries sent by the Reorganization to Denmark. He was married to Metta Margreta Jensen in 1871. They came to America in June, 1878, and lived near Weston, Iowa, until 1903, when he with his family moved to Holden, Missouri. He was ordained an elder February 24, 1895, at Hazel Dell, Iowa, by Apostle Peter Anderson. He lived faithful to the covenant he made to serve his Lord until he passed from this life December 21, 1931. His companion passed to her rest December 22, 1920. He leaves one son Anton and three grandchildren to mourn his death. The funeral was conducted from the home of his son in Holden, R. O. Self in charge, and sermon by Richard Bullard. He was laid beside his companion in the Holden Cemetery.

A Most Worthy Achievement

The Herald of October 21, 1931, carried an Official Call from the First Presidency."

This call simply and frankly sets out the following principles and considerations:

The church is facing a crisis. Since its work must go on its immediate obligations must be met. By January 15, 1932, these amount to $138,624.89. The emergency requires the mobilization of all the resources of the church. This places upon every member and officer the responsibility of complying with the financial law of the church in both tithes and offerings. It is this generation of Saints that stands today at the crossroads. The months of November and December, 1931, are therefore to be designated as a period of prayer and sacrifice.

Happily we may now speak of achievements, both tangible and intangible, for the church throughout the world has responded nobly to our call.

Elsewhere in this issue the Presiding Bishopric has furnished us a report of the actual results in dollars and cents of this special sacrifice effort. A goal set up, a goal attained—a goal which opens the way to new and further sacrifices, new and further victories. Nothing succeeds like success.

It is only the first hurdle, the Bishop wisely informs us, but we may be pardoned if we pause long enough to indulge in a smile of satisfaction and to take our bearings, surveying both the ground covered and the nature and direction of a new advance.

Most certainly it may be said that in consideration of the depleted ranks of our ministry, the limited budget for administrative work, the limited time available for the organization of a church-wide sacrifice effort, and especially in consideration of the continued world-wide financial depression which has taken us during these winter months to unprecedented depths, this achievement of our people must go down in history as an outstanding example of self-sacrificing devotion.

Nor is our success to be measured entirely in cold cash. The months through which we have passed have been such as to try the very souls of men. Again man's extremity has proved to be God's opportunity. Fasting, prayer, humility, repentance, sacrifice, renewed devotion, loyalty and conviction—such outline the pathway which has led to new spiritual heights. Evidences of these spiritual achievements have been received from all quarters of the church, from branches, districts, stakes, from Zion, and from the most remote of our foreign fields.

But we must go on. To quote Bishop DeLapp, "Together we have climbed the first mountain—now for the long steady pull."

Nearly a month of the new year has passed. We are already operating on the new budget. Its items, cut to the minimum as they are, must be met. Then, too, provision has been made for a substantial amount of debt reduction—all this a part of a carefully planned and widely accepted financial program for the years ahead.

These obligations must be met. They are no less definite or binding than were the obligations of the months just past. We have every reason to believe they will be met with further manifestations of courageous faith, similar to those now so fresh in our memory.

The experiences of November and December should be helpful. The principles formulated, the organization set up, the laws emphasized during that special effort are fundamental to all Church endeavor. It was definitely planned that such should be the case. We should now proceed along the same lines, each officer of the church teaching the whole law and evidencing his sincerity by his example; each member of the church complying with God's law in God's way, not for a week or a month only, but with regularity and consistency each day and week of the entire year.

We have not only attained new heights, but we have traveled in the right direction. Because we have been willing to go forward in God's way, we have been victorious in this endeavor and have gained the strength we shall need for the struggles of tomorrow.

Some one has said, "The resources of God are promised to those who undertake the work of God." More of the Saints than ever before are convinced that they are engaged in the work of God, more than ever before have felt the presence and compelling power of His unfailing resources.

Assured of the divinity of our task and the continued presence of the power, love, and wisdom of Almighty God, the work of the church will go on to final victory.

"God Hath Called Us"

The approach of the World Disarmament Conference at Geneva is attended by grave apprehension. Peace lovers are praying that it may achieve its purpose—persuade the nations to scale down their armaments. But pessimists are abroad crying, "It can not be done!" And there are many who for selfish reasons are doing their utmost to thwart the purpose of the conference. A strangely inconsistent condition exists, a condition characteristic of the rule of selfishness and fear. The world cries for bread for its little children, and yet the nations are glutted with armament programs and activities. The great bulk of the taxes go to so-called national defenses; people are ruled by fear; war thoughts are abroad, and there is actual fighting in the Orient. The press reflects the excitement of the times. We pause to wonder—is it peace, or is it war?

The world has forgotten the words of the Apostle Paul in his first letter to the Corinthian Saints: "God hath called us to peace." He was seeking to teach a people who professed to be followers of Christ. Perhaps as he wrote he thought of the words of Job: "Acquaint now thyself with him (God), and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee." Or perhaps the words of the Savior impelled him to write as he did. There is always Jesus' simple command, "Have peace one with another." How his promise lingers and soothes: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

No time is better than the present for us to think of our blessings—how God has called us to peace, how Christ has promised us his peace. We of latter days have been spoken to directly concerning this matter. I here quote a significant passage from a revelation given to the church March 3, 1873: "Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit, in comforting and strengthening you for my work."—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 13.

Peace, we are divinely taught, is one of the fruits of the Spirit of God. It is not a condition of dishonor or of cowardice. Indeed those who propagate peace are named as "blessed" by the Savior.

The cruelty, the barbarity, the gross selfishness, and the utter foolishness of war should be daily held up to our children and contrasted with the teachings of Christ who was the greatest patriot of his day. As the people of God and servants of the Master, are we thinking in terms of peace or in terms of war? Do we delight in singing hymns whose message is martial? Do we hold up to our children war heroes and achievements? Do we give them toy guns and cannons and knives for Christmas and instruct them in their use to destroy and hurt? Or are we hunting out and holding up to the eyes of all the deeds of people who believed and practiced peace.

The other day as I sat in a theater viewing worldwide scenes presented by the Pathé News, the words were flashed on the screen: "A unit of the United States coastal defense in action." It was one of our biggest guns in action. Beside me sat a child thrilled to breathlessness by the magnitude and the mystery of the powerful mechanism. In his excitement he turned to me, a stranger, and ejaculated: "When I'm a man, I'm going to shoot one of those, and boy, will I bring the enemy's old airplane down!" I thought of a bit of a poem which is supposed to have been written by one of the unemployed and left on a park bench. It was printed in The Intercollegian:

"To a Nine-Inch Gun

Whether your shell hits the target or not,
Your cost is five hundred dollars a shot.
You thing of noise and flame and power,
We feed you a hundred barrels of flour
Each time you roar. Your flame is fed
With twenty thousand loaves of bread.
Silence! A million hungry men
Seek bread to fill their mouths again."

Contrast war and its fever and fury with thoughts of home, love, plenty, friendships, work for Jesus, happiness. Let us think again of the simple statement: "My peace I leave with you." This peace we accept or reject. Are we showing the world today in our lives that we have accepted Christ's peace? Now is the time for critical self-examination. Dare we make it?

"God hath called us to peace."

The Passing of Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson

The membership of the church will be saddened to learn of the death of Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson, who has been a leading influence in the musical affairs of the church, a patron of young musicians, and a person of importance in the world of the art. A list of her services and contributions would be too long to give here, but will be presented in an early issue of the Herald, together with the sermon delivered by Elder U. W. Greene at the memorial service in Independence.

It must be said of Mrs. Robinson that she will be greatly missed, not alone for her services and her inspiring help in the field of her greatest interest, but as well for her warm friendship, and for the sincerity and charm of her personality.

The "official family" of the church, as well as the membership at large, share in the sorrow into which the family is plunged that one who had reached the height of her powers and usefulness, not the end of them, should be so unexpectedly taken. In behalf of the church we offer an expression of sympathy to the family, praying that they may have faith and fortitude to withstand the loss.

Reflections

IN THIS time of wars and rumors of war, it is the recurrent duty of the Christian to remember that our religion stands for peace, that His stay on earth was during a time of peace, and that He was called the Prince of Peace.

What is the price of peace? If, as was said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," then we may say that eternal patience is the price of peace. And sometimes peace is too dear to be bought at any price, for the price that is sometimes demanded is virtual extinction.

WE HAVE before our eyes an example of what it costs one nation to remain at peace. The people of China, groping to find their way out of the darkness of antiquity, find themselves hampered by the lack of a spirit of unified nationalism and loyalty, without a strong leadership in which confidence may be reposed, without the power and support to provide adequate domestic police protection, and without the means of maintaining an effective army controlled by central authority for the repulsion of foreign foes. At such a time educated Chinese are called upon to estimate the price of peace. Total submission seems to be the only answer they have to make to the Japanese invasion of Manchuria and the demands which the Japanese are making.

THE FOLLOWING clipping, taken from the Epworth Herald, shows how some of the educated Chinese feel about the situation:

Students in Chinese government and mission schools are a bit puzzled about developments in Manchuria. Said one college fellow to Professor Everett M. Stowe of Fukien Christian University: "We hate war but we can not help but prepare for war. We love peace, but peace is too far ahead of the time. We want justice, but justice is mingled up with might and force. Our ideals say one thing but actual circumstances force us to accept another. . . . If we are to survive, is it to be at the cost of everything for the sake of surviving?"

Christian nations are of course interested in the welfare of China. But sometimes it seems they are interested only for selfish reasons. On the other hands, if it is the duty of other nations to protect helpless China, must American and European blood be spilled to protect Asiatic territories?

ONE THING is obvious. The last of the history of the Manchurian trouble will not be written when Japan has forced an unfair peace on an unwilling China. It may require only this act to spread an intense spirit of nationalism in China that, with the great possibilities that lie in China's future power, will raise a foe for Japan that sometime in the future will overwhelm her. Manchuria is likely to become the Alsace and Lorraine of the East.

Japan is sowing bayonets and bullets in Manchuria. Japan had better beware. She may yet have a bloody harvest to reap in that unhappy country.

The price of peace is now very high for China. But the future may show that the cost of war is much higher for Japan.

In fact, the whole world may yet learn that peace is cheaper than war.

Radio Announcement

RELIGIOUS SERVICES BROADCAST BY K M B C

Every morning at six thirty the church broadcasts a devotional service over K M B C. This is a fifteen minute service conducted in the Stone Church studio, with Paul Craig at the organ and John F. Sheehy conducting the worship. Starting Monday, January 18, Brother Sheehy will start reading the New Testament with his radio audience, beginning with the first chapter of Matthew.

On Sunday morning from seven thirty to eight U. W. Greene conducts a very interesting period of Bible study.

At eleven o'clock every Sunday morning the Stone Church Choir is presented in the opening exercises of the morning worship at the Stone Church. This is an impressive service with beautiful music, and D. O. Cato, announcer.

The regular Vesper Service is given from four thirty to five o'clock. The program is in charge of Mrs. Sunshine Beck, with T. A. Beck announcing, and U. W. Greene speaking.

Every Sunday night at ten, with the exception of the second Sunday in each month, Bishop A. B. Phillips preaches a doctrinal sermon. This is the regular missionary service with D. O. Cato in charge. The musical program is provided by the Stone Church Choir, the Ladies' Chorus, and the Wahdemna Choral Club. On the second Sunday night of each month the Kansas City Central Church provides the speaker and the musical program.

Interesting Financial News

We think the Saints have every reason to be encouraged about the results of their efforts during the year 1931. Of course, it may be said that we might have done better, and granting that this is true we need but look ahead during the year 1932 and determine that we shall, by renewed activity in every avenue of church, endeavor to make up for any deficiency in devotion, loyalty or financial response which may have marked our pathway during 1931.

As we approach the task of the new year we may well give some consideration to the achievement of the past year. During the year 1930 the church sustained an operating loss of approximately $105,000. It was necessary during 1931 to make somewhat drastic reductions in order to bring our expenditures more nearly in line with our income. It seems from the information available at the present time that this objective has been practically accomplished, although it will be a matter of weeks before complete information can be given in this connection because of the volume of detail work in closing the books.

It is to be noted, however, that during 1931 the church, as well as the rest of the world, passed through the worst depression in history. In spite of this the Saints responded to the call of the church and raised an amount almost equal to that of the year 1930. A comparison of receipts for the two years by districts is presented below and will undoubtedly be of considerable interest:

Comparison of 1930-1931 Income by Districts

Results in October, November and December Period

The more recent objective which was the climax to the efforts of 1931 was that set forth in the attempt to raise $138,624.89 during the months of October, November and December. The reports are sufficiently complete to indicate that this amount was raised. In fact, if our estimate in one or two instances is not very far off our total receipts for this period amount to $138,671.

In the Herald of January 13 we gave a distribution of the funds received up to that time. It will undoubtedly be of interest to bring this more nearly up to date.

Principal Payments:
Accounts, Mortgages and Notes Payable	$ 20,000.00
Bonds Payable	17,000.00
	37,000.00
Interest	29,700.00
Budget Items:
Family Allowances	40,000.00
Elders' Expenses	3,800.00
Miscellaneous—Including Aid, Saints' Homes, Graceland College, Administrative, etc.	17,000.00
Total	$127,500.00

We have not gone into minute detail in making this report, but have presented figures which are approximately correct. A substantial balance of cash is held in our Canadian Account due to the unfavorable exchange rate and a small working capital account is also maintained in the bank with which we do business in Kansas City.

Included in the above figures is approximately $10,000 of family allowance checks which will have been received by the time this issue of the Herald is off the press.

It is to be noted that the disbursements include payment of three months' allowances which were paid, one half month in November, one half month in December, and two months in January. Besides the regular allowance payments we have attempted to give special consideration to emergency cases, although our ability in this connection has been more limited than is desirable.

Our 1932 Program

After giving careful consideration to the many plans for debt reduction that have been suggested, we feel that it is essential that the first step in our program must be that of raising the 1932 budget. It is extremely important that we organize for this purpose at once. The facts which are available also indicate that this is all that can reasonably be expected of the Saints during 1932. The budget is presented below:

First Presidency	$ 2,600.00
Presiding Bishopric	6,000.00
Quorum of Twelve	700.00
Dept. of Religious Education	825.00
General Office Expense	1,250.00
Auditorium Operating Expense	3,000.00
General Church Expense	1,500.00
Bishop's and Agents' Expense	1,000.00
Independence—Pres. & Bishopric	700.00
Lamoni Stake—Pres. & Bishopric	700.00
K. C. Stake—Pres. & Bishopric	1,250.00
Far West Stake—Pres. & Bishopric.....	1,000.00
Holden Stake	300.00
Foreign Missions	1,000.00
Interest and Exchange	70,648.44
Real Estate Expense	5,000.00
Family Allow., Inc. Elders' Expense.....	138,841.68
Holden Home	7,500.00
Saints' Home	1,000.00
Miscellaneous Aid	15,000.00
Graceland College	16,000.00
Operating Expenses	$275,815.12
Items other than Operating Expenses:
Pay'ts on Consecration Contracts	$ 12,000.00
Chapel Fund	1,850.00
Retirement Reserve for Debt Reduction....	191,796.05

The above budget calls for a payment of approximately $192,000 toward debt reduction, or to put it in other words, 40% of the total budget, providing the entire amount is raised will be applied toward our debts.

We are now sending quotas to every district which show the amount to be raised and how it will be applied. It is extremely important that during 1932 we make a sustained effort in raising the budget. We have suggested to Stake and District Bishops and Agents that they set a month by month goal based upon the circumstances and conditions governing in each district.

This budget can be raised if every one sets his hand to the task. The successful endeavor of 1931 is indicative of what will be accomplished in 1932. We shall endeavor to keep the Saints informed of month by month progress during the year.

Our Church and the Depression

The Weakness of Our Strength, and the Strength of Our Weakness

By Ward A. Hougas

The following is the fourth of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. Perhaps the readers will profit by a suggestion that they consider in connection with the criticism expressed in this article, that expressed in an article in this issue by President Elbert A. Smith.—Editors.

Practically every tragedy which has to do, either directly or indirectly, with humanity demonstrates two things, the strength of our weakness and the weakness of our strength. The depression as it affects our church has been no exception.

Many unpleasant things have happened during the past two years. Men have been released, building programs have been halted, departmental work has been reduced and losses of resources of all kinds have been suffered. This has caused many church members to be sad, others have become discouraged and a few perhaps have become rebellious—all because of our national and international financial system having become abnormal. What would have happened to the church had there been no depression? Would there have been any need for any radical readjustments or was the church billed to ride in perfect ease until such time as some national or international crisis called a halt? The specific relationship of certain phases of our work to the depression have already been discussed in these columns. Others will follow. What is the general relationship?

What has been, still is and perhaps always will be the real strength of our organization. Is it the long list of resources listed on the balance sheet of the annual report by the Presiding Bishop? We believe not. The real strength of this organization is to be found in the faith of its people.

The crisis, however, is demonstrating the weakness of that faith. Not that our faith was wrong, but that we continued to be satisfied with a faith which did not demand much of us. Our faith, such as most of us have had, has demanded no more of us than has the faith of any other professing Christian. Our faith has been extended to include only a portion of the law—the easier part at that.

Our faith that everything would come out all right in the end because “this is God’s church” has led us to pursue policies without intelligent analysis. We speak of the membership at large as they have expressed their wishes through that body called the General Conference.

Depression or no depression, this fatal weakness of our strength eventually would have overtaken us. The depression hurried it along, nothing more.

Yet as the crisis strengthened its grip upon the church to a point which to many seemed intolerable we began to discover that after all there was a great strength to be found in our weakness.

It is almost unbelievable when we are faced with the figures showing that considerably less than one fifth of our membership is supporting us financially with perhaps a little higher percentage backing us in other lines of endeavor. This has been our fatal weakness. Yet now, while facing a real challenge, we are beginning to realize that in this store of undeveloped resources, both of man-power and money, is to be found a strength which may place us on a more solid footing than we have been on for some time.

Now, what is our relation to the depression? We grant at once that, had we been functioning as we should have been, the matter of an international depression would be of much less concern. The sad part of it is that we were not functioning with our Zionite program. The result is that we are just as much a part of the depression as if we were not the true legal representative of the Church of Christ here on earth. The truth is that while we are the representatives of the true church of God we are by no means truly representative of that church. Had we functioned and developed as we should have done, in full harmony with all the law, such a thing as a financial depression would have but comparatively little effect upon us as a church. But, we are here. We have lost money, both as individuals and as a church. We have lost man-power. We have lost the confidence of many people. In fact, we have lost more than most of us realize at the present time and will do doubt suffer some further minor losses before it is over.

Another moratorium on the war debts will not solve the problem which the church must solve. A change in the political color of our government will not solve our problem.

Ours is a problem which we must solve for ourselves. Happily we believe that as a church we can and will solve it.

The past few months have been sufficient to convince most any one who is closely scrutinizing the spiritual horizon that the membership of the church is not only willing to solve the problem but is also able to solve the problem.

We have learned many lessons. Out of the travail and disappointment of the past year in particular has been born a new spirit, a new light, in fact a new vision.

The weakness of our strength must be overcome. Our faith to do must include all the law. Our faith must be a faith that will not only cause us to pray, to sing, to be honest and to live decent, but a faith which will cause us to go much farther in this process of doing than we have ever done before.

If we do not learn to keep all the law it will be but a comparatively short time until we will find ourselves again subject to the effects of the weakness of our strength. Intelligence, determination and loyalty must mark our activity.

The strength of our weakness must now be utilized. Undeveloped resources must be developed. The eighty per cent of the membership, which so far has a faith which includes but a portion of the law, must be taught and converted to the remainder. Those who have been living in fuller harmony with the law must move ahead.

We have been able to evaluate our activities and efforts during the depression better than ever before. Our invoice has been taken and we are ready for further growth.

It is true that we will emerge from under the depression bearing a tremendous burden. It is also true that we have at our disposal a tremendous strength—a strength which has been increased considerably by the depression.

The church has gained, actually profited by the depression. Some money may be gone, some active men have become more or less inactive, but in the final analysis the church is stronger, better entrenched and able to accomplish more today because of the depression than it would have been without.

We are not suggesting that our burdens are gone nor that our responsibilities are lifted, rather the reverse. We are saying that there is before Latter Day Israel the brightest hope, the biggest opportunity and the most sanely encouraging outlook that has confronted it in many years—thanks be to the depression.

Prophetic Warnings of Latter Days

III.—AGAINST THE "SPIRIT OF SPECULATION."

By Elbert A. Smith

So recently as April, 1906, the Lord, speaking through the prophet, the late President Joseph Smith, said: "The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain, is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided." (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7.)

The warning was clearly prophetic. Since that date we have witnessed the most wide-spread, long-continued and hectic period of speculation known to history. Nearly every one bought shares in something that was to make him rich quick without effort. The man or woman who was content to work and save was considered a fool—never destined to get anywhere.

Then came the crash and the gaudy house of promises built by the spirit of speculation fell. Fortunes were swept away, credits were dissipated, reputations ruined, and now all reap the sad harvest. But that outright and obvious loss was not so great as the previous loss to character entailed during the era of wild speculation—the undermining of those humble but basic virtues of industry, honesty, and frugality cherished by our fathers and enjoined by gospel precepts. These do not thrive in a system innoculated with the "spirit of speculation and the greed for gain."

Effects of the Crash

Two drunken cowboys decided to try a ride in an automobile. Presently they were in the hospital. When the first one to regain consciousness was questioned he replied: "We were hopping along about seventy miles an hour when my friend who was driving leaned over to me and said, 'Here comes a bridge.' And I leaned over to him and said, 'Better turn out and let it go by.' And he did."

The whole country was racing along drunken with the spirit of speculation when suddenly trouble was seen rapidly approaching. We tried to turn out and let it go by. All would be over in three months, we were told. There are some signs of returning consciousness. The disastrous results are far felt. America had the fever worst and is credited with world-wide repercussions as the result of her wild plunging. (It was in America where the warning was voiced.) Speaking to his Italian compatriots in the senate at Rome some time ago Mussolini said:

For us poor provincials of old Europe the explosion was a great surprise. We remained shaken and confounded like the world at the announcement of the death of Napoleon. We had been given to understand that the United States was a country of prosperity, indefinite and absolute—without eclipse, without decadence; all were rich.

Everybody knows by memory the things which now are commonplace—there was a motor car for every eight inhabitants, a radio for every four, a telephone for every three.

Everybody played the market. As the shares went up, everybody having bought one at twenty, sold it at a hundred and with it bought a car, radio or telephone, or made a trip to Europe, paying on the installment plan.

All that was marvelous. Then we had a series of black, blackest days. That crisis isn't yet cleaned up. Instead of prosperity there are lines of those waiting for bread and soup in the great cities of the United States.

The fact is, from that day we were thrown back into a high sea; from then on navigating has been extremely difficult.

Was Joseph's prophetic warning timely? Let Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation, answer:

A few people are always heedless of consequences, but we saw nearly the whole community make an unreasoned and unjustified mass movement into speculation, in utter disregard of the cautionings of those public agencies which our lawmaking bodies and our best banking and business judgment had set up. The public, through ignorance or eagerness or both, rushed to disaster as certainly as would a locomotive, driven at full speed over a busy line, through crowded districts, past all signs and signals. And then, as a complement to this speculative frenzy that lifted securities to levels far beyond any warrant of supporting profits to the industry or of yield to the investor, came the crisis through which we have been passing, when another evil phase of mass psychology overwhelmed the nation.—Saturday Evening Post, March 28, 1931.

To the Church Specifically

The warning was addressed specifically to the church. Unfortunately not sufficient heed was given to it. Scarcely a branch in the church that has not been gone over carefully and repeatedly by the promoters of this that and the other speculative venture. As soon as one died another was born,—an even more "promising" child.

The field has been gleaned over and over. Many of these enterprises never had even a faint chance of success. Many of them have been a complete loss to the investors; sometimes they entailed a spiritual as well as a financial loss, as when investments were solicited on the strength of alleged dreams or visions.

Many a good Latter Day Saint's home, farm, or business, was lost through the spirit of speculation. Many were impoverished; while there were thousands of minor losses. This is not to say that the promoters were necessarily dishonest; the most successful promoter believes in his enterprise. Your typical professional promoter is a sort of hypnotist—even self-hypnotized. He can make others believe anything—and himself almost anything. He sees great visions and dreams great dreams. Other ventures have failed—true—but this one is gilt-edged, fool proof, bound to win—it can not fail. Invest a dollar and reap two dollars—five dollars—ten—as you prefer. But look far enough back of the lesser salesmen who are self converted, often you will find a shrewd and calculating "higher up"—a manipulator who never loses when the crash comes. The investors lose—but he it is who has the "sure thing." The cards are stacked—even if the venture succeeds, the small investor is frozen out. A shrewd Independence man remarked to me, "I do not gamble, but if I did I would rather go over to Kansas City and gamble with dice or cards, for there I would have a chance, small, perhaps, but a chance—while in this other game I have no chance at all."

And yet I believe it safe to say that during the past twenty years, or less, Saints the world over, contributing relatively small amounts individually to speculative ventures, doomed to certain loss, have thrown away enough money to easily pay the present church debt and enlarge our missionary enterprises. Some who have scoffed at investments in church bonds have lost in these speculative ventures while church bonds to date have regularly paid interest to their investors. It is said that an Independence man, driven to borrow money, or desiring to borrow money took to a Kansas City bank church bonds and secular securities. He expected to realize little or nothing on the church bonds. To this man's surprise the banker threw the other securities aside and accepted the church bonds with the laconic comment, "A church is morally bound to pay." These other ventures recognize no moral obligations and they take excellent care to avoid legal obligations wherever possible.

Have We Learned Our Lesson?

Have we learned the lesson? God did not speak idly. With the return of "prosperity" or near prosperity, will come another flood of speculative ventures. Have the people generally learned their lesson or will they yet again risk the dunce cap and the ferule of divine chastisement?

Governor Franklyn D. Roosevelt addressed the Legislature of the State of New York on January 6 of this year on this subject. Recounting the orgy of speculation he said:

Today we recognize the unsoundness and danger. The bubble has burst with all its rainbow glory. The public has burned its fingers in the flame of wild speculation and has learned now to fear the fire. While it still fears the fire is the time for us to act.

Consider This Investment

While we yet see and remember, perhaps feel the effects of the fire, we may well resolve to heed the warning given to us as Latter Day Saints. In fact we may well resolve to give more careful study to all of the divine warnings and instructions that are ours. There is one "security" in which I would like to see our people invest; not in stocks and shares, but in men—men to go out and preach the gospel. We were commanded to avoid the “spirit of speculation and greed for gain.” We were commanded to “prosecute the missionary work at home and abroad” so far and so widely as we might. Have we given sufficient heed to either commandment? You answer.

Let the Nations Default

By John F. Garver

Reprinted from “Zion’s Ensign” for January 14, 1932. In this little article the author has very clearly and forcefully expressed what must inevitably come to be the view and attitude not only of the whole church but indeed the view and attitude of the whole Christian world toward the troubled question of reparations for war. The author is well known to the members of the church as a writer of stirring and vigorous editorials for the “Ensign.” We feel that this excellent bit of thinking and writing should be broadcast as far as possible.—Editors.

It was no matter for surprise when Germany served notice last Saturday she could not meet her next reparation payment. There was furthermore no adverse comment other than from Belgium and France. And from France nothing like what would have been a year ago. For, as Newton D. Baker says, even France has learned something during the past year. It is well that Germany has defaulted.

It is well that Germany has defaulted, because this development draws the issues squarely. Let the world learn and be forced to recognize that war comes at so high a cost it can’t be paid for; that when the cost even of wanton devastation is assessed upon those who have perpetrated it, it comes so high it can’t be met. Let men and nations learn that war is waged these days on such a colossal scale that when they make loans for the sake of carrying on war, they can not collect.

And mark it well, the nations failing to collect from Germany will put further pressure on the United States of America, to “forget” debts to this country, and no country, more than France, which is in a better condition to pay than any other. Hard as it may come for some of these nations, particularly Great Britain, to default their obligations, we hope this country stands pat, till the nations default.

This we say not in any spirit of animosity. It is only that it will be well for the world to meet face to face, in all its ugliness, the cost of war in money. And there is no way so effective by which to teach this lesson as for men and nations to find themselves unable to collect.

These debts are not going to be paid. Germany’s

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The United States Steel Corporation reports that forty-four per cent of all eye injuries result from the use of hand tools. If a small particle of steel, or brass, strikes you in the eye, besides the damaging traumatism produced, it may be carrying disease germs, with a resultant infection, or by its oxidation process, may cause an irritating action, followed by inflammation. Glass is not so dangerous in this respect. Magnetic particles are much more easily removed than pieces of stone, or splinters of wood; then, too, not being sterile, they frequently set up a purulent inflammation, which may totally destroy the vision. All such accidents, if neglected or not properly treated, may set up an inflammation in the good eye, followed by total blindness. Scars are another hazard to the eye, especially those resulting from the splashing of liquids or hot metals, acids, or alkalis. Often the entire cornea is left with an opaque scar from injuries, especially those caused by alkalis, on account of their tendency to penetrate and spread. The deeper the destruction, the more hazardous the accident becomes, depending upon its depth and location. Boiling water, steam, mortar, lime, acids, powder, and molten metal are burns that are quite common. Such accidents always leave a grayish or white-looking scar tissue. In many cases, adhesions form, and I have witnessed many cases where the lid has grown fast to the eyeball. This is brought about by the two raw surfaces coming in contact with each other, which in consequence, become adherent. The treatment of such an unfortunate condition consists in a complete removal of the caustic substance, at the earliest possible moment. Solid particles may be removed with cotton or forceps. If it is caustic alkalis doing the children for sixty-two years are not going to pay for the folly of their fathers. Nor are the nations owing the United States going to pay in full under the shifts of this killing depression, when the basis of payment as agreed upon is ability to pay. Let the nations default, then.

Let them default for a clarification of the international atmosphere; and let them default in the interest of world peace. For without any question, when men and nations find they can not collect on loans made to carry on war, they will not be so ready to rush into war as was the case in 1914.

damage, such as lime or mortar, the eye should be flushed out with a stream solution of boric acid; if the chemical should be an acid, the eye should be irrigated with a solution of sodium bicarbonate (ordinary soda). After such accidents, a physician should be called at once. Such cases require the very greatest care.

Many cases of total blindness can be attributed to a fellow workman, who has tried, by the aid of a toothpick, handkerchief, or some other contaminated article, to remove a foreign body from the eye. This causes the infection to spread into the corneal tissues that have already been lacerated, which may result in a perforation of the cornea or a deep-seated inflammation known as Panophthalmitis. No doubt it is useless to add that such foreign bodies should, only, be removed with a sterilized instrument, and under strict aseptic precautions.

Exposure to various forms of injury has frequently been found damaging to the eye, such as X-ray, too long exposure to Ultra-Violet rays, etc., which may set up very serious, acute conjunctivitis. Long exposure to intense heat is frequently damaging. It is a noticeable fact that glass blowers are susceptible to cataract; it is the eye nearest the furnace that is affected. Atrophy of the optic nerve is an indirect industrial hazard, through the absorption of poisons, such as lead or alcohol, especially wood alcohol. These poisons are frequently absorbed by the tissues and find their way into the circulation of the blood. Such accidents are best prevented by a safety device placed upon the machines. Goggles, while frequently of benefit along these lines, are products of yesterday and have been found more or less impractical. The Workman's Compensation Acts have been of great benefit in the education of the employees in matters of safety and have been the means of safety devices being placed in all of our large industrial plants.

The small work-shop and farm implements have not progressed so far along these lines. Anyone that is subject to progressive myopia (short-sightedness) especially the young, should select such trades that are not exacting on the eyes. Fortunately, the majority of nearsighted people are unusually mentally proficient—far above the average—which is a great help.

Enoch was a man who used to take long walks with God. One day they walked farther than usual, and God said, "Enoch, you are tired. Come into my house and stay and rest." And Enoch did.

Old Fable, Linking "Book of Mormon" With "Manuscript Found" by Solomon Spaulding, Bobs Up Again

BUT IT IS PROMPTLY SQUELCHED BY S. A. BURGESS, CHURCH HISTORIAN

Periodically when material for the mills of journalism runs low, some enterprising reporter resurrects and refurbishes the ancient tale that the Manuscript Found was the source of the Book of Mormon. Just as the farmer's cows would break out of the back pasture in midsummer when the grass became short, so the hungry scribbler for the press goes to this subject. And just as regularly the wardens of truth must get out and herd these enthusiastic strays back to the limits of veracity.

The following articles are, first, a letter from S. A. Burgess, Church Historian, to the Herald Editors; and second, a letter from the same writer to the Editor of the Kansas City Star. These letters will sufficiently explain and introduce themselves to the reader.

Editor, Saints' Herald.

Dear Brother:

A number of people have called our attention to the article on the Solomon Spaulding Manuscript Found in the Kansas City Star of January 4, 1932. This was also published in the Daily Dispatch of Moline, Illinois, January 9, and very likely was published in other newspapers across the country.

There have been many answers pointing out the weakness of the case by members of the church from 1839 on, and especially a more recent answer was the publication of the Manuscript Found in 1885 by the Herald Publishing House. This was done through the courtesy of President Fairchild who permitted an authenticated copy to be made and introduced with several letters giving a clear statement of its history.

But as indicated, the best analysis is that by President Fairchild himself. He shows repeatedly that he is not at all favorable to the church of Jesus Christ or the Book of Mormon, but he also shows the careful analysis of the student. I believe that we published the whole of his address in our Journal of History, Volume 17, April, 1924. It may be that the inclosed will be sufficient for the present.

Respectfully yours,
S. A. BURGESS.

Editors, Kansas City Star.

Gentlemen:

In your issue of January 4, 1932, there appears on the editorial page an article entitled "Say a Tavern Keeper Inspired Mormon Bible." In this article there are a number of small errors, as well as the whole statement being quite improbable.

This article says that Spaulding did his writing while at Amity keeping a tavern. All previous accounts and biographies of his have agreed that his "Manuscript Found" was prepared at Conneaut, Ohio, prior to 1812, that he removed to Pittsburgh or vicinity in 1812 and at that time placed the manuscript with Patterson. A year or two later he removed to Amity, but took the manuscript with him. There he died in 1816.

It is very interesting to note the way in which this story has grown since it was first published by E. D. Howe in 1834. It has been answered many times but probably the fairest statement, because entirely impartial and written by one by no means favorable to the Book of Mormon, is that of President James H. Fairchild of Oberlin College. We would like to see this whole paper of his republished in the Star and would gladly furnish you a copy if you wish. It appears as Tract No. 77 of the Western Reserve Historical Society. It is a paper read before this society and that of the Northern Ohio Historical Society in Volume III. We offer you here a brief resume with a few extracts. In his introduction President Fairchild states:

The question whether or not the Book of Mormon is based upon a manuscript of Spaulding is intrinsically of little importance. It required only a very moderate degree of literary ability and invention to produce the book, and several of the original leaders of the fanaticism must have been adequate to the work. It is, perhaps, impossible at this day to prove or disprove the Spaulding theory. (Page 187.)

In the next four pages there is a brief biography of Spaulding, the testimony of the witnesses offered by Howe; then on pages 192 and 193 he remarks upon Mr. Patterson's testimony of 1834 and that offered in 1842, also that of Mrs. Spaulding (Mrs. Davison by second marriage) in 1834, then her statement in 1839, and remarks: "This seems to be a great enlargement of memory or of knowledge since 1834, and it is difficult to read the extended and elaborate statement without reaching the conclusion that Mrs. Spaulding-Davison had very little to do with it." (Page 193.)

Next he gives in a scholarly way a statement that Mr. L. L. Rice bought out the Howe Printing shop in 1839 and that while visiting Mr. Rice, in a search for some anti-slavery tracts, they found an old manuscript certified to by D. P. Hurlbut as being that of Solomon Spaulding. A fragment of a letter with the manuscript bears the date of January, 1812. After giving a description of the manuscript he says: "The manuscript has no resemblance to the 'Book of Mormon' except in some very general features. There is not a name or an incident com- mon to the two. It is not written in the solemn Scripture style." (Page 194.) This manuscript clearly was not the basis of the book.

Was there another manuscript, which Spaulding was accustomed to read to his neighbors, out of which the Book of Mormon grew, under the hand of Sidney Rigdon or Joseph Smith, or both? If we could accept without misgiving the testimony of the eight witnesses, brought forward in Howe's book, we should be obliged to accept the fact of another manuscript. We are to remember that twenty-two years or more had elapsed since they had heard the manuscript read; and before they began to recall their remembrances they had read, or heard the Book of Mormon, and also the suggestion that the book had its origin in the manuscript of Spaulding. What effect these things had upon the exactness of their memory is matter of doubt. No one was present to cross-question, and Hurlbut and Howe were intent upon finding the testimony to support their theory. In its more general features the present manuscript fulfills the requirements of the Manuscript Found. It purports to have been taken from an artificial cave in a mound, and thus was naturally called the Manuscript Found. It sets forth the coming of a colony from the eastern continent, and is an account of the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, suggested by the mounds and earthworks in the vicinity of the author, and was written to explain the origin of these works. . . . Of the eight witnesses brought forward by Howe, five are careful to except the "religious matter" of the Book of Mormon, as not contained in the manuscript of Spaulding, and the theory is that this matter was interpolated by Sidney Rigdon, or some other man who expanded the manuscript into the book. This strikes me as an important circumstance. The Book of Mormon is permeated in every page and paragraph with religious and Scriptural ideas. It is first and foremost a religious book, and the contrast between it and the supposed manuscript must have been very striking to have led five of these witnesses to call this difference to mind and mention it, after the lapse of twenty years and more. The other three witnesses are careful to say that the Book of Mormon, in its "historical parts," is derived from the Spaulding manuscript, thus implying the same exception expressed by the others. Now it is difficult—almost impossible, to believe that the religious sentiments of the Book of Mormon were wrought into interpolation. They are of the original tissue and substance of the document, and a man as self-reliant and smart as Sidney Rigdon, with a superabundant gift of tongue and every form of utterance, would never have accepted the servile task. There could have been no motive to it, nor could the blundering syntax of the Book of Mormon have come from Rigdon's hand. He had a gift of speech which would have made the style distasteful and impossible to him. The minuter features of the testimony of these witnesses are obviously of more weight in their bearing upon the probability of another manuscript. When they speak of the Scripture style of the manuscript, the frequent recurrence of the expression, "and it came to pass," the names recalled, "Nephi," "Lehi," and others, the remembrance seems too definite to be called in question. But it must be remembered that the Book of Mormon was fresh in their minds, and their recollections of the manuscript found were very remote and dim. That under the pressure and suggestion of Hurlbut and Howe, they should put the ideas at hand in place of those remote and forgotten, and imagine that they remembered what they had recently read, would be only an ordinary example of the frailty of memory, and it would not be unnatural or improbable that such an illusion should be propagated among Spaulding's old neighbors at Conneaut. This view must, of course, be purely hypothetical, and could have little force against the positive testimony. (Pages 196-198.)

Comment is then made on the attempt to support the testimony by following the manuscript through

Patterson's office and the story that it came into the hands of Sidney Rigdon. He then comments:

This would be interesting if true; but there seems no ground to dispute the positive testimony of Rigdon's brothers that he was never a printer, and never lived in Pittsburgh at all until 1822, eight years after Spaulding left, and then was there as pastor of a Baptist church. Rigdon sent from Nauvoo, in 1839, to the Boston Journal, an indignant denial of the statement of Mrs. Spaulding-Davison, already referred to. A sentence or two from this denial will be sufficient:

"It is only necessary to say, in relation to the whole story about Spaulding's writings being in the hands of Mr. Patterson, who was at Pittsburgh, and who is said to have kept a printing office, etc., etc., is the most base of lies, without even the shadow of truth. . . . If I were to say that I ever heard of the Rev. Solomon Spaulding and his hopeful wife until D. P. Hurlbut wrote his lies about me, I should be a liar like unto themselves."

The claim in reference to Rigdon's connection with the Spaulding manuscript seems to become more and more definite with every new statement of the case, and without any addition to the evidence. Mrs. Ellen E. Dickinson, a grandniece of Mrs. Solomon Spaulding, in her New Light on Mormonism, recently published, finds it easy to put imaginings in the place of facts, in her statements in reference to Rigdon, as follows:

"At an early age he was a printer by trade, and is known to have been in Conneaut, Ohio, at the time Spaulding read his 'Manuscript Found' to his neighbors, . . . and it is easy to believe the report that he followed or preceded Spaulding to Pittsburgh, knowing all his plans, in order to obtain his manuscript, or copy it, while it was in Patterson's printing house—an easy thing to do, as the fact of the manuscript being left carelessly in the office for months is not questionable."—P. 47.

Over against these fancies are the facts given in the testimony of Rigdon's brothers, published by Rev. Robert Patterson, of Pittsburgh, that when Spaulding was reading his manuscript to his neighbors in Conneaut, Rigdon was a boy seventeen or eighteen years of age, on his father's farm in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania; that he never was a printer, and did not live in Pittsburgh until 1822, six years after Spaulding's death.

These are only a few extracts. There are further statements as illustration of the facility with which a shadowy tradition becomes definite "history." There does not appear to be any evidence that Smith and Rigdon had any acquaintance until after the publication of this book. He also discusses the later story of there being two manuscripts, points out its weakness and advises his hearers to wait until such second manuscript is produced and authenticated.

We do not doubt that the tavern still stands and do not question that Mr. Spaulding died at that place in 1816. But the story that his writings were the basis of the Book of Mormon is highly improbable.

In the interest of fairness we respectfully request that you call particular attention to this critical examination by President Fairchild as was given to the original partisan account.

Respectfully submitted,

S. A. BURGESS,

Historian.

A Declaration of the King's Law

VIII.—PREPARING FOR CHRIST

By Kenneth B. Curtis

Note: The reader will please remember that authoritative statements concerning stewardship may come only from the officers of the church. The author of these articles is presenting the matter for consideration and discussion. Other views and statements may be presented in these columns if of sufficient interest to our readers.—Editors.

I truly believe the church would never sponsor any gathering movement of the Saints in Zion to practice communism. The scriptural phrase "and all shall be equal," is so often misinterpreted to mean communism. Several kinds of religious organizations in the past have attempted just this very thing. Naturally, failure has been the result as it always will be. At least, I guess I might be tolerant enough to say that none of them have ever made a success of it yet. The thought of holding all things in common is so terribly sliced up with different opinions that we are prevented from seeing anything else but a nest where the lazy and shiftless may come and enjoy themselves for ever more. Neither does community stewardship harbor socialism. Just because Christ was so bitter against the rich man or capitalist, he did not teach the other extreme which is socialism or communism.

In studying Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4 we find the Lord saying: "Behold, here is wisdom, also, in me, for your good. And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships." It will be noted that God could see community stewardship harassed with communistic and socialistic opinions and therefore made this statement as a warning. Further, it is very similar to the "conditional" type of statement. That is to say, the claims, which are equal with all, are granted provided your stewardship concerns are benefited.

Man was made to work—I don't mean as a slave, but we all know what God told Adam when he drove him from the Garden of Eden. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." (Genesis 3: 19.) And community stewardship coming from the same divine source would certainly uphold this commandment. As to the conditional side, we find Christ speaking very plainly in Matthew 13: 12: "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." Christ's statement not only pertains to property (as I will call man's earthly goods) but also man's talents.

Let us analyze this last paragraph. Aristotle, speaking of economics, says: "Man's purpose in trading is for gain." Consider it, you are working entirely for self in that case. How today is a nation's wealth measured? By its property. What does Christ mean when he says: "My kingdom is not of this world"? (John 18: 36.) When applied to economics, it means Aristotle's statement is wrong. It should read: "Man's purpose in trading is to grow." (Motion is life.) Also the wealth of Christ's kingdom on this earth will not depend upon its property, but upon the community's ability—talents, if you please. "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given." Talents are spiritual. Christ's kingdom on earth is measured (if it can be measured) spiritually. Also it is to build up the individual spiritually. If man, when he is resurrected, will be quickened in the glory that he lived for in his earthly life (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6), then the wealthiest men, not only in Christ's kingdom on earth but the kingdom after the resurrection, will be the men that gain the most talents in this life. (Matthew 25: 20-26.) For the greater their ability and wisdom, derived from their talents, the greater will be their property to manage. Hence, community stewardship is not communism.

According to prophecy, Christ's kingdom on this earth is to be the richest and most powerful nation the world will ever know. Why? To answer it, imagine the World War of 1914 to 1918. There were about 60,000,000 men engaged in that conflict, counting both sides. When each one was equipped with a death-dealing weapon to destroy, how much hell and destruction took place? Now turn that around and place 60,000,000 men in various occupations that correspond to their divine calling or talents utilizing every ounce of the group's ability to build and assist and what have you? Heaven on earth. The commandment to gather together in Zion is not to form a new government or to make a nest for lazy and shiftless people, but to enable those that want to accomplish something to find a ready demand for either their services or their products. In short, community stewardship is democracy in every phase of sociology, including economics.

Trading is necessary in human life, therefore, man must pay for what he gets; and the storehouse method of exchange, although it can not dictate, will require each steward to give an account of himself.

But remember that idleness breeds mischief and sin condemns a steward. "Give and take" is the storehouse motto. Don't confuse this with government, this comes under the head of economics.

May I offer the following discussion from a purely scientific study of socio-economics, to show the necessity of the Patriarchal Blessing in connection with finding the talents to direct the individual's work, so as society collectively may be self-supporting.

The figure above represents a map of Community Stewardship laid out as a solar system, depicting its spiritual and temporal elements in their respective relation one for the other. The letters (temporal) and the numerals (spiritual) are represented and explained in the chart below. The letter "L" is the steward, the rest analyze him. Note the balance of the spiritual and temporal elements. This is a single phase of community stewardship; the ultimate size is not known. See the previous article, "Talents and Their Consecration."

All things were created spiritually before they were created temporally. Let us reason on this point for just a moment. We all know there are two eternities, future and past, and that the future eternity would of a necessity be formed before the past eternity. The point involved is that although both eternities are facts yet it takes the present tense of things to give or form the bodies into actual existence, and from then on it is no longer termed, in a future state, but rather, past eternity or reality. Note the three groupings, future, present and past, and that the present is used as a medium of exchange between the two eternities.

The question is asked, no doubt, What is the need of this explanation? The answer originates in the study of mathematics. A third unknown part of a formula can always be found if the other two are given. Therefore, if we know the past with the present we are able to decipher the future within certain limits. Consider the driver of a motor car, in fact any type of vehicle. It is absolutely necessary for the driver to see a certain distance ahead.

Now if God is leading the group he will work within each individual and consequently there are created three classes of people so talented that one class will be gifted as prophets, writers, inventors, etc., to see into the future eternity and discover or open the way for the main body, or second class. This second class are builders in the sense that they are talented to materialize the future or theory into actual existence. This second class will be found in the majority over the other two classes. Finally the third class known as historians, archaeologists, etc., will record and note the movement of creation as its existence rolls into the past eternity to be in time forgotten as far as temporal man is concerned.

Consider an advancing army in an unknown country with its scouts opening the way for the main body and the rear guard marking its safety from behind. All three classes are equal in importance, and only the God of heaven could operate in the group individually to produce such a talented society. "To him that hath, more shall be given." It is the lazy shiftless evil-doer that is to be barred from the storehouse and not the righteous. They will be abundantly nourished and have equal claims.

I would advise the student of community stewardship to study the school of the prophets mentioned in 85: 39, Doctrine and Covenants. It is evidently closely connected with the washing of feet, and it seems clear to me that the washing of feet is a function of stewardship. Because both Christ and Paul speak of it as pertaining to a symbol of Godly fellowship. (See John 13; 12: 3; Timothy 5: 10.) Also it is figuratively mentioned by Isaiah (4: 4) when speaking of Zion, God's footstool. But concerning the school of the prophets I withhold my personal opinion until further research work has been accomplished.

Now here a thought arises regarding necessary products for the storehouse that only the outside world has at the beginning. This is answered by the commandment given in prophetic form that is found in various parts of the Scriptures. We are to come away from the outside world in ways and actions and thoughts, that we are not to touch their idols of gold and silver, their wares, to ignore their religions, their doctrines; in short to separate completely and sever all connections with them. To quote: "Depart ye, depart ye, [the elect] go ye out from thence, [outside world] touch no unclean thing [wares and gold]; go ye out of the midst of her [abominable churches]; be ye clean [morally] that bear the vessels of the Lord." (Isaiah 52: 11. More quotations are, Jeremiah 50: 8; 51: 6; Isaiah 48: 20; Zechariah 2: 7; 2 Corinthians 6: 17; Revelation 18: 4, and many others.)

However, Zion is cautioned not to leave in haste, but rather little by little. As the talents in the community grow, as the different needs are produced within, as the necessary natural resources are obtained by the securing of land through donations and the sale of internally produced goods being sold for cash to the outside world; in short as fast as is possible to become self-sustaining, not with cash, not with fine buildings, not with extravagant luxuries, but with our needs and just wants supplied, we are to draw away from the world. To quote the caution: "For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you: and the Lord of Israel will be your rereward." (Isaiah 52: 12; Micah 2; Doctrine and Covenants 57.) This is how the separation so many people can not understand will take place. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavily laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matthew 11: 28-30.)

Changing scenes, we have the home before us now for a brief second. It must be made ready for Christ the same as our business. A home full of little children is a delight to Christ, our Savior. A home full of love has the essence of romance. The husband is the knight; the wife the fair lady whom the knight awakens by a kiss. The happiness of companionship, of devotion one for the other, is wonderful building material. In the progress of building from the foundation Christ laid, the knight and fair lady become father and mother. This has all been made possible by a marriage or covenant. As the home grows it begins to blossom out, not in one direction but all over. Like a beacon it stands for stability, assurance, the outward expressions of men's souls; it is ordained of God for a purpose larger than just to people the earth.

Do we realize that purpose, that goal to be attained? It is pitiful to note the lax opinions of today, the narrowness of goals, the selfishness and lusts of the flesh, the desires and results of the modern home. How pathetic to step within the four walls and feel the chill and barren atmosphere of canned meals, incubator babies, hard times, distress, worry, sickness in many cases derived from self indulgences, and above all the utter laxity toward God's service. Does the home need to prepare for Christ? Would Christ accept good business relations with poor home ties? Never. To begin with, good business would never arise with such conditions. Further, good homes could never last with corrupt business. Both are dependent upon each other; both must grow together. Community stewardship is meant for the home, the same as for business. The home, however, is the spirit for business. Pleasant home conditions make happy business men and happy business men make good providers and good providers tend toward plenty, and plenty is God's gift for companionship, true and just with all men.

What was the "Spirit of '76"? What is Zion's spirit now? Remember, a house divided against itself can not stand. (Mark 3: 25.) Let us therefore see if community stewardship offers any possible building suggestions for the home in Zion.

From our study in stewardship in connection with our talents we believe it is given to mankind to know that each has a specific calling or work to do in this world and by following the leadings of the spirit through our patriarchal blessing, we will, if faithful, accomplish it. If that be the case the companion in life (marriage) best suited to assist in the accomplishing of this work will cross our path at the allotted time we are to marry. That is, if we are faithful and follow the leadings of the spirit. And as you will find happiness in executing your calling, so will you find happiness in your marriage, if you are faithful. This presents the thought then, that when one is born into this world his or her mate is also born within the allotted time; God has ordained that they shall meet and join, if faithful. Isn't the beginning of all things before God? Success and happiness always come from obeying the directions of God. However, man has his free agency. Possibly this could answer the puzzling questions regarding so many broken homes.

Following marriage comes the home, the great tale—the tale a mirror of humanity—it never lies: what you put into it reflects. Originally it was ordained to house an atom of group life. The workings of large communities or cities, are continuations of home life. Pennies make dollars; details solve national problems. True home spirit is the beginning of all success. The earth is populated from the miniature group life called home, wherein man first learns to meet his neighbor. It is like a school. As the great universe is a school for a purpose we know not, so is the home a school for the universe, and like the universe it should be governed by the spirit, protected by the father, nursed by the mother (Church) and built for the children. Also, as a grain of sugar dissolved to sweeten a fluid solution for food, so is the home eventually dissolved in the great tide of humanity to build and flavor mankind. What a little child will do in its future life will nearly always reflect back to its mother's training. Therefore, besides peopling the earth, the home is ordained to train people when small how to love each other, or their neighbor.

Christ says, "Let little children come to me." (Study the beautiful scene created when Christ has all the little children about him. 3 Nephi 8: 12-27.) This only speaks the louder, then, for family and private prayer. All meals should be blessed. Morning and evening prayers short and to the point, especially to interest and attract the children, are in order. Long prayers tend to tire and frustrate the desired ends. Some private and quiet room should be set aside to use as a prayer room. Here the parent should bring their child one or two minutes a day, and by fables with little short prayers, instill into the child the necessity of continually seeking God in prayer, the great way man has of calling upon God. Pointing out little happenings in their lives as blessings from God. Remember God never sends evil upon his children. He merely suffers us in his wisdom to fall into those ways. God is love.

All are commanded to work, our talents suggesting the type and leading the way, therein finding the motive. This should be a part of every child's education. The work they do in itself possibly is not of much value to a large community, but for the child it helps to develop, bringing out those underlying qualities and giving to the home a brisk shine. A little girl making the beds or sweeping the walks possibly will not do a perfect job, but will say, "Look what I can do for Mamma!" A little boy may chop his father's pet plant down while hoeing the onion patch, but father's boy is the apple of his eye.

What makes a genius? One who executes his or her calling in its fullness.

When should a child make the stewardship covenant? When it is on its own resources by all means. The covenant is a pledge, and it is the duty and privilege of every one to know what for and why

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

McKenzie, Alabama

The recent retrenchment movement in the church has affected this branch. Our pastor was taken from us. But there was not any of us who had thought of quitting. We said: "We can go on. We must go on. We will go on." So on the first Sunday night in December, we met in the most largely attended business meeting we have had for some time, to organize our forces for the purpose of carrying on during the year.

Our young elder, Lyle D. Flynn, former student of Grace-land and at present a teacher in McKenzie High School, was unanimously chosen pastor. He at once chose as assistant pastors, to have direct charge of certain departments of local work, H. H. Wiggins, D. E. Sellers, L. G. Sellers. The last named was put in general charge of the church school; D. E. Sellers was put in charge of the music with Mrs. Edith Odom as pianist. Every active member of the group has pledged full support to these officers and the general church program. We move into the future with faith, courage, and enthusiasm.

The priesthood of the group are organizing themselves for their work. They plan consistent and systematic visiting in all the homes of the members during the year. The class of work which has already been done in producing encouraging results. They also plan consistent and persistent missionary work in near-by communities. If our missionaries are all taken from us, we will do the work ourselves. We feel confident the Lord is with us, and will open the way.

At present we have three group midweek prayer meetings, one for the adults at the church, one for adults in the town of McKenzie, and one for the young people in the junior church building. All these groups meet in union prayer service at the church once a month. This plan is working well.

It is pleasing to see the enthusiasm with which the young people are entering the year's work. They recently organized a young people's choir with the promise of furnishing they are to make the pledge. That is free agency.

Instead of laying the temporal things aside for one day a week (the Sabbath) as is commanded, and bringing forth the spiritual side, we question whether it is right to go to ball games or picture shows on Sunday. To begin with, why do you question it? Read the following promise in prophecy form for obedience:

If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. —Isaiah 58:13, 14.

If we will thus continue in the service of the Lord, seeking him continually in prayer and fasting, at all times preparing for the second coming of his only begotten Son, Christ, then will we find prosperity and happiness and witness the redemption of Zion his holy city.

most of the church music. They are tackling their work with zeal and energy, and we expect great things of them. Also, a large number of the young people are taking certain "projects," for the year, the proceeds to be given to the church. One takes an acre of corn, one an acre of cotton, one some chickens or hogs or cows, or—well, the list is quite a long one. Each individual has a certain, definite thing to do, and the proceeds from his work go to the church. We expect this movement to produce interesting results.

We want Herald readers to know that this year McKenzie sails Zionward, which is our course.

Nauvoo, Illinois

We are pleased to report that we have been able to meet the requirements of the church during the sacrifice period, and it seems to be the disposition of all to uphold the church program.

Christmas brought our young people home for the holidays. Paul Fusselman was the first to arrive from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. He spent a week with home-folks but had to leave before the Christmas festivities were well under way, for his new assignment to the Fleet Air Base in Coronado, California. Myron Wood came next from Quincy, Illinois, where he is attending the Gem City Business College, and made a short visit with his parents. Irene Layton, who is teaching in Independence, also spent Christmas with homefolks. Then came the Graceland College group, Roberta Lewis and Jack Sanford and with them Aaron Booker and Dwight Davis, who were guests of the Lewises during the holidays.

These young people gave their assistance toward all the activities of the branch. Dwight Davis was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service on December 20, and again the following Sunday. He was also in charge of the prayer and testimony service on the evening of December 30. He and Roberta are numbered among the College Players and we were made happy by their assistance in our pageant, "Seekers After Christmas," which was put on the evening of the 27th. The Sunday evening previous was occupied by the children of the beginner department who gave a pageant, "Round the Christmas Tree."

Brother and Sister L. H. Lewis entertained the young people one evening with a Christmas party, and on New Year's eve they met with Arnold and Florence Ourth and watched the old year out in the old William Marks place. A holiday in Nauvoo would be incomplete without a visit to David's Chamber so a hike was taken one morning to this historic spot, and dinner was cooked and served in the cove.

Sister Addie Matthews, of Independence, is making an extended visit with her daughter, Dora Henderson. Sister Matthews gave an interesting talk on the evening of January 17, relating many wonderful things that occurred during her visit to Australia with her father and mother, Joseph and Emma Burton.

The infant daughter of Ralph and Hyla Bolton, Betty Jean, was blessed at the morning service, January 10, by J. W. Layton and J. C. Page.

A. L. Sanford, director of Religious Education, is successfully carrying out the outlines given in the Vision for the worship programs. He assigns the parts from the stand the Sunday previous, and thus far has met with a splendid response. At present he is using each family in turn. They take their places on the platform and unitedly carry out the program assigned them.

J. W. Layton had the misfortune to have the little finger of his left hand severed by a running circular saw while working in a carpenter shop.

Nauvoo is experiencing an unusually mild winter, and the grass is still green. It is the first time for many years that there has been no skating on the river.

Denver, Colorado

Attendance at the services the past few weeks has been very good, despite the prevalence in our ranks of flu and other ills. The mild, sunny weather has been much enjoyed and appreciated. Many of our number were ill just before the Christmas season, and some are still confined to their homes, but the severity of the epidemic seems to be diminishing. Sister Laura Kohankie is in the Presbyterian Hospital, preparing to undergo an operation; we are earnestly praying that God will send her his Holy Spirit of comfort, and that she will be richly blessed during the ordeal before her.

Brother Elmer Sutton, son of Brother and Sister J. R. Sutton, of Genoa, Colorado, was brought to Colorado General Hospital January 3, suffering from a ruptured appendix. An operation was performed, but the physicians had little hope for his recovery. We are glad to say, however, that he has made considerable improvement, and his condition is quite encouraging. The Saints have been steadfastly praying for his recovery.

The choir, under the direction of Farr Kemp, had prepared a cantata, "Hail, Messiah," to be given December 27, but owing to the illness of some of the members, they were not able to sing the entire piece. They gave several numbers on that evening, which were well done, and much appreciated by the congregation.

A Christmas party was held for the children of the primary and intermediate departments the afternoon of December 24. Christmas Eve, a pageant was presented by members of the young people's dramatic club, under the direction of Sister Myrtle Smith.

Three little maidens have recently come to make their homes among us. Joanne, daughter of Warren and Edna Williams, was born September 4. Ilene Louise, daughter of Howard and Mildred Sheehy, was born December 13, and a daughter was born to Glen and Hazel Holmes January 10.

The women of the adult group held a social meeting Thursday afternoon, January 7, at the home of Sister Ruth Robertson.

Sunday evening, January 10, the choir of the Edgewater Community Church sang a cantata, "The Holy Child," in our church. This was remarkably well rendered, and we sincerely appreciate their kindness in coming to us with this beautiful selection.

We are very proud of our young people, for the work they are doing, and the zeal they are showing in striving to qualify for service, and we feel that some of their activities are worthy of mention. The group is organized with Glen Holmes as leader, Fred Kemp assistant, Goldie Bell, secretary and treasurer.

Every sixth Sunday a luncheon is held at the church following the morning service, after which some time is spent in such activities as social meetings, lectures, discussions, debates, prayer meetings, and music. Every six weeks, on Saturday evening, a group party is held at the home of one of the young people, or a skating party, swimming party, wiener roast or steak party is arranged. During the summer, week-end and holiday parties are held in the mountains.

The dramatic club gives a number of pageants and plays throughout the year. The officers are Burrell Shupe, president; Vernon Young, business manager and treasurer; Doris Shupe, costumer; Fred Kemp, stage manager and properties man, and Mrs. Myrtle Smith director. These pageants and plays are carefully selected, and are for the most part on religious subjects. Last year the club was represented in the tournament of religious drama sponsored by the Colorado Council of Religious Education, held in Denver, and it expects to participate this year also.

The basket ball team practices regularly and takes part in the games in the church league. Francis McClendon is captain and coach.

The orchestra is led by Farr Kemp and furnishes music for the church school services and for other occasions where music will add to the success of the event.

A teachers' training class for the study of the Book of Mormon has Glen Holmes as its teacher. This is a Grace-land College credit class.

Most of these young people are to be found at the church school every Sunday morning; those who are not busy as teachers or officers are members of a class taught by Elder E. J. Williams.

Pastor Glaude Smith, who is also district president, has made a number of trips to other parts of the district in the interest of the work during the past two months.

Sunday morning, January 10, we had the pleasure of listening to a sermon by Elder J. R. Sutton, who is in Denver because of the illness of his son. Brother Sutton has been known and loved in this district for many years.

Elder Silas D. Condit Passes Away

Another of the stalwarts of the church has been promoted to membership in the church triumphant, Elder Silas D. Condit, of Douglas, Arizona.

I came over from Los Angeles on learning of his death which took place on the morning of December 28. He passed away quietly and peacefully in his sleep. We paid our respects to his mortal remains and laid them to rest in the Douglas Cemetery on the afternoon of December 31, just as the last light of the old year was passing.

Brother Condit came from old Latter Day Saint stock, being the son of Silas Whitehead Condit, who was an active member of the church in the days of Joseph the Martyr. The Condits started with the body who headed west from Nauvoo and settled in Kaneshville in 1847, the Condit home being the third house built at Kaneshville. They refused to accede to new doctrines being injected into the church by Brigham Young and those associated with him, and in 1848, instead of continuing westward to Utah, they turned north after crossing the Missouri, and effected the first settlement at the junction of the Little Sioux and the Missouri Rivers.

The Condits laid out the town of Little Sioux and in this pioneer neighborhood, our departed brother, Silas D. Condit, was born on March 7, 1858.

The Condits early became associated with the Reorganization and Silas D. was baptized at Little Sioux, Iowa, in 1867. On February 1, 1880, he was ordained a teacher, and later became an elder. On June 7, 1896, he was ordained a seventy and began active missionary work, his labors taking him into Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Utah, and Wyoming. Because of failing health he went to Arizona about 1911, and continued in the active missionary work there for a number of years. The salubrious climate of Arizona restored him to a rugged manhood which continued until recent months.

In 1912, Bishop E. L. Kelley chose Brother Condit as bishop's agent for the State of Arizona, in which position he labored faithfully. He was pastor at Douglas for a time and for the last year in addition to his bishop's agent work has been pastor at Bisbee.

He was a popular preacher in the country settlements of southern Arizona and had hundreds of friends among those outside the church. The seating capacity of the funeral parlors at Douglas was overtaxed, when we paid him our last respects, more than half of those present being nonmembers.

The pallbearers were, June Taylor, Forest Golding, and A. O. Corely of Douglas, and U. S. Ratteree, Raymond Ratteree, and Clyde Adams of Bisbee. Sister D. L. Evans and Sister Enyart furnished the music, assisted by Fern Jowles.

The spirit of peace and assurance was present and though none of the immediate family was able to attend, yet there were plenty of mourners, for a friend of the common people has passed away.

He leaves a wife and three daughters in Los Angeles, and numerous relatives in Idaho, California, Oregon, and other places to mourn his departure. May the courage and faith of these old pioneers remain with those of us who are left to carry on, is my sincere prayer.

MYRON A. MCCONLEY.

Lennox, California

January 7.—Activities of Lennox Mission have been going on much the same as usual. Lately we have heard encouraging sermons. On the evening of December 27, Apostle Myron A. McConley was our speaker, and talked on "Zion and Its Perfection." The sermon was enjoyed by everyone who heard it. Brother McConley is a welcome visitor at Lennox. We wish to commend him for his work in the ministry.

On January 6 we had our regular business meeting, and elected new officers for the coming year. We pray that the Spirit of God may guide those who hold office, that they may do the things our Heavenly Father would have them do.

We are planning to make some improvements in the mission this coming year.

The last few Sundays several new friends have attended the mission. We hope and pray, with the help of God, they may see the truth and join our number.

Providence, Rhode Island

On Thursday, January 7, the following officers were elected to serve until October, 1932: Pastor, High Priest Daniel F. Joy; assistant pastor, Elder George F. Robley; church school director, John D. Colburn, priest; adult superintendent, Irving Cook; junior superintendent, Daniel F. Joy, junior; children's superintendent, Tillie Streeter; branch treasurer, J. Allison Cook, deacon; branch clerk, Georgie M. Spinnett; organist of church, Laura Brown; assistant organist, Muriel Colburn; pianist of church school, Ruth Grange; secretary of church school, Alice Bradbury; publicity agent, Edmund M. Brown, elder.

Our new orchestra, composed of Deacon John Jackson as leader, also first violinist; pianist, Ruth Grange; violins: Daniel F. Joy, junior, Earl I. Brown, and Clifford Salisbury; cornetist, Lewis Mills, and celloist, Hazel Garlick, has already done very creditable work in the church school.

Christmas night, under the able direction of the retiring church school director, Alfred E. Toombs, who is leaving this branch to reside in Portland, Maine, we enjoyed an entertaining concert. At the end of the concert Santa appeared and after distributing large stockings filled with goodies to Sisters Carrie Perry, Elthina Joy, Delphina Toombs, and Brother William Bradbury, ages 94, 84, 84, and 87, respectively, he then made special fun for the children, and distributed gifts or candy to all present.

Excellent repairs have already been accomplished on our chapel, and others are now under way which will be greatly appreciated when completed.

The woman's department has been exceptionally active, having weekly meetings with an average of twenty-six members present. They have their weekly noon luncheons served for twenty-five cents a plate. This department has donated liberally to the general church funds, also to local repairs, and has made it possible for the sum of twelve hundred dollars to be sent to headquarters. This was about $175 above our quota for November and December, 1931.

We are especially gratified to note the harmonious and good feeling of cooperation now existing especially in our priesthood, and the branch, as a whole, is united and determined to do all possible to meet the present and future problems which confront us as a local as well as the general church.

Our 1932 slogan is: "Each one to be a committee of one to interest one more in our church work."

Muskegon, Michigan

A group of young people from this branch attended the service of Grand Rapids the latter part of the month of November, receiving strength and encouragement from the discourse of President F. M. Smith.

Brother Francis Bowman and Sister Eva Vannetten were united in marriage the 5th day of December. They were attended by Miss Lula Holliday and Douglas Osborn.

The women's department is busy raising money for the local church debt. December 11 they presented the play, "Sewing for the Heathen," to a large group of friends at the church. During January and February this play will be given at several of the city schools and churches. Sister W. Jacobs directs this group of workers.

The Sunday school gave a good Christmas program.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited this branch December 31, delivering the lecture, "Open Door." All who heard him were well repaid for attending the services.

The branch seems to be progressing along the financial line since adopting the new plan of making collections. Each month envelopes are handed to the members, and any amount enclosed therein goes to pay off the local debt. Envelopes are returned to the secretary the first of every month.

Brother Loyd Soper, who is in the University Hospital at Ann Arbor, requests the prayers of the church in his behalf.

Little Marvin Jacobs passed away January 7. He was critically ill for several days. He was the five-year-old son of Brother and Sister W. Jacobs.

Elder A. Whitehead is our pastor and his address is 1716 Ellwood Street.

Sacramento, California

A rare musical treat was given by the choir of thirty voices in the church on the night of December 20. They were assisted by friends and lodge members of Sister Clark.

We here print the announcement of this program as it appeared in a local paper:

"Special music will be given at the Reorganized Latter Day Saints' Church, Twenty-fourth and K streets, at 7.45 p. m. Sunday. A specially augmented choir, under the direction of Mrs. Charles A. Clark, with Mrs. C. H. S. Bidwell at the piano, will give the Christmas cantata, "His Natal Day" (Edward W. Norman).

"The complete program will be as follows:

"Prelude, organ and piano; processional: hymn, invocation, Reverend W. H. Dawson, pastor; announcements; scripture reading; vocal solo, "The Voice in the Wilderness," Miss Vera Crisler; cantata; sermon, Reverend G. P. Levitt; offertory, vocal solo, Mrs. Glazier Baker; doxology; benediction: postlude."

The church was beautifully decorated by the young people with wreaths and holly.

On Wednesday evening, December 16, this cantata was given at the Rising State Rebekah Lodge, celebrating its sixtieth anniversary. In appreciation for the help of their friends in this cantata, Mrs. C. H. S. Bidwell entertained the choir members and their husbands, wives, and friends at her home December 29.

A Christmas entertainment was held in the lower auditorium of the church, December 22. The children's division furnished the entertainment with the exception of several numbers by adult members. After the program Santa Claus arrived with treats for the children. Refreshments were served to all.

The first sacrament Sunday of the year was marked by a good spirit and a filled house. Two men were ordained to the priesthood, Joseph Ensley to the office of elder under the hands of Brothers W. H. Dawson and Sam Rieste; Brother Esaias Epling to the office of priest under the hands of Brother G. P. Levitt and E. C. Burdick.

The Saints in Sacramento are working hard to make this year better by far than any previous years. They join in wishing the other branches success and happiness, hoping that God will watch over and bless all who are seeking the fountain of eternal life.

Mason City, Iowa

January 8.—Since our last report sent in in October, our group has continued to grow. The weather has made it difficult for us to have at our services members from Charles City, Nora Springs, and those living in the country.

In November Sister Kinney suggested the group buy a Book of Mormon to be presented to the library. We voted to buy the best binding and to use the money from our birthday offering. Sister Kinney presented the book to Miss Barrette, librarian.

In December we had a Christmas program as follows: Each adult and child gave a Bible memory verse. Sister Kinney told the story of Christ's birth both from the Bible and the Book of Mormon. Elaine Nelson sang a Christmas song, and there was a verse by Morna Grace Wineman; Christmas story from Luke 2, Dorothy Nelson; Christmas poem, Velma Dennis, and a Christmas song and verse by Zell Nelson. Sister Smith gave a demonstration of two of her kindergarten class, Morna Grace Wineman and Zell Nelson. This was a picture lesson, and she showed how the little ones are learning the principles of the gospel.

The program closed with an exchange of gifts.

A sum of $13.50 Christmas offering was sent to Bishop Charles Fry the last of December. This we were able to do above buying the Book of Mormon for the library, Sunday school supplies, and helping with the expenses of the elders when they are here.

Shidler, Oklahoma

At the branch election E. E. Workman was sustained president, and members of the priesthood were retained in their respective offices as follows: Priest, Paul Storm; teacher, G. W. Swain; deacon, Frank Fender. Brother P. Storm is assistant pastor, filling the vacancy left by Brother Simmons who went to Missouri.

As there are no Saints living at Foraker, and only one family within a radius of several miles, and since no passenger trains pass through there, the branch voted to change its name from Foraker to Shidler Branch. Those coming here can reach us by bus, there being two daily from Tulsa to Ponca City or vice versa.

There appears to be among us a greater spirit of love and unity. The little church which we built and paid for during 1931 is an encouraging factor in the progress of the group. We very much enjoy our meetings. To those who have always had good church facilities, our building might seem very simple indeed.

The women's department bought a nice little building finished inside with sheet-rock. Brother Walter Daugherty used his truck and house moving outfit and with the aid of other men in the branch, moved the building to the back of our church where it was converted into a kitchen and serving or general work room. A nonmember woman, who comes to our meetings, loaned us a large steel gas range. Others donated dishes, cooking utensils, and Brother James Duncan, a sewing machine.

Each Thursday, the women's workday, some of the sisters come to town as their children come in the car to school, and by nine o'clock most of the workers are there. One or two volunteer to cook the dinner which has been brought by all, and which is mostly brought from the farm or garden. At noon sixteen children, from the second grade to the seniors, come from school two blocks away, also some of the husbands come, and all partake of the dinner together. This is attracting the attention of nonmembers, and many are coming and bringing their dinners that they may work with us. After noon, when all are gone except the workers, an hour is devoted to devotional exercises.

In this way, even though we are scattered far apart, we are trying to learn to worship, work, and play together. We are preparing so that when we are privileged to enjoy Zion conditions, we shall be able to fully appreciate them.

The women have worked hard, and they felt amply rewarded when on December 31, they paid the last dollar contracted.

Webb City, Missouri

Second and Oronogo Streets

Webb City Branch approached the close of the year, 1931, with a membership whose hearts were thankful for the Spirit of God which we have often felt in our services. Though we can see advancement in our work here, we are sorry that more could not have been accomplished.

Every department of the work seems to be starting out with renewed energy to make the year 1932 the best in the history of this branch.

The junior church is having good meetings. At their last service Brother F. L. Freeman talked on "Giving to the Church." A special number, "Giving for Jesus," was sung by the choir, and a sacrifice offering was taken for the general church. The attendance is good.

The women of the branch met in social session for their annual Christmas party at the home of Sister George Jones. A very interesting program was given. "The Christmas Rose," a reading by Sister Mildred Turner, was especially enjoyed. A silver offering will go to the Christmas offering; this was taken up this year instead of the usual exchange of gifts.

The Christmas devotional service was held at 10.45 a. m. December 20. At 7 p. m. a vesper service was given by Sister Mary Hobart and the junior choir. The service was very beautiful and impressive.

"The Magic Star," a Christmas play, was given by the children's division on Christmas night, Sister Neva Tumble, superintendent of the division, in charge.

Four young people delivered short talks at the 10.45 hour the morning of December 27. Beatrice Deaver talked on "Why Pay the Church Debt—Now?" Dora Terrant on "If You Owe a Debt to God, Pay It Now"; Mildred Turner on "The Church Must Go On"; James M. Jones on "The Sifting Time." At the close of the service a special offering was taken for the sacrifice period of December. This amounted to seventy-six dollars, and by the close of the year the offering had grown to one hundred dollars. Nor is the end yet.

During the month District President Amos T. Higdon was in Webb City one week, visiting and encouraging the Saints. He preached two fine sermons Sunday.

The first Sunday of the new year brought good attendance. After the passing of the emblems of the Lord's Supper, the congregation sang "Take Time to Be Holy," and the pastor gave as the theme of the service, "High Altitudes." The new year was emphasized as a year of promise and achievement. At the evening service the pastor's theme was "Self-Determination," and he asked the Saints to use their will power to the glory of God. The priesthood and congregation are trying to make the service as beautiful as they can.

On New Year's Eve a watch party was given by the church school at the home of Pastor Ira O. Waldron and his wife. About forty guests welcomed 1932 by singing "Come Let Us Anew Our Journey Pursue" and "Consecration." The guests, who ranged in age from three to seventy years, played games and took part in contests. Refreshments were served close to midnight.

Dunlap, Iowa

The Saints of this mission observed the sacrifice months of November and December. On Thanksgiving morning we met for prayer service, and during this meeting the sacrifice offering was collected. Since the first of January Brother Cecil Talcott has been appointed solicitor for this mission.

A short Christmas program was given December 21.

Members of this group meet each Thursday evening for class work and prayer service. We also have junior church services on Sunday morning.

Out-of-town speakers have recently included Brother Fred Fry, Brother Irvin Rosenberger, and Brother George Young, of Woodbine, and Bishop W. R. Adams, of Logan. Local members of the priesthood are also doing their part to help make this work a success in Dunlap.

Highland Branch

Southern Ohio District

You will find our little church across the valley and on the hill, about four miles from Sinking Spring, Ohio, on state route 124, leading to Hillsboro.

This branch has been making rapid growth in the last two years. Two years ago Elder John R. Grice came into the branch, and as a result of his missionary effort, twelve were baptized into the church. Ten of these were young people, and you may be sure that along with these new members came life and activity.

The society of recreation and expression was organized, and a goal was set—a new church. Of this we have great need, and though we have not yet realized our ambition, we are looking forward to the time when it will become a reality. The young people's society has saved about two hundred and fifty dollars for that purpose. One of the means of raising this money was by holding annual banquets. The first occurred in November, 1929, and was a great success. Not only did it make money for the society, but it had a splendid spiritual effect, causing the Saints to mingle with one another and with others not of the faith. We believe that such association goes a long way toward gaining community confidence.

Elder Grice came into our midst again in 1930, to hold a series of meetings, and six more answered the call and obeyed the gospel.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held in September, 1931, to elect new officers. We decided to organize ourselves according to the new plan of Religious Education. Elder C. C. Simmons was retained as branch pastor; Brother Heber Wood was elected to the office of associate pastor. The following are other officers: Secretary, Viola Davidson; treasurer, Carrol Rhoads; statistician, Allie Wood; pianist, Mary Deardoff; librarian, Arlie Marie Rhoads, and publicity agent, John Bobb.

On November 1 Elder John R. Grice began missionary services in the branch. Due to unfavorable parking conditions at our church, and because it was believed more people could be reached, the Masonic Hall was obtained in the village of Sinking Spring. The people proved by their presence and interest how much they appreciated the opportunity to hear the gospel preached. Crowds were good, and at the end of six weeks of faithful labor Brother Grice baptized ten more into the Kingdom of God.

During Brother Grice's mission with us we held our third annual banquet. The date was November 14 and Brother Grice was toastmaster. There were a number of good toasts on subjects pertaining to church work. The food prepared by the women of the branch was good, and altogether a most enjoyable evening was passed. Out-of-town guests that night were District President A. E. Anderton, of Columbus; C. W. Clark and Paul Vale, of Columbus; Brother and Sister P. W. Barker and Leonard Barker, of Middletown, and Brother and Sister Jesse C. Reed, of Jackson, Ohio.

Santa Ana, California

The Saints of Santa Ana Branch gathered in the basement of the church on December 10, to witness the baptism of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Krohe. Patriarch W. A. McDowell came down from Los Angeles to be with us as he had assisted Brother A. M. Starkey in their conversion. The service was beautiful and impressive. Brother Starkey, who performed the baptisms, and Brother and Sister Krohe were dressed in white; the font was decorated with greenery and flowers, and with reverent and happy spirit, the Saints greeted the new brother and sister. After the baptism, Brother McDowell gave a short talk of encouragement to the new members and of counsel to the Saints of Santa Ana.

Sunday, October 18, Brother Starkey baptized two young boys, Donovan Holve and David Carmichael, junior.

Our people have endeavored to assist the general church during the weeks of sacrifice. The Ladies' Aid Society, under Sister William Kuhn, president, earned money by doing housework and ironing and was able to give a substantial offering. Nearly every member of the branch made personal sacrifices, and we have all felt the happiness that comes to those who serve Christ.

September 27 was Rally Day in Santa Ana. Bishop D. B. Carmichael was the morning speaker. Later a basket luncheon was served in the church basement.

Our business meeting was held on Thursday, January 8. Brother A. M. Starkey was reelected branch president. Sister Charles Calkins was chosen director of Religious Education.

Pasadena, California

January 20.—The Saints of the Pasadena Mission have been very busy. The Tuesday evening meetings are well attended, although there are yet a number of Saints living in Pasadena whom we would like to interest in the work here. We wish they might be as faithful as are some nonmembers who attend regularly and do their bit in a financial way.

Last evening Elder Eli Bronson, of Central Los Angeles Branch, preached a wonderful sermon, taking for his text Luke 12:32, "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

We have also had the recent pleasure of listening to District President W. A. Teagarden, of San Bernardino, Apostle Myron A. McConley, Brothers George Wixom, John Milnor, Lawrence Brockway, and Jesse Johnson.

We have again taken up the study of the Book of Mormon, and meet each Sunday evening at seven o'clock with Brother and Sister Omohundro, 51 W. Mariposa Street, Altadena. The class seems much interested and each takes his turn teaching. We have ordered a large Book of Mormon map which we think will be of great service to us.

The La Da Sa Club is very active. We have pieced and tied comforters, some being used as gifts, and others bringing in a little money. By raising money in this and other ways the club was able to make a Christmas offering.

The annual Christmas party, held at the home of Brother Jessie Elliott, was enjoyed by forty guests. There was a Christmas program, and a small gift for each one.

We are now planning a dinner to be served on the evening of February 16 at the home of Brother and Sister Strong, 449 Martello Avenue.

Independence

Stone Church

How beautiful can be a service when those giving it work to produce inspiration and instruction! This was made apparent to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning when speaker and soloist united their efforts to give a single impression. Pastor John F. Sheehy, the speaker, talked on "Going Forward With Jesus." The admonition of Jesus, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your father which is in heaven is perfect," was his text. Perfect in what? In human relationships—love, service, forgiveness, charity. His challenge was for us not to go back to Jesus, for we have never been ahead of Him, but to go forward with him in daily life.

The soloist, Brother George Anway, sang a special number, "Forward to Christ." The words of this song were written by Geoffrey O'Hara as he sat in the pew of a New York church, under the influence of an inspiring sermon. Only a few days ago the words were put to music. The congregation appreciated this new song by Brother Anway, who formerly was a member of this congregation and the choir. He now has charge of the music at Central Church, Kansas City.

Two splendid anthems were sung by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, Lorena Kueffer at the organ. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder J. S. Kelley.

In the evening a large crowd enjoyed Elder C. Ed. Miller's illustrated lecture on "Hawaii."

President Floyd M. McDowell preached the funeral sermon of Mrs. Louise I. Robinson January 23, in Independence. Mrs. Robinson, who was baptized into the church May 6, 1900, at Independence, by her husband, Wallace N. Robinson, was a friend to music and its development. During her life she took prominent part in sponsoring musical productions in the church. Her death occurred at Santa Monica, California, January 18, and the body was brought to Independence for the funeral rites and interment. She was born June 24, 1875, at Winthrop, Missouri.

Second Church

Second Church was very pleased with its quota of speakers, Sunday, January 24. Patriarch Ammon White at eleven o'clock in the morning, delivered a sermon worthy of praise. President F. M. McDowell in the evening gave an impressive discourse.

At the baptismal service in the afternoon the following children were given place in the ranks of the church: Fannie May Twombly, Millicent McCormick, Louise Daniel, Robert Daniel, David Binger, Dorothy Sullivan, Eva Rice, and Jessie Queen.

The six thirty young people's service was well attended. Interest taken in this meeting is phenomenal and attendance is growing. The Clover Leaf Four, a colored male quartet, sang at this hour.

Wednesday, January 20, Miss Blanche Edmonds and David Cole were married by Brother William Inman at the home of Walter P. Beck. The young couple have an apartment at 216 West Lexington Avenue.

The death of Sister Ida Moore, January 16, brought sadness to this congregation. She was one of those who helped in the early work of the branch. Her life was one of usefulness, and she was greatly loved in this community.

Liberty Street Church

As has been previously reported, the spirit of devotion and increased interest is in evidence in this branch. We feel that God is bringing about his righteous purposes among his people.

Elder C. B. Woodstock preached an inspiring sermon at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, and Elder C. A. Kress spoke at 7.30 in the evening. His subject included revelation and the Book of Mormon. Brother Kress will continue this subject next Sunday evening.

The class of girls taught by Miss Lyda Thomason, gave a fine program at the nine forty devotional service Sunday morning, and the offering of the newly-organized orchestra added to the service.

The young people are working hard on the plays to be given in the dramatic contest of the churches in Independence sometime in February.

The teachers and officers of the church school will have a banquet February 2, at seven o'clock in the evening. The year's work of the school will be discussed, the workers become better acquainted, and altogether we hope to spend a helpful evening together. The guests are bringing food for the banquet, everything from chicken to cake. A committee is in charge of the accumulation of materials and preparation of the meal.

Walnut Park Church

The morning service at Walnut Park, January 24, was very uplifting. At eleven o'clock Elder C. A. Kress spoke to the congregation. The choir, directed by Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "More Love to Thee, O Christ," the solo being by Inez Hartman.

The evening sermonet was by Elder John F. Sheehy, and the choir sang the anthem, "O Love Divine."

"Farewell to Nauvoo," a "Conversation," by President E. A. Smith, was presented by young people of the congregation and much appreciated by the congregation. The stories of the early church are of interest, and cause the Saints of this district to realize the privileges of today.

January 22, a baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Simmons at Research Hospital, Kansas City, Missouri. Mrs. Simmons was formerly Miss Virginia Lee Boyd.

The funeral services of Brother William T. Horne were held at the church on Thursday, January 21, at two o'clock. He was seventy-two years of age, and leaves his widow, Mary Horne, and grandson, Frank Raymond Horne, of the home; a daughter, Mrs. Ray Chappelow, of Independence; two sons: Melvin Horne, of Ohio, and Fred Horne, of Independence; two sisters, and one brother, of Blue Springs. A quartet composed of local singers rendered two hymns, and there was a solo "At Evening," by Myrtle Brackenbury. Interment was at Blue Springs.

Kansas City Stake

The singers of Kansas City Stake, under the direction of George Anway, commenced rehearsals of Handel's Messiah at Central Church Sunday, January 24. These rehearsals will be a part of Sunday's schedule until the convening of General Conference in April. Kansas City Stake singers will join the singers of the church in presenting the oratorio to the conference. The chorus meets at three o'clock each Sunday afternoon.

Delegates to represent this stake at General Conference, will be elected at a special meeting held at Central Church, Monday, February 15, at 7.45 p. m. It is hoped that every congregation in the stake will be properly represented at this meeting.

Central Church

Sunday was an ideal day, just enough cold in the air to invigorate. The day was full of activities.

Following the church school with the assembly for the worship period, a hymn was sung. The anthem by the choir, was "Praise Ye the Father," by Gounod-Reese, Sister C. E. Wight directing. Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the speaker of the hour, giving words of encouragement and comfort to the Saints and particularly stressing the point that the call for sacrifice to the membership during November and December had not been in vain, that we had gone over the top in meeting the quota prescribed. We were happy in the thought that Central Church membership whole-heartedly responded to this call.

At three o'clock members of the Kansas City Stake Choir met at Central for rehearsal of the Messiah which is to be rendered at General Conference. Kansas City anticipates a membership of one hundred and twenty-five voices in this chorus.

Elder William Patterson was the speaker at the seven forty-five hour to a very good audience.

Sister Carlotta Babb who is confined at the Menorah Hospital from a major operation, is progressing nicely. Also Sister Margaret Blair entered Research Hospital for an appendicitis operation, and reports indicate that she, too, is as well as can be expected at this writing.

On Saturday evening, Central basket ball boys and a few of their rooters motored to Kidder, Missouri, and played the Kidder College, the score being 26 to 15 in favor of the Kidder College. This is the second game Central team has lost this season.

Argentine Church

The speaker at seven forty-five, January 17, was Bishop C. A. Skinner whose theme was the "Resurrection." Brother Skinner proved to be a splendid chalk talk artist.

The following Sunday evening this congregation was favored with a lecture on the pioneer Prophet, Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon and the book of Doctrine and Covenants. The speaker was the associate stake president, Elder George Mesley.

Nation-wide Testing Program

The first semester for the college year, 1931-32, is drawing to a close and the Graceland faculty has its plans perfected for the second semester.

One of the special activities which will be engaged in during the second half of the year is the acceptance of an invitation from the American Council on Education, with headquarters at Washington, District of Columbia, to join in a nation-wide college testing program for college sophomores which will be conducted in May of the present year.

In May, 1930, some forty colleges in Pennsylvania under the auspices of the American Council of Education, joined in a college testing program which had such beneficial results among the colleges of Pennsylvania that it has been decided to extend these benefits to a group of colleges throughout the country, and Graceland is very fortunate in receiving an invitation to join in these benefits.

Each college using the test will be able to see how its students, as a group, compare in achievement with those in other colleges and perhaps in an even more important use, they compare individuals. The main purpose of the test is to throw light on the capabilities, needs, and problems of individuals rather than to furnish a basis for institutional comparison. The general outline of the testing program includes: Testing of general mental ability; general cultural tests including literature, fine arts, history, social studies and science; English tests including spelling, grammar, punctuation, vocabulary, and literature.

The extension of this invitation to Graceland by the American Council on Education is but another evidence of the very fine standing which Graceland has in the educational world.

G. N. BRIGGS.

Graceland's Lecture Program

During the first semester of every college year a period on Monday of each week is devoted to an oration course for freshmen with the purpose in mind of enabling them the better to make the necessary adjustment from their high school life to that of greater freedom of study, social, and recreational activities of the college.

During the second semester of the present year a lecture, conference and round table discussion on various topics will be presented to the entire student body. Among the topics to be presented will be: "Need of Religious Expression"; "What We Can Do in Keeping Up Religious Practices While at Graceland"; "What Men Expect of Women"; "What Women Expect of Men"; "Attitude of College Students Towards Town People"; "Conventions and Etiquette"; "Treatment of Older People"; "Public Decorum"; "Personal Hygiene"; "General Principles of Friendship"; "Boy and Girl Relationships"; "Every Man's Reading"; etc.

These topics seem to indicate that the students at Graceland during the second semester will be enabled to discuss and think about many of the worth-while things of life which many times are neglected in the college course.

Lambda Delta Sigma Notes

The regular monthly meeting of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society was held Thursday evening, January 14, with President B. A. May in charge. Doctor Platz reported on the activity of the committee which has been considering the revision of the by-laws. The proposed revision was discussed and then laid aside for final action until the next meeting.

The investigative report for the evening was on the topic, "What Are Ex-Graceland Students Doing for the Church?" The committee in charge of this report consisted of Roy A. Cheville, chairman, Morraine Greene, Elizabeth Smith, Walter Johnson, James Moses, and Leslie Kohlman.

In Mr. Johnson's talk on the relationship of Graceland to the church he stated that the college was organized by a General Conference Resolution of 1890, and since that time has functioned as the chief educational institution of the church.

Miss Smith reported on the interest of ex-students in church activities. It was found by a survey that a large majority of the alumni have retained an active interest in the church, while only fourteen per cent of them are classed as inactive. Mr. Moses reported on the results of a questionnaire sent to various pastors to ascertain to what extent the alumni were helping in church work in the different branches. Of the five hundred ex-students reported on, it was found that sixty-three per cent were classified as being entirely interested in the program of the church, with over half of this number classified as being definitely active in branch work. Of the remaining thirty-seven per cent, only half were classed as indifferent, with but twenty-four out of the total five hundred ex-students listed as definitely inactive. In the eighteen branches reporting all sections of the United States were represented with the exception of the Northwest Pacific Mission. In these eighteen branches alone there are now fifty-five branch officers, fourteen church school directors, and forty-one church school teachers who are ex-students of Graceland.

Mr. Kohlman reported on the number of ex-Gracelanders now holding important positions in the leading quorums of the church. It was found that two members of the First Presidency, two of the Presiding Bishopric, five Apostles, three presidents of stakes, and three presidents of seventies have been students of Graceland.

Mr. Cheville reported on a questionnaire recently filled out by the present student body. From this it was found that ninety per cent of those now in Graceland are church members and are definitely interested in its program. Certain types of services are preferred, the Wednesday evening prayer meetings, the sacrament services, and the vesper services being the ones having the strongest appeal to the students. The Christmas vesper service was considered as the most inspirational service engaged in thus far this year.

From the results of these investigations it is seen that Graceland's alumni do not forget the church that fosters their alma mater. The college is putting out men and women who are vitally interested in the program of the church.

JAMES B. MOSES.

New Courses Offered in Church School

Beginning with the new year, four new courses are being offered for college students in the Lamoni Church School. All of these are being taught by members of the Graceland faculty. At a recent meeting of this group it was decided to make the slogan "Every student a regular church-goer" come true this year. A committee was appointed to interview each member and encourage regular participation in church school activities.

Dr. G. A. Platz is conducting a course in the practical application of religion to life; A. R. Gilbert, dean of the college and director of athletics is teaching a course in students' religious problems. Freshmen are especially urged to attend this class. Mrs. Mae Warren has charge of a course designed especially for young women; this is a continuation of the excellent course offered earlier in the school year by Miss Tess Morgan. The fourth course is in charge of E. E. Closson, the subject being the significance of the gospel according to Saint John. A thorough study of this book of the New Testament will be of extreme benefit to those who are taking the course. During the past two Sundays most of the class time has been taken up with discussions relating to tithing and the making of inventories.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Colorado Springs Branch held its annual business meeting December 29, including the election of officers for the following year.

On January 10, at the morning service occurred the installation of the following officers: Branch president, Elder J. E. Ebling; secretary and treasurer, Charles Liggett; church school director, Sister E. E. Conway; music director, Sister Ira Engstrom; publicity agent, R. C. Harrison; correspondent, Ila Cox; finance committee: Charles Liggett, Ray Ebling, and K. Karamota.

Two credit classes are held in the morning and evening on Sunday. We have two splendid teachers, and those enrolled enjoy the wonderful courses.

One thing which always seems to bring encouragement and comfort to the branch president is the fact that all members of the priesthood are in line and working in harmony.

The women's department has been doing its share of branch work.

Sometimes our members are few, but those who do come to the house of the Lord, often partake of the sweet influence of the Spirit.

Bisbee, Arizona

This branch deeply regrets the passing of its pastor, Elder Silas D. Condit. Brother Condit was a veteran in the latter day cause and was a great help to the Saints in this territory.

It was necessary to hold a business meeting January 1, for the purpose of electing officers. Apostle M. A. McConley was in charge. Brother H. C. Goldie was elected branch president, to succeed Brother Condit. Sister Daisy B. Short was sustained branch clerk; H. C. Goldie sustained as branch solicitor, and Dave H. Myers was elected publicity agent. Brother J. W. Myers was sustained Sunday school superintendent, and Sister Sarah Hall was sustained secretary and treasurer. Brother T. R. Davis was elected to have charge of all books and music in all services.

We are striving to make this a happier and more prosperous year than 1931.

A paragraph in a letter written by Orville L. Oppelt, of Centralia Branch, Washington, to the First Presidency, on January 13, brings this information: "I thought perhaps I should tell you that we buried Sister Fisher, who is a sister of Elders S. W. L. Scott and Columbus Scott. She passed away Sunday night at nine thirty, and we buried her Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock.

Hammond, Indiana

During the holiday season the Saints of Hammond Branch were frequently reminded of the financial needs of the church as well as the development which must be made individually to merit a place in the kingdom of God. At Thanksgiving time a Thanksgiving birthday banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church, each one paying a penny for each year of age, and as much more as he felt he could sacrifice. The tables were divided into four sections, representing the four seasons of the year, and four members of the priesthood responded to the toastmaster with a short speech about the respective seasons. The banquet was nicely served and the room beautifully decked with lamps and other decorations. The banquet was well attended, much enjoyed, and financially successful.

Sister Eleanor Myers prepared and presented a Christmas program at the church, which was especially enjoyed by the children.

Some sickness resulting from colds, has developed in the branch, but those afflicted are well on the way to recovery. With Sister H. G. Cresse we mourn the passing on December 26, of her father, Brother Adair, who was ninety-two years of age. His health had been declining for some time.

The weekday prayer services are being held in the various homes and occasionally in the homes of some of the Saints in Gary. They have been much enjoyed.

Waterloo, Iowa

The new year finds the work in this branch moving along smoothly. Renewed interest is being manifested by most of the members.

Sister W. D. Trusty is at home from the hospital and improving in health.

The O. B. K's held a birthday party for Tommy Saul on Tuesday night after their regular meeting. A large birthday cake was one of the prominent features of the evening, and all testify to its goodness. There were nineteen in attendance.

The women's department has resumed regular meetings. A little son was recently born to Izetta Jackson Morgan.

Lyman Rooka was married to a Miss Pearl Fry a short time ago.

Alaric Fisher and wife, of Bassett, Iowa, visited at the homes of his parents and sister, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Fisher, and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. McCormick, during the holidays.

Everett, Washington

The new officers for 1932 were installed Sunday evening, January 10, at an impressive candle lighting service. A figure dressed in white, typifying the angel of light, appeared before a personage representing the church, and lighted a candle. The retiring pastor, George Brundage, lighted a taper from the candle of the church and passed on the light, formally bestowing the responsibilities upon the new pastor, Granville Swenson. Brother Brundage expressed his confidence in the new pastor with a few appropriate words, and pledged the loyalty of the membership.

The other officers received lights for their tapers from Brother Swenson who spoke a few words to each officer to stress the importance of the tasks for the coming year. In addition to the pastor, the officers for the new year are as follows: Church school supervisor, Sister Roy Davis; adult supervisor, J. H. Nichols; young people's supervisor, Theodore Stearns; president of the women's club, Sister Granville Swenson; primary supervisor, Sister Samuel Stearns; director of music, Sister F. A. Willetts; clerk, Roy Davis; treasurer, Benjamin Pilbeam, and librarian, Dale Nichols.

The new leaders are making their plans for the year and many new and interesting features are to be introduced into each division.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Owing to the vacancy caused by the death of S. D. Condit, Douglas, Arizona, we hereby appoint Brother W. P. Bootman of Tucson, Arizona, as bishop's agent for Arizona District.

This appointment of Brother Bootman is subject to the ratification of the next district conference.

Brother Bootman comes to us well recommended, and we feel confident he will receive the earnest cooperation of the membership in giving their support to this phase of church work.

The solicitors are requested to send their January and all subsequent reports to W. P. Bootman, Box 2546, Tucson, Arizona.

The Clinton (Missouri) district conference institute will convene Saturday, February 13, at 10 a. m. with Fort Scott Branch, located at Sixth and Burk Streets, and will close Sunday, February 14, at 4 p. m. Classes will be conducted by Elder John F. Sheehy on the following subjects: "Church History," "Establishing Zion," "History of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants," and "The Doctrine and Covenants and its Contents." Delegates to General Conference will be elected at the three o'clock session Saturday afternoon.—C. C. Martin, district director of Religious Education.

Our Departed Ones

FARBER.—Randall Roy Farber was born at Mineral City, Ohio, September 2, 1890; was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints September 7, 1910. He married Miss Jessie Gratz February 21, 1912. Died at Barnes Hospital, Saint Louis, Missouri, January 1, 1932. Surviving are his mother, a brother, and a sister besides many other relatives and friends. Interment was in Mount Washington Cemetery. The funeral sermon was preached by Paul M. Hanson, assisted by Floyd M. McDowell.

DANIELS.—David E. Daniels was born in Wales, England, in November, 1866. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Lucas, Iowa, July 6, 1884, and was well known to such brothers as Joseph Smith, Alexander Smith, John A. Robinson, T. W. Williams, and others. Became a sojourner in San Antonio, Texas, approximately six years ago. He was a sincere Christian and an ardent student, an advocate of the Book of Mormon. Was esteemed by all who knew him. His health had been failing for a year before his death, but his condition was not generally known. During his declining months he was taken into the home of Doctor Harry A. Porter, who cared for him. His death occurred at the Bonaire Sanatorium January 5. Left to mourn are his aged mother, of Lucas, Iowa, who lives with her daughter, Miss Minnie Jones, a half-sister to the deceased. The funeral rites conducted January 6, by Elder T. J. Jett, sr., and Elder R. E. Chrono, were pathetic due to the absence of any near relatives. The two San Antonio Branches extend sympathy to the bereaved ones in Lucas, Iowa, and assure them that their loved one was laid to rest by friends. His grave lies in San Jose Burial Park near those of two late members of First San Antonio Branch, Brother Waite, sr., and son.

A middle-aged widow. A member of church and of the branch in Des Moines, needs work. Capable of either general office work or cashier work, but will accept housekeeping work in a modern or semi-modern home. Excellent references both in and out of church in Des Moines.

Transportation

GENERAL INFORMATION

Reduced fares to General Conference have been granted by the railroads on what is known as the Round Trip Identification Certificate Plan, which provides for the sale of round-trip tickets at fare and one half of current fares, with minimum of one dollar for round trip, upon presentation of identification certificate, which will be issued by the Transportation Department direct to members of the church applying for such certificate. One certificate will suffice for all members of the family. These certificates are now ready for distribution and will be mailed to all members requesting them.

Tickets will be sold with routing via same lines going and returning, or may read via diverse routes; that is, via any authorized route on going trip and any other authorized route on the return trip. Certain indirect routes will also be authorized at fares higher than those applying via the direct route. Tickets will be sold to Independence or Kansas City, Missouri, dates of sale being as follows: From all points in the United States and Canada, with the following exceptions, the dates of sale of tickets will be April 3 to 9, with final return limit to reach original starting point thirty days from date of sale. The exceptions are: Montana, Southern Idaho, Utah, Alberta, dates of sale April 2 to 8; Arizona, British Columbia, Nevada, Northern Idaho, Oregon (except via California), Washington (except via California), April 1 to 7; California, March 31 to April 6; Oregon (via California), Washington (Vancouver to Seattle, including via California), March 30 to April 5.

Tickets must be validated by ticket agent before boarding train for return journey, and when validated will be good for return leaving Independence or Kansas City on any date within final return limit, but passengers must reach original starting point prior to midnight of such final limit.

It must be understood that these reduced fares apply only to church members and dependent members of the family; and the name of the member to whom the certificate is issued, together with names of dependent members of the family for whom tickets are desired, must be filled in before the Identification Certificate is presented to ticket agent. Arrangements for tickets should be made well in advance of your departure to avoid any possible delay.

Considering the substantial reduction in fares granted by the railroads, together with the other advantages such as safety, speed, comfort and convenience, we would respectfully urge that our delegates and visitors to the Conference favor rail transportation in preference to other methods.

Address Transportation Department, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for your Identification Certificate.

We would all be happier and healthier if we could but rid ourselves of the mental and physical pains that we bring about by expecting trouble. Notes From the Field

A Heartening Personal Report

In a personal letter to President Smith, Brother Fishburn recounts his blessings and speaks of plans for a better future.

I trust 1932 may be a more satisfactory year for the church than 1931 was. However, on looking back over 1931, from a personal standpoint, I feel that I was particularly blessed. I have just checked over some items and was extremely pleased to note that during last year I paid $650 in tithing, besides making some quite sizeable contributions to the local branch and to Brother Glaude Smith personally. The Lord has surely blessed me financially and I am deeply appreciative, and trust that this coming year I may be blessed so that I may be an even greater contributor to the upbuilding of our great cause.

I sincerely trust that Brother Glaude Smith may be appointed to Denver again. He is doing a great work, is tremendously well liked, and it would be a shame to move him, now that he has everything so well in hand. The interest is very good, not only among the membership, but we have a number of nonmembers attending services regularly, several of whom I feel sure will ask for baptism shortly. It is surely a very fine treat to have a man in charge here who is thoroughly converted to our cause and its program and is solidifying our congregation by his optimism and loyalty.

ED FISHBURN.

Women of Detroit Raise Large Fund

Brother George H. Booth, of Detroit, writing President Smith recently, said:

"You will be interested in knowing that the Women's Department of Detroit for the last month raised for the general church fund nearly five hundred dollars. The group of which my wife is a member raised one hundred and four dollars. She of course is elated because of the fact that her contribution is the largest.

"Everything here in Detroit is progressing very nicely. J. Charles Mottashed apparently has the situation very well in hand, and beyond doubt is very deeply interested in his work."

Encouragement From Rich Hill Branch

To The First Presidency, Independence, Missouri:

At the semi-annual business meeting of the Rich Hill Branch, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, it was resolved to send to the general offices of the church a resolution expressing our appreciation of opportunities in the past for service and also of encouragement received.

We desire to express our confidence in the church and church officers and to pledge ourselves as a group as well as individuals to give service and continued support in the future.

THE RICH HILL BRANCH.

RICH HILL, MISSOURI.

A Pledge of Support From Central Michigan District To the First Presidency and Bishopric, Greetings:

We are attaching hereto copy of resolution, which was unanimously adopted at our recent district conference, held at Beaverton, Michigan, December 12, 13, 1931.

We are very happy over the outcome of our recent special conference, in that a wonderful spirit of unity characterized the entire session, each measure being passed unanimously.

At a special meeting held for the young people, a similar resolution was unanimously adopted by them.

We are also gratified to report that our District "went over the top" in raising our quota.

Again expressing our willingness to assist in every way possible, and extending to you our very best wishes for your success and happiness this coming New Year, we remain

Fraternally yours,

HUBERT CASE,

District President,

WINNIE M. HULBERT,

District Secretary.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.

The Resolution

WHEREAS, the Presiding Powers of this church, namely, the First Presidency, Bishopric and Joint Council have so nobly shouldered the responsibility of pledging themselves to eliminate the present indebtedness of this church in as short a time as possible, and endeavor to keep same free from debt thereafter, not encouraging any building except when money on hand is available,

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED: That we, as a district express our faith and confidence in these men and unanimously pledge ourselves to assist them in this endeavor to the limit of our possibilities and resources.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

District President,

WINNIE M. HULBERT,

District Secretary.

Blue Pencil Notes

A good way for Madam Rumor to reduce is on a very simple diet of plain facts. What do you feed her?

I wonder, did Adam ever say, "Who has had my fig leaves? I can't find them anywhere"? And if so, did Eve reply, "My dear, they are on the floor right where you left them. You should hang things up and then you could find them"? I think probably that did happen. It is not written in sacred history, but it is written in human nature, which makes what is often appropriately referred to as profane history.

Maxine, a little girl of my acquaintance, dropped in a moment to tell me that she was making "about a thousand cookies." I do not think that she really counted them, probably there were not over nine hundred; but they were real cookies and fine ones, for that afternoon she brought me some of them—sugar cookies with pink frosting, like mother used to make. I always had a theory that every mother should teach her daughter how to cook; it is rather fundamental, and lots of fun. And every father should teach his son how to use hammer and nails and saw. Boys and girls who know how to make things have much more fun than those who only know how to break things. Prisons are full of men and women who thought it smart to break things. Once I got a great thrill with a gang of other boys breaking windows in a vacant house, just to hear the glass fall, but I am glad that I learned in time that it was much more interesting to stay at home and use a kit of tools making things.

I was privileged to visit Des Moines recently, my first trip into the field for some time. The district priesthood held a banquet Saturday evening. In view of world and church conditions I went to that banquet with no desire to entertain or be entertained. I went with the desire to deliver to those men such a message as God would wish delivered to his chosen servants. I did not know until later that the district officers and the other speakers had decided among themselves that the meeting should be serious and spiritual rather than jovial or frivolous; in fact, it became more like a communion service than like the ordinary festival occasion. If the Saints everywhere in like spirit are preparing for the coming General Conference we should have a good conference.

We have been accused of coming to the conference of 1930 in a carnival spirit, to be entertained, to mingle with a great throng, to see and hear "big doings." Be that as it may, we should come to this conference as to a "solemn assembly," humbly, prayerfully, and with charity in our hearts. The program is being arranged in that spirit to that end. Prayer meetings, songs of praise, the preaching of the word, quorum sessions, and business meetings will predominate. There will be a limited amount of class work devoted to fundamental needs and aims of our work. We need the presence and direction of the Lord this year—our need is very great in that regard. Let us come in a spirit to receive his favor. Do you suppose it will be possible to carry the spirit of the prayer meeting over into the business sessions? Yes, it is possible. Will it be done?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Christ the Light of the World

Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? . . . If thou prepare thine heart and stretch out thine hands toward him; if iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles. . . . And thou shalt be secure, because there is hope; . . . and thou shalt take thy rest in safety. Also thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid.
—Job 11: 7-19.

Today fear rules the world. Suspicion is rampant on the earth. Selfishness and hatred are abroad. There is poverty, hunger, suffering. The monster of war rears its head. Great cataclysms take place overnight. Disaster threatens. Intrigue and intolerance—but why go farther? It is a dark picture. Is there any light in it?

Again we have forgotten Christ's declaration: "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." We are shirking our responsibility named in his Sermon on the Mount: "Let your light so shine before men, that they see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." We are so busy with other things that we forget to let our light shine before men.

We need to be constantly reminded that Christ is the light of the world, that he may be found if we search, that he is perfection, and that if we would be like him, we must put away all wickedness. In Christ is hope—our hope. In him is security. In him is safety. He is the divine light. He brings brightness, beauty, and love into the lives of men. And he asks our humble help.

FLAMES IN THE ORIENT—

Scriptural and nonscriptural prophecies find another fulfillment in the recent troubles in the Far East. Japan, one of the present first-rank military powers of the world, continues its invasion of China. There is apparent no real motive but desire for conquest, and for needed lands and resources; Japan's apologies and explanations can not be considered seriously. This act flouts the peace treaties and agreements, and reveals the present impotence of the League of Nations. In view of the prophecies mentioned, we are not surprised. But the situation is unfortunate.

"SCRAPS OF PAPER"—

Japan has resented the inquiry of the League of Nations into her actions in China, and has declared this little war to be an affair to be settled exclusively between China and herself. China has thought otherwise, and has made repeated appeals to the League. Little good those appeals have done.

Once more a nation has regarded the existing treaties as "scraps of paper," but it remains to be seen if Japan, like Germany before her, has not lighted a bigger conflagration with those "scraps of paper" than she will be able to control. Japan has really placed herself as an outlaw among the nations of the world.

SHOULD AMERICANS DIE?—

The invasion endangers the safety of American and European missionaries, travelers, and business people, and threatens the holdings and concessions of powerful corporations of all other large nations.

Should Americans, Englishmen or any other foreigners die to protect China? Two considerations urge intervention: justice for the Chinese, and the demands of powerful capitalistic interests for protection. Of the two, we suspect that the latter will be the more influential. But other great considerations urge us to stay at home and mind our own business. American men do not wish to die to protect an incompetent and bankrupt oriental state. We tried to help Europe out of its mess, and our only rewards for our trouble and expense are hatred, suspicion, and threats to repudiate the debts. We should not send American men across the water to die. Let the travelers and missionaries come home. Let the corporations take care of their own property. We are not the police force of the whole world. Let us try to solve some of our own terrific problems. We shall have plenty to do if we take care of the United States. Besides killing innocent men in a cause that could only result in the bolstering up of a feeble bandit-ridden government, a war would add to taxes already too high, and increase the great deficit from which our government is suffering.

WAR IS RUTHLESS—

Warfare is once more revealed as ruthless, brutal, and revolting. It once more attacks civilian populations. The horror which is being enacted these days in Shanghai shocks a world that is already sick with the smell of powder and the sight of blood. . . . The world must realize that all efforts to make warfare humanitarian by forbidding the use of poison gas, dum-dum bullets and saw tooth bayonets is futile. As well try to train a lion to eat mush within sight of raw meat. Warfare can not be made decent, simply because it is not decent, either in essence or in entirety.

WAR MUST BE OUTLAWED—

This occurrence in the Orient should compel the nations of the world to renewed activity in the determination to outlaw and prevent war. The horror of war should not subdue us; the frequency of its recurrence should not make us yield to it. It is not inevitable; it can be stopped. We have simply not yet succeeded in forging weapons of sufficient strength to overcome it. And it may be a suggestion to say that when those weapons are forged they will be of a strong economic character, as well as diplomatic.

We can not give up the effort to end war without giving up the effort to save civilization. Giving in to war is not simply permitting an evil that afflicts the world; it is giving up to something that will destroy all that is worth while in the world.

If our measures to end war have failed, it does not mean that we should abandon all efforts. It means, rather, that we must use stronger and yet stronger measures.

SALVATION FROM WITHIN—

China's trouble today is that she has been a parasite nation, depending on others for military protection, relief from famine, and spiritual leadership. Today her defenses are gone. We can sell goods to China; we can teach her people our culture and civilization. But no lasting good can ever come to China save through her own efforts. There is one power on earth and one only, that can drive the Japanese invaders from Chinese soil (if they are ever to be driven out): that is an aroused China that will give its last drop of blood, its last bit of resources, to the purchase of liberty and the reconstruction of the country.

Sociological Effects of the Depression

The Crisis Forces Man to Examine His Institutions

By Walter L. Daykin

The following is the fifth of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. The author of this article is a member of the church who has entered upon a distinguished university career and won recognition in his own field.—Editors.

Our economic institution had its origin in some basic and fundamental human need. It has been suggested by some authors that this need was hunger and that this interest became institutionalized when a body of rules was organized around it. These rules governed human activities evoked to satisfy this need. In the beginning the efforts to satisfy this interest or need were quite largely on the "fumbling and success" level. Soon a system of folk-practices arose. Finally a vast amount of theory came into existence in order to justify our economic practices. So our economic theory of which we are so proud, amounts to little else than a group of rationalizations. This theory tells us how our present competitive system operates. One naturally wonders whether this theory is universally applicable. Will it apply in a communistic experiment like the one in Russia? Better still, will this theory apply in our own Zionite scheme when this utopian ideal materializes?

That our present economic system has proved itself inadequate is evidenced by the existence of unrest, poverty, unemployment, the inequitable distribution of wealth and many other pathological conditions. At present these abnormal aspects have become emphasized and we have what is called a depression. Even the noted economists of America can not locate the specific causative factors involved in this depression. A partial list of causes enumerated by these specialists are overproduction, the tariff, underconsumption, the World War, the breakdown of foreign markets, the failure to deflate the currency, excessive industrialization, and over-speculation. An analysis of these causes is not our concern here. It might be suggestive to note, however, that it is paradoxical to argue that there is overproduction in a country of plenty where people are starving.

It is undoubtedly true that the present financial crisis has some far-reaching sociological effects. It has conditioned and will continue to influence the social processes, and consequently will affect personality and cultural development. However, to point these effects out specifically would be a rather difficult task because all of these effects will be relative with reference to the persons and groups involved.

Only a few of the general sociological implications of the present depression will be suggested here.

Evils of the Depression

One of the chief effects of the depression is the tremendous increase of unrest. Our country is saturated with radicals, men who react negatively to our standard values. The presence of these men demonstrates the lack of wish satisfaction, and as a result, distrust and pessimism have followed. During normal times we have some unrest but now the financial conditions interfere with many established interests, and therefore discontent is more prevalent. Because of the disparity of incomes class distinctions and differences have been greatly emphasized. In a distressing time like this social injustice is aggravated. These dissatisfied members of our population are clamoring for more recognition. Often this unrest gets an expression in literature, theoretical utopias, and radical organizations, such as socialism, anarchism, and communism. The presence of these radical organizations clearly demonstrates that our economic system is far from ideal and that it is shot through with either real or imaginary defects.

It is obvious that any financial crisis is characterized by widespread unemployment. While this is an economic phenomenon, yet it often leads to personal demoralization. The person out of work tends to become detached from other workers and consequently loses his social status. He then joins the unemployed group and as a result lowers his standard or scale of living and develops a hostile attitude toward those more favorably situated. After being unemployed for some time, habits conducive to the shiftless life become established and even when work is offered, it is often refused. Numerous cases of this sort have come within the range of experience of the writer. Then, too, there is the subtle worry cost involved in unemployment. When the financial status of folks becomes unbearable, insanity or an attempt to escape reality may be the way out. Often this worry leads to drastic behavior such as suicide.

The economic depression may have varied effects upon cultural development. It is perhaps well known that institutions are interdependent and that a change in one institution is reflected in all the other institutions in our social organization. For example, the inventions in the industrial world have not only influenced economic relations but they have invaded the home, the church, and the moral system. Modern machinery has lightened the housework of women. The housewife no longer makes the clothing for the family, bakes the bread, or cans much food. Then the modern electric devices, such as the sweeper and washing machine, have further lightened the housewife's burden. Naturally there is much leisure time on the woman's hands, but our present mores still demand that a woman should stay in the home. This seeming failure of the customs and attitudes to keep pace with the modern inventions results in disorganization in the home. Areas of communication have been increased and this has been followed by the introduction of new behavior patterns into isolated situations. As a result criticism of old ways of behaving has become extensive. Our present religious and moral state can never be understood apart from the economic changes.

Similarly this present economic depression will send its tentacles into all of our institutions. It may effect the home by further decreasing the birth rate. Certainly crime of certain types will increase because it has already been established that there is a close correlation between crime and delinquency and the financial situation. The church is so inescapably linked with our other institutions that it is bound to be influenced by this economic crisis. Our people must realize this. We are in the world and we are a part of it. We make our living in the so-called worldly industries; we buy from the same shops that others do, and follow the same styles. Our only difference from the world is that we are people with a distinct religious philosophy, and when we lose this, we are engulfed in the large inclusive group. If we are a part of the worldly social organization it is obvious that the breakdown of one of the social institutions will threaten the stability of the church. In short, our church people should realize that this economic depression has influenced every phase of human endeavor.

Some Benefits of the Depression

The effects of the depression are not all detrimental. Every crisis has an organizing role. An excellent example of this is found in the recent World War. This common conflict had a tendency to close the breach between capital and labor, to diminish the prejudice between the Negroes and whites, and to reduce the social distance created by religious affiliations. Perhaps these effects were only temporary. Out of this financial depression is arising more human sympathy. In other words, people are becoming more conscious of others and community responsibility is emphasized. The idea of being "my brother's keeper" is getting a practical expression. In one city in Iowa, for example, funds were gathered from persons and organizations and used to give work to the unfortunate in the community. The same effects should be experienced in the church. In this period of crisis the church membership should be welded closer together, and our attention should be focused upon supernatural guidance.

It has been suggested that this depression represents a crisis situation. This anticipates some disorganization which must be followed by reorganization, which may result in progress, or it may result in some pathological condition. However, it is a chance that must be taken because unrest and crisis initiate social change and are the only roads to progress. This depression or economic crisis through which we are passing makes us conscious of our social and economic defects. Attention is focused upon abuses which abound in our economic institutions. Numerous panaceas have been offered as means for eliminating these glaring defects. Apparently our leading economists are utterly helpless so far as a solution for our economic ills is concerned. Some of them attempt to lull the public to sleep by predicting an early return to normalcy. These lullabies are, for the most part, mere projection of wishes. Most of the leaders in the field of economics blatantly assume that our present economic system is the right one and their panaceas for its reestablishment run largely in terms of repairing the old structure.

New Factors Needed for a Solution

The task of showing the way out of our present economic crisis is no easy one. However, it is clear that any permanent solution to our economic problem necessitates the discarding of some of our antiquated economic ideas. Our church could be useful here because certainly we desire to substitute cooperation for excessive competition and to produce for utility and consumption rather than for profit. This present economic difficulty may demonstrate to our people the need for our social and economic program. When they are converted to its need, perhaps more progress can be made. Unfortunately our church is not adequately prepared to go far at present because of the lack of a clearly defined procedure as to the establishment of our Zion. It must be recognized that our approach can not be purely sentimental but the establishment of a Zion must be attempted only after a careful analysis of the whole situation has been made. Our immediate problem in this work is psychological and sociological. We are facing the difficult task of building up a collectivistic society with individualistic-minded people.

Prophetic Warnings in Latter Day Revelation

IV.—AGAINST DEBT AND EXTRAVAGANCE IN PUBLIC AND PRIVATE EXPENDITURES

By Elbert A. Smith

In David Copperfield, Mr. Micawber philosophizes like this: "An income of twenty shillings a week with an expenditure of nineteen shillings leaves a balance of happiness; while an income of nineteen shillings a week with an expenditure of twenty shillings leaves a balance of misery." A great many individuals and institutions, several great nations, some of our leading cities, and even the church, during prosperous times diligently accumulated a "balance of misery" that must now be liquidated.

To Us a Warning Given

To us the Lord gave a warning against debt, and coupled with it certain sound counsel as to expenditures, public and private, calculated to avoid debt. In an editorial in the Herald some months ago we dealt with the warning against debt, hence at this time a brief review on that point will be sufficient.

Advices and even commandments are given with qualifications, subject to our ability to heed and obey. Under modern conditions it may not be possible always to conform strictly to the advice: "Owe no man anything." (Romans 13: 8.) Yet without doubt that was the goal indicated as desirable to be obtained—and we were to work toward it rather than away from it.

Debt is bondage. In 1830 the Lord advised: "Pay the debt thou hast contracted with the printer. Release thyself from bondage." (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5.) In 1831 the Saints were told: "It is said in my laws, or forbidden, to get in debt to thine enemies." (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 6.) In 1833 they were told: "Let the bishop seek diligently, to obtain an agent, and let it be a man who has got riches in store; a man of God and of strong faith; that thereby he may be enabled to discharge every debt; that the storehouse of the Lord may not be brought into disrepute before the eyes of the people." (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 6.) In 1901 the church was told concerning the college debt: "The college debt should be paid." (Doctrine and Covenants 125: 16.) In 1906 they were commanded: "In the establishment of the sanitarium and the home for children debt should not be contracted nor too large nor expensive buildings be built at the outset." (Doctrine and Covenants 127: 4.) Going back again, in 1834 they were told: "Concerning your debts, Behold, it is my will that you should pay all your debts." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 13.)

Some of these commandments are specific, though with a general principle underlying (as the one concerning the Sanitarium), others are general. It is impossible to read them all without concluding that the Lord regards debt as a bad thing to get into and a good thing to get out of. His warnings are unmistakable.

Debt a Very Present Hindrance to Us

I have heard men argue that debt is a good thing for the church, local and general, as it furnishes an incentive to the membership to save and put their money into given enterprises of a constructive nature. That argument always seemed to me not sound doctrine. I am inclined to agree with a statement made by Bishop DeLapp, some weeks ago, to the effect that debt for a business man may be a good thing, providing he can borrow at a low rate of interest and make his investments yield a higher rate; but the church is not in business, and should not be, so has little use for debt. Our mission is to preach the gospel, primarily, and secondarily to consolidate our gains locally under Zionite laws. In those enterprises debt proves to be a very present hindrance in every time of need. It is "a balance of misery."

The World Over

Today, the great nations of the earth are debt ridden to the point of exhaustion. The World War left them burdened; and subsequent extravagance in governmental expenditures and in the maintaining of large armaments has all but ruined them. After all, the Lord is wiser than men. Only recently Germany, about to collapse and fall into chaos, thus endangering all Europe directly, and the rest of the world more indirectly, was rescued (temporarily) by the combined efforts of other nations. Almost immediately afterward Great Britain came to the brink of the precipice, causing an upheaval in her government circles and bringing to her aid France and America with offers of credit in enormous sums. These loans were postulated, as in the case with Germany, upon a program of drastic reductions in expenditures and the continued exercise of retrenchment and economy.

More recently Germany has declared utter inability to continue paying reparations. Her obligations in that regard have been estimated at a total of $9,000,000,000, with $4,049,000,000 of private debts (i. e., loans from private sources). Great Britain, and France, had depended upon payments from Germany with which to meet their own obligations. The world's war debts are not likely to be paid soon—or ever.

Concerning South America a press dispatch from Washington, District of Columbia, dated January 24, serves to remind us that while during the crazy days of speculation the United States regarded the world as her fish pond, others also were fishing. The dispatch reads:

Those American citizens who invested about 1,531 million dollars in South American bonds, and now find about 815 millions in default of interest payments, have been even worse "suckers" than those who put their billions of dollars in rapidly fluctuating European securities. According to estimates made by the Latin American Bondholders' Association the one-and-a-half-billion-dollar par value of South American bonds has shrunk to 272 million. The only ones who have profited have been the international bankers, who collected their commissions from the American investors.

In our civic affairs conditions are deplorable. Our leading cities, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia are debt ridden, if not actually near the verge of bankruptcy. In Chicago there has been talk of closing the public schools. Twenty million dollars is still owing to teachers and school employees. There have been millions for graft and "rackets"; but nothing for the schools. In both Chicago and Philadelphia taxpayers are on strike against further increase of taxes. New York, the richest city in the land, found it difficult longer to borrow money to sustain the city government, but on promise of retrenchment recently succeeded in effecting loans of some two hundred and fifty million dollars. Thus extravagance and dishonesty have written a large "balance of misery" on the ledgers of many of our cities.

Advice With the Warning

Coupled with the warnings to us against debt were certain instructions concerning very fundamental habits of frugality and economy. It were well with us had the warning and the advice been given more diligent and general heed:

The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard. (Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7. Given in 1913.)

The Way Out

We can now see the divine prescience and wisdom in this as in other portions of modern revelation.

This revelation was given just before the War, and the truth couched therein, though not addressed to the world, had a world-wide application. Extravagance, speculation, wastefulness, and carelessness the world over have written a large "balance of misery" on the ledgers of the nations and cities; today, as the way out, they turn themselves to some of the very rules of conduct set forth in the revelation quoted.

We have reason to believe that the church has learned her lesson well and permanently. Not in one generation will it be forgotten. The way out is still as indicated in the revelation of 1913: "Both in private and in public expenditures carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard."

III.—RESPONSIBILITY AS A SEVENTY: PREPARATIONS FOR MISSIONARY WORK

By James Franklin Mintun

My calling, and some of the conditions existing associated with my life, (which but few knew anything about), caused me, while making preparations to occupy as a seventy to worry over the grave responsibility of such a sacred calling. Not only had I met with financial losses, but on the account of them I met with social and business losses for a time, and these, associated with false accusations from within and without the church, with envy and jealousies, growing out of misunderstandings, and bitter prejudice from those without the church, were hard to endure, and I worried much, and possibly overmuch at times, not knowing what was the wisest thing to do. But I kept close to God, and in prayer I received strength and leadings which greatly encouraged me, without which I would not have been able to patiently endure. I continued to seek out and to occupy at every opportunity in a ministerial way, and not to be moved from the leadings of God to me; and continued my preparations for the labors of a seventy. What sweet peace filled my soul when God would manifest by the Spirit his approval of my weak efforts to occupy and continue my preparations for my life's work, which I thought the work of a seventy to be.

A Letter From "Brother Joseph"

Over a year before I was appointed to a mission I was urged by some to enter missionary work, leaving my family without a home, and still in debt. This I could not feel was the right thing to do, and

I concluded to write to President Joseph Smith, informing him of my financial condition, and what was being urged upon me to do, and what my judgment had been in the matter, asking him for his advice and counsel. In reply he wrote as follows:

Plano, Illinois, March 26, 1880.

Brother J. F. Mintun, Magnolia, Iowa.

My advice, after carefully thinking the matter over, praying for guidance, is this. Get yourself a home, free from debt, after doing which, if you approve yourself in the field your family will be cared for, beyond a doubt. If, however, you are distrustful of the results, obtain something to do, and help make assurance doubly sure. One thing to me is quite certain; you will find but little if any comfort in anything but the telling of the gospel story, and God will use you to declare his word in some way. Don't fret, nor grumble, nor repine; do what you can: find no fault, and let the consequences take care of themselves.

I still pray that you may be properly directed, and believe that you will.

Yours in bonds,
JOSEPH SMITH.

The original of this letter lies before me in the bold handwriting of Joseph Smith, and I have thought how much better it would have been up till this time if I had heeded all this letter contains. This letter decided me, and I tried to fulfill its instruction. It showed me some of my failures, and has been ever since it was received of great assistance to me, and has inspired me with greater patience.

At the semi-annual conference held at Park's Mill in September, 1881, I was appointed a mission to the State of Nebraska. At the time I was occupying locally at Magnolia and elsewhere preaching the word, and was acting as superintendent of the Sunday school at Magnolia. As previously referred to, I had secured a small property for a home at Magnolia, to which place I moved in September, 1880, and labored in the general merchandising business for Elder James M. Harvey, who was a very zealous minister. When sent for to administer in cases of serious illness, he would close the store and we would both go, and many great blessings came to the Saints through these administrations. While I thought by doing this way it was unwise from a business point of view, and it so proved later on, yet it did not lessen my zeal and interest in the work of the church.

Preparations for Departure on Mission

How ill prepared I felt to start out alone, without any previous missionary experience, among strangers, in a strange part of the country! I pleaded for some one to be sent with me who had had some experience in missionary work, with whom I could labor at least for a time.

It seemed that there was not any one available at this time, so I was advised to go and do the best that I could, and that all would be well. Accordingly I made the best preparations that I knew how, so that I would take with me the necessary material for ministerial work and for clothing, and to leave my family as comfortably situated as possible, there being at that time no allowance made by the general church for the missionary families. It is true that there was a bishop in western Iowa, at Little Sioux—Bishop David M. Gamet—who kept a storehouse, where he received moneys and properties, but the amounts received was very meager to meet the needs of the poor and the needs of the families of the missionaries. When he had anything, and it was called for, he sent it.

On November 7, 1888, having previously arranged with Brother E. R. Lanphear to take me by team to Calhoun, a town about five miles from Magnolia, where I had sent word that I would preach on that night on my way to my mission, I began my work, which I thought would be continued as long as life should last. While bidding my wife farewell, I handed her my purse with all that I had in moneys and credits. She urged me to take enough money to take me to Nebraska, as she did not have faith to believe that I could get across the Missouri River without money. I felt that I should go as the missionaries of New Testament times went, and I said to her, "God knows the conditions, and if it is his will that I should do missionary work in Nebraska, he will provide some way that I can get there; but if no way is prepared by the Lord, I will know that he does not want me to go there to do missionary work, and I will return home, and labor as I have done before." It was with tearful eyes and a very sad heart that she consented for me to go as I did. But the way was provided in a strange manner, and it was much better in some ways than if I had taken money from my home, in fact in every way. It was as follows:

Help Provided

There was a brother living in Calhoun by the name of James Emmerson, a man poor in this world's goods but rich in faith. He attended the services the evening of November 7, but on the account of rainy weather that night he requested me to remain another evening, and preach for them, believing that more would be present. So I did, lodging at my sister's who was living in this village. The next night was pleasant and a goodly number were present and I felt well in ministering the word. At the close of the service I stated that I was starting on my first mission, and starting like those sent out in New Testament times; but asked for no collections, and none knew, not even my sister, that I had no money. After the close of the service I went to lodge at my sister's, but before entering the house I breathed a prayer to God to in some way provide for my needs, that I might go to my mission the next morning. I then prepared and lay down on the bed, but before closing my eyes in sleep I again began to pray as before, but before closing the prayer a rap was heard at the door of the room where I was laying. I asked who was there. He told me that it was Brother Emmerson. I asked who he wanted, he said, "I want you." I opened the door, through which he thrust his hand towards me, saying, "Here, take this, after I have told you how it happened that I have come." He then said: "After the meeting I went home, and began to prepare for bed, and started to pull my boots, and when I had hold of one to pull it, a still small voice said to me, 'Go, give the money you have to my servant.' I reasoned to myself that I had but fifty cents, and I was needing that in so many ways, that I concluded I would not give it, and again began to pull my boots; but as I did so, a voice louder than the former said, 'Go give that money to my servant.' I again thought and reasoned to myself that as there were so many ways in which I needed the money that I ought not to be required to give it away. I again began to pull my boots and had one off, when a loud voice said, 'Go and give that money you have to my servant.' For this reason I am here, and give you this money. Good night." I lay down to my rest with a strange feeling of gratitude, and an assurance from God that he was preparing the way before me, and that it was his will that I should do missionary work in Nebraska, according to my appointment.

Starting on the Mission

The next morning I started for my mission, going as far as Modale where I lodged with a sister, and was on my way to the Missouri River the next morning, toward Blair, Nebraska, which I had decided would be my first stop, and where I would make my first effort to preach the word. I knew no one there, and did not know that there were any Saints living there. I crossed the river by a ferry boat, the only way of a public nature that one could cross the river at that time. I paid for my fare twenty-five cents, so that I had twenty-five cents left, and it was getting near dinner time. I started towards Blair, and soon saw a man come into the road from the timber with a load of wood, and as I was not used to carrying a valise, and it was quite warm, I asked the man if I could put my valise on the load of wood and follow him into Blair where he said he was going. He granted my request and invited me ride with him as he did not have a large load. I did, and soon began to make myself acquainted and to make known the work I was intending to do. I asked him if he knew of any Latter Day Saints living in Blair. He said, "I am a kind of a one." I thought his answer was a strange one. But I soon found the reason for it. When we arrived in Blair he asked me where I wanted to get off, and as we were just in front of a small store, I said, I was a stranger there and did not know just where I should get off, but he had better let me off there. It was then noon, and I was hungry from my walk, and I needed a lunch. So he let me off, and I invested a part of my twenty-five cents in some cheese and crackers, and began to eat. The proprietor of the store was an old gentleman, and, as I learned, an Irishman and a Catholic. He was not busy at the time and came and stood by me as I ate, and I asked him if he knew of any place that I could get to preach in. He said, "What church do you represent?" I told him I represented the Latter Day Saints. He said, "I believe I know of some Latter Day Saints, living not far from the store, and I will go and see them and find out for you." I said, "Show me where these parties are, and I will go and see." But he insisted that I should eat my lunch, and he left me to eat, and soon he returned with the information that he had found some Latter Day Saints. I said, "I will go to them at once, if you will show me where they live." He showed me, and I went to the hospitable home of Brother W. T. Hicks.

A Kindly Reception

The first thing that I saw of any importance as I entered through the door, was the Saints' Herald lying on the bed, which gave me an assurance that I was at home. They made me twice welcome, and though quite poor and poorly prepared to entertain any one, they seemed very happy to provide a place for me, and to assist me in preparing a place where I could minister to the people there, and assisted me to find other Saints in the place. As I began my labors here I felt that God was with me, and the Spirit's presence removed all doubt. There was not left the possibility of a doubt to enter my mind as to my calling and appointment, and God's will concerning the care of his servants who will but trust him.

This old gentleman who assisted me to find the Saints, and was so kind to me ever after, gave me an experience that has left a warm spot in my heart towards the Catholics; for I knew that God had used this man to assist me, and through him had prepared the way before me in my first mission. I am also reminded at this time that in many instances I have been befriended by members and at times by ministers of the Catholic Church, when I certainly needed it. Many Catholics have entertained me, and have listened to the preaching of the word through me, and a few have entered the

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

More attention should be paid to adequate lighting facilities in industrial plants and in the home. Insufficient illumination promotes accidents and reduces efficiency. The quality of the light and its intensity, or flicker, and whether it is from natural resources, deserves more consideration. Ocular fatigue is frequently brought about by a glare of light. There is an instrument known as a photometer, of which there are several varieties, that measures the amount of illumination.

Many children are rendered blind by the lack of intelligence upon the part of the parents in the choice of toys. In my practice of several years, I have known one or perhaps both eyes to be injured, or entirely destroyed, by such implements as arrows, scissor blades, lime burns, Fourth of July fireworks, finger nails, knives, spears, the crack of a whip, air guns, toy pistols, etc. More consideration along this line of convention is a duty that parents owe their children.

Myopia or near-sightedness, almost always depends upon the lengthening or elongation of the eye-ball. The causes of myopia are unknown, but it has been found that the demands of civilization and education have a great deal to do with it. Eyes that are used excessively or improperly for near work, frequently become myopic. Practically every child that is born is more or less far-sighted (hyperopic). The general health of the individual and also the standard of education affects the percentage of this defect. Among some of the other contributing causes, may be mentioned poor elimination, insufficient outdoor exercise, excessive study, too fine, or indistinct print. The faulty construction of desks in some of our schools and colleges might also be mentioned as one of the contributing causes. It church through my influence. These have proved very faithful. When God can work upon the hearts of members of the Catholic Church and some of its ministers, to show the servants of God favors, as has been the case in my experience, they, as well as all other religious bodies should be those whom I should tell the blessed story to without prejudice. I have always done this, and have many warm friends in the Catholic Church; and there are many of these who are friends to the church; and have about as little prejudice against the Latter Day Saints, as the Latter Day Saints have towards them.

has been found that in England and the United States that one tenth of all blindness is ascribed to myopia. The symptoms depend upon the degree of defect. Sometimes there are no symptoms except indistinct vision for distance, which, in some cases, is not discoverable until an oculist has been consulted. Since one who is affected with this condition requires less accommodation, he may have the advantage in close application. This is brought about by a lessened development of the circular fibers of one of the intrinsic muscles. If it is of a high-degree type, the distant vision is very indistinct, and, in some cases, there is pain in the eyes after near using. Some cases have black spots floating before their eyes, and sometimes bright flashes of light. In other cases, there is a partial blindness in the visual field. This condition is called scotoma. When there is total blindness in a part of the visual field, it is known as absolute scotoma. In some cases the eyes are unduly prominent, the pupils are dilated, and the patient has a tendency to screw the eyelids together. To those with excessive high myopia, the strain is so great and painful, that a divergent squint is the result. The eyes tire easily, are irritable and sensitive to light.

The treatment consists in the removal of the contributing causes, just enumerated, and properly fitted glasses, and the avoidance of fatigue. Rigid hygienic rules, both local and general, must be carried out, especially in the young. Outdoor exercise and plenty of sleep, restriction of near work, proper illumination are extremely necessary. A book or other reading material should be held thirteen inches from the eye. The light should be good—neither too bright nor too dim—and should come from behind, preferably over the left shoulder. Attention should be paid to the sitting posture, and the school children should have their desks so constructed to conform to it. What is known as a progressive type of myopia, is a very serious defect and is associated with the common danger of degeneration of the retina and choroid, which is frequently complicated with hemorrhages, either in the retina or vitreous, and which is accompanied by slowly developing cataracts. A more serious complication, in some cases, is the detachment of the retina from the choroid, with almost complete loss of sight. This condition may be prevented by avoiding too violent exertion, or any slight injury to the eye.

As in the treatment in the less progressive form, proper attention must be paid to the general health and the eye health of the individual. This great catastrophe may be brought about by lack of outdoor exercise and too much fatigue. A semiannual refraction, with an alteration in the glasses to conform to the needs of the constant changes of the eye, will do much to relieve this strain. Restricting the reading and having every possible care taken of the light—illumination equivalent to ten-foot candles—on the page. It has been found in recent years that the ear can be utilized as a means of education to spare the eyes. This is brought about by small classes and quiet rooms, presided over by teachers especially trained for this line of work. All young people who are of a definite tendency to myopia, especially children under ten years of age, having five or more diopters of myopia, should be the ones admitted to the "ear classes."

All young people, as I have said before, who have any symptoms of the progressive form of myopia, should choose an occupation that does not require constant, exacting work of the eyes.

A Missionary at Large

By James W. Davis

October 20, finished in Cambridge, Nebraska, and started for home. "What a grand and glorious feeling" to be headed for home, the most loved place of all. But my car was not percolating very good, so I stopped at Oxford and had a little work done on it which cost me four bits (in Australia it would be two bob). Then I went on to Alma where I had supper with Brother and Sister Wookey. They have been very nice to me. Then I started on the way home again. But the car was still behaving badly, so I stopped down town and had some more work done on it, and this time it cost me two bits. But it was worse than before, so I got another fellow to help me with it and he got better results and didn't charge me anything. (I like to have my garage bills graduate that way.) By this time it was nearly midnight, but I was still determined to get home as quickly as possible, and although I had 350 miles to go, I started on. As I drove along I filled in the time as well as I could. First I had a prayer service, then I had a song service.

All went well for a couple of hours and then at about two o'clock in the morning my car stalled and could not be induced to go another yard. So I slumped down in my seat and went to sleep. An hour and a half later I woke up and was stiff and cold. I got out and walked up and down the road a couple of miles and warmed up, then crawled back into the car and went to sleep again. But it was a cold night and an hour later I woke up colder than ever. So I scrambled out and walked a few more miles but this time I couldn't get warm. I had a problem to solve, too, for I had very little money and I was facing another garage bill. So, not forgetting the practice of a lifetime, I prayed as I walked and asked the Lord to intercede for me and help me to get home with what money I had.

Presently I saw a light in a farmhouse within a half mile from where I was, so I waited until they had time to get their "bedragglements" on and a fire started and then I took off down to the house and explained to the folks that my car had been stalled since two o'clock, and could I come in and get warm? Of course I could and was made welcome and given a hot breakfast, and a garage man was called from a near-by town to come and tow me in. So far my prayer was being answered. This man worked on the car (carbureter) for a while and finally got it running rather imperfectly, so I got under way again. A few miles further on I was becalmed again. However it was daytime, and I had a better chance of obtaining help. Presently a man came along the same way that I was going, so I signaled him to stop, but he was otherwise minded. A little later another came along the same way so I gave him the "high ball," and he turned out to be the operator of a garage in the next town ahead, so he got behind with his car and pushed me into town and into his garage and after awhile had my craft ready for the breeze again. I had no more trouble, but kept steadily on and finally arrived at home safely with eleven cents reposing calmly in my pocket.

My prayer was answered and I was home. What a glorious realization, for there were loved ones there to welcome me. I had not long to stay so I worked hard to get things fixed up around home in preparation for winter. I attended communion services in Independence the first Sunday in November in company with my wife and thoroughly enjoyed being among the Saints, for in my new work I am quite thoroughly isolated from the church.

November 4, I started back to my territory, but this time I brought Neddie (my wife Inez) with me. We left home in the morning, and drove through to Alma, Nebraska, where we spent the night with Brother and Sister Wookey. Found them all well and all right. Next day went on to Holdrege, where we secured light housekeeping accommodations and Neddie and I were soon established in bachelor's quarters. This was a wonderful improvement over staying around smelly old hotels. They are saturated from cellar to garret with tobacco smoke, and, like Uncle H. O. Smith, "I'd just as soon smell a skunk."

Sunday, November 8. There were no Saints in Holdrege, of which we knew, so on Sunday, the 8th, we spent part of the day quietly together in our little two-room apartment reading and writing. I had received a very encouraging and spiritual letter from Patriarch J. T. Gresty some time before, so we got it out and read it again, and the same inspiring influence that attended him when writing it brought comfort and cheer to us while reading it. Our love for Brother Gresty is deep and abiding. Later in the day we drove over to Bertrand and visited Brother and Sister William Clifton. We received a warm welcome and had a good time. To meet Saints like this when we are away from home cheers us up wonderfully, for notwithstanding we have never seen them before they seem very near to us, in fact it is like seeing home folks. Sister Clifton has a son and two daughters by a former marriage, Russell, Ruth, and Eunice High. They are lovely young people. The girls are in high school, while Russell has graduated and is now regularly employed. It is most unfortunate that such fine young folks as these, who have been baptized into the church in their childhood should have to be so completely isolated from the church. They are talented and would be good church workers, but instead of their own church having the benefit of their usefulness, they have to find their outlet in the Lutheran Church. What a tragedy that our ministry should be so decimated that we are no longer able to properly look after our "Scattered Saints." While I was working Bertrand, Neddie went over with me one day and we paid the Cliftons another visit.

