Tuesday evening, May 31, the Saints gathered at the church, expecting to greet Brother E. J. Gleazer and to be addressed by him. A reception had been planned, to be held at the close of the service. All were much disappointed that Brother Gleazer was unable to be here because of unavoidable delay in completing his arrangements for his journey to Australia. An impromptu program was arranged, the principal feature of which was the showing of moving pictures of Colorado National Parks, by E. W. Fishburn. Solos were rendered by Alice Milligan and Mildred Sheehy. The meeting was in charge of Elder Clarence L. Bruno, director of Religious Education.

The young people held their regular monthly prayer service at 8.15 a. m., June 5. Sacrament service was held at ten forty-five, and was almost entirely a period of prayer for the sick and for the welfare of the church. In the evening the members of the dramatic club presented the play, "A Sign Unto You." This play teaches in an impressive manner the meaning of the words of the Savior, when he said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The play was directed by Sister Bertha Black, and the following were in the cast: Fred Kemp, Goldie Bell, Mildred Cowan, Margaret Chatburn, Howard Sheehy, Vernon Young, and Dorothy Jones. A quartet, consisting of Glaude Smith, Fred Kemp, Farr Kemp, and Burrell Shupe, sang, "Take Time to Be Holy," accompanied by Mrs. Ethel Kemp. Sunday evening, June 19, the club went to Fort Collins and presented the play at the Saints' church to a large and appreciative audience. July 10, they gave it at Colorado Springs, and were greeted there also by a well-filled house.

On this day a son was born to Brother and Sister Burrell Shupe. This child is unusually well supplied with grandparents, having for his great-grandparents Brother and Sister E. F. Shupe, Sister Josephine Hammond and Mrs. D. F. Fortney, and for grandparents Brother and Sister Leo Shupe and Brother and Sister Louis Coven.

The regular semi-annual business meeting of the branch was held Monday evening, June 6. The following officers were reelected: Glaude A. Smith, pastor; E. J. Williams and G. F. Walling, counselors; C. L. Bruno, director of Religious Education; Ethel Radcliffe, supervisor of the adult group; Glen Holmes, supervisor of the young people's group; Louisa Fishburn, supervisor of the children's group; Bertha R. Black, secretary; L. R. Holmes, treasurer-custodian; A. E. Norris, librarian; Farr Kemp, chorister; Inez Schrunk, organist; Ralph Radcliffe, publicity agent; E. F. Shupe, historian; Nellie M. Williams, correspondent; Farr Kemp, church school secretary.

Sister Louisa Fishburn, who was severely burned in a fire which broke out in her home June 4, is slowly recovering from her harrowing experience, and is now able to attend church. She had a narrow escape, as she was alone at the time and was overcome by the smoke. She was rescued by a neighbor.

Brother and Sister Burke E. Nolan are the happy parents of a baby girl, who has been named Sonne Yvonne. Sister Nolan was formerly Bessie Bruch, of Genoa, Colorado.

June 12 was observed as Children's Day, always a happy time for the children and their proud parents. At the eleven o'clock service the little ones in the primary and junior departments, assisted by Elaine Salyards, Amneh Robertson, Dorothy Wildermuth. Hazel Shepherd, Glen Bruno, George Darnell, and Mildred Sheehy, presented a pageant, "The Lost Words." A quartet composed of Alice Milligan, Farr Kemp, Lefa Kemp and Fred Kemp, and accompanied by Mrs. Ethel Kemp, assisted in the program. At the close of the service, Elder Clarence Bruno performed the rite of baptism for his little daughter, Alta Marie, and for Edwin Robert Fishburn.

Local members were pleased to have here on June 26, the missionary in charge, Apostle Roy S. Budd, who spoke morning and evening.

Sacrament service July 3, was well attended and a good meeting was had, the pastor in charge. Elder E. P. Darnell gave the preparatory address.

The speaker for the morning hour on July 10, was the pastor, his subject being "Human-Divine Relationships." At this service the little son of Burrell and Doris Shupe was blessed by Glaude Smith and E. J. Williams and given the name, David Burrell. The congregation had the pleasure of hearing a beautiful solo, "I'm Sure I Shall Not Pass This Way Again," sung by Russell Richards, with his sister, Elverda Richards, at the piano. These young people have been blind since birth, and despite this handicap, have made great progress in music. They are the children of Mrs. Henry Ralston, of Denver. E. J. Williams was the speaker in the evening on the subject, "Jesus and the Kingdom."

Brother Smith left in the afternoon to visit the branches in the southern part of the district. July 5, he was called to Pueblo to preach the funeral sermon of Brother J. O. Davis, who died July 2. The next day he drove to the northern part of the district, visiting Cheyenne and Albin, Wyoming. He reports very good services, the Saints being much encouraged and eager to do all they can to assist in the work of the Master.

Denver Saints have enjoyed renewing acquaintance with Mrs. M. T. Short, of Independence, who spent a few weeks in this city and worshiped with the local congregation several times.

Mrs. John F. Sheehy, of Independence, is in the city, visiting her son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Sheehy, and making the acquaintance of her little granddaughter, Ilene.

Coldwater, Michigan

During the six weeks between May 22, and July 3, eleven people were baptized and their names added to the records of the branch, S. W. L. Scott officiating. Two others from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, were baptized in the church font by Elder Starr Corless.

This period opened May 22, with the baptism of Irena, Iona, and Phyllis Howe. On Children's Day, four children from the class taught by Sister Ethel Gallagher, were baptized with appropriate ceremony. And July 3, witnessed the baptism of four more, Brother and Sister Schuette and two sons, Alverto and Donald. This family had eagerly attended the evening lectures given on the "Record of Joseph," under the auspices of the school of expression. They had also been attendants at church school and pulpit services.

The Dexter family, members and nonmembers, celebrated July 4, with a family reunion, Brother and Sister H. J. Corless, the seniors, in their midst. There were forty-six present from Ashland, Toledo, Port Huron, Jackson, and Whiting, and the celebration occurred at the home of Brother and Sister J. E. Dexter. A program followed the dinner.

The school of expression, and church school joined the women's department, being represented by their leaders in charge, in a social gathering not long ago at the home of Brother S. W. L. Scott. A large company of Saints met, welcoming new members and passing the evening with music, questionnaires on the symbolical significance of flowers and a list of questions which involved the settings and personnel of events described in the Bible. Some of the oldest members of the branch were present. Even Brother and Sister H. J. Corless and Sister Stroh, who are advanced in age, and very faithful in walking to church to attend services, were present at this function. About twenty-five were served refreshments.

A "Beautiful Zion" program is rapidly taking form in this branch. It will be presented soon by the Saints. Officers wish the big part of the group to participate. A splendid faith abides in the church here and bodes much good if humility continues among the members.

Toronto Young People Hold Convention

The young people of Toronto, District held their annual convention June 10, 11, and 12, and although many from the outside were not present, the officers were gratified by a large attendance of local young people.

Friday evening was devoted to class work followed by a musical program.

Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke Saturday afternoon on "Patriarchal Blessing," this address being very enlightening and causing many to desire their blessing.

That evening the young people attempted something new in entertainment. For three months previous to the convention, fifty young men and women had given most of their leisure time to the preparation of a dramatized cantata, "David, the Shepherd Boy." Participants were costumed as were people in Biblical times, and the presentation of the play was made more realistic by a native street scene, and scenes from King Saul's Palace, Mount Carmel and forest. These were designed and painted by William Fauls of Toronto. Lighting effects were borrowed from theatrical equipment, and it was said that they surpassed any previously used in amateur dramatics. For this cantata the Saints are indebted to the faithful efforts of Samuel Crump, director, assisted by S. G. Clark and Mrs. Charles Marshall. The play throughout was accompanied by Samuel Crump at the organ, and William Clifton at the piano. The director is a member of the young people's group. The cast has been asked to present this play again during district conference to be held in Toronto in October.

The Sunday services commenced at nine thirty with prayer meeting. It was pleasing to see the young brothers and sisters take part. The spiritual growth of the young since last convention is quite apparent, six of the boys having been called to the priesthood during sacrament service June 5. Elder Grant St. John spoke at eleven o'clock. Talks from four of the young men interspersed with musical selections composed the afternoon program. In the evening the young people were again honored by having as speaker Patriarch F. A. Smith. Sister Florence Osborne, of Hamilton Branch, gave a vocal number.

The women's department served dinner and supper at the church, making it possible for the people to attend all meetings with ease.

Everyone found encouragement in the success of the convention and is looking forward to planning an interesting program for 1933.

Bremerton, Washington

Members and friends of this little branch are trying to keep the work of latter days going in this part of the world.

From Sunday, May 29, to Sunday, June 5, Elder A. C. Martin, district missionary, was here. During the sacrament service the Lord spoke to the Saints through Brother Martin, giving counsel and consolation.

June 19, Brother Monte E. Lasater, district president, made this branch a visit, and June 22 and 23, Apostle J. A. Gillen was here. He preached splendid sermons each evening. The sermons of each of these brothers did much to encourage and help the members.

The Harmony Club has been meeting only once a month during the summer, at the home of Sister Lena Loveless at Kitsap Lake. The members take their children and a picnic lunch, and the meetings are mostly social. But the president has a full program outlined for the fall and winter.

Quite a number of Bremerton people are planning to attend reunion. Those who go always come home with new vision and a greater determination to go forward.

Local members have been greatly blessed. All the men are working and only just recently have they had a wage cut. The prayers of the Saints of Bremerton go out for those who are in need of both temporal and spiritual blessings.

Holden Stake

Lees Summit

Lees Summit Branch has encountered difficulties which no doubt have retarded its progress, but the members there are hopeful. Perhaps their attitude toward their branch as well as the entire church be expressed by those words from Holmes: "The great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving." They hope they are moving in harmony with the church to the greater unity, higher spiritual level, and effective service essential for the accomplishment of worthy and gigantic tasks.

They have had the pleasure of hearing in the past year some wonderful sermons from R. S. Budd, F. Henry Edwards, J. Charles May, J. A. Koehler, Frank McDonald, J. W. Davis, A. C. Barmore, Amos Allen, Arthur Koehler, W. H. Eliason, G. R. Wells, and others. These have encouraged them to carry on, teaching them that that which carries the church toward the ideals of Christ is worth while.

The young people have organized and are functioning through monthly prayer meetings, musical and social activities, plays, and other services. The Gleaners Study Class of women are earnestly interested in their study of the church history. They have not tried to make any money the last year, but have devoted their time to adding to their knowledge of the church and of the Saints who so nobly took the message of the gospel to the world in early days.

At their all-day meetings the first Thursday in the month, a program and a social good time are had, also a short study period. Other Thursday afternoons are spent in study. Their offerings are used for sacrifice and to help the branch.

The former officers were reelected, with only the change of Brother Charles Mengal as superintendent of young people division; Fern Banker, secretary of church school; Floyd Mengal publicity agent, and Brother Christie Kearns as bishop's agent.

Programs have been given on Christmas, Easter, and Mother's Day. June 19 was observed as annual home-coming and Children's Day. In spite of rain and threatening weather, Children's Day and home-coming was a pleasant success. The one hundred and fifty present were about one-half the expected number, but there was a large number of guests considering the weather.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards, of Independence, and officers of Holden Stake, W. S. Macrae, of the presidency; Bishop J. A. Koehler and C. F. Scarcliff, of the Bishopric; J. D. Gault, a former pastor, wife and daughter, and Brother and Sister C. A. Silsby, of Holden, were among the guests. In the morning the children presented a program of recitations, dialogs and songs. The short talk by Brother Scarcliff, to the children, was enjoyed by all. One pleasing feature in the program was the song, "Jesus Calls Us," sung by Alvin Mengal, and pantomime by Sister Hazel Brace; another at the closing of the program was the blessing of Hilda Marie, daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Mengal, by F. Henry Edwards and Ernest Brace.

Judging the many comments on the decorations, they seemed well worth the effort. Over the steps leading to the pulpit were arches of fern and roses, with a banner of welcome on one. The choir loft and pipe organ were banked with large lace ferns in bloom and flowers in baskets, set so as to resemble beds of blossoms in a garden. The front railing was covered with vines and roses, completing the representation of a garden with a fence around it.

At 2.30 p. m. Apostle Edwards delivered an inspiring sermon. He reminded the congregation that they must pay the penalty for their sins regardless of what excuse they have for them. He admonished the members to put first things first and give matters of secondary importance their rightful place and attention. The talk he gave the adult class was much appreciated.

Grandview

June 12 was decision day at Grandview. The theme of the church school and eleven o'clock hour was the lesson learned from Peter at the Temple gate: "Such As I Have, I Give." The numbers rendered both in readings and song gave the people a desire to strive for another year to stand on higher ground.

June 20 this group was visited by fifty-one young people with their supervisor, Brother D. R. Snively and wife, of Atherton. They motored to the home of Brother and Sister Lloyd L. Bogue, at Raymore, Saturday, where a picnic supper was spread on the lawn. The Grandview Saints motored out to spend the evening with them. A playlet entitled, "Thank Goodness the Table Is Spread," was given by the Atherton young people after which all made merry at games until time to say goodnight. Grandview Saints returned to their home. Goodnights were said and the boys with Brothers Bogue and Snively had a sleeping-out party while the girls with Sisters Bogue, Snively, and Haws took possession of the house.

Sunday morning all were assembled in the church at Grandview for the young people's prayer service. A goodly number of adults were present also. Brother Bogue had charge of the meeting assisted by Brother E. Martin.

The eleven o'clock hour was given to the young people. Brethren Richard Graton and Wendel Vantile were the speakers. In these two young men is material which will be useful in the church of tomorrow. Others numbers, both readings and musical, were very good.

The Athertonians motored back to the Bogue home where dinner was served on the lawn and a quiet afternoon spent visiting with Brother and Sister Bogue and family. Brother Bogue was leader of young people's prayer service for seven years and Sister Bogue Temple Builder leader for several years.

Sacrament service was a quiet hour, but a good meeting enjoyed.

Sister Morse has been ill for some time, and the prayers of Saints are asked in her behalf.

Brother and Sister Bernns, who have moved back to the Grandview group, were made welcome.

On July 24 these members have home-coming day and will welcome back all members and friends. A basket dinner will be enjoyed in the basement.

Independence

It was thought that the Campus crowd Sunday evening numbered several thousand. Men, women, and children from every congregation of the church in and near Independence composed the audience and listened attentively to the sermon which Apostle F. Henry Edwards based on the theme of the hymn, "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly." Immediately preceding the sermon a quartet sang this hymn.

The Auditorium Band added to the attractiveness of the half hour of music before the sermon, playing several selections, and J. Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, sang "Fear Ye Not, O Israel." Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the congregational music, and Elder Frank McDonald introduced the speaker.

The young people of Independence congregations, under the sponsorship of the young people's council, are scheduled to conduct some very interesting Sunday evening trips to neighboring branches during the rest of the summer. They will begin next Sunday night. Each visiting group will furnish a short program and the speaker for the evening.

Stone Church

The present crisis of the world was not unexpected. We had been warned by natural conditions in the world and by the prophecies of the scriptures. So declared Elder Leonard Lea in his sermon to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning, "The World at the Crossroads," and devoted his time to a clear delineation of the three aspects of the crisis—economic, political, and moral. In each of these fields Jesus had something to say, and until the world is ready to listen to him and obey his will, we shall find no solution to our problem.

Music for the service was by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig and accompanied at the organ by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee. The anthem, "Sing to the Lord," was a pleasing number, and Mrs. Nina G. Smith and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess sang a duet, "I Waited for the Lord," by Mendelssohn, with chorus by the choir. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder H. G. Barto.

A pretty lawn wedding took place Saturday night, July 9, when Miss Birdie Magargee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Magargee, of Independence, and Myron Kelley, son of Elder and Mrs. W. A. Kelley, also of Independence, were married. The ceremony was said by Elder Kelley, father of the bridegroom, assisted by Elder T. C. Kelley. Before the ceremony Mrs. John Isaacks sang, "Because," and "For You Alone," accompanied by Miss Gladys Givens, who also played the wedding march. Miss Nina Morgan, was bridesmaid, and Charles Magargee, brother of the bride, attended Mr. Kelley. Yvonne Hattey carried the ring. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley will live in Independence.