November 22. We had intended to move from Holdrege to Lexington on Saturday, but we had a young blizzard and did not dare venture forth in it. So we made the trip on Sunday in order to be in our new territory ready for work on Monday. We had to travel through a sleet storm, and as we had no "Defroster" the ice accumulated on the windshield so I could not see to drive. On account of this I had to get out sixteen times in a distance of forty miles and scrape the ice off the glass with a safety razor blade. A good brother has suggested a very practical way to overcome this difficulty another time and we will try to make use of the information. We arrived at our destination safely, for which we were very thankful. We secured another bachelor's quarter and proceeded as before.

November 29. We did not find any Saints in Lexington, but on this Sunday we drove over to Cozad to look up some Saints there. We found a Brother and Sister Sims about seven miles out of Cozad, and were again made very welcome. We had intended to pay a short visit only, but we were soon having such a good time that our stay was prolonged. This is one of the homes where Brother E. E. Long has been a welcome visitor for a number of years, he having baptized Brother Sims. The mention of Brother Long's name brought a flood of memories to me, for he and I have been rather intimately associated in missionary work in the past. Some of our experiences were of a kind to establish a close friendship between us. I'll mention one only: Some years ago we were laboring together in Southern Ohio. We had occasion to go from the city of Dayton to a town called Brush Creek, near which place there was a new opening where considerable missionary work had been done. We missed our connections in Cincinnati and had to take a through train to Portsmouth which was beyond our destination, and cost us more money, leaving us with only seven cents between us. We arrived in Portsmouth about noon. There had been quite a heavy fall of snow, and we had to walk fifteen miles to get back to our appointment. We each had a piece of pie at four in the morning, in lieu of breakfast, and needless to say, were in need of food before tackling those fifteen miles through the snow. Seven cents didn't look very big, but we had to make it do, so our problem was how to spend it to the best advantage. Brother Long suggested that we buy two cents worth of crackers and five cents worth of cheese. I suggested that we buy a five-cent loaf of bread and reserve the two cents to keep the Devil out of our pockets. My motion carried. We secured the loaf, carried it along with us until we were well out of the city, then broke it in halves and proceeded to devour it. We had no butter or jam, but we ate it and it tasted good. It did its work, too, for we made the journey in good time, had a hot supper among warm friends, and preached that night. We spent several happy weeks together and baptized a number of good people into the church. I believe Brother Long and I had an agreement that we would not tell this story, but I have violated the pact several times. Such experiences are good for us. They send the roots of our affection for each other to greater depths.

The names of W. E. Shakespeare, E. F. Robertson, O. L. D'Arcy, and others of our traveling ministry, are in household use with the Sims family. Finally we reluctantly bade good night and returned to our miniature domicile in Lexington. We had had another good time.

Slinging mud on the character of another reacts upon the person who does the throwing. As Booker T. Washington, the Negro who did so much to uplift his own people, phrased it, "You can't hold a man in the ditch without yourself staying in the ditch, too." No scandal is ever so scandalous as it is made out to be by those who welcome rumors concerning the weakness of others. The man who deals in slanders should beware lest he soil his own hands.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

THE GOSPEL FORUM

Under this heading we shall be glad to receive and publish articles and letters of interest to our readers on the doctrine and work of the church. Writers are responsible for their own views. Other views on subjects discussed here will be received if of sufficient interest.

The Trinity

By J. F. Gunsolley

An article that appeared in the issue of December 30, entitled, "The Personality of God," contained a discussion of the Trinity that aroused considerable interest. We have received a number of letters and articles concerning the article, some of them excited ones. One of the best of the articles submitted was the following one by the author, which we are glad to have the privilege of presenting. And we take this opportunity to thank all who have written to us upon the subject.—Editors.

The definition for trinity in theology is: "The union of three individuals in the God-head, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit."

The Scriptures teach that "in the mouths of two or three witnesses" shall every word be established. We will now proceed to introduce evidence from three witnesses, whose testimony has never yet been impeached. "The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things." (Genesis 1: 1, 2, Inspired Version.)

Here the first witness testifies that there are two individuals—Father and Son. There can be no father without posterity; and there can be no son without parenthood.

The Testimony of the "Bible"

In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. (John: 1, 2.)

Here we have the same thought as above with the "word" added.

For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one, and there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one.—1 John 5: 7, 8.

John here states that there are three, the Father, the Word preached by the Son, and the Holy Ghost; "and these three are one," and the Spirit, and the water and the blood all agree in one.

I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.—John 16: 28.

This last statement from John is so plain that comment seems to be unnecessary. There can be no other meaning derived from these Scriptures, but that there are three individuals spoken of, Father, Son, Holy Ghost, and they are one. How they are ONE will be left to some one that knows, for an explanation. We have a similar use of one in another familiar sentence:

Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh.—Genesis 2: 30.

Two individuals are here mentioned, and it is said that "they shall be one flesh." We will also let some one that knows explain how a man and a woman can be "one flesh." Adam and Eve, with their sixty-three children, were one family. Father, mother, with seven sons and seven daughters, are one family. The United States of America with its states, president, houses of Congress, and all officers, make one government, together with a population of about 125,000,000 people. One hundred thousand people, with a quorum of three for a presidency, twelve apostles, seventies, high priests, evangelists, bishops, elders, etc., united, form one church.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John testify that when Jesus was baptized of John, the Holy Spirit in a visible form rested upon his head, and a voice said, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." Who said it? Was Jesus a ventriloquist? Did he try to make the people believe that there was no one in the heavens that could talk?

The Testimony of the "Book of Mormon"

Lehi in vision "saw the heavens open and he thought he saw God sitting upon his throne," etc. (Book of Mormon, page 2, verse 7.)

Nephi saw the "Lamb of God, yea even the Son of the Eternal Father!" (Page 28, verse 62.)

After he was baptized, I beheld the heavens open, and the Holy Ghost came down out of heaven and abode upon him in the form of a dove. (Page 29, verse 74.) The Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove. (Page 161, verse 10.)

This is the doctrine of Christ, and the only true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. (Page 163, verse 32.)

And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the Creator of all things, from the beginning. (Page 216, verse 102.)

Be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God. (Page 342, verse 104.)

Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me, etc. (Page 628, verses 44, 45.)

Behold my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him. (Page 632, verse 8.)

Thus will the Father bear record of me; and the Holy Ghost will bear record unto him of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost are one. (Page 634, verse 38.)

We saw and heard Jesus speak unto the Father. (Page 649, verse 17.)

Yea, your joy shall be full, even as the Father hath given me fullness of joy, and ye shall be even as I am, and I am even as the Father; and the Father and I are one. (Page 677, verse 22.)

I would commend you to seek this Jesus, . . . that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, which bareth record of them, may be, and abide in you for ever. (Page 749, verse 41.)

This second witness has testified so plainly that there is no need for the counsel to offer any comment.

The Testimony of the "Doctrine and Covenants"

The third witness will now take the stand, and testifies as follows:

Behold, I am God, and have spoken it. (Doctrine and Covenants, page 8, verse 5.)

Behold, I am Jesus Christ the Son of God. (Page 15, verse 14; page 20, verse 10; page 26, verse 12.)

Behold, I am God, and give heed to my word. (Page 26, verse 1; page 27, verse 1.)

Wherefore the Almighty God gave his Only Begotten Son; . . . Holy Ghost which beareth record of the Father, and of the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end. (Page 34, verse 5.)

I am Jesus Christ; I came by the will of the Father, and I do his will. (Page 40, verse 2.)

God spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, I am the Lord God Almighty, and endless is my name, . . . Thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and my Only Begotten is and shall be the savior. (Page 43, verses 2 and 4.)

Listen to the voice of the Lord your God, . . . I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, . . . that they may become the sons of God, even one in me, as I am in the Father, as the Father is one in me. (Page 61, verse 1.)

Enoch beheld the Son of Man ascend up unto the Father. (Page 68, verse 12.)

Ye shall bear record of me, even Jesus Christ, that I am the Son of the living God, that I was, that I am, and that I am to come. (Page 129, verse 1.)

I am God; I change not. (Page 293, verse 8.)

Conclusion

The three witnesses have given their testimony, but not one hundredth part has been quoted in this article. The Bible, the first witness coming from the Jews, has stood the criticism for ages. The Book of Mormon, the second witness, has stood the test for one hundred years, and agrees with the Bible. The Doctrine and Covenants, the third witness, is being attacked and so far has withstood all assaults; it agrees with the other witnesses; the three are one in their testimony that there are three in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and that these three are one.

To take one passage of Scripture from any one of the books and build an argument upon that one alone, or to make any other argument, would be virtually denying all other Scripture bearing upon the subject.

To say that there is only one individual in the Godhead is discrediting the statements of the books. The three books, from beginning to ending, affirm

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Amana Society of Iowa Preparing for a Change

(The following article appeared in the Kansas City Star. It will be of interest to our readers who have been watching the Amana experiment for some time. The article carried the headings, "Give up communist idea," "Amana colonies in Iowa decide to incorporate," "The 'share and share alike' principle, in effect 75 years, does not suit the younger generation.")

AMANA, IA., Jan. 5.—The board of trustees of the Amana Colonies, considered the largest and most successful religious communistic society in the United States, today approved a form of reorganization which contemplates a 1¼-million-dollar corporation to be organized under the laws of Delaware.

John Noe, a member of the board of trustees, said tonight that the reorganization will not be effected until the project is submitted to a vote of members of the colony.

Leaders in the colony have for some time realized that a change was imperative. Agitation last summer reached a stage where a committee was appointed to consider means of perfecting the change.

Modifications Recently

The society has operated for more than seventy-five years under the communistic plan of "share and share alike," although in the last few years there have been slight modifications.

Under the proposed constitution the colonies would become the Amana Society, Inc., and its assets would cover all of the society's present holdings, which include 26,000 acres of land in Iowa County, woolen and cereal mills, jobbing houses and stores, as well as buildings, livestock and equipment in the villages and on the farms.

Plan Stock Issue

Members of the board were hesitant to talk about the specific form of the corporation, but it was understood that it called for issuance of 25,000 shares of common stock, presumably to be taken by members of the society. Preferred stock also may be issued, but that step was left undetermined.

Control of the society has been vested in a board of trustees of thirteen members. George Heine-mann, 86, who has been president for many years, resigned recently and Peter Zimmerman was chosen for the place.

that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, these three are one God. And yet they are separate individuals having a distinctive work to perform in the great work of the creation, and the carrying on of the work of redemption.

Australia's Lone Evangelist Is Busy

I have given one hundred and thirty patriarchal blessings since my ordination to the office of patriarch less than two years ago, and have preached continuously. I have this month passed my sixty-fifth milestone and am anxious to go on spending and being spent for the church so long as my mental and physical powers shall endure. I am pleased to tell Saints that Sister Jones who has been ill since our American tour, is again taking up the responsibilities of her home.

I am away from home a great deal both in and beyond the field assigned me by General Conference. Being the only evangelist in Australia, I am called to go beyond the bounds of Victoria and New South Wales. I have visited Brisbane and worked there and that is one thousand miles from my home. I am to visit Adelaide, South Australia, in January, and in the interim I have been carrying on the work in New South Wales and Victoria.

It gives me pleasure to say that the Spirit of the Lord has wonderfully blessed me in my evangelical work, and I am happy in it and hopeful that my health will continue and I shall be able to assist in lifting the church out of its difficulties. I am confident that we shall succeed in carrying our great task to a completion that will meet the Master's approval, and in the meantime the officers of the church have my full support and sympathy in their important task.

My interest in the love for the work and for the Saints have been greatly enhanced by my personal contacts during the centennial year, and though I fully sense that mistakes have been made and we have overreached ourselves in a variety of ways, I realize that to err is human, and who of us is not human? I shall ever pray for Zion and work for her redemption, being assured that her ideals though difficult—supremely so—to bring into actuality, are of God. Yet they will, if persisted in by a faithful people, lift the world nearer to God, and assist in ushering in his glorious reign in which, I pray, we may be privileged to participate.

J. H. N. JONES.

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's Beacon Light

In this city regular services of the Reorganized Church are held at First Church, East Side, River Rouge, Wyandotte, and Brightmoor. J. C. Mottashed is branch pastor and bishop's agent. Wilbert Richards and Lewis G. Wills are his counselors, and associate pastors are: First Church, G. H. Booth; East Side, Wilbert Richards; River Rouge, R. E. Ulman; Wyandotte, L. J. Richard, and Brightmoor, Lewis G. Wills.

Detroit's Beacon Light, a monthly periodical which presents announcements, news, and happenings, is produced by the following editorial staff: George H. Booth, Lewis M. Heaviland, and Veryl M. Wode.

The women of the church are organized into thirteen groups and have a unique system of providing a steady flow of money into the church treasury. At the first of each month one of the groups turns in the money it has collected during the past year; at the same time a small amount is retained to finance the next year's work. The total contribution of the women to the church during 1931 was $1,627.80. In August and September the workers came to the church and canned fruit and vegetables which are now being used in welfare work. Money is made in various ways—dinners, socials, sewing, mite boxes, sacrifice offerings, sale of baked goods, barley, rugs, Christmas cards, handkerchiefs, linens, etc., and some of the women furnish jitney service to those not having cars. Nellie Harkness, leader of women, reports last year's work as a great experience in harmony and co-operation.

Lectures for the Men's League for the month of January have been: January 10, "From Oxcart to Airplane," by Professor J. S. Worley, of the University of Michigan; January 17, "Detroit's Adult Education Program," S. DeGalan, director of evening classes of the Board of Education; January 24, "Arctic and Antarctic," by Charles L. Kessler, who was with Admiral Byrd's party at the South Pole; January 31, "The Divine Cagliostro and Kenelm Digby," two famous quacks of history. This lecture will be by Dr. Harry A. Pearce. The league meetings are held on Sunday afternoon at First Church and are open to men and women. Special music is under the direction of Mrs. Henrietta Davis. The league also served a supper at First Church from six until eight o'clock the night of the branch business meeting, January 12.

A new organization which is attracting interest is the Trinity Arts Society, a group of young women who meet each Monday evening. The interests of this group, as indicated by the name, are the three arts—dramatics, music, and sewing, taught by skilled instructors. Dramatics is in charge of Mrs. Lewis Boyington who teaches at Marygrove College and is tutor of vocal expression. Music is under the supervision of Mrs. Henrietta Davis, an instructor at the Detroit Conservatory of Music and an active member of the Detroit Musicians' League. Sewing is taught by Mrs. Jamima Walker, an accomplished dressmaker. The society owes its existence to Mrs. Birdie Janrow the supervisor, through whose courtesy these classes have been made possible. Eileen Mann is president of the group. Group 3 of the women's department serves supper each Wednesday evening at a very low price, and the girls who work and find it difficult to rush home and eat then come back to the church in time for the first class, are served at the church. Every young woman in the city is invited to join the society.

Christmas was appropriately observed in this branch. First Church had a cantata, "The Coming of the King," and several Christmas parties. Brightmoor celebrated with a Christmas tree entertainment. Milan Mission, which continues active, had a special entertainment.

The Patroness Society is at work. Its first meeting of the year was January 5, which was election of officers. Mrs. Rose Hunter was in charge. The program which followed was by Group 1 of the women's department, led by Mrs. Sadie Curtis.

Missionary Meetings at Post Oak and Clinton, Missouri

My last missionary effort before the holidays was held at Post Oak, Missouri, beginning Sunday, December 6, and continuing over Sunday, December 20. My two weeks' visit with Saints and friends of Post Oak and vicinity was very much enjoyed. The interest shown by Saints and nonmember friends was encouraging, and our meetings would have continued longer, judging from the interest, had it not been for Christmas activities. We are convinced that another series of meetings should be held at this point as soon as it is deemed advisable by those interested. While at Post Oak I gave two programs at the Shawnee High School a few miles south on the highway. I was given an invitation to occupy another hour at the same school as soon as I am able to return.

During the holidays I spent the week end at Marshall, Missouri, and found the faithful band of Saints who had shown such a fine missionary spirit during my four-week missionary effort there in November, still carrying on with their usual enthusiasm. We were pleased to see so many present at the Sunday evening service.

The first Sunday of the new year was spent by the writer with the Saints at Lees Summit, where Sunday school, sacrament, two preaching services, and visits among the Saints kept me busy throughout the day. This faithful band of Saints is to be congratulated for the spirit of sacrifice manifested by them throughout the months of November and December. The missionaries are always made welcome at Lees Summit.

At present I am at Clinton, which city is about fifteen miles south of Post Oak. I came here with the intention of remaining for the week end only, then joining Brother G. R. Wells in a series of meetings at Knobnoster, but as the Methodists have started a revival service at that point, it was thought best to postpone our meeting there for the time being. The Saints at Clinton are holding Sunday school in a small theater building free of charge. This building is well seated and lighted. The Sunday school numbers from twenty five to thirty. There were between sixty and seventy at our preaching service Sunday night, and the theater has been offered us free for a series of meetings. The time and offer seem opportune as the meeting at Knobnoster has been postponed, and no other arrangement for services had been made.

This is the former home of the Whites. I. N. White, D. C. White and Alfred White, and their families, formerly lived here. Brother Ammon White graduated from Clinton High School. The outlook for building up the work here is bright. Though one family of Saints, that of Brother and Sister Payne, has moved away, two new families have moved in, the Baths and Dibbles of Scammon, Kansas, and another family of Bowmans, of Cherokee, Kansas, is moving in.

Brother and Sister Willis W. Kearney and family, also Brother and Sister Hunt and family are dependable and active in all church activities here. We trust that the present effort in Clinton will result in much good.

Tigris Branch

Near Ava, Missouri

Nineteen hundred and thirty-two finds Tigris Branch forging ahead. The Saints met in branch business service January 10, electing C. B. Freeman president. Brother Carl Newton was sustained secretary-treasurer; musical director, Sister Charles Norman; correspondent, Sister D. A. Fuller; librarian, Sister Roxie McGinnis; solicitor, D. A. Fuller; janitor, Brother Gayheart Crestison. With such capable officers as our leaders for the new year, our zeal is renewed and we are also proud of our new and reinstated officers of the Sunday school. These also were elected January 10, Brother D. A. Fuller being retained as Sunday school superintendent, with Sister C. B. Freeman as assistant; Emma Freeman, secretary and treasurer; Lillian Freeman, musical director; Roxie McGinnis, librarian, and Gayheart Crestison, janitor.

We have organized a Religio society, an organization which we have not previously had in this local. This, we hope will build up the attendance of our young people. Gayheart Crestison was selected to act as president of the Religio with Mary Childers as secretary-treasurer. Sister Dallas Newton was chosen musical director.

We have been happy to again have Brother C. B. Freeman and family move into this neighborhood. They are very helpful. Also Brother and Sister S. W. Simmons have moved near enough to attend services often. He preaches frequently. Everyone loves Brother and Sister Simmons. We are happy that Brother Simmons is healed of the malady which caused him so much suffering.

The closing feature of 1931 was a Christmas program and pie social. The pantomime, "The Christ Child," was presented by this branch, and "Not Such a Goose" was given by the Ava Branch young people. A large crowd attended the program, enjoying it to the fullest extent. A neat sum was realized from the sale of pies and popcorn balls. We had no Christmas tree and gifts, the branch agreeing to send the value of intended gifts to the Bishop as a sacrifice offering.

This branch welcomes all who live close enough to attend its services. The church is located about nine miles from Ava, Missouri, on Highway 14, one mile from Tigris Store.

Flint, Michigan

At a watch night service, December 31, eight members were added to the church by baptism. Five of these were children and three senior young people. Stanley Shears, an organ player, and Miss Grace Conarty, a purchasing agent for Smith Bridgeman Company, the largest department store in Flint, were among those baptized. The other young person was Miss Ruth Fly, who previously was a leader and teacher in a popular church of the city. The mother of Miss Fly is very bitter against the church, and it became necessary for her to leave her parental home in order to join the church. Her mother gave her the choice of leaving the church or leaving home, and she, with implicit faith in God, chose to do the latter. Already there is evidence of the mother's repentance for what she has done, and we think it will be but a short time before the girl will be back home again.

The candidates mentioned above were prepared for church membership, by three months of study on Sunday mornings at the church school. Another class is now being prepared for Easter.

West Haven, Connecticut

The members in West Haven wish everyone to know that God has wonderfully blessed us and that we are striving to do his will. Our services still are held at 107 Orange Avenue, but we are thinking of looking for a small place to rent, as our numbers have outgrown a home.

A week before Christmas we were favored with a visit from Brother William Patterson as he was on his way home to spend the holidays with his family. His parting advice will long be remembered by all. After the service we had a social in his honor, and Brother Donald Crowell, in behalf of the mission, presented him a purse. Sister Alberta Wilcox, vice president of the Mizpah Circle, presented him a gold piece.

The Christmas program was held at the home of Brother and Sister Calvin Sears, and the sacredness of the occasion was felt by all.

We do not wish to boast of the amount raised for the sacrifice period for we deemed it a duty and a privilege to go nearly one hundred and fifty per cent over our quota.

We are glad Sister Ruth Patterson is on the road to recovery and expect to have her with us in the spring, as Brother Patterson is coming in February. We hope to be worthy their presence.

Much pleasure is being experienced in helping Sister Sadie Roylance conduct our church store. She is doing well.

Independence

The young people's council of the congregations in Independence has arranged a dramatic contest among the young members. Thirteen groups are working on plays. From these, seven one-act plays of a high type will be selected and presented in the Stone Church Dining Room on the nights of February 9 and 11. Admission price to the contest is as follows: Thirty-five cents a season ticket (two nights), twenty-five cents a single ticket.

Every Sunday afternoon at two thirty a class for the priesthood is held in the young people's room in the Auditorium. The class is taught by Bishop A. Carmichael, whose subject is "Our Social Program and Its Relation to Zion."

Sunday afternoon the Independence Messiah Choir had its third rehearsal of the conference oratorio, Handel's "Messiah." Paul N. Craig and Mrs. George H. Hulmes were the directors and Mrs. Florence Koehler Campbell and Mrs. Jeannette Craig pianists. Patriarch J. T. Gresty, who will direct the oratorio at conference, was present and gave an enthusiastic report of the work of the orchestra which will assist in the rendition of the oratorio. The choir has nine more Sunday rehearsals.

The four Boy Scout troops, sponsored by the church in Independence, participated in a city-wide scout round-up, held last Friday night at Memorial Hall and witnessed by twelve hundred people. Among the program features which claimed the interest of the audience were fire-building contests, scout games, physical exercises, and demonstrations of the tenderfoot, second class, and first class requirements of scoutdom. Our four troops are 223 and 226 of the Stone Church, 222 of Spring Branch, and 227 of Enoch Hill and Walnut Park. For two years Independence has held the record of having a larger number of registered scouts than any other city of equal population in the United States.

Stone Church

In the January Sunday morning worship services, junior, intermediate and adult members of the church school were reminded of the appreciation we should have for the finer things in life—the home, the church, and the capacities of self to live and love and lift. The intermediate pastor, W. Earl Page, priest, was in charge of these services.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp's Sunday morning sermon presented the necessity of facing the facts, keeping check of our work, and driving forward with a future-looking program. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Bishop A. Carmichael.

A pleasing musical background was given the service by the Stone Church Choir and the men's chorus, directed by Paul N. Craig. The choir sang two hymns and an anthem, and the chorus, making its first appearance, sang one number. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was the organist.

The January theme of the junior church was missionary. This service, conducted at eleven o'clock each Sunday morning in the basement of the church, opened the year with a good sacrament hour in charge of the junior pastor, Elder Will Bolinger. On the second Sunday of the month Elder George G. Lewis delivered an illustrated lecture on Australia, which presented some of the unusual fauna and flora of the country as well as the story of the early church there. On the third Sunday the intermediate pastor talked on "Jesus—the Good Shepherd." Miss Ella Jones told a story which breathed the missionary spirit January 24, and Mrs. S. A. Thiel was the story-teller on the fifth Sunday. Music is in charge of Mrs. John R. Lentell, assisted by Fae Van Trump, pianist, and Ross Moore, organist. Special numbers were given by the following members of the department, Lucille Esgar, Jeanne Scott, and Helen Mader.

The February theme, "Our Heroes," will include early church heroes as well as national heroes.

Mrs. Hazel Moler, junior superintendent, who is again in the Sanitarium, is missed by the children of her department and by fellow officers. All wish her a speedy recovery.

Elder William Patterson presented many encouraging thoughts in his sermon to the Stone Church congregation Sunday evening. He is helping the church and the community to the best of his ability while his wife, Sister Ruth Patterson, is recovering from an operation at the Sanitarium. The last report gave her condition improved. The Pattersons bring from the East the spirit of cheer and cooperation. We shall miss them when they return to New England.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Radmall were guests of honor at a celebration, given January 26, at the home of their eldest daughter, Mrs. J. E. Vanderwood and Elder Vanderwood, in honor of their golden wedding anniversary. The evening was spent in entertainment, and refreshments were served to about thirty guests. Mr. and Mrs. Radmall were married in Salt Lake City, Utah, and have lived in Independence and vicinity since 1907. They at present live on a farm. They are the parents of six children, three daughters and three sons.

Walnut Park Church

In spite of the cold weather which gripped this vicinity, the Sunday morning eleven o'clock service of this congregation was well attended. Elder George F. Bullard, the speaker, in spite of the handicap of a heavy cold, delivered a helpful sermon on the text found in Romans 6: 23. The choir, directed by Minnie Scott Döbson, sang "Incline Thine Ear," the solo being sung by Carlotta Norman. Walnut Park Saints are proud of their choir and have adopted as a slogan for the year, "A big choir for every service."

The evening service, January 31, was devoted to a lecture on the American Indians by Elder C. Ed. Miller. The choir sang "Seek Ye the Lord," the obbligato solo being sung by Erwin Moorman.

The golden wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister J. N. Mann was celebrated by about two hundred Saints of district three in the basement of the church January 25. The entertainment, a feature of which was a mock wedding by the juniors, was a complete surprise to the bride and bridegroom of fifty years. A program in charge of Mrs. Erwin Moorman preceded the dinner. Brother and Sister Mann's appreciation was very apparent, and their friends were glad to share with them in this celebration.

Enoch Hill Church

The church school worship service Sunday morning was in charge of Superintendent C. E. Beal. The theme, "Charity," was effectively carried out by a short program of Scripture readings, a talk by Elder Beal, a cornet solo by Donald Bullard, and a vocal duet by Donald Bullard and Richard Maloney.

Pastor H. L. Barto occupied the morning preaching hour. He used as his theme, "Concerning the Law." "Obedience to law is liberty," he asserted; "we have our choice. We can obey law or receive the punishment that comes from disobedience."

The Sunday evening speaker, Elder Walter Self, used for his text, John 3: 8, stressing the necessity for truth in our lives, and relating it to the work of redeeming Zion. One of his closing thoughts linked his sermon with the morning discourse by the pastor: Out of Zion shall go forth the law.

The first session of a teacher training class was held at six o'clock Sunday evening. Elder G. G. Lewis is teaching the class. This is a credit course, and those who desire are invited to attend and take part.

Englewood Church

Attendance and interest continued through the two weeks of missionary meetings conducted by Apostle J. A. Gillen. The series closed January 24. Many expressions of appreciation came from members and friends, and we look for good results from these meetings. The speaker was blessed with the Spirit. His last sermons seemed to be an overflowing of the Spirit of the Master, and his exhortation for us to "press on" filled us with hope in our task and wonder at our privilege.

Knowing that Brother Gillen's plans included a trip to Alabama in the near future, the Saints were happy to be privileged to give him a little gift of money. Our prayers go with him that he may be successful in his work in the southland.

At Brother Gillen's last service we were favored with two beautiful vocal numbers by Mildred and Irene Shupe and Evelyn Shupe Flournoy. We are happy to have the young people of the church qualifying for service. This brings to mind the words of President McDowell in his sermon Sunday morning. He made plain the fact that God has put "helps" in the church for the perfecting of Saints and the carrying on of his purposes.

The eleven o'clock service Sunday morning was given to the installation of our new officers and teachers. Many who have served faithfully were designated to continue their work throughout the present year. One especially to be mentioned as a faithful helper is Sister Petentler who has been the "nursery mother" for the past six years, and another is Sister Fike who, for six years, has served as primary superintendent. This again brings us to the words of Brother McDowell: "This work centers not in the raising of money, not the building of buildings, but it centers in the people, and seeks to build character by developing the lambs of the fold into useful members of this great church."

After an anthem by the choir, led by Sister Pauline Arnson, who has consented to serve as chorister another year, officers and teachers were called by name to occupy the front seats, and were given the charge by Brother McDowell. Sister Fred Koehler spoke briefly in behalf of the workers, accepting the responsibility of teaching and leading the youth of this congregation.

The efforts of the church school during the past year to indoctrinate the children has been crowned with success. Every child above the primary grade has had or is having a year's course in the study of the Book of Mormon, and at the end of the year a great number of children wished to repeat the course because of the interest and love they have for it. We are happy that the Book of Mormon study has at last been simplified so that the children may understand it. We are satisfied that they have received the testimony promised in the book itself. We began the course in each class by telling the children of the manner of the coming forth of the book, and asking them to pray that they might know of its divinity.

Amourdale Church

There are times when the depression seems to have the upperhand, but it can not kill us spiritually. We have good average attendance at our meetings. A class in religious education taught by E. P. Sanders, is well attended, and Sister Henry Rushfelt has been teaching a class in music appreciation. The sessions of the latter class were discontinued a short time ago because of the illness of the teacher, but will be resumed as soon as possible.

In the past year Armourdale Saints have tried to do their part, and are making plans this year to do all within their power to help the church forward.

A new year's party, held at the home of Brother and Sister McNeese, turned into a prayer meeting as the new year entered. The spirit of this worship hour was carried into the sacrament meeting which lasted until one fifteen, the time being well occupied. Pastor R. L. Goold was in charge, assisted by six members of the priesthood.

Since the beginning of 1932 the pulpit here has been occupied by Patriarch Ammon White, Elder R. L. Bishop, Elder H. J. Bootman, Brother Roy Williams, and members of the local priesthood.

The second Sunday of each month is in charge of the O. B. K.'s. The speakers for January were Brother Williams, of Atherton, and Elder E. P. Sanders. The O. B. K.'s are making commendable progress in developing young workers for the different departments.

Omaha, Nebraska

Much was said and printed in 1931 of the steady drop in the stock and bond market. Financiers believed that things were down as far as they could go, and then—drop, they would go again. Many of us have no immediate concern with the listings on the stock exchange, but all of us can look to our spiritual stock of the past year. Has it suffered? Has it reached a new low mark, or has it, unlike the financial market, increased by the pressure of the times, and seen a new high mark? Perhaps our financial status as a church is at a low ebb, but the most essential thing is—what about our spiritual status? We may scan the financial sheet rather nervously to see what our holdings are listed at, but do we just as anxiously peer into our spiritual status? The opening of a new year is a good time to take an inventory of ourselves spiritually and, also, to make out that financial inventory for the Bishop.

The year 1931 was a unique one for Greater Omaha Branch, as is evidenced in the fact that we had three pastors. In March Elder Blair Jensen was sent to Lamoni Stake, and in November we were made to regret the release of our pastor R. Melvin Russell. But for every sorrow there comes a joy, and so through a new arrangement we share with Council Bluffs, Iowa, the services of Elder Ray Whiting. Indeed we are doubly fortunate as Brother Russell is still located here, and in addition to his secular duties, acts as assistant pastor.

In keeping with the spirit of the month, the theme for the family worship services for November was "Think and Give Thanks." At the pulpit service on the Sunday morning preceding Thanksgiving, Brother Russell in his sermon, asked us to consider whether or not our attitude would be one of thankfulness if we should lose our health, homes, or positions. On the morning of a beautiful snowy Thanksgiving day the Saints of this branch met to voice their expressions of prayer and praise.

The sacrament service of the last month of the year was well attended. At this meeting two sacraments were observed, that of the blessing of babies and the Lord's Supper. A note of deep feeling and humility characterized the splendid testimonies. In the evening of this Sabbath we had as speaker, Apostle J. F. Garver who took as his text: "Watchman, what of the night?" We were again fortunate on Sunday, December 13, to have Brother Garver as speaker at the morning pulpit service. That evening President Frederick M. Smith spoke to a full house, and explained the message of the Joint Council and the adopted balanced budget plan.

The women of the branch again had a booth at the Douglas County Courthouse, December 14 and 15. They served home-cooked food, and by this endeavor some more dollars found their way into the treasury.

On Friday evening, December 18, Omaha young people assisted their Council Bluffs friends in a candle light worship service. The theme was "The Call of Christ."

Particular emphasis was given the Sacrifice period on Sunday, December 20. The play, "On Christmas Day in the Morning," was given at the family worship period, and at its close the congregation came forward with their gifts, wrapped in white, for the poor. The gifts of money for the general church were placed in special envelopes. This service made a fine setting for Pastor Ray Whiting's Christmas sermon.

The theme for the family worship periods for December was, "Our Gifts," and very appropriately for the last Sunday of the year, the topic was "Our Gift to a New Year." Brother Whiting's sermon at the eleven o'clock hour inspired every one to want to be "one of the few." We were happy to have with us, for the evening meeting Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

December 30 a quiet wedding occurred at the church, when Miss Grace Edwards and George W. Gates, both formerly of Independence, but now of Chicago, were married. Elder Ray Whiting officiated at the service. We wish for them a life-time of happiness.

Sunday, January 3, 1932, was the first sacrament service of the new year. A prophecy of encouragement and the admonition to continue on, was given. Each testimony expressed a determination to go forward and a thankfulness for the lessons of the past year.

That the sharing with Council Bluffs of the services of Brother Whiting is working out splendidly, is evidenced in the fact that we are fortunate in being able to hear from a greater number of speakers. Apostle Paul M. Hanson gave the message at the eleven o'clock hour on January 10. He told us that life consists in the attitude of mind we cherish, and sighted to us the fact that Christ's words to those in distress were: "Be of good cheer." In the evening Elder E. Y. Hunker, the speaker, pointed out the contributions of the Restoration to the world.

Salt Lake City, Utah

When we experienced our first heavy fall of snow in November, nearly everyone we met in the city was rejoicing. From all sides we heard, "Oh, is not this fine?" "Just what we need." "Yes, we have been hoping and praying for this and plenty more to follow. Then we will be assured of the water supply for next summer." We have had that snow many times repeated, and just as often we have heard these exclamations of approval. We have had from five to seven inches the last two days, which, according to the weather bureau record, makes the snowfall forty-four inches this season.

Our two months of sacrifice were duly observed. The people here responded quite freely considering their circumstances, and consequently they feel good over these sacrifices.

The church school voted unanimously to dispense with the usual Christmas expense in harmony with this spirit of sacrifice. Thus the Saints made their offering larger.

During the holidays two plays were given, the first by Sister Allan Wardle's intermediate class, "The More Abundant Life." Tickets for this performance, printed by Brother Will Winkworth, were sold, and a sum was taken in and applied on the insurance of the church building. When Brother and Sister Chase came here last May, we were over a year in arrears on this, but, thanks to the young people's evening meeting on Sunday who have devoted all their collections to this fund, we have about paid this up to date. The play, "The Crooked Mouth-Lamp," put on by the young people's class on Christmas Eve was a real Christmas treat. Much credit is due them and Miss Mabel Jensen who helped so diligently in the training.

The New Year's Eve watch party was a success. The first part of the evening was spent in discussion of spiritual experiences and their bearing on the church work; reminiscences of other like events seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by numbers and nonmembers. The refreshments, served by the women about eleven o'clock, were not at all indicative of hard times, but quite ample and met with general approval. Brother Chase then led in a devotional service of song, prayer, and testimony which was generally participated in, and a degree of the divine Spirit was felt by all. At twelve o'clock at a signal from the one in charge, Brother Elmer Lohmolder stepped to the door and let the new year in. "Joy to the World" was sung, then came the benediction, and hearty new year wishes were exchanged.

The branch greatly enjoyed the two sermons delivered by Brother McDole, of Seattle, on his short visit here December 13.

Brother Chase was absent from the city the last two Sundays in December, being called to Idaho to officiate at the funerals of two of our members. The first was that of Brother Elvin M. Jones, son of the branch president of Malad, Idaho, W. P. Jones. He was a young man of twenty-five years. The other funeral was at Burley, Idaho, Brother Calvin Jacobson, nephew of Brother and Sister Conyars of this city.

During Brother Chase's absence, the associate pastors, Brothers Hall and Lohmolder, efficiently occupied.

We miss Brother Robertson's help and presence in the branch since he has taken charge of Ogden Branch.

We are beginning a series of cottage meetings. Started this at the home of a member who so requested, not having been able to get to our meetings this winter. This is quite a success both in numbers and spirituality. At the close, another sister requested that we meet at her home next Tuesday night. Brother and Sister Chase have had very interesting times in other districts holding meetings of this sort. Those requesting meetings invite in their neighbors, and a missionary sermon is given with privilege of questions and answers at the close. This is a practical method of personal evangelism.

At the branch business meeting some of the dependable young men and women were placed in charge of the two sessions of the church school, Brother George Wilson, superintendent of the ten o'clock morning session, and Mabel Jensen and Elmer Lohmolder in charge of the evening session at 6.30. At this hour Brother Chase is conducting an interesting class in Doctrine and Covenants and Church History.

President F. M. Smith has promised us a call on his way East. The Saints are looking forward to an enjoyable and profitable time at this event.

The district presidents, Brothers Chase, Robertson, and Lohmolder, and their wives motored to Provo and Ogden on the occasion of their business social. They enjoyed the events, meeting the Saints and friends of these places.

Brother Chase says, "You never hear me pleading unemployment."

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

Though our numbers have not increased, the work of this group is progressing in favor with God and man. Activities are growing under the capable ministry of Elder Walter Culp and with the help of the faithful and broad-minded Saints.

Fifteen families live in the territory of this mission, and the total enrollment is about forty-five. There is an active membership of about thirty. On Sunday a prayer and praise services follows the regular nine thirty Sunday school, and at seven o'clock in the evening the preaching service is given fair attendance. There are two elders, one priest, and one teacher here, all of them active in their duties.

Discouragements and trials attend us as they do wherever a new opening is being made. But we are often blessed with the Master's Spirit.

On Sunday, January 10, Brother O. A. Rexroad led Charles Monroe into the waters of baptism at Pond Creek, the ceremony being witnessed by this congregation.

The mission business meeting will occur the early part of February, and we hope to see progress assured.

Recently Missionary Jacob Halb, of Middletown, held a short series of meetings. Also Elder John R. Grice, of Columbus, was here one night. We appreciate the visits of the men of the ministry, and look to the time when a three or four-week meeting will be held here.

Considerable sickness has been experienced by the members, but most of the sufferers are better.

Because of the financial conditions here, the mission finds it impossible to finance the purchase of the new Hymnals, and since the Herald Publishing House is out of Zion's Praises, we are experiencing some difficulty in securing song books. If there are congregations which have purchased new books and are looking to a disposition of old books, we would appreciate their writing Brother Luther Crabtree, 1004 Eighth Street, Portsmouth.

Eldorado, Kansas

The group of Saints at Eldorado numbers 26 at the present time. Elder T. C. Baker who has charge of the group, is doing a good work. He is assisted by Priests Charles Merrill and Shank.

On the first Sunday of each month the Saints gather at the home of Sister H. B. Hudson, on South Atchison Street, to partake of the sacrament and for prayer and testimony meeting. These gatherings are very helpful to those in attendance, being full of the spirit, and unity prevails.

In December Brother Baker in his earnest way brought up the problem of church finances, and urged each one to continue to sacrifice. He reported that the Eldorado group stood second in giving in the Wichita territory.

Brother Merrill gave a short talk on the duty of paying tithing. He reported at the first of the year that for the months of November and December he sent in as sacrifice, Christmas offering, and tithing a total of $89.08.

The women's department, under its leader, Sister Charles Merrill, is doing a fine work. In the year past they purchased new Saints' Hymnals, furnished the entrance hall in the nurses' home, and gave a granite topped work table to the new hospital kitchen here. Several food sales have enabled them to swell the Christmas offering, buy a number of church books, subscribe to the Ensign as birthday gifts to members, and place a Book of Mormon and Bible in the public library. On Tuesday afternoon the women meet to study the life of Christ as written by Christiana Salyards. Sister T. C. Baker is the efficient teacher.

Sister Hudson graciously extends the use of her home for all services.

At present none of the Saints are out of employment. The gospel work goes on and as one Sister said: "God is surely working with the Saints in Eldorado, and I can't afford not to work."

Madison, Wisconsin

The branch business meeting was held December 20. Elder H. W. Woodstock was elected branch president by unanimous vote; Mary Woodstock, clerk; financial agent, Orvalle Dahlem; chorister, Minnie Carpenter; superintendent of Religious Education, Lee Root who chose for his assistant, Margaret Johnson. Carl Wirth was chosen branch solicitor for the bishop, and Leda Colbert, publicity agent.

The women's organization had its business meeting December 29. Nora Root was elected president and Leah Miller secretary. The books show an income for this group, during the past year, of two hundred and twenty-five dollars, most of which has been spent for articles needed at the church.

The Christmas offering for 1931 amounted to more than one hundred and seventeen dollars.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was present at the prayer service December 16, and gave the first of the several three-minute talks on the financial law of the church, which composed the evening's program. Carl Wirth spoke on "Why File an Inventory?" Orvalle Dahlem, "Why Pay Tithes?" and Lee Root on "Can It Be Done?" The theme for the prayer service was "God's Best Gift." Lee Root was in charge and gave the theme talk. The scripture lesson was from John, and the thought to be kept in mind during the meeting was "What can I give in return for God's gift to me?"

Apostle D. T. Williams was here January 3, his evening theme being "Seeking Divine Approbation."

The sacrament service for January was well attended and a spiritual feast was enjoyed. Many beautiful testimonies were given. Those present were starting the new year with greater determination to give their best for the church in service.

Pastor H. W. Woodstock preached the morning hour of January 10 on "The Prodigal Son." In the evening Lee Root, recently ordained, preached his first sermon, the theme being "Service to God and Fellow Men." Romans 12:1 was his text: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." One of the thoughts in his sermon was: He who steps from his path to help another, moves toward his goal. In closing he read the poem, "The Bridge Builder." Brother Root is a capable young man, willing to render service to the church wherever needed.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

District Missionary O. W. Okerlind was, as usual, very busy preceding the Christmas season. He reported the baptism of M. Prideaux at Council, Idaho; a visit to Cheyenne, Wyoming, the latter part of November where he held a few services and celebrated Thanksgiving with the Buffehr family; meetings at Casper, and a week at Orpha, Wyoming. His next stop was Denver, where he visited the former Idaho missionary, Elder J. Arthur Davis. And the next stop was his home in Independence, where he spent the holidays with his family.

During the two months of sacrifice, Brother Arthur Condit, the district treasurer, with the help of the local priesthood, urged the Saints to obey the financial law of the church, namely: (1) File an inventory of properties and money; (2) pay tithing, and (3) make a generous offering to help the church.

Hagerman Branch

Brother William Drake met with an accident December 19, in which his car was completely wrecked and he was rendered unconscious. His convalescence is now almost complete.

A number of young people and former friends spent the holidays with relatives in Hagerman. They added greatly to the effectiveness of the church services and the happiness of this congregation.

The Christmas program was given on Christmas Eve. There were plays, songs, readings, and music by the orchestra. About one hundred and thirty people were present to enjoy the entertainment.

Hagerman's meetings are well attended this winter and interest is good. The last Sunday evening of the year the pastor addressed a large congregation which included fifteen nonmembers on "The Restoration."

Rupert Branch

Branch officers were elected at the business meeting December 20: Pastor, Elder W. A. Connell; chorister, Sister W. A. Connell; secretary, Helen Montrose; treasurer, Harry Waylett; church school superintendent, Harry Waylett. It was decided to change the time of the annual business meeting from December to the third Sunday in September.

A short Christmas program was given by the children's division Sunday at eleven o'clock. The Christmas play which was to have been given by the young people was canceled on account of the serious illness of Sister Waylett.

Boise Branch

Apostle M. A. McConley was scheduled to visit this congregation the first Sunday in December, but an air-mail letter informed us that his visit had to be deferred and that he was sending District President Silas Condit to fill his appointment. Brother Condit, accompanied by his wife and Brother and Sister Dickerson, spent the day and took sacrament with the Saints. Their visit was much enjoyed.

At the annual election of officers Brother John B. Cato was selected as branch president, T. B. Jackson and George B. Anderson to act as his counselors; Gladys Chambard, secretary, and T. B. Jackson, treasurer. Lester Dellenbaugh and John R. Mamerow are superintendents of the Sunday school, and John R. Mamerow and George B. Anderson have charge of the department of recreation and expression. Belle Bullock and Bessie Hull are at the head of the women's group. Sister Dorothy Mamerow was made chorister for all departments.

The Christmas program was given to a packed house, and the people were lavish with their praise. The colored-light effects were the work of Brother Arthur Fletcher. Thirty composed the cast and showed much dramatic talent in impersonating Bible characters.

Beardstown, Illinois

Thirteenth and Monroe Streets

This branch is making progress. The church school opens each Sunday morning at nine thirty, and there is preaching each Sunday evening at seven thirty. Elder M. R. Shoemaker is pastor and his associates are Elders E. E. Thomas and C. H. Davis. We are fortunate in having a good corps of the priesthood. The church school director is E. E. Thomas, and Mrs. E. E. Thomas is chorister; orchestra leader, Mrs. M. R. Shoemaker; clerk, Mrs. L. C. Jones; financial clerk, C. H. Davis.

A choir of twelve and an orchestra of eight members supply good special numbers and assist greatly in the song services. Their help goes far in preparing the way for the speaker.

December 24, under the direction of Sisters E. E. Thomas and Frank Corcoran, "The Bethlehem Way," was presented to a full house.

During January the following speakers have occupied: January 3, Elder M. R. Shoemaker preached on prophets condemned by public opinion; January 10, Elder C. H. Davis spoke on present-day faith; January 17, Elder E. E. Thomas, bishop's agent for Central Illinois, spoke on tithing and filing inventories, and January 24, Elder R. L. Fulk, district president, spoke on Proverbs 29: "Where there is no vision the people perish."

Beginning January 27 Elder Fulk will hold a series of meetings at Beardstown. All are invited. Visiting elders or men holding priesthood are always welcome to speak.

San Antonio, Texas

Rockwood and Cherry Streets

On the morning of January 17 Brother Ed. Yerrington, of the local priesthood, was the speaker. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts," (Zechariah 4: 6), was the text of his sermon. He clearly explained how the Spirit of the Lord works with his people when they are in touch with him and how, without it, the church can not function.

Brother W. H. Mannering, the evening speaker, chose for his theme, "The Word of Wisdom," bringing out good points on frugality and referring to statements of the church physician regarding the care of the body.

Other speakers of the month were Robert Jett and Fred Smith, also local members of the priesthood.

"Christmas Bells," a cantata, was presented December 20, by eleven women directed by Emma Jackson. Pastor E. L. Henson was in charge and gave a short talk which was especially appreciated by the singers. The decorative setting added to the effectiveness of the production. Special parts were sung by Mrs. Fay Hall, soprano, Miss Hazel Canyon, contralto, and Mesdames R. E. Miller and Ed. Yerrington, duet.

Three days later the children, sponsored by Mrs. Ed. Yerrington, supervisor of that department, presented a program. The choir, directed by Ed. Yerrington, sang the anthem, "Hosannah in the Highest." Six junior boys acted as wise men and the choir sang "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night." The beginners sang Christmas carols, and two junior girls, Madalyn Desmoke and Mary Jett, were candle bearers.

The most remarkable thing about this program was the spirit manifested by the children, their willingness to forego the treat which formerly has been given them and to make the price of this treat their offering to the church. A small cedar chest was placed in front of the altar, and the children were given a Christmas envelope. When the pianist played a march, the children came forward and dropped in their offerings. Everyone responded, and the collection that night amounted to thirty-five dollars. This was turned over to the sacrifice offering.

The depression has hit us in the South. Many are out of work, but we are doing what we can to help in paying the general church debt.

We are thankful to have Sister Jarvis back after her illness of several months.

Bremerton, Washington

Bremerton Saints have been busy with the usual winter activities. The church school and women's club have been active.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards and District Missionary H. I. Velt were here the evening of November 20. They held a priesthood meeting with regard to the sacrifice period after which Brother Edwards preached a fine sermon which was much enjoyed by those present. His topic was, "Remove not the Ancient Landmarks." Just before the preaching service Brother Lundeen was ordained to the office of elder. Brother Velt gave the charge, then Sister Lundeen sang, "This My Task." Brothers Edwards and Velt officiated in the ordination, and Sister Lundeen sang at the close, "O Jesus I Have Promised."

The next evening the Saints gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Lundeen, the occasion being a birthday surprise for Sister Lundeen. The evening was spent in music, games, and conversation, after which dainty refreshments were served, chief among them being a beautiful birthday cake.

Several parties have been held for the different groups of the branch this fall and winter. New Year's night quite a number gathered at the Lundeen home for an evening's entertainment.

November 20 the good ship U. S. S. Colorado arrived in the navy yard, bringing with her our young brothers, Hubert and Stanley Mills, of Independence. During their stay here, they have helped us in our services by using their musical talent. These boys with their friend, Bruce Yoeman, have played nearly every Sunday night for two months. When they are gone we shall miss them.

The Christmas program was simple. There were readings, songs, one tableau, and the aid of a six-piece orchestra.

The annual business meeting of the church occurred January 4. Few changes were made. Brother F. H. Bacher was reelected branch president, Sister Cora Jones, church school superintendent, and Eva Lundeen, music director.

Last fall Brother Floyd Bouse and family, of Arizona, came here to live, and they are a welcome addition to the branch. Brother Bouse has already lined up with the work to be done and is busy.

Considerable sickness has prevailed in the branch. Sister Jones, Sister Gosset, Sister Larson, Brother Lundeen, and Gladys Lundeen have been ill but are recovering. Sister Larson was to have started January 8 to visit her old home in Sweden, but became so ill that she had to permanently abandon her trip.

On January 17 Sister Loveless, Homer Reynolds, Hubert Mills, Brother Bacher, Brother Dalberg and Brother and Sister Lundeen went to Seattle to hear President Frederick

M. Smith preach. Everett, Tacoma, Puyallup, and Bremer-ton Branches were represented with the Seattle members to hear the President speak. He gave us a clearer insight into the financial program of the church.

Richland, Missouri

There are five families or parts of families of Saints here in Richland. They are Sister Emma Frock; Sister W. P. A. Willoughby, and son, Levern; J. E. Johnson and family; Sister Garvia Mayer and daughter, Shirley Arden Mayer, and J. A. Brendel and family. Sisters Frock and Willoughby's people have lived here for the last twenty years. The three last named families moved here in the past few years from Lexington, Missouri. We have in all eleven members, and are trying to build up the latter-day work here.

Shirley Arden Mayer, ten years old, was baptized October 1, 1931, by J. A. Brendel, and confirmed by Brother Brendel and J. E. Johnson.

We have regular sacrament meetings with a fine spirit. We enjoy the friendship of many in the church especially those in Holden Stake, and ask the prayers of all that we may serve the Lord with all our might. Times such as these call for faith.

If others are contemplating making their home in the Ozarks, and settling near Richland, we hope to hear from them in order that we may work together in the building of God's kingdom on earth.

South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

Mishawaka, Indiana

The new year was properly ushered into this branch by the baptism of Charles Wilson, husband of Loretta Wilson who came into the fold about a year ago. We are quietly but earnestly seeking to establish the Father's kingdom in this locality.

More than two hundred people composed the congregation which witnessed the Christmas entertainment and tree December 23. The entertainment, thanks to the different active committees, and the cooperation of Elkhart Saints, was most successful.

Sister Clara Kline, of South Bend, an aged member, passed peacefully to her reward January 9. Surely hers was the peace God has promised to those who are faithful and true. Her friends testify to her patience and her faith and integrity in clinging to the rod of iron. Hers was a light which shone quietly but steadily. The funeral service was held at Hibbard, Indiana, January 11, Elder Hoxsey officiating.

The annual election of branch officers is over and we are settled for another year of work. Those chosen to officiate are: Branch president, Forest E. Myers; church school superintendent, Albert Taylor; Religio, Elder Hoxsey; women's division superintendent, Bertha Granger; treasurer, Deacon William Harder; secretary, W. F. Hardy.

Our services have been growing in numbers and interest. Brother Myers's chart lectures, "Down From the Tower of Babel," followed by Elder Hoxsey's sermon on the Book of Mormon and early archæology were especially interesting to our visitors. At the Sunday evening services we now have an attendance of about seventy. Much interest is manifested and we expect some baptisms in the near future.

The priesthood and members feel the absence of the priest and branch solicitor, Brother Charles Ferry, who is ill. We shall be thankful when he is again able to be with us.

Elder J. L. Coonfare has been transferred to Benton Harbor, Michigan, by the company with which he is employed. His mother and her daughters are living with him at present at 733 Colfax Street. Brother Coonfare will be glad to get in touch with Saints who live in or near Benton Harbor.

The address of our pastor is 1001 Burdette Street, Mishawaka, Indiana.

Our Departed Ones

NATIONS.—Kathryn Yockey was born at Hershman, Illinois, January 1, 1911. At the age of fourteen she united with the church at Wedron, Illinois. Graduated from the Hershman High School at the age of sixteen following which she, with her parents and family, moved to Mount Sterling, Illinois, where for two years she was employed at the telephone exchange. December 18, 1929, she was married to George Nations at Camp Point, Illinois. They made their home at Camp Point until October, 1930, since which time they have resided in Quincy. She submitted to an operation for tumor at Blessing Hospital, January 5, and passed away January 7. Surviving are her husband, of Quincy; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Yockey; three brothers, Mervin, Lyle, and Wayne, of Mount Sterling, Illinois, and a half-sister, Mrs. Eva Thompson, of Jacksonville, Illinois. Funeral services were held at Daugherty Memorial Home in Quincy, Illinois, January 9, 1932. Elder E. E. Thomas, of Beardstown, Illinois, in charge. Priest Frank Corcoran delivered a wonderful sermon, using the twenty-third Psalm as a theme. A degree of the Spirit was manifested in the songs and sermon which marked the last rites of this young church member. Interment was at Mount Sterling, Illinois, in the city cemetery.

DALYN.—John Dalyn was born in Victoria, Ontario, Canada, July 18, 1866. He married Miss Susan Ward October 12, 1892, and to them ten children were born, one of whom died in infancy. He moved with his family to Manitoba in 1899. Eleven years later he moved to Ribstone, Alberta, where he lived until 1926, when he moved to Vancouver, British Columbia. He was baptized into the church April 29, 1906, and was ordained a teacher February 24, 1907. Died at his home in Vancouver, December 15, 1931, leaving his wife, four brothers, two sisters, nine children, fourteen grandchildren, and many friends to mourn his departure. The surviving children are: Victor H., Joseph S., Ross C., Mrs. A. B. White, all at Ribstone, Alberta; Thomas J., Mrs. N. V. Morrison, Bella L. Dalyn, and Frederic J., who live in Vancouver. The funeral was held at the Saints' church at Vancouver, J. E. Johnston and M. H. Cook in charge. The sermon was by Brother Cook.

LEWIS.—Charles A. Lewis was born in LaSalle County, Illinois, October 27, 1862, and died at his home near Osborn, Missouri, January 3, 1932. He was preceded in death by his parents and two brothers, Jesse and Andrew. Is survived by four sisters and three brothers: Benjamin C. Lewis, Carrie M. Lewis, Emma B. Lewis, of the home; Mrs. Alida Sebby, of near Osborn; Mrs. Roberts, of Cameron; William A. Lewis, of Hays, Kansas, and Zenas J. Lewis, of Stewartville, Missouri. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in his youth, and clung to that faith all his life. He was a farmer and for many years lived near Osborn. Though his health had not been the best for some time, it was a sudden attack of apoplexy which caused his death. The funeral was held from the Saints' church in Stewartville in charge of F. L. Hinderks, of Cameron. The sermon was by Elder Samuel Twombly, of Fanning, Kansas. Interment was in Stewartville. Brother Lewis was a substantial citizen of his community, quiet and unassuming in disposition but a man of scrupulous honor and integrity of purpose.

Laurel Club Will Feed the Conference

EARNINGS TO GO TO CHURCH FUNDS

True to its record of helpfulness, the Laurel Club, of Independence, comes forward with a feeding program for the seventy-fifth General Conference, to convene April 6. It will again operate its cafeteria in the Auditorium, where at the 1930 conference, thousands were served. Two rows of steam tables and the rearrangement of service tables will lengthen out the line of hungry conference visitors and speed up the service, according to Mrs. T. J. Watkins, president of the club.

Good, sanitary, home-cooked food at reasonable prices is promised by the Laurels, and the earnings of the cafeteria go straight into the funds of the church. For a number of years the Laurel Club has worked hard to acquire equipment for the Auditorium kitchen and dining room, and this year the women hope to see all this equipment used to feed the conference crowd.

A force of fifty or more volunteer and hired workers will operate the kitchen and cafeteria. Equipment in the form of a forty-gallon steam soup kettle, steam cookers for vegetables, huge gas ranges, steam tables, and a mammoth electric dishwasher enables this comparatively small group of helpers to feed a great number of patrons. This service the Laurel members willingly give to the church, sacrificing the joys of conference attendance and visits with conference guests in their homes. It is their contribution to the welfare and success of the conference. All they ask, in return, is the support of the conference in their business for the church.

L. B. M.

Send in Your Reservation at Once

The committee on housing the delegates and visitors this conference will be very pleased to make reservations for all who anticipate coming. It is important that the committee know just as soon as possible from this date how many are coming and what accommodations they would like to have. We would like to please everyone who comes, but we do not make any promises for people who come without asking for reservations.

The Laurel Club has been asked by the conference officials to furnish meals. This is a big task for the club to assume, and we trust our conference visitors will support the Laurel Club dining room. The profits from the dining room go to the church. The Housing Committee is not making any provisions for board.

It is important that all who are planning to attend the conference send for their reservations at once to the Pastor's Office, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Singers, Open Your "Messiah" Books

All good singers of the church who are planning to attend the General Conference in April, are invited to sing with the big chorus which will present Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah." Male voices, especially tenors, are needed, also alto voices. If you wish to take part in this musical production, begin now to rehearse the choruses listed in the Saints' Herald of January 20, page 50. Also, please let Brother John T. Gresty know your plans. His address is 1620 Benton Boulevard, Kansas City, Missouri.

"The Messiah" will be sung Sunday afternoon, April 10, Brother Gresty directing. The chorus of six hundred voices will be accompanied by an orchestra of eighty or more pieces. In addition to the choruses listed to be sung, the performance will include Number 46, "Since by Man Came Death," page 172.

Considerable enthusiasm is being generated among the singers, and not the least enthusiastic is Brother Gresty. The orchestra, rehearsing twice weekly, is doing splendidly, and reports from the choirs at Independence, Kansas City, Lamoni, Saint Joseph, Holden, and other places, indicate diligent practice.

The women of the chorus will wear white dresses and the men dark suits and black bow ties.

The Approaching Conference

It has been said that the Centennial Conference of 1930 was a celebration; by way of contrast the conference of April, 1932, is to be primarily a business session. At the former the pageantry of a hundred years of history drew our eyes backward over the times of the past. In this next conference we turn our eyes forward to the tasks before us.

What has happened to the church and to the world in the eventful two years has brought grave concern. People will come to this conference in a thoughtful and prayerful mood. They will be here to legislate, to consider, and to seek together the influence of that Spirit whose guidance will be necessary to indicate the way ahead of us.

This people faces problems, but they are not impossible of solution; there are heavy burdens, but they can, with faith and resolution, be borne; the future is dark, but the path can be revealed.

We approach this conference with faith in God and faith in the people. The church is equal to all of its obligations and necessities, if it is minded to meet them; and we believe that it is.

The Law of the King

The law of a king is service,
And the kingliest serve the most;
Then ye who are sons of promise
And would royal lineage boast,

Get under the common burden;
Go, help the brotherless sons,
And win the royal guerdon,
The thanks of comforted ones.

For suffering is measureless,
The sorrowing are a host,
The law of a king is service,
And the kingliest serve the most.

—Stanley F. Davis.

Blue Pencil Notes

"Some folks," complained Deacon Goodentart, "some folks seem to think that tact is something to drive with a hammer."

Every sweet song in its very nature is capable of atrocious renditions. In some throats its sweet cadences become shrieks and wailings. Yet we do not blame the composer. But when some one makes a failure in his interpretation of religion people say: "If that is religion I want none of it," or "If that is what the church stands for count me out."

William Allen White is quoted as saying, "The Almighty has never been known to plant a really dynamic idea under a plug hat." Such a statement pleases western prejudice against the "high hat" attitude, but to inspire confidence presupposes omniscience on the part of Mr. White. We suspect that he has not been with the Almighty on all his planting expeditions. If we remember rightly Abraham Lincoln used to go about wearing a "plug hat," even before the days of his presidency. True, it was a battered and rusty hat, as a rule, and he used to keep the crown filled with papers and documents, still it was a "high hat," to be specific, a "plug hat"; and unless the Almighty caught him bareheaded sometimes he certainly planted dynamic ideas under that hat. Class and dress do not count so much—it is the head under the hat that counts; if it is good ground for dynamic ideas the Almighty pays little attention to the hat.

Real recreation quickens aspiration. The true purpose of recreation is not merely to amuse, not merely to afford us pleasure, not merely to "kill time," but to increase our fitness, enhance our usefulness, spur achievement. Any form of recreation that impairs either our physical or mental efficiency does not recreate.—B. C. Forbes, in Keys to Success.

THE RACE IS SAFE—

Two tendencies, among others, are planted deeply in the human race: the destructive and the preservative.

Ever and anon men cry to us that humanity is headed for destruction, and that in a frenzy of madness it will send itself into oblivion.

Recent circumstances and social phenomena have inclined us to believe that this is true. It would seem that the world is determined to ruin itself.

But if this were true, the human race would have been destroyed long before the beginning of written history. If mankind had been possessed only of destructive inclinations, it would surely have perished from the earth.

There are the saving and preservative tendencies as well as the others. And on occasions when sin and decay go too far, men have the capacity for corrective disgust, and the power to repent and change. And it has been the salvation of men that in every crisis, when things have gone too far, they have revolted and changed.

God has put into every one of us a variety of tendencies. Out of some of them we make destruction, and with others we save. It is our privilege to choose.

And since he has made us so, perhaps we are not in danger of immediate destruction.

THE CATHOLICS REACH FOR THE CHILDREN—

Strong instructions have been issued to the young people of the Catholic Church that they must adhere carefully to the conditions laid down in the dispensations by which they are permitted to marry non-members. All of the children, says the church, must be raised as Catholics, and the non-Catholic partner of the family must not only make a binding agreement to permit this arrangement, but in some cases at least must submit to a series of instructive sessions with a priest. If the parents violate the agreement the threat of excommunication, a very severe one in that faith, is held over the Catholic; and the children may be declared illegitimate.

The Catholic Church is not willing to give the children their own choice. It is not willing to grant equal rights to the nonmember parent. The arrangement is palpably unfair. Young people who consider marrying Catholics would do well to ponder over this situation.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY TO EARTH—

The surface of the earth is precious. It is limited, and therefore worth too much to the world to be wasted in the possession of unfit and unworthy peoples. Man's tenure of earth's surface is a stewardship, as is a nation's tenure; and men individually and collectively are responsible for the use they make of the land.

Throughout the long history of the world, nations have had to prove their fitness to possess the land by their ability to hold it against all enemies. In spite of sentiment and ideals this has always been true; and in spite of the teachings of Christianity, it is true today. The price of possession is the power of defense. Morality, righteousness, and justice do not enter into the practical consideration, in spite of what we may believe ought to be.

Where a million Indians roamed and starved in this land; 120,000,000 citizens live in comparative comfort, in spite of the depression. Who is there to say that no whites should have ventured into this land? It was needed for civilization, and unjust as it may seem, the primitive race, unable to protect its holdings was forced to yield.

A nation that possesses land has more than a right to it. That nation has a responsibility to the land. If that nation has discharged its responsibility, it will be able to protect itself and its land. If it has not done its duty, it will be overcome.

Since their revolution against their own empire, the people of China have been a weak and parasitic people. Other peoples have fed them in famine, protected them in war, and taught them in peace. They have allowed government to be the plaything of bandits, education to be the charity of Christian churches, relief to be the function of other governments, and culture and moral integrity to be the chance of the moment.

If China has fallen on evil days, was this not to be expected? For what have her people prepared but this? How have they used their opportunities? How have they met their responsibilities to the land, the precious surface of the earth?

The time has come when China must decide between coming into a national consciousness and an adult statehood, or submitting to foreign encroachments at the hands of Japan that will rob her of both lands and independence.

All people are alike responsible. If they can not hold their land by their own efforts, they must lose it. If China will not or can not meet her responsibilities, she must yield to Japan. Who is better fitted to manage the corrupt and bandit ridden areas of China than Japan?

On the other hand, what nation could more properly make a struggle that would repel the Jap invader and free China for ever from his encroachments than China herself.

China's only real and lasting salvation must come, soon or late, if it is to come at all, from China. This is her responsibility for the land she holds.

The Religious Significance of the Depression

By Ray Whiting

I asked a number of ministers of various churches whether they had observed anything of religious significance that has come as a result of the depression. One of them answered, "Not much; we have not yet learned our lesson sufficiently to be wise when prosperity returns." All were unanimous that the depression had "revealed our sins," and all agreed that it had increased the spiritual fervor of the faithful few.

Popular Religion Helpless

Without doubt, something is happening in the minds of men, due to the depression, that does and will have a bearing upon religion. In the first place it has revealed our sins; the sins of nations calling themselves Christian, yet spending their strength competing in the terrible art of war; the sins of these Christian nations which permit the accumulation of wealth by the few while tens of thousands of men, women and little children go hungry and cold, some finally dying for the lack of this same wealth; the sin of luxury and waste and display on the part of some church members, while at the same time in the same city thousands of other church members are walking the streets begging for work.

All this affects religion. It has brought down upon it an avalanche of criticism not altogether undeserved. The depression has made painfully clear that, not only must the cause of the depression be laid at the feet of Christian people, but that religion is almost helpless in bringing about an adjustment.

Popular Religion Useless

The depression has revealed the fact that much of present day religion is not only hopelessly antiquated, but of such a nature as to be almost useless in meeting the needs of humanity.

H. Emil Brunner, a professor of Theology in the University of Zurich, in an article in the Christian Century for December 23, 1931, entitled, "Is Jesus Coming?" says, "I hope that Jesus, as he is understood today, will not only fail to come, but will completely disappear." Then he goes on to show that the Being many christian people worship is not like Jesus the Christ. A Mr. Paul A. Schilpp writing in the October 28 issue of the Christian Century says: "Much of what has gone under the name and banner of religion therefore, has been outer ostentation and childish superstition." And Benjamin Ginzburg, in the Nation of October 21, 1931, commenting on the amount of money spent annually for religious worship declares, "Most of the money goes directly or indirectly for Sunday sermons which do nothing but vainly defend an antiquated conception of God and assure immortality to persons who are afraid of death." He further charges that, "The spread of science has never made half as many atheists as the stupid defense of a religion that has no meaning in terms of modern life."

Religion has always had her critics, but perhaps she was never more deserving of them than now, for the utter fallacy of attempting to build the kingdom of God upon the materialistic philosophy, the selfishness and the make-believe of the present age, as is now made glaringly evident.

But this criticism is not only pointing out the fact that religion is not now the force it ought to be in the world, it is just as loudly declaring that the reason religion is weak is because the things of the world, the things foreign to pure religion, have entered the church and robbed her of her spiritual strength. The sin of the church, as revealed by the depression, is that she has followed, to too great an extent, the ways of the world. Mr. Brunner, in the article mentioned above says, "Mankind is sick, sick unto death; . . . But at the bottom of this sickness is man's making himself God, his worship of the world, of the universe, or of reason, of values, of himself, instead of God."

The depression has shown that the way of the world is not sufficient, that while it heaps up great mountains of gold and gathers stores of goods, it finally results in confusion, waste and want. The way of the world stands condemned, for it has been tried and failed. Its ways have been tried within religion with the result that they have so encumbered the church that it could not serve. The only hope of the world now lies in a religion freed from the sins of the world, the religion of Jesus Christ.

Spirituality for the "Faithful Few"

According to reports coming from many quarters, the depression has increased the spiritual enthusiasm of the faithful few. It has made them more keenly conscious that religion will save the world, but that it must be a religion of service and of sacrifice for others, instead of an entertainment and a heart balm for self. We have discovered, as stated by E. Stanley Jones, that, "It is one thing to have truth, it is another thing to have living truth."

The "faithful few" knew they had the truth, but the depression has made it evident that if it is to have much effect in the world they must develop that "fire" which will give life to that truth. The depression has made us conscious that if religion and the church is to hold the respect of intelligent people it must do more than to recite a few truths. The truth must become flesh and dwell among men again.

E. Stanley Jones, in his book, The Christ of Every Road, gives a beautiful illustration of the attitude of too many toward religion. He says, "We are still taken up with trivialities, such trivialities as our own position and place and power. In the Federated Malay States you can see men, grown men, sitting on the ridges of the rice fields and fishing in a foot of water. Within sight of them the great ocean rolls, but there they sit and fish in rice fields." Christians, too often, have been like that. Most of our time and money and thought have been spent in the trivial things of the world. Instead of being submerged in the ocean of "living waters" we were content to wade in the shallows. "And," as Mr. Jones continues to say, "all the time the great world of problems were roaring in our ears: the demand for God, for healing from sin-hurt, for human brotherhood, for social and economic reconstruction, for world evangelization. There is where we should be fishing. It is dangerous, but worth while."

Religion in Action

Some one has well said that, "Humanity's moving convictions come not from the head, but from the heart. And the heart is stirred not by pale abstraction of reason, but by pulsing realities of experience. . . . So, in every era of conflict, it is not until the issue has by some means been dramatized that the masses can be made to understand it, and aroused to action. . . . To be a moving factor in the conduct of the distracted and heavily weighted multitudes of our own time, our religion must cultivate the high art of dramatizing itself in action." The depression has taught us these things.

Some Who Have Heard the Voice

Out of the depression comes a voice calling the people to a fuller sacrifice, to a deeper devotion. Perhaps only a few will hear it, but if a few will hear and respond, then the religious significance of the depression will be great. In all ages it was only the few, often only one or two, who heard the Voice, but hearing, they not only transformed their own lives, but changed the course of history.

David, a shepherd boy, lived in an hour of great depression for the army of Israel, but he thought, "Who is this uncircumcised Philistine that he should defy the armies of the living God?" So he went out in answer to the Voice from that depression and said to the giant, "I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, . . . that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel." The world stands trembling and almost defeated before the giant, Materialism, but out of the depression comes a Voice calling some to arise in the name of the Lord of hosts that the earth might know again that there is a God in Israel.

There was Esther, who, at the time when her people were about to be destroyed, heard the Voice and, even in the face of possible death said, "I will go in unto the king, which is not according to the law, and if I perish, I perish." From this depression there comes a Voice moving some to say, "I will go unto the King, and if I perish, I perish."

Out of this depression, as from all others, there comes the Voice challenging the few who hear to greater dangers and they are responding. Out of this depression, we verily believe, will come a greater demonstration and revelation of God and religion than this generation has ever witnessed.

A Memorial to Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson

The Prayer

Delivered by President F. M. McDowell at the funeral bier of Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson, Independence, Missouri, January 23, 1932.

Our kind heavenly Father, in humility and in gratitude, in weakness and yet with assurance of thy strength, conscious of human limitation, yet knowing of thy love, we pause in thy divine presence, bowing our heads as evidence in part, we sincerely pray, of that humility and that gratitude.

We feel it a privilege to call thee our Father, and to know this afternoon that out of all the experiences of men in their endeavor to understand thy nature, they have best learned to speak of thee as a loving Father. We are grateful, too, that thy Son who was sent to pilot us in the way of life, has taught that thou art our Father indeed, a Father who loves us, who so truly loves us that he sent his only Son that all men might find him and know him, love him and desire to be like him.

We are especially thankful, too, this afternoon, that our own experiences as thy children with thee and with each other, have taught us that we are indeed brethren, that there is a tie that binds us in a great fraternity, a great brotherhood of love, and that because we are brethren, thou art then our Father.

We thank thee for the evidence of thy majesty in thine own handiwork in the souls of men. We thank thee for the spirit of the lives of those who have known thee and sought to serve thee. This beautiful afternoon surrounded by friends and loved ones of our sister, by these beautiful flowers which symbolize the continuity and purity of purpose in her life, we pause to share our sympathy and utter this prayer in this sad hour. The sadness of the hour is lessened when we remember the majesty and beauty of thy handiwork as it has been brought to bear upon the soul and in the life of our departed sister.

We know thee, then, our Father, most of all today for what thou canst do with men and for men, and for what thou doest cause men and women to do for thee and for each other. We thank thee then for the beauty of the life of our sister, and that we have all been made the recipients of her righteousness. That which she has received at thy hands has been returned to thee. She loved to serve her fellow man and make life more rich and more beautiful for all of those with whom she came in contact.

Our approach to thee, our kind Father, is made easy today because of the character, the integrity, the service, the sweetness of the life of our departed sister, and because of our assurance that her life is acceptable to thee. We know that at this very moment thine arm of understanding and love and power shall be extended to those who grieve, those who have been caused to mourn—and we pray that such a blessing shall continue to be theirs.

Bless us during this hour. May thy Spirit be here with assurance. May pain, and sorrow be removed by thine understanding presence. In the words that are spoken may there be thoughts which shall bring peace. May the life of our sister inspire us to know that the only thing worth while is that we shall use the gifts and the talents that have been given to us in service to thee and our fellow man. May thy divine benediction rest upon us. May it comfort the sorrowing and heal the broken hearted and bring that assurance and courage which we shall need as we shall continue to merit thy love—we humbly pray in the Master's name, Amen.

The Sermon

By U. W. Greene

I will read this afternoon a brief Scripture lesson from 1 Thessalonians 4: 13-18. (Inspired Version.)

But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that they who are alive at the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them who remain unto the coming of the Lord, who are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then they who are alive, shall be caught up together into the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

The trend of human opinion sets strongly toward a belief in immortality. The master minds of the ages have been strong in their affirmations of continued life. It is true that there are exceptions to this rule and that there are some people living today who do not want life continued beyond the experience here, but these exceptions only prove the universality of the rule. One of the most beautiful thoughts ever given to man has to do with the immortality of the soul, and the desire for it exists everywhere. Take this hope from us—so bright and beautiful, beyond this present life, and it would leave us in a land of shadows, groping like the beasts of the field—where all that makes life worth living is lost. There are some who can not see these grand truths, but that is no reason why we should all be classed as blind. The glorious mission of Jesus Christ was to bring life and immortality to light through the Gospel—but this hope was in the world before Christ, existing in the hearts of men through the divine enlightenment.

The word of God declares that he is; it also declares that we shall live again. Jesus did not argue the question or go into details, but he said: "In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." And the Apostle said, "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." But the word of God tells us more than that. It tells us that God will be there, and where he is will be permanence, and Christ will be there. The redeemed of the ages will be there. The Holy City—the New Jerusalem—will be there. The glory of God, giving them light, and the nations of the saved will walk in the light of it. The tree of life will be there. The river of the waters of life will be there. There will be no night there. Love will be there in its highest and best sense and not limited by the restrictions of the human body.

God tells us of these things, not with trivial details but upon the broadest terms, that can not be denied. So wonderful were these things, that God sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. It is a wonderful thing to turn from the mere conjectures of pseudo-philosophers—from the denials of scientists and poets, and the dim fancies that darken the minds of men, to the clear declarations of God in his word.

There we learn that the spirit of life, which God breathed into man in the beginning, shall last as long as Eternity. Often we hear people say, "I can't believe what is mysterious." It is not difficult to believe the fact, while not understanding the manner of the production of the fact. We all know of the growing grass the earth sends forth in the springtime, but how do the particles of earth, the sunlight, the warm rains change it into the green verdure? By what process does one blade bring forth wheat? Another corn? How is it that the same things produce the beautiful color of the rose, and also the darker shades of the dahlia? The mode is mysterious—the fact plain. We know the earth is covered with green—that the flowers bloom in the garden—the trees are beautiful with bloom and foliage, but by what process we can not tell. We may reason—we may proceed step by step, but the nature of the process is beyond the investigation of man. So that we may believe a fact, while the mode of its development is mysterious to us. On a cold winter evening we look at the northern lights, ascending in variegated colors toward the zenith. The heavens are illuminated by the glowing currents flitting across the sky, and we ask: How are they produced? Yet men are asking the question: "How is it possible for God to resurrect a body?" Some of its particles may enter into the life of plants. Some bodies are cremated and the ashes scattered to the winds, or in the ocean currents. Can they be gathered together again? When we analyze the thought it shows lack of faith in the power of the Supreme Architect of the universe. His knowledge and power are such that he can reconstruct the body again and place therein the spirit that has been resting in the paradise of God. We may take a watch to the jeweler to be repaired—its wheels are worn and the springs broken. If I take it apart I can not remember where the parts belong, in order to make the necessary repairs. But the jeweler unfastens the parts and strews them around. Sometime later he takes them up, puts piece to its piece—part to its part, and reconstructs the framework again, because he has a knowledge of the fitness of every particle. Shall not the great Creator of all things, then, be able to remember the particles of our bodies, and reconstruct them, until they shall shine in his presence like his most glorious body? Surely, his power and wisdom are sufficient and past our finding out.

There are also the analogies in nature to help our minds. The trees of the forest once were full of foliage, but we watched them wither and die; yet we have the sweet assurance of another springtime when the swelling buds will be seen—the leaves reappear, and the flowers crown the branches. Here is re-vivification—an awakening again. There are many people who marvel that we can have faith in what they call "The Unknown"—yet who show their absolute faith in the unknown everytime they fall asleep. They believe that after a few hours of complete unconsciousness they shall return to new life and vigor. They implicitly trust the Unknown a third part of their lives, but are assailed with doubts when they feel the lethal touch of the long sleep approaching. The philosophers of the world have never solved the problem that confronts us this afternoon. Their wisdom does not pass beyond the closing of our eyes in sleep, any more than it penetrates the mystery of death. This world's wisdom stops there. Only those who have faith in God and his promises, can go on. While they trust the Unknown every day in sleep, let them not wonder at those who trust God and his promises after this life. Jesus said: "Unless you become as little children" and it has more comfort and meaning, for the Saint of God than all the philosophers this world has ever known.

"Approach thy grave as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant slumber," is infinitely better than that of the man who said: "I am taking a leap in the dark." The world has failed to solve the mystery of sleep; the mystery of life; the mystery of what lies beyond the narrow horizon of our lives. We believe at night that we shall rise strengthened and refreshed in the morning. So the Saints of God believe that the today of this life has its tomorrow in the resurrection of the just, at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ; and that what we call the sleep of this body will just as surely end as does the lesser sleep which now daily "knits for us the raveled sleeve of care."

It was the prophet Alma who said: "It has been made known unto me by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body, are taken home to that God who gave them life." And then shall the spirits of the righteous be received into a state of happiness which is called paradise—a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care and sorrow; until the time of their resurrection, at the coming of the Lord, when the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the body and spirit will be restored one to the other, and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Son of God. (2 Nephi 6: 29, 30.) "And this mortal then shall put on immortality, and this corruption shall put on incorruption." (Mosiah 6.) "And the atonement [of Christ, our Lord] bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead, and . . . bringeth back men into the presence of God." (Alma 19: 105.)

This is a glorious thought—that the body and spirit will be united in the New Jerusalem, with powers improved and with a nature glorified. Then we shall enjoy the fullness of redeeming love. Then our broken home circles shall be reunited. Then we can say: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." And unto those who have faith in Jesus Christ, and who keep the commandments of God comes the voice of the Angel, saying: "Write Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." (Revelations 14: 13.)

We face the sad fact today that in the death of Mrs. Robinson, another sweet and beautiful life has gone home—but she has left us a legacy. The church, the home, and society lose heavily when such a life takes its flight. We know that in the paradise of God she is happier and that we are richer in soul when we reflect on her life. She had found the secret of a happy life. As we listen for the keynote, we can hear all the harmonies that float around it. We know that a life will be beautiful when we know the star that leads, and the power that guides. The center of her life was her Lord Jesus Christ. His will had become her will, and she sought to have her life like his life; in him she lived and moved, and had her being. She had a Christian face—calm, strong, hopeful. A pure heart gave her a countenance beaming with love to all. She had a fine personality, and the courage to do what she thought was right. She had the culture of unselfishness, which lost self in the service of others. She was a Christian mother, possessing that sweet caressing influence that floated from her soul like the perfume of a rose. She possessed the hope in Christ, like an anchor to the soul, which is worth more at the moment when the life forces begin to slip away—like sand through our fingers—than all the wealth of the world. She lived a beautiful life and died in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. May she have the twofold resurrection—one when the dead in Christ, arise, to meet her Lord and the loved ones waiting to welcome her—the other, in the many lives that remain here, enriched by her benefactions and blessed and purified by her influence. She sought to lay up treasures in heaven, and has taken with her into the next world, first, a beautiful character; second, an overflowing and happy disposition; third, a triumphant faith in God and love for Jesus Christ, and his work among men. Names that live long after those who bore them are dead—are those whom God has exalted because they have proved their right to immortality. She leaves behind her the beautiful benediction of a faithful wife and loving mother and a loyal friend.

I can not say, and I will not say
That she is dead—she is just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
She has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since she lingers there.

And you—O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return;
Think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of There, as the love of Here.
Think of her still as the same, I say;
She is not dead—she is just away.

And unto the bereaved ones this day, may God, in his infinite mercy place his arm of love about you, and give unto you his Holy Spirit with its comfort and support in this your hour of great trial, in my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Voice of Warning in Modern Revelation

V.—CONCERNING CLASS WAR

By Elbert A. Smith

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.

The Scripture just quoted is not in a class with the predictions concerning wars between nations. It forbodes something even more sinister and alarming. It quite clearly relates to war within nations, not sectional strife, as between the northern and southern states of the United States, or the north and south of Ireland, but armed strife between classes, setting neighbor against neighbor; such strife as we already see in its incipient stages between those who have in increasing measure and those who have lost even that which they thought they had.

The Beginnings of Class War

In years gone by capital and labor were united in one person. The man owned a little shop and tools and worked at his trade. By and by he hired one or two men to work for him, but continued to work with them. The number increased, but even after the employer had ceased actually to work at the bench or machine he remained intimate with his employees. He lived in the same neighborhood, in much the same style, and knew his workmen personally and affectionately. Even after he became the "big boss" or the "old man" they respected and liked him. But the distance between them widened. He moved into a better neighborhood—into a different circle socially—into a different world. There remained no sympathetic contact between him and his employees. He was interested in dividends; they in wages. It became a sort of war between employer and employee, the one seeking to increase dividends, the other to increase wages, shorten hours, and better working conditions. The owner became one of a board of directors, or perhaps only a stockholder clipping dividends.

The war became more than figurative. Employees had recourse to strikes, boycotts, sabotage, and bombs. The employer fought back with court injunctions, lockouts, and the militia. They became enemies indeed, yet both strangely enough trying to live from the fruits of the same industry. Machinery was perfected and became almost human in intelligence. It displaced men. Those who remained were speeded up and set at highly specialized tasks, under "mass production." Labor lost its interest and appeal. Then came hard times and unemployment.

The Slave That Becomes Master

Some years ago Oscar Wilde wrote:

The fact is, that civilization requires slaves. The Greeks were quite right there. Unless there are slaves to do the ugly, horrible, uninteresting work, culture and contemplation become almost impossible. Human slavery is wrong, insecure and demoralizing. On mechanical slavery, on the slavery of the machine, the future of the world depends.

Doctor C. C. Furnace, of Yale, in his book America's Tomorrow, estimates that today in America every individual of us has one hundred and sixty-five slaves working for him, or their equivalent in machine power. In colonial times each individual had on an average three slaves. These slave machines have not proportionately reduced the hours of labor of those who work, but they have "emancipated" many from labor and also from the rewards of labor. Unemployment all but ruins the nations. Machinery and mass production are important factors in the situation, though not the only ones.

The machine that was to be the slave has become the master. And now the voice of the radical is heard saying: "Why should we be broken by the machine? Let the workers take over the machine and the factory and make them serve us. Our labor has built the industry. The courts and bayonets always defend property rights, never human rights. We will set up our own government and have our own courts and laws. We know how to run the machines, and we were taught in the World War how to fight. Workers of the world, unite to overthrow the old and to build a new economic order!"

Prudent men say, "Let us correct the evils of the present system rather than turn to one whose evils may be even worse." But the voice of prudence does not interest those in want and so the argument approaches a dangerous stage. In Russia the thing proposed by the radical has already been done. And from there the appeal goes out to all lands: "Go thou and do likewise." In Russia literally a man's hand is against his neighbor. If a man owns a little shop and his neighbor does not, he is a capitalist and is doomed. If he has a small farm and hires even one man in harvest time, he is "exploiting labor" and must be "liquidated."

George Bernard Shaw visited Russia. He is an ardent admirer of the Soviet government, and its defender. He is not likely to exaggerate conditions in any way reflecting upon the experiment in Russia. In a recent article syndicated by the North American newspaper alliance, he said:

In Russia they have abolished capital punishment for murder and substituted four or five years' imprisonment. But if you make money they shoot you ruthlessly.

If you walk into a state bank (banking in Russia is a public function, as it should be in every sensible country) and proffer a sum of money on deposit they will pay you eight per cent interest on it. But if you do this on a scale which suggests you are obtaining more than your fair share, their income tax commissioners will look into the matter; and if they find that you have been speculating or exploiting the labor of others, your relatives will presently miss you and you will not turn up again.

One thing begins to become clear. The present economic system must be reformed, almost remade, to remove its evils, to secure a more just and general distribution of goods, to guard against unemployment, or the discontented will rise up and throw it into the discard, as they did in Russia, with incredible ferocity and bloodshed, and then they will set up a new order. Will men of power, wealth, influence, and brains lead out in such a work of reformation? Will they even permit it? One thing is certain, the world is to be made over after some pattern, and the time will not long be delayed.

Wanted: A "Christian Nation"

Russia is striving for many of the goals that we desire. She seeks equality, and the emancipation of the poor. She is doing it by force and terror and without religion—indeed every energy is directed toward the destruction of faith in God. To a degree she visions the brotherhood of man—the fatherhood of God is repudiated. What a pity that some great "Christian" nation should not essay the task that Russia has attempted and do it in the name of God and Christ. No greater challenge was ever presented to the human race. What will the "Christian" nations do about it?

The problem of production has been solved far beyond the fondest anticipations of a few years ago; indeed so successfully has it been solved that today a few may provide for the needs of the many so that many are thrown out of employment and can not buy the goods produced—so we have poverty and suffering in the midst of plenty. How to solve the problem of just distribution? On that point the New Statesman and Nation, of London, not long ago declared that it must not be done on any basis of profits but "according to human needs." Thus spoke the prophet Joseph nearly a century ago: "Every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just." (Doctrine and Covenants 82: 4.) He also pointed out the disasters that were to follow failure to make such a distribution. The New Statesman, as quoted in the Literary Digest for January 23, 1932, also dwells on those probable disasters, as follows:

They [the economists] will have to go beyond the point of admitting that a new generation can not for ever be bound in the fetters of old indebtedness. They will have to agree that the only sane way of using the immense new wealth which modern science and machinery now offer is deliberately to organize its production and its distribution, not according to a theory of marginal profits, but according to human needs. . . .

If they abandon their self-imposed task of explaining why we must all be poor in the midst of plenty, and set to work to tell us how to make use of our wealth, they will find themselves, for the first time, speaking with real authority.

If they do not soon tackle their task, all the cranks and the inadequately trained people will do it for them. In which case we shall have another horrible mess.

The "Surplus," a Blessing or a Curse

Today modern methods and mass production are able to create an enormous surplus of goods. This surplus the Lord said should be consecrated to the service of God and humanity. It has not been consecrated and so it remains the very root of social trouble. It embarrasses and even ruins those who hold it, and those who need it but have it not are in want and too often plunged into bitterness of spirit as well as suffering of body. So it does not serve humanity at all but becomes a potential cause of strife.

The prophecy quoted (Doctrine and Covenants 45:13) seems to indicate that we shall drift into class warfare. The fires of class hatred will be fanned until they are beyond control. Neighbor will be against neighbor. In that day the Lord will reveal his power and his wisdom in the behalf of those who would have no part in such scenes of violence and crime. In the meantime, though we may not now succeed in establishing the perfect order contemplated in Zion, it is our duty to approximate those conditions as nearly as we can and be prepared in heart and in spirit for the hastening time of his work. One thing is sure: a hundred years ago Joseph Smith, under the inspiration of God, warned the world of the danger ahead in class war that should spring out of the unjust and unequal distribution of earth's fruits among earth's children. And it is equally sure that he also pointed out the remedy. Our faith in that remedy should be strengthened rather than weakened by current events.

God has put something noble and good into every heart which his hand has created.—Mark Twain.

There is a perennial winsomeness about the life of Jesus. The enchantment of his graciousness lures us to him and binds us fast as we come into his presence. There is such an evident earnest, yet simple unaffectedness. To come into the presence of Jesus is like reaching an overlooking mountain eminence, or like resting in the fascinating calm of a beautiful lake. His freedom, his freshness, his sincerity delight us into a mood of buoyant reverence.—Charles B. Tupper, in Church Management.

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—4

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Trachoma is a chronic, contagious inflammation of the covering of the eye and lining of the lids. It is sometimes spoken of as granulated sore eyes or granulated lids. It is due to an unknown virus, which sets up, in the beginning, a mild form of inflammation, followed by the formation of scar tissue, which causes the lid to contract, and may turn in, causing the eyelashes to scatch the eyeball, or on the other hand, the eyelashes may be turned out. I have had whole families consult me, who were made totally blind by this condition. It is very prevalent among the American Indians, and also among the people of Russia, China, Japan, and Egypt. It is frequently found in our southern and midwestern states, especially among the poor of the large cities. This form of conjunctivitis has been spread in the United States by letting immigrants arrive on our shores without having had their eyes examined. But fortunately, all immigrants now arriving have their eyelids turned back (everted) and the conjunctiva examined for evidence of this infection, which if found, the immigrant is promptly sent back from whence he came. If it can not be shown that the disease might not have been recognized at the port of departure, the steamship company is liable to a fine of one hundred dollars for every case of trachoma on board.

There are many ways by which this terrible disease may be propagated, such as the common roller towel, handkerchiefs, fingers, and other similar means. If more attention were paid to the proper hygienic surroundings in our municipalities, and other places, it would go a long way toward helping the prevention and spread of the diseases. On account of the improper education among families of this class, and some of the so-called higher classes, when one of the family becomes infected, it usually spreads to the rest of the household. It is a progressive disease, unless properly and thoroughly treated, and is frequently complicated by a grayish membranous tissue, called pannus, that usually covers the upper half of the cornea, making it almost opaque, brought about by the eyelashes or the granulated condition of the lids, by its frequent rubbing over the cornea. Often ulcers are formed at the edge of the pannus, which results in more scar tissue being formed and assisting, materially, in the crowding of the cornea. It is plainly evident, from what has already been said, that prevention should be the watchword, which naturally consists of not only avoiding the infection, but by maintaining the proper sanitary and hygienic surroundings.

Damaged vision may be prevented if treated early enough, but should not be undertaken, except by a complete specialist. If neglected too long, the pannus will become more and more dense until the individual is partially, or totally, blind.

Autobiography

IV.—INCIDENTS AND LABORS IN THE NEBRASKA MISSION

By James Franklin Mintun

While at Blair I rented a vacant house and with the assistance of a few of the brethren prepared some temporary seats, where I preached for several nights, resulting in the baptism of four. One of those baptized was a young lady who was engaged to a man about twenty-nine years of age. He was badly prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints, and seriously objected to the baptism of his fiancée. He could not move her by arguing against the doctrine, for she could defend that, so he began to talk against Joseph Smith. He said that he saw Joseph Smith attempt to walk on the waters of the Mississippi near Nauvoo. One of the planks that had been laid just under the water had been taken out by some one, and when he came to where this plank was he went into the river. She did not believe the story, but did not want to tell him it was untrue without some evidence for what she said, so she came to me for advice. I told her to ask him how old he was then; to have him figure out what year he was born. Then in a quiet way tell him that Joseph Smith was killed in 1844, several years, about eight years, before he was born. She did so and he was chagrined to think she had caught him in a lie. He said no more along this line but in a mean way tried to dissuade her from being baptized. She was converted, and would be baptized. Then she wanted to know what I thought about her marriage to him. She was very conscientious in a way, and felt that since she had promised to marry him that she would be false to her promise should she not marry him. I advised her that when she made the promise he represented a truthful man, but now he had proved himself untruthful. She promised to marry a truthful man and could not be held to marry an untruthful man, and the promise had better be broken than to keep it in a formal way and live to regret it in future years. She married him and was miserable as long as she lived with him.

Following this series of services I labored in Fremont, preaching in the cottages of the Saints, and making my home with Brother Matthew W. Sampson. This labor resulted in the baptism of several that month, among whom were Brother Edward Thomas and wife. Brother Thomas was a user of tobacco. He had been converted to the truth that baptism was for the remission of sins, and he believed that the use of tobacco was a sin, so he came to the baptismal service to have that sin remitted because repented of. When I was ready to baptize him and he was standing in the water, he asked me to wait, and at the same time he took his tobacco and his pipes out of his pockets, and cast them into the river; then said now I am ready, and he was baptized.

Some time later one of his arms became paralyzed, and became useless. He requested administration, and his arm at once began to grow strong, and continued gaining strength rapidly till strong again. Some time later he met with some trouble which caused him to be separated from the church. A few years later I had a debate in Fremont, near where he was then living, with Elder J. A. Seaton, of the Christian or Disciples Church. During the debate the question of the spiritual gifts was brought into the debate, and treated with unchristian methods, even to making sport of such claims for the present. In my reply I brought several who had been blessed with the gift of healing in to testify, and among others Brother Thomas consented to stand and testify to the healing of his arm when afflicted with paralysis, although at this time he was associated with the Salvation Army. His wife also testified to her knowledge of this healing. His testimony was quite a surprise to several who knew him, and knew that he was not then a member of the church, but he was willing to testify to the truth even if he had been severed from the church.

During one of our cottage meetings held in Fremont about this time an incident transpired worthy of note. We had assembled at the home of one of the Saints for service and the service had begun, when the son of our host was seized by an evil power, which he said was upon him trying to crush the life out of him, and he could neither move nor speak, but a groan gave notice that something was wrong. As soon as I heard the groaning I discerned what was the trouble. I requested the audience to remain in their seats while the branch president and I administered to the boy. We administered to him, and rebuked the evil spirit, and spoke to the boy to arise, and he did, and I had him follow me into the room where most of the Saints were assembled. He was freed from this power, and I never knew of his being troubled in this way any more, and I knew him for several years afterwards. He was a boy about seventeen to nineteen years of age, and of large stature.

The Conversion of a Fine Family

At this time James Huff was judge of the court of Fremont and took the position that he was an infidel; and he was to the sectarian religions, but he was hospitable towards the ministry of the church, and took delight in entertaining them, and in encouraging his children to be blessed and baptized. He also took a delight in inviting other ministers into his office and arguing with them, and taking our views as a church to meet their arguments. His wife was a member, and he gave her every encouragement in her faith, and attended with her many of the services of the church. At one time he invited me to visit him at the office, when he had arranged for the president of the Free-Thought Society of Nebraska to be there. When I came into the office Mr. Huff introduced me as a minister of the Latter Day Saints, and thus began a conversation on religion. This man took the same position regarding Bible teachings as he had with other ministers, to some of which I agreed, and to others I gave our explanation, which he said was different from any minister with which he had conversed, and expressed surprise, that he was not able to controvert the position we took. He excused himself giving as his reason, as he was an attorney of the city, that he had business that he must attend to. He was much impressed with our views, and Mr. Huff was pleased to see the results of this conversation. This man, like many others, did not object so much to what the Bible really taught as the interpretations given by the various ministers who professed to be teachers of its contents. And when he referred to some quotations which had been mistranslated, and I gave the correct translation as it appeared in the Holy Scriptures, he said, he had no objection to such teachings. These experiences had the effect of leading Mr. Huff to believe in the work of God.

An event which occurred soon after this shows the tendency of his faith in God. His oldest daughter, May, was desirous of being baptized with her aunt, Miss Amelia P. Bradley. At this time the ice was about one and a half feet thick on the water where we were to baptize, and the place of baptism was about one mile and a half from the home of Brother Huff. His daughter was ill at the time, and the mother thought that she should wait until later. The daughter wished to be baptized then. Her father took the position that if baptism was of God, that he would protect all those who were to be baptized. This difference resulted in their calling me to the home for counsel. I decided that the girl should be baptized as was her urgent desire, believing that God would protect her, as Mr. Huff had argued. Preparations for the baptism were made, and the mother, to take all precautions that she thought necessary that she should, took some new red flannel and wrapped around her body under the clothing she had put on for baptism. She with her aunt was baptized, then with a heavy comfort wrapped around their clothing they rode this mile and a half in a cold winter's wind. As soon as I had changed my clothing I was called to the home of Mr. Huff, as he wished to see me. When I entered the house, he called my attention to a red piece of flannel hanging on the door which I had entered. He asked me to take it and tell him whether it was damp or dry. I had no idea what he had in mind. I did as he requested. He said that his daughter had worn this under her clothing when she was baptized and then the comfort pressed the wet clothing against it, and he wanted to know how it was possible that it was dry. I answered that the Lord had protected the girl in the exercise of her faith in being baptized; thus showing that it was a duty that all owed to God, and that the faith he had expressed previous to her baptism was confirmed to him, thus making it more obligatory on him to obey. This was indeed a miracle. He said nothing. But he did obey in time, and became a faithful member and servant of the Lord for years afterwards, even to his death.

During September, I believe on the ninth, I baptized the wife of Daniel Jones, who was seriously afflicted at the time. The physicians had said her affliction was incurable. After baptism she was administered to for her affliction and healed. They later moved to Lamoni, where they resided for several years, and lived for many years after this.

An Experience at General Conference

During this same month the semiannual conference was held at Lamoni. I attended and was assigned to lodge with the family of President Joseph Smith. Going there, I traveled part of the way with Elder James Badham, and we entered into conversation. Brother Badham spoke of never having preached at the conference, and mentioned a dread of doing so, and feared that he might be called upon to preach at this conference. I replied that because there were so many more able ministers than myself at the conferences I did not fear that I should be asked. The conference had assembled for the evening service before we arrived, so that we did not have the privilege of seeing many of the brethren before the meeting. President Joseph Smith was on the platform, and saw us enter the assembly, but neither of us had the privilege of speaking to him.

At the close of the service announcements were made and Brother James Badham was appointed to speak the next day. I think that, at the morning meal, I concluded I would let Brother Joseph know what a surprise he must have had in store for Brother Badham. I related to those at the table our conversation had while coming to conference the previous day, and the incident pleased those present. But what followed pleased all, but surprised me more than what I had related. As soon as I had concluded, Brother Joseph looked across the table, and said, "Brother Mintun, did you ever speak at any of the conferences?" I told him I had not; I did not anticipate what would follow. He at once announced at the table to me, "Then, Brother Mintun, you will be the speaker this evening." I made several excuses that I thought were good, but they were not good enough, so it was decided that I should preach, and I delivered my first sermon at a general conference. It may be of interest to some to inform them of the conditions made for holding the conference at that time. The auditorium was in the open with limbs thrown over a frame work to keep out the sun, and planks laid for seats, without any backs. The meetings were inspiring to me, even the sermon I was called upon to preach, for God blessed me by his Spirit in delivering the word, and gave me strength of voice to deliver it.

An Engagement in Debate

After the district conference held at Omaha, which I attended, and continued preaching services until January 11, 1883, I made a brief call at Blair to see the family of Brother W. T. Hicks, who were in very poor health. I then returned to Fremont, where the Seventh-Day Adventists were holding a state convention, and visiting among the people, and had confused some of our members who had not been long in the church, concerning the Sabbath question. The evening that I arrived in Fremont, I, with Brother G. M. L. Whitman, attended their services. At the close of the service, during which were presented some good thoughts, I was asked by some earnest listeners what I thought of the service. I answered that some good thought had been presented. They asked definitely what was presented that I did not agree with. I was telling them some of the thoughts that I was not in agreement with, when Brother Whitman and one of the elders of the Adventists were in consultation to formulate propositions for debate, without my knowledge of it. After we started for home he showed me the proposition, and said that he had promised that we would give them our answer concerning the proposition and debate on the next day. We did so, favoring the form of the proposition, and setting the time to begin, and agreeing upon proper rules. In three days we were to begin the debate, expecting by that time that Brother E. C. Brand would be with me. The time for the first session came, but Brother Brand not arriving, Brother Whitman acted as my moderator, and a Mr. Nicolas as chairman. The chart containing the Ten Commandments, as they generally use it, and a chart containing pictures of the visions of Daniel and Revelations was also hanging on the walls, the debate being held in the Adventists' Church build. The proposition was, "The Seventh Day is the Sabbath of the Lord, and Binding upon Christians at the present day." My opponent was the president of the Nebraska conference, Elder A. J. Cudney, and a very pleasant man to debate with. He expressed no bitter prejudice, and made no unkind charges, but presented his side of the question, making an effort to answer my arguments fairly in general. When I challenged him to produce one place where any of the Apostles, or Christ Jesus, had given instruction that the seventh day should be observed, as found recorded in the New Testament, he quoted from Acts 26:22, as follows: "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say," and there he stopped, where there is no pause of any kind, not even a comma, and made the argument that since Paul did not say anything except what the prophets and Moses did say, therefore he must have taught everywhere that the seventh day was the Sabbath, for they all taught this. My reply was that my Bible did not have the quotation as it was read, and it was not read as it appears there, and the argument was based upon false premises according to the reading in my Bible, and asked him whether in his Bible there was a pause after the word "say," and if not why he stopped there instead of reading till there was a pause, or period. I then read it as it was in my Bible, by adding after the word say "should" come: as it appears in the same verse, then followed by reading the next verse to show what Paul had reference to as that which "should come," as the prophets and Moses had said, which reads:

"That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles." Then I said I would like to have my opponent show the audience in what way he by this Scripture taught that the seventh day was the Sabbath. To this he made no answer during the debate. After the last session of the debate, Mr. Cudney was greeting some of the Saints that had previous to the debate been somewhat confused concerning the ques-

Men will continue to make mistakes even under the laws of Community Stewardship. However, to avoid them as much as possible, men will need to count the cost of what they do. There must be a motive for every job. Again, many men with good intentions are swept from their feet by enthusiasm or lack of experience. Ideas that to the individual may seem important are in reality useless as far as the community is concerned. The group is building a tower of ability in each individual. Without unity no goal could ever be reached. A community may exist, but without a goal its efforts would run in an unprogressive circle; nothing would ever come of it and soon degeneration would result.

It is queer to note that mankind, in the face of desired ease and luxury, is really content when hard tion debated, among others was Sister Huff, the wife of Brother James Huff, of whom he asked, "Well, what do you think about the Sabbath question now?" She said, without hesitation, so that it was heard all throughout the church building, "If I was a Latter Day Saint before the debate, I am ten times more of a Latter Day Saint now." This was followed by this statement as publicly made by Mr. Cudney, "Well, we have gained nothing by this debate." However, there was a friendly feeling continued between the members of both churches, and Brother Brand and I continued to hold meetings, with the elders of the Adventist church, they taking one night and we the next for several nights; they to place questions in the question box for us to answer when we occupied, and we to put questions in for them to answer. Some of the Adventists were more favorable towards our faith, and a few obeyed the gospel afterwards.

at work. That probably answers many questions regarding man's lust for money in present-day economics. He is willing to work, but he wants something to work for; and since he has been taught from childhood the old traditional belief that money is power and a goal worth striving for, it is no wonder that he has 'stumbled. I venture to say when men have fully realized the possibilities of right relationship one with another, with God at the head, they will with even greater zest strive to attain the highest goal. (Isaiah 26: 9.)

Man in himself is not evil but he has to learn; and in learning all men make mistakes. And the reason that so many fall by the wayside in life is that they lack unity. This brings us back again to our topic, "On the Watch Tower." Let us look out and view suffering humanity as they struggle blindly on in the earth below. (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 6.)

It will be well to keep in mind the dream Daniel interpreted for Nebuchadnezzar, as recorded in the second chapter of the book of Daniel. His interpretation of this dream has a deeper significance than is at first apparent. This is due to a lack of observation of history. It must be remembered, God showed Daniel the interpretation which points out clearly that Daniel was not depending on his own wisdom or experience, for sufficient history had not at that time been made. As an illustration: A man can not appreciate how tall he is except he may compare his size with some standard or average. This holds true in reasoning with Daniel's interpretation as will be shown.

The interpretation which is correct but not completely understood starts with Daniel 2: 37, and continues to verse 45 of the same chapter:

"Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: for as much as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure."

The common opinion is that the transition of power from one government to another up to the time the stone smashes the image standing intact, as at present, with many governments in existence. But what is meant when Daniel says, "And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken"? and he was speaking of the ten kingdoms.

Could it mean, if I may offer an opinion, that economics, up until the time of the rise of the ten kingdoms at Rome's fall, was purely a governmental issue but that within due time following this drastic change of state power, economics gradually fell into the hands of a minority which represented the well known "Feudalistic State."

Daniel MacGregor, in his book, A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, concludes his proof of scriptural interpretation of this image being completed in 1830 A. D. by stating, "Now for the kingdom of God, for 'in the days of these kings the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom.' Reader, that kingdom was set up. It was organized on the sixth day of April, 1830, about one month after the completion of the image, when the London Protocol of Great Powers officially recognized the independence of Greece. (Heilprin's Historical Reference Book, page 138.) It was the church of Jesus Christ, composed of Latter Day Saints."

Let us imagine a picture of economics separating itself from government. The discovery of America, the Revolution and setting up of the first real democratic government in the year 1776 A. D. which was the reflection of the final great government of God, did much to strike a finishing blow to this great image of kingdoms. But neither the beginning of democracy, which marks this date, nor the restoration of the church in 1830 A. D., delivered the blow that is spoken of as the hurling of a great stone. (Daniel 2: 34.) True, democracy began to spread, but democracy was thought of long before 1776.

"Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence," says the Encyclopedia Britannica (Page 183, volume 7, fourteenth edition) "was saturated with the doctrines of the philosophers and the most thorough-going democrat of the land when he came to this country." And Joseph Smith, in 1830, founded a God-fearing people that soon were to be torn to pieces by the very ones claiming to stand for democracy. The hurling of the great stone was not yet.

But for some inconceivable reason Daniel, in his twelfth chapter, verse four, was told to "shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end," which end would come, says the Angel, when "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand. And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate [church] set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." (Verses 10 and 11.) The very year the church of Jesus Christ was reorganized in 1860 A. D., after having been torn to pieces, and also the time of the Civil War in the land of democracy. Did the great stone fall on the image of kingdoms then? No. Only democracy spread more, the abominable church on seven hills prospered, and "by one of those inconsistencies that are not infrequent in history," says Brand Whitlock (formerly United States Minister to Belgium) speaking of the Civil War, "this new democracy—like the old democracy in Greece—became the party of the slave-holding oligarchy of the South, but the Civil War abolished slavery, and the nation conferred upon four million Negroes, ignorant and unequipped for citizenship, all the civil rights legally enjoyed by white men. The destruction of the old aristocracy of planters cleared the way for business enterprise. The age of the machine had dawned, the industrial revolution had begun. The wage-slave succeeded the chattel slave; but with enlightenment labor was growing in solidarity and consciousness of its power. Trade unionism arose, and the conflict between capital and labor emerged. Politics began to feel the impact of economics. Every man in the land had a vote, but the masses had an uneasy feeling that they did not rule; somehow by delegations of the taxing-power they could not understand, the economic stratification of society was still preserved. Demos, depending on representative government, began to suspect that the government was not representing it. Demands arose for a more direct democracy—primary laws, the initiative, referendum and recall, and other 'tools of democracy.'"

Finally it dawned that democracy was more in theory than practice, and economics succeeded then in challenging the government of democracy for supremacy. Like cold steel the distance rumbled with the twelfth verse, twelfth chapter of Daniel: "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days," the year 1905 A. D. Like the rushing of wind everyone cries, "What happened then?"

Communism, the greatest terror to capitalists, boomed in the far-away distance. Russia had had its first warning of the coming of the Bolsheviks or Communism. In the year 1905 A. D., following the war with Japan, a revolution broke out in Russia, and in "February, 1906, there appeared two [instead of one] imperial ukases, by one of which a council of the Empire and by the other, a Douma, or popular house was created [which was the first step in the dethroning of the Czar]. Previous to this time certain fundamental laws had been issued by one imperial ukase but could be withdrawn or modified at the pleasure of the Czar. However, the Douma never acquired a position of influence and control, but survived until the revolution in 1917. As a result of the military disasters and scandals, including the betrayal of the army to the Germans, the Czar was deposed in March, 1917, and a republic proclaimed under a provisional government. A constituent assembly was to be chosen to determine a constitution, but before it could assemble the Bolshevik regime was inaugurated. Soldiers and Workmen's Councils were established in Petrograd and other places, and the radical Socialist element secured control of the machinery of the central government. Lenin, as president of the council, and Trotzky, as Foreign Minister, have been the controlling forces in what government there has been." (The State, by Woodrow Wilson, page 524.)

Communism, promising equality to all, was at hand. Like a great wave it now is sweeping the world, crushing before its growing power the kings of economic aristocracies. We stand and gasp. Are Russians blessed because they waited till 1905 A. D. for communism? No! Never! Communism or socialism, both are as deadly to Godly society as serpents. Could a man live with his heart taken out? Never. Neither can society, as a body, live without the organs which a democratic government provides for.

Communism affects not only economics but government. It is a conglomeration of every form of government and revolt. The home, as communism will dictate sooner or later, shall have group marriages, one great family table, public nurseries for children, etc. The great natural law of God, "For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath," (Matthew 13: 12) would be frustrated—killing initiative. Privacy and individual rights would be doomed. The home would be polluted. "For if such a movement attracts a few lofty spirits, whose philanthropic impulses are equalled by their intellectual culture," says Charles Franklin Thwing, author of The Family, etc., "it also draws those throngs which Horace Greeley characterized as 'the conceited, the crotchety, the selfish, the headstrong, the pugnacious, the unappreciated, the played-out, the idle, and the good-for-nothing generally; who, finding themselves utterly out of place and at a discount in the world as it is, rashly conclude that they are exactly fitted for the world as it ought to be.' (This passage is quoted in History of American Socialisms, pages 42, 43.) With such material, failure is inevitable. Even if dishonesty, jealousy, indolence, ignorance, and vice, can be eliminated, it is found that self-love and individual happiness are principles too strong to be exercised. The communism which has been based on religion has attained a condition more remote from failure than has that communism which has been either irreligious or materialistic. But if religion may serve to allay that selfishness which has contributed to the breakdown of communistic schemes in property, it can not usually be subsidized in the interest of communism in the family. That Christianity which has purified and elevated the family will not be constrained to stain and degrade domestic life."

Democracy therefore must stand. Democracy in the home means its actual appearance in the world. The home is the foundation of society. Democratic government rests on the individual in the sense that he has grown from childhood, out of the realm of home life, to form other homes. Democracy says this type of individual shall rule, whether man or woman. The old cry of man ruling woman because Eve tempted Adam, wherein God said, "and he shall rule over thee" (Genesis 3: 16), was done away with in Christ. For Christ came to free all from the bondage of sin—woman included. The sanctity of the home must be democratic for the rights of all are at stake. The majority rule through a popular chosen head or official. Government may rest on the individual but it is entirely dependent on the homes.

Summed up let us say then, democratic service is the reflection of the individual's will in operation through recognized channels, and should be found in all phases of life. It does not deprive anyone of his rights, it does not thwart initiative in some to coddle laziness in others. It opens the avenues of growth and progress in all who care to grow. In economics it hinders the few in cornering the markets. All may grow, all may live, and all may have a chance when democratic service is found in all phases of group life.

Democracy is the stone to be hurled at the "image" but it must replace the present movement of aristocracy in economics. For in a democratic government if the will of the people tends for miniature aristocracies in economics, the government itself reflects that will, and as a result aristocracy rules democracy and democratic service is thwarted. (Daniel 2: 43.)

As the devil and his abominable church, set on seven hills (Revelation 17), polluted the doctrine of Christ and his church in the dark ages, so is the devil trying to pollute the new form of economics found in the teachings of Christ by fostering the growth of communism. But communism, like all evil intents, will hang itself by its own mistakes in due time. Even now it has met its first fighting opponent. Fascism, snarling with bared fangs and dripping mouth, rises to crush and stall the evil onslaught of communism. From one extreme to the other Fascism rises. "Even orthodox liberals, Catholics and others supported Fascism, in which they saw the only hope for the salvation of the country from chaos. Many adhered to the movement for selfish reasons—landlords and manufacturers who simply regard it as a form of protection for the rights of property which the government allowed the seditious elements to violate with impunity, and others became Fascists out of a spirit of adventure, to secure positions for themselves or for other personal reasons. But the immense majority were inspired by genuine patriotism." (Luigi Villari, in The Fascist Experiment. Mr. Villari was on the Secretariat of the League of Nations, etc.) However, it is paving the way for democracy in economics. Kings and governments are helpless. Capitalists and their followers, including the abominable church, will build up their barriers to ward off the oncoming rush of Communism; wars will rage between them; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. (Luke 21: 26.)

"And there shall be silence in heaven for the space of half an hour." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27.) Then out of this black and miry mass will appear the Rock of Christ. Its rise will be a surprise to many. Steady and unflinching its progress will continue; white and sparkling its form will be. Kings shall come and look. (Isaiah 52: 15.) Even those who have a part in its progress will wonder and be amazed, for no one will ever be able to say, "See what I did."

tioned merely represent the two great opposite forces of evil at work today in the world.)

Added Note by the Author

Democracy and Its Price

Fascism versus communism, or imperialism versus socialism, are these to be preferred? Rich and poor; capitalism or labor, they all mean the same thing. Democracy stands out alone in sociology as the ideal government; community stewardship as its brother in economics. Present-day philosophers prophesy a single world-wide democratic government in the near future. This, as all latter day Israel knows, conforms with the reign of Christ during the millennium period.

"President Wilson has declared that the United States can never again be a neutral in a great [European] war. The world has become too closely knit together for us to pursue in the future the policy of isolation." (The State, by Woodrow Wilson, revised by Elliott, page 554.)

Aggression and conquest, the fear of all peace-loving people, was not done away with in government tactics with the banishment of the Kaiser, as all the Allied Powers had hoped, for we now look squarely into the face of a powerful Empire who eyes the world in similar contempt as did the German ruler in 1914. Mighty Imperialism still exists, all to our sorrow. Oh, weary humanity, were it not for the lusts of the flesh; if we could but recognize the virtue of Zion's ideal, how glorious and divine our lives could be.

Notes on the Seventeenth Chapter of Ezekiel

By J. W. A. Bailey

There are those who have interpreted the two eagles of this chapter to represent the coming of Lehi and Mulek to America. As I see it, the Bible interpretation is against this position. First, this is a prophecy concerning the captivity of the house of Judah, told in a riddle. The great eagle of verse three, represented a nation of great power from a distance. Lebanon, here referred to, was Jerusalem. (See verse 12 and Jeremiah 22: 6.) The highest branch of the cedar, was the highest authority of the royal line of Judah. The city of merchants in the land of traffic, was the city of Babylon.

The young twigs of verse four were the royal seed. The seed of the land spoken of in verse five, were the people of Judah that were taken into captivity. (See verse 13, and 2 Kings 24: 14.) Being planted in a fruitful field by great waters, was the placing of Judah in a rich and powerful nation, surrounded by other great nations (waters here mean nations, see Numbers 24: 7, Revelation 17: 15, Isaiah 18: 2). Surely, Judah was planted by great waters (nations) in the days of her captivity in Babylon—the Babylonians, the Medes and Persians. Setting it as a willow tree and it becoming a vine of low stature, shows that Judah had lost her former glory, and was brought down—humiliated. (See verse 14.) Its growing and putting forth branches and sprigs shows that even though it was abased, it flourished and was protected. Such men as Daniel, Ezra, Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, and others, came into favor, and even into high positions while in the Babylonian captivity; and finally under the direction of Cyrus and Darius, they returned and rebuilt the temple. (See Ezra 1: 1-3; 6:1-15.)

The first eagle represented the king of Babylon coming against Jerusalem, when he took the king of Judah and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valor, and the mighty of the land; and made Zedekiah king of Judah, and took an oath of him, which covenant Zedekiah broke. (See 2 Kings 24: 1-20; Ezekiel 17: 12-18.)

The second eagle spoken of in verse seven, was the king of Egypt. Notice that no reference is made of this eagle coming to Lebanon, only that the vine (Judah) bent towards him that it might be watered in the furrows of her plantation. Verse fifteen explains verse nine. In verse fifteen we see that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon by sending his ambassadors into Egypt to make an alliance with the king thereof: But the Lord said that Judah would not prosper. (See Ezekiel 17: 9, 15; Isaiah 30: 2, 7, 8; Jeremiah 32: 5, 27: 12-14; 37: 6-10.)

By reading 1 Kings 25: 7 and Jeremiah 39: 6, 7, we see that the king of Babylon came to Jerusalem and took Zedekiah, the last king of Judah, and slew his sons, and put out his eyes and carried him to Babylon. Zedekiah had a son named Mulek who was brought to America before this last deportation to Babylon. (See Helaman 2: 129; 3: 56, 57.) This must have been several years after Lehi left Jerusalem, for Zedekiah was only about fourteen years old when Lehi left.

By reading Jeremiah 41: 10; 43: 5-10, we see that the daughters of Zedekiah were not slain by the king of Babylon, but were permitted to go with Jeremiah the prophet, even to Tahpanhes, Egypt.

In Jeremiah the first chapter, we read that God called Jeremiah before he was born, to be a prophet unto the nations, and set him over the nations and kingdoms, to root out, to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant. (Jeremiah 1: 5, 10, 18.) A wonderful work for this great prophet to do!

In Ezekiel 21: 25-27, the Lord spoke of the king of Judah as a profane and wicked prince: He said, "Remove the diadem and take off the crown; for it shall not be the same; exalt him that is low and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." (See Ezekiel 17: 14.)

The above quotation plainly shows, that there would be a change in the kingdom of Judah, that it would be transferred from one line of the royal family to another; and that it would be overturned three times, and there it would remain until Christ should come, whose right it is to reign.

I believe the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and I appreciate the abundance of evidence that has been collected in support of its divinity; but I must frankly say that the seventeenth chapter of Ezekiel has never appealed to me, as having any connection with it.

Here are a few reasons why the twenty-second and twenty-third verses of the seventeenth chapter of Ezekiel can not be applied to the people of the Book of Mormon:

Notice that the Lord was to take of the highest branch of the high cedar and crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and plant it upon a high mountain, an eminent mountain in the height of Israel, and it was to bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar; and under it shall dwell the fowl of every wing.

Though Mulek was of the royal line of Judah, he never became a goodly cedar under whose branches the fowl of every wing dwelt, neither did he leave any royal line after him; and as to Lehi, he was not of the royal family, and neither he nor Mulek was planted on an eminent mountain of the height of Israel. From the reading of the text I understand that the nation in which this "tender twig" was planted, was an eminent nation composed of the seed of Israel. This could not refer to Lehi nor Mulek coming to America, for there was never an Israelite here before their coming. Neither of them ever became a goodly cedar under whose branches the fowl of every wing dwelt—no other people ever came under the protection of the Nephites or the Mulekites, but in time they themselves came under the protecting wing of their brother Ephraim, and under whose protection they remain unto this day—the American Government, which Government was established by Ephraimites.

I believe that this "tender twig" was of the royal seed of David, and by some means, divine or otherwise, it was planted in the "Isles afar off." (Jeremiah 31: 10.) It was done by a righteous man from the east to whom the Lord gave the nations before him, and made him ruler over kings. (See Isaiah 41: 103.) By reading Jeremiah 1: 5-10, we will see that this righteous man was Jeremiah, unto whom the Lord had given the nations, and kingdoms, with the power to pull down, to destroy, to build and to plant. From this we can see, that by the direction of God, Jeremiah planted this "tender twig" of the high cedar where it grew and became a goodly cedar, under whose branches the people of every nationality should dwell.

We should not lose sight of the promise that God made concerning the perpetuity of David's throne. God promised David that he should never want for a man to sit on the throne of the house of Israel. (Jeremiah 33: 17; 2 Samuel 7: 12-16.) By reading Psalm 89: 3, 4, 20-29, 35-37, we see that God promised to establish the seed of David for ever, and build up his throne unto all generations, that his hand should be in the sea, his firstborn higher than the kings of the earth, his seed should endure for ever, and his throne be as the sun and moon.

In Genesis 49: 10, the Lord promised that the "sceptre" shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come. This evidently has reference to the second coming of Christ, for it says, "Unto him shall the gathering of the people be," which did not take place at his first coming. (See Luke 13: 34; 24: 21; Acts 1: 6.)

After Zedekiah was taken to Babylon, the kingdom of David was lost to Palestine; and at the birth of Christ the Jews were under the Romans. Thus we must look for the kingdom of David in some other part of the world, if we believe in the promises of God concerning the perpetuity of his throne.

There seems to be sufficient evidence to prove that the kingdom of David is now in the British Isles, "The Isles afar off," which isles had been peopled by Israelites as early as 1000 B. C. The kingdom of Great Britain stands today as one of the greatest Israelite nations on the earth. It is the real head of the Ephraimite people, with the royal seed of Judah in their midst. Her king stands as the highest king of the earth (Psalm 89: 27), under whose dominion people of every nationality dwell. She is the God appointed protectorate of Judah, and of her blood (Ephraimites), the great American people are largely made up, which Government is the God appointed protectorate of the people of Manasseh. The American Government was built by the people of Ephraim, in honor of Manasseh, according to the prophecies; thus proving at every step that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin.

Facing the Kids

I always ask a new acquaintance if he has children, and I want to know where and how they are being educated, or, if they are married, how they are getting along.

So recently I met the president of a big city bank and without much persuasion he began to tell me about his boys.

They are so successful that people sometimes ask him if there is some secret in their bringing up. "There is no mystery about it," he says. "I just trust them."

He told me that when he was elected president of the bank he had a conference with the boys. He said: "I haven't reached this position without a lot of work, and to keep it is going to be just as hard as it was to get it. You boys can help me or hurt me a great deal.

"If you have the reputation of being honest and clean and industrious, that will reflect credit on me.

"If you are lazy and untruthful and drink and gamble, if the news spreads around town that I have sons who are no good, people will begin to think there must be something wrong with my management. They will say: 'If he can't handle his home successfully how do we know that he is competent to handle a bank?'"

One of the most interesting incidents in Lincoln Steffen's autobiography is his experience with a New York police inspector who had been a grafter. Steffens helped to expose him. The poor fellow turned state's evidence and was demoted to the rank of captain and sent to an outlying district. The rest of his life he was honest, becoming finally one of the most useful men in the whole department.

Steffens visited with him years afterward. He asked the captain if he was ever tempted to graft again.

The other regarded Steffens with amazement. "Say, you don't know what I've been through," he exclaimed. "You never had your kids sit silent at dinner, nudge one another on, and so pass the buck to the big boy you always kind of . . . wanted the respect of, and then had him swallow a lump and blurt out, 'I say, Pop, is it true, this stuff they're all saying? It's all lies, ain't it?' . . . And you ask me if I'd do it again?"

A major portion of human progress comes from kids trying to make their fathers proud of them, and fathers trying to make the kids think they are O. K.

Seattle, Washington

Sunday, January 17, Bremerton, Everett, Puyallup, and Tacoma Branches met for an all-day service with Seattle Branch. President Frederick M. Smith addressed us on the subject, "Church Finances," at both the morning and evening services. In the afternoon the priesthood were addressed by President Smith. He gave us a wonderfully intimate acquaintance with the financial problems of the church.

At the close of the evening service the following motion, moved by Brother Bacher and seconded by Brother Lasater, was presented: "We, the Saints of the Bremerton, Everett, Puyallup, Seattle and Tacoma Branches, extend to the First Presidency and the other general officers of the church, a vote of confidence in their integrity and ability to carry forward the directional and supervisory work of the church and that we, as members, pledge ourselves to do our utmost to release the church from financial bondage through the payments of our tithing, consecration of surplus, and free will offerings." The motion carried unanimously.

It is our understanding that all the above-named branches oversubscribed their November and December sacrifice quotas and that the little Bremerton Branch with a quota of $183 actually raised $591, and for the month of January had one of the sailor boys on the S. S. Colorado file his inventory and pay $120. This young man has set a wonderful example to the youth of the church.

Bremerton Branch is worthy particular note since its number is small (six families). The heads of virtually all families are employed in the Navy Yards, so this sacrifice came from a group of laboring people. Surely this type of devotion to the welfare of the church will not only meet her financial needs but will bring Zion.

Christmas Activities in Norway

Most of the readers of the Herald are no doubt aware that the Christmas season in Norway lasts for twenty days, beginning December twenty-four and closing January thirteen. This period is spent in various social activities such as visiting each other in the home, and having "fests" (social gatherings in churches and other organizations where a program is given, refreshments served and much time spent in marching around the Christmas tree and singing Christmas songs.) This year was no exception to the rule. It may be of interest to hear how the missionary and his family spent at least a part of these twenty days.

Baptisms in Oslo

Passing over Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, which for reasons beyond our control were spent mostly at home, we come to December twenty-six, when I had the privilege of baptizing three people into the church. Two of these were a young married couple, thirty years old, formerly members of the Utah Church. After making their acquaintance I visited them in their home and obtained permission to hold meetings there one night each week. After about two months of such meetings which were used mostly in presenting the differences in the two churches, this young couple were converted to our claims, and requested baptism. Not desiring to do anything contrary to the will of God, this young man prayed that if it was not God's will that he should unite with us, he would be hindered. In answer to this prayer he was given three spiritual dreams which proved to him beyond all question of doubt that the Reorganized Church is the one that is accepted and recognized of God, and that it was His will that they should unite with us.

On the afternoon of December 26, the ordinance was performed in a font which we had rented for the occasion from one of the other churches of the city. An impressive worship program and baptismal ceremony was carried out which added sacredness to the occasion. The laying on of hands was had immediately after the baptism.

That evening the Saints gathered in the home of one of our families where a pleasant evening was spent. We ate supper together, after which a spiritual meeting was enjoyed there being many interesting testimonies.

Fest in Oslo

The next evening, December 27, a successful fest was held in our rented hall in the city. It began at five o'clock and lasted for four hours. A program consisting of singing, music, readings, devotional period, and a sermon was enjoyed. Refreshments were served and much time was spent in marching around the Christmas tree. Over eighty people were present.

Watch Party at Bøn

On New Year's Eve, my family and I went to Bøn where a watch party had been arranged for that evening. It began at nine thirty and closed about twelve thirty. A crowd was present and a social good time was enjoyed. Refreshments were served. A sermon by the writer and several vocal as well as instrumental solos by Sister Ruch contributed to the evening's program. The last fifteen minutes of the old year were spent in attempting to come as close to God as possible in the spirit of worship. A lighted cross bearing the date, 1931, had been on the wall before the audience during the evening. Just as the old year was dying during a period of silent prayer, while the clock was striking twelve and quiet music was heard from the organ, the cross of 1931 was lowered and a lighted star of hope was raised bearing the date 1932. During this period the electric lights were extinguished and the room was dimly lighted by candles. A little girl clothed in white came in and at the proper time read an appropriate poem, after which she sang the first verse of "Nearer My God to Thee." The audience sang the remaining verses. Thus we entered the new year with a feeling that we were near God and had a desire in our hearts to be even nearer.

Old Folks' Reception at Bøn

It has been the custom of our people at Bøn for several years, to hold a fest or reception during the Christmas season for the older people of the community. This was held this year on New Year's Day. About sixty people accepted invitations and gathered at the church at four o'clock, where for six hours they remained and enjoyed themselves. Refreshments were served twice during the evening. This reception is sponsored by the women's department, and they bring the food with them. There is always food in abundance. The Lord seems to bless us so there are always several baskets of fragments to gather up afterwards. Space forbids my going into detail about these fests. Suffice it is to say that food, both spiritual and temporal, is provided. It was my lot to make the main speech of the evening, and I enjoyed a good portion of the Spirit in trying to bring encouragement and cheer to those who have reached the sunset of life. Sister Ruch entertained with song and music. It seems that Norwegians never get too old to enjoy marching around the Christmas tree. The sound of Christmas carols seems to fill them with new life, and a part of the joyousness of youth is brought back to them. They are grateful for such occasions.

Sunday School Fest at Bøn

The next day, January 2, the annual Christmas tree fest was held for the Sunday school. Over one hundred were present and enjoyed themselves during the five hours the fest lasted. While those in old age enjoyed marching around the tree, it seems that the children never get enough of it and seemingly never get tired. For hours they engage in this, singing at the top of their voices, and then they beg for more. Refreshments were served once during the evening, and Santa Claus gave a treat to all children present. Sister Ruch also gave a small remembrance from us as a family to all of the children. We have spent several years with them in their Sunday school and have learned to love them. Since we have moved from there, we miss them and have every reason to believe that they miss us.

Then came Sunday, the first Sunday in the new year, with its regular meetings. A sacrament service was held in the afternoon and preaching in the evening. We were blessed at all of our services, but the outstanding service in regard to the presence of the Holy Spirit was the Sunday evening preaching service, at which it was my privilege to stand under the influence of the Spirit and bring much admonition and advice to the Saints and friends who had gathered.

Women's Meeting in Oslo

We as a family, returned to Oslo on Monday, in order that we might prepare for the regular women's meeting that was to be held in our home on Tuesday, January 5. Between twenty and twenty-five assembled and an unusually good meeting was had and special Christmas refreshments were served. While the Norwegian people believe in serving refreshments as often as possible, the spiritual phase of the services is not forgotten.

On the whole, we can say that the work in Norway is moving forward. We feel encouraged. We raised more than our quota during the sacrifice period. And we believe we can discern an added spiritual impetus as a result thereof. Pray for us. Sister Ruch and I are the lone missionaries for the three Scandinavian countries. Our responsibility is great. We need the help of God giving us wisdom, inspiration and direction. May it come, not only to us, but to the entire church, is my prayer.

V. D. RUCH.

Manchester, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford

We are pleased to report to the Herald our annual "tea party," held on New Year's Day. It was a good pleasant gathering of bright happy faces, old and young. A gathering of optimists, it was a real tonic at the outset of the year. These guests were real "empire builders," and with such a backing, our nation must go forward towards a brighter day.

It is good to be able to report the complete recovery to health of our esteemed pastor, G. W. Leggott. May we take this opportunity of wishing all those who suffer, a blessing, that their needs may be met and a brighter year may be in store for them.

We seated about ninety adults and thirty children to tea. The program, after tea, was left in the hands of Messrs. A. Gent, H. Barrington, and J. Tapping. They included in their program one or two novel ideas.

The community singing with which they led off, went with a rollicking swing; Mrs. Maud Nelson rendered three songs, and played the piano for the community singing. Three little tots gave recitations, Doreen Gent, Olive Brian, and Evelyn Hurst. They were rewarded with a small gift. Then we had a little diversion—the oldest lady present was brought to the platform and presented a box of chocolates. She was

Mrs. Dauber, seventy-five years old, of Clayton. Mr. and Mrs. Barrington received a similar presentation for the longest married life; Mr. and Mrs. Mayne for the largest family to grow to manhood and womanhood.

Then there were splendid but brief speeches by T. Brien, Mr. Mayne, and W. H. Greenwood. Professor "X" took the guests into the land of the mystics with sleight of hand tricks. H. Barrington brought this program to an end by presenting a monologue, "The Caretaker."

The children were afterwards taken in hand and together with the youths and maidens (and some who, I am afraid, are getting on in married life, but who refuse to be counted out) enjoyed games and romping. So we heralded the new year full of life and energy and a great hope for the year before us.

Now we desire to wish you and the staff, a Very Happy and Prosperous New Year and a greater circulation to your paper.

From the pastor, G. W. Leggott, and all the members of the Gospel Hall.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

The annual business meeting was held December 2, and the following officers were elected: Pastor, Elder H. E. Ratcliffe; branch clerk and treasurer, Courtney Rotzien; church school director, H. E. Ratcliffe; chorister, Sister H. E. Ratcliffe; adult supervisor, Sister R. T. Walker; young people's supervisor, Sister Fern Shackow; children's supervisor, Sister J. Henneman. We feel that under the supervision of these officers and with the cooperation of the Saints, the branch will move forward. It was voted to use the envelope system in raising the branch budget.

The Christmas program and tree were enjoyed the Sunday morning before Christmas during the church school hour. The children were willing to sacrifice Christmas treats this year, and the money was used for the benefit of the general church.

Elder George Day, of Bemidji, was a welcome visitor December 20. His sermon was encouraging.

Sister J. F. Rotzien was called to Independence, Missouri, December 16, by the serious illness of her father, Elder Lurett Whiting, who passed away December 24.

The ladies' aid have about completed their study course on "Religion in the Home," in which they have gained much useful knowledge.

The adults will take up the study of church history on Sunday evening. The young people have been provided a lecture course on the financial law of the church, to be delivered by the pastor. They will now take up a study, "The Elements of Stewardship."

Elder Thomas Leitch has visited Saints in Straubsville, North Dakota, encouraging them in the work.

Funds from the ladies' aid pie social December 18, were used for branch expenses.

Elder H. E. Ratcliffe officiated at the funeral of John Walker December 2, from the Hanson Funeral Home. His text was, "Let not your heart be troubled: . . . in my Father's house are many mansions."

The adult group surprised Brother and Sister Lewis Spillman at West Fargo the evening of December 15. Refreshments and a social time were enjoyed.

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe has of late delivered some instructive sermons. Some of his subjects have been: "If You Owe a Debt to God, Pay It Now"; "The Church Is the Bride of Christ and Must Be Ready at His Coming"; "The Work Must Go On as We Have Put Our Hands to the Plow," and "Many Are Called But Few Are Chosen."

Deacon Courtney Rotzien and Priest Jerome Stowell have also given interesting talks. We are glad to see these young men of the priesthood trying to magnify their calling.

In this time of crisis in the church, may we live faithful, keep God's commandments as never before, and try to remember the slogan for the year suggested by President F. M. Smith to "Hear no evil. See no evil. Speak no evil." Let us join with others in saying, "To your knees, O Israel, for God has said, 'Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive.'"

Oshoto, Wyoming

The branch business meeting was held December 27 at Little Missouri Schoolhouse, for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year. Those elected will serve only until next October when the branch and Sunday school will hold a united business meeting, another step in the church plan as we understand it. All officers were retained as elected two years ago when Apostle J. F. Curtis organized us into a branch, except, due to the removal of Sister Clara McElroy to Lamoni, Sister Hartshorn, sr., was made supervisor of adults and Audrey Stubbart, chorister and branch reporter.

We had a very profitable day on the Sunday preceding Christmas, Sunday school, Christmas program, tree and treat in the forenoon, basket dinner at noon, and business meeting in the afternoon. It was probably the last time this winter that we shall see so many faces, for the roads have become almost impassible.

Brother Fred Cousins has given the Saints some talks on the financial condition of the church which cause us to wish for more of this world's goods in order to help this wondrous work along. But being in the drouth area, we feel thankful to be able to help even a mite.

One of the events of the near-Christmas season was the marriage of one of our young couples, James Lisle Gray and Lena Nitcy. We wish them all success.

Central Michigan District Is Alert to Church Needs

Bay City, Michigan.—Circumstances favored a complete surprise for Brother E. S. White who recently celebrated another birthday. He was busily helping in the preparations for an eventful Friday evening when the Bentley Orchestra was to entertain the Bay City young people. A special program and refreshments of ice cream and cake were planned, then the women, knowing of Brother White's birthday, prepared a real banquet. They brought cakes covered with candles. And to make the evening more pleasant Elder B. H. Doty, a splendid entertainer, singer, and speaker, happened into town and played with the orchestra. After the evening's talk by Brother Jones, the pastor announced the special object of the entertainment, to honor one who has grown old gracefully in our midst. Brother White feelingly responded to the surprise. The orchestra did well and was invited to return.

Our social functions are too few. We do not appreciate each other as we should because we do not visit and mingle enough, play together, pray together, and sing together as we did in days now gone.

A happy group met at the home of Brother and Sister Spencer, near Standish, Michigan, on a recent Sunday and spent a day of worship. Members came from Bay City, West Branch, and Bentley to worship with these isolated Saints. The Sunday school from Moore's Junction, came in a body and conducted its session at the Spencer home. Brother Matt Umphrey preached. Dinner was eaten together, and a splendid prayer meeting convened at one thirty, followed by a sermon by the writer, then one by Brother Priddy, and Brother Umphrey again at night. West Branch gets the next meeting.

We hear good reports for the winter from over the district, and are encouraged. This branch went over the top for the Thanksgiving and Christmas drive, and I feel sure it will this year and the years to come until the debt of the church is paid, and we launch a real missionary drive to carry the gospel to the nations. We regret exceedingly that this important work has to be impeded by lack of means to carry it on.

Brother White and the writer were in a wreck January 2. A sixteen-year-old boy driving very fast, smashed us broadside. The collision cost the insurance company one hundred and fifty dollars to repair Brother White's car, and the other car was sold for fifty dollars, as the owner did not have the money to have it repaired. We were fortunate to escape alive. Each of us suffered fractured ribs and bruises.

Apostle D. T. Williams preached a fine sermon here a few days ago on his circuit over the field, presenting his series on the first principles. He urges the priesthood to get busy. President F. M. Smith also urged this on his trip through this region, teaching that where the priesthood is united, the branch is united and the work goes on in harmony and peace; but where a priesthood is divided the branch is divided. The harvest is great and the laborers are few. Who will do the reaping? You and I? Or will the sheaves lie ungathered?

HUBERT CASE.

Davidson, Oklahoma

The communion service, presided over by the pastor on the first Sunday of the year, was very impressive, and the congregation spent a profitable hour of worship. The rostrum of the church was beautiful with its background of snow white decorated with evergreen and the glittering letters, "A Happy New Year." There were present Saints from Erick, Oklahoma, and Wichita Falls and Rock Crossing, Texas.

On Christmas Eve the church was filled with people who came to see the pageant, "The Story Beautiful," and other appreciated numbers. These were effectively presented by young people and adults.

On Wednesday evening before the first Sunday of the new year, the Saints met for their usual midweek prayer meeting. Following this service the branch business was transacted. Brother Z. Z. Renfroe was elected pastor of the branch to fill the vacancy left by his father, B. F. Renfroe, who resigned because of failing health.

A round table discussion on "How We Can Better Our Church School" was held January 17, at six o'clock by the pastor for the supervisors, and teachers of the church school. To plan the year's program was the meeting's objective.

The women's department is moving forward with awakening activities. We have always had a fine group of women, but we believe they are now more active than ever before. A contest which has been on for two months, has created much interest among members and their friends in this department. The women are studying the Book of Mormon and as a visitor counts twenty-five points for the individual bringing her, this is an effective way of interesting a number of nonmember women in the study class. The fourth Wednesday of each month is social day of the department and many good programs are sponsored by Mrs. Troy Parker.

Brother Homer Qualls who barely escaped death when he fell eighteen feet into the city well, December 27, has been returned to his home after twenty days in the hospital at Frederick, Oklahoma. He received a bad scalp wound and a broken shoulder and arm which necessitated a special operation and many days in bed. We are happy that he has sufficiently recovered so as to make the move home.

May the new year bring to every Latter Day Saint the spirit of active and consecrated service. This branch faces the year with a forward outlook.

New Westminster, British Columbia

The Christmas season is always very busy in New Westminster Branch. This year was no exception.

During the month of November the Saints had the pleasure of meeting Apostle F. Henry Edwards, some of us for the first time. He was accompanied by District President Harold I. Velt. Brother Edwards spoke in Vancouver three times on Sunday, November 15, and Brother Velt came to New Westminster and spoke Sunday evening. On Monday evening Brother Edwards was in New Westminster and preached a wonderful sermon on the text: "I will build my church." Nearly all the people present had heard other sermons preached on this text, but so great emphasis did Brother Edwards place on each word of his text, that his discourse was distinctive. We look ahead to another sermon from this minister. He and Brother and Sister Richard Baldwin are to be in Vancouver the latter part of this month to hold institute meetings.

December 6 Brother Cook, of Vancouver, Washington, was here willingly bringing encouragement to the members.

December 9 the Laurel Club held a bazaar. The Blue Birds were responsible for the novelty stall, and all stalls proved successful.

December 23 was an important night for the children. The three divisions were in charge of the program, and Brother Cook played his violin. The Christmas tree delighted all.

President F. M. Smith arrived in Vancouver January 13, and held a union meeting for the British Columbia Saints. Very ably he placed before the members the present financial condition of the church. His talk made the members more determined to meet their obligations to the church.

Coldwater, Michigan

With commendable courage Coldwater Saints march to the gospel step in the unfolding events of latter days. They realize that they must overcome the conditions of the day through the help of Jesus Christ the Lord.

For the past season services have been regular and on high spiritual and educational plane. The departments have rallied under their leaders with splendid enthusiasm. The holidays were jubilant. A Christmas program and tree were staged for the juniors by Sister Scott, Maude Corless, Martha Fish, and Ethel Gallagher, and others. The primaries also acquitted themselves well.

The annual business meeting resulted in a reinstatement of the former official regime. Sister Gallagher was placed in charge of class work and Sister Blanch Peer was replaced at the secretary's table of the church school. We find a competent and brilliant leadership in the departments.

Services of this branch have been graced by the presence of many members from a distance, and the Spirit of the Lord has cheered the people. A variety of programs adopted and pointing to Zion's goals, with Jesus as the central thought, has widened the vision, strengthened the faith, and confirmed the hope of the members. The church papers and books furnish material for study and reflection.