This congregation mourns the passing of one who during her life worked faithfully and well, Sister Myrtle Viola Winegar. She passed away at the Sanitarium July 15, leaving her aged mother, Mrs. James J. Winegar, six brothers, two sisters, and many friends. The funeral was held from the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, Elder John F. Sheehy in charge, and Elder U. W. Greene preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove. Sister Winegar was forty-nine years old. She was born at Wheeler Grove, Iowa, and was baptized into the church in 1899.

Englewood Church

In spite of warm weather, attendance and interest are good in this congregation. The church school is outgrowing its quarters, but officers and classes are making the best of the room available.

Pastor Perry Hiles held his third review on church organization Sunday morning, July 10. As a result of this series the children of the branch took considerable interest in the general officers and their families who were guests at the branch picnic at the Campus Tuesday evening, July 12, and who also had charge of the prayer meeting on the following night. The children remember with happiness their experience of one year ago on the same occasion when each one had the opportunity of personally meeting and shaking hands with the following officers and their families, President Elbert A. Smith, President F. M. McDowell, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, Elder C. B. Woodstock, and Elder John F. Sheehy. Local officers are happy to have the opportunity to bring the children so closely in touch with the leaders of the church.

Elder Hyrum O. Smith was the morning speaker July 10, and his text was taken from Philippians 2:12. He stressed the fact that the truest philanthropy helps a man to help himself, and that the best way to preach the gospel is to live it. The choir sang, "In Heavenly Love Abiding."

This congregation welcomes Sister Robert Vance and her niece, Sister Tressa Weeks. They enrolled with the choir at their first appearance at Englewood and signed up for the Harvest Home Chorus.

Sister Charles C. Koehler met with Englewood women on a recent Wednesday to outline the work expected of the women of Independence. Of course it was expected that the wife of the originator of the Harvest Home Festival movement, would give attention to that project for the fall. She said: "We expect a bigger and better festival this year than ever. There will be greater need for it. But we are going to try to eliminate every unnecessary item of expense, and are doing some strenuous planning to that end." Since this is Washington Bicentennial year, decorations at the festival will probably commemorate that event.

Sister Koehler also urged the women to organize study clubs along lines useful in their homes and with their families. She advocated family worship and talked of budgeting not only finances, but also the time of the family.

The July sacrament service was well attended. Elder Earl Moore made the remarks concerning the oblation, and Elder S. S. Smith talked preceding the sharing of the emblems. Pastor Hiles was in charge.

The dramatic class, taught and directed by Mrs. JoZelma Taylor, is taking a summer vacation. It will meet again in the fall.

Special program numbers of music and readings have of late added to the services.

Elder A. G. Hougas was the morning speaker July 17.

Spring Branch Church

The Wednesday night prayer meeting July 13, was a splendid service in charge of Brothers Jake Andes and C. D. Brewer. On Sunday morning Brother Arthur Peer was assisted by Brother Omer Sedoris. A good number were present to enjoy this inspirational hour. Brother A. L. Murdock, who is in the Sanitarium, was remembered in prayer.

Elder B. J. Scott, the morning speaker, used as the basis of his sermon, Doctrine and Covenants 59:2, and delivered an instructive discourse to the congregation. At the opening of this service the anthem, "Rejoice, Jerusalem, and Sing," was sung by the choir, David Stewart, soloist. "Hark, Hark, My Soul," was sung by Sisters Beulah Stewart Donkawich and Elizabeth Hinderks.

July 15, Brother Benjamin Jennings took his Sunday school class of nine junior boys for a picnic to the East Fork between Blue Springs and Lees Summit. The boys enjoyed fishing, swimming, and a quantity of ice cream.

Local members are happy that many who have been sick are recovered and back at services.

The Lord is blessing this branch with his Spirit. Large attendance and exceptionally good meetings are enjoyed.

East Independence Church

Services of the past few weeks have been outstanding because of the high spiritual standard set. Sacrament Sunday of this month was begun with an active session of the church school, class work merging with the communion hour, there being hardly a vacant seat in the house. Elder R. L. Fulk was here and with the pastor, blessed the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Earl Minton, Maxine Marie. Brother Fulk was asked on this occasion to give the charge, and he counseled the Saints to be steadfast and loyal, and urged them to meet the standard set in the Restoration, and with all their determination to help the church.

Pastor Frank Minton occupied the pulpit not long ago, using the story of Queen Esther to stir up the minds of the Saints to remembrance of the possibilities of their lives being filled with the power of God and with righteousness and purity.

Brother Howard Cook, a young priest of the Stone Church congregation, preached recently, and the urge and hope he held out in presenting the plain and precious things of the gospel, were commendable. This was his first effort to preach the gospel, and the Saints at East Independence pray that the Lord will call many more such young men into his service.

Mrs. Ida Green, of this community, was led into the waters of baptism by the pastor. Local members are happy to receive her as a sister. Her husband has long been a member.

The prayer meetings are unusually well attended, and the spirit of earnestness and a desire to live and act righteously are evident on the part of young and old. The young people are more active and conscious as never before of their responsibilities.

Brother A. H. Christensen brought a message concerning the economic conditions of the world and their bearing on the church. He stressed the fact that through the "way of the Lord" the Saints must free the church from bondage.

Kansas City Stake

Bennington Heights Church

The series of meetings conducted by missionary J. Charles May has been well attended by the membership and their interested friends, in spite of the warm weather. Because of the interest displayed, the meetings will continue into next week.

Brother Roy Curtis, Sister Curtis, and their daughter, Beverly, of 2042 Lawn Avenue, were severely injured by an explosion during the fireworks exhibition at Swope Park July 4. They are reported to be improving rapidly following administration by the elders.

Brother George Garrett and family have moved to Oklahoma for the summer, with the possibility of remaining there. Bennington Saints regret the loss of this family.

The report of the receipts of sacrifice week in this group is very encouraging. In many ways have the Saints sacrificed to aid the church. Little children turned in small savings, foregoing their usual purchases of candy, ice cream cones, etc.

Attendance at midweek prayer meetings have been exceptionally large with many of the young people present and taking part, expressing the desire to help in the upbuilding of the kingdom. This is very encouraging to the group as a whole.

The members of the priesthood are working in their several offices; and despite the discouraging times, the Saints rejoice in the opportunities the gospel presents.

Argentine Church

The evening speaker, Sunday, July 10, was Bishop F. B. Blair.

Calumet, Oklahoma

For several years it has been the custom of local Saints to have a celebration for the community on July 4. Always they have been successful in these affairs, and this year was no exception to the rule. Considering the busy season, the crowd was comparatively good throughout the afternoon, and races and contests held everybody's interest and enthusiasm. A good three-act play was given in the evening, the cast being selected from the local young people. The Saints had the largest audience they have ever experienced at Calumet. It was estimated that eight hundred or more were present.

Two stands were operated throughout the day, one by the young people, the other by the adults. Proceeds from the latter will be used for church expenses, and those from the former will be used to aid the young people in carrying out plans made for the district reunion, to be held at Eagle City. This reunion the young people of Calumet hope to attend collectively.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Even though the Saints of this branch are facing the depression with many handicaps, they are endeavoring to go forward with faith to the accomplishment of greater tasks. Attendance at all regular services is fair.

With true devotion and sacrifice the branch responded to the call of the church during Sacrifice Week. The total sum collected far exceeded the expectation of everyone and over the results they have much cause to rejoice.

The blissful peace of God's Spirit prevailed over the sacrament meeting July 3. The presence of his Spirit did much to encourage the Saints. Prayers were offered in behalf of the general church and for the series of meetings which convened July 17. Preceding the opening of these meetings the Saints were busy advertising and preparing means by which the effort might supply the needs of the community. Preparations were for the greatest gospel campaign ever made at this place. Visitors are coming from over the district and the plains of Texas. Apostle Roy S. Budd has promised to be the speaker during the latter part of the series. Until he arrives Brothers Howard Harpham and Z. Z. Renfroe are occupying the pulpit. Brother Carlyle Kueffer, of Oklahoma City, is helping again this year by directing the singing. Brothers Kueffer and Harpham helped at Davidson last year and are helping again this year at the request of the Saints as well as of many nonmembers.

The children, under the direction of Sister Homer Qualls, furnished the program June 12.

Davidson's pastor had the pleasure of delivering the baccalaureate sermon for Victory High School May 8, and on May 29 that of the local high school.

Mother's Day was observed with an appropriate program at the eleven o'clock hour. Elder Z. Z. Renfroe preached the sermon.

Brother W. A. Wilson has recently moved to San Diego, California, and is living at 426 Milbroe, a street two blocks long between Thirty-seventh and Thirty-eighth just north of Ocean Boulevard. Since Brother Wilson is unable to walk, he would be especially pleased to have Saints living in the city, call on him.

Gospel Hall, James Street

The services June 26, were in the form of school anniversary celebrations. An edifying service opened at ten thirty in the morning in which T. A. Brian addressed the Saints on, "The Call to the Young," and Cyril Chorlton talked on "Secular Things and Sacred Things." A goodly number composed the congregation which heard, besides these talks, the prayer by Pastor G. W. Leggott, the lesson, Psalm 1, read by Walter Baguley, and a solo by Miss May Holden.

The afternoon session of the celebration was in charge of H. Barrington, the church school director, and the gathering was mainly composed of young people who excelled in their efforts. The invocation was by the pastor, and following the opening hymn, Miss May Burn read the lesson. "Consecration," and "I Would Be True," were solos by Miss Edith Noble and Miss Florence Hayward. Then Miss Ada Bailey gave a pleasing reading from the beatitudes, followed by remarks by the church school director on the ability of his assistants, and a review of her work as teacher of the primary class by Miss Florence Hall.

The six thirty evening hour opened in charge of Elder Tapping with the singing of the hymn, "Father, Thy Paternal Care." Priest G. Wilson pronounced the invocation which was followed by the Lord's Prayer. The scripture reading, Doctrine and Covenants 1 and 4, was given by Teacher W. Baguley. Then the choir sang, "Come With Happy Faces to the House of Prayer," and Miss May Holden sang, "A Clear Heart." "Personal Consecration," was the theme of Pastor G. W. Leggott's sermon, his text being from Proverbs 22: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

Brother Leggott stressed the necessity of child training and reviewed the conditions under which the Sunday school was inaugurated.

Altogether the members were privileged to enjoy a helpful Sunday in the master's service. Miss Edith Noble sang, "Take My Life and Let It Be," and the congregation joined in "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet."

On Children's Day seven were baptized by Pastor Frank Enix and Elder Roberts, William Kraschel, Audrey Partin, Virginia Partin, Francis Partin, Louis Roberts, jr., Donald Richardson, and Frederick Richardson. The confirmation preceded the evening preaching service, the pastor being assisted by Elders L. W. Roberts, A. S. Votaw and Ethan Godfrey.

June 24, the Women's Club held its monthly social. The proceeds for the month of June were given to the Sacrifice Fund.

Brother Levitt, district president, gave a very interesting sermon on the evening of June 26.

The young people have held two early morning prayer meetings, and expect to hold one each month.

Sister Edna Burdick and sons, LeRoy and Albert, of Sacramento, were visitors at the home of her parents, Brother and Sister Votaw, during the latter part of June. Elder Burdick preached on the evening of July 3.

Sister Blanche Fugate and John Wurtele, of Earlimart, were married May 3.

Fresno Saints are looking forward to the visit of Apostle G. G. Lewis July 24.

Conference Minutes

SPRING RIVER.—The spirit of the late General Conference carried over into Spring River district conference, held at Webb City, Missouri, May 20 to 22. Harmony marked the three days of meetings, one of the factors of the harmonious and spiritual services being the excellent leadership had. Apostle J. F. Garver assisted the district president, Elder Amos T. Higdon, in presiding. Elder Birch Whiting, of Rich Hill, Missouri, and president of Clinton District, and Robert Jones, formerly of this district, but at present located in Kansas City, were among the visitors present to lend influence to the conference. The opening meeting of the conference was a program under the supervision of Albert Cobb, district young people's director. The program consisted of three one-act plays given by branches which had previously contested with other branches of the district for the honor of staging their play at the conference. The plays given were, "If Lacking Only Truth," by Pittsburg, Kansas; "Lita's Man," by Parsons, Kansas, and "Good Medicine," by Cardin, Oklahoma. Assisting the players was a ten-piece orchestra from Joplin, Missouri, under the direction of Miss Marguerite Sheppard. Huston Hobart, of Webb City, also sang a vocal solo. Brother Charley Myers, of Arma, and Brother Lee Quick, district missionary, of Mapleton, were in charge of the prayer meeting at 9 a. m. Saturday. It was at this meeting that the Spirit of the Master began to express itself, and at the following meeting the district president seemed to be blessed most wonderfully in delivering the opening address of the conference. District officers elected at the afternoon session were Amos T. Higdon, president; Ronald G. Smith, of Pittsburg, and Andy J. Jones, of Columbus, Kansas, counselors; Mrs. C. E. Wilson, of Joplin, secretary; Mrs. A. N. Deaver, of Webb City, chorister; Mrs. C. H. Hobart, of Webb City, director of women's department; Raymond Troyer, of Joplin, publicity agent, and Mrs. A. M. Hogan, of Carthage, historian. The appointment of Brother Norman Gray, of Parsons, to the office of bishop's agent was approved and the recommendation of Ronald G. Smith as church school director was sustained. Votes of appreciation and thanks were extended to Brother Frank L. Freeman, of Webb City, for his unselfish and worth-while services to the district in the office of counselor and also bishop's agent. Brother Freeman has held these offices for a number of years and has been a valuable asset to the district. Because of his failing health he has been forced to extend his resignation. The climax of Saturday's spiritual meeting came Saturday night with the sermon by Apostle Garver. He chose as his theme, "To This Task Let the Church Devote its Energy." Sunday's meetings began with a young people's prayer meeting in charge of A. J. Jones, Frank Shanks, of Carthage, and Edward Larson, of Independence. The church school at nine thirty was in charge of Jim Jones, of Webb City. Elder I. O. Waldron, of Webb City, gave a talk, "Love for Our Country," which was followed by the lesson study, "The Next Step in Religious Education," in charge of Bob Jones. Neva Trimble, of Webb City, was in charge of the children's department. The subject of Brother Garver's sermon at eleven o'clock was, "Who Will Go for Us?" At the ordination meeting at 2 p. m. Sunday the following brothers were ordained as the Spirit of God was present to direct the words that were spoken; Fred A. Graves, of Joplin, to the office of elder; B. F. Kyser, of Miami, to the office of priest; Walter Sample, of Miami, and Oseer Sooter, of Joplin, to the office of teacher, and Raymond Troyer, of Joplin, to the office of deacon. The right hand of fellowship was extended by the district president to these men following their ordination. Women's department and

"It's Still There"

While I was yet a boy I once heard an old missionary relate the following experience. It seems that a representative of our church, an aged brother, was engaged in a debate with a young and somewhat conceited representative of another denomination. The dispute at this particular point seemed to be concerning the question of the necessity of baptism. The aged brother, as his part of the discussion, was content to refer to the words of the Scripture, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Against this position the young man talked for an hour. When it came his turn again, our brother arose, adjusted his spectacles and looking intently at his open Bible exclaimed, "It's still there."

Once the writer, traveling by train with a friend, crossed the plains of Kansas. During the day we noticed ahead of us near the horizon what seemed at first to be a bit of fleecy, white cloud. Something about its appearance, however, continued to attract our attention until we spoke to the conductor about it and he, to our surprise, informed us that the white cloud was in reality Pike's Peak, a hundred miles away. As we journeyed on an old cow grazing in a meadow completely obscured Pike's Peak. At other times a hay stack or a little hill or a house completely obscured our vision. Each time the peak disappeared. Could it be the conductor was wrong? Was there after all such a peak? But in turn each of the minor obstacles were passed and we were led to exclaim, "It's still there."