Pulpits have been exchanged to good effect. The first Sunday in January Brother S. W. L. Scott was given charge of two services at Battle Creek with Brother McKnight as assistant. On a recent Sunday this pulpit was occupied in the morning by Brother David Young, who presides over Battle Creek Branch.

December 15 a group of Saints and friends gave our aged and faithful brother, H. J. Corless, a birthday surprise. For years he has been an active priest in the branch. He has reached the seventy-fifth milestone on life's highway.

The city papers have been very liberal, seeking for and giving publicity to our programs and church items.

Parsons, Kansas

Elder Lee Quick recently delivered some splendid sermons to the Saints here. We were most happy to have his help.

Though we are few in number, we are striving to do our bit both spiritually and financially. Our greatest desire is to help build up Zion and to live so that God will be pleased to bless his people.

We have adopted the church school plan of conducting our services and think it an improvement. The women's department is busy, having joined the Patroness Society, and their aim is to have many useful articles completed for the Sanitarium by spring.

At Christmas we made up almost two baskets of food which were delivered on Christmas Eve to a widow and three small children, besides other individual baskets and toys which were given to the needy and shut-ins.

Sault Sainte Marie Branch

Owen Sound District

No doubt some of the Saints will enjoy hearing from our branch, that we are still active and are making a little progress. Despite the dull times we are keeping our own financially as well as spiritually. A greater unity is manifested among the Saints, each one trying to do his part to help in the program of the church. This congregation is increasing, especially the church school in which we are handicapped by the lack of room.

The women's work group is trying its best to raise a fund to build a basement in the near future.

We had a successful Christmas concert, the program consisting of choruses, solos, recitations, drills and a two-act play, "City vs. Country," put on by the young people. The success of this entertainment is due to the cooperation and unflinching efforts of the teachers, organist, and chorister. The building was filled to the door and many had to stand. A silver collection was taken up to help defray expenses.

On January 17, a fine crowd attended the baptism of Harold Taylor which took place in the church, Elder G. A. Edwards officiating. Mr. Taylor is a fine young man and will be an asset to the church. He has been investigating for a long time and is the fruit of Brother Edwards's labor. Now, we are looking forward to the return of Brother H. A. Dayton, district missionary. We expect him here about the first week in February and we intend to hold a series of meetings.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

District President T. M. Carr visited this group and presided at the annual branch business meeting December 9, which resulted in the following officers being elected: President, Frank L. Shinn; vice president, M. H. Headley; secretary, J. W. Hughes; treasurer, N. L. Bernaur; bookkeeper, Harold Headley; young people's leader, D. R. Ross; pianist, Florence Headley; trustees: Leroy Eschrick, W. J. McDowell, and J. H. Lockard; Sunday school superintendent, T. A. Dershimier; assistant superintendent, J. W. Hughes; Sunday school secretary, Madge Shinn, and branch correspondent, Anne Shinn.

The new year started with a call meeting for all officers and committees, to discuss plans for the activities of the branch.

The first sacrament service of the year was well attended. The spirit of gladness was manifested. That spirit has been prevalent in all of the meetings thus far this year.

Sister Chalfont won a prize for the most faithful Sunday school attendance for the past year.

Brother and Sister James E. Bishop recently visited with us.

The young People's Cornerstone has made extensive plans for 1932. A program of topics for discussion has been arranged with a leader appointed for each meeting. Marked progress has been shown in this group, and the meetings are well attended. The success of the organization is largely due to the fine leadership of D. R. Ross whose enthusiastic work is an encouraging influence to the young people.

A surprise party was given recently by a number of Saints, for Brother and Sister John Tenos, in their new country home.

A farewell party for Brother and Sister L. F. P. Curry was held in the home of Brother and Sister Omohundro. Sisters Hughes, Raisbeck, and Tenos were the associate hostesses. Sister Curry was showered with handkerchiefs, and a military set was presented to Brother Curry. These members, who are making their new home in Dallas, Texas, have been active in Pittsburgh District, and will be greatly missed by the Saints here.

Recalls Happy Associations With Workers

Sutton-in-Ashfield, England.—It is a long time since this branch wrote to the Herald. The work here, however, in spite of many difficulties, financial and otherwise, is thriving. We believe that the adversities through which we have been compelled to pass, have brought us nearer God and to a realization that his arm is not shortened, but that he will ever be with his children.

As I sit in our little home tonight here in Old England, my heart goes out in gratitude for all the wonderful blessings and friends this church has brought me. As I sit beside the fire I recall many who have shared our home while they labored in England. Brother James Bishop where are you tonight? Do you remember those happy times we had, those little jaunts we took in Sherwood Forest, the old haunts of Robin Hood and his merry men? Do you remember how you tried to ride "Uncle" Simon's motor bike, and how it threw you? Do you recall the parting in our home when you had to go, the words you said about the missionary's life being made up of meetings and partings. And you, Danny Sorden, where are you? Do you remember how we used to sit around the fire on winter nights and the stories of colored people you used to read to us? And Brother Curtis, Brother Bullard, Brother D. T. Williams, and Brother and Sister Baldwin, we remember all of you. We have talked of the wonderful things God has done for us in our little home. Brother Paul M. Hanson, when he stayed with us last year, brought us great cheer.

Brother Hanson, you will be glad to know that Doreen, the little girl whom we adopted, has been a wonderful blessing to us. She walks and talks a little bit now. It was you who said she would bless us.

We in Sutton-in-Ashfield desire to work together for the cause we have so much at heart. Our prayers are for the Presidency in this time of crisis and for all other officers.

GEORGE V. WILLIS.

Buchanan, Michigan

A special business meeting was called by Branch President Mark Gross for Monday evening, January 25. This proved of much interest to the members, Brother Gross instructing us in parliamentary rules. Among the items of business transacted was the election of a publicity agent or rather, the sustaining of last year's agent, Sister Burgoyne. Sister Maxine Myers was elected superintendent of the cradle roll; Sisters Riley and Burgoyne were elected and given power to choose a third to compose the entertainment committee. One of the duties of this committee is to find places where visiting members from a distance may stay to enjoy the Sunday evening services. Sister Mirna Glover was chosen to help them.

Apostle D. T. Williams plans to be here the evening of February 6, to deliver one of his series of monthly lectures. We shall be glad to see him.

Other members have been added to the cradle roll. A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. George Virgil. A daughter, Dolores Grace, was born December 2, to Mr. and Mrs. Morley Myers, and a daughter, Nancy Jean, on January 16, to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Anderson.

Sister Viola Gross McCarthy has been suffering with neuralgia, but is much improved at present.

Brother George Seymour, recently ordained a priest, creditably occupied the pulpit Sunday morning, January 24. He gave many good thoughts. Also our young deacon, Steven Martin, presided at the prayer meeting January 13. We are proud of our young brothers.

Brentwood (Missouri) Branch

Marshall and Berry Avenues

Prayer meeting convened at nine o'clock in the morning, November 26, quite a number being present. On this morning Pastor C. J. Remington was able to be again in our midst. His family had been quarantined.

Not only this family but others have suffered from various diseases, and as a result they have not been able to attend services.

Several families have moved away, but others have moved in and there has been little change in the number of our membership.

A benefit two-act playlet was presented at the church the night of December 17. The proceeds went for the purchasing of candy for the church school.

On December 21 occurred the annual Christmas play. So many were in attendance that there was scarcely standing room.

This branch with the rest worked for the success of the two month period of sacrifice. One of our brothers donated the profits of his laundry for the two months. His immediate family did not accept their regular salary, so the sacrifice fund was swelled. May the church teach the law of tithing to the fullest extent and God bless the Saints.

Through contact with some of our colored neighbors, an opening was secured for Pastor Remington to preach to them. They have invited him to return.

Columbus, Ohio

First Branch, Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue

The past few weeks have been busy for Saints of First Branch. We had a fine visit with President Frederick M. Smith Saturday and Sunday, November 21 and 22. The subjects he discussed were instructive and helpful. We feel stronger spiritually and have a great desire to support the general church program.

The first Monday night in December we held annual business meeting, the following officers being elected: Branch president, C. W. Clark; first counselor, John Gabriel; second counselor, Paul Vale; Sunday school superintendent, William Lewis; superintendent of department of recreation and expression, Andran Lane; treasurer, Homer Owen; auditor, Herman Zieschang; branch clerk, Mildred Ferguson; musical director, Nathan Weate, and librarian, Margaret Crosier.

The Sunday school gave its annual play December 23 under the auspices of the dramatic club, directed by Harvey Carter. It was excellent.

Sunday night, December 27, the choir gave a cantata, "The World's Redeemer," directed by Nathan Weate. Many compliments were given the singers and director.

Elder Jacob Halb visited the Saints of this branch December 20, and preached in the evening.

Branch officers and heads of various departments are looking forward to greater and better ideas for 1932.

Wichita, Kansas

Water and Osie Streets

The 1931 conference of Southwestern Kansas District was held in Wichita on December 12 and 13. Apostle E. J. Gleazer presided jointly with the district president. Elder Arthur E. Stoff was reelected district president for the ensuing year. Practically all the other 1931 district officers were reelected, also. It was resolved to discontinue the branch at Rolla, Kansas.

Delegates elected to the 1932 General Conference are: A. E. Stoff, C. T. Pooler, Ira G. Whipple and Sister Minnie Barraclough, all of Wichita; and Sister Cochran, of Pratt, Kansas, and Brother George Vickery, of Winfield.

Brother Gleazer's excellent sermons were well received by the regular district congregation and the many visitors. His work is an inspiration to us, but there was much delivered on this visit for the guidance and direction of both the individuals and the district as a unit.

The branch chorister, Mrs. Esther Nelson, assisted by a chorus of twenty-seven voices, delighted a packed auditorium on the evening of December 20, with a beautiful rendition of the cantata, "Music of Bethlehem," by Holton. Everyone who has visited Wichita Branch since Mrs. Nelson has been our choir director knows that the leadership was excellent and that "beautiful rendition" is but a poor compliment for the artistry displayed. An arm bouquet of beautiful flowers was presented to Mrs. Nelson at the close of the cantata, by the members of the choir, the pastor making the presentation address.

During the holiday season two playlets were given here, one by the young people, under direction of Mrs. C. A. Balman, and the other by the Adults, under direction of Mrs. Catherine Slawson. Unusually large and appreciative audiences enjoyed these plays. In fact, a large number expressed pleasant surprise at the talent revealed by those participating in the plays. The discovering of this talent and directing it to the good of the branch has been a worth-while effort.

Wichita Branch is well pleased with the number and frequency of visits from out-of-town Saints and friends. Last month Elder E. B. Hull paid our pastor a visit while en route to his western Oklahoma field. It was a pleasure to witness something of the love these two men have for each other, a love that has grown from mutual respect for labors done in the Latter-day work. Brother Hull preached our Christmas sermon and gave an interesting talk on his experiences and observations while in the Hawaiian Islands.

A few of the other recent visitors here are: Elder and Sister Moorman, of Springfield, Missouri; Sister Rose Scruggs, of Hot Springs, Arkansas; Mr. and Sister D. M. Copeland, of Talmage, Kansas; Miss Alice Anson, of Independence, who is visiting with her parents, Elder and Sister A. C. Anson, and Brother and Sister Ammon Badder, and children, of Independence.

The annual Wichita branch business meeting was held on December 30, Brother A. E. Stoff being unanimously retained as president. Elders C. T. Pooler and A. C. Anson were re-appointed president's counselors. Brother Pooler was also chosen superintendent of Religious Education; Sister Minnie Barraclough, superintendent of the adult division; Sister Lena Curtis, superintendent of young people, and Miss Margaret Williams, superintendent of the children. Deacon J. R. Wolfe was chosen branch treasurer. Elder Ira G. Whipple was sustained as bishop's agent.

Hugh and Virgil Weaver, ages twelve and ten, respectively, sons of Brother and Sister G. C. Weaver, honored our church school during the year, 1931, with a perfect attendance record, and were rewarded with a copy of the Book of Mormon, with their names in gold on the cover. Perfection is a high goal, in any line of endeavor, and frequently attained becomes habit, then established character. May these boys attain perfection in life.

The women of the adult division meet once each month in the home of one of the sisters. Book reviews are given at each meeting after which a short program and social time are enjoyed. Such books as Red Bead, Christ of the Indian Road, Magnificent Obsession, have been reviewed.

Here is news! A daily paper has given considerable space to the expressions of a Latter Day Saint pastor. One of the leading local dailies, the Wichita Evening Eagle, usually carries in its Saturday edition a page devoted to local church activities for the following Sunday. In the issue of January 23, large space was given to an article by our pastor, A. E. Stoff, and his picture. We are grateful to the Eagle for its courtesy.

The quarterly branch business meeting, held on January 20, had an unusually large attendance. After the usual business had been disposed of, the question was brought up as to whether this branch should adopt the course of approving suppers, bazaars, plays, etc., for which an admission or per capita charge is made, as an added source of branch income.

The pastor stated his position as president of the branch, to be that our finances should be obtained in proper conformity with the law of stewardships; that finances should arise from tithing, offerings, surpluses, consecrations, and that the branch should obey God rather than copy after worldly ways.

Almost everyone present took part in the discussion, with the result that the pastor's position was adopted by an overwhelming majority, amounting in effect to an enthusiastic endorsement of his administrative policy here. Moreover, a spirit of friendliness prevailed throughout the meeting and afterwards to the extent that all present appeared well pleased with the decision reached on this question.

Graceland News

Addition to Graceland's Library

President Frederick M. Smith has recently donated two thousand volumes to the library. These books are from his own personal library and from the Ruth Lyman Smith Memorial library which has been previously located at Independence. They are greatly appreciated and will be of inestimable value to the classes in religion, history, sociology, economics, and philosophy. Some excellent references in the field of parentcraft and public speaking are also among the books received.

President Smith was the first Graceland graduate, and he has kept in close touch with the college from its beginning. We are grateful for this tangible evidence of his interest, and the student body and faculty join in thanking President Smith for this generous gift.

Looking Forward to General Conference

Preparations are already being made for a large group of Graceland's faculty and student body to attend the General Conference in Independence in April. President Briggs has announced that college will close Thursday, April 7, in time for students to catch the bus to Kansas City that evening. The vacation period will end Tuesday morning, April 12. Organizations here on the campus are preparing numbers for the special meeting to be held on Saturday evening, April 9, when present, past, and future Graceland students will get together. Plans are being made to perfect an alumni organization for Graceland's graduates at this time. Details regarding the exact time and place of this meeting will be announced later.

The Priesthood Roster

At a meeting of the young men of Graceland's student body who hold the priesthood, a number of interesting facts were observed. It was found that six out of the ten men on Graceland's faculty hold the priesthood. Of this number five are high priests and one an elder.

In its present student body Graceland has twenty young men who hold some official position in the church. The name, home branch, and office of each of these men will be of general interest to Herald readers.

Those holding the office of elder are: Dwight Davis, Seattle, Washington, and Noble Kelly, London, Ontario.

Numbered among the priests are Esmond Crown, Centralia, Washington; Ivan Dillee, Independence, Missouri; Colin Ferrett, Sydney, Australia; Neal Deaver, Joplin, Missouri; Walter Gerow, New Westminster, British Columbia; Floyd Holdren, Barberton, Ohio; Loren McDole, Seattle, Washington; Almer Sheehy, Independence, Missouri; Lynn Smith, Independence, Missouri; Paul Utneher, Antigo, Wisconsin.

There are two holding the office of teacher: Walter Johnson, Sydney, Australia, and Harold Leland, Plymouth, Massachusetts.

The following hold the office of deacon: Donald Chesworth, Fall River, Massachusetts; Leslie Kohlman, Houston, Texas; Pataha Samuella, Papiti, Tahiti; Albert Sanford, Nauvoo, Illinois; Arthur Wellman, Crosswell, Michigan, and Clifford Willod, New Westminster, British Columbia.

This fine group of men met to plan its work for the year. All expressed a desire to be active. The roll call showed that approximately twenty per cent of the men at Graceland this year hold the priesthood. Is it any wonder that the church should expect much in the way of service from this consecrated group of talented young men?

College Not Affected by Bank Closing

Friends of this institution will be glad to learn that the activities of Graceland College will not be materially affected by the closing of the State Savings Bank in Lamoni. The needs of the college have been so carefully planned and the cost of operation so well budgeted and distributed over a period of time that the closing of the bank at this time finds the college but little involved.

Within three days after the closing, the State Banking Department at Des Moines had arranged adequate banking facilities. In spite of the closing of this bank the financial interests of the community are being well provided for.

A Spiritual Inventory

The students of Graceland talk about "outstanding services of the year." They mean fellowship services that are made rich by expressions of spiritual living, meetings that will always stand out in their memories as invaluable experiences. Last Wednesday evening the college chapel was the scene of just such a service.

As E. E. Closson gave the theme for the evening, he told of an orderly machine shop in which he had helped make an inventory of all the machinery. He examined valuable tools that were carefully wrapped. He checked machinery that needed repair. He listed old worn-out parts and estimated the number of slugs on the scrap-heap. He examined shafts to see that they were running true. Everything had to be accounted for even if some things were not of enough value to be counted separately. The slugs were merely estimated, and yet they were of some use for they could be made over into parts for valuable machines.

Mr. Closson then suggested that we make an inventory of our spiritual life, to see if our spiritual machinery was in good order. One student told of a machine he had seen that smoothed rough, raw wood into symmetrical planks with a satiny finish. He said he wished to acquire a spiritual machine that would take his plain and homely thoughts, and make them into a beautiful outlook upon life. Another expressed the opinion that his machine could serve him much more efficiently if he would be more careful in keeping it polished by much service.

Many humbly confessed that they were slugs whose lives might need to be recast if they were to help in the general plan of the church. One expressed the thought that it takes many kinds of machinery to make up a good shop, and perhaps the Master Mechanic wants all kinds of good machines in his shop. The little burr that holds a wheel in place is just as indispensable as some large, expensive part. In making this spiritual inventory what do we find to be in need of the greatest repair?

The Graceland System Bars Loafing

After being at Graceland for a short time, one learns that this is the home of the thirty-six hour day and the eight-day week. About the second question the business manager asked me when I first arrived was, "Would you like to start that job in the morning?" As I had asked for work, I thought he might consider me ungrateful if I tried to postpone the inevitable.

Morning found me pushing a mop with enthusiasm. By continuing to push the mop, making arrangements for my class schedule, getting my trunk from the station, and learning the conventions of dormitory and commissary life, I succeeded in keeping busy. Some people will tell you that Lamoni is just another place where the sidewalks are taken in at precisely eight o'clock each night, but if they have ever been here they will have to admit that Graceland offered them no chance to loaf. Before coming here I had, at times, enjoyed the luxury of leisure; thus I regretted to see the termination of those old loafing days. The hours that had once been mine to use as I pleased became a part of a new system, the Graceland system. The old has given way to the new, and I have tried to take fate's decrees willingly. I am now working on the Graceland system and I find no time to loaf.

ARTHUR WELLMAN.

Genoa, Colorado

This branch is still very much alive though the Saints have of late been permitted to meet but seldom on account of bad weather and the territory which the branch includes.

Brother J. R. Sutton, branch president for many years, has given his best efforts to the work of the church. He has carried on extensive missionary efforts in eastern Colorado. He meets with the group in and around Genoa the first Sunday of the month, with the group at Seibert (another part of the branch) the second Sunday of each month, and with the group at Flat Top the third Sunday. Frequently, however, these appointments are broken, Brother Sutton being away in the district filling other appointments. At present he is laboring with the members at Eads, Lamar, and Wiley. A few weeks ago he was called to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Gale, at Seibert, also the funeral sermon of a brother at Kanorado, and at Glenn. The last funeral was that of a nonmember. Brother Sutton receives many such calls from nonmember friends.

Brother Sutton was recently called home by severe illness in his family. His son, Elmer, was very low with peritonitis. The doctors thought his case hopeless, but now they say: "It's perfectly marvelous." Elmer is gradually getting better. He is in a Denver hospital where Elder Glaude Smith and other Saints visit him daily.

When Brother Sutton is away, the rest of the priesthood do well looking after the work. Among these men are Page Bruch, Kelvin Gurwell, O. H. Self, C. W. Sutton, James Bruch, jr., and E. A. Elefson.

There is a steady though slow growth in numbers, and a wonderful feeling of peace and harmony prevails. We think a more united band of Saints would be hard to find. Our financial success has not been so great for the members are mostly farmers and we have had three severe drouths, this last year being worst of all and accompanied by a plague of grasshoppers. Some regions have not had rain since a year ago last August. This condition makes it difficult, in fact, impossible, for the members to meet their various quotas. The depression is hard enough to survive, as what farmers produce brings little, but when they do not produce enough to feed their stock, they have a problem. We trust the coming season will be more favorable.

Elder Glaude Smith, president of Eastern Colorado District, included us in a tour of the district last fall.

Since our last letter to the Herald Bessie Bruch was married to Edgar Nolan. They are making their home in Denver.

Sister Gladys Shippy was recently married to Bert Peterson. Mr. Peterson is a young farmer who lives near Genoa, and so the branch will not lose Sister Gladys.

Fanning, Kansas

Fanning Branch has a group of consecrated, loyal workers who are making a united effort to put the Lord's work first in their lives. This is not only true of the older Saints but also of many of the younger.

On Friday night, January 22, the young people's class assembled at the home of their teacher, Virgil Sheppard, for a business and social meeting. Class officers were elected and plans made to begin work on a three-act play, to be given sometime in the near future.

Branch officers have decided to set aside one Sunday morning church hour each month for a junior church service. The first service was held Sunday morning, January 24, with James A. Thomas as the speaker. Sister James A. Thomas told an interesting story to the children during the hour. The children who occupied the seats in the central section of the church, gave good attention to Brother and Sister Thomas during the services.

Evangelist Samuel Twombly visited with Atchison Saints Sunday, January 31, and preached at the eleven o'clock hour.

Pastor William Twombly has adopted the method of having the various members of the priesthood of the branch alternate in the preaching services. This has been quite successful in holding the attention of the congregation, as they are thus permitted to hear the gospel story from the various ministers.

Fanning Saints rejoiced in the speedy recovery of Brother Wiley, senior, who has been suffering severely from a large cancer on his forehead. Brother Wiley had been feeling badly for some time when he felt impressed to call for administration. He did this. His testimony is that at the conclusion of the administration he felt the power of intervention in which he believes the roots of the cancer were killed and all pain permanently removed. The cancer immediately began to slough out and the large sore is now nearly healed over. This is just another testimony that God is and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him.

Last Year in Crescent, Iowa

Brother G. J. Harding was again elected pastor of this group for 1932, and nearly all other officers were sustained at the business meeting the first of the year.

At a meeting January 20, at the home of Brother J. C. Adams, definite plans were laid for intensive work in the coming year. We are moving forward and the members are encouraged.

However it is not of this year we wish to write you, but of last. At the beginning of 1931 G. J. Harding was elected pastor with Dan Butler and David McIntosh as counselors; Everet Hemmingsen, clerk; Sister Arthur Benson, head of the women's department; Sister Lena Pratt, director of music; Hans Hemmingsen, branch treasurer; Harley Butler, superintendent of church school, and J. C. Adams, superintendent of the young people's study period which meets at seven o'clock on Sunday evening.

Under the direction of these officers the branch moved forward. Two series of missionary meetings were held by Elder L. G. Holloway, comforting and cheering the members and instructing nonmembers. Several were baptized. Two promising young men were ordained to the priesthood, Harley Butler and David McIntosh. And Brother George McKeown was called and ordained a deacon.

The church school and women's department did a good work. This branch also has a fine class of young people who are participating in activities and helping in the church school.

When the first financial drive in June was announced, the priesthood arranged for an intensive visiting campaign. In this most of the members, were visited and the needs of the church explained. A special meeting was set for the last Sunday in June, to which all were invited to bring their contributions. Brother Holloway preached a sermon on sacrifice. It was encouraging to note the response of the Saints to this call, even the little children searched their pockets for every penny.

In the November-December drive, another visiting campaign was planned, but continued rain and bad road conditions made this impossible. Nothing daunted, the pastor wrote letters to the members; and there was also the official call of the Presidency. These were mailed to each member, and Thanksgiving morning was set as the closing time for the November sacrifice. A special program was prepared and carried out the same way as before except that the speaker was Brother J. A. Hansen.

The sacrifice was continued through December, and by the close of the month the branch treasury had a substantial sum to turn over to the Bishop. One hundred dollars of this amount was turned over by the women's department. This the workers cleared from a bazaar held in the new garage of Mr. and Mrs. Seaton. The building was loaned for the occasion.

Independence

The Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, furnishes the music for the ten o'clock Sunday night service over KMBC on the last Sunday of each month. On January 31, the program consisted of selections by the entire orchestra; a violin solo of his own composition, "April Sunshine," by Gomer Watson who was accompanied by Harold Buseth; a cornet solo, "One Fleeting Hour," by Oscar Moorman, accompanied by Mrs. Thelma Countryman, and a quartet consisting of Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, Milford Nace, and Arlon Chapman, sang, "In the Hour of Trial." Elder A. B. Phillips was the speaker, his sermon theme being, "The Requirements of the Gospel."

Stone Church

"We are interested in causes and effects," was the simple statement with which Elder C. Ed. Miller opened his talk, "The Object of the Sacrament," at the Sunday morning communion service. "We are interested in the greatest cause which has engaged the attention of mankind, the cause in which Christ was interested. When properly applied this beautiful ordinance of the sacrament is a cause which produces marvelous effects. The Spirit of the Living God is the greatest cause in the world; it produces the greatest effects. Its fruits are love, joy, and peace. In the service of the sacrament we have opportunity to obtain this Spirit. The sacrament prayer pleads that we "may always have His Spirit." It is this Spirit which we need in preparation for the General Conference of the church which will assemble in April."

Always on sacrament Sunday the Stone Church is crowded with worshipers. They occupy the lower floor of the auditorium and fill the gallery. In the choir loft are seated the men of the priesthood. All unite in prayer and reverence before the emblems of the Last Supper. Hymns, scripture readings, special prayers, meditation and the sharing of the emblems hallow the communion service.

On last Sunday those officiating in the stand were Elders John F. Sheehy, T. A. Beck, C. Ed. Miller, G. G. Lewis, H. G. Barto, G. W. Eastwood, R. T. Cooper, and J. S. Kelley.

That we are living in the "perilous times" described by the Apostle Paul is the belief of President Elbert A. Smith who spoke to the Stone Church congregation Sunday night on "The Signs of the Times." The present-day spirit of unrest, uncertainty, and rebellion, war, disasters, calamities, famine, disease, poverty, and the appalling number of accidents—all these fit into Paul's picture of physical and spiritual peril. Daily prophecy is being fulfilled, and one word describes the world's condition—confusion. In times like these the promise of the Lord: "But my people will I preserve," is very comforting to those who faithfully serve him.

The musical background given the evening's sermon by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Evan A. Fry, was appreciated by the large congregation of Saints. Soloists were Edward Brackenbury, tenor, and Albert Brackenbury, bass. Elder D. O. Cato presided over the service, assisted by Elder H. O. Smith.

Second Church

The sacrament service Sunday morning was in charge of Pastor A. K. Dillee. There was good attendance, the church being completely filled. Brother and Sister Hugh Goold were welcome visitors at this service. Brother Goold was the first pastor of Second Church, holding the position eight years. Brother and Sister Frank Veenstra, who have just returned from their mission in Holland, were given hearty welcome. Sister Viola Totty, who has been quite ill since December, was able to be out at church for the first time since her illness.

Miss Rhoda Knight and Harvey Whiting were married Saturday evening at the home of Mr. Whiting's grandfather, Brother Arthur Whiting, who read the marriage service. The young couple will be at home at 427 West Linden.

Brother A. K. Dillee reports that the general attendance at second church has been steadily increasing in the last five years. The year 1931 had an actual increase of thirty-three hundred attendance over 1930. The month of January, 1932, had an attendance of eight hundred more than the corresponding month of 1930. The financial status of the branch is also improving. In 1930 the balance on hand was seventy-seven dollars; in 1931 the balance on hand was one hundred and seventy-seven dollars.

Brother Roy Settles who has charge of the young people, reports that he has been urging them to file their inventories with the church, and that at the present time more than forty-six per cent of those between the ages of twelve and thirty-six have made their financial statements.

A series of meetings will begin at Second Church Sunday, February 14, and continue throughout the week with the exception of Saturday evening. It will conclude on the evening of Sunday, February 21. Bishop A. Carmichael will be the speaker.

Walnut Park Church

The young people are working hard on their plays for the local contest, which is sponsored by the Young People's Council of L. D. S. Churches. The finals take place this week at the Stone Church. Walnut Park has much talent along this line, and we hope that it will be used for the up-building of God's kingdom.

The sacrament at eleven o'clock, February 7, carried with it a fine spirit. The theme, "Seeking First the Kingdom of God," which was given in the scripture reading, seems to be the thought and aim of the Saints at Walnut Park; many are striving for it. The infant son of Cornelius Victor Long and Thelma Willoughby Long was blessed at this service by Elders George F. Bullard and W. T. Gard.

The Auditorium Orchestra furnished the music for the final service of the day, under the direction of Brother Orlando Nace. The church was filled to its capacity, many to hear the orchestra and others to see another of Brother E. A. Smith's "Conversations," this one being the tragedy at Carthage. Many were made sad as they lived over again this tragedy, the death of our beloved Prophet.

Preceding this Brother Benjamin Bean gave an interesting sermon, leading up to the tragedy.

A new mothers' class has been organized. This occupies the Sunday school hour in the basement of the church, and has as its teacher Sister Lyle Weaver.

The Walnut Park Quilting Society, whose president is Sister W. B. Fallon, meets every Wednesday in the basement of the church. Last year they quilted nine quilts, several being sent to them from Texas, and a total of $117.04 was realized from the work. Sister Elmer Pennell and her Patroneses also meet with these ladies and are doing a good work, that of furnishing one of the rooms of the new hospital. They are working on their third quilt and on a number of other articles.

Walnut Park mourns the death of one of its much loved members, Sister William H. Christie, whose funeral was conducted from Walnut Park Church, February 7. She was seventy-four years old. Besides her husband and several relatives who survive her, there are a host of friends who will remember her for her faithfulness and the help that she has given this branch.

Spring Branch Church

A good prayer meeting began Sunday's activities at eight fifteen o'clock.

The church school session was in charge of the class taught by Velma Jones. Kenneth Davis offered the prayer.

A helpful sacrament service at eleven o'clock caused the members to appreciate anew the opportunities of their sainthood.

In the afternoon musicians of the district assembled at the church and organized an orchestra. The help of this group will add attractiveness to our services.

The program of the evening church school was given by the class of Brother Andes. It consisted of a story by Brother Fish, a solo by Jake Andes, and a humorous reading by Leland Belk.

Elder J. A. Bozarth was the evening speaker, his theme being, "The Fulfillment of Prophecies."

Betty Jane Smith, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Smith, was blessed under the hands of Elders Sam Andes and J. E. Cleveland.

Miss Agnes McKee, of Far West, who underwent a sinus operation at Research Hospital last week, is convalescing at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Andes. Her improvement is rapid and she expects soon to return to her work.

The young people's class went to Warrensburg, January 31, and presented the play, "The More Abundant Life." The class was much impressed by the friendly hospitality shown them by the branch.

Boy Scout Troop 222 entertained its committeemen February 5, with a rib barbecue at the home of Scoutmaster Leonard Roberts. The committeemen present were J. G. Nelson, Delbert McClain, and G. V. Bilquist.

Mrs. Dixon, the junior department supervisor, who was operated on several weeks ago, is at home and doing well.

Enoch Hill Church

"Our Heroes," the theme of the church school worship service Sunday morning, was carried out in a pleasing program, under the direction of Mrs. Iva Chrestensen of the women's department. Mrs. E. E. Kramer, Mrs. R. E. Whittitt, Mrs. George Street, and Mrs. Agnes Hartman, gave short talks on the various heroes of the church and country. A ladies' sextet sang, "Marching With the Heroes."

A large crowd attended the sacrament service and a profitable hour was spent. Elder E. E. Thomas gave the opening talk.

Elder J. S. Kelley selected as a theme for his evening sermon, "What Is Our Religion?" For a scripture reading he chose Matthew 16: 13.

Dahinda, Illinois

Dahinda Branch has embarked on another year's voyage, the faithful few on board the old ship of the church. Willingness marks the efforts of the crew, and although the seas are sometimes rough and stormy, the vessel is plying her course. We have an anchor which holds us against the storm, and a chart which, if followed, will carry us to the harbor of victory.

We find it worth while to keep up the Sunday school where, with the help of the heavenly Father, we endeavor to mold the lives of our children. But seldom do we have other meetings. The infrequency of our services can be attributed to lack of official help. Our branch president lives several miles away and can meet with us only when the roads and weather are agreeable. His efforts to help us, however, are deeply appreciated. The priest of the branch also lives a considerable distance away and is tied down with dairy business so that he can not meet with us. But he, too, desires to help us. The teacher is an elderly brother who was active as long as he could be but has been forced by the infirmities of age to retire from active service.

The Saints were happy to welcome the district bishop, John C. Stiegel, to our little church January 24, and to hear his words of inspiration, love, and devotion to the Master's cause. He stressed the fact that we must pay less attention to the material things and more to the spiritual. This service was a spiritual feast to the members, a feast following a long famine, for we seldom hear a sermon.

We were disappointed in not having Elder F. C. Bevan here at some time when he was in the district. District President E. R. Davis is a consecrated worker and never forgets us. Always we feel strengthened after a visit from him.

At present some are under quarantine for scarlet fever. We hope that soon all will be well and able to meet with us again.

Each family of Saints has suffered with the others, some undergoing great sorrow and affliction. We try to endure with grace and know that all will be well if we are faithful.

Kansas City Stake

Special stake conference for the election of General Conference delegates and other business will be held Monday evening, February 15, at eight o'clock, at Central Church.

Central Church

After a few days of disagreeable weather the latter part of the week in which a fine mist froze as it fell over Kansas City and surrounding territory, making it somewhat dangerous for pedestrians and motor cars, a beautiful Sabbath day dawned. It was the first of the month, the time for a renewal of the covenant of the Saints, and a goodly number was present at all meetings.

At the Sunday school period, the Semper Fidelis quartet sang "My Task." This was a lovely rendition, and the appearance of these young women in their white robes inspired a reverential attitude on the part of the worshipers.

The sacrament service at eleven o'clock, in charge of Elder George Mesley and Bishop Skinner, assisted by Elders Harvey Sandy and J. W. Paxton, contained a marked degree of the Holy Spirit. Elder J. E. Vanderwood called the Saints to a new and more vital conception of the meaning of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Patriarch John T. Gresty admonished the people through the voice of the Spirit to live holy lives and God would surely bless them. A number of short testimonies and earnest prayers consumed the rest of the hour.

The three o'clock Messiah rehearsal found more choir members throughout the stake responding to the call. But Kansas City Stake has not as yet reached her quota for this great chorus.

The usual monthly concert by the choir consisted of two anthems, "Sanctus," by Gounod, and the "One Hundred and Fiftieth Psalm," by Franck. These little concerts always are appreciated by the audience, and serve as a good background for the discourse which follows. Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the speaker of the hour, his theme being the latter-day message and proof of its authority. He pointed out some passages of Scripture that have been fulfilled only recently. Elder Vanderwood will labor under conference appointment in the Kansas City Stake until the convening of General Conference.

Sister D. H. Blair and Sister Carlotta Babb, who have been confined in the hospital for the last several weeks, each undergoing major operations, have progressed to such an extent that they have been removed to their respective homes. Sister Skinner is still confined in the Sanitarium and prayers were offered in her behalf at the sacrament service, also for various others among our membership who are confined to their homes.

The O. B. K. department is hard at work in preparation for its entry in the stake O. B. K. music contest which will be held at Central March 18 and 20.

Central Basket Ball Team and the Liberty Street Team of the Latter Day Saints League tying for championship, met in combat at the Woodland School Monday evening, the score being twenty-five to twenty-three in favor of Liberty Street. This is the first championship the Central team has lost in three years.

Argentine Church

A small but very interested congregation listened to the sermon by Elder J. A. Gardner, of Independence, Sunday night, January 31.

The fourth anniversary of our local Boy Scout Troop 26 was observed here last Sunday evening, February 7, Scoutmaster Frank G. Tuttle in charge. This also commemorated the twenty-second anniversary of the Boy Scout movement. Those taking part on the program were: Mr. B. B. Dawson, scout executive of Kaw Council, who gave the principal address; Pastor R. E. Browne, who offered the prayer; Paul Barry, troop bugler, who gave the church call; Ray Burger, who read the scripture lesson; Paul Rupard, who made a short talk; Malloy Hagemann who took up the offering; Clayton Cooper, who played a piano solo; Frank G. Tuttle who talked. Mr. Charles Sersley introduced the speaker.

The objectives of the troop for 1932 are—Advancement, leadership training, the building of a cabin, preparation for re-registration and review, hiking, camping, handcraft, vocational guidance, and good turns. Activities of the Kaw Council will continue during the week, and Friday night a review of all troops will be held at the Memorial Building, Kansas City, Kansas.

Holden Stake

Atherton Church

The first sacrament of the year had as guests Elders W. S. Macrae and C. F. Scarciff, of Holden, and Bishop J. A. Koehler. At the close of the service Brother Macrae announced the release for a few months of A. E. Allen as our pastor. This action was made necessary by Brother Allen's heavy general church responsibilities. He is the church auditor, and at least until after General Conference, his attention will be solely devoted to general church duties. Brother Allen has been pastor here for the past three years and has done a splendid work. We extend our appreciation and thanks. Brothers George W. Beebe and D. R. Snively were sustained as pastors for the unexpired term.

Elder Richard Bullard was the speaker January 17, in the morning. He centered his talk about the character of Enoch. He also assisted in presiding over the mid-week prayer service.

Other speakers have been D. R. Snively, F. A. Cool, and D. R. Hughes.

On Monday evening, January 25, a farewell party was given in honor of J. A. Thompson and family who are moving to Ripley, Oklahoma, where they expect to settle on a farm. They have been with Atherton Branch since its beginning, rendering valuable services. We hope the Saints in and around Ripley or in near-by branches will make an effort to

Our Departed Ones

DONALDSON.—Louisa W. B. Donaldson was born August 16, 1848, at Herman, Missouri, and had lived in Burlington, Iowa, since 1874. She was a member of the church for a period of forty-five years. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. K. Penny, of Burlington, January 24, 1932, after an illness of three months. The funeral services were held from the rural home of a daughter, Mrs. John Duff, near Fort Madison, by Elder F. T. Mussell. Interment was in get acquainted with Brother and Sister Thompson and daughter, Isla.

Outstanding in our Christmas holiday observances were the program of the primary department; the presentation of "The Other Wise Man," by the young people on Christmas Eve and their carol singing which followed; the branch supper on Wednesday evening followed by prayer meeting; a young people's watch party at the home of George Beebe, and a birthday party at the Bogue home in honor of their son, Harley. Most impressive of all was the reverent march of branch members to the altar where they placed a silver offering as a gift to Christ and the church.

the cemetery at Denmark, Iowa. Left to mourn are two daughters: Mrs. Penny and Mrs. Duff; four sons, twenty grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren.

JERNIGAN.—America Cobb was born in Santa Rosa County, Florida, April 13, 1866. She was married to Benjamin Lomax Jernigan August 11, 1882. To this union were born five sons and four daughters, one son dying in infancy. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the spring of 1896, to which faith she was true throughout life. She died at her home in East Brewton, Alabama, January 16, 1932. She leaves her husband and eight children to mourn. In the life of this beloved mother and true friend were exemplified the great principles of righteousness and loving-kindness, which those who are left will endeavor to carry on, that her type of life may be eternal. Funeral services were held in the Dixonville Church, Elder Lyle D. Flynn delivering the sermon. Interment was in Dixonville Cemetery.

BROWN.—Sarah Lucinda Barmore was born July 14, 1881, at Birdseye, Indiana; was baptized a member of the church May 27, 1900, at Oakland City, Indiana. She was married to William Harvey in 1905, and two children were born to this union, Glen Scott and Flossie Lorene, the latter departing this life two years ago. Mr. Harvey passed to his reward some years ago. In March, 1914, Mrs. Harvey was married to Cloise E. Brown who survives her. She died December 11, 1931, at Independence, Missouri. Was devoted to her church and home. Only until she assumed the care of two grandchildren, left by her daughter, was she absent from the church services. Left to mourn are her husband and son; three sisters, three brothers, three grandchildren, a number of other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was held December 14, at Enoch Hill Church, by Elders Herbert L. Barto and Robert Whitsitt. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

FISHER.—Elizabeth Scott was born February 23, 1852, near Scottsville, Indiana. She spent her early girlhood with her parents, John and Mariam Scott. There were two brothers, Leonard and Columbus Scott, and three sisters. One brother survives, Elder S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, and one sister Mrs. T. N. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. Sister Fisher was baptized at the age of eighteen by Elder W. W. Blair. Later she united in marriage to Isaac Fisher. Five children were born, two of whom survive, Mrs. Harold E. Premo, of Centralia, and Mrs. Agnes Sloss, of Seattle, Washington. Sister Fisher passed quietly away at her home January 10, 1932, after a year of illness. The funeral was held at the Saints' church in Centralia, and the sermon was given by Elder Orville Oppelt, pastor. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery at Centralia.

SALESKY.—Estle Marie Salesky was born in Tacoma, Washington, August 4, 1917. Came to Centralia with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Salesky, about five years ago. Estle was baptized October 12, 1930, with her mother and her sister, Gladys, by Elder Harold I. Velt. She was a faithful worker in the church until her death December 9, 1931, which resulted from diphtheria, and followed about three weeks of sickness. Her parents and sister, Gladys, remain. She was buried with a simple grave-side service December 10, 1931. A beautiful service was given in her memory by the church school, January 10, 1932. The service was an expression of devotion, song, and love for the sister who had passed from our midst. The sermon was preached by Elder Orville Oppelt, pastor of Centralia Branch. The body was laid to rest in Mountain View Cemetery, Centralia.

ROBINSON.—Louise Alcorn was born June 24, 1875, at Winthrop, Missouri. Married Wallace N. Robinson in 1897, and to them were born two children, Lucile Robinson Kraft and Wallace N., junior. She was baptized a member of the church May 6, 1900, by her husband, at Independence, Missouri, and throughout her life was prominent in musical activities. She was the founder of the Independence Music Club, a member of the Kansas City Music Club, member of the board of the former Conservatory of Music and later of Horner Institute of Music, and was national music director of the church. She started many young people on their road to musical success and was responsible for the contests instituted at the General Conference, giving the Louise I. Robinson medals for excellent performances in instrumental and vocal music. She also helped in other musical capacities. Had many musical advantages, studying at home and abroad, and using her gifts for the benefit of her friends. Her unselfishness and generosity were outstanding. Passed away at Santa Monica, California, January 18, 1932, and the funeral was held in Independence, Missouri, at the home of a sister-in-law, Mrs. O. L. James. President F. M. McDowell was in charge of the service and Elder U. W. Greene preached the funeral sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Surviving besides her husband, daughter, and son, are two grandchildren, her mother, Mrs. H. K. Alcorn, of Hollywood, California; a sister, Mrs. C. O. Moore, of Kansas City, other relatives, and a host of friends.

GILLSON.—Emily Gillson was born July 3, 1870, at Cambridge, England. Died December 23, 1931, at her home in Manchester, England. She leaves her husband and three daughters to mourn her departure, all members of the church. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints October 30, 1897, by Elder G. W. Leggott. For thirty-four years she was a faithful member of the church, held in high esteem by all who knew her. Evangelist W. H. Greenwood conducted the funeral service at the home, and many floral tributes from friends and Saints testified to the respect in which she was held. The memorial service was held in the Saints' chapel, the sermon, "Hope of the Saints," being delivered by Brother Greenwood. Sister Maud Nelson sang by request the favorite hymn of this sister, "One Hour With Jesus."

KERSTETTER.—George Riley Kerstetter was born June 21, 1854, at Elkhart, Indiana. In early manhood he moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri; from there he went to Centralia, Washington, forty-one years ago. Mr. Kerstetter was baptized into the Reorganized Church June 2, 1907, by Elder S. P. Cox, at Centralia, Washington, where he continued to reside until his death January 16, 1932. He is survived by Mrs. Eva Kerstetter and eight sons and daughters: Mrs. George H. Davis, of Everett, Washington, Mrs. Orville Oppelt, Mrs. Inez Howard, Mrs. Milton Foron, Mrs. Doris Howard, Dexter Kerstetter, and George Kerstetter, of Centralia, and LeRoy Kerstetter, of Salinas, California. The funeral was held from Newell's Mortuary, the sermon by Elder Marcus H. Cook. Interment was at Washington Lawn Cemetery, Centralia, Washington.

SMITH.—Mary A. Walker was born March 18, 1867, at Denver, Colorado. Became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 29, 1885, at Independence, Missouri, being baptized by Elder Joseph Luff. She was a faithful, helpful member, the devoted wife of the presiding patriarch of the church, Frederick A. Smith, and a loving mother. Death claimed her at her home in Independence the night of December 3, 1931. She had lived in Independence for twelve years, being a staunch worker in the Sunday school and among the women. Left to mourn are her husband, four daughters: Mrs. Gladys I. Trumble, of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Joy M. McCullough and Mrs. Winsome L. McDonald, of Independence, and Miss Freda S. Smith, of the home; three sons: Glaude L. Smith, Eastwood Hills; Doctor Fred A. Smith, Akron, Ohio, and Harold L. Smith, Jacksonville, Florida; five sisters: Mrs. Luch Amish, Iowa City, Iowa; Mrs. Mabel Green, Spokane, Washington; Mrs. Jessie Wedge, Pawhuska, Oklahoma; Mrs. Clara Williams, North English, Iowa, and Mrs. Lizzie Falls, of Tiffin, Iowa; one brother, Orville Walker, Tiffin, Iowa, and eleven grandchildren. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, at Independence, December 6, Apostle U. W. Greene preaching the sermon and Elder John F. Sheehy in charge. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery, at Lamoni, Iowa.

PITTMAN.—Margaret Jane, daughter of John and Charlotte Copeland, was born in Lee County, Iowa, May 20, 1880. She married William Pittman at Fort Madison, Iowa, March 19, 1910. Met death with her son, Ralph, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a passenger train January 24 in Dallas City, Illinois. She is survived by her husband, daughters: Mrs. Harold Todd and Eunice Pittman, one grandson, Raymond Todd, six brothers, four sisters, and other relatives. With her son she was baptized into the church September 14, 1924, at Disco, Illinois, by Elder Amos Berve. The funeral services of Mrs. Pittman and her son were held from the Saints' church in Fort Madison, Iowa, January 27, Elder W. H. Gunn officiating. Interment was in Copeland Cemetery several miles west of Fort Madison.

PITTMAN.—Ralph Pittman, son of William and Margaret Jane Pittman, was born in Lee County, Iowa, July 12, 1914. With his mother he met death when the car in which they were riding was struck by a passenger train Sunday afternoon, January 24, 1932, in Dallas City, Illinois. He is survived by his father, William Pittman, two sisters: Mrs. Harold Todd and Eunice Pittman, a nephew, Raymond Todd, and other relatives. He was baptized with his mother September 14, 1924, at Disco, Illinois, by Elder Amos Berve. Ralph's funeral was held with his mother's at the Saints' church in Fort Madison, Iowa, Elder W. H. Gunn officiating. Interment was in Copeland Cemetery.

RUTLEDGE.—John Anthony Rutledge was born November 8, 1877, in Granville, Tennessee, March 26, 1905, he was married to Miss Nora Hunt at Conejos, Colorado. They settled near Rupert, Idaho, in 1928. He was baptized by Apostle J. F. Curtis in 1904. Passed away January 22, 1932, leaving to mourn besides his wife, ten children, his mother, Mrs. J. S. Barker, of Hayward, California, four sisters: Mrs. Mattie Osborn, Hegler, Idaho; Mrs. Virdie Miller, Albion, Idaho; Mrs. Gertrude Stevens, Saint Ignatius, Montana, and Mrs. Bernice Walker, Hayward, California, and one brother, Jim Rutledge, of Boise, Idaho. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church in Rupert, in charge of Arthur Condit, the sermon being by W. A. Connell. Interment was in Rupert Cemetery.

General Conference

Under this heading special announcements will appear each week. Readers are asked to look for it in order to keep informed about plans and programs.

The Purposes of Conference

In every general conference as well as in the smaller conferences of the church, three main purposes stand out above all others: (1) spiritual guidance; (2) the transaction of business; (3) preparation for further work.

The most important purpose of the conference is, of course, to seek spiritual guidance and light. Without the spirit of unity which is to be obtained in the bond of God's love, all other purposes are without hope of accomplishing any good. It is with the desire of coming together for a unity of understanding and concerted action dictated thereby, that we gather to general conference. And certainly we can see the grave need of that spiritual guidance, whether we look abroad to see the morass of uncertainty into which the world has drifted, or whether at home to see the plight of the church in common with other institutions. All other considerations are subordinate, so far as the church is concerned, to this: that we shall be led by the Spirit of God.

With this great purpose in mind, we draw together to accomplish our second purpose: which is the transaction of such business as may be dictated by that guidance which we seek. The purpose of our business is not the creation of human plans, but the ratification and acceptance of Divine wisdom. It is not our purpose to endow our wills and work with his power, but to submit our wills and work to his righteousness.

Without Divine leadership our work is in vain. Without our work, the Divine leadership is likely to be in vain. Both are essential to the fulfillment of His purpose and the accomplishment of our salvation. Work must be headed by leadership: leadership must be supported by work.

The third purpose is that of preparation for further and better service. If any organization does not plan to prepare and train its forces it is depending on a perfection in human nature which does not exist, and only decadence and inevitable defeat face it. It would seem to be a necessary part of the whole program of the church for younger men of the ministry to gather together for instruction by the older men; for the women—who, without possessing the powers of priesthood, are responsible and active in carrying out much of the work of the church that is not touched by the priesthood—under their own leaders and instructors. Preparation, instruction, training, and education must all receive attention if the work of the church is to go on.

Subsidiary purposes appear at the conferences. Among these is that of providing recreation and entertainment. Even the smallest of district conferences often provide one evening for program features. At the coming General Conference the program features will be reduced to a minimum, but those features will be of the highest order, as announcements already made will indicate.

As the delegates come to conference they should keep the three main objectives in mind: spiritual guidance, the transaction of business, and the preparation for further service.

L. L.

Do We Appreciate God?

When we become rather satisfied with our own importance in the world, when our achievements loom big, when our noses tilt to an upward incline, when we begin to think the admonition, "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth," doesn't apply to us, nothing brings us more quickly and more effectively to the level of real humility, righteousness, and appreciation than a glimpse into the science of astronomy. Our soul grows and our self-opinion shrinks when we shake hands with the stars.

The wonders of the universe surpass our imaginative powers. Its boundlessness overwhelms us. The size and numbers of the stars and other heavenly bodies exceed our comprehension. The great distances!—well, after a time it ceases to be distance; it is just space. We marvel how all these wonders could come about. This we are told in one sentence, a very simple sentence of ten small words: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Ten words to announce the creation of millions and millions of worlds and their establishment in the universe! And God, the Creator! Great indeed is Jehovah the Lord and our God. Of him and his creation the Psalmist sang: "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

The invention of the telescope and the spectroscope have revealed new worlds to men, their distances, their revolutions, their composition, and their temperature. Daily this knowledge increases and challenges us to greater things because of the magnitude of our environment. Our appreciation of the physical universe grows. Should not our appreciation of the Creator of this universe keep pace?

When we think of big things, we grow big. When we walk the high highways of life, we lift our heads into clearer, purer air. When we think of heaven, we become heavenly. Are we thinking of and appreciating God?

Though he is the Creator of time and space, the Ruler of the universe, the King of kings, God is our Father who loves and cares for us. Jesus came to teach us that. He taught us that the heavenly Father knows men's hopes and fears, that he hears and answers our prayers, that he has many blessings in store for us if we obey his commandments. Jesus said: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: and . . . thy neighbor . . ." Are we showing our appreciation of God by doing as he has asked?

ARE WE CIVILIZED?—

As we view the recent course of events this question comes home to us, bringing low the pride with which we had exalted ourselves. The fact that we may not be directly responsible for the condition of the world does not excuse us: the fact that these things can be in the world wherein we live is an indictment of our civilization. The fact that hundreds and thousands of men can starve within reach of plenty indicates serious faults in our economic system; the fact that there can be so much injustice in a world that has provided itself with all the legal machinery that we have marks out broad flaws in our government; the fact that there can be so much sin in a world that has lived so long in the presence of the sublime ideals that are our heritage reveals a nauseating taint in our morality; the fact that there can still be wars of conquest, and that thousands of innocent persons can be made to perish to satisfy greed and ambition is an indictment of our international relations.

On every point in which we can examine ourselves we have grossly failed. Our claim to real civilization seems to be an unproved boast, and at the very best we can only say that we are on the way toward what might some day become an approximate realization of a mature and civil conception of life.

COMMENDABLE CALMNESS OF THE NATIONS—

With regard to the recent exciting events in the Far East, the nations of our "Western" civilization are in one accord—they are calm. The situation in the Orient was supposed to be as dangerous as a great barrel of powder; but it seems that the rest of the world is not to be touched off, it has already had its great explosion in the World War, and there is nothing like an explosion to rid a neighborhood of powder. The situation reminds one of a similar situation that used to recur in the school yard: after a few brisk battles, even the most pugnacious of little boys showed a surprising lack of interest in fighting—they were very calm, and especially those who suffered black eyes and bloody noses. The Western nations have had their punishment, and they are very calm. For this fact we are very thankful.

STUBBORN CHINESE RESISTANCE—

Japan is surprised that, in spite of her superior modern equipment for war and her trained troops, the Chinese soldiers are able to offer a stubborn and heroic resistance. Perhaps even the Chinese themselves are surprised. And the rest of the world seems to be delighted. China is to be congratulated on possessing a type of man-power that is able to withstand warfare of the kind the Japanese are waging. Although the Chinese greatly outnumber the attackers, it must be remembered how deficient they are in equipment; they are working mostly on nerve and courage.

JAPAN SHOULD LEARN—

Japan should learn what it costs to invade the territory of another people. Although Japan should win temporarily, and should gain a partial victory by a sudden oriental capitulation, there is always the long, long future to face, in which a great nation of people, coming into the conscious possession of their own nationalism, will nurse the memory of their wrongs and take sinister revenge. Japan is storing up trouble for herself in the future.

Notes From the Field

"You Can Count On Me"

The following is from a letter to the First Presidency by one who has proved his devotion by many years of faithful service in the mission field under trying conditions.

My prayers are that God may bless you with the Quorum of Twelve, and the Bishopric in your efforts to regulate the affairs of the church, and in meeting the problems that confront you in this trying hour. May God richly bless you with such special light and wisdom in preparing for the coming General Conference so as to enable you to realize your highest ideals as never before.

May we as a church cherish a beautiful vision, dream lofty dreams, and enthrone beautiful ideals in our hearts, that will enable us unitedly to go forward to meet the challenge of this hour, and achieve that which others have only dreamed about.

During the past two years, my health has been better than for thirty years or more, and they have been the most successful and happy years of all my missionary experience. And though the depression may continue, I desire to ever go forward and be able to say to the church, "You can count on me."

Very sincerely yours,

JACOB G. HALB.

"Carry On"

A SLOGAN BECOMES A REALITY

President McDowell sends us the following:

Among the many city churches to lose their pastor as a result of the releases of September is that of Mobile, Alabama. Appointed to that city were Brother and Sister George E. Burt. From every point of view their leadership in Mobile seemed to be indispensable. Their release was a distinct blow to everyone concerned.

When the situation confronting the church as a whole was presented in frankness and detail, the branch membership pledged by a unanimous rising vote to do their best to "carry on" in spite of the disappointment of their loss. Choosing from their own number a young man, they pledge to him their united support and went to work. The following just received by the Presidency's Office from this young pastor indicates that they have kept their pledge in a splendid way:

"I am very happy to say that the Saints have responded with a splendid spirit generally for which they are to be commended. The district and more especially Mobile Branch exceeded their quota for general church funds for the last three months of the year.

"There was some anxiety upon my part and others for our church attendance when Brother Burt left, but I am happy to report that instead of decreasing our attendance is greater than at any period since my connection with the branch. One of the contributing factors has been the organization of our young people. We meet with them on Tuesday night and are doing some definite things. Their interest has grown and they are attending all of the services including Wednesday night prayer service in large numbers. In one week I received from them fifteen inventories and they are making arrangements to pay their tithing. Brother McDowell, the time has come when these young people will not be held back any longer, but are going to step forward and demand of the older folks to either fill the offices of the church to the honor and glory of God, or step aside for this younger generation, who will. It is not only the case in Mobile Branch, but is general over the south.

"I received a letter from Brother Gillen which informed me that he would visit us the latter part of the month. This was indeed a pleasant surprise as his influence is great in Mobile.

"We are endeavoring to do all in our power to offer consistent leadership to the Saints, and while we have our discouragements we have no complaint to make."

"Praying for a Good Conference"

From a letter to President F. M. McDowell:

Yours of January 25 to hand. Thanks for the kind wish expressed. I also received from Bishop DeLapp a report of what we had done for the last quarter ending December 31, and I was indeed pleased to see that the Toronto District had gone over the top. He sent us our quota for this year which is larger than last year, but I feel that we can make it. I have already started to get in touch with the different branch presidents, and I will shortly be out among the branches just as soon as the roads open up and I will feel it a pleasure and privilege to encourage the members to sacrifice for the needs of the general church.

The Joint Council is to be congratulated upon the operating budget just received for 1932. I note that everything is pared to the bone. During the last two years the Saints, in common with others, have been made to suffer from this depression. The wage earners among them have had a cut in wages and the farmers complain that their produce has fallen in price, and that they get little or nothing for their work, which is true.

We held our district conference last October. At that time we elected our delegates to General Conference. Our convention is an annual affair. I will be there if all is well with me, and am praying for a good conference and that God will guide and give all the officers and members his Holy Spirit that all that is done may be for his glory and the onward march of Zion's army, and I feel sure that my prayers will be answered.

Praying for your health and spiritual welfare.

Your brother in the gospel,

JAMES A. WILSON.

"Forward During 1932"

From letter of James C. Page, Nauvoo, Illinois:

"We are very happy over the good news contained in your letter of January 25, and if the spirit that is in the members of the Nauvoo Branch is in the membership as a whole, we shall make strides forward during 1932. The average membership for last year has been about sixty. The solicitor informs me the branch contributed to the general church in all funds during 1931, $694 and some cents, nearly eleven dollars per member, and the first month of the new year we are sending in about $100, and you must know that we don't have people with very considerable incomes."

"Have Faith in God"

In a certain eastern city there was once a hospital with that suggestive inscription over the main entrance. The building was of brick, but set in the front of it was a broad marble slab, and on it in letters of gold were these plain words, "Have Faith in God."

It was a Christian hospital. Hundreds of sufferers, borne thither in the ambulance or assisted up the walk by loving friends, have looked up at those words as they passed in at the door. We may be sure that the words gave added courage to many an anxious heart. Hundreds of sufferers have there been cured, as human intelligence and human love have cooperated with those healing forces which are altogether divine. As they walked away, rejoicing in health regained, they looked back at those words of gold, and were made more deeply grateful to Him who had wrought with his chosen servants for their recovery. "Have faith in God!" They are good words to have engraved upon a building devoted to healing, or upon the walls of one's home, or upon the tables of one's heart!—Charles Reynolds Brown, in Faith and Health; Thomas Y. Crowell Company.

The Christian Handshake

It was said of Maltbie D. Babcock, a Presbyterian minister who has been gone these thirty years, but whose memory is still fragrant, that one of the secrets of his beautiful life was just this, his attitude that seemed to say, though his lips did not frame the words: "Can I help you?" I may not do the exact thing the young man asked who came to my study door this morning, but I can give him my hand, and with my handclasp say: "I would like to help you." The title of Frank Kingdon's book states exactly what I have in mind: Humane Religion. Humane religion is religion that helps, it is the religion of the hand. The handshake says volumes, and in a crisis it is much better than the voice.

When the Christian shakes hands he backs it up with his heart. "Here's my hand and here's my heart," is what he says. The Christian's handshake is no superficial act; it reaches to the very depths of his being; it is sincere; it is heartfelt.—Bruce S. Wright, in Girded With Gladness; Cokesbury Press.

Probably the only institutions which have been more overwhelmed with polysyllabic titles than our Protestant churches are the railroads. The early promoters seem to have thought that no stock could be sold to a gullible public unless the projected road went by at least three cities, all of which must be mentioned in its name. I happen to have spent my boyhood days near a railroad which has always done a lusty business hauling suburban passengers between Chicago and Blue Island, Illinois. When I first learned to read, its cars bore the inscription, "Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific." Then came a period when the stock was being liberally watered and the coaches were inscribed with the title, "The Great Rock Island System." Later an advertising man got into the picture who seems to have realized that most of the public reads and thinks in terms of one syllable words, and the same old cars were repainted with nothing on them but "Rock Island."—The Reverend John R. Scotford, in The Christian Century.

Conference "Daily Herald"

Whether you come to General Conference or not, you will want the Daily Herald. It will contain a full record of official and unofficial events at the Conference, together with articles and inspirational material. It will also contain the Conference Minutes, which will not be available in any other printed form. The price, as usual, will be fifty cents. Those who wish to take it are asked to subscribe early, and to send cash with the orders.

Present Facts and the Future Program

By G. L. DeLapp

An important communication from a member of the Presiding Bishopric, delivered as a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, January 31, 1932. Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.

It is customary for the average traveler to measure the distance to the place he is going in terms of the experience he has gained during the time he has traveled. Today is the closing day of the first month of a new year. We trust that during this month the Saints have been evaluating the achievements of the past year. Sometimes it seems difficult to find time to give the consideration one ought to give to that which has been accomplished in the past. Our troubles and trials pass before us with such prominence that we sometimes give undue consideration to them and little consideration to our achievements; and so, as we sum up some of our experiences of the past, may we do so only with the thought in mind that we shall attempt to determine the distance yet before us in reaching our objective, as compared to the distance we have traveled thus far.

We find from the records that our objective has been set forth as Zion, and while Zion involves a myriad of problems, which are both material and spiritual in nature, I wish to give most consideration this morning to those which have an economic aspect.

We turn to Section 36 of Doctrine and Covenants, where we find the word of God recorded:

And from that time forth there were wars and bloodsheds among them; but the Lord came and dwelt with his people, and they dwelt in righteousness. The fear of the Lord was upon all nations, so great was the glory of the Lord which was upon his people. And the Lord blessed the land, and they were blessed upon the mountains, and upon the high places, and did flourish. And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them; and Enoch continued his preaching in righteousness unto the people of God.

The Necessity and Place of Material Things

As Latter Day Saints we believe in the restoration. As Latter Day Saints I wonder just how many of us have attempted to determine for ourselves just what the purpose of the Restoration was and is. I believe it to be the setting forth of the relationship of man to man, as related to the material things of life.

I come to this belief because, as I stated, of the revealed word of God. Practically one third of the revelations received by the church have a direct bearing upon the material things of life; upon property rights. I believe that the methods through which these material relations or personal relations between man and man are to be accomplished are through the processes of stewardships, inheritances and the gathering.

In Section 101 we find the Lord stating, in no uncertain terms, that he created the material things of life in order that man might have and enjoy his creation. This was to be made possible through the processes we have mentioned—stewardships, inheritances and the gathering. In other words, it has been established that the spiritual life is to find expression through the material forces, and the result will be Zion.

As we approach our objective, or attempt to cover the distance to it we must think in terms of an economic unit of life which gives expression to the ideals set forth. Zion is an economic unit of life, and in that economic unit we may hope to find a condition which will show the result of a spiritual development, of a people living in righteousness, because of right conduct governing the use of material things.

We look back over our past, and we find that the distance we have traveled is insignificant when compared to the distance yet ahead of us. I hope, however, that we will not come to too hasty a conclusion in this connection. As I have already stated, our trials, our troubles, and our difficulties, are constantly before us, and we lose sight, sometimes, of the things we have accomplished as a people, and as a church.

Many Problems of Zion

We have already stated that Zion involves a myriad of problems. Hence, though we have not been able thus far to discover all the fundamental truths which are necessary for us to understand, in order that we shall achieve Zion, it should not discourage us, but rather, the very fact that we are becoming conscious of the truth that Zion does involve a myriad of problems, is encouraging.

I believe that our labors and meditations have brought to us reward in this knowledge that there is a distinct relationship between the material things of life and man's spiritual life. It seems to me that this knowledge has become crystallized in the minds of the Saints this last year, for we need but point to the condition in which we find ourselves today, and we become conscious of the fact that our inability to develop spiritual strength is due to the fact that there are certain material things and difficulties which are in our way, which have hindered our progress; and we find that our economic unit Zion, with spiritual strength has not thus far been developed.

In the summary we ought to make of our progress, however, it is necessary that we give consideration to certain facts which are outstanding, and which we can not evade even should we desire to do so, and that as we face these facts we become conscious that they must be given consideration ere we can make very much progress toward the achievement of our objective—Zion.

Commendable Efforts for a Good Purpose

Some of the encouraging things which are facts, as I see them, are that the history of this people is such that we have every reason to believe that ultimately our goal shall be achieved. We find a history marked by outstanding incidents of sacrifice. We find, as we go back over the pages, that in any crisis through which the church has ever had to pass, there have been those who have rallied to the cause, and who have carried on, making possible the achievements of the past. We need but refer to Kirtland, the tragic days of Independence, Far West, Carthage and Nauvoo to remind us of the sacrifice and suffering of a devoted people which again made possible the Reorganization and the carrying on of the work. I think this spirit of devotion is equally true today. This is evident, as we give consideration to the call which went out to the church during the last few months, a call asking for a definite contribution in order that the bare necessities of the church might be provided; a call to which the Saints responded, giving into the coffers of the church a little more than the amount called for, and we are conscious of the fact, too, that as we recognize the willingness on the part of the Saints to give, that in many instances these gifts have been made through the sacrifice of a willing, a conscientious, a consecrated and a devoted people. It was this people that made possible the revenue coming into the coffers of the church in the amount of $416,000 during the year 1931. We believe this is an achievement, one which we must not overlook, one of which our people ought to be proud, but only to the extent that with renewed effort, and in determination, we shall proceed to accomplish even greater objectives in the future.

Facing the Facts

These are some of the encouraging things we ought to be thankful for. There are some other things I think we must face as facts which are not so encouraging, but which nevertheless we must face, in order that we may study our problem, and that we may not make any mistakes of like nature in the future. At least we shall be able to minimize or decrease the number.

There has been a lack of foresight on the part of the church in the past. We need but go through the records of some nine, ten, or eleven years in the past to find there has been a tendency on the part of the church to expand more rapidly than its financial situation justified—and as I speak of facts as I see them I am attempting to face them only as facts, and trust that they shall in no way be considered as a reflection upon any individual or group of individuals, or upon the membership of the church, but that we shall simply state them as facts which exist and to which we should give careful consideration.

During six and one half of the nine and one half years previous to 1931 the church spent more than it took in. It shows an operating loss during that period, a net loss, of approximately $400,000. The result has been a depleted operating fund, and today when we would enter into a program of attaining our objectives, of moving forward on the road which shall lead to the establishment of Zion, we find our hands tied; we find ourselves unable to minister to a people in harmony with the will and the divine commands of God.

This is a fact that we can not continue to ignore in setting forth a program for the future, in order to assure ourselves that the time shall never come again in our experience, when we shall say that the opportunity is ours but because we did not build safely and surely and with foresight, we find ourselves unable to take advantage of the opportunity which is offered.

Along with this decrease of our operating fund, we find an ever-increasing mounting of liabilities, due, I think, we may say, to two things: one of which was a program beyond the capacity and strength of the membership to carry out; the other, due to the fact that we have taken upon ourselves certain assets with corresponding liabilities which have mounted to the point that today we face a tremendous debt. Oh, I know that there are those who will say that this debt can be raised in sixty days, ninety days, a year, or two years, and it is not my intention this morning, to argue that point, but simply to present the fact as a fact, and to suggest that as we build in the future we must build upon facts as they exist.

The First Necessary Step

The first step looking toward the achievement of our objective must be that of paying our debt. I do not wish to overemphasize our indebtedness, yet it seems to me that it is brought forcibly to our attention as we think in terms of our missionary endeavor; and when we think in these terms, I do not think only in terms of the missionary activities throughout the church, of the preaching of the gospel of repentance and baptism and the resurrection, etc., but I think in terms of our missionary effort as related to stewardship, the gathering, and Zion; because, if this church is to succeed, if it is to be outstanding, if it is to make a contribution greater than the contribution made by any other organization in the world, it will be because we have a definite and distinct program; of which Zion is the objective. Stewardships, inheritances and the gathering are the process through which the achievement may be realized; and today, as we think in terms of missionary activity and missionary work, we must remember that we have claimed much; we have attempted to draw into the church those members who, because of a definite desire on their part to make a contribution to the cause of Zion, to the building of an economic system which is different from that found in the world today, have been willing to make their contribution. Yet we go out into the world saying that our church, our organization has a different message, has a different objective than that of any other organization in the world, the objective of which is the establishment of an economic system where righteousness shall prevail, and wherein, as God has stated, there shall be no poor; and what do we find? We find that facing us as we attempt to carry out our missionary program is our indebtedness. Let us go out today and attempt to draw to the church members with the appeal of a Zion, of an economic order different than that which we find in the world today, and point at the same time to the debt which is ours, and who is there who shall have the heart to continue to say that Zion is to be found in the midst of this church? Because the answer which any sane and thinking man will give, is, If you, as an organization, have thus far been unable to so adjust and conduct your affairs, so that you are in financial difficulties as deeply as the rest of the world, then what have you to offer greater than we shall find in the rest of the world?

This is said again, not by way of criticism, but simply as a fact as I see it, and one which we can not ignore.

The Storehouse Principle

Let us go back just a few moments, reviewing some of the principles set forth, and we find that if there is one outstanding principle which will ultimately have to be complied with to lift the church above the world it is the principle of the storehouse. This implies the consecration of the surplus; for after all, the principle of the storehouse is set forth because of a need of a distribution of the material things of life, wherein every man shall enjoy the opportunity of making his way, and of making a contribution to mankind. Today, however, we find that theoretically the storehouse is a part of our divine plan, but practically we find that there is no surplus coming into the church. We wish to make this comment because I believe it is another one of the facts which we must face, and it seems quite apparent that there shall be no surplus coming into the coffers of the church until we first shall see that the church is financially able to protect that surplus. In other words, I think that I may state briefly just this, that human nature is such that a consecration of the surplus will not take place until that consecration will bring fruit, not only in the life of the individual giving it, or paying it, but shall also bear fruit in the life of the church itself, and shall make a direct and definite contribution to the establishment of Zion, our objective.

The Program of Debt Payment

We are attempting to present facts through the columns of the Herald, and one of the facts which we must face is that it seems almost impossible to reach the entire membership through the medium of the Herald. Too many of our people are not taking the Herald—or if taking it do not read it. This is a fact which has a direct bearing upon our problem as a whole.

Just recently the question was asked, "We note it is necessary to contribute $40,000 a month during 1932 in order that we might meet our obligations. Do we understand that it is necessary to contribute $40,000 a month every year for fifteen years?" In the setting forth of our fifteen year program we attempted to present the payments which the church would have to make, whether it liked to or not, rather than what it ought to make. The fifteen year program was and is merely a setting forth of facts as they actually are; and it seems to us that we will be obliged, in a period of not more than fifteen years, to pay off the church debt. If we were to continue the same operating budget that we are operating on during 1932 we should find that our debt would be paid off in approximately seven years. Our future progress will depend to a large extent upon our ability to keep the membership fully informed.

Setting Up a Program

We said that our progress will be determined by the extent we are willing to face facts, and to make adjustments. Let me present two or three things which I think we as a people must give some consideration to if we are to make real progress in the future. The first and most important, I believe, is that of the setting forth of a definite program, with definite steps leading toward our definite objective. In other words, I am presenting this thought to the many of us today. Do we know where we are going, why we are going and how we are going to get there?

We have talked of Zion in terms of generalities, but Zion must become concrete in our thinking, and definite steps must be taken, a definite program must be set forth to the membership of this church if we are to make very much progress toward our goal; and we think that the time has come in our experience when the membership of this church ought to demand such a program, and ought to insist that all together we work it out.

The payment of the debt is of course one of the steps of such a program, but, for one, I do not wish to have the payment of the debt become the major objective of the church. It is only incidental to the great task confronting the church. I do not wish to contradict myself in that connection, because I have already emphasized that it is important, and that it is one of the first steps in order that we shall make the progress we ought to make, but I do not believe it is of such supreme importance that we should lose sight of greater spiritual objectives that the church must have. I believe that the time has come in the experience of the church when the membership of the church must insist upon the official personnel of the church getting together on a definite and clear-cut program.

Our stewardship program, the program of the gathering and of inheritances ought to be studied by the official personnel of the church until ultimately there shall be a more united front, and when we are able I believe to work out a program upon which the official personnel of the church can agree, then we shall find the membership willing and ready to make their contribution. This throws a tremendous responsibility upon the officials of the church, a responsibility which can not be shirked. A responsibility, however, which all the Saints ought to help share through faith and prayer. There must be a unity of thought; there must be a unity of desire, and I believe that there is such a unity on the part of our people in so far as desire is concerned. I believe that there is a unity of desire among the officials of the church, and by "officials" I do not mean just the Joint Council; I mean the leading priesthood quorums of the church. It is imperative that we become more united in our thinking that we may proceed more rapidly toward the achievement of our objective.

Zion calls today as it has never called in the experiences of the church. We need but to look around us, and our reason tells us even if we do not have a spiritual manifestation of it, that Zion must be, if the world is to continue its existence. So then our task becomes a joint task, our responsibility a joint responsibility. Our objective may be attained, may be achieved if we so desire, and if we look back over the distance we have traveled even though we see we could have done many things differently, let us not lose courage because of the distance yet to our goal, but let us take advantage of the experiences we have gained. We have all made mistakes, but, taking advantage of these experiences, let us move forward, facing the facts as they are, and not as they ought to be, and make our adjustments accordingly; and I believe if we do this we shall find that the next few years of our experiences shall bring to us our objective, with an ever-increasing enlightenment. We shall understand, and God's work shall be accomplished if we have the courage of our convictions.

When we ask concerning men how divine are they, rather than ask concerning them how different they are, we are on the way to progress and purity. But when we build our hopes on a work that is labelled with the fact of a difference we have crippled ourselves at the first, where, as a matter of fact, we ought to have Christianized ourselves.—Reverend Fred Smith, in The Christian Union Quarterly.

A true artist should put a generous deceit on the spectators, and effect the noblest designs by easy methods.—Burke.

A Flower Sermon

In the soft dusk before the night
 The lilies gleam like flowers of light,
 Reminding us that there may be
 Some brightness in obscurity;
 And all the sweetness of the rose
 The tender power of love foreshows,
 Unselfish love that is content
 With spending, yet is never spent,
 Nor can its firmly-planted seed
 Uprooted be by word or deed.
 Dark pansies in a shady grot
 Bid us have patience with our lot,
 While marigolds tell us to bless
 Our own small worlds with cheerfulness
 Daisy and pink and pale sweet-pea
 Alike enjoin humility;
 Bright sunflowers in corners stand
 Like golden angels hand in hand,
 Calling on grateful hearts to raise
 With them to heaven a psalm of praise. . . .
 So if their message we discern,
 Grace from each flower we may learn.

The Depression and Our Social Program

By J. A. Koehler

The following is the seventh of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. The author of this article is a careful student of economics and of the practical ideals of the church.—Editors.

The financial embarrassments and the economic distresses that we peoples of the church suffer, along with the rest of the world, compel us to acknowledge the force of one or the other, or both, of the following disjunctives:

First: Either we have not been devoted to a social program having to do with the exaltation of this people, or the social program to which we have devoted ourselves is not adapted to the purpose of promoting our peace, prosperity, and happiness.

Second: Either our resources in man-power and physical equipment are too inadequate to our purposes—both quantitatively and qualitatively we may be unequal to the task, or our technique has been too faulty. Surely no one will insist upon the force of a time element.

There are men, even in the church, who maintain that the peoples of the restoration movement have had no kingdom-building social program, that they have not been devoted to the purpose of realizing the government of God, and neither that there are not enough men in the restored church who have the personal qualifications which fit them to discharge successfully the offices of such a social program.

No doubt men who reason in this manner believe the proposition that "The truth shall make you free." They believe in the power of Godly government. They believe in the power of kingdom-building righteousness and truth. They believe in the authority of the laws of God, or the laws of nature. They believe that social life as well as personal life, that group behavior as well as individual behavior, that public affairs as well as private affairs, are governed by law. They believe that peoples and nations are depressed by their sins, and exalted by their righteousness.

To such men it is puerile for a people whose mode of behavior keeps getting them into social messes and economic distresses to pride themselves on their righteousness or on their knowledge of the truth. Truth does not work that way. The ways of truth—that is, the truth of human living-together—are the ways of peace, prosperity and happiness. And the only possible ground by which a people may justify the belief that they are the builders of the kingdom is the outcome to them of their own behavior in prosperity, happiness, and peace.

Social programs are plans of action, or schedules of things to be done, or prearranged courses of procedure, by which societies as such, i. e., by which peoples as groups or as communities, or in their corporate capacities, endeavor to achieve certain purposes or to reach certain goals.

The difference between a social program and a personal program is the difference between "A Choir" of say one hundred voices making preparation to render The Messiah, and one hundred individual singers going about separately as each may choose, making preparation for such musical expression as suit their several purposes. The former is an "organized" endeavor on the part of one hundred individuals. It is a group endeavor, the success of which depends upon the manner in which these one hundred voice expressions are coordinated or governed. It is an endeavor in which the behavior of the one means much to the other ninety and nine. The latter, however, is merely so many individuals pursuing so many personal objectives, which may, or may not, be complementary and contributing to social ends. The success of any or all of these one hundred personal programs may not depend at all upon any concert or any coordination of effort—that is, upon the behavior of "The Group" as such.

There is much confusion of ideas about "social" righteousness and "personal" righteousness; about "social" programs and "personal" programs; about building the kingdom and building men for the kingdom.

It is obvious that social programs may differ widely both in purpose and in method. The range of possible choices is wide. The question that concerns us is this: Has the church—has this body of 100,000 Latter Day Saints, not as a mere mass of individuals having somewhat similar personal aims—had a social program worthy the church of the living God which has any bearing upon the welfare of its peoples? Does our group behavior have anything to do with saving our people from economic, industrial, and financial depressions?

To some it seems that we peoples of the church have behaved as if we believed that ingestion, and digestion, and egestion, and all the rest, would go on of their own accord to promote the health of the body, if only we would apply ourselves assiduously to the cultivation of the spirit. We have behaved as if we believed that there is no law to which the affairs of "peoples" as such are subject. Not a few men of the ministry, even, have openly declared that there is only one kind of social program that concerns the peoples of this church and that is a program of so-called "evangelism," together with a program of raising moneys for that purpose. They say that there is but one kind of government, and that is a government having to do with the mobilization of a ministry for missionary and pastoral purposes. To them the way to care for the body is to cultivate the spirit. The way to promote the temporal welfare and happiness—the economic well-being and security—of this "people" as such is to increase the number and quality of "believing" disciples as such. With this type of men dominating the affairs of the church it is no wonder that we have not put forward a social program to save our peoples from the fate of the economic world in whose ways they walk.

Causes of the Depression

If we are to put forth a social program to save ourselves from the evils of industrial depressions, we must know something of the factors which, for many years, have caused these depressions. Out of what do business depressions arise? Do they arise from any niggardliness on the part of God or of nature? Do they arise from any lack of manpower with which to convert raw materials and capital goods into consumers' goods? Do they arise because our economic processes normally leave us without goods on shelf? or in the social cupboard? Do they arise because men individually refuse to accept opportunity for profitable employment?

No! Industrial crises arise because the gifts of nature and the efforts of men individually and privately are made abortive by the behavior of men collectively and publicly. We are depressed because of the unavailability of capital to further production—because the laborer does not have access to industrial equipment. We are depressed because our scheme of distribution leaves the laborer powerless to purchase the products of his labor. We are depressed because economic society is chaotic; because it is inefficient; and because it is unjust.

We hail with delight every new breeze which brings with it rumors of new outlets of expression and increased powers for our financial institutions. And yet, as we analyze the causes of our depressions, we should come to know that it is financial considerations that obstruct and make abortive our economic functions. It is these financial institutions that stand between us and the bread we have made to eat. It is these financial institutions that stand between us and the industrial equipment we have made for our use. It is these financial institutions that make distribution unjust. And from the workings of these financial institutions the social program, to the advancement of which the church has been directed to bend its energies, is designed to set us free. And I prophesy—and yet not I alone; for the prophecy is given over and over again in the messages to the church—that even more disastrous depressions await us if we will not put forward the social program which makes "The Storehouse" of the Lord the pivotal financial institution of our economic structure. I say "pivotal" institution, because there are other institutions which revolve around this hub, and which are items in the social program given for our adoption. This scheme of social institutions makes economic life orderly, efficient, and just. And under its operation no righteous people will suffer from industrial and financial depressions.

The Lesson of the Depression

The individual must share the fate of his people. No number of men in separate and independent action can hope to establish themselves economically outside the areas of business depressions. Men must find refuge and safety in their behavior as peoples. If the peoples of this church do not learn from this depression that their only temporal salvation is Godly government in economic life, the depression will have failed to teach us the most important lesson we have to learn.

Zion is by nature a place of safety and of refuge. Safety in Zion does not arise from propitiating the gods. The secret of Zion's glory is not found in any form of incantation. The prosperity, the greatness, the glory and the honor of Zion arise from her obedience to the law of social behavior. It is the truth which makes us free. And this truth is the warp and woof of the social fabric of Zion. This social program is by nature adapted to the needs of men. "The government shall be upon his shoulder." From the very beginning of the restoration movement, God began to unfold the particulars of the social program which is to eventuate in a government of God in economic life. And if this people do not soon learn that in economic life, as elsewhere, "The truth shall make you free," we may find to our sorrow that we who believe we are the "called" of God have come to be the "rejected."

Error Can Not Serve Us

The economic life of this people must be molded in accordance with the law of God—the truth. "If otherwise they shall be cut off." They shall be "good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under the foot of man."

Why try to escape the pitfalls which lie in the direction of our travel in economic life by trading our business oxcarts for business automobiles? Are we to be saved economically by displacing our business bean-shooters with business machine guns? Is the business menu which uniformly gives peoples generally industrial indigestion to be the cause of bodily vigor to us?

The social program written in the law of this people is designed to throw "light" on the problems of "the world." The world is one huge society. There can be no answer to its problems outside a social program. Peoples have no way of avoiding confusion, and economic waste, and depreciation of wealth except by programing their economic activities. It is not our behavior in the fine arts that has brought us this depression; it is our behavior in the utility arts and the workings of our political institutions which are shaped to complement our ideals and aims in economic life. And it is in these particulars that the behavior of the peoples of this church is to become "A light to the world."

Peoples must realize their social ideals through their social institutions. There is no other way. It is for this reason that social institutions are regarded as tests of the spirit of a people. Where the ideal is in substance a government of God in economic life, there is nothing else to do but to "gather together" under conditions which make possible self-government in economic life. People who aspire to be a people in the true big sense, must have a program of "gathering" under terms and conditions which give them freedom to embody their sentiments in laws of their own making, institutions of their own building, and customs of their own shaping. And there can be no industrial, or business, or financial depressions for peoples who devote their energies successfully to the realization of such an ideal. "Zion shall escape if she observe to do." Yes; she shall more than escape. "She shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, and very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her. . . ."

The Church and the Social Program

The church is God's agency for setting up this government of God. There is no reason for believing that any other than a church people will enact laws, build institutions, and shape customs for the especial purpose of molding its common life in accordance with the will of God.

Besides the testimony of reason, the experience of the race witnesses the hopelessness of social reconstruction on any high moral plane without individual regeneration. The church, through its educational program and its missionary program, not only is instrumental in bringing the regenerating influences of the Christian movement into the lives of men; but through its social program it is an instrument for organizing the righteousness of regenerated men into the kingdom. Men must be proselyted to the kingdom mode of living. They must have some medium of expression of the new concept of social life. And the church with its Zion-building social program is designed to supply this need.

A Program With a Purpose

The love of God in the individual is known only by his behavior touching the welfare and happiness of his fellow men. The love of God works out to practical results. "To what purpose," i. e., to what practical results in the life of men, are the multitude of your church activities? is a question to which we must be able to give a proper answer, if our religion is to have any claim upon the lives of worthwhile men. This is the distinguishing characteristic of the social program of the church. It not only seeks to glorify God; it seeks this glory through the uplift of man. "Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor" and "doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."

The worth whileness of a religious movement must be judged in the light of the need of the times. The needs of this age can not be supplied by a church without a social program adapted to these purposes. There must be a direct relationship between the program of the church and the ends to be achieved. We must not deceive ourselves with the foolish notion that the body can be made strong by "cultivating" the mind. The law of love can not be fulfilled by those who set aside the law of labor. Mere personal righteousness does not fulfill the righteousness of the kingdom.

The goal of the social program of the church is "Zion." Zion is a social enterprise. It is a Godly government—orderly, efficient, and just. It is a mode of group behavior; it is a corporate expression under which financial considerations can not defeat economic aims. To the study of "The Lord's Storehouse," the hub of Zion's economic wheel, we will do well to give much of our mental energy.

Our Fate

Unless we are to fall with Babylon—which is economic confusion—we must come out of her and establish ourselves as a people. That is to say, we must have a social program that eventuates in the kingdom. We must set up the government of God in economic life.

Are we to prove to be "good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men"? And yet that is the fate decreed, if the peoples of the church will not put forward this "kingdom-building" social program. The present depression is an omen of this fate. On the other hand, the nature and the power of righteousness and truth are such that nothing can rob the peoples who devote themselves to the business of the government of God of the prosperity, the glory, the greatness, and the honor which arise naturally and inevitably from "social" righteousness and truth. "Sin is a reproach to any people," but "righteousness exalteth a nation." To put forward the social program of this church is to seek the righteousness of God and to build the kingdom.

Prophetic Warning in Modern Revelation

VI.—CONCERNING WARS TO COME

By Elbert A. Smith

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.

The section just quoted also states, "The hour is not yet but is nigh at hand when peace shall be taken from the earth." The Lord, knowing the calamities which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth called upon his servant Joseph Smith and spake to him from heaven and gave him commandment that he should proclaim his warnings to the world. Joseph Smith and his associates and those who came after him sounded that warning in various parts of America, Europe, and the islands of the sea. Yet in the language of the prophet of old we may say, "Who has believed our report?"

Those who remember the dawning of the present century will recall that it dawned with the highest hopes. Civilization was to go on and on. In particular war was to cease. The Hague tribunal had been set up. Arbitration between nations was to banish armed conflict.

In an interview in New York City, October 14, 1931, H. G. Wells, the British author, lecturer, and historian, said, "It is as if I were watching a dark curtain fall steadily, fold after fold, across the bright spectacle of hope with which the century dawned." (Quoted from the Kansas City Star, October 20, 1931.)

Upon a world and a century filled with hope that war had been banished there burst all the horrors of the World War, which involved practically all of the major civilized nations, the worst war of all time.

Humanity sought refuge, then, in the slogan: "We will make this the war to end all war." But, alas, such has not been the case. President Herbert Hoover, speaking before the International Chamber of Commerce, assembled in Washington May, 1931, reminded his hearers that the annual cost of armament the world over has increased seventy per cent above the cost just prior to the World War; the present cost being five billion dollars annually. He stated that there are now five million, five hundred thousand men constantly under arms and twenty million more in reserve. And then with a degree of irony reminded his hearers that all of these nations were signers of the Briand-Kellogg Pact to renounce war. (See Literary Digest, May 18, 1931.)

Joseph Smith's Message to America

Joseph Smith had a message for the world as well as for the church. In particular he sounded a voice of warning to his own nation. There was pointed out in revelation the iniquity of slavery. In a revelation given in 1833 the statement was made, "It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another." (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.) Even before that, on Christmas Day of 1832, there was given the revelation pointing out the final results of slavery unless a way of repentance and restitution could be found. I refer to the famous revelation on the Civil War which reads as follows:

Verily thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place; for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations. And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshalled and disciplined for war: And it shall come to pass also, that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath, and indignation and chastening hand of an Almighty God, until the consumption decreed, hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the saints, and of the blood of the saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies. Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen.

The authenticity of this remarkable prophecy is beyond question. It was published to the world through various avenues, the most notable being The Pearl of Great Price, a pamphlet published in England in 1851. I have in my own library an original copy of The Pearl of Great Price containing the revelation as given above, the copy coming to me from the hands of Elder J. C. Clapp, it having been in the possession of his family from the time of publication, ten years before the first shot was fired at Fort Sumter.

In this revelation it was pointed out exactly where the war should begin, the course it should run, the organizing and arming of Negro regiments, the appeal of the South to Great Britain for aid, the misery and suffering to come upon the nation. It is to be noted that the revelation said further: "The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations beginning at that place." We have lived to see the fulfillment of that prediction. In the light of the remarkable way in which the opening paragraphs of this revelation have been fulfilled, can we doubt the closing statement that these wars and judgments shall continue "until the consumption decreed has made a full end of all nations"?

We have also a copy of Joseph Smith's appeal to America, published in 1844, begging the state legislatures to abolish slavery "not later than the year 1850," the slaves to be purchased and set free,—the very plan advocated later by Abraham Lincoln. The warning was not heeded, not even considered, and the day of calamity approached in America. It is worthy of note that the warning was again repeated through President Joseph Smith, son of the Martyr, in his first general epistle to the church in 1861: "And in the name of the Lord of hosts, I call upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe, and be baptized, for the time cometh when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon all nations, and the besom of God's wrath shall smoke through the land."

World Wars Predicted

Surely the word of God was vindicated. America was overwhelmed in civil war. But there yet remains the major portions of those warnings to be fulfilled. The revelation on the Rebellion, previously quoted, said that the wars foretold and judgments decreed should "make a full end of all nations." That may have seemed absurd to many readers twenty years ago or thirty-two years ago when the century dawned with such bright hopes, when men fancied themselves entering upon an era of perpetual peace. But those warnings do not sound so absurd today.

July 11, 1931, before a peace conference in London, Prime Minister MacDonald of Great Britain declared that if another war should come, "The great Armageddon struggle would come at last, and the end of it will not be defeat, but the uniformity of exhaustion. Mankind would be almost wiped out. Mankind would be exhausted by another war and all his works and his civilization would be obliterated. That is the end which awaits those who say, 'We will trust our national security to the accumulation of armament.'" At about the same time David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Great Britain during the World War, declared, "The next war is inconceivable, yet the world is going on steadily, stolidly, stupidly towards the catastrophe, singing the songs of peace and preparing for war."

The Secretary of War to the United States during the World War, Newton D. Baker, said that the situation today regarding war is like "a loaded pistol aimed at the heart of civilization itself, with a hair-trigger and held by an unsteady hand." (Literary Digest, August 15, 1931.)

Even more recently the Archbishop of Canterbury, speaking in Saint Paul's Cathedral with the Prime Minister and members of his cabinet present, said, "Who can doubt that in another world war civilization may perish." (Kansas City Star, January 6, 1932.) Probably it would surprise the Archbishop of Canterbury to know that Joseph Smith anticipated him by a hundred years and warned the world that unless there should be repentance and acceptance of the gospel and a preparation for peace, war and allied calamities would make a "full end of all nations."

The Lesson to Be Learned

Such has been the vindication of modern prophecy concerning wars in America and abroad. The lesson to the Saints is obvious, to sound the gospel of repentance and preparation to the world and to set themselves and their own houses in order under the divine commandment, "Be ye also ready." The promise is made, "I have . . . decreed wars upon the face of the earth and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the Saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them." (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 9.)

The accuracy with which these prophecies have been and are being fulfilled should give us the most implicit faith in the promises that were associated with the warning; those promises were uttered by the same spirit and in connection with the predictions, and the promise is definitely made:

Great tribulation shall be among the children of men, but my own people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear witness of my Only Begotten. . . . and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.

The promises of the Lord stand sure. The times vindicate his knowledge and our faith should be increased rather than diminished. Our duty is laid before us. In the midst of wars and rumors of wars our duty is to "renounce war, and proclaim peace." (Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.) In times of peace we are to preach repentance and righteousness. In times of war we are not to be carried away with the spirit and fever of war-time propaganda, which is the fever of hatred. We are to renounce war. Individuals may make their choice as to war service, or, if drafted, are to be obedient to the laws of the land, but it is not the business of the church to incite men to rush to war or herself to imbibe or breathe forth in the slightest degree the spirit of war and animosity, for we are to "renounce war and proclaim peace." Such missions of mercy as are conducted by the Red Cross and Salvation Army and Quakers during war times offer an avenue for a Christlike expression of the spirit and energy of the church.

In the meantime the great burden laid upon the church, even as in the days of Joseph, is to proclaim these things to the world, not only the voice of warning but also the voice of promise; to preach the gospel of peace and salvation (which is the only hope of the world) so far and so widely as we may. The church should set her house in order, relieve herself of debt and every other embarrassment that in any way hinders the prosecution of this work. Her missionary force renewed, increased, vitalized with a new spirit of consecration, should go forth to the world with that message. Her pastors, consecrated and filled with a new power should stand ready to receive those brought out from the world and build them together into the City of Zion, the place of refuge.

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7.

(Conclusion.)

"Hitherto Hath the Lord Helped Us"

By Grace L. Krahl

There was a time when a strange thing happened in Israel. There were many strange occurrences in Israel, but it may be of interest to recall this particular one and its outcome.

The strange thing was that the ark of the covenant, the symbol of God's presence, rested in their midst and at the same time Israel was worshiping idols. The saying, that, "Where the ark is, there is God," now lacked verity.

For twenty years they continued their idol worship and "lamented for the Lord." Now they were threatened by their enemies the Philistines, and they were filled with fear.

Then Samuel, the prophet, said to them:

If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods and Ashtaroth from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines. Then the children of Israel did put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served the Lord only. And Samuel said, Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the Lord. And they gathered together to Mizpeh, . . . and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord.—1 Samuel 7: 3-6.

And the Philistines seeing an advantage in the concentration of Israel, came up against them to battle. And Israel besought the prophet that he would cease not to cry unto the Lord for them, that he would deliver them out of the hands of the Philistines. And Samuel offered a sacrifice and cried unto the Lord and the Lord heard him and caused great thunder on that day upon the Philistines and discomfited them and they were smitten before Israel.

Then Samuel took a stone and set it up and called the name of it Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." (1 Samuel 7.)

To Latter Day Israel, as we sometimes call ourselves, has the Lord committed some sacred things, that give rise to our claim that God is with us. Not the tables of the covenant, the golden vase that had manna, nor Aaron's rod that budded. Neither are they confined in an ark or coffer, nevertheless they are most sacred; tangible and intangible they are alike evidences of the power of God and the spirit of his presence.

The gospel of our Lord and Savior has been given to this church. The hidden record containing its fullness has been revealed and brought forth by the power of God. The holy priesthood to minister to the church and the world, and the building of the kingdom, or the establishment of Zion, have been given into our charge; and we, too, lament for the Lord—for more of his guidance, his power, the manifestations of his Spirit, his reassurance of our acceptance, or his reproof, as it may be.

True, we are not bowing down to wood and stone in the form of deities as did Israel of old, but can it be there are other barriers between God and us, that hinder the kingdom in its advancement?

The deprivations of the past months perhaps have been revealing, disclosing to us what our goals really have been, economically, socially, and spiritually. With some remorse we may discover that, to use a familiar expression, we have not been putting first things first.

To love the Lord with all our might, mind, and strength, and to love our neighbor as ourselves, are two compelling tests of citizenship in the kingdom, and become the qualities of the people who maintain and further it.

If we were to ask ourselves upon what do we expend the most of our might, mind, and strength, would we be satisfied with the answer? And if we love our neighbor as ourselves, how does he flourish at the present time?

If religion is the will of God expressed in the lives of men and that expression were complete throughout the church, the kingdom would be builded, would it not? But since it is not, must we not become qualified for a kingdom-building people, as Brother Koehler would say?

Can we not put away the barriers that hinder, that the Lord may deliver us from our present bondage; that the light of his countenance may shine upon us and that his assistance in our distress shall be so marked that we, too, shall be able to raise our Ebenezer and say with Samuel of old, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us"?

That the building of the kingdom may have our best thought and strength and the love of neighbor our equal concern, is my prayer.

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease—5.

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The cornea is a transparent convex-shaped membrane that fits into the sclerotic coat, or tunic, of the eye (the white part of the eye) and fits in like a watch crystal. It consists of one sixth of this coat of the eye. It is well supplied with nerves and lymphatics, but has no blood vessels, except those that come up to its margin. Its function, aided by its transparency, is to transmit light into the eye, and next to the layer of tears, it is the first refracting medium. Any opacity, or scar, on this membrane will obstruct vision, depending upon its size, density, and location. When it becomes inflamed, or continually irritated, blood vessels may appear, in nature's attempt to heal, or if ulceration has taken place, scar tissue will be the result.

Corneal ulcers of all varieties, pannus or Trachoma, and a condition known as interstitial keratitis—a deep inflammation of the cornea—are some of the chief causes of corneal blindness. Corneal ulcers, if not treated early, may perforate and ruin the eye. Perforation is due to the virulent organisms, sometimes aided by a lowered resistance of the patient, and increasing age. It is the duty of the specialist to find out what the invading organisms are, which is easily done by taking some of the secretions and examining them under the microscope. The gonorrhoea and pneumonia germs are the most virulent.

Another form of inflammation of this part of the eye, usually found in undernourished, tubercular, and anemic children, is phlyctenular keratitis. These germs are frequently found in the nose, throat, mouth and other parts of the body. This form of disease is usually chronic, sluggish, and recurrent. The inflammatory places are usually multiple and may disappear in one or two weeks, or may form corneal ulcers. The peculiar characteristic of this form of ulcer is that it rarely perforates unless it is badly neglected. The treatment should be conducted by a competent oculist and special attention should be given the individual's food, fresh air, sleep, and sunshine. The hygienic part of the treatment almost always depends upon the social worker, rather than upon the physician.

Another form of inflammation of the cornea, and frequently of more serious consequence, is called interstitial keratitis. It is often a result of congenital syphilis, accompanied by nerve deafness, and it affects the bones and joints. Sometimes these patients have the characteristic "saddlenose." It usually occurs between the ages of five and fifteen years and possibly as late as thirty years, and seldom follows acquired syphilis. It not only may affect the cornea, but may involve the whole of the eyeball. The usual antisyphilitic treatment is about the only hope for this class of cases.

Burns of the cornea frequently leave scars that occlude the sight, depending upon the depth of the destructive process. These scars may occur from scalding water, curling irons, etc. Chemicals often penetrate more deeply and spread over the corneal tissues. Alkalies are usually worse in this respect than an acid, and unless they are taken care of early and neutralized at once, scar tissue is the result. The first thing to do is to remove the caustic substance, as soon as possible. If the foreign substance is composed of solid particles, it may be removed by absorbent cotton or forceps. The one thing to remember is that whatever solutions are applied, they should be with the object of neutralizing the caustic substance as soon as possible, or render it insoluble. If the chemicals should be of an acid form, the eye should be irrigated with a weak solution of ordinary baking soda (sodium bicarbonate). Should the offending material be lime, mortar, or caustic alkalies, the eye should be flushed with a straight stream solution of boric acid. This should be fol-

Providence, Rhode Island

Our 1932 slogan, "Each one to be a committee of one to interest one more in our church work," already has shown results in attendance.

The men's club under the able leadership of the president, Teacher Raymond A. Garlick, has taken on new activity. January 26, in our chapel's vestry an interesting lecture was given to the club by the State probation officer, Arthur J. Hatton. It followed one of the famous Eber Johnson's Rhode Island clam chowder suppers. About forty men were present, and we were specially pleased that our slogan, above referred to, resulted on this occasion, in having present about ten non-members. There was a very good spirit of fellowship and all enjoyed the evening. At these meetings the social features include games of chess, checkers, table tennis, anagrams, etc.; also, a radio program was enjoyed at the last meeting.

February 7, the sacrament service was well attended. At that time a new feature was introduced and from the results we feel sure it was most beneficial. The Saints remained on their knees while the sacrament prayers of both bread and wine were made jointly by Pastor Daniel F. Joy and Elder Frederick W. Roberts. The priests, Edward A. Fox and John D. Colburn, serving the bread, upon reaching the rear seats, were followed by Elders George F. Robley and Edmund M. Brown bearing the individual wine service. This greatly expedited the usual lengthy part of the sacrament service. About seventy members were thus served in almost one half the usual time, giving more time for the prayers and testimonies which followed.

Bishop Edward L. Traver, of Boston, spoke Sunday, February 7, and his remarks were of such deep religious fervor that all present felt a wonderful spiritual uplift.

About twenty letters were sent out to members and others, inviting them to the February 7 evening service, at which time Pastor D. F. Joy, with the assistance of a very clear chart, gave a wonderful sermon regarding the origin of the present-day churches. Several nonmembers expressed interest and enjoyment especially in the "Restoration."

March 5 and 6 the district conference will meet at Providence. We expect to have present Apostle Roy S. Budd.

Australian Reunion at Tiona

The ninth annual reunion at Tiona convened on Christmas Day. The attendance of middle aged and aged persons was meager, but this was made up for in the attendance of young people. The depression was responsible for the absence of heads of families, and almost all who were in attendance came the cheapest route and lived on the cheapest fare while on the grounds. That is not denying that they lived well, for cheap fish, crabs, prawns, and vegetables abounded.

The company's store and dining hall were under the management of the members of Bulahdelah Branch, and these lowed by cold compresses, atropine, and sometimes a bandage. Most of these cases are followed by adhesions, sometimes so extensive as to cause the lids to be adherent to the eyeball. A competent specialist should be consulted as soon as possible after such an accident.

Saints did all they could for the material comfort of participants in the reunion.

Gradually we have been enlarging the circle of nonmember friends who attend, and there was a large attendance of these estimable people. Many of them have helped in the building up of the grounds, prominent members of this group having financed and materially assisted with the installation of our twenty thousand gallon water service.

The meetings were as follows: Prayer service 8.30 a. m.; class work 9.45 till 11 a. m. ("Young People's Church Problems," by W. J. Haworth, and "Religious Education in the Home," by G. H. Parker); a sacrament meeting, a young people's prayer meeting at 7 a. m.; a young people's program of orations and musical items, preaching services, and concerts in the evenings. The preachers were Elders A. V. Robinson, W. J. Haworth, W. J. Vaughan.

Among the social items were the following: a number of group banquets, a community banquet in the dining hall, attended by practically the entire camp, a concert in the meeting tent and an open-air entertainment at which the performers used the front porch of the caretaker's residence as a platform.

New Year's Eve we arranged a barbecue on the beach. A small sheep was roasted over a silky oak fire. The entertainment last mentioned was in progress during the first hour of the barbecue, and those in attendance were few. The roasting mutton sent forth its appetizing aroma and two dingoes (native dogs) traveled miles, from the Cape Hawke Brush to swell the assembly. Their dismal howling rather scared the city boys and girls, but using their electric torches to flash upon the animals, they at length frightened them off. The fire also played its part, perhaps, in fending the dogs off, for it is said that they will not come too close to a fire.

During the last hour of the roasting, the entire camp was in attendance, and while we watched the barbecue, community singing was enjoyed. The Stockton Male Voice Party was with us and helped materially that night and in our church services. The roasted sheep was cut up and served in buttered bun (or roll) sandwiches. This repast was eaten by the light of a huge bonfire which the young men had built upon the beach.

As the "witching hour" of midnight approached the company formed a large circle and sang first, "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot?" and then, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and as some were leaving the next day, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

For the first time in the history of our reunion we had a surf clubs competition. Two teams, representing Newcastle and Sydney respectively, and coached by Dave and Jack Corbett, experienced life-savers, made entry. Features of the contest were the march past (with flags and surf reel), surf reel drill, rescue work and resuscitation. The Newcastle team acquitted themselves better in the first three subjects than did the Sydney boys, but the work of resuscitation on the part of the Sydney boys put them ahead by just two fifths of one per cent. This event convinced the onlookers that we had two efficient surf squads should life saving be necessary.

There were six baptisms in the lake. Elder W. J. Haworth baptized a young man and woman, and later Elder A. V. Robinson immersed four young people. All were confirmed at the sacrament meeting.

Spiritually and socially the reunion was a decided success. Each year the grounds seem to become more beautiful. The weather was fine. The surf was in gentle mood. The fishermen had plenty of luck. Recreations were entertaining and educative. The murmur of the ocean was our lullaby, and the songs of birds awakened us in the mornings. Everything conspired to enrich the spiritual tone.

W. J. Haworth.

Far West Stake

Fortescue Branch

The annual business meeting was held Sunday, January 10. Stake President Ward A. Hougas and Elder L. A. Keck, a member of the stake high council, came from Saint Joseph for this meeting. Elder Keck gave an instructive and interesting talk preceding the election. With Brother Hougas in the chair, the officers for the year 1932 were elected. Brother Albert McKown was sustained as pastor.

The women's department held its first business meeting of the year Wednesday, January 13. Pastor McKown met with them to help in selecting officers for the year.

An all-day social and quilting meeting was held on Wednesday, January 27, thirteen women being present to quilt. Several men were guests at noon. An offering was given to defray the expense of the lunch. Three new members joined the social work the first of the year.

Cameron Branch

The month of January has been a busy one for Cameron Saints. Few changes were made in the election of officers for the new year. F. L. Hinderks was sustained as pastor; he chose for his counselors, D. W. Gamet and S. H. Simmons. Brother Clifford Constance was reelected church school director; Sister Florence Gamet was reelected supervisor of the junior department; Clifford Constance was appointed supervisor of the adult department, and Sister Lottie Daniel was chosen as young adult leader.

The women of the branch have been busy and faithful in the work of that department. Sister Lottie Daniel was sustained as leader for another year. Regular meetings are held every two weeks. Much of the time is spent quilting. A goodly sum from this department was contributed to the branch in the past year.

On Sunday evening, January 10, a pageant, "The Old Rugged Cross," was presented as a fitting setting for the splendid sermon, "Seeking Jesus," by Pastor F. L. Henderks.

Bishop Milo Burnett was a welcome visitor Sunday, January 17, when he preached at the morning service.

We feel that we were fortunate to have with us Apostle Paul M. Hanson to hold a week's series of meetings, January 24 to January 31, inclusive. Large crowds greeted him each night, many non-members attending. Brother Hanson's wide experience in foreign fields and his thorough knowledge pertaining to American archæology furnished a splendid variety of subjects for discussion. A special song service was held each evening, and on Friday evening a number of young people from Stewartsville Branch gave a fifteen minute musical program preceding the sermon. This was much appreciated.

The Cameron Saints feel that these meetings were an inspiration to them. They have increased our vision, strengthened our faith, and renewed our courage to press constantly forward. We hope that sometime it may be again our happy privilege to have Brother Hanson with us.

Kingston Branch

Bishop Milo Burnett was a welcome guest at Kingston Branch Sunday, January 31. He delivered a very excellent sermon at the morning service.

Gallatin, Missouri

The scattered Saints at Gallatin were glad to have the stake president visit them Sunday afternoon, January 31. Brother J. L. Bear, of Saint Joseph, and Brother David W. Gamet, of Cameron, accompanied Brother Ward A. Hougas to this service with the isolated Saints. Sunday school is conducted at this place but there is no branch.

Richmond Branch

Although Richmond is one of the smaller branches in Far West Stake, the work is progressing very well here. Brother Oscar Case conducted a series of meetings from January 17 to 31. The attendance was large throughout the series and some nights the little church was packed to overflowing. A number of nonmembers are interested.

Friday night, January 15, Ward A. Hougas spent the evening with us and delivered a splendid sermon to a good crowd.

Saint Joseph Branch

The first month of 1932 has seen various activities in Saint Joseph well under way for the year. This month has marked the beginning of two activities provided in the branch business meeting.

A series of pre-baptismal classes is being held at third church on Monday and Thursday evenings. The series began January 25 and will close February 15. Much interest is being shown and many nonmembers are attending. Under the provisions of the resolution, candidates for membership must complete this course or its equivalent before being baptized.

One service of particular interest at First Church was the family worship service on Sunday, January 17. This service is to be held the third Sunday of each month. The congregation for this first family worship service was the largest one for Sunday morning for a long time. Pastor Ward A. Hougas gave an interesting object lesson on "Builders" which was enjoyed by children and adults alike.

Kirtland, Ohio

On January 3, a well-attended sacrament service was held at the Temple. Elder Thomas gave a splendid talk from the pulpit before the bread was broken. He emphasized our need of God and the meaning of our part in the Lord's Supper.

On this morning, before the dismissal of the church school, Sister Marjorie Stiffler sang "Suffer Little Children," accompanied by Sister Katherine Booher. Then the infant son of Brother and Sister Norman Parsons was blessed.

The Kirtland reunion committee met here December 26. Members of this committee are Elder James E. Bishop, president of the district, of Steubenville, Ohio; Missionary John R. Grice, and Elder A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, and Elder John R. Cooper, of Kirtland.

January 17 Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley delivered two excellent addresses at the Temple. Brother Gunsolley's personality and spirituality have, for a number of years, connected him with the ministerial and educational fields of the church. Sister J. A. Gunsolley gave a short talk to the church school. In the morning Brother and Sister W. E. Householder sang "I Will Magnify Thee." In the evening Sister Martha Parsons sang "Repentance," by Gustav Von Meckel, accompanied by Sister Irene Flack.

Elder E. A. Webbe addressed the junior and senior English classes of the Kirtland High School not long ago on Doctor Samuel Johnson, other writers, and the printings of the English people. Mr. Webbe was born in England and lived there for some time. His father was a carver of wood cuts for illustrating books and papers, and Mr. Webbe often took these wood cuts to London. While waiting for the return train, he frequently made tours of Fleet Street and visits to Saint Paul's Cathedral.

Brother and Sister Frank Ebeling and daughter, Earlena, are staying indefinitely in Kirtland while Brother Ebeling attends to business in the vicinity. They are with Brother Ebeling's mother, Sister Minnie Ebeling. The Ebelings have been living in Missouri.

Elder J. L. Cooper occupied the pulpit the morning of January 24. Mrs. Katherine Moore and his sister, Ruth Davies, daughters of Brother and Sister D. Davies, sang "Son of My Soul," by John Keble, and were accompanied by Josephine Ebeling.

The speaker on the evening of January 24, was Attorney

Harold U. Daniels, assistant prosecutor, who gave an interesting lecture on "The Purpose of Law." He defined law as "the binding custom or practice of the community," and gave the three types of court cases, Law of Contracts, Law of Torts, and Criminal Law. Elder J. L. Cooper introduced the speaker. Mrs. Josephine Ebeling sang "Rest in the Lord," being accompanied by Mrs. Adaleine Clough on the organ, and Elder George Neville sang "I Shall Not Pass Again This Way."

There was a meeting of the church school teachers Sunday evening at six o'clock, January 31.

Lamoni Stake Conference

The annual conference of Lamoni Stake was held in Lamoni, February 6 and 7. There was small representation from distant branches, but attendance from the central and neighboring branches made large congregations for every session.

Institute of Church School Workers

On Saturday afternoon, workers from several of the church schools met in the stake classroom. Roy Cheville led the discussion, entitling it "From Now Until April 6." He presented several definite goals toward which to aim in this period. It was decided that the local churches should shape their program of education with the problems and needs of the General Conference in mind.

Business Meeting

At nine thirty on Sunday morning the day began with a worship service. On the background of the stage were these letters, "April 6, 1932." In Lamoni Stake emphasis has been given to the importance of selecting qualified delegates to send to the coming conference, and so, the congregation saw the significance of this reminder. It was further brought out in a short dialogue on the choosing of delegates by Eugene Closson and Monroe Carter.

When the transition came in the nature of the service, Blair Jensen, the stake president, took charge. First came the nomination of delegates. This came from the floor. Mimeographed ballots were prepared and distributed toward the close of the service. This year two types were prepared, alternating the order of names, thus insuring against the tendency to check the names first appearing. Tellers were appointed and results announced at the afternoon session.

The following were chosen as delegates to General Conference: J. W. Barr, George Blair, G. N. Briggs, Roy Cheville, E. E. Closson, N. Ray Carmichael, Miss Mabel Carlile, Robert Campbell, G. L. DeLapp, J. F. Garver, Mrs. J. F. Garver, A. R. Gilbert, H. H. Gold, L. G. Holloway, Blair Jensen, L. G. Kelley, J. E. Leeper, Joseph Lane, A. L. Loving, L. W. Mof-fett, and W. T. Shakespeare.

Other business included the disorganization of branches, approving recommendations for ordinations, and sustaining and electing stake officers. The Lone Rock and Allendale Branches were voted disorganized. The groups of Saints residing in these localities will be cared for as missions under the stake presidency. The conference approved the following recommendations for ordination—from Lamoni Branch, Arthur Walden and Ed Downey, priests; and Harvey Campbell, deacon; from Creston Branch, David Blair, elder. The stake presidency, bishopric and high council were sustained. Mrs. Burnham Silsby was chosen music director in the place of Mrs. W. H. Blair, whose health did not permit her to continue. Miss Cora Leverson was reelected secretary and recorder. Mrs. Martin Hynden was chosen director of Religious Education.

Archæological Lecture

At two thirty the Coliseum was filled for the lecture by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. He selected the phase from American Archæology which deals with the traditions concerning the visit of Christ to America after his resurrection. Apostle Hanson's specialization in this field makes him outstanding in his lectures.

The Lord's Supper

One unusual feature of the day was the evening sacrament service. The limitation of housing facilities to Sunday seemed to demand such an arrangement. Several expressed their approval of it as a fitting climax to the day. Besides the sixteen priests who served, there sat at the table, President F. M. McDowell, Apostles J. F. Garver and Paul M. Hanson, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Blair Jensen, and Roy Cheville of the stake presidency, and T. S. Williams. The A Cappella Chorus sang as the bread was broken and before the ordinations.

Lansing, Michigan

Lansing Branch is determined to work for the church with greater zeal. Samuel A. Barss, the pastor, has as his associate pastors, Alva J. Dexter, and Clarence W. Dudley; secretary, Orian Fiscus; treasurer John Luce; bishop's agent, Charles Fiscus; music director, Opal Harper; church school director, Alva Dexter. In the church school Brother Dexter has the cooperation of the assistant director, John Luce; the superintendent of adults, C. W. Dudley, of young people, James Andrews, and of children, Wanda Ferguson. Frances Dudley is the secretary.

The Sunday morning church school is well attended, the average number being one hundred and twenty-five, and the Friday evening session is better attended. There are Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and teacher training classes, also classes for the boys and girls. The study hour is usually followed by a twenty-minute program. Much local talent is being discovered by these programs.

Brother Alva Dexter was recently requested to take charge of a Sunday school at the Community Church in the north end of the city, and is not able to be with us on Sunday mornings. He is a capable young man, and we are sure he is doing a good work and welcomes this opportunity to teach the gospel to others. Brother John Luce takes charge of our church school.

Prayer services are well attended. God has been wonderfully blessing the Saints with the gifts. Messages of admonition and encouragement are frequently given.

The depression has hit many of the Saints very hard. But we are leaving the "de" out of "depression," also the "i," and using the remainder for our slogan—"Press on." A greater spirit of unity prevails, and we are learning the meaning of being our brother's keeper.

A storehouse has been started here by Clarence Dudley, others assisting. Through it we are more able to efficiently help those who may be in need.

Five members, two children and three adults, were added to our number during January.

Each Monday evening the priesthood meet with the men of the branch for study. Much interest is being manifested among the men-folk.

The women are working splendidly under the leadership of Sister Ercel Trescott. They are able to bring much needed funds into the treasury.

Elder Leonard Dudley, of East Jordan, has been here several weeks. He and Sister Dudley are visiting at the home of their daughter, Sister Jesse Tischer. He has preached some splendid sermons.

Apostle D. T. Williams gave a lecture January 10, on "Seeking Divine Approbation," and February 7, he lectured on "The Resurrection of the Dead." His visits are much enjoyed and we receive much good from his lectures.

On January 31, Brother Wesley Russel preached the evening sermon. He has been a member of the church about six months and is a young man of twenty-two years who has been preaching since he was twelve years old. He has been noted throughout Michigan and parts of Canada as the "boy evangelist." The past few years he has been undenominational, having become dissatisfied with the teachings of a number of churches with which he had come in contact during his ministry. He spent some time in Chicago working with Paul Rader. Relating the experiences leading up to becoming a member of our church, he tells of searching for the one true church, described in the Bible, and which he knew must be in existence somewhere. He continually prayed to God for guidance. He was loaned a copy of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, and was much impressed while reading it. He went into the woods alone, knelt in earnest prayer to God, asking that his will might be revealed to him. Then God spoke, telling him that he had at last found the true church of Jesus Christ; that he should be baptized at once, then he would receive authority to go out and teach the gospel. He was baptized and during the confirmation was called into the priesthood. Brother Russel is a worker for the Master, preaching the gospel with power and much assurance wherever he goes.

Brother and Sister Gerald Main are the proud parents of a baby daughter, born February 1. A new girl also came February 1, to make her home with Brother and Sister Everett Barss.

The Saints were saddened when Audrey Tischer, nine-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister Jesse Tischer, passed away January 12. She was their only daughter and a lovable girl. Though she was young, her life was an example to older Saints.

Under the competent leadership of Elder S. A. Barss and his young associates, the future looks bright in spite of depression, bank failures, and war clouds. We are sure of God's watchful care over us. We desire to do all we can to remove the financial burden of the church, and help spread the gospel.

Thayer, Missouri

The Stone Church

We have a strong branch organization and hope to accomplish much in the coming year. Services are held at the Stone Church as follows: Church school 10 a. m. Sunday; preaching 11 a. m., and 7.30 p. m. On Wednesday night comes prayer meeting and on Friday night Bible study.

Our prayer services are excellent. It is seldom that we fail to have one hundred per cent meetings.

In the Bible study during the past year, we used a teacher training course in the Bible. This year we are studying the Book of Mormon, using the adult quarterly as a text. Much interest is shown in this class. The more we study the Book of Mormon, the more we think it a wonderful book. This class is in charge of Joseph P. McLain.

About the middle of December occurred our business meeting. Administrative officers of the branch are: Pastor, Elder G. A. Davis; assistant pastor, Elder J. W. Hancock. Clarence Mayo is the solicitor and Bertha McLain secretary. At this meeting the branch voted to organize a church school, and chose Joseph P. McLain as director. Elder J. W. Hancock is adult supervisor, and Harold Hancock is supervisor of young people. Bernice McLain is secretary, and Bessie McGuire directs the music. The following were chosen as teachers: J. W. Hancock, Harold Hancock, Chloe Miller, Edith Hancock, Cordia Salem, and Ray Ricketts.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister J. W. Hancock, is active. They held a pie supper in the basement of the church January 16, and although it was a rainy, disagreeable night, they cleared a little more than twenty-five dollars.

While we have a small branch at Thayer, you would travel far to find a group better in team work. There are no disturbing factors here. The spirit of fellowship and love permeates the heart of each member of the group. We are trying to live in peace and love and contentment. May God grant that in years to come it may ever be so.

We wish that every group of Saints could realize that there are at least three things to be observed if they expect to accomplish anything worth while either for themselves or for the Master. These three are: (1) Love and trust in God and in one another; (2) The total effacement of self, and (3) A determination to put one's shoulder to the wheel and push with every ounce of energy.

Thayer has planned many things for the year. We hope to see the church safely weather the storm brought on by the financial depression from which the whole world is suffering, and we think we are safe in promising that Thayer Branch will do the best it can to help in the coming year, that the church may carry on.

Communication From Bishop's Agent

To the Saints of Arizona, Greeting: Having been appointed by the Presiding Bishopric to act as their agent for the State of Arizona, I am choosing this means to inform the Saints of Arizona that I am ready to receipt them for any amount from five cents to ten thousand dollars. I should be pleased to hear from all the scattered members and to get into personal correspondence with them. I shall try to visit as many of you as I can, and will be pleased to have all reports from solicitors, sent to me in time for me to get my reports away by the 25th of each month. As these are the instructions from the Presiding Bishopric.

This is the time of the church's trials, and while I am aware that most of us are poor in the things of the world, let us keep in mind the "widow's mite," and the great sacrifice which Christ made for us, and the glory that is to be revealed to those who make the sacrifice to redeem Zion, and become stewards for God. Let us lay on the altar of sacrifice the dimes and dollars we may have been spending for those things which would not advance the cause in which we agreed to become a coworker with God when we entered the waters of baptism.

I shall be pleased to answer any questions, or assist in any way that I can. I shall be glad to furnish each member of the state who have not already filed one, an inventory blank. Let us cooperate and raise our quota which is twelve hundred dollars. My address is box 2546, Tucson, Arizona.—W. P. Bootman.

North Manchester, England

This branch mourns the passing of Sister Emily Gillson, wife of Priest H. W. Gillson, December 22. The funeral arrangements were in the hands of Patriarch William H. Greenwood who conducted a short service at the home and at the graveside. When he preached the memorial sermon the following Sunday evening at the church, he paid tribute to our sister's beautiful character, her influence for good, and the sympathy and help she gave to all in need. At this service Sister Maud Nelson sang by special request Sister Gillson's favorite hymn, "One Hour With Jesus." Sister Gillson was sixty-one years of age at the time of her death.

The sympathy of the branch is extended to the bereaved husband and three daughters.

West Haven Saints Have New Meeting Place

The West Haven, Connecticut, congregation has outgrown its former meeting place, the home of Brother and Sister John Raylance, and has been fortunate in securing a hall at 945 First Avenue.

The Saints rent this hall from the Veterans of Foreign Wars. They met there on Sunday morning, February 7, for sacrament. A peaceful spirit reigned.

Bisbee, Arizona

Bisbee Saints mourn the death of Pastor H. C. Goldie who succeeded Brother S. D. Condit. Brother Goldie's passing made two pastors this branch has lost by death in less than six weeks. Nevertheless, we feel we must continue to go forward, for God will have a tried people.

Elder C. O. Myers, of Arma, Kansas, was here on a visit and his services were enjoyed. We have also lost our Sunday school superintendent, J. W. Myers, who with his family, accompanied his father back to Kansas. A farewell party was given them.

Elder S. S. Smith, of the Arizona and New Mexico field, was here last week-end and expects to be here this week to hold meetings Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

We are left without an active elder in Bisbee, but arrangements have been made for Brother Taylor, of Douglas, to come up here on the First Sunday of each month to administer the sacrament.

Scandinavia Over the Top During Sacrifice Period

When I received a letter from the Bishop informing me that our quota for the sacrifice period was four hundred kroner, I thought it would be impossible to raise that amount from our small band of Saints, none of whom are overly blessed with this world's goods. But by letters as well as through personal work I presented the needs of the church as well as I could. The response was much greater than I had dared to expect. Not only did we raise the four hundred kroner expected of us, but funds continued to come until we had reached the amount of five hundred and seventy kroner and seventy are. Never before have the Saints so willingly responded to the call of the general church for funds as upon this occasion. It has brought me much encouragement. Some who never before supported the church financially came forward with their offering this time. Ten new names were entered on my tithing book. And the good work seems to not have stopped at the end of December. Tithes and offerings received thus far during January are above the average usually received during a month.

An article on tithing written by me appeared in the November issue of Sandhetens Banner, which came at a very appropriate time. When the article was written and sent in for publication I knew nothing of the sacrifice period to be held in November and December. Its appearance at that time helped the Saints better to understand their duty. This week I have received ten kroner in the mail from one of the poorest families we have in the church. When I received it I thought of the widow's mite. Surely this family must have given from that which they needed for the necessities of life. It was an indication that all who want to help will find a way. May the good work continue until the church is free from debt and the gospel preached in all the world.

V. D. RUCH.

Saints in Australia are looking forward to their mission conference at the Easter season. Larger attendance of adult members than that had at the reunion at Tiona at Christmas is expected, and all will enjoy the well-balanced conference program.

Sydney Harbor Bridge will be opened March 19, and cheap excursion fares will give the Saints of Australasia an excellent opportunity to attend the conference, which is scheduled to commence March 20 and to extend to Easter Sunday. Social features are being prepared by the Sydney Social Club for March 19 and Easter Monday respectively.

Coeur d'Alene, Idaho

This branch was organized with fifty-nine charter members December 14, 1920. Only nine of those charter members remain in Coeur d'Alene. Four are dead and others have moved to various places. But numbers have moved into the branch, and several have entered by baptism. Eleven were baptized during the past year. At present seventy-three are enrolled on the branch record, and the church officers are in personal touch with them.

Part of the time, during the existence of the branch, there have been several members of the priesthood here. Then at other times there has been only one, Elder L. E. Holmes. Brother Holmes has appreciated all the help he could get to help carry on the local work. At present there are two elders, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon in Coeur d'Alene.

We have more nonmembers attending the church school than ever before, and hope to have an increase in membership from this source.

January 24, the young people took full charge of the church school and the regular directors enjoyed the privilege of "just looking on." This experience was helpful in preparing others for future work.

The junior girls, supervised by their teacher and the church school director, gave an interesting Christmas program to a well-filled house on Christmas Eve.

January 3, the young people gave a play, "Other Sheep Have I." Carrie Stucker, the teacher, directed the production which was well given.

Those of the ministry who have visited the branch in the recent past are Evangelist Richard Baldwin, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, and Missionary A. C. Martin. Brother Baldwin held meetings for one week. Sister Baldwin preceded him several evenings with some interesting talks. Brother Edwards preached for us one Sunday afternoon. Brother Martin was here nearly a week. He preached twice on Sunday, January 17, and spent the rest of his time visiting the membership. Elder Fout, pastor, and others of the local priesthood, accompanied and assisted him in these visits. Brother Martin plans to come again to visit those he did not have time to see while here.

Miss Percille Worsencroft, who has been visiting in the Bert Stucker home the past two weeks, is returning to her home in Iowa. She is a willing worker and has helped the branch with her musical ability.

Farnworth (England) Branch

In September, 1931, we had a visit from the district presidency. Following the afternoon session, tea was served. The day was well spent and the meetings were thoroughly enjoyed.

The branch harvest festival occurred October 18. The room was tastefully decorated with fruit, flowers, vegetables, and other good things. Brother S. H. Hope was the afternoon speaker, and the evening service was given over to Brother Harold Barrington, of Manchester.

The following Sunday was turned over to the elderly people of the branch, the veterans of the church. Speeches were given by the following: Sister Mary Rothwell, who has given fifty-three years of service to the church; Sister Ann Spargo, formerly of Farnworth, but now of Wigan, with a membership of fifty years; Sister Sarah Walsh, who has served for forty-seven years; Sister Mary Fenny, with forty-one years to her credit, and Brother William Fenny who also has been a member for forty-one years. This service was most encouraging to the younger members.

November 21, Saturday, the children of North Manchester Branch presented to us the dialogue, "The Golden Ladder." They were directed by Sister Olive and Brother W. Heywood. It was a treat to listen to these children sing.

And now we come to the last event of the year, our sale of work held December 5. It was opened at six o'clock in the evening by Sister Mary Spargo, assisted by Sister Annie Spargo and Brother S. H. Hope. After the opening ceremony, pink rose buttonholes were presented the three in charge by John Ross, Ronald Fray, and Stanley Spargo, boys of the branch.

The stalls were well arranged and trimmed with orange and black. The women's stall took the form of drapery and fancy goods, the men's, groceries, and the children's booth had sweets, oranges, and small ware. As a result of their sales children and adults handed in purses filled with the returns of their ingenious ideas and hard labors. The children sold chocolates, matches, and home-made toffee; some of the women sold potato pie, jam, chocolates, and others sewed. Credit goes to all for their efforts.

The amount made by the sale of work was thirty pounds, which sum was handed to the building fund treasurer. It was an increase over last year's sale, and we are grateful to all who took part in buying, giving, or working.

At eight thirty refreshments were served. Then after a thirty-minute interval the rest of the evening was spent socially. The children first took part with songs and recitations after which the adults gave a sketch, "Our Parochial Gathering." A great deal of excitement was aroused by the accidental dropping of a tin tray from one of the stalls just when Brother J. Spargo had the gathering spellbound with a ghost story.

The sale was a great success considering the hard times the members of the branch are experiencing in unemployment and short-time working. But members and friends of the branch deserve hearty congratulations on the way they have worked and united in 1931. We hope the same ambitious spirit will live with us during the years to come.

Toronto, Canada

The first birthday of the new Toronto Church was celebrated by special anniversary services Sunday, January 17. The young people held their prayer service at 8 a. m., Apostle R. S. Budd in charge. Then at 9.30 a. m. followed the general prayer meeting, Brother Budd again in charge. At eleven the following visiting brothers spoke: Elders William Fligg and Frank Gray represented London District. They spoke of the early history of Toronto Branch. Elder H. A. Dayton, of Owen Sound District, and Elder Charles Hannah, of Hamilton Branch, also addressed the congregation. At this hour the junior department held a special program in which Brother Budd gave a talk and Mrs. Marshall entertained with her special story telling.

At three o'clock in the afternoon the church school had the program. Elder Frank Gray again spoke and Bishop A. F. McLean gave an address on church finances. At this session Pastor J. L. Prentice was asked to make a presentation to one of the members of Brother Bertrum Gozzard's class for regular attendance at Sunday school. Allan Bailey was presented a set of bookends in recognition of his attending class one hundred and thirty-two consecutive Sundays. At the seven o'clock service, Apostle R. S. Budd was the speaker and gave a wonderful sermon. The church was packed and there were chairs in the aisles.

The anniversary banquet was held the following Monday evening. Brother Prentice was chairman. Elder J. A. Wilson gave the toast to "The King." Bishop A. F. McLean spoke in detail on the finances, showing that for the year, 1931, Toronto Branch collected from all sources nine thousand five hundred dollars and that at the same time Toronto District had about eight hundred dollars over the required quota for the general church. Mrs. Mary Wilson, supervisor of the department of women, which sponsored the banquet, spoke of their work of the year. This department during the year collected and paid two thousand dollars, covering the interest on the church mortgage and as a surprise this night handed over another check for five hundred dollars, to be applied on the mortgage principal. Elder B. H. Hewitt present the toast to "The Church" to which Apostle R. S. Budd responded.

On Thursday, January 28, the young people presented the play, "Cyclone Sally," proceeds going toward the pipe organ fund. This department has arranged for several plays and is keeping very busy. In fact the different departments have the nights all taken until well on in April.

Recent speakers were Elders James Pycoc, Douglas Cameron, James A. Wilson, B. H. Hewitt, Grant St. John, J. L. Prentice and Brother William Pugsley. Regardless of the world conditions we feel encouraged, and hope for a successful year in the church.

Independence

Perhaps because Independence has many Saints—there are 6,324 names on the records—and because their activities are divided among nine congregations and one mission, the prayer services and their benefits are sometimes not given the emphasis they should have.

The center place is divided into districts which are subdivided into groups. The nine congregations, Stone Church, Second Church, Walnut Park, Liberty Street, Enoch Hill, Englewood, Spring Branch, Gudgell Park, and East Independence, include forty-three groups. And in addition, there is Sugar Creek Mission. Each group of members is the center of a number of church activities chief of which is the midweek prayer meeting.

Imagine Independence going to prayer service on Wednesday evening—more than forty adult prayer services in the homes of the Saints, and three or four young people's gatherings for worship. At the Stone Church alone on last Wednesday night there were about one hundred and twenty-five young people. Indeed the Saints in Independence believe in prayer, and they are praying.

In these prayer services neighbors bear testimony of their faith in Christ; the Scriptures are read and made clear by the elders; the singing of hymns comforts the troubled, and the Saints unite in prayer for one another and for the entire church. Here are found evidences of the love and watch-care of the Master, admonitions, prophecies, and other gospel gifts. Those who regularly attend the group prayer services are blessed.

On Sunday the early morning prayer meeting in a number of congregations is an established institution and is regarded as the best way to begin a day for the Lord. One or two churches have midafternoon services of general character. Of these the Stone Church gathering is outstanding. There are many men in Independence who give a number of hours each week to the conduction of and attendance at services of prayer. For these consecrated helpers the Saints are grateful.

The play, "Bread," given by the young people of the Stone Church, won the silver loving cup in the dramatic contest sponsored by the young people's council, which ended Thursday night, February 11, in the dining hall of the church. Mrs. Albert Brackenbury directed the play. The contest is an annual affair and the winners will keep the cup until the contest next year. The first group of plays was given Tuesday night on the permanent stage erected for dramatic activities in the dining hall. Second place was given to Englewood young people who presented "Menfolk," Miss Pauline Siegfried directing. "Mansions," the play given by Walnut Park, and directed by Mrs. E. Moorman, was placed third, and "Neighbors," given by Liberty Street and directed by Miss Mabel Tignor, won fourth place. Judges in the contest were Wallace Burlington and Mrs. Ross Moore, of Kansas City, and Mrs. Leonard Lea, of Independence. Roy Settles, president of the council, took charge of the contest.

A compilation of reports from the various units of the Independence school system at the end of the fifth month of the school term, gives the total enrollment for the city to be 4,701 as compared with 4,616 for the same time last year. The boys continue to outnumber the girls 2,414 to 2,287

This report includes William Chrisman High School, Junior High School, and the several grade schools, Alton, Benton, Bryant, Columbian, Gilpin, McCoy, Noland, Ott, and Young.

Last Thursday night the six clubs of the Auditorium Basketball League completed the first half of the schedule with the following scores: Liberty Street 16, Cubs 8; Enoch Hill 15, Stone Church 13; Walnut Park 14, Auditorium 13. The play of the Liberty Street Club has been the feature of the race. However, the other teams have added new players and the second half promises some keen competition.

Stone Church

Apostle James A. Gillen will begin a series of special services Sunday, February 28, at the Stone Church, continuing every night for a week.

The everlasting covenant and its comprehension of the covenants set forth in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants composed the theme for Brother Albert Carmichael's Sunday morning sermon to the Stone Church congregation. Some of the covenants mentioned as included in the everlasting covenant are the covenant of the priesthood, of baptism, and of the Lord's Supper. These we must observe and keep if we would have part in the everlasting covenant.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang two anthems, solo parts being sung by Mrs. S. A. Burgess and Mrs. John Isaacks. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee played the organ. Elder J. S. Kelley was in charge of the hour, assisted by Elder S. A. Thiel.

A worshipful communion service was conducted by the junior pastor in the lower auditorium of the church the morning of February 7. Pastor Will Bolinger was in charge with Elders David Van Trump and James Strachan. Assisting priests were Roy McNeil, Earl Page, Oral Andes, and Roy Davey, and W. H. Snead and James Etter were the deacons in charge. Mrs. J. R. Lentell directed the music. The response of the children was good, there being eighteen testimonies in four minutes.

A Lincoln program was presented as the eleven o'clock feature of the junior church last Sunday, the class of girls, taught by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, being in charge. Jane Fairbanks is president of the class. There was a piano solo by Jeanne Scott, the pledge of allegiance to the flag led by Warren Cannon, a vocal solo by Florence Burgess, a story by Evelyn Burgess, and piano solos by Ruth Harder and Alice Harrington.

In the evening the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig, presented its annual concert to the Stone Church congregation. A large crowd of church people and friends enjoyed the following excellent program:

Intermezzo	Hollins
Hazel Scott Withee, organist
a. Processional, Scripture and "Amen"	Blaine Bender, reader, and Chorus
b. "Hear Lord, Our God"	Tschaikowsky
c. "Hymn of Praise"	Tschaikowsky
"The Spinning Song"	Thomas
Elinor Smith, harpist
a. "O Day of Penitence"	Gounod
b. "Wake, Awake"	Christiansen
"The Deluge"	Saint Saens
Gomer Cool, violinist—Mrs. Withee, organist
a. "Fierce Was the Wild Billows"	Noble
b. "Hymn to the Savior"	Kremser
Edward Brackenbury, tenor—Miss Smith, harpist
Mrs. Withee, organist
c. "Praise the Lord Eternal"	Schuetky
"Grand Offertoire de St. Cecile"	Batiste
Mrs. Withee, organist
a. "Listen to the Lambs"	Dett
Juanita Roedel, soloist
b. "I'll Never Turn Back"	Dett
Delta Nace, soloist
c. "Beautiful Savior"	Christiansen
Gladys Good, soloist

Liberty Street Church

"Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and his righteousness," was the text used by Elder Harry G. Barto in his sermon Sunday at the eleven o'clock service. In a deliberate manner he expounded the laws by which the Saints must abide in order to build up Zion.

In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller gave an illustrated lecture on archaeological discoveries substantiating the Book of Mormon. A collection was taken for the support of the Graphic Arts Bureau.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the young son of Brother and Sister Chester Young was baptized in the font at Second Church by Elder John R. Lentell and confirmed at the service in the evening at Liberty Street Church.

On February 2, the teachers and officers of the church school had a banquet in the basement of the church. Sixty-one people were seated at two rows of tables arranged in the shape of a "V." Invited guests were Elder and Sister John F. Sheehy; Elder and Sister George G. Lewis, and the husbands and wives of teachers and officers. Pastor John R. Lentell was toastmaster. The program opened with everyone in line passing and shaking hands. Elder Leonard Lea offered the blessing on the food. A baked-chicken dinner with all the trimmings was enjoyed, after which Fred Friend led some songs, and then Elder Lewis, director of Religious Education in Independence, gave a talk on the value of teacher training. This was followed by a talk by Harry Blake, superintendent of our church school, which stressed the far-reaching effects of the work of the teachers in molding the lives of boys and girls. A message by the pastor in Zion, Brother John F. Sheehy, was a fitting climax to the program of the evening. The closing prayer was offered by Brother Cleland.

The young people's activities, under the direction of Miss Mabel Tignor, Cecil Walker, and Elbert Mock, are going forward in dramatic and recreational fields. The latter includes the activities of basket ball teams in two different leagues in which each team holds first place.

The Girl Scouts are giving a chili supper at the church tomorrow evening, February 18, to raise funds for their registration with the national scout office.

Enoch Hill Church

The boys' class, taught by Brother E. H. McKean, was in charge of the church school program hour Sunday morning. They gave a pleasing program in honor of one of the noble men of the ages, Abraham Lincoln. The program was as follows: A talk on the life of Lincoln by E. H. McKean; "Song of the Union," boys' chorus; a tribute to Lincoln's picture, Bob Street; reading, "Visions of Lincoln," Laverne McKean; cornet and French horn duet, Edmond and David Allen; song, "Lincoln," boys' chorus. Quotations from Lincoln, given by each class member as he placed a letter under the picture of Lincoln, interested the school. When this number was finished the name "Lincoln" was spelled beneath the picture. Then David Allen played "Taps."

Elder J. R. Lentell, the morning speaker, following the anthem, "The Captain Is Calling," by the choir, took as his theme, "The Captain Is Calling." It seemed fitting that Scoutmaster Ammon Badder and his troop of boys were seated on the rostrum.

"Let us have faith in our Captain," urged Elder Lentell. "We must work because of love for the Captain, not from fear of the punishment which might result from neglect of our work." The service closed with the scout benediction.

At the evening hour a fine concert was given by the Auditorium Orchestra.

Tuesday evening, February 9, the losers of the "elephant contest" entertained the winners. The basement of the church was the scene of much merriment and festivity, and the losing team, giving as the evening's feature a humorous program, found that it is almost more fun to lose in a church school contest than it is to win.

The Dorcas Class of the church school, taught by Mrs.

John Swalley, was organized in January with the following officers: Assistant teacher, Mrs. Ivy Chrestensen; president, Mrs. Charles Warren; secretary, Mrs. L. R. Street. This group, which is composed of mothers of the young people of Enoch Hill, meets once each month to spend a worth-while evening. The February meeting was held at the home of the president. The program for the evening was "The Dorcas Story" read along with the scripture reading of the life of Dorcas, and other readings and songs. President F. M. McDowell was present and spoke on the relationships of parents and young people. These women are trying to live the Dorcas life, knowing that unselfishness and helpfulness will bring blessings to everyone.

Walnut Park Church

The early morning prayer service February 14, gave much courage and joy to the Saints although the number present was few. Elders Benjamin Bean and C. K. Green presided, and we feel that those who do not attend this early service are missing a real spiritual feast.

Attendance of the church school dropped considerably owing to the bad weather.

The speaker on this the Financial Sunday of the month was Elder T. A. Beck, who talked concerning the financial law, stressing the necessity of obedience. The choir sang the anthem, "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes," the solo being sung by Mrs. Marian Campbell. Many of the choir members of this district are singing in the Messiah Choir which is preparing the oratorio, The Messiah, for the General Conference.

Large crowds have been attending the evening services at Walnut Park. Next to the last of Brother Elbert A. Smith's "Conversations" was given Sunday night, "The Rise of the Reorganization." A historical review covering the deaths of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and events leading up to young Joseph's taking his place as leader of the church, was given by Elder K. R. Mosier. We hope that when these plays are finished our congregation will continue to grow in numbers.

Spring Branch Church

The class of Sister Irene Roberts had charge of the morning church school session last Sunday.

Bishop A. B. Phillips, the eleven o'clock speaker, chose for his text, "Shall a man full of talk be justified?"

The evening session of the church school was in charge of Brother Tankard, Sister Fish's class giving the program.

An inspiring evening message was given by Elder C. B. Woodstock.

The classes of Brother Andes and Sister Velma Jones were entertained with a Valentine party by Sister Irene Roberts's class in the basement of the church Friday evening.

The young son of Brother and Sister Austin, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia is showing signs of recovery. He is at the home of Elder Robert Fish.

Kansas City Stake

Gladstone Church

Sunday evening, February 7, was the beginning of a series of special Sunday evening sermons by Elder R. S. Salyards of Independence. Brother Salyards needs no introduction. For many years he has stood before the people as an able defender of the latter-day gospel. Sister Fred Wamsley and Mr. Smyth furnished special music.

Pastor C. A. Selbe has been ill for the last few weeks, but was sufficiently recovered to preside over the sacrament service February 7.

Recent speakers have been Elders John T. Gresty, F. B. Blair, and H. A. Koehler. Local young people have furnished the music.