It is the characteristic of Christian religion to speak with assurance, to put its trust in abiding things, to frequently exclaim with joy and renewed confidence, "It's still there." The truly religious man crushed by defeat, submerged in material things, blinded by the oppressive nearness of the forces and activities in which he must live, is blessed with a spiritual insight which permits him to keep seeing the invisible. It makes possible his exultant cry, "It's still there."

Hear the declaration of the Psalmist David, "The Lord is my shepherd," or the words of Job as he cried out in his travail, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," or the Apostle Paul, after recounting his shipwrecks and physical sufferings, "I was not disobedient to my heavenly vision," or John M. Terry's dying whisper, "Tell the Saints the gospel is true."

Glancing through my notes the other day I found this quotation from the pen of Joseph Fort Newton, one of the ablest of modern preachers:

We, too, are sailors, afloat but not adrift, upon the waters that flow about the universe, swept by the Winds of the Spirit which blow where they list, but do not run at random. We go trusting, God willing, that good seamanship and a wise Pilot shall win to some undiscovered shore of human good. That though some ancient landmarks fade from view; other and more splendid guiding peaks will rise to sight. Always our quest is for the liberty of faith, the fellowship of the love of Christ, the fraternity of righteousness, the redemption of man from solitariness and selfishness in a Beloved Community—and our voyaging is not in vain.

In these days that try men's souls we must not lose sight of abiding values. If we have played and worked and served as we ought our vision of God's righteousness should now serve us well. We need not be unconcerned about the turmoil of the world today, indifferent to the sufferings of humanity or foolishly optimistic, but we can by the grace of God discern "the things that abide." With clarity of spiritual vision we can see the abiding presence of God's love. With full assurance we can exclaim, "It's still there."

The Priesthood Manual

Over a period of years there has been a growing demand for a practical guide for the use of our ministry. During the months immediately preceding the late General Conference this demand became insistent, so much so that the Joint Council of First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric urged the immediate publication of materials then in preparation. Within twenty-four hours following the adjournment of the conference, steps were taken providing for the editing and publication of The Priesthood Manual.

The Herald from time to time has contained advertisements and official announcements urging the early distribution of the Manual, not only that its practical suggestions might be made available for the priesthood of the church, but that the income from its sale might be used in the preparation and publication of further material, the need for which is everywhere apparent.

The limited sale of the manual to date would seem to indicate that our ministry do not yet know that the manual is available or that they have simply neglected to send in their orders. It would seem to us that the needs of the hour in the church and the action of the late General Conference requiring a higher standard for our ministry would justify the request of the Presidency that each man holding the priesthood secure for himself a copy of the manual. We can not believe that the limited sales to date is the result of indifference on the part of our ministry as to the magnitude of their task and the imperative need of more efficient workmanship.

The manual represents a number of months of work on the part of several of the leading officers of the church. Its contents deal with the everyday practical problems and activities of the ministry. The topical index makes this material immediately available. Its daily use will improve the quality, beauty and effectiveness of the work of the priesthood.

We respectfully urge that men under conference appointment, together with district and branch presidents make it their special task to see to it that at least all of the active men of the local ministry not only secure a personal copy of The Priesthood Manual, but study it diligently and apply its suggestions as they seek to carry on their priestly duties among the Saints.

Defaulting War Debts

Recent developments at Lausanne, in which it appears that European nations are combining to shift a large part of the burden of the war debt to the shoulders of the United States, recall to mind the prophetic editorial written by Apostle John F. Garver in the Ensign of January 14, 1932. We reprint some passages from that editorial:

And mark it well, the nations failing to collect from Germany will put further pressure on the United States of America, to "forget" debts to this country, and no country more than France, which is in better condition to pay than any other. . . . These debts are not going to be paid.

That is being literally fulfilled.

Pressure is now being exerted on our government to cancel the war debts. We ought never to cancel. Let the nations repudiate their debts if they will. Let this repudiation stand on the pages of history as a testimony against war, and against the makers of war.

We hope this country stands pat, till the nations default. This we say not in any spirit of animosity. It is only that it will be well for the world to meet face to face, in all its ugliness, the cost of war in money. And there is no way so effective by which to teach this lesson as for men and nations to find themselves unable to collect. . . .

Let the nations default, then.

Let them default for a clarification of the international atmosphere; and let them default in the interest of world peace. For without any question, when men and nations find they can not collect on loans made to carry on war, they will not be so ready to rush into war as was the case in 1914.

Only the international bankers made the World War possible on the vast scale on which it was conducted. Leading writers have told us that various short and ugly wars have been prevented since 1919 by the fact that the international bankers have regarded war-making nations as poor risks, and consequently wars have been prevented in some cases.

Nobody can win a modern war. Everybody loses tremendously—far more than can possibly be gained. Each party to one of these major contests is able to bring itself so near a state of exhaustion before it quits that nothing is left for the conqueror; and the old adage, "To the victor belongs the spoils," is made untrue because there is no spoil left.

It should be a happy world that sees war and the makers of war in a state of bankruptcy. It should be a saner and wiser world that sees war as an institution utterly without credit in any financial market.

It would be a generous gesture—foolishly generous—for the United States to cancel the debts in order to permit a settlement of the troubles among European nations. There are some moral reasons why it should be done, but there are far greater moral reasons why it should not be done. Let us not be a party to the attempt to wipe the pages of history clean of this foul blot. Let it for ever remain the stain of bad faith. Let the nations repudiate their debts, and charge this repudiation to the arch-criminal of history—War!

Requests for Prayers

Vida Taylor, of Kings Mill, Texas, is isolated and can not reach any of the elders for administration. She has been suffering from deafness and from general poor health, and has not been benefited by the treatment of physicians, although she has spent much money for their services. She asks for the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed, to fulfill her responsibilities better than at present.

S. W. Simmons, of Keltner, Missouri, is suffering from the infirmity of age and general sickness. He specially requests prayers for relief and restoration to health on August 7, which is to be his eightieth birthday, and asks those who pray to fast from the morning meal. It will also be of interest to the Saints to know just how we stand in regard to our budget for the first six months of the year. Our receipts by months are as follows:

January	$ 29,122.26	$ 38,963.46
February	19,183.75	22,656.35
March	20,628.87	25,432.02
April	14,968.55	29,748.81
May	18,125.64	20,059.05
June	47,120.65	67,140.42
	$149,149.72	$204,000.11

Our operating budget requirements for 1932 as pointed out in previous statements amount to $24,000.00 per month or a total of $144,000.00 for the first six months. This gives us an excess of receipts over budget expense requirements of $5,149.72 available for debt reduction. It has been necessary during this period to pay out considerable more than this amount on principal payments necessitating a postponement of the payment of some of our current obligations, the most pressing of which are family allowances.

Distribution of funds already made during the month of July are as follows:

Budget expense items	$ 2,939.43
Interest	23,556.15
Family allowance	11,285.61 of the church he offers this testimony: "I need help that only God can give. I believe God will hear and answer the prayers of this people."

Elders' expenses	641.39
Real estate expense	1,427.06
Accounts and notes payable	2,916.93
	$42,816.57

We again wish to congratulate the Saints for this manifestation of a devotion to the church and for the willing sacrifices made. It has enabled us for the present to meet our most pressing obligations.

We must keep in mind, however, that it has not sufficiently relieved the situation. We, therefore ask for the continued cooperation of the Saints throughout the succeeding months.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By G. L. DELAPP.

The Nauvoo Leadership Camp

An excellent opportunity for young people of the church to meet and get acquainted is offered by the Young People's Division in its supervised summer camp to be held at Nauvoo, August 15 to 26. There will be plenty of good times provided, as campers of other years can testify.

The forenoons will be spent in class work, instruction in how to lead in recreation, music, dramatics, and in training leaders to take the initiative in supervising an interesting and profitable program for young people in the local branches. Special phases of our general church program for the coming year will be discussed by such able leaders as Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Apostle J. F. Garver, and others.

The afternoons will be devoted to recreation, boating, swimming, organized games, and competitive sports. During these activities the campers will have opportunity to put into actual practice the instruction given in the class periods earlier in the day. Everyone is expected to work hard in the morning, play hard in the afternoon, have a good time all day long while he is gaining valuable information about the church, and about its present program for young people.

The evenings will be spent around the campfires or in some specially planned activity. A number of these special events have already been planned including two motor-boat trips on the rivers; two fellowship services in "David's Chamber"; three special lectures by visiting church leaders; and at least one evening of musical and dramatic productions. Ideas for organizing the young people's group in a local branch will be demonstrated on all of these occasions.

Young people between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four are eligible for registration. The registration fee is one dollar and should be sent in with the registration blank properly filled out and signed not later than August 10. The cost of the camp for board and housing will be one dollar per day. The girls will occupy the cool and comfortable rooms in the Nauvoo House overlooking the Mississippi River. The boys will use the four cabins on the river bank just east of the Nauvoo House.

It is suggested that all young people interested in the Nauvoo Camp write to the director, Eugene Closson, Lamoni, Iowa, for registration blanks and full details. Leaders of young people's groups should advertise this in their locals, and wherever possible conduct a party of young people to this general church camp.

Is It Right?

Is it right to build churches to save men, and at the same time license shops that destroy them?

Is it right to license a man to sell that which will make a man drunk, and then punish the man for being drunk?

Is it right to license a man to make paupers, and then tax sober men to take care of them?

Is it right to license a saloon to teach vice, and then tax people for schools to teach virtue?

Is it right to derive a revenue out of a traffic which no decent man defends?

Is it right to teach your boy not to drink, and then vote to license a place where he may be taught to drink?

Is it right to teach your boy to be honest, and then vote to license a place where he may be taught to gamble?

Is it right to teach a boy to restrain his passions, and then vote to license a place where his worst passions will be inflamed?

Is it right to take care of your own boy, and vote to license a place which will ruin your neighbor's boy?

Is it right to preach justice and charity and then vote to license a thing which robs the widows and orphans of their bread?—Round Table.

Study Outlines

The reader will find the "Study Outlines" at the end of the articles in this issue. Space requirements made it necessary to move them from their usual place.

We have been glad to hear, from time to time, that classes have found these outlines useful. If those who use them feel inclined to offer any suggestions or criticisms of the material that would improve them, the Editors shall be glad to hear of them.

NEWS BRIEFS

Big Things in Store for Young Campers at Nauvoo

"Everyone is expected to work hard in the morning, play hard in the afternoon, and have a good time all day long while he is gaining valuable information about the church and about its present program for young people." That is the program in a nutshell of the young people's camp at Nauvoo, August 15 to 26.

Here are specialties promised the campers after the daily routine of forenoon class work and afternoon recreation: Two moonlight motorboat trips down the river; two Wednesday evening fellowship services in "David's Chamber"; three special lectures by visiting church leaders; at least one evening of musical and dramatic productions.

Camp attendance this year is limited to about eighty young people between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four, and the cost is at lowest figure—thirteen dollars for the entire session. Eugene E. Closson, camp director, is assisted by the following staff: W. H. Blair, R. A. Cheville, Miss Anne Morgan, Delmar Jones, Mrs. Nell Cheville, Mrs. W. H. Blair, and Mrs. Julia Closson. Church leaders who plan to give the camp their help are Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and Apostle J. F. Garver.

President F. M. McDowell to Northwest

Last Friday night President F. M. McDowell left Independence to attend the week-end institute at Council Bluffs, Iowa. He returned home early this week, but leaves tonight for church work in the Northwest, where he plans to spend the month of August. Points in that section at which he will give special help are Race Track, Montana; Portland, Oregon, and Seattle, Washington.

Bishop D. S. McDole Finds Good Interest in Branches of Northwest

Since taking over the work of bishop's agent for the Seattle and British Columbia and Spokane Districts in early June, Bishop D. S. McDole, of Seattle, Washington, has found keen interest in all the branches he has visited. He is availing himself of every opportunity to mingle with Saints and increase their faith in God and the church and their desire to serve, share, and sacrifice.

On Memorial Day Brother McDole visited the Vancouver-British Columbia Branches, and later he visited in Everett and Puyallup. With reference to his experience at the last named place he writes: "I think never in all of my life did I feel such an urge to bear witness to the divinity of this latter day message and of coming events as I experienced Sunday night at Puyallup. Under the influence of the power visited upon us, there remained not the vestige of doubt of the ultimate execution of all promises delivered to us in the latter day revelations."

Over the week-end of July 2, 3, and 4, he took advantage of excursion rates to Spokane, where he met with a representative group of Saints.

Brother McDole testifies that he has been richly blessed in performing the work of a bishop. The General Conference approved the recommendation for his ordination to this office, and shortly thereafter he was appointed to labor in the districts above mentioned.

Apostle J. F. Garver Active in Central Mission

Early last week Apostle J. F. Garver passed through Independence on his way North after having attended a highly successful and inspirational conference at Thayer, Southern Missouri District. Thayer members joyfully welcomed him, and the conference followed a two-week missionary effort by Elder W. E. Haden. Brother Garver preached to the conference, helped in the transaction of district business, and presided over an unusually good prayer service on Sunday morning. He has also been working in Clinton District.

This veteran worker of the Quorum of Twelve has a big assignment for this conference year—Central Mission which includes Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Northeastern Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Spring River District. And the summer season with its conferences, reunions, institutes, and other special meetings keeps him traveling from place to place. There is a constant demand for his help.

One Hundred Years Ago

One hundred years ago this month Saints at Kirtland, Ohio, were given a "joyous treat." They received the first number of the Evening and Morning Star, printed at Independence, Missouri, by W. W. Phelps and Company. Ohio members were happy to know that in so short a time the number of Saints in the Land of Zion would grow large and strong enough to print a paper of their own.

The purpose of the paper was to "promulgate religious and moral principles." It was for "an eternal union whose maker and supporter is God." It contained some of the revelations given to the latter day church and other information. The Evening and Morning Star was not designed to treat political issues.

The Truth About Liquor

By A. B. Phillips

NUMBER ONE

That immortal document from the pen of Thomas Jefferson, The Declaration of Independence, is the foundation stone upon which has arisen the richest and most powerful government existing on earth today. To achieve this great distinction within the space of about one hundred and fifty years, and to grow in that time from a few states with a population of less than four millions into a mighty nation of more than one hundred and twenty millions, with the greatest industrial equipment the world has ever produced, was made possible only because the principles upon which we built affirmed the equal rights of our citizens to Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness, and because laws were enacted and enforced having that end in view.

The conflicting interests of many and the selfish arrogance of some can hardly be wholly eliminated from any nation so long as the frailties of human nature remain. The willingness of men to insist upon injurious pleasures, even when such pleasures indulged in by them invade the sacred rights of others, is no new thing in the history of mankind. Because of this defect in various people it has been necessary to enact and enforce laws that seek to prevent such encroachments upon the natural rights of the people as a whole and as private individuals. The selfish seeking of some, it is found, even extends to the commission of crimes and misdemeanors of such a shocking nature that no nation could long endure which does not effectually check them. That paragraph of the Declaration which affirms these sacred rights declares:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. . . . That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. . . . That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to affect their safety and happiness.—History of the United States, by Thwaites and Kendall, pages 164, 165.

Free Liquor Versus Human Freedom

If all people have the rights of liberty and the pursuit of happiness, as declared in the Declaration of Independence, it follows of necessity that such rights do not and can not encroach upon the equal rights of anyone. For instance, liberty, which is affirmed to be the right of all men, can not exist so long as people are permitted to do things that take away the liberty of others. Therefore liberty must of necessity be limited to things that are not destructive of liberty. So also, the pursuit of happiness must be confined to things that do not destroy happiness; and the principles of political government must not disregard this truth. For these reasons, one of the functions of government is to prescribe laws and sanctions that are designed to prevent such acts on the part of any persons as would invade the sacred rights of others.