The earnest interest and active participation of the young people in the church school is gladly noted.

Conference Notices

Conference of Southeastern Illinois District will meet at Mount Vernon, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, March 5 and 6. At this conference delegates will be elected to go to General Conference. All expecting to attend General Conference should be present at this conference, or send their names in with a statement of their intention.—District secretary, Mrs. Myrtle Choat, Marion, Illinois; district president, R. L. Fulk, Benton, Illinois.

Saint Louis district conference will convene on Saturday and Sunday, February 27 and 28, with Saint Louis Branch, at Grand and Carter Avenues, in Saint Louis, Missouri. At the business session Saturday at six o'clock delegates to the coming General Conference will be selected. It is expected that Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be the official guest at the conference, so make special effort to attend and hear the message Brother Hanson has for us. Please mail your statistical reports to the secretary, C. J. Remington, 1423 Cecelia Avenue, Webster Groves, Missouri.—The District Presidency.

Eastern Oklahoma conference will have only a one-day meeting and that on Sunday, March 20, at Idabel, in the county courtroom on the third floor of the courthouse. The election of delegates to General Conference and district officers composes the principal business to be transacted in the session which will open at 10.30 a. m. Since there are no Saints at Idabel, all who attend the conference should provide their own lunch.—J. W. Peterson, district president.

Change of Conference Date

The district presidency, with the consent of practically all branch officers in the district, has changed the date of district conference at Bellaire, Ohio, to February 20 and 21, so as to have Brother G. T. Griffiths and Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith with us. Opening session will be at two thirty Saturday afternoon, and as no definite time was set for election of delegates to General Conference, time for such election will be determined or announced after the conference opens. This being our spiritual and educational conference, no other business will be transacted. Hoping this notice reaches all before conference, we urge you to take advantage of this opportunity to be instructed and encouraged by these church fathers. We endeavored to get this notice to you in the last Herald by telegraphing it, but it did not reach the editors in time.—Samuel A. Martin, district secretary.

Pastoral

To the Membership of Nauvoo District, Greeting: Word recently sent out from the Presiding Bishop's office concerning the general church budget for the present year gives our quota as $6,700.

Our district secretary has proportioned this amount to the several branches according to their enrollment as follows:

Branch	Enrollment	Quota
Bevier	112	$ 610.58
Burlington	166	904.97
Fort Madison	117	637.84
Keokuk	67	365.25
Montrose	58	316.19
Nauvoo	60	327.09
Ottumwa	92	501.55
Rock Creek	95	517.90
Nonresident	363	1,978.93
	1229	$6,700.00

This is an average of $5.45 a member for the entire district.

We are therefore sending this information on to you at this time, so that each one can see what are our needs for the year, and we sincerely hope that we may be able to meet the obligation now resting upon us.—F. T. Mussell, district president, Burlington, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

STEWART.—Alice Romania Campbell was born near Keg Creek, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, February 8, 1857. In early womanhood she went to Kansas, where she married Jesse G. Stewart, of Garden City, November 29, 1886. She was the mother of four children, three of whom are living: Moroni N. and Opal D. Epperson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Mary W. Anson, of Omaha, Nebraska. She was baptized into the church in childhood, and after going to Kansas was active in Sunday school work. Upon moving to Council Bluffs, about twenty-two years ago, her house was a gathering place for her neighbors wherein they were taught the way of life in the Sunday school and at preaching services. These were held nearly every Sunday until in 1920 the branch began to provide for the growing interest in that part of the city, purchased a building, and provided services there. It was known as Belmont Mission. Our sister always had the missionary spirit. As a result of her efforts, directly or indirectly, thirty-nine were baptized into the church. She died January 17, 1932, at the home of her daughter in Council Bluffs. While her health had been failing for some time, she was ill only a short time. The funeral was held by Elder J. F. Mintun January 20. Interment was in Lewis Cemetery, near the place of her birth.

HORNE.—William P. Horne, long a resident of Independence, Missouri, passed away after a lingering illness, January 19, 1932. He was born in Independence June 22, 1860. Was baptized a member of the church December 27, 1896, by Joseph Smith. He is survived by his wife, Mary E., of the home; one daughter, Mrs. R. J. Chappelow; two sons, Melvin A., of Columbus, Ohio, and Fred R., of Independence; two sisters, Mrs. L. K. White and Mrs. J. W. Dodson, of Blue Springs; one brother, T. H. Horne, of Blue Springs. The funeral was conducted from the Walnut Park Church, Independence, and interment was in Blue Springs, Missouri. Funeral rites were in charge of Elders Ammon White and E. K. Greene.

WAYLETT.—Claudia S. Richards was born at Malad, Idaho, May 6, 1874; married Noel B. Waylett May 15, 1892. Died at Pocatella, Idaho, January 23, 1932. The funeral and interment were at Malad, January 27, A. M. Chase officiating. Two daughters and one son preceded her in death. Surviving are, the husband, four sons: Rese R., Kenneth E., Harry K., and W. Carey, all of Rupert, Idaho; one daughter, Mrs. W. G. Richards, and two grandchildren, Claudia and Noel, all of Pocatella, Idaho; two sisters, Mrs. J. M. Daniels, of Rupert, Idaho, and Mrs. George Metcalf, of Philipsburg, Montana, and five brothers: William, Thomas L., and David H., of Ogden, Utah, Evan M., of Long Beach, California, and E. Richards of Malad, Idaho. Mrs. Waylett was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints June 18, 1883, by R. J. Anthony.

Joseph R. Lambert Passes

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT

With the death of Joseph R. Lambert on February 17 in Independence, another one in the rapidly thinning ranks of the early defenders of the Reorganization has passed to the beyond.

Brother Lambert was an able man, a servant devoted to the cause, and an exemplary minister of the faith. Through both the spoken and the printed word he taught and helped the work to which he gave his life. He lived to finish his labor, and to enjoy in the company of his family the rest to which he was so justly entitled. The Herald wishes to express the sympathy of the church to the family in this hour of their loss.

In this issue of the Herald the reader will notice that the "Blue Pencil Notes" by Elbert A. Smith contain a fine tribute to Brother Lambert.

Staying Power

Almost any day, in these difficult times, you can read of some person who has decided to give up the struggle and "end it all." Often the person who has decided to quit this life is a father who has a family dependent upon him; sometimes it is a mother, who not only kills herself but takes the children with her.

The sad thing about "ending it all" is that it does not end the trouble which caused it. It ends a life, it ends an opportunity, but it does not end the problem. The children who were hungry go hungrier still; the mother who was in want faces loneliness and redoubled destitution. Everything that was bad becomes worse. Nothing is helped, and no problems are solved. And almost always there are those left behind whose miseries are increased, whose confidence and trust are violated by the act.

What men and women need is the power to "stay" in times of duress and sorrow. There is nothing that can give us the strength to endure trouble that religion can. Its consolations bear us up and give us hope of better things, and faith to see in the future the justice which the present denies us.

It is easy for the losing team to quit; it is easy for the defeated army to surrender. It is a much harder thing to carry on, but it is much nobler to do so.

When we are ready to quit, the calm voice of faith says to us: "Stand and be patient. Endure your trial. It too will pass, and all will be well. Stand fast. Be true."

Blue Pencil Notes

"MEN OF POWER AND EXCELLENT WISDOM"

It was under the administration of Joseph R. Lambert as minister in charge that I was called and ordained to the office of priest in 1898. However, my acquaintance with him went back farther than that time. In fact the first Latter Day Saint sermon that I recall hearing was preached by Joseph R. Lambert. He was the first missionary of the church, that I remember, who visited that part of the country where my people were living as isolated Saints when I was a small boy. In the reverential attitude that I held toward the ministry, it seemed to me that Brother Lambert, as a man of God, was quite able to look entirely through me and perceive every small deviation from the path of rectitude of which I had been guilty, including the use of certain bywords that had recently come to my knowledge which were supposed to be beyond the acquaintance of a boy of my age. Perhaps I was not entirely wrong. He was a man of penetrating gaze and penetrating mind. In any event, if I was not a better boy, at least I was more careful during his visit. At that time he was an ardent hunter and took me with him frequently to help carry home the bag of game, which established him permanently in my confidence and good graces.

Joseph R. Lambert was one of a remarkable family. Probably his best known brothers were Daniel F. and Bishop George P. Lambert. Daniel Lambert was alternately school-teacher and editor. In his younger days he taught my wife in the public schools of Lamoni and in his later years taught one of my sons. All of the time by spirit he was a crusader, seeking out the cause that appealed to him as being righteous often finding it (perhaps almost by preference) on the unpopular side and with the minority. Having found that cause he always threw into it his energies and abilities which were of the highest order. Through the Independent Patriot, he carried on his crusades with his brilliant pen, interesting himself in both politics and religion. I differed from him in politics and at times on other questions, and once or twice felt the force of his pen; but those facts never in any way diminished our friendship or decreased the esteem in which I held him.

Bishop George P. Lambert always seemed to me as one who had just stepped out from the ranks of the Pilgrim Fathers. He was just as strict, devout, and incorruptible in spirit as they, but much more gentle, human, and wise in his contacts with other men. He won more than respect from those of us who knew him best. "Evil fled from his presence."

Joseph R. Lambert was the Apostle, and well worthy of the title. He was a man of strong intellect, of the keenest sort of logic, of great courage, and just as incorruptible as his two brothers. As was remarked at his funeral, he held the ministry for more than sixty-five years and in all that time by no act of his ever caused the flag of Christ to be lowered. Moreover, in the heyday of his strength, when any enemy, no matter how formidable, came against the citadels of our faith, Joseph R. Lambert was found barring the way with a defense brilliant, courageous and effective. There were two words in his vocabulary which I remember as rising up through his every sermon like twin peaks. They were "truth" and "law." These words he always thundered forth with that deep voice which caused hearers to marvel how such power should come from so slight a frame. By these two words he tested all things. Every idea that was urged upon him confronted the query: "Is it true?" Every program and procedure that was brought to his attention claiming his allegiance had to convince him first that it was "in harmony with the law."

Some one remarked in my hearing recently that in his opinion probably the young people of the church today are not receiving the same spiritual guidance and personal testimony that was enjoyed by men like Joseph R. Lambert. In making such a comparison it should be remembered that Joseph R. Lambert (like others of his type and caliber in the church) was not an average man. He was an upstanding and outstanding man in his generation. It is obviously not profitable to judge the masses of one generation by the outstanding figures of the generation that preceded it. Probably the average young people of today judged in that way will not measure up to the stature of Joseph R. Lambert; neither would the average men of his generation. He was, to use an old expression, "one among a thousand," or taking the world as it ran in his day, one in ten thousand. The same could be said of other stalwarts of the early days of the church. But I have the greatest confidence that today, here and there throughout the church, in different parts of the world, there are young men whom God is calling and preparing, each one if judged by those about him may be one among a thousand, destined in his generation to be upstanding and outstanding in the work of the church, a man of "excellent wisdom." Every generation during a dispensation of God produces such men as its spokesmen and representatives.

What was the secret of the greatness of Joseph R. Lambert? He was one of a remarkable group of men called by revelation of 1873. He with others was called to the office of the Apostle; the Presidency also was filled. The Lord said at that time, "Verily, I say unto you, if these my servants will henceforth magnify their calling in honor before me, they shall become men of power and excellent wisdom in the assemblies of my people." Because those men did magnify their calling and honor Him without reservation the promise to them was fulfilled. The same spirit is at work today in the church for those who will follow its leadings. Let no man doubt it, those young men who choose to magnify their calling and honor the Lord with the same degree of consecration and devotion manifested by their predecessors in due time will become "men of power and excellent wisdom in the assemblies of the Saints."

Missionary Lessons of the Depression

By F. Henry Edwards

The following is the eighth of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. The writer, as Secretary of the Quorum of Twelve, is closely in touch with the missionary work of the church.

Business men concerned with temporal affairs are learning the lessons of the depression, for to fail means their elimination. The Lord's business deals with eternal verities, but the depression nevertheless has many lessons to teach us. These lessons will make for efficiency in conducting the affairs of the church, both local and general, and efficiency in such a work finally means increased range and power in the salvation of men.

Our Tragic Loss of Opportunity

I am repeatedly impressed that the major tragedy of this depression period from the viewpoint of the church is that what should have been our day of revealed strength has actually been a day of revealed weakness and doubt. Without question the surrounding darkness should have thrown the church into clear-cut relief. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God should have shone forth. But not even the most optimistic Latter Day Saint can justly claim that these things have really happened. Years which should have disclosed the fundamental strength of the church of the living God have actually demonstrated a weakness closely akin to that of other religious organizations, although these have programs far less pretentious than ours.

Many factors have contributed to our weakness in this depression period. From the viewpoint of the missionary one of these stands out quite clearly. It is that we have converted people to a form of belief rather than to a way of action. We have been content to change opinions when we should have changed lives. The depression has shown us that far too many of us talk differently but act about the same as our fellows. This is not entirely true, but it is all too true. It is because of this that the crisis found us in the same boat with the remainder of the world, both as individuals and as an institution. Theology is tremendously important. What men believe matters immensely. But we must win men to transforming beliefs in order that they will be transformed, and if this fails we have failed. Our task is to enlist men in a great cause and not merely to win them to a form of belief.

Must Reach Human Need

It is of the very essence of Christianity to identify itself with the downtrodden. This is infinitely more than to have sympathy with them, and it is the heart of redemption. Jesus actually became one of the suffering masses in Palestine, in order that he could save them and all mankind. Paul actually identified himself with the working classes to whom his ministry took him. Their problems became his problems. He worked out his own salvation in working out theirs. Latter Day Saints must identify themselves similarly with those who need the kingdom. None of us must seek to escape the urgent call to kingdom building just because we have a little money, or a promising future, or local prestige. The needs of the neediest of men must be our own needs. We must never gloss over our terrible spiritual poverty with the thin veneer of current civilization. The rule of success for the church as well as for individuals is to seek first to establish the kingdom.

All this calls for renewed emphasis on individual regeneration, but such regeneration as shall justify itself in social contribution. Converts must be proselyted to the kingdom ideals and purpose. They must be taught to expect to identify themselves with the work of Christ and the program of the kingdom. There must be no anticipation of growing in sanctity and safety, but only in sacrifice and power. And we who have been members of the church for these many years must set the example.

This principle of redeeming men through identifying ourselves with their needs is but one of the fundamentals which this depression has shown to be vital to our effective continuance. All the fundamentals are being vindicated. Trivialities are being exposed in their true colors. Dynamic faith, creative repentance, kingly regeneration, effective authority, the practice of immortality, dependence upon divine gifts, inevitable accountability; all these principles are once more shown to be basic to real Latter Day Saintism. We must weave them into our lives, so that we truly become worthy of our great calling.

Economy and Concentration

We have neither time, opportunity, nor resources to develop many interesting and promising fields of investigation and culture. At the present time the immediate and imperative need is for us to relate the great truths of the Latter Day Saint evangel to the basic needs of modern life. As we do this we shall find both power and authority.

The lessons of the depression in the field of missionary methods are also likely to be lasting and important. It is necessary for us to find less expensive ways of conducting our church affairs, ways costing less in spiritual energy and in time and in a thousand other factors as well as in money. But this does not mean that we are to find ways of doing church work so that it will demand less sacrifice of us. We must continue to invest all that we can in the work of the church, and we must then make our investment yield the fullest possible returns. Our economies must result in wider influence, in more stable ministry and in more speedy building of Zion.

The Method of Building

It is already apparent that we shall have to think in terms of groups rather than of individual converts. We must build branches in strategic centers, develop these into larger branches, divide these and build up the parts. In this way we must saturate desirable territories and become sufficiently strong, both numerically and spiritually, to make our influence felt in the communities and to provide at the same time a rallying center for our membership and their children and friends.

With such a program the missionary appointees will have less time for personal missionary work with isolated individuals. Their major task will be in organizing and directing the growth of nuclei into branches and branches into districts, so that they can then move forward into other promising territory and repeat this process as the law directs. Because of this it will be more necessary than ever that the Saints shall keep up an aggressive campaign of personal testimony, for the administrative work of the appointees will be dependent on support of this character. It is of the very nature of Christianity that every member shall be alive to his responsibility to win his neighbor.

Preliminary Gathering

Under such a program isolated Saints will be expected to move to centers of church activity whenever they have opportunity. For some, unfortunately, this opportunity may be a long time in coming, and we shall have to make the best possible ministry available for these scattered Saints. But it is not reasonable to expect the church to for ever chase round after people who change locations repeatedly without ever moving nearer a center of organized church life. If the church pursues a consistent policy of organizing branches in typical centers of population and employment, then members who do not now have church privileges ought to use every endeavor to get into close contact with the church in these centers. The 1930 General Conference recognized this situation and passed the following resolution:

It is our recommendation that wherever possible members of the church should locate in the vicinity of regularly organized branches and should avoid making their residence where it will be almost impossible for them to attend services regularly. When people are moving from one town to another, or seeking a new location for their family in which to find better opportunities for employment, we suggest that they keep in mind the desirability of moving into the vicinity of a branch of the church where they may have the benefit of the association with the Saints and may also make their contributions to the onward progress of the church. . . . We strongly urge that no such moves be made without consultation with properly constituted stake, district, and branch authorities. (Conference Daily Herald, 1930, page 35.)

Increase Missionary Force

Our endeavor to carry on with the depleted forces possible in our present financial situation has taught us, moreover, that leadership can not be developed overnight. We must have many more men under full time appointment. Carrying on with the present number of missionaries is unthinkable except as an emergency measure. And if the appointment of further missionaries is impossible until the debts of the church are paid, then this must be a major incentive toward the payment of those debts.

This increased missionary force must be drawn from a more effective local ministry. No one is more acutely conscious of this than our good local men, and from every side come requests for a careful pruning of our priesthood ranks so as to eliminate dead timber. From every side, too, come urgent requests for aid in becoming more efficient representatives of the Master and officers in his kingdom. One of the surest ways out of the present depression is by the development of our local ministerial resources.

Missionary activity is basic to church life. The missionary spirit is being more and more widely and deeply felt. It will not down. And this is one of the major assurances of our ultimate triumph.

Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.—Psalm 15:1-5.

Is Our Organization Adequate?

A PLEA FOR A STOREHOUSE

By E. H. Perkins

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.—Deuteronomy 14: 22.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouses, that there may be meat in mine house.—Malachi 3: 10.

For ye tithe the mint and rue, and all manner of herbs.—Luke 11: 42.

The above quotations are, I believe, sufficient to establish the fact that the tithe may be paid in kind as well as in cash; or, at least, to establish the fact that tithes could be so paid under the Mosaic dispensation, and that the same system was permissible during the ministry of Christ on earth. Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4 states: "Let the Bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the Bishop." This, I believe, is sufficient to establish the fact that tithes may be paid in money or in kind in the present dispensation.

Under our present system of organization, it would be almost impossible for our farmers, our stock growers, our fruit growers, and our manufacturers to pay tithes or make offerings in goods or products, except those who reside in stakes or in Zion, where they are located in the immediate vicinity of a storehouse. Those of us who are scattered abroad upon the face of the earth must make our offerings and pay our tithes in cash, in order that it will be in a form such that it may be readily transmitted to the Bishop in Zion.

The present "depression" has demonstrated that certain changes in our present form of organization might be beneficial to the growth of our work. I speak here of the fact that many of our members have produced an abundance of foodstuffs, but, due to lack of markets, could not sell it, and therefore, they could not raise money with which to pay tithes or make offerings, and consequently, the church has lost. It is also a fact that some of our members, who depend upon daily wages for their living, have been, through unemployment, reduced to the point where they are barely able to exist, and these the church should be helping, instead of asking them to help the church. The sad part of all this is the fact that the goods which some of our members could not convert into cash must perish and waste away, while, within a few miles, there are those who must suffer for want of those same goods, because they have no money with which to purchase them.

The storehouse is our answer to this problem, but in order to function properly, there must be a storehouse in every community. This is, of course, what we will have when we are "fully organized," or so we are told. It is believed by the writer that we need a storehouse in every community where there are Saints who produce either goods or produce, and that such a storehouse is needed now. With such a storehouse in each community, it would then be possible for each Saint to pay his tithing, and make his offering, in kind as well as in money. This would result in a greatly increased number of tithe payers throughout the church. True, there would be an increase in administration expense, but the increased revenues would more than offset this.

"But," someone asks, "what are you going to do with these things after they are received at the storehouse in the local community?"

Let those who have an income purchase from the storehouse such supplies as they may be in need of, in this way converting a portion of the goods into cash, which could then be forwarded to the Bishop. If there were any among us who were suffering from lack of employment, their needs, or a portion of their needs, could be met from the storehouse, and the persons so aided could work at improving the church buildings and property, as long as they could not find any remunerative employment. In this way, we would be taking care of our own poor and needy, as we have been instructed to do. It would also be possible to exchange goods held in the storehouse for goods held in other storehouses, and in this way, by direct exchange, we could decrease our need of money. Money would, of course, be needed to pay transportation charges, but this would be obtained from the sale of goods to local consumers. This system would also save to the Saints some of the money that now goes to pay the profit of the various middlemen that handle all goods between producer and consumer.

There are some who will say that if there are men far enough advanced in the study and appreciation of our temporal program to enable them to maintain a local storehouse, that these men should not establish any local system or co-operative society, but should come up to Zion, because that is where they are needed. We will grant that such men should be in Zion, giving of their knowledge and willingness to establish the work more fully there. But, it is not possible, under present circumstances for these men to gather to Zion. They have no funds, and the church has no funds with which to bring them in. These men are established in such a manner, that by remaining in their present locations, they can produce goods and products, but they can not now establish themselves in Zion on a producing basis. Should these, then, be denied the privilege of working together for their mutual benefit, as well as for the benefit of the church? We are of the opinion that they should be encouraged to establish their local storehouse, and to pay tithes of all they produce into such storehouse.

Not knowing the local conditions prevailing in all localities, we can not say just how the storehouse should be administered, but the system used would, of necessity, be flexible enough to permit its being adapted to fit the needs of each community, and, from first-hand knowledge of conditions existing in my own district, I venture to say, that had we some way provided in which our members here could contribute of their goods, that the number of tithepayers can be doubled in a short time. As it is, only about twenty per cent of our members are helping financially, and if this number could be doubled throughout the church, think of the benefit it would be.

We also have many wage earners who are anxious to go up to Zion, to take part in the great work, but there is no employment available there for them, and they must needs remain where they are. Must these, too, be refused opportunity to gain first hand knowledge of the practical operation of the storehouse system until such time as they can be called in to Zion? They, too, would benefit greatly by the local storehouse, inasmuch as they would see it in operation, and this would encourage them to greater effort to take their share of the burden, as well as making it possible for them to save somewhat on their expenses.

As we understand it, there must be an accumulation of wealth, either in the church coffers, or in the hands of the individual members, before there can be much progress in the gathering. The local storehouse would aid both the church and the individual to accumulate the necessary wealth that the gathering could be hastened. The church would be aided in that the number of tithepayers and other financial contributors would be greatly increased, and the individual would benefit in that it would be possible for him, by dealing through the storehouse, to save a greater portion of his income, to be used in establishing himself in Zion. There would also be an increase in the amount of tithing paid by the individual, due to the decrease in his necessary living expenses.

We believe the time is at hand when we must give more consideration to the needs of local communities, and by aiding them, aid the general program of the church.

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease—6

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

There is a baby's inflammation of the eye that is of the utmost importance to everyone to know something about, which goes under the high-sounding name of Ophthalmia neonatorum. It is of a purulent type and before the advent of antiseptics was the cause of many cases of blindness. In 1924 De Schweinitz, a noted physician and surgeon, stated that this disease caused one twelfth of all the blindness in the United States. Seventy-five per cent of the cases are the result of gonorrhoeal infection, which either occurs during the process of birth, from the mother, or through contact with contaminated attendants. Fortunately, in the last few years, preventive measures have been instituted, that have caused a marked reduction in the number of cases. It is more serious in undernourished infants than in others, and usually manifests itself during the first two weeks of a baby's life.

It remained for Crede to bless mankind with the application of the proper method, which is now spoken of as "Crede's method" and I was astonished, the other day, to read in one of our leading newspapers that some association was opposed to this God-sent gift. The proper application of this remedy involves three important steps: first, a thorough cleansing of the baby's eyelids of all secretions, with a cotton sponge moistened in boric acid solution; second, with the aid of a soft-nozzled, flexible rubber ear syringe, the eyelids are separated and thoroughly irrigated with a straight solution of boric acid; third, the eyelids are again separated, and a one per cent solution of silver nitrate is allowed to come in contact with the conjunctival surfaces for one minute. In applying this treatment, it is a necessary precaution not to admit the finger nail, the cotton sponge, or the syringe nozzle to scratch the surface of the cornea. As for other preventable infections, education is one of the greatest bulwarks of prevention.

The spreading of most of the infectious diseases are mostly the cause of our own carelessness or ignorance, or that of others. Every purulent form of conjunctivitis in the newborn should have the secretion examined under the microscope. But not a bit of time should be lost in the treatment, by waiting for the diagnosis. A baby, thus infected, should be kept in a position so that the affected eye is next the sheet, in order to prevent the germ-laden pus getting into the unaffected eye. Hourly irrigations, day and night are necessary by a reliable day and night nurse, under the direction of a competent eye specialist.

Unskilled attendants are not capable of attending to so important a case as this. During the course of this disease, it is necessary, if it is at all possible, that the child should subsist on its mother's milk, for it has been found to aid very materially in reducing the virulency of the infection. It was a sorry sight, in the old days, to go into an eye and ear hospital and see so many children doomed to total blindness. The ignorant have been so careless in regard to this disease, that it has been necessary to have legislation passed in all the states compelling those in charge to institute the treatment just described. People find it easy to forget the blessings of medical science; therefore it requires a persistent campaign of education.

Autobiography

V.—FURTHER EXPERIENCES AND LABORS IN THE NEBRASKA MISSION

By James Franklin Mintun

Associated with the baptism and confirmation of Sisters May Huff and Amelia P. Bradley, there was much of God's power manifest. Several were blessed with healing; the gifts of tongues and prophecy were experienced to the confirming of the faith of the Saints, giving unmistakable evidence that the work in which they were engaged was God's work, and that in his compassion and love he still remembered the little flock in Fremont. I was associated with Elder E. C. Brand, of blessed memory. We conducted a series of preaching services at the courthouse, which resulted in the baptism of one noble man, and interesting others in the gospel work.

On the seventh of March of this year I visited the Columbus Branch, and for the first time, met Elder Henry J. Hudson, who presided over it. He had been a protector and father to the few families, who had gone this far on the way towards Utah, following Brigham Young, but because of the dishonesty and iniquity of some of those who were in charge of the company of which they formed a part, they would go no farther. Here lived a religious peculiarity by the name of W. K. Lay, who, while believing in the mission work of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, yet claimed that he was the one on whose shoulders the full work of God should then fall after his departure. He claimed that Adam, Jesus Christ, Joseph Smith and W. K. Lay were very prominent characters as representatives of God on earth. Near here lived Guy Barnum, one of the counselors of Charles B. Thompson, of Beneemy fame, that had its headquarters at Preparation, Iowa, in early days just after the scattering from Nauvoo. There being no special demand for special labor at Columbus at that time, I went to near Aurora, and held a few meetings, where my brother, John W. Mintun, then lived, but there being no interest I went to the home of Brother Charles Pemberton, north of Central City, and from there went to Neligh, and to the Clearwater Branch, composed principally of Saints of western Iowa, who had sought a home by homesteading, and while they were poor they were willing to labor and sacrifice for the restored gospel. . . . I was assisted here and at Cedar Creek by George S. Hyde and part of the time by Charles Derry. . . . It was near here that the mother of Elders Heman C. and Hyrum O. Smith lived on a homestead. She was a woman of wide experience, and had made great sacrifices for the restoration. She was the daughter of Apostle Lyman Wight, and came to northwest Iowa with the Montagues, the Ballantynes, and several others from Texas after the death of Lyman Wight. I was told by all these people, and by Sister Smith that her father always taught the Saints to live pure and virtuous lives in the public instructions he gave, and that "Young Joseph" was legal successor to his father as the president of the church, which is the reason that nearly all of those who followed Lyman Wight to Texas, came into the Reorganization. From them have come many powerful men of the ministry, with a willingness to sacrifice that but few have exceeded in the ministry of the church.

At this time my family was in real need, and I left this part of the mission for my home, stopping at Fremont long enough to baptize one and administer other ordinances. When I left for home, Sister Stoner, whom I met there, came to the gate and handed me forty dollars, saying that she had heard that my family was in need. Without that help I can not see how we would have been relieved from suffering for a time, but this amount carried us over until the Bishop could send us some assistance.

While I was at home assisting the family I was also assisting with the work as much as I could. An aunt of Brother H. A. Merchant desired baptism. She was the daughter of Lucius Merchant who was at Nauvoo at the time of the deaths of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, not leaving there till sometime in 1846, so he testifies in a testimonial that I have in my possession. He came as far as Council Bluffs, expecting to go on to Utah; but ere he arrived here learned of some of the iniquities that had been introduced privately and taught by Brigham Young, stopped and then located in Harrison County near Magnolia, where he taught his children the truthfulness of the Restoration. It was the result of his teachings and example that this daughter desired baptism. At the time she was in very poor health and growing weaker and worse every day. This was affecting not only her body but also was very disturbing to her mind. She was married to a good man, but he was prejudiced against the faith of the Saints, and a member of the Disciples Church. He opposed her being baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church. But when he saw her condition and that there seemed no hopes of any relief he consented to her baptism, and requested me to do the baptizing, having been acquainted with me since before coming into the church. At the time of her baptism she was very weak, and it was necessary to assist her into and out of the wagon that took her to the creek where the baptism took place. She was led to the water because of her weak condition. I baptized her, after which she walked up out of the water unassisted and to the wagon and got in without help. She continued to grow strong and lived to care for her home and raise a family. Her husband has been a friend to the servants of God and a friend to the church, being a willing listener, but has never become a member.

I returned to my mission on June 6, soon after I saw my family supplied with the necessities of life. I made my first stop where I met Brethren E. C. Brand and the district president, William M. Rumel, where was made a continuous effort to restore the interest and spirituality of the Platte Valley Branch over which Elder Nelson Brown presided. It was here that I met and ordained Brother George McConley.

On June 6, a decision was reached to build a church in Fremont, and a committee of solicitation was appointed, of which I was chairman. This building was used for a time, after which the Saints began to scatter, and the building was disposed of.

I feel like emphasizing the fact that my labors were made pleasant by the association and assistance of such self-sacrificing men as Brethren Charles Derry, E. C. Brand, George S. Hyde, William M. Rumel, and Levi Gamet, the latter the only one yet living. Most of these were with me at a two-days' meeting held near Meadow Grove, where then lived Joseph Jackson, who was a great help to the work of God. At this two-days' meeting five were baptized by me. We, Brother Derry and I, labored in this part of the mission for some time, laboring at Craig, Battle Creek, and schoolhouses in the vicinity.

During the last of July and the first part of August there was an epidemic of diphtheria in Fremont, there being one hundred and five cases at one time, and many deaths. This kept the elders busy, and many of the families of the Saints were made happy in the power of God when relief would come to their loved ones. At the home of Brother Edward Thomas, whom I have mentioned before at his baptism, occurred the deaths of two of his daughters, their burial being conducted the same day. A very sad event.

The family and I attended the Leland's Grove Reunion, during September. At this reunion Brother Joseph Smith gave one of the most effective temperance lectures that I ever heard. Some one had left a whisky bottle on the platform or on the pulpit, and it was presented to Brother Joseph, and he took that as a text from which to preach that day.

On November 23, just as I was finishing my dinner, or noonday meal, at Sister Nelson's, near Blair, I was requested to pray for a Mrs. Lake, not a member of the church but one who had faith in God. I find the following written in my diary in reference to the home of Brother Nels Nelson, where we had the prayer for Mrs. Lake:

I enjoyed what only can be enjoyed at a home where the Spirit of God rules in the hearts of the inmates. How blessed for a servant of God to enjoy such days of spiritual comfort. May God raise up many families, such as this of his children. On the twenty-fifth I made a visit to Mrs. Lake's and found her able to sit up, and much relieved. She testified to me. She said that she had been so sick as to vomit blood, and had laid unconscious some time before the requested prayer was rendered. Since that time she had had no such spells, and was growing stronger. She gave God the praise.

On Thanksgiving Day of this year I spent the time at Brother John Taylor's. My diary has this entered at that time:

Oh, how much to be thankful for! A God to love; a Savior in whom to trust; a knowledge of the way of salvation, a remission of sins through the advocate Christ Jesus; a virtuous, loving wife, of whom to think and in whom to confide for earthly consolation; a home in which to rest when afflicted and wearied; kind friends to minister to my wants; a conscience void of offense toward God and all men with the promise of eternal life by enduring in faith to the end. Praise the Lord for his goodness and his loving kindness to me and his love to sinful man. O God, keep me, but to ever praise thee.

After purchasing a lot for the building of a church at Fremont and making other provisions for the building, I preached at Blair, and at Desoto, where once was a very lively branch, but now there were only a few Saints left, and they somewhat discouraged, because of what had destroyed the interest there. I returned to spend the holidays at home and minister while there. I note that I enjoyed my Christmas dinner with the family of Brother George Montague, another one of the Lyman Wight colony who came to western Iowa. He was an able minister of the gospel, with whom I labored in after years, as my history will show as I proceed. This ends the experiences of another year in the work of the Lord, which would have been much more satisfactory had I been able to do more. I find this expression relating to my feelings recorded in my diary: "How blessed to meet under the smiles of a merciful God whom we love, with those whom we love, whose kindness we have sacrificed for the gospel's sake."

Propaganda in the Backyard

By Margaret W. Gibson

Four little boys were playing in the living room. A few small boards, some tan cloth, two or three dozen screws were keeping them happily occupied.

Suddenly, "Let's play war!" said one, my own, I believe.

The boards were covered with the cloth to form embankments. Screws turned on bases of plasticine made cannons. Cones of paper were quickly assembled to construct the tepees of an Indian village. And then, flat upon their stomachs, four small boys crouched behind the cloth-covered embankments, levelled the screw cannons upon the peaceful wigwams with their imaginary inhabitants, and a terrific fire of destructive "Boom! Booms!" burst forth on all sides.

Eyes flashed. Musketry blazed and roared. Commands were yelled, and the village was riddled with accurate shots and balls. It was all thrilling and all deadly to the Indians at any rate. The small besiegers were miraculously unhurt. I was as excited as any of them.

All at once one of them stopped. He had thought of something. With a sort of shame-faced courage and determination he said, "Let's not play war! Miss Wendle says it's terrible. We shouldn't even think of it!"

Protests were loud, forcible, and long. They had been having a fascinating time. The fortifications were all erected, and cannons accurately trained, and the village nearly annihilated.

The peacemaker was right, but the other boys had a case, too. The error was plainly mine, for I had allowed them to play the game in the first place. We finally allowed them to fire one more shot each, and the village capitulated. But then, we all had to count the cost.

Before our imaginations filed the few living Indians that remained, old men and squaws and little children, maimed, starving, and heartsick. Their tepees lay in smoking ruins; their warriors lay dead. Hunger, disease and cold faced these few weak survivors with their strong defenders gone. We saw it all, for Miss Wendle had been right, and I had at last awakened to my responsibility.

With real relief the little boys finally turned to another game. It wasn't as exciting as the other, at first, but in a few minutes, they were as deeply engrossed as ever and quite as happy. And then I sat down to think.

Those children were here for their playtime nearly every day. I had ten chances a week to guide them. And yet, if it hadn't been for a wise second grade teacher who improved her opportunities, the horrors of war would never have occurred to any of them. If we mothers are ever going to help mold public opinion against bloodshed, we must begin early and wisely.

It has frequently been a relief to me, I must be frank to say, sometimes to hear the children quarreling or playing war. I know where they are and what they are doing. I have even taken pride in the fact that they do their playing and "scrapping" in our yard. But I wonder if they haven't been getting some tares with the wheat, and it is the tares that spoil the harvest!

Can't they be just as noisy and just as happy at something constructive? Can't they cross the plains in their covered wagons, spy out the best routes, barter with the Indians, and be decorated for diplomacy in keeping peace? I think so.

This summer I had the privilege of visiting an Indian battlefield in M——. It is well preserved, interesting, educational. The old earthworks are still there. The trees are scarred by bullet holes. Signs tell where this man "fell with a bullet hole through his heart," where "Here died the Indian who crept nearest to our breastworks," and here "So-and-so was buried." It is a thrilling spot. Even today one looks for painted faces and war bonnets crouched in the grass.

But it is over now. It happened nearly fifty years ago. Two monuments attest the fact. Within the last few years, only, has the second monument been erected. It stands but fifty feet from the one which honors the fallen white men. It is a simple little shaft of red sandstone, surprisingly in keeping with the spirit of the place, erected by the Indians to their honored dead, and to the memory of their valiant chieftain. After nearly fifty years we have come to realize that they had a side and a good one. Were a few cattle, stolen by two drunken Indians worth the sacrifice of so many lives and homes of both races? Was there an attempt made to settle the matter peacefully? I wonder.

It is early yet this morning. The children are still asleep. I think I shall go out to my pile of old cans and gather a few. Then I shall bury them in

A Declaration of the King's Law

X.—"THE ENEMY"

By Kenneth B. Curtis

"Have faith in God." If only we could pause for a moment and think how beautiful, how encouraging that phrase of four words really are. It could easily be applied to man's weakness in the face of his enemy.

Cold, hard business men ponder over facts. If they could only get at the facts of the case; but what would Jesus say to men like these? With that sweet, decisive manner, he would point out the main, outstanding fact of all times that never changes, and that applies to all business: Have faith in God—in him, in whose hands lie the power to solve any and all of our troubles, if only we will have faith. Zion's redemption is governed by its people's faith; and faith is not present when people are not humble. Therefore, it is necessary that the right perspective be gained on any fact or group of facts before we try to solve those problems that appear in the foreground.

The facts of science, the values of the immediate objects, are seldom the important ones to consider first. The things that we can not see, that occupy prominence in the spiritual world, will be found in most cases to carry a great deal of weight. Christ loved facts. Yet he was a poet, a dreamer, even under the burdens that were his to bear. How sweet was his disposition, his love for his fellow men even in the face of death; and through it all, the right value of facts, governed by that great major fact persisted, and we find the trend of history bending more and more to his teachings.

the sandpile, deep enough that little bare feet will be safe, but not too deep for exploring sticks to locate. They are oil wells. When located, they will immediately prove to be gushers and will need derricks of Lincoln logs, erected over them. These wells will yield numerous barrels of oil; pine cones, to be rushed to the distilling plant, made of blocks. There gasoline will be extracted and sold to the toy garage, where every toy car, truck, and tractor in the neighborhood can purchase gasoline! The new and constructive type of game may not work, but it's worth trying.

Ignorance has no program. But education without faith in God is darkness.

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

How many times have the people tried to gather only to be driven out. Zion rests today in discontent, doubtful sometimes whether all this is really so. Is she to gather her forces or not? It is a common opinion there is strength in numbers.

There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it: Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man. Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.—Ecclesiastes 9: 14-16.

And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon us.—2 Corinthians 12: 9.

The strength of numbers with God does not mean the strength of an army drawn up for battle to protect their homes. "But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils." (Luke 11: 22.)

God never meant man was to depend upon his own strength as warriors, even with numbers. When he said, "Behold, I have commanded my servant Baurak Ale, to say unto the strength of my house, even my warriors, my young men and middle-aged, to gather together for the redemption of my people, and throw down the towers of mine enemies, and scatter their watchmen," (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 5) he did not mean military tactics should be used. Study carefully the following:

But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.

It is plain to be seen that God could have had no other reasons than that the gathering was to enable the new medium of exchange (storehouse) to be brought forth. Not that God could not have used a few, but there is strength in numbers when all are at work producing the necessities of life. Therefore, if we will do our part in helping our fellow man God will do as he promised—"Behold, the destroyer I have sent forth to destroy and lay waste my enemies; and not many years hence, and they shall not be left to pollute mine heritage, and to blaspheme my name upon the lands which I have consecrated for the gathering together of my saints." (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 4.) So have faith in God. Trust in him and be humble so he can use you to the best of your ability in the group.

Again, he has promised if we are faithful, "Verily I say unto you, concerning your debts, Behold, it is my will that you should pay your debts; and it is my will that you should humble yourselves before me, and obtain this blessing by your diligence and humility, and the prayer of faith; and inasmuch as you are diligent and humble, and exercise the prayer of faith, behold, I will soften the hearts of those to whom you are in debt, until I shall send means unto you for your deliverance." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 13.) It is interesting to note Christ's actions in paying his taxes. (Study Matthew 17: 24-27.) "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." (Isaiah 65: 24.) However, it is written, "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (3 Nephi 6: 33.)

When people really want to serve God, when they long for his Spirit, his presence, when people want him as a child does a parent, when the way is rocky and strewn with ugly pitfalls, when the mouths of traps are open wide in inviting fashion, so they know not the way to turn, when the horizon is black with foreboding clouds, then God, in his unbounded mercies, his infinite wisdom, will be found ready to send forth his mighty power in their behalf.

In the last article we climbed up in the "Watch Tower" and looked out over the situation confronting the world today. But for all the trouble and turmoil abroad in the land we could not see or even glimpse the real adversary. He is cunning and deceiving, treacherous and bloodthirsty and under all manner of disguises mingles in our very midst. He creeps into the hearts of our friends, our fathers and mothers, pollutes the homes, and kindles an almost unquenchable fire of lust in youth. Then all that may be said or quoted to convince is like butting your head against a stone wall. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." (Ephesians 6: 12.)

Doctor Sigmund Freud, writing on present-day conditions, in his book, Cultural Super-Ego and Its Impossible Demands, says:

The command to love our neighbors as ourselves is the strongest defense there is against human aggressiveness, and it is a superlative example of the unpsychological attitude of the cultural-ego. The command is impossible to fulfill; such an enormous inflation of love can only lower its value and not remedy the evil. Civilization pays no heed to all this; it merely prates that the harder it is to obey, the more laudable the obedience. The fact remains that anyone who follows such preaching in the present state of civilization only puts himself at such a disadvantage, besides all those who set it at naught. What an overwhelming obstacle to civilization aggression must be if the defense against it can cause as much misery as aggression itself.

According to Doctor Freud, civilization must be on the Qui Vive if the very command which fulfills the law of Christ can not remedy present-day conditions. It must be remembered that the true, full gospel of Christ is supposed to solve every trouble man has, whether it be in the home or business. It possibly never entered the Doctor's mind that mankind might be traveling backwards; that they have stumbled on the exchange because of valuations, and have lost sight of the real goal in life. When man can only see money, it is true, Christ's teachings are of no avail. In remedying a fault, to be really effective, it is necessary to seek the heart of the trouble first; favorable results all along the line usually follow.

The question is then, just who or what is the enemy? Do we need a tower to see him? No—we need education. A mind that gives a solution to a problem is one that knows and understands the situation. Society has developed such a highly scientific form of organization that every member is almost a law unto himself. Educational faculties of today are typical of this development. The age limit seems to decide the climax to public education. Again I will say, If man does not obey the commands of God, how is he to prosper, and if he does not study, how can he obey? There are two forms of punishment attached to every disobedient act. The first is executed by the society in which the individual who committed the sin belongs, and the reaction or punishment, although not always just or complete, comes quickly. The other form of punishment is slow and sure; it is the laws of God or nature claiming their rights. Therefore, evildoers, no matter who or what they are, always pay the price. God's mercy is only toward those who repent in time and cease their evil ways.

In seeking the heart of the trouble it is interesting to note the cultivation process of the world for the growth of civilization. Service is the exchange mark between all creation; nothing lives for itself. Rubbish of its own accord will fall by the wayside. Further, all things developed for the assistance of man carries two powers: right and wrong. Science, engineering, building—in fact all improvements that tend to assist and promote the welfare of mankind—will last and continue to grow. But if they are used for evil purposes, they will disappear in time. (See Isaiah 2: 4.) The human body is no exception to this discussion.

It is therefore necessary for man to reason, having a certain knowledge of the prevailing conditions, before he may wisely detect the real author of the particular evil. It is no doubt agreed by all that man has a goal, but that is not all, man must have more than that, he must know the reason for that goal. To illustrate: When a destination on a trip is reached, (the goal) the motive for the trip must be apparent, else energy has been wasted. We can picture Christ telling us of our destination and the sights along the way; how we will encounter faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection, and the judgment day, how we must love God first and then our fellow man as ourselves. But after all we will sooner or later want to know the why of the trip. This is clearly brought out in the first chapter of Genesis. This chapter quotes in full the mind of God—in short God's plan from eternity to eternity. In the twenty-sixth verse we are told God made man to have dominion or serve. Man flatters himself with that ability while in the flesh but he forgets he can't even see God while in that condition. As the home is a school for the universe, so is the universe a school for the life hereafter. Our motive for our present condition, though, is to learn how to serve. Evil then is the opposite of service.

When trouble is abroad in the land some one is not serving. Some serve the wrong master in ignorance, but ignorance has no program and the price of that folly must be paid. As is written: "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation." (Exodus 34: 7.) This only illustrates the grandness of Jeremiah's prophecy:

In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But everyone shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. (Jeremiah 31: 29, 30.)

Which suggests the thought that righteous wisdom will be among all men.

Still we are not satisfied as yet with our analysis of the enemy. Our comprehension of him is too vague. Could we look at him face to face? Only when his mask has been lifted.

Let us turn our attention, however, to the evil spirits that asked Christ: "If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine." (Matthew 8: 31.) What is there about that passage in Scripture that attracts your attention the most? Is it because you are able to form a fantastic mental picture of the devils going from the men into the swine, or does it answer our question of who is the enemy? We agree about Lucifer, and that there are spirits; but is man made to suffer just to suffer? As long as Satan is abroad in the land that is what man will have to do. Possibly if we analyze spirit we may discover our enemy.

If death is idleness, then life is motion. If motion is life, and the spirit leaves with death, then the spirit is the driver. Hence the spirit is power. Since molding clay can not mold itself, it stands to reason motion without power is impossible. It is written: "The spirit of the Lord had ceased striving with them . . . that they might be destroyed." (Ether 6: 92.) Man must work or else he is idle and idleness is sin. But when the evil spirits went into the herd of swine, "Behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters." (Matthew 8: 32.) The thought is the swine went wild and had plenty of motion. Therefore, we find death or silence is not the evil spirit but only the result of his presence. The fact that the swine immediately drowned themselves after the evil spirits had entered into their bodies shows us that spirit is power whether good or bad, and that the spirit, like all creation, carries two powers—good and evil.

So our study of spirit leads us to the realization that God's spirit can be used for good or bad. Lucifer tries to show us how to misuse it and Christ tries to teach us the right way. Ignorance therefore, is no excuse.

In summing up this article for a conclusion of what could be the heart of most trouble, let me suggest, "He that ruleth his spirit [is better] than he that taketh a city." (Proverbs 16: 32.) Which means, we ourselves are the enemy, if we so will, for man has his free agency and if he desires to bend his energy, which was given to him by God, in opposition to that which is right he becomes the enemy of his own soul. Therefore, Zion's greatest enemy can be her own stewards.

The way to neutralize self-satisfaction, to cause us to throw away our own petty measuring forms, is to range ourselves against the standards of the higher righteousness and the nobler ideal. In fact, to bring ourselves alongside Him, in Whom all the excellencies are to be found, and Who, above everybody else, can send us home both stung into shame, and yet inspired into the pursuit of the noble humanity and the higher challenge.—A. Russell Tomlin.

Plans for Washington Celebration

Graceland's president, G. N. Briggs, has been chosen chairman of a committee to arrange a community program for the commemoration of the bicentennial anniversary of Washington's birthday, which is being nationally celebrated between February and the close of the year, 1932.

The members of this committee were chosen from various churches, clubs, and other organizations of Lamoni. E. E. Closson and Miss Florence Thompson are the other two representatives from the college. The committee has already outlined a tentative program centering around a large community gathering to be held at the Coliseum, February 25. A special union service of the two churches in Lamoni has been planned for the eleven o'clock hour, Sunday, February 21. President Briggs is to be the speaker at this service.

Other plans made by the committee include the moving picture, "Alexander Hamilton," for the evening of February 22, and the four-act play, "Nathan Hale," to be produced by the College Players early in March. The business men of Lamoni have agreed to sponsor a Fourth of July celebration in line with the spirit of this national Washington bicentennial celebration. As a climax to this period the schools, churches, and community will unite in a special observance of Thanksgiving Day.

Graceland Engineers

The second of a series of talks on career planning was given at the regular meeting of the engineers on last Tuesday evening. In preparation for these talks, members of the club have been carrying on detailed and instructive research in the many and varied fields of engineering. Following the custom of the club, each topic was open for general discussion and the response was entered into with some spirit. The main talks of the evening were given by four sophomore students of Mr. Mortimore's civil engineering class.

"A Storehouse of Spiritual Values"

No one can understand the wealth of meaning caught up in the phrase The Chapel unless he has lived at Graceland for at least one school year. Last Wednesday evening the chapel was filled with young men and women who came to this fellowship service seeking something. At the opening of the meeting President F. M. McDowell, a former student and faculty member, set the theme for the evening by telling what the old chapel had meant to him as a student, of its influence upon him when he is away from this place, and of the memories it always calls forth when he is permitted to return to its sheltering walls. He told of its far-reaching influence upon several outstanding men and women who have gone out from Graceland in past years. Summing up his remarks he called the chapel a "storehouse of spiritual values," and it was upon this statement that most of the testimonies were based.

Students who have spent one, two, or three years at Graceland spoke of the meaning the chapel holds for them. They come to the chapel seeking, and from this "storehouse" they carry away increased courage, a desire to do their very best in all things, an increased appreciation of life, a conviction of definite religious responsibilities, the desire to carry spiritual values from this storehouse to others; here they form higher ideals, deeper friendships, and an altogether bigger and more practical religion.

The chapel has been the integrator of the students' best thoughts, and a balance wheel in times of fast changing ideas. Many at this service felt that in the years to come, when they are far away from the chapel, the memory of the place and the spiritual values that it has given them will help them to mold their lives in closer harmony with things that are enduring. Every Graceland student has access to this storehouse of spiritual values.

President McDowell Lectures

The fourth series of lectures of the school year were delivered by President F. M. McDowell, February 8 to 11, inclusive. On each of the four days the chapel was filled with students and visitors who found the discussions to be interesting and instructive. The subject chosen for the series was "The Eternal Triangle of the Christian Life." It was presented from three different aspects, "Thyself," "Thy Neighbor," and "Thy God."

President McDowell began his lectures by painting several word portraits of conditions in the world today. Unrest and uncertainty are universal. There is tension in life, in the home, among nations, everywhere. There is friction and disintegration of the elements which make for life. This is caused by faulty thinking, by a faulty sense of values, and by faulty conduct. The evil of our age is that we overrate things and underrate life. Life at its best is the triumphant integration of truth, beauty, and goodness demonstrated in the eternal triangle of the Christian life which involves self, neighbor, and God.

Jesus spoke the heroic and reconciling word for all time when he said that we should love the Lord our God with all our heart and strength, and our neighbor as ourself. No social program can succeed without the integration of these elements. Any worth-while philosophy of life holds that there must be some unity of man with himself, some cooperation between man and man, and some contact of man with God. Christ saw in man the object of supreme worth. By directing his impulses properly man has power to become a son of God. If man would realize his highest possibilities, he must know himself. He must accept himself. He must believe in himself. He must be himself. He must keep himself in the presence of the best. He must lose himself in order that may find himself.

Our neighbor is anyone that is in need of what we can give him, and we are always in need of what our neighbor has to give. To believe that our neighbor is the same sort of being as ourselves is fundamental. He has the same qualities, the same needs, the same potentialities, and he is redeemed by the same elements. The power to be brothers is the supreme heritage of all who will try to be Christians. The world is one, mankind can not live apart.

In his last lecture Brother McDowell said that it would be a limited and inadequate God if one man could tell another all there is of significance about him. Even though we can not know all concerning God, we may grow to be like him. We can and do know that God is entirely worthy of the love of man. He is a Father who will reach down to help man if only man will reach up to meet him. Man's soul needs two lifts; one coming down from above and one coming up from below. Jesus was an example of this: he was a man with all the urges, desires, and appetites of humanity, yet he was in a position to interpret the will of heaven because he was the Son of God.

In closing, President McDowell laid down several suggestions for the building of a Christian life. Desire earnestly the best gifts. Believe big things about God, about men, about yourself. Find some all-consuming purpose and give yourself to its accomplishment. Furnish the mind with the lure of worthy ideals. Make choices consistent with the chosen task and the accepted ideals. Harness all your resources to the task. Become attached to the power lines of the infinite. The world is awaiting our message. How long shall we keep humanity waiting?

The student body of Graceland feel that they can not adequately express their thanks to Brother McDowell for the inspiration of these messages. The fuller appreciation will be demonstrated in lives, not words.

JAMES B. MOSES.

Why "Graceland"?

When President F. M. Smith and George Barrett walked back and forth across the ground that now is Graceland Campus, they planned to make it as beautiful as possible. They visioned winding drives, graceful avenues, and adorning trees and shrubs. They wished to make a distinct contribution of art to what was to be the educational center of their church. Thus in the words of Mr. Barrett, the plot, "was laid out in grace and beauty." He suggested that, because of the gracefulness of the outlined drives, avenues and lines of trees, the plot be called "Graceland."

The name was never attached to the land by any official action. "Graceland" has come as a natural consequence from an inspired suggestion. Today that name has come to be the jewel of the greatest thoughts when hearts of alumni turn back to their alma mater.—Graceland Tower.

Man the Ship

She was a trim little craft that made one's eyes twinkle as he watched her cast off from the dock and begin her long voyage. The crew was engaged in stowing and lashing the gangplank, coiling lines, and fastening storm curtains, for the weather gave every indication of being stormy. The captain busied himself in the chart room figuring tides, courses and schedules, while the mate commanded the work on deck.

The storm came with a fury that made the vessel quiver from stem to stern. The ship plunged and tossed in the gigantic waves that threatened her destruction.

What could be done? Two alternatives presented themselves. The first was to abandon the ship and take to the lifeboats, leaving the ship to flounder in the storm. At least the lifeboats would float and perhaps eventually the crew might be rescued by a passing steamer after the storm had subsided. What crew would listen to such a proposal and give up all hopes of ever bringing their ship to port? None. They accepted the second plan.

They would stay with the ship. Every man aboard went to his work with determination to weather it out. Captain, mates, officers, helmsmen, deck-hands, stokers, engineers, and the galley crew set to the task that taxed them to the utmost.

And the result? Why, they brought her in! The captain's face beamed as he related the merits of his crew, and the crew were proud of the confidence they had in each other. Faith, cooperation, and hard work had brought the ship through the teeth of the fierce storm.

The church, too, is going through a heavy storm. Will it weather the gale? Faith and cooperation will bring it to port and safety. It is up to us. Have we faith? Are we cooperating?

WALTER GEROW.

Savanna, Illinois

Savanna Saints are working together in unity for the advancement of the church and are becoming more earnest and zealous. They sense the great need of Zion as the clouds of distress multiply.

We have a fine Sunday school. The parents realize the importance of study for themselves as well as for their children, and all classes are presided over by faithful members of the church who realize the sacred duty intrusted to their care, and are consecrated to the task of "training up the child in the way he should go, so that when he is old, he will not depart therefrom."

The branch is small yet the Sunday school often has an attendance of over sixty.

Our prayer meetings are becoming more spiritual and are well attended. The women's department members are meeting weekly for study so as to become better enlightened, realizing that "knowledge is power."

We also are trying to do our bit financially although many of the members are unemployed and all have had a cut in wages. We desire to unite our prayers with those of the entire church, that we may live humbly, seeking divine aid, and that the Lord will choose to honor and instruct us so that Zion may become a reality, and be a light unto the world when distress and insecurity threaten the safety of all.

Fisher, Arkansas

Missionary A. M. Baker has just closed a two-week series of meetings which now seem to be the most successful ever held in this community, though none have asked for baptism. Brother Baker enjoyed excellent liberty throughout the meetings. With the exception of the first few nights we had a full house of interested people who apparently laid aside the prejudice of the past and took in the words of life.

Brother T. B. Ziegenhorn spoke on Sunday mornings and had charge of the choir. Through his excellent management the worth and ideals of good singing have been magnified.

Brother Baker has not left with us the stain of knocking and slurring of other churches. His sermons were of a constructive type, and many complimented his fairness. We are pleased with the results and shall be glad to refer to this in the future. Several years ago it was not that way here; when the missionaries left, it took us years to live down the stigma of battle. We may well afford to be constructive. Whatever is built on the sand will fall of its own accord. We attribute our success here to the fact that many who once bitterly opposed are now interested and that our proposition has been fairly placed before all.

We are glad to note the progress of our young people in the church school. Attendance has almost doubled during the last year. Many are availing themselves of the opportunities offered them. They should have the experience before the experienced become incapable of rendering further service. Responsibility has become so needful and so great that we can hardly tell where to place it; therefore, some must assume it voluntarily or the work goes undone. This is a wonderful day in which we live although sometimes we see the future darkly.

As a reward of our labor we have four new class rooms. These prove to us that we can do things during hard times. If progress is made by sacrifice, we should make much progress, not because we make much sacrifice, but because the least we can now do is to sacrifice. I think it may truly be said that we are stronger than heretofore because sacrifice creates love and love creates willingness to do. "Forward" will be our motto.

East Jordan, Michigan

Twenty-nine attended the young people's class party January 28, at the home of the teacher, Brother Bill Murphy and Mrs. Murphy. Refreshments were spread on tables in two rooms, and there was no sign of depression in food or appetites. This is a class of the local Sunday school.

The Murphys live in a big farmhouse on a hill overlooking the Jordan River valley and Lake Charlevoix as well as the town of East Jordan. A prettier spot would be hard to find at any season. We have had a great deal of snow and ice this winter and the electric lights of the village below give the impression of a Christmas card picture come to life.

Surely nothing much ails the church today when such good, old-fashioned times are still enjoyed by its young people.

Great joy was spread abroad among us by the news that this branch more than raised the money asked of it. The young people as a class were working on that drive. You may expect us to do our part in 1932. We know there is no fun outside the church to compare with the wonderful times we experience within it while doing our bit for the Master. Credit is due Brother Murphy, the teacher, and Thelma Summerville, the president as well as each class member.

Soldier's Grove, Wisconsin

Saints of this branch were pleasantly surprised Sunday, January 10, to see Brother Leonard Houghton, district president, enter the church. His radiant personality and cheerful smile make him welcome everywhere, and he remained here ten days preaching soul-cheering sermons. Brother Houghton's first missionary work was in this region about thirty years ago. When the health of our former district president, Brother Amos Berve, became very poor, compelling him to relinquish work in the district and missionary field, Brother Houghton was elected to act as district president.

A branch business meeting was held December 26, Philip Davenport, jr., being chosen branch president. His counselors are Wesley Davenport and Art Davenport. Wesley Davenport is superintendent of the church school and Nellie Adams is branch solicitor.

On January 20, we had a "wood bee," to get wood for the church. The wood was cut from the place of Brother William Maybee. The ladies' aid gave the men their dinner. Nineteen men with axes and saws cut between twenty-five and thirty cords of wood.

Church school is held every Sunday, there being large attendance. Preaching follows this session.

We are having very cold weather, about twenty degrees below zero. We hardly ever miss a cold winter in Wisconsin.

Lakewood, Ohio

Detroit and Arthur Avenues

The Saints face the future with greater hope and expressed desire to go forward with the work of the church.

Our sacrifice offering for November and December amounted to $259.70. This was received from twenty-six contributors. We are anxious to see the church debt paid. When ever a special effort is called for, Lakewood Saints can be depended on to meet that demand.

The annual business meeting was held January 7, and the following officers were elected: Pastor, Elder F. T. Haynes; assistant pastor, Harvey Spiller; branch clerk, Sister Olive Richards; director of church school, Sister F. T. Haynes; secretary, Elinor Miller; chorister, Sister F. T. Haynes. Sister F. T. Haynes is supervisor of the adult division, Brother Harvey Spiller, of the young people, and Sister Olive Richards of the children's division.

The young people's class has been studying the quarterly, "Studies in the Restoration Movement," by Eugene and Julia Closson. They are now beginning part two with great enthusiasm.

The Thursday night prayer meetings have been well attended. January 28 the Saints met in the home of Brother and Sister Fred Berry where a pleasant hour was spent. The meeting was marked by a high quality of spirituality. The Saints have been glad to see some of the active members of the past again attending. We pray that God will bless them and help them to see the necessity of their regular attendance.

Speakers who have occupied the Sunday morning hour are the following: F. T. Haynes, E. G. Hammond, of Akron, Ohio, and our young brother, Harvey Spiller. All were blessed with a good degree of the Spirit and brought inspiration to the congregation. December 27, William Patterson, a high priest, delivered a much-appreciated sermon on, "Our Attitudes."

January 26 a seven o'clock dinner was served in the basement of the church. Credit for the meal is due Sister Eula Spiller and helpers.

The Lakewood Saints are saddened by the absence of Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley, who now are traveling in the district. They are devoted workers and their wise counsel has been much appreciated here. Brother Gunsolley has given a number of blessings in the last few months. We are grateful for their past association, and our prayers are that the Lord will continue to bless them in their efforts.

The sacrament service for February was in charge of Elder F. T. Haynes and Brother Harvey Spiller, and proved to be a profitable meeting.

Conference for Northern District, British Isles

Another milestone in the history of the Northern District, of the British Isles Mission, has been passed in the holding of the January district conference. The conference convened in the Beresford Road Church, Beresford Road, Longsight, Manchester, on Saturday and Sunday, January 2 and 3.

The business session was held on Saturday evening, the business being disposed of in a very satisfactory manner. One of the items was the appointment of delegates to represent the district at the forthcoming General Conference. Then the meeting was given over to the director of religious education, High Priest Nephi Dewsnup, for educational and social work. Bishop Trapp made a strong appeal in behalf of the church finances, and was supported by District President W. H. Chandler, high priest, after which Elder Will Bailey, of Birmingham, director of religious education for Midland District, gave a fine talk on "Why I Must Be Loyal to the Department of Religious Education." Brother Bailey's visit was the outcome of an invitation to the district presidency of Midland District to take part in the conference. He is counselor, along with Elder Franklin Schofield, to the president of Midland District, High Priest Joseph Holmes. The rest of the evening was spent in musical and vocal items.

Services on the Sunday opened with preaching at 10.30 a. m. in charge of High Priest G. W. Leggott, counselor to the president of Northern District. The speaker was Elder Franklin Schofield. Associated with Brother Leggott were Elder Nephi Dewsnup, director of religious education, Elder J. W. Green, counselor to the president of Northern District, and several general church officers. Elder Harold Dewsnup sang a solo, "Jesus, My Savior." After the lesson had been read by High Priest Joseph Holmes, the speaker was introduced. The theme of the sermon was, "I Would Be Loyal to Christ." The speaker gave as one of his reasons for being loyal to Christ the fact that he is being loyal to the highest type of manhood. At the close of the discourse Sister Annie Waugh sang an appropriate solo: "Oh, to Be More Like Jesus."

At 2.30 p. m. the service, in charge of District President W. H. Chandler, took the form of a presentation to High Priest W. R. Armstrong of an illuminated address. This was a token of love and esteem from the executive officers and members of the Northern District on his approaching fifty years' service in the ministry. The address was suitably inscribed and bore a beautiful representation of the church seal in color. There were short speeches by several of Brother Armstrong's oldest associates in the church, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, Elder S. F. Mather, and Thomas Brien.

After Brother Armstrong's response, the meeting was closed and reopened in a fellowship service, in charge of Patriarch William H. Greenwood.

During the interval between the afternoon and evening services, there was a meeting of the high priesthood, addressed by the district president, and the young people were busy making arrangements for holding a young people's convention early in February. One feature of the afternoon service was a special sacrifice offering made by the Saints which amounted to more than four pounds.

A community song service at six o'clock was in charge of the district musical director, Elder James Schofield. The evening service commenced at six thirty and was in charge of the district presidency. Elder Joseph Holmes, high priest, and president of Midland District, was the speaker. The theme of the evening was, "I Would Be Loyal to the Church." Soloists for the evening were Sisters Norah Waugh and Maud Nelson.

A vote of appreciation for the manner in which the Saints of the Beresford Road Church had entertained the conference, was moved by the district president and carried by the Saints.

Dunn Center, North Dakota

Though our numbers have not been augmented by baptisms, spiritual growth has been made. Never was there a time when the Saints have been so interested in studying the program of the church. The first communion service of the new year was one of the most spiritual ever held in this branch. A quiet working of the Spirit was in evidence throughout the service. It was an experience which promised greater unity for the coming year. We are hoping and praying for an increase in membership.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held January 10, the meeting in charge of Branch President Lester H. Anderson. The treasurer's report and other reports were read and accepted, and the budget for the year approved. Officers were unanimously sustained: President, Elder Lester H. Anderson; treasurer, Brother Chet Moffit; solicitor agent, Frank Anderson. Sister Elsie Tucker was elected secretary for branch and church school; Peter Rasmussen was elected librarian. Brother Chet Moffit was chosen director of the church school; G. C. Adams, adult supervisor; Lester H. Anderson, young people's supervisor. A rising vote of thanks was given the sustained officers.

The Sunday school presented a small Christmas program Sunday, December 27. Considering the short time spent in practice, the children did well. They are planning other programs.

On account of bad weather and roads attendance has not been good for several Sundays. Branch President Lester Anderson could not get over the roads to be here, and has been greatly missed. But Brother G. C. Adams has been present to take charge, and the work is going forward.

Newton, Iowa

Saints in Newton surprised their pastor, Harold Shippy, with a birthday party in his honor Friday evening, January 30. He was presented a Book of Mormon. Games were played and home-made ice cream and cake were served.

Already it is apparent that this year will be a successful one. Although the group here is small, the members are energetic and have the desire to spread the gospel. We feel that the hand of God is directing the church here as well as in the whole church.

The women call their organization the Marietta Walker Circle and have Mrs. Ira Shippy as their leader. They meet twice each month to quilt and enjoy a study period. Last year the women's department raised a considerable sum of money in rummage and bake sales, to help solve the financial problem.

The Maotha Blue Bird Band of young girls was organized recently and five were initiated in a candle light ceremony.

Blue Bird diaries were made in which a record of activities will be kept.

Many of the Saints in this vicinity are looking forward to the Des Moines district conference which will be held February 12 to 14.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The first Sunday of January marked the ninth anniversary of the opening of our church. The Spirit of God was present at the communion meeting, and each worshiper felt encouraged to go forward.

Bishop H. E. French spoke in the evening, giving a synopsis of the branch history. This reminded us of the promises of the Father to us and our responsibility in bringing about their fulfillment.

At the morning service January 10, Frederick Kehlmiel and wife brought their young son, Fred D., to be blessed. A. E. Anderton and R. E. Madden officiated.

Pastor R. E. Madden chose for his counselors this year G. H. Kirkendall and Doctor W. B. Reeves.

The women's department met January 14, with twenty-nine members present. The members sacrificed the usual potluck dinner and came fasting and praying for the work of the church. Each donated fifty cents as an offering to the general church. A sum of twenty dollars was made up, and the women felt greatly blessed in their effort. Two new members joined the group at this meeting, Mrs. Josephine Brush and Mrs. Sharfenaker. This year the group will study about the church. Sister A. H. Nieman read a paper, "Our United Purpose—the Church." Sister John Grice read a paper on "Teamwork" and gave twelve things to remember if we would succeed: (1) The value of time; (2) the success of perseverance; (3) the pleasure of working; (4) the dignity of simplicity; (5) worth of character; (6) power of kindness; (7) influence of example; (8) obligation of duty; (9) wisdom of economy; (10) virtue of patience; (11) improvement of talents, and (12) joy of originating.

Other speakers for the month were A. E. Anderton, J. E. Matthews, G. H. Kirkendall, C. W. Clark, A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, Doctor W. B. Reeves, and Chester Carey.

Gaylord, Michigan

This branch initiated the church school program the first of the year, and we like it. Each Sunday is an improvement over the last.

At the annual business meeting Elder Elmer Parkes was reelected branch pastor. He chose as counselors Elder Allen Schreur and Elder Hector McKinnon. Sister Sarah Schreur was reelected branch clerk and Earl Widrig, treasurer. Charles McKinnon was selected as church school director; Sister Ilah Schreur, musical director; Sister Sarah Schreur, adult leader; Hector McKinnon, young people's leader; Sister Flora Widrig, leader of children.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited this branch on a recent Sunday, and delivered the fourth of his series of sermons. A large crowd enjoyed his discourse.

The women's department meets each week under the supervision of Sister Sarah Schreur. The time is spent sewing and studying the Book of Mormon. There is also a short program each week.

A nine pound boy has been added to our cradle roll, Harold Albert, born to Brother and Sister Heman Schreur, January 30.

Several of the Saints' families are enjoying the radio sermons from Independence over KMBC.

Independence

A special rehearsal of "The Messiah," the conference oratorio, will be held for choir and orchestra the afternoon of March 6, Sunday, at the Stone Church. Patriarch J. T. Gresty will be in charge. All chorus and orchestra members of Independence and vicinity and those living at a greater distance who can make the trip, are urged to be present. April 10, the date when the oratorio will be presented to the conference, is not far away, and there is much work yet to be done on "The Messiah."

Stone Church

During the month of February Elder H. W. Harder, associate superintendent, has charge of the worship programs which precede the lesson sessions of the church school. Each Sunday morning he gives a helpful talk to the junior, intermediate, and adult departments. The lives of Lincoln and Washington composed his theme February 21. In commemoration of the occasion the American flag and the church flag stood on the rostrum.

Mayor Roger T. Sermon, on Sunday morning, talked to the Stone Church congregation delineating on the character and life of Washington. Four qualities, he declared, made Washington the great man he was, a man whose memory we revere: (1) He was a great leader, courageous, unselfish, honest, and willing to work; (2) He was a patriot; (3) He was a good citizen, and (4) He was a Christian.

It is unusual for the Stone Church to have in its pulpit the mayor of Independence and the chief of police, but such was the case on this morning. Elder D. O. Cato, who is chief of police, assisted the pastor in charge. Mr. Sermon was introduced by Pastor John F. Sheehy.

"More Love to Thee, O Christ," and "Take Time to Be Holy," were sung by the Stone Church Choir. Mrs. S. A. Burgess was the contralto soloist. Paul Craig directed the anthems and also the number by the men's chorus, "March on." Mrs. J. Adelbert Withee played the organ.

Downstairs the juniors, too, remembered George Washington with a program in his honor. A kindergarten orchestra, directed by Mrs. J. R. Lentell, offered musical numbers, and Ross Moore played the organ. There were readings by Wayne and Warren Cannon and Pollyanna Bolinger, a solo by Virginia Ann Mave, a historical sketch of Washington's life, by Mrs. A. B. Phillips, and a story, "George Washington and the Waffe Iron," by Mrs. Lentell. Pastor Will Bolinger was in charge of the program.

A fine illustrated lecture on the life of Washington and the city named after him was given by Elder C. Ed. Miller to a very large congregation of members and friends on Sunday evening. Of particular interest were a number of new slides which Elder Miller has taken considerable pains to make a part of his collection.

Music for the evening was by the Aeolian Chorus directed by Mrs. Jeannette Craig.

About sixty members and their friends of the Stone Church Choir made merry at the Valentine party given in the Wahdemna Choral Club rooms February 12. Games were designed to cause the merrymakers to think of the four great men born in the month of February—George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas A. Edison, and Charles A. Lindbergh. The committees in charge of the entertainment and refreshments did splendid work. The choir's weekly musical contribution to the services at the Stone Church is deeply appreciated.

An honored member and former untiring worker in the church has gone from us in the passing of Elder Joseph R. Lambert, on February 17, at the home of his son, Richard J. Lambert, in Independence. Brother Lambert had belonged to the church since 1863. During his career as a minister in the church he occupied a succession of offices in the priesthood, teacher, priest, elder, apostle, and patriarch. He contributed much to the written and printed word and was a successful controversialist. He was in his eighty-seventh year at the time of his death. There survive him a daughter and a son, Mrs. A. H. Mills and R. J. Lambert, of Independence; two sisters, Harriet Redfield, of Independence, and Ellen Pitt, of Hancock County, Illinois; a brother, Alexander, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, other relatives, and many friends. Funeral rites were held at Independence and at Lamoni, Iowa, where the body was interred.

Miss Nelene Marie Dawson, of Maryville, Missouri, became the bride of A. Craig Siegfried, son of Bishop and Mrs. Mark H. Siegfried, of Independence, February 13. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Dawson, of Maryville. The bridegroom is an Independence boy and a former Grace-land student.

Walnut Park Church

A wonderful sermon pleading with the Saints to become more like Christ was delivered by Elder Calvin H. Rich Sunday morning at Walnut Park. The choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson and accompanied by our young brother, Drexel Mollinson, sang "Praise the Lord, O My Soul," the solo being taken by Mrs. Marian Campbell.

The infant son of Brother and Sister Harold Hight was blessed at this service by Elder R. D. Weaver and the child's grandfather, Brother R. Barnhardt.

"Young Joseph Takes His Place," the last of President E. A. Smith's "Conversations," was given to a large congregation Sunday evening. President E. A. Smith was present and gave a synopsis of all the former plays. Much has been derived from these Sunday evening dramatic sketches from church history, and we shall miss their instruction and entertainment.

The A. W. Z. Class and its teacher, Brother William T. Gard, enjoyed a Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister Orlando Nace Saturday evening, February 13. Sister William T. Gard was the guest of honor. The class has been conducting a membership campaign, activities being pushed by two teams, the Rustlers with Juanita Harris as captain, and the Hustlers with Milford Nace captain. The latter team entertained the Rustlers.

Enoch Hill Church

The class period of the church school Sunday was shortened to allow more time for the Washington bicentennial program, given by the girls' organization known as "Builders on the Hill." Mrs. H. E. Winegar directed the girls. The program consisted of the song, "Onward and Upward," by the congregation; scripture reading, Ruth Grayer; talk on Washington, Dorothy Winegar; song, "Washington," by the girls' chorus; story, "The Discontented Soldier," by Pauline Alexander; song, "Lest We Forget," by girls' chorus.

At the eleven o'clock hour the chorus of girls directed by Mrs. H. C. Burgess gave twenty minutes of excellent music. Pastor Herbert Barto was the morning speaker. Fitting his sermon to the thought of the day, he discussed the growth and development of the American government and how God used Washington and other great men to lay the foundation so that his purposes might be carried out among the children of men.

In the evening a trio sang, "Land of Sunshine." The singers were Mrs. Charles Warren, Mrs. Amos Allen, Mrs. Rilla Johnson. Richard Bullard sang a solo, "Behold, What Manner of Love." Elder T. A. Beck was the speaker.

Englewood Church

At the sacrament service February 7, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Stageman was blessed by Pastor D. S. McNamara and given the name, Celia Rae. Elder Calvin H. Rich was the evening speaker.

February 14 found our little basement church decorated with flowers, flags, and a picture of Abraham Lincoln. A short program was given in honor of the birthday of this great man. Elder C. Ed. Miller was the morning speaker, and the music was in charge of the chorister. Elder Carl Hopkins was the evening speaker. The song service was followed by a vocal solo by Pastor McNamara.

The women's department had a covered dish luncheon with Mrs. Carl Haynden last Wednesday, and the dramatic club met with Mrs. William Crick on Friday at 9.30 a. m. Mrs. JoZelma Taylor was the instructor. Today the club was scheduled to meet with Mrs. Beatrice McNamara.

On Tuesday night the choir, with full attendance, and under the direction of the chorister, paid a debt it owed the Second Church Choir for help during Brother Gillen's series of sermons in Englewood a month ago. Our choir rendered some special numbers preceding Bishop Carmichael's sermon and also was in charge of congregational music.

Mrs. Pauline Arnson was ill and could not meet with the choir at its last Thursday night rehearsal. She was greatly missed.

Our meetinghouse was again in patriotic regalia on Sunday, this time in honor of the bicentennial anniversary of the birth of Washington. A brief program followed the class period.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the morning speaker. We rejoiced to see him looking so well and happy and to hear the good report he brings home from the southland. The morning's music was under the direction of Sister Alta Hougas, long-time chorister of past days. Elder Lyman Fike was the evening speaker.

Spring Branch Church

A good spirit was enjoyed at the early morning prayer service Sunday. Brothers Fish and W. F. Smith were in charge. The morning church school was in charge of Brother Andes's class.

Speakers at the eleven o'clock service were Brother Jacobson and Arthur Peer. The former talked on finances, the latter on loyalty to church and country. The new orchestra of this congregation added attractiveness to this service by giving a musical selection. This group is progressing rapidly.

The class taught by Brother Bilquist gave the program at the evening session of the church school. It consisted of a reading by Bessie Merle Totty, a duet by Alma Dickenson and Gladys Dickenson, a reading by Margaret McClain, and jokes by Velma Jones.

"Authority" was the theme of Brother Fish who spoke at the evening hour.

The young people's class gave a surprise-farewell party to their former leader, Joseph Farrow. Brother Farrow expects soon to make his home in Grain Valley, Missouri. The party was given at the home of Delbert McClain and about thirty-five were present. The people of this congregation regret the loss of Brother Farrow.

The wedding of Hazel Howe, daughter of Mrs. Lena Howe, and Loy Andes, son of J. S. Andes, took place at the home of the bridegroom's parents last Friday evening at 8.30.

East Independence Church

Among the speakers who have come to this congregation in the past few weeks was Elder William Patterson whose timely message, "Think Who You Are," stirred up our minds. He asked us to remember that at all times we represent Christ and his church on earth and that we are the pattern of his kingdom.

Elder A. H. Christensen recently closed a series of evening services which did much to instruct and build up the members.

At the last two Sunday services Elder Harry Friend and Patriarch Ammon White gave encouraging sermons.

Not long ago a large part of the congregation surprised Elder and Sister A. H. Christensen and family. They took refreshments and spent the evening with them singing, and visiting. The day was Sister Christensen's birthday.

The church school continues active and calls out the largest congregation of any service in the branch. The director of the school, C. Edgerton, started this year with a general discussion period in review of the revelations given in 1832, just one hundred years ago. Our young brother, Ammon Christensen, gave an address on Washington and his life at the church school period February 21.

Sunday evening this congregation dismissed its service to participate in the annual community sing. This is held in our neighboring Methodist Church. The various organizations in each church as well as the two school districts, Spring Branch and De Kalb, contribute numbers. This year the program was a celebration of Washington's, Lincoln's and Longfellow's birthdays. Sister Iva Edgerton was in charge of the sing and was elected leader of this entertainment for another year. This affair calls out almost the entire community and results in a packed house. Old-time songs are those principally used. The East Independence Orchestra, under the direction of A. H. Christensen, made its first public appearance at this time, giving a splendid musical contribution.

Lennox, California

On Sunday, February 7, members of this mission together with other Saints of the branches in Southern California District, met with Central Los Angeles Branch for the district conference. We were stirred by the good sermons. Two were preached by President F. M. Smith who explained to us the church debt and matters pertaining to it. Brother Smith left us many things to consider. Lunch was served in the church dining room at noon.

February 29, the Youth's Fellowship Club of the mission will give a play, "The More Abundant Life," by Clara L. Nichols. The cast and director hope to make this undertaking a success.

The women are working to give a chicken dinner in order to raise money to help in improvements on the meeting house.

Plans for this mission in 1932 call for stricter attention to the laws governing the kingdom and a studious application of the truths learned, that we may grow with our faces Zionward.

London, Ontario

The Royal Oak Bible Class staged a successful banquet not long ago. Between sixty and seventy invited guests sat down to the tables. Bert Richardson, teacher of the class, acted as toastmaster. Elder Frank Gray, church school director, responded to the toast, "Our Church School," speaking commendably of the school activities and advancement made this year. He offered encouragement to the teacher and members of the class, expressing the hope that the class will grow in number. Following an instrumental number by E. Jukes, Bishop J. C. Dent responded to the toast, "The General Church." He ably brought to attention various phases of the work carried on by the church, urging all present to be loyal and uphold the church in righteousness. Bert Richardson, class leader, gave a solo. Elder William Harrison, president of the class, responded to the toast to the class. A solo by Fred Heddington preceded Elder J. C. MacGregor's response to the toast, "Our Church." Brother MacGregor is pastor, having occupied that office for several years. He spoke encouragingly of the work which is being carried on in the various departments and the good feeling that is shown by the membership. It is his hope that the Spirit of the Master will permeate the souls of all and bring them to heights they have not yet attained. The chairman then called on several class members for a few remarks.

The Young Men's Bible Class in connection with the church school carried out a successful program at the evening hour on a recent Sunday. Priest Orlo Dent, recently ordained, was in charge and stated the purpose of the young men in putting on this program. He urged the young men of the branch to attend the church school and affiliate themselves with the class. Then he introduced the first speaker, Priest Arlo Hodgson, a class member and leader of the school orchestra. A musical number by Brother Neil, a member of the orchestra, was appreciated. Brother Dent introduced Priest William Alford, president of the class who used as a basis for his remarks the text: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." "The task of all young men," he said, "is to work for the honor and glory of God." He urged the youth to be watchful against the prevailing temptations and to seek earnestly the blessings derived from being a child of God. Brother Fred Heddington sang a solo and the choir, composed of about thirty members of the class, gave two hymns. The ushers and those who took up the offering were class members. Doctor D. A. Campbell, assistant teacher of the class, took a prominent part in the choir numbers. Each member of the class wore a white carnation. Many congratulations were extended the class on the success of their first venture of this kind.

The junior department of the church school had a Valentine party at the church last week, and the children and their teachers had a happy time. Refreshments came at the close of the party. The affair was under the direction of Sister Grace Perry and her staff.

Aurora, Illinois

66 South Elmwood Drive

Aurora Branch held its annual business session the last week in December to make it possible for District President Roscoe E. Davey to be present. This meeting resulted in the reelection of most of the workers: Pastor, Brother C. Malcar; church school director, Sister Roscoe Davey; director of adult division, Sister J. E. Wildermuth; young people's division, Sister C. B. Atkins; children's department, Sister Doris Wildermuth; branch solicitor, David Moore; director of music, Sister Doris Wildermuth; pianist, Myrtle Hill.

We are happy to welcome back to our midst several members who have for some time been indifferent. Appropriate to their home-coming was the sacrament service the first Sunday of January. This gathering was immensely enjoyed because of the presence of the good Spirit.

A stimulating sermon by Brother Roscoe Davey was given to us the last Sunday in January. He used for his text that portion of Christ's teaching in which he sends his disciples to reap where others have sown, telling them that the field is already white for the harvest. He ably reminded his hearers that we should thrust in our sickles and reap the supply of grain sprung up from the planting of the great men and women gone on before us. We should strive to leave a record, that our posterity looking back upon it, will be strengthened to square their shoulders and carry on. He said that the price our Martyrs paid was too great unless we too can glimpse that great light, and leave a record of barriers surmounted. If we leave the right kind of a record, it will stimulate oncoming generations to forge ahead rather than sit still saying, "What's the use?"

Aurora Saints are handicapped by the lack of a church building. But proper decorum is had at prayer and preaching services by taking the little ones to a separate room, where they are cared for by junior girls. The girls are instructed beforehand by Doris Wildermuth who has charge of their division of the church school.

Several members have been confined to their sick beds at various times this winter, but through the grace of God have been restored. Sister Mabel Reedy and little Donna Fae Davey are those whom we now number among the sick.

The Saints miss Brother Irvin Luke and his wife, Lois, who left last October. They are now in Kansas City, Kansas.

Brother J. E. Wildermuth and son, Beryl, who have been visiting with their family here since Christmas, returned to their fruit ranch in the Ozarks last week.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Special services attracted much interest for this branch from February 7 to 12, Apostle R. S. Budd being the speaker. Visitors came from Archibald Branch, twelve miles away, and from Bloomsburg, nearly sixty miles distant, to hear discussed the fundamentals which compose the basis of the triumph of Zion's ideals. The talks were full of good reasoning. The establishment of Zion was visioned through the principles of faith, repentance, baptism, tithing, and consecration of our lives, talents, and means.

On Sunday morning, February 14, instead of a preaching service, several of the young people gave a review of the week's services and the points or illustrations which most appealed to them. Those called upon to speak were Jacky Swales, Kenneth Parrot, Alfred Davies, Sirrel Terries, Arthur Evans, Florence Swales, Elmer Hegelend, Jack Williams, Jones Jenkins, John Jenkins, and William Hawkins. The talks were extemporaneous and the speakers did well.

During the meetings questions were asked of Brother Budd, and our thought has been stimulated. We trust this stimulation will bear fruit in greater activity.

The music during the missionary services was an inspiration. Chorister J. R. Jenkins displayed his talent and good taste. Sister Maud Hegelend played the piano and William and Alfred Davies their violins. The work of instrumentalists and singers presages musical advancement here.

Some time ago a brother said: "Wherever there is a desire to minister the opportunity will come." If this branch will be united, it has a great future. Our young people are preparing for service.

Calgary, Alberta

1507 Fourteenth Avenue, West

It has been some time since the Herald heard from us, but we read the letters and reports of other branches, and these cause us to want to let the world know that we are here in Calgary, regularly holding church services and Sunday school, in spite of the fact that the Saints are few in number and are not visited very often by the missionaries.

The annual business meeting was held January 4. After a thorough explanation had been made of the new plan of Religious Education, it was adopted by the branch. The group chose Brother C. B. Gibson, superintendent of the church school and Brother M. Hanna, treasurer. These officers began their work the second Sunday in January, and all hope to make a splendid showing in attendance and class work.

The Christmas program given December 18, consisted of songs and other individual and group numbers in which practically all the children participated. Every year we have a Christmas party; inexpensive gifts are purchased to be delivered by Santa Claus during the evening.

The local congregation responded nobly during the two months of sacrifice, paying tithes and giving offerings. The children worked hard, too, and gave their offerings. All are anxious to obey the temporal law.

The death of Brother Henry H. Marshall, of Strathmore, Alberta, brought sadness to the Saints here. He passed away February 1. The funeral services were held Thursday, February 4, at two o'clock from the Armstrong Funeral Home, by Elder William McLeod.

Sacrament services for January and February were well attended. Some out-of-town Saints were present.

The women's department is holding regular meetings and making a quilt. A social meeting was held at the home of Sister M. Hanna, January 27. A silver collection amounted to five dollars.

Saints passing through or visiting Calgary will be very welcome at our meetings.

Eagle City, Oklahoma

This little branch is trying to live and teach the gospel of the kingdom. The church school and preaching services have good attendance, many present being nonmembers. Six classes occupy the Sunday morning hour.

On each first Sunday the Canton group has church school service, too, with preaching following.

There is preaching here and at Canton every Sunday evening. Elders Lester Dyke and Roy Diamond alternate. Elders E. Ballinger and H. Harpham, of Seiling, usually occupy at Canton on the first Sunday. Prayer services are held here Wednesday evening and at Canton Thursday evening.

Elder E. B. Hull held an interesting two-week meeting here in January which was well attended and much enjoyed.

At the annual business meeting all officers were sustained for 1932. A peaceful spirit was felt during the session.

The usual Christmas observance was carried out and the closing number of a pleasing program was "The Story Beautiful."

Though few in number the women's department is faithfully at work. Canton group also is quite active. At Eagle City we take turns with the Methodist and Christian Ladies' Aids in entertaining the other two societies once every three months. Quilting, a short program, and refreshments compose the usual order.

Birmingham, England

We realize that the year before us is full of opportunities for service to the church of Jesus Christ. The challenge to each one of us is to help bring about the condition for which we daily pray: "Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." The responsibility of the gospel weighs heavily upon us, and we want to see the church of Christ achieving great things, its people unitedly working to save precious souls.

Our prayer services are a source of spiritual power and strength. They offer a season for the refreshing of tired minds and bodies. The words of Jesus are: "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest to your souls." In these strenuous times we are glad to sit at the feet of the lowly Nazarene, and where two or three are met in his name, he has promised to be and bless. We have many times seen this promise fulfilled. "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly," said the Master. So we praise God for this unspeakable gift, and desire to give it to others.

Our financial position is very satisfactory. We feel assured that 1933 will find us clear of debt and making headway. We were happy to assist during the sacrifice period and trust that the church debt will soon be reduced and that the missionaries may resume their important work.

We have had a number of fine sermons on the financial law, and have appreciated the inspired writings of our leaders and articles that have appeared in late Heralds from good and wise men. We are desirous of living as the church requires.

At present there is much sickness in the branch due to an epidemic of flu. Many blessings of healing have been experienced. For these we are thankful.

The new year message, given by Elder A. Kendrick, exhorted us to go forward with faith and courage. We have the Savior's promise that he will be with us to guide our efforts.

Bradner, Ohio

This branch is going forward in the work of the church, and has much for which to be thankful.

Elder Franklin Slye was reelected branch president at the annual business meeting December 28. Sister Ulrich was made Sunday school superintendent. William Smith was made superintendent of recreation and expression.

All departments are functioning properly, each leader putting forth every effort to make his undertaking successful. We have splendid meetings with good attendance. Two orchestras are organized in the branch, one of young people, the other of older members. Sister Henry Smith directs both groups.

A two-day conference of Northwestern Ohio District was held at the local church January 30 and 31. The main object of this gathering was to elect delegates to General Conference. Brother and Sister Harold Harms were selected from this branch. A fine program under the supervision of Sister Everett Ulrich, was given on Saturday evening, at which time the junior orchestra provided music.

The department of women, under the leadership of Sister Willard Hetrick, has a good program outlined for the year. The women regularly bake cookies, there being a good demand in Bradner and elsewhere. They gave a fried chicken dinner January 22, for which they sold more than two hundred tickets. Many Saints from neighboring branches, Oak Harbor and Toledo, attended.

There is no actual suffering among the members because of depressing times. Most of the family heads are employed, and by practicing frugality, we are holding our own.

Last Thanksgiving the Saints gathered at the modern country home of Brother and Sister Henry Smith and partook of their hospitality. After a chicken dinner at noon, a program of music and stunts was enjoyed. Several older members became reminiscent. In the evening there was lunch, and more fun. Because this proved so enjoyable an affair, it was repeated at Christmas time. The Saints in Bradner are as one large family and have many fine times.

Elder Jacob Halb held a ten-day series of meetings early in January. His sermons were very spiritual.

A Missionary in Arkansas

Winthrop, Arkansas, February 11.—As a matter of interest for northern Saints, I wish to say that beginning last week, many families here are making garden. Most of the time the weather is very spring-like. This is the general rule here for this time of year. While the soil is light, with the use of care and fertilizer, the country is able to support quite a dense population. Berries and melons seem to be the most profitable crops. Around Hope and not far from here the gardeners claim to raise the largest and most delicious watermelons anywhere in the world. Each year the town put on a melon festival or fair, and the people come from many miles both to see and eat these exhibits. One man in Oklahoma, doubting the reports as to the size of the watermelons, offered an exorbitant price for melons weighing a hundred and twenty-five pounds. Within four days he was compelled to discontinue the order, being swamped with loads of melons of that weight. Most of these crops reach the early Kansas City and Saint Louis markets.

Only a small part of the country is being tilled. Pine, oak, and hickory cover many acres. Streams are clear and fishing is good.

About melon time next summer, we expect to have a camp meeting near Dalby Springs, Texas, not far from here. Any Saints planning a vacation would enjoy camping with us.

I have been having a month's meeting at Winthrop with good attendance and interest. The southern melodies sung by the Saints and their friends are soul stirring. Our question box is well patronized by young and old. After a sermon on the laying on of hands, there came in some sneering questions as to the laying on of hands, in Old Testament times, on goats and sheep. When it was explained that anything consecrated to God is set apart by the laying on of hands, even his adopted children, the questions turned to the discomfiture of the questioner.

We organized a young people's society last night which bids fair to engulf the high school students. I spoke before the student body Monday night and am invited to occupy the assembly hour again Friday.

J. W. PETERSON.

Mulberry, Kansas

Those who in years past have lived in Mulberry will be especially glad to know that the branch continues here, and that the gospel work is doing fairly well under the circumstances in which we labor.

There is a mission in Gross, Kansas, which has Sunday school at 2.30 p. m. and preaching on Tuesday nights.

At Liberal, Missouri, a mission of the church conducts three services each week. A faithful group lives there, and the organization of a good branch there in the near future is very probable. A man and his wife were baptized there Sunday, February 7, in the afternoon. These two new members will be a help in the local work especially in the young people's department.

Though only three of the group are church members, the young people at Liberal are faithful, and splendid young people's services are conducted each Thursday night. An average of eighteen attend the Wednesday prayer meeting, and a little rain does not stop them. Attendance at the preaching and confirmation service Sunday night, February 7, was large. Brother Farington, pastor of Pittsburg Branch, and Brother Todd, pastor of Arma Branch, officiated in the confirmation which was marked by a degree of the Spirit. While the house was crowded, the decorum was good. The Pittsburg young people will visit this mission February 18, presenting a program.

Cleveland, Ohio

The annual branch business meeting was held November 27, 1931, Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley in charge, and the following officers were elected for the new year: President, Elder J. A. McNeil; church school supervisor, Elder J. H. Talbot; adult supervisor, C. H. Thomas; young people's supervisor, Rex Mason; children's supervisor, Miss Shirley Talbot; organist, Mrs. Maude Mason; director of music, Mrs. E. A. McNeil; branch solicitor, Clark Bennett, and publicity agent, Mrs. L. A. Vanderwerf.

At the close of this meeting, the incoming branch president brought to the attention of the body the splendid accomplishments that had taken place in the branch under the direction of Brother Gunsolley. Special mention might be made of the careful manner in which the church property was kept at all times. This occasioned much favorable comment in the church and in the neighborhood. A baptismal font was installed under his direction, and considerable repair work was done, with the assistance of Brother Rex Mason and Brother Wilson.

January 27, the women's department was organized, and Mrs. Maude Mason chosen as supervisor. January 23, the women's department entertained the Lakewood Branch sisters at a luncheon.

Provision was made at a special business meeting, February 3, for the organization of the Zion's Religio Literary Society. The branch president, knowing of the long and faithful service rendered by Brother Gunsolley as one of the society's general officers at its formation, prevailed upon him to act as chairman in bringing into being our local organization. To this he cheerfully consented. The following officers were chosen: President, L. A. Vanderwerf; vice president, John A. McNeil, jr.; secretary, Miss Frances Jones; treasurer, Mrs. L. A. Vanderwerf, and librarian, Harry Campbell, jr.

The Cheerio Girls, under Sister Gunsolley, and the Boy Scouts, under Rex Mason, meet on Friday night as usual.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

On February 14, Central Church had the rare treat of having Apostle Paul M. Hanson as its guest speaker both morning and evening. His theme during the morning discussion dwelt upon the world-wide depression, and he spoke words of comfort saying that even though the people of the church, because of the necessity to be in the world, are compelled to face the trying and perplexing problems which confront the nation, that God is mindful of the needs of his people and will bless them in as much as they walk uprightly before him.

His evening discourse consisted of a lecture on archaeological points of interest found in Mexico. It presented fifty or sixty slide pictures on the screen which proved to be of interest to the splendid audience. This was a lecture which must have required hours of study and research, a service invaluable to the church.

February 21 was a gloomy day and the attendance at the morning services was below the average.

Bishop C. A. Skinner was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, and the service was dedicated to the memory of the birth of the father of this nation, George Washington.

At 7.45 p. m. Central people were much pleased to again welcome the Wahdemna Choral Club which rendered a lovely program of sacred music.

The various circles of the Women's Club have been busy working toward their goal of adding to the church building fund. On Tuesday evening, February 23, a Washington's birthday party was held at the home of the club's president, Sister Mary Moats. Each member attending, took along the sum of twenty-five cents (a penny for each day of the month of February, except Sunday.) These pennies will be added to the mile of pennies which the club is saving. The club is divided into two groups and much rivalry is being manifested, each group trying hard to be the winner. It requires sixteen pennies to a foot and when the whole mile of pennies will have been saved, a sum of $844.80 can be added to the building fund.

Sister D. H. Blair and Sister C. A. Skinner, who recently were confined to the hospital, are able to be about again, and were attendants at Sunday's services. Sister Blanche Mesley is recovering nicely at the Sanitarium.

Delta, Colorado

Owing to adverse conditions among many of the Saints in this vicinity, attendance at services has been much smaller the past quarter than heretofore. Some by carrying the "bulk of the load" have endeavored to keep things moving, and we hope it will soon be possible for more persons to attend regularly.

Quite a number gathered at the church on New Year's Eve. The early part of the evening was spent in the upper rooms playing games and visiting. From eleven o'clock until the ushering in of the new year, a worship service was held in the main room downstairs. Scripture readings followed by song responses helped to spend profitably the last hour of the old year.

The children of the branch and others enjoyed a party given for them by Sister N. L. Booker, January 2.

The women met at Sister Booker's church home January 21, and partook of a potluck dinner, and enjoyed being present for the services which followed. Brother Booker talked on "Branch Problems," and we hope all were made to realize the importance of giving support in every way possible for the advancement of this cause. In his appeal, he stated that Delta Branch had "met the test" in many ways in the past, citing the purchase of the present church home, the meeting of the payments, the helping with the remodeling, etc. Brother Booker also mentioned our willingness to help support the missionaries sent here when it became necessary for the general church to release them. We feel that Brother and Sister Booker have merited much more than we have been able to do to express to them our appreciation of their willing services. May we always meet the test that God's designs may be furthered and that his children and servants may be encouraged to press on.

Sister Booker's suggestions with regard to providing suitable recreation for our young people, were timely, and we trust that soon there may be satisfactory responses along this line.

January 24, Brothers M. L. Schmid and Delmer Perkins and family, of Grand Junction, visited us. Brother Perkins gave the theme talk of the day and Brother Schmid occupied the eleven o'clock hour. Their visits to Delta are always welcomed.

New Canton, Illinois

Elder, R. L. Fulk, wife, and daughter, of Benton, came to this place to spend the Christmas holidays, and on the evening of December 26, Brother Fulk commenced a series of sermons using the little model church constructed by Elder Harvey Minton. Brother Harvey was one of our home boys, and the Saints were happy at the work he was inspired to do. The sermons were delivered with much spirit and power to a fair-sized crowd at first. As the meetings continued the interest increased until there was a full house.

Methodists, Christians, Catholics, and Christian Scientists were present, and for three weeks Brother Fulk talked to them about the wonderful plan of salvation and the organizing of the church of Jesus Christ. The message was very plain and delivered with a power which compelled attention. Many believed and the Saints were made to rejoice.

On the second Sunday of the meetings five were baptized at Kiser Creek at New Canton, and many more are considering making a decision.

Sister Fulk directed the singing during the holidays, and special music was enjoyed during the meetings.

On Sunday Brother Fulk was assisted by Brother William Guthrie, of Nebo, Illinois.

On the evening of January 18, a social was given at the church in honor of Brother Fulk. Leaders chose sides, and questions were asked on the sermons on the model church. Sandwiches, pickles and coffee were served and every one had a social good time.

Leicester, England

On January 2 and 3 Leicester Branch held special new year services under the direction of Elder E. R. Chappell, music director.

The first session of the week-end was an "All-in" concert by the "Leicester Religians." Part one consisted of selections from their repertoire of favorite concert items, a half-hour of distinctive variety. A dramatic cameo followed entitled, "The Wraith of the Road," a study of remorse. This was well played by four of the young people and E. R. Chappell, the producer. The next item was, "The Wrong Flat," a farcical comedy, played by a cast of seven young people. It was one long laugh for the audience. The last item was an epitome in song and story of, "The Seven Ages of Woman." The story was told by Betty Chappell. Songs typical of the seven ages of woman were sung and illustrated by tableaux by the Religians. This was written and produced by E. R. Chappell. The stage manager was Arthur Norton and the music director was Miss Ivy Dilks.

Pastor Arthur Norton was in charge of the new year sacrament hour January 3, in the afternoon. "Consecration" was the theme and there were many testimonies offered along with prayers and hymns. All resolved to do a greater work for the Master and to strive to keep the gospel banner waving in 1932.

A young people's service followed, in charge of the deacon of the branch, John F. Chappell. Musical and other program numbers were given by young people and children. The Spirit of the Master permeated the talk of Sister F. Emily Norton.

A new year choral service began at 6.30 p. m. Elder Simon Holmes, of Clay Cross, was the speaker on the theme of the day, "Consecration." Hymns and readings suggested this theme. A good number of Saints and friends attended. The director was Ernest R. Chappell and Miss Ivy Dilks was the accompanist. We parted with an earnest desire to do all we can to spread the gospel in this year. This program will be repeated in the near future.

East Bay Branch

2020 Ashby Avenue, Berkeley, California

President F. M. Smith spent a busy week in the Bay Cities. Sunday morning, January 31, he spoke to this branch, giving a thorough analysis of the fiscal situation of the general church. In the evening he was the speaker at the San Francisco church. Wednesday evening he spoke to the congregation at Park Presidio. Friday morning he was the guest speaker of the Pacific School of Religion and in the evening he left for Los Angeles.

Not long ago Berkeley was privileged to hear Dr. Millikan speak on "Science and Religion." It was inspiring to hear this world-renowned scientist, whose isolation of the electron and the weighing of it is one of the most distinguished achievements of modern science, speak of these two forces as being complementary to each other in the uplift of our civilization.

On a Sunday late in January Doctor Bush was in charge of our service and Brother Ralston preached the sermon. Brother Carmichael was in Santa Rosa, Brother C. Hawley was engaged in business matters which prevented his attendance at church. The pastor was the preacher at Park Presidio. In the afternoon he was the guest of the Decoto Masonic Home for the aged and conducted the afternoon service. Two of our members are there, Mrs. Felter and Mrs. Tate.

The Keystone Banquet was held January 29, tickets having been sold to more than two hundred guests. The guest speakers held the attention of the audience. The good program and smiling faces of the people spoke well of the success of the affair.

Brother Austin, president of the Keystone Club, has left for the South. We miss his dependable assistance.

Sister Betty Brown passed away in the Kings Daughters Home, February 2. The funeral was conducted at the "Little Church of Flowers," Pastor John F. Rushton officiating. For many years Sister Brown was known to the church for her faithfulness and devotion. She was in her ninety-third year.

On a recent Sunday morning Apostle M. A. McConley and Elder G. P. Levitt were among the visitors. Brother Levitt, the district president, announces that the district conference will be held at Stockton, Saturday and Sunday, February 27 and 28. Our delegates to this gathering were elected early in the month.

The workers' conference convened the evening of February 8 when profitable discussion and the making of plans occupied the hour.

MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

E. S. Hargrave is hereby appointed as bishop's agent of Winnipeg District.

Brother Hargrave comes to us well recommended and we feel confident he will receive the earnest cooperation of the membership in giving their support to this phase of church work.

The Saints in this district are requested to send their contributions to Brother E. S. Hargrave, 529 Richmond Street, Winnipeg, Canada.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Pastoral

To the Membership of Rock Island District, greeting: You will be pleased to learn that our district contributed $6,953.88 to the general church budget for 1931, which was $153.88 over our quota. This was due to the splendid cooperation of officers and members. Our quota for 1932 has been set at $8,500. This is a twenty-five per cent increase over 1931, the increase being due to our program of debt reduction. The general authorities have asked us to apportion our district quota among the branches, which we have tried to do in justice to all. As our district numbers approximately 1,700 the average will be $5 per member. The quotas assigned are as follows: Anamosa, $50; Cedar Rapids, $425; Clinton, $400; Davenport, $250; Dahinda, $125; Fulton, $900; Galesburg, $150; Joy and Buffalo Prairie, $400; Kewanee, $700; Moline, $560; Matherville, $25; Millersburg, $50; Muscatine, $100; Oelwein, $550; Peoria, $25; Rock Island, $900; Savanna, $705; Waterloo, $125; nonresident and those who will send direct to the presiding bishop, $2,060. Total $8,500. If each branch, and each church school will try to do its part in organizing for this work through the observance of the oblation, Christmas offering, birthday offering, and the teaching of the temporal law, and if each individual member will do what he can in justice to himself and his obligations to God in the recognition of his stewardship, we shall again find ourselves at the top of the ladder when the 1932 books are closed. We have confidence in the Saints of Rock Island District, and appreciate the privilege of working with such a loyal group. Let us work together that we may rejoice together in the accomplishment of the task set before us.—E. R. Davis, district president, 2325 Twenty-third Avenue, Moline, Illinois.

Message From Zion's Patroness Society

Greetings from the unit in Zion of the Independence Sanitarium Patroness Society to all Patroness women: Some time has elapsed since we sent a message to our sisters and organized units throughout the church. The patroness work moves on. There is much to be done with a promise of the New Sanitarium being at least partly finished in the near future. Many units have organized to assist in the work of furnishing the new building with linens and other materials. At the coming General Conference we shall have our annual display of hospital furnishings, made and provided by the units of the Patroness organization. At that time we shall be glad to greet again all Patroness women and other sisters interested in this work. Our task is large, but it is a pleasing service to furnish, in a small way, things to cheer the hearts of those who have to leave home to go to this place of healing. We are making it possible for them to find in the New Sanitarium and Hospital beautiful things made by loving hands and designed to cheer those who suffer and are lonely. All who are sending work for their units or otherwise, we ask to get the same to Mrs. H. L. Loosemore, 1117 Van Horn Road, Independence, Missouri, by March 15, so that the work can be listed and bulletins made. We thank all who are helping us and pray the Lord's blessing upon his workers. We hope to see you during General Conference.—Iva Edgerton, secretary of the society, Rural Route 3, Box, 371 Independence, Missouri.

Marriage

BIVENS-PITSENBARGER.—Miss Pauline Bivens and Mr. Leonard M. Pitsenberger, both of Topeka, were united in marriage the evening of January 25, at the home of Doctor Edmund J. Kulp, of Kansas City, Missouri. The Reverend Kulp is a former pastor of the First Methodist Church in Topeka of which the bride is a member. Mrs. Pitsenberger is the daughter of Mrs. E. O. Bivens, of 316 West Seventh, and is a graduate nurse, having practiced in Topeka and Manhattan. Leonard is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, of 2331 Buchanan Street, and is a faithful worker in Topeka Branch and leader of the young people of Northeast Kansas District. Both young people are loved and honored by the Saints and their many friends in Topeka, who extend to them the sincere wish for a long and happy journey along the highway of life. Mr. and Mrs. Pitsenberger are at home to their friends at 316 West Seventh Street.

Our Departed Ones

CURRIE—Mary K. Currie was born near Crescent, Iowa, December 11, 1869. She married John L. Currie December 19, 1885. Was the mother of twelve children, eight of whom are living: Mrs. Ruth H. Guinnas, of Joplin, Missouri; Allen T., of Coquille, Oregon; Mrs. Edna P. Hanson, Mrs. Bertha E. Hanson, Leona M., Dorothy, Grace A., and Ernest L., of Council Bluffs, Iowa. She became a member of the Reorganized Church in 1895, and kept the faith. Was active as far as her strength permitted her and sought to encourage her children to activity in the church. For several years she was in ill health, and died February 1, 1932, of pneumonia, at her home in Council Bluffs. Her work was principally in her home and for her loved ones, and the results are commendable. The funeral was held February 4, by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by Elder Ray Whiting. The sermon text was Romans 15: 4 and Revelation 14: 13. Interment was in Crescent Cemetery.

CARPENTER—Chauncey E. Carpenter, son of D. W. and Lida E. Carpenter, of Pistol River, Oregon, was born February 7, 1895. He died January 20, 1932, of appendicitis. In early youth he joined the church in Bandon Branch and was a member at the time of his death. He was a man of strict integrity, loved and respected by his friends and acquaintances. He leaves to mourn, his wife, five children, his parents, and two brothers. He was a resident of Pistol River, Oregon.

CONGDON—Mary Louise De Backer, daughter of Leon and Fernie De Backer, was born January 18, 1892, at Brussels, Belgium. In 1924, she was married to Arthur Congdon. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1927, being baptized by Elder O. W. Okerlind. She departed this life February 5, 1932, in the hospital at Estevan, Saskatchewan, where she had undergone an operation and later developed pneumonia. The funeral sermon was preached by J. F. Curtis at Goodwater, Saskatchewan. Left to mourn are her husband, father, mother, six brothers, and one sister.

Business Opportunity

On account of the increasing number of visitors to the Joseph Smith Home and graves of the Martyrs, there is an excellent opportunity to start a restaurant, oil station, or souvenir shop in a property close by, small capital required, we especially would like to hear from a released missionary.

General Conference

Under this heading special announcements will appear each week. Readers are asked to look for it in order to keep informed about plans and programs.

Special Rehearsal of "Messiah" Next Sunday

The Messiah Choir composed of singers from Independence, Kansas City, Holden, and Far West Stakes, and many other points, and the Messiah Orchestra will hold special rehearsal of the conference oratorio at the Stone Church next Sunday afternoon beginning promptly at four o'clock. Brother Gresty will direct the rehearsal. This is the first time choir and orchestra will have rehearsed, and all singers and orchestra members living close to Independence are urged to be present. The director and other choir officers hope to see present members from Saint Joseph, and other places. This rehearsal is important.

Personal Finances

It has been thought necessary, in view of past experience, to issue a word of caution with regard to personal finances for the coming General Conference. Every person who comes should make complete arrangements for transportation both ways, and for expenses during the stay in Independence. The provisions should be adequate also for possible emergencies.

A few people have always come to the general conferences who have had only sufficient funds to pay for their transportation one way. These few have been without means of paying expenses during their stay, and often without a way to return to their homes. Others have chosen the conference time as an occasion to come and cast themselves upon the charity of the church without any adequate claim whatever.

The church will not be able to furnish these people with funds, or make provisions for them, except in such cases as full arrangements shall be made previously in writing by the Presiding Bishopric.

People are warned, too, of the general situation of unemployment. Visitors can not expect to find temporary jobs to finance their trips.

This warning is issued to prevent suffering for persons who may thoughtlessly involve themselves in difficulties.

L. L.

Missionaries Attending Conference

Indications are that the attendance at the coming Conference will consist largely of delegates and ex officios. It is important that the general church appointees attend, if practicable to do so. Efforts are being made by the Transportation Department to provide as many of these missionaries with transportation as possible, but the ability in this connection will be rather limited.

Even where transportation is obtained there will be other expenses which the missionary will have to meet. We are, therefore, urging the branch and district officers to cooperate with the missionary to the end that the district in which he labors will render financial assistance to meet the expense of the trip to Conference. This may not be feasible in all districts, but wherever possible, the cooperation given will be greatly appreciated.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

"The Long, Steady Pull"

Some time ago in one of his communications to the church, Bishop DeLapp used the words, "Now for the long, steady pull!"

Under the most trying conditions imposed by the depression, the people of the church have rallied their forces and have made a splendid effort to meet the necessary obligations. It has been shown that the task is not impossible. In the words of President McDowell, "It can be done!"

We are now at the point where we are required to make the "long, steady pull." Some people can make a display of great energy and power for a short period of time, but they tire and wear out easily. Others get started slowly, but proceed with an increasing and almost irresistible momentum. While all types of personality and performance are needed by the church, the present times and situation place a special value upon those who can be counted on for endurance and steady sustained effort.

The payment of our debt, as has been remarked, is not our goal. And yet it stands in the way of our goal. It has not so much to do with the preaching of the gospel, and yet the work of preaching the gospel can not be carried out as it should be until the debt is paid. Let us keep working. L. L.

The Still Small Voice

And . . . the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake: and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.—1 Kings 19: 11,12.

Elijah could not hear the "still small voice" of the Lord until wind, earthquake, and fire had ceased. This dramatic incident from the Scripture is more than a story: it is a lesson.

If, by some miracle, there could come a lull in the present noise and confusion of the world, it might be that men could hear that "still small voice" speaking to them. God speaks, but it is only when we become quiet that we can hear. The first thing necessary is quietness, not only physical repose, but mental peace.

Ghandi takes one day a week for complete silence. The periods of silent meditation in the services of the Friends are well known. These times of quiet are to give the voice of conscience and the "still small voice" of the Lord a chance to speak.

When one goes far into the country, away from the din of cities where no slightest noise of man's clattering machines can come, he can open his ears to the majestic silence that broods over the open spaces of the earth. He hears a silence that is more eloquent than sound.

Perhaps we shall never incorporate the practice of silence as a feature of our religion, but we can take periods of time to banish the concerns and worries of everyday life from our minds, and be quiet.

Those who follow the hermit life lose the riches of all other personalities. Those who continually immerse themselves in crowds lose the rich experience of discovering their own personalities. The ideal life requires for every person the privilege of access to the society of people, and the other great privilege of withdrawal.

There are institutions maintained by some religious organizations which are called "retreats"; to these places people who have become too much encumbered with worldly concerns and worries can go to give their time to silence, rest, and meditation. If more of us could take periods of "retreat" we should be vastly benefited.

The still small voice of the Lord is speaking. Do we hear it? Or is it lost in the confusion of noise in which we immerse our lives? L. L.

"Be Not Afraid"

Starved souls are not a few in these days. Always there have been people who denied themselves spiritual growth because they were afraid of the appearance of religion, because they feared the responsibility of goodness, virtue, and sincerity. They have preferred to move with the crowd rather than to accept high standards in moral and spiritual things and stand their ground.

Fear is a potent factor in determining the way we live. We can not deny the charge, for every one of us is afraid of something. "Fear rules the world," some one has said. Fear of the present and the future awakens suspicion and distrust in the hearts of men, fosters prejudice and intolerance. Fear opposes the upbuilding forces of love and trust. Fear destroys hope, happiness, and the possibility of peace. Fear spurs nations to waste their wealth in armaments and men to permit poverty, hunger, and suffering. Fear brings hell on earth.

The Christ plan does not include fear. He came to save and redeem the world from fear. The foundation of his life-giving message was: "Thou shalt love—" He did not say: "Thou shalt fear." Jesus by his life of love and helpfulness taught men that God is the Father of love, not the Father of fear. He taught his disciples by simple words and deeds. Here is the story of an incident in which Jesus taught his disciples not to fear. I tell it to you because I want you to think about it. Let the words of Christ sink deep into your soul; apply them to your life as you are living it now.

And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away. And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone. But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary. And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me. And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

NOTICE

Sale of Insurance Business

The insurance business known as the "American Underwriters, Incorporated," which has been located in the Battery Block, 221 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri, has been sold to Brother Glaud L. Smith, who has been engaged in the general insurance business in Independence and Kansas City for a number of years.

Brother Smith is a man well qualified by training, disposition and experience to take over and carry forward this business. We feel sure that every courtesy and facility will be extended to the many patrons of the office. He expects to represent the same strong old line companies for whom the American Underwriters had the agency, in addition to the others he already represented.

All parties indebted to or having claims against the American Underwriters should take up such matters directly with him.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
 By A. CARMICHAEL.
 L. F. P. CURRY.
 G. L. DELAPP.

The above notice of sale calls for a statement of some of the reasons for the action had.

First, the church was not organized to conduct a commercial enterprise. To do so requires competition with its own members, and entails liabilities which if not discharged from the income of the business must be from tithes and offerings. The American Underwriters, Incorporated, has involved the church under both counts. (Please observe that there is a fundamental difference between the church itself engaging in some form of business and persons organizing for the same purpose as stewards under the fundamental law of the church.)

Second, since the first advance in 1924 by the church to the American Underwriters, Incorporated, or to its predecessor, the total has reached the sum of $32,692.19. Recovery of this substantial amount is possible only from a cash sale of the business as a going concern, or from assets left after debts have been paid and from future earnings. Since the best cash offer represented a very small realization, it became obvious that other steps were necessary to increase the recovery. The sale to Brother Smith constituted such an arrangement, and from it the church may expect to receive over a period of time practically half of the original advances. A satisfactory guarantee of performance has been given, in addition to which Brother Smith is combining his own clientele with the American Underwriters, Incorporated, thus placing the business upon a broader earning basis than heretofore.

If the branches and members who have hitherto placed their insurance with this agency because it was a church institution will continue doing so, the complete discharge of the obligation agreed to will be materially hastened. Brother Smith is qualified to merit the patronage solicited.

This sale is but another step in the readjustment of the finances of the church and the full cooperation of those in a position to help may reasonably be expected.

Comparative Statement of Income of Months of January, 1931, 1932

In a previous article we stated that it would be our aim to give a report each month of the income by districts. While we do not have all the reports in for the month of January 1932, we think it advisable to present those which have been received.

The districts which have not reported are shown at the foot of the column. It is to be noted that the total received in 1932 from the seventy-three districts was $27,649.72 as compared to $36,562.85 for 1931. Forty-six of the seventy-three districts reported less than for a year ago and twenty-six received more.

We wish to call attention again to the fact that our requirements for 1932 are approximately $40,000 per month. To raise this amount will require greater diligence on the part of all, but particularly upon those who have the responsibility of raising the budget in the various stakes and districts.

Centenary of the Late President Joseph Smith

The year 1932 marks the centenary of the birth of the late President Joseph Smith. Born only a short time after the organization of the church, his childhood days were passed during the stirring events and troublous times of those crowded years when his father brought the early church from a small membership to what was estimated to be nearly a quarter of a million. He was less than twelve years of age when the tragedy of 1844 occurred. His young manhood was passed during the "dark and cloudy day" from the time of that event to the more peaceful and constructive work that began in 1860, when, in his twenty-eighth year, he accepted the leadership of the church.

From 1860 to 1914, the year of his death, was a remarkably long period of service, and saw the church, under his direction and with the aid of staunch helpers, gradually and steadily gaining back much of the old ground, but winning a new peace, security, and respect.

It does not seem long since 1914. Many are alive who knew him well, and worked with him and under him for the church. To them it may well seem that his spirit is still with us, and that his utterances and writings have a current value and application.

Many of his friends have both pleasant and profitable memories of their association with him. In this centennial anniversary of his birth it would be appropriate for them to write their reminiscences. We should be glad to receive such writings within the next few weeks and months and make selections from them for use this year. L. L.

Salvation from our sins is free, offered to all. It is a present thing, saving us for this world, saving us to our highest life and soul-beauty, but we spurn it and use only our own poor devices to meet the world's fierce temptations; and seek salvation by poor, futile, human devices. We live our lives as though there were none to help us but our brethren, and they are weak and blind as we are. We want light and leading, companionship and love, assurance and forgiveness, while God has made us his own children and has given us prayer, whereby to call upon him; but we live as though the world were but desolation, empty of divinity, a bleak, barren spot, forsaken of God, with empty heavens above. The pity of it all—the world packed with spirit, and we living weak, poverty-stricken lives!—Frederick Lynch.

Evaluating the Lessons of the Depression

By A. B. Phillips

The following is the ninth of a series of articles contributed by various writers to the consideration of the depression, its causes and effects, and the future possibilities. From a lifetime of experience and study the author draws some valuable considerations.

The nation, people, or church that consumes without adequately producing must either repent or starve. Whether or not the words of Genesis are figuratively understood, the history of human experience is condensed in the admonition of God:

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground.—Genesis 3:19.

Because of capitalistic influences many millions in the world today are not producing. These influences are concomitants of, but subordinate to, the underlying cause of all the evils which they produce. That cause is selfishness and greed. The depression of today is but an incident which has been repeated unnumbered times in greater or lesser areas of the world for thousands of years. In all probability it will have further repetitions until men become teachable through the lessons that should be learned. In our present state of culture and material development it is easy to think of the conditions now being suffered as almost the worst in human experience, and of course they are (probably) the worst in the experience of this generation in some respects at least. The pessimism of Irwin Edman, as expressed recently in the Forum, is doubtless shared by many with deflated pocketbooks seeking a job in vain, though some might use more forcible if less elegant terms:

If in some timeless prenatal heaven one had been given one's choice, it is doubtful whether anyone would wilfully have chosen this age and this particular year of it in which to make the most of the brief gift of mortality.

Personally, while I sometimes think I have experienced my full share of today's many tribulations, and perhaps more than most others, I would not miss the opportunities and lessons of the age for any of those I can find recorded in history. If one can not learn today, then his powers of observation or his desire to learn must be faulty. And, after all, is not the joy of learning and applying life's lessons an important factor in the purpose of life?

Aspects of the Depression

Throughout the world untold millions are out of work, and many are actually starving. Probably France, until recently, was not in the picture to any great extent, so far as unemployment goes. Yet in spite of an estimated two million workless men in New York and several millions more in other states of the Union, many of these men hunting for jobs have luxuries that the working Frenchman rarely possesses. Too many of our people are suffering from inability to pay for the automobile which they bought on the installment plan. Or maybe it was an electric refrigerator, a new radio, better furniture, finer clothing, frequent movies, or the higher-priced foods. They mortgaged their future to the capitalistic system, which failed to provide future jobs.

Last May in Kentucky miners and deputies of a coal company had a battle, some being killed on both sides. A parade of jobless miners under our flag was broken up,—then they turned to the red flag. Thousands of men and women stormed the City Hall in Philadelphia and forced the Council to abandon its plan to raise taxes. Already over fifty-one thousand houses had been sold by the sheriff for taxes, and thousands were made homeless,—just a bit of the flotsam of the depression. The history of this depression will never be written. To obtain all of the facts would bankrupt the nation, and besides,—those in control of our affairs do not want the facts published, though many of them will doubtless leak out.

Where Has the System Failed?

The United States is the richest country in the world, say Gifford Pinchot and others. But this statement I hold to be misleading. Admitting that the wealth is in the United States, the people are the United States, and the people haven't it. Where has this great wealth gone? The American Economic Review lately showed there were over three hundred thousand industrial corporations here in 1927, and two hundred of these corporations controlled thirty-five per cent of all business wealth in the whole country, and by 1929 this wealth totaled seventy-eight billions. Remember, billions, not millions. The National Bureau of Economic Research has shown that in 1929 the per capita income for all was $700 each, but hundreds of persons had incomes of a million or much more,—profits from workers now jobless and homeless. The Federal Trade Commission recently showed that one per cent of the people own sixty per cent of the wealth, while seventy-seven per cent of the people own but five per cent of the wealth.

How does all this happen? It is the capitalistic system of profits, by which the worker benefits but partially from what he produces. For the decade ending 1929, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce reports:

Real wages increased only 13 per cent while the returns to all industry increased 72 per cent.

No wonder the prices of corporation stocks soared to extreme heights, only to collapse when the wild orgy of spending had dried up the resources through enormous sums borrowed on greatly inflated stocks. As soon as the collapse began, this very inflated borrowing hastened the downfall. Many thus lost the stocks bought at balloon prices, and now have neither stocks, money, nor the jobs with which to redeem their mortgaged futures. Many stocks are now selling for less than one tenth of their former prices, but everyone is either unable or afraid to buy them. To the freezing shorn lambs they have no attraction.

Our trouble is not wholly with the system, for the system could not exist if human nature were different. Men will talk of equality when others are more prosperous, but many feel quite different about it as soon as they themselves have accumulated wealth, because selfishness—self-interest—exists in many people to a much greater extent than they realize. For this reason the period of inflation seems very pleasant, just as the deflation is extremely painful,—and it is sure to follow. The system has failed because it encourages uneven distribution of wealth by promoting selfishness.

Brotherhood, Industry, and Foresight

It is natural for man to produce, to create, and to develop. But the motive that impels him to do this depends upon his character, and Jesus came to help men develop character in the right way and for the right ends. His precepts on love and service have been stated so many times that it seems superfluous to repeat them here. The thing we need most is to apply them. Without a brotherhood that actually works in daily experience they can not be applied, either by us or anyone else. This brotherhood must be founded on supreme loyalty to God, or it will never work. John affirms: "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." A revelation to the elders of the church commands: "Ye shall see that my law is kept." The officials of the church are thus enjoined to maintain the dignity of the law and work together to this end "by common consent in the church."

Industry and foresight are also necessary to prosperity and achievement. When I was a small boy I sometimes sat in the shade of the autumn woods, watching the squirrels scamper over the ground and out upon the limbs of the trees to gather nuts for winter use. Are the squirrels trying to teach us lessons of industry and preparedness? I never heard of a nation of squirrels that starved because they would not save for the future, but perhaps we lack their foresight, and so we spend all and then suffer for it. If we all worked for the good of all, distributing equitably to each, there would be an abundance for all, and everyone could be working and producing still more for comfort and progress. Instead of this, there is more than enough for every one, but we can not get it or work to produce it.

God has given us the procedure and the power to remedy our ills, if we are stable enough to honor his law and work together. We are called to be the light of the world and the leaders of men, but we must learn that real leaders keep the law as well as teach it. He who is trusted with leadership and violates the rules of the body he is pledged to serve, breaks the faith and confidence of the people and is a menace to their progress. A people that sets such an example must repent, or they will soon or late drift out among the aimless and useless flotsam of the world. The church suffers today because men have taught but not led in honoring the law and rules of the body as they should have done. Our experience of late should teach us better things for the future.

Going Backward to Go Forward

The law of the universe is a law of compensations. God applies retributory and compensatory means to induce better conduct, if we are willing to learn. Sometimes our mistakes and follies make it necessary to retrace our steps. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." If what was lost in this depression had been spent for missionary work, both membership and resources today would be greater. Other large sums spent in various ways, some of which brought great losses to the church, might have been conserved for times of need, and to pay the church debt then existing. Now we must retrace our steps before we can go forward effectively. The church had been warned,—but it was not well heeded:

The church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.—Doctrine and Covenants 130: 7.

Let us not fall into the error of seeking to forget the causes of our present troubles, at least until we are sure that the lesson has been learned and will not be needed again. Because of past failure to heed, our perception of the truer values became dimmed, and a backsliding movement followed in several respects. The church, which is called to be a great spiritual and moral force among its people, must not condone the increasing use of tobacco among the members, the increase of divorce and remarriages forbidden by its law, and growing moral and spiritual laxity in either private or public life. It must check the tendency to become "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," lest the regenerative power of the Spirit and its divine witness in the body become a thing of the past. We have drifted in some of these things;—let us return to God.

Let Us Set Better Examples

One cause of our spiritual troubles, which lie at the root of lapses in conduct, has been carelessness. While thinking in terms of the group let us not forget that individual conduct is the foundation of the group, and that group conduct is but the total of personal conduct in association. Personal example is more likely to be followed, in the long run, than precepts not exemplified. By more family devotions let us strengthen the spiritual ties of the home circle, for careless home life is responsible for much of the blight that comes upon the young, as well as older persons, and temptations meet less resistance. Changes in the social order must be safeguarded by those who hold safe principles, or disaster impends.

If at heart we had not forgotten our ideals, these clamoring materialistic times somehow claimed every possible moment, leaving all too little of it for devotion to God, to the church, and to the ideals we hold. Then, too, how easy it is for us to bid conscience serve desire, rather than to prompt desire. But a wholesome conscience is one of the finest things that God ever blessed or man ever owned. Perhaps God will use this depression for us to regain wholesome things we were letting slip from us.

Lessons for Us to Learn

By our experiences, so trying, we have surely learned some lessons. Shall we apply them? Let me borrow from Shakespeare to say, "Aye, there's the rub!" We have some inspiring examples,—and the others should warn us. A genuine spirit of sacrifice produced the church funds of recent months in particular. Some have duplicated the example of the widow who gave two mites—her all. Such have riches laid up where thieves can not break through or steal. It is an inspiration to think of such examples. Others with greater abundance have also shown their faith by their works. If there are any who regret their failure to help when able, let them find comfort in the words of Augustine:

The confession of evil works is the first beginning of good works.

If the words of this ancient and venerable teacher find no response, let us hope it may be because not needed. At any rate, it suggests a safe beginning, and much more commendable than the conduct described by Colton:

Men will wrangle for religion; write for it; fight for it; die for it; anything but live for it.

From this depression we should be able to learn the lesson of self-discipline, for many of us have learned forced discipline in at least some things. We need not be ashamed of self-discipline, for it has produced the greatest men of all ages, and thus we shall find ourselves in good company. To repress our unnecessary wants, to make companions of thrift and foresight, to reject the baubles of life, and to build for eternity instead of for the passing moment, are things told us by this period of stress.

Many things learned should deepen our faith, hope, and charity toward God and man. The sublime devotion of some inspires our faith in the Saints and our hope of final triumph. Some have proved as tried and true as was Daniel, and we must prove that their loyalty to the church has not been misplaced by our fault. To have faith in each other is fundamental to our progress. Bulwer states this in forcible terms:

Strike from mankind the principle of faith, and men would have no more history than a flock of sheep.

Our reasons for this faith are many. It will not die, for there have been gains as well as losses written on our ledger, and some losses are gains. Let us hope that we have lost for ever worldliness, self-importance, and selfishness; but that we have gained greater fidelity to God, more spiritual and moral integrity, and a deeper and more abiding fraternity with the Saints. If these lessons be gained, the church will fulfill its mission to bless mankind.

I am not so lost in lexicography as to forget that words are the daughters of the earth, and that things are the sons of heaven.—Samuel Johnson.

Autobiography

VI.—THE CLOSING YEAR OF MY FIRST NEBRASKA MISSION

By James Franklin Mintun

Conditions at the beginning of 1884, in a temporal way, were not encouraging; but on January 23 as I left loved ones, we prayed that something would happen favorable to a continuance in missionary work, to which we had consecrated our lives; and I hoped especially that the family should not suffer while I was absent.

I began preaching at Blair that evening. The next day I was called to administer to Sister P. Ruby, who was in a serious condition. She could not control her muscles, but her body was tortured by a twitching that was seemingly controlled by the power of destruction. She was administered to and relief came almost immediately. She walked more than a quarter of a mile and was present at the evening services.

My next stop was at Fremont where I arrived on Saturday the 26th, and began preaching the next day, at 10.30 a. m. and again at 2.30 p. m., after which for a time a prayer service was held, at which time the spirit of prophecy led me to say, "The spirit of humility now made manifest by my Saints is pleasing to me, your Lord, and acceptable to God. Continue in this humble spirit; for if you do not, my wrath will be felt by you in great power."

Even with the presence of the Spirit of God, I continued to feel much distressed, growing out of information, concerning the possibility of my family not being supplied sufficiently to keep them from suffering. This distress was much allayed by a communication received from President Joseph Smith, who was apprised of the situation of my family and home needs, as follows:

Lamoni, Iowa, January 25, 1884.

Brother Frank:

It is the Lord's will that you make arrangements, if possible to take and keep the field, ready for near and remote fields of labor.

Make preparations of such a nature that you will not be needed at home for months; do all that you can to fix your affairs for permanent labor in the ministry.

Yours in Bonds,

Joseph Smith.

Again at a prayer meeting on the 30th at Fremont, presided over by the district president, William M. Rumel I was moved by the Spirit to say, "It is the will of God that you my people keep very humble. If you do, purifying your hearts, I the Lord will bless you with some spiritual gift through whom he may choose." It seems that some of the Saints were troubled because some spiritual gift was not manifest among them.

I was called to do some missionary work at or near Dorchester, where there lived a family or two of Saints. I regretted that I could not grant the request, neither was there any one else who could fill the request at that time. My time was fully occupied at Fremont and vicinity. Some favorable interest was manifested by the Baptists, associated with some opposition, and by the Seventh-Day Adventists, with opposition by one of their ministers at Blair. The Baptist minister, the Reverend Lewis was much interested in the doctrines of the church and the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and by his request I wrote an article for the Saturday Evening Journal. This was accepted and published and another article desired, so I wrote an article on "Joseph Smith's Views on Polygamy," which also was published. The Seventh-Day Adventist minister made an attack on Joseph Smith and the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and one of the brethren presented to him propositions. He claimed that Joseph Smith was a false prophet, and that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants contradicted each other and that both of these books contradicted the Bible. The propositions covered both these points, but he would not accept of them, and give us a chance to defend ourselves as a people. The two articles written for the Saturday Evening Journal were both printed and a request for another article caused me to write one on "Joseph Smith's views on Civil Government," which also was printed for the information of the readers of that paper.

During the last of February I ordained Brother Daniel R. Beemer, a teacher, Brother Edward Thomas, a deacon in the Union Branch at Fremont, Nebraska, Brother Hans Jensen, a teacher in the Pleasant Grove Branch, near Fremont, and attended a business meeting at the Douglas Branch. All of these branches have been disorganized for several years.

On the first of March, I was requested for another article for the Saturday Evening Journal, and on the fourth I sent an article on "The Loyalty of Joseph Smith." All sent were published, and they brought about a better understanding among the readers of that paper, and it seemed to be appreciated.

For a short time the first of this year I was associated with Elder Joshua Armstrong, who was a very congenial associate, and helper.

During the latter part of March I started to the General Conference, held in April, at Stewartsville, Missouri. My first stop was at Plattsmouth, where I ministered. Here I met a brother who had met with a serious accident sometime before, and the effects of it did him great injury both physically and mentally. As I gathered the information, the brother was out chopping wood and splitting it. His little daughter came out of the house, unknown to him, and in her playful way ran up behind him to push him, that he might know that she was there, but she missed his limbs, and went between his legs just as the ax was descending, and split her head, causing her instant death. The endurance of this event was serious enough, but the more serious followed, for there were those who like Job's comforters came and informed him that there was no place for him in the kingdom of heaven, for did not the scriptures say that "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," (1 John 3:15) and the murderer shall have his part in the lake which burneth with fire, etc. (Revelation 21:8.) These parties condemned the accident that had caused him such grief as a murder, and therefore he was a murderer. This nearly dethroned his mind, and caused him to see God in a way that to him there was no love in him if such was his mind and will. I bid him to dismiss such accusations from his mind. The God whom he worshiped was both loving and just, and to condemn him as a murderer, and not permit him the rights that the gospel promised was not just; and that man was not more just than God, so that while he suffered the loss of his darling child, yet he was not at fault for what was done. He seemed much relieved.

My next stop was with Elder Mark H. Forscutt, and J. W. Waldsmith at Nebraska City where I ministered the word, here I experienced a strengthening spiritual force while conversing with these men of God. From here I was accompanied on my way to General Conference by Brother Joshua Armstrong, enjoying a pleasant and profitable conversation by the way till we arrived at Saint Joseph. At this place we met Brothers Joseph Smith, Henry A. Stebbins, George A. Blakeslee and Edmund L. Kelley, all of whom I had met in the years past. I hold in grateful remembrance the good that I received in association with these men, and this memory is of value to me now.

I stayed during the conference at the home of Mr. Christman, neither he nor his wife being members of the church. No one could treat the servants of God with greater respect. Apostle John H. Lake was my roommate, and very few more prayerful and spiritual men have I had the fortune to meet and associate with. Brother Morris T. and Ellis Short occupied another room and they furnished the entertainment for all. What congenial men of God! All these have gone to their reward,—yes, to their reward! I alone am left to continue the struggle to keep the faith and to finish the work God has given me to do, and I am still anxious to "occupy" even as much so according to my strength as I have ever been and more capable to bring about good than I have ever been.

During this conference I was present at a talk given by Bishop Blakeslee, and as a result I can present the following notes for the good of those who may read this autobiography, as they have been of great worth to me:

A private gift is not a tithe, nor could it be acknowledged as such.

A delegate sent from a district could not call upon the Bishop or agents for means to attend conference; but the general ministry could.

If a man made enough so that his income would supply his family, and he was in the ministry, the amount expended would not be credited as tithing; but the individual should pay his tithing to the Bishop, then if he needed any assistance he should appeal to the Bishop.

The beginning of tithing is a tenth of that upon which tithing has not been paid; and then the tenth of the interest or increase annually thereafter.

District appointees could not as yet be supplied from the general church funds; none can be supplied except general missionary appointees.

Private giving is not discouraged or discountenanced; but it were better that the member give to the treasury, and the missionary be supplied from that source.

On April 14 the missions for this year were read as assigned. I was appointed to Minnesota, with Apostle E. C. Briggs in charge. I was impressed by the Spirit, as I believed, that the appointment was an unwise one, and not directed by inspiration, as the previous ones had been. I went to Brother Briggs, and told him of my impression, and he said that there was no leading of the Spirit in the appointment, but for me to go and occupy, and then you will not be criticized if failure results. I also spoke of my impression to Apostle William H. Kelley, and he said that I was appointed to Minnesota, because they did not know of any one else to send, but that it was true that the Spirit did not suggest that you be thus appointed. I went with a heavy feeling, determined for the work's sake to do all that was in my power. I was advised by Apostle Briggs to return to Nebraska and finish my work in building a church at Fremont, being chairman of the building committee, and other special work that I had begun, and to continue there till their district conference, which was held in the new church at Fremont, on June 28 and 29. I then returned home to better prepare the family to be cared for that I might remain longer in the field. While making the necessary arrangements I was requested to assist in the Little Sioux District near my home for a time and associated with Brethren Phineas Cadwell, J. C. Crabb, and D. M. Gamet. I assisted with meetings at Magnolia, Bigler's Grove, Moorhead, Little Sioux and River Sioux, till June 22, when I started for my mission with a heavy heart, and yet glad to be in the field of active work. At Sibley, Iowa, I was met by Brother Parley W. Premo, and lodged at his home for the night, beholding the first sunrise in Minnesota as I awakened. Here in Southern Minnesota there had been once a very active branch of the church, now in a partially disorganized state, because of some unpleasant differences that had arisen among the Saints, and others moving away, who had been strong support to the work there. The Saints who were still in that part were much discouraged, but still making a struggle to live, but several about to the point of giving up the struggle. I found the Saints honorable and well thought of by their neighbors, and felt deeply in sympathy with them in their efforts. In this spirit I entered into the work, first to try to strengthen my brethren and then to spread the gospel to others. I sought to inspire them to engage in mighty prayer to God to come to our assistance, and they were willing to follow my suggestions in this regard.

After I had visited some of the Saints, it was suggested by Brother Smith Campbell that we make an effort to open the gospel work in the town of Adrian some twelve or more miles from where any of the Saints lived. This we tried not only once but twice during my stay in Minnesota, but the prejudice was very strong, and the expense was too heavy to continue very long. Brother Smith Campbell was the brother of Apostle William H. Kelly's wife. In the same neighborhood lived another brother, James. These were noble-spirited men, but not having the encouragement they needed they faltered somewhat. Sister W. H. Kelly made a visit to these brothers, and was a means of giving encouragement to them, and a help to me in my feeble efforts.

On August 10 I called the Saints together, to determine what they were willing to do, and what direction the Lord would give us in answer to prayer. The Spirit was present and fell upon several, and deep contrition was expressed for wrongs done, and reconciliation in several instances was brought about through a tongue and interpretation through Brother P. W. Premo, giving admonition and instruction. The Lord told the Saints that he was reaching out his hand in mercy to call his people back, and that he was willing to bless them very much if they would return to him, even though they had strayed from him.

The divisions that had existed and wrongs done by some of the Saints made it very hard to make a favorable impression by the preached word, the people being impressed with what they had heard and seen in the lives of those who professed to believe the gospel rather than what the precious word held out to them in promises and helpfulness. Another handicap was that harvest was now on and they did not stop for nights or Sundays, but just changed shifts of horses and men and kept the machines moving. For several days I assisted as I could in this work, driving the reaper, for it meant that less would go to waste. After harvest was over, I made another effort in Adrian, and put an article in the paper there, but could not awaken any interest, so I called the Saints together in a business meeting to give to them a word of instruction and encouragement. Because of conditions at home, and adverse conditions in the mission I was compelled to return home, starting about the last of September. Before I started I made visits to nearly all of the Saints in the vicinity where I had labored. One sister, a widow, was away all summer cooking in a railroad camp with her sons, returning home a few days before this. I went to visit her, and had quite a pleasant visit with her talking on the gospel, for she was very hungry for spiritual food. During the time of our conversation I observed her great need of many things for the convenience of her cottage home, and thought how much she needed help and how I wished that I could help her. When I was getting ready to leave she presented me with a ten dollar bill. I objected to receiving it, although I had need of the money, but I thought she needed it worse than I did. She said, "Brother Mintun, I have been saving this to present to you before you returned home, and I shall feel very badly if you do not receive it." I said, "My dear sister, I feel that because of your need that I should not receive it, but if you feel that way about it, I will receive it, and I surely will use it with an eye single to the glory of God." From that time, more than ever before, I could not spend anything given to me for what I did not really need. I knew that much of what I had already received since being in the missionary work had been from the living of the givers, and because of this I had restrained myself from spending for what was an unnecessary want.

After arriving at home I prepared to attend the reunion from October 3 to 12, held at Leland's Grove, after which I labored locally in the Little Sioux District going as far north as Akron, and west as far as Richland, South Dakota. I continued till the first of December when I interviewed the Saints at Sioux City relative to their desire for the organization of a branch, which was favored. I then attended the conference of the district held at Little Sioux, Iowa, December 13 and 14, where I reported the desires of the Saints of Sioux City. The branch there was organized later by Elder Charles Derry.

From this conference I returned home continuing to seek for employment of any character. The neighbors and Saints furnished some wood and I sawed it when not otherwise engaged. I kept in correspondence with President Joseph Smith and Bishop Blakeslee, in regard to my financial condition, and the prospects of entering the field at an early date. President Smith replied as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, January 13, 1885.

Brother J. F. Mintun: I do not know that I am a safe adviser. My opinion now is that the conditions of the finances in Brother Bishop's hands, will be quite short for the next year, owing to the closeness of affairs everywhere. This would seem to point to the necessity for your getting at something to keep the dumplings in the pot tumbling over one another, or in other words, to keep the "pot boiling." No one can blame you, and however much you may desire to keep the field, if the field can not keep the wife and babes, you can not safely stay in it.

My advice is to write at once to Bishop Blakeslee, ascertain from him what the prospects are for the year to come, and govern yourself accordingly.

I am in bonds.

Ever yours,

Joseph Smith.

Bishop Blakeslee thought it inadvisable for me to think of continuing in the field on account of debt that the family had already incurred in order to live, which the church was not in a condition to pay, and the prospects for funds was very poor. This fully decided me. I spent about three months in seeking for employment, and found a school to teach in the fall, and applied for an appointment for the position as postmaster at Magnolia. In the interim I worked at anything I could find to do, occupying in the ministry locally in the vicinity of my home. In the fall I taught school, and in the spring I was appointed postmaster. During this fall I had a political experience worth noticing. While I was clerking for the merchant at Magnolia, I was requested to become a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools of Harrison County, to which office I was nominated. I was defeated. I was requested to furnish money to two saloons in seeking for votes in Missouri Valley. I refused, and the other man on the opposite ticket furnished the money and was elected, and I met with an honorable defeat. The first and last experience I ever have had in seeking a political office. One of the arguments made in my home town was, that if I was elected the schoolhouses would be filled with "Mormonism." One of the principal ones in spreading that argument afterwards came into the church, and died an honored member, beloved by all who knew him.

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—7

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Squint or strabismus, or what is commonly known as cross-eyes, is one of the most frequent of eye conditions, and if not attended to early in life, will result in blindness of the crossed eye brought about by disuse, which can be minimized through early treatment. According to the best authorities, it is considered hereditary to some extent, and nearly always appears before the sixth year of life. The old saying, "The child will grow out of its cross-eyes," is certainly pernicious advice. Such cases should be treated by a competent eye specialist. About one third of the cases can be corrected if glasses are fitted early enough; if glasses fail, surgery as a rule, will have to be resorted to.

Atrophy of the optic nerve is a serious condition and it is seldom possible that any form of treatment will check the progress when it has once begun. It is a slow painless disease, accompanied by a gradual loss of vision and only arises after an injury, be it toxic, traumatic, or inflammatory. Some of the cases are of syphilitic origin, multiple sclerosis, poisoning by lead, wood alcohol, and other poisons. A large percentage of cases are complicated with locomotor-ataxia. Hence, the necessity of an anti-syphilitic treatment given early in the course of the disease. Wood alcohol has been the cause of such blindness in many instances, and its use should be prohibited by law, for internal or external purposes. Labels, containing this poison, should have a suitable display on the containers. There are various intercranial complications, that sometimes bring on this disease, and it is the duty of the physician to endeavor, as far as is humanely possible, to find the cause.

Toxic amblyopia is a dimness of vision, brought about by such narcotics as morphine, cocaine, tobacco and alcohol. Speaking of tobacco, reminds me of the words of James I:

A custom loathsome to the eye, hateful to the nose, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and the black stinking fume thereof nearest resembling the horrible Stygian smoke of the pit that is bottomless.

Such poisons are usually spoken of as toxic, meaning poisonous. Tobacco smoke is a very complex substance. Besides containing nicotine, it contains carbon-monoxide, ammonia, hydrocyanic acid, various resinous compounds, tar, pyradine and their derivatives. In cigarettes, it has been estimated, that there is fifty-seven per cent nicotine in the smoke, much of which is absorbed into the system. Eighty-eight and two tenths is absorbed in inhaling and sixty-six and seven tenths per cent in puffing.

Alcohol and tobacco are the principal agents in causing this form of blindness and are unquestionably the cause of so many so-called inexplicable railroad, automobile, and airplane accidents. Diabetics and pellagrous individuals are peculiarly sensitive to things poisonous. The treatment is namely the avoidance of the poisons and thorough elimination through the bowels, kidneys and sweat glands, etc.

A Brief Autobiography of Edward Rannie

It is to be regretted that a longer account of the life of Edward Rannie is not available. With great modesty he prepared this short chronological record of his career during his last sickness at his home in Independence. He was a contributor to the church publications, and it was said of him that "He was an energetic, faithful worker and minister of the gospel, and his impress is left upon the church. Brother Rannie died January 7, 1927. An account of his death was printed at about that time, and we hope that it is not too late to print this account of his life.—Editors.

My father's name was Edward Rannie. He was born in Scotland in the month of May, 1822. He went to Manchester, England, about 1840 or 1841, and learned the trade of stationary engineer. My mother's name was Elizabeth Marland. She was born near Manchester, England, in February, 1824, and she became a cotton weaver. My mother was baptized into the Brighamite Church in Pennsylvania sometime between 1857 and 1860.

I was born in Pennsylvania, near Minersville, on January 14, 1857. My parents moved to Mount Carmel, Pennsylvania, in March, 1862.

I attended the public schools of Mount Carmel until I was several months past fifteen years of age and then moved to Nebraska and attended the public schools in the country three months each winter until I was twenty-one years of age. I went to a business college in Omaha, Nebraska, for one year, commencing in September, 1882.

With my parents I went to Nebraska, Dodge County, twelve miles northwest of Fremont, and lived with them on the farm about eleven years.

When my mother became a member of the Brighamite Church, a friend, and sister in the church, by the name of Prigen Thacker, gave her two volumes of the Millennial Star, some of Orson Pratt's writings, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and several tracts published in Liverpool, England, concerning the faith of the early Latter Day Saints. From them I received my first information concerning the history and doctrine of the Latter Day Saints. In January, 1876, I subscribed for the True Latter Day Saints' Herald, and later bought some books and tracts, and from them got my first information about the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

For about two years I was a regular reader of the literature above referred to, and at the same time was a regular attendant at a union Sunday school in our district school building. The first Latter Day Saints I talked to about the church were Edward Boulson and James Perkins, who were out doing missionary work as local men, sent out by the district. They came to our home December 15, 1877, and on the night of December 27 I heard my first sermon by the Latter Day Saints, spoken by Elder James Caffall, in the Jamestown Schoolhouse.

I was baptized on December 28, 1877, and my mother also, by Elder James Caffall, in the Rawhide Creek, near Jamestown, Nebraska.

On Sunday, December 30, with mother, I went to the home of Brother James P. Ogard and his mother and sister and younger brother, and a branch was organized, consisting of the following named persons: James P. Ogard, Kate Ogard, Maria Ogard, — Anderson, — Anderson, Mary Anderson, Elizabeth Rannie, and Edward Rannie. James P. Ogard was ordained an elder and I a priest.

We had meeting every two weeks, and I did the preaching. For about four years I preached in the country schoolhouses and also in private homes in Fremont. My first missionary experience was with H. H. Robinson, about ten miles away from home, in December, 1878.

I went to Omaha in September, 1882, to attend the business college of A. L. Wyman, and while there I was elected priest of the branch.

I was married to Miss Mary Hester Rumel, daughter of Nicholas and Amanda B. Rumel, on April 26, 1887, and to us four children have been born: Frances Amanda, April 7, 1889; Alma Edward, August 25, 1891; Paul Rumel, June 4, 1896; and Mark Dewey, December 30, 1898.

I was elected president of the Omaha Branch in the spring of 1888 and served about three years.

On May 31, 1892, I began to work for the Omaha Street Railway Company as a conductor, and I worked for them for eleven years one and one half months.

In 1901 I was appointed by the General Conference of the church to be a missionary to Eastern Colorado, and after a very brief stay I became discouraged and returned to my home in Omaha.

I was appointed in 1903 as a missionary to have charge of the work in the Tri-cities, Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline. I went to my field in June and passed through a most severe trial in trying to adjust myself to the new conditions. My family moved in August, which was a great help to me to overcome the difficulties under which I was laboring.

I was present at the April conference at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1904, and was appointed to the Eastern Iowa District. It was a trying year for me, and had it not been for the Lord showing both myself and my wife in a dream that I would make a mistake in leaving the field, I might have been overcome and quit the field.

In March, 1904, our daughter Frances was taken sick, so we had to take her out of school. She lingered until October, when she died, on the 11th. The doctor pronounced it tuberculosis of the bowels. This was the second death in our family, the other being Mark Dewey, on February 13, 1901, he having been born December 30, 1898.

I was appointed to South Dakota in the spring of 1905, and also in 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, and 1910. My work took me some into North Dakota. In connection with my missionary work, I was agent for the Bishop.

In 1911 I was appointed to the Southern Nebraska District and was reappointed in 1912.

In 1913 I was appointed to the Gallands Grove District and served one year.

In 1914 I was appointed to the Fremont District. In the autumn I was taken sick and had to go home in September and also again in the last week in November, and on the 7th of December I was operated on by Doctor John R. Green for hernia. This was the third operation, the other two having occurred in May and October of 1913.

I was a patient in the Sanitarium at the time of the death of President Joseph Smith on December 10, 1914, and I could not attend the funeral services.

In 1915 I was appointed to the Eastern Iowa District with a recommendation from Brother J. A. Gillen that I be selected as president of the district, and it was approved. I was so elected.

In 1916 I was sent to the Southeastern Mission, comprising the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida. The early part of the year the mission seemed to be very difficult because of new conditions among a new class of people; their ways were much different, and especially their eating. Before the year was over, I learned to love the people, and it turned out to be a very pleasant and enjoyable year. I found great pleasure in reading the history of the people.

In 1917 I was appointed to the Central Oklahoma

District, with a recommendation that I be selected as president of the district. I was so chosen at the September conference.

In 1918 I was reappointed to the Central Oklahoma District. The news of the close of the great war came while I was away from home.

In 1919 I was again reappointed to the Central Oklahoma District. On March 19 we moved from Lawrence, Kansas, back to Independence, Missouri. We had lived there from September, 1915, having moved there to make it our home while Paul attended the University of Kansas. Our home had been in Independence, Missouri, commencing June 22, 1909.

In 1920 the General Conference was at Independence, Missouri, and I was appointed to the Clinton, Missouri, District. I was appointed president of the district by the First Presidency and at the conference at Taberville, Missouri, May 29, was elected to the same office. I was president this year, of the reunion held at Rich Hill, Missouri, from August 20 to 29. In 1921 and 1922 I was sent to the Southern Indiana District, and was elected president of the Indianapolis Branch and served for two years.

During my membership in the church up to this date, April, 1921, I was ordained to the following offices:

Priest, on December 30, 1877, by James Caffall and James P. Ogard.

Elder, on May 29, 1888, by James Caffall, William Ballenger, and William M. Rumel.

Seventy, on April 14, 1912, by John W. Rushton and Frederick M. Smith.

High Priest, on April 12, 1917, by Gomer T. Griffiths and Francis M. Sheehy.

At the Religio Convention held in Independence, Missouri, in 1910, I introduced a resolution providing for the publication of a juvenile history of the church and appropriating $150 to help in its publication. I was assisted by J. E. Vanderwood and Amos Chase to get it through the convention. We did the same in the Sunday School Convention, and then it was passed on to the General Conference, and when the report came in I offered the necessary resolution to have the church provide for the writing of it, and also for its publication. It was referred to the Historian's Department and Board of Publication for action. In this work I was assisted by J. E. Vanderwood. The work was done by Vida E. Smith, and it was published under the title of The Young People's History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

At the Religio Convention held in Lamoni, Iowa, in 1913, I was one of the members of the appropriations committee, and J. A. Gardner was the treasurer of the society. I introduced a resolution providing for an appropriation of $300 per year to help young men and women to get an education at Graceland College. It was carried in the committee, and I took care of it on the convention floor, and it carried there.

At the General Conference held at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1917 I presented a resolution providing for the Graceland College Day collections to be available as a fund to assist young men and women to obtain an education in Graceland College, the fund to be under the care of the Bishopric. It was carried.

(In regard to this part of his life another writer has paid Brother Rannie this tribute: The idea of a revolving scholarship fund from which worthy young people may secure help in completing their education was first proposed by Elder Edward Rannie, a warm friend of Graceland College. . . . He framed the resolution which was presented by the Appropriations Committee to the annual convention of Zion's Religio Literary Society, and advocated its adoption. At first this was considered an innovation. Some hesitated, and the measure was warmly discussed. However, when the vote was taken the resolution carried by a substantial majority, and by this act the convention wrote into the history of the church a resolution that was to have a far-reaching effect. It would be well now to pay tribute to the courage and fine spirit of the man who first championed the idea of a scholarship fund.)

When I attended the General Conference at Independence, Missouri, in April, 1910, I held the office of bishop's agent in connection with my missionary work, and at one of the meetings of the agents and bishops I introduced a resolution providing for the publication of an authoritative statement of the temporal law of the church, and it was carried. The book was published under the name of The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment. The resolution is found in the first part of the book.

Scandal

A little scandal trickled through
Where gossip cracked the wall,
And rapidly the volume grew
That was at first too small.
They sought with truth to fill the rent,
To close the ugly breach, but spent
Their efforts all in vain for, like
The stream that steals out through the dike,
Foul scandal's volume swells and spreads;
Beginning as a subtle slur,
It quickly wrecks and rips to shreds
The splendid walls of character.

A Declaration of the King's Law

XI.—"MAN'S WEAKNESS"

By Kenneth B. Curtis

One of the greatest problems confronting society today is to determine how man can be made to produce more without undue physical strain. (See The Higher Powers of Man, by President Frederick M. Smith.) There should be a reason for wanting such a question answered. It is not meant to benefit any particular individual but rather that all may profit. Again, since the greatest majority of men live so far under their net ability, it immediately appears there is a terrific amount of human power wasted in a single nation. If Christ's kingdom on earth is to exceed all previous governments it is plainly to be seen that no great amount of waste of any kind can be tolerated. Every thought and every action must count. How is this to be accomplished? Are Zion's stewards to surrender as slaves to a human machine purely as an illustrative devotion to their God and his Christ? Possibly if such a problem could be answered together with a formula how it may be developed and put into practice, not only the individual but Zion as a whole would shortly be re-deemed.

It is a recognized fact that the average man wants to accomplish something worth while in his life. He is not necessarily lazy because he doesn't wish to submit himself as a paid machine slave to the present day industrial enterprizes. Every sane man has a great desire to be free as far as is conventionally possible. A nation straining every nerve and muscle to become rich in material things is far from Zion's objective. It isn't a case of speeding production but rather of utilizing every available ounce of ability. Art that is famous today because of its valuation will not be so in time to come. A new class of art reckoned by its merits alone will suffice. Men will not give to receive as at present but will receive from one to give to others. The storehouse is meant to accomplish this end.

To diagnose the case of man's inefficiency in production is like searching for a hidden truth. Its ultimate realization brings the greatest joy and happiness. And once found its application is merely a matter of moulding by experiment and observation of results. But it is necessary for us to tear down all the millions of facts and theories that have grown up around man and leave him as a skeleton standing before us. We will then build around him a theoretical remedy for this trouble; time will beautify and soften any harsh and distorted corners.

"My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness—that the powers of Christ may rest upon me." (2 Corinthians 12: 9.) "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul"? (Mark 8: 36.) Herein lies the approach to a study of our topic. First let us be sure we thoroughly understand the full meaning of "temporal" and "spiritual," since we are to use them frequently.

Now temporal means timely, or that which is temporary. Nowhere did God give any temporal or timely law. The laws always existed, but certain bodies governed did not; that is, in that particular form. They change, decay and are remade. As to temporal and spiritual things, we liken them to two classes of motion: rotary or continuous (spiritual) and the straight or terminable.

According to the psycho-analysis there are three stages through which man passes through during his life; that is to say, the greatest majority of men. The first is the need of objects to occupy his thoughts (childhood). The second is the need of objects only to start a train of thoughts by which he may then occupy his thoughts (adolescence and eroticism). And the third is the ability to occupy his thoughts, irrespective of any object, in reasoning with prevailing situations (mature adulthood). Here he has at last reached the spiritual aspect of creation. Civilization today is just ready to pass from this second stage into the third. The old Greeks presented philosophies pertaining to objects; they studied the world more from the point of curiosity, as a child tears a clock to pieces to see how it's made. Christianity suggested love, or the adolescent stage, for man's pleasures, conveniences, sorrows and joys were measured and exchanged by objects of property and cash. Community stewardship suggests to civilization the matured adult stage or how to deal with the powers that operate in our midst. Of a certainty property or objects, as I will call them, are needed in stewardship but if the spiritual powers rule and operate the universe as they always have done then it behooves man not to try and cure a weakness by that which is effected (temporal or object) but by that which effects (spiritual). Further elaboration on this thought only reassures the more but does not change it.

In examining the decaying records of ancient man, (3000 B. C. and earlier—the Ethiopians of antiquity, etc.) one is struck by their genius. (See Inspired Translation, Genesis 8: 9.) This is simply the result that when the divine spark of knowledge was first born in man's brain, (Inspired Translation, Genesis 4) God cared for him and his families as a mother cares for a newborn babe. Man was irresponsible, had to be disciplined by a loving father and was carefully nursed by the Holy Spirit. When man wrote, as in the book of Ether, he evidently was at a loss to reason with the great thought that prompted him. And it is my opinion, the Urim and Thummim, (stones) used by seers to translate writings of antiquity, offered to the translator's vision of thought the same channel traversed by the author rather than any transfiguration of letters. The actual markings seen with the naked eye only prove some one did participate; the signature mark of a blind or ignorant man on a legal paper is identical for an illustration. (See Inspired Translation, Genesis 6: 5, 6.) To know and comprehend a thing is to be free; superstition comes from lack of reasoning with the powers that are.

The thought that man in himself is complete, as the egoist would declare, is a falsehood which all will agree with due observation. To begin with, man, no matter how spiritual he may become, never can encompass the all of creation. Why? Spirit spoken of in this sense is the result of some effect or creation; a sublime mountain, etc. One man is an abstract spirit of all men and hence it would require all men to accomplish what all men could accomplish. And anything accomplished not by men can not receive the spirit of men, but John says, "All things were made by him [God]; and without him was not anything made that was made." (John 1: 3.) So men, first and last, are only an abstract of the almighty spirit. That abstract, however, is concrete in its division. An army is made up of several concrete soldiers; Zion is a community of individuals. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Romans 14: 7.) If man were sufficiently complete in himself he could dictate in the case of heredity, he could evade the great eternal judgments of God after death; the resurrection would be his for the choosing.

This suggests then that "I," as an abstract spirit of all men, a steward, must fulfill three purposes: One, "I" must be able to receive or listen; two, "I" must carry or exchange that which "I" receive, and three, "I" must give or produce. My production is entirely dependent upon my ability to receive and exchange. But it would be ridiculous to suppose I could always carry and never receive or give. Standing water soon becomes poisonous—remember, service is the hinge of creation. Nothing lives for itself. Egotistical people only are a law unto themselves. A man must receive to give, not give to receive. A bucket can not be emptied continually; it must be filled to be emptied.

This sounds the gong to Community Stewardship's hidden science, "Finding my talents by my patriarchal blessing," if we were to call it that. Our outlet or production for what we receive is thus governed. If God, the Almighty Spirit is in all things, then "I," as an individual steward of that great spirit, will produce only that which "I" know of the all. (The word "know" as herein mentioned means a storehouse of knowledge or what we carry.) We know a thing because we learned or gathered it by study and experience. But talents are like roots that are embedded in the great spirit of all. Every soul wants to tell its conception of God by its talented outlet. I want to tell mine, we'll say, by my pen, another by public speaking, another by painting, another by the corn he grows, etc. Anything that is made to assist man to live and do good reflects that essence of God. A machine—a whirring electrical dynamo, etc.

This view must be grasped or else the point of my entire series of articles will be lost. The storehouse plan of exchange would never be successful without a system for production. It will be agreed by all that man can always consume all he produces, and that is only proper. Consumption and production should be equal. A scientist doesn't have to reason that out although they have a published statement to that effect, that "Wherever there is a universal demand there is a universal supply." But that has not always been true under all conditions. Therefore, we, as scientists, will add, that "Wherever there is a universal demand in righteousness there is a universal supply." Now righteousness means the fulfillment of law. So we hold forth to you a theory of production, provided the storehouse medium of exchange is used, to automatically equal that of consumption and overcome, to a great extent, man's inefficiency of ability.

Now if the talents are embedded like roots in the great spirit of all, and the soul seeks to give out its (kind) conception of God, then the body, when working, is only functioning in a very natural way. Hobbies and the like, to a degree, originate by this phenomenon. In short then, an individual would be content, even happy, when producing by this natural process. It's not a case of catering to whims, etc., but anyone with a knowledge of the needs of society could soon tell whether they were following a practical line or not. And the storehouse would employ just such men to check idle producing. Anything, however, as in the case of an invention or the fostering of new types of work would need to be considered individually. The steward's character and past record would be an important deciding factor. Constructive advancement surely would be welcomed.

Doctor W. Taube, M. D., writing in the Homeopathic Recorder, a medical periodical, tells of a famous Doctor Constantine Hering who so loved his work as a physician that he practically lived in his study.

"Upon himself he made great demands, but in himself he showed great humility. He made his bed in his study, surrounded by many notes and his writing material. When the dawn awoke him he must have everything at hand. At sunrise his soul was uplifted to God. He then, after preparing for himself his morning beverage, over a small flame, began his work. He joined his family at breakfast only twice a year, at Christmas and on New Year's Day, his birthday. Thus in the performance of his manifold activities as practicing physician, humanitarian, and writer he became the "Father of Homeopathy" in America. He was the recipient of countless honors on the occasion of his fiftieth anniversary of Doctor of Medicine, and on the celebration of his eightieth birthday. He was always modest and retiring and constantly active. In his eighty-first year, on July 23, 1880, he passed out while engaged in his work upon the third volume of his Guiding Symptoms. Only a few hours before, he had prescribed for a patient in his office. In one of his memorial addresses it is remarked, "He who never rested, rests!" It may be said of him that he was the embodiment of unrest in the pursuit of the development of the new healing art. He deservedly has the honor of spreading homeopathy in America.

Note the fact that his work, strenuous though it may have been, did not overtire him. That he was not only a great help to society but also he surely must have found happiness in his work at least.

Doctor Frederick M. Smith in his book, The Higher Powers of Man, partly lays the blame of man's inefficiency to produce at the feet of habit. (Page 211.)

"Habit has much to do with the persistency with which the average individual remains inferior to his full self. And those who escape from this inferiority owe their escape to excitement, ideas, and habitual efforts which push them over the first barriers of fatigue onto levels of consciousness of wider significance. Examples are numerous. In the absence of normal excitement deleterious excitement may functionize to throw the higher powers into gear; but this means the borderland of constitutional abnormality. Far better it is to have the will functionize to open up the deeper levels."

It will be seen that Doctor Smith speaks of the "will" as the real and preferred method of finding man's undiscovered powers. And true he is, for in the case of Doctor Constantine Hering his whole heart and soul could be seen in his work. He evidently loved the practice and study of medicine. The atmosphere in his study was cool and inviting—he seemed to rest at his work. Doctor Smith brings out another important point regarding the necessity of a dominating interest in the life of youth. (Page 231.)

“In no period of the individual life is there greater need for the directional influence of a dominating interest than in the storm and stress period of pubescence, when the adolescent life is made up of impulse and intense feeling. At such a time there is needed a back-fire to sex, and this is found in the interest which absorbs in wholesome activity the nervous energy which otherwise will run into morbid lines with physically and morally pathological results. Youth is drunkenness without wine and the tendency for fast living at this age must find a legitimate outlet, to avoid morbidity and perversion. At puberty the individual breaks into the larger life of the race, and for that event every preparation should have been made by providing adequate and proper outlet for every force which nature at that period provides so lavishly. The whole being thrills with the larger life, and under right guidance and given legitimate direction it can lead to the inspiration of the poet, the muse, the genius in every line of activity. Its perversion leads in the opposite direction.”

Doctor Smith, however, is advocating these higher powers under the term of “Second Breath.” It is interesting to compare the various titled theories regarding these higher powers in man. They all seem to strive for the same end, that is in their own way. They each have certain fields to cover and what one does not cover the other does, but they all culminate similarly. The fact that economics today waylays many men from their real calling, even offering every possible hinderance, is apparent, and no reason to discredit the theory that the finding of man’s talents would uncover that dynamic force which would do away with discontented workers, set working hours, etc. If the following of one’s talents as a livelihood is only a natural function of the human body then this could be the means by which the higher powers could be thrown into gear and man could function to full capacity with even less effort than under present conditions. Then, too, when considering Christ as the ruler, it is only natural to believe he would by all means inaugurate a method that was natural, sure of success and still offer contentment and happiness to all who took part. He surely is not a slave driver.

Now the question is, What relation has the patriarchal blessing with the finding of my talents? The building up of one’s talents, as will have to be considered first, is like building up a private library. There are two ways to gather together a technical library, and only one right way. And that is to start with one subject, that which is most dominant in the individual’s life, and collect the books pertaining to the various phases as the individual progresses in a knowledge of the subject. If the subject is at all worth anything its roots will eventually reach and grow into unknown fields of study which will give the student a very broad knowledge, not only of his own subject but of life in general. Every book will instantly hold a value to him. Nothing is more uninviting than to own a library, no matter how large and costly, that is made up of just a variety of books. This is the way man’s talents will grow, all originating from one desire. And he will gain more just in proportion to the amount he studies and works at it. The lack of a fine education is the weakest excuse I know of for not improving. A study of Abraham Lincoln’s life would be a good example for that. It is finding that one dominant interest that counts now.

Christ said, “Seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.” (Luke 12: 31.) The patriarchal blessing is based on just that quotation. There is a need to know and understand a particular characteristic about divine growth. Upon close observation one will note that God is always referred to as existing in the heavens above or within. All things come out of him and hence grow down or out. This will be seen to be an opposite conception of our accustomed thought of growth which is just upward. For instance God is the head, under him is the head of Christ, then men, etc. The patriarchal blessing suggests to the individual’s mind what his bodily actions shall be. The mind is to control the body. Now, forget for a time any earthly desire and concentrate on the written blessing and the scriptures, praying always. Very seldom will the blessing tell you any particular vocation—just bodily actions. For instance, out of the whole writing it might suggest—“Pray, study, not only books but yourself; and meditate.” Again in another case it might suggest—“Pray; seek to qualify yourself by the study of God’s word.” And still again it might suggest—“Pray; and fulfill all that which comes to you from day to day and your way will be opened up.”

From these three examples I would roughly judge there was reference made to a writer or statesman—a preacher—and a particular type of business man or minister. However, the thought back of it is to seek the glory of God on earth among men. In short not to misuse that spirit or talent for evil, for all divine creation carries two powers—right and

Des Moines Holds District Conference

The annual conference of Des Moines District was ushered in by a young people's banquet at the Des Moines church, the night of February 12. One hundred and seventy-five reservations were made. Dr. J. E. Slocum presided and toasts were given by Raymond Thompson, Kleta Finley, Paul Whitman, and Will Robinson on the theme, "More Abundant Life." Bertha Deskin gave a reading. Eva Cook led the singing. President F. M. McDowell gave the address. The program partook of the spirit of a communion service. Every participant presented his work with carefulness and in the Spirit of the Master.

The next morning at nine thirty the people met for prayer and testimony, an unusually large number being present. The business meeting followed, and delegates to General Conference were elected, also district officers. No change was made in the district officary. District President Castings suggested that a reunion in June, at the Des Moines Church, would best meet the needs of the Saints of the district. The conference approved the suggestion and left arrangements to the district officers.

Stephen Robinson introduced a resolution providing for a district gathering for the purpose of the Saints' turning in their inventories in the month of March. The 27th was the date decided upon by district officers; the place, Des Moines Church.

After the business session Brother McDowell conducted a round table discussion of the financial condition of the church. He preached Saturday night, talked to the priesthood Sunday wrong. This is so even in the administering of the blessing. All through the history of civilization that power was wrongly administered by the so-called witches, fortune-tellers, etc. This same theory seems to have a remote connection to the horoscope reading, etc. There is only one right way to administer it and that is through the patriarchs as set forth in the word of God. It is a written conditional prophecy to the individual in regard to his future temporal life.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given to thee by prophecy, with the laying on of hands by the presbytery. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." (1 Timothy 4:14 to 16; also study Philippians 2:12, 13.)

If more would act the play of life,
And fewer spoil it in rehearsal;
If bigotry would sheathe its knife
Till good becomes more universal;
If custom, gray with ages grown,
Had fewer blind men to adore it—
If talent shone
In truth alone,
The world would be the better for it.

morning, taught a class, preached at eleven o'clock, and had charge of the two thirty afternoon sacrament service besides conferring with workers at odd times. His sermon of Sunday morning was given with the power and authority of the Holy Spirit to the edification of the large audience who heard him.

At the communion service the Spirit spoke through two of God's faithful servants. Two hours of time were profitably spent on a high spiritual plane. At the conclusion of the morning service Brother Castings had advised the Saints to keep their children with them and avoid unnecessary talking, promising the presence of the Spirit. This was done with the results above mentioned. It was another Pentecost for Saints of latter days.

A larger congregation than usual remained to hear the closing conference sermon by Elder L. G. Holloway.

Sister Hattie Clark and a score of other faithful sisters served meals in a highly efficient manner, denying themselves the pleasure of attending the conference in order that all might have physical food.

A banquet for the ministry of the district and their wives was held in the Des Moines Church the evening of January 9. Clyde MacDonald was toastmaster, and toasts and responses were of a spiritual character, the program having been planned by Stephen Robinson to exclude all things of frivolous nature. "Converting and Conserving Our Spiritual Assets" was the theme. Short talks were made by Charles Fry, Henry Castings, L. G. Holloway; a violin solo was played by Vern Deskin; a quartet composed of Charles Chapman, Dan Smith, Rollo Pratt, and John Chapman, was accompanied at the piano by Albert Chapman. President Elbert A. Smith made the evening's address, speaking with deep feeling. His words revealed that he is sharing with his brothers the privations of the present and that he has always shared the hardships of the missionaries. He concluded with a prophecy which encouraged the people.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was here last September for a special conference on church finance. He placed the condition of the church squarely before us.

Des Moines Branch is moving ahead under the direction of Brother E. O. Clark and his counselors, V. L. Deskin and George Orr. They have organized a willing priesthood for their work, and good has resulted from their effort. Brother J. W. Rudkin is superintendent of the Religio and much interest is growing up through his work. He is assisted by Lee Mussell and Raymond Thompson.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Since the beginning of the year, this branch has gone forward. Sunday school and church attendance have increased, especially on the part of the young people whose interest in church work is reviving.

The morning of January 10, a special program honored the thirty-eight members of the Sunday school who had perfect attendance during 1931. The total enrollment of this school is one hundred and twenty-five. The program included an appropriate talk by the pastor, Elder Carlisle, vocal solos by Richard Watkins and Samuel Mansell, and a piano solo, "Consecration," by Arvella Noble.

The infant son of Brother and Sister Wilfred Bigler was blessed by Elders William L. Goudy and Charles Cramer at the close of the morning service, January 24.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths was a visitor here the week of January 31, preaching four evenings and conducting services at Uhrichsville one night. We are glad the Lord continues to bless Brother Griffiths with strength and power to carry on his work.

Brother Lewis Bigler who has been seriously ill, is reported to be recovering.

News of the death of Sister Thomas, of Kirtland, on February 15, was a shock to her friends here. She formerly lived in New Philadelphia and was a member of this branch. We extend deep sympathy to her bereaved family.

Brother Ralph Frye, of Uhrichsville, was baptized Sunday, February 14, by Elder John Carlisle, and confirmed by Elders William Goudy and Charles Cramer. The baptismal service, due to inclement weather, was held at the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool. Brother Frye was prophetically admonished to be faithful, and told that he would be called to be a servant in the Lord's work. Members of this branch greatly admire Brother William Donaldson, of Uhrichsville, for his splendid missionary efforts in bringing the gospel message to all with whom he comes in contact. He is the proprietor of a shoe repair shop and with each piece of finished work he sends out a copy of one of the church periodicals. In addition to this he distributes the papers to his many friends and acquaintances. We feel it is through his worthy efforts that a number in Uhrichsville have entered the fold of the gospel. Pastor Carlisle has also conducted numerous preaching services there in the past year.

The young people's department held a George Washington party at the church Friday evening, February 19. Elder Charles Cramer gave a talk on "The Life of George Washington." Readings and musical selections were included on the program, then the crowd adjourned to the basement for games, contests, and refreshments.

Rehearsals on the play, "The Most Precious Gift," directed by Nettie Bigler and Anna Cramer, are under way. The play will be presented Sunday morning, February 28.

Elder and Sister William Patterson visited this branch Saturday, February 20, on their way to Cleveland, Ohio.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

Early in the year District Missionary O. W. Okerlind returned from a holiday trip to his home in Independence, Missouri, arriving first in the district to call on the Saints at American Falls and Rupert. For a time he conducted successful services at Hagerman where he enjoyed the interest and attendance of young and old. His plans include visits to Boise and other parts of the district as soon as it is possible.

While in Independence Brother Okerlind enjoyed meeting with former Idaho members. He attended prayer services there and preached in two of the churches. The courage of the Saints and their hope of work for the future sends him back to his field with greater zeal and purposefulness.

According to the report of District Treasurer Arthur Condit, Idaho District did not quite raise its quota. Extra expenses during the fall months kept us from making the mark. Nevertheless, the Saints, especially the isolated members, are doing well and are willing to pay their debt to the Lord.

Hagerman Church

Missionary Okerlind spent a week the latter part of January in this branch, arriving the 16th. He left for Boise on the 23d. The meetings were splendidly received.

Sister Stella Adams who had been ill since December 14, passed away January 21. She leaves four small children, the youngest one month old.

The women's department elected officers at the regular meeting January 14: Superintendent, Sister Drake; assistant, Sister Parks; secretary-treasurer, Sister Reveria Condit. A committee was appointed to work out plans for the year.

Rupert Church

The branch election of officers for the year was held Sunday, December 20, the meeting having been postponed to that date on account of illness in the group.

Sister Claudia Waylett, who had been ill for two months, was taken to a Pocatello hospital, January 12, and passed away. The funeral and burial were at Malad, Elder A. M. Chase officiating.

No branch Christmas program was had this year on account of illness. The children's program and treats were given the Sunday before Christmas.

The children met January 11, at the home of Sister Mary Plowman, their teacher, and organized the "H" Club. They have vowed to become better Christians during 1932.

Under the direction of William Storey the young people hold weekly meetings.

This branch is working under the church school plan. We are having some difficulty becoming accustomed to it, but think it will work out well.

Boise Church

The Book of Mormon Class, conducted each Friday evening at the church, is growing more popular as the members get a better insight into the marvelous book. Attendance is the best it has been for some time. Elder George B. Anderson is the teacher.

A number in this congregation have been absent from our services this winter, some visiting friends and relatives in other places, and a few confined to their homes by illness. Some new members have also moved into our midst.

Gains Strength and Hope After Long Illness

Wheeling, West Virginia, February 18.—At last the sphinx speaks! No doubt my friends throughout the church have wondered why they have not heard from me. I write to explain the cause of my long silence.

The Saints in southern California will remember that shortly after my return from Hawaii, about three years ago, I suffered a breakdown which necessitated my going to the mountains for treatment and recuperation. Through the kindness of Sister Opsal and her family, of Chico, California, I was enabled to spend two profitable months among the pines in northern California. After returning to my home in Los Angeles, I thought I was able to return to work again, so I entered into it with enthusiasm in the hope of making up for the time I had been idle. But evidently my restoration to health had not been complete, for it was not long until I again found myself incapacitated.

Then, in order that I might be nearer my mother who was critically ill, my appointment was changed to the Toronto District in Canada. As soon as seemed advisable, I went there and labored as best I could through the summer and fall months of 1930 until the death of my mother in November necessitated my coming to Wheeling. About a month later I returned to Canada, but it seems that the winter months there are too severe for me for I suffered an attack of intestinal flu which nearly finished me. It left me with an intestinal infection that I have been struggling for months to conquer, and not until recently have I been able to make any headway against it.

As a result of this long siege of illness I was forbidden to assume any mental or physical responsibilities. There were times when I was close to the border line of life. So on the advice of my physician I have carried on correspondence only when compelled to. This explains why my many friends who have been kind enough to write to me, have not heard from me.

This Gethsamane of illness together with financial worries which at times have become almost unbearable, have made the last couple of years seem like a long terrible nightmare. Occasionally, however, there have come rays of sunshine through the clouds, bringing me cheer and hope. One of these came in the form of a visit to New Liskeard, Ontario, last fall. Every fall, for the last twenty years, I have been a victim of hay fever and asthma. Last August through the kindness of the Saints there I went to New Liskeard, and for the first time in twenty years, escaped my annual attack of this affliction. By escaping this I avoided another setback in my other trouble, and since that time I have gradually improved in health until now the prospects look good for becoming my old self before long.

I have tried in vain to understand why one must endure such crosses so long, but through it all I have had assurance of divine watchcare and the belief that eventually the cross would be lifted has been ever present with me. Some years ago I was informed by the Spirit of a certain work I should do in life, and, since that work is only partially done, I have full confidence that opportunity will be given me to complete my task.

I desire to express my deepest appreciation to all who have so kindly remembered me during my illness. Particularly am I grateful to the Saints in New Liskeard and Toronto, in Canada, and the Saints in the Wheeling District in West Virginia, and the Northern and Southern California Districts. I must also mention particularly the Saints and friends of the Hawaiian mission, some of whom have remembered me not only with words of encouragement, but in a material way as well.

I am sorry I was unable to keep up correspondence with all these good people, and I fear some of them may have lost confidence in me by this time, but I trust this letter will explain things and assure all that although I have not written I have certainly not forgotten, and I hope in due time, to be able to answer every letter received.

I want all to know, too, that my faith in the church and its ultimate triumph is still as firm as ever, and although my activity in the cause has had to be limited, my interest has never waned, and I look forward longingly to the time when I can again enter into the work with my old-time vigor.

We are truly engaged in the work of God, and though the forces arrayed against it be strong, the church will surely triumph. I want to be one to help carry it forward to victory.

If any should care to write me, my home address is 3735 Eoff Street, Wheeling, West Virginia. May the blessings of heaven be upon all God's people.

JOHN F. MARTIN.

West Virginia's Conference Delegates

West Virginia District met in special conference February 21, at Parkersburg, and elected the following delegates to represent the district at the General Conference of the church: A. C. Silvers, Nevada, Missouri; Clyde F. Ellis, Independence, Missouri; Lucy Silvers, Nevada, and Frank A. Minton, Independence.

Central Illinois Holds Call Conference

Beardstown, Illinois.—A call conference of the Central Illinois District was held here Sunday, February 14, for the purpose of selecting delegates to represent the district at the General Conference of the church.

The business session opened at 2 p. m., District President R. L. Fulk in charge. The district chorister, Joe Williams, led the conference in the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

During the afternoon session Brother Peters, of Decatur, was ordained into the priesthood. O. C. Henson and O. C. Johnson officiated.

Those selected as delegates are: R. L. Fulk, Frank Corcoran, Ogle Thomas, Guy A. Lewis, M. R. Shoemaker, Mrs. M. R. Shoemaker, and Lena E. Fusselman.

The conference adjourned after the singing of "My Times Are in Thy Hands."

Elder Fulk held a three-week meeting here previous to the conference, and eight people were baptized after the business session.

A bounteous and delicious dinner was served by the women of the church.

Oldest "Herald" Correspondent Passes

Elder Frederick Hansen, aged eighty-seven years and the oldest Herald news correspondent, passed away at his home in Persia, Iowa, February 16. A member of the church for almost seventy years, he has functioned as an elder since 1867. For three years he labored as a missionary in England. For the past forty-five years he has been active in church work in the vicinity of his home, acting for some time as pastor at Persia and Salem Branch at Leland Grove. He was born in Denmark and came with his parents to the United States in 1857, and his early years were crowded with the picturesque experiences characteristic of pioneer life in the church and nation. A man of honor and integrity, he will be missed by the community he served so well.

For a number of years Brother Hansen was a faithful news reporter for the Herald, submitting at intervals, accounts of the church happenings at Persia. The editors depended on him, and in his writings, as in all other things, he did not fail those who depended on him.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs Church

We have had some accidents in this branch. Sister Ada Halfhill fell from a horse and her elbow was thrown out of the socket. After that she burned her hand severely. Then her little daughter, Altha, had a needle run into her knee, and was taken to the Independence Sanitarium. She is home again and getting along fine.

Our prayer services are now in charge of Priest Gerald G. Phillips whose help we much appreciate.

The January sacrament was well attended. Elder O. W. Sarratt preached in the evening, telling us that the Devil's most common and sharpest weapon is discouragement.

Brother G. Phillips preached on the second Sunday of the month. "Life Is a Garden" was his theme and the Spirit was there in power. Brother H. Hattey, our former pastor from Bates City, preached in the evening. It was good to have him with us once again, and he spoke of the marvelous work and a wonder which was to come forth, according to the Scriptures.

Brother C. A. Joice preached the morning of January 17, his theme being "Health" and his text being taken from Daniel 11: 32, 33. In the evening a group of young people from Gudgell Park, under the direction of Sister Esther Hook, brought to us a Christmas cantata, and Sister S. A. Thiel gave a reading on the birth of Christ.

Brother R. J. Stark chose as his text the morning of January 24 John 1: 12, and gave a message which was very plain and helpful. Brother Clarence Martin preached in the evening from James 2: 14.

On the fifth Sunday of January Brother O. W. Sarratt, our pastor, delivered the message. His text was taken from Ezekiel 33. In the evening Brother A. Campbell spoke to the Saints, his text from Proverbs 23: 7, his subject, "The Mind."

Marshall Church

A goodly congregation of Saints met for communion service the first Sunday of February. Elder Harold Thayer presided. Brother Thayer has preached the last two Sundays, giving much spiritual instruction. Brother Marion Johnson occupied the pulpit early in February, speaking very acceptably.

The prayer meetings are well attended and edifying and the young people's recreation and expression meetings, under the leadership of Sister Dixie Spohrer, are increasing in numbers. There are two classes in the Book of Mormon, the young people's class taught by Sister Dixie, and the adults taught by Brother Will Ridge. The juniors are taught by Sister Merle Thayer. Some good programs are given the last half hour of the meetings. A spicy dialogue was given by Brother and Sister William McLaughlin February 12.

Sister Charles Ridge, mother of Ralph and Will, is very ill.

Independence

Stone Church

Apostle James A. Gillen spoke to the Stone Church Saints Sunday morning at the eleven o'clock hour, his sermon being preliminary to a series on gospel work and principles which is being conducted throughout the week.

Brother Gillen has just returned from eighteen months of missionary work in "Dixie land," and his report concerning that field of labor was very gratifying. His message from the Saints there is that they are willing and ready to go forward. He believes that many Saints, not only in that district, but here and elsewhere, are imbued with this same great desire and determination, and he feels strongly assured that the church will go forward and that the time is not far distant when God is going to do great things for this church.

Reading from Jeremiah 17: 5-7, he dwelt briefly on the statement, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord," and also upon the encouraging promise that "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is."

With this Sunday's program the junior church, which meets in the lower auditorium at eleven o'clock, concluded its month's theme, "Our Heroes." The hymns "I Love to Tell the Story" and "For the Beauty of the Earth" opened the hour, and prayer was offered by Pastor Will Bolinger. Elder C. Ed. Miller gave interesting sketches from the lives of a number of church heroes prominent among whom was Glaude Rodgers. Mrs. J. R. Lentell was in charge of the music.

Almost a capacity house greeted Brother Gillen in the evening, to hear the opening sermon of the week's series. Apostle Gillen reiterated and laid strong emphasis on his statement of the morning concerning the determination of the Saints to go forward and of God's interest in his church and children. Reviewing briefly the conversion of Paul, he asked this question: "If Jesus Christ was so concerned about his church then, is he not just as concerned today?" He believes that He is and that he will hear the prayers of his people for divine aid.

In addition to Paul, he spoke of other men of the past upon whose words and testimony we rely, and yet we are not prone to give heed to the great and good men who are living today, or those of recent times. Of many of the faithful ones of latter-day Israel, he made mention to his audience, paying tribute to their loyalty and devotion to the cause of Christ. We, too, must be true, because God has trusted us with the responsibilities of his work and because the people are trusting us. The time has come when our faith should increase.

The Stone Church Choir, under the conductorship of Paul N. Craig, sang morning and evening, furnishing an appropriate musical background for Brother Gillen's sermons. In the morning Gomer Cool played a violin solo, and the choir sang "Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord" from "The Elijah," and "The King of Love My Shepherd Is." The evening anthems were "I Will Lay Me Down in Peace," and "I Will Lift up My Head." Mrs. Robert Wheeler was the soprano soloist.

Another of this congregation has passed into the beyond in the person of Sister Rose M. Page, wife of Brother Walter A. Page. Her sudden passing on Monday morning shocked a community of friends and acquaintances. The funeral was held from the Stone Church this afternoon. For many years Sister Page was a worker with the women and girls of the church. Always she served as much as her health permitted. She was capable in every line of activity in which she was called to serve. Last fall she was asked by the pastor in Zion to take charge of the Stone Church exhibit at the Harvest Home Festival; she was tireless in her work. Her Christian womanhood, her neighborly kindness, and her living interpretation of sainthood drew many to her. We shall miss her. Sister Page was born November 29, 1876, at Ellsworth, Kansas, and was baptized into the church when a little girl. She married Walter A. Page, May 8, 1900. Left with the memory of a loving wife and mother are her husband, Walter A. Page, and four children, all of Independence, Mrs. Alberta Cox, Mrs. Helen Brackenbury, W. Earl Page, and Paul Page. There also survive her mother, Mrs. Emma Pooler, of Independence; two sisters, Mrs. Lydia Swift, Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and Mrs. Emma Bullard, Independence; two brothers, C. F. Pooler, Wichita, Kansas, and A. C. L. Pooler, of San Jose, California; four grandsons, and other relatives.

The funeral of Sister Mildred Maurine Sellers Ballew, nineteen years old, was held from the Stone Church yesterday afternoon at three o'clock. Her death occurred Saturday afternoon, in Kansas City, as a result of mastoid trouble. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. She leaves her husband, Glen Ballew, of Kansas City; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Sellers, a sister, Myrtle Sellers, and a brother, Bobby Sellers, all living near Independence.

A host of relatives and friends called the afternoon and evening of February 25, at the home of Brother and Sister H. R. Mills, in Independence, to extend congratulations on their sixty-third wedding anniversary.

A wedding of interest was that of Miss Mabel Andrew and Mr. Oliver McKevit which took place at the home of the bridegroom's parents in Independence, at eight thirty Sunday night, Pastor John F. Sheehy officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Andrew, of Windsor, Ontario, and a graduate of the School of Nurses Training of the Independence Sanitarium. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McKevit, of Independence, and is presiding deacon of the Stone Church. Preceding the ceremony Miss Lillian Andrew, sister of the bride and a nurse in training, sang "O Promise Me," accompanied at the piano by Miss Violet Anderson who also played the wedding march. The bridal pair were attended by Miss Lillian Andrew and Mr. Roy Dooley. Mr. and Mrs. McKevit will be at home after March 10, on Vermont Avenue.

Elder and Sister Richard Bullard celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary with an open house yesterday from one o'clock in the afternoon until ten o'clock at night. The worthy couple were married March 1, 1882, in London, England, where both were born. For many years Brother Bullard was a missionary in the church. They are the parents of five children: Richard Bullard, Mrs. Charles S. Warren, Walter Bullard, and William H. Bullard, of Independence, and Harold Bullard, of Kansas City.

Almost two hundred students of William Chrisman High School presented "Clouds of Time," a pageant portrayal of the life of "The Father of His Country," three successive nights last week and at one matinee. The production was written by Mr. Blevins Davis of the William Chrisman High School faculty, who also directed it. Nineteen episodes combined to give the most finished and comprehensive production ever presented, at the high school, it is said. Many hundreds of the community witnessed "Clouds of Time."

Walnut Park Church

The church school at Walnut Park, February 27, was well attended. For the past month it has been in charge of W. T. Gard's class of young people. The spirit in which these young people conduct the school is manifested in many ways, and we feel will have a great deal to do with our future leaders in this work. Next month the school will be in charge of Kenneth Morford's class of young people.

Sunday was scout day for Walnut Park, and the eleven o'clock hour was dedicated to the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts who occupied the rostrum. Girl Scout Troop 10 is captained by Mrs. Fritz Oeser, a capable worker, and Boy Scout 227 has as its scoutmaster, Brother Ammon Badder. Elder George Mesley, of the Kansas City Stake presidency and an ardent worker with young people, was the speaker. His talk was directed to the boys and girls, and he explained to them the different markings on a totem pole which he carried and which had been presented to him by a boy in Australia.

At six o'clock a bicentennial pageant was presented under the direction of Sister Erwin Moorman. Negro songs were featured, and the costumes were of the early period.

Elder Benjamin Buntun delivered the evening sermon, urging the Saints to come closer to God. The choir, under its director, Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," the alto solo being taken by Carlotta Norman, assisted at the piano by Gladys Reynolds.

The different groups of women workers of this district are resuming activity. They meet once a week at the home of the group leaders. Several classes have begun and the remainder of the time is being spent in sewing.

We regret the loss of our pastor, Elder S. C. Smith, who shortly will move to near Buckner. Brother and Sister Smith and their family have been of great service and will be very much missed by District Three.

Gudgell Park Church

Speakers at Gudgell Park, February 14, were Elder C. V. Hopkins whose subject was "Feed My Sheep," and Elder B. J. Scott who discoursed on "Eternal Judgment."

The early morning prayer service that day was in charge of Brother William Haskins. Church school attendance was not so large as usual due to the cold weather and snow.

Sacrament service for February was in charge of Pastor Walter Chapman, assisted by Elder P. A. Sherman. A full house enjoyed a spiritual meeting. In the evening Elder Walter Self spoke on "Resurrection."

Good attendance is being given the midweek prayer service.

February 11, a "get-acquainted meeting" was held at the church. The members brought lunch baskets and a real feast was eaten. About seventy-five enjoyed the program which followed.

The women's department meets on Friday, in the home of the women of the district. They are doing some good work.

At the Friday night Religio the classes are busy. The adult class is studying the Book of Mormon. Clarence Martin the teacher. The young men's class is interested in church history. The young women are giving attention to a course of Bible study, Sister Roy Sherman the teacher. The boy's class is interested in the Boy Scout movement. Brother M. Atwell is their teacher. Sister Lillian Johnson has charge of the little folks. February 5, the young men's class gave the program. February 12, Brother Martin's class entertained the Religio after the class period.

The church school opens its session each Sunday morning at nine thirty in charge of the superintendent, Clarence Martin, assisted by Roy Sherman. The school is growing. Attendance is splendid.

Spring Branch Church

Brother Brewer and Jacobson were in charge of the eight fifteen morning service of prayer. An excellent spirit characterized the testimonies and prayers of the Saints.

The juniors took charge of the morning church school. The scripture reading was by Junior Peer and the call to worship was by Richard Smith.

Pastor James E. Cleveland was the eleven o'clock speaker. "Unity Among the Saints" was his theme.

Brother Tankard conducted the evening church school, and the program was furnished by Brother Cleveland's priesthood class.

"For I say unto you that except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven," was the text selected by Evangelist U. W. Green in the sermon of the evening.

The branch gave a farewell party at the church February 23, in the evening, for Brothers J. E. Cleveland, Joseph Farrow, and Ira Weeks and their families who are leaving next week. We sincerely regret the departure of these loyal workers. Their presence in new fields will be of much benefit to their new friends.

The women's department, under the supervisor, Sister Robert Fish, is very active. They are making over clothing for needy children and selling quilt blocks. A week ago today they met at the home of Sister Jacobson for an all-day quilting.

Fresno, California

The Saints of Fresno have been enjoying some very spiritual meetings. In our midweek prayer service last week, two prophecies were given for the encouragement of individuals, also the group. The prayer meetings are well attended by the young people and nearly everyone takes an active part.

Sister Roberts, church school director, has started a Bible class which meets every Monday evening.

Attendance in the junior department is increasing. The junior worship period commands the interest of every boy and girl.

The Saints enjoyed a birthday surprise party on Pastor Frank Enix, last month. He was presented a fountain pen.

The music department gave a social, and the money derived from it will be used to buy Easter music. The choir was responsible for the entertainment during the evening.

Thursday evening a short business meeting was held for the purpose of electing representatives to the conference at Stockton. All those who regularly attend prayer meeting were elected as representatives for the group.

Sister Martha Lightowler, age ninety-two years, passed peacefully to her reward February 10. She has been a member of this church since its reorganization. Elder A. S. Votaw preached the funeral sermon.

Longview-Kelso Mission

Kelso, Washington

Since we have only one priesthood member here, a teacher, preaching services are not held very frequently. However, we always have Sunday school, and we number about thirty-two members. We are trying to keep the little band together and interested in the faith of latter days. We raised our financial quota for 1931 in offerings, and believe we are moving steadily forward, gaining not in numbers, but in the desire on the part of each individual, to come up to a higher plane of living.

A faithful member, Brother Geer, was badly injured in November while working in one of the mills here. His life was despaired of by the doctor and nurses, but Brother Dave Sorden, of Portland, was called to administer. A blessing was given, also the injured brother had a vision in which he saw Christ by his bed and talked with him. The sufferer was promised that he had nothing to fear, for He was near to watch over him. Now our brother has recovered enough to go and come without pain or recurrence of the weakness from the injury.

May the faithful Saints everywhere carry on.

MISCELLANEOUS

Arkansas and Louisiana Conference

The Arkansas and Louisiana district conference convened at Bald Knob, Arkansas, February 13 and 14, at 10 a. m., the district presidency in charge. District officers were elected as follows: Missionary A. M. Baker was elected president of the district; Brother Thomas Emdee, vice president; Fern Emdee continues as secretary. Truman Ziegenhorn was elected chorister and Opal White, organist. Reports were read and approved.

The following delegates were elected to General Conference: J. E. Phillips, A. M. Baker, F. O. White and wife, Ray Ziegenhorn, Truman Ziegenhorn, Seth Harbour, and W. H. Hampton.

We are glad to say that this district goes on record as whole heartedly supporting the church program with regard to the liquidation of the church debt in three years.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—Special conference convened at Beaver-ton, Michigan, December 12, at 10.45 a. m., for the purpose of legislating on raising the quota of this district to go toward paying church debt, and also to elect delegates to General Conference. The meeting opened with the song, "We're Marching to Zion"; prayer by Elder S. T. Pendleton. Hubert Case, district president presided over the conference. After some preliminary remarks by Brother Case, some splendid talks were given by E. S. White, Burt S. Turner, R. E. Jones, S. T. Pendleton, George White, N. A. Carrick, and George W. Burt. Brother Case then made a brief summary of the talks given, touching upon the high points made by each speaker, after which a resolution was moved and unanimously carried that we ask the privilege of paying off the debt in three years. With such a wonderful degree of unity and consecration present, it was suggested that a season of prayer be entered into. As the Saints poured out their hearts to God, asking for divine aid in reconsecrating and re-dedicating their lives to God and the church, a wonderful blessing came as a result, evidencing God's approval of the action taken. The second item of business, election of delegates to General Conference, resulted in the selection of the following: Hubert Case, Alice M. Case, R. E. Jones, Mildred Jones, Burt S. Turner, Claudia Turner, Merle Lambkin, Clinton Loomis, Mrs. G. A. Pringle, S. T. Pendleton, Winnie M. Hulbert, G. W. Burt, Maggie Burt, E. S. White, Esther White, and Matthew Umphrey. At this juncture, the following resolution was moved and unanimously carried: "Whereas, the presiding powers of this church, namely the First Presidency, Bishopric, and Joint Council, have so nobly shouldered the responsibility of pledging themselves to eliminate the present indebtedness of this church in as short a time as possible, and endeavor to keep same free from debt thereafter, not encouraging any building except when money on hand is available, therefore, be it resolved: "That we, as a district, express our faith and confidence in these men and unanimously pledge ourselves to assist them in this endeavor to the limit of our possibilities and resources." In the evening a splendid program was given by the young people. Several five-minute speeches were given on the theme: "What the Young People Can Do to Assist." Each speaker, stressed some particular line of endeavor. Following the program, a resolution similar to that passed at the morning session was unanimously adopted by the young people. Adjournment was then had.

Our Departed Ones

SMITH.—Charlotte Warren was born in Peoria, Illinois, September 26, 1881. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints May 1, 1898. She married William T. Entrican and to this union was born a son, Clifford Entrican, who resides in Saint Louis, Missouri. Upon the passing of Brother Entrican, she married Brother Theodore Smith, of Orlando, Florida, where she made her home for a number of years. "Sister Lottie," as she was known to friends, possessed a beautiful Christian character, and her home the past few years was open to the missionaries and Saints who came her way. She leaves to mourn her passing, her devoted husband, her son Clifford, and a granddaughter, Mary Entrican; two brothers and two sisters, of Illinois, besides a host of friends. She peacefully departed this life Wednesday evening, January 13, at her home in Orlando, Florida. Elder F. G. Pitt preached the sermon in the chapel of Carey Hand. He and Sister Pitt sang as her last request, her three favorite hymns, "He Will Hold My Hand," "Think of That Beautiful City," and "There Is a Land Immortal." The many beautiful floral offerings testified of the love and high esteem in which our sister was held. She was laid to rest in Greenwood Cemetery, Sunday afternoon, January 17, 1932, in Orlando, Florida.

FREDRICK.—Harold Eugene Fredrick, of Peoria and Joliet, Illinois, departed this life April 11, 1931, aged thirty-five years and ten months, at Hot Springs, Arkansas, where he had spent a few days. He passed away suddenly with heart attack. Harold left to mourn his departure, his wife, Ethel Fredrick; his parents, Frank E. and Marguerite E. Fredrick, and one brother, Harlow G. Fredrick, of Joliet, besides a host of other relatives and friends. Harold united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when a boy, and though he was in contact but occasionally with the church, he loved its message and the association with its ministers and members. He possessed a kind, gentle spirit, always forgiving as he hoped to be forgiven. Interment was in Oakwood Cemetery, Joliet, Illinois, April 15, 1931.

BECK.—Agnes Parks was born in Joliet, Illinois, in 1898; departed this life September 27, 1931, at her home in Kenosha, Wisconsin. She joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when a young girl, and lived a consistent Christian life, happily ministering to those about her. She was a successful teacher in the schools of Kenosha. She left to mourn, her husband, Rudolf N. Beck, a brother, Arthur Parks, and two little nieces Nadean and Patty Rose Parks, for whom she and her husband were caring; also other relatives, friends, and the many pupils with whom she had come in contact in her public life. She was extremely busy for the few short years she was permitted to live, passing on at the early age of thirty-two years. She suffered but a few months when the call came. Interment was in Kenosha, Wisconsin, September 30, 1931.

FRANKLIN.—Jeddie M. Franklin was born in January, 1861, at Coalville, Utah. Moved to Gallands Grove, Iowa, in 1885, where he lived until 1904, when he moved to Kidder, Missouri, and to Independence in 1919. When eight years old he was baptized by Elder E. C. Brand and was a faithful member of the Reorganized Church to the close of his earthly life January 26, 1932. Died at his home in Independence. He married Miss Martha A. Roundy October 12, 1887, and to them five children were born: Faye Franklin, of Columbia, Missouri; Eva Franklin and Mrs. Beryl Scott, of the home, and Leslie Franklin, Buck Grove, Iowa. One daughter, Leona May, died when four years old. His wife preceded him in death December 19, 1924. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. The funeral sermon was by C. J. Hunt, assisted by J. M. Baker.

MARSHALL.—Henry Werbert Marshall, of Strathmore, Alberta, Canada, passed away February 1, 1932, at the Holy Cross Hospital in Calgary. His death followed a long illness. Mr. Marshall was born May 15, 1872, at Merlin, Ontario, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, August 18, 1918, at Calgary, Alberta, by C. H. Coles. The funeral, conducted by District President William McLeod, was largely attended by friends who held Brother Marshall in esteem. Saints of Calgary and district will miss him. They sympathize with Sister Marshall in her bereavement.

BROWN.—Betsy Brown, widow of Alfred Brown, was born March 22, 1837, and was baptized into the church July 31, 1867. In 1852, with others she crossed the plains from Missouri in a wagon drawn by an ox team. For a number of years she lived in Utah and Nevada, then moved to California. Was married to Brother Haws, and after his death, married Alfred Brown. Was the mother of nine children all of whom she outlived. During her life she was a faithful member of the church and many enjoyed her hospitality and kindness. For the last five years she has been an inmate of the Kings Daughters Home in Oakland, California and a victim of paralysis during that time. Passed away the morning of February 2, 1932. The funeral was conducted February 4, by J. W. Rushton. Interment was in Sunset View Cemetery. Surviving are a granddaughter, Ora Haws, of Oakland, and a grandson, A. G. Haws, of Berkeley.

REESE.—Chloe M. Moore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos B. Moore, was born in San Jose, California, November 9, 1859. She was married to Gomer Reese December 23, 1875, and to them were born nine children. Four preceded the parents in death. Those surviving are: Evan Reese, of Didbury, Canada; Mrs. R. A. Young, Bozeman, Montana; Mrs. A. E. Warren, Los Angeles, California; Mrs. William Newton, formerly of Wilmington, California, and Percy Reese, of Denton, Montana. There also are left three brothers and three sisters: A. J. Moore, Bozeman; Mrs. Dave Williams, Long Beach, California; Mrs. John Davice, Springfield, Missouri; Mrs. William Haws, Spray, Oregon; Frank Moore, Condon, Oregon, and E. J. Moore, of Alberta, Canada. The deceased was baptized a member of the church August 23, 1867. She passed away at her home in Bozeman, February 5, 1932. The services were held in the Dokken chapel at Bozeman by Evangelist G. W. Thorburn, of Deer Lodge.

LAMBERT.—Joseph R. Lambert was the second son and child of Richard and Jane Thornber Lambert. He was born in Hancock County, Rock Creek Township, Illinois, October 4, 1845. His education was obtained in the district schools and in the home circle. During the dark and cloudy days of the church, he became well informed in the religious principles furthered by the Reorganization. He and one brother, Daniel F., joined the church November 5, 1863, and took it upon themselves to teach the gospel to their brothers and sisters and others, which resulted in gaining many workers and much strength for the church of their choice. In December, 1865, he was ordained to the office of teacher. Later he occupied as a priest, elder, apostle, and patriarch, being a minister of the church for more than sixty-five years, and without ever lowering the banner, he occupied with profit to the church and honor to himself. His principal ministry was as an apostle from 1873 to 1902, and during the remainder of his life as an evangelist. He contributed much to the written and printed word. His father's family of six sons and six daughters have all passed into the future life except Harriet Redfield, of Independence; Ellen Pitt, of Hancock County, Illinois; and Alexander, the youngest, of Colorado.

December 11, 1873, he married Anna Elizabeth Phelps, who passed in death February 8, 1923. Of four children born to them, two still live and are residents of Independence: Mrs. A. H. Mills and R. J. Lambert. Besides his children, his two sisters and one brother, there survive four grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends. He died February 17, 1932, at the home of his son. Funeral services were held February 18, at the Carson Funeral Home, Independence, Missouri, directed by Elder Isaac M. Smith. Bishop Albert Carmichael delivering an address, and at Lamoni, Iowa, at the home of his niece, Mrs. Lena J. Graham, directed by Elder Wilber Prall, Elder R. S. Salyards delivering an address. His body rests at Lamoni by the side of his companion.

Central Features

The three principal features of the coming General Conference, according to the above program, will be Business Sessions, Quorum Sessions, and Preaching Services. Everything else will be incidental to these. A small amount of class work has been planned for the early morning hours. Two prayer services have been provided. As noted above, during the first four days of Conference, only one business session a day will be held. This, however, is subject to action of Conference. During the closing days of the Conference, it is anticipated that two business sessions will be needed each day; this, in the interest of economy as well as concentrating the attention of the Saints on the vital significance of the Conference this year.

Three series of preaching services have been planned: 1. Pre-conference series, referred to above. 2. Pastoral series. This includes four pastoral sermons to be given at the Stone Church at 11 o'clock each day from April 6 to April 9 inclusive. 3. General Conference Series. Each evening throughout the Conference a general church officer will preach on some theme connected with the Restoration Movement and the gospel of Christ. Each of these preaching services will be preceded with an appropriate musical prelude.

The special musical feature of the Conference will be the rendition of "The Messiah" on Sunday afternoon, April 10. Much preparation has been given to this production and it has been given a central place in the Conference program.

Features of special interest to the young people have been concentrated this year for the most part in the week-end, April 9 and 10. This is the only time the Graceland College people can be in attendance at the Conference and the only time a great number of young people and young people's leaders may be expected to be present. The young people will maintain throughout the Conference headquarters for educational and social activities and the Independence young people will give a reception to their visiting friends following the preaching service on Saturday evening, April 9. On that same evening the Graceland College Alumni will hold a business and fellowship session.

Sunday morning, April 10, a mass prayer service will be held at the Stone Church for the young people. This should be one of the outstanding services of the Conference. Much of the class work will be of interest to the young people and especially to the leaders of youth. Some group conferences have been provided for those interested in these activities.

Class work, as stated above, has been limited this year. A small number of subjects will be offered—subjects of vital interest and special importance in connection with the church program. The early morning hours each day will be devoted to this work. Detailed announcement will be provided later.

The program as tentatively outlined closes with the business session on April 14. The Independence Sanitarium has been given permission to hold their annual commencement exercises on the evening of April 14.

Complete details of the above program will be furnished later.

Blue Pencil Notes

"Ho—hum," soliloquized Deacon Goodentart, "seems as though no matter how tall a bishop is he is generally short."

Paul argued for a good conscience, but a lot of people today put more confidence in a good lawyer.

When men are warm (but not too warm) and have had enough to eat (but not too much) and are in fairly good health they seem to run rather easily to philosophy. When they are cold and hungry and ragged they take more to anarchy.

I do not believe in uncontrolled emotionalism. But I certainly would hate to see the day when this work should become a cold-blooded business proposition, and nothing more. Intellectualism has gotten the world into nothing but a sad muddle. Religion makes its first appeal to the heart, and purposefully so, too. "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength." Men are moved by their feelings, good or bad, more than by their intelligence. How important then to arouse right feelings, deep and strong and true, and then direct them in right channels. That is the simplest kind of logic; so after all reason and emotion come to the same task.

During a quarrel in a Greek church in Kansas City John Anagnostopolus is reported to have bitten the left ear of Harry Charuhas so badly that Brother Charuhas had to be taken to the hospital for an operation. When Greek meets Greek there are lively times. Disgraceful? Yes, but are not all church quarrels disgraceful? They leave worse hurts than a bitten ear. I would like to see a "peace conference" in the church in which all members and officers would enter upon a "five year program" to liquidate all church contentions; every one pledged to refrain from participation in hard feelings and church squabbles of every sort for a period of five years. Why not? It is argued that if we are to have a financial program we should have a spiritual program to match it. If we are to liquidate material liabilities why not "liquidate" some of our spiritual liabilities? Division and dissension are always costly liabilities, demanding excessive interest and overhead charges. Before Christ gave his disciples their great commission, he prayed for them, "I pray not for the world but for them which thou hast given me, for they are mine. . . . Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." Before the church can undertake its great work successfully there must be unity and oneness. Personal and official quarrels must be foresworn—they cost too much. With the priesthood, including all the leading quorums, united and at peace, we may with influence and authority move among the people as peacemakers, advocates of Christ, and lead them forward in his great work.

"AS ONE OF THESE"

I walk along the street sedate and slow.
The years have made me dignified—ahem.
But when the boys race by from school, aglow
My spirit runs and jumps and shouts with them.

My face is long and serious—life's gaff
Has made it look like Solomon—ahem.
But when I hear a group of children laugh,
My childish spirit laughs and laughs with them.

So when I think about the pearly gate,
My fears are soothed a bit, by words that please
Me when I know I am not wise or great:
"Except you shall become as one of these

You can not enter." When I see a child
Loving and loved of parents, brothers, too,—
Beneath the years that time on me has piled,
My soul is born anew, a little child.

What of Our Testimony?

A hundred years ago the church, newly-restored to earth, heard much about testimony. Latter-day revelations of that time frequently mentioned the testimony given to the church and that which, in turn, was expected of the Saints. Here are Jesus' own words: "And now, I, the Lord, give unto you a testimony of the truth of these commandments which are lying before you." The Lord admonished his servants to be diligent in testimony, teaching the truth by word and deed. They were to "bear testimony in every place, unto every people."

These instructions given to our forefathers compose a part of our heritage in the faith. They apply to us today. And in addition to them, we have the exhortations of present-day ministers to "be valiant in testimony," to "live the gospel," to "be a bright and shining light," to "teach truth by daily example."

In this connection let me quote a portion of a revelation given to Joseph Smith, jr., and six elders in September, 1832: "Verily I say unto you, who now have my words, which is my voice, Blessed are ye inasmuch as you receive these things; for I will forgive you of your sins with this commandment, that you remain steadfast in your minds in solemnity, and the spirit of prayer, in bearing testimony to all the world of those things which are communicated unto you."

In ancient days Christ said to his disciples: "Follow me" and "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." He was the Great Teacher. His life was the living testimony of the love of God for men, of divine mercy and forgiveness. He redeemed the world from ignorance and sin. The truths he taught will live for ever. His commission was to the world, and he said, "Come unto me, all ye . . ."

We have the Christ commission to take our testimony to "all the world," to tell men the truths which have been given to us. What are we, who profess to follow Christ, doing? Are we living so that our example shall be a memorial to goodness, truth, and beauty, or do we allow our minds to become darkened, as did our forefathers because of unbelief, and because we have treated lightly the things we have received? Are we honest with ourselves and our God? Are we unselfish, humble, true, consecrated? Saints of latter days, what of our testimony?

Keeping Fit

Physical culture enthusiasts have a fad that they call "keeping fit." It is probably one of the most beneficial hobbies that ever struck the world. Thousands of people carefully watch their diet and refrain from overeating and unwise eating in order to "keep fit." They quit tobacco, they stay home and get enough sleep, they take systematic exercise, and they consult the doctor for examinations—all this they do in order to "keep fit." And they are rewarded by the fact that they can look at a pair of clear eyes and a clean complexion in the mirror every morning when they shave. The rosy glow of health and the feeling of strength are sources of great satisfaction. For all who like to indulge themselves in some little vanity there is nothing to surpass the feeling and appearance of good health, for which they may feel slightly superior to their pallid and fleshy neighbors.

Reflecting on this fad of keeping physically fit, we are constrained to think about another possibility—that of keeping spiritually fit. It is well to give the body its daily attention—how about a bit of daily attention for the soul? One could, if really conscientious about the matter, create for himself a daily program of activity, coordinated with his other duties, for spiritual growth. There would be, of course, the daily prayers; the short period of retirement for silence, meditation, and self-examination; the determination to do each day something to make some one else happier or to help some one, (as the Scouts do); the daily consideration of some good quotation or inspiring thought; and a daily amount of time devoted to study. Of such things would a program for keeping spiritually fit be made.

Thousands have the energy and ambition to keep physically fit. How many have the vision and persistence to try to keep spiritually fit? L. L.

Industrial Peace

If I am right, the social problem is more psychological than political or economic. Legitimate discontent with the conditions of labor ought to be remedied, even at the cost of slightly diminished production. But the preachers of class enmity are the worst enemies of society, and the preachers of love and loyalty and good will are its best friends. The duty of the church towards industrialism is indirect but none the less important. Its message may be summed up in the words, "The Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Accept this, and most of our difficulties will soon adjust themselves.—Dean W. R. Inge in "Our Social Problems."

Reflections

Justice for the Railroads

Our rapid national development and our far-flung commercial enterprises would have been impossible without the railroads. It is quite conceivable that without them our country would still have only the fringe of a civilization on our seacoasts and along our waterways, with nothing but wagon roads leading back into vast tracts of wilderness, to which no adequate transportation could bring any service. We would have been as Russia was up to 1910.

Whatever past quarrels the public may have had with the railroads, we want to look at the present and the future, facing the facts honestly. If we are interested in our own welfare, we must be interested in the railroads.

We Depend on the Railroads—

Our present and future welfare depends on the railroads because we rely on them to carry the bulk of the heavy freight of the country. Commerce and industry are kept going by their service. In spite of all that may be said about rates, railroad transportation is cheapest, safest, and best in the long run when all of the costs are counted.

We could not depend exclusively on motor truck transportation. Our highways would not stand the strain. They are not big enough nor durable enough. Anyway, we don't want them cluttered up with freight trucks. Any one who takes a long trip across country these days understands very well what a nuisance the large trucks and buses are. And even the best of concrete slab construction is soon pounded to pieces by their great weight.

The railroads are the most dependable carriers of great volumes of heavy freight; and, we may add, the safest vehicles of passenger transportation.

Who pays the cost of "cheap transportation"?

Of course motor trucks can underbid the railroads on rates when public tax money pays for the highways and maintains them. And it would cost billions more than the present staggering appropriations to build and maintain the new and larger highways that would be needed if the railroads ceased operation.

"Cheap transportation" by motor trucks is an illusion, and the public pays the difference!

The Unregulated Carriers—

All of the old evils that were eliminated from railroad competition by legislation and the Interstate Commerce Commission are practiced today by the truck and bus transportation interests. They can discriminate between shippers; they can accept or reject shipments as they choose; they are not forced to maintain any regular service; they can take the cream of shipping opportunities and leave the less desirable business to other carriers (in this case the railroads are the victims); and they are not forced to print rates or schedules ahead of time.

The Plight of the Railroads—

The railroads are involved in the heaviest single group of investments in the country. By these investments the country has greatly benefited, as well as by the services performed. The railroads are subjected to strict regulation and heavy taxation while they see their competitors, only lightly taxed, using the public highways which the railway taxation helps to maintain. They see the best of the business, the short hauls, going to the other carriers. Business has fallen off, until many employees have been thrown out of work, repairs on equipment have had to be suspended, and the situation has become very serious.

What the Railroads Need—

The railroads are not asking for subsidies, like the waterway transportation. They are not asking for an opportunity to increase rates. They do not ask the government to build and maintain their roadbeds. All they are asking is justice. And it would seem to any impartial person that justice would require an equitable taxation for all transportation facilities. With this equalized taxation relative costs would be adjusted, and general transportation put on a true competitive basis. The railroads are not asking for subsidies: they ask and ought to get a fair chance.

The Country's Future—

The future welfare of the country depends upon the railroads. No present method of highway construction can produce roads that will long withstand the weight of heavy motor truck transportation. The congestion of traffic on the public highways would be very undesirable. The chaos of transportation would be inconceivable, and the problems of regulation all but insurmountable.

The fact is that we need the railroads. In simple justice we ought to give them a square deal. And if we continue the present unfair treatment we are bound to suffer.

Why We Believe in Jesus

By F. Henry Edwards

A few weeks ago a young man said to me, "If we accept the principles of the gospel our difficulties melt away, but my difficulty lies in accepting those principles. I can not take for granted the fundamental things for which the church stands. Why should I believe in God or in Jesus or in the church?" It is with this conversation in mind that I am taking as my theme this morning, "Why should we believe in Jesus?"

The preposition which I am using here is extremely important. Why we should believe in Jesus, not just about him. Much of our time is spent in learning about God and about Jesus and about the church. These things which we learn are desirable and should be known. It is both interesting and helpful, for example, to know that Jesus was born about 4 B. C. It is also interesting and helpful to know that this church was organized on April 6, 1830. Then again, it is interesting and helpful to know that the Reorganization Movement took form in 1852 and 1853; came past its first great crisis in 1860 and its second major growing pain in 1873, etc. But our belief in the church is not founded on these things. Our belief in the church is a matter of personal response, and so is our belief in Jesus. I want you to keep this in mind this morning. We are to discuss why we should believe in Jesus. Finally this means why we should surrender our lives to his guidance and teaching.

The Beginning of the Church is Jesus

When we go back along the stream of historic Christianity to the headwaters of this stream we do not find there a set of doctrines or a church organization or a philosophy of any kind; but we find away back at the source of Christianity, a radiant and inspiring personality. "In him we live and move and have our being." Doctrines come from Him, not Jesus from the doctrines. Church organization comes from him. He has not been manufactured by the church. The great beginning of Christianity is Jesus. The end of Christianity is Jesus. He is the Alpha and the Omega.

I am naming four reasons for believing in Jesus. They are not listed in the order of their importance because our opinions as to their importance will differ. Nor are they mutually exclusive. They support and overlap each other.

We Believe Because of His Testimony

We believe in Jesus Christ first of all because of his own testimony. A man is his own best witness.

So is Jesus. Repeatedly the Master refused to bear testimony when the inquirers merely wanted to satisfy their curiosity. He had no use for what Kipling called "insatiable curiosity." But whenever it was really necessary to speak Jesus did so, and gave willing testimony regarding himself and his work. Listen—can we not hear him in these moments of sincere and earnest testimony, "not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom, but he that doeth the will of my Father;" "I and my Father are one," "Knowest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me?" Repeatedly, and in a variety of ways Jesus told those who earnestly sought him that he and his Father were so closely related together that they could not possibly be divided.

Other men have made claims similar to these both before and since. But either immediately or after a lapse of time these others have been written down as cranks. Jesus has been remembered, because the testimony which he bore was true. When President Smith was in Jerusalem some ten years ago, a man came to see him at mission headquarters and said that he was the reincarnation of Moses and Elias and Jesus, and would like an opportunity to be introduced to our people in the United States. Naturally President Smith wrote that man down as a crank. That is about how any of us would feel with regard to anyone claiming kinship with divinity but yet failing to bring forth the living evidences of such kinship. But Jesus carried the evidences of his divine paternity with him, and because of this, men whose eyes were touched by the angel of clear vision came to believe in him with all their hearts and minds and strength.

We believe in Jesus because of his own testimony. Jesus said: "All power is given unto me, both in heaven and on earth." That would have seemed silly on the lips of any other person. Even on his lips it has seemed foolish to many. Yet the better we know him the less foolish it seems. Men who know him best thank God that it is the most sublime truth. Again, he said: "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." The rulers of the Jews laughed among themselves and said, "Yes, we will lift him up all right, but not as he wants to be elevated." But yet the cross on which they raised him has become the very symbol of Christianity, and the crucifixion is our most touching revelation of the transcendent love of God. H. G. Wells, in his play, "Joan of Arc," makes his heroine say: "If I go through fire I shall go to the hearts of the people." It was true in her case. It was much more true in the case of Jesus. Whenever he has been lifted up he has drawn men to him. It is eternally true. His own testimony has been vindicated by the experience of men.

Study your New Testament. Get to know it thoroughly, as a real student of English knows his Shakespeare. Cultivate intimacy with the men who were closest to Jesus, with Matthew, John, Peter, Paul, and others. When you get their point of view you will find that the startling claims of Jesus were redeemed from apparent foolishness by the wonder of the life he lived. We believe in Jesus because of what he himself has testified.

We Believe Because of the Testimony of the Early Disciples

We believe in Jesus, in the second place, because of the testimony of his earliest disciples; the men who were nearest to him and knew him best. These men were Jews. They were traditioned to believe in one God. They had to pass through a tremendous and cataclysmic spiritual experience before they could find place in their hearts and minds for a prophet who would be the Son of God himself. Yet they passed through this experience, and ever afterward they were different men. Watch Peter and John and Thomas and the others of the Twelve as they journey with Jesus in Galilee. They look like ordinary common folks but we know enough about them now to recognize that they were not common. They had in them the elements of greatness. Yet certainly they had not yet arrived at their great destiny when we meet them on the highway with Jesus before the fateful days of Calvary. They still lack an elusive something which is vital to their growth.

Now look at these same men after Easter. Take Peter, for example. The coward who had denied his Lord at Calvary stood up with the eleven on the day of Pentecost and faced the three thousand Jews who had slain his Master, faced them and convinced them of their blood guilt. What had happened to Peter? In the interval between these two events he had really seen Jesus for the first time. Now he believed in him. From this time forward nothing mattered except that the gospel should be preached in all the world. Peter, who knew the Master as very few men knew him, believed in him in spite of the terrible cost of that belief.

The biographies of Jesus which have come down to us from a few years after that tremendous Easter experience are historic records. Though they were compiled after a lapse of years, the impression which Jesus made on the men around him is reflected in these gospel stories. Matthew and Mark and Luke and John use little expressions and turn of phrase which Jesus used, and incorporated in their serious narratives little quips of humor which had been immortalized by the smile of Jesus. These men were probably fashioned in the likeness of other men of their time. They were not courteous or friendly but were almost unnecessarily direct and stern in their relationships with each other. Yet these men had found something in Jesus which they wished to record without any deviation, and so we find values in the gospel which they themselves did not fully appreciate. We should believe in Jesus because these inspired writers have preserved for us a picture of his winning personality which could not have been preserved unless he had impressed them as in very truth the Son of God.

We Believe Because of the Testimony of the Later Disciples

A further reason why we should believe in Jesus is that his disciples of later years have borne convincing testimony about him. I believe that if I were given a chance to keep ten revelations of the Doctrine and Covenants, but must let go the other one hundred and twenty-five, I would probably ask to keep Sections 1, 17, 42, 51, 58, 76, 83, 85, 90, and 122. Of these one of my favorites is Section 76 and from this I wish to cite your attention to the following excerpts from paragraph three:

We beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fullness; and saw the holy angels and they who are sanctified before his throne, worshiping God and the Lamb, who worship him for ever and ever. And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God.

I presume that all of you remember Bishop E. L. Kelley, one of the grand old men of the Restoration Movement. Others of you who have not met him know about him. Bishop Kelley dated his devoted faith in the work of God, and the success which came from that faith, from one crucial spiritual experience. I believe that at that time he did not hold the Melchisedec priesthood, but he was granted a vision of Jesus and was given convincing testimony that Jesus is the Christ. This remained with him throughout life and made him an outstanding power for good. Thus we see that the testimony of the divinity of the Master is not confined to any time. It is borne by those who have been in close touch with him in these days as well as in other days. Their testimony is a major reason why we should believe in Jesus.

We May Believe Because of Our Own Experience

The fourth reason which I am giving why we should believe in Jesus is that we ourselves can have indubitable proof that he is the Son of God. I think that Alma, in the Book of Mormon, gives the best illustration of the way of achieving this knowledge of our Savior for ourselves. He tells us that the only way to know whether a seed has the germ of life within itself is to plant it and surround it with the conditions of growth. If the seed grows we then know it to be good seed. If it fails to grow, we know that it is not good seed. If we fail to give it the chance to grow, we can never be entirely sure whether it is good seed or not.

Alma suggests that we do this same thing with our belief in Christ. If we want to have faith in him, then the scientific thing to do is to treat our faith as a seed and to give it light, moisture, warmth and the other conditions essential to growth so that it can grow if there is any real life in it. And the testimony of Alma, and of countless other men who have followed his advice, is that if we will follow this procedure we can ourselves receive the evidence that Jesus is the Son of God and the Savior of the world.

Some of the greatest men who have ever lived have said in all sincerity that the motivation of their greatness was their love for Jesus Christ. The more these men acted like Jesus the better became their understanding of him and the deeper their conviction of his divinity. That is the test to which I would like all our people to put their faith in God. Understanding of the ways of God and of the truth of the gospel is not just an intellectual adventure, it is a venture in spiritual enlightenment. Such an adventure requires that we shall use our minds, but it also requires that we shall be utterly devoted to the work of God. The riches of understanding are denied those who merely seek them by the intellectual way of discovery. Many a poor man, utterly lacking in outstanding intellectual qualifications, has a rich assurance of the things of God which has come to him in the course of a life well lived.

So I say to you that we should believe in Jesus Christ because we can get to know him for ourselves if we will pay the price of intimacy and of understanding. Do the things which Jesus has asked you to do and which in your heart of hearts you know you ought to do. Make his way of life your rule of life. Be kind and unselfish. Learn to love with discrimination, making your affection count for the good of men. Surround the seeds of faith with the conditions of growth, and you will find that the seeds will in fact grow and blossom and bear rich fruit.

We believe in Jesus most when we are living at our best, and it is more reasonable to trust our own judgment when we feel the inspiration of heaven than when we are living in a spiritual depression. Personally I find it more easy to have faith in God and the church when I am living at my best than at any other time. I think that you also will find that this is true. We should believe in Jesus because of what he himself has said, because of what Godly men nearest to him have said about him, because of the testimony of Joseph Smith and Bishop Kelley and of thousands of others of our own times, and most particularly because we ourselves can know him if we will follow him closely enough. We can believe in Christ if we give ourselves a chance to believe in him.

Autobiography

VII.—AN INTERVAL BETWEEN APPOINTMENTS, TO THE CLOSE OF 1890

By James Franklin Mintun

During the winter of 1885 and 1886 I taught a term of school, thus being able to meet my obligations and to provide for the family. The burden of my calling rested heavily upon me, but I patiently waited and faithfully performed every duty so that I could add to my finances, the sooner to return to missionary work to which I had been called. Soon after my school closed there came to me an appointment to act as postmaster at Magnolia, Iowa. In March of this year, 1886, I began my work as postmaster with Brother Alma M. Fyrando, assistant. We also borrowed sufficient capital to put in a small business, consisting of stationery and a small supply of groceries. The morning we were to open up the business, I went to the building, and at an early hour before 6 a. m., I dedicated the business to God, asking for prosperity, and a blessing on the business, that I might the sooner enter into missionary work, promising the Lord that as soon as success should attend the work and enable me to pay all indebtedness and situate my family so that I could, I would sell the business, resign from the position as postmaster, and again enter missionary work to continue during life, if desired.

Our business prospered. I worked as a notary public, doing some insurance and loan business, besides the business previously mentioned. To God we gave the praise for our success. Our success was noticed and inquiry made as to how we could succeed when others were suffering loss in the same locality. Some said they could not understand it, but could see that we were being prospered, and their anxiety caused them to make the inquiry. During the time we were in business we were also engaged in the church work every Lord's day, and evenings when we could.

On the day of our opening for business, I became the father of my first born, who has been an honor to God and her parents, and has rendered great assistance to me and the family when in missionary work financially, so that at the death of her mother in 1920, she had saved for herself nothing, but all above her living was given to the family to assist the church so that I might continue in missionary work.

After continuing in business for about three years, we had prospered so that I thought if some one should come and purchase the business I would sell and prepare the family so that I could again engage in missionary work. An offer was soon made by the father of my partner, and I sold the general business, securing a small building to continue my work as postmaster with the stationery part of the business till another should be appointed to the position as postmaster, and in this I was blessed. I continued thus till the latter part of 1890, occupying my time actively in church work locally, acting as Sunday school superintendent at Magnolia, and preaching in Magnolia and vicinity nearly every Lord's day. And my diary says of my work: "Had good liberty in preaching, and received added light on the Scriptures used"; "Had fair liberty"; "Had excellent liberty"; or "Had the assistance of the Spirit." My heart responds with gratitude even now when I note the history of the favors of God bestowed on one so weak as I. This assures me that God will take the weak things of the world to confound the mighty and will bless all, no matter how weak they are, who will do his will in a humble way.

During the year 1889, June 29, the Lord blessed us with another daughter, who has been equally thoughtful of the needs of the missionary family into which she was born, as the older one has been, and neither has grown "sour" because of its being necessary for them to be deprived of many things that other children enjoyed, but both are faithful in the interests of the church so far as possible.

I further note that so great have been our family blessings in a physical way, that since our marriage in 1877 up till about August 5, 1889, it was not necessary to call a physician, but when sickness occurred God had always given relief in answer to prayer, or prayer and administration. At this time my wife was very sick. After two administrations with earnest prayer, we could note no apparent help. We then sent for a physician. We felt reproof that our faith was for some reason weakened, and we determined to further humble ourselves, that we might enjoy and represent greater faith. A few days after this I assisted in administration to Sister Charles Derry, and she was immediately relieved. At the same time we administered to a Sister Benson, who too, was immediately greatly blessed, and gradually grew well. Such are the blessings of God to his people today.

At the reunion that was held that year in October, there were present of the ministry Joseph R. Lambert, Mark H. Forscutt, John S. Roth, Charles Derry, Joseph F. McDowell, S. W. L. Scott, and others, from whom I heard some wonderful sermons. On the 13th at the prayer service there was a tongue given with the interpretation, which was witnessed by the Spirit to be of God.

I continued to labor locally in and near Magnolia, being much blessed in my ministry. On February 16, 1890, I was preaching at Magnolia, when "I was led to preach on baptism and its appropriateness by showing the spiritual results by the form of its application. A man was present who had passed through some trouble in the home. His wife was a member of the church. He was troubled, and in listening to the sermon, the Spirit took the word preached to him, and he found satisfaction. He spent the night in prayer, and God showed him his duty, and I was given the evidence of the effect the word had had with him. He came and requested baptism, but on the account of his recent trouble he was advised to wait and receive further instruction, which he did. He was baptized March 23 of that year.

At the district conference held in Magnolia, Iowa, beginning March 1, 1890, I was chosen associate president of the district. At this conference I "presented the matter of organizing a district Sunday school association, which was unanimously approved. I was chosen District Superintendent, assisted by S. B. Kibler and David Chambers. Thus reads my diary:

Rules to govern this association were formulated by S. B. Kibler and myself, March 16. The organization was called "The Little Sioux District Sunday School Union." These rules were endorsed June 7, at the Convention of the district, held at Logan, Iowa.

During the first of April I sent my report to General Conference, and received a missionary appointment to North West Iowa, as circumstances permit, and then follows in my diary this: "I felt very desirous of laboring as would be an honor to God."

During the time of this conference the Saints' Herald contained a request from Eastern Nebraska in their district conference minutes for my return to them as a missionary. My record states concerning this: "This caused me to believe that past missionary work was remembered as an acceptable one, and should I do no more, I shall feel that what I have done was beneficial to this great work of God." In this mission I had spent about three years as I have previously recorded in this autobiography.

On May 4, Elder Heman C. Smith came to Magnolia, and spent much of his time in my home and with me, and our conversation was largely on my late appointment, and how most effectually to serve, and arrange my circumstances to serve. We also conversed on the general work of the church, and his wise counsel and helpful instruction gave me great encouragement in making the preparation to take the field. My diary has this record at this time: By the "authority of the Little Sioux Branch and the District Sunday School Union, I organized a Sunday school at Little Sioux, Iowa, with George M. Scott as superintendent, and John Dickey, assistant superintendent. On June 29 I called together the Sunday school workers and considered and agreed to a "uniformity of lesson texts for all classes." This was a great help, for it united all the students at the same time in studying the same Scriptures, and this was followed by a review for the entire school, which greatly increased the interest of all in the Sunday school work.

On July 6, at a sacrament service, "a spiritual feast was enjoyed," when I was moved by the Spirit of revelation to give the following:

"Verily, thus saith the Spirit to this people: I will cleanse, I will purify those whom I have chosen as my servants. The labors that I have required at thy hands, because of the office to which thou hast been called must be done. Thou must engage upon it, for I will forgive whom I will forgive." After this was given, Brother J. S. McDonald testified, "that he had now received the evidence for which he had been seeking for the past months, so that he might be confirmed in the position to which he had been called." Brother McDonald had been called to the office of teacher in the church, and while his name was not mentioned in the communication, yet the Spirit conveyed the instruction to whom it was intended to benefit.

This spiritual gift I had enjoyed years before, but because of criticisms and the quenching of the Spirit by me, and asking God that this gift might be taken from me, I had not enjoyed it for years until that time. A few weeks previous to this experience I had asked the prayers of the Saints that I might be forgiven for having made such a request of the Lord, thus depriving the church of a gift that might have been of so much value to them; and the Lord answered the prayer, for which I then praised the Lord for his mercy.

I continued to prepare for missionary work until the reunion held that fall in Logan, Iowa, where we met and made permanent arrangements with Bishop E. L. Kelley to take the field, the family to receive $18 per month, we then having two children. I had expected to enter into missionary work on October 5, but at the time Brother Magnus A. Fyrando was seriously ill, and not expecting to recover. He requested me to take charge of his mercantile business in the interests of his family, and so arrange it that they would not suffer loss. He lived but a short time. He had bought in the business that had formerly been conducted by his son Alma and myself. He bought my interests in 1889. I continued in charge of the business and estate till near November 12, at which time I find this record: "In separation from loved ones at this time I could more fully realize the great love the Son of God had to leave the mansions of glory with his Father, and all the holy angels, and come to this world of sorrow, and care to die the ignominious death on the cross for sinful man, his enemy. I left my tearful family with a soul too full of sadness to picture with words, and wended my way to Preparation with varied thoughts, both evil and good, the good however, predominating, till after passing over many a hill, and through many a valley—which reminded me of the varied character of life—I arrived about four o'clock at the home of Brother Jarius M. Putney, one of God's noblemen. He was at that time presiding over the Union Center Branch at Moorhead, I began a series of services at Moorhead and at Preparation. The latter place had been settled by one of the elders in the church at the time the church was at Nauvoo—Charles B. Thompson, and some few followers who settled there, and was reigned over by Thompson and an associate, Guy Barnum. These people were called Baneemyites. They had "all things common," according to their way of interpreting that principle. Everything belonged to "us," and when wanted they would inquire for "our" article whether it was a hoe, spade, hat, or whatever was wanted. Some crooked work was discovered by some of the members there, and they with considerable feeling ran Thompson and Barnum out of the country under pressure. Most of these people came into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and were held in high esteem for integrity and righteous purposes, but their confidence in men was lessened, whether they were men in the church of the ministry or not, for they had been betrayed by Brigham Young and those who went with him, and later by Charles B. Thompson, in whom they had imposed great confidence, both temporally and spiritually, to be afterwards betrayed.

In noticing my daily record for the months of November and December I am convinced that God greatly favored and blessed me, for the record says: "I had excellent liberty"; "preached with great power"; "God was with me in great power, etc."

I closed my labors for this year, and returned home December 27, and remained until I had "attended to my business, so that I could be more fully free to remain in the ministerial field, and was prospered in my efforts."

The Eye and Its Relation to Health and Disease.—8

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Situated just behind the pupil, is the crystalline lens, whose function is to focus rays so that they form a perfect image on the retina. It has the ability to change its shape according to the distance of the object and whether the rays are parallel or divergent. This alteration in the refractory part of the lens is known as accommodation. It is made up of layers like an onion, which give it its elastic structure. It is held in position by ligaments known as the suspensory ligaments.

Cataract is an opacity of this crystalline lens and is found among the old of every land. Some are more subject to it than others. It has been estimated that every fiftieth person in Egypt is blind from this cause. It is more prevalent in India than in any other part of the world. People living in hot countries are more subject to it than those living in cold countries. The various forms of this important condition are described in textbooks of the eye, but need no description in these articles. The most common form is known as Senile cataract, occurring in old persons. The causes are not very well understood, therefore, prevention is somewhat unsatisfactory. There are cases, however, where some part of it can be prevented and some remedied, especially those engaged in hot occupations such as working in glaring sunlight, dust and dirt, and too long exposure to Ultra-violet rays. Glass blowers are susceptible to this condition, which is believed to be due to the heat on the cornea and the lens. Diabetics are also subject to this condition. Hereditary cataract occurs in several different forms and is inclined to remain stationary. In such cases, complications may occur, such as poisoning from certain toxic substances, glaucoma, diseases of the retina or Uveal tract, tumors, etc.

According to some authorities, such as Bateson, and others, cataracts are hereditary, and may run in families, occasionally skipping a generation. It should not be forgotten that certain constitutional diseases predispose to cataract, such as diseases of the vascular system, and Bright's disease; and that flashes of electricity, or intense heat from glowing coals or light, or molten glass, may also cause it.

Hygiene of the Eyes

Eyestrain is nothing more than fatigue and is usually found in persons who accustom their eyes to close work or in those who have had a protracted or severe illness. It is not a cause of organic disease, but may aggravate it. The symptoms are varied—some cases scarcely showing any trouble at all, while some are complicated with a general irritation of the eyes, and stys. The most common symptom is headache, while in others the only symptom presented is a blurring of the print, occasional double-vision, or restricted distant vision. Some people are peculiarly susceptible to this condition, especially those of nervous temperament. I have witnessed many cases of severe digestive disturbances. Persons, thus attacked, are easily affected by car-sickness, dizziness, twitching of the muscles, or spasmodic movements of the head. The prevention of eyestrain is avoided by not reading or working in a dim or flickering light, or a glaring light. The right kind of illumination and the proper correction of the defect with glasses, is the proper treatment.

If the world is beautiful in its vastness it is because it is first beautiful in its details. Majestic mountains are composed of grains of sand. Heaving oceans consist of drops of water. The great artist presents the gallery with an inspiring canvas. He could not do this, with all his genius, without the pigments and brushes manufactured by the skill of the manufacturers. The great author gives the reading public a treatise on some important subject. He could not do this without the able aid of the printer and the proofreader and binder and publisher. Every business, trade, profession, calling, vocation is dependent, each upon the other. Life is a matter of interrelationships, mutual dependencies, helpful cooperations and coordinating principles.—Richard Braunstein, in Church Management.

Under this heading we shall be glad to receive and publish articles and letters of interest to our readers on the doctrine and work of the church. Writers are responsible for their own views. Other views on subjects discussed here will be received if of sufficient interest.

The Urim and Thummim

By J. W. A. Bailey

One of the most wonderful, and mysterious things possessed by the presiding high priests and seers in olden times, and also at the restoration of the gospel in our day, is the divine instrument called the Urim and Thummim.

There are several things connected with the history and use of the Urim and Thummim that can not be fully explained, yet from the bits of history and tradition we do have of it, we have much to support the account given of it by those who were directly connected with the Latter Day Restoration, 1827-1830.

It is very evident from the history we have of this holy instrument, that it is one of the greatest symbols of the Christ.

Because of it being held sacred, and the views the Jewish prophets had concerning such great matters, especially those things that have to do with the name of God, may explain why we have so brief account and description of it.

1.—Definition

"In Israel the development of a strict monotheism necessarily modified the conception of the Urim and Thummim. No description of them is found in the Old Testament." (Jewish Encyclopedia, volume 12, page 385.)

The definition of the Urim and Thummim supports the idea that it is a symbol of the Christ.

The following quotations are taken from a few of the best authorities on the subject as to its definition.

"The LXX translates Urim and Thummim by 'light and truth.'" (Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 937.)

"The ancient [Septuagint] interpretation of the Urim and Thummim as signifying light and truth." (Cyclopedia Biblical and Ecclesiastical Literature, by Clintock and Strong.)

"Urim and Thummim conjointly signified the light of truth or divine inspiration." (Theocratic Philosophy of Freemasonry, page 10.)

"The most generally received interpretation is light and truth." (Mackey's History of Freemasonry, page 968.)

The apostles and prophets designated the Christ by the terms, "light and truth."

John, speaking of him, said, "He was the true light, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1: 9.)

John said that he was sent to bear witness of that Light.

Jesus, speaking of himself, said, "I am the light of the world." (John 8: 12.)

Again, Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14: 6.)

Saint John says, "God is light," and Moses says, "He is our rock." (John 1: 5; Deuteronomy 32: 4.)

In the Doctrine and Covenants, Jesus says, "I am the Spirit of truth," and again, "The glory of God is intelligence, or light and truth." (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4, 5, 6.)

How wonderful are the above statements. Jesus Christ was and is the true light, the perfect manifestation of God. "Light and truth," manifested in flesh.

So was light and truth manifested (revealed) through the Urim and Thummim, the symbol of Christ.

The Catholic Encyclopedia has this to say on this point: "It belonged to the high priest to manifest the divine will made known to him by the means of the Urim and Thummim." (Volume 12, page 408.)

George Oliver, D. D., has this to say, "The Pectoral of the high priest was enlightened by the Urim and Thummim, in the same manner [only inferior, perhaps in degrees] as the Shekinah illuminated the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of Holies. Hence the high priest was sometimes honored with the Divine Word, and truly, for he was the substitute and type of the Messiah." (Theocratic Philosophy of Freemasonry, page 10.)

"Archbishop Tenison asserts that the Shekinah or light was Christ." (Ibid., page 10.)

Doctor Oliver has this to say on this important point: "The Urim and Thummim, the vital spark, represents Christ." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 365.)

2.—Were There More Than One Urim and Thummim?

There are those who are of the opinion that there were two sets of the Urim and Thummim; that God gave one set to the brother of Jared about 2230 B. C., and that he gave another set to Moses about 1491 B. C.

For the lack of a complete history concerning this divine instrument, this point is one of the mysteries connected with it.

The writer is of the opinion that there was but one set of the Urim and Thummim, and that it was transferred from one country to another by the power of God.

The Book of Mormon says, "These things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation and they have been kept, and preserved by the hand of the Lord." (Page 291: 19, 20.)

To me, the statement, "prepared from the beginning," means from the Creation, and not from the time God gave them unto the brother of Jared.

Doctor Oliver quotes Willett as saying, "The Urim and Thummim were written in some precious matter, not made by art, but prepared of God, and given to Moses, who put them within the breastplate." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 369.)

But Oliver quotes Michael as saying, "That he was of the opinion that the Urim and Thummim were had before Moses." (Ibid., volume 2, page 369.)

The Jewish Encyclopedia has this to say on this point: "The Urim and Thummim are mentioned as something familiar to both Moses and the people. An inheritance received from the time of their ancestors." (Volume 12, page 385.)

Doctor Sanford says, "They are introduced into Exodus without explanation, as if familiar to the Israelites of that day." (Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, pages 937, 938.)

Henry H. Willman, D. D., has this to say on the matter, "In the breastplate was placed the mysterious Urim and Thummim, the nature of which was so well known to the Jews as to require no explanation." (History of the Jews, volume 1, page 192.)

From the above we notice several important things concerning the Urim and Thummim:

- That they were made of some precious matter.
- That they were not made by art.
- That they were prepared of God.
- That they were had before Moses.
- That they came down by inheritance.

Yes! They were two diamonds, prepared from the beginning, and given to man by the Lord. They were handed down from generation to generation, by the will and power of God.

There were about three hundred and nine years from the time God gave the Urim and Thummim to the brother of Jared, and the call of Abraham, and four hundred thirty years later when Moses was commanded to put them within the breastplate of judgment.

If they were mounted before being thus mentioned in the days of Mosiah, we have no record of it. They are referred to in Jaredite and Israelite history, only as two stones.

Doctor Sanford says, "Some scholars suppose that they were the twelve stones of the breastplate; others that they were two additional stones, concealed in its folds." (Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 938.)

The Jewish Encyclopedia has this to say in regard to the number, "The Old Testament account of the Urim and Thummim indicates that they were two (only two) objects." (Volume 12, page 385.)

3.—Manner of Using the Urim and Thummim

Oliver says, "The Urim and Thummim were certainly some tangible substance, which was placed in the doublings of the Pectoral, as in a purse or pocket, by which responses were vouchsafed to the wearer of the Ephod." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 365.)

The Catholic Encyclopedia says, "Oracles were vouchsafed to the Hebrews by means of the Urim and Thummim, which are to be connected with the Ephod. They were not merely pebbles, black and white, for besides answering yes or no, they could refuse answer altogether." (Volume 11, page 265.)

William B. Smith said, "That Joseph Smith always used the Urim and Thummim in connection with the breastplate when receiving official communications." (Rod of Iron, volume 1, number 3, page 6.)

Lindo the Jew gives this statement as to the manner of their use, "As some persons may be curious to know how the inanimate stones of the breastplate could predict by the Urim and Thummim the will of the Omnipotent, the following tradition of our sages fully explains it: When any particular tribe was indicated, the stone bearing its name shone with extraordinary and unusual luster, and the decision was pointed out by the letter of the alphabet forming. It protruded in a manner visible to all present." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 371.)

4.—The Urim and Thummim on This Continent

The first account we have of the Interpreters, or the Urim and Thummim, used by the people who lived on this continent, was when they were given unto the brother of Jared, about 2230 B. C.

Moroni, writing from the record of Ether, gives this account of the record that the Lord commanded the brother of Jared to write, and the two stones He gave unto him.

"Ye shall write them and seal them up, that no one can interpret them; for ye shall write them in a language that they can not be read. And behold, these two stones I will give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things which I have confounded; wherefore I will cause in mine own due time that these stones shall magnify to the eyes of men these things which ye shall write." (Book of Mormon 722: 87-89.)

We notice from the above, that God commanded the brother of Jared to write, and to write in the language that was confounded—the Adamic language—and he was commanded to seal up the two stones with the things he wrote.

If the term "seal up," as used here by Ether, always means to bury or hide up in the earth, then how was it that the Urim and Thummim were not with the twenty-four gold plates when found by King Limhi's party?

By a careful reading of the account, we see that King Mosiah had the Urim and Thummim before he ever met Limhi. (Book of Mormon 270: 166-170; 232: 60-73.)

The term "seal up," as used by Ether, must be interpreted in the same way as we have to interpret it as used in the Book of Mormon on page 151, verse 144. Here Joseph Smith, who is referred to, was commanded to seal up the book (record) and hide it up again. Yet we are told by Joseph Smith himself in the Church History, volume 1, page 13, that he turned the plates and the Urim and Thummim over to the messenger who called for them. David Whitmer told the same story.

This explains how they have been kept and preserved by the power of God. The record says, "They were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages; and have been kept by the hand of the Lord, that he should discover to every creature who should possess the land, the iniquities and abominations of the people." (Book of Mormon 291: 18-20.)

Urim and Thummim—The term "from the beginning" as used in Book of Mormon 291: 19, evidently means from the days of Adam, as will be readily seen by reading the following references: Matthew 19: 8; Book of Mormon 8: 82, 83; 15: 158-160; 437: 32; 714: 3, 4; 721: 80; 733: 89; 734: 93, and many other such references.

There are those who are of the opinion that the Urim and Thummim were not had in the days of Adam, because they were all of one language, and there was no need for them, but when we examine this idea we find that it won't stand the test.

The brother of Jared did not need the Urim and Thummim to translate or interpret the language, for he wrote his own record in the same language that they had from the beginning. (Book of Mormon 722: 89.)

But this wonderful instrument was used for other purposes than to interpret languages. It was used by the presiding high priest to discover who were worthy to possess the land (Zion), to discover the iniquities and abominations among the people, as we will see by reading the following references: Book of Mormon 291: 20; 440: 55, 56; 733: 89-93.

From the foregoing references we see that the brother of Jared, and others needed the Urim and Thummim to discover the works of darkness of a murderous black-hand society that was operating among the people.

This society of anarchists, thieves, murderers, and hijackers came down from the days of Cain. (Genesis 5: 16, Inspired Translation.)

If ever anyone would have needed the Urim and Thummim to discover such evils, it was Adam, who lived at the beginning, the time this society was organized.

The Urim and Thummim were used to discover the sins of the people. (Old Testament Learners, page 480.)

The Urim and Thummim were used for other purposes than for interpreting languages. They were used to receive revelations, to settle difficult questions that arose among the priesthood, and for other matters. Joseph the Seer used them for similar purposes—he used them to give warning as to the safety of the plates, etc.

I believe the day will come when the Urim and Thummim will come forth with the rest of the records, and will be used not only to translate those records, but to reveal the worthy from the unworthy in Zion.

For reasons better known to the Lord than to us, there are several big historical gaps between the times of the different prophets who are mentioned as having the Urim and Thummim.

Based upon the statement, that the Urim and Thummim "came down from the beginning," and other historical data, I believe that God gave them to Adam, the first man, and first presiding high priest on earth. They were not only useful for the purpose already mentioned, but they were the great symbol of the Christ; and the jewel of the office of high priest. (See Deuteronomy 33: 8.)

I further believe in that this Divine instrument was had in every time and place the gospel had to be restored except the time the Son of God himself restored the gospel.

If the Urim and Thummim did not come down to Mosiah through the prophets from Lehi, as may be inferred from these references (Book of Mormon 207: 7; 291: 19, 20; 292: 1, 2; 233: 81, 83), then the Lord evidently gave them to Mosiah, or to Benjamin; and from that date they were handed down to Moroni, who hid them in the State of New York, where Joseph Smith obtained them in 1827, by the will of God.

It was the same Urim and Thummim, had by the brother of Jared, that Joseph Smith obtained. (Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.)

There is not any evidence that Ether who lived sixteen hundred years, (or more,) after the death of the brother of Jared, ever had the Urim and Thummim.

They were in the hands of Moses before the days of Ether and besides, they were not with the plates of Ether when found by the people of Limhi. (See Book of Mormon 759: 108; 232: 60-64, 69-73; 270: 166-170; 291: 14-22.)

If Lehi did bring them with him, then we are sure that Ether did not hide them up, for Lehi was here before Coriantumr was found by the people of Zarahemla. (See Book of Mormon 752: 21-23; 759: 103-108; 202: 37.)

5.—The Urim and Thummim Were Lost to Israel Between 1004 and 786 B. C.

Whosoever were commanded to use the Urim and Thummim, the same was called a seer. (Book of Mormon 233: 73-77.) However, some prophets have been called seers, that did not possess the Urim and Thummim. Peter (John 1: 42), and others.

The prophet Amos is the last seer mentioned in the Old Testament. (Amos 7: 12.)

Doctor Hastings says, "According to the Rabbis, the Urim and Thummim lasted until the Temple; the Spirit of Prophecy until Malachi; and the Bath-Kol, as the sole means of guidance from that time downward." (History of Bible Dictionary, volume 4, page 828.)

The Jewish Encyclopedia has this to say about the matter: "Tradition is unanimous in stating that the use of the Urim and Thummim ceased with the destruction of the first temple." (Volume 12, page 385.)

"The Post-exile Israel had neither the sacred breastplate nor the Urim and Thummim. Ezra 2: 63 contradicts the assertion of Josephus." (Jewish Encyclopedia, volume 12, page 384.)

About 536 B. C., a question as to who were entitled to officiate in the priesthood came up, and they made a search for the genealogical record, and the Urim and Thummim, but they were not to be found. They were lost. (See Ezra 2: 62, 63; also Nehemiah 7: 64, 65.)

While there is not any account of it, yet Lehi could have obtained the Urim and Thummim connecting the following references from the Book of Mormon, 7: 61; 14: 158-168; with the statements of Ezra, and Nehemiah, it seems quite evident that Lehi did get this genealogical record.

6.—The Urim and Thummim Contained the Memorial or Sacred Name

It is quite evident from the following statements, that the loss of the Urim and Thummim is what has given rise to the saying: "The Memorial or Sacred Name has been lost."

"It belongs to the high priest to manifest the Divine will made known to him by the means of the Urim and Thummim." (Catholic Encyclopedia, volume 11, page 265.)

The Pectoral of the high priest was enlightened by the Urim and Thummim in the same manner as the Shekinah illuminated the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of Holies. Hence the high priest was sometimes honored with the title of the Divine Word." (Theocratic Philosophy of Freemasonry, page 10.)

Doctor Oliver says, "The Urim and Thummim, the vital spark, represents Christ." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 365.)

Doctor Hastings says, "A favorite explanation of the Jewish writers, reaching back to the Jerusalem Targum [Pseudo Jonathan on Exodus 28: 30] was to the effect that the Urim and Thummim contained the Sacred Tetragrammaton." (Hasting's Bible Dictionary, volume 4, page 841.)

Here is what the Jewish Encyclopedia has to say on this important point, "The teachers of the Talmud, however, if their own statements may be believed, had never seen the Urim and Thummim, but regarded them as the 'Great and holy name of God.'" (Volume 12, page 386.)

7.—What the Urim and Thummim Were Composed Of Doctor Oliver, quoting Willett, says, "The Urim and Thummim were written in some precious matter, not made by art, but prepared of God." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 369.)

The above statement is in perfect harmony with that which is found in the Book of Mormon, 291:19, where it says, "These things were prepared from the beginning." Also in harmony with the history of Lucy Smith, wherein she says they were "two smooth three-cornered diamonds." We will give her statement in full further on in this article.

Doctor Oliver said, that "Saint Epiphanius wrote that the Chief Priest of Israel wore a diamond when he entered the Sanctuary on three grand festivals of the year. This stone shone with the brilliance of snow when announcing an auspicious event."

He further says, "Here is found the altered tradition of the Urim and Thummim." (Historical Landmarks, volume 2, page 366.)

Though Saint Epiphanius did speak of the Urim and Thummim, in the singular term, that does not disprove the statements of those who said they consisted of two stones. Notice that Doctor Oliver said that this statement of Saint Epiphanius is an altered tradition of the Urim and Thummim.

One of the Book of Mormon writers, also David Whitmer, referred to the Urim and Thummim as a stone. (Book of Mormon 440:55, 56; and Parsons' Test Book, page 215.)

The Jewish Encyclopedia says, "The Old Testament account of the Urim and Thummim indicates that they were two [only two] objects." (Volume 12, page 385.)

8.—The Account of the Urim and Thummim in Our Time

The following is what William B. Smith had to say about the Urim and Thummim in an interview with J. W. Peterson:

"The Urim and Thummim were set in a double silver bow which was twisted into the shape of the figure eight, and the two stones were placed literally between the two rims of the bow. At one end was attached a rod which was connected with the outer edge of the right shoulder of the breastplate. By pressing the head a little forward, the rod held the Urim and Thummim before the eyes much like a pair of spectacles. A pocket was prepared in the breastplate on the left side, immediately over the heart. When not in use the Urim and Thummim was placed in the pocket, the rod being of just the right length to allow it to be so deposited. This instrument could, however, be detached from the breastplate, and that Joseph often wore it detached when away from home, but always used it in connection with the breastplate when receiving official communications, and usually so when translating, as it permitted him to have both hands free to touch the plates. The instruments were too wide for Joseph's eyes, they must have been used by much larger men. Sometimes Joseph resorted to the plan of covering his eyes with a hat to exclude the light in part to prevent eye strain." (Rod of Iron, volume 1, number 3, page 6.)

There are several interesting points in the above statement concerning the Urim and Thummim that I wish to call the reader's attention to. He says they were placed in a pocket over the heart, and when receiving official communications, they were used in connection with the breastplate.

Philo said, "The Urim and Thummim are objects which were found in a pocket attached to the high-priestly ephod." (Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 108.)

Doctor Oliver said, "The Urim and Thummim were placed in a purse or pocket in the Pectoral."

Moses says, the Urim and Thummim were to be put in the breastplate of judgment, and were to be worn upon Aaron's heart.

The Catholic Encyclopedia says, they were to be worn connected with the ephod.

There is another point in the statement of W. B. Smith I wish to refer to. That is, he said, that Joseph covered his eyes sometimes with his hat. This is evidently what has given rise to unfriendly criticism; that he used a peep-stone in his hat, etc.

Here is a statement found in a little book entitled, Cæsar's Court. It says, "The High Priest was closely veiled when he used the Urim and Thummim." (Page 28.)

9.—Lucy Smith's Account of the Urim and Thummim

I will now present the statement of Lucy Smith concerning the Urim and Thummim. She was the mother of Joseph the Seer, and had seen this wonderful instrument.

She says they were "two smooth three-cornered diamonds set in glass, and the glasses were set in silver bows, which were connected with each other in much the same way as old-fashioned spectacles." (Joseph Smith and his Progenitors, page 116.)

The reader will recall that Doctor Oliver quoted Willett and Saint Epiphanius as says the Urim and Thummim were composed of some precious matter. A diamond.

Besides Lucy Smith's statement that the Urim and Thummim were composed of diamonds set in glass, she described the shape of the stones, which is one of the most wonderful things yet stated concerning them. Two smooth three-cornered diamonds.

Two smooth three-cornered diamonds, are triangles. Two triangles placed together form the "Six Point Star," an emblem that has been used for ages, and is still used to represent God; also to represent spirit and matter united.

The six-pointed star, composed of two interlocking triangles, was the Shield of David, the national seal of Israel. And the Jews use it even to this day.

The Six Point Star, like the Urim and Thummim, has come down to us from the Chosen Family, to whom God revealed his will.

Even though some of the heathen nations used this emblem, that is not proof that it originated with them, as some have supposed. This, like many other things, the heathen have borrowed from the birthright family, and in most cases have perverted their true meaning.

Hubert Howe Bancroft, the famous American historian, made the following statement, that bears on this subject:

"The Semitic family alone were civilized from the beginning. A peculiar people, constantly upheld by a special act of Providence from falling into Paganism. They alone possessed a true knowledge of the mystery of creation." (Native Races, volume 1, pages 5, 6.)

How wonderful is the above statement, "The Semitic family alone were civilized from the beginning;" the same beginning when God gave unto this family the great Urim and Thummim, one of the great means whereby they obtained this true knowledge of the great mysteries.

Yes! Adam and his son Seth, and the great prophets of that line, had the wonderful Urim and Thummim, and by its use received a knowledge of the kingdom of God.

Supplement

The following may serve to explain how the "Six Point Star" came into use as a sacred emblem.

In the Ten Commandments, Israel were commanded, "Not to make any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in the heaven above, or that is in the earth, or that is in the waters under the earth," to worship, or to represent God.

The Urim and Thummim being too sacred for public use, Israel used the Six Point Star as a substitute for their national symbol of God, and at the same time be in keeping with the Ten Commandments.

The Urim and Thummim being the first and greatest emblem in the world, it would be only natural that other emblems would originate from it.

The Triangle which represents one or both of the diamonds of the Urim and Thummim, has been, and is now regarded by many people as a symbol that represents God.

To this day the Jews use the Triangle on their (imitation) Ark of the Covenant.

The fathers of the American Constitution, who were inspired of God for their work (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10) placed the Triangle with the "All Seeing Eye" in it, over the Great Pyramid for the "Cap Stone."

This is what is known as the "Reverse" of the Great Seal of the United States.

The same inspired men placed thirteen stars in the form of a Six Point Star over the Eagle, with a glory around it.

This is the "Obverse" of the Great American Seal.

The center star of this constellation serves the same purpose as the "Eye" in the Triangle, or as the obtuse angle in the Six Point Star, or as the "G" in the Masonic Square and Compass.

How strange, yet how harmonious are these acts. The American fathers, who were of the blood of Israel, using the same great symbols on their National Seal, to represent their fidelity to the God of Israel. (See United States Government History of the United States Seal, pages 9, 10.)

The Urim and Thummim represent Christ, who is "light and truth," and the Six Point Star represents the six principles of eternal truth, which emanated from that "Great Light and Truth."

There is a saying that facts are stranger than fiction, and so they are in this case. Three of the most wonderful organizations: the Jews, the Masonic Order, and the United States of America, all using symbols which are of one origin.

Yes, these three groups are all composed of, or nearly so, of one blood; the Semitic family, who have always been, and always will be, the custodian of the holy things that pertain to the kingdom of God here on earth.

How great are the mysteries of God. His ways are past finding out.

Summary

They were prepared from the beginning. Days of Adam. (Book of Mormon 291: 19.)

They were not made by art, but prepared of God. (Landmarks, volume 2, page 369.)

They were handed down from generation to generation. (Book of Mormon 291: 19.)

They were given to the brother of Jared, shortly after the dispersion from Babel. About 2230 B. C. (Book of Mormon 722: 88.)

Brother of Jared was commanded to seal them up with his record. (Book of Mormon 722: 88; 723: 92, 93.)

They were kept and preserved by the hand of God. (Book of Mormon 291: 20; 207: 7.)

They were tangible substance. Made of precious matter. (Landmarks, volume 2, page 365, 369.)

They were two smooth three-cornered diamonds. (Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, page 116.)

In 1391 B. C., seven hundred and thirty-nine years after the brother of Jared had them, or eight hundred and sixty years before Ether hid his record, Moses was commanded to put them in the breastplate of judgment. (Exodus 28: 30.)

They were lost to Israel at the time of, or shortly after the building of the first Temple. (Jewish Encyclopedia, volume 12, page 385.)

They could not be found in the days of Ezra—536 B. C. (Ezra 2: 62, 63.)

Lehi may have obtained them with the records, or direct from the Lord. (Book of Mormon 207: 4-7; 292: 2.)

They were not with the twenty-four gold plates found by Limhi. (Book of Mormon 232: 72, 73; 270: 166-170; 291: 14-16.)

They were two stones. (Book of Mormon 722: 88; 723: 93.)

They are mentioned as two stones fastened in a bow. (Book of Mormon 291: 18.)

They were two smooth three-cornered diamonds set in glass, glasses set in a silver bow. (Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, page 116.)

They were handed down from Mosiah to Moroni, who hid them where they were obtained by Joseph Smith. (Book of Mormon 723: 97-99; 725: 1; Church History, volume 1, pages 12, 13.)

They were the same Urim and Thummim had by the brother of Jared. (Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.)

They were hid up (returned to the angel) by Joseph Smith. (Book of Mormon 150: 141-144; Church History, volume 1, page 13.)

Uses of Obstacles

Nature, when she adds difficulties, adds brains.—Emerson.

Many men owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.—Spurgeon.

"Adversity is the prosperity of the great."

"Kites rise against, not with the wind."

The secret of happiness is not doing what one likes, but liking what one has to do.—James M. Barrie.

The task of abolishing war is not to be achieved by efforts directed primarily to abolishing war. Fundamentally the task is not to abolish but to create; and that which must be created is nothing less than a different world community, a changed international order. Such an undertaking can not be left merely to the statesmen. They could not, if they would, create a new world community, unless the people themselves want it and are prepared for it. And if that be true, it follows that in the long run the objective of the peace movement must be not governments but peoples, not a limited body of officials, but the general public. The problem of abolishing war is at bottom a problem of educating the great body of citizens of this and other nations. It is a task of nation-wide and world-wide education. The pupils of the peace movement will have to be numbered, not by the hundreds or the thousands, but by the millions. An international outlook must become as prevalent among the general population as is reading and writing.—Edward W. Evans, "If the Peace Movement Is to Succeed," Federal Council Bulletin, March, 1931.

There is no indication that the march of science has undermined religion, and it certainly should not undermine any religion which is capable of adapting itself to new conditions and keep in step with the march of progress. Any other sort of religion probably should be undermined.

The primary idea in religion lies in the single word "ought," the sense of duty being beneath all religion, while what is duty, i. e., what particular line of conduct is actually best for society as a whole, must be determined by science. In other words, this is a question of knowledge or intelligence, rather than of conscience.—Doctor Robert A. Millikan, in Science and Religion.

Gloucester, England

Gloucester Branch is striving to maintain its standard in the church. For quite a while it has not had the use of a meeting room, but through the generosity of the Saints, it has never been denied the privilege of meeting. The branch has for its pastor Bishop A. T. Trapp, and for assistant pastor Elder E. Meadows, who also labors in the office of branch priest.

The new plan of Religious Education, which was adopted some time ago, has proved a great success. Sister E. L. Jarvis has been the supervisor since its inception here, and is appreciated as a worthy and capable leader.

Gloucester is a small cathedral city where tradition abounds, and it is a hard task to convince people of the truth of this work, but we have been told by the voice of inspiration that God will raise up a people here, and we know his promises are sure. The Saints are being wonderfully blessed. Fellowship meetings are held weekly, and there they testify to the many blessings received from a loving Father. Our experiences prove that this is God's church and that he is still with his people. Many times we have been encouraged by the spirit of prophecy, and we know the church will come through victorious in spite of financial depression and other difficulties.

The priesthood always has a special interest in the faith and prayers of every branch member because we sense their responsibility. We shall continue to pray that God will direct their every activity. May the work go forward, the Saints come up higher, and Zion become more firmly established, is the fervent desire of the Gloucester Saints.

Graceland News

Two Chapel Programs

Monday morning, February 22, the chapel was filled with Graceland students and instructors assembled to commemorate the birthday of George Washington. As each entered the room which has been so adequately described by Brother F. M. McDowell as "a storehouse of spiritual values," the first thing to meet his gaze was a large picture of America's first citizen. Part of the portrait was painted in white, making a sharp but pleasing contrast with the dark blue curtains of the stage which served as its background. Directly below the picture stood the radio, and strains of patriotic music broadcasted from the national capitol, filled the room. At eleven o'clock President Hoover's nation-wide address was received, followed by "The Star Spangled Banner." In accord with the spirit of the day, the chapel program was continued by instructive and enjoyable talks, readings, and music by our own students. Graceland with the rest of the world paused on this two hundredth anniversary to pay a sincere tribute to the Father of our Country.

Two Graceland instructors, Mrs. Eugene E. Closson and Mr. A. R. Gilbert, both of the physical education department, recently gave practical and interesting lectures in the chapel. Mrs. Closson, with the aid of lantern slides, gave an instructive talk concerning posture. She showed the correct standing, walking, and sitting postures, and told how they assist greatly in maintaining a healthful tone throughout the entire body. She also pointed out that incorrect posture produces a host of harmful effects in the general feeling of the individual, as well as detracting from his personal appearance.

In his lecture Mr. Gilbert showed slides of the various sleeping positions of a healthy individual, demonstrating that a sleeper changes his position many times during the night to relax and rest all the muscles of the body. Many students resolved to take these lectures seriously by attempting to correct both their waking and sleeping postures.

Graceland Scores High in Psychology Tests

Reports from the State University of Iowa show that there are six classes at the university and ten junior colleges throughout the State that are working under the sea-shore project method of studying psychology. Of the seven hundred students enrolled under this plan, sixty-eight of them are attending Graceland. There are no freshmen taking psychology at the university; half of the students there are sophomores and the rest are juniors, seniors, and graduate students. In Graceland seventy per cent are freshmen and the rest are sophomores. But in spite of this difference Graceland has had one fifth of all the high scores made in the standardized tests even though she has only one tenth of all the students participating. In other words she has had twice as many of the highest grades as would normally fall to her lot.

In comparison with the ten other junior colleges participating, Graceland has had one third of all the high scores with one tenth of the students, or three times as many of the highest grades as she should normally have. In the four tests that have already been taken this year none of the ten junior colleges have had a higher score than that made by Graceland.

The head of the psychology department at the University of Iowa, in a letter to Mr. Closson, made this comment: "I was very much pleased to see Graceland scores standing high in comparison with the other schools. This is fine work on which I congratulate both you and your students."

All-college Party

On Friday evening of last week nearly one hundred students and faculty members assembled in Briggs Hall to participate in the first all-college party of the year. The three groups, Financiers, Intellectuals, and Beauties occupied the three large class rooms on the west side of the building where games appropriate to the "occupation" of each group were played. The "Economists" served three kinds of refreshments, candy, peanuts, and popcorn, all for the price of five cents per person with no deficit either in food or funds. Everybody present had a good time and all are looking forward to the next social.

Concerning Our Alumni

The Literary Digest under date of February 13, carries a picture of a former Graceland student, Professor James R. Houghton of Boston University, and a two-page write-up of his recent work with the committee appointed to revise the Methodist Hymnal. The Digest makes this interesting observation: "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," rang out a rich barytone voice. People passing in the street below picked up their heads to listen. 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' sounded above the strident honking of taxicabs. 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul, Let Me to Thy Bosom Fly'—and those who had not gone to church for years hummed the words they had learned in childhood and had not forgotten.

"Time and again the strong voice of Professor James R. Houghton, of Boston University, was lifted in the parlor of a hotel in Pittsburgh. His audience closeted with him listened attentively. They nodded their heads in unison as the old favorites were sung. These must remain in the hymnal. They belong to the world and to time."

After three years at Graceland, Altabelle Willard could not be satisfied to leave school, so she went to Iowa City where she received her bachelor's degree in history. She then entered the school of medicine and this year is graduating from Iowa University with her M. D. At the present time she is an interne in the children's division of the university hospital. Because of her high standing in scholarship, Miss Willard has recently been elected as one of the twelve out of seventy-five who applied for the senior internship in the Bellview hospital in New York. Admission to this hospital is only gained through special examinations and achievements. Miss Willard will take up her work next January, and in the meantime she plans on finishing her course at Iowa followed by a summer camp assignment and special work in a chemical laboratory in New York.

Civic and State responsibility has come to Mrs. J. R. Taylor (formerly Mamie Worland, of Pollard, Alabama,) by her recent appointment as superintendent of the Child Welfare Unit in her section of the State of Alabama. This honor comes following a long period of activity in the educational and social fields in her community, adjoining counties, and state. During the last summer, Mrs. Taylor attended the University of Alabama, specializing in child welfare activities.

The many friends of H. V. Meredith, both in this country and in England will be pleased to learn of the success he is attaining at the State University of Iowa. A letter from Dr. James C. Manry, head of the department of character education in the State University, contains the following paragraph:

"Mr. Meredith is now in his first year of graduate study in this University, majoring in Character Education. He is altogether a very superior student, unexcelled by any student who has been in this department during my connection with it. I look forward to Mr. Meredith's making a very real contribution to education."

The challenge to all Graceland students who are planning to continue their education in higher institutions of learning is found in the example set by these worthy graduates. It may be phrased in this way, Go thou and do likewise.

New London, Connecticut

At the annual business meeting for the election of branch officers, Elder Alma T. Whipple was continued as pastor; Sister Blanche C. Rondomanski, secretary; Sister Sadie Alves, treasurer; Sister Florence Simmons, chorister; Sister Lois Crandall, librarian, who chose Brother Douglas Alves as her assistant; Brother John E. Whipple, church school director. This branch has been facilitated by the new system of combining church and Sunday school supervision which was adopted here last year.

Elder Frank Dobbins and his daughter, Miriam, of Somerville, Massachusetts, were here recently. February 21, Brother Dobbins made another visit. Sunday morning he preached using for a theme, "A Sure Foundation," and many inspired thoughts were presented.

A Valentine party for all departments with a program of games, instrumental and vocal music and refreshments was enjoyed.

An informal dinner party celebrated Washington's birthday. Appropriate readings and recitations were given by the children. A brief dialogue was given by Ruth Slater and John L. Whipple in costume, as Martha and George Washington and including all children present. All were given opportunity to participate in song, with violin, piano, saxophone, and clarinet accompaniment.

Apostle Roy S. Budd is expected here Sunday, February 28, to preach at the morning service.

Kansas City Stake

Thirty delegates were chosen at a special business meeting, held the evening of February 15, to represent this stake at the General Conference of the church, to convene at Independence, April 6. They are: Mrs. Charles A. Allen, Mrs. Laura D. Beebe, Dora Blankenship, Mrs. Fred Brose, Mrs. P. J. Brose, Cora Gerber, Mrs. H. W. Goold, Mrs. R. L. Goold, Mrs. J. A. Harrington, Mrs. Sarah Hawkins, Mrs. O. G. Helm, Mrs. Ida Hidy, Mrs. H. R. Higdon, Mrs. H. A. Higgins, Mrs. H. A. Koehler, E. W. Lloyd, Mrs. Blanche Mesley, George Mesley, Mary Moats, Mrs. William Powell, Mrs. P. J. Raw, Harvey Sandy, C. A. Skinner, Mrs. John Tucker, Frank G. Tuttle, F. L. Waters, Mrs. C. E. Wight, Mrs. Welton Wood, Mrs. J. O. Worden, and Mable Grabske White. The stake membership, which these delegates represent, numbers 3,035, according to the report of the secretary-recorder to the semiannual conference last November.

Other business matters calling for the attention of the stake at this special meeting were the acceptance of the resignations of Elder R. L. Bishop as pastor of Mount Washington Church and of J. Ray Lloyd as pastor of Malvern Hill Church. Brothers W. F. Bolinger and Welton Wood were chosen, respectively, to fill these pastorates. The name of Brother Vernon McCanns was presented for ordination to the office of teacher, approved and the ordination provided for. Brother S. S. Armstrong was elected adult leader at Bennington Church to succeed Talford Shery who resigned. In charge of the meeting were Elders C. D. Jellings and George Mesley of the stake presidency, assisted by Apostle Paul M. Hanson who addressed the conference.

Gladstone Church

Each Sunday evening of February the Saints had the pleasure of hearing a sermon by Elder R. S. Salyards, sr., Special interest was noted among the members and many nonmembers were in attendance. Guest soloists were Mrs. N. B. Baldwin, Mrs. Fred Wamsley, and A. H. Koehler. These added much to the help of local young people.

Elder L. C. Connelly occupied the eleven o'clock hour on February 21 and February 28, with a special series on the Word of Wisdom. He used a chart called "The Human Factory."

Pastor C. A. Selbe and Elder A. R. Moore are again in active service after brief illnesses.

Quindaro Church

The Book of Mormon classes are being taught by Sister Higgins, one at two o'clock each Friday afternoon in the homes of the Saints. This class is well attended and much interest is manifested by the women. Another class is held each Sunday afternoon at five thirty at the church.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood is conducting a Doctrine and Covenants class each Thursday evening at seven thirty at the church.

Beginning Sunday, March 20, a week of pre-Easter services will be conducted by Pastor H. A. Higgins, to close Easter Sunday with baptism.

March 17 a Saint Patrick's dinner will be served in the lower auditorium of the church by the women of the senior division.

Sunday, March 13, at seven forty-five in the evening, Apostle Paul M. Hanson will be the speaker, and the following Sunday evening President F. M. McDowell will occupy the pulpit. The first and second Sunday this month are in charge of the O. B. K's.

Sacrament service Sunday morning was well attended, and a goodly degree of the Spirit was manifested in the prayers and testimonies.

Since the opening of the year, our pulpit has been occupied by Elders Levi Gamet, J. O. Worden, J. E. Vanderwood, and members of the local priesthood.

Sister John Gross who has been seriously ill is improving at her home, and thanks the Saints for their prayers in her behalf. She feels that it is through the mercy of the Father that her life was spared. Others of our sick are convalescing.

Topeka, Kansas

1114 Clay Street

The calendar year for 1931, as it is now recorded in history, is characterized by much that brought perplexing problems to homes, church, state and nation. In our humble place of worship, as a unit of the church, we have had problems, yet the following items mark the trend of our efforts in the attainment of the goal of the church.

The closing of the holiday season will not soon be forgotten. It did not include our activities alone but those of twenty-two young people from a distance. The Chelsea Park young people, of Kansas City, came to Topeka the evening of December 20, with a fine Christmas program. The play, "Mimi Lights the Candle," was especially enjoyed. The junior choir, directed by Jessie Belle Taylor, sang some beautiful anthems, and numbers were rendered by the girls' quartet. Several deserve special credit for the Christmas program, and the branch hopes to have their help at a future date.

The junior department, under the supervision of Sister Fern Weedmark, is enthusiastic in the notebook contest. This lends interest in matters of attendance and searching for materials and pictures. At Christmas the department sponsored a service project, giving the entire school the opportunity to help provide a bushel basket of groceries and other things for a needy family.

A tableau written by Sister Mildred Goodfellow, supervisor of the children's division, was presented December 20, preceding the young people's program. Sisters Weedmark and Happi assisted.

The evening of December 23, was the occasion for a Christmas party for the children at the home of Sister Helen Hays. Games were played, treats given, and gifts exchanged between the children.

The young people, under the supervision of Sister Deller and Sister Sheets, gave the play, "The Most Precious Gift," at the morning service of December 20. This initial dramatic effort on the part of the young is to be commended and encouraged. They have a room equipped for class work.

Sister A. V. Trego, just recently returned from the War Mothers' pilgrimage to France and Germany, gave two interesting lectures the morning and evening of January 24. She has promised to return at a future date and give an illustrated lecture. She was accompanied to Topeka by Lewis Ray and Shirley Wolterman. They were united in marriage at the Weedmark home, January 23, by O. E. Weedmark. Although strangers to this branch, they have our best wishes for a happy life.

Sister G. G. Cadwell recently worshiped with us and accompanied her husband to their home at Independence, Kansas. Brother Cadwell has been transferred to another run on the Missouri Pacific Railroad. O. E. Weedmark and B. F. Deller were placed in charge in his place. Elder Cadwell is a faithful worker wherever he is.

The F. O. Kelley family has the sympathy of the Saints. Brother Kelley's brother, Charles, of Kansas City, lost his wife. This sister and her husband, when visiting the F. O. Kelleys, have worshiped with us.

The prayers of the Saints are offered in behalf of Brother Bootman who is at the Santa Fe Hospital in Topeka for treatment. We trust that soon he will be able to return to his home in Kansas City.

Several young people enjoyed a Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister C. J. Sheets. Special entertainment for the evening was music by Joe Fenolio on his piano-accordion. Refreshments in "heart style" were served.

The B. F. Deller family and Sister C. J. Sheets, accompanied by Dorothy Hirschburger, Ronald Brewster, Harold Crooker, and Homer Wolverton, attended the meeting one evening at the Lemuel Lyster home in Carbondale, Kansas, where Elder W. A. Smith was holding a series of meetings the first of the month. Two special numbers were given by the young people.

District President Dave Little, of Burlingame, held a priesthood meeting February 7, at 2 p. m., in the interest of the work at this point.

We were glad to have the church architect, Henry C. Smith, with us at a recent prayer meeting. He is inspecting the work on the new Federal Government Building here.

The depression has not hindered Cupid in his activities. Wedding bells tell of his work. Two members of this congregation have been principals in wedding ceremonies. Verna Crooker, daughter of Sister A. P. Crooker, became the bride of Mr. Everette Bartleson in a ceremony at her home Saturday afternoon, December 26, solemnized by Elder G. G. Cadwell, assisted by the Reverend O. Glen Crosby of the Christian Church. The music was by Mrs. William Lindaburry. Miss Edna Stanffer, of Lawrence, Kansas, was the bride-maid, and the bridegroom was attended by Mr. Ralph Ward, of Topeka. Little Jimmie Morris, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer. The couple will make Topeka their home.

January 25, L. M. Pitsenberger and Miss Pauline Bivins were married in the evening in Kansas City.

Two surprises were sponsored by the adult division in charge of Sister Hays, assisted by Sister Weedmark. One was a kitchen shower for Sister Bartleson at the Weedmark home February 25; the other a surprise party and the gift of a bridge lamp at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Pitsenberger, Friday evening, February 26.

Dow City, Iowa

Although attendance of late has not been average, due to illness and adverse weather conditions, interest in the work is increasing. This seems very evident since the adoption of the new plan of Religious Education on January 1. The following themes have been used: January 10, "Life and the New Year"; January 17, "God's Great Love"; January 24, "The Appeal of Christ"; January 31, "Faith"; February 7, "Sacrament"; February 14, "Heroic Lives"; February 21, "Loyalty."

The young people's division of the church school presented a pageant, The Light of the World, January 17.

As speaker this year we have had M. O. Meyers, and Guy R. Johnson, of Deloit; E. A. Rosenberger, of Woodbine; Elvin Baughman, of Dunlap; G. A. Gunsolley and W. R. Adams, of Logan, and Fred Baber, of Arion (this branch.)

The young people, chaperoned by Mrs. June Griffin and Miss Zeta Clothier enjoyed a coasting party one evening in January. Each was privileged to take a guest and all enjoyed a lunch in the basement following the party. About thirty-five enjoyed this special recreational activity.

The bicentennial anniversary of the birth of Washington was fittingly observed in our services February 21. A special number was a short pageant, "Making the Flag" Those who have radios enjoy the programs from the Stone Church studios, Independence. Especially are we interested in the efforts of Mrs. Vinnie Hatch and Mrs. Sunshine Beck who received their early religious training in this branch. We would tell them to keep on with their good work, and assure them that their home town is proud of them.

Two young people of this church school, nonmembers, won honors at the local school declamatory contest recently conducted. They are Wayne Riddle and Luella Anderson. The former spoke "Spartacus to the Gladiators," and won first place in the county contest held in Denison, February 18.

This branch has been given an invitation to attend the services in Dunlap which are being conducted by Elder E. Y. Hunker at the Elvin Baughman home.

Independence

Next Monday night the Independence Music Club offers part of its benefits to the public in the form of a combined lecture and musical program at the Stone Church at eight o'clock. "The Study of the Orchestra" is the theme which will be treated, the Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, collaborating with the Music Club. Orchestral selections will be interspersed with lecture items and vocal solos by members of the club. Everyone who is interested in music is invited. A silver offering will be taken during the evening.

Stone Church

Attendance at the Stone Church school is increasing, and the ranks of the absentees are growing smaller. Two Sundays ago the eleven hundred mark was passed, and the classes continue to grow.

"Christ lives, and because he lives, we live," was the reassuring message Apostle E. J. Gleazer brought to the Stone Church congregation at the communion service Sunday morning. Jesus came among men. He lived with men and taught them the way of truth and light, and yet those privileged to hear his words, did not realize their depth and significance. Until after he was crucified and came from the grave, his disciples did not understand the meaning of the covenant. It is so with us; words mean little, but deeds and actions mean much. Christ did not fail his followers in ancient times. He will not fail us now. He is with us. He does indeed live.

Elders H. G. Barto, R. T. Cooper, T. A. Beck, J. S. Kelley, and G. G. Lewis and Bishops G. L. DeLapp and G. W. Eastwood were in charge of the communion service. Assisting them was the large corps of priests who each month faithfully administer the sacrament to the hundreds who come to the table of the Lord. The choir loft was filled with members of the priesthood.

Downstairs more than two hundred boys and girls partook of the emblems of the Lord's Supper at the eleven o'clock junior church service. Elders W. F. Bolinger, David Van Trump, and James Strachan were in charge. Short talks were made by Elder Strachan and Elder S. A. Thiel. The month's theme for the juniors is "Following Jesus."

The junior department deeply regrets to lose the kindly services of Pastor W. F. Bolinger who recently was chosen to act as pastor of Mount Washington Branch, in Kansas City Stake near Independence. Fellow officers of the church school will miss Brother Bolinger's willing assistance, but all of us wish him success in his new work.

Last week enthusiastic comments concerning Brother J. A. Gillen's "wonderful sermons," "spiritually refreshing meetings" and "talks attended by the Spirit," were heard on all sides. On Sunday night he concluded a series of eight sermons with a powerful discourse which urged the Saints to faithful service and loyal attitudes in the gospel.

Beginning a week ago last Sunday evening, Brother Gillen's presentation of conditions in his recent field, the southland—the loyalty of the members and their activities to help the church in this time of crisis—have stimulated the Saints of the center place to new courage and determination. Hundreds of people, old, young, middle-aged, some church members, some who are not church members, are glad that they heard Brother Gillen's sermons last week.

The contributions of the musicians to this week of meetings were deeply appreciated. Guest and local soloists were helpful, and special thanks go to the Central Choir of Kansas City, directed by George Anway, which sang one night, and to the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, which sang the opening and closing nights and once during the week.

Brother George W. Bender, a resident of Independence for fourteen years, passed away at his home early the morning of March 2. He leaves to mourn his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Bender, a daughter, Blanche Bender, a son, Blaine Bender, of the home, and another son, Dwight Bender, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; three sisters: Mrs. Lillian Kent, Peoria, Illinois; Mrs. Rebecca Dean, of Nampa, Idaho; and Mrs. Amanda Reid, of Faithorn, Michigan. The funeral was held from Carson and Son Funeral Chapel, Friday afternoon, in charge of Elder John F. Sheehy, Elder J. A. Vanderwood preaching the sermon. Brother Bender had many friends in this community who extend sympathy to the bereaved family.

Walnut Park Church

The early morning prayer meeting, March 6, was devoted to family groups and was largely attended. Six complete families were represented. A very spiritual service was enjoyed. The church school was in charge of Brother R. Barnhardt.

At the sacrament service a fine talk was given by Elder James W. Davis whose subject was taken from Matthew 6: 19, 20.

The program for the evening session of church school at six o'clock was given by Elder Benjamin Bean's class. It was heard by a crowd of members and friends.

Elder Bean was the speaker at the preaching service which followed. The anthem by the choir was, "In Thee, O God, Do I Put My Trust," the solo being sung by Marian Campbell. Minnie Scott Dobson directed, assisted at the piano by Drexel Mollison.

The Girl Scouts of Troop 10 now have as their lieutenant sister Carroll Olson who is giving them lectures on home nursing. Some weeks ago Troops 49 and 10 were combined under the captaincy of Sister Fritz Oeser, and retained the latter number. The present troop has twenty-eight members, all of them active. A week ago they enjoyed a hike and other outdoor activities.