For a long time it had been known that the use of intoxicating liquors was resulting in grave injuries to many people that did not use intoxicants. It robbed millions of families in various ways: it deprived women and children of necessary food and clothing and shelter, exposed them to brutal treatment and gross immorality, and undermined both health and mind to such an extent that it threw upon the public burdens that should have been borne by those who had disregarded them, and consumed both themselves and their physical and financial resources. A government that would not seek to correct such gross evils would betray the very principles on which stable government must rest. Experience proved that freedom among the people was impossible so long as free liquor existed. Therefore many ways were devised in the effort to protect the people from its baneful effects.

The younger people of this generation know practically nothing of the sickening details of these early attempts to make the liquor business respectable. The statement has been repeatedly made that liquor conditions are worse today than they ever were before. I shall prove to you that such statements are absolutely false. After about a quarter of a century of experience in this matter, the New Jersey Temperance Society has produced facts to show that conditions were much worse before prohibition. It states:

Prohibition laws are being enforced far better than the former laws regulating the liquor traffic. Recall the way the saloons sold on Sunday contrary to law; recall the disolute women who plied their trade with the saloon as their headquarters; recall the children "rushing the growler"; ask the older ministers how they were received at police headquarters when they went to complain about some den in the immediate neighborhood of their churches. The "good old days when the liquor traffic obeyed the law" never existed.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, pages 16, 17.

Liquor Lust

Nearly all of the claims made today that prohibition is worse than the saloons originated with those who themselves use liquor or are the friends of those who have violated the law. The liquor business has never had a conscience. In this respect it is no safer to trust than any other unlawful activities, and truth does not perch upon its banner. It is a business whose supporters well know has produced unspeakable trails of immorality, and almost every shade of crime, falsehood, and suffering known to the world. It destroys health, dissipates wealth, wrecks morals, betrays chastity, abuses loved ones, besmirches friends, chokes decency, and murders life itself.

No one can support any form of the liquor business without knowing that he is aiding some of the most evil forces that ever existed. The untrue statements that have been made by the supporters of liquor lust would make the notorious Ananias blush for shame. An organized effort has been made by these forces to convince the people that prohibition is doing more harm than good, and I have carefully examined more than thirty false statements they have made with this end in view. Some of these statements I shall bring to your attention in detail during my addresses upon this important subject from time to time.

The same class of people who break the prohibition laws today were just as lawless in the days of the saloon. Such an eminent authority as former President Roosevelt noted the fact that crime and liquor went hand in hand in those days of the legalized saloon. He said:

The liquor traffic tends to produce criminality in the population at large and law breaking among the saloon keepers themselves.—Ibid., page 30.

These facts prove that when antiprohibitionists say prohibition makes more criminals than the saloon did, they do not state the truth. The type of people who created the demand for liquor in saloon days were a disgrace to the nation. In 1913 the liquor dealers' organ, Wholesalers and Retailers Review, admitted as much when it said:

With comparatively few exceptions, our saloons are houses of drunken men, profanity and obscenity of the lowest possible type.—Ibid., page 36.

Liquor the Companion of Crime

Today we are told by some who oppose prohibition that they do not want the saloon back. Whether or not they are sincere in this statement, let us remember that liquor is produced to be sold and drunk. Those who produce it will see that it reaches the people in spite of abolished saloons, and in spite of laws to control its distribution, if they can do so. If it reaches the people at all, there will be places where it can be obtained, and it will be the companions of the same kind of criminals that it has always been. If you want to know what is in the hearts of such men, you need only to read the statement made in a liquor dealers meeting, as reported by affidavit of Mr. Wallace in 1908. It says:

The success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others, will die, and if there is no new appetite created, our counters will be empty, as well as our coffers. . . . The open field for the creation of appetite is among the boys. After men have grown and their appetites are formed, they rarely ever change in this regard, and I make the suggestion, gentlemen, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now will return in dollars to your tills after this appetite has been formed.—Ibid., page 65.

Liquor supporters claim that local option or state option would be much better than prohibition. But the facts prove otherwise, for local option has been thoroughly tried, and it has been discovered that the question of option does not materially change the criminal tendencies of those who have made liquor a curse to the human race. There were speakeasies and bootleggers in the liquor license days, and they were apparently just as numerous and just as evil as they are today, if not worse. An interview with the president of the Pennsylvania Liquor League in 1896 was reported in the Pittsburgh Leader, which stated:

In Scranton the licensed saloons keep open on Sunday. He also admitted that there were from seven hundred and fifty to one thousand unlicensed bars or tap rooms in that city.—Prohibition Facts, page 14.

The Pittsburgh Leader in 1900, a wet paper, reported a meeting of liquor dealers on November 15 of that year, and stated:

At the meeting of the retail liquor dealers yesterday the statement was made that there are in Allegheny County two thousand three hundred unlicensed liquor dealers who sell liquor in violation of the law every day in the year, Sundays and election days included.—Ibid., page 14.

You can not make the production or distribution of liquor lawful without putting it in the hands of liquor supporters, and they are a class who have always proved to be untrustworthy. The Chicago Vice Commission reported in 1911 that while the brewers talked loudly of eliminating the sale of liquor to those connected with prostitution, in fact their investigators showed nine hundred and twenty-eight instances where prostitutes were permitted and encouraged in saloons under control of the brewing company.

The Fallacy of Liquor License

The liquor business has always been evil in its very nature and in its effects. It does not change this evil character of the business, whether it be legalized and sold under the laws of a city, a state, or a nation. It is a fallacious and foolish claim to assert that any system of license and distribution can change the evil nature of the business. Let the experience of Chicago in 1907 show what happens when liquor is legalized. McClures for April of that year stated:

The brewers employ agents to watch continually every nook and cranny in Chicago where it may be possible to pour in a little more beer. If a new colony of foreigners appears, some compatriot is set at once to selling them liquor. There is now one retail dealer to every two hundred and eighty-five people.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, pages 33, 34.

To prove the fallacy of such claims one needs but to note the contrast in arrests for drunkenness between cities in "wet" countries and the United States under prohibition. Current History for April, 1928, shows that arrests for drunkenness per ten thousand population were several times greater in Toronto, Montreal, Paris, London and other European cities, than in New York. William E. Johnson, as chief of the United States Indian Service before prohibition, convicted four thousand four hundred offenders against the law. At that time one half of his territory was dry and one half was under license, but ninety per cent of the cases were in licensed territory. This shows how lawless the liquor element is under license laws. Tables of arrests for drunkenness per ten thousand of population in 1923 show fifty in London, fifty-four in Paris, and only 18.11 in New York. In 1926 it was forty-eight in London, and only 14.26 in New York, or less than one third of the ratio in London.

Life, Liberty, and Happiness

The only way that the Constitution of the United States can guarantee and protect our right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, is by making it unlawful to promote or support or countenance that which has proved to be destructive of these rights. We shall never be able to make laws to satisfy everyone, until the day comes when everyone wants what is for the well-being of all the people. The murderer does not want the law which will punish him for taking human life; the burglar and thief do not want the laws that will restrain them from robbing people of their property; the libertine does not want to be deprived of liberty to seduce morals; and booze supporters do not want prohibition. Yet they well know that drink has killed many thousands of innocent people, debauched hundreds of thousands of our youth, caused untold suffering and crime, and has never yet produced real good, prosperity, liberty, or happiness to any people.

Instead of life, liberty, and happiness, the liquor business and liquor drinkers have produced directly and indirectly more deaths, bondage, and misery than any other evil with which this nation has had to contend. Something of its deadly nature is shown by the statistics of C. F. Stoddard, who states:

The United States Census Bureau Report shows the death rate from alcoholism reached 5.6 per 100,000 for the twenty years prior to prohibition. The highest it has been since prohibition is 4.0 per 100,000. It averaged 2.4 in the "dry" states and 5.3 in the "wet" states.—Ibid., page 39.

The Honorable Richmond P. Hobson, in the Congressional Record of February 2, 1911, said:

Experience covering nearly one hundred years shows that alcohol causes 680,000 deaths in the United States every year.—Ibid., page 39.

Forty-three life insurance companies support this conclusion and do not accept habitual drinkers as standard risks. The indirect deaths which have resulted from liquor through accidents, diseases and crime, are if anything still more alarming. Liquor is also very destructive to liberty, both of body and mind, both of the drinkers and of their innocent victims. Liquor supporters have connived together to terrorize the people into giving them the evils of alcoholic drink. What do they care that drunken drivers kill thousands of people every year on the streets where all should be at liberty to drive safely without the constant menace of meeting such pests of the public? They never heave a sigh for the thousands that are slaughtered by drink, but immediately become insanely excited if one lawless bootlegger happens to be shot while attacking an officer of the law.

The Government of Liberty

We may rightly deplore the death of any person, but he who places crime, immorality, and a perverted appetite above the safety, progress, and virtue of his nation, is neither the most loyal nor the most trustworthy citizen to advise the people's course. Even the French Government became so concerned over the ravages of alcohol, that one of its posters stated:

The habit of drinking leads to neglect of family, to forgetfulness of all social duties, to distaste for work, to want, theft and crime. . . . Alcoholism is one of the most frightful scourges—whether it be regarded from the point of view of the health of the individual, of the existence of the family, or of the future of the country.—Ibid., pages 76, 77.

The government of liberty must necessarily protect its people. Liberty does not mean freedom to do injury. If you would have a glorious government that protects life, liberty, and happiness, do not vote to give any people power to do greater evil. Let your sympathies be where honor, virtue, and moral integrity are maintained; for they will not deceive you.

Responsibility

By Susan E. Sinclair

(This article was read as an address to a conference by Sister Susan Sinclair, wife of Doctor W. A. Sinclair. Sister Sinclair died last May 18, and the sentiment of this article may be taken as one of the principles that were the guide of her life. Struggling against sickness and physical disability she heroically gave and did all she could for the church as long as her strength permitted. Permission to publish was requested by President F. M. Smith, and the manuscript was furnished through the kindness of Doctor Sinclair.)

It is many years since I attempted to write a paper for a convention. Perhaps I shall not be able "to put across" what is in my mind upon the subject assigned me, but if I can leave just one thought in the mind of you that will be beneficial, that will be enough.

The subject allotted is one of such wide magnitude that I can not hope to hit even the "high spots," but since it is and always has been a favorite subject of mine, perhaps we can find some good.

You who have known me and heard me for many years back will remember that I have always been burdened for myself and for the rest of you with that all-important phase of our work—"Individual Responsibility."

It is to the women of our district that I am supposed to talk, but you men might take notice. Like all good preachers I must take a text. You will find it in the tenth chapter of Mark, the thirty-fifth to forty-fifth verses. I will not read the ten verses—you know that story of James and John, the sons of Zebedee who came to Jesus and asked him to grant unto them "whatsoever we shall desire," and when they told Jesus their desire—to sit one on the right hand and the other on the left in his glory—"Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? And they said unto him, We can. And Jesus said, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of, and with the baptism that I am baptized with shall ye be baptized; but to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give; but it shall be given them for whom it is prepared. And when the ten heard, they began to be much displeased with James and John. But Jesus called them, and said unto them, Ye know that they who are appointed to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you, but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister: And whosoever of you will be the chiefest shall be servant of all. For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many."

Couple with this story just one sentence of Paul's when he came to Ephesus and asked if they had received the Holy Ghost and they answered that they "had not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Now this is my text and contrary to most good preachers, I am going to repeat it often as I go along, so that you will get it ringing in your ears and circulating through your mental area until you can not forget the question asked you personally, but will need to think and think and apply it to yourself every day until you find out if you really are converted.

Here it is, "And he said unto them, unto what then were ye baptized?" "Unto what then were ye baptized?"

Now for a few pertinent questions: "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" In other words, Have you sensed your individual responsibility? Does this work of Christ into which he has kindly called you to labor mean anything to you? Are you working out your own salvation? You notice I said, "Working," or are you content to sit at one side and let the other fellow work? Do you belong to the class who, no matter whether things go as they would like or not, say, "Here am I, use me," or to the class who say, "If they won't play my way, let's see what they can do. I'm willing." We have a class who seem to delight in that pet phrase, "Why don't they do something?" I've never been able to find out who "they" are. If it isn't you as well as I, then who is it? If this work is anything at all it should be a "we" business and until it becomes such I'm afraid we'll not get very far. "Individual responsibility." "Unto what then were you baptized?"

Do you think that because you have been baptized you are entitled to sit on the right hand of the Master? "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of?" What was that cup? Think it over. How long did Christ prepare himself? How did he learn obedience? See how far your mind will travel if you allow it to dwell upon these things. Are you willing and ready to go all the way? or just content to sit down and think of your own pleasure and give just as little time as you can squeeze out of seven days in the week to help your home branch and all the separate departments in it?

Is your time so taken up with outside interests that the Lord's work must be neglected or given just the shortest possible time because you are needed so much some where else? I'm not an extremist. I know there are two ends—some people give all the time to outside interests, lodges, societies, bridge parties, dances, politics and so on, and to the church a service on Sunday when they think they do their whole duty because they come to that service that perhaps lasts one hour—sometimes not once a Sunday, once a month to Sacrament service and they think they have fulfilled the whole law. Then we have those at the other end that find no leisure time at all either for outside interests or for church. But we are cautioned “to be temperate in all things” and thank God, there is a happy medium where we can “go in and out and find pasture,” but notice there is just as much “in” as “out” and we can not be too careful in our selection of our “outside pasture” for Jesus has cautioned us that even though we must be “in the world” we must not be “of it.”

How about it, men and women? Where are you going? Do you know? Towards what are you aiming? “Unto what then were you baptized?” What are we accomplishing as a branch or district? You know a chain is as strong as its weakest link. Are you the weak link? Have you qualified personally? If so, how about helping the rest of us? How far will your branch go if it has failed to recognize that great commandment given the church back in 1832? Suppose we just cite it as one of our sins of omission—Section 85, Doctrine and Covenants where they were told to assemble themselves together and teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom that included a study of about everything under the sun and then some. If we were following it, would we have much time for outside interests or for talking about our neighbors and particularly backbiting those who feel the urge and desire to help the cause in any little way they can? Twenty minutes on Sunday morning is about all the time most of us spent in study. Isn't that true? We can't meet even once in two weeks for instruction and study. We need social recreation. “Unto what then were you baptized?”

Just to sit around and take life easy—too lazy to think of higher things, too lazy to exert not only your mind but your body as well to accomplish whatever those whom you have chosen as leaders may suggest? How about it, ladies, is it such an effort to make a loaf of cake if you are asked, or perhaps donate fifty cents or a dollar to help along the cause? How much sacrifice is there in it? I'll admit there may be some who must really sacrifice to raise any set amount of money in these times, but be honest with yourself—just analyze it, think, consider, weigh the question—Did I ever miss anything I gave to the church for the Lord's work? Did

I ever find after I had given my part that I really needed it? Have I at any time given the “widow's mite?” She gave all she had even her living. Has my faith ever been tested as the faith of the early Saints was?

Oh, friends, does this work mean anything to you—not anything, but everything? Until it does, I'm afraid we are falling far short of the mark of our high calling. Does it come first? “Unto what then were you baptized?” Can we not determine from now on to look at our religion from the practical end—putting into practice all the virtues so very necessary for our development spiritually—assuming our responsibility, each one in his own place—but all busy “about his Father's business?”

Have I sounded harsh in my conclusions? I hope not. You know me well enough to know that my heart and soul are in this work and I can do so little for its advancement, but at least I can be a “booster” not a “knocker.” I feel my individual responsibility so deeply that I know how little I know, but I do want to advance and to be truly converted, and I am willing to exert every ounce of strength I have to accomplish something. How about you?

“Unto what then were you baptized?” Unto John's baptism of water or unto Christ's baptism of service? What was it Jesus told his disciples in the lesson we read? “Whosoever of you will be the chiefest among you, shall be servant of all.” Service to God and man, but notice please, “God” comes first. Is it not a fact that if we are keeping the first great commandment, “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind—and the second will follow as a natural consequence?

“Unto what then were you baptized?” Where are you going? At what are you aiming? Is it only a glory of a star you want when you might have the glory of the sun? Think on these things seriously. Christ's words were not idle phrases—they meant something.

“Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?” “Unto what then were you baptized?”

Science is outside sectarian differences. It changes, it moves in these days of ours, with extreme rapidity, but at any one movement at any period in the development of knowledge you will find that, broadly speaking, all competent men are agreed, not as to what is the ultimate truth, but what is at the moment the best truth which you can arrive at, and from that progress starts and forms a new base for a new advancement.—Lord Balfour.

Godly Thinking and Godly Doing

By R. E. Davey

(From a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, April 7, 1932. Reported by Gladys Gould.)

For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.—1 Corinthians 3: 9-15.

If there is one challenge above another that confronts those who profess to be the disciples of Christ today, it is the challenge of Godly living. We have passed the day when the world is satisfied with professions, doctrines, creeds, and to a large extent with churches and religions in their entirety. There is only one thing that can lead the world out of the critical condition in which it finds itself. There must be brought into existence a group of Christian disciples who will dare to make their discipleship vital and real, and live their lives in accord with Christ and his teachings. The Word must become flesh and dwell again among men. The challenge of Christian discipleship is the challenge of Godly living.

There must sound out from us as a result of our righteousness that same witness bearing influence that Paul spoke of in writing to the Thessalonian saints:

Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ . . . So that ye were ensamples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia. For from you sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak anything.—1 Thessalonians 1: 3, 7-8.

What a wonderful missionary work shall be accomplished when the day comes, as come it must, that there can go out from us throughout all the world that which will be representative of God as a result of our work of faith, our labor of love, our patience of hope, so that the world through us can find God.

Restrictions on Free Moral Agency

We wish to associate two verses of scripture for our text. One we find in the twenty-third chapter of Proverbs, seventh verse; the other in the fourth chapter and twenty-third verse:

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

There has been a great deal said, especially by Latter Day Saints, relative to the question of free moral agency, that we are free moral agents to choose our own course and do the things we may choose to do. I have been wondering in recent years whether or not we are free in the aspect in which so many of us have been accepting it. The more I see of life, the more I learn of human nature, the more I analyze my own life, the more I discover that today I am not free to choose the things I will do or will not do. Neither do I think any individual sitting under the sound of my voice is this morning able to choose his own conduct. If we need to verify the observation just made, all that is necessary for us to do is to just ask ourselves, as we are sitting here this morning whether or not during the past week, during yesterday, or even so far today we have been able to do the things which we in our own minds knew we should have done. How many of us have succeeded in doing that? I fear not very many, if any. I wonder how many of us have been able to leave undone all the things which we knew in our own minds should have been left undone? Why did we do them then? For the simple reason that today we are not free to choose the way we will act or the things we will do. The Apostle Paul recognized this when he said, "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. . . . When I would do good evil is present with me." (Romans 7: 19, 21.) We find there are contending forces within us, one seeking to dominate the other, our ideals and desires of today at war with our past habits, attitudes, and desires.

We are, today, the shackled slaves of everything we have thought, said, and done from the first conscious moments of our existence to the present. We are, today, the sum total of all our past experiences. Everything we have thought in the days past, everything we have done, has gone to make us what we are today, and has bound us in its shackles, either to our good, or ill, depending upon what that past has been. That is true of each one of us. We are today the bound slaves of what we have suffered ourselves to do, and the choices we have made in the days which are now past. Yesterday we were determining our today.

I used to read years ago with considerable concern the statement made by John on the Isle of Patmos regarding the resurrection and judgment as follows:

And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it . . . and I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelations 20: 11, 12.

I used to wonder about the book of life. I wondered if God had appointed a private secretary out of his angelic hosts to follow me around day by day and write down in a book all of my activities. I have long since come to the conclusion that such is not necessary. When I stand before the bar of God's judgment, or when you stand before that bar, there is only one thing that will be necessary to enable God to judge us by our book of life. Our own souls as they will there be laid bare will be mute evidence of all that we have been. Woven into the warp and woof of our souls as they come before God is the story of our life—the embodiment of all we have been. The book of life—our own souls.

Today Prepare for Tomorrow's Tasks

All of this is extremely important. If, upon the tomorrows which lie before us, we are going to accomplish the gigantic task God has given us to do, it is going to be necessary that we shall make effective use of our opportunities of today, and especially so in the processes of our thinking.

If we are today the sum total of our thinking and acting in the days that are behind us, then of necessity, if we desire in our hearts that upon the tomorrows that lie before us we shall be able to work the works of righteousness, it is going to be vitally essential and necessary that we seek today to lay the foundation in our own lives that alone will make such possible. I am as satisfied as I am standing here this morning that before the day of Zion's redemption shall come it is going to be necessary that each one of us shall consider seriously some of the vital forces of our own lives, the factors and qualities that go into our own makeup, the operation of our own minds. For only in so doing shall we be able to build within us today the kind of attitudes, the kind of habits, the quality of character God can use in the redemption of Zion tomorrow. Zion is not redeemed today because you and I are what we are. If we were Zion-building material Zion would be. Before we can hope to see Zion there must be brought into existence Zion-building individuals. I am certain that such individuals are only going to be produced by a definite obedience to the laws of God.

"Keep thine heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

The Renewing of the Mind

The Apostle Paul undoubtedly had this truth in mind when he wrote to the saints at Rome:

I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds.—Romans 12: 1, 2.

Paul knew that as a man used his mind, as he used his thinking processes, so he became. He knew that it was going to be essentially necessary for those who intended to be full-edged disciples of Christ and usable instruments in his hands for the accomplishment of his purposes that they must utilize the power God had implanted within them. "Be not conformed to this world, but rather be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." If you and I are going to become Kingdom-of-God-building individuals, it is absolutely essential that we become transformed by renewing our minds, by a change in our thinking processes, thus enabling God to accomplish his purposes in our lives.

The most vital factor in the great principle of repentance is our thinking. Until we shall actually begin to think in terms of God, of Christian living, we will make very little progress in Christian or Godly living. I believe Paul caught up very beautifully the principle of repentance when he told the saints at Rome not to be conformed to this world, but rather to be transformed by the renewing of their minds. In writing the saints at Ephesus instructing them in the ways of Godliness, (chapter 4, verse 22 and 24) he says, "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts; . . . And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." I skipped a verse intentionally. In these two verses we find couched indisputably the principle of repentance, the laying off of the old man and putting on the new. But how accomplished! I will reread the passage and insert the verse I omitted.

That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

And again we find Paul drawing our attention to the underlying factor of repentance, our thinking. We are going to be able to lay off the old man and put on the new man when we begin to use the powers God gave us, the mentality, the intellect, the power to think with which we are endowed, and begin to think as God would have us think.

We are here today for the reason that during the past we have been thinking as we have been thinking, and because those thoughts have found expression in our actions, our conduct, and have been moulded into our character, making us the type of individuals we are. To in any way work a change we must begin at the fountain head, our thinking. "By the renewing of your minds." Be renewed in the spirit of your mind. We must begin to feed the inner man upon very carefully selected food, by a change in our thinking processes, or rather the "what" we think.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

"As a man thinketh, so is he."

So, then, if tomorrow we would be able to do with our lives what we desire today, let us bear in mind that our beginning point indisputably is in our thinking. There can be no dissociation between Godly living and Godly thinking. No man can conduct his business after the pattern of present-day pagan business and become the kind of an individual God can use in the redemption of Zion because he is not thinking in Zion terms.

Again we find Paul telling us, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." (Philippians 2:5.) We will become possessed of the mind of Christ when we think as he thought, react to life's problems as he reacted, do as he did. It is a certainty that we are not going to be able to conduct ourselves in a Christlike manner until by our thinking we are filling our minds and souls and hearts with the things characteristic of the Kingdom of God. I do not believe, in spite of the implicit faith and confidence that I have in our doctrine of stewardships, in the social ideals of this church, I do not, I can not believe that Christian stewardships will ever become a reality until first you and I shall change our processes of thinking, and as a result become the kind of people that it is going to take to make possible stewardships and the redemption of Zion.

We refer occasionally to our men of science when we find them emphasizing the things that are vitally important to the work of God. We desire to read to you a statement from Doctor Seashore:

Have ideals. Be a hero-worshiper. Reflection upon ideals tends to express the ideals in life. The mind feeds upon its environment. Your mind is full of what you see, hear, feel, touch and taste; but what the sights, sounds, pressures, odors, and tastes shall mean to you depends upon the more or less clearly recognized ideals; therefore to control conduct we should control the sources upon which the mind feeds, and recognize that the mind develops in the pattern of its ideal.—Ten Rules for Wise Living.

Feeding the Mind

The chief fact we wish to draw from that is this: The mind feeds upon the things by which it is surrounded. I am satisfied we are going to make very little progress in developing within us the Christian attributes, Christian virtues, and emotions that shall ultimately bring us to the place where we are willing to sacrifice, suffer, and, if needs be, die for the ideals of the Master until we have reached the place where we assiduously surround and feed our minds with things conducive to that development. We are not going to find our souls, our subconscious minds, our hearts, filled with the things of God, that which will make us a Godly people, through some of the ways we have been endeavoring to do it in days past. Let's cease trying to delude ourselves and face facts.

Not by our continual attendance at the movies, that specialize on the vice and atrocities of life, will our minds become as the mind of Christ. We are not going to develop Godly thinking by surrounding bridge tables, or any similar activity. We are not, either the young men and women, or boys and girls, or us older ones going to become usable in the hands of God in redeeming Zion so long as we fill our minds with the literary trash, and worse, that we find on the news stands, and all too often in the homes, today. When the time comes that we will feed our minds on food that is Godly we will find ourselves growing and acting Godly, but not until then. When the time comes that we find the people of this church more interested in reading the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Herald, the Ensign, the treasures of literature, than in reading the true story magazines, the tabloid newspaper, etc., we are going to find ourselves going forward as we should and taking our place as the Saints of God.

In the trying days in which we are living, is it not essential for us to face the facts of life? We find ourselves face to face with as great problems as has ever before confronted the Restoration. The world is in dire need of the things this church has to offer, yet we are not in a position to make the contribution. Why? Because we have been doing these other things. We have been thinking in the same terms that the world has. We have been feeding our minds upon material that is the antithesis of the righteousness of the kingdom of God. The kingdom has come last instead of first.

Living Righteously

Jesus said to his disciples of 1900 years ago, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." He didn't say if, possibly, or maybe. He positively declared it. And today, if we are to be the Saints of God and entitled to entrance into his kingdom we must cease compromising with the world. We can no longer justify our actions by what those of the world do. Our criterion must be the commands given by Christ.

Let us accept the rich endowment God has given us in our mental powers and see that they are used in the way that shall be conducive to accomplishing the purposes of God. The high principles of Christian living are not going to be easily obtained. Nothing worth while is ever easily obtained. The purpose of the church, as your speaker views it, and the purpose of the gospel is to bring to us the spiritual unction, the spiritual power, the Christian idealism that will enable us to accomplish these higher, greater and more worth-while things. Frankly, Saints, I would rather be in the shoes of the individual who has made no profession of Christianity and yet has lived foursquare with his neighbor and brother than to be a professing disciple of Christ and a member of his church and live beneath my privileges. The purpose of the church is to enable us to live righteously. But have we suffered the gospel to so vitally effect our lives as to enable us to grow into the measure, of the stature, of the fullness of Christ, or have we been satisfied with merely joining the church. I discover to my sorrow that the condition in which we find ourselves today is mute witness that the latter is true. There are altogether too many of us who are satisfied with the mere fact that we are in the church. We are extremely sorrowful for the poor benighted souls in the world who have no knowledge of Christ. But what have we produced? "By their fruits ye shall know them." We can not turn to the right hand or the left and receive very much consolation for our achievements. Oh, some few things have been done, but not enough. What are some of the things that are vitally needed ere the redemption of Zion can be made possible?

First, there must be developed a group of people who shall dare to let the things of the kingdom have right of way in their lives, and shall succeed in doing with their lives, individually and collectively what God would have done. To make that possible what are some of the essential factors that must be recognized?

Must Be Dependable

One of the characteristics we must become possessed of, before we can hope to see Zion, is dependability. A mental quality if you please.

Can you imagine Zion built by a group of people who are not dependable? People, who when they speak you do not know whether or not they speak the truth. People who say they will do something when they have no intention of doing it. People who are in the clouds today, and tomorrow, because of some minor thing, are in the slough of despondency and refusing to do anything. Before Zion is going to become a reality there must be produced individuals who are dependable under any set of circumstances. God and the church must know where they are and that they can be depended upon regardless of what happens. When they say they will do something, that something is going to be done. Their word is as good as their bond.

How do we become dependable? Well, if I desire to develop strong muscles I get a pair of dumb-bells and use them. If I desire to become dependable I do so by being dependable, by forcing myself to do what I have said I would do whether I like it or not, in small things as well as in large. I must start by thinking straight, forming mental paths of dependability. We must control our own life. A wise writer has said, greater is he that controlleth his own spirit than he that taketh a city. When I say I will do something, I must see, by all the strength there is in me that that something is done. To become absolutely dependable is no easy task. Yet in the name of mysteries how are we going to realize Zion until we, by the grace of God, shall take hold of ourselves and force ourselves to become what we must be. We must think dependable, act dependable, until it becomes habitual to be dependable. It will require will power and strength of character, but it must be done. "As a man thinketh so is he."

Upon every hand we see illustrations of what happens when there is a lack of dependability. One factor that is at the root of our difficulties in the world, and that makes it difficult to regain the ground lost through the depression is the fact that individuals, institutions, governments have proved that they are not dependable. People have lost their confidence, and civilization is about wrecked. Lack of confidence will wreck anything. What is needed is dependability from the highest to the lowest, both in the world and in the church. If all the gospel means to us is that we are going to accept its principles and ordinances, and meet together from time to time, only to go on in the same old way, doing the same old things, still failing to develop dependability we are not going to redeem Zion. We have had the church for one hundred years, and the kingdom isn't built yet. In the name of all that is holy, let's start at the starting point now—"As a man thinketh, so is he."

Must Render Christian Justice

Another quality of life that must be attained before Zion can be is that of Christian Justice. Another set of mental attitudes.

Justice sounds like a very easy thing. Individuals may think it is extremely difficult to love their enemies, but that it would be easy to deal justly with everyone. Jesus gives us a very clear conception of what he means by justice, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Take that commandment and apply it in all walks of life. It is the most searching, and difficult of Christ's commandments. He also said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

No man who is just will assume to himself anything he would resent if it were assumed by some one else. Is that not mere justice? He who would enter the kingdom of heaven must do the will of the Father who is in heaven. Jesus has revealed to us what that will is. We must deal every man with the other, as we would be dealt by. The Prophet Micah tells us the same thing. "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly before thy God." That is what God requires of us if we are to become colaborers with him in the task of building Zion.

Christian Justice. We will use a little illustration to bring before you just what we mean, as we find it in the little things of life. It was at the Centennial Conference, two years ago. At the time we registered they gave us some tickets, one of which was to be exchanged later for a reserved seat to see the College play. There was a large crowd here last conference, and when the time came for exchanging these tickets there was a long line waiting in front of the place where the exchange was to be made. Starting in at the tail end of the line we gradually moved up until we were near the table. There was still a long line behind. Just then a sister stepped right up in front of me and taking out a half dozen tickets from her purse said, "Exchange these tickets for me for the Thursday night performance. I will appreciate it if you will."