Enoch Hill Church

Elder C. V. Hopkins occupied the morning hour February 28. Following the anthem by the choir, "Let the Gospel Light Shine Out," he stressed the need of the Saints to follow the gospel law as that is the only way to receive God's blessings. He said, "Let us not pray for the depression to be lifted but for strength to endure."

In the evening Elder F. J. Lewis preached on the theme, "Sir, We Would See Jesus." "What we need today," he stated, "is the ability to see Jesus. It is this which will carry us through times of stress. Christianity is the solution of the depression."

The program period of the church school hour, March 6, was spent in singing hymns selected by the different classes.

Although the weather was very cold, a large crowd attended the sacrament service. In the evening the Saints were glad to have as the speaker Elder W. J. Brewer, a former pastor of this congregation. Elder Brewer recently moved back on the hill.

Englewood Church

Pastor D. S. McNamara chose "Zion" as his subject the morning of February 28, and if the feeling of the pastor is an index to the purposes of the congregation at Englewood, the Saints are ready for any activity along the line of Zion development that the church may offer. Surely the cause of Zion was never more humbly nor more spiritually presented.

Elder C. Ed. Miller began a series of stereopticon talks on the Book of Mormon at 7.30 p. m. to a splendid congregation.

The women's department enjoyed a covered-dish luncheon at noon Wednesday at the home of Sister Christie Hartley. About thirty were there. A kitchen shower surprise for Brother and Sister L. L. Barnett, who recently lost their home by fire, was the feature of the day. A business meeting followed, which resulted in a name for this organization, "The Friendly Circle," and provisions for a trip around the world as a means of raising finances. This project has since been postponed until after General Conference.

The dramatic class met Tuesday at one o'clock in the afternoon with Sister D. S. McNamara. One member, Sister Ben Basset, was not able to be present because of sickness brought on by contact with poison oak while she was working in her garden last week. This is proof of the unusual February we had, a month reported by the Kansas City weather bureau, to be the warmest in history.

President and Sister Elbert A. Smith, Brother Nathaniel Carmichael and wife, and Sister Tordoff, were at the sacrament service Sunday morning. Brother Carmichael offered prayer and Brother Smith spoke encouragingly to the congregation. Prayers were asked for Brother Arthur Welch's sister and Frances Gindhart, daughter of Sister Ida Gindhart.

The choir sang Sunday evening under the direction of the chorister, Sister Arnson. Sister Arnson has been detained at home for several days by illness, but we are glad to see her improved in health and to have her with us.

Far West Stake

Cameron

There was large attendance and a splendid spirit prevailed at our February sacrament service.

The C. S. S. Group held an all-day meeting in the church basement February 11. The time was spent in sewing a quilt for Sister R. D. Ballinger whose home was recently destroyed by fire. A miscellaneous shower was also given her to assist in refurnishing her home. At noon a covered-dish dinner was served. Twenty-three were present.

Through the courtesy of Apostle Paul M. Hanson we enjoyed an illustrated lecture on Thursday evening, February 11, of pictures from the ancient cities of Central America, Mexico, and Peru. A large number of nonmembers listened to this lecture.

The children of the junior department enjoyed a Valentine box in the basement Sunday, February 14. A program, in keeping with Valentine Day, was given by Sister Elsie Butler's class.

The young people hold their regular meetings each Sunday evening at six o'clock under the supervision of their leader, Sister Lottie Daniel. A study period is held. At present lessons from a pamphlet containing "Talks to Young People," by Floyd M. McDowell, are being studied. One game is played at each meeting for recreation.

A play, "The More Abundant Life," was presented at seven thirty o'clock February 21, by this group of young people. Once each month these young folks give us their time and talent in the form of a play that is very worth while. These have been greatly enjoyed and appreciated by all, and we hope that this splendid young group will continue to be actively engaged in the service of their Master.

Saint Joseph Branch

Apostle Paul M. Hanson paid his initial visit to Saint Joseph February 16 and 17. At that time Brother Hanson gave his illustrated lecture at Third and Fourth Churches on Tuesday and Wednesday nights respectively. Large crowds greeted him at each place.

A baptismal service was conducted following the close of the series of pre-baptismal classes held at Third Church. Three persons were baptized.

The O. T. Z.'s had a Valentine party at which the adults were guests. The basement was prettily decorated with hearts and streamers. A stunt program was given by the young people and refreshments were served. Both old and young enjoyed a jolly evening.

The children of the church school were given a Valentine party by their supervisor and teachers on Saturday afternoon, February 13.

The adult division of the church school held their first meeting of the year on Friday, February 26, at the church. A covered-dish dinner was followed by a program. Bishop Milo Burnett was the dinner hour speaker. The program consisted of musical numbers and an illustrated lecture on the Hawaiian Islands by the pastor. An unusually large crowd attended.

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's Beacon Light

The membership of Detroit Branch consists of approximately one thousand, nine hundred people divided somewhat roughly into seven groups. The total financial contribution from all groups for the year, 1931, was $5,883.21.

In a report to the branch business meeting, dated January 12, the branch pastor, J. Charles Mottashed, presented the work of the five groups and two missions, touching upon the activities of the women's department, the department of recreation and expression, the missionaries, the body of priesthood, the music department, welfare activities, branch finances, the junior church, and the Men's League.

Under the leadership of their present officers, Detroit Saints are aware that the larger aspects of the work and the ultimate goal can only be achieved by their whole-hearted cooperation and the submergence of individual opinions for the benefit of the whole. It is axiomatic that as the church belongs to all, then it must be supported by all. Hard work, self-denial, and prayerful living will produce results today as always.

The statistical report for the six months ending December 31, 1931, tells us that the branch has gained by baptism, thirty-six, by transfer twenty-one. Thirty-four have been lost by transfer, and seven have passed away.

The father and son banquet, sponsored by Group 8 of the women's department, was held at First Church, February 12. This event was city-wide, and a splendid program was presented by the Men's League.

The regular mass meeting of the department of women was held Tuesday afternoon, February 9, at First Church. Group 2, under the leadership of Mrs. Mann, furnished the program.

The Men's League, under the leadership of George J. Russell, is having fine meetings. January speakers were interesting. During February the league is enjoying the following: "The Modern Way of Being Neighborly," by Charles F. Campbell, director of the Detroit League of the Handicapped; and "Young America and the Changing Order," by Professor C. A. Fisher of the University of Michigan.

The basket ball league schedule includes games up to February 27. Games are played at the Woodward Baptist Church.

Throughout the branch the musicians have given unstintedly of their time and talent to the success of a variety of church services. Choirs are growing in number and helpfulness.

The Saints have profited by the midweek prayer services, also by the work of an increasing number of the priesthood.

Among those whom death has of late taken from us was fifteen-year-old Genevieve Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown; the seven-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Greunisen; Sister Pearl Irwin, formerly a stanch worker in this branch but who was a resident of Canada at the time of her death; Raymond Ouellette, who passed away December 1, in the Herman Kiefer Hospital of diphtheria, and Lizzie Caswell Porter, who died at the Wyandotte Hospital.

The regular monthly joint church workers' meeting was an enjoyable affair. Elder David Dowker, the guest speaker, gave an inspiring talk on incentive motivating the lives of persons who work with the young. This meeting was held at First Church.

George and Erma Hosler are the parents of a son whom they have named George Williard, jr. The baby was born December 27. On January 2, Mary Edith arrived in the home of James and Mae Nelson.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H. Streets

Much ice and snow cut down church attendance during the month of January. We are looking forward to spring and hoping for renewed effort and activity.

The Saints have experienced considerable sickness, but all are now convalescing.

Sister Blanche Farrar, adult leader of the church school, is planning a full year of activities. With the cooperation of every member, we are sure her plans will put the branch forward.

Sister Hale was again chosen leader of women, Sister Anderson to act as her assistant. Already they are busy with various projects for earning money for the branch and for social uplift.

In our last Lincoln news letter, we failed to mention the splendid Christmas program given December 20, in charge of Esther Shrunck. The children enjoyed a treat from Santa after the program.

The historical playlets scheduled for January were postponed until a later date because of the bad weather.

Missionary Activities in Holden Stake and Clinton District

Since the missionary effort at Clinton, Missouri, where we held services in the Family Theater, I have been engaged in services at Knobnoster and Rich Hill, Missouri.

It was a great pleasure to be associated at Knobnoster with Brother Gomer Wells, and to enjoy the hospitality of Saints and nonmembers. Some of these I had met in other districts in times past. My father and Brother Gomer Well's father labored together in Knobnoster and the surrounding regions thirty to forty years ago. Though they have both gone to their reward, their names were often mentioned while we were at Knobnoster, and it was a happy privilege for us to be thus associated in an endeavor to help carry on the work they have laid down.

At the closing service of the series at Knobnoster, the Warrensburg Saints and friends to the number of forty or more, in response to the invitation of their pastor, Brother Wells, were with us, and we were pleased to see the missionary spirit manifested by all.

My next series of meetings, which has just closed, was held at Rich Hill, Missouri. Fifteen days were spent and sixteen sermons were preached at this point. We sometimes say "the faithful few were on hand," but we are pleased to report that at Rich Hill "the faithful many were on hand" every night. This branch has a band of lively Saints, and fine progress is being made by them. The branch is in charge of the district presidency, Elders Whiting and Murdock. Both the aged and the youth manifest great enthusiasm in all the activities of the branch. We were busily occupied while there, visiting during the day among the Saints and friends, singing songs, and ministering to their needs in every possible way. In these visits I was associated with our congenial brother, Elder Murdock.

The Sunday activities keep them quite busy all day. In the morning at nine thirty they have an impressive devotional service with an attendance of a hundred or so. This is followed by the class period from ten to eleven o'clock, and then the preaching service. For some time, Elder Chase has been giving food lectures in the afternoon to a class of from forty to fifty, then comes the preaching service in the evening.

Including the baptism which took place the closing day of the missionary effort, twelve have already been baptized during the past two months. And with the missionary spirit shown by them during the recent missionary effort, this year bids fair to be a banner year for Rich Hill in many ways.

J. CHARLES MAY.

Delhi, Ontario

The membership at Delhi is small. Nevertheless we are active in the gospel. Our little church building was moved from the country and is now comfortably situated in the village.

This branch more than reached its Christmas offering goal, and the Saints were happy. We were pleased also to capture the Sunday school shield for highest attendance in the district.

Elder William I. Fligg, district missionary, was here for two weeks the first part of last March. He preached from his chart, "The Lord's Vineyard," giving expression to thoughts which encouraged the Saints. He was also here a week following our special all-day meeting last August.

The new church school plan was adopted in Delhi a year ago, also the envelope system of taking collections. These two have proved to be great improvements in church work.

The annual business meeting was held November 29. Elder Clarence Weeks was reelected pastor. This is his eleventh term. Elder Leslie Barham was chosen assistant pastor; church school director, Sister Clarence Weeks; assistant director, Floyd Squires; young people's leader, Brother Sullivan; secretary, Noriene Barham; treasurer, Brother Hoskins; music director, Ruby Wilbur, publicity agent, Brother Sullivan.

Sister Wilbur was in charge of the annual Christmas program, given December 22. February 14 the junior children assisted in a program of which Brother Sullivan had charge. The sermonet was by Brother Hoskins.

A box social will be held March 17. The proceeds will be turned into the building fund.

Sioux City, Iowa

In spite of extremely cold weather the branch has been busy during the past month. Though impassable roads and a scattered membership have somewhat decreased attendance, the interest of those present made profitable the work undertaken.

Two study classes are in session each week in addition to the regular church school. Each Sunday evening at six thirty Missionary C. J. Smith conducts a class on church history. He has made his course most instructive by a detailed presentation of the history of the church made stronger and more conclusive by various corroborative writings outside our own volumes of history. Wednesday evening at seven thirty a class for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants convenes under the auspices of the C. S. S. group of women. Pastor G. M. Vandel is the teacher of this group. Many questions concerning our church government and laws have been cleared up in these classes.

The department of women collected and distributed several baskets of food to needy families at Christmas. The evening of February 2, a group of down-town women met at the home of Sister Vandel for a "quilting bee." The Riverside group of women meets regularly every two weeks for work and a social time. Although few of the women belonging to this group are members of the church, they are valiant in contributing to the needs of the branch. At present they are embroidering blocks for a quilt to be sold for the department. The women of this branch welcome Sister Emmerson and her daughter, Sister Fae Gardner, who are here for a few months. Sister Emmerson recently moved to Sioux City from Pisgah, Iowa, and Sister Gardner is from Independence, where she was actively engaged in young people's work.

In keeping with the custom of the branch and the graduation services of our schools, a commencement service was held for three of our young women graduates the evening of January 24. Pastor G. M. Vandel was in charge. Jeanette Beauchenne, who is graduating from Central High, presented a reading; Marie Johnson, graduating from East High, and Dorothy De Harty, graduating from Central High in June, gave a vocal duet. At the conclusion of the sermon by Brother Vandel, three alumni, Bonnie De Harty, Raymond Smith, and Genevieve Sands, sang "Auld Lang Syne."

Chorister Raymond Smith recently organized a junior choir for the young people.

A sermon series pointing to the definite things required of us, especially with regard to our financial contributions to the church, has been given by Missionary C. J. Smith.

Bellaire, Ohio

Perhaps this branch has been neglectful in the past about making contributions to the Herald, but our faith is not waning; in fact it is increasing. And our desires carry us forward. We shall endeavor to do better work in the future than we have in the past.

February 7 being the first Sunday in the month, our services began with Sunday school at ten o'clock in the morning. At eleven o'clock sacrament service was opened with the blessing of a child. The parents were nonmembers, who had visited the church only once previously. In the social service, the power of God was present to such a degree that it gave strength to all present and filled them with the desire to go forward with the great work. District President William Richards, of Steubenville, was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder David Collins and the branch president, Sebastian Vadala. A short address was given by Brother Collins.

At two thirty two precious souls were brought into the church by baptism, J. T. Wallace and Jackie Riell.

At seven o'clock song service was held in charge of our able and diligent brother, C. S. Rice.

This was followed by a short reading from the Church History, an idea recently initiated which has proved interesting to the Saints.

After this, the two new members were confirmed by the district president, William Richards, and the branch president, Sebastian Vadala. Elder Richards then delivered an appropriate sermon, "The Six Fundamental Principles of the Gospel."

Wells, Michigan

The depression has been felt by the Saints in the district surrounding Wells, but in general the members have fared well. We have done considerable welfare work this winter, have kept in touch with each other to see that none suffered, and have extended help wherever we could.

To meet the spiritual needs of the Saints has imposed considerable traveling on the part of the local ministry. Only the smaller portion of the membership is located near the church. There is a group five miles away, another group seven miles, and yet another nine miles distant from the church. Because many have no means of travel, we have had to carry the work to them and hold meetings for all besides planning special services once in awhile at the church.

We are proud to report every man holding the priesthood active. Our deacon, who for some time has been doing night work and was unable to be out, is now free again and making up for lost time. We have had some special meetings of late at night and invited the local ministry to work with us. One worker helped nearly every night, sometimes walking five miles to keep the appointment.

Most of the time we held cottage meetings, reaching nearly every member who was unable to come to the regular services. Several nonmembers also attended the meetings and we are getting good reports from the effort.

The priesthood is studying and working. And the membership is busy with class work and in departments. The women are doing a commendable work, and a fine group of young people is interested in expression, recreation, and study. With the young Saints are associated several young men and women nonmembers.

A. M. BOOMER.

Fanning, Kansas

The Saints of Fanning Branch held a profitable sacrament service February 7. A great many took part in prayer and testimony to the edification of all present. Elders William Marsh, James A. Thomas, and William Twombly were in charge.

The women of the branch held an all-day social at the home of Sister W. H. Dittmore February 11. A covered-dish luncheon was enjoyed at noon. Quilting, games, and music were features of the day's entertainment.

"God's Way Is the Best Way," was the theme on which Brother Floyd Mortimore spoke at the junior church service Sunday, February 21. Ora June and Florence Mortimore sang a duet number and Sister James A. Thomas told a story to the children which was in harmony with the theme.

The branch held a Washington's birthday party at the home of their pastor, William Twombly, in which old and young were invited to take part. That invitation was so generally responded to that the house was filled. After an enjoyable time at games, the sisters served the luncheon which they had prepared and brought. On the following Thursday night, the young people's class with the teacher, Virgil Sheppard and wife, met at the A. Chesnut home for their monthly social meeting.

Brother Samuel Twombly preached one of his inspiring sermons at the Sunday morning church hour. His subject was Bible or Scripture appreciation and he gave the broad interpretation that the term Bible should cover all the revelations of God to his children everywhere on the earth, from the beginning to the present time. The text used was God's commandment to the church to study all good books, "to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion."

Brother Virgil Sheppard has been delivering a series of missionary sermons on Sunday evenings on the subject, "The New Testament Church." These sermons have been very interesting to those in attendance.

A number of the Saints from Fanning are planning to attend the district conference which is to be held at Neta-waka on March 6.

Cottage Meetings in Deer Grove, Illinois

A cottage meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Burgess, of Deer Grove, Illinois, February 21. Brother C. A. Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, was the speaker. Brother and Sister Burgess are members of Brush Creek Branch.

At this service there was quite an attendance, several nonmembers being present. Meetings will be held in this community the third Sunday in each month.

MISCELLANEOUS

Conferences Notices

The Minnesota district conference will take place March 12 and 13, at the church, Fifth and Queen Avenue, North, Minneapolis, Minnesota. All those desiring reservations, please get in touch with the undersigned.—Wesley Elvin, 3641 Grand Avenue, Minneapolis.

The annual Far West stake conference will be held at Saint Joseph at First Church, 415 North Seventeenth Street, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, March 11, 12, and 13. The conference will open Friday at 7.30 p. m. with an illustrated lecture by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, "The World of Yesterday." Pastoral

To the Membership of Southern Indiana District, Greeting: You will be interested in knowing what is expected of our district for 1932. The Presiding Bishop's office, concerning the general church budget for the present year, gives our quota as $3,200. We learn from the district secretary, Sister Nita A. Ferguson, that our district numbers eight hundred, counting nonresident members, as per reports to the August conference. This gives an average of $4.00 a member for the entire district.

Branches	Enrollment	Quota
Louisville	220	$880
Derby	60	$240
Indianapolis	154	$616
Byrneville	118	$472
Marengo	77	$308
Nonresident	171	$684

For 1931 this district raised a little more than its quota, and we hope it may be the same for 1932. Southern Indiana has been hard hit in many ways, but, with the blessings of God attending, I believe we can raise the desired amount. This will require sacrifice on the part of all. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5: "Behold, now it is called today (until the coming of the Son of Man); and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned, (at his coming); for after today cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, Tomorrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon." Let us all do our best and leave the rest. Remember! "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."—J. O. Dutton, district president, Galva, Illinois.

Conference Minutes

KANSAS CITY STAKE.—The semiannual conference of this stake was held November 16, 1931, at 7.45 p. m., at Central Church, and a special business meeting was held at the above place February 15, 1932. Both sessions were in charge of the counselors to the stake president, Elders C. D. Jellings and George C. Mesley. At the former meeting they were associated with Stake Bishop C. A. Skinner, Apostle John F. Garver, and G. L. DeLapp of the Presiding Bishopric. Prayer was by Apostle Garver. Minutes were read and approved. A message was read from Stake President C. E. Wight, in Oklahoma City. This was full of hope notwithstanding the crisis through which the church is passing. The message of the stake presidency called attention to the action of the Joint Council of the church which has adopted a definite financial program. The secretary-recorder reported a net gain of 75 which brings the total stake membership to 3,035. Since last conference the following men have been ordained: Lyle H. Davis to the office of priest; E. P. Sanders, elder; Don C. Stafford, priest; A. L. Meyers, teacher; Marion Sneed, elder. Reports were received from seventeen high priests, twenty-one elders, fourteen priests, five teachers, and eleven deacons. There were transferred out, 87; transferred in, 127; baptisms, 46; deaths, 11; marriages, 13; divorces, 4; ordinations, 5; license restored, 1; children blessed, 16. A report from Elder W. O. Hands, superintendent of the boys' department showed three Boy Scout Troops with Frank Tuttle in charge at Argentine, and Abe Sears in charge at Chelsea. The report of Elder Arthur Oakman, stake missionary, was read. Brother Oakman's transfer to Saint Louis District was much regretted in this stake. Stake Patriarch John T. Gresty reported a very busy six months. Elder George Mesley, director of Religious Education, reported only one religious week-day school in the stake, that at Malvern Hill Church which was in charge of Sister Florine Hands. Mention was given the stake leadership school which enrolled 249 from fifteen of the sixteen churches of the stake. The president of the O. B. K. Council, Elder George Mesley, cited its various activities for the last six months. The report of the historian and reporter, W. S. Brown, was read. The high council recommended the following ordinations: Elmer J. Moran, priest; Lloyd Siebert, priest, and A. J. James, teacher. All of these were approved and the ordinations were provided for. The resignations of R. L. Bishop as pastor of Mount Washington and J. Ray Lloyd as pastor of Malvern Hill Church were read. The stake presidency was not ready to announce the successors of these brothers and asked the local priesthood of the two churches to carry on. The name of Harley Sampson was presented as director of the young people's division of Bennington Church, and approved. It was recommended that the election of delegates to General Conference not be attempted until a conference to be held in February, 1932. This was so ordered. A recommendation of the stake bishop regarding the conference, approved, and unanimously adopted. A vote of appreciation was given Sister Emma L. Thomas who had so faithfully served for a long period in the stake office. A rising vote of thanks was given and a letter of appreciation was ordered sent to the late stake missionary, Elder Arthur Oakman. A vote of thanks was given Sister Nena Young as local Central correspondent; a rising vote of confidence went to Elder George Mesley, assistant stake president and acting pastor of Central Church; a vote of appreciation and confidence was tendered Bishop C. A. Skinner; Stake President C. E. Wight was also remembered with an expression of appreciation. The conference ordered expressions of assurance and support, spiritual and financial, sent to the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Quorum of Twelve. The benediction was by Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

A special conference was held Monday evening, February 15, at 7.45 p. m. Elders C. D. Jellings and George Mesley of the stake presidency, were in charge, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson was also in the stand. The name of Vernon McCann was presented for ordination to the office of teacher, approved, and ordination provided for. The resignation of Elder R. L. Bishop as pastor of Mount Washington Church, was accepted, and the name of W. F. Bolinger was presented as his successor, and approved. The resignation of Elder J. Ray Lloyd was accepted and Elder Welton Wood was elected his successor at Malvern Hill Church. S. S. Armstrong was elected adult leader at Bennington Church, to succeed Talford Shery who resigned. Apostle Hanson addressed the conference. Delegates elected to General Conference are: Mrs. Charles A. Allen, Mrs. Laura D. Beebe, Dora Blankenship, Mrs. Fred Brose, Mrs. P. J. Brose, Cora Gerber, Mrs. H. W. Goold, Mrs. R. L. Goold, Mrs. J. A. Harrington, Mrs. Sarah Hawkins, Mrs. O. G. Helm, Mrs. Ida Hidy, Mrs. H. R. Higdon, Mrs. H. A. Higgins, Mrs. H. A. Koehler, E. W. Lloyd, Mrs. Blanche Mesley, George Mesley, Mary Moats, Mrs. William Powell, Mrs. P. J. Raw, Harvey Sandy, C. A. Skinner, Mrs. John Tucker, Frank G. Tuttle, F. L. Waters, Mrs. C. E. Wight, Mrs. Welton Wood, Mrs. J. O. Worden, and Mable Grabske White. Those present are to cast the full delegate vote and in case of division a yea and nay vote. Benediction by Apostle Hanson.

Our Departed Ones

STACY.—Mary Katherine Stacy was born March 8, 1881, at Beach Grove, Tennessee. She died February 2, 1932, at Louisville, Kentucky. In April, 1898, she married James Stacy, and to them were born five sons and four daughters. Left to mourn her death are her husband, five sons, four daughters, eight grandchildren, many other relatives, and friends. She was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 30, 1931. Interment was at Louisville in the Evergreen Cemetery. The funeral sermon was by Patriarch F. A. Smith.

HARRISON.—Nina M. Smith was born October 31, 1900, at Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. She became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints February 25, 1917, at Warrensburg, Missouri, being baptized by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. Married O. J. Harrison at Warrensburg, in 1922, and they moved to the State of Washington in 1927, locating at Malott. She passed away early the morning of February 12, 1932. Surviving besides her husband and infant daughter are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Smith, two brothers, Frank and Roy Smith, and one sister, Mrs. Chester McMorriss, all of Paris, Missouri.

CARLILE.—John P. Carlile departed this life Tuesday morning, February 9, 1932, at the home of his daughter near Underwood, Iowa. He was eighty-five years of age and had resided for eighty-one years in the county in which he died. His life won him the respect of the community. He was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for many years, having been baptized in young manhood. Was an active worker in the church, serving in various capacities. At the time of his death he held the office of high priest. For many years he presided over the North Star Branch at Underwood; also presided over the Pottawattamie District and acted as bishop's agent under Bishop E. L. Kelley. He is survived by four sons and four daughters. The funeral services were conducted from the Saints' church in Underwood, February 11, by John A. Hansen, assisted by Nels P. Johnson. Interment was in Walnut Hill Cemetery, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

A Call for Fasting and Prayer

The General Conference of 1932 will assemble in the midst of world events which are believed by many to mark the end of an epoch and the dawn of a new day. Never before has our church faced such a challenge, never such an opportunity. Never before has it stood in greater need of divine direction. Never was it more imperative that both members and leaders alike should daily commune with the Father. The call of the age is for a prophetic church. Will our church answer this call?

The sessions of the various pre-conference councils will be held almost daily from March 21 until the opening of General Conference on April 6. The work of these councils is vital both to the success of the Conference and the onward progress of the church. The members of these councils are keenly aware of the responsibility that is theirs. They need the support of a united membership and the guidance of the heavenly Father. We are therefore suggesting that beginning on March 20 the Saints in their homes and in their places of worship engage in daily periods of prayer on behalf of the work of these preconference councils and that of the General Conference. It will be well that such matters be made the theme of family worship, of each church service and upon other occasions when the Saints are assembled.

We suggest further that this period of daily prayer be continued up to and culminate in an intensive period of fasting and prayer covering the days of April 3, 4, and 5.

Communications have been received from various quarters to indicate that the Saints are keenly conscious of the present crisis in the church and hence will fervently and whole-heartedly respond to this call. We are happy to publish the following which comes to us as the action of the Lamoni Stake High Council. We hereby not only express our appreciation of the sincere and intelligent devotion which has motivated this message but wish to give our hearty approval and official sanction to its contents:

Whereas, the history of the church is replete with instances of great sacrifice, courage, and energy in meeting crises of the past, and

Whereas, there is ample evidence in the present epochal period through which the world and the church are passing to indicate that a crisis threatening the life processes of the church is presented; and that the Saints of this day stand ready, as did the Saints of Kirtland and Nauvoo, to follow the leadership of men consecrated to the church, united by the bond of fellowship and a common purpose, and committed to the will and direction of God, and to demonstrate their devotion and love for the church through sacrificial effort in a project divinely sanctioned in the interest of their church,

Therefore, be it resolved by the Lamoni Stake High Council, That the First Presidency of the church be given this assurance of our support in their prayerful and careful consideration of the possibilities resulting from the pre-conference councils in preparation for the coming General Conference, and urge that a day of fasting and prayer be designated for the membership of the church at large to invoke the presence and direction of God in these councils.

And that the preconference councils endeavor to lay the foundation for the bringing to the people in General Conference assembled the will of God concerning the fundamental problems confronting the church and how the people should move out, in harmony with his will to solve them.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By F. M. McDOWELL.

Notice to the Seventies

Inasmuch as it is anticipated that we will have a short conference this year, and the program for the Seventies calls for considerable study and work, particularly with regard to the functions of the quorums and the status of the members, it is thought advisable that we get together at least two days before conference convenes. Accordingly we are arranging for the Seventies to meet in Joint Session in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church in Independence, at 10.00 a. m., Monday, April 4.

We earnestly desire that as many of the Seventies as can possibly do so will be in attendance, not only those who are now under appointment, but also those who have been released, where possible. Please have your reports in the hands of the secretaries in good time.

There are no common tasks. Tasks are mutual, dependent, related. The teacher is helpless without the student. The expert is impotent without the apprentice. The master needs the disciple. The "Daily Herald" Will Be "Different"

ELDER WARD A. HOUGAS PROMISES A REAL NEWSPAPER

WARD A. HOUGAS

The Conference Daily Herald this year is to be "different," according to the promises of Elder Ward A. Hougas, President of Far West Stake, and an experienced newspaper man.

There will be interesting sketches of news and personalities, flash write-ups of the latest events, as well as the more sober matter of conference business.

The church is fortunate in having secured the services of one who has had extensive experience as a newspaper editor and publisher. At the same time he has spent years of his active life in the service of the church and at present occupies a position of high responsibility. He knows the church work as well as he knows the publishing business.

Perhaps the only other word of introduction that need be said for Brother Hougas is that he is a son of T. A. Hougas, known for so many years for his connection with the church work.

This will undoubtedly be the most important conference in our history. Before the body of delegates and officers this time will come the entire problem of reconstruction of the church program. The Daily Herald will cover this news in a way that can not be duplicated in the weekly Herald. The Daily will be worth far more than the nominal fee that is charged for it.

Questions beseege us on every hand. They leap out from the dark corners of life; they meet us at every turn of the road; they rise up from the open grave. They come early and stay late. Every life is full of unanswered questions that lacerate the heart and baffle the mind. Time, itself a riddle, solves many riddles, but the darkest questions follow us to the end and sail with us on our long journey.—Joseph Fort Newton.

To him who presses on, at each degree new visions rise.—Julia Ward Howe.

How Far Are We on the Road to Damascus?

It was a beautiful way curling among the hills of Palestine, this road to Damascus, and we know that it was a much-traveled way. Let us here compare it to the beautiful and much-traveled road of life. For milestones it has joys and hopes, sorrows and pains, health and success, disappointments and difficulties. The sunshine is sometimes too glaring. The wind buffets us. We need constantly to adjust ourselves to the winding route. Nevertheless, we pursue our way to the Damascus of service and character.

Since we desire pleasant experiences, it seems peculiar that many of us are continually making trouble for ourselves and our friends. We worry needlessly. We speak impulsively saying exactly what we think. We criticize sharply. We have no sense of humor. We pass the word of gossip along the line. We don't do our share of the work, or else we do it in the wrong way. We are anxious, sorrowful, and easily hurt.

Long before we find ourselves in this condition we should read Saul's experience on the road to Damascus. This man was an ardent and zealous worker—but how did he work? Later these are his words to King Agrippa: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." There was a work for Saul to do, a work designed by the mind of God, and he would not see it. The day came when on the road to Damascus, the Lord appeared to him with overwhelming brightness and demanded: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" One statement of Jesus at this time is outstandingly significant. It is a familiar statement, but we can well afford to consider it again. Jesus told Saul: "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks."

Pricks! We, too, who are on the road, find them all along the way—the inconvenience of being poor, ill health, long hours of hard work, haste, gossip, lack of consideration on the part of fellow travelers. And yet, we remember that God has called us his children and sent his Son to us to live and die and be resurrected to a new life. Jesus has designated us as his friends and has trusted us to go forth with his message of love and goodness. Even as we experience the vicissitudes of travel, we know that we must live up to the name of children of God and friends of Christ.

How much complaining and suffering and anxiety we might save ourselves and others, as we move along in life's colorful caravan, if we learned the lesson of not kicking against the pricks! Calmly accepting conditions as they are and then doing our best to improve them, would help us far on our way.

Truly, with us it is as it was with Saul—"It is hard."

There is a mission for each one of us. Our time is not given us to waste kicking against the pricks. Jesus would have us use it more profitably. Must he appear to us on the road and blind us with his glory before we offer ourselves, before we say, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Are we making travel easier? Just how far are we on the road to Damascus?

A Changing Stand on Prohibition

The papers for March 15 are carrying the news of the surprising vote in the House of Representatives in Washington on the Beck-Linthicum resolution, which proposed to return to the states the right to decide whether they desire the return of liquor.

This is regarded as one of the most serious blows that the cause of Prohibition has yet received since the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment in 1917.

Apparently the campaign of ridicule and distortion of fact put on by a great many newspapers of the country, aided by the expensive efforts of the moneyed liquor interests, and encouraged by the loud voices of the thirstier element of our citizens, is at last bearing fruit. At last our fledgling statesmen are receiving their "liquor courage" from the lusty cries of their constituencies.

The growth of the sentiment in favor of liquor in this country may be regarded as a concomitant of the general breakdown of moral values, the loss of conventional restraints, the disrespect for law, and the corruption of politics and government. All these things go together.

The fearful thing is that, once it is demonstrated that a sufficient number of the people of the country want liquor, the members of our national legislative bodies will climb upon the bandwagon of alcohol in increasing numbers.

We suspect that the representatives of the people are not leaders, but followers, and that they will go in whatever direction they see the herd moving.

In the face of this changing situation, what can the Protestant Christian churches do? For they have been the supporters of the movement to abolish liquor from the beginning. They must begin again the old campaign for temperance. If it is to be impossible in the future for us to have prohibition, then we must teach temperance.

The cause of prohibition is not yet lost. But while we can see it losing as we do in the present situation, we must be ready for the worst that may come, and it would be well for us to start now.

In spite of the blind pigs and speakeasies, in spite of the great quantities of liquor that flow in the country, conditions are better than they were when we had liquor.

Let us try to remember what the old conditions were. One could pass along no city block without having his nostrils assailed by the sour odor of beer; every principal corner in the centers of business, large and small, was occupied by a saloon; women generally went out only with escorts, for if they went alone they were in danger of being offended by drunken men reeling out of the latticed doors; the wives of many workingmen never knew whether their husbands would come home with their pay or not on a Saturday night. Homes were broken up, lives were ruined, mothers left without visible support and families of little children went hungry and in rags. All things gave place to the first demands of the tyrant alcohol.

For years we have lived under improved conditions. In far greater percentages, savings have gone into food, clothing, property, and banks instead of into the pockets of the saloon keepers. Women have enjoyed a new freedom and safety. Home life has been improved and the children of the nation have grown healthier. Words are too weak to describe the improvement in conditions.

It is disheartening that the trend of affairs indicates a change of sentiment. There is a passage in the Scriptures which says something to the effect that "the hog" returneth "to his mire." Is some modern Circe turning the American people to swine and sending them back to the old liquor trough?

L. L.

Are You Studying?

Never in the history of the church has there been greater demand that we become keenly aware of the meaning and purpose of our church work and the methods approved of God in the building processes so necessary in establishing his kingdom in the world. On every hand the experiences of the times force one to the conclusion that the solution of the world's difficulties must come in the acceptance of a Christian philosophy of life, and the working out of our serious social and economic problems in harmony with the plan and method outlined by the Christ. Our church stands pre-eminently among the religions of the world charged with the task of offering a solution, not only in religious theory, but in actual demonstration, of social and industrial living according to a divine plan which will save the present civilization from the disintegrating forces of selfish greed and lust.

A supreme purpose of the Restoration was that the gospel of Christ might go forth in the power of light and truth. In one hundred years we have made some progress but the greatest tasks are still before us. The work can be done and Zion become a reality only through a process of growth and development of a people who have sought a knowledge of God's way through study and by faith, and who have consistently and persistently followed in the way revealed in latter days.

Let us capitalize every opportunity to clarify our thinking, to gain wisdom and faith and courage. Of course the work of the church will go on, and its work will be done in coming months and years by those who have persisted in faith and loyalty to its ideals and who through study and prayer and earnest effort have kept their lamps cleaned and filled and brightly burning.

We list, below, the supply of mimeographed studies, most of them carried over from the Centennial Conference Institute. These have been prepared by outstanding men and women of the church. Their message is still vital to Zion's accomplishment. Secure one or more for home study, or secure copies for class or group use. These will be sent postpaid while the supply lasts at 25 cents each, five copies to one address for $1.00.

Reflections

The Call for the Return of the Prophets

FAULTY WORLD LEADERSHIP—

The recent turn in world events—the trouble between Japan and China, the threat of fascism under Hitler in Germany, the deep shaking of the world's financial structure and the rapid transport of gold from bank to bank and from country to country, our own industrial unrest and the rumblings of threatened hunger riots, in fact, the deep tribulation and uncertainty of the whole world—lead us to the conclusion that there has been something lacking in world leadership. We have had the best human wisdom there is, but the present state of affairs indicate that human wisdom is not enough. What we need is prophetic leadership—such prophetic leadership as came to the children of Israel at times of crisis during the long history that extended from the days of Moses to those of Malachi.

A PROPHET OF GOD NEEDED—

In view of the alarming circumstances of the present day, and of the need of leadership which is so apparent, we have had recalled to our attention an article that appeared in the Christian Century of September 25, 1929. In that issue Dr. Edward Shillito, a widely known writer and a preacher of the English Congregational Church, was responsible for the appearance of a remarkable article entitled "Wanted—Prophets!" Some extracts of that article appear below:

We need a prophet. Not a "weather prophet," not a mere forecaster; not some one who is able to look ahead and tell us how business and the stock market are going to be. Of these prophets we have had enough, and they have been, for the most part, false prophets; for the souls of all the world are sick with following the advice they offered.

The world needs a prophet of God—one who speaks not of the future alone, but one who also speaks in flaming denunciation of the present, one who speaks of the world's sins and transgressions, and repentance. The great function of the prophets of Israel was not prognostication, but social discipline. The prophet that the world needs, as Dr. Shillito said, must speak under the urgent pressure of the hand of God. We must catch in his voice the note which can not be mistaken. Thus saith the Lord. The Lord God must have spoken to him in ways which we may not know, but which we can not ignore. We must be sure that he has been admitted into that world within the world, which the prophets knew, a holy and terrible place. He must have felt the constraint of the living God.

PROPHETIC LEADERSHIP FOR THE GROUP—

In an article in the Herald not so very long ago one of our own writers, Bishop J. A. Koehler, emphatically pointed out that we can not be saved individually, so far as the affairs of this earth are concerned. If we are to be saved at all it must be by means of group salvation. Zion must be redeemed by a people working cooperatively toward the realization of their ideals; otherwise there can be no Zion, and no redemption, and all of our efforts are in vain.

The prophet of God that the world needs is also a social prophet, a man of affairs, and—in a great spiritual way—a statesman.

Once more, the prophet must be one who declares the will of God not upon the individual life primarily, but upon the life of the community, and of the nations. The prophets of Israel were concerned for the most part with public affairs; they were given to see upon the screen of the nations the writing of the divine hand. They did not provide two grades of righteousness, one for the guidance of the individual Israelite, the other for the policy of Israel. The prophet in that age, and it still is true, was not a man who believed that politics was a field of operations upon which the voice of religion must not be heard. On the contrary he was much more of a statesman than a preacher in the modern sense, and more of a poet than a writer of prose. He saw that a nation could obey the Lord God, or disobey. He knew that its decisions conditioned in a far-reaching fashion the life of the individual man. The prophet then and the prophet now sees that it is impossible for the individual soul to be perfected unless the process of his redemption is carried through to a finish. He must be set in the midst of a redeemed community.

THE SOUL UNAFRAID—

The very nature of the prophetic office is such that its ministrations will not be welcomed by the people. Even those who should benefit by it (at least they should benefit ultimately) will hate the prophet and persecute him. But he regards more highly the will of God than the notions of men. He is independent of normal social conventions so far as it is physically possible for him to be so.

One thing more must be said of the prophets; they are not afraid of the face of man, not even afraid of being less than respectable. . . .

The prophet is not an official. His can not be a piece of routine. The prophets of Israel did not arrange to deliver their prophecies twice a week at fixed times. They did not engage to write for every Wednesday evening's paper. That is the honorable work of pastors and evangelists and teachers. The prophet is not appointed for life. He may be a prophet only for one brief moment. There may be long silences between his word. How little do we know of the lives of Isaiah and Jeremiah! And of John the Baptist, only a brief part of his life. Prophets were aroused, quickened, inspired not to make a continuous comment upon public affairs—that is the serious task of the journalist or the teacher. The prophet may have a thousand other duties to fulfill as an ordinary citizen, but as a prophet he may be called for one task only. All his life may be gathered up into one moment.

THE PROPHET IS THE SERVANT OF GOD—

The prophet is not the servant of men, but the servant of God. Though he may be slain of men, yet will he not obey them. The most independent and fearless of all creatures, so far as man is concerned, he is yet the most sensitive instrument for hearing the voice of the Lord.

Where then are the prophets? If an occasion came, such as came to Amos and Isaiah, what kind of man should we need? We have seen that they are not officials; their office is not a permanent one; they do not remain prophets for life; they can not be counted as ready to pronounce oracles at any time; they do not act periodically. They are the standard bearers of a unearthly order of life. They are under the hand of God. They are his elect. . . .

We do not need a new order of prophets. The prophet need not wait for ordination. There is no call for men and women who shall be always prophesying. It may be that for each occasion as it comes the Spirit of the Lord will come upon some one; and he may pass into silence when his witness is given. But the prophet was never more needful than in these days in which the crisis comes as a thief in the night. Only the prophet can deal with it.

He gives some—prophets. We are in desperate need of them. But they will not come in any other than the ancient way. The Lord God speaks; and some one listens to him, and now can never escape from him. If the prophet says he will no more speak in his name, then his word is within him as a burning fire and he can not contain. Such were the prophets of Israel. Such will be the prophets in whose words we in our day shall hear the voice of the Lord of the world. Blessed will be the church which knows them when they come, and stands by them in their witness even in the cloudy and dark day. That church shall receive a prophet's reward.

THE PRESENT DAY PROPHET—

The remarkable fact concerning all the great prophets who have spoken in the name of the Lord has been their entire lack of complacency and compliancy. In general they have been revolutionists of the most insuppressible kind. As a result they have been stoned and persecuted. Isaiah and Jeremiah did not speak to please the multitudes: they spoke only to please God. Jonah tried to escape the necessity of speaking the will of God, but He would not be denied until Jonah had fulfilled every bit of work that was required of him. Joseph Smith did not speak to please the multitudes, or to make a fine and acceptable name for himself among the established churches. Almost his first words brought him into conflict with those others who claimed to represent the church of Christ.

In fact, one may take it that the prophet who speaks to please the multitude is a false prophet.

. . . No man who can not do without popularity can never be a prophet. "Mr. X. is a prophet, see how his church is filled." That is a formula of doubtful value. "Mr. X. is a prophet, see how the windows of his church are broken"—that is more probable. It is not, of course, inevitable that the prophet should suffer, but it is more in line with the precedents of history. Nor can we forget the words of our Lord upon the past and the future of the prophets. His disciples were to be prepared for persecution and were not to count themselves above the prophets in this matter.

The state always needs prophets and needs them not in marble monuments, but in flesh and blood; without such vision the nations perish. There is a demand for men who plainly come from another realm and are not to be cajoled or bribed. They will declare the naked truth about war, and industrial wrongs and all forgetfulness of the poor. They will stand always for the other side. They will apply the Christian gospel to things present, as well as to things past. They will act as a quick and sensitive conscience to the community.

THE PROPHETIC CHURCH—

In ancient times perhaps there was nothing that corresponded to a "prophetic church" and yet at times there was the organization of people who followed the prophets. There is a place in the world for a church that is ready to receive and follow the words of the prophet, once they have recognized that his words are of an origin that is divine.

No church can be a prophetic church that is following the dead prophets of the past. It must wait for and receive, recognize and follow the living prophets of God.

There is an old saying that it is the priests who slay the prophets. This is because the priests are the servants of the prophecy of the past, of God's message to another generation. They work out a pretty little scheme of things by which they can control the situation to their satisfaction. Then the prophet comes along and upsets everything, and naturally the priests persecute him, if necessary to death.

The prophetic church will have to choose between following the leadership of its priests and that of its prophets. And when its priests are clothed in linen and cloth of gold and scented with lavender—and the prophet, like John the Baptist, hairy and clad in the skins of animals—then it will be hard for the proper and respectable people to hear the prophet when they have been listening to the pleasant voices of their priests.

Are we and can we be the prophetic church that it was our mission to be when the church was organized in 1830? Are we heeding the voice of warning? Do we obey the prophecies that have been given to us?

In the days and years that are before us we shall have need to ask ourselves these questions many times. It will be difficult to carry on our work, for Jesus said:

. . . Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

Let Yours Hands Be Clean

By Merl B. Grover

Behold, I will hasten my work in its time; and I give unto you who are the first laborers in this last kingdom, a commandment, that you assemble yourselves together, and organize yourselves, and prepare yourselves; and sanctify yourselves; yea, purify your hearts, and cleanse your hands and your feet before me, that I may make you clean; that I may testify unto your father, and your God, and my God, that you are clean from the blood of this wicked generation, that I may fulfill this promise, this great and last promise which I have made unto you, when I will. . . . Abide ye in the liberty wherewith ye are made free; entangle not yourselves in sin, but let your hands be clean.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 20, 24.

This period of the church's history is being looked upon almost universally among her people as a time for closer unity, a time for greater bonds of fellowship with each other and with God, a time for the rallying together as never before for the final great effort to accomplish the mighty task that lies yet before us. Perhaps in years past we have sensed this, but today that attitude should be more significant than ever before: significant because the climax of the world is approaching; because it is our good or ill fortune to live in a day when there are powerful opposing forces in the world and when every man must ultimately rally to one or to the other. Chancellor Bruening of Germany voiced the opinion of many wise men a few days ago when he said that the world is rapidly approaching the greatest crisis of all history, not only economically, not only morally, not only spiritually, but a crisis in every sense of the word. In this condition of confusion leaders will spring up all over the world and a great many people will follow them. Some will lead the people here and some there, but whatever their motives, they being but human can only lead the people into further chaos. The crisis, the storm, the darkness shall take its toll and only those able to weather it will be permitted to bask in the beautiful sunshine which shall inevitably follow. But the tempest, the darkness, the very gates of Hell, shall have no power over those whose hands are cleansed of all evil. The call which comes to us, God's people, in these days of mad confusion is, "Rally ye to the cause of the one mighty Leader of all leaders, and as ye come to take his precious name upon you, let your hands be clean."

The Children of Nephi

In the early days of Book of Mormon history, Nephi, one of the forerunners of that people had in a vision, in which he was permitted to look down the avenues of time and behold all generations of his seed. He saw the rise and fall of kings and of nations and of great men. He saw his people ascend to the most sublime heights, and saw them lower themselves in awful forms of degradation. He saw them as they prepared for the coming of Christ and he describes them as an exceedingly fair and delightful people. He beheld them in this beautiful state for some two or three generations after Christ's appearance, and then they began to fall away. Their god became the riches of the world; they sought after power; they fought and strove between themselves for the mastery of each other's material possessions. With the coming of this condition, Nephi beheld that they were no longer a white and delightful people, but were now cursed with a skin of darkness. Wrapped in a heavenly vision and beholding these things through divine eyes, Nephi saw that when the people dwelt in righteousness they were white and clean, and when they fell into evil and wrongdoing the stain of those sins was upon them and they appeared soiled and unclean.

"Sin No More"

The laws of God are unchanging. Divine eyes today behold righteousness as cleanliness and evil as filth. Hands engaged in the promotion of unclean deeds must be unclean, and unclean hands will soil any clean thing with which they come in contact. Yet today there are organizations throughout the world dwelling under the name of churches who teach that as often as a man sins he may be forgiven—that sin is a natural thing with man and that he may continue in that state as long as he will periodically confess and strive in some small way to penalize himself. We find no such philosophy in the gospel of Christ Jesus. True, he said to the woman taken in a terrible form of sin, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," but he was careful to add, "Go thy way and sin no more." This church is a stream of living water in which the stain of all sin may be washed away. Here we may come from contact with the filth and wash our hands clean. But should we return again and again with soiled hands, the crystal stream must, too, become defiled. If we go forth from the house of the Lord and return again and again with the stain of the world upon us, his church must also surely become stained. "Cleanse your hands before me" and after that "Let your hands be clean." Soil them no more.

The Cleansing of Baptism

The ordinance of baptism, the mode of entrance into Christ's church, is beautifully symbolic of the ideal of cleanliness. The psychological values of these beautiful ordinances in the church are unequalled in any man-made organization, and well they may be for they are products of a divine intelligence. The thought inspired by the ordinance of baptism is that of a man approaching the throne of the Master having a complete faith in that Being, truly repentant for the sins that soil his soul, and going down into the water with the desire in his heart that as he is buried with Jesus, all the unclean and regrettable parts of his life shall be washed away, and he will come forth cleansed and purified—a new man. He is given all the privileges that belong to a child of God and is entitled to every blessing that comes to a member, but with those blessings and privileges, there also come certain responsibilities. He belongs to the church, he is a son of the church, and his is now the power to bring glory or shame to the parent organization.

There comes to my mind in this connection, a beautiful poem I once read about two mothers who had just passed through a great sorrow. Each was the mother of a son, young and strong and in the prime of manhood. Suddenly and without warning, death had placed its cold hand upon the sons of these mothers and robbed them of all that life held dear. And as they were seen walking together one day, there was a noticeable contrast in their attitudes. Their heads were bowed in sorrow, and yet one, underneath her awful grief, bore a trace of pride, an attitude that was akin to joy for her son had died as he had lived, true and honorable, his hands clean and his soul spotless of all evil. The other woman was also bowed, not alone with sorrow, but her sorrow was made heavier with shame. There was no trace of pride or joy in her heart—all was hopeless, black despair. Her son had sat upon a high place in glory and honor, and then in an hour of temptation had placed personal interest in the form of money before the principles for which he lived and had died a traitor, unclean, disloyal to all that was good. In the story of this poem these mothers were friends with corresponding hopes and ideals and faith in their sons. And because one remained loyal to his charge and held himself clean to the day of his death, his name became a byword throughout all the world for honor and righteousness; and because the other became disloyal and inflicted a soilmark upon his otherwise spotless soul, his name went down in history as a synonym for weakness and treachery and contempt. In their grief these mothers sorrowed for a world, for one was the mother of Jesus and the other the mother of Judas.

That story, while probably entirely the product of the poet's imagination is a beautiful simile of the possibilities in a man's relation to his church. One by the cleanliness of his heart brought to his mother joy and happiness, even though she saw him die; and above all he brought to her a real witness of his love for her. The other son, by the soil he inflicted on the innocent soul she bore him, opened a never-healing wound in the heart of his mother, and in return for her love and protection and blessings, he brought her shame and suffering and anguish. Ours, as children and the church of the living God, is the power to bring honor and glory or dishonor and shame to our church by our clean or unclean lives. Ours is the power to hold our sacred membership in clean or unclean hands. Ours is the power to become a Jesus or a Judas. Those powers are given us now, today. But in the final analysis, in the last hour, in the day of Zion's glory there can be none but the clean, the pure and the good. Those who have failed to heed the warning will stand no more, for the sifting time is here. Those who would be at the side of the Master in the day of his second coming must behold their church always as a possession beautiful and precious beyond description—pure and unspotted. Let your hands be clean.

The Sins of This Generation

"Cleanse your hands before me," saith the Lord. Shall we cleanse them of the dirt of honest toil? Cleanse them of the ink from the scholar's pen? Cleanse them from the dust of the weary traveler? No! Cleanse them of the blood of this wicked generation: a generation in which bands of men are organized together for the express purpose of robbery and plunder and murder; a generation in which the idol of gold and silver and paper money is worshiped and the Almighty God of the universe is forgotten; a generation in which men look with suspicion upon their neighbors and trust no man; a generation if you please which by the grace of God produces foodstuffs, fuel and clothing in such quantities that if placed in a heap would make a mountain so high that it would darken the light of the sun—yet allows its poor, ten million unemployed poor today, to go cold and hungry and ragged. Cleanse your hands, not of the dirt of honest toil, not of the ink from the student's pen, but of the blood of this wicked generation. Nor are these idle words, my friends, for know ye that the evil of this generation has entered into the very walls of God's own house. Here among his own people are those who rob God. They perhaps do not realize it, but nevertheless there are those otherwise noble men and women who by their own acts stand convicted of robbing the very Being who is their benefactor in all things. They would not rob the widow nor the orphan, they would not defraud their neighbor, the very thought of taking one penny from the collection basket would be most repulsive to them, yet they steal from God. I repeat, they steal from God, because by virtue of the baptismal covenant every man in God's kingdom acknowledges that his tithes belong to God, his presence in the house of worship belongs to God, his every talent belongs to God, and cruel as it may seem he who willfully denies God any of these things actually steals that which in every sense of the word belongs to God. His hands are soiled by the evil of that generation in which he lives. Cleanse your hands before me. Let your hands be clean.

Judged by Our Fruits

All productive things in this world are judged by their product. It is so with factories, it is so with trees, it is so with flowers and likewise it is so with men. The test is almost without exception. Science is interested not in the way a man lives, but in what that living accomplishes; God is interested in the result of a man's life, for he says, "By their fruits ye shall know them"; the world points to a man and identifies him not as a man who dreamed a dream, not as a man who planned a plan, but as the builder of a building, the painter of a certain picture, the writer of a certain book. He is judged by his finished product. A little more than a century ago, God saw fit to restore his church to the world. It was then but a plan, a blueprint, a means to a great end. It was much like a young life in whom there is great possibility but with which both time and labor are necessary to make it a thing worth while. People rallied to its aid for its plan was appealing, its message inspiring, and its burden light, but in their haste to make it a reality, there came jarings and strife and contention within the organization and it became increasingly evident that unclean hands were handling it and leaving their soil-marks upon it. So the people were admonished and instructed to tarry yet a little while; to wait until they had raised themselves to the high plane of their task. They were told, as we have been so often reminded, that had they been obedient to their laws and faithful to their covenants, their work could have been completed.

By reason of unclean hands of that and other generations the church is still short of being a finished product—it is still a potentiality. Men of the world are sent to investigate our economic system and return with the report that our plan is wonderful, that we have a marvelous theory but we have nothing by which they can judge—we have no finished product. But how many years hence will they say this? We live in a day fast approaching the coming of the Son of Man. We live in a day when to the right and to the left we behold the fulfilling of prophecy. We live in a day when by the mercy of God we shall convert this marvelous plan into an even more marvelous finished product and it shall be a clean one, it shall be a pure one, it shall be one which is above the reproach of God and man. But in the hands of the builders rests the fate of the building. Let your hands be clean.

A statement often repeated among men is that cleanliness goes hand in hand with Godliness. We can not, somehow, associate the thought of God with the thought of anything vile or impure. Elbert A. Smith says that of all the creations of God, only man has been permitted to dine with him. We eat of material things for the sustenance of our bodies and in that sense we may be said to dine with animals, but we also eat of spiritual things for the sustenance of our souls, and in that sense President Elbert says we dine with God. We come to preaching service, we come to sacrament service and some very few of us come to prayer service to sit at the table with the Master, to eat and drink deep of his Spirit; to feed, as we so often sing, on food divine. It is by this Spirit that truth is manifested unto us; that we may know and no longer merely believe. The men who are counted great in any generation are those who know; the man who doesn't know or isn't sure is dismissed with a shrug of the shoulders. Know the truth and the truth shall make you free, said Christ. The very creed of our church, if we can be said to have a creed, is "ALL TRUTH." High above the front entrance of the New York City Library, chiseled deep in the stonework there are these eternal words: "But above all truth beareth away the victory." God's church in which you and I have the great privilege to be members must and some day will be victorious over all the world, but to do so we know it must cling ever closely to the truth, and must seek always for the truth. Science seeks also for truth, but in a different way, namely through the carrying out of experiments the results of which manifest a positive or negative witness to a stated theory. But Peter in his writings says there is yet a more sure word of prophecy, a more dependable witness. Peter lived and worked and walked with Christ; he heard Christ preach and teach; he felt the dynamic strength of Christ's personality. He knew as far as it was humanly possible to know that Jesus was divine. And yet having all these material proofs, scientific proofs if you please, Peter says that there is yet a more sure proof—the prophetic Spirit of God.

Our Great Trust

We Latter Day Saints have the greatest trust in the world; we have the greatest task in the world; we make the most stupendous claim in the world. It is all truth, or it is a gigantic fraud. Either the angel did fly through the midst of heaven declaring the everlasting gospel, or he didn't. Either the Book of Mormon is a divinely inspired and authentic record or it isn't. Either the Doctrine and Covenants, from which we read our text this morning, contains revelations from the mouth of Almighty God, or it doesn't. And because this work is so stupendous, God has placed within our reach the power to know, even know the truth. The spiritual food of which we partake as we dine with God at these meetings is the great witness of the truth of all these things. If we fail at this service to feel God's Spirit, if we fail at tonight's or next Wednesday evening's service, there can be but one explanation. Even as we can not enjoy eating at a table with a person who is filthy and unclean, whose hands soil every morsel of food they touch, neither can God dine with us when we are unprepared and unfit to sit at his table. Let your hands be clean that you may eat and drink with the Master that food which will nourish your soul and strengthen your faith until it becomes a definite knowledge.

In one of our national anthems we sing those familiar words, "Let us rally round the standard." We are told that in the last days, the church of God shall be as an ensign upon a hill; a banner whose purity and whiteness shall shine forth in all the chaos and confusion of a sin-darkened world. From a certain poem comes a beautiful thought along this line, the thought of one generation calling back to another, "To you from failing hands we throw the torch, be yours to lift it high." To us is tossed this beautiful ensign as a beacon to us, and as a light with which to beckon all the world. We shall rally to this ensign and with our hands shall hold it high, but as we do so shall we remember the great price of this banner? Shall we remember that it is precious beyond expression, even more precious than a human life? A great surgeon takes a human life into his charge; takes upon himself the responsibility of prolonging or destroying that which can only be created by Almighty God. He pits all his years of college preparation, all his trying experiences, all his natural resources against the demon of disease. He spares no effort in his determination to be prepared for the great task before him, and the final step he takes is the cleansing of his hands. The great surgeon knows that in those hands he holds a priceless treasure, a human life. And precious as is a human life, Jesus freely gave his for this mighty banner. I think of the story of that giving as it was portrayed to me through the medium of a play I witnessed some two or three years ago, and as I think of it, the part that comes most vividly to my mind is a certain scene in which Judas was seen after the death of Christ examining his hands. "Blood," he cries, "there's blood upon my hands." His hands, his instruments which would ever serve him in whatever work in life he would do were for ever stained by the lifeblood of the Master. He could never again touch a clean thing without that soiled mark being left upon it. In my home is a little babe who in all the innocence and purity of tiny babyhood represents to me the nearest thing to heaven which I have ever beheld. I am sure I could never place, nor permit to be placed a soiled hand upon her. Yet in our hands is placed the banner of King Immanuel, more precious than the human life in the hands of the surgeon, more precious than the blood which stained the hands of Judas, yea, even more precious than the little babe. The call that comes to the people of this divine church in these days of her great need is: "Rally ye to this all precious standard, but as ye bear it aloft, let your hands be clean."

Happiness in Religion

By W. H. Deam

The greatest happiness comes from service in the Lord. Joy in the Lord is the greatest joy one can experience. Supreme happiness is often accompanied with tears. Once when I was a little boy one of my older sisters had been away from home in another state for a number of months. When she returned home she and my mother fell on each others necks and wept. I told them that I thought they should be glad instead of being sorrowful. I did not understand. They were weeping, or perhaps I should say shedding tears, for joy.

The woman who followed Jesus where he was invited to dine with a Pharisee and washed his feet with her tears, wiped them with her hair and repeatedly kissed them, was supremely happy. Her joy in the Lord knew no bound.

Religion gives happiness and dispels gloom. Happiness in the Lord is true. It is lasting. Latter Day Saints should be the happiest religionists in the world; but they haven't a monopoly on religious happiness. Others have faith, hope, and joy in the Lord. Although they have not the fullness of the gospel some times I think they are happier than we who know and have tasted of its fullness.

It is religion that can give
The greatest pleasure while we live;
'Tis religion that can supply
The greatest comfort when we die.

Is there any one who is able to dispute the sentiment expressed in these lines?

David expressed himself on happiness by saying, "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord." Solomon said, "Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he." Of rejoicing Jesus said, "I will see you again and your heart will rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."

Recently Mr. A. B. McDonald, reporter for the Kansas City Star, interviewed Clarence Darrow, the great criminal lawyer and noted agnostic. Mr. Darrow is reported as saying, "I would kill all belief in God, the Bible, religion and the church, if I could."

In the course of the interview Mr. Darrow remarked that when the Christian comes to die it is with regret and sorrow, and that he is no happier than the disbeliever in God. Mr. Darrow is a man of great wisdom, but when he made that statement he showed that he had had little or no experience in the passing away of the firm believer in God.

I have seen many people pass away with smiling countenance, a happy look and words expressing joy because of the hope entertained of eternal life. I recall one who recently passed away. I had administered to her many times, she receiving much relief on each occasion. The day before she died I called to see her. She was suffering a great deal. She was ready to go, but asked for administration to be relieved of suffering. Instead of going through the regular form of anointing and laying on hands I simply knelt by her bedside and offered an impassioned prayer for her relief from suffering. All the while I was praying I could hear her asking God to come and take her. A little while before she died she said, "Mother, when you see that I am going, take hold of my hand and hold it while I pass away." So, when her mother noticed a change she took hold of the daughter's hand and squeezed it and called her name. There was just enough life left so that she opened her eyes and said, "O, mother, why did you call me back?" thus evidencing that she was passing into a state of happiness.

She was thirty-four years old. She had been ailing several years with the dreaded disease, tuberculosis. The mother told me that she and her daughter had been "pals," and that she would miss her very much, but she felt somewhat recompensed by the thought that her daughter was through suffering and was now in a state of happiness.

This is the satisfaction and consolation of the true believer in God. Evidently Mr. Darrow knows nothing of this. His whole family believe as he does, and when one dies it ends all as far as that one is concerned. No hope. No chance for a happy reunion. It is all over.

Decision

Resolve, and thou art free.—Longfellow.

The heaviest charged words in our language are those briefest ones, "yes" and "no." One stands for the surrender of the will, the other for denial; one stands for gratification, the other for character. A stout "no" means a stout character, the ready "yes" a weak one, gild it as we may.—Munger.

The Eyes and Their Relation to Health and Disease.—9

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

When one is doing close work, the eye should have short periods of rest, by looking at distant objects, which relaxes the muscles of the eye. When a person is physically tired or drowsy, he should not do much reading. The recumbent posture should be avoided, while using the eyes. Bathing the eyes in cold water is refreshing and comforting, especially after long exposure to the irritating effects of wind, undue strain, or dust. Another good plan is to wash them thoroughly with a saturated solution of Boric acid. No one should read during a fever, and great care should be taken of the eyes during convalescence from any disease. Baby's eyes should always be shaded from direct exposure to sunlight, and children, as well as adults, should not gaze long into the sun or any brightly illuminated object. All flickering lights lead to tiring of the muscles of accommodation and cause fatigue and pain. The amount of illumination depends, sometimes, upon the work that is being done, such as sewing on black or white cloth. More illumination is needed for the black and the white. Reflecting light from other objects is detrimental to the eyes. The eye muscles tire easily when moving in a rail-way train, etc.

Exceedingly great care should be taken of the eye, especially at the ages of forty to sixty years. At this age one should be very careful to have his eyes tested by competent persons, at regular intervals. It is the duty of the physician to early recognize glaucoma, and other diseases that have been mentioned in this series of articles, and the proper treatments for the infections that impair vision.

I believe there has not been sufficient importance attached to the fact that the eyes may be a frequent portal of entry for all kinds of infectious diseases. The lacrimal duct aids in removing all kinds of bacteria from the eye, by the constant flow of tear secretion, frequently these germs are found in the secretion, after five minutes in the eye; from the throat—fifteen minutes; from the bowels—twenty-four hours.

Unfortunately, face masks do not protect the eyes, and no doubt, it can be readily seen that common colds, pneumonia, diphtheria, tuberculosis, and other respiratory infections or intestinal diseases may start by these germs entering the eye. Children's eyes are frequently infected by toys, and serious injuries are frequent as a result of those toys having sharp edges.

Autobiography

VIII.—MISSION WORK IN WESTERN IOWA, 1891

By James Franklin Mintun

I began my mission work in 1891 at Moorhead and Preparation, where there was quite an interest. I left the family better satisfied and better cared for materially. My soul was thrilled with the spirit and power of my calling. I continued my studies daily of the standard books of the church, with other books that claimed to be good books. I sought in this way to gather information to meet opposition intelligently, and to make a stronger defense of the word and work of God. My preaching was principally to emphasize the fundamental principles of the gospel, and in reasoning from the prophecies that related to the restoration in the fullness of time, with the presentation of conclusive proof of the distinctive position we, as a church, occupied relating to the marriage ordinance, and in bearing testimony of the Christ and his work on earth in these latter days.

I was burdened with a report from my home that my eldest daughter was very sick, which brought me to my knees in deep humility, asking God that she might speedily recover, and not make it necessary for me to leave the field. God gave answer to this prayer.

I went from Moorhead to Turin, in Monona County, the latter part of January. At that time there was a great demand for instruction on the temperance question, to which I responded with several lectures.

From early childhood I was moved with horror at the effects of intemperance. When I obeyed the gospel I found the support necessary to wield a force against the curse of intemperance wherever I have been, and always acting with my fellow ministers and business men when possible to assist them in their noble efforts in lawmaking and in the executing of it, by assisting to choose those who would fulfill their duty in the execution of law. I am no less interested in the cause of temperance, and feel that the time is fraught with the possibility of great harm coming to society by an indifference toward this question.

One Who Conquered a Bad Temper

At the services at Turin I came in contact with several prominent people of the "Holiness Society." After conversing with me, one man, by the name of Ephraim Payne, concluded that if he had to become a Latter Day Saint to get to heaven, he would prefer not to go there. He afterwards lost interest in the principle of "holiness" as he then viewed it. Another man of this order and one who had been very prominent in their revival services, came to the conclusion, that although he had traveled all through that country and made the loud boast that, "I am saved; and wholly saved," yet he was constrained to obey the gospel, which caused him to repent of his sins, and to be baptized for the remission of them. This man obeyed the gospel and became an elder in the church, and went through a struggle to subdue an impulsive disposition, so much so that he had fasted and prayed many days before he could say he was safe from it. To say that he made a loud boast of being saved is illustrated in an incident related to me in Turin in regard to a revival service held about four miles from that place. It was said that he went out to hold secret prayer in the top of some of the very high hills just off from the Little Sioux River bottoms, and that he became so enthused that he prayed so loud that the people from the camp came rushing up to see what was the matter. The people of the town of Turin declared to me that they could hear the noise that far, so that I am within the truth when I said he made a loud boast. Another incident occurred when I, by invitation, visited at his home a few miles from Turin. While we were conversing about the gospel, during which time he several times said that he never "got mad." He went out to do some chores about noontime, and he said that he was thinking about his boast that he never got mad, and one of the horses stepped on his foot. When he came in after feeding them, he said, "Brother Mintun, while I was out, I got mad," then told me the incident. I asked him if he had not felt somewhat like that a good many times previously, and he admitted that he had, but he did not then think that he was angry, only righteously indignant! He told what he had done when he was angry, and his wife said at once, "Well, Brother Mintun, I have seen him act that way a good many times in our experience." He had hard work to not show his anger then. He was baptized a very humble man on a day in which occurred the worst blizzard I ever saw in western Iowa, and I was born and raised there. I asked his wife why she did not consent to baptism when he did, seeing that she had admitted that she believed the gospel was true. She said, "I will wait to see how much good it does my husband." She did, and it was not long until she also obeyed.

A Debate With Clark Braden

During the latter part of February, some of the people became alarmed because of the many who were accepting the gospel teachings, and to make an effort to counteract it they sent for Clark Braden of the Christian Church—the progressive division. He held his lectures at first at Preparation in a large hall that would seat several hundreds of people. During his lectures the hall was filled. I was present at the lectures, and while at times he was quite abusive, he stopped long enough to say, "I am ready to prove everything that I say." At the close of one of the lectures when he had charged Joseph Smith with the introduction of polygamy, and having many wives, and had made light of the gospel claims and said the gifts and blessings of the Holy Spirit were no longer needed to assist in the work of God, I wrote out two statements which he had made, which were, "The gifts and blessings enjoyed in New Testament times were no longer a part of God's work, and Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy as a church tenet previous to 1844; and took them to him and asked him whether he was ready to sign these propositions. He hesitated, but finally said, "Yes, I will." He continued to tell the people that we would send for Brother E. L. Kelley to meet him. I said nothing. The next day I went to see him and agree upon the rules for the debate, and he treated me as a very insignificant being compared with him, but with the presence of the Spirit of God I did not feel so, neither did I feel so in all my preparation to meet him. The debate was held, beginning March 23. I sustained my defense in both propositions to the satisfaction of both those in the church and without. Mr. Braden did not even please those who had furnished the money to bring him there. He frequently referred to the fact that we as Saints claimed to be inspired of the Holy Ghost, but asked the people to see what he was doing without making any such claim. At the close of the debate, I thanked the people for the respect shown, and said that I had not to depend on the inspiration of finances for my support, but God had been with me. He was angry and said, "It is nobody's business what arrangements I make for finances."

Some days after the debate Mr. Braden was lecturing at Woodbine in the Christian Church, which was filled. Brother Charles Derry and I were present when he was advising them not to enter into debates with the "Mormons" on doctrinal propositions; and said they were very foolish to debate with the "Mormons" and take the Bible as standard of evidence. He said, "I did this at Preparation with Elder J. F. Mintun, but I will never do it again."

At the place of the debate lived a very devout Catholic lady, who had been acquainted with the Latter Day Saints for many years, and with whom I had been acquainted since childhood. She invited me to her home for dinner not long after the debate. While I was there she expressed with tearful gratitude the pleasure that had come to her during the debate which she attended. She had thought the Latter Day Saints believed in polygamy, yet did not practice it from fear. She held her neighbors in high esteem, and they also held her in the same regard. "Now," she said, "I know that the things I once held against them are not true, and you don't know how happy I am; and I thank God for this great pleasure that has come to me."

Services of Friendship

I administered to many sick during the first of this year, most of whom expressed thankfulness for the blessing received. While at Little Sioux I, in association with Brother George M. Scott, administered to Sister Ella Miller, formerly Jordan, who was very sick. She testified to us of immediate results, and of having been overshadowed by the Holy Spirit which permeated her whole being.

I was instrumental in uniting in the holy bonds of wedlock on April 16, of this year, Elder S. W. L. Scott, and Sister Margaret Coffman. I had been associated with Brother Scott for many years in the Seventy's Quorum, and his wife I had known from babyhood, all through her life. She was one of the purest and sweetest young women, as she also was as a little girl when she was one of my students. She was almost idolized by the rest of the family. The marriage was somewhat like a funeral on the part of the immediate family, not because they did not think Brother Scott worthy of her, but because the marriage meant a separation, as she was going to make a home for her husband in Indiana. They were very happy, but it did not last but a short time when she took sick and was brought home to die. When I heard of Brother Scott's grief, I at once came to him, and was with him till the last sad rites were over.

One Sunday I had preached in Little Sioux, and was returning home with Brother Charles Vredenburg. By the side of the road we noticed a cow mired in the mud, and needing relief. Brother Vredenburg said, "What shall we do?" I said, "We will get the cow free if possible, even if it is Sunday." So we did, the only signs following this act being the mud we carried away with us.

On April 28, I was at my home, and Brother Heman C. Smith was there. He preached a sermon that I have never forgotten because of the power with which he preached. This is what my diary says: "Listened to a sermon upon the subject of 'The Dominion of Man, and the Purpose for Which He Was Created.' Part of that which was uttered was by authority from God." So wonderful was the power which accompanied his preaching that it has never been forgotten.

A Testimony Concerning Joseph Smith

About this time I became acquainted with Father

Isaac Ashton, who at that time lived in River Sioux. From him I gathered this testimony:

RIVER SIOUX, IOWA, March 28, 1891.

I, Isaac Ashton, do hereby certify that my place of residence was at Nauvoo, Illinois, from 1840 until 1846; and I was personally acquainted with Joseph and Hyrum Smith; and to my certain knowledge they did not teach nor practice polygamy. Neither did I ever hear them or any one else say Joseph received any revelation on polygamy.

(Signed) ISAAC ASHTON.

My wife concurs in the above statement.

(Signed) ISAAC ASHTON.

While preaching in Woodbine I received word of the illness of my wife, and Brother Matthew Hall at once conveyed me to my home on June 1. The next day my first son was born, who lives to be an honor to the truth, and in whom the principle of honesty is supreme. He will not shield any one, no matter what his love is for them, if in wrongdoing. This has brought him in contact with some unpleasantness in his business life.

On July 4 I was requested to deliver an oration at Moorhead. This was my first, and proved to be my last. I was assured that I was not fashioned for an orator.

On July 11 and 12, I assisted at a two-day meeting held at Magnolia, where Brother W. W. Blair was the principal speaker. At this meeting my first-born son was blessed by Brother Blair, and set apart as an instrument in the hands of God for service.

Clark Braden came into western Iowa lecturing against the Saints and Brother Blair was with me in making a defense of the church in the park at Logan, Iowa, and also in the courthouse. Mr. Braden had made a vicious attack on the Saints. One of the prominent men of the county, with whom I was well acquainted from childhood, had married one of the sisters living in Logan. I jokingly said, "Well, how do you like to live with a Latter Day Saints after hearing what you have tonight?" He flew into a rage, and I apologized for saying anything, and made my get-away. The next morning this man hunted me up, and when he met me he apologized for his deportment, saying, "Well, Frank, the old Adam got the better of me. Forgive me. And whenever you are in Logan make my house your home while there." I never was treated better by anyone than that man treated me, and he attended some of our services.

Brother Blair and I also lectured at Six Mile Grove and Garner's Grove, making a defense of the Saints, and their faith. By request I assisted Brother Blair in preparing an article for the Logan Observer which was published, through the kindness of the editor, who had formerly been one of my instructors in the public schools.

On August 8, I began tent work in Missouri Valley assisted by that good man Charles E. Butterworth. Here we continued till the 13th, but on account of no interest did not continue longer. During the time of these meetings, we were called upon to administer to a nonmember. She had a running sore, called by some a white swelling. We visited her, and by conversation felt that she had true faith in the God of power, who heard and answered prayer, and she believed in the teaching of the Bible relating to the healing of the sick, and had sent for us because she believed we were elders in the church. After the administration we called up the next morning and she was much better, and gave God the praise. I do not know whether she ever came into the church or not.

We went from there to Moorhead, where Brother W. W. Blair held a few meetings, then went to Turin, where Brother Butterworth and I raised the tent, and continued there from August 29 to September 6, when the tent was taken to River Sioux. During these tent meetings Frank Cohrt and D. A. Hutchings were baptized. Here we continued until the time of the reunion, when I, by request, acted as secretary and registrar of the reunion. During this time I baptized Mina Perkins (now Kearney), who has proved a great help to the church in her way. Brother W. W. Blair continued with me and Brother Butterworth went home for a time. The reunion was held at Logan, Iowa, and presided over by President Joseph Smith. At this reunion a prayer meeting was held of which my diary says: "It was the best prayer meeting I ever witnessed. Many tongues, and all interpreted, and some prophecies. One to the Sunday school workers, 'That the Lord was well pleased with the efforts already made,' and that God would assist them in their future efforts."

From this reunion Brother R. M. Elvin came home with me, and held a few meetings. He assisted me in administering to a babe that was thought to be dying at 2.00 a. m., and the babe was immediately healed.

On October 19, I began a series of preaching services at River Sioux, a continuation of the ones held in the tent. During these services I was assisted in the song services by Sisters Ruth, Bessie, and Grace Cobb. I was at this time writing some articles for the church papers, and having them criticized by Sister Alice E. Cobb, at whose home I was lodging.

Two were baptized as a result of previous services. I began meetings at the Jones Schoolhouse east of Little Sioux, November 5, where I was greeted by large audiences of interested listeners. One peculiarity connected with this place is that nearly all the leading men of the church had preached there, and all greeted by large, and apparently interested audiences. No baptisms were performed up to this time, nor till some few years afterwards, when Brother W. A. Smith preached there for some length of time, when several score of people were baptized.

While holding meetings at Moorhead following the services here, on November 18 a Sister Trussler, who afterwards married Brother Ira Lewis, while on the way to the services fell from a lumber wagon, and it run over her in such a way that it was thought she was seriously injured, but through administration the mercy and power of God came to her relief, and no permanent injury resulted to my knowledge.

During this year I was superintendent of the district Sunday school association, in charge of the work at the reunion. The Sunday school work increased in numbers and interest. At the Logan Reunion I was assisted by S. B. Kibler, James M. Baker, Dora Young, Lucy L. Lyons (afterwards Ressigue), Anna Steadman (afterwards Salyards), with Ruth Cobb (afterwards Smith), as secretary.

Striking Back at Unemployment

By Millard Pace

At Concord Springs, Arkansas, located in the western part of the State, is the headquarters of the Arkansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma Development Corporation. On an eight-thousand-acre tract of cut-over timberland, five hundred unemployed men are building up a community-owned and governed colony. They expect to be self-supporting. Each member is a stockholder and works ten acres of land. A town site has been laid out, and buildings are rapidly going up. The saw mill turning out the lumber for the buildings is owned by the community. Plans are made to build a canning factory to be ready for use as soon as vegetables are ripe for canning.

The men work eight hours a day, and the town slogan is, "He who does not work can not eat." Only persons with enough money to buy the ten acres of land and food to carry them through the winter are admitted, but the amount of money is surprisingly small, they say. No doubt you would like to read their statement: "Please say we are not radicals, communists, or a Soviet or Little Russia group. We are merely American men out of work who seek to solve our own relief problem."

Those who have cleared up cut-over timber land and know the work that is attached to it, realize the task before this colony of men. Cutting the underbrush, piling the old half-rotten logs, pulling out stumps, are only the beginning of the work. How well I remember breaking new ground, how I pulled with all my strength to get the plow from under a stump or a root only to go a few steps then have to do it over again.

I can not but compare these men with an unemployed man I heard a few weeks ago say that he was going to vote for President Hoover because he had showed him how to live without working. This man was living from the charity funds that the employed were asked to give, money which in some cases was taken out of their wages. He is willing to do everything in his power to keep conditions as they are, regardless of the effect on others. I wonder if such men would be willing to go to Concord Springs, Arkansas, and try to help themselves? How are we going to help the unemployed? Give them the bread that other men earn—or give them a chance to help themselves? What kind of a dole do the unemployed need? Do we really need a dole, or a change in the distribution of wealth?

$31,267.71 in Christmas Offering

By C. B. W.

Records are now complete in the office of the Presiding Bishopric giving the above sum as the total Christmas offering for the year 1931. What a splendid sum to be given through the self-denial, if not the sacrifice, of a grateful and loving people! The times have been hard, money has been scarce, and many have been out of employment, but with all of this handicap and with most commendable courage, faith and love, the Christmas offering has been consistently given.

For the more part this offering has been made in small amounts probably by a total of fifty thousand people, including thousands of children and young people, making some self-denial each week from their savings, in an expression of their constant love for the Master—and given in the spirit in which he gave his life for the world. The fact that the gift has come as an unusual sacrifice, and in a time of supreme need in the church, only sanctifies the giving both to those who give and to those to whom the gift shall minister. The entire church is grateful.

Now we look forward to the Christmas offering in 1932. We can not begin too early to make our weekly or monthly offerings. In the years of the past we have learned the sweet joy of giving in this all-the-year, free-will offering, given in continual remembrance of the Christ and in the desire that our sharing of God's blessing to us shall help in his work.

It is especially significant that the Christmas offering does not take the place of the payment of tithes as is anticipated in the law, or of special offerings as may be called for to meet specific needs

Stewardship Demonstration in Detroit, Michigan

Stewardship is having a very practical demonstration in the city of Detroit. For about two years the management of the branch financial and property affairs has been in the hands of a board of stewards composed of men consecrated to this position and whose duty it is to carry on the church business as though it was their own, but always in the best interests of the people. Nothing more convincing could be said than this, that while Detroit has been more effected by the depression than any other major city, the local church has come through in fine financial shape, and is in a better condition today than it ever was.

Talk of a new church has been heard in this city for fifteen years, but because of a lack of centralized administration we have never been able to put our present properties into good repair. Each new proposal was received when it was submitted and passed upon without regard to any concerted program. But under the unified management of a board of stewards and a united pastorate, which, of course dictates spiritual direction, we have been able to adopt a program to which all are subscribers. This program treats every detail as a factor in one definite plan.

An instance of economy effected is very interesting. For years we have had trouble heating the First Church. It had a hot-air furnace. At one time a business meeting almost authorized an expenditure of some two thousand dollars for a steam heating plant. This was without any regard as to whether or not we had the money or prospects of raising the money, or whether or not we had mortgage payments coming due. A mere accident of numbers prevented this expenditure. Recently two men on the board were assigned the work of solving this problem; they came in with a report upon which the board acted. A splendid hot-air furnace was found and purchased for two hundred dollars including the installation, and the church is warmer this year than it ever was; we have no fear of the worst weather. In fact with a simple, inexpensive blower we could make the church uncomfortably warm in the worst weather.

The progress we have made has had two peculiar effects upon the people. On the one hand, it has shocked some folks with its speed forward and on the other hand, it has thrilled many with a satisfaction which has brought outspoken approval. Some few folks dislike to see the scaffold up before the old temple, but others know it is a sign of constructive progress. On January 12 we had a semi-annual business meeting. A very satisfactory financial report was received. Our new church lot is worth all we paid for it even now, and perhaps more on account of im-in the church. In every branch of the church, through the church school or otherwise, provision should be made to keep the purpose and the opportunity of the Christmas offering before the membership. It may be well to designate this work as the special responsibility of one of the officers of the church school. It is one of the best means of spiritual education and occasions for spiritual growth open to us in the program of the church.

Let the Christmas offering fill an important place in our total program in 1932.

provements on the boulevard. We are in a position to go ahead with a new church building as soon as business conditions get to the point where we can hope to dispose of First Church at a fair price. We are standing like some of the large corporations, financially sound and ready for the opportunity, which is sure to come, and all this because of stewardship and the inspiration of God upon men who have given the work their very best effort unhampered by unwise interference, because they have succeeded in inspiring confidence in the great mass of people who have financed the program. At this business meeting there was a generous demonstration of confidence in City Pastor J. Charles Mottashed and the board of stewards. The church secretary, whose office is open all day at First Church came up for some fine commendation.

If you want to see a good work going forward take note of Detroit. Big things are destined to come out of her; she is a great city and the world knows her power. May she thrive as one of the outposts of Zion.

Students Hold Services in Iowa City

Spring meetings of the Latter Day Saints' group in Iowa City, Iowa, began Sunday, March 6, with a gathering at the Oathout Funeral Home Chapel. Walter L. Daykin, student pastor, was in charge. Brother Daykin's appointment by the general church was approved by the group, and the following additional officers were named: Addison Brown, treasurer; Sidney Barrows, chorister; and Max White, pianist. Regular meetings were scheduled for each Sunday afternoon at the Oathout Chapel, a splendid gathering place made available through the kindness of Sister and Mr. Bert E. Oathout. Sacrament service will be held each month, the other meetings to be varied in nature, including devotional, preaching, and discussion. About twenty were present at this first meeting, including students of the university and a number of townspeople.

The group had the pleasure of entertaining President F. M. McDowell for a few days in February. Thirty-one were present at a dinner held in his honor during his stay in Iowa City, and a number attended services at which he spoke both in Cedar Rapids and Rock Island.

Word Comes From the Hawaiian Mission

It has been some time since Herald readers heard from Hawaii, but the work of the latter days has been going along fine and a better spirit seems to be ours at present. We are glad to know that the Hawaiian Mission went over the top in last sacrifice drive, and trust that this spirit shall continue with us throughout the year.

Elder G. J. Waller has been reelected president of the three branches at Honolulu. At the Hawaiian Branch he has four elders, three priests, two teachers, and two deacons to assist him. At the Chinese Branch one elder, one priest, and one deacon assist, and in the Japanese group he has one priest, one teacher, and one deacon to help.

In the last six months two new priests have been ordained at the Hawaiian branch and one at the Chinese. These ordinations make us feel that the work is still progressing, and we trust that God's Spirit shall still be ours to enjoy.

The Hawaiian Branch met February 22, Washington's birthday, for a general clean-up. We never saw a better spirit than was shown on that day. Our lawn and recreation lot are quite hard to keep mowed, but for the past twelve months we have kept things looking fine, and saved the church budget $156. Thirteen months ago we were paying a janitor three dollars a week to do this work.

All three branches have a good Sunday school, and each a recreation and expression class meeting at 6 p. m. on Sunday.

We were saddened January 5, by the death of Sister Margaret Chaing. She was the foremost leader of the Chinese Branch, also a well-known public school-teacher. She was the wife of John Chaing, and the mother of a daughter about eight years of age.

Brother and Sister Macrae, our missionaries to the islands, are still at Hilo, located on Hawaii, the largest island. We shall be glad to see them return to Honolulu.

Independence

Stone Church

The junior orchestra, directed by Leon Snow, made its first appearance before the church school at the combined session of juniors, intermediates, and adults, Sunday morning. Elder G. G. Lewis was in charge of the worship service and described the painting, "The Light of the World." Miss Ina Hattey, soprano, sang the hymn, "The Savior at Your Door."

Apostle Gleazer used something unusual for the basis of his talk Sunday morning, a cartoon clipped from a daily newspaper with the heading, "Your Country Calls." On a sign in the cartoon was the inscription: "We must fight to make America safe for Americans." Choosing a passage from the Bible to build up his subject, he asserted that Peter taught in his day much the same as we do now—that we should not be as concerned about salvation in future life as in this one.

Although we are experiencing a great depression, Brother Gleazer thinks that we are on the verge of a revival in which he expects to see the church rise up and effect the redemption of the world.

The musical program, broadcast over K M B C from eleven to eleven thirty, consisted of a selection, "Speed Away," by the men's chorus directed by Paul N. Craig; a solo, "The Voice in the Wilderness," by Scott, by George Anway; a vocal solo by Pauline James Arnson; and a number by the Stone Church Choir, Mrs. Arnson, soprano soloist, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, contralto, and Mr. Anway, tenor.

Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Apostle J. A. Gillen.

The juniors are glad to welcome back their superintendent, Mrs. Hazel Moler, who has been ill in the Sanitarium. She was in charge of the eleven o'clock service downstairs Sunday morning, assisted by Elder David Van Trump. The Apostle Paul's hardships as a minister for Christ furnished the basis for the sermon of Evangelist U. W. Greene. His discourse was a part of the month's theme, "Following Jesus." Glen Moore played a piano solo.

Boy Scout Troops 223 and 226 acted as hosts to the scouts of Independence Sunday night when they held a court of honor at the Stone Church. Scout Chief H. Roe Bartle, of Kansas City, was the principal speaker, and three hundred and thirty-five merit badges were awarded to eighty-six boys representing nine troops. Professor A. C. Morris was chairman of the court of honor.

Pastor John F. Sheehy gave the address of welcome. Troop 223, under the direction of Scoutmaster Francis Holm, gave the pageant, "The Eight Ages of Scouting," with the assistance of Mr. Ernie Modlin, in charge of scouting for the city of Independence, and Eagle Scout Chandler and his father.

In addition to the merit badges given, eleven boys were awarded the rank of star scouts four achieved life rank, one a bronze palm, one a gold palm, and one a silver palm.

Five of the six Girl Scout troops in Independence responded to the invitation of the host troops to be guests of honor. Sixty-seven girls and their officers were seated in the choir loft and during the evening sang "I Would Be True" and "Peace."

Scout officers sitting in the court of honor and assisting Professor Morris were Mr. H. Roe Bartle, chief scout executive of Kansas City; Mr. Ernie Modlin, scout executive of Independence; Mr. Mize Peters, president of the Independence scout council; Mr. Henry Stahl, commissioner, and Mr. R. E. Chandler, deputy commissioner.

Liberty Street Church

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning. His sermons was instructive and encouraging. The pastor, John R. Lentell, continued his series of Sunday evening sermons at 7.30. "The Resurrection" was his subject this week. For several Sundays the question has proved an interesting innovation. Many questions have been placed in this box, and each Sunday evening are being answered from the pulpit by the pastor.

The choir and orchestra composed of about twenty-five voices and twelve instruments will give their second annual rendition of "The Lord of the Eastertide," by Creswell, on Easter Sunday morning at eleven o'clock at Second Church and at seven thirty in the evening at Liberty Street. Fred Friend is the director. Another Easter program is being prepared for the eleven o'clock hour by some of the children under the direction of Sister McConnell, superintendent of the beginner-primary department, and Sister Lyda Thomason, director of the girls' chorus.

Almost every member of the Liberty Street priesthood was present at a meeting in the afternoon Sunday. Ways and means of overcoming the effects of the depression on church finances were discussed at length. Elder J. Stanley Kelley represented the local bishopric. It is hoped that systematic effort will prevail and that conditions both spiritual and temporal will be improved.

Priest Ralph Remington occupied the morning hour February 28, delivering a splendid discourse on the love of God and the love of man. He impressed the congregation with the need of putting the principles of the gospel into action, exercising charity, being clean, showing reverence, being grateful, and in every thing we do living the gospel.

Walnut Park Church

Many Saints gathered for the eight o'clock morning prayer service at Walnut Park, March 13, in spite of the cold weather. Elder George Bullard presided, and renewed faith was given the Saints.

The church school was in charge of Kenneth Morford's class of young people. The orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, adds much to this session and is always on time with its service.

Following the anthem by the choir, "Hark, Hark, My Soul," the alto solo by Carletta Norman and soprano obbligato by Marian Campbell, directed by Minnie Scott Dobson with Drexel Mollinson at the organ, we listened to Bishop A. B. Phillips. "Improve Your Talents" was his subject.

At 5.45 the young people's study period was shortened so that a little more time could be allowed for the program. The Clover Leaf Quartet, composed of colored boys, gave four old-time spiritual numbers the harmony of which was pleasing. The large audience also enjoyed two harp numbers by Miss Elinor Smith, of the Stone Church congregation. Besides these there were several numbers by local talent.

Opening the evening service the choir sang "More Love to Thee, O Christ." This was followed by a very encouraging sermon by Elder C. V. Hopkins.

Brother C. J. Yarrington passed away at his home, March 12, after a long illness. Besides his wife and many relatives who will mourn his death, he will be missed by the Saints of District Three whom he served with love and loyalty. A short funeral service was held at Carson and Sons' Chapel, March 13, and the body was taken to Albany, Missouri, for another service, then to Lamoni, Iowa, for burial.

Enoch Hill Church

The program hour of the church school Sunday morning was in charge of Mrs. Agnes Hartman. The theme "Prayer" was very effectively carried out. Scripture readings were given by W. H. Stevens, Donald Bullard, and Mrs. Hartman. Mrs. Lilla Warren and Mrs. Henrietta Allen sang "The Garden of Prayer," and a girls' quartet composed of Helen McDonald, Martha Chrestensen, Margaret McDonald and Pearl Chrestensen sang "A Whispered Prayer."

It seemed a coincident that Elder C. Ed. Miller used prayer as the theme of his morning sermon. He chose to use Daniel as an illustration. Because he was diligent in prayer, keeping his windows open toward Jerusalem, Daniel was given great power and was selected for a position of trust. A people who spend much time on their knees, keeping their windows open toward Jerusalem, will be a strong and powerful people, while a people who neglect to pray will become weak.

The young people of the hill with their pastor, Elder Herbert L. Barto, went to Buckner Sunday evening to furnish the program for that congregation. Elder Barto occupied the preaching hour. Elder J. E. Martin, of Enoch Hill congregation, is pastor at Buckner.

The church was crowded with visitors Sunday night, Saints from the Stone Church and other places who had come to hear Apostle E. J. Gleazer complete his morning's message given at the Stone Church. "Save yourselves from this untoward generation," (Acts 2:40) was the text he chose to impress upon the minds of his hearers the great necessity for Zion, a place where a consecrated people may gather in safety to follow the Lord. He painted darkly the conditions in the world—the distress of nations, the breakdown of governments, law, and order, economic difficulties, and presented the message of Christ and Zion as the solution to these troubles.

The Dorcas Class met at the home of Sister Robert Whittitt last Tuesday evening, March 8, for its monthly social evening. Though the weather was cold quite a number of the class were present and an enjoyable evening was spent. During the month the class has sent letters to isolated Saints who live in various parts of the United States. The answers to these letters were read before the class. They were interesting, and the writers seemed to appreciate the women's thoughtfulness in writing; they requested more letters. Another feature of the evening was the "roll call" answered by the giving of each woman's favorite recipe. They not only brought the recipe but the article of food sufficient for each member to sample. All were Word of Wisdom recipes and some were taken from Vision, being recipes submitted in the recent Word of Wisdom contest. The women on Enoch Hill are trying to live worthy their class name.

Gudgell Park Church

Elders C. K. Green and G. W. Eastwood were the morning and evening speakers last Sunday. Their sermons were helpful.

There was good attendance at the early morning prayer meeting, and interest was very apparent. Brother Roy Sherman, assistant superintendent, took charge of the church school.

Brother Melvin Atwell's class of boys gave the program at the Religio hour Friday evening, March 11, and the entertainment was enjoyed by all classes and visitors.

Of late unfavorable weather has had its effects on our services. One night Religio was not held because of it. The weather has also taken its toll of midweek prayer meeting attendance. Sunday, March 6, was a cold day, and the congregation was smaller at each service.

The women met all day, March 4, at the home of Sister Roy Sherman. In spite of the rain thirteen adults and seven children were present. A delicious lunch was served at noon.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

Kansas City has departed from its usual resort weather in the past ten days and has had a real touch of winter, the thermometer hovering around five and six above zero.

Music at the church school the first Sunday of March was furnished by the Semper Fidelis Ladies' Quartet. Also Jean Dunn, of the intermediate department, sang a soprano solo, "Fairest Lord Jesus," and as this lovely little voice unfolds through the course of study, she will be able to render service to the church through the gift of song.

At the sacrament service, the sick of the church were remembered in prayer quite a number having been reported confined to their homes. Also Baby Lindbergh was held before the throne of grace, that he might be protected and returned safe to the arms of his parents.

The usual concert was given by the choir in the evening following the sermon, delivered by Elder James W. Davis.

On Friday evening, March 11, the Women's Club displayed a number of quilts of all designs and antiques which were brought by the various members of the church. Many interesting articles were among the collection. A program was given, and the proceeds of their efforts were applied on their goal of twenty six hundred dollars on the Central Church building fund.

The theme of the worship at Sunday morning's worship period, was "Power of Faith." The Scripture reading was Doctrine and Covenants 42:13, after which "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" was sung.

The church period was in charge of Elder F. B. Blair. Elder John A. Garver was the speaker of the hour, delivering a fine discourse to the attentive audience.

At seven thirty preceding the preaching service, members of Central O. B. K's who entered the stake musical contest, contributed their entries in the contest—a vocal solo by Helen Scott, a quartet and a violin solo. These numbers will appear in the finals of the contest which will be held on Friday and Sunday of this week. On Friday evening at eight o'clock the junior soloists, vocal solos, and choruses will sing. On Sunday at three o'clock the junior instrumentalists, instrumental solos and quartets will be heard. Seven groups are to be represented and the O. B. K. trophy will be presented at the services next Sunday. Following the musical numbers, Elder W. O. Hands gave an illustrated lecture on "Old Nauvoo" and told some very interesting facts concerning the finding of the unknown martyrs' graves. A number of Utah guests were present to hear this lecture.

A stewardship library has been established at the church office and will be open on Tuesday and Fridays for the purpose of assisting our people in their study of the stewardship, especially the young people who are entering the oratorical contest. Herald articles, pamphlets, books, and magazines are available for study.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood is conducting a Doctrine and Covenants study class at the church office on Monday evening and reports a fine enrollment.

Next Sunday the Saints will have opportunity to brush up on our own church beliefs in contrast to those of two other factions of the Restoration. In the morning Apostle J. F. Curtis will discuss the Hedrickite and Fetting movements, and in the evening Elder Calvin H. Rich, for many years a pastor in Salt Lake City, will discuss the present status of the Utah church doctrines. These men are qualified to speak on their respective subjects.

Fourth Church

From January 3 to February 28, the speakers have been Elders J. O. Worden, H. J. Bullard, W. O. Hands, who spoke several times, J. D. Curtis, of Colorado, George Mesley, J. T. Gresty, M. H. Sneed, P. T. Andersen, George C. Johnson, and J. E. Vanderwood. Brother Hands used slides to illustrate his lectures on the different translations of the Bible. Brother Vanderwood also has been teaching the Doctrine and Covenants to the Progressive Club the last few Thursdays.

The sacrament services have been well attended and marked by the presence of a good spirit.

Several families in this branch have suffered because of unemployment. To help this situation the Saints have presented several short plays, giving them to good crowds.

A number of good stories have been told by Sisters Tyra Lueking and Vada Allen at the early family service every Sunday. Sister J. Seibert has also related stories of many outstanding women in the Bible.

There is considerable musical talent in the ranks of our young people.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

The church here is going forward. Everyone seems to be pressing toward the goal. Our young men of the priesthood are taking their turn in the pulpit, helping to declare the counsel of God. They are also taking their turn in having charge of the prayer meetings.

The priesthood meet once a month to outline a program for the coming month and select topics for the prayer service and those to have charge, all the speakers for Sunday and those to have charge. These lists are printed and each member of the priesthood is supplied a copy; a copy goes to the publicity agent, and one is posted on a bulletin board in the rear of the church.

Topics for prayer service for the last Wednesday in January and those in February were: "Looking Ahead," "Accepting God's Hand," "My Choices," "My Christian Aims," and "Consecration." Very spiritual testimonies were woven around these topics. When the people have a theme on which to concentrate their thoughts, we seem to have better services. Attendance is also greater.

Branch President H. W. Woodstock has received a promotion in his secular work which puts his working hours in the day-time instead of from three to eleven at night. He has Sundays and holidays off, so now he has a better opportunity to direct the services of the church.

The February sacrament service was elevating. The Saints expressed a desire to bring their lives to a higher plane and do everything they could to help build God's kingdom.

Bishop C. J. Hunt recently visited in this branch, preaching twice on Sunday and attending prayer service. He was pleased with the progressive spirit manifested.

February 29, Apostle D. T. Williams delivered the last of his series of lectures here. He has been discussing the principles of the gospel, and his closing theme was "The Judgment Eternal." We are sorry this was the last, for we have looked forward to his coming. We hope that the one the conference puts in charge of us shall see fit to continue with monthly lectures where Brother Williams has left off.

The women bought a new pulpit desk for the church and are working toward getting chairs to match.

The church school is progressing under the direction of its able director, Lee Root. He is also sponsoring a Bible contest, prizes to be given to the winners. This contest creates an interest in everyone to read his Bible. Young people and adults are working hard.

Once a month each church school class takes turns at giving a party for the school in the lower auditorium of the church. Games are played and lunch is served.

Brother Root has chosen Dewayne Miller as his second assistant or supervisor of the junior department, with the object of preparing him for greater service. Dewayne is a capable boy who is desirous of helping in the church, and a good junior steward; he complies with the financial law of the church and keeps his stewardship book up to date.

Our young men are helping the older men to carry the branch activities along.

North Platte, Nebraska

The adoption of the new plan of Religious Education has improved this branch, putting our forces into new and more efficient channels. The church school is doing fine under its head officer, Elder E. R. Sivits. Since the election of officers, the school has changed the time of its convening from 9.45 a. m. to 10 a. m. Preaching is at eleven o'clock every Sunday morning except the first of the month when sacrament and prayer meeting are held. Dinner is enjoyed at noon, and at 2.30 p. m. we have preaching.

The recreation leader, W. L. Sivits, is pushing his part of the branch activities for the best interest of the young. He is teacher of the young people and his group is becoming more united and determined to help.

It is encouraging to see the spirit of unity which has of late prevailed among us. The branch president and his helpers are working. If all of us help, the latter-day work in North Platte will not suffer.

Visiting Saints are welcome at our meetings which, on Sundays, are held at the Advent Church, Tenth and Willow Streets. The prayer meetings are held at 1123 West Sixth Street on Wednesday evening.

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch, Thirty-ninth and Grand Avenue

This branch work is moving along smoothly, with enough plans and social enterprises to promote courage and hope for the future. With so many members unemployed, our financial condition is not all that could be desired, but under the circumstances it is encouraging.

The Saints were entertained Sunday evening, January 24, with a sacred historical cantata, "The Vision," presented by the Los Angeles Mormon Stake Chorus. It was written by one of their people, and we appreciated it. The cantata was built on the early origin of the church and happenings incident thereto, which, of course, is common ground for all factions of Latter Day Saints.

District conference convened February 6 and 7, District President W. A. Teagarden in charge. With him were associated Apostle M. A. McConley and President F. M. Smith. Routine of business was consummated with a good attendance from all branches. Twenty-five delegates were elected to attend General Conference.

President Smith gave a good talk Saturday evening, also Sunday morning, then addressed the priesthood at 2.30 p. m.

We have had the pleasure of a visit from John A. Robinson and wife, Keo. Brother Robinson preached Sunday, February 14, at the morning service at Central Church. In the evening at the East Side Branch he gave a lecture on Kirtland Temple. They left the following morning for their home in San Antonio, Texas.

Brother Carl F. Crum and wife passed through Los Angeles on their way to Corpus Christi, Texas. They had with them their baby, also Mr. and Mrs. Ward, Sister Crum's mother and father. Brother Carl preached Sunday evening, February 14, at Central Church, and they left early the following morning for their destination.

We were made sad by the death of an esteemed friend, Leo C. Newland, who was not a member of the church, but was an active attendant and took a keen pleasure in raising flowers which he used to bring to the church for decorations. Mr. Newland passed away February 11, after an illness of about three weeks with double pneumonia. He leaves his wife and mother. The funeral sermon was by Eli Bronson.

The "Marthas" served meals during conference which were up to their usual excellence in quality and quantity. Owing to their very reasonable prices, and the number of meals that were donated, they cleared only sixty-five dollars this year, but we consider that very good.

The Lord has given us a super-abundance of rain this season, which is quite unusual, but we are grateful nevertheless.

The unemployment situation seems to grow more acute instead of better, and we are beginning to think, "How long, oh, Lord, how long?" There is a growing conviction among the Saints that we are going to be forced to do what the Lord requires. We are going to learn by the things we suffer.

Sister McConley is very ill, and we are certain all who know her will offer a prayer in her behalf that she may regain her health and usefulness in the church.

Western Oklahoma Conference

At the Calumet church, on February 27 and 28, the Western Oklahoma district conference was held. Weather conditions were ideal, two spring days, warm enough that the men and boys shed their coats between services, and the volley ball players perspired freely. All the branches of the district were represented. Davidson Branch had the largest representation of visiting branches, Seiling Branch the smallest. A goodly number of nonresident members were present. On Sunday a number of Saints from El Reno and Oklahoma City, of Central Oklahoma district, were present.

We were disappointed that Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder E. B. Hull could not meet with us. The worship services were very spiritual and strengthening, and the Spirit was present throughout all the meetings. Conference work was carried out smoothly. A change was made in the district president; Elder M. Crownover, of Calumet, retiring, and Zenos Z. Renfro, who holds the office of seventy, was elected. Brother Renfro appointed as his counselors, Elder B. A. Howard, of Erick, Oklahoma, and Elder E. E. Crownover, of Hydro, Oklahoma. Brother B. A. Howard is also the district superintendent of Religious Education.

A total of thirty-two baptisms was reported for the conference year although we were without a missionary the greater part of the time. Since this is a farming district and our membership is principally composed of farmers, we did not raise our quota of tithes and offerings. We have seven hundred and ninety-two members enrolled, and the bishop's agent reported a little over two thousand dollars from this district last year.

An entertainment was given by the young people of Calumet Branch which was greatly enjoyed by all.

While we were feasting spiritually the physical body was not forgotten. Calumet Branch had erected a tent near the church building, and the women of the branch had prepared a feast for us.

Santa Ana, California

Baptisms continue in Santa Ana. The last Sunday in January our pastor officiated when three fine lads entered the waters of baptism. Frederick and Harry Kroehe and Rodger Engel became members of the church on that day. Rodger is the great-grandson of Brother Glaude Rodgers, one of the early and greatly-loved missionaries of the church. Brother Starkey and the boys were dressed in white, as is our custom here, and the font was tastefully decorated with greenery.

Sister Charles Calkins, who was put in charge of Religious Education at our annual business meeting, was unable to assume this responsibility because of ill health. She has agreed to serve in the junior department and is doing splendid work. Brother John Inman took her place as head of Religious Education, assisted by Brother Frederick Kroehe, sr. All are attempting to work together under this new plan.

Sister Donald Nimmo (formerly Rebecca Mills) who for the past two years has ably directed our choir, has had to resign. Sister Walter Mills has taken her place.

This week the Patroness Society mailed a box of linens and a gift of money for the Sanitarium. Sister Best, the president, has been very faithful in this work and all have made a consecrated effort to assist the Sanitarium. We in Santa Ana feel nearer to Zion in thus materially aiding one of her most necessary institutions.

The Ladies' Aid Society, under the energetic leadership of Sister William Kuhn, has just presented our local church with new velour curtains and drapes.

Visiting speakers at recent Sunday services were Brother Leonard Rhodes, our former pastor, and Brother R. C. Chambers. President F. M. Smith, on his recent trip to California, visited among the members here for a few days.

Fulton, Iowa

The Saints are working together for the advancement of the church and, as a consequence, are becoming more interested in their undertaking.

There was good attendance at Sunday school last Sunday. We have two superintendents, Irvie Campbell and Alma Heide, who serve alternate Sundays in this office.

Each Sunday we have a birthday offering, and everyone who has had a birthday during the week comes forward and drops pennies in the bank, as many pennies as he is years old.

The young people, married and single, have organized a club in which the members are divided into couples, each couple having to entertain the rest of the members and other guests sometime during the year. One of the events of this club was a recent Valentine party.

Surely this will be a successful year in this region. The church members are energetic and desire to learn and spread the gospel. We feel that the divine Hand is directing us.

Due to sickness Brother John Heide and Sister Almira Heide have not been with us for several Sundays. They are missed and we hope to have them back soon. Brother Amos Heide has charge of the preaching service.

The Ladies' Aid met at the home of Florence Merrick to quilt. Dinner was served at one o'clock. A short program was given in the afternoon.

Northeastern Kansas Holds One-day Conference

Notwithstanding unfavorable weather conditions, about forty Saints met at Netawaka, March 6, for a one-day conference. All district officers were present save one. The district presidency, Dave Little, William Twombly, and James Thomas, presided.

A spirit of unity prevailed throughout the day. The music was directed by Gilbert Hedric with Sister B. F. Deller at the piano. A special number was contributed by Dorothy Deller and Harold Crooker.

The sacrament service was the opening session. Introductory remarks by James Thomas were replete with thoughts on the need of obedience on the part of the Saints in keeping the law given to govern the church. "To the extent we have failed to live in harmony with the revelations given, shall we suffer and worry under existing world conditions," he said. He stressed the need on the part of the ministry and the membership of reviving the old-time custom of offering their prayers in their meetings and expressing their needs and desires; this is necessary that the work of the church may hasten. The ministry hunger to hear these prayers. Too long we have neglected them, and as

Conference Minutes

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—The semiannual conference of this district convened at Netawaka, Kansas, March 6. The district presidency, Dave Little, William Twombly, and James A. Thomas, presided over the sessions. T. J. Christensen was associated with the presidency and passed the emblems at the sacrament service at 10.30 a. m. Basket dinner was served at the church. At 1.30 p. m. ceremonial presentation of a gold seal certificate to Sister Fern Weedmark, of Topeka, by Gilbert Hedrick, district Sunday school superintendent, took place. The afternoon sermon, "The Need of Repentance," was by James A. Thomas. Then came a short business meeting. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. District Treasurer O. E. Weedmark reported total receipts of $51.45; expenditures, $41.33; balance on hand, $10.12. The report of the district Sunday school superintendent was accepted. The report of L. M. Pitsenberger, district superintendent of recreation and expression, was read. Action on the recommendation to adopt the plan of Religious Education was deferred until next conference. Delegates elected to General Conference are Mrs. C. J. Sheets, Mrs. J. M. Green, Samuel Lyter, Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, Samuel Twombly, Glen Beaman, and F. G. Hedrick. The closing talk by Samuel Twombly was "The Future Church."

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—The conference of this district was held at Philadelphia February 20 and 21. The business session was held Saturday evening in charge of Apostle R. S. Budd and the district presidency, T. J. Elliott, H. L. Livingston and A. H. D. Edwards. Reports were read from district officers, and the following officers were elected for the coming year:

District president, T. J. Elliott; counselors, H. L. Livingston and A. H. D. Edwards; superintendent of Religious Education, E. Walter Lewis; musical director, Clara S. Thumm, and secretary, Elizabeth Teal. Bishop John Zimmermann was sustained as district treasurer, and the following were elected as delegates to General Conference: R. S. Budd, George Robley, H. L. Livingston, T. J. Elliott, A. D. Angus, Sister A. D. Angus, John Zimmermann, sr., Sister John Zimmermann, sr., Willard Hettrick, A. H. D. Edwards, Sister A. H. D. Edwards, Louis Kuhn, Asa Fowler, James Moses, and J. A. Jacques. A recommendation of the reunion committee that there be no reunion during 1932 on account of economic conditions was unanimously adopted by the body. It was voted to hold the next district conference with Bloomsburg Branch in the fall, the time to be set by the district president. The following motion regarding the use of tobacco and strong drinks by ordained men was carried by a large majority, there being only one opposing vote: "Whereas, the Lord has spoken against the use of tobacco and strong drink on different occasions, and whereas, in all our appointments we ought to show respect unto said counsel, therefore be it resolved, that, henceforth the branches of the New York and Philadelphia District sustain no man in his ministerial office whom they know to be addicted to either of the foregoing evils." After the business session an enjoyable program was furnished by the Philadelphia Harmonica Band, under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie. On Sunday the day was well filled with church school in the morning under the direction of the local officers, preaching at eleven o'clock by T. J. Elliott, prayer service in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening by A. H. D. Edwards. Apostle Budd had held a series of interesting and well attended services during the week preceding conference, and all of the conference services were well attended not only by the visiting Saints but also by members of the Philadelphia Branch and their friends. Several new members were added to Philadelphia Branch by baptism during the church school session.

Our Departed Ones

HAMILTON.—Jane Hamilton was born in Adams County, Illinois, October 21, 1855. She died at Independence, Missouri, February 12, a result, many blessings have been withheld. The Saints should shake from their garments the coals of indifference and arise in the strength of the Lord.

At the communion service prayers were offered for light and divine guidance in the business session and also for the General Conference.

A basket dinner was eaten at noon at the church.

Preceding the afternoon sermon by Brother Thomas, the district Sunday school superintendent, Gilbert Hedrick, briefly gave the history and described the certification plan sponsored by the Department of Religious Education of the church. Sister Fern Weedmark, accompanied to the stand by Dorothy Deller and Gwendolyn Christensen, was presented a gold seal certificate, the first to be given in this district.

The theme of Brother Thomas's discourse was "The Need of Repentance."

Those selected as delegates to General Conference are Mrs. C. J. Sheets, Mrs. J. M. Green, Samuel Lyter, Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, Samuel Twombly, Glen Beaman, and F. G. Hedrick.

The closing talk by Elder Samuel Twombly encouraged young and old. It was on the future progress of the church.

1932. Married James Hamilton in 1874, who died in 1923. To them eleven children were born, five of these surviving their parents, three daughters and two sons. Mrs. Hamilton was baptized by J. T. Kinneman in May, 1880, at Stewartville, Missouri. The funeral was held at Carson's Chapel, Independence, Missouri, by Elder Ammon White. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

HANSEN.—Frederick Hansen was born in Denmark, October 12, 1844. He died at his home at Persia, Iowa, February 16, 1932. In 1857, he came to America with his parents who, at Iowa City, joined the famous "hand-cart" caravan headed for Salt Lake City. Sickness prevented their going farther than Omaha. Brother Hansen was baptized into the Reorganized Church on June 28, 1862. He was ordained an elder in June, 1867, and that same year he went to England, where he labored as missionary for three years. Later, he settled near Persia, Iowa, where he held church membership for forty-five years, acting as pastor for some years both at Persia, and at Salem Branch at Leland Grove. He was a member of the church for almost seventy years and was active in church work until his death. He was of a studious turn of mind, a man of honor and integrity, highly respected in his community. His life was a distinct asset to the church and speaks for itself. Surviving him are one brother, Kennedy, of Myrtle Point, Oregon; two sisters, Julia, of Berkeley, California, and Carrie, of Sterling, Colorado; five children, Edgar and Grace, of Persia, Iowa; Mrs. Scott Evans, of Portsmouth, Iowa; Mrs. Jesse Lytle, of Harlan, Iowa, and Arthur of Modale, Iowa; nineteen grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. One daughter, Alice Brackenbury, preceded him in death. The funeral was held in the Saints' Church at Persia, sermon by Elder E. Y. Hunker. Interment was in the Chambers' Cemetery.

BENDER.—George W. Bender was born June 7, 1854, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Died Wednesday morning, March 2, 1932, at his home in Independence, Missouri. He was married to Elizabeth Owens October 27, 1889. To this union three children were born. Blanche O., of the home address, Dwight O., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Blaine O., of the home address. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Decatur, Nebraska, in 1895, being baptized by Elder G. L. M. Whitman. Brother Bender moved to Independence in 1918, and located at the home where he resided at time of death. Besides the immediate family three sisters survive him: Mrs. Homer Dean, of Nampa, Idaho; Mrs. W. P. Reid, Faithorn, Michigan, and Mrs. C. W. Kent, Peoria, Illinois. Brother Bender was a man of fine personality and had many friends; he was a devoted husband and a kind and loving father. He was an honorable citizen, a good neighbor, and a man devoted and faithful to his church and his service of God. The funeral was held from the Carson Undertaking parlor Friday, March 4. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, and the sermon was by J. E. Vanderwood. Interment was in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

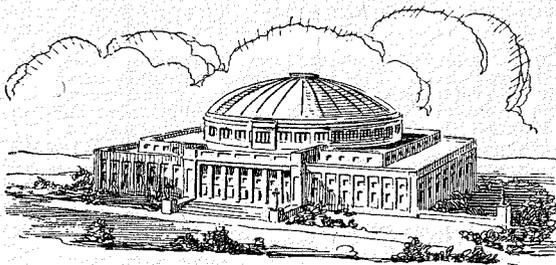

WELCH.—Minnie Alena Welch was born November 9, 1873, at Blandensville, Illinois. November 9, 1893, she was married to J. W. Welch. Four children blessed this union. One preceded his mother in death. Mrs. Welch united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in June, 1930, and was a staunch believer in the faith. She had been in poor health for four years but had borne her affliction with patience and fortitude. Death came to relieve her, October 23, 1931, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Vera Peaslee, Macon, Missouri. She leaves to mourn, her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Peaslee, and Mrs. E. Gilstrap, of Kewanee, Illinois, and one son, Herbert, of Pomona, California. The funeral service was held from the Saints' church in Macon, Sunday, October 25, 1931, when a large number gathered to pay respect to her memory. Elder F. T. Mussell, of Des Moines, Iowa, conducted the service.

COUCH.—Elizabeth A. Albertson Couch was born in Brantford, Canada, April 6, 1852. Died at Chico, California, February 10, 1932. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Fairview, Michigan, in November of 1894, and continued as an active member until death claimed her. Elder W. H. York was in charge of the services. Interment was in Chico Cemetery. There survive to mourn a son, George F. Albertson, other relatives, and many friends.

BARSS.—Robert James Barss was born in Sullivan Township, near Chesley, Ontario, November 20, 1870. Died at Lansing, Michigan, December 27, 1931. At the age of fourteen he moved to Harbor Beach, Michigan. May 20, 1887, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder Robert Davis. In 1892, he went to Jefferson County, Nebraska, where he continued to live except two years spent in Virginia. He was married to Mary Lourie March 31, 1897. He was a lover of music and conducted a singing school for several years. He sang in the Neligh, Nebraska, Congregational Church Choir in their Christmas cantata and left immediately for Michigan to visit relatives. A few hours after enjoying a Christmas dinner at the home of his nephew, George H. Trescott, he was stricken with apoplexy. The funeral services were held in Forestville; interment was at Rock Falls Cemetery, near Harbor Beach. Elders Thomas Rawson and William Grice officiated. He is survived by his wife, Mary, of Neligh, Nebraska, two sisters and four brothers: Mrs. America Trescott, S. A. and George C., Lansing; Mrs. Laura Mastin, Forestville; William J. and Alexander J., Detroit; a number of nieces and nephews and a host of friends. He was loved by all who knew him. He will be remembered for the good he did while among us and the beautiful spirit manifested in his praises to God.

ROBLEY.—Anna Seegrift, wife of Patriarch George W. Robley, was laid to rest Sunday, February 2, 1932, after a brief illness from pneumonia. The funeral services were held from the Providence Church, her church home for many years. Pastor D. F. Joy and Bishop M. C. Fisher officiated. Two beautiful duets were sung by Louise Fox and John Jackson. Anna Robley was born August 23, 1868; in 1885, was married to George W. Robley, who entered the mission field shortly after. To them were born eleven children, seven of whom grew to maturity. Six of them sat with the husband and father in the last tribute made to their mother, who under adverse circumstances reared her children in the faith to which both she and her husband had given much.

Independence Property For Sale

One of the steps in our present financial program is the liquidation of assets not needed for the major work of the church. Through consecration, wills and purchases, the church has been accumulating large holdings, both improved and unimproved real estate in Independence. While a consistent effort has been made to dispose of these holdings and some sales have been made, the process of liquidating has not been rapid enough to keep pace with the increase.

It would be very helpful to the church if some of these holdings could now be liquidated and the proceeds applied toward the reduction of our indebtedness. To this end church bonds or notes will be accepted in full or part payment. These properties are held and managed by the Central Development Association, a corporation organized by the church for such purposes.

On the opposite page are pictures of some of the houses in Independence which are being offered for sale at reduced prices.

The General Conference

Under this heading special announcements will appear each week. Readers are asked to look for it in order to keep informed about plans and programs.

Meetings of the Pre-Conference Councils

On the fifteenth of March the members of the Quorum of Twelve began sessions in the Auditorium, meeting in the room now occupied by a portion of the church library, this being the room where several of the Joint Councils will be held this General Conference. Eight of the Twelve are present, the absentees being Brethren McConley and Williams. Following a session of prayer the task of meeting the preconference problems was taken up, and the needs of the missionary field were discussed.

Among the men of this quorum the opinion seems quite prevalent that along with the definite financial program which was outlined by the councils of last year there should be a definite program with clearly seen goals in the spiritual activities of the church, both along local as well as missionary lines. With this in view the Quorum of Twelve seems to be approaching its tasks in a spirit of hope and firm faith.

On the twenty-first, in the forenoon, was held the first session of a series of meetings of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric. All members were present, except the two of the Twelve before mentioned, and Brother Curry of the Bishopric. Following a season of prayer, reports from the field were heard, and this part of the council activities was in progress at the time of this writing.

In the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, there seems to be generally prevalent the same idea of definitizing some of the objectives interim here and the ultimate goal of Zion, and a determination so to do; and the earnestness with which the brethren are entering upon their tasks holds fine promise of worth-while endeavor in that direction.

Again, too, there seems to be present in this council a deep-seated consciousness of our dependence upon God and his wisdom to guide the church in this time of stress and heavily weighing tasks and responsibilities. And the humility present promises well of their efforts to establish the essential rapprochement with the sources from which come divine wisdom and light.

The number and difficulty of the problems for which solution is sought by these councils is, perhaps, little understood or inadequately appreciated by the membership generally. The work of the councils requires an application and sustaining attention which becomes a tiring strain upon the men, and the weeks of this work necessary requires the exercise of bodily as well as mental vigor which combine to form a task the faithful discharge of which requires patience, faith, and loyalty, and not a little amount of self-control.

The discussions having place in the councils cover a very wide range of knowledge, and the solution of the problems demands the securing and utilization of a vast amount of information.

The brethren seem to bring to their tasks this time especially a fine faith in the ultimate success of the church, in God, and in the people of the church. In this faith I firmly believe these men are being upheld by faith and constant prayers of the people of the church.

The times are portentous. Conditions within and without the church all point to the necessity now as in the past of Divine wisdom to guide us along safe and secure roads. The desire to do God's will and live close to him seems to have had expansion within the church, and this expansion can not but find expression in the Council. To do God's will and best serve the church seems to be the dominant desire of the brethren.

Special "Messiah" Rehearsal

A special rehearsal of The Messiah, the conference oratorio, is scheduled for the Auditorium, Sunday afternoon, April 3, beginning at three o'clock. The Messiah Choir composed of singers from Kansas City and Independence, will be augmented by singers from other near-by points, and the oratorio orchestra will accompany. Paul N. Craig will direct the rehearsal.

THE REGISTRATION FEE

The official program for General Conference which is now in the hands of the printer will contain the following provision:

"All visitors as well as delegates and ex officio delegates are expected to register. Those who do so will receive the official badge, the official conference program, each issue of the Daily Herald, a souvenir booklet, a centennial songbook, and a ticket entitling the bearer to a seat in the reserved section during the rendition of The Messiah. The fee for single registration is $1.25.

"There is no provision in the annual budget for the expense of General Conference. Registration fees will be used for that purpose. By this means each person in attendance at Conference may carry his part of the load."

The plan of financing Conference by means of a small registration fee has been urged for several years by a number of the church officials. Not until 1930, however, was this method followed. The results of the experiment were convincing. Without having the exact figures at hand, we feel safe in saying that never before has the Conference so nearly financed itself.

This year there is no provision whatever in the annual budget for financing General Conference. Either its expense would have to be met from a general collection or by means of the registration fee. After full consideration the latter method has been agreed upon, and this year all visitors as well as delegates and ex officios are urged to register and pay a registration fee of $1.25. An effort has been made to provide each person with the sort of material that will make his attendance at Conference as pleasant and profitable as possible. Accordingly each one will be provided with the official badge, the official conference program, each issue of the Daily Herald, a booklet commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, a centennial songbook, and a ticket entitling bearer to a seat in the reserved section during the rendition of The Messiah. It is considered by those who are held responsible for the planning and management of the Conference that the above provision will not only distribute the burden of financing Conference by placing a small portion of the load upon each person attending, but will serve as well to make the Conference orderly and businesslike, providing each with the opportunity of keeping informed in regard to the matters before the Conference, participating in its various services and activities, and sharing alike in its responsibilities.

Schedule of Daily Classes

APRIL 6-14, AUDITORIUM

To recognize consistent studious effort on the part of those who attend the following classes regularly and participate in the work of the class hour, credit certificates will be issued at the close to those who turn in record cards showing their attendance at no less than six of the eight sessions, and who pay the credit fee of ten cents. Each student may attend two classes daily and earn a total of sixteen credits during the Conference.

Following is a list of subjects and the instructors. Further information as to the places of meeting will be found in the official program of the Conference.

CLASSES
Subject	Instructor
1. The Doctrine and Covenants	F. H. Edwards.
2. Church Court Procedure	A. B. Phillips
3. Teaching and Leading Young People	E. E. Closson
4. Children's Division Materials and Methods	Mildred Goodfellow
5. Book of Mormon Study: "Christ in America"	P. M. Hanson

A Grandson Arrives

I desire to share with the readers of the Herald the pleasure of a bit of "news" received while away from home on January 15. While in Seattle, Washington, at the home of Brother and Sister D. S. McDole, I received a telegram from my elder daughter, which told me of the "Safe arrival of Frederick Nils Larson." That news informed me of the advent of my second grandson, this time presented to me by my younger daughter, Lois. I believe many of my readers will rejoice with me.

Shall We Proceed?

In a recent letter from a district president to the Presidency there occurs a paragraph which may reflect feelings prevailing in other places also. The district president says:

"Our people have begun to look Zionward. Persecution, oppression, and general conditions are having their effect. I sincerely hope that out of the coming General Conference will come a definite and distinct move in the direction of our expected goal. The world at large is interested in 'bread,' and our people, too, are demanding a spiritual bread and something in the abstract for their long sought-for Zion homes and ideals. I feel (based upon my experience here, of course) that a unified program, backed by every member of the Twelve and Presidency, would be very, very acceptable to our people here. I could not attempt and am not attempting to approximate the remainder of our people, but I do feel that I know the situation here. I do not mean to find fault or to attempt to advise, but knowing this condition exists here, I feel it my duty to report it. I'm sure direction from the Giver of all good must come in connection with this, too; but many, many of our families are living the law as it is given and explained to the best of their ability and they naturally want further direction and are inquiring, 'Why do we not go on?'"

"It is evident that our sacrifice periods have been a great help to our people, and the very reason that our people are wanting to 'go on' is partly due to the fact that they are receiving spiritual blessings by reason of their sacrifice. These blessings, it would appear, are but a taste of our future for which our people long.

"Our prayers and good wishes are certainly for our leaders, and I believe I am expressing the sentiment of the entire district, almost to a man, when I say that you men have our confidence and we are not ready, by any means, to conclude that our little church is not going to surmount and survive this terrible depression. Too, we know that from it will come good in many, many ways, and we feel to thank God and look to a brighter future than ever before."

Zion and Zion conditions have from the first constituted a goal towards which this church has worked. And that looked-for reformed society has been a magnet which has drawn the love and sacrifice of this people. The unsettled conditions about us, economical, industrial, political, and social, are such that our people long more keenly than ever for the safety and security of Zion.

It is to be hoped that out of our present conditions will arise a persistent determination on the part of all Saints to work resistlessly for Zion conditions. There is need particularly for those who can make contributions of means and talent to place themselves in position to be used. For there is much to do—an endless amount of work—to establish ourselves in the regions round about, to redeem Zion and establish or fix her curtains.

So we share with the brother quoted, and the people whose opinions he in turn quotes, the hope that a definite and unified program may soon be recognized by all, so that unitedly we can go out and work for that which has become our common understanding.

The signs of the times indicate the wisdom of preparing now against the coming of still other crises and periods of disquietude, doubt, and uncertainty in the world. Our own adversities should press us together in faithful devotion to our ideals, and in humility to do God's will as has so clearly been pointed out to us in the past.

Let us do our immediate tasks, then, and prepare for still greater ones.

Gardens for the Unemployed

Between twenty-five and thirty acres of land in and near Independence, largely composed of vacant city lots, have been offered for the use of unemployed persons during the coming year, says the Independence Examiner. This land will not only furnish enough food for many families, but will raise enough to be canned and otherwise preserved for use next winter; for it is quite certain, we are told, that we must expect unemployment and distress for some time to come. The best thing we can do is to prepare for it.

This work is being sponsored in Independence by Director Balfour of the Civic Relief and Unemployment Association and by Captain Frank McCormick of the Salvation Army.

This excellent plan recommends itself to other citizens and communities elsewhere. It has many advantages. It puts many needy families on a self-supporting and independent basis, and keeps them from the demoralization which dependence upon charity often causes. At the same time it will put to good use much property that is at present idle.

No doubt such a plan could do much over the country to help the citizens and prevent suffering.

Notice

The attention of our readers is called to the two notices on page 281 from Sister Audentia Anderson regarding copies of "Religio" Quarterlies on the Book of Mormon, and a copy of The Ministry of Beauty in the hands of some unidentified borrower. Attention to these two matters will be appreciated.

Reflections

IT CAN HAPPEN TO YOU—

Suppose your child were kidnaped, instead of the Lindbergh baby?

"Oh," says Mr. Average Citizen, "that would never happen to us. We are not wealthy enough!"

Do not be deceived. An evil which begins by striking at the rich, and appears to succeed as this one has, will soon spread until it leaves no home in the country safe. Within a fortnight the same kind of crime was attempted against a less wealthy family.

The kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby is a threat against every American home, and against the safety of every American child. Given a little time, kidnaping can strike at any one of us. Citizens must unite against this horrible and brutal crime.

THE RIGHTS OF LITTLE CHILDREN—

We believe that every child has a right to be safe; safe from the violent hands of those who would carry them off, perhaps torture and maim them, in order to compel their parents to pay huge sums of money. The rights of childhood are a part of the sacred rights of the home. We must maintain these rights at all costs or no rights that we have are worth anything to us.

Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." He saved them from the roughness of the rude hands that would have separated them from His love. Are we living up to the responsibility that we owe to protect them?

THE GOVERNMENT MUST PROTECT—

The government is obligated to protect its citizens, or it loses its value and prestige as a government. When the forces of law and order become too weak to protect the lives, property, and families of the citizens, we are in a truly pitiable state. But when the forces of law and order are found in collusion with the predatory elements of society, corrupted by the bribe money that they offer, the situation is worse than disgraceful. Legislators, judges, and civic administrators everywhere should realize that when they weaken the government through inefficiency they are destroying the very machinery by which they and we are to survive.

THE COSTLINESS OF GOVERNMENT—

If costliness of government were an index of its strength and efficiency, ours should be among the best, strongest, and safest on earth. Unfortunately, as the cost of all other things goes down, the cost of government keeps going up. And as the price rises the quality of return that the taxpayers get for their money grows worse.

The world has come to this pass, that many thinking men and women see that either the cost of government must come down, or the government itself will break down.

RIGHTEOUS GOVERNMENT—

We are led to the conclusion that a clean and economical government can not be built and operated, no matter how fine the system, with wicked and corrupt men holding a considerable number of the offices. Godly government can only be had with a righteous people.

Of sham and pretense, of hollow character and tainted reputations, of hypocrisy and mouth-idealism, we have too much. The time must come when more men of real integrity and fearlessness must participate in the affairs of government, or the government itself weaken and perish. Honest people must rescue it from the hands of the dishonest.

We can not believe that the nation suffers from any lack of able and honest men. They simply revolt at the tremendous tasks they would have to face in attempting to clean up the government. They are too busy with other matters. Yet the very welfare of the nation upon which their prosperity depends is endangered, and they will have to bear their share in the responsibility if it fails.

A book may deal with stars, or starfish, with international or domestic relations, with organic evolution, political revolution, or the brain's convolutions, it may be poetry or science, philosophy or sociology, but if it quickens the imagination to lofty flights, warms the heart to generous deeds, and clarifies thinking about man as a citizen of God's world and about men as comrades in the great task of making that world a fitter dwelling place for God's children, it is a religious book.—The Christian Century.

The older generation never criticizes itself so severely as when it denounces the sins of the younger generation, for it was the older people who shaped the conditions under which youth has grown up.—The British Weekly.

Many Errors in Beardsley's Book

CHURCH HISTORIAN FINDS A COMPOUND OF IMPOSSIBLE TALES IN THE LATE WORK, "JOSEPH SMITH AND HIS MORMON EMPIRE."

By S. A. Burgess

We hesitate to ask space in the Saints' Herald to review another book with its attack upon Joseph Smith, but Joseph Smith and His Mormon Empire, by Harry M. Beardsley has been reviewed in so many different magazines and newspapers, and clippings have been sent by so many of our readers to the office of the First Presidency, that it is only fair that a general statement at least should be made.

At the very time we were examining this book we were interested to note an item taken from a Harvard publication attempting to correct a story regarding Theodore Roosevelt. In substance the statement was that it is strange how often such a story is corrected instead of revised, when it is not only contrary to known facts but is improbable and even impossible under the known circumstances. In the case of Joseph Smith the motivation behind the various stories is not at all difficult to understand. The first book by Howe was not published until the '30's. The affidavits taken were two and three years after the church was started, but examined they are not so much different from what one would expect in a hatred-infected religious atmosphere. Tucker's volume was published many years after the death of Joseph Smith. On the other hand there are statements published from his neighbors speaking very highly of his family. The things of which they are guilty are poverty and the claim of divine communication.

The story of the Solomon Spaulding Romance has been quite fairly answered as pointed out in the Herald of January 27, 1932, by President James H. Fairchild, of Oberlin College. President Fairchild comments upon a point we have repeatedly noticed, that is, how these stories grow. Each writer adds his imagination to his affidavits, then the next one takes that imagination for gospel truth and adds his own further imagination.

Mr. Beardsley's book can not be called really a biography. His approach is not that of a scholar or student. It is that of the newspaper man who wants to write a novel and who therefore gathers up the worst stories he can find and adds enough imagination to make a consistent whole, even though a vicious picture.

Now here it may be well to refer to a story told of George Washington in a recent number of the Ladies' Home Journal, which states in substance that a boy pushed his way to the front, hearing that George Washington was there, and then called in a high treble, "Why, mamma, it is only a man."

Joseph Smith was a man, enjoying outward sports, but we know of no authentic evidence that he wrestled on the Sabbath Day and attended horse races, or got drunk. He was a man. When under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, a prophet, but at other times, as he himself and his wife and others have said, he was a man, but we believe a good man.

Much is made by Mr. Beardsley of the statement that we "prefer to believe" that he was not a polygamist. We admit that preference but it is a preference that extends to all other men. We would prefer to believe that Brigham Young was not a polygamist, but the evidence is against us. We prefer to believe that men are honorable and will hold firmly at least to the legal presumption that a man should be considered innocent until proven guilty. Of the assertions with regard to Joseph Smith and polygamy there are instances so vile that we can not recommend the book for general reading. We do not mean in this to set a restriction against anyone desiring to read but merely that it is not of such a character that if it dealt with any other subject it could be recommended for general reading. These assertions are made up partly of the assertions of others, partly of the further imagination of the writer.

With regard to Bennett and his book, the conclusions reached by the Illinois Historical Society should be sufficient. With regard to later conditions in Nauvoo, statements of contemporary writers near the time, like Smucker, should be conclusive, but in this we should remember that later editions were brought out by other writers who added some assertions of their own. The letter of Dr. R. D. Foster sent in 1874, while not directly discussing this question, constitutes in itself a denial, for certainly he would never have written so favorably of Joseph Smith, jr., if there were any truth in these allegations. The principal evidence is of course that furnished by Utah. That has been answered many times and is answered by the testimony offered in the Temple Lot suit and is answered by Judge Phillips' decision in that suit.

That polygamy was introduced in Utah, alas, we can not deny. That women were "sealed" to Joseph Smith also appears to be fairly established. That children were born that were alleged to be his children is also true, but we must remember that his oldest son, Joseph Smith, the late president of our church traveled through Utah several times in search of any child who could claim to be a physical descendant of Joseph Smith, jr., and stated to the day of his death that he found no evidence there of any woman occupying the position of wife to his father other than his mother Emma Hale, and no child that could reasonably be traced as his physical descendant. He was told many times by women that they were married to his father, but under examination their testimony gave way just as it did in the Temple Lot suit.

But there are some who claim to be children of Joseph Smith, among others Heber J. Grant, president of the Utah church. We are informed that he made this claim in the East some years ago to the surprise of many, but it now appears in the Centennial History of the church, volume six, as published in Salt Lake City. The statement and his claim is that his mother was sealed to Jedidiah M. Grant for time and to Joseph Smith, jr., for eternity. This marriage took place in the year 1855, more than eleven years after the death of Joseph Smith. Heber J., the only child of this union, was born in November, 1856, more than twelve years and four months after the death of Joseph Smith, jr., but by the peculiarities of their marriage system they claim that the mother who belongs to Joseph Smith in eternity will take with her her children and therefore state clearly that the church is now presided over by a literal descendant of Joseph Smith. It is well that such evidence be kept clearly in mind when such stories are repeated.

Further, we noted from personal observation that there were a number out there who took delight in exaggerating stories. It was considered quite a joke to relate such stories and shock some innocents from the East.

We will not take space here again to answer the accusations. They have been answered in many tracts of the church, including Joseph Smith in His Own Defense and Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist? and several tracts by the late President Joseph Smith, as well as by articles in the Saints' Herald.

Mr. Beardsley relies quite largely on Doctor Wyl and his book, Mormon Portraits, though it is not worthy. There is hardly a single instance where testimony given is at first or even secondhand. It is perhaps not surprising that statements made and repeated should finally come to be believed. That has occurred too often in human experience, and that, once told, further stories are told to give them reality. It may interest some of our readers to learn such fantastic tales as the following: that Joseph Smith possessed such immense political power that Abraham Lincoln, Judge Douglas, and the governors of the states courted his favor and the state legislature dared not oppose his wishes; also that a proof of the character of the Book of Mormon is that one of the islands was named Omandagus; that scores of our young men go each year to Nauvoo to sleep in Joseph Smith's room in the Mansion House before setting out on their missionary journeys in behalf of the Reorganized Church; again, that the Book of Mormon represents Nephi, a Jew, as classifying swine among the useful animals. In this last case the evidence is that the Jaredites, who are represented as coming from the tower of Babel about 2200 B. C., are represented as having swine. They, of course, were not Hebrews, let alone Jews.

The names of the first six members of the church are incorrectly given. It is alleged that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery went to the Whitmer home because Oliver Cowdery was infatuated with the daughter whom he afterwards married, and she was aged twelve years at the time, which is a little far-fetched, but not as far-fetched as some other stories. There are quite a number of such statements clearly inaccurate and untrue. We are taking for granted that our readers will know that all of the statements above are rather absurd, but we will mention one more, and that is the allegation that Emma Smith was anxious to get rid of her husband, that she opposed the church and attempted to expose it, but that this denial of belief in the divinity of her husband's inspiration returned to haunt her when young Joe had prospects of success in the "propheteering business," so she attempted to deny the earlier evidence. Such a statement is made twice. The second is that her effort to cut herself off from the Mormons is more significant of her real conviction than is her deathbed statement, and it alleges she only drew back when it appeared that Joseph third had a splendid opportunity to get started in a lucrative business.

These are rather mild instances of the vicious inference that Mr. Beardsley attempts to draw from every fact and allegation. He refuses to distinguish between her allegiance to her husband and the original doctrine of the church, her allegiance to the restoration all through her life, and her rejection of Brigham Young as a leader and of the abominations which he introduced. He ignores the fact that in the withdrawing from Brigham Young she was not withdrawing her testimony to the work. But he does offer one alleged piece of evidence. He states that she made statements to the representative of the Quincy Whig and the New York Herald that she had never taken any stock in her husband's revelations. For this he gives as reference Gregg, The Prophet of Palmyra, pages 538, 539. In Gregg there appears such an alleged letter but from the New York Sun. Such a letter was published in the New York Sun, December 9, 1895, (letter dated November 20, 1895) but it is not true as alleged by Mr. Beardsley that she made no denials at the time, because in the Times and Seasons, volume six, page 1096, there appears such a denial. It seems from this that she took the earliest opportunity within reason to publish such a denial. We must remember that there was no rapid mail service at that time and the Times and Seasons was published only semimonthly, hence her denial must be considered prompt. This denial included a letter addressed to the New York Sun for publication making again such denial. It appears that she also wrote to James Arlington Bennett, to whom it was alleged the original letter was sent and that he had this letter published in the New York Sun for January 25, 1896. This letter to Mr. Bennett is not as detailed as was her letter published in the Times and Seasons but it is a prompt and emphatic denial.

The history of this has been written in the Saints' Herald heretofore and can be found in the following issues in particular: Saints' Herald, volume 49, page 1194, et seq.; volume 52, page 267, et seq.

Autobiography

IX.—LABORS IN NORTHWEST IOWA, 1892

By James Franklin Mintun

My labors this year began at Little Sioux on January 1, where I was laboring the last week in the previous year. These labors consisted of preaching, visiting and administering to the sick and suffering, giving special instructions in the use of the Inspired Holy Scriptures in the Sunday school work, and comforting the mourners. Here two were baptized as a result of late labor, one remaining true to her covenant.

Faith to Be Healed

About January 10, Lois, the daughter of Sister Alice E. Cobb, who had married Mr. Newton Silsby, was living in Louisiana, where she was taken with fatal illness. The affliction was contagious, so that it was dangerous for any one of the family to go to her. She lived but a short time. To know what to do was a problem as her husband was sick, so that he could not look after the remains. Upon learning that her husband was a Mason, and there being no Saints in that part, so far as known by us, I advised the brother, Peter Silsby, who was living in Little Sioux, and had married one of the daughters of Sister Cobb, to go with me to the officers of the local lodge of Masons in Little Sioux and request them to wire to the local lodge in the place where his brother lay sick, of the conditions. We went and the lodge cared for the sick as well as the dead, preparing the body for shipment to the family at Little Sioux. Some of the family went as far as the "Transfer Station" at Council Bluffs, when they learned that the body was on the way to them, and they returned. I spent several days assisting and comforting the family through their grief, and God marvelously ministered to them, as the family testified, and will testify today, if living.

With Brother George M. Scott, the president of the Little Sioux Branch, we administered to many sick about this time, and all were blessed. One sister, Sarah W. Conyers, to whom we administered, was instantly healed of a serious sickness. This sister was one who had faith to be healed. She had been administered to many times during her life to my knowledge, several times in which I had assisted, and she was always immediately restored. Not only was she relieved of her sickness, but her former strength was almost immediately restored. Her last sickness was one in which she was paralyzed, her mind being affected so that she could not exercise her faith to be healed as before. This was one of the rare cases, and one of the most prominent in my experience where one had the gift to be healed.

I continued at Little Sioux till the twenty-fourth of the month when one more was baptized; and then began labor at and near Mondamin, but the interest here was poor. I then began a series of services at the Jones Schoolhouse again, continuing for some time on the account of an apparent interest. I was cared for by one not of the church, a family of noble principles by the name of Jones. I continued there, at Moorhead, and then at Little Sioux till February 18, when I came to Sioux City and occupied at the courthouse, lodging at Brother M. P. Berg's. The attendance was small but the Spirit indicated that in the west and north part of the city a good work would finally be done. The dailies, both Journal and Tribune, were kind in printing articles submitted, and publishing notices of meetings without cost.

By a dream I was instructed to come at once to Little Sioux, where I learned upon my arrival I was greatly needed. With my other work I was busied in assisting to correct the records of branches and the district in agreement with the general records, and copying the records of branches in new records. This with my Sunday school work engaged a part of my time during the first part of the year.

I met with the Sunday school convention at Persia, March 11, which was followed by the district conference. At this convention I gave a talk on the best methods of conducting primary classes. At the conference I assisted to preside, and to ordain Brother W. R. Davidson, now of Washington, District of Columbia, and D. A. Hutchings, both to the office of elder.

A Well Filled Record

In my report to the general conference, which was made on April 1, the following items appear among others: Preached 216 times, baptized 17; attended and assisted at 26 sessions of Sunday school and conventions, and administered to 51, 44 of whom were relieved and blessed noticeably at the time.