Yes, she would. Now if that good sister had been back about two thirds of the way in that long line, how would she have appreciated it if some one else stepped in ahead of her and secured the good seats that she was entitled to? You see she was taking to herself what she would most surely have resented if some one else had taken himself. You just watch yourself as you go through life and see how many times you find yourself giving way to the doing of just that kind of utterly unchristianlike thing, taking advantage of official rank, of social prestige, of political pull. This illustration is of just a small thing, but take that same characteristic, that same attitude of mind, and carry it on up to the higher complexities of life and you will find one of the chief causes of our being torn apart, that produce hatred and ill will, that sets class against class, and makes impossible the redemption of Zion. No man, if he be a full-fledged disciple of Jesus Christ, has a right to take, nor will he attempt to take to himself, any advantage that he would resent if it were taken by some one else. For if he does he is not doing as he would have others do by him. This must be done before we can have Zion. How can it be done? Only one way, we must set ourselves to the task of developing the qualities, the mental attitudes and habits that will enable us to do to the other man what we would have him do to us. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Let us attempt to put ourselves in the other man's shoes and see what our reaction would be if the situation was reversed. Let our employers put themselves in the shoes of their employees. I think some of our employers would have a different attitude toward their employees if they would do this. If the employee would rightly measure his attitude toward his employer and his work, let him ask himself how we would have his employee do if he were the employer. If he be a business man behind the counter or the mahogany desk let him ask himself how he would like to be dealt with if he were the customer. Out would go profiteering, adulterations, short weights, legal trickery, etc. If he is a customer let him put himself in the shoes of the man behind the counter and ask himself how he would like to have his customers treat him. Some of us would be paying our debts instead of spending our money on trifles or to satisfy our selfish desires. That is Christian justice, and will only be accomplished by a conscientious, sincere effort upon our part, by a constant watch. We must take ourselves by the nap of the neck and the bootstraps, as it were, and force ourselves into the doing of it.

When we recognize that as a man thinketh, so he is, that we are going to find in the issues of our life what we allow to pass through our thinking day by day, we are going to be extremely careful of our thinking. We will begin to surround our minds with material that will furnish food that is wholesome, on which it can grow and thrive, until right is in control of our whole "house." Then, and only then, can God accomplish through us what he has designed. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

One more thing we want to just briefly mention that must be developed before we can have Zion. "Love your enemies." Zion can not be built by a group of people who nurse ill will, or hatred against others. Can you imagine Zion established by people that do that? Surely not. But that is the way the great majority of us do, isn't it? If some one says something or does something that offends me, I am not going to speak to him, or respond to my church activities until that individual comes to me and apologizes. I'll just sulk. Do you ever see Latter Day Saints who are always looking for someone to apologize to them? Beware that kind of individual. It doesn't make any difference how seriously one may be hurt or offended, Jesus requires that he shall forgive, even until seventy times seven times. If we don't forgive, God will not forgive us. "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive you your trespasses." (Mark 11: 25, 26.)

This command of Jesus is definite, right to the point. Yet sometimes we Latter Day Saints wonder why it seems that the door of heaven is sealed over as with brass and our prayers go no higher than our heads when we find ourselves having the audacity to come to God asking for a blessing, for forgiveness, when we in our own hearts are not forgiving those who have wronged us. We wonder why we are spiritually weak, impotent, and the power of God not functioning through us in accomplishing his work. No individual can afford to pay the tragic penalty of ill will, hatred, hurt feelings. It destroys health, disrupts the mind, and saps spiritual strength.

Now, then, if we are going to make a success out of our own lives, and build Zion we must have such qualities as dependability, Christian justice, and a forgiving spirit. These qualities are going to come into our possession just as soon as we begin to think in these terms, and then as a result of thinking, begin acting that way. For, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Be watchful, careful of the way you use your mind, of what you let it feed upon, for out of it are the issues of life.

Let us be very careful of what we think, read, see, hear. Let us be careful of the environment with which we surround ourselves, for everything we see, or hear, or feel, leaves its imprint, becomes a part of the warp and woof of our lives. Today we are laying the foundation of what we will be tomorrow, and tomorrow we will be the slave of the choices we make today. We must learn that every day is doomsday.

In closing, we want to draw your attention to a brief, yet very important statement that comes to us from Paul in the fourth chapter of Philippians, eighth verse:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

"Lay off the old man and put on the new by renewing your minds."

"Let that mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." If you would grow into a Godly individual, then think Godly. Whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report, think on these things. And out of that thinking there will come into our lives the spiritual unction of God that will enable him, through us, to accomplish the gigantic task of Zion's redemption, the sublime in Godly doing. May God bless us to this end.

THE TRUTH ABOUT LIQUOR

By A. B. Phillips

1. Some persons claim the right to drink liquor as a matter of personal liberty. Do you think personal liberty should give a person the right to poison himself with alcohol? The laws prohibit the traffic in opium, morphine, and other very harmful drugs. Do you approve of that interference with personal liberty? Is the case not the same for alcohol?

2. What are the injuries received from the drinking of alcoholic liquors?

3. Are conditions worse today than they were before prohibition? Did the liquor interests ever obey the law? Can we believe their statements and promises now?

GODLY THINKING AND GODLY DOING, By R. E. Davey

1. Does man possess "free moral agency"? Bring reasons to prove your position.

2. What limitation does life impose upon our freedom? How does the gospel limit that freedom?

3. What responsibilities further impose conditions upon our free moral agency?

4. Draw up a list of rules for conduct that would conform with "Godly doing." How many of your rules would be negative? How many positive. Let the class vote on each rule admitted to the list. Does the result make a good code for conduct?

If life as it is has to be escaped from, then sentimentality will always be welcome in tedious or unhappy homes. When once we decide to tackle life, and not run away from it, sentimentality will disappear, for our days will then be full of genuine interests and emotions, and we shall no longer have any need for shoddy substitutes.—Frank Swinerton.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Independence

Enthusiastic reports come from the groups of young people which on Sunday night visited neighboring branches, furnishing the programs and speakers. This was the first of these Sunday evening trips. Englewood, Second Church, Liberty Street, and Enoch Hill visited Lees Summit Branch; Walnut Park, Gudgell Park, Spring Branch, East Independence, and Sugar Creek, went to Atherton, and Stone Church young people visited the Saints at Lexington, Missouri. These trips are being sponsored by the young people's council.

This council met on Monday night to consider fall activities in the form of play and oratorical contests and music festivals. It announces another early morning prayer service for the young people at the Campus, August 14, at seven o'clock. Through this working group the young people of Independence have been invited to visit the Stewartsville reunion on August 21. The council is considering arrangements which will make it possible for the young people to accept this invitation and attend the reunion of Far West Stake in a body.

The Independence chapter of the Graceland College Alumni Association held its first annual pep meeting at the Campus Monday night, there being present Gracelanders from the early days of the college to those of the present. Guests of the evening were the William Chrisman High School graduates who plan this fall to attend Graceland. College memories, songs, and personalities were enjoyed in a brief program, and there were talks by President F. M. McDowell and Elder C. B. Woodstock. A short business meeting of the chapter resulted in the appointment of two committees to care more definitely for the interest of Graceland College in Independence. One committee is a ways and means group to raise funds to assist Independence young people to attend Graceland. The other is to work with the pastors of Independence in providing College Day programs. Refreshments were served at the close of the evening.

During the summer season the forty-six groups in Independence are enjoying outdoor get-togethers. Since May, group annual picnics have been numerous at the Campus and at pleasure places. Usually some of the general church officials are special guests, and renew acquaintance with all the members.

Officers and workers are formulating plans which have to do with the shaping of the Harvest Home Festival, October 11 to 16.

It was a large and attentive congregation of people that assembled at the Campus Sunday evening to listen to another sermon by Apostle F. Henry Edwards on a hymn theme, "Just As I Am." Preceding the discourse a quartet from the Stone Church Choir, Mrs. Paul Wheeler, Mrs. Velma Brocaw Nunn, Gerald Johnston, and Clarench Resch, sang the hymn. Other music of the evening was supplied by the Auditorium Orchestra, and by Mrs. Paul Wheeler, soprano soloist, who sang "The Good Shepherd." Favorite hymns were sung by the congregation, "Come Thou Fount of Every Blessing," and "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" Elder John R. Lentell offered the invocation and benediction.

Stone Church

An attractive half hour of music by the Stone Church Choir preceded the concluding sermon of Elder Leonard Lea's Sunday morning series. Under the direction of Paul N. Craig the choir sang "Sanctus," by Gounod, Elbert Dempsey singing the tenor solo, and "Bless the Lord, O My Soul," from the Russian Liturgy. Hazel Scott Withee was the organist. There was also a stirring bass solo by Colin Ferrett. This program was broadcast over KMBC.

"The Kingdom of God" was the theme of Brother Lea's sermon, and he spoke on the citizenship, the characteristics, and conditions in that kingdom as revealed by the Scriptures. For a text he chose the words of Jesus: "But rather, seek ye the kingdom of God." This discourse was the climax of his series of three sermons, and he was heard by a large congregation of people.

Elder H. G. Barto, associate pastor of the Stone Church, was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder C. B. Hartsorn, of Des Moines.

Tomorrow the women of the ladies' aid of the Stone Church are to meet at the Auditorium in the morning. They will bring a lunch and enjoy a picnic dinner.

The Stone Church Choir made merry at its annual picnic and outing at Wildwood Lakes last night. A large number enjoyed the swimming facilities of the place. The committee in charge of the outing functioned very effectively.

Walnut Park Church

The Saints who worshiped at Walnut Park, July 17, enjoyed a real spiritual feast beginning with the early morning prayer meeting in charge of Elders R. D. Weaver and C. K. Green, and continuing through the church school and eleven o'clock hour which was occupied by Pastor Frank McDonald. He chose his text from 1 Corinthians 2. The young people's choir assisted in the service, singing the anthem, "A Prayer," directed by Delta Nace and assisted at the organ by Drexel Mollison.

The services on the following Sunday were also of an inspirational nature. The early morning prayer meeting was in charge of Elder Paul Davis, William Herbst, and Benjamin Bean. Brother Bean whose privilege it was to make the opening remarks, sang the Twenty-third Psalm in tongues. How wonderful it must have been in the olden days to hear David, the shepherd boy, singing songs of praise and thanksgiving to God!

The church school was well attended after the classes assembled to hear the song, "Heed the Voice," which was given by the Spirit to Patriarch J. F. Martin at conference, and has been set to music. It was sung unaccompanied by a quartet consisting of Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, Arlon Chapman, and Milford Nace. This was an inspiration to the Saints.

At the next service the speaker was Elder C. Ed. Miller, who carried out the theme of the early morning prayer service, speaking at length on "The Psalms of David." His sermon was much appreciated. The choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "The Lord Is My Light," soprano solo by Marian Campbell.

In the evening the Galilean Class inaugurated its missionary task of the season. Meeting at the church at five o'clock with lunch baskets, they motored to Atherton. After eating lunch, they were joined by groups from Gudgell Park, Sugar Creek, and Spring Branch congregations. Each was represented in the program preceding the sermon by Elder George Jenkins. Walnut Park was glad to do its little bit to contribute to the happiness of Atherton Saints.

The Adult Stewardship Class, Brother Millard, teacher, enjoyed a trip to the Atherton farms, July 10. About thirty members left the church early in the morning and reached Atherton Church in time for the prayer service and remained for church school. Brother D. R. Hughes then conducted them over the grounds before the group enjoyed basket dinner down by the Little Blue River. This class felt that its time was profitably spent as well as enjoyed.

On July 8, Group 29, West, met on the lawn of Brother

Clarence Redfield's home, and were fortunate to have present Patriarch Ammon White and wife. Brother White gave an interesting talk on his experiences in the church, and a large crowd listened to him. Several from the Walnut Park Orchestra were there, and the lovely evening combined with the sacred music inspired all who attended.

This group had its annual picnic on the following Tuesday on the same lawn. The two bands from Group 29, West, and Group 29, East, furnished music. Special guests of the evening were Pastor and Sister Frank McDonald and Sister F. R. Schafer and daughter, Mildred. The latter two have gone to Iowa to make their home. The branch regrets the loss of Sister Schafer who has been a faithful worker and friend. She was the supervisor of the women's department in District 3 for several years, and was a member of the advisory committee to Sister C. C. Koehler, leader of women in Zion. The Saints hope that God will bless her in her new work and that she will be able to join them again.

Group 29, East, held an ice cream social July 21, clearing nineteen dollars. They met on the lawn of the home of Elder Benjamin Bean on Spring Branch Road. An attractive program including band music from the group, several guitar numbers, and a song by the Drigalla sisters, entertained the Saints.

Spring Branch Church

Last Wednesday night's prayer service was marked by good attendance and an excellent spirit of participation. Brothers Robert Fish and C. J. Dixon were in charge.

The early Sunday morning prayer hour was conducted by Alma Tankard and C. J. Dixon. Many were there and the young people took prominent part. When the young members are active in testimony and song, all feel encouraged to help.

The morning preaching hour was in charge of Pastor George W. Eastwood, assisted by Jake Andes. Elder J. Charles May, an old friend of this branch, was the speaker. He told of his first meeting with Spring Branch Saints when he preached on the porch of the home of Brother and Sister Brainerd before the church was built, and commended the members on the stone building they now occupy. His text was taken from 1 Thessalonians 1: 5: "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." He also spoke of the spiritual gifts and of his experiences in the missionary field. "We all feel that the gospel means much to us," he said, "but what do we mean to the church?" Brother May also sang a song in the Tahitian language.

Leo Leslie Olsen Is Accidentally Shot

The many friends of Brother Leo Leslie Olsen, druggist, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, have been shocked to learn of his death, July 13, when he was mistaken for a bandit and accidentally shot during a hold-up at the MacMarr Grocery Store which adjoins his pharmacy in Phoenix, Arizona. He was shot by an employee of the grocery store, who in the excitement of the robbery mistook him for the bandit. Brother Olsen died as he was carried into the Good Samaritan Hospital ten minutes after the hold-up. He had been shot four times.

The press story of the event tells of a hold-up plan, designed to trap anyone who attempted to rob the MacMarr Grocery or Olsen's Drug Store, and how it went awry when the clerk, ignorant of the plan, ran from the store, automatic in hand, close behind the robber. Forty-five minutes after the shooting, police caught the bandit, Youther L. Rowell, twenty-four years old, who calmly recited details of his escapade to the officers, unaware that a murder charge might be added to the robbery counts against him. These included charges of twice holding up a theater, which he also confessed.

Brother Olsen, son of Austin and Dollie Olsen, and grandson of Elder Glaud Rodger, early missionary to Australia, was born in Lamoni, Iowa, June 11, 1890. He moved to Arizona in 1926. His obituary appears in another column of this issue.

Kansas City Stake

Bennington Church

The special meetings being conducted by Missionary J. Charles May, have been well attended in spite of the hot weather. They were brought to a close Wednesday night, July 13, and Bennington Saints are hopeful that the seed thus sown shall find lodgment in many that are honest in heart.

Thursday evening the junior choir met at the home of Brother and Sister E. H. Agin for rehearsal, and later in the evening the Young People's History Class conducted its business meeting after which both organizations joined forces and made a very successful attack on four freezers of ice cream.

On Friday evening this congregation enjoyed a three-act play put on by members from Fourth Kansas City Church.

Sunday morning's service was a sermon by Brother Edward Larson; and in the evening a discourse by Brother J. Charles May. Both were inspiring and helpful.

This week Brother May is holding special outdoor services at Sixteenth Street and Bennington Avenue and many non-members are reported in attendance.

Wednesday night prayer meeting was a little out of the ordinary in that the Saints met in fasting and prayer for those that are unemployed, and coupled with that, many brought provisions for those who are in need.

The workers of the women's department are busy preparing fruits and vegetables for the Harvest Festival.

Argentine Church

Elder Levi Gamet was the speaker at seven forty-five, July 24. His subject was "Prophets."

Owen Sound District Reunion Held at Port Elgin

The Saints who have been attending regularly in the past years have expressed themselves that this was the best reunion they ever had. The number attending averaged from one hundred during the week to about three hundred and fifty on Sundays. Patriarch F. A. Smith, Patriarch John Shields, and Apostle Williams added greatly to the spiritual uplift of the Saints. The branches represented were Sault Ste Marie, Manitoulin Island, Orilla, Elora, Sarnia, Wiarton, Owen Sound, Grand Valley, Guelph, Toronto, and other places.

On Sunday, July 3, reunion opened with prayer service at 9.30 a. m., sacrament being served to about three hundred people. A wonderful spirit was manifest among the Saints and it lasted throughout the week. From eleven to twelve Apostle D. T. Williams spoke on the "Responsibility Towards the Church." He illustrated by saying that if the captain of the ship called for help to the pumps all would respond to the call because it was the only salvation to save the ship and themselves. When the President of the church calls for help, the members should all respond to the call of the captain of the gospel ship. Patriarch Smith preached at 3 p. m., and Apostle Williams in the evening.

During the week, prayer service was held from 9 to 10, followed by a study hour conducted by Apostle Williams, the subject being, "Family Evangelism," which was very educational, and a deep interest was manifest. From eleven to twelve came preaching services. The speakers were Elder Morrison, St. John, Belrose, Farrow and Hewitt. The evening speakers Apostle Williams, Elder Boaz and Patriarch Smith; his theme during the week was, "What Does Your Church Mean to You." The meals were served in the hall at the fair grounds under the supervision of Sister Doris Dayton and volunteer helpers. The afternoon was given to recreation, ball games, horseshoe pitching, and swimming.

After preaching in the evening of July 4, all assembled in the dining hall to celebrate the evening in honor of the American Saints who were present. Singing and speeches were features of the evening. The spirit of unity and fellowship was expressed by many who hoping for the time when the two countries will stand as one, without borders. On July 7, Saints met in the hall again for another social evening of singing and story-telling, which was followed by a wiener and marshmallow roast.

On Saturday morning, July 9, a half-hour prayer service preceded district conference, Apostle D. T. Williams presiding. Reports of the last conference were read and approved. Election of officers for the coming year was as follows: Re-elected H. A. Dayton, district president; D. B. Perkins, first vice president; Benson Belrose, second vice president; F. B. Stade, bishop's agent; R. J. Wilcox, secretary; Brother Furnace, musical director and chorister; Sidney Smith, assistant chorister; H. A. Dayton, district director of Religious Education. The time and place of the 1933, reunion were left in the hands of the district presidency. In the afternoon Apostle Williams departed for Montreal.

On Saturday evening, the Warton Saints presented a three-act play, "Yimmie Yonson's Job," which was humorous and well rendered to an appreciative audience.

During the reunion Patriarch F. A. Smith and Patriarch John Shields gave thirty blessings, and administered to a number of Saints.

On Sunday throughout the day the church was full. Patriarch F. A. Smith was the speaker at prayer service, also in the afternoon. His farewell sermon admonished the Saints to be faithful to the cause of the Master, and the benediction that was pronounced upon the people caused many to shed tears and the Spirit of the Master was felt to a great degree. Brother Smith left for Warton, Owen Sound, and other places with the good wishes of all. The closing sermon of the reunion was preached by Elder B. H. Hewitt. After this farewells were said to the Saints of Port Elgin who so willingly opened their homes to the visiting members.

The success of this reunion is due to the untiring efforts of the district president, H. A. Dayton, and his associates.

Central Michigan District

The work in Central Michigan is moving forward. There is a marked, increasing interest throughout the district, with possibly the most encouraging outlook for some time past.

The world-wide depression has been felt here as elsewhere, and many have become discouraged because of lack of employment. This naturally retards, to some extent, the progress of the work, from a financial standpoint, and has a tendency to lessen the number of workers, thus throwing more responsibility on some.

However, Michigan Saints expect to emerge from these conditions, and during this time of perplexity they are learning lessons of distinct value, which are bound to be an important factor in the building of a strong character and a tenacity of purpose that will eventually cause them to reach their goal, or the realization of their dreams—Beautiful Zion. Many have been made to realize the strong significance of the statement: "Man shall not live by bread alone." This is being verified in the attitude of the Saints throughout the district, as there is an increasing tendency toward greater sacrifices and greater consecration that our work may go forward.

Much has been accomplished in the last few months along the lines of more efficient organization in the branches, greater unity and cooperation between branches and district and a definite manifestation of the spirit of the late General Conference. Much of this has been brought about through the untiring efforts of Brethren Case and White in their trips through the district, endeavoring to set things in order and establish peace and harmony. As a result of their efforts, there is a much better priesthood organization, more unity and harmony, less bickering and gossiping and a decided change for the better all through the district. These men have also done much to inspire the local priesthood to duty in the crying needs of the hour, encouraging them to visit every home, thus spiritualizing them as leaders of God's people and helping the Saints to rise above trivial things and engage themselves in the master's business.

A number of all-day meetings have been held with gratifying results. These have done much to build up the faith of the Saints and bring them to a higher spiritual plane. Particular mention should be made of the meetings held at Mikado, Whittemore, and Tawas City. These were very spiritual.

The branch at Houghton Lake, under the leadership of Brother Roy Knapp, is progressing splendidly, and during a recent visit of the district presidency, a feast of good things was enjoyed in preaching, singing, and priesthood meeting. Other branches visited were Alma, Saginaw, Midland, Coleman, Beaverton, Gladwin, Butman, West Branch, Prescott, Whittemore, Tawas City, Mikado, Twining, Farwell, Clare, and Bay City. The efforts being put forth in these branches are also commendable.

Bentley Branch, under the leadership of Brother Matthew Umphrey, is moving forward. Greater unity and peace prevail, and at the last sacrament meeting the Saints adopted the plan of paying one tenth of all the money they receive into the coffers of the church. This action evidences a wonderful spirit, and will inspire many other branches with the spirit of giving.

Most of the branches did well in Sacrifice Week. The members are convinced they need a sacrifice week every month until they learn to pray together, pay together and be humble and consecrated enough that every one on record will learn his or her duty. Then Zion will be a free people and her message will go to all nations.

Nine persons were baptized at Bay City and four at Saginaw on Children's Day, and many more in various places are near the kingdom. If the Saints will be humble and prayerful, and thrust in their sickle and reap, many will be brought to hear the Master's voice and obey the call. The gospel is no less significant now than in the days when "hundreds were added to the church," and notwithstanding the world is reeling in the drunkenness of iniquity, many souls are yearning for the angel's message.

Surely the greatest era of proselyting since the early days of this church, is upon the world, but God can not carry out his great purpose in his people in the gathering in of these precious souls until the Saints purify their lives and put him on exhibition before the world.

Many more district activities are being planned, which, officers think will bring this district to the front and put it in the one hundred per cent working condition.

Muskegon, Michigan

The most encouraging event of Children's Day, observed here June 26, was the baptismal service in the afternoon in which nine candidates were baptized by Elder Whitehead. An unusually spiritual confirmation service took place in the evening. That morning the children gave a program which was much enjoyed.

Elder Whitehead has chosen ten from the large number of local young people, to assist him build up the Religion. Though interest in this department has of late been waning, officials have thought it important to continue its activities because of the many boys and girls in the branch.

The spirit of deep devotion which prevailed throughout the sacrament service July 3, was very strengthening.

New Castle, Pennsylvania

New Castle Branch is moving forward in the work of the church. June 12, the Saints went in a body to Kirtland, Ohio, to hear President Frederick M. Smith preach. During the day an ordination service took place in which Brother John Biddle was ordained to the office of priest, and Brother Calvin Westcott to the office of teacher.

The following Sunday, June 19, five children were baptized.

Elder T. M. Carr was here June 26. He is the district president, and comes from Pittsburgh. Elder D. Jones, of Sharon, was also here. These two assisted the branch elder, William McCune, in the confirmation.

The Saints hope to see much good done in this little branch and to help build up the kingdom of God.

Conference of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District

The conference of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District convened at Lansing, Michigan, June 11, presided over by Apostle D. T. Williams, Elder A. C. Barmore, and Elder A. J. Dexter.

The following district officers were unanimously elected: President, Elder A. C. Barmore; president's counselor, Elder A. J. Dexter; secretary, Myrtle Perry; district treasurer, Bishop E. C. Evans; chorister, Louise Evans; director of Religious Education, Elder A. J. Dexter.

The following brothers were recommended for ordination: Macey A. Ellis to the office of elder, and Glenn Myers and Henry London to the office of priest.

It was voted that there be no reunion held in this district this year.

The time and place of the next district conference were left in the hands of the district presidency.

Delta, Colorado

Children's Day was observed by special services in which the children participated. Charles Walter Williams, infant son of Brother and Sister William Williams, was blessed during the rendition of one of the program numbers.

A beautiful and impressive baptismal service was conducted at the Delta Pool during the noon hour when there were no bathers in. Elder N. L. Booker officiated, baptizing five little girls: True Dora Vest, Ada Lou Staats, Josephine Williams, Glenus Adkins, and Barbara Harshman.

Brother Cecil Schmid and family, missionary from Chicago, released, were visitors on the above date, and his message at the eleven o'clock hour was timely and well received.

The Saints gathered on the evening of June 29, to welcome Apostle Roy S. Budd and listen to an inspiring sermon by him. For his text Brother Budd used the words of Jesus: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He stressed the necessity of prayer as a means of coming unto him and learning of his ways. All were edified, and will be pleased to have Brother Budd return whenever opportunity permits. Brother Budd with some twenty others attended the district conference held at Durango, July 2 and 3.

July 13, Brother and Sister N. L. Booker left Delta via Monte Vista, where they expected to remain over Sunday with the Saints, en route for Independence and eventually Lamoni, where they will be assigned duties on the hill at Graceland College. Saints of Delta will miss them tremendously, but know they will be a blessing to others wherever they are.

Sister Jewell Harshman returned recently from Independence, where she has been since serving as a delegate to General Conference. She received glad welcome home.

At the business meeting held July 10, nearly the entire personnel of branch and church school officers was changed. It was thought wise to hold a complete election since it is not long until regular election of officers and vacancies made by the Bookers leaving necessitated a partial election. Elder Albert Rose, of Olathe, was unanimously elected pastor of the branch; Arthur Rose, Montrose, church school supervisor; H. E. Merryman, Montrose, treasurer; Jewell Harshman, secretary; Inez Rose, Montrose, musical director; Edra Vest, Olathe, publicity agent, and Lilah Harshman, Cory, correspondent. A good spirit prevailed, and it is hoped that the selections made will prove beneficial to all.

Delta women are beginning the study courses outlined in the Saints' Herald. They are sure to prove a source of good to the workers.

The young people are working on their money-making projects as also are some others, and they are to report their progress at the next social gathering. Their get-together socials are proving enjoyable and creating a stronger bond of friendship among them.

God is indeed working with his people in this vicinity, and the prayers of the Saints are for the progress of his work everywhere.

Conference for Western Colorado

A period of intensive religious activity marked the Western Colorado district conference at Durango, July 2 and 3. The Spirit of the Master was present to a noticeable degree.

Apostle Roy S. Budd preached a series of fine sermons and Elder N. L. Booker, former district president, gave a splendid talk.

A program was the first conference event, numbers being presented by the Durango young people the evening of July 1. Sister Frieda Wallis, of Olathe, also took part. Some who participated were not members of the church, and considerable talent was displayed in the various selections.

The conference was organized the next morning following an inspiring prayer service. The district presidency cooperating with Brother Budd, missionary in charge, was chosen to preside, and H. E. Merryman, of Montrose, was designated to serve as secretary.

During the morning session, business was chiefly of routine nature, consisting of reports from the priesthood of the district and also of the auditor, the district treasurer, bishop's agent, and the director of Religious Education, Sister Booker.

Following this hour the priesthood met for discussion of the needs of the district, and some recommendations to the conference were formulated.

At the afternoon session Brother Booker announced that he expected to leave the district very soon, and recommended that the conference elect William B. Farley, of Durango, as district president. Brother Farley was unanimously elected. He then presented the name of Brother E. H. Perkins, of Grand Junction, as a counselor. The choice was unanimously approved. Then Brothers Farley and Perkins presented the name of Brother Arthur G. Rose, of Montrose, as the second counselor, and this name, too, was unanimously approved. Sister Edra Vest, of Olathe, was elected district secretary, and M. L. Schmid, bishop's agent, was chosen to serve as district treasurer. From several nominees, Sister Amy Dearing, of Montrose, was elected to serve as director of Religious Education.

During his stay here Brother Budd captivated the hearts of the young people who hope he will visit frequently in this district. On Sunday morning he gave a group of them an excellent talk. Many were their expressions of appreciation.

Sacrament was served in the afternoon after which Brother Booker gave his farewell talk. Then four speakers conveyed to the Bookers the appreciation of the district for the work they have done and the results accomplished for community and district good. Brother Perkins spoke in behalf of the young people of the district: Olive Hubbard, of Delta, in behalf of the women; Maxine Harshman, in behalf of the young people, and Brother Budd, in behalf of the higher quorums.

Western Colorado District is sorry to lose these good workers and friends, but the Saints are pledged to carry on and do the best they can under the circumstances. They feel that the new district president is a capable man, and intend to give him staunch support. They are happy in the knowledge that Brother Budd is deeply interested in the progress of the district, and under his leadership and counsel, they dare to go forward.

The conference was well attended, twenty-four being present from outside points. Nineteen of these came from "over the range" as the Durango people term it. The next conference will be held at Delta, the exact date to be decided later.

Iowa City, Iowa

The educator is interested in personalities, in individual human beings, and in the changes which take place in those individuals, said A. R. Gilbert, of Graceland College, in his lecture, "An Educator's Interpretation of Life," Sunday, July 3. All human beings are seekers of happiness, he said, and this happiness is to be found not in complacency nor in possessions, but in constantly discovering new goals and working to achieve them—in activity. Noble Kelley was chairman for the evening.

Doctor Lonzo Jones, of the University of Iowa, spoke on "A Father's Interpretation of Life," Sunday, July 10. It is his conviction that the home should be recognized as an educational institution in its own right. The school, boys' and girls' organizations, and the church are tending to demand too much of the child's total waking hours. The cultural influences, opportunities for responsibility, and recreational experiences which the home can promote are invaluable to the child's development. The genuine father is one who vigorously interprets life in terms of the physical, mental, social, and religious well-being of his children. H. Voas Meredith was chairman, and introduced the discussion period which followed the lecture.

Institute at Miami, Oklahoma

The institute held at Miami, Oklahoma, July 16 and 17, commenced with prayer service at 10 a. m., Saturday, and eight hours of instruction in "Church Finance" were enjoyed throughout the remainder of the two days' services. Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the instructor in class work, and many parts of the financial law, which has been misunderstood by some, were made clear. The Saints feel that a very constructive work was done here. Several expressions approving the program of the church were heard during the service.

Approximately one hundred and ten were present Sunday and at the close of the morning service a basket dinner was shared at the park. Immediately after dinner, they gathered at the water's edge and were made happy as they witnessed the baptism of Loreen Kyser, wife of Brother Raymond Kyser.

Although unable to know just what the future will bring, the members are optimistic and feel that the church will surely come through this crisis victorious.

District President Amos T. Higdon, and his two counselors, Andy Jones and Ronald Smith, together with District Missionary Lee Quick and Bishop's Agent Norman Gray, were present.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

The month of June brought to Missionary John L. Sandidge a great variety of activities in the district. During the course of the month he visited and worked in the following places: Boise, Hagerman, Pocatello, Lava Hot Springs, and Rupert, and spent considerable time traveling among the isolated members.

One of his chief undertakings was to ascertain if the Saints wanted a reunion and if they did, to make arrangements for it. "We want a reunion," they told him, and favored from three to five days. The dates chosen were August 24 to 28. Expenses were estimated and apportioned, and helpers were secured for the reunion period. These will include Elder and Sister A. M. Chase, of Salt Lake City. The reunion will be held at Hagerman.

At Lava Hot Springs, Brother Sandidge preached to Saints from Malad, Robin, and Pauline. His sermon followed the union Sunday school held in the Episcopal Church, and he had an appointment there again that evening. A picnic dinner was enjoyed at noon in the park, and in the afternoon he preached again. He was assisted in charge by the president of Malad Branch, and these two blessed the infant daughter of Sister Vaughn, of Pauline. The reception given Brother Sandidge at this place by members and nonmembers, was most hospitable. He was invited to remain and preach during the week. He continued until over the next Sunday.