In preparing to attend the general conference and convention, I prepared by request a talk to be given at the convention. In order to provide finances for my expenses in going and being at the sessions previously mentioned, I "sold my cow," my diary says. The next day after selling the cow I started in company with Brother Charles Derry to the conference, lodging the night of April 2, at Brother Calvin Beebee's, of Council Bluffs. He and his family were great helpers at that time in supporting the church and its work in every department. The subject of the talk given at the convention was "The Sunday School of Today the Church of Tomorrow." . . . On April 8 at the prayer meeting of the conference two prophecies were given. One of the revelations promised increased endowment to the ministry, and further communications from the Lord.

On September 14 I began tent meetings at Ute, Iowa, lodging with Brother John Edwards, one of the isolated Saints, who had held on to his faith. Here I was assisted in the music with Saints from Moorhead, some driving as far as fourteen miles to be there to assist. Those who were my principal assistants were Alice Montague, now Case, and Grace Montague, now Vredenberg. While a few were interested here, yet none were near the kingdom. I was at this time collecting money for the purpose of building the gospel boat, Evanalia, and had up to this time collected $33, given principally by Saints in and near Moorhead. It will be remembered that two of the Moorhead Saints went on a mission to the islands with Brother and Sister Burton, Brother Hubert Case and his wife.

Baptized in the Jordan

I was baptizing several near Moorhead in the stream called Jordan. An incident had occurred some time previous to this, in which Brother Eldrige Montague, the son of Brother George Montague, was in conversation with a minister on baptism. The minister opposed immersion, and the boy—for he was but a boy at the time this occurred—was bringing Scripture in proof of immersion as the proper mode of baptism. These the minister could not refute. The boy further showed that this was the way Jesus was baptized, and the way he was baptized. The minister said, "You were not baptized the same way that Jesus was baptized, for he was baptized in Jordan." The boy said, "I was, too, for I was baptized in Jordan." To this the minister could not reply, for the boy was baptized in the stream called Jordan near Moorhead. To this the minister had no more to say.

The reunion was held this year at Logan, Iowa, from October 1 to 16. During the week I had assisted in putting up the tents and at other work necessary for the reunion. At the beginning of the reunion there were 137 tents erected. This year I was secretary with Gomer R. Wells my assistant.

On the 23rd of October I left for my mission work very early in the morning, and this is the record of my diary: "My little children all took breakfast with me, and bid me 'Good-bye,' with their little hearts filled with sadness. God bless the children and families of the missionaries." So I say now, while I write the history of my life.

On November 4-6 I attended a convention of Sunday school workers at Deloit of the Gallands Grove District, by special invitation. On Saturday, the 5th, there was a prayer meeting at which the gifts of the Spirit were manifested in tongues and interpretation, through which the Lord made known the calling of two and gave reproof to one of the priesthood for slothfulness for not doing what he could.

On Sunday, November 13, I occupied the Methodist Episcopal Church in Onawa, by invitation of the minister. He was chided for letting me have the church, yet he was present at the service, his wife playing the organ for the meeting. This was on the twenty-second of the month and I occupied at Smithland in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church the same evening. Here I found a people at this time quite willing to listen, some of whom afterwards came into the church. Continued here till the twenty-eighth.

I went from here to Correctionville, where I found a daughter of Brother John A. McIntosh, Jennie Hodges, who had been a Saint, long isolated, and had associated with the Baptist Church; but said that she had not been satisfied, and while she had not heard a gospel sermon for fourteen years, and her husband was a nonmember, her heart longed to hear another gospel sermon. Near here I preached in a schoolhouse to one of my smallest audiences, three persons. They gave good attention, and I felt well in spirit in preaching to them. One of the causes of such a small audience was a severe storm.

On December 2, the convention and conference began at Little Sioux. My report for the three months previous has this record: preached forty-five sermons, baptized nine, attended five Sunday schools and one convention in the Gallands Grove District. James McKiernan was present at this conference. He was assistant missionary in charge of western Iowa this year.

I then made an effort to interest the people of Blencoe, but their ears were turned away from hearing. I was very kindly entertained by the family of Mr. Ernest L. Hogue, who was afterwards one of the members of the Iowa Legislature.

When I returned home I found Brother McKiernan holding meetings at Magnolia, in which services I assisted.

Thus ended another year of active work, with results as varied in character as it is possible to imagine; yet I felt that I had done some little good, but not near all that I had desired; but I had done what I could.

The Ministry of Beauty

By STANTON DAVIS KIRKHAM

Some years ago I loaned a gift copy of the above book to some Latter Day Saint visiting in our home in Omaha. Who it was is an item which has escaped my memory; hence I take this method of trying to locate the long-missing volume. I should deeply appreciate having it returned to me, at the following (our present) address:

AUDENTIA ANDERSON

Lincoln, Nebraska

Report of Department of Statistics for 1931

By C. L. Olson

During the year 1931 the following changes occurred in the total enrollment of the church:

Numbers 2, 3, and 4, of the Study Course in Book of Mormon, called "Lessons in Nephite History," by Louise Palfrey Sheldon.

This course was printed for use in Religio classes in 1908-1910, but was reprinted in 1924. I have Number 1, and greatly desire to complete the set. Please communicate with Audentia Anderson, 837 South Fifteenth Street, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Real work is the only way to fulfill your highest ambition to a satisfying degree; just trying will keep you busy, and we are only happy when we are busy. So if your first venture fails, tear it up, use the pieces for a foundation to begin all over again, and hope that the experience teaches you to build better.—Gene Stratton-Porter.

I believe in prayer; it puts you in league with the Infinite. It fills you with a divine power; it endows you with rich sympathy. "Lord, teach us to pray." Let no man think it is easy to pray.—John R. Ewers.

Communicable Diseases

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Man may well be considered his worst enemy, for he is the greatest source of all the communicable diseases. The lower animals are next. Nearly every epidemic disease is peculiar to man. Under experimental conditions, these diseases may be communicable to lower animals, but are not common to them under normal or natural conditions. Food, soil, water, and air may, sometimes, convey infections and communicable diseases. Most germs of the communicable class, soon die in air, soil or water. They do not grow or multiply under adverse conditions of our environment. One of the great advancements of sanitary science in the past few years, is the fact that such diseases must be fought in the light of an infection. Much research work has been upon the most common communicable diseases, such as typhoid fever, yellow fever, cerebrospinal meningitis, tuberculosis, and others. It is known that man may contract diseases from the lower animals, especially the domesticated, such as rabies from the dog, maltafever from the goat, tuberculosis from cattle, also hoof and mouth disease, animal parasites from meat, plague from the rat, glanders from the horse, and many other diseases that might be mentioned.

Nearly all infectious diseases depend upon man's own control over himself, but, unfortunately, through ignorance, he does not grasp the great benefits that might be derived from proper prevention, for instance such diseases as malaria and syphilis. Unfortunately, while inoculation against blackleg or anthrax is easily controlled upon cattle, man, himself, frequently rebels against some of the greatest specific cures. This is one of the greatest hindrances to public health work, for the success in the prevention of communicable diseases depends, almost wholly, upon education and cooperation. It can not be denied that preventive medicine is one of the greatest social aids to the human family.

The transference of diseases may, for convenience, be considered under three general heads: first, direct; second, indirect; third, through intermediate channels. Contact infection is considered under the direct means of transference, while through water, food, soil, air, etc., is an indirect means of transmission. The intermediate are the insect-borne diseases. The most usual method of transference is from one person to another, but many are easily spread through routes of travel, water and milk.

THE GOSPEL FORUM

Under this heading we shall be glad to receive and publish articles and letters of interest to our readers on the doctrine and work of the church. Writers are responsible for their own views. Other views on subjects discussed here will be received if of sufficient interest.

A Declaration of the King's Law

XII.—"OUR REDEEMER"

By Kenneth B. Curtis

Every individual has his conception of Christ, our Redeemer. Therefore, the subject is a delicate one and no doubt this article will be more or less criticized for even attempting to place it within the bounds of a story. However, one must remember also many people will be sadly disappointed in their expectations when Zion is finally redeemed.

The ascendancy of science over theology today tends to place temporal power above spiritual power. True, the mind of man is spiritual, but only in a sense, that is, as we would consider an abstract of the "all" in a temporal existence. (Romans 8.) The spirit of God is in all things; but so is the spirit of Shakespeare in literature; yet that spirit isn't Shakespeare, neither is the spirit of Christ in men, Christ. The spirit of Christ, in this respect, is an ideal which furnishes man with an incentive to climb. It is easy to misconstrue the tangible into an egotistical thought. (1 Corinthians 2.)

Let us go farther. What all men have accomplished, as the old-time psychologist would point out, was accomplished while man was in a conscious and sane state. But Doctor Freud has propounded the theory of the subconscious mind from his experiments in psycho-analysis. This theory brings into relief the workings of the natural laws of the human creation. For instance, man's heart beats not because he consciously deems it necessary but because it's a natural law of life, irrespective of consciousness. Therefore, we must agree, God works, even though we may not know it. Then the conscious mind of man is only a supplement and not always dependable or even needed at times. If we were to continue in this theory without careful observation we would eventually end with Darwin's theory of evolution and the doctrine of "Ego."

The subconscious mind, as Doctor Freud has reference to it, is another question and one to be seriously considered but the student must beware of doctrinal snags. A few of the tricky ones are spiritualism, reincarnation, predestination, astrology, Darwin's theory of evolution, and many others all luring and enticing. But always our goal is ahead; the path is straight and narrow and the climb at times difficult. We are seeking spiritual light and our Redeemer. (John 1:1-15.)

God likens Zion, the community or the church, to a woman, and Christ as her husband; the individual stewards as their children. Now in seeking for Christ we must consider a man and his wife. Their relationship is close and they are known as one but the husband isn't the wife nor the wife the husband. They are two different beings even though they are known as one. Therefore, the Spirit of Christ may be in the individual or the community, but that isn't Christ, our Redeemer. (See The Song of Solomon.)

We must remember of all the higher theories regarding man's mortal existence in connection with God (the subliminal self, etc.), many of them deal with a power given to man by God as a necessary sense, even as the sight or smell is a necessary sense but which is not God himself or even his Son, Christ. Before we go further let us bear in mind the five senses of man are to his body as any controlling instruments are to a motor car. Still with all these fine instruments you would never think of turning the car loose without a driver. Naturally the same applies to the human body. The subconscious mind, as its motor, is all tuned up with blood circulating, etc., ready to go as the individual enters into life. Still there must be a driver. Now who is the driver of the human body? Your conscious mind. Further, as the driver is governed by traffic laws, so is the mind supposed to be governed by this sixth sense, if I may be permitted to term man's divine calling in life. And it is this sense that is a stumblingblock to so many students of theology. Therefore, we must search elsewhere for our Redeemer. He is not our talents. (Matthew 25.)

Let us consider the workings of a spiritual endowment or a quickening of the body, as when one is spiritually born. As man spiritually must have, of a necessity, decided to come to this earth so is it necessary for man to decide whether he will reside with Christ in heaven after physical death. If his desire is with Christ, then his actions must symbolize that physical death and spiritual birth to come in the waters of baptism. The actual rebirth of the spirit in the flesh, however, will only come according to our submissiveness to the cause. In short, the suggestion of Christ, a universal power, is a fixed will governing all who resort to it in humility and faith. Consider hypnotism. Do not confuse this with talents or man's divine calling. This thought opens the gates to a distinctive working knowledge of the Holy Ghost in contrast to the being of Christ and also the function of prayer. If the human mind is so created that when the individual, in all faith and humility, does attempt to link itself with a higher intelligence by prayer, it immediately appears that Christ, as a representative of this higher intelligence, is the possessor of a brain. The will is a faculty of the brain. And as the truth is manifested to the individual by the power of the Holy Ghost (John 15:26), we, therefore, recognize the Holy Ghost as a carrier between the minds of God, Christ and man, and which is likened unto a dove, a bird of peace and love; used sometimes by man literally to carry messages. (Make special note of Acts of the Apostles, chapters 1 and 2.)

Now why do we seek Christ? To attain a higher plane of existence. This applies to all phases of life. For instance, there are numerous forces discovered, theorized and titled by man that present a problem of no real consequence unless the student seeks to compare them with the mechanics of the gospel of Christ. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." (Matthew 6:33.) Among many of these abnormal scientific discoveries are conditions which correspond to many divine talents found in the church of the living God. As there are freaks of nature in bodily form, it stands to reason there are freak talents. There is only one way to receive a divine gift or talent and that is through the gospel of Christ. (John 10:1-5.)

For illustration, two brothers, affiliated with no particular religious sect, discovered they had ability to heal people simply by placing their hands on an individual's head and praying. But when they attempted to open a sanatorium and commercialize on their ability it disappeared. Again, scientists have studied carefully and attempted to explain in royal fashion (see Doctor Sigmund Freud's works on psycho-analysis) a queer ability known scientifically as "Automatic Writing." "A person who has this power," says W. H. Myers, author of Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death, "may sit absorbed in reading or in conversation, while his hand produces written words or sentences, of which he knows nothing until he afterwards reads them. In some cases the matter so written states facts previously known to the subject but which he is unable to recollect by any voluntary effort. And in rare cases the matter written seems to imply knowledge or capacities which the subject was not believed to possess either by himself or by his friends. Other actions, including connected speech, may be produced in a similar fashion, and in the last case the subject hears and understands the words uttered from his own mouth in the same way only as those from the mouth of another person."

We, as a people, believe in the healing power of the spirit when administered by the proper ones; we believe in divine revelation through the prophet of the church; and we believe in the power of prophecy as "Thus saith the Spirit," etc., as delivered individually by the power of the Holy Ghost. But to obtain these gifts or talents, not only in the priesthood but among the stewards in general, the ordained channels must be recognized. I truly believe this applies to the various trades and arts also. Real ability in the field of endeavor, to my opinion, has not even been scratched yet. The capacities of an individual, regardless of character, who has found the kingdom of heaven are inconceivable. As the Apostle Paul, as Nephi, as Moses, as Enoch all witnessed the kingdom of heaven in one way or another and received that undenyng power, so I truly feel each individual who becomes a steward of Zion must tarry in Zion seeking Christ in prayer and fasting before launching out into the world alone. He must wait for that spiritual endowment that will come from God through Christ and manifest to him that necessary dominant interest or talent to begin with. "And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." (Luke 24: 49.) And while you wait is the time to study your patriarchal blessing. Read and reread it. It will not only comfort you but it will tell you how to find the light of Christ.

We now can visualize one of the important functions of the church in Zion—also the storehouse. People will come to Zion, be made stewards, tarry for a short period doing odd jobs about Zion as students do at college while they're preparing themselves to receive the power of Christ to show them their field of work. Afterwards the way will be opened for them to go into the world if necessary where they are most needed and work as never before for Christ and his church. Again I say the student of community stewardship should study the School of the Prophets found in the Doctrine and Covenants 85: 39; 94: 2; 95: 2; 55: 2, etc. "Go ye out into the world" has a powerful meaning.

As was mentioned before, everyone has his opinion of Christ and I have no intention of forcing my personal ideal upon the reader. Rather, the purpose of this article is merely to show by a scientific way of thinking that there is an individual with body, parts and passions separate from all earthly men, whom we, as a people, will recognize as our leader. His characteristic self is one very seldom analyzed to any degree of correctness. However, there is a Christ, the Son of God, and it behooves us all to recognize that fact and seek to find him. This can be done for it is written: "Seek, and ye shall find." (Matthew 7: 7.)

In concluding this series of articles let me say from a personal standpoint, we must dedicate our lives to Christ but that doesn't necessarily mean we are to preach. I may want to be a business man. I would preach if I were called, but that isn't my dominant interest, I know. I love the drama and I love to write; I would love to combine the two. I know for a certainty a new type of theater is soon to appear. The theater of today is one of the greatest causes for the people having such loose morals. It ridicules law and order, it is a monarchy in business. I have made a very close study of it and I know that the lusts, not only of sex which it fosters, but money, has almost entirely ruined it. It has fostered the power of suggestion of various degrading influences and thought to get by with it but the same influences that it put out are only coming back on its own head and it now is facing destruction. Yes, it is great today. But that greatness is only measured by its filthy money and thoughts. Oh, God, grant us the blessing that we will always want to dedicate our lives to thy service.

The business world has produced many powerful enterprises that can and must be made to function for the good of mankind. Come, the world needs us all, let us fight and pray to rescue business and life from the grips and power of the devil. We can't do it alone, but with the power of Christ nothing is impossible. To the youth in Zion—read and understand, pray and seek for light and your talents. The church debt can be made as naught if we'll all get out and fight. Work for the church and the church will work for us. If we can't find opportunities, let's create them ourselves. And by the stewardship covenant we'll know a friend when we meet him regardless of place or conditions. We, as stewards, will convert the business, the elders of the church, the souls of men, and together we'll all see Christ, church debt or no church debt.

Let us adopt the motto: "Zion's redemption in this generation!" as suggested by the Los Angeles Central Branch of California. If we can only visualize Zion's ideal, the city beautiful, the home of community stewardship. She has her colleges, her churches, her storehouses all for those who fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. (Ecclesiastes 12: 13.) The storehouse must be kept full; the church papers combined for the sake of unity so when the prophet of the church wants to speak all classes of readers may hear him. The church debt paid. The question is asked, Whose fault is this debt? No one's. God could have easily enough kept us out of debt, but consider the following: "And as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from birth. And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." (John 9: 1-3.)

"Capacity never lacks opportunity," says an eminent statesman, "it can not remain undiscovered, because it is sought by too many who are anxious to utilize it daily. Whoever undertakes to build a house, to cultivate a farm, to work a mine, to obtain relief from pain, to maintain a legal controversy, or to perform any function of useful life, is actively watching for every man qualified to aid him. To appreciate the thoroughness of the search it is necessary only to realize the number of persons engaged in all these pursuits and undertakings throughout the world. From such a search no form of ability can remain concealed. If the possessor of capacity thought to hide himself he would be discovered and induced to employ his ability for the benefit of those who need it. To be successful, then, one has but to qualify himself thoroughly for some occupation. Every man has some natural aptitude. In these days the training by which natural aptitude is developed into effective ability can be obtained by every youth. Time occupied in worrying about opportunities, openings, and starts, is time wasted; because to every capable man a start and an opportunity are always furnished by the necessities of other men."

"Ye can not behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the designs of your God concerning those things which shall come hereafter, and the glory which shall follow, after much tribulation. For after much tribulation cometh the blessings. Wherefore the day cometh that ye shall be crowned with much glory; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 2.)

[The End.]

In spite of the weariness, exhaustion, and pressure of crowded days, Jesus felt for him, at least, more necessary than rest or sleep or food was the opportunity for uninterrupted prayer. He recognized thereby a value which we, in the hurry and confusion of our busy lives, are very likely to overlook.—Lucius H. Bugbee.

I do not know what I may appear to the world; but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the seashore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.—Isaac Newton.

Our Present Needs

FOOD IS BEING WASTED AS PEOPLE FACE STARVATION, ONEIDA CLERGYMAN DECLARES

REV. FRANK C. MESLE OF REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST URGES CHRISTIAN SPIRIT IN DAILY LIFE

The Reverend Frank C. Mesle, pastor of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, today writes for "The Herald" the weekly Sunday sermon, a feature of these pages. Mr. Mesle's topic is "Our Present Needs," a New Year's message.

"Our Present Needs—Ye are complete in Him."

"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him; rooted and built up in Him, and established in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power.—Colossians 2: 6-10.

"As we enter into the New Year we find many business people engaged in taking inventory to determine the measure of progress made during the past year, to learn from the mistakes of the past, and to outline a program that will more effectively enable them to carry out their purpose and reach the goal set.

"This is good procedure to be followed by Christian men and women everywhere, and would be followed if we were as interested in checking on our spiritual progress as we are on our material program. We should take time to ask: 'What progress have we made spiritually, and what are our present needs individually and as a nation?' Can it be said that we are complete in Him? We call ourselves civilized and like to think we are a Christian nation, yet men, women, and children starve in our cities while grain is dumped in rural fields and fruit decays in our orchards.

"It is reported that cargoes of bananas have been dumped into the Atlantic Ocean because the market is overstocked with them. Factory wheels stand idle and goods glut the warehouses waiting vainly for buyers, who, impoverished and unemployed, live in rags and hovels. The spectacle of wasting abundance, beside dire want is a farce, made shameful by widespread and tragic suffering. We who call ourselves civilized and Christian have pitied China and India, where the overflowing crops of one region can not be taken to the starving population of another because there are no railroads; we have railroads, but with us it is no more than the thickness of a piece of green paper that keeps the hand of the hungry from the rich and wasting surpluses that the land has produced. In other words, we have too much of everything, yet many are underfed, without clothes enough to keep warm, and inadequately housed. We are the richest nation in the world, yet we have the most unemployment and the most crime.

"This is enough to remind us that an examination of our progress reveals many things in our national and individual life that require the application of corrective measures before we can feel proud of our advance in civilization and Christianity. The inference of the text is that in Jesus Christ is revealed the full measure of man's needs—'Ye are complete in Him.'

"The conditions mentioned above exist because somehow we have failed to understand and apply the principles of Jesus Christ. We are not complete, there is want, suffering, sorrow, crime that need not be. These conclusions are a fair result of a casual inventory of our progress. During the past years we have let the warriors of the world try their hand at the solutions of the world's problems and have failed. The politicians of the world have tried their hand without success, doubt and skepticism have produced no better results, even churchianity has fallen short of meeting the world's needs. But, it can not be said that Christ and Christianity have failed to meet the needs of mankind. We have not as yet had faith and courage to give Christ a fair trial in the solution of our problems. Having tried everything else and failed, would not the result of our inventory suggest that we outline a new program that we may more effectively meet the present needs and correct the serious defects we find in our present-day method of doing things. I think so.

"A prominent divine has this to say of the church (and we are a part of the church): 'I am more and more convinced that the church, as it now stands, is not measuring up to its obligations, because it has lost sight of its real mission in the world. In order to meet the challenge of this crisis, it must first of all define its own mission. In order to do that, it must face and answer a preliminary question: Is Jesus Christ the unique, divine Son of God, with an authoritative revelation and power to realize His program? If it can give this question an affirmative answer, the mission of the church is clear—it is to take Christ's program seriously and make its realization the supreme thing in life. What is this program? Jesus put it into the most challenging sentence that has been uttered in all human history. 'All authority is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations (not from all nations, but of all nations) teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.' If that means anything it means an immediate challenge to the world to recognize Christ's authority and His program as the only program that can warrant lasting peace and cure the many perplexing problems that confront us at the present time.

"The program of Jesus is to make disciples of all nations, convert all of us to acknowledge Him as the Son of God, cause us to realize that He did come to us with an authoritative message or revelation, and that He has power to realize His program, but in the realization of this great program man must be a willing instrument though whom God, Christ and the Holy Spirit can work. God working in man will enable man to realize the program of Jesus. Jesus said of Himself, "I am the Way, the truth and the light," "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." John said, 'Unto as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God.' The above scriptural quotations suggest to us the part that Jesus takes in the divine plan to build a new and better world.

"It is not enough that we believe these things about Jesus. It is not enough that we profess faith in all the high ideals embodied in His teaching. For too long we have affirmed our faith in words—but by action denied the vital demands upon us, we have not yet learned to live the program of Jesus—We are not yet complete in Him, there is still too wide a gap between what we say we believe and what we do, or between the word and the flesh. In Jesus the word became flesh and dwelt among us.

"We suggest as a resolution for the New Year that we assume the task of closing the wide gap that we find between our beliefs and our conduct, thus translating the program of Jesus Christ in terms of human conduct, and changing this world into the kingdom of heaven, thus applying corrective measures, that the unchristian conditions that cause so much misery, sorrow and dire want may be entirely removed from among men. The church and its members must assume this responsibility or it will not be done. We may seek to excuse ourselves by

Australasian Mission Is Alert to Church Needs

The members of the Southern New South Wales District presidency are just now very much occupied with a progressive program of preaching and teaching throughout the district. The same is true of the presidents of the other districts in the Australasian Mission. Every man seems to have a definite job and to be doing his best to attend to it.

Elder W. J. Vaughan, who has labored in Sydney for a number of years, has been transferred to Northern New South Wales, and has taken up residence in the town of Wingham. His new field has seven branches and he expects to maintain a monthly circuit which will include practically all points. He will travel by auto and serve isolated members within a radius of two hundred miles.

Elder A. V. Robinson who has been located in the Northern New South Wales District for some years, has been transferred to the Newcastle end of the Southern New South Wales District. Here he will serve four branches and a group or two and quite a number of isolated Saints.

Guildford Branch celebrated its second anniversary February 14, with a day of special services. Fine church school and church programs were enjoyed by large audiences. This branch is about twenty miles south of Sydney. Attached to it is a group about forty-five miles west of Sydney. Its members are very earnest in seeking to spread and uphold the angel message.

A very successful parliamentary debate on the establishment of Zion, extending over several weeks, was recently conducted in the Balmain Church. The debaters were all young people, some members of the Kimmor Klub, the Balmain Public Speaking Club, and a class of boys from the Leichhardt Church School. The work done by these young people was very creditable. We are hoping soon to publish the speeches and the bill which they constructed as an educational course.

Just now we are preparing our work in connection with the Australasian Sacrifice months. We trust that it will be as successful as the sacrifice week of last year.

A rather pretentious program has been prepared for our passing the responsibility on to conditions over which we feel we have no control, such as the State, industry, economic laws, over-production and a host of other causes, but let me remind you that all politics, business and social life is our product as individuals and the measure of the Christ ideal that has touched our lives is reflected in the way we carry on in politics, business and social activities. And an honest inventory of our day by day activities will convince us that the ideals of Jesus have not been seriously worked out in our lives.

"The supreme need at the present time is to take the program of Jesus seriously into all of life, seriously enough so that it will bring about a desirable and needed change in all the essentials of life, political, business, social three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. 'As ye therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk in Him' because 'ye are complete in Him.'" mission conference, which will take place March 20 to 27. As the date synchronizes with that of the opening of the Sydney Harbor Bridge (March 19), we are sure of a large attendance from all parts of the mission. We look for a decided spiritual uplift as a result of the gathering.

I am leaving Sydney tonight (February 16) at ten o'clock, by steamer bound for Brisbane, Queensland, where I shall conduct a missionary series for two weeks and incidentally do some teaching regarding the sacrifice months. As this is summer time and I shall be near the Tropic of Capricorn, I am taking my light suits. I hope for a good time among the good Saints and friends there and trust that the series will be productive of much good.

Alabama Young People Are Active

Tithing Project Program Goes Forward

McKenzie, Alabama, March 6.—It has been a number of weeks since I reported the activities here in the Southland, especially in McKenzie. We are all working hard, and I sincerely believe we are growing. Our prayer meeting attendance in all the groups is ranging around a hundred. The young people meet sixty strong each week, and such response I have never seen. Last week we had sixty-seven young people present, thirteen prayers and nineteen testimonies.

Last Sunday morning I saw this congregation—a household—touched as I have never seen them before. We did not have a regular service, but a special service with four young people doing the speaking. Rogene Odom talked on "Zion as God's Plan for Saving Men." Harriet Carpenter talked on "The Necessity of Being a Steward." Evins Williamson talked on "Why not Make This a Zionistic Community?" while Lula Odom's theme was "Youth and Age Working Together." Young and old sat that hour moved by the Spirit of God, listening to four high school pupils proclaim the gospel of God in plain and meaningful terms. Afterward several said, "To think, it all is coming from the young!" Another asked, "Why haven't we done more toward the redemption of Zion?" Words can not describe the service, the beauty and the simplicity and the Spirit that was present. All I know is that the congregation was moved nearer God than it has been in my acquaintance with it.

Our project work is well under way. We have gained fifty-two inventories and are going for one hundred. There is no one wanting to turn back. The project list has climbed to thirty and is still climbing. The young people have decided to do some work or raise some product the proceeds from which compose their tithing project until the tithing is paid, the rest to go as offering. Our first requirement is an inventory. The list of projects to date is as follows:

William Patrick, proceeds from three peach trees.

Swen Patrick, proceeds from three peach trees.

Allman Salter, one fourth acre of cane.

Gaston Odom, raising twenty chicks to fryers.

Luther Beesley, one fourth acre sweet potatoes.

Otis Weaver, one fourth acre sweet potatoes.

Erby Lee Barlow, one fourth acre sweet potatoes.

Mrs. E. L. Barlow, raising chicks to fryers.

Rogene Odom, proceeds from three peach trees.

Darwin Wiggins, one acre corn.

Lula Odom, twenty chicks to fryers.

Muriss Miniard, one acre of corn.

Willia Sellers, chicks to fryers.

Louis Benton, profits from Sunday's work (he is a mechanic).

Mrs. Louis Benton, chicks to fryers.
 Elwin Wiggins, fifty chicks to fryers.
 Myrtle Barlow, twelve chicks to fryers.
 Marjorie Sellers, turkeys.
 Grace Wiggins, chicks to fryers.
 Lila Odom, two turkeys.
 Aubrey Odom, one fourth acre of truck produce.
 Ammon Salter, one fourth acre sweet potatoes.
 William O. Sellers, fifteen chicks to fryers.
 John Earl Baldwin, profits from ten hens.
 George Parker, one acre corn.
 Sybil Harper, chicks to fryers.
 Christian Hall, donation of one half of earnings from laundry.

Mrs. Lyle D. Flynn, a patch of beans.
 Heaman Salter, one fourth acre of cane.
 Lyle D. Flynn, a patch of beans.
 Freda Sellers, one tenth of income.

Here is a copy of a portion of a letter I received from Freda Sellers who is attending Livingston Normal, at Livingston, Alabama. This in a way sums up the determination of the group: "I don't believe I ever told any one what my project was going to be, but I am going to save about a dime from each dollar I receive this year, anyhow, I'm going to do my best. I feel that I can and go to school. You know it is hard for a girl to live on a dollar a week, buy all she eats, her books and everything—well, that is what I am trying to do. But I am going to sacrifice a dime of that. . . . The only satisfaction I get from going to school here is that maybe I am preparing a way to go to Graceland."

It isn't the amount of money that the projects will bring in that will count, but the fact that we are forgetting ourselves in terms of God and his work. That is our purpose. Our attendance is increasing and we are more busy. The priesthood are visiting. The work is on.

Rock Island District Welcomes President McDowell

Saints of Rock Island District were delighted to have President F. M. McDowell as their guest and speaker at Iowa City, Cedar Rapids, and Rock Island during February. We were happy to renew our acquaintance with one who has had such a deep influence in the lives of our young people, and whose visits to Kewanee and Rock Island a few years ago left an indelible imprint on our memories. Not only by the inspiring words which he spoke, but by the influence of a powerful personality, which corresponds with the Christian ideals which he taught, shall we remember our "Big Brother."

On Saturday evening, February 20, he arrived in Rock Island, coming from Cedar Rapids with Brother W. Woodward. His lecture that evening was of special appeal to department workers, testing the results of our religious education to see if we are really developing Christian character. It is sometimes easy to think of our country as being entirely Christian, but a real Christian is one who considers every man as his brother, who puts personality above material things, and labors with God to bring about his righteousness on earth. A pagan is one who puts material things above personality, and considers his personal comfort and desires above the needs of his fellow men. Are there not then many pagans even in our midst? Can we develop Christians instead of pagans?

Sunday morning the Sunday school was conducted as usual with Brother Woodward teaching the young people's class and President E. R. Davis, the adult men. At the preaching service Brother McDowell gave a powerful sermon on the theme, "Let There Be Light." He listed the qualities which make, or belong to light, such as love, faith, virtue, knowledge, etc., as opposed to the powers which make for darkness, selfishness, greed, ignorance, hate, etc. He quoted the passage: "Light cleaveth unto light; truth rejoiceth in the truth, mercy loveth mercy, and justice continueth her course." Surely, if we feed the fires of right, the souls of men will produce the same light which Jesus came and died to bring into the world.

In the afternoon, after a round table discussion which elucidated the fifteen-year program and other financial policies of the church, a more formal lecture was given by Brother McDowell on the problems of youth. "Let the church speak out against the evil forces and practices of the world," he said in the course of his remarks. A high standard, unswerving fidelity to ideals of honor and purity, a fixed life program which will prepare for definite service of real value, devotion and reverence to the cause of the Christ,—these and other standards he set up as worthy guideposts on the highway of life.

Sunday evening, as on other occasions, a capacity crowd greeted President McDowell. His timely remarks in regard to the present conditions of world—social disintegration and the results of hatred and greed in governments, corporations, and individuals which have brought us to the present crisis—demonstrated the need of compliance with the teachings of Christ. When the love of Christ is enthroned, we shall make this earth a heaven, but until then, we must suffer the results of our choices.

We immensely appreciate the efforts of Brother McDowell in arranging his tour, and we can assure him that his visit with us will bring forth much good fruit.

Stockton, California

Clay and Sutter

This letter to Herald friends commences without notes for October 12, 1931. At that time Stockton Saints took charge of the funeral rites of Sister Annette Brown who passed away at the home of her daughter, Sister Lillian Johnson, of Manteca, California.

On October 25, Modesto Saints assisted in the services at this church when our little brother, Lawrence Haas, was baptized and Brother Curtis Hardy's little son was blessed.

Among the activities of the women in the past four months, we wish to record a plate supper which yielded a fair profit, also the annual bazaar December 2, 3, and 4, which netted over eighty dollars.

The infant daughter of Sister Rawley was blessed, November 15, and given the name, Sarah Kate.

Visiting ministers who have occupied this pulpit have been Apostle M. A. McConley, District President G. P. Levitt, A. E. Frazier, pastor of Modesto Branch; Oscar Ensley, of Sacramento; P. R. Gilbert, of San Jose; Joseph Ensley, of Walnut Grove, and Joseph Bussell, of Sacramento.

Stockton was the meeting place of the district conference which convened February 27, with a fairly good representation from the district. The first meeting was called at two thirty Saturday afternoon, G. P. Levitt in charge. By motion the conference put itself in charge of the district presidency, and principal business items were disposed of at this session. Recommendations of names for ordination were approved as: Brother Roberts and Brother Godfrey, of Fresno, to the office of elder, and Brother McDonald, to the office of priest; Brother Roamer, of Ukiah, to the office of teacher. These ordinations were provided for.

The first meeting Sunday was an ordination service which opened at nine o'clock. Following the ordinations, the service became a prayer and testimony meeting continuing until eleven thirty. The meeting was of a high spiritual order, the gift of prophecy being given four times.

If the spirit of this conference can be taken as an index of that prevailing through the church, the high quorums need have no doubt of the good results to be expected from the program outlined for the church for the next few years.

At two thirty in the afternoon Sister Blohm, of Sacramento, conducted the class in Religious Education, which clearly indicated the good coming to the church workers from her faithful and untiring services.

Monument Commemorates Beginning of Restoration Movement in the South Seas

Erected at Mahu, Tubuai

On October 28, 1931, the membership of the church in Tubuai, under my direction, erected a monument on the site of the first church building housing the activities of the first branch of the Restoration in the islands of the South Seas.

In the early part of 1843, four missionaries, Addison Pratt, B. F. Grouard, Noah Rogers, and K. Hanks were appointed to open up the mission now known as the Society Islands Mission. They sailed from New Bedford, Massachusetts, October 9, 1843, and after several months at sea, during which time Mr. Hanks died, landed at Mahu, Tubuai, on April 30, 1844. Missionary work was begun immediately among the natives and a number of English-speaking sailors who were building a boat there. Eleven were baptized and a branch was organized at Mahu July 29, 1844.

The history of the Restoration Movement in Tubuai is much the same as in America as the Utah Mormon apostasy affected even this far-distant island.

Addison Pratt remained at Tubuai until after the murder of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young's subsequent usurpation of power. Returning to America in 1852, he cast his lot with the Utah Mormon Church. Despite the fact that Pratt's return to America left the Saints without a foreign leader, they were steadfast to the truths of the gospel when Tapuni, a native elder of the Reorganization from one of the other islands, visited them in 1892.

Tapuni, not knowing the exact standing of Addison Pratt after the death of Joseph, the prophet, rebaptized all who had been baptized by Pratt and his native successors. The Mormon Church on hearing of his work, immediately sent two foreign missionaries to Tubuai to counteract Tapuni's influence. They were successful in converting to the Mormon faith a part of the members who had been rebaptized by Tapuni. (Polygamy had not yet been taught and has never been practiced in Tubuai.) These two Mormon missionaries, acting on Brigham Young's example in 1847 in Utah, rebaptized the people who had been baptized first by Addison Pratt and his native successors, and later rebaptized by Tapuni. It was then, in 1892, that the division of the believers in the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith began.

The Tubuai branches, being so far away from the main body of the membership of the mission, have not received the help that should have been given to them, yet they have been true to the church, and through proselyting gains and pastoral work have a present membership of one hundred and twenty-six, cared for by three branches. Despite the fact that for several years no foreign or native missionary visited this island, we have maintained our numerical standing among the other three churches who have one or more missionaries resident in the island whose total population is between five and six hundred.

The property upon which the activities of the first branch, Mahu, were housed, has never come into the possession of the church. Apostle C. F. Ellis, however, was successful in purchasing a parcel of ground two meters square, about six and one half feet square, (upon which part of the building had stood) from the private owner, with a view to eventually erecting a suitable monument there.

It was agreed that the time had come to complete this work, and on October 28, 1931, the monument was dedicated with suitable ceremony, natives only participating. The monument has a two-meter square foundation about sixteen inches in depth made of native lime and stone with four natural stone posts at the corners, and a huge natural black stone from one of the old native courts of worship placed in the center of the lime foundation. The natives, on the day of the dedication, literally smothered the monument with flowers, one native elder bringing a branch of the candle-nut tree, the nuts of which in primitive days were used for lighting purposes.

Taruiarii a Tauhiti (Horahitu), missionary presented the Restoration of the gospel, centering his remarks around the year, 1830. Tavi Harevaa, pastor of the Mataura, Tubuai, Branch and a one-time Mormon elder presented the history of the appointment and landing of the first missionaries together with the early history of the work done at Mahu. Horahitu then offered a most appropriate dedicatory prayer following which informal speeches were given by a number of the priesthood.

The voluntary speech of Ronoimauri Tehahe, a Mormon elder, was much appreciated for, notwithstanding the claim of the Mormons of their beginning in these lands dating back to Addison Pratt, the Mormon missionaries in Tubuai rejected the invitation to join with the Reorganized Church in the dedication exercises.

It is most fortunate for the church that Apostle Ellis was able to get that small piece of land before the Mormons did, for to the natives it is another link in the chain vindicating the right of the Reorganization to successorship to the original church.

The building and dedication of the monument were great events in the lives of the Tubuai Saints and their keen interest in it expressed their interest in the church and their appreciation of the work and sacrifice of the first missionaries to these islands.

Independence

Daily it is becoming more apparent that Independence, with the rest of the church, is preparing for General Conference. Weeks ago the Bulletin of Independence Churches began carrying a coupon, to be filled out by those having housing facilities for conference visitors, and mailed to the pastor in Zion. The Laurel Club undertook the responsibility of serving meals to the conference, and under the directorship of its president, Mrs. T. J. Watkins, began to organize its forces and make out menus.

Almost three hundred strong the Messiah Choir meets twice weekly, Paul N. Craig conducting. It now rehearses with the Auditorium Orchestra.

Everywhere there is a stir of expectation. Housewives are cleaning house. The general church offices are places of much activity. Some of the quorums are meeting. Clubs and other organizations are coming forward to contribute their part to the conference. The Wahdemna Choral Club has offered its rooms as a rendezvous for the young people of the conference. The Patroness Society is planning to receive and welcome its members from far and near. The Mothers' Club will have a guest room for conference visitors. Other clubs and classes are preparing to do their share in offering cultural, religious, and social contributions to the conference schedule.

Independence has seen many conferences, the last of which was outstanding, but her people eagerly look forward to another legislative assembly of the church. They will take part in class work and business meeting, and with their brother and sister Saints will gain much from the sermons preached.

The five Girl Scout troops of the church in Independence held a rally meeting at the Y. K. T. room Friday evening, there being seventy-five girls and their officers present to take part in the games, songs, stunts, and fun. A feature of the evening was the investiture of ten tenderfoot scouts. Troop 46, of the Stone Church, acted as hostess to Troop 10, Walnut Park; Troop 14, Liberty Street, and Troops 33 and 37, Stone Church.

Stone Church

"Men are determined by the fruits they bear, not by the gifts God has bestowed upon them or by the talents he has given them. A Latter Day Saint is determined not by the fact that he has some gifts or some talents, but by the fruits he bears. So it is with the church of Jesus Christ—it is determined not by its name, or what people say about it, or what it says about itself, but by the fruits it bears. The gospel is a gift from God, but our sainthood is determined by the fruits we are bearing." These were salient points of Apostle Roy S. Budd's sermon Sunday morning to the Stone Church congregation. For a text he chose the words of Jesus, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

"We do not make laws," he continued, "we discover them. Our inability to discover laws is our own undoing." If we expect to bear fruit becoming to the children of God, we must submit ourselves to law just as the seed submits to the laws of nature, going down into the earth and being subjected to temperature and moisture. The characteristics of the fruit of the Spirit, as they are listed by the Apostle Paul, are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance.

The half hour of music broadcast over KMBC by the Stone Church Choir, preceding the sermon, was enjoyed by a large congregation of Saints. An anthem, "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," by Shelley, had as contralto soloist, Velma Brocaw Nunn. Mrs. Alice May Burgess, contralto, sang "Before the Crucifix," by La Forge. The second anthem by the choir was an old favorite, "Into the Woods My Master Went," by Nevin. "O Love Divine" was a hymn-response sung by the choir. Paul N. Craig directed the singers, and Robert Miller played the organ.

Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Patriarch Ammon White.

The boys' choir recently organized by J. Glenn Fairbanks, rehearses at two o'clock each Sunday afternoon. About twenty voices have been tried out, and Brother Fairbanks, who is president of the Stone Church Choir, hopes to have this group of young singers assist the adult choir. He is the director of the newly-organized group.

An impressive Palm Sunday service, in the evening, commemorated Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem. A candle-lighting ceremony was very effective, and three groups of robed singers, the Aeolian Chorus, the Cantanina Chorus, and the Men's Chorus of the Stone Church Choir, supplied the music.

President F. M. McDowell, the speaker, brought to the large congregation the message, "The Costliness of the Cross."

Beautiful stereopticon copies have been made of famous paintings of Christ. The showing of these fittingly brought the service to a close.

On Sunday afternoon the funeral of a venerable member, Brother Clayton G. Gould, was held at the Stone Church. Brother Gould died early the morning of March 17, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. M. T. Williams. He was eighty-two years of age. Besides his daughter there survive two sons, Herbert A. Gould and George A. Gould; a brother, W. W. Gould; two sisters, Mrs. Eleanor Whiting, and Mrs. Roseltha Alberton, thirteen grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and many friends. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the funeral service and the sermon was by Apostle J. A. Gillen. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Gould was born in 1850, in Washington County, Minnesota, and had been a member of the church for many years.

Second Church

Services at Second Church have been well attended during the past month and excellent sermons were the rule. Last Sunday morning Elder C. C. Koehler preached at eleven o'clock, and Brother J. F. Mintun was the evening speaker.

On March 17, about thirty women of this district held an all-day meeting at the home of Brother and Sister J. F. Mintun. The occasion was the celebration of Sister Mintun's birthday. At noon, each guest having brought a covered dish, a tasty luncheon was served. The time was spent in quilting.

The home of Brother and Sister J. B. McPherson, on South Cottage Street, was badly damaged by fire several days ago. The loss was covered by insurance. Sister McPherson is ill with a severe cold contracted at the time of the fire.

J. T. Curtis, who has been confined to his bed for three weeks, is reported improving. Brother John Bailey, who has been ill for several months, is still in a serious condition. Sister Davis, who since Christmas, has been confined by illness to her home on Ruby Street, is reported improving.

On Easter morning a cantata will be given at eleven o'clock by the Liberty Street Choir and Orchestra. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis will be the evening speaker.

A special prayer meeting for young people will convene at eight o'clock Easter Sunday.

Walnut Park Church

Elder James W. Davis was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday morning, his subject being "Humility." The anthem by the choir was "In Heavenly Love Abiding." Minnie Scott Dobson directed, assisted at the organ by Drexel Mollison. This was a fitting opening for the service.

In the evening the young people's study period was well attended, and a fine program was given by local talent.

The Saints were pleased to have as the evening speaker Elder R. D. Weaver. His helpful sermon was enjoyed by a large congregation. The choir was again on duty, singing "Just for the Present Hour." Special parts were sung by Mr. and Mrs. Knoepel Mosier and Mrs. Ammon Badder.

The marriage of Alice Story, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Story, and Justus Bean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bean, occurred February 23. They were married by Justice Henry Chastain in Independence.

The marriage ceremony of Rebecca Long and W. C. Fetter was solemnized February 28, at the home of Elder Youngs, Elder Benjamin Bunten officiating. These bridal couples have the good wishes of the Saints of Walnut Park.

Englewood Church

A spiritually helpful sermon was preached Sunday morning by Elder Perry Hiles, assistant pastor. The choir sang "It Is a Good Thing to Give Thanks," by Patty Stair, and Sister Pauline Arnson sang "The Palms," written by Faure-Felton.

At this service the congregation voted to hold an eight o'clock prayer meeting Easter morning. The subject for special prayer will be the coming conference.

In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller closed his lantern lectures. A full house heard his concluding message. His subject was "Evidences That Jesus Christ Visited This Continent After His Resurrection."

Brother Miller's lectures have been well planned and executed. They have established, without question, the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. How thankful we should be that this divine gift to us is now substantiated by scientific researches!

At the close of the lecture the words of the hymn, "The Old Rugged Cross," were thrown on the screen and sung by the congregation. Then Brother Miller showed beautiful, colored pictures from famous artists on the life of Christ. Sister Roy Howery played "Silent Night," "'Tis Midnight," and "Yes, the Redeemer Rose." This made a fitting climax for Palm Sunday.

The Saints are grateful to Brother C. E. Harrington and his office for help in advertising these lectures. Brother Harrington owns and operates a weekly paper in this community which is delivered by carriers to every home in the vicinity, each Friday evening. He offered us a splendid means of advertising.

Elder Amos Allen occupied the "bishop's hour" the second Sunday of the month, taking for his central thought: "It is for me that I have been afflicted." His words were timely and most encouraging.

The Friendly Circle of Englewood's department of women had almost banner attendance at the "quilting bee" at the home of Sister Earl Moore, last Wednesday. Twenty-five women and ten children were served lunch by the hostess.

Spring River Young People Hold Annual Convention

Pittsburg, Kansas.— Spring River district young people met here in their annual three-day convention, March 4, 5, and 6.

On Friday night a banquet was served by the local women's department. Plates were laid for one hundred and fifty-five. A wholesome menu was served. The program was as follows: Reading, Nella Allen, Pittsburg, Kansas; reading, Mary Hobart, Webb City, Missouri; piano solo, Beatrice Deaver, Webb City; "My Home," Lena Harvey, Joplin, Missouri; musical reading, Ruth Hobart, Webb City; "My Church," Frank Shank, Carthage, Missouri; vocal solo, Bonita Bothwell, Pittsburg; "My World," R. G. Smith, Pittsburg; address, President F. M. McDowell.

Institute work was held Saturday and Sunday under the leadership of President McDowell, assisted by Frank McDonald, of Independence, Missouri. Amos T. Higdon, district president, and George E. Harrington, of Independence, were also present.

Good attendance and interest marked all meetings although the weather was the coldest and most disagreeable we have had this winter. Young people's officers were selected for the year: President, Albert Cobb, Joplin; vice president, Estel Weaver, Pittsburg, Kansas; secretary, Lena Harvey, Joplin; treasurer, Marguerite Sheppard, Joplin; activity chairman, T. W. Bath, Pittsburg.

The next annual meeting will be held in Joplin.

San Francisco, California

Park-Presidio Branch, 405 Arguello Boulevard

President Frederick M. Smith's visit to the Bay district was enjoyed by everyone who had opportunity to see and hear him. The Park-Presidio Branch had added a few members to its list by baptism since his last visit.

This branch was honored with a surprise visit to one of its members, John W. Rushton, from the Park-Presidio Kiwanis Club December 13. Though the day was very stormy, attendance registered close to one hundred. Brother Rushton was greatly surprised and very happy.

This branch celebrated its fifth anniversary the night of February 12. The scene of the celebration was Milligan's restaurant. Fifty-five members and friends partook of the meal and entertainment carefully arranged by the Ruth's Club of which Sister Ruth W. Clegg was chairman. The following program was given: Introductory remarks by Branch President Edward W. Nelson, and the toastmaster, Dr. A. L. Holling; piano solo by William Roeth, well known radio star; interlude, Sister Bessie Bohall Holling; response and remarks, John W. Rushton, of East Bay Branch; vocal solo, Miss Ora V. Lambert, who was accompanied at the piano by Sister Christiana Waller; talk, by Emery Parks, pastor of San Francisco Branch; community song; talk on Lincoln, by Brother H. Carpenter; piano solo, William Roeth; community song, "The Future of Our Branch," by Louis B. Shippy; comedy skit, Sister Helen Roeth; introduction of our first Sunday school attendant, Richard Carpenter, son of Brother Howard Carpenter, and our last addition to membership, Zona Jarvis, eleven years old.

Attendance at our meetings is fine, especially when we consider that our visitors are as regular in attendance as our own membership. Whatever our activities, you will find our visitors with us.

Our district papers accept all we give them with the result that we have hundreds of lines of free publicity to our weekly credit.

We boost, go out among our friends, and through new contacts spread the gospel story. We may be termed "joiners," and feel that unless the members make themselves known, we shall become as dead timbers.

Kansas City Stake

O. B. K. Music Contest

The Kansas City O. B. K. Council sponsored its second annual music contest March 18 and 20.

This year there was a larger number of entries. The general quality of performance and spirit of the occasion were excellent. Large and enthusiastic audiences were present and every number was warmly received.

In each division the contestant was required to perform two memorized numbers, one chosen from a selected list and one from any list of the contestant's choosing. There were no awards for individual performance, but the group whose representatives secured the highest number of points, was award the O. B. K. trophy.

Quindaro Church scored highest with twenty-eight points and Thelma Carmichael, O. B. K. councilor for the group, was given custody of the trophy. Mount Washington and Central scored twenty-one points each and Chelsea and Fourth twenty points each. Other groups had individual entries but these five congregations were well represented in almost every division.

The judges for the contest were Miss Jessie Elizabeth Miller, supervisor of music in the Kansas City, Kansas, schools; Miss Elsie Luther, director of music at Northwest Junior College in Kansas City, Kansas; Mr. A. F. Fultz, director of the church music supervision movement in Kansas City; and Miss Marcene Smith, of Independence. Each of the judges expressed enthusiasm for the spirit and purpose of the occasion.

Mr. Fultz has requested the services of the Central Chorus and a selected quartet for a performance of selections from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the Kansas City, Kansas, week-day church school music festival in May.

The individual results are here tabulated:

Friday, March 18: Junior contralto: Myra Gould, from Armourdale group, first place. Contralto: Mona Gross from Quindaro, first; Anna Decker from Chelsea, second; Lois Gibson from Mount Washington, third. Junior Soprano: Velois Martin from Malvern Hill, first; Helen Gerber from Mount Washington, second; Lurabelle Sears from Chelsea, third. Soprano: Helen Scott from Central, first; Vivian Palmer from Quindaro, second; Edna Decker from Heathwood, third. Tenor: Garland Tickemyer from Fourth, first; Leonard Dunlap from Mount Washington, second. Bass-baritone: Lawrence Siegle from Fourth Church, first; Raymond Bleil from Chelsea, second; Frank Hunter from Mount Washington, third. Choruses: Quindaro Church, first; Chelsea Church, second; Mount Washington Church, third.

Sunday, March 20: Junior piano: Edith Foley from Quindaro, first. Senior piano: Lois Gibson from Mount Washington, first; Marion Worden from Fourth, second; Lucille Sandy from Central, third. Adult piano: Zelma Lungwitz from Quindaro, first. Easy piano: Billy Rebenschied from Grandview, first. Advanced violin: Frank D. White from Central, first; Fred Snell from Chelsea, second; Ona Comer from Fourth church, third. Girls' quartets: Central Church, first; Chelsea Church, second; Fourth Church, third. Boys' quartets: Fourth Church, first; Mount Washington Church, second. Mixed quartets: Central Church, first; Chelsea and Mount Washington tied for second.

This contest is discovering and developing talent. Some who sang publicly for the first time in the contest a year ago showed remarkable development. Four young people directed all the music for their church's entries. Some who sang for the first time this year were among the winners.

The purpose of the contest is summed up by this goal—"Not to win a prize nor to defeat an opponent, but to pace each other on the road to excellence."

The council's next venture is a stewardship oratorical contest in May. Brother Kenneth Curtis is in charge of the library of source material which is open at the church office every Tuesday and Friday.

Far West Stake Conference

The Far West Stake Conference is over. Sunday evening, March 13, marked its close. For two days and three nights members of Far West Stake worshiped together in a remarkable manner. That it was a highly successful event is witnessed by the testimony of the hundreds who were in attendance. Attendance was large from the beginning reaching its peak on Sunday evening when standing room was at a premium and many were turned from the doors.

The conference opened Friday night with an illustrated lecture by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Brother Hanson showed many slides of ancient America and gave an interesting lecture.

Beginning with the morning prayer service, in charge of Apostles J. F. Garver and P. M. Hanson, Saturday's services were exceptionally well attended. A business meeting followed the prayer service at which time delegates to General Conference were elected. Reports were read and accepted and all stake officials were sustained.

The afternoon was given to lectures and committee meetings. Apostle Hanson delivered a fine sermon at two o'clock after which President F. M. Smith addressed the members of the priesthood while Apostle J. F. Garver lectured to the remaining congregation in the upper auditorium. Then committee meetings were held. Chief among these was the Harvest Festival committee meeting. Plans are already being completed for the annual exhibit.

Following a good supper served by the women of Saint Joseph, a large congregation gathered to hear President F. M. Smith in his first sermon of the conference. President Smith's explanation of vital questions of the day found a response in many of the people gathered to hear him.

A short recreational program was staged by the O. T. Z.'s of First Church following the Saturday night service.

As early as the church school period on Sunday, the house began filling up until by the eleven o'clock hour many were standing. During the church school period Apostle Hanson gave an interesting talk concerning some of his experiences in this country and abroad. First Church was very pleased to present to the stake at this time, its junior chorus which gave two special numbers.

With eager expectancy nearly four hundred people awaited President Smith's sermon on Sunday morning. President Smith was at his best. In a straightforward manner he launched into a general discussion of the problems, hopes and ideals that stand out as distinctive features of Latter Day Saint philosophy. His appeal for service, and loyalty to God and his church was met by the response of hundreds who sat and stood within the sound of his voice.

Far West Stake was glad to have President Smith as a guest, and the outstanding spirit of unity which prevailed throughout the conference bore witness of the appreciation of the group.

With a beautiful rendition of the "Hallelujah Chorus," by the local choir as a background, Apostle J. F. Garver delivered an inspiring sermon Sunday afternoon to a large congregation.

As a climax to what had been an outstanding conference came the religious drama, "Whatsoever Ye Sow," as presented by the Ul-Lik-Us Players of First Saint Joseph Church. First Church proved to be too small to accommodate the crowd and a second presentation was given on Monday night.

For an hour and a half Sunday evening the conference crowd listened to one of its best sermons as presented through the medium of drama. The cast, an experienced one, was working at its best and the club made what was perhaps its most outstanding contribution as a dramatic organization.

The conference is over so far as its public meetings are concerned. Yet there is a spirit of brotherhood and devotion to the cause, which seems to have been enriched by the experiences of the conference, and which is finding a lodging place in the hearts of all who were so fortunate as to be in attendance.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg Church

The Warrensburg Branch has greatly increased in interest since Brother G. R. Wells has been pastor. Although he has been laboring in Knobnoster for some time, he succeeded in getting things well organized before he left here. Brother T. L. McCormick is acting as pastor in the absence of Brother Wells.

Prayer meetings are well attended and of a highly uplifting nature.

The family of Brother and Sister Sammy Andes, which moved to Warrensburg in the fall, has helped not only in the various departments of the Sunday school but also augmented the attendance.

Sister T. L. McCormick, who was recently hurt in an auto accident, is slowly improving.

Sister Nora Hartman who has been afflicted with cancer for nearly three years, has been a living example to us of Christlike patience and fortitude. We ask for her the prayers of the Saints, that the Lord may bless her abundantly now in her time of need.

Elder J. Charles May who just finished a series of meetings at Knobnoster, preached here March 13, to a large and attentive audience. He will continue through this week and probably next week.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Saints in this branch are praying for the success of the church and the General Conference.

The church school has been conducting a contest which will end the Sunday before Easter. Questions out of the Bible are asked. March 6 we had a debate on the question, "Resolved That the Sunday School Is of More Benefit to the Child Than the Home." The negative speakers won. Three nonmembers were asked to act as judges.

In the near future the dramatic club will present the play, "No Account David."

Elder D. Clatworthy gives us good advice in his sermons and is becoming a splendid speaker. Certainly he will do much for his Master if he continues faithful. We do not know what we in Lowbanks would do without him.

Large attendance is given the Sunday school classes. Nearly all the young pupils are nonmembers, but they take great interest and regularly take part in the contest. One team is designated as the "Onwards," the other as the "Upwards." Of course the losing team will treat the winning side.

This year we had a scarlet fever scare, but that is over. Some are now ill with flu.

We hope throughout this year to do better work as a branch than we have been doing, and we are looking for the officers of the district to come from Toronto to help us.

This week we had the heaviest snowstorm of the winter and colder weather than any time this year.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Branch, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

Chicago Saints were saddened at the passing of Sister Anna Pement, December 22. Years of acquaintance with this noble worker made us the more keenly feel our loss. All that human skill could do for her was done. Brother David Dowker preached the funeral sermon, Elder Keir assisting. Sisters Schmid and Bullard sang, "The City Four-square," and "Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love." Beautiful floral offerings bespoke the respect and love of all who knew her. May God's peace be with the bereaved family.

The annual business meeting was held December 14. Elders Davey and Schmid were present. Each gave expression to interesting thoughts. Brother H. P. W. Kier was sustained as branch president; Brother Clem Evans as head of the Religious Education department and superintendent of Sunday school; Brother Ray Hurst, clerk; Brother Ralph Swanson, tithing solicitor and treasurer; Chorister Brother Arthur Sherman, and pianist, Sister Winifred Wood; correspondent, Sister E. Horton. The colored mission work was one subject of consideration. These few faithful Saints still meet in Sunday services at the home of Sister Hammett, assisted by the priesthood of Central Branch. They have had their trials and privations, and we feel they need our prayers. The name of Sister Horton was submitted for ratification as women's department head; Sister Mary Wood, Sister Cora Kier and Sister Phylis Lester, to act as assistants; Sister Fay McDonald, secretary and treasurer.

The Saints were cheered by the message brought by President F. M. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. We are glad to hear of the onward progress of the Lord's work in different quarters. This branch was glad to help in the sacrifice period.

Our Christmas Eve program was "A White Christmas." "Christ the King," was sung by the choir, Brother Clem Evans gave the opening prayer, and Brother Keir spoke on the purpose of the evening, "Sacrifice." Sister Wayne Hall told the Christmas story about giving Jesus our Christmas presents, after which during the playing of "Holy Night," each class marched up and placed its gift on the altar. This was draped in white with a cross in the distance. Brother Keir offered the consecration prayer.

The choir, under the direction of Arthur Sherman, has been active in its part of the services, furnishing special music each Sunday. We have a good number of people interested in the musical department of the church, and this is well for it is a help and inspiration to those dispensing the word of God. The choir has been sponsoring several parties.

The K. Y. B. Class (Know Your Bible), under Sister Pearl Schmid, meet at the home of Sister May Horton each week. An interesting as well as instructive time is spent.

We have had three pantry and food showers on three of our families who have been unemployed. Also we have remembered our sick with fruit, flowers, or cards.

The adult class, known as "The Happy Hustlers," has organized and is having parties and social good times.

The junior church is in progress under the direction of Sister Anna Smart, Sister Leta Swanson directing the music. This cause is worth while, and we are glad that we have willing workers to carry this part of our children's education along.

Sacrament services are well attended, and God's Spirit is ready to bless us if we put ourselves in the right condition. Many testimonies are borne, from time to time, to the divinity of this work.

Brother J. F. Garver was here February 28. With such counsel and advice, we should, like Israel of old, go forward.

We have been wonderfully blessed with good sermons for the past two months. These have been given by Brothers Keir, Evans, Lowe, Oliver, Hurst, Davey, Pement, and Schmid. And each Sunday evening we have enjoyed the classes on Doctrine and Covenants. We need more of the study of the word of God.

Sister Lana Rounds and Mr. Irvin Ridge were married by C. E. Schmid on Thursday, January 19. Our best wishes accompany these young folks, as they go to their new home in Des Moines, Iowa.

The Sunday school moves forward under Brother Clem Evans. Sister Jean McDonald, pianist. Class work is under Brother Keir, Brother Lowe, Sister Lillie Nelson, Sister Schmid, Sister Keir, Sister Emily Nelson, and Brother Lester. Sister May Horton and daughter, Sister Milly Spuehler, are in charge of the beginners' department.

We are pleased to place on our cradle roll department the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Wilbur Compton, born February 18. This is a great-grandchild of Brother and Sister Arthur Sherman, sr. The baby's mother's name was on our cradle roll in 1912.

We have seen many changes take place in our forty-three year's residence in Chicago. We are pleased to see the church moving toward the goal. This branch is looking for renewed zeal and fresh courage to be the outcome of a series of meetings by Brother R. Davey, starting March 6, and continuing to the thirteenth.

Southeastern Illinois Conference

A call conference was held at Mount Vernon, Illinois, opening the evening of March 4, with a splendid program. This was given to an overflowing house, a large number of non-members attending.

The members of the district were called together to elect delegates to General Conference. On Saturday morning at nine thirty the Saints met in the little church home to hold prayer service in behalf of the General Conference.

Then came the organization of the conference, the remainder of this hour being given over to talks by various men of the priesthood. The business session was held in the afternoon at which time delegates were chosen. Brother Charles Wesner preached the Saturday evening sermon.

Sunday morning the church school convened at the regular hour, Brother William Colvin in charge. Some interesting points were explained with regard to the organization of the church in Book of Mormon times.

The prayer service of the sacrament meeting furnished an unusual experience. From the beginning a spirit of inactivity seemed to prevail, a spirit of opposition and coldness. After this had been struggled against for some time, Elder Arthur Henson arose and compared it to the conditions that prevailed in the early part of the Reorganization, telling of the members who met to effect the Reorganization and how they prayed all day and battled against the spirit of darkness. Then a young brother, who is not in the habit of praying publicly, led in prayer. He was followed by District President R. L. Fulk who asked in his prayer that the powers of darkness be rebuked in the name of Jesus Christ. Almost at once the spiritual atmosphere cleared and there was a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. The district president afterwards stated that he had discerned the power of opposition and was led to rebuke it, but failed at first because of lack of courage. He also said that he knew why the opposing power was there: Satan was seeking to discourage his people, especially the men who had been called to the priesthood. But the power of right prevailed; God gave his Spirit to the extent that no one could doubt. The ordinations provided for by the conference followed, and the people rejoiced.

We are happy to report that through the combined efforts and sacrifices of the various branches in the district and the help of Sister Mabel Phillips, publicity agent, we were able to purchase one hundred and twenty-six new Hymnals. These were divided at the conference. Three of the branches already had bought new books and this partly supplies all eleven branches besides isolated members at Fairfield, Flora, Cisne, and Goreville. We are now one hundred per cent with new books. Twelve volumes are to be used as district books. The Saints are eager to learn some of the new songs. We are trying to advance musically as well as spiritually, and hope more books may be added later.

Brother Ernest Roberson preached Sunday afternoon.

A bounteous dinner was served in the basement of the church.

Niketes Take Banner in Declamation

As a result of the declamatory contest, held in the college chapel on Saturday evening, the Niketes Literary Society now holds the banner for declamation. Although members of the Pleiades Society won highest honors in the contest, the Niketes totaled more points than the Pleiades. Miss Emily McCormick, of Albion, Wyoming, and Miss Gretchen Kelly, of Lamoni, Iowa, tied for first-over-all, winning over nine contestants.

Three groups of declamations were heard: Oratorical, dramatic, and humorous. In the oratorical division, Monroe Carter won first place, placing James Moses second. Gretchen Kelley won first in the dramatic group, William Gould taking second place, and Elizabeth Smith and Charlotte Derry tying for third place. In the humorous group, Emily McCormick won first, Margaret Anderson second, and Ruth Butcher third.

Miss Kelly held the audience spellbound by her dramatic presentation of the well-known reading "Jean Valjean," making marvelous transformations from the person of the galley-slave to that of the bishop. Laughter brought tears to the eyes of the spectators, and many suffered side-aches when Miss McCormick presented "Good-by, Sister" in a clever, and uproariously comic manner.

All of the readings were well given to an appreciative audience, composed mostly of students interested in the contest. Wilbur Chandler played a number of piano solos before and after the contest, rounding out a worth-while evening.

"What Is It That Spurs You On?"

From the bulletin board in the Old Ad Building, the Fellowship poster insistently asked this question of the boys and girls who passed. The question struck deep into the hearts and minds of the Graceland students, for Wednesday evening, February 24, they came to the chapel with reverent interest, bringing a wealth of thought and good feeling. As Roy Chevillie presented the theme, he told of the things that had spurred some men of history on. It was the needs of mankind that spurred Christ on, even to Calvary. In conclusion he said that the stimulus, to be lasting and most beneficial, must have a three-fold significance. It must be mine (an inner, personal urge), thine (kindly interest and regard for other folk), and Divine (a desire in harmony with the wisdom of the Diety).

The Graceland College basketeers won first place in the question, "What spurs you to do the best in your life work?": Contacts with nature; the devotion and expectations of a mother; a feeling of kinship with the Divine; love of home, parents, friends and mates; a glimpse of bigger and better things; a sense of loyalty to people; a job, principles and goals to attain; friends—their ideas, good will, and expectations; the quiet, spiritual influence of the chapel service.

Graceland Wins Trophy

The Graceland College basketeers won first place in the basketball tournament of the Southwestern Iowa Junior College Conference, held Wednesday, March 2, at Creston, Iowa, with six junior colleges of the State represented. In the first game the Graceland quintet won an easy 38-17 victory over Clarinda Junior College, and in the final game the Yellow Jackets captured a thrilling 28-25 victory over Chariton Junior College, coming from behind in the last three minutes of play after trailing the Chariton five from the very beginning. The players who represented Graceland in the tournament were William Hamann, Richmond, Missouri; Glen Jacobson, Berkeley, California; Alma Smith, Independence, Missouri; Delmar Jones, Taylorville, Illinois; Raymond Linehan, Akron, Ohio; Ned Jacobson, Berkeley, California; Bert King, Monroe Hills, and George Briggs, of Lamoni, Iowa; and William Gould, Kansas City Missouri.

Since this is the first time Graceland has entered the State tournament, we felt proud to bring back to our college the cup representing first place. The tournament not only adds interest to Graceland's athletic program, but also betters her standing among the other junior colleges of Iowa. Graceland is proud of her team and of the beautiful trophy it won.

Music Student in Recital

On Thursday evening the Graceland College Music Department presented Miss Vivian Castings in a graduate piano recital. Miss Castings is a pupil of Miss Rae Lysinger. In this recital she was assisted by Mr. Colin Ferrett, bass.

Diligent work brings its own merit. This was apparent in the skill with which Miss Castings handled her instrument and interpreted her selections. While in the Des Moines High School she received the distinction of being judged the best pianist there. Building upon this honor, we feel that she has now attained further heights in the field of musical art.

Miss Castings is more familiarly known at Graceland for her work as an accompanist at various college and church services, and it proved a new experience to have her appear as soloist for the evening. She also distinguished herself in this capacity, excelling in technique and in speed of performance. Her playing involved a certain dash and brilliance which captivated her audience. Some persons voted her preeminently outstanding work to be Chopin's "Troisime Ballade"; others felt that her successful rendition of the "Etude in D flat," by Liszt, was deserving of distinction. Others had no choice, but felt that the entire program was composed of interesting material.

Mr. Ferrett appeared as a fitting complement for the piano groups. Perhaps the audience best appreciated his interpretation of "The Lute Player," by Allitsen, and "Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves," by Handel. A pleasing criticism to make of Mr. Ferrett concerns the clear articulation which he consistently employs. He has a noticeably smooth and even quality not always heard in a bass soloist.

The closing selection was the first movement of MacDowell's "Second Concerto in D Minor, Opus 23." Miss Castings was assisted at the second piano by Miss Rae Lysinger. This execution climaxed the program which was one of the most important presentations of this year's music department.

Seiling, Oklahoma

This branch was favored with a visit from Elder E. B. Hull who held a ten-day series of meetings. The Saints were very much encouraged by his talks on the prophecies of the Bible, especially those applying to our time. Splendid attendance was had at first, but was somewhat decreased toward the end by inclement weather. Brother Hull will be very welcome in this place at any time.

Communication from Bishop's Agent

To the Saints of Southern Missouri District, Greetings:
 We did well in our financial campaign of 1931, went over our quota, raising more than the church asked of us. I feel sure with the good church members we have in this district that we can do still better in 1932. Now is the time to start. Our quota for the year is $2,000. We should say, as we have before, "We can do it." Then we should start and outdo it. Our goal for this year is—every member a tithe payer. If we reach this goal, we shall be rewarded according to our works. The work of the Lord is supremely important, and if the financial arm of the endeavor falls short, the church will suffer loss. If any Saints need inventory blanks, write the undersigned or the Bishop at Independence, and you will be supplied. Can the church depend on you? Shall we pledge our support to help put over this program? You will feel happy in this life and receive the greater blessing when you pass on by honoring and obeying God's law.—G. A. Davis, bishop's agent, Thayer, Missouri, Box 86.

District All-day Meeting

Des Moines District will hold an all-day meeting at the Des Moines Branch, 717 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines, Sunday, March 27. Bishop G. L. DeLapp will be the principal speaker, and there will be a special service for receiving and filing of inventories. This starts promptly at 9.30 a. m. A basket lunch will be served and there will be a prayer service at 2 p. m. with special Easter music and preaching in the evening by Bishop DeLapp.—Stephen Robinson, 2212 Thirty-ninth Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Our Departed Ones

KINGSLEY.—Elizabeth Myatt was born near Birmingham, England, August 23, 1870. In 1873, she came to the United States with her aunt, Louisa Myatt, who tenderly cared for her. Early in life she obeyed the gospel and lived her religion until her death which occurred January 26, 1932, at her home at Maquoketa, Iowa. She suffered a stroke several years ago from which she did not recover. It was hard for her to move about the house. She married James Kingsley who, with their daughter and three grandchildren, mourn her departure. She also leaves a foster brother, Walter Myatt, of Elwood, Iowa. The funeral was held at the Harrison's Funeral Parlors, the sermon being by Elder John Heide. Interment was in Maquoketa Cemetery.

PRICE.—Richard Alfred Price, sr., a native of Utah, was born August 5, 1859. Passed away February 23, 1932. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 15, 1875. Surviving are three sons: Richard Alfred Price, jr., M. Deck Price, and Wright B. Price; a brother, Merton S. Price, sr., of San Francisco; a sister, Mrs. Lottie Moran, of Oakland, California; four grandchildren, and many friends. Our brother cultivated a beautiful spirit which made and held friends. His care of his late wife during her long illness was most commendable. He was faithful to the church to the last. The funeral sermon was by W. H. Dawson. Interment was in East Lawn Cemetery, Sacramento, California.

Laurel Club Needs Help

DONATIONS OF FOOD NEEDED TO CARRY ON THEIR VOLUNTEER WORK IN BEHALF OF THE CHURCH

The Laurel Club, as usual, is making preparations to serve meals for the visitors at General Conference, for which all profits are turned over to the church. This year the operations of the club will be made more than usually difficult on account of the lack of funds.

Food, rather than money, can be of immediate help to the club. Eggs and potatoes and many other farm products can be used, some of which are almost too cheap for farmers to sell at a profit. People could do much good by sending in donations of home grown products.

Any such donations of food should be shipped to the Laurel Club, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Special Notice to Statistical Workers

The Department of Statistics will hold a reception and social gathering for all branch, district and stake secretaries and statisticians on the third day of Conference, Friday afternoon, April 8, at 4.00 p. m. This will be an excellent opportunity for all the statistical workers of the church who are in attendance at General Conference to get together and become mutually acquainted and to talk over the problems of the work of handling the church membership records. All visiting secretaries and statisticians are also urged to sign their names and addresses in the Statistical Department's Special Register, which is kept at the Registration Desk.

Church Historical Map

AN OBJECT OF BEAUTY AND A GRAPHIC ILLUSTRATION OF HISTORICAL EVENTS

A church historical map, beautifully designed and printed in four colors on high quality vellum paper in either white or India tint, containing dates and illustrations of all the principal historic events in the history of the church, is the latest addition to our church literature.

This map, conceived in the ancient cartograph style, now returned to popularity by modern printers, combines the art of the illustrator with that of the map maker to make a production very beautiful for framing (now much used for decorative effects in modern living rooms) and valuable as an educational aid for the teaching of church history to the young people.

The map is generously large—24 by 30 inches, including the border. It was produced by the Bullard Studios of Independence, and printed by the Herald Publishing House. The project was started at the suggestion of Bishop Carmichael, and the historical features were checked by S. A. Burgess, Church Historian.

The map is rich in detail of happenings from all places of special interest to our history, especially New York, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa. The border is made to serve for pictures of various missions and places of special interest.

This map is of inestimable value for teaching the children, and should be in every church home and Sunday school. It is for sale at the price of $1.00 by the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Patriarch J. T. Gresty Disappears

The disappearance of Patriarch J. T. Gresty on the afternoon of Friday, March 25 has caused great concern, especially to his friends and to the officers of the church.

Until recent weeks Brother Gresty had been in his usual state of moderately good health and cheerful frame of mind. Asked to direct the rendition of The Messiah to be given at the General Conference, he had been at work on the scores for the brasses and wood winds that were to compose a part of the orchestral accompaniment. Under the intensity of this work his physical strength declined, and he became affected by nervous strain. After several days of rest and observation at the Independence Sanitarium, he was permitted to return to Kansas City where he was making his home with friends; but his physician, Doctor Charles F. Grabske, strongly urged that he give up the plan to conduct the rendition of The Messiah. This decision was of course a great disappointment, but, with his usual buoyancy of spirit, he seemed to be reconciled.

Thursday night was a bad one for him and he did not rest well, being up several times and requiring the help of the friends of the household. After an anxious period he began to recover. Although he remained in bed Friday morning and part of the afternoon he was cheerful, and ate a hearty meal at noon which he seemed to relish. He said that he felt better.

On many afternoons it was his custom to go visiting other friends at their homes, always announcing his departure. Friday afternoon he rose and dressed unexpectedly and left the house without saying anything to any other member of the home. He was last seen by a taxicab driver walking toward the "downtown" section of the city.

A note was left at the house in his handwriting which gave no indication as to his probable location or the immediate movements he expected to make. Whether he left the city by train or bus, or by other means, or whether he remains incognito in some part of the city, is not known.

Considerable anxiety is felt for his welfare on account of the state of his health and his nervous condition. Any amount of exposure would be likely to have serious results.

Meanwhile, a close search is being made for him, and the police and civil authorities of this region have been notified. Bishop R. T. Cooper, at whose sister's home Brother Gresty was staying, is in direct charge of the search. President Smith and others have been doing all possible to help.

Brother Gresty has always been a congenial and loved member of the home where he stayed. The apprehension which his disappearance has caused to everyone is of course a matter of much concern and pain.

The Making of Covenants

Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do. Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God, . . . That thou shouldest enter into a covenant with the Lord thy God, and into his oath, which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day: that he may establish thee today for a people unto himself, and that he may be unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers.—Deuteronomy 29: 9, 10, 12, 13.

Whenever men feel the necessity of establishing a conventional form of conduct for personal or mutual protection in matters where the law does not operate, they proceed to make agreements. In international relations and in business we have the "gentlemen's agreement" which, without the sanction of law has nearly the force of law.

The "gentlemen's agreement" is the term applied to the conventions of human relations. In religious matters the same sort of conventions become, by virtue of the divine relation, the covenants by which men govern their lives.

A covenant is a gentlemen's agreement with God.

In reading the Old Testament, one finds a great deal written about the covenants. They were the foundations of religious life. We wonder why so little is made of the idea today.

In this connection, we find an interesting example of the making of a modern covenant in Church History, Volume 1, page 529:

On the 29th of November, 1834, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery made covenant, which will be seen to be quite in harmony with the general law of tithing. . . .

"That if the Lord will prosper us in our business, and open the way before us, that we may obtain means to pay our debts, that we be not troubled nor brought into disrepute before the world, nor his people; after that, of all that he shall give us, we will give a tenth, to be bestowed upon the poor in his church, or as he shall command; and that we will be faithful over that which he has intrusted to our care, that we may obtain much; and that our children after us, shall remember to observe this sacred and holy covenant; and that our children, and our children's children, may know of the same, we have subscribed our names with our own hands.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

"OLIVER COWDERY."

In its simplest and most primitive form, the covenant is a vow registered within one's own mind that, if one obtains his desires, he will perform certain services of devotion and donation. In its most sublime form, it reaches the height of great moral and spiritual law.

On the basis of experience, one discovers that certain ways of life are good, and that certain others are bad or harmful. Observing this, and wishing to profit by the experience, one sets himself in agreement most profound and binding, from which the ordinary exigencies and accidents of life shall not release him. This becomes a sacred covenant.

The great advantage of a covenant is that it sets landmarks. It does not leave the course of life subject to whims and caprice, the feeling of the moment, or aimless decision of expediency. The covenant is a great stabilizer.

How many of us are still aware of the covenant we made at baptism? And how many of us have let that covenant be the last we have ever made? As long as we hold reservations against full agreement with the gospel law, that long are there covenants yet for us to make. And as long as we exist under a condition of incompleting covenants, that long must we be content with only partial spiritual blessings. Our covenants, and our fulfillment of them are our claims to divine grace.

L. L.

God's Paths Are Straight

Today when all the world is drifting and we hear much of suffering and hardship, we are blessed with the assurance that God is with us and that through us he is working out his purposes. These are comforting thoughts, but they challenge us, too.

The second revelation in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants, a revelation given to Joseph Smith, jr., in 1828, begins with these statements:

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.

This links itself with the teachings of the Bible, that God is the God of the living, that his will is everlasting, that he changes not. A study of the Book of Mormon informs us that God is just and that he does not work in darkness, but invites all men to partake of goodness. Jesus said: "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name."

And now, in latter times, the purposes of God challenge us. He has seen fit to trust us with his work. He asks us to love and serve him and one another, to have faith, to pray. He tells us that his work can not be frustrated, and he asks us to help by living his laws. Courage: the paths of God are indeed straight.

The Quarterlies Late

It is regretted that the quarterlies are late, and that some inconvenience is certain to be caused to those who are expecting them. Our patrons should know that neither the Herald Publishing House nor the chief officers of the Department of Religious Education are at fault. The very late arrival of some of the copy has brought about the situation, and the Herald Office, by running its presses day and night, is attempting to do what can be done to speed up the mailing of the quarterlies.

Correction

Two corrections should be made in "The Urim and Thummim," by J. W. A. Bailey, in the Herald of March 9, 1932, page 239, first column. The first appeared in lines 11 and 12, the result of an editorial attempt to explain a Hebrew character. The words, "obtuse angle in the Six Point Star," should be deleted. The second, in line 52, was a manuscript error, for which the reader should change the date 1391 B. C. to 1491 B. C.—The Editors.

Class Study Outlines for the "Herald"

For some time the Directors of Religious Education have been receiving requests for some adult study materials in the Herald. Some of these requests have suggested that the study material should be based on the current articles contained in it. We have wished that we could provide such help for classes of people of mature interests.

The question was brought sharply to attention when a class of young people in Independence, the Y. P. R. class of the Stone Church, casting about for a course of study, proposed the consideration of weekly Herald articles as material for their discussions. Since this occurrence we learn that a class in Lamoni has been following such a plan for some time.

We hope that these two classes are the pioneers of a movement that may become more general, and that our study outlines and our articles may prove of such interest that people elsewhere may be led to follow. It will be beneficial for the church and for our publications.

The effort is in the experimental stage. Much criticism will be expected, from which we hope to improve. Perhaps some may even be stimulated to write articles for us to help the work along. We hope it may be so.

Study Outline for Classes

INTRODUCTION

The following outlines are offered as optional and suggestive studies for those classes that are not using the regular senior and adult quarterlies.

The method should be at the convenience of the class and the teacher. They can choose to concentrate their study on any one article, or make a survey of any of the several articles appearing in this issue.

When a class decides to follow this study, as many of the members as can possibly do so should have copies of the Herald in order to make preparation for the succeeding Sunday's discussion.

THE OUTLINES

Faith

By Lloyd Harding

1. Is your faith such that you could or would ask a blessing on the food before eating in a public place? Do you think this action appropriate for general practice?

2. The old man who asked for prayers before the departure of his train was perfectly sincere. He deeply and reverently believed. He had a practical and workable faith. Can all have this faith? Is it desirable?

3. What is the basis of the religion of Jesus? Is this sufficient, or are other things necessary? Is such love fulfilled in the emotion, or must it necessarily lead to action?

4. Try to work out a description of faith without using the familiar words of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

The Making of Covenants

Editorial

1. Are all covenants made after we enter the church? What kind of covenants are sometimes made before?

2. What do you think of the covenant made by Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery?

3. Are there other kinds of covenants that we should make?

Little Prayers

The tiny prayers are golden,
The larger prayers are steel,
The first are found, the others made
By some linguistic weal.
Some prayers are long, and some are short
As bits of love caressed,
But the little tiny prayers you pray
Seem reverently the best.

Letters to the Editor

Received Help From the "Herald"

About a year ago now I received word from the Herald office notifying me that unless I renewed my subscription the paper would be stopped. I could not send the money then, neither did I feel like asking them to send the paper longer as it had been coming for some time after the date it should have been renewed. So as time went on I was without the church paper. It was not long until I began to hear things about the church I love that caused me to be very uneasy and much alarmed. I wondered if the church was going to be broken up again as in the dark and cloudy days. But, thanks to the heavenly Father, a way was opened up whereby I could have the Herald again.

Some time last September Brother Floyd McDowell sent me a questionnaire asking why I, a branch president, was not taking the church paper. I answered it the best I could, and it was only a short time until I received a letter from him, also a Herald. Ever since then I have read the Herald through again and again as it comes each week. I was very much interested in the financial drive of last October, November, and December. The news of the progress of the church was so much brighter than I had heard during the summer months that I carried the paper to other Saints here.

Not long ago I came home after a hard day's work and picked up the Herald that came that day and read several articles before supper. They touched a tender spot in my soul, and I desired the family might have the same experience, so used the articles for the evening worship. After supper we assembled around the family altar, and my companion read while the two children and myself listened very closely. The two articles we used were written by Brother Mintun and Brother Davis. After we had finished, our little girl of eight years said, "Papa, is that true or only a story?" When I told her it was true she said, "Papa, I will want to hear more of them." If the Herald will reach a child of eight years it should be in the home of every Latter Day Saint.

With the Passing of the Old Guard

By J. F. Garver

It was with a deep stirring of emotions that I learned while engaged in my labors in the field of the passing of Joshua Carlile and Joseph R. Lambert.

I have before sensed something of the significance of the laying down of the armor by the men of the generation which knew these our late brothers in the days of their active ministry. With two of them going so near together, these having been among my very best friends over so long a period of years, I sense as never before that with the passing of that generation of noblemen the Reorganization, unless it has a care, may lose something that can not be regained.

Joseph R. Lambert was the first general officer of the church for me to meet. I made his acquaintance at the home of William Leeka, another of God's noblemen of that generation, who these many years now has slumbered with our fathers. This was in October, 1897. I had just joined the church, on September 26, to be exact.

Brother Lambert was ill. He was unable to attend the conference at the "Plum Hollow" church (burned to the ground a few weeks ago), so remained at the home of Brother Leeka on Saturday morning. I met him there, having been graciously invited to partake of the noon meal with others of the conference at this hospitable home. Brother Lambert arose from his couch to dine with us, and returned again for his needed rest before the business session of the afternoon. Brother Leeka, saddened and distressed, shook his head and said, "Poor Brother Lambert, he will not be with us long." That was over thirty-four years ago, and Brother Lambert has continued with us until now, having buried almost to the last man the vigorous ministry of the church of that day.

The years that were his privilege in the earth were his and ours because he was the type of man he was. Brother Lambert every hour of every day lived for the best that was in him, among other things for the best in his physical forces, so that while he was a man always frail and afflicted, his life was extended because of the conscientious care which he gave for the keeping of his physical powers. This same painstaking and conscientious attention and sustained and constant effort was given to his ministry.

He was a man of honor, of integrity, of deep sincerity, of soberness, and of abiding faith in the ultimate outcome of the church. As a young minister in Lamoni, on many occasions I know I was a trial to Joseph R. Lambert, and yet he continued to give me his confidence, his support where he could, and he was always kind and helpful. He was one of those men who had the happy faculty of calling to a brother's attention his weaknesses in a way to make him want to overcome self, and make his ministry strong. Coming into the presence of Brother Lambert always sobered me and inspired me with a desire to be worthy of the confidence of my brethren.

Joshua Carlile was a different type, but was a man of like strength in the circles in which he moved. He was jovial and buoyant, ready with his hearty laughter, with the twinkle of his eye, and with his keen wit. Yet he, too, was the soul of honor, and his faith in God was such and his good works were such that his testimony and his preaching and his conversation were a constant source of life and fire and zeal for his brothers and sisters of the church. A more agreeable man I have never met. He was simple and yet profound in his preaching, a great power in moving other lives. When I came in the presence of Brother Joshua Carlile it was to find my personality vibrant, responsive to the call of his buoyant spirit, and always he turned my face upward to the light. His, too, has been a powerful influence for better things in my life and my ministry.

These two taken together make a perfect whole—soberness and carefulness, made buoyant with a sense of humor. We can not live without the latter, nor can we do without the former. Thank God for the life of these two good men.

And now my mood returns as of the beginning. The men of that generation without reservation gave to this church all they had, and in a sincerity that ennobled their offering, in the hand of God became a thing of verity and power. They lived but for the church. It was the biggest thing in their life, or in any life. Because they loved much, they gave much, which was all they had, and with that contribution God was enabled to bring forth and establish the Reorganization.

I am fully persuaded that the only thing that can carry this work on to its final consummation is the same kind of nobility of life, the same kind of greatness of character, the same kind of sacrifice and service, finding expression through personality of sober buoyancy. May God help us to make it so.

I want to build a structure with sure foundations laid,
With walls to meet the tempest, unshaken, unafraid,
With towers that will be standing when time its requiem sings.

So it must be constructed of the enduring things.

Faith

By Lloyd Harding

It was noonday in the "Jitney Bar" in a smallish city in Oklahoma. The "Jitney Bar" is a cross between a cafeteria and a buffet lunch. It has a bar for the dispensing of soft drinks, from whence its name may have come. The food served there is clean and wholesome, and cheap. The place is patronized by almost all classes of people, and especially by office workers, both male and female.

They Gave Thanks

Upon this occasion I had chanced in there for lunch. An elderly couple entered while I was there, went to the serving table, procured and paid for their food, and seated themselves at a table directly in front of me.

The mother—at least she looked like a good old mother—had a plate of beans and a large sandwich, each item having cost ten cents. And the dad—at least he looked like somebody's dad—had the same.

The man had hung up his hat before they sat down, and after they were seated a strange thing took place. Without ostentation, but with perfect simplicity, dad and mother folded their hands and bowed their heads and closed their eyes, and dad prayed so only God and mother could hear. I was amazed to see that they were returning thanks for their homely food and asking His blessing upon it. And then they began quietly to eat.

I never knew who they were or whence they came or where they went. They were well past middle age. Their clothing was poor, almost shabby, but clean. The gaze of each was clear, and had about it that limpidity which shines out of the smiling eyes of little children.

In the rush of life they paused to give thanks to God for their frugal meal. They shrank not because they were in a public place. They were not self-conscious. Neither did they attract attention to what they did. Unquestionably they had faith.

An Appeal for Prayer

In another state I once saw a grandfather begin his journey in search of health and a more beneficial climate. His children and his grandchildren were gathered at the railway station. His last request before he boarded the train was this: "Remember us in your prayers, children!" He voiced his petition to them so that all could hear, relatives and by-standers alike. The grandchildren were mostly of adolescent age, and they were somewhat embarrassed by this semipublic request. Not so with the patriarch of that family. He was sick, and his parting words were proof that he had been crying out in faith to God for his blessings.

These two widely separated incidents give rise to the thought that most people are possessed of faith, and are able, upon occasion at least, to seek the calm and gentle peace and the merciful blessings of God.

Such instances, rare and largely unnoticed though they may be, speak eloquently of the fact that even in days of turmoil and godlessness a few of His children remember to worship God by prayer.

You have only to talk, however, with other wayfarers on the journey of life to learn that there is a deep, individual impulse to religion in nearly every human being. And, further than that, you will find a willingness to acknowledge the mercy and kindness of God. When I was younger, one man shocked me beyond words by such an acknowledgment. In a conversation concerning business he had occasion to speak of his possessions and his family, and he added: "God has been very good to me." The statement was true, but I was startled by such a frank admission from a man who was engaged in a non-religious conversation.

Universal Faith

Truly this flame of faith seems to have residence in all people, this desire at times to worship Deity. In the beginning there must have been but one religion and one God, but as peoples scattered and became isolated there seems to have grown up a system of religion for each group. In any event, there appears to be a Supreme Being in every religion, whether it be the Vishnu of the Hindus, or the Buddha of the Buddhists, or the Allah of the Mohammedans, or the Jehovah of the Israelites, or the Great Spirit of the American Indians, or the God of the Christians. This fact argues for a primal unity in all religious belief.

The Jehovah of ancient Israel was a God of righteousness, of power, and of compassion, even if pictured as stern and adamant in his dealings with a people whose history shows them to have been as persistent in their lapses of faith as in their religious tenets.

The Allah of the Mohammedans is portrayed in a more ruthless light, for Mohammedanism seems to be based largely on fear. Thus the austere and commanding Jehovah of the Children of Israel is made into a harsh and awesome Allah by the Mohammedan religion. Buddhism and the fragmentary religions of the American Indians seem to spring from a more gentle Head, although the Aztecs and other tribes in America followed the practice of human sacrifice as a part of their religion.

Yet the American Indian in his own fashion approaches the Great Spirit, the Mohammedan calls upon Allah, the Buddhist worships his idol, and the Chinese pay homage to their ancestors. Most of the latter also follow the teachings of Confucius, who never claimed to be a religious leader, but who has nevertheless left an immense imprint upon the moral consciousness of at least one nation.

But it is only the religion of Jesus Christ which is frankly and positively based upon the principle of love, not alone of God for man, but of man for his brother man. It is only the "glad tidings" of Christianity which have released the main spring of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and given life and vitality to precepts and teachings.

And I believe we all find within us, when we allow ourselves to feel it, a ready response to the waters of life which well up within our breasts like wholesome fountains.

Most men may forget God in the ordinary, routine days of their lives, and thus blunt their religious sense, but when trouble or stress is upon them they will readily admit that they fall back on faith and go to God in prayer.

Moving Toward God "In Reverse"

Benvenuto Cellini could not be called a pious man in any sense. Yet when he was placed in an extremity he betook himself to fervent prayer and worship.

As recorded in the latter part of the first book of his autobiography, he was at one time cast into a foul dungeon just after his leg had been broken. Under almost indescribable conditions he existed for months. He was saved from suicide by a divine power; he was ministered to by angels to such an extent that his leg was healed and made sound; he received peace and delight to his soul; he was prompted and warned to pray by an angelic voice, as a consequence of which the heart of his jailer was changed and his life was spared; his special prayer to God was answered, and he was transported through a great hall, where the innumerable thousands of the dead were moving about, to a place where he might climb up and see the sun, as he had yearned to do. He climbed the heights until he could see the glory of the sun, and in a remarkable vision he saw Christ and others within the lustrous orb. But as he climbed he did so backwards. He ascended in this most awkward and laborious manner, apparently turning his back on that which he desired most to see.

In this respect he demonstrated how most of us seek God. In the ordinary, hum-drum days of our lives we go blindly on our way, forgetting to look up. We give him no thought until some calamity is upon us, and then we remember to pray and to seek him. We thus approach him in a negative way, and clamber up the heights backwards. Instead of trying to draw near to him in an affirmative and orderly way day by day, we usually wait to gain our knowledge of him in times of suffering and distress.

God Works Through Natural Means

If we attend with our intelligence we soon discover that the answers to our prayers are seldom, if ever, announced with a fanfare of trumpets or by a blaze of lightning or through some miraculous means. Rather we come to realize that God works in a natural way and sends our blessings to us in some commonplace and normal manner. This is true to such an extent that a subtle power often tempts us to believe that what we desired was coming and would have arrived anyway, without our prayer. Yet again if we attend we learn that God works through and with the hearts of men, just as Cellini was saved from death by earnest prayer which resulted in the fact that his jailer, without any outward cause, countermanded the orders for his execution.

In all ages man seems to have bewailed the decline of faith. In somber tones Matthew Arnold wrote:

The Sea of Faith
Was once, too, at the full and round Earth's shore
Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furled.
But now I only hear
Its melancholy, long, withdrawing roar,
Retreating, to the breath
Of the night-wind, down the vast edges drear
And naked shingles of the world.

Carlyle said: "Belief, Faith has well-nigh vanished from the world." He may have intended to limit his language by placing a biblical slant to the word "world" but this is improbable.

Unquestionably faith and its exercise decrease, and have decreased, from time immemorial, in a general sense, with the neglect of worship. In all past ages as well as in our own time there have been many who neglected to worship Deity, by whatever name expressed. Lately there is concrete and cogent proof that all churches are fast losing their hold.

Faith an Individual Matter

Assuredly there is a decline in group faith, a composite waning of the evidences of belief among all peoples, and an ever increasing disregard of formal worship. Yet if we sift this matter we inevitably find that faith is an individual thing, a very personal thing. Even if we have faith we can not foist it upon others, though they be close to us. They must use their own faith. We may strengthen such faith as they have, perhaps, for as heretofore suggested it fairly appears that we all have faith, although it may be dormant within us. And we do have the power to weaken the faith of others, not only by our words but by our examples; and therein lies a monstrous responsibility.

Little children seem to be blessed with faith in large measure, and theirs is the best type of faith. It is that simplicity, that absolute freedom from doubt, which keeps little ones untroubled and undismayed. They may not understand in which direction their faith leans, but they are soothed and made impervious to worry by this attribute of God.

This God-given quality is nothing with which human beings should tamper. And if children possess it, it goes without saying that they should have peaceable possession of it. A long time ago William Blake denounced those who disturb the faith of children. He said this:

He who mocks the infant's faith
Shall be mocked in age and death.
He who shall teach the child to doubt
The rotting grave shall ne'er get out.
He who respects the infant's faith
Triumphs over hell and death.

We may not all agree that some from their graves "shall ne'er get out" but perhaps it would be better for them if they were not resurrected.

In any event, the faith of childhood is a wondrous thing and should be left to flower in peace, watered by such encouragement as we are able to give.

Faith is an intangible and elusive thing. We can describe it only as we ourselves know it. As Martin Luther once wrote: "For it is not possible for any man to write well about it, or to understand well what is rightly written, who has not at some time tasted of its spirit, under the pressure of tribulation; while he who has tasted of it even to a very small extent, can never write, speak, think or hear about it sufficiently."

It is noteworthy that Luther seems also to connect the exercise of faith with tribulation. Perhaps it is sweeter when we are driven to its use, but that is doubtful. At any rate it is a stronghold of refuge in any trial.

Thomas Carlyle had a beautiful conception of faith. He touched upon its universal aspect as follows: "It is by faith that man removes mountains; while he had faith his limbs might be wearied with toiling, his back galled with bearing; but the heart within him was peaceable and resolved. In the thickest gloom there burnt a lamp to guide him. If he struggled and suffered, he felt that it even should be so; knew for what he was struggling and suffering. Faith gave him an inward willingness, a world of strength wherewith to front a world of difficulty."

Certainly the principal office of faith is to make the heart "peaceable and resolved" in all conditions; in the exhilaration of joy as well as under the gloomy drizzle of sorrow; within the effulgent rays of good fortune as well as beneath the sodden fog of reverses.

The Uses of Faith

Nevertheless, we must build our faith. If we would gain it in larger measure we must use it. John Milton stated: "Well knows he who uses to consider, that our faith and knowledge thrive by exercise, as well as our limbs and complexion." (He used the word "complexion" as we use the word "constitution.")

We would do well to accumulate our hoard of faith as the miser saves his pennies. We must learn to recognize the valuable coins thereof when they come to us. Ralph Waldo Emerson truthfully said: "Our faith comes in moments; our vice is habitual. Yet there is a depth in those brief moments which constrains us to ascribe more reality to them than to all other experiences."

By irrelevancy, Walt Whitman made forcible his contribution to the subject when he asserted: "Faith is the antiseptic of the soul." True it is that faith will purge our spirits. It will, if we propagate it, kill the poisons within us, and drive out the fungus of indifference which seeks to choke spirituality.

Faith is an abstract thing and yet it can become almost tangible. It is the power to believe in the face of all persuasion to unbelief; it is a sort of strong foundation upon which we can build our hopes and, in time, our lives.

True faith grows stronger under trial and becomes a fixed determination to serve God and to overcome our spiritual enemies. And nearly always, if we analyze the matter, it is after the trial of our faith that we receive the blessing of God. It may not be exactly the blessing we desired or expected, but if we are faithful there is always a resultant benefit.

The Nature of Faith

Faith is a diffusion of many ingredients, of which the greatest should be humility. And a little of the element of meek stubbornness or kindly persistence should add much to the mixture.

Faith is at once a cause and a result. We have it inhering in us and causing us to believe in spiritual things, and if we exercise our faith it becomes greater and stronger and gives birth to a better realization of truth. Apparently it is not at all a physical property for it seldom atrophies with mere disuse. On the other hand its sources may be smothered by scorn and contempt. And if we ridicule or mock at faith it has a tendency to disappear, leaving bitterness and drifting sorrow in its place.

Faith in its effect is like a governor. It is a sedative. It restrains us from hysteria, and it prompts us to proper action, such as prayer.

It is universal in its operations and it is always free. We may exercise it at any time or place and in any environment. We may rely upon it in a sick room or at a feast, during a joyous reunion or while being robbed on the highway, when riding on a train or in a parachute.

Faith is a function of the heart rather than of the mind. It is something we feel with our fine emotions rather than something we can take apart and analyze with our intellects. Pascal recognized this quality in faith. In his "Thoughts" he wrote: "It is the heart which experiences God, and not the reason. This, then, is faith: God is felt by the heart, and not by the reason."

These "Thoughts" yield another jewel of comparison, as follows: "Faith is different from proof; the one is human, the other is a gift of God." This is worthy of much consideration.

An ancient and much-read work called the Imitation of Christ has this to offer: "All reason and natural investigation ought to follow faith, not to precede, nor to break it." Had this good advice been followed from the Middle Ages when it was published, we might expect that faith would have been increasing instead of decreasing among the masses with the passing years.

An afternoon train ride recently was remarkable for three incidents. First, the train struck a cow and as the coaches rolled slowly past her I looked down upon her from the window. Her head was lifted in agony and the fear of death was in her eyes. The poor dumb beast was to die, without hope, and therefore in fear and misery. All who so desire may classify themselves with that poor brute, and scorn at religion and eternal life. But faith lays hold of the promises of Him who died to save; who made the path for all His followers, not only from life to death but also through the unmarked wastes from death to resurrection.

Secondly, a lady on the train was handed a telegram which told of the death of her only sister, and she was crushed with grief.

A short time later the train pulled into a sun-baked little town, and the bodies of two men were unloaded. The lives of these men had been snuffed out in an oil well fire, and their last trip home was in their caskets. The cries and sobs of those bereft were tempered only by the presence of a goodly company of friends. Many men were there, and some of them were in the rough clothes of labor. Yet they were present with sunburned faces and toil-scarred hands, each with the vestment of a lodge about his neck, to do whate'er they could.

Even if we pass over the inevitable end of life, the latter two of these incidents show us again that soon or late rending griefs come into the experience of each human being. Such losses are inexorable, but after the first paroxysm of sorrow and despair the soothing, reassuring effect of faith is a treasure greatly to be desired by all. Then we find that it is infinitely better to have filled the reservoir of faith by daily accumulations than to have allowed the wellsprings to be stopped up.

We need faith day by day and no one need be ashamed to have it or to use it. Let those mock and ridicule who feel so inclined. Doubtless the time will come to all such when their mockery will turn upon them and they will feel truly ridiculous.

And best of all, faith is neither sectarian nor selfish. We may all, as His children, look freely to God with the eye of faith, no matter what spectacles of creed we may put on.

Perhaps in this dissertation from a nonbiblical standpoint one quotation from the Bible would not be inapropos. It is as follows:

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God. For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.—Mark 11: 22-24.

Report of the Department of Statistics for January and February

By Carroll L. Olson

The reports of the Department of Statistics for the two months of January and February are as follows:

Total enrollment of the church January 1, 1932.....	110,614
January baptisms	155
Transfers from unknown.....	8
Gains by correction.....	3
Total gain	166
Deaths	93
Expulsions	29
Loss by correction.....	1
Total loss	123
Net gain during January.....	43
Total enrollment of the church February 1, 1932.....	110,657
February baptisms	78
Transfers from unknown.....	3
Gain by correction.....	1
Total gain	82
Deaths	90
Expulsions	14
Loss by correction.....	5
Total loss	109

Net loss during February.....	27
Total enrollment of the church March 1, 1932.....	110,630

It will be seen by the above statement that the gains by baptism and transfer from the unknown were hardly sufficient to offset the losses; in fact during February the losses were greater than the gains. As far as total baptisms are concerned, February was the lowest month in the past twelve years.

The following miscellaneous reports were also received during the two months:

Item	Number in January	Number in February
Transfers	563	578
Blessings	148	91
Marriages	86	62
Ordinations	20	30
Silences	9	3
Divorces	3	7
Branches disorganized	2	2
Resigned	1

During January the branches which had three baptisms or more were the following:

Rich Hill, Missouri	8
Flint, Michigan	7
Third, Columbus, Ohio	7
New Canton, Illinois	5
Central Oklahoma, nonresident	4
Ontario, California	4
San Diego, California	4
Denver, Colorado	3
Lansing, Michigan	3
Muskegon, Michigan	3
Portales, New Mexico	3
Saginaw, Michigan	3

During February the branches which had three baptisms or more were the following:

Beardstown, Illinois	8
Central Oklahoma, nonresident	5
First, Columbus, Ohio	5
Los Angeles, California	5
St. Thomas, Ontario	5
Southwestern Texas, nonresident	5
Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania	4
Eastern Michigan, nonresident	3
Rich Hill, Missouri	3

The distribution of the total baptisms for the two months was as follows:

	January	February
Zion and the stakes.....	13	4
United States and Canada outside stakes..	88	72
Holland Mission	6	2
British Isles Mission.....	2
Norway Mission	2
Hawaiian Mission	10
Society Isles Mission.....	34
Totals	155	78

Weekly Health Letter

Contact Infections

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Infections may be focal, from the mouth, sexual organs or the teeth. We should not depend upon the protection of our health officers, but should guard our own bodies from various poisons that people unnecessarily imbibe. One thing to remember is to avoid infections. Infections may be brought about through the skin, or through the nose, and it is plainly evident that when there is an epidemic, people should keep away from public places. The subject of focal infection has been the result of much discussion and by it is meant a collection of germs which multiply in the body and produce poisons. These poisons are taken up by the lymphatic system and then they enter the blood stream, causing a very marked and harmful influence upon the body.

A large percentage of conditions are found to be due to focal infections. I will mention only a few, such as lumbago, neuritis and the so-called rheumatism. Most of the cases in the old days were brought about by not knowing the source or not seeking the real cause of the trouble, but in the light of our present knowledge, we have the X-ray and the various laboratory tests which aid very materially in finding out the origin of the infection. It should be understood more thoroughly that the removal of the focal infection may not be enough to restore the patient's health, but frequently prevents further progress of the disease. This is because the body tissues have been changed. Therefore the physician frequently applies other methods of treatment to bring the patient back to normal. They may include various hygienic, medical, or physical means, such as heat, massage, baths, electricity, and medicinal agents. Many cases have gone so far that it is only possible to improve the condition, which may prolong the patient's life and relieve suffering. High blood pressure and low blood pressure are frequently the result of this class of infection, and many times is the cause of serious structural changes taking place in the kidneys, heart, and blood vessels. The teeth, the tonsils, middle ear, and the sinuses are the most of the sites but the reproductive organs, the intestinal tract, the gall bladder, wounds of long standing, especially those involving the bones, may also be the cause of serious trouble. It is a strange fact that diseased tooth cavities, tooth sockets, may last for years without the knowledge of the individual. Fortunately, the X-ray has been a great aid in discovering such an obscure condition. Unfortunately, in some cases, an X-ray examination does not reveal an infection of this kind even in one of its most virulent forms. The physician must be constantly on his guard not to overlook the fact that it is not the pus that does the damage, but the bacteria, and he must be constantly on the alert to interpret symptoms. Nearly all cases requiring an examination for pains of neuritis, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatic, etc., and each and every case of kidney irritation or evidence of disturbances in the thyroid secretion, should have an X-ray examination as an extremely necessary precautionary measure.

Autobiography

X.—CONTINUED MISSIONARY WORK IN IOWA, 1893.

By James Franklin Mintun

I was associated with James McKiernan and Charles Derry the first of the year in services at Magnolia, and continued till the ninth of January. I then labored in the vicinity of Preparation and Onawa in schoolhouses, till the twenty-second, when I was taken ill, yet continued preaching at night even when I could not sit up during the day part of the time. During these services Mrs. Eliza Folck, an aunt of Brother Hubert Case, and Mrs. Priscilla Brown, 86 years of age, gave their names for baptism on January 30.

I came to Onawa to make arrangements for the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church, where I had preached once before, where I began services on February 6, continuing till the eleventh. The minister, F. A. Morrow, attended the services, and again his wife presided at the organ. By invitation enjoyed his hospitality part of the time I was there. This is record relative to these services: "Thus I closed my labors in Onawa, feeling that if ever the angels of God had ever prepared the way before any of his ministry they had prepared the way before me."

From there I went to Maple Landing where lived the family of Brother Seward. There was a union church building, but it seems that the Methodist Episcopal minister had charge at the time. He refused to let me use the church, "calling us a low degraded people." I attended the Sunday school, and by request taught the Bible class. I preached at a schoolhouse near the church to a large audience in the evening. The next Sunday I attended the same Sunday school, having continued meeting each night the preceding week. The minister did not come to occupy, and the members consented that I might preach at 11 a. m., if I would permit them to select the text of Scripture from which I should preach. I was pleased with their selection, which was James 1: 27, and was happy in the enjoyment of the Spirit as I preached the word, giving them distinctly to understand that we should be very careful to satisfy ourselves that we had that "pure religion" this text spoke of. That out of the many religions that existed in the days of Jesus Christ, there was but one pure religion, and that it was just possible that of all the many religions now on the earth claiming to be the religion of Jesus Christ, there is but one "pure religion!"

I was requested to again come into the neighborhood of the Jones Schoolhouse, to perform the marriage ceremony of one of the daughters of the Catholic lady previously mentioned as being benefited by the debate which she heard between Clark Braden and myself. While there I preached at the Jones Schoolhouse, and at the Johnson Schoolhouse, not far from Little Sioux, when I had the pleasure of the company of Brother Columbus Scott, with whom I have been associated in the Seventies Quorum for many years, he having come to make me a visit. He preached some powerful sermons.

I went home March 1, to prepare for the coming convention and conference which was held March 3, 4, 5. My report for the last three months contained the following: "Attended 89 services, preached 66 sermons, attended 10 Sunday school sessions; baptized several and did other work of the church." This year I was selected as one of the delegates with the arrangements that my expenses would be paid. My report made for the conference year contained these items: "Attended and assisted at 289 services, preached 205 sermons, baptized 24, and acted as superintendent of the Little Sioux District Sunday School Association.

On March 13, I began a short series of services at River Sioux, assisted by Brother Mark Jensen, supported with musical help by Sisters Ruth Cobb and Bertha Beecham. On the 15th I attended a prayer meeting at Little Sioux, when I "enjoyed the spirit of prophecy, and had a most beautiful vision: A virgin with upturned face and uplifted hands and tearful eyes, pleading and seeking to advance; but on both sides were personalities pulling down on her hands. The hands finally are lowered, the head bowed, and a person trying to push the head forward; but then came to her rescue other persons who delivered her from these adversaries, and she ascended in a flowing white robe with a joyful face, occupying perfect freedom in advancing."

This is the record of March 17: "Got ready to go to Lake Circle, but just previous to starting Brother Amos Vredenberg came for us to administer to his father whom they thought lay at the point of death. . . . The results were marvelous. He was much relieved. Made out, and had his will signed and sealed."

A request for a debate was made on March 7, and was on March 25 concluded with an agreement on three propositions, the Baptists selecting the Reverend Allen to represent them, the time of the debate to be the latter part of June or first of July. After I spent some weeks in preparing for this debate the minister died and the Baptists made no arrangements for a substitute.

On March 31, I was asked to administer to Grandma McCauley, not a member of the church, but a woman of great faith in the power of God. Through faith and prayer she had relief given her from a cancer at one time, and she said at this time, "I have faith to take out another if it should be necessary."

I was on my way to Conference to be held at Lamoni this year, and stopped and ministered the word at Omaha April 2. I was at this conference reappointed to the Little Sioux District in charge.

On April 20, I made a visit with Sister S. W. L. Scott, who had been brought to her mother's, Sister Susan Coffman's, to die. She died on the twenty-fifth, and I returned to her mother's to comfort her husband and the family, with whom I lodged that night. The next morning I viewed one of the most unexpected experiences of my life. Brother Scott was very grief stricken, and when we came down the stairs the nurse that had accompanied his wife from Indiana stepped up to where he was seated and requested him to tie her shoe laces. With the humility known to be a virtue in Brother Scott he made no remonstrance, though I could see that it was a heavy burden to have her to make such a request under the circumstances. This was an evidence of lack of good judgment on the part of the nurse, and of the humility of the man of God, whose heart was almost bursting with grief.

Six names were given me for baptism at Little Sioux May 1, which was attended to, the confirmation following, and a social service held in the evening which was such a blessing to all that meeting did not dismiss till about 11 o'clock, so great was the manifestation of the Spirit. At this baptism Doctor Benjamin B. Shirk was baptized. Following this I was brought home to assist Brother J. F. McDowell with services at Magnolia, and to meet Brother F. A. Smith, who was associated with me in mission work this year. He came May 6, and began by preaching at Magnolia that evening.

I started for the home of Brother R. Vansickle, who had obtained the consent of the trustees for the use of a union church, in charge at the time of the Methodists. We had notices prepared and were distributing them, when we met the minister, when we made known our mission. He made it emphatically known that he had charge of the church and not the trustees, and that we could not use the church to preach in, and expressed himself in a very abusive way. We had services at the home of Brother Vansickle. We then went to Pierson and secured the use of the United Brethren Church for Sunday evening, and then made use of the Southwick Schoolhouse near Brother Vansickle's. In the neighborhood I found some scattered Saints who had not heard any preaching for some time, and they were very much revived. On the twenty-first I baptized four and confirmed them, and administered the sacrament. While here I administered to one of the sons of Brother Vansickle who was suffering from an internal disorder and was almost immediately relieved.

This was one time when my record said: "I found upon examination to have only one cent of my own with me."

At Brother Vansickle's I preached a sermon to his son Ora, who was sick and could not attend the preaching, and requested to hear a sermon. After this he requested baptism as soon as he was able.

At Smithland and Oto, I made a visit to Sister George F. Waterman, who was quite low with what was pronounced to be a cancer. I then came to Little Sioux where I met with Brother W. W. Blair again on the twenty-fifth. Remained to assist with the services till the twenty-eighth, when I baptized three. On the next day Brother F. A. Smith came to be associated with me in missionary work.

The district convention and conference met at Moorhead June 2-4. At the convention of the District Sunday School Association I was again re-elected superintendent. At the conference I ordained Brother Hubert Case to the office of a priest, and Frank Cohrt to the same office, and Brother Edward C. Outhouse to the office of teacher. On the fifth I baptized two.

Arranged for the locating of the tent for services at Missouri Valley where it was brought and put it up on the twelfth, continuing meetings till the twenty-fifth with the assistance of Brethren F. A. Smith and Joseph Seddon in the preaching and Sister Millie Davidson, now Adams, with the music.

On the twenty-fifth the tent was taken and put up at Onawa, where meetings were held with the association of Brother F. A. Smith. Three were baptized at the close of the meetings.

On July 15 I assisted with a two-days meeting at Moorhead. At a prayer meeting a prophecy was given, my record says, "In which I was promised strength to finish my work, if I would put my whole heart and trust in God, as there were many souls awaiting the hearing of the gospel from me." Here was performed a double wedding ceremony, the only one I have ever performed. Brother Ernest Outhouse was married to Aggie Hoffman, and Thomse O. Strand married to Lenna Outhouse. The next day I baptized six, and assisted to bless seven children. On the seventeenth I baptized one of those previously married, Brother T. O. Strand and another; the next day I baptized three more, and on the twentieth I baptized one more; and on the twenty-third baptized one more. Brother F. A. Smith was with me in these services.

On the twenty-fourth the tent was taken and put up at Smithland, where Brother F. A. Smith and D. A. Hutchings assisted. Here three were baptized by Brother F. A. Smith. While at Smithland the tent blew down. Another was baptized. An effort was made to secure a place at Mapleton for missionary purposes, but received no encouragement.

The tent was then taken to Peiro, and Brother D. A. Hutchings assisted Brother F. A. Smith, continuing till August 31. I labored at Little Sioux, where I baptized five. During the time of the tent meetings at Peiro, I was by special request to assist in the reunion at Thurman; engaged in the work there from the twenty-first, making a specialty of the Sunday school work, with the blackboard. Was associated here with Joseph R. Lambert, Joseph Luff, J. B. Heide, Joshua Carlile, Henry Kemp, and Columbus Scott. Convention and conference of the district was held at Woodbine beginning September 1, where I was chosen to assist in presiding.

The tent was taken to Maple Landing, where because of my illness Brother F. A. Smith did the major part of the work. Here is where in my preaching I made one of my blunders, which I knew nothing about till Brother Fred called my attention to it following the service in his joking way. I thought that he was only joking at first, but when others sustained him in what he said, then I was satisfied. He said that in my effort to make the Book of Mormon prove conclusively and emphatically that the church was free from the charge that some were holding that we approved of a man having more than one wife, I quoted the statement from Jacob the second chapter which says:

"For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women." But I used the word "one" in the stead of "none" in that part which says "and concubines he shall have none." This was not forgotten.

The meetings continued at Maple Landing till too cold, when Brother Smith and I continued in a schoolhouse in the neighborhood, till the 28th.

There were several very much interested. The tent was then shipped to Logan where the reunion began October 6, continuing till the sixteenth. I baptized fourteen at the reunion.

I had one of the most peculiar dreams at this time in which I thought that I dreamed that another brother and I both prophesied that Brother Joseph Lane was called to preach the word. This was true, and he is at it yet.

The Missouri Valley Branch was organized without my knowledge, being assistant missionary in charge, or the knowledge or consent of the missionary in charge, Brother Joseph R. Lambert. When we learned of it we arranged a plan so that the matter was adjusted satisfactory to all, so far as I have ever heard, and it is one of the branches that is continuing with steady aim, and with an eye single to the glory of God.

While preaching at the Brown Schoolhouse near Soldier, Iowa, I lodged with Brother James Ballantyne, and while there he requested me to assist him to make a division of his real estate, and make out deeds for each heir, to be placed in escrow till his death, when they were to be secured and put on record. This is the thoughtfulness of the good brother, to save expense to his heirs. While holding meetings here, I was alone, and one night I tried to preach, and everything turned black before me, and I was assisted out into the air, but not able to hold meetings that night, and while there was a house full that night, the interest was broken, and I closed the meetings. Continued meetings in several schoolhouses till the time of the convention which was held December 1, at Persia, Iowa. After the conference of the district, Brother Heman C. Smith made a tour of the Magnolia, Woodbine, Logan and Missouri Valley Branches, where I assisted him.

During the latter part of December I cared for the sick in my home.

An event transpired during the time Brother F. A. Smith and I were laboring together that is worthy of notice, which I had nearly overlooked.

On June 27 we came to Little Sioux on our way to where the tent was, and called at Sister Alice E. Cobb's. For several weeks previous to this call, her sister from Pennsylvania was visiting her. She was a delegate to the religious congress then in session at Chicago, representing the Christian Science thought on religion. She had come to see her sister with a view to convincing her that Christian Science was superior to the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and that sickness was a thing that did not exist. She took sick, and was sick when Brother F. A. Smith and I called. Sister Cobb came out to meet us on the porch, and had us be seated, and explained the situation. She requested me to make her sister

Kirtland District Meets in Conference

The annual conference of Kirtland District was held at Barberton, Ohio, March 5 and 6. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, minister in charge, was associated with the district presidency in presiding over the conference. Patriarchs Gunsolley, Griffiths, and Manchester, and Elder John L. Cooper, pastor of Kirtland Branch, and bishop's agent for the district together with other workers of the district were in attendance.

The business of the conference was done in the spirit of unity and peace. The membership of the district totals 1,876, entitling the district to eighteen delegates to General Conference. The reports show that the district has done excellent work in bearing its burden of the general finances. There has been a steady increase by baptism. And since there have been no missionaries in the district for some years, the increase of baptism indicated activity on part of local authority and personal workers.

The district has shown considerable interest in the new program of Religious Education and nearly all of the branches are using the system either in part or in full as much as possible. The district has a fine worker in William F. Webbe, superintendent of church schools.

The district officers elected were J. E. Bishop, district president; E. G. Hammond, first counselor; William Goudy, second counselor; Mrs. Edna Rhodes, district secretary; Mrs. Frank Ebeling, district chorister; Mae Gill, district treasurer; William F. Webbe, superintendent of church schools, and John L. Cooper was sustained as bishop's agent.

In the evening the district president preached on the "Need of Zion," a sermon which was well received. Saturday evening a reception was held for the young people in the home of Lula Romig. This was largely attended and a visit while she visited with Brother Smith on the porch. I did so, and found her very humble, and willing to call upon the elders of the Latter Day Saints to administer to her. She said, "I came here from the far away state of Pennsylvania to convince my sister that there was no sickness, but now I am sick. The local Christian Science members have been here to try to convince me that I am not sick, but I can not deny what I know is really so, for I am sick, and very sick. My sister has convinced me that Joseph Smith had authority given him to administer for the sick, and that the elders now have that authority, and I wish to be administered to, for I believe I shall be healed." Brother F. A. Smith and I administered to her, Brother Smith leading in prayer before the administration, and the Spirit of God was in that prayer. After we had administered to her, she sat upon the side of the bed or lounge where she had been lying, and began to make her plans to return home, not intending to stop at Chicago. We were informed that she became strong and had her normal health afterwards.

an interesting time was had. Some of the older folks met in the home of Mr. and Sister Dickson.

Sunday was a day filled with activity. A large crowd was on hand for nine thirty, for the brief but effective devotional exercise. Special classes were held afterwards, Brother Ellis being in charge of the priesthood; Brother J. E. Bishop was in charge of approximately fifty young people; Brother Gunsolley had charge of the adults, and Sister Gunsolley took charge of another adult class, while the local classes were cared for by the staff of local teachers.

After the class work, a pleasing ceremony was conducted by William F. Webbe. Five certificates were presented from the Department of Religious Education. Sister Gunsolley was presented a gold seal certificate. John Curry, Sister Manross, and Sister Brain received certificates of other grades. Sister Virginia Webbe was not present to receive hers. The commencement speech was made, in his usual effective style, by J. A. Gunsolley. It was appropriate that he should make the speech for he has been interested in the development and education of the young of the church for a number of years.

The morning sermon by Apostle C. F. Ellis was an inspirational analysis of Revelation 14, and Isaiah 29, with appointed applications to conditions in the world and the vital needs of the church.

The afternoon sacramental service was a spiritual feast. A good spirit prevailed throughout the meeting and the Saints were active in their testimonies, indicating their zeal for the church and breathing prayers for the success of the coming General Conference.

A hearty vote of thanks was extended the Barberton Saints for their excellent hospitality. Barberton Branch is under the leadership of Elder W. P. Odom, who is a consecrated and a godly man.

Motions prevailed indicating the support of the Anti-Saloon League of Ohio and a request was made to the First Presidency for the return of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis to this mission, and also the return of Brother Gunsolley and his wife to the district.

The Saints are looking forward with grave concern and expectancy to the coming General Conference; they are praying that the power of righteousness shall prevail. The branches of the district approved the recommendation of the district president that each branch on each Sunday prior to the General Conference meet for prayer, supplicating God that he in his graciousness and revealing power will bless the General Conference and the whole church.

The ordinations of Lamont McDowell and Edward Cooper to the office of Elder was approved by the conference. The conference then adjourned to meet according to district rules.

On Sunday evening, Brother Gunsolley began a series of meetings in Barberton Branch.

All who attended the conference were made happy because of the association of others and the presence of the Holy Spirit. One brother expressed a thought like this: "Some folk are saying that the church is weakening. All they need to do is to come to a conference like this and see the large army of young and old who are devoted to the interests of the gospel of Christ. They will be convinced that the church is going on to victory."

A motion was adopted in the conference, asking the First Presidency to consider the advisability and the propriety of a stake organization for Kirtland. This was done not in the spirit of prompting or of demanding, but rather as a suggestion indicating to the general church officers that some in Kirtland are alive to the needs and possibilities of a stake organization in this part of the country. The early church once had a stake organization in Kirtland and the Lord promised that he would rebuild Kirtland. He has not forgotten his promises and in his own due time his word will be fulfilled. Kirtland District is committed to the message of the Restoration of the gospel, the spreading of that message in all the world, and the building up of Zion, and prays the blessing of God upon its labors and the labors of all others in these tasks.

Dallas, Texas

The greatest movement that has occurred in this branch in several years originated at a special business meeting, called by Pastor W. R. Standifer, to decide just what we would do with the small church building fund which was on hand. We realized that it would be foolish to think of a new building at this time, and the old building was badly in need of repairs. It was therefore unanimously decided to remodel the old frame building in our possession.

To the original building have been added a new room to take care of the children's church school requirements, and a rest room. The old windows that could not be lowered from the top and could be raised from the bottom only with difficulty, have been replaced with new ones, and this eliminates our past ventilation difficulty. The entire building, including the "annex," has new wall paper. Windows have been changed to doors, and doors to windows wherever needed. All woodwork is newly painted. The windowpanes are "stain-glassed" with art glass paper, and we are proud of them. Also, the rostrum has a beautiful green carpet which is new, and new inlaid linoleum covers the floor of the vestibule. The "annex" has new window curtains, and the old draperies in the main building have been brightened up by redeyeing.

Nor was the exterior of the building neglected. It has been rough stuccoed a light gray, the windows trimmed dark red, and the cornices straw color. The new fireproof shingle roof is terra cotta color. There are new entrance doors stained dark oak. All we need now to complete the picture is shrubbery for landscaping the grounds and an attractive church sign.

We are happy to know that we now have an attractive meeting place, and the only debt is forty-two dollars. Everything else, including all labor, was paid for in cash.

District conference for central Texas convened at Dallas, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, February 12, 13, and 14. Friday evening, February 12, a play, "The Path Across the Hill," was staged by the young people's group, and was a huge success, despite the fact there had been no opportunity for a dress rehearsal because of church repairs. Those in the cast were Helen Deere, Virginia Williams, Mary Davenport, Mildred Lee, Mrs. Forrest Wilson, Mrs. Herbert Bleil, Stanley Davenport, Hal Davenport, Forrest Wilson, and James Livingston. Sister Chattie Everett directed the play.

Saturday, the 12th, was devoted to prayer meeting at nine o'clock, followed by a business session, which was adjourned at noon to be resumed at three o'clock. Missionary J. W. A. Bailey spoke at the evening service.

Sunday we met at 9.45 a. m. for the regular church school program. C. W. Tischer delivered an interesting sermon at the eleven o'clock hour. Dinner was had in the annex, to enable everyone to be present at the round table discussion at 1.30 p. m. Priesthood meeting was held at three o'clock, and the evening meal served at the church at five o'clock. Prayer service was held from six to seven o'clock, at which time the conference was formally brought to a close. Bishop L. F. P. Curry spoke at the evening service.

Out-of-town conference guests were, C. W. Tischer, Houston, district president; Missionary J. W. A. Bailey, district vice president; Brother and Sister F. L. Arnold, Brother and Sister A. V. Arnold, Donald McCormack, and G. G. Arnold, of Houston; Missionary George H. Wixom, San Bernardino, California; Sister George B. Ritchie, South Bend, Texas; Sister Frances Cornwell, and Brother G. Andes, Breckenridge; Brother J. A. Wyninger, Fort Worth, Texas, and Brother Lester Hershey and family of Handley, Texas.

We are pleased to announce that Brother Curry and family, who have formerly resided at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, have moved to Dallas. We hope they will enjoy their acquaintance with the Saints here and will enjoy living in Texas.

Friday evening, February 26, the young people held a farewell party in honor of Addie Alice Hershey at the home of Brother and Sister H. H. Davenport, Arlington, Texas. The Hershey family recently moved to Denison, Texas, from Handley.

Brother Gene Christy of Kansas City was our guest at morning services, Sunday, February 28.

Two deaths have been reported. Mrs. Addie Connelly, Green Forest, Arkansas, mother of Sister Lester Hershey, died December 4, 1931, at the home of Brother and Sister Hershey, at Handley, Texas. Mrs. Connelly was fifty-eight years of age.

Brother John J. Elam, husband of Sister Martha Elam, and father of Sister Zella Standefer, died at his home in Dallas, Friday, December 11, 1931, at the age of seventy three years. Brother Elam was baptized a member of this church August 9, 1931.

Columbus, Ohio

Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The Spirit of the heavenly Father encouraged this congregation at the February sacrament service. Each was made to feel a more intense desire to press on in his service.

The women met February 11, for a potluck dinner. Twenty-five members and one visitor were present. Sister Ethel Kirkendall read a paper on "The Purpose of the Church." She made it plain that the church is the means to an end and that perfection is not impossible if we strive to live our religion. First and always our effort should be to serve the church. A variety program followed, each member taking part.

The priesthood are having very profitable meetings the first Tuesday evening of each month.

The Sunday school started a contest last Sunday. We hope to see attendance increase. Ninety-nine were present on the opening Sunday.

The Temple Builders, Orioles, and Blue Birds are meeting regularly. Each group is growing under its respective leader.

The prayer meetings are of a high spiritual order, and attendance is increasing.

Sermons during the month of February were very good. From each speaker we gleaned instructions to apply to our daily lives. The speakers were R. E. Madden, H. E. French, Doctor W. B. Reeves, J. E. Matthews, G. H. Kirkendall, G. R. Wheeler, and A. E. Anderton, district president.

Third Branch, 2369 Sullivant Avenue

This is our first appearance in the Herald. We wish at this time to give a short account of our origin and growth.

In May, 1930, a few of the Saints of this section of the city of Columbus organized under the group system, by holding prayer services at the home of Sister C. R. Dougherty, on South Eureka Avenue.

After a few months we found it necessary to seek larger quarters, as our attendance became too large to be successfully accommodated in a private home. These services were under the supervision of Elder F. C. Welsh, then of First Branch. Associated with him were others of the local priesthood.

After intense interest was shown in these prayer services, it was deemed wisdom to organize a mission with preaching services Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening. This mission was organized by District President A. E. Anderton. The organization as a mission was perfected in October of 1930. A church school was also organized with a full staff of teachers and officers.

This continued as a mission until March, 1931, when we were organized as the Third Columbus Branch, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis being present and Elder A. E. Anderton. Elder F. C. Welsh was chosen president, G. P. Myers, priest; Luther Kirkendall, priest, and Brother Walters, priest. Brother Kirkendall was ordained a priest at the organization of the branch, Brother Theodore Welsh a teacher, and Brother Ted Dougherty a deacon. The officers of the branch remain the same with exception of Brother Myers who was called and ordained an elder in October, 1931.

This branch has steadily grown. Seventeen new members have been added to its number since its organization. The Spirit of God has characterized the work in this place, and we have been assured that if we are faithful before our heavenly Father, many honest souls will be added to our ranks.

Our Sunday school at present is under the supervision of William Welsh, superintendent, and Charles Myers, assistant superintendent, and others occupying the various offices. This school has grown until we have an enrollment of about sixty-five. Of this we are very proud.

In the year that has passed since our organization, we have had the splendid support of many of the local priesthood, and also of some of the neighboring branches. Among those from out of the city that have visited us have been Apostle Clyde F. Ellis, Elder Ed. Dickson, of Lancaster, and Elder William Vickroy, also of Lancaster. We are glad to have those of other branches visit us whether they are of the priesthood or otherwise.

Pastor F. C. Welsh held a two-week series of special services with excellent success. A good interest was shown and five new members were added to our number.

We have an organized women's department, under the supervision of Sister Schmidt, and feel sure that the department will grow in the future as it has in the past.

We hope to be able, in the future, to let you hear from us from time to time, and trust that you will remember us in your prayers.

Ava, Missouri

About the middle of January Elder J. C. Chrestensen, of Tigris, came into this locality and held a ten-day series of services. Brother Chrestensen united with the church in 1860, and for over fifty years has served in the ministry. His sermons were well received.

Elder S. W. Simmons, of Kiltner, Missouri, visited us Sunday, February 14, and preached an inspiring sermon on the theme, "I will Build My Church." Brother Simmons came from Oklahoma a few months ago and located a few miles west of Ava.

A pie supper was held at the church the evening of January 19. The proceeds which amounted to about nineteen dollars will be used for further improvement on the church building. We were assisted in the program by a number of helpers from the Union Sunday School. The young people of the Saints' church presented the play, "The More Abundant Life," in the Union Church at Christmas.

The department of recreation and expression had its beginning here Sunday evening, February 28. Officers are: President, Grant Dobson; assistant, Eldon Morris; secretary, Mayme Gettys; treasurer, Sister J. E. Morris; music director, Alvin Dobson; janitor, Eldon Morris. Teachers for the study period are: Brother Ralph Wilt and Sister Gomer Maitland.

During the past few months our church school has grown. It is well supervised by Brother Wilt with Brother Spease as his assistant. Our aim is to attain greater success if possible in future months.

Ludington, Michigan

We strive to build up the kingdom of God in Ludington. The wonderful lectures of Apostle D. T. Williams have been much enjoyed, and the members look forward to his return.

John Irving, the ten months old baby of Elder J. L. and Sister Ruth Randall, passed away January 27. The child was sick only two weeks with gland trouble and a malady resembling tonsillitis. His death was a severe shock to the parents and community. Besides his parents, the baby leaves one sister, Eloise Mae, one brother, Richard Leroy, his grandparents, and other relatives. Elder D. T. Williams preached the funeral sermon January 29. The baby was born March 25, 1931, and was a strong, merry little fellow.

Keith Loyal is the name given the infant son of Mr. and Sister Peterson. He was born February 7.

At present there is much sickness in the branch.

Alliance, Ohio

During 1931 Alliance Branch gained seven members by baptism. Attendance at all services has been nearly doubled. Our midweek prayer meeting is of special interest; several of our primary members take an active part.

In Sunday school we have been following the programs outlined in Vision with splendid results. The theme talk is usually given to different ones of our young people and they have presented some good thoughts. There is fine talent among them.

Brother Alba Smith, who has a fine Baritone voice, and Sister Vida Smith, who is an accomplished pianist, have been broadcasting over station WADC, Akron, Ohio.

Our young brother, Joseph Gordon, also a musician, was chosen from among many high school students to give a piano solo at the Alliance High School commencement, January 27, at which time he graduated. Others might be mentioned who are being recognized because of their talents.

In social activities we have enjoyed class parties, wiener roasts, and box and pie socials. The proceeds of the latter two are to purchase new hymnals. At Christmas-time our young people arranged and gave a splendid program. A Christmas pageant presented in costume was beautiful and impressive.

The women's department has been active under the leadership of Sister Celia Smith. We have been able to assist the branch financially, paying insurance, buying paint for the interior of the church, and enlarging the platform which was badly needed.

Among the ministry who have visited us, bringing messages of encouragement have been Elder E. Guy Hammond, of Akron; Elder William Goudy, of New Philadelphia, and Elder William Lewis, of Canton. In December, district superintendent, James Bishop, of Steubenville, and Elder John Cooper, of Kirtland, visited us, speaking at the Wednesday evening prayer service. The times in which we live, the wonderful promises of God and the present needs of the church were placed plainly before us. We regretted that they could give us only one evening.

Elder J. C. McConnaughy, of Barberton, conducted a week of missionary meetings the latter part of last May with good results. Commencing the week of January 24, of this year, Elder James Bishop conducted a series of meetings, illustrating some of his lectures with stereopticon views. He had splendid liberty. Good interest was shown, and from this effort we expect some baptisms.

The family of Sister Gordon, which has been under quarantine for diphtheria for three weeks is able to be out again. There are several others who are sick, and we wish them a complete and speedy recovery.

We have been passing through some discouraging conditions, common to all, at this time. Only one brother in the branch has employment. Some of the Saints, living at a distance who have been very faithful in attendance, have been unable to come to church being without money to secure a license for their car. This has caused our attendance to drop with the new year. However, our faith is strong in the ultimate triumph of this church and our determination is to go forward, lifting our share of the load, that we may have part in its final glorious success.

Conference in Utah District

The conference of Utah District was held February 28. A good prayer meeting at nine o'clock, presided over by Elder A. M. Chase, district president, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards, began the activities of the day. Church school convened at ten o'clock, and an interesting sermon was given by Brother Edwards at eleven.

The business meeting was called for two o'clock in the afternoon, and Apostle Edwards was chosen to preside. Over one hundred members were present. Reports from over the district were heard, and delegates chosen for General Conference are Elder and Mrs. A. M. Chase, Elders R. R. Robertson, and Allan Wardle.

At three o'clock Apostle Edwards had charge of a round table when the members were privileged to ask questions. These were very satisfactorily answered and topics of interest were discussed.

"What It Takes to Be a Latter Day Saint," the theme of Apostle F. Henry Edwards' sermon was an inspirational and fitting climax for the most interesting and best attended conferences we have had for some time.

Apostle Edwards came into this district on Wednesday, Brother Chase meeting him in Ogden. At night Brother Edwards gave the Ogden Saints a sermon which was thoroughly appreciated. Thursday night quite a good congregation of the Saints at Malad were out to greet him, and were rewarded by hearing one of his interesting spiritual sermons.

On Thursday, February 25, Brother Chase received a message from President F. M. Smith which announced that he would be in Salt Lake City Friday noon, could stay only one night, but would preach to the Saints Friday evening.

We had a busy time getting this announced over the district and the members here, but were successful. When Friday night arrived there was quite a full house, every branch in the district being well represented. President Smith gave a clear-cut and interesting presentation of financial conditions of the church stressing the fact that success can only be attained by each member willingly accepting and bearing his share of responsibility. At the close, everyone filed up to greet him with a hearty handshake and to express appreciation of his discourse.

The excellent sermons of Apostle Edwards through the district and President Smith's discourse Friday night made a good approach to the conference, helping in general attendance and good feeling in our Sunday meetings.

Good meals were served by our experienced chef, Brother John Graci. The women's department has previously had this responsibility, but Brother Graci generously offered his services free of charge; all he asked were the materials to cook. He and the rest of the young people's class undertook the task and served a good hot dinner family style and an excellent lunch at night. Over one hundred sat at tables at noon, and nearly all stayed to the evening meeting.

We are having excellent cottage meetings in Salt Lake City and Brother R. Robertson reports the interesting times they are having in cottage meetings at Ogden. This is an excellent way of telling the gospel message to our neighbors.

The Saints of this district are praying for the success of the coming General Conference. Brother and Sister Chase expect to visit each branch in the district before they go to conference.

Independence

The Messiah Choir of Independence and Kansas City approved a resolution from the Messiah Choir Board inviting Brother Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to direct the conference performance of The Messiah. This action was taken at the regular Sunday afternoon rehearsal at the Stone Church, the resolution being presented by George H. Hulmes, manager. Brother Hoxie is the general church chorister. Meanwhile local directors are diligently at work with choir rehearsals.

Stone Church

It is appropriate that a beautiful Easter Sunday should open with a baptismal service. Four candidates were conducted into the water by Elder S. A. Thiel, David Charles Phillips, Harold Richard Phillips, Mrs. Ada L. Adkins, and Elizabeth May Noon Phillips.

Beautiful flowers and music and an atmosphere of calm and reverence hallowed the Easter service for the very large crowd of worshipers which gathered at the Stone Church at eleven o'clock Sunday morning.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson chose as the basis of his Easter message the words of Jesus to John, the divine: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." He impressed upon the congregation the significance of the resurrection of Christ in all history and in our lives today, the hope, the joy, the promise, the responsibility.

The musical program, arranged and presented by the Stone Church Choir and its soloists, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, with Robert Miller at the organ, was of high merit. Albert Brackenbury, bass, sang "Jesus of Nazareth Came," by Hamblen, assisted by the men's chorus. An anthem, "As It Began to Dawn," by Foster, was sung by the choir, Miss Lilly Belle Allen, soprano, and Albert Brackenbury, bass, the soloists. Then choir and congregation sang an Easter hymn, "Christ, the Son." The Aeolian Chorus, accompanied at the piano by Miss Mary Okerlind, sang "Open the Gates of the Temple," and Nina Grenawalt Smith sang "Lift Up Your Heads," by McClure. The climax to the musical program was the choir's rendition of the "Hallelujah Chorus," from The Messiah.

Elder H. G. Barto presided over the service, assisted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

Special numbers commemorated Easter at the junior church service downstairs. A playlet, "The Meaning of Easter," was presented by three boys of Mrs. A. B. Phillips's class, David Sheehy, James Sheets, and Warren Cannon. Other numbers were piano solos by Helen Mader and Ruby Barham; vocal solos by Lucille Esгар and Lois Resch; a selection by a quintet of girls: Lucille Esгар, Emerald Hoisington, Florence Burgess, Maxine Trexler, and Pearl Brown, and numbers by the junior girls' chorus.

Elder Nathaniel Carmichael talked to the young congregation on Palm Sunday. Thelma Betts gave a reading, and there was a solo by Rosalie Smith.

In the evening a one-act Easter play, "Pilgrims of the Way," by Dorothy Clarke Wilson, was given to a large crowd. The time of the play was a period in early history of the Christian Church closely following the crucifixion and ascension of Jesus, and the place was a garden near Mary's house in Jerusalem. The cast of six people was directed by Mrs. F. M. McDowell, assisted by Miss Pauline Siegfried. Music was supplied by Robert Miller at the organ; by a mixed quartet: Nina Grenawalt Smith, Alice May Burgess, Elbert Dempsey, and D. O. Cato; by a male quartet: J. Glenn Fairbanks, Gerald Johnson, M. H. Siegfried, and J. E. Kelsey. Following the organ prelude Miss Siegfried read a selection from Bruce Barton's book, "The Man Nobody Knows." Pastor John F. Sheehy offered the benediction.

Beautiful costumes and lights and good character interpretations made "Pilgrims of the Way" outstanding and much appreciated by the big congregation.

The Stone Church congregation took part in an impressive Good Friday service last Friday noon, President Frederick M. Smith the speaker. Brother Smith reviewed the historical events of Passion Week—the triumphal entry of Christ into Jerusalem, the approach of the Passover, the Last Supper, Gethsemane, the betrayal, the trial, the crucifixion, and the burial. He also touched upon national and religious observances of Good Friday and the significance of the day in our own lives.

President F. M. McDowell, who was in charge of the service, read the Scripture account of Christ's trial, crucifixion, and burial, and Evangelist U. W. Greene offered a special prayer commemorating the sacrifice of our Savior.

Music enhanced the hour. Nina Grenawalt Smith sang a pleasing solo, and Robert Miller played the organ. Elder G. G. Lewis led the congregation in the hymns, "'Tis Midnight and On Olive's Brow," and "Alas, and Did My Savior Bleed." The concluding number was a favorite one, "The Old Rugged Cross," sung by the Wahdemna Male Quartet; Roberick May, Richard Day, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold.

Elder Amos Berve is eager that his many friends should know of his improved state of health. He was able to attend the Easter services Sunday morning, it being the first time he has been to church in a number of months. He hopes to be able to attend the sessions of General Conference.

Among those whom death has taken from us is Mrs. Mary Anna Leibold who died March 23, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. F. Akers. The funeral was held from the Stone Church, Apostle James A. Gillen in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Leibold was sixty-four years old.

Elsie Marilyn, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Chapman, of Independence, passed away March 8, at the Independence Sanitarium. The funeral was in charge of Elder U. W. Greene, and interment was in Mound Grove.

Sister Viola L. Parsons, for twenty-four years a resident of Independence, passed away March 19, leaving her husband, James B. Parsons, an adopted son, Leon McVay Parsons, an adopted daughter, Mrs. Juanetta Parsons Crosswell, four sisters, and one brother. The funeral was held from the Stone Church by Elders U. W. Greene and Ammon White. Interment was in Mound Grove. Sister Parsons was born July 14, 1878, at Spickard, Missouri, and was baptized January 8, 1893.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Alverda Fry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orrin K. Fry, and Alvin Snodgrass, son of Mrs. L. V. Gaines, took place at three o'clock Easter Sunday at the home of the bride's parents in Independence. Elder William D. Bullard officiated in the ceremony which was performed before eighty relatives and friends. Miss Margaret Baird, of Russellville, Arkansas, attended the bride, and Orrin K. Fry, jr., the bride's brother, attended the bridegroom. Preceding the ceremony Orrin K. Fry, jr., violinist, and Miss Margaret Baird, accompanist, played, "I Love You Truly," and "O Promise Me," followed by "God Hath Made Two Hearts as One." "Because" was sung by Mrs. Anna L. Nall, accompanied by Miss Juanita Bushart who also played the Lohengrin wedding march and Liebestraum, Liszt, softly during the ceremony. This was followed by a four-hand arrangement of Mendelssohn's wedding march, by Miss Bushart and the bride's father.