Rupert Church

Brother Sandidge arrived at Rupert from Pocatello and held a week of meetings, delivering splendid sermons. Interest was good.

Relatives and friends of Sister Margaret Richards were shocked to hear of her sudden death, June 2. The funeral was held at Pocatello, Brother Sandidge preaching the sermon. She is survived by her husband, two children, Claude and Noel, her father, and four brothers.

Sister Hanford Plowman gave a surprise party for her sister, Helen, June 21, celebrating her birthday. The young people of the church were invited, some relatives from Twin Falls, and some friends who are not members. A happy evening was spent.

Boise Church

Three children were baptized the afternoon of Children's Day, Wayne Horner, Arthur Horner, and Philip Wilson. Brother John R. Mamerow officiated and the baptism occurred in the Boise River. The confirmation service came in the evening. That morning the annual program was given by the children under the direction of Sisters Hull and Bullock. Pastor Cato delivered a sermon.

June 6, Sister Hull and her Religio class went to Arrowrock Dam and a wiener and marshmallow roast was enjoyed.

The young people met at the home of Brother and Sister Wilson, June 19, for a swim. They went to the irrigation ditch.

The evening of June 26, Brother Charles Likins preached to the congregation. Five days earlier he and Sister Likins returned from a five months' vacation in California and Michigan. June 27, they continued their journey to New Meadows where Brother Likins is employed.

Hagerman Church

Sister Jennie Condit was pleasantly surprised the evening of June 18, when about eighty friends and relatives gathered at her home to help her celebrate her birthday.

Audrey Dennis has been confined to her bed with a severe case of poison oak.

Sister Velma Abercrombie and Sister Arlie Player are attending summer school at Albion.

July 10, a birthday dinner was given in honor of Brother and Sister J. H. Condit. He was eighty-five years old July 7, and she was eighty-one July 15. Dinner was served on the lawn to seventy friends and relatives.

Plano, Illinois

There were three baptisms in this branch during June. Burdette Huen, a talented young man and the grandson of Sister Clara Southwick, Alberta Reynolds, youngest daughter of Brother and Sister Bert Reynolds, and Mrs. Vernie Mall, sister of Brother Reynolds, were the candidates.

Several members from Plano attended the district conference at Mission in June. Also others have been away on vacations.

The wedding of Brother Marion Blakely and Miss Bernice Johnson occurred June 30, and they have established their own home.

Brother Carl Ruoff, a former Graceland student, was speaker at the church on a recent Sunday evening. He has been attending the University of Missouri.

Sister Lois Wildermuth, of Denver, also a Graceland student, visited relatives here and in Aurora in June and played the wedding march at the wedding of her cousin, Doris Wildermuth. Lois is attending summer school at Northwestern University in Chicago.

Among those who have been visitors this summer were Brother and Sister Jerome F. Wildermuth and two sons, of Mansfield, Ohio; Sister Mabel Reedy, of Aurora; Sister Irene Johnson, who is spending the summer with her parents, and Mrs. Ella Stout and son, Neil, of Saint Cloud, Florida. The last named were on their way to Wisconsin to spend the summer. Mrs. Stout is recovering from a nervous breakdown and was in a hospital a few days for treatment.

Thayer Rejoices Over Conference

Members of Thayer Branch are grateful and eager to tell of a most wonderful meeting and conference which ended July 17. About two weeks of meetings were conducted by Elder W. E. Haden who gave the Saints things that will be cherished by them for ever. It was God's work carried on in its glory. The Saints were lifted up and made able to see more clearly and to know that they listened to a man of God. Brother Haden touches the hearts of the Saints, helping them to let their light shine out to the world. When he visits this branch, the members feel the presence of the heavenly Father. Indeed words poorly describe Brother Haden's missionary meetings at Thayer this month and the good they did.

Thayer Branch had looked forward to these services for a number of months, and was honored by the presence of Apostle J. F. Garver. The services of Brother Haden closed Thursday night, and Brother Garver continued on Friday night with a wonderful talk. Conference opened at ten o'clock Saturday morning and new officers were elected to some posts. Brother Clarence H. Mayo was assigned the duties of Southern Missouri publicity agent, and Sister H. E. Waite, recently from Texas, was assigned the work of district secretary and clerk. Other things were brought forward at this gathering, and the meetings throughout the day were active.

This branch is growing. The Saints are moving upward with it to the great kingdom. Brother and Sister Waite and daughter, Frances, who have just moved here from San Antonio, have been a great uplift to the group. Sister Waite is chorister, and their help has been a Godsend here.

Prayer meeting began at nine o'clock Sunday morning and lasted until 10.45. All who were present felt the influence of the Spirit of God. The meeting was in charge of Brother Garver. This was a glorious hour of prayer, and a long list of marvelous testimonies was heard.

Local members rejoiced at having so many brothers and sisters from other branches here on that occasion, and hope to see the day when they shall come in greater numbers than have yet been brought together in Southern Missouri District. They hope to have all these visitors return. May the Saints everywhere go forward in faith, in eagerness, and in the Spirit of the Holy Father.

Eastern Montana Reunion-Conference

The annual reunion and conference of Eastern Montana District was held at Fairview, Montana, July 8, 9, and 10, under the efficient leadership of District President Arthur Ritter, assisted by his counselors, L. O. Wildermuth, who is also missionary, and W. R. Hillman. Patriarch George Thorburn was also present and helped.

A few of the Saints had gathered at 8.30 a. m. the opening day, and a good spirit was present during the first prayer service. At eleven o'clock in the morning round table session was held, and early in the afternoon L. O. Wildermuth delivered a sermon on "Growth and the Abundant Life." "The Need of Zion" was the sermon theme of George Thorburn that evening.

A prayer meeting, conducted by Patriarch George Thorburn and L. O. Wildermuth, began the second day's sessions. Then came the business of the conference, A. R. Ritter, chairman. Reports from officers were read or given verbally. Officers were elected for the new year: Arthur Ritter, president of the district; L. O. Wildermuth and W. R. Hillman, counselors. W. R. Hillman was sustained bishop's agent; Joseph Barry elected secretary. This meeting was continued in the afternoon. At the close of both morning and afternoon sessions, round-table talks were held.

A lovely musical program was given by the young people that evening to the inspiration of the reunion. Then Brother Wildermuth gave a short address commending the talent displayed and the opportunities of developing talent for the service of others.

Brothers Thorburn and Wildermuth presided over the prayer meeting which marked the opening of Sunday. Following the church school, Brother Thorburn delivered a fine sermon, his theme thought being taken from John 10: 9: "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture."

Then came a baptismal service, one little boy being inducted into the church.

At noon a bountiful basket lunch was enjoyed by everyone.

The confirmation and sacrament services occupied the greater part of the afternoon, a wonderful Spirit being present. Brother L. O. Wildermuth recounted many instances in which the Spirit of God was made manifest in the lives of Saints. A large number were administered to at the close of this service, Patriarch Thorburn and Brother Wildermuth officiating.

In the evening Brother Thorburn preached a fine sermon on "Count the Cost." Several musical selections were also given.

The Saints greatly regretted that Apostle J. A. Gillen was unable to be present at the reunion.

The conference was adjourned at the close of the evening service. Few will forget the spirit of peace which was present in great power throughout the entire conference.

A Correction

Elder J. J. Cornish submits a correction of an item in the article which tells of the death of Brother William H. Fuller, page 646, Saints' Herald for July 6. According to the printed account Brother Fuller baptized Brother Harry Passman while in California, but Brother Cornish states: "Brother Passman was baptized by Brother Fuller in Detroit, Michigan. I was at the baptism and assisted him, and also confirmed Brother Passman and his friend who also was baptized at that time." Brother Cornish was president of the district.

Requests for Prayer

Mrs. E. A. Gill, who has been at Bishop, California, since early in April, is almost blind and hardly able to walk as the result of a stroke she suffered. She desires administration from elders of the church who find it possible to visit Bishop, and also wants to have some oil blessed. She would particularly like to see Brother M. A. McConley. Her house is number 416, just back of the Valley Cleaners Laundry, and her post office box is 614. She is Brother Alvin Kniseley's mother-in-law.

Our Departed Ones

OLSEN.—Leo Leslie Olsen was born June 11, 1890, in Lamoni, Iowa, and died in Phoenix, Arizona, July 13, 1932. He was the son of Austin and Dollie Olsen, and the grandson of Elder Gland Rodger, an early missionary to Australia and the South Sea Islands, who represented the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He was baptized in the church of his grandfather at the age of eight years by Elder H. A. Stebbins at Lamoni, Iowa. Most of his education was received in the State of Iowa, and in 1912, as a result of an ambition to serve others, he graduated as a pharmacist from the Babson's Highland Park College in Des Moines, Iowa. He followed his profession first in New Market, Iowa, as manager of a drug store, then successfully operated his own stores in Dallas and Melcher, Iowa. He moved to Arizona in 1926, and did relief work in Phoenix until 1929, at which time he purchased his own store at Sixteenth and McDowell Streets. On January 7, 1913, he married Lillian Stanley, and to this union were born a son, Robert, and a daughter, Margaret. He is survived by his wife Lillian; his son Robert, 14; and his daughter Margaret, 9; his mother, Dollie Olsen, (his father having preceded him by about two years); a number of other relatives, and a host of friends. His interest in business was so great that his time was completely taken up by it. It was while doing business that he made the army of friends who loved and respected him. All who knew him referred to him as an excellent and quiet gentleman. The world has lost a friend but it has gained a life patterned after righteousness. Funeral service in charge of Elder Louis J. Ostertag, July 18, 1932, from the A. L. Moore and Sons Chapel in Phoenix, Arizona. Interment was at Greenwood Memorial Park.

CAMPBELL.—Annie Nelson was born February 2, 1863, at Mayville, Michigan. Married William Burdan and to them were born five children who survive her: Mrs. Bert Gordier, of Onaway, Michigan; Mrs. Annie Fulcher, Port Sanilac, Michigan; William Burdan, Detroit; Marshall Burdan, Plymouth, Michigan, and Mrs. George Badgero, Detroit. Besides these she leaves a stepson by a later marriage, George Campbell, of Ocqueoc, Michigan; three sisters, twenty-seven grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Both husbands preceded her in death, Mr. Campbell by only two weeks. She died July 11, 1932, and the funeral was held July 13 at the Saints' church in Onaway, Elder M. J. McGuire, of Mikado, officiating, assisted by Elder T. J. Ledsworth, of Port Huron. Interment was in Tower Cemetery.

SUND.—Carrie Sund was born September 20, 1858. She was baptized into the church October 14, 1877. She had made her home with her sister, Mrs. Haskell, of Camas, Washington, for the last two years. Prior to that time she lived in Portland, Oregon, for many years, and was beloved by every man, woman, and child who knew her. Her whole life has been spent in helping others, and her greatest love was the church. She passed away February 20, 1932. Funeral services were conducted at Camas, Washington, Elder D. B. Sorden delivering the sermon. Many friends motored from Portland to attend. Sister Sund leaves to mourn, a sister, Mrs. Haskell. Mrs. Bernice Jenkins, of California, is a niece, and Carroll Olson, of Independence, Missouri, is a nephew.

FERDIG.—Lucy Ann Allen was born in Pennsylvania, February 11, 1846, and in 1850 moved with her parents to Mapleton, Iowa, in a covered wagon. The family homesteaded in Iowa. March 10, 1861, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. She was a pioneer member of the Reorganization. July 4, 1861, she was married to John Ferdig at Ambrosia, Iowa, where they lived until 1911, when they moved to Chariton, Iowa, then to Sioux City in 1920. He died May 23, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Sales. Was preceded in death by her husband in 1926. Surviving are five sons: Norman, of Sioux City, Iowa; Charles E., Filley, Nebraska; William, Black Duck, Minnesota; Elmer, Albany, Nebraska, and John, Elk Point, South Dakota; four daughters: Mrs. Lucy Everett and Mrs. Ella Scofield, Lawton, Iowa; Mrs. J. E. Sales, Sioux City, and Mrs. Viola Scofield, Missouri Valley, Iowa; two brothers, Norman Allen, Ticonic, Iowa, and William Allen, of Sioux City; fifty-nine grandchildren, and thirty-one great-grandchildren.

TAYLOR.—Fannie Smart was born January 5, 1852, at Florence, Ontario. Married Richard Marshall Taylor June 22, 1875. He preceded her in death March 11, 1901. She was baptized in June, 1874, by Elder Arthur Leverton, at Zone, Ontario, into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and was firm and faithful until death claimed her. Died April 18, 1932, at 6646 Iroquois Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, where she made her home with her youngest daughter, Mrs. W. L. Warren. She leaves to mourn, three daughters and one son: Mrs. Lovina Sussex, Lansing, Michigan; Mrs. Elizabeth C. Depew, Windsor, Ontario; Mrs. Olive May Warren, Detroit, Michigan, and Mrs. John Henry Taylor, South Bend, Indiana. One daughter, Ida Mary, died in September, 1896. Sister Taylor leaves also thirteen grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren, two sister, five brothers, one stepsister, and three step-brothers. The funeral service was held at her late residence the evening of Tuesday, April 19, at eight o'clock, by Elder W. Richards. On Wednesday her remains were conveyed to the Saints' church at Bothwell, Ontario, where she lay in state until the hour of two o'clock. The following service was in charge of Elder William R. Leverton. The sermon was delivered by Bishop John C. Dent, of London, Ontario. As had been requested by the deceased, six of her grandsons acted as pallbearers, laying her away to rest in Bothwell Cemetery at the side of her late husband.

SCHOFIELD.—Mary Schofield was born June 29, 1851, at Openshaw, England. She was born in a little street on which stood only two houses, between Ashton Old Road and what was known as Paddy's Gate on Donkey Common. Her father worked in a brick-works, where they made bricks by hand and her mother worked there, too, in the summer when they were "paring" and "walling." Mary, when eight years of age, had charge of two young babies. When she was eleven years old she worked at a paper mill. When yet a little girl she would creep quietly into Saint Silas's Church on Ashton Old Road and, afraid to be seen, would find a secluded place. When the minister passed, if she could but touch his robe, she thought it wonderful. July 19, 1910, she joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Bradford, being baptized by Elder J. W. Rushton. She was a woman who overcame all her difficulties by faith and perseverance. She reared her family of sons and daughters under difficult conditions. Passed from this earth at the age of eighty-one years, March 6, 1932, her funeral being conducted March 8, 1932, by Elder G. W. Leggott. A memorial service was held for her at the Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford, March 13, by Elder F. Tapping, Elder G. W. Leggott paying splendid tribute to her life.

SCHIMMEL.—Alice Ida W. Schimmel, wife of Elder John J. Schimmel, of Kansas City, Kansas, was born April 13, 1871, at Chester, New York. She married J. J. Schimmel October 6, 1888, and to them five children were born: Alice Matilda, deceased; Mrs. Ruth Johnson, of Methow, Washington; Mrs. Laura Johnson, Kansas City, Kansas; J. J. Schimmel, jr., Chicago, Illinois, and R. M. Schimmel, Kansas City, Kansas. She united with the church in August, 1897, and was firm in the faith and a devoted member and helper until bodily weaknesses forced her to remain at home. She died May 31, 1932, leaving besides her husband and children, five grandchildren, four sisters, and many friends. The funeral service was at the Gates Funeral Home, Kansas City, Missouri. Interment was in Mount Moriah, the sermon by Ammon White.

Words and Works

Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the work that cometh forth from the Lord.

And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them.

And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.—Ezekiel 33: 30-32.

There are two religions, which exist side by side: the religion of words, and the religion of works. Ezekiel's prophecy here is directed against a people who had only a religion of words.

Now it is too easy to condemn the religion of words, and so hinder the propagation of the gospel. A good man can spend all his life in benevolent works, and gain not one single disciple for Christ. For by the Word are all men taught.

It is also too easy to become enamoured of words, and lost among them, in error conceiving them to be the end and aim of religion. We are all acquainted with people who have talked religion all of their lives, and never lived it once.

The Kingdom of God can not be built by publicity agents. The