Walnut Park Church

Easter Sunday services throughout the day were well attended and were of spiritual benefit to those who came out to worship. The program of the church school at nine thirty was given by the junior department, and much credit should be given the children for their effort.

At eleven o'clock part of the cantata, "The Risen King," by Schneckner, was given by the choir. Apostle E. J. Gleazer selected his text from Jobe 14 and spoke on "The Hope of the Resurrection." Brother Gleazer spoke with power and was blessed with the Spirit to a great degree both for himself and for the benefit of his hearers.

The Easter cantata, "The Song of Triumph," was sung by the Walnut Park Young People's Chorus, directed by Orlando and Delta Nace, at seven fifteen in the evening. The soprano solos were sung by Thyra Moorman, the alto, by Juanita Byrne, the tenor, by Palmer Phillips, and the bass, by Harry Hartman. Walnut Park was proud of this rendition and was made to realize that these boys and girls will be the men and women of tomorrow who will help to carry this church to its ultimate triumph.

A Saint Patrick's party was enjoyed by the Galilean Class March 17, at the home of Brother and Sister Emil Cross. Thirty-five were present to enjoy the evening's entertainment.

Enoch Hill Church

Saints of this district very much enjoyed the instructive sermon preached by Elder J. A. Gardner the morning of March 20. He told the story of Zaccheus, how he climbed a tree that he might see Jesus, and in so doing was seen by the Savior. "We, too," said Brother Gardner, "by making an attempt to see Jesus will be seen by Jesus."

In the evening Apostle J. A. Gillen chose as his theme, "Modern Idolatry." In his inimitable way he showed the Saints how the present generation is turning to material things and forgetting God. They are drunken with ideas of their own greatness. How have they profited? We can plainly see that the arm of flesh has failed. There is only one way—let us turn to God and trust him.

On Easter Sunday a pleasing program was given during the morning preaching hour by the adult's and children's divisions. There was a sermonet by Pastor H. L. Barto.

Bishop B. J. Scott occupied the evening hour reading from Psalm 116 and taking as his theme, "I Will Pay My Vows Unto the Lord Now."

The women of Enoch Hill are organized by Sister Iva Chrestensen, supervisor, and are busy. Group 32 has as its leader Sister Zadie Young; Group 33 North, Sister Effie Cox; Group 33 South, Sister Dolly Inman. These women are earnestly and energetically at work, meeting one week in a home in their group to tack comforts, quilt, mend, or do any work needed in that home. Then the next week they meet for class study in the Doctrine and Covenants in the home of Sister Annie Maloney which is centrally located. Brother Walter Self teaches this class. Also there is a class in child training each Wednesday afternoon at the home of Sister Agnes Hartman who is the teacher.

Some happy social times have been sponsored by the women. In February our former pastor, W. J. Brewer and family moved back into this district, and February 27, the Saints met at the home of Sister Chrestensen to welcome them home. A pleasing program was arranged by Sister Lila Warren. Brother and Sister Brewer, pleasantly surprised, enjoyed the evening, and carried home gifts that were a great help to them in a material way.

March 6, a large number of the members, young and old, surprised Brother and Sister Nadin in their home. The program of the evening was in charge of Sister Agnes Hartman. Everyone was encouraged by this association.

New Castle, Pennsylvania

This branch had election of officers the last week in December with the result that the officers who were in charge last year continue in office in 1932. Brother William McCune, as president of the branch, is doing a good work.

The ladies' aid is busy pushing its work along.

The young people attending church services are increasing in number and are taking an active part.

Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith was here March 14 and 15. A goodly number heard his message at both meetings.

Occasionally Elder Tom Carr, of Pittsburgh, comes to give us words of encouragement.

Kansas City Stake

Quindaro Church

A week of pre-Easter services began Sunday night, March 20, with the theme, "Standards of Measure." One hundred and thirty-nine were present and everyone seemed enthusiastic and ready to do his share. The juniors had charge of the opening services and were commended for their efforts. The congregation was divided into sides, the "Purples" and the "Whites," with Berwyn Lungwitz and Frank Wadhams as the respective captains. The Purples took the lead Sunday night with seventy-four in attendance.

There was a baptismal service Friday at the close of the service, the confirmations being Easter Sunday morning.

Though Pastor Higgins' father was very low and his work at the plant was exceptionally heavy, he did the best he could. He spoke every night and at both services Easter Sunday. The following program of dates and themes was carried out in these pre-Easter services:

March 21, "The Approach to Faith"; March 22, "The Blueprint of Christ"; March 23, "The Gateway to Life"; March 24, "Walking With God"; March 25, "Christ Transcendent." Easter Sunday morning, "The Argument of the Empty Tomb," and in the evening, "Exchange the Cross for a Crown."

The O. B. K.'s of Quindaro carried home the honors and the trophy from the music contest, scoring twenty-eight points. The branch is happy with them in their success.

Malvern Hill Church

At the last stake conference Elder Ray Lloyd, because of other pressing duties, resigned the pastorate, and Elder Welton Wood was elected to take his place.

Malvern Hill has one of the largest midweek church schools in Kansas City, Kansas. Children from the near-by grade school are excused for one quarter day each week to attend a church to receive religious training. We have an attendance of more than two hundred every Wednesday during six months of the school year which is the length of term of the church school. Eight teachers, under the supervision of Sister Florine Hands Graham, are doing a splendid work.

We shall miss Brother H. J. Bootman who passed from this life March 10, at the Santa Fe Hospital at Topeka, Kansas. He was an elder and one of the charter members of this branch. He acted as our pastor for many years. Was cheerful and ready to serve the church in any capacity. Besides the members of this group, he leaves his wife, five sons, one sister, three brothers, and a host of friends.

Sister Alice Shimmel and Sister Laura Bebee, who have been quite seriously ill, are much improved. We hope soon to see them again.

Pasadena, California

The work in Pasadena is going steadily forward, and although few in number, we are strong in faith and courage.

Elder Johnson, who has been in charge of the work since its inception, has moved to Long Beach. Brother George Strong is now in charge. We are sorry to lose Brother and Sister Johnson, but hope to see them in our midst occasionally.

Brother and Sister Green have returned to San Bernardino and we also miss them, as they were willing workers.

To offset these losses some new faces have recently appeared among us and were given a most hearty welcome.

Each department of the work is functioning. Much interest is shown in the preaching service, and the study class and our prayer meetings are blessed with a goodly portion of the Spirit. Every one takes part. Elder Bronson has promised to preach for us on the third Tuesday evening of each month.

Pasadena was well represented at the district conference at Central Church, Los Angeles, in February, and all came away strengthened by the sermons of President F. M. Smith, and with a better understanding of the problems confronting the church.

The dinner given in February by the La Da Sas was a success in every particular, and plans are under way for another to be given soon.

The work in Glendale has been revived and is in charge of George Strong. Meetings are held each Friday evening at present at the home of Brother Swain, 3460 Casitas Avenue, Glendale.

Southern Ohio Holds Conference

Splendid sermons, uplifting spiritual experiences, harmoniously conducted business and a good social time characterized the conference held at First Columbus Branch, March 5 and 6.

It was appropriate that the opening service was one of prayer conducted at nine o'clock Saturday morning by Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elder John R. Grice.

A. E. Anderton, Floyd Rockwell, F. A. Smith, and John R. Grice presided over the business meeting which convened at ten thirty. Reports of the branches showed an increase which was heartening to those assembled. Delegates were present from all but three of the branches in the district.

The following officers were elected in the afternoon session: District president, A. E. Anderton; counselors, Floyd Rockwell and R. M. Gray; secretary, Elmer Caldwell; treasurer, Franklin Reiske; chorister, Hazel Gribben. Delegates were chosen to attend General Conference. A special collection was taken to assist the missionaries to attend conference.

"Teaching" was the title of the lecture given at six thirty by Francis May. He named three rules which must be applied in teaching: (1) The teacher must know; (2) The teacher must create interest; (3) The teacher must develop enthusiasm.

At the evening preaching service Brother John R. Grice was the speaker on the theme, "The Need of God Today." He was assisted by Wilbur Kreibel.

Following this service Harvey Carter, who has charge of the dramatic club, assisted by members of the club, presented two short plays, "Good-bye," and "The Deacon's Spotted Calf."

Then a reception was given in honor of Brother Emery Williams and his bride. Brother Williams is one of the successful pastors in this district, being in charge of Pleasant Valley Branch. Sister Lois Rockwell sang, "The Little Church in the Valley."

A priesthood service was held Sunday morning at eight o'clock. Two interesting talks were given. Brother Matthews related his experiences and the blessings he has received while working as a local minister. He pointed out how local men may work for the accomplishment of good. Patriarch F. A. Smith talked concerning priesthood responsibilities to the local church and how the general church depends on them.

First Columbus Branch officers took charge of the nine o'clock Sunday school. At ten fifteen a sacrament service was in charge of Patriarch F. A. Smith, assisted by A. E. Anderton, Floyd Rockwell, R. M. Gray, John R. Grice, and C. W. Clark. The Spirit was there in abundance. The testimonies were humbly given and the Saints pledged their support to accomplish the task before the church.

At two thirty in the afternoon Patriarch F. A. Smith preached on "Where Do We Go From Here?"

Brother William Altman, of Pleasant Valley Branch, was ordained to the office of priest by J. E. Matthews and Doctor W. B. Reeves.

"Kingdom Building," was the theme of the evening sermon by Brother Grice, and his text was Matthew 6:33: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

First Branch Choir sang several beautiful anthems during the conference. Hazel Gribben and Lucinda Madden were soloists.

The Loyal Club served splendid meals at a nominal cost. We appreciate the services of this splendid group of women.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

February 7, this congregation had a spiritual sacrament service. In the evening the speaker was Elder D. A. Whiting. He urged the need of attendance at prayer services and a study of the Scripture, ancient and modern. Through these means, if we live lives of faithfulness and devotion, we may receive a knowledge of the truth.

Brother D. Spase was the speaker the morning of February 14. No service was held in the evening on account of stormy weather.

February 21, F. W. Smith used the occasion of Washington's birthday to review some of the qualities of that great man and his copatriots. Elder Walter Curtis, of Bates City Branch, touched upon missionary aspects of our task in the theme, "Redeemer of Israel," in the evening.

The arrival of baby Marian Ruth in the home of Brother and Sister Robert Stark was occasion for rejoicing.

At the morning service of February 28, Priest G. G. Phillips reminded the Saints of the place the day of rest should have in the practices of the Saints, and called attention to the Word of Wisdom and its relation to the health of our bodies.

A play by the young people, supervised by Brother C. Joice, was given in the evening.

The branch was shocked and saddened March 13, by the death of Sister Audrey Hathaway. She passed away while sitting in church, her young baby in her arms. Cerebral hemorrhage caused her death. The funeral was in charge of Elder O. W. Sarratt, of Oak Grove. Sister Hathaway was thirty-eight years of age and the wife of Ney Hathaway, a farmer of this community. She leaves besides her husband, a son, George Glenn, sixteen years old, three daughters, Millie Mae, eight, Seddellah Lee, five, and the baby, Nadine Pearl; her father, six sisters, and one brother.

Tacoma, Washington

At a time when the world is in a state of turmoil and uncertainty, it gives us a great deal of courage to know that one thing we possess is genuine and sound. In Tacoma Branch we have had the opportunity of hearing Elder Harold I. Velt, our brother from Australia, who presented a series of lectures on the civilizations of Ancient America, and the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Certainly these lectures are inspiring. What other religious denomination is there that has such an outstanding history to offer? Nothing should keep us, as a people, from extending ourselves to the very limits of our ability in doing what we can to advance a cause so basically founded as this. If only more of our people could witness the beauty and truthfulness of our belief, as it was illustrated to us by Brother Velt, then many more of us would be inspired to live nobler lives while trying to attain the zion standard of living.

Many nonmembers enjoyed the lectures with us, and we are encouraged to go out stronger than ever to live a more honorable life before our fellow men. God is in the work. This has been demonstrated time and time again. We hope that we may so live that God will be able to use us to advantage in carrying on the work that is dear to all of us.

Fanning, Kansas

Despite the depression and the stormy weather of the last few weeks, Fanning Saints have kept up good interest in the various activities of the church. In addition to the regular Sunday services, choir rehearsal, under the direction of Sister Mabel Mortimore, is held each Thursday night. The young people are also rehearsing a play, "Mr. Bob," which they plan to present next month. The women's department has also been active. On Thursday afternoon, March 10, they met at the home of Sister Bettie Twombly for their silver tea. Plans were made for future activities of the department. On the following Saturday a food sale was held in Troy under the direction of Sister Maggie Dittmore.

A good spirit was present at the March sacrament meeting, although, owing to weather conditions, the attendance was small. Brother William Marsh was in charge.

Elder Samuel Twombly, William Twombly, and James A. Thomas and Sisters Bettie Twombly and Inez Pilcher were Fanning Saints who attended the district conference at Netawaka, March 6. Despite the snowstorm, Saints were present from various branches over the district. Brother Samuel Twombly was elected to represent Fanning at the General Conference.

Brother James A. Thomas was called to Scranton to preach the funeral sermon of George Chapman on Saturday, March 12. Brother Chapman was one of the charter members of the Scranton Branch.

A goodly number of Fanning Saints attended the Far West stake conference, held in Saint Joseph on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, March 11, 12, and 13. The sermons of President F. M. Smith and Apostles J. F. Garver and P. M. Hanson were much enjoyed. Much appreciation was expressed concerning the drama, "Whatsoever Ye Sow," presented on Sunday night by the Ul-Like-Us players.

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch

Everyone is looking forward to General Conference with the expectation of something definite being given or formulated to further the onward progress of the work. Our delegates are getting ready for their trip and the duties that devolve upon them. Our prayers go with them to the end, that they all together may be moved and prompted by God's Holy Spirit in their deliberations pertaining to the business of the kingdom.

Owing to the health of Sister McConley, it seems apparent that Apostle Myron A. McConley will not be able to attend General Conference. He has had to miss all the council meetings. She requests the prayers of all the Saints.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was a welcome visitor in our midst, and gave a wonderful talk during the Sunday school hour March 6, then again in the evening he was the speaker.

We are having beautiful weather with sunshine, green grass, and flowers in profusion. If we could create an atmosphere within ourselves in harmony with nature, perhaps we might be more Christlike in our lives. Nature in her springtime attire brings cheer to one's soul.

Work is scarce and hard to get in many or almost all lines. There have been drastic reductions in forces and wages, which affects our church group here as elsewhere. We try to be optimistic and trust God that his people are being tried; that we are experiencing only what we have brought upon ourselves; that our lesson may be learned and our futures builded on more solid ground. It is our hope that Zion may evolve from this depression.

Central Los Angeles Branch is actively engaged in many lines of endeavors. We have a large class in stewardships, a large Book of Mormon class, young people's open forum, and all of the Sunday school work among the younger folk. Our staff of Sunday school workers is alive and consecrated to the work. Our near-by missions are doing nicely, and one or two new openings are available for some of the priesthood to do a little missionary work.

We hope the "old wolf" does not keep too many from attending General Conference, and may those who go remember those who remain, and all labor together for the up-building of the kingdom of God.

McKenzie, Alabama

March 19.—We have had the mildest winter in the memory of the majority of those living here. We hear of suffering from lack of life's necessities in many places, but while some of the Saints here have not had many things they thought they needed, we know of no case of real suffering. There are some cases among us where those who had plenty of certain things have shared with those who lacked. We notice that there is quite a little stock of goods still on hand from the harvest home festival last fall. This stock was kept to distribute to the needy during the winter.

Apostle James A. Gillen was here a few weeks ago. Some think his sermons were the most encouraging of any he has given us. His strong challenge and appeal for more active service is finding a response in the lives of the Saints in this region. Perhaps because of the spirit of sacrifice and consecration manifested among us, he was able to manifest more of the spirit of apostleship towards us.

Each week there are three group prayer services. The average attendance is now one hundred. At the union prayer meeting in February eighty were present. The March service was cut short by a storm.

Attendance at regular Sunday services is also increasing. We think it good for a rural congregation, the members of which are scattered over an area of several miles. And the devotion of the Saints evidences the fact that the priesthood are actively visiting in the homes. We have heard several say that they have been blessed by these visits.

About fifty inventories have been filed in this group since the first of the year, and thirty have started their "stewardship" projects.

Sacramento, California

In the month of November, 1931, a newspaper of this city launched a Baby Revue, the most popular baby to receive a prize. Along with this, any group organization such as a club (and we understand there were twenty clubs in the contest and one with one thousand members) was permitted to back a baby. The group was to turn in subscriptions and coupons for the baby of its choice, and the parents of the baby to help the group by giving their votes. About the third week of the contest the Idola Club decided to enter. They worked faithfully, and when the contest closed the last of January, the club had gone over the top five million votes and had won a prize of a five hundred dollar Visionola, a radio, phonograph, and motion picture machine combined. The credit for most of this can be given to Brother Ralph Ensley and wife and Brother E. C. Burdick. This is proof of what we as a people can do if we pray and work.

The young people enjoyed their New Year's party at the home of Sister Bidwell.

When Sacramento Branch organized under the new plan of Religious Education several years ago Sister Marie Honeychurch was appointed supervisor of the adult division. Under her supervision the group has enjoyed many good times. Once a month the women of the group meet at the home of some member. At these meetings speakers have been provided who have brought much interesting and useful knowledge. Mrs. C. H. S. Bidwell secured the speakers for Mrs. Honeychurch. We have had as speakers, Mrs. Hugh Bradford, international president of the Parent Teachers Association; Judge Shields, of the juvenile court of Sacramento; Mr. DeBack, a detective of the narcotic squad, and the dean of women of the junior college. As a group we feel very appreciative of these who have given their time and talent.

Fifty-one members of the branch attended the district conference at Stockton, February 28, and felt amply repaid for going.

The Saints were saddened by the death of Brother Richard Alfred Price, sr., February 23. Brother Price was seventy-three years old and has been a member of the church for many years.

We were fortunate to have Apostle F. Henry Edwards with us March 1. Brother Edwards's sermon was uplifting and inspiring.

The sacrament service of this month was well attended, one hundred and one present, and God's Spirit was there to bless.

The priesthood are working to bring themselves more in tune with the heavenly Father, that they may be able to be of service to those to whom they minister.

Brush Creek, Illinois

We are striving to carry on the latter-day work at Brush Creek Branch, but owing to bad roads, we have not been able to meet as regularly as we would like. This is a country branch, and the Saints are scattered.

Seven new members have been added to the branch since last we wrote: Leonard Caudle and wife and daughters, Wanda and Olga Caudle, James Clow, Howard Knapp, and Roy Milner. Brother Eddie Colvin and family, of Mount Vernon, have moved here, and we welcome them.

November 19, the branch was saddened by the death of a young member, Leslie Slover. He is greatly missed by every one, especially by his Sunday school classmates. He was fourteen years old. The funeral service was conducted by Elder R. H. Henson, assisted by Elder William Clements.

Brother James Slover has been in poor health this winter, but is slowly improving.

Brother John Henson, of Xenia, was ordained an elder at the district conference in December. Brother Tommie Henson has been ordained a teacher.

The Saints contributed liberally during Sacrifice months.

On December 24, the church school presented the play, "The Magic Star of Bethlehem," which was well attended.

Elder John Henson, of Xenia, preached morning and evening February 28.

Mrs. Charity Forth, the oldest member of the branch, passed away February 29. She had been in failing health for some time. She was the mother of Sister Kate Morris, and was ninety years old.

The women's department is making a name quilt, the proceeds from which will be used to purchase new Hymnals.

Quite a list of furniture, bed linens, clothing, and dishes has been presented to Sister Agnes Vaughn and family whose house burned last fall.

Sister Wanda Caudle, a young member, is in the Weber Sanitarium at Olney in a serious condition. We trust she will soon be able to return home. She is the daughter of Brother and Sister Leonard Caudle.

Calumet, Oklahoma

The annual conference of Western Oklahoma District, met at Calumet this year. There was a splendid representation from all parts of the district and from nonresident members. Also we were favored with the presence of a goodly number of visitors from Central Oklahoma District. All district officers were present and business was properly attended to. Elder Z. Z. Renfroe now is acting as president, but other than that, few changes were made in the officers. Because of necessity, the conference was a comparatively

Marriages

ADAMS-MELTON.—Sunday morning, February 21, following the sermon by Elder J. Charles May, occurred the marriage of Miss Gladys Adams, daughter of Mrs. Grace Adams, of Rich Hill, Missouri, to Mr. Henry Melton, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Melton, of Knightsen, California. Elder Ralph Murdock officiated in the ceremony. Preceding the ceremony Miss Edythe Chase sang "I Love You Truly," accompanied at the piano by Miss Elsie Constance, of Cameron, Missouri, a cousin of the bride. The wedding march was played by Miss Constance. Beautiful decorations made an appropriate setting for the marriage service. The benediction was offered by Elder E. Chase after which the bridal couple received the congratulations of more than one hundred people who witnessed the ceremony. They will be at home to their friends on a farm four miles east of Nevada, Missouri.

Conference Minutes

PITTSBURGH.—District conference opened at 2.50 p. m., February 27, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, President T. M. Carr in the chair. A motion of the conference placed the district presidency in charge with power to choose associates. Elder Carr asked G. T. Griffiths and F. A. Smith to associate with the district presidency as presidents of the conference, and asked Brother Griffiths to assist in presiding over the business session. Benjamin Cooper was elected secretary. The minutes of last conference were read and approved, and Florence Headley was chosen as conference pianist. Elder Carr then called on Brother Griffiths for a talk, and he responded with a review of general church conditions. He was followed by Brother Smith who also reviewed church affairs, finances, and the great need of missionary power and the fact that the reduction of our missionary force has retarded the work of the church. Brother Carr read his report, reviewing the work of the branches. He gave as the reason for the reduction of tithes payers the reduced number of wage earners. The priesthood were commended for their labors and their reports. Three recommendations were made to the conference: (1) That members of the priesthood be required to labor in their offices in order to retain their licenses; (2) That a second vice president be added to the district presidency, to make a presidency of three; (3) That some definite rules be formed regarding the ordination of men to the ministry in the district. The statistical reports read showed the following: Pittsburgh, 142; Donora, 83; Lock No. Four, 103; Fayette City, 70; New Castle, 52; Punxsutawney, 60; non-resident report, 96, making the district membership total 618. Ministerial reports from the following men were read: Elders: S. H. Gaskill, W. H. Daugherty, F. L. Shinn, B. F. Warner, S. Winship, J. Raisbeck, and W. G. McCune; priests: H. M. Winship, W. D. Gaskill, R. H. Winship, E. Brennan, A. Howes, and C. I. Winship; teachers: J. P. Marsh and J. W. Winters; deacons: F. F. Branfor and W. Grant. The district treasurer's report showed $130.94 on hands. The motion that this sum be turned over to the auditor for auditing, carried. The following resolution presented by Elder F. L. Shinn carried: "Be it hereby resolved that the presidency of the Pittsburgh District be composed of a president and two counselors, each to be regularly elected at the annual business conference of the district. And further, that said counselors be chosen from separate sections of the district." It was further resolved that in case of the removal of the district president, the first counselor act as district president, with the second counselor as his counselor, until the next election of officers. The election of officers for the district for the year resulted as follows: District president, T. M. Carr; first counselor, W. H. Daugherty; second counselor, B. F. Warner; secretary, B. L. Cooper; bishop's agent, L. S. Eschrich; director of church schools, W. L. Winters; auditor, J. Hughes; treasurer, L. S. Eschrich. Action was taken to discontinue the office of district chorister, electing instead a committee on music, composed of three. The present committee is Florence Headley, Mary Barker, and Sister Lotts. Delegates to General Conference were elected as follows: Thomas M. Carr, Gomer T. Griffiths, Frederick A. Smith, Sister W. H. Daugherty, Jesse W. Winters, and Clyde F. Ellis. The secretary was asked to notify the Credentials Committee at once of the names of the delegates to General Conference. The secretary was also directed to look up minutes of past conferences to see what action had been taken regarding ordinations to the ministry. It was resolved that the district presidency should notify all branches in the district at least thirty days in advance of conferences, giving a tentative program. The business session was concluded by benediction by Elder S. H. Gaskill.

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—A call conference of this district convened at Mount Vernon, Illinois, March 5, with the usual opening for the purpose of electing delegates to General Conference. A prayer meeting in behalf of the General Conference was held at nine thirty, there being a good degree of the Spirit present. The conference acted to place the district presidency in charge of the gathering. Those presiding were R. L. Fulk and his counselors, Ernest Roberson and Charles Wesner. The district secretary, Sister Myrtle Choate, acted as secretary for the conference; Sister Virgie Fulk, district chorister, was in charge of the music; Sister Hazel Roberson, pianist. Johnnie Rocket acted as deacon. The minutes of the previous conference were read and approved, and the remainder of the morning hour was given to talks by W. M. Clements, Hallick Milner, Fred Stratman, E. S. Choate, Marion Lawrey, Ernest Roberson, E. W. McKinny, Charles Wesner, Lewis Deselms, R. L. Fulk, and Arthur Henson. Hallick Milner gave the benediction. The afternoon session opened with song and prayer and the reading of the morning session minutes. Delegates elected to General Conference were Brother and Sister R. L. Fulk, Brother and Sister Arthur Henson, Brother and Sister Marion Lawrey, E. W. McKinny, Brother and Sister William Colvin, Sister King, of Centralia, Sister Helen Cisne, and Brother Arthur Mills. This is the delegation for our district. Charles Wesner preached the Saturday evening sermon. William Colvin was in charge of the 9.45 Sunday morning church school. Sacrament service at eleven o'clock was followed by an unusual prayer meeting. Ernest Roberson preached a forceful sermon. The names of the following were presented and voted on, and the men ordained: Marion Lawrey, priest; William Colvin, teacher; Johnnie Rocket, deacon. The district president preached in the evening. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the district president.

KIRTLAND.—District conference convened at Barberton, Ohio, March 5 and 6 at 10.15 a. m. Apostle C. F. Ellis and James E. Bishop were in charge. Ministerial, statistical and financial reports of various branches were read. Three patriarchs were present, Gomer T. Griffiths, J. A. Gunsolley, and A. R. Manchester. Motion carried that we approve the recommendation to ordain Lamont McDowell to the office of elder. Motion carried that we approve the recommendation to ordain Edward Cooper to the office of elder. Budget adopted: Expenses for incidentals only, stationery, postage, and upkeep of records. (A) All who travel in the district, who have work, pay their own expenses. (B) Those out of work and appointed and district officers have expense met by those receiving their ministry. Income: Each branch takes up a collection the second Sunday of each quarter. It was decided that on each Sunday morning, before the regular meeting hour, the branches and groups assemble in prayer and, as many as can, in fasting, and let the success of the coming General Conference to be the theme. It was suggested that this be done each Sunday until the convening of the General Conference. The following delegates were elected to General Conference: C. F. Ellis, E. G. Hammond, Bessie L. Hammond, William Hubert Mitchell, J. L. Cooper, Sister J. L. Cooper, James E. Bishop, J. A. Gunsolley, Mattie W. Gunsolley, Joseph Kochis, Evelyn Kochis, G. T. Griffiths, R. S. Budd, F. A. Smith, Paul Hanson, L. F. P. Curry, and J. F. Curtis. District officers were elected as follows: District president, James E. Bishop; two counselors elected: Elders E. G. Hammond and William Goudy; secretary, Edna M. Rhodes; superintendent of church schools, William F. Webbe; financial secretary, Mae Gill; district chorister, Josephine Ebeling. At 7 p. m. Barberton Branch orchestra favored the conference with three selections. Charles Romig was director. At 7.30 p. m. sermon by the district president, James E. Bishop. Sunday at 9.30 a. m. the church school convened. District President James E. Bishop and J. L. Cooper in charge. Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley gave an address to those receiving certificates. The certificates were presented by William F. Webbe to Mrs. Ella Manross, from Kirtland; Miss Virginia C. Webbe, Kirtland; John L. Curry, Kirtland; Mrs. Ruth Brain, Lakewood, and Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley, Cleveland. Sister J. A. Gunsolley received the gold seal certificate. Following was a sermon by Apostle C. F. Ellis. At 2 p. m. sacrament service was held, and there were thirty-nine testimonies and one prophecy. This meeting was of a fine spiritual order. A hearty vote of thanks was given Barberton Saints for their hospitality. The conference was well attended, and a splendid spirit prevailed.

Our Departed Ones

BENNETT.—John William Bennett was born at Pointe Aux Barques, Huron County, Michigan, December 18, 1851. He departed this life at his home in Freesoil, Mason County, Michigan, January 31, 1932. When but a small boy he moved with his parents to Holland, Michigan, where, when he grew to manhood he married Hannah Schreur. The marriage took place sixty years ago this January. Three children were born to them: John E. Bennett, of Freesoil, Michigan, and Mrs. Kate J. Reek, of Fountain, Michigan, who survive him, and William G. Bennett, who passed away in 1897. In April 1884, he moved with his family to Freesoil, where he lived until his death. With his wife he was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder John J. Cornish November 5, 1893. He was firm in his convictions, faithful to the church, zealous in his love of God and always thoughtful and kind to the poor and needy. Was ever willing and loved to help the church in a financial way. The funeral was held February 3, at the Saints' church in Freesoil. Interment was in Maple Grove Cemetery, Freesoil. Elder Allen Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan, officiated.

COINER.—Fannie Ellen Shelhart was born October 1, 1856, at Des Moines, Iowa. She was the eldest daughter of Jacob and Emmaline Shelhart. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the age of sixteen by Elder Gordon E. Duel. She married Oscar E. Coiner in August, 1884. To this union five children were born, three daughters and two sons. One son and one daughter preceded her in death. Surviving are two daughters: Carrie Hall and Julia Thorstenberg, of Wichita, Kansas; one son, John M. Coiner, of Longview, Texas; two sisters, Mrs. Deloria Coil, of Independence, Missouri, and Julia Button, of Sacramento, California. Sister Coiner's faith in the gospel never wavered. The funeral sermon was by Arthur E. Stoff, pastor of Wichita Branch. Interment was in Wichita Park Cemetery.

SUMAN.—Jennie Comly Suman, a resident of Moline, Illinois, for sixty years died of pneumonia at the home of her son, Walter H. Suman, February 9, 1932. She had been ill for a week. Jennie Comly was born April 28, 1835, at Montrose, Iowa. She moved to Moline when she was sixteen years old. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when fifteen years of age, at Nauvoo, Illinois, by John H. Lake, December 2, 1873, she was married to Samuel Suman in Moline. For fifty years they lived in the home at 1649 Twentieth Avenue, Moline, a home which was ever a resting place for missionaries in the church. Her husband died twelve years ago. Surviving are her short session and the time was divided to the best advantage among business meetings, prayer, preaching, and song services. It was a most successful and enjoyable conference, and we felt that God's Spirit was near to bless his people.

two sons, Walter and Paul Suman, of Moline; one daughter, Mrs. Mildred Irwin, of Elmhurst, Illinois; a sister, Mrs. George Van Dran, of Independence, Missouri; a brother, W. B. Comly, of Plano, Illinois, and six grandchildren.

HOLMAN.—Ordesa Holman passed from this life February 23, 1932, at the Rumford Community Hospital following an operation on the stomach. She was born at Dixfield, Maine, December, 1858. Married Eugene Holman January 10, 1879. To this union were born nine children, all but one living to mourn their loss. Her husband also survives her. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church November 8, 1889. A good mother and a devoted Saint has gone from the place where her entire life was spent, a beautiful valley surrounded by hills on the Androscoggin River. Her home was one of sincere hospitality; missionaries and friends found a welcome there. Bishop M. C. Fisher preached to a large gathering of relatives and friends. She left to her children and grandchildren a legacy of faith and godliness.

HUNT.—John W. Hunt was born in Tennessee, September 3, 1860. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Apostle J. F. Curtis in January, 1905, at La Jara, Colorado. Moved to Idaho in 1918. Departed this life February 12, 1932. Leaves to mourn his wife, Mary Jane, together with three sons and four daughters; also forty-one grandchildren. The funeral was held from the Saints' church in Rupert, Idaho, in charge of Elder W. A. Connell. The sermon was by Elder O. W. Okerlind. Interment was in Rupert Cemetery.

MITCHLER.—Sarah Ella Whiteley was born the fourth child of a family of six, four boys and two girls, at Bonaparte, Iowa, where she spent her girlhood. She was an accomplished musician, having graduated from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Married Harry Mitchler, of Bonaparte, July 2, 1876. Three daughters were born to this union, all of whom survive. After the birth of the second daughter, the family moved to Pueblo, Colorado, where the third daughter was born. Her husband died in 1894. She remained in Pueblo till about 1912 when she began a series of extended travels, making long visits with her daughters. In 1920 she settled in Los Angeles, California, living at the Antlers Hotel until a short time before she died. She was living with her second daughter in Watsonville, California, when she passed away December 25, 1931. The funeral was conducted by Elder A. R. Lawn, of Watsonville, assisted, at her request, by her son-in-law, Elder John A. Robinson. Her eldest daughter united with the church in 1899, her second daughter a few years later. Up to a few months before her death, Mrs. Mitchler remained opposed to the church, but through the efforts of her second daughter and Dr. Lawn, she finally accepted without reservation the restored gospel; but because of her weakened physical condition, she was not baptized. Left to mourn are her three daughters: Mrs. Keo M. Robinson, of San Antonio, Texas; Mrs. I. M. Weller, Watsonville, California, and Mrs. Ella Taylor, San Francisco, all of whom were with her to minister in her last illness; two brothers, Joseph and Phillip Whiteley, of Bonaparte, Iowa, and one sister, Mrs. I. W. Allender, Guthrie, Oklahoma; five grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Interment was in San Jose, California.

SCOTT.—Martha Carlile was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, April 7, 1852, one of a family of nine children. She spent all her life in Pottawattamie County, living the last eighteen years in Council Bluffs. She married Thomas Scott December 25, 1872, who preceded her in death about four years. They were the parents of two sons and four daughters. Of these there survive one son, J. G. Scott, of Council Bluffs, and three daughters: Mrs. F. H. Hansen, Magnolia, Iowa; Mrs. Thomas McCart, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Miss Josephine Scott, of Council Bluffs. She was baptized May 7, 1882, and was always active in the work of the church till her health failed. Died at Council Bluffs February 25, 1932. Besides her children she leaves one sister, Mrs. William Scott, of McClellan, Iowa; one brother, Isaac Carlile, of Lamoni, Iowa; seven grandchildren; two great-grandchildren, and a host of friends. A large funeral was held for her at Central Church in Council Bluffs, John A. Hansen in charge and delivering the sermon. He was assisted by Elder George R. Beaty. Interment was by the side of her husband in Walnut Hill Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

The General Conference

Under this heading special announcements will appear each week. Readers are asked to look for it in order to keep informed about plans and programs.

Greetings to General Conference

The Editors of the Herald extend greetings to the officers, delegates, and visitors to the General Conference of 1932. That the Conference may be a profitable and successful one, the Saints strengthened, encouraged, and animated thereby, and the work of the church given a distinct impetus forward, is the burden of our petitions to Deity.

Many marked changes in conditions have been experienced since last we met in General Conference, and the eyes of the whole church are upon this Conference as one likely to mark an important point in our history. Times which demand sharp decisive measures of readjustment to meet changed or changing conditions are always period markers.

Among the gathering officers, delegates, and visitors there is sensed not only the importance of the occasion, but there is displayed a fine faith in the future of the church and its ability to meet the crisis. And this is well, for concerted action by a people firmly faith-bonded is necessary. By our works we must show our faith.

In the interim this and last conference the officials of the church were under the necessity of taking some drastic measures in curtailment of expenses. These have been presented duly to the church and official conduct governed thereby. The outcome or final result of these measures will be a matter of careful scrutinizing and estimation by the councils of the present Conference. The determination and courage of the Saints in meeting such crises as shown in the past will doubtless come again into play in the present one.

Again we extend a welcome to the Saints in General Conference assembled, and join them in facing our problems and tasks with a faith which sees a victorious outcome.

Sacrament Service at the Auditorium

While the Conference of 1932 officially begins April 6, yet the meeting at the Auditorium on Sunday morning, April 3 may well be considered a start, and as such was an auspicious one. It was a sacrament service, and while no special effort was made to attract attendance from points outside the center place, yet the attendance was a large one. Those in charge of the meeting were the members of the First Presidency, and they were assisted by the Presiding Bishop and the Presiding Patriarch and the members of the Quorum of Twelve.

The spirit of the occasion was uplifting, and indicates on the part of the Saints a consciousness of the trials and tasks immediately before us as a church and the need for Divine guidance, grace, and support. There is, if we can sense the spirit prevailing among the Saints, a willingness to sacrifice for the cause.

If the quiet, peaceful spirit prevailing at the sacrament service of the third instant is an omen of the Conference, then much good will be accomplished.

F. M. S.

"Do You Remember——?"

There are many Saints still living who cherish memories of the late President Joseph Smith. Many of these memories are of a nature that would be encouraging to others, and interesting to the increasing numbers of newer members in the church who had not the privilege of knowing him.

Having undertaken to gather incidents of that kind, I am making this appeal, through the columns of the Herald, asking that the Saints write me their memories of my father, relating little incidents in which he figured, especially those which reveal his character—his kindness, thoughtfulness, or whatever quality seemed uppermost at the time. These letters will be greatly appreciated, and I should ask that, if possible, definite dates, names and places be used. Of course where "memory saith not" in regard to such details, the bare story will do.

Please address your letters to me, at my home address: 837 South 15th Street, Lincoln, Nebraska.

OFFICIAL

Report of the Department of Statistics for March

By Carroll L. Olson

During the month of March the following changes took place in the total enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment March 1, 1932	110,630
March baptisms	168
Gains from unknown	5
Total gain	173
Deaths	78
Expulsions	15
Total loss	93
Net Gain during the month	80
Total enrollment April 1, 1932	110,710

The following miscellaneous changes also were reported during the month:

Transfers	302
Blessings	124
Marriages	48
Ordinations	22
Silences	6
Divorces	4
Restored	1

The total of 168 baptisms for March was more than twice the number reported during February and better than several years, but nevertheless still considerably below the average for March which is 284. During the first three months of this year there have been only 401 baptisms, as compared with 509 during the first three months of 1931, and 1,094 during the first quarter of 1930. The year 1930, of course, was unusual because at that time we were completing the missionary campaign which culminated in the Centennial Conference. However, it does not seem that the missionary program of the church should be neglected even at this time, in spite of our retrenchment program. The world is in need of the saving message of Christ and it is up to the local ministry to see that the missionary work is carried on.

It is encouraging to note that in some places these efforts are still being conducted with diligence as evidenced by the following column of figures which shows the branches outside the stakes which had three baptisms or more during the month:

Onaway, Michigan	16
St. Thomas, Ontario	15
Fresno, California	9
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	8

Detroit, Michigan	6
Wray, Colorado	6
London, Ontario	5
Port Huron, Michigan	5
Houston, Texas	4
3d Columbus, Ohio	3
1st San Antonio, Texas	3
Winthrop, Arkansas	3

In addition to the above, 5 branches and 2 district nonresident groups had two baptisms each, and 24 branches and 2 nonresident groups had one baptism each.

Among the stakes, Kansas City had 28 baptisms, Independence 11 baptisms, Far West 3 baptisms and Holden 1 baptism.

The total baptisms were distributed as follows:

Zion and the stakes	43
United States and Canada outside the stakes	123
Foreign Missions	2
Total	168

Study Outlines for Classes

Number 2

In this second attempt to make the materials in the Herald available for class study we are conscious that much could be done to improve the usefulness of the outlines. As they are in an experimental state, we are holding the form open to change. We would appreciate hearing from those who use them as to how they could be improved for class work.

In this issue we are offering the outlines of two articles of diverse interest. "Visiting Technique" by Bishop Skinner is obviously intended primarily for the priesthood. But all of the members will read it, too, we hope. As we read it we thought that this responsibility for the success of the work of visiting is not alone on the shoulders of the priesthood. The members in their homes, too, are responsible. With this viewpoint we framed the questions to suit the interests of the larger number of people.

The Truth Shall Make You Free By J. A. Koehler

1. What are some of the "illusions that deceive"? Are there any illusions in the church that stand in the way of the building of the Kingdom of God? Name them. How can we remove them?

2. For the building of the ideal "kingdom" we must have scientific methods. The old faulty methods that have brought the earth so many of its ills will not serve the purpose. Can an ideal Zion be built with the old individualistic and monopolistic order of human relationships still existing?

3. Jesus said, "He who would save his life must lose it." If we would save the social order, we shall have to give up certain features of it. What are these? The inefficient and bungling economic machinery can not be made to serve for the Kingdom of God by any imaginable process of sanctification.

4. Truth and law will be the foundations of the new order. From what does truth make us free? From what does law make us free? Are we ready to obey the imperatives that truth would impose upon us?

Visiting Technique

By C. A. Skinner

1. The author gives some rules for the priesthood to follow in making their visits to the homes of members. Can you name them? Evaluate them.

2. Are there some rules for the family to follow when they are visited? Are the younger members allowed to creep away to some entertainment? Does the mother escape by finding something to do in the kitchen? Does the father allow the purpose of the visit to be frustrated by "talking shop" or merely visiting? How can the families help to remedy these conditions?

3. What do you think of the value of visiting by the priesthood? Is it an essential part of the church work, or is it something that does not fit with the modern age?

4. So many people say that the priesthood visits are a good thing. And yet they do nothing to make it easy for the priesthood to carry out the duties of their office. If the people will not cooperate with the priesthood, who is responsible for the negligence of this important work?

5. What can be done in the future to improve directly the value and efficacy of priesthood visiting?

6. So much of the talk one hears about why priesthood visiting is not effective is mere "passing the buck." Is your group ready to face the truth and admit a fault where the fault exists?

Responsibilities for Two Members of Graceland College Faculty

It has just come to our attention that honors in the form of responsibilities have come to two members of the Graceland College faculty. President G. N. Briggs is Secretary-Treasurer of the Iowa College Presidents Association, and N. Ray Carmichael, Business Manager at Graceland, is Secretary-Treasurer of the Iowa College and University Business Managers Association. This recognition is another indication of the abilities of the officers in charge of Graceland.

The Circle of Prayer

Many letters come to us from members who desire their requests for prayers shall be mentioned in the Herald. It has been our intention for some time to establish a department in these columns devoted to the important interests of prayer. A projected series of short articles, discussions of prayer, and other items are scheduled to begin in the near future. Along with these we propose to print requests for prayers. In this week's issue we are making a start toward our work by printing the names of some who desire prayers. We feel that it is important that our people should be bound together in a circle of prayer, and have accordingly given the department a suggestive title.

DESIRE PRAYERS

Mrs. Grace Hobart Dickeson, of Independence, Missouri, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be relieved of her suffering from arthritis.

Helen Stevenson of Concordia, Kansas, desires prayers that she may, if it is the Lord's will, be restored to health and strength, in order that she may continue her work at school and not have to drop out. Although not a member of the church, she has faith in God and in the power of prayer.

M. A. Dick, of Oxly, Missouri, has been suffering for some time from pains in the side, and desires the prayers of the Saints that he may obtain relief. He submits his will to the Divine will, but believes that prayers of faith can aid him.

For Fifty Years Elder G. J. Waller Has Taught and Lived the Gospel in Hawaii

Half a century ago last February 14, Brother Gilbert J. Waller landed in Honolulu on the schooner Jane A. Falkenburg, from England. It was quite a different Honolulu from the city of today, but young Waller was there to assist his uncle, Gilbert Waller, owner of a meat market, and with the energy which has characterized his career in the islands, he set to work.

All his life Brother Waller has given his best in a spiritual and a material sense to the church in Hawaii. The Saints in Honolulu and on neighboring islands call him the "big father," and are grateful to him for his patient teaching, constant service, and righteous living. Unstintingly he has served in the building of three groups of church members in the city of Honolulu, the Hawaiian Branch, the Chinese Branch, and the Japanese Branch. He has taught these people from the books of the church, has conducted their prayer meetings, has preached to them, administered to their sick, and ordained their men to the priesthood. He has been a spiritual father to them, and, in return, the Hawaiian Saints love him.

The following concerning the life and service of Brother Waller to the Saints in Hawaii comes from the pen of a young American and church member now in Hawaii. It appeared in a letter in the Saints' Herald of October 21, 1931: "When he (Brother Waller) leaves his office about 4.30 p. m., he makes a tour through the city of Honolulu, to visit the Saints who need for anything. He is always ready to wait upon the sick, and since there are several hundred Saints besides thousands of nonmembers, you can imagine the calls he receives each week. Not only is he willing to go to the sick to help them spiritually, but he gives much to their financial needs. . . .

"Nor do Brother Waller's good works stop with the city limits. He goes out into the country, and when he takes a few days' vacation from his business, he visits the other islands, also goes to Australia and the United States, preaching the gospel to all who will listen."

A year after his arrival in the islands, young Waller bought out his uncle's interest in the meat market, and five years later, according to the press story of the Honolulu Advertiser, in 1888, he succeeded in interesting three island ranchers to the extent that they formed a copartnership under the title Metropolitan Meat Company. A little later, the copartnership became a stock company which continued under the same title until 1909 when the principal island ranchers acquired the business, formed the Hawaii Meat company cooperative, and continued the operation of the retail end of the business as the Metropolitan Meat Market. Brother Waller has been manager of the Hawaii Meat Company Ltd., since its incorporation.

Always interested in helping people better themselves, Brother Waller has been prominent in civic and political affairs. In this connection the Honolulu Advertiser has the following to say: "Since his earliest manhood, Waller has taken an active part in civic affairs, in the chamber of commerce, in politics, in banking affairs and in the church, his interest and influence being devoted to the betterment of social conditions."

During his fifty years in Hawaii this man has seen great changes in the life of the islands. In the meat industry he has been a pioneer, introducing the first refrigeration plant in Hawaii, and also engaging in the fertilizer business, manufacturing the first fertilizer made in the islands.

Brother Waller was born at Stackhouse, near Settle, Yorkshire, England, November 9, 1859. He left England January 1, 1882, going to Hawaii by way of New York and San Francisco. During the course of years he has made many visits to the United States and is well known to and esteemed by the Saints of the Western Coast.

No Word From Brother Gresty

Since his disappearance on Friday March 25, no word has been heard from Patriarch J. T. Gresty, author of the oratorio The Course of Time who was to have directed the chorus and orchestra in the rendition of The Messiah on Sunday, April 10.

Considerable fear has been felt for his welfare and safety, and every effort possible has been made to locate him; but all such efforts have so far produced no clue as to his whereabouts.

It was known that he was depressed over his failing health, and that the statement of his physician that he should not consider carrying out his plan to conduct The Messiah brought him additional disappointment. Suffering from nervous strain, and possibly from amnesia, he left the home of the family with whom he was staying, and it is feared that he would not be able to care for himself as the delicate state of his health would require.

On the eve of the conference at which people looked forward to the pleasure of seeing him and enjoying the benefit of his musical leadership, his disappearance comes as a shock. Many expressions of sympathy for his suffering and concern for his welfare have been expressed, and many inquiries as to the results of the search for him have been received.

Words of Encouragement

Elder W. J. Haworth of Australia, addressing a letter to the Presidency, writes as follows:

"The eyes of the Saints turn towards Zion at this time. Their prayers are that the blessings of God may rest upon his people at the General Conference; that the blessing of divine direction may be afforded in the present difficult circumstances and that the officers upon whom falls perhaps the most dire responsibility ever borne by officers of the church may be specially directed and supported."

This kindly and sympathetic interest, together with the faith and prayers of the people of Australia as well as those of people elsewhere, do much to encourage and strengthen the officers in their tasks.

Visiting Technique

AN ARTICLE FOR THE PRIESTHOOD

By C. A. Skinner

Definition: Technique, "Manner of artistic performance."

Art: "The skillful and systematic arrangement or adaptation of means for the attainment of an end. The practical application of knowledge, skill or power."

Purpose: "The purpose of priesthood visiting is to build the spiritual life of the members."

Factors to Be Considered

In order to make a success of our work of visiting we must understand the factors that enter in, study them, that we may make the proper application. In our opinion, there are three chief factors:

1. The visiting officer.
2. The member.
3. The mental process.

Inasmuch as it is the visiting officer who is going to do this work we may as well discuss this factor first. He should be a man of God, honest, upright, showing by example in his everyday walk of life that he is worthy of the name he bears.

Examination Necessary

"It might be well for him to check up on himself—stand in front of the mirror sometime and take stock of himself. Look himself over and see if he measures up to the standard. Study the weak points if he has any and seek to strengthen them. In other words, he might with Robert Burns wish for a power that would make it possible to see himself as others see him."

Personal Appearance

Considerable attention should be given to your personal appearance as this is sure to have some bearing on the impression you make as a minister. Clothing should be selected with good taste as to color and fit. It should be kept clean and in press. Your linen should be clean and your shoes cleaned and shined. Your teeth should be brushed and your hair combed or brushed.

Enthusiasm

Your approach should be dignified, yet radiate with enthusiasm. You will find this a valuable asset as a minister and visiting officer. Unless you are enthusiastic about your own proposition it will be difficult to interest some one else. Emerson said,

"Nothing great has ever been accomplished without enthusiasm."

Personality Necessary

Knox defines personality as "that magnetic outward expression of the inner life which radiates courage, courtesy and kindness. It attracts people by producing a pleasing effect, and is the product of development of the positive qualities. It makes a man a leader of the affairs of men instead of a follower."

Personality is that which distinguishes us from other men. It is our entire make-up. It is a wonderful force in business or in the ministry.

No matter what course your life's work may take you will need personality, and nowhere will you find a better place to develop it than in the business of being a minister for God—a visiting officer. We are not born with this qualification; this magnetic something that attracts people to us is not obtained by wishing, but is shaped on the anvil of life. Personality may be developed the same as a strong arm and no man engaged in the work of the ministry need lack personality for in his hand he holds the clay with which to mold personality.

The Mental Process

Obtaining the desired result in visiting is purely a mental process. You will not meet with success in trying to force your proposition. You will not have much luck in coaxing a member to do his duty, and few have the power to hypnotize them.

Since our work is wholly a mental process there is little or no need of discussing any physical qualifications only insofar as these physical elements react upon the mind of the minister himself, and upon the minds of the members. For illustration: If a conversation between minister and member, who are strangers, is conducted over the telephone, the member would get only an impression of the minister's words and ideas, plus a faint suggestion of the quality of voice, but in a personal interview the minister's mind, eyes, body, clothing, hands and feet would be speaking through ideas, stability, dignity, etc. In other words, it is the entire make-up or ensemble rather than mere words and ideas which determine whether our visit will be a success or failure.

Steps in the Mental Process

There are certain steps in the mental process which must be taken, and taken in their order if we are to meet with success. In their order they are: Approach—Attention—Interest—Desire and Decision.

We have just named the steps that must be taken in the mental process if we would reach the goal; however, there is a path that leads to the steps, that we should take, and this path we will call preapproach.

Is a preapproach important? Our answer is, yes. It is true that in every case it is not absolutely necessary, yet many visits have been failures because there was no preapproach.

Before you call determine some service you can render. This could best be done by making a preapproach. Learn something of the family, such as how long they have lived in the vicinity, where they lived previously, how many members in the family, which ones belong to the church, what is the occupation of the wage earners. How can you help them spiritually, mentally, physically or otherwise?

Do you make preapproaches in your work as visiting officers? If you do you are in better position to meet with success. If you do not you are greatly handicapped. If we want to do the most possible good, meet with big success, it will be necessary for us to do extraordinary things. We will have to do thinking, studying and analyzing. These are three things that too few of our local priesthood do.

Approach

Having gained all the information possible about the member and having determined the service we can render him we are ready to make the approach proper, and it should be the proper approach, for it is very important as the first impression governs largely your progress. Ex-secretary Shaw said, "I have won more lawsuits with my opening remarks than in any other way." Why do you think this is true? In his early life Mr. Shaw sold books and fruit trees to pay his way through school. This gave him some idea of the "mental process" and all through life he has used this to a tremendous advantage, which has gained for him national fame as lawyer, financier, governor, and cabinet officer. The Apostle Paul was a master in making an approach. Read the account of his address before King Agrippa, Acts 25: 22-26, and his sermon at Athens, Acts 17: 18-34.

Attention

Attention is the mother of interest.

The right kind of approach will naturally command attention. Your mannerism will have much to do with getting the attention of your member, and much to do with the progress you make in visiting. Once you are in the presence of the member much depends upon the manner in which the minister conducts himself. If the manner is pleasing there will be fewer opposing considerations as the visit progresses. Therefore, it should be the effort of the visiting officer to make a favorable impression at the outset.

In case you fail to get attention at the time of approach, try to find a point of contact. Talk in the member's language. When you have fully gained the attention of the member, then in a diplomatic way present your proposition in an interesting and convincing manner.

Interest or Managing the Interview

Interest is the mother of desire.

As the interview progresses the attitude and manner of the minister should be such as not to antagonize the mind of the member but that which will lead his mind up the steps of the mental process. This involves a number of points which must be borne in mind. You must interest an individual either by what you say or the way you say it. What you say, of course, should be important, yet it might not be as important as the way you say it.

Be courteous. One thing that is necessary during the interview is courtesy. It can not hinder in any respect, but is sure to facilitate in many instances. Courtesy is a mark of good breeding.

Don't "knock" the church or the officers.

Draw the member into the picture.

Know Your Business

Knowing your business will create a quality which can not be bought with money, a quality worth more to you than almost any other, and that is the quality of confidence. Knowing your business gives you this quality and you can not get it in any other way. The thing that gave the Apostle Paul courage to stand before King Agrippa and deliver that masterpiece was the fact that he knew his line. There was no guess work about that. He received his information on the way to Damascus. Sometimes the Lord has to make a man blind before he can see, and after Paul passed through that experience he knew. Another reason for knowing the thing that we are talking about is we will be able to answer intelligently every question that may arise. Being able to do this will establish confidence, and without confidence we can not lead an individual.

Motives

In making a visit, our aim is to create a desire on the part of the member, for the church, and what the gospel will do for him. We should bear in mind that desire comes after the motives of men have been stirred. There are comparatively few motives, such as profit, pleasure, happiness, ambition, caution, fear, love, pride, utility, duty. During your visit determine which of these motives you will have to arouse and use them as a leverage.

A visiting officer may have a fair knowledge of the church and of the blessings that will come to a member as a result of living a righteous life, and yet fail in his visit to move the member to action because he may not know how or fails to analyze the member's mind and appeal to the proper motive.

Motive creates a desire. "When you create a desire you do it because of what an individual thinks and feels. When you fail to create a desire it is because your appeal has not touched the self-interest cord of the member's heart. A decision is not made until an individual feels that he will derive some kind of benefit or satisfaction as a result of that decision." Hence the necessity of appealing to the proper motives.

An example: A certain broker was approached by an insurance salesman. The salesman knew that the broker had a genius for investment, that he was a shrewd buyer and cautious; but that was all he knew about him. The salesman called on his prospect and presented his insurance proposition and he presented it ably too, for he knew the insurance business "from A to Z" and he interested his man to the point of decision, but when he came to the "close of the sale" the customer would not buy.

In the course of time another insurance salesman approached the broker, but first he made a preapproach. He discovered what the first salesman knew, that the prospect was a clever and cautious buyer, a keen man with a good business sense. But he found out something else. He learned something about the home life of his customer; he discovered a very vital fact that the first salesman had overlooked—the broker had an invalid daughter. Not many people knew that fact. While the daughter was taken out riding every day by some member of the family or the chauffeur, she was never in attendance at social or public affairs, consequently few people knew of her.

Salesman Number Two called on the broker and presented insurance to him in an interesting and convincing manner. He talked nothing but insurance and got just what he expected; just what salesman Number One got. No application. The customer was interested. He admitted nearly everything but would not sign the application.

The salesman was appealing to the wrong motive. He discovered his mistake and changed the position of his guns. He played on a different motive. He continued: "Now, Mr. Brown, I know you have a genius for investment. You know that I am not exaggerating when I say that everything you touch seems to turn to gold. You know how to invest; you know how to make money, but suppose you should be taken away. Do you think that the men who will handle your estate will have such a genius for investment as you have? I want you to be frank with me. Do you think they will be as clever in this matter?"

The salesman had pulled the right string; he had appealed to his vanity. The broker said, "Well, I don't know, perhaps they will." But down deep in his heart he felt that they would not; that he himself was superior to the man who would have control of his estate after his demise.

The salesman had him staggering and he knew it, so he continued. He looked at his customer straight in the eye and said: "Now, Mr. Brown, you have a right to take risks with yourself and with most of the members of your family, but there is one member of your family upon whom you dare not take a risk, and that is your invalid daughter." The salesman saw the customer wince. He knew he had struck the right cord.

"If your estate is not handled as cleverly as you handle it," continued the salesman, "if anything should happen to dissipate it, there is one member of your family who would suffer severely and you think too much of that girl to take a chance. You would not think of making her take any such risk." This salesman sold his customer because he discovered which motives he should appeal to, and he pulled the strings of vanity and caution that never had been pulled before.

Decision

Desire is the mother of decision.

The decision is often referred to as the hardest part of the visit to negotiate. But the minister who studies the art of getting the decision as he studies every other phase of the mental process should experience little trouble in bringing the decision to its logical conclusion.

Much has been said and written about what is termed the "psychological moment" to get a decision. A particular moment is supposed to arrive somewhere near the end of the discussion when the mind of the member will be convinced that he will be benefited by following the minister's advice and building for a better spiritual life.

However, he may belong to the type who procrastinates and finds it difficult to decide. In such cases he may need reassurance on many or all points before he will act on your suggestion or advice.

Power of Suggestion

The power of suggestion is tremendous when exercised by one who is an adept in it. One can greatly increase his power and ability as a leader of men if he understands thoroughly the law of suggestion in relation to its power to influence men.

Few men have this power or ability to a marked degree.

Be sure that your suggestions are positive, not negative. One is just as weighty as the other. Many a visit has succeeded or failed on account of a single suggestion. Suggestion exercises a marvelous power in salesmanship, politics, medicine, business, advertising and religion.

H. Addington Bruce, a prominent psychologist, said: "By suggestion we mean nothing more than the infusion of an idea into the mind with skill and power that it dominates, and for the moment disarms or excluded all other ideas which might prevent its realization."

Herein lies a latent force which can be used to great advantage. Study the principles of suggestion and learn to apply them. The natural laws of suggestion are operating all the time in your mind. A suggestion in the member's mind always works. It may work for you or against you, but it usually works.

God Our Partner

The above principles are fundamental and are in reality a part of the visiting technique. If properly applied they will help in leading the individual's mind along the line of "The Mental Process." However, we should not depend on "visiting technique" alone. God is our partner and should be considered and consulted. Before every visit it will be well to have a season of prayer, asking God to direct in all your work.

The Truth Shall Make You Free

By J. A. Koehler

People used to believe that the way to avert disease and disaster was to propitiate the gods. Even in the making of glass the Assyrians believed that the selection of "a favorable day in a fortunate month" and the offering of "a sacrifice before the embrays" were necessary parts of the manufacturing process.

There are still many people who believe that the secret of good fortune is to be found in charms and incantations. Among religious peoples especially there is a widespread belief that they can win the favor and command the blessings of God for themselves by the acceptance of doctrines and the observance of forms which have little or no more relation to the ends sought than a wish for sunshiny weather has to do with the passing of the rain.

But the substantial needs of the race are not satisfied except through fundamental adjustment. A kitchen with every known device for the preparation of meals; a proper assortment and arrangement of dishes, and the punctilious observance of table etiquette are not the measures by which a people provides itself with wholesome foods at mealtime. Such adjustments may supplement or even complement the essential food-providing process, but they are not essentially a part of it. Wholesome foods at mealtime are possible without modern kitchens; without table linen and candles and forks; without the formalities of polite society; and even without any formal prayer at mealtime.

Illusions That Deceive

Certain illusions that we have nourished in relation to the church may have social as well as personal values. But illusions which blind the eyes of our understanding to the laws of social well-being are bad. And when our indulgence of illusions causes us to neglect the truths which condition the freedom of peoples, they become abominations.

What does a mere change of residence have to do with the business success of a farmer? What does a mere declaration that from this day "I will make accounting of my affairs as a Steward" have to do with turning an otherwise unprofitable method of conducting business into a business success? What do any and all such acts or beliefs have to do with the economic freedom of this "people"? In what way can they possibly be related to the world's social problem?

No one set of words can be made to describe accurately our illusions, since each of us has his own peculiar ideas or feelings in these relations. But that this is a rough statement of the general character of our illusions, few who have had opportunity to know will deny.

But I recite these only as examples of our illusions which we try to make do the service of a fundamental truth. Such illusions are nourished to the neglect of the basic economic adjustments upon which the freedom of this people (and every other people) depends.

There are other illusions which I would like to mention, but I have already taken too great personal risks to indulge that liberty. Don't misunderstand: I do not say that formal prayer at mealtime has either no personal or no social value. I do not say that friendly conversation at mealtime has nothing to do with the value of the food eaten. All I say is that formal prayer at mealtime is no part of the essential process by which the race provides itself with wholesome food.

There may be a great difference between sound methods of procedure and sound principles of social behavior. And we make a mistake—a grievous blunder—in the work of the church, if, like the Assyrians in the making of glass, we regard "the sacrifice before the embrays" as essential to the production of our "glass." It becomes tragic in the work of the church when the "sacrifices" to the em-brays (or what not) turn our energies away from the essentials—the "sand" and the "fire" and the "furnace."

The Wisdom of the Technicians

And this is the character of our behavior, notwithstanding the fact that we regard ourselves as technicians in the field of church endeavor. But technicians in other fields of endeavor do not go at their tasks as if it were possible to achieve their ends by any such measures. Men whose special business it is to churn butter, or to bake bread, or to design engines, or to build houses, or to care for the health of the body, or to cultivate the mind, or whatnot, know themselves to be under the necessity of adapting their means to their ends—they are concerned with causal relations.

To these technicians there must be a natural relation of doctrines and behavior to the purposes to be realized. These men do not believe that bread will bake as well in a cold oven as in a hot one because it is to be eaten at the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. They do not believe that the mind can be trained as well with dumb-bells as with textbooks because the knowledges and skills to be acquired are to be used in preaching the doctrines of the church. They do not believe that physical exertion can be made a substitute for mental discipline, no odds what the motive back of the endeavor, or whether the effort is made in the schoolroom or in the pulpit.

Men who are schooled in the utility arts, and even in the fine arts, recognize the dominion of law—God's law. But in the social arts—in matters of government, or of human living together—we talk and act as if we believe there are no necessary relations arising from the nature of man's social life—no natural laws to which we must make our social behavior conform as the price of both our spiritual and our temporal freedom; our peace, prosperity, and happiness; our joy in the Holy Ghost.

Face the Truth; Obey the Law

Regardless of the costs to one personally, some facts need to be pictured in their nakedness. Some of the fantastic speculations, the mysterious doctrines, indulged as if they conditioned our economic freedom, have about as much to do with Zion's redemption and our salvation as a wish for sunshiny weather or the raising of an umbrella has to do with the passing of the rain; or as the building of a barn has to do with the yield of a crop.

Law for "peoples" implies social purpose and social discipline. Law for "peoples" implies government adapted to defined or definable social ends. Law—the necessary relations arising from the nature of things. But what necessary relation is there (for example) between the doctrine of "The Gathering" as practiced by us to date (not in its intended application) and the contribution to advancing civilization the church was called into being to make? What necessary relation is there between our past business adventures and Zion's redemption? None! This behavior witnesses neither a social purpose nor an effort to effect "social" discipline. We have need to examine ourselves whether we be in the faith.

Substitutions

For every phase or mode of human behavior there is law; there are certain necessary relations arising from the nature of man and the nature of his undertakings. There are limitations, or "bounds and conditions," to the law of devotions, just as there are limitations to the law of muscular training. The former can no more be made a substitute for the law of stewardships than the latter can be made a substitute for the law of mental development. What is the use, then, in a people trying to make up for their social and moral shortcomings—their shortcomings in political and economic life—by preaching more sermons or baptizing more "members" (so-called) into the church? Would ten hundred thousand members behaving in economic life as we behave, make "The Kingdom" a reality any more certainly than one hundred thousand behaving as we behave? Is it possible for the church to make up for its indifference to its Zion-building task by improving the technique of its sacraments? or increasing the fervor of its prayers? or the frequency of its devotions? Not unless these sacraments and devotions are given a Zion-building content or made somehow to serve a Zion-building purpose.

If any one doubts this reasoning, let him "contemplate" the first chapter of the book of Isaiah, or the fifty-first or the seventieth or the seventy-seventh or the eighty-first or a dozen other sections of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, or the Sermon on the Mount, or Amos, or any of the prophets who have had occasion to speak on questions of social behavior.

The Test of Truth

In scientific circles every theory is judged by how it works out in actual experience. The test of truth is reality. All truth of human living together is realized in actual social experience. In every field we are continually testing rules by the behavior of things themselves. There is no other test. The true test, yes, the only test, of the doctrines of the church relating to the behavior of man in association is the real experience of the peoples of the church themselves—the outcome of their own behavior. A tree is known by its fruit. The name of the tree and the pedigree of the vine argue nothing; the number of trees in the orchard, the spraying outfit, and all such like, establish no fact of truth, if the orchard does not bear fruit. The test of truth is reality—the actual outcome in practical or appreciable results. That is the test of the social behavior of us men of the church—the outcome to us in peace, prosperity, and happiness.

The Truth Shall Make You Free

Righteousness exalteth a people. Of what use is truth except to set us free? Why do I want the truth of butter-churning or soap-making, except to free me from fruitless toil and the disappointments and liabilities that attend error or nonpossession of wealth? It is the very nature of truth to set us free. It is folly for one who has been turning his churn all day without practical results to regard his behavior as the way of truth. It is not good sense for a people who have traveled several times as long in a given direction as it takes to reach their destination without once sighting the goal, to insist that the direction of their travel is the path of truth. The truth does not work that way. What it is designed to yield, it yields. No "people" can live the truth of "the Kingdom" without realizing the glories of Zion.

You Shall Know the Truth

The truth may be known for the reason that it may be referred to reality. The theory that three kernels of corn planted in one hill rather than three kernels planted in three hills will double the yield of the crop can be known only by referring this theory to a real corn-growing situation corresponding to this theory. The test of truth is reality.

And that is the way truth may be known—by reference to reality. And any truth relating to yields of corn crops may be proved by reality. It has an actual, yes, a natural place in the corn-growing business. But I would like to see the man who can think some of the phantasms called "stewardships" or doctrines of economic salvation into relation to real economic life and the freedom of this people. Phantasms; illusions; imaginations—they can not be "known" because they can not be related to reality. But the truth may be known because it may be used to practical purposes in life. I speak now of the truth of human living together, i. e. of social behavior.

If Ye Continue

Yes; "If Ye Continue" you shall know. Knowledge is born of experience. I do not say that there is no a-priori knowledge. I only say that one cause of the dearth of knowledge of the truth of "the Kingdom" is the failure to behave in kingdom-building ways. Nothing can prove our ways to be the ways of truth except the blessings of "the Kingdom." And nothing can yield kingdom-building blessings except kingdom-building behavior. Would we "know" whether the doctrine of stewardships is the truth? Then we must behave in the stewardship way. Yes; the price of faith which saves is behavior which assures.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It is worse than useless to try to invent substitutes for the truth. There are none. It is a mark of ungodliness to try to achieve our redemption, to realize our freedom, in other than the way of truth. And we shall know that our ways as a people are the ways of truth, when they prove to be the ways of prosperity, of happiness, and of peace. Amen.

New Quarterly Studies for April

By C. B. Woodstock

While most Latter Day Saints know that a series of quarterly studies are used in the church school, especially in the Sunday morning classes, probably few realize the extent and the richness of the materials prepared for study purposes. At present we are printing seven graded quarterlies each quarter, each an important link in the chain of religious study materials, and each especially prepared in content and method to feed the interests and to meet the peculiar life needs of the age group for which it is written. These seven yearly studies are parts of three year cycles and there are eleven elective year courses, making a total of thirty-two years of graded study, besides a number of small textbook studies.

Certainly there is no excuse for one to go unformed, or to get out of step with the progress of the church, if he is willing to spend five cents a month (15 cents per quarter) for study materials suited to his interest and need. It is highly essential, however, that wherever possible the entire membership, from little tots to old age should be progressively using the materials prepared at infinite cost of effort and consecration on the part of the best writers and teachers to be found in the church. The entire curriculum is prepared to be used consecutively from the nursery up through the Young People's Division. To omit any year means a loss which can not be easily made up. In the adult group there is always the freshly prepared current quarterly which is recommended for study

Sunday morning, but there are also numerous elective studies which were published in former years. From these selection should be made for use in young people's and adult classes on Sunday evening or on week days.

We call attention to the following quarterlies which are being mailed out for use in the coming quarter.

Adult: Message of the Book of Mormon, Part 3. "The Faith and Belief of the Gospel Among the Ancient Americans," by C. I. Carpenter.

Older Young People: "Studies in the Restoration Movement," Part 3, "Distinctive Features of the Restoration," by John A. and Pearl J. Gardner. With this study it is very desirable that each class shall have access to one or more copies of the Restoration Movement and the Latter Day Saints, ($1.50) and Youth and the Restoration, ($1.50). These are excellent books to be had in every church school library.

Senior Young People: "History of the Church for Youth," Part 3, "The Reformation," by Mrs. Anna Salyards. Wonderful stories of faith and love and heroism of the early reformers and their converts are sharply contrasted with the base and evil designs and persecutions of those who opposed the coming of light and truth and liberty. Mrs. Salyards' History of the Church is especially valuable to young people who are fresh from their study of European History, but it will be found fascinating also by adults.

Junior Young People (Intermediate): "Seeing Life Whole," Part 3, "The Finer Things of Life," by E. E. Closson. Stories of actual life experience of early adolescents are interestingly told and the choices in evidence are evaluated in the light of the faith and belief of the church as revealed in the standard books. Thus principles of Christian conduct are determined and given a practical application in the everyday life of boys and girls.

Juniors: "Jesus and His Teachings," Part 3, by Hallie Gould. This is an intimate study of the experiences and teachings of Jesus the Christ in the latter part of his ministry.

Primary: "Learning to Live as God's Children," Part 3, by Ruby Williamson.

Kindergarten: "Leading Childhood to God," Part 3, by Mrs. Tessie Smith.

The following are fifty-two lessons, each, bound in book form:

Nursery: "A Year of Lessons for the Nursery Child," by Anna Friend Roberts.

Bible Study: "Jesus and His Message," by Mrs. Anna Salyards. This study of the Gospels has recently been prepared as the result of over forty years of continuous research and writing for the church. The beautiful, inspiring lessons have equal appeal to older young people and adults who wish a confirming knowledge of the message and ministry of the Christ.

A complete, descriptive list of present study materials, The Church School Curriculum, is published each year. This with a price list and a convenient order blank may be had on request. Address The Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Focal Infection

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The teeth and bony cavities of the skull may not show symptoms of virulent infection. The X-ray will not show abscesses themselves but on the films there are dark areas showing where degenerative changes have taken place. These dark areas are interpreted as pulpless teeth and indicate a low bodily resistance, and are a liability rather than an asset. Such a condition carries a risk, especially if there is any reason to suspect an infection—if so, the risk is much greater. It is far safer to eradicate areas of this kind than to run the risk of heart disease, rheumatism, kidney trouble or some other serious constitutional complaint. It is often puzzling whether or not a tooth should be removed, and under such conditions the filling of the tooth is of doubtful utility. It is the duty of the physician to explain to the patient, in order that he may have a clear understanding of the situation.

Where there is some chronic diseased condition existing in the body, such disturbances as of the blood pressure, rheumatism, or kidney complaint, a great deal of time and pain should be taken to clear up mouth infection. I have, many times in my experience, seen obscure conditions affect the general health, which have been cleared up after the extraction or treatment of the teeth, or removal of the tonsils.

If pulpless teeth are retained, the roots should be examined by the X-ray at least once a year, and if the X-ray shows signs of infection, the benefit should not be given to the tooth, but to the interest of health and longevity.

Tonsils are very deceptive so far as focal infection is concerned. They may appear normal upon superficial examination, but when cultures are made, they almost invariably are found to be harboring infection. Undoubtedly where tonsils are unduly enlarged or diseased, their removal is necessary unless it is a case of diabetes or old age. Even then, sometimes, under very precautionary measures it is better to get rid of them. Care should be taken not to overlook, as has been emphasized in former articles, chronic infection of the ears and the nasal cavities, and the same principle applies to the region of the throat, as well as to the other sites of infection. Investigators have found that there is a higher percentage of patients complaining of high blood pressure, due to these infections, and it is the duty of the physician, so far as is humanly possible, to locate its source.

The reproductive organs may be another means of poisoning the whole body. It may occur in either of the sexes, and it is quite often not so easily located, as in other parts of the body. It has been found that these sites of focal infection are more prevalent than was formerly supposed. Usually, the physician and the patient's attention is directed to digestive disturbances, in many of these cases. All cases should undergo a thorough physical examination, aided by X-ray, and it has been very common, in my practice, to find an infected joint, harboring all kinds of bacteria, which has had its origin in an infected tooth or tonsil. Wounds of long standing, especially those involving bones, are quite frequently a cause of this unfortunate condition. It is the duty of the physician, aided by the cooperation of the patient, to locate the source of these focuses of infection. One of the most unfortunate things, perhaps, is that there may be a low degree of focal infection without the patient being conscious of it, making it difficult for the physician to get cooperation from the patient. Physical examinations should be had periodically, for in this way, many times, these conditions are discovered before serious damage is done. Such a removal of a focus of infection, frequently, not only eradicates the existing troubles, but prevents serious future trouble. There are many cases of mental derangement caused by such infections, and most physicians who are dealing along the lines of nervous and mental diseases are becoming more and more careful about trying to locate the source of this infection, as they have found out that many cases have been cleared up along these lines.

So long as men live on the level of the flesh or even of the flesh and soul, they may be indifferent to God. But the spirit of man is the candle of the Lord. Spirit with spirit can meet. God who is a spirit, makes his appeal to the spirit of man. "Deep calleth unto deep."—J. D. Jones.

Autobiography

XI.—1895 IN IOWA.

By James Franklin Mintun

For several years I had been concerned about a permanent location for the educating of my children while I was spending my time in the ministry. This year I thought seriously of securing a home in Lamoni, but while I was made some splendid offers of property, yet I could not feel that the time had come for me to make a move, or else Lamoni was not the place for me to move, so I concluded to wait.

I was at Little Sioux the twenty-first of April and organized a Sunday school at River Sioux, and preached there. Returned home the twenty-second, to prepare for another year of missionary work. Found the measles had made a visit to my loved ones, which occupied a few days of my time, but soon I was away to my work. I was at Little Sioux and River Sioux from the tenth till the twentieth when I baptized two. I received an urgent request to come at once to Smithland, where I replied to a lecture that had been delivered by a Mr. Willoughby against the Book of Mormon. I was assisted by Brother Hubert Case. I continued here in a capacious hall preaching to large audiences. From there I occupied at Oto for a couple of services, when I learned that Elder Willoughby had again lectured against the faith of the church at Smithland, but did us but little harm. . . .

I went with the tent to Smithland on the eighth of June, when as soon as the tent was up a wind broke the center pole. On the ninth I replied to the last lecture of Elder Willoughby. Brethren Montague and Oscar Case were associated with me. It was becoming so very dry that the citizens became alarmed. I felt led to pray for rain in the evening and that night the rain came in a gentle shower which did much good. While Brethren Case and Montague attended to the services at the tent I went out in the country at a schoolhouse and preached. During the time of these tent services I preached on the two covenants. At the close of the service one party said, "I have studied upon that question for twenty-five years, and never was satisfied. Now I am satisfied." This person had been a Seventh-Day Adventist, but from that time she could not agree with them on that question, but favored the Latter Day Saints, but said, "I have already enjoyed such light and help of the Spirit in hearing that I am afraid I will not receive more if I enter the church, then I will be dissatisfied." She judged that some in the church had not received as much as she had. This was where she made a mistake, and was not baptized, but wrote me some years afterwards that she regretted that she was not baptized at that time. Brother Hubert Case came to assist, and Sister Ettie Townley came to assist with the music. The tent blew down on the night of the nineteenth, and again on the twentieth, but with the help of the sisters in sewing up some of the rents we again put it up on the twenty-first. This is evidence that all is not pleasant in tent work. We continued tent services till July 1. Two were baptized by Hubert Case. . . .

While we were here the hot winds destroyed nearly all the corn that year, in western Iowa. It just turned the blades of the corn white as the wind struck. This was the first experience of this kind that Iowa had witnessed in that part, and in any other part of the state that I knew of. The people felt as though God had forgotten them, but did not so fully realize that they had forgotten God many times in the past. During the time of these services a high school girl committed suicide by drinking poison. Her father at that time was using liquor so that the family was but poorly supplied, and when the girl requested him for something necessary for her school work, if he was under the influence of liquor he would curse and abuse her. At this time he did that and went so far as to accuse her of lewdness. This crushed her spirit, and caused her to say, "If that is what my father thinks of me, what is there for me to live for?" And she at once took some paris green, and went to her room and drank it. As soon as he knew what was done he was sober, and able to carry her down stairs, but only to see her die. I was requested to preach the funeral sermon. Just previous to the sermon the principal of the high school handed me a note, in which he commended the girl as having the highest character, and being an excellent scholar, and a pure, virtuous girl, wishing me to read it. There was a very large audience, with a minister or two curious to know what kind of a sermon would be preached. I did not forget to get in a strong point or two on the temperance proposition, and the danger of yielding to the temptation of drink. I was informed that the father took strength, for a time at least, to forego satisfying his thirst for liquor. . . .

I watched with my wife's mother day and night till her death which occurred on the eighteenth of August. She had suffered for about nine months, and the care of her mother brought on a serious condition in the life of my wife physically, weakened her body and almost wrecked her nerves. While I was helping my wife after the funeral, I was preparing the program for the reunion Sunday school work, and preaching in Magnolia and vicinity. . . .

I began meeting at a schoolhouse at Lake Circle, and had preached a few nights with the house full of listeners, but I did not feel that much good was being done, and when retiring for the night of November 23, I made it a subject of prayer, whether I should continue longer in services. I was shown an open vision, a funnel of light coming from the heavens, becoming larger as it rested on the earth. Within the circle of light was a residence that I had lodged at when I was in that neighborhood for the first time holding meetings. Another was now living there. The light not only showed the residence, but also the outbuildings, so that I could not be mistaken in the place. I was shown that the heavenly light was visiting that family. He was a professed infidel, she an Adventist. Neither had heard the gospel as we represent it. He had heard but two or three sermons when he requested baptism, trembling under the power of the Spirit. His wife had not been present at the services, and was somewhat prejudiced from what she had heard of the "Mormons." I advised him to still further investigate, and influence his wife to come to the services. She came, but acted as though she felt out of place there. But I was led to conclude that I should make her a visit. The lady at whose home I was lodging was her aunt, and she said she would go and tell her that I was coming over to have a talk with her on religious subjects and to answer her objections, if she had any. I found her dressed neatly and her housework so arranged as to give me an audience, her two little children under parental control. I at once told her my reason for coming to see her, and requested her to present any questions she wished, and I would try and answer them. She had asked but two questions, and I had given historical and scriptural answer to them when she said, that being the representation of your faith, I have no objections to becoming a member. Both attended the services till Sunday when both were baptized, and their children blessed. With this done I felt that my work in that place was finished. Two others from Onawa were also baptized when they were.

On November 30, the convention began, followed by the conference on December 1 and 2, at Logan, Iowa. After the conference I continued holding services till the fourth. On the fifth I attended a prayer meeting at Magnolia, when the Spirit made known to me the calling of Brother D. R. Chambers to the priesthood. I was at Onawa and held services from the eighth till the twentieth, when I organized a Sunday school. I enjoyed a treat from the twenty-third till over the closing of the year. My family came to be with me, while I visited some of the scattered Saints in Plymouth County, and some near Cherokee. At Cherokee I administered to a Sister Bennett, who was marvelously blessed both physically and spiritually. She said she saw and heard angels while she was being administered to.

There was one incident that occurred at my home just previous to my wife's mother's death. She had suffered long, and she longed to be relieved. She wondered why the Lord did not take her, as many were taken that could do a better work than she could do at her age in life. One evening just as my wife and I were retiring (in a room adjoining the one where mother was, in order to be near her, should she need help), we heard her singing, "Joyfully, Joyfully will I go home," a line of a hymn in the Saints' Harp. She seldom tried to sing and never since she was suffering so severely. So the singing sounded strange, and I rushed into where she was, and I found her face bathed in tears. She said, "Frank, don't think that I have imagined what I am about to tell you." I said, "Why should I. You would be the last person that would tell for a fact an imagination." Then she said, "I was lying with my eyes closed wondering why I had to continue to suffer, and why I could not be released in death. Others who are younger and could be more useful are taken, and should I be healed I am too old to be of use to the church or society. I heard, as it were the music of bells at the foot of the bed at the window. I opened my eyes to see what had caused this music, and there stood a beautiful personage at the foot of the bed, who said to me, 'Do not fear; I have been sent to answer your questions. You will continue in life yet a short time longer, that you may be fully prepared to go home to glory'; and at once this personage began to sing that hymn, and a chorus of voices just above the bed joined in and sang, and my spirit was led to sing with them, and that is what you heard." Mother Knight did not know that such a hymn was in the hymn books of the church. This was a lasting testimony to us of the ministering of angels, and God's answer to the prayers of the humble.

I wish I had three lives. One to study medicine. One to take a fuller course in music. One to study more thoroughly the Bible. But they would all be missionary.—Words of a young missionary, in Young People's Leader.

"—Troubled About Many Things"

One day in Jonesport, Maine, a neighbor came running into our house all excited and out of breath. She was troubled! She was worried! After a few minutes she told the cause of all this excitement. Another neighbor had recently purchased a new automobile, and this particular morning had driven his car right in front of her house and stopped. He started to turn around and in backing his car he bumped into the porch of the house next door. This is exactly how she described it:

"Then he backed that spanking new car right into that porch and damaged the porch and ruined the car and almost killed Wilson's baby: for there was the baby carriage right by the porch and if he had hit the carriage and if the baby had been in the carriage he would have likely as not killed the baby."

It didn't do much good to tell her that the baby was in the house in bed and the porch was not damaged at all and the only thing that happened to the car was one fender bent a little. Didn't matter at all, "it was what might have happened," that troubled her so much.

When Jesus entered the home of Martha and Mary he soon discovered one of the sisters very much "troubled about many things." Mary was spending some time listening to Jesus. Martha seemingly had no time for that. She had the house cleaning to do and it took all her time.

Some people could well afford to spend more time than they apparently do in house cleaning. Some spend too much time.

May I very kindly suggest right here that we have a few people in Independence today who are "troubled about many things." They even suggest a "house cleaning for the church." They talk too much about these things to other people, but not enough with Jesus. Let us talk less about "these things that trouble us" with each other, but more and more with Jesus. Remember the verse reads like this—"Martha had a sister, called Mary, who sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his words."

If we spend a little more time talking with Jesus we might learn something especially about "cleaning house in the kingdom of God—the Church."

For the next three months let us all spend as much time as we can sitting where Martha found Mary—"at Jesus' feet."—John F. Sheehy, from The Bulletin of the Independence Churches.

My son, take hold on that which thou hast, and thou shalt be rich. . . . What one's attitude would have been toward the crucified Christ is indicated by one's attitude toward those who are persecuted for their principles today.—Church Management.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, 203 Rockwood Court

We miss the influence and able sermons of Elder George H. Wixom who is at work in territory west of us. He strengthened the Saints here in their spiritual warfare. Elder J. W. A. Bailey whose appointment followed Brother Wixom's brought with him an abundant supply of stereopticon views with which he added interest to his sermons.

During the eleven o'clock service March 20, Priest Robert Jett and his nephew, Floyd Jett, were ordained to the eldership after an appropriate charge was given them before the congregation by Missionary J. W. A. Bailey.

The family of T. J. Jett, sr., has greatly figured in the maintenance of the two branches in San Antonio. The branches could never have survived without their help. In early days the grandfather hauled seats, set up mission grounds, and preached in the absence of conference appointees, and in his work among the Mexican people, he was nobly assisted by his wife who conversed in Spanish as well as he. They developed two Mexican groups one of which moved away to Mexico many years ago and became lost to the church. At last Wednesday evening's prayer meeting it was pleasing to witness in the presiding chairs father, son, and grandson, the pioneer, Elder T. J. Jett, his son, T. J. Jett, and his newly-ordained grandson, Floyd. Floyd's father, T. J. Jett, jr., has been our district and branch president several terms. We feel that the boy's capacity, with modern church facilities, should make him of greater service than either of his family predecessors in office.

On Easter Sunday the juniors gave an appropriate program at eleven o'clock, partly assisted by some adult musicians. Pastors E. L. Henson preached a splendid Easter discourse which interested both grown-ups and children.

Coming from Beeville about ten days ago, Elder J. W. A. Bailey reported the baptisms of three persons as the result of a series he just closed there. Others are interested.

A welcome surprise to the branch was the smiling presence of Sister Ruth Harp on Easter Sunday. She has been visiting relatives in Uvalde, Texas, and was much missed from the choir and in other services.

In the evening the Easter service was given by the choir under the direction of E. F. Yerrington. The cantata, "Life Eternal," appealed to the congregation. The choir will sing this cantata next Sunday at the W. O. W. Hospital auditorium in San Antonio, where the organ will be played by Miss Emma Jackson.

Sioux City, Iowa

March 27.—A new program of Religious Education has been inaugurated in this branch. In each group definite plans are being followed for teaching something essential to our individual and collective spiritual progress. In the adult church school, conducted by Sister Blanche Haviland, each class is studying one of the church quarterlies concerning the building of Zion. In addition to this work, a feature each Sunday is a review of the life of some person of church history by a member of the school. People studied so far this year are "Joseph Smith, the Prophet," reviewed by Charles Smith; "Oliver Cowdery, the Scribe," by Lawrence Jones; "Sidney Rigdon, the Preacher," by Harry Sevy; "Emma Smith, the Elect Lady," by Sister G. M. Vandel; "Martin Harris, Man of Zeal," by George Vandel, jr.; "Hyrum Smith, Man of Loyalty," by Ramona Burnett; "David Whitmer, Man of Faith," by George Vandel, sr.

Our prayer and sacrament services have been built around the theme, "Our Part in the General Conference." A real awakening of interest seems evident to all who have entered into the spirit of this theme.

Elder C. J. Smith has been teaching us the laws concerning our stewardship over financial possessions. These sermons have contributed greatly to our new branch program of definite education along lines which heretofore have been taught rather vaguely and uncertainly. C. E. Burnett and Harry Sevy have added their sermons to these, each using material which furthered this program.

Brother Charles Smith's leap year birthday and a Saint Patrick's Day party have been recent social events. February 29 a group of friends met at the home of Brother Smith to help him celebrate his birthday. Sister Ramona Burnett entertained the department of women at its monthly social meeting the evening of Saint Patrick's Day.

Among those who have been ill are Brother T. Beauchenne, Millette Burgaman, and Betty Dickey. Sister Trede is recovering from a fractured arm received in a fall on an icy sidewalk while she was walking to church.

Easter Sunday was the occasion for two enjoyable services commemorating the day. The eleven o'clock service was conducted by Brother C. J. Smith. The story of the first Easter was told by Scripture readings, sermonets, and appropriate congregational songs. A bass solo was contributed by Sanford Vandel. At the evening service a playlet, "A Mother's Easter Faith," was presented.

Kirtland District Gives Certificates

A notable occasion was observed at the conference held at Barberton, Ohio, in which five students of leadership in Religious Education was granted certificates for specific achievement. These were Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley, Mrs. Ella Manross, Mrs. Ruth Gill Brain, Miss Virginia Webbe, and Mrs. John T. Curry. Kirtland District has been outstanding in the work of its training program, and much of its success is due to the untiring effort and the enthusiastic leadership of the district director, William F. Webbe. Especially in these days of necessary retrenchment on financial lines, it is encouraging to find local workers diligently seeking a preparation which will help them to assist in carrying forward the local work of the church.

The following excerpts are taken from the address of Elder J. A. Gunsolley, on the above occasion:

"As members of this class, you have studied a prescribed course; you have satisfactorily completed an assigned task, that you might enter upon a greater task. You have, so to speak, followed where others have led the way. But now you are to be recognized as leaders, qualified to direct others even as you have been directed. Remember that this directing is to be by leading, not 'Go thou,' but 'Follow thou me.'

"You can not safely lead into strange fields. You must have first become familiar with the way by personal exploration, or at least by personal acquaintance resulting from your own effort. You must be able to speak as 'one having authority,' that you may have power in the thing wherein you would teach.

"You are set upon a pedestal, however uncomfortable the realization of this fact may make you feel. You are being advertized, else why this public graduation, and why these certificates of graduation? You are expected to achieve in greater measure as a result of the preparation you have made. The confidence of the people in your ability has been strengthened, and that confidence must not be betrayed.

"You have followed a path which has been marked out for you, a way that has been blazed and cleared for you in the maze of infidelity and ignorance, but you are not entirely out of the woods. It is yours to press on until you shall with the help of the Spirit emerge into the clearing where the sunshine of God's truth shall shine unclouded upon your way. You are among the number who by reason of your qualifications shall eventually lead Israel out of the wilderness into the promised land. It is not necessary that you understand every detail of Israel's wandering, but you should understand thoroughly every principle necessary to affect their deliverance.

"It is not essential that you know all about Paul's missionary journeys, each place he visited, the length of his stay, and the persons he met there; but it is significant that you should know what he taught the people in the various places visited and how the Lord worked with him in his ministry among the people as they came to him inquiring, 'Sir, what must we do to be saved?'"

Eastern Colorado Conference

The Eastern Colorado District Conference was held in Denver, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, February 26, 27, and 28.

On Friday evening a fellowship program was given which was well supported and attended by the various branches throughout the district. We were very happy to have with us on this first evening many representatives from some of the most distant branches. Numbers for the program were furnished by the Fort Collins, Colorado, Albin, Wyoming, and Denver Branches.

Saturday's services began with a splendid prayer meeting at 8.45, E. J. Williams, A. E. Tabor, and I. N. DeLong in charge. The service was devoted largely to prayer, and a spiritual meeting was enjoyed.

The business sessions of the conference were held on Saturday morning and afternoon. As there were no general church officers present, the meetings were in charge of the district presidency, District President Glaude A. Smith as chairman. The first business of the session was the passing of a motion directing the secretary to send a night letter to Apostle E. J. Gleazer, expressing our sympathy in his illness and our regrets that he could not be with us.

The six branches reporting showed a net gain of twenty in membership. The total membership of the district was reported as 1,939.

The district treasurer and bishop's agent, Ralph Vincent, presented a report showing a balance on hand, but which, unfortunately, is not available because of the failure of the Otis bank, and also a report on tithes and offerings for the district, which was very encouraging, in view of the present financial stress which has affected business conditions all over the country.

In the morning session the district president requested all to pray for direction in the selection of a director of Religious Education for the district. At the afternoon session Sister Myrtle Smith was elected to this office.

The conference received the following for ordination: Harold Tabor and Paul Diefendorf, of Wray, Colorado; and Ralph Vincent, of Otis, Colorado, to the office of elder; John Henry Hesse and Steven Bullard, of Wray, to the offices of teacher and deacon respectively. All of these ordinations were approved.

Delegates to the General Conference were elected as follows: Glaude A. Smith, Myrtle Smith, A. E. Tabor, Sister N. A. Tabor, Irby Mundy, Jewell Mundy, Abbie Mundy, Flora Leake, Paul Diefendorf, H. A. Tabor, Laura Tabor, Melvina Cooper, G. E. McConley, sr., Mary McConley, Sallie Conway, J. Arthur Davis, Dora Wildermuth, A. B. Chatburn, and Ethel Radcliffe and J. W. Madden.

The question of a district reunion next summer was referred to the reunion committee and the district presidency.

At the preaching service Saturday evening we were addressed by District President Glaude A. Smith who spoke on the theme of the conference, "God—Our Refuge and Strength."

Sunday services began with a fine prayer service at eight fifteen, in charge of Glen E. Holmes, Floyd Engstrom, and Harold Tabor. There was a very good attendance and the fine spirit that was present, leading many to take part in prayer and testimony, made this a service long to be remembered.

The church school was in charge of Brother Clarence L. Bruno, director of Religious Education of Denver Branch. Space will not permit a detailed description of the various numbers making up this program, but it was one of the finest church school services we have ever attended. During the regular class study hour we were addressed by Clarence L. Bruno, on the subject, "Programs for Church School," who gave many helpful suggestions for the preparation of interesting and coordinated programs. Brother Floyd Engstrom, of Colorado Springs, then gave a talk on the subject of "Class Credit Work for Teachers," in which he stressed the need for trained teachers, and explained the value of preparation and the earning of credits toward the various types of certificates.

During the preaching hour we were addressed by President Elbert A. Smith, who spoke on "Eternal Values," the value of close contact with God, the value of fellowship, and the value of the gospel.

Two babies, Arlene Carol Holmes, and Jay Wayne Saxton, were blessed.

At two o'clock we had the pleasure of witnessing the baptism of Arlo Vincent by his brother, Ralph Vincent.

Communion service was in charge of the district presidency assisted by the priesthood of the district. We were very glad that President Elbert A. Smith was able to attend a part of this service and make a short talk. After the sacrament service the ordinations of Paul Diefendorf, Harold Tabor, and Ralph Vincent were consummated, followed by the confirmation of Arlo Vincent, after which there was a season of prayer, testimony, and song.

At the close of the communion service, Brother J. D. Curtis gave a short talk regarding the reunion and reunion grounds at Colorado Springs.

The final service of the conference was held Sunday evening, in charge of E. J. Williams and A. E. Tabor. President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker. At the close of this service the visiting Saints gave a vote of thanks to Denver Saints for their hospitality during the conference. Then after a short talk by the district president the conference adjourned.

This 1932 conference was one of the finest ever held in Eastern Colorado District and was marked throughout by a spirit of enthusiasm and devotion for the work in which we are engaged and by a feeling of the finest fellowship.

A Child Is Healed

Decatur, Illinois.—It is with thankful hearts and gratitude to God that we write of the wonderful blessing the Father has bestowed on Brother and Sister C. S. Daniel's family in the marvelous healing of little Ray Dennis, four years old. The child was taken to the hospital with dangerous affliction of the brain which, the doctor said, almost always proves fatal. "If he gets well," he stated, "it will be by a higher power." He could not hold out any hope for recovery. When the nurses, who had had years of experience with such cases, saw the child, they shook their heads in doubt and said that there was little hope he would live until morning.

Paralyzed on one side, speechless, suffering great agony, the child lay, but those who love him remembered the words of the apostle James: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

The child passed from one convulsion into another from one o'clock until five in the evening. But Elder O. C. Johnson was sent to administer, and in the evening the Saints met in special prayer service in his behalf, pleading with the Lord for help.

The next day at the same time he had two more severe convulsions which seemed to take his very life away. Again he was administered to and from that time, he had no more convulsions, but continued to improve.

All were amazed at the sudden change for the better, especially some relatives who are opposed to the church. But they were frank to admit that the child's recovery was caused by the hand of God working according to his promise.

May all of us live worthy of such a blessing.

Apostle J. F. Curtis in the Northwest

During the first two weeks of February Apostle J. F. Curtis reached Weyburn on his missionary tour of the northwest, and here he remained for ten days while he delivered a series of inspirational and edifying sermons.

The Saints were surprised and highly pleased to see Brother Curtis in the field again after the serious illness he has gone through. We are hoping that he will be blessed with health and strength to pursue his work.

Apostle Curtis was a busy man during his visit to Weyburn. The time between sermons was taken up by visits with the Saints and interested people and by the holding of round table conferences. These conferences proved interesting and highly educational. Questions were answered and rumors cleared up to the satisfaction of all. Everyone who was interested in knowing the truth about the church was welcome to come and discuss it with Brother Curtis and some interesting talks were had. Not a moment of his valuable time was wasted.

During his stay here, Brother Curtis found a comfortable place to stop at the home of Brother William Neill. The meetings were held in a country schoolhouse, and it was necessary for Brother Curtis to drive three miles each way, in a bobsleigh to attend, and during that period we had some real Western Canada blizzards. In spite of the storms, Brother Curtis was "on the job," and everyone felt if a Missourian, from the "Sunny South," could endure it, we Canadians could. Attendance was good.

Elder Johny Neill and Missionary Joseph Sandidge have been doing some splendid work in the district, and there were some interested nonmembers present to hear Apostle Curtis. They were impressed with the message he brought. The truth is hard to deny when it is presented in the clear and forcible manner employed by Brother Curtis.

It was revealed by the Spirit, to Apostle Curtis and Elder Johny Neill that V. H. Fisher, of Tyvan, Saskatchewan, should be ordained a priest, and the latter, having had a testimony of the calling by the Spirit, accepted the office. The ordination was in charge of Brother Curtis and Elder J. R. Neill. During the ordination service Apostle Curtis was instructed by the Spirit that it was the Lord's will that Brother Gerald Watam, of Weyburn, be ordained a teacher. Sister Watam testified that she had an evidence of the calling and Brother Watam accepted the office, being ordained by Elder Neill and Brother Curtis.

Rumors have been circulated in the South about church conditions in the Canadian West. When the adversary finds himself without logic to defeat the truth, he does not hesitate to use any weapon at his command. It is true that the financial condition of the West is bad, due to crop failures, but the spiritual condition is better than it has been for years. When conditions improve, this district can be expected to carry its share of the financial burden, and in the meantime the Saints are anxious to support the church in every possible way.

We all hope that Brother Curtis will be permitted to visit us again soon, and we pray the blessings of God will follow him and the church.

Otter Lake, Michigan

The membership of this branch now numbers thirty-six and many of these belong to the Jones family. Last Sunday twenty-three attended our Sunday school, all Joneses but three. Illness and absence from home have made our congregation rather small, nevertheless our meetings are profitable and characterized by peace and calm.

Otter Lake has been fortunate in having Apostle D. T. Williams come with his six months' series of lectures (one lecture a month) which were of a high order. His course is most instructive, and has helped many of us.

Recreation meetings are held once a month and the Saints and friends have a good time. This department is presided over by Brother Edward Jones, and the programs are so well handled that good results.

There are five members of the priesthood in this branch. All are working harmoniously.

The Juniata Saints met with Otter Lake congregation the last two Sundays of Brother William's lectures. They live about twelve miles from here and are a small group of staunch Saints. We visit them occasionally and are well repaid for our efforts.

Our prayers are for the General Conference, especially for those in charge.

Tulsa, Oklahoma

1324 South Cheyenne

March 22.—The coming of General Conference will bring to a close a number of activities of the Saints of Tulsa Branch for the first quarter of 1932.

Immediately after conference Pastor J. E. Lancaster hopes to arrange for a two-day priesthood institute, followed by a two-week series of missionary services.

The first event of importance of this year was the installation and communion service on Sunday morning, January 3. At this beautiful service the leader of each department gave a pledge to the branch of his service during the year and also the pledge of that department. This was followed by the communion service in which the pastor asked all to consecrate themselves.

On the following Sunday, January 11, the new superintendent of the church school, Sister Maude McComb, organized a young married people's class with O. A. McDowell as the teacher. Sister Ellen Henson was elected president of the class and Sister Edward I. Johnson the secretary. Sister Evan P. Hopkins was chosen as social chairman. This class gave a "pep" party on January 12 with fifty present. They are now holding an attendance contest and the record to date for any one Sunday is seventy-five with an average attendance of sixty.

The young people's class with Falice H. Cunningham as its teacher has been given new impetus by an attendance contest. All departments of the church school are being inspired with the fine enthusiasm of Sister McComb and her assistants.

On January 31, the Saints of Tulsa had the unusual privilege of having President Elbert A. Smith as speaker for the morning and evening service. His general thought in the morning was "The Things We Should Hold Onto in Our Church." The branches at Sperry and Skiatook dismissed their services in the evening to bring the crown to three hundred and twenty to hear his evening sermon on "The Signs of the Times."

The Temple Builders gave their annual carnival and all church night the month of January. Following dinner at six o'clock came a half hour of congregational singing of old-time gospel hymns, and then a play presented by the girls. It was a very successful evening socially and financially.

Sunday morning, February 28, we had as guest speaker, Edward Larsen, of Copenhagen, Denmark. He gave a very interesting talk on "Life and Customs of Denmark."

The morning and evening attendance for church services have been averaging well over a hundred. The record being one hundred and seventy-nine with the exception of the Sunday Elbert A. Smith was with us. There is no doubt but that we feel the spiritual impulse to serve due to the high quality of preaching and to the renewal of consecration in every department. The church choir has doubled in attendance in recent months. The department of women, under the leadership of Sister Edward I. Johnson, meets once each month with a luncheon and program and to outline the work of the coming month.

On February 19, Tulsa Branch had the privilege of entertaining the Central Oklahoma district conference. We enjoyed having with us Brothers G. L. DeLapp and L. F. P. Curry, of the Presiding Bishopric; Brother E. J. Gleazer, of the Quorum of Twelve, and F. Ed. Dillon, district president. The conference opened with preaching services Friday evening, February 19, Brother Dillon, the speaker. Saturday began with a general prayer service at eight thirty in charge of Brothers Dillon and Keuffer. Class work at ten o'clock was taught by Bishop DeLapp. At two o'clock in the afternoon came the regular conference business meeting. Brother Gleazer preached in the evening. Sunday began at eight o'clock in the morning with a prayer service; church school at ten o'clock, during which hour the program of the church from the Bishop's standpoint was presented by Bishop Curry. This was followed at eleven o'clock by a sermon from Bishop DeLapp. In prayer and ordination services at two o'clock in the afternoon, four men were ordained to the priesthood, and under the influence of the Spirit Brother Gleazer gave us much encouragement.

Judging by the comments of the officers and people present, this undoubtedly was one of the finest conferences that has been held in Central Oklahoma District.

We are looking forward to our Easter service Sunday morning, and the cantata by the choir that evening. We are in hopes that the spiritual conference through which we have just passed is a foretaste of the General Conference that is to come. Our prayers are that such may be the case.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

The February sacrament service was a very spiritual one. We were sorry that the attendance was small. The bad weather and the icy condition of the streets caused many to stay home who otherwise would have benefited from this meeting.

A baby boy came to make his home with Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Hale February 9. His name is Richard Adrian.

Sisters Farrar, Hunt, and Sckrunk had charge of a box social given by the women's department the evening of February 19. The boxes were sold at auction at supper time, and the sale netted the department $11.85. After supper a short play, directed by Sister Poague, was enjoyed.

A program was given at the church Sunday morning, February 21, observing the birthday of George Washington. Blanche Farrar, adult leader, was in charge.

Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson were called to Independence during the first part of February, owing to the serious illness of their grandson there. They report some improvement and are thankful for the prayers of the Saints in his behalf.

A choir of more than twenty voices will present an Easter Cantata Sunday morning, March 27. They are preparing "From Death Unto Life," under the direction of Sister Anderson.

Kenneth Brittell is again in Lincoln, attending the Agricultural College. We were glad to welcome him back into the branch.

On February 28, we had as our guest at the morning service, Apostle George Albert Smith and his wife, of the Salt Lake Church. They were visiting at the home of Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson while in Lincoln. Apostle Smith gave an interesting talk on the Book of Mormon in the Senior Adult Sunday school class, and also assisted at the preaching services. He spoke a short time following the sermon by Brother Francis Schrunk. We were much pleased to have these people with us. They both show a great love for the gospel work. Brother Poague preached an interesting sermon in the evening.

Brother and Sister Hufferd, of Hooker County, have been worshipping with us. We certainly appreciate these new members who are coming in, and trust that they will feel welcome.

Wichita, Kansas

Water and Osie Streets

Within the past several weeks, Wichita Branch has enjoyed a number of social affairs. In commemoration of Washington's centenary, a general membership get together entertainment was given on the evening of February 22, in the church basement. The gathering was sponsored by the pastor, A. E. Stoft; the supper by the ladies, and the entertainment by the "TEN" Girls' Club.

Brother Stoft is a genial host, and managed so well that no one was aware of the "mechanics of entertainment." Sister Baraclough, Stoft, Curtis, Hankins, Weaver, and the other women who served the dinner once again performed a miracle of legerdemain. How they can conjure such a volume of quality and flavor in so short a time from so small a kitchen is a cause for wonderment. More than one hundred and twenty persons were served in as smooth and perfect manner as one could wish. Was the supper excellent? Ask some of the gourmets present. (No, Latter Day Saints are never gourmands, but some of us were tempted.) A further testimony of its excellence is that the freewill offering was more than the cost of the meal.

The TEN Girls' Club (Sister Curtis is leader, and the group is seemingly composed of the "sub-debs." of the branch), provided the entertainment with about twenty numbers: songs, readings and well-staged sketches, "Honor to the Nation's First President" being the theme.

We are not in on the secret of what "TEN" signifies, but are convinced of its meaning: "Talent en noblesse." Miss Margaret Williams modestly says she does not represent anything particular in the "TEN", but her direction of their talent certainly produces results that delight the entire branch congregation whenever they appear.

It was a great pleasure to have with us many visitors, both local friends and several from out of the city. Among these were: Sister Mary Pooler, of Independence, mother of Elder C. T. Pooler; Sister Schwall, of Modesto, California; Mr. and Sister C. S. Jackson and family, recently from Cheney, Kansas; Mrs. Reed, of Stafford, Mr. and Sister Frieto; Mr. and Sister Adams; Mr. and Mrs. Ashley; Mrs. Madden; Miss Gladys Brennard; Miss Jessie Jordan; and, Messrs. Abrahamson, Herbert Jones, and William Guinn.

On Friday evening, March 4, the Young Married People's Class of the church school, sponsored a farewell gathering in honor of Brother and Sister Earl Sheppard, and their three children, Robert, Allen and Elaine, who are moving to McAllen, Texas, away down on the Rio Grande, where Brother Sheppard will engage in the bakery business. Though the class had charge of the reception, practically every department of the branch took part: the pastor, Brother Stofft was master of ceremonies; Sisters Jacob and Mackenzie decorated the rooms; Sister Hankins served refreshments, and Sister Catherine Slawson directed a delightful entertainment program. Approximately fifty people were present, and the evening was greatly enjoyed, even though there was unmistakably present a feeling of sadness that our friends were passing from our presence. The Sheppard family had taken an active and worthy part in the service this branch endeavors to render to the Lord. They are greatly missed both by their class and by the branch, yet there is consolation in the knowledge that, as Paul said of the Twelve Tribes, they with us are "instantly serving God day and night," regardless of location.

The men's department held its regular monthly meeting on Monday, March 7, in the church basement. Sociability again prevailed, and little or no business was transacted, the evening being given over to an entertainment program, partly comic. Brother Ed. Nelson made a stump speech in the Negro dialect, and John Becker gave a Negro sermon on the subject, "The Prodigal Son." Elder Williams gave an excellent talk on the historical setting of the Book of Mormon, and afterwards replied to many questions from his hearers. Brother Mackenzie made a short talk on the subject, "Spiritual Inheritances."

Thursday afternoon, March 17, the ladies had their regular "book review" and entertainment. By special request Brother Stofft reviewed for them, Christ of the Mount, by E. Stanley Jones. Including visitors, there were about thirty ladies present who unanimously declare Sister Jackson to be a lovely hostess.

Kirtland, Ohio

Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley and Sister Gunsolley arrived here February 13, and held a series of meetings extending over two Sundays with the exception of Thursday and Saturday nights. They closed Sunday night, February 21. Attendance was good at the meetings, there being an average of about eighty present. Brother Gunsolley used the blackboard to illustrate many of the lessons. His subjects dealt largely with church fundamentals, the object being to give all a picture of the church, impressing the grandeur and beauty of the gospel plan, calling forth the love and admiration of members and friends, and enlisting their whole-hearted service. The sermons dealt with the "gospel wheel," and various theories of salvation according to orthodoxy, and some of the themes were: "Walking in the Light"; "The Fruits of Gospel Obedience"; "Lord, What Wilt Thou Have Me Do?" "Individual Responsibility of Example"; "Glories in the Resurrection," and "The Glory of God Is Intelligence." An unusual aspect of the reception of these meetings was the interest taken by the young people many of whom attended and took copious notes.

On Thursday night, February 18, a George Washington program was presented at the school auditorium and meetings were suspended for the occasion. This program was given by the young people's division of the Temple Branch. Patriotic songs were sung by the audience, Sister Anne Householder leading. Elder Earl Curry offered the invocation, and then followed the varied program of talks, papers and dramatic skits on George and Martha Washington. About two hundred were present to enjoy the numbers.

The Daughters of Zion listened to interesting accounts of their work in Africa by the Reverend and Mrs. Gordon Beacham, of Erieside, the afternoon of February 9. The guest speakers were presented by Elder John Cooper. About fifty were present to hear the missionaries talk, and other program numbers were given by members of the club.

Each first Sunday of the month it is fitting that the Saints of Kirtland meet in the Temple, built by our fathers of the early church, to express thanks for the gifts and blessings we have received from the heavenly Father.

On the evening of the first day in February more than four hundred citizens of Kirtland heard the concert given by the Lyon and Healy Juvenile Band. The program, which included classic numbers, folk songs, and popular pieces, was sponsored by the Parent-Teacher Association. Following the band music Sister Anne Holgate gave a beautiful description of Hagar's reply to Abraham. She was dressed in a costume of that period and carried a jug of water and a loaf of bread.

Brother Richard Cox, son of Brother and Sister Andy Cox, was recently married to Miss Margaret Ray, of Wiloughby, Ohio.

The four sons, a grandson, Thomas Sparks, and John Collin, a relative, acted as pallbearers at the funeral of Sister Thomas Thomas, sr., February 18. Elder David Proper preached a beautiful sermon. Sister Thomas Thomas was a sister of Brother T. W. Williams, of Bevier, Missouri. She had many friends in Missouri as well as in this part of Ohio. Interment was in Kirtland Cemetery.

Mr. George Thomas was baptized February 21, by Elder Thomas Thomas, and confirmed by Elders John L. Cooper and Joseph B. Biggs.

Sister Alma Curry, librarian, is doing a successful work. She has had one hundred and forty-seven books in circulation since the middle of last October.

Of late the musicians of the branch have done excellently. We appreciate their services. Not long ago the young people's choir sang "Great Is the Lord," and numbers by our soloists, Katherine Moore, Josephine Ebeling, and William Davies, have been enjoyed.

The women's department is active. About fifty are attending the meetings. One group finds it necessary to meet at night because it is inconvenient to meet in the day time; this group is led by Sister Mabel Thomas. There is no age limit in either group, and the spirit of growth is showing itself. Sister D. P. Davies is the leader of the day time group which is making a close survey of the Doctrine and Covenants. Sister J. B. Biggs is the teacher.

Works and Memories in Spring River and Clinton Districts

Veteran Missionary Tells of Past and Present

Joplin, Missouri.—During 1931 my diary tells me that I have preached one hundred and seventy-six sermons and attended one hundred and eighteen other services. Have labored with the following brothers: J. Charles May, R. E. Davey, and Hollie Dennis.

Brother Dennis is the pastor of my home branch at Mapleton, Kansas. He had been keeping up appointments at the Walnut Hill Schoolhouse, about twelve miles from Mapleton, and on August 9 he commenced a series of meetings. The crowds and interest were so good that he sent for me to come to help him. I joined him August 16, and for two weeks we had fine services. We then moved to the Poplar Grove Schoolhouse. The Walnut Hill Schoolhouse is where I first heard the gospel and the Poplar Grove Schoolhouse is where I preached my first sermon. Our meeting at Poplar Grove was well attended. Brother Dennis has since baptized two there. These places are in Clinton District.

Brother May and I held a meeting at Stark, Kansas, in the Friends Church. Brother Jones, of Walnut, Kansas, and a number of the Saints living in and around Stark, did all they could to make this meeting a success. We then held a short meeting in Pittsburg, Kansas. After this, Brother May was transferred to Holden Stake, and Brother R. E. Davey came to help in this vicinity. We commenced a series of meetings in Coffeyville, Kansas, Brother Davey doing most of the preaching. Independence, Kansas, was our next place for meetings, and from there we went to Bartlesville, Oklahoma, where we stayed overnight with Brother Lloyd Harding and family.

Sunday morning we began a series of meetings at Nowata, Oklahoma, about twenty miles from Bartlesville, Brother Davey doing the preaching. I remained there a week and was then called away. Brother Davey preached for three weeks and was given good community response. I am much interested in Nowata, having opened up the work near there in 1910. Sister Reed had moved there from Pennsylvania with her husband who was working in the oil fields. She asked me to come and hold meetings, and a number were baptized. A. C. Silvers, R. S. Budd and others have helped there.

In all the above places the branch presidents helped in the meetings, and I enjoyed laboring with them.

Nor must I forget my trip last summer to Chanute, Kansas. Brother and Sister Daniel Gray, their son, and I drove from Parsons to Chanute to visit some of the Saints. We found the Jays and the Hills. Brother Hill works in the Tribune office. We met at Brother Hill's house and preached to them. Brother Gray and I called on our colored brother, John Carson, and family. He is a real Latter Day Saint and is busy trying to get his people to see the gospel.

September 13, we had a nice meeting in Cherryvale, Kansas, baptizing four. Held a meeting for two weeks at Weir, and attended the institute at Pittsburg, October 4, Brothers F. Henry Edwards and Frank McDonald in charge. I had held a meeting in Pittsburg in June and found a group of very willing helpers. Seven were baptized.

October 11, I commenced a meeting near Wimer, Oklahoma, where live a number of Saints. There I worked two weeks and baptized four fine young people.

Almost a month later I began one of the best meetings I have enjoyed for some time at Miami, Oklahoma. For three weeks good crowds came, the same people attending throughout the series. Six were baptized and others were interested. While working there, I was called to Joplin, to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Jennie Parker, also to Weir, Kansas, to preach Sister Putnam's funeral sermon. I have preached a number of sermons at funerals of people who are not members of the church. Also I have married several couples. In December I held a few meetings at Parsons, Kansas.

Just before Christmas I went to Rich Hill, Missouri, to see my father and mother. I found them well and firm in the latter-day faith. Preached there Sunday night to a good crowd. Rich Hill Branch is growing under the leadership of Birch Whiting and his helpers.

We were all home for Christmas dinner. Our children were there and thirteen grandchildren. My wife and I enjoyed it. Brother J. F. Curtis came down to stay a couple of weeks and we enjoyed his visit. It reminded us of days past at Grannis, Arkansas, when Brother Curtis met Bowgard in debate. Brothers J. T. Riley, Jesse Simmons, "Arkansas" Smith as we called him, and I stayed at one place. Brother Curtis ably defended our faith. One morning the mail came and Brother Curtis said: "Well, boys, I have a new girl at home." Those were great days. We were all young and life was ahead. Now Brother Riley is gone to his reward. I haven't seen Brother Smith and Brother Simmons for a long time, but pray that they are still in the faith. Brother Curtis gave us some good sermons. May he live many years to preach the gospel.

I have preached in Arma, Kansas, Webb City, Joplin, and a number of other places. I have enjoyed my work more this year than for some time. We were sorry to lose Brother McDonald, our district president. But now Brother Amos T. Higdon is our leader. He is a fine man. I have known him since he was a boy. He started out with me in the ministry, a lad of twenty years. Boys who were not married did not receive an allowance in those days. I remember a number who gave from one to five years to the church before they were married.

I went into the ministry in the spring of 1900. My wife and I had three children. We were given fifteen dollars a month. There were about four hundred missionaries appointed that spring, a good many of them were young men as above mentioned. One of these was W. S. Pender, reared in Spring River District. He labored for years as a single man and was one of the best men I ever met.

The slogan of the church now is "This Church Will Go On." That is a good slogan, but God may have to raise up men willing to make the supreme sacrifice, give their lives if necessary. Jesus gave his life, Paul, Joseph Smith, and many others. I am glad that I was privileged to hear this gospel when I was young. The thirty years or more I have spent in the ministry have seemed short and I have not accomplished as much as I would like to have done, but when I stand before the great Judge if Jesus can look me in the face and say: "You have done the best you could," I shall be satisfied. Dear people, I know this work is true.

LEE QUICK.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

The spring conference of this district was held in Boise, February 20. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was elected to preside, assisted by the district presidency. Following the opening routine, A. V. Moore, of Rupert, having resigned as a member of the district presidency, Elder John B. Cato, of Boise, was chosen his successor. The calling of Brother Laurence Hendrickson, of Hagerman, to the office of priest was approved and the ordination set for the following day. Then the supplementary report of the district treasurer was read and a letter from the Presiding Bishop regarding the district quota for 1932. This quota is $3,100 which includes a debt reduction of $1,240. Resolutions concerning priesthood conduct and function were passed by the conference, and copies of them were ordered sent to each member of the priesthood in the district.

Sunday, February 21, Boise Branch dedicated its church building. Prayer service began at half past eight after which Brother Laurence Hendrickson was ordained a priest, Apostle F. Henry Edwards officiating. The Sunday school convened at ten o'clock under the direction of Brother Lester Dellenbaugh. An impressive dedicatory service took place at eleven o'clock, the sermon being by Apostle F. Henry Edwards. The prayer of dedication was by Elder O. W. Okerlind.

Other activities of the day included a basket lunch at half past twelve, a round table discussion at half past two, and preaching by Brother Edwards again at half past seven.

Boise Branch

District Missionary O. W. Okerlind conducted a week of meetings here the latter part of January.

February 21, was a red letter day in the history of this group. For the first time since its organization, the branch owns its church home. The dedication occurred February 21. The church is a neat little brick building in the church district of the city. It cost $5,080. Since they are few in number and not very rich in purse, the Saints took five years to pay off the contract, and they feel the Lord has abundantly blessed their effort. Apostle Edwards, Elder O. W. Okerlind, and Silas Condit, district president, assisted in the dedication service. During the week prior to the dedication the men calcimined the building and the women came Thursday and cleaned up the church. On Saturday the district conference was held, there being good attendance from Rupert, Hagerman, and many isolated members were present.

Apostle Edwards arrived in Boise, February 18, and preached several splendid sermons.

A new baby girl, Vivian Thelma, is now at the home of Brother and Sister T. R. Wilson. The mother is Mrs. James Harder, daughter of Brother and Sister Wilson.

Hagerman Branch

A number from this branch attended the spring conference at Boise, February 20, and remained for the dedication of their church February 21.

Hagerman members enjoyed the opportunity of having Apostle F. Henry Edwards speak to us February 22.

Sister J. H. Condit who has been very ill at the home of her son, Silas, is again able to return to her own home. She is nearly eighty-two years old.

A number of our members have been ill, but most of them are improving in health.

Brother Laurence Hendrickson, ordained a priest at the conference, occupied the pulpit Sunday morning, February 28.

Word has reached us of the death of Sister Yale, of Ekalaka, Montana. She passed away February 7, at the home of her daughter in Spokane. All will remember her as a devoted Saint. She was baptized at Hagerman during the 1924 reunion.

Rupert Branch

Brother John Rutledge passed away at the hospital in Rupert January 22, of double pneumonia. He is survived by his wife and ten children. The funeral services were held here by Brother A. W. Connell.

Brother John Hunt died at the home of his son in Paul, Idaho, February 12. He leaves a wife and seven children. The funeral was conducted at Rupert, Elder O. W. Okerlind preaching the sermon.

Brother A. W. Connell received a telegram notifying him of the death of his sister, Mrs. Lizzie Nish, of Crystal Lake, Illinois. This is his second sister to die within a year.

This branch has been operating under the church school plan for more than a year and as yet has had no difficulty in working out the system. We think it an improvement over the old plan. In making collections we use the envelope system and find it is increasing our income.

Lamoni Stake

Easter Sunday at Lamoni

Easter Day brought out good sized congregations. The balminess of the day was enticing to townspeople. Even more attractive was the visit of President F. M. Smith and Bishop L. F. P. Curry. By nine-thirty, the hour for the opening of the church school, the Coliseum was quite well filled. Before the sermon began, several were being turned aside for lack of seating room.

The following description of the auditorium was given by the Lamoni Chronicle. "The decorations were simply but beautifully symbolic of the occasion. In the south box a white cross rose against a green background, surrounded by bouquets of tulips, all under the reflection of a soft rose-colored light. In the north box a large basket of lilies was located. On the stage in front of the pulpit was a large bouquet of lupines and giant snapdragons while on each side were Easter lilies. On the gray curtains back of the stage was hung the theme of the day "Christ Is Risen."

The worship period at the opening of the church school began with the reading of the scriptural story of the first Easter. An Easter greeting was given by Elder George W. Blair who has just returned from wintering in Florida. After the study period, a group of juniors sang an Easter carol and the babe of Brother and Sister Alma Propst, of Red Oak, Iowa, was blessed. In the interlude, shifting to the preaching service, organ solos were played on the vitaphone.

It was fortunate that the service was planned with considerable amount of music. This brought President Smith just in time for the sermon. He and Bishop Curry drove up from Kansas City, and did not arrive until half past eleven. The music of worship was beautiful and appropriate to the day. From "The Messiah" were two anthems by the choir, "Surely, He Hath Borne Our Grievs," and the "Hallelujah Chorus," and the soprano solo, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth" by Mrs. Linna Hunt. Elizabeth Smith and Charles Ballentyne played Schubert's "Ave Maria" as a harp and violin duet. President Smith in prefacing his sermon said he chose to keep in the spirit of the day and speak on the theme of Passion Week. He reviewed forcefully and sympathetically the events of the last week on Christ's life, leading to the majestic culmination of Easter Day.

In the afternoon President Smith and Bishop Curry spoke to the priesthood in the stake rooms. These two leaders spoke frankly of the work of the church today. President Smith talked of the changed situation in our recent retrenchment and the consequent added responsibility that came to local men. The present program requires development and activity in the local ministry, he said. The bishop reviewed some of our policies and the present situation in church finance. Today it is not only the program, but the sticking to it that is imperative.

In the evening another congregation filled the main floor and a few late comers sat in the balcony. The A Cappella Chorus of Graceland College sat on the platform. The ministers of the service were Bishop L. F. P. Curry, President F. M. Smith, who offered the prayer, Apostle J. F. Garver, and the pastor, Blair Jensen. The chorus began the service by singing the hymn "'Tis Midnight," a favorite in their repertoire. Later they sang Grechaninoff's "Cherubim Song." Bishop Curry said he presumed that the Lamoni congregation had heard explanations of church finance by Bishop DeLapp, and that he also chose to keep the spirit of the day. He drew three pictures of Eastertide and closed with their challenge for us today. At the doors to greet the departing congregation were President Smith and Bishop Curry. It was a helped and appreciative group of church folk that they greeted.

Far West Stake

At the regular quarterly business meeting that convened March 16, it became necessary for us to select a new pastor, owing to the fact that Brother F. L. Hinderks and wife moved from our midst to their farm near Stewartville, Missouri. Elder Thomas Fiddick was elected to fill the vacant place. We shall miss Brother Hinderks. He has served faithfully and well as our pastor during the past four years and has labored unceasingly to promote the welfare of the branch. Our best wishes go with Brother Hinderks for his success wherever he may be.

Sister Florence Gamet was also released as supervisor of the junior department after a faithful service of two years with the children. Sister Elsie Butler was elected to serve in that capacity.

Quite a number from Cameron were in Saint Joseph Sunday, March 13, attending the stake conference. They enjoyed President F. M. Smith's sermon at eleven o'clock.

We were pleased to have with us on Sunday, March 20, Stake President Ward A. Hougas who gave a helpful sermon at the morning service.

The choir, under the direction of Paul Fiddick, rendered a pleasing musical program on Easter Sunday at seven-thirty o'clock.

Maple Grove Branch

Bishop Milo Burnett spent March 20, at Maple Grove Branch. He delivered a fine sermon. Bishop Burnett spent March 27, at Oakdale Branch, preaching both morning and evening to large crowds.

First Saint Joseph Branch

All regular services are being carried on to good advantage. Attendance keeps up to normal and the services are very encouraging. Pastor Ward A. Hougas ended his series of Sunday night sermons on Easter Sunday.

The O. T. Z's enjoyed a Saint Patrick's party at the church March 17. An Easter morning prayer service was held at Krug Park with a fair attendance and a fine spirit. Breakfast was served by the boys.

The adult division of the church school held its regular monthly meeting at the church March 25, with a good representation.

Independence

Pre-Conference Meetings at the Auditorium

The communion service in the Auditorium on Sunday, April 3, drew a large number of church people from Independence that filled all of the seats on the main floor and many in the balcony. It is estimated that there were more than three thousand people present. Gathering quietly and in a spirit of worship the large assembly seemed to be prepared for the orderly and beautiful service that followed.

A pleasing sight greeted the eyes of the entering visitor as he beheld the snowy white tablecloths where the eucharistic emblems were spread, and beauty was added to the setting by the great banks of ferns and Easter lilies that surrounded the platform. The ordinarily cavernous interior of the Auditorium was relieved by the hangings in purple and gold that draped the oval balcony and the high-windowed opening back of the choir loft. For these appropriate and beautiful decorations we were indebted to the Mother's Club.

Present at the speaker's table were Presidents Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, and Floyd M. McDowell, Bishop Albert Carmichael, and Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. In the chairs provided for the Quorum of Twelve eight of the ten members were seated, Apostles J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams being called from the city over the week-end.

The sacramental emblems were first served to the officers at the speaker's table, then to the members of the Twelve, who in turn passed them to the members of the priesthood who occupied the choir loft. These men, numbering only a few less than one hundred, served the congregation. For the excellent order, dignity, and efficiency in the difficult matter of passing the emblems, the pastor, John F. Sheehy, and Elders Harry Barto and Henry Stahl were responsible.

The familiar songs of the church were sung by the congregation under the leadership of George G. Lewis. The invocation was offered and the blessings on the emblems were asked by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. In the devotional period a special prayer was spoken by President Elbert A. Smith. A short address was delivered by President Frederick M. Smith, who also gave the benediction at the close of the service. A spirit of peace and reverence prevailed the whole assembly.

At the large prayer meeting in the Stone Church at two thirty in the afternoon there were more than six hundred people in attendance. Elders A. K. Dillee, E. A. Thomas, and Walter Chapman were in charge.

The first rehearsal of the Messiah Choir in the Auditorium began at three o'clock, almost three hundred singers being present and a full attendance of the orchestra. Brother Paul N. Craig directed. It was announced by George H. Hulmes, representing the Music Board of the church, that Brother Craig will direct the conference performance of The Messiah. Because of illness the general church chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, was unable to accept the invitation to direct the oratorio. The performance, one of the events of the conference, will be given next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

The evening service in the Auditorium at seven thirty was preceded by a program of music by the Auditorium Orchestra, under the direction of Orlando Nace. A beautiful feature of the program was a well played selection from Tannhauser.

Elder Richard Baldwin, offered a moving prayer before the sermon. Apostle M. A. McConley selected for his text, "Prepare ye, prepare ye for that which is to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 1:3). His theme was "The Hour of Preparation." In brief review he outlined the marvelous progress made by the world in the fields of science and mechanics, but pointed to the social and moral decadence of the age as an indication of dangerous trends. He pointed out that men must grow in goodness if they are to save themselves from destruction and that they must be won to the program of goodness by the gospel of Christ.

On Monday evening a great number of incoming conference delegates and visitors augmented the local congregations gathered at the Auditorium to hear Bishop A. Carmichael, whose subject was "Let All Things Be Done in Righteousness."

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis continued the preconference series of sermons on last night with a helpful discussion on "Fundamentals of Spiritual Renewal."

This morning, April 6, the seventy-fifth General Conference of the church opened. The first class period commenced at seven thirty; the first devotional service was held at the Stone Church at eight forty-five. The Daily Herald carries to the church the story of this conference.

Stone Church

Elder S. A. Thiel who Sunday morning was in charge of the church school session of the adult, intermediate, and junior departments, in the main room of the Stone Church, announced the church school arrangements for conference Sunday, April 10. The adult and young people's divisions of this school will participate in special class work to be conducted at the Auditorium next Sunday. The intermediate, junior, primary, and beginner departments will meet at the Stone Church as usual.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, gave its customary sacrament Sunday night radio broadcast program last Sunday night at ten o'clock. At the call of the director, the singers met at the church for rehearsal at nine o'clock. Tonight the Stone Church Choir will sing to the General Conference in the Auditorium. Apostle James A. Gillen is to speak on "The Restoration of the Gospel."

Yesterday, April 5, was Golden Wedding day for Brother and Sister Joseph Elliott of this congregation. They held open house for their friends many of whom were present to help them celebrate the joyous occasion. Brother and Sister Elliott were married in Minnesota near Fergus Falls.

Sister Janet Elizabeth Barto, sixty-nine years of age, died at her home at Independence Sunday. Elder Hubert Case was in charge of the funeral April 4, assisted by Elder John F. Sheehy. The burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Barto leaves her husband, C. N. Barto; two daughters, Mrs. Edith Bullard and Mrs. Eathel Blake, and two sons, Herbert L. Barto and Harry G. Barto, all of Independence; a sister, of Hamilton, Missouri, six brothers, eight grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

Among others who have recently passed away are Metta Charlene Davis, the seven-months-old daughter of Brother and Sister Boyd L. Davis who died the morning of April 1, and Mrs. Altheta Richards, seventy-eight years of age, who died at her home Saturday morning.

Brewton, Alabama, Branch has a class in "Business Training and its Correlation to the Economic Program of the Church" as a part of its Department of Religious Education. The class meets on Tuesday and Friday evenings and interest is unusually good. It presents a course, bringing together general principles of economics, bookkeeping and stewardship. Brother Earl T. Hidgon is director of Religious Education in this branch and is enjoying his work.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

Our new pastor, Elder Will Bolinger, will be here continuously after General Conference. We shall be very glad to have him with us. He is relinquishing his work as pastor of the junior department of the Stone Church in Independence.

Sunday, March 27, Mount Washington had excellent services. The young people began the day with a sunrise prayer service at six o'clock. Twenty-four were present.

Impressive worship services were held in the departments upstairs and downstairs. The church school was well attended.

At the evening hour the choir and Brother Bolinger gave an enjoyable program of anthems and Scripture readings.

Friday, April 1, the O. B. K.'s gave a pie and chili supper at the church. The proceeds are to be used to construct a retaining wall for the volley ball and tennis court.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood conducts a Doctrine and Covenants class for the women's department on Friday afternoon. Last Friday the women met all day at the home of Sister Hunter.

Sunday afternoon, April 3, at five o'clock the O. B. K.'s held their monthly food fellowship meeting. The program included a sermonet by our new pastor.

The Girl Scouts are active. Twelve girls are included in our troop No. 51. They are making progress in passing their tests. A few of the girls went to Fairmount Park on a wiener roast March 26.

March 25, the O. B. K.'s had their regular monthly birthday party at the home of Sister Bertie Gould. Those having birthdays this month were Sister Bertie Gould, Isabel Stobaugh, and Lorel Winegar.

Gladstone Church

Easter Sunday services were well attended. About twenty children and young people furnished the program. Evangelist Ammon White was the evening speaker.

On Friday evening, April 1, the group met at the home of Sister G. A. Witte for a social gathering. Competitive games were enjoyed.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood presided over the sacrament service the morning of April 3, and was the spokesman in the ordination of Elmer J. Moran to the office of priest. Elder A. R. Moore assisted. Brother Moran formerly held the office of teacher.

Pastor C. A. Selbe is still confined to his bed. The prayers of the Saints are asked in his behalf. Sister Hattie Crosby who has been very ill, is slightly improved.

Chelsea Church

A pretty church wedding occurred March 28, at eight o'clock in the evening, when Mabel Nettie Snell, daughter of Brother and Sister William W. Snell, was united in marriage to James H. McHarness, Elder Joseph A. Harrington, pastor, officiating. The rostrum was banked with ferns and palms and floral decorations were Easter lilies and begonias. Brother Frederick Brose played two violin solos, "To a Wild Rose" and "Salut d'Amour," and Ramon Bleil sang "O Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly." Sister Mildred Brose was accompanist and played Lohengrin's "Wedding March." The bride was given in marriage by her father. The ring-bearer was Master Lester Allen Fowler and Freda Furness was flower girl. Bridesmaids were Jessie Belle Taylor and Marjorie Tousley, and groomsmen were Frederick Snell and Earl Snell, brothers of the bride. A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony.

A reception was held at the home of the bridal pair. Mr. and Mrs. McHarness are at home at 1932 Franklin Street, Kansas City, Kansas.

MISCELLANEOUS

Our Departed Ones

SMITH.—Myrtle M. Teeters, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson J. Teeters, was born in Clear Lake Township, Steuben County, Indiana, March 13, 1884, and lived her entire life in this community. Her father and mother preceded her in death, the former sixteen years, the latter six years. Born and reared on a farm, Myrtle enjoyed the privileges of the rural schools. Twenty-six years ago she was married to Clyde Smith, a prosperous farmer of the township, and to them were born eight children. All were present at their mother's funeral services. With others Myrtle Teeters was baptized into the church in October, 1902, by Bishop E. L. Kelley. She remained faithful to the gospel till the call came to lay down the armor, March 5, 1932. Her last illness was of short duration. She leaves in mourning her husband, her children: Murle, Martelle, Claude, Madelyne, Harold, Vera, Don, and Deane, her sister, Mabel, and many other relatives and friends. All hold her memory dear. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church at Clear Lake, Monday, March 7, 1932. Elder S. W. L. Scott paid tribute to her hope and character. The very large attendance and beautiful floral offerings attested to the appreciation of a community mourning the departure of one worthy all respect. The committal services were conducted in the Teeters Cemetery.

LIGHTOWLER.—Martha Lightowler was born May 19, 1839, at Thornhill, Yorkshire, England. She became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints February 26, 1869, at Nortonville, California, being baptized by J. W. Gillen. Departed this life at Fresno, California, February 10, 1932. A great number of friends and relatives survive this veteran of the faith.

CARLILE.—Joshua Carlile was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 11, 1853. He spent his entire life in Pottawattamie County, living at or near Underwood about fifty-five years. He was married to Josephine Brown by Robert M. Elvin in Council Bluffs March 18, 1882. To them was born one son, Earl H. Carlile, of Council Bluffs. Mr. Carlile was baptized into the church by Robert M. Elvin May 18, 1879, at Eight Mile Grove in Pottawattamie County. He was ordained an elder April 24, 1887, by Hans N. Hansen, J. P. Carlile, and B. Harding, entering at once and with commendable zeal into the duties of this office. He gave of his time, means and talent in a way to approve himself to God and the people. August 29, 1904, he was ordained a high priest and evangelical minister and patriarch at Crescent, Iowa, by Frederick A. Smith and Martin M. Turpen. In this office also he served faithfully, impartially imparting encouragement and counsel, and in this work he won the love and high esteem of the church membership. He passed away February 24, 1932, after a brief illness, at his home in Underwood, Iowa. Of his immediate family he leaves his wife, son, and one grandchild. The funeral was held from Underwood Church by John A. Hansen, assisted by Elder Ray Whiting, Friday, February 26. Interment was in Underwood.

CHAPMAN.—George G. Chapman was born in Lincolnshire County, Durham, England, May 19, 1851. He came to the United States with his parents when he was fourteen years old, going to Kansas in 1872; in 1880, he moved to Scranton, where he made his home. July 5, 1875, he married Jane Pogson who survives him with five daughters: Mrs. A. E. Metzler, of Riverton, Wyoming; Mrs. T. M. Bryden, Pratt, Kansas; Mrs. J. E. Kerr, Lincoln, Arkansas; Mrs. J. O. Kerr, Larned, Kansas, and Mrs. C. W. Gardner, Topeka; ten grandchildren; one great-grandchild; two brothers, John Chapman, Rockvale, Colorado, and William Chapman, of Higbee, Missouri, and other relatives. He joined the Latter Day Saint Church in 1862, and was a faithful believer. He was a charter member of both the Masonic and Odd Fellows order of Scranton, also a member of the Security Benefit Association. The services were held at Scranton Methodist Episcopal Church. Elder James A. Thomas, of Fanning, Kansas, preached the funeral sermon.

FARRELL.—Sarah Elizabeth Farrell was born September 1, 1850, in Davis County, Indiana, and died March 9, 1932, at her home in Allendale, Missouri. When a child she came to Missouri with her parents. She married Robert Charles Farrell in May, 1870. To this union six children were born: Ida Florence Vinnerd, Shenandoah, Iowa; Edward Morton, Denver, Missouri; Effie Isabelle, who died in

Marshall Branch

Everyone seemed to share the joyous Easter spirit. For several Sunday mornings Brother Harold Thayer had been leading up to the subject, "The Resurrection." On Easter morning he gave a realistic and appealing discourse, following the little company of disciples out to Bethany where the Lord left them, ascending into heaven.

Sister Ethel B. Schwab, of Independence, has worshiped with us while on business in Marshall. She gave an encouraging talk in Sunday school one Sunday, and assisted Sister Dixie Spohrer in the junior church last Sunday.

A contest is encouraging better attendance. The young people are enthusiastically supporting the movement.

infancy; Sarah Ella Wacholtz, Grand Rapids, Michigan, who was unable to be present at the funeral; Robert Marion, Grant City, Missouri, and Pearley Mabel Murray, Allendale, Missouri. Her husband served in the Civil War and received an honorable discharge. He preceded his wife in death in May, 1919. Mrs. Farrell was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints February 22, 1888, by Elder H. A. Stebbins, and continued faithful till her death. Her life was one of sacrifice to God, home, neighbors and friends. She died with the hope of a glorious resurrection. Besides her children she leaves ten grandchildren, one great-grandson, other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was held at the home March 11, 1932, with Elder Joseph Lane, Lamoni, Iowa, in charge, and sermon by Elder M. Traxler, of Lamoni.

KENTY.—Kathryn Louise Kenty was born in Independence, Missouri, October 15, 1922, and was a brilliant and good-hearted girl. She passed away at the Independence Sanitarium March 7, 1932. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on Children's Day, 1931. She appeared to anticipate her departure for she became deeply interested in the hymn, "Beautiful Home." This was sung at the funeral service at Stahl's Funeral Home. Elder G. E. Harrington delivered the sermon. Left to mourn are her father and mother, her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Harrington, and a number of other close relatives and friends.

WALLIS.—Talitha C. Hodges was born October 17, 1842, at Bloomfield, Missouri. Married William G. Wallis December 31, 1871, who preceded her in death twenty-four years. They were both faithful members of the church. She was baptized by J. A. Currie September 25, 1888. Died February 29, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lee Applewhite, near Hindes, Texas. Surviving are one daughter, four grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, and other relatives. Interment was in the city cemetery of Pearsall, Texas. The funeral was in charge of W. H. Manning.

STADLANDER.—Huldah Steinhauer was born August 19, 1891, at Ionia Michigan. She moved to Burlington, Iowa, at the age of sixteen, and on March 29, 1910, was united in marriage to William J. Stadlander. Five children blessed their union: Alberta, Lucille, Dorothy, Herbert, and Louis. Sister Stadlander united with the church February 10, 1916, and remained a faithful member till her passing, March 10, 1932. She had been ill for several months, but had borne her affliction with patience and Christian fortitude, and during her later illness received remarkable blessing by administration. The funeral services were held from the family residence on Sunday afternoon, March 13, when a large concourse of people gathered to pay respects to her memory. Elder F. T. Mussell, her pastor, conducted the services with a Scripture lesson from Proverbs 31: 10-31, his text being from Hebrews 9: 27. There are left to mourn, her husband, five children, her aged father, one sister, and two brothers. Sister Huldah was known for her willing spirit to help those who were in need.

BLANCHARD.—Harriet Charlotte Blanchard was born in London, England, March 3, 1858. She was married to Thomas Blanchard in London, October 16, 1880, and was the mother of six children: William, Frank, Bertha, and Aubrey. Two children preceded her in death. She was baptized February 12, 1911, by Elder William I. Fligg. Her husband died as the result of a street car accident three years ago. Her funeral services were in charge of William I. Fligg, March 18. A good mother, neighbor and Saint has gone on.

GOULD.—Clayton G. Gould was born April 14, 1850, in Washington County, Wisconsin. He died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mansel Williams, in Independence, Missouri, March 17, 1932. He was married to Ellen Delia Gould September 10, 1872. To this union were born six children. His wife and three children preceded him in death. He was baptized July 21, 1876, by Apostle Thomas W. Smith. Was first ordained a teacher and then a priest. On June 9, 1877, he was ordained an elder and April 24, 1901, he was ordained to the office of high priest. He was a faithful member of the church as long as he lived. He retired to his bed as usual on the evening before his death, and as he slept, the Angel of Death called him away, to join the many loved ones on the other side. He is survived by three children: Mrs. Mansel Williams, George A. Gould and Herbert A. Gould, all of Independence; also thirteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. Besides his immediate family, he is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Roseltha Abbertson, of Battle Lake, Minnesota, and Mrs. Eleanor Whiting, of Independence, Missouri, and one brother, W. W. Gould, of Independence. The funeral was held from the Stone Church March 20, 1932. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, and Apostle J. A. Gillen preached the sermon. Interment was beside his wife in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Great Activity During First Days of Gathering

Getting Organized

The seventy-fifth general conference began with a number of people not counted by the clerks at the registration desk, but the officials of the church were pleased to note that more people were in attendance than had been expected. Looking into the vast empty spaces in and about the Auditorium one feels that there are not enough people in the whole church to fill it, and yet when the time for conference comes it is somehow filled, and well filled. Class work started off with enthusiastic and attentive listeners. Doctrine and Covenants, church court procedure, the work of the church school and the interests of the young people along with a number of other things claimed the interest of the people. At the same time the two morning devotional services and a preaching service at the Stone Church drew large numbers. This program of study, devotion, and preaching services along with conferences and discussions, were repeated each day during the remainder of the week. Private meetings of various quorums of the church were also carried on daily.
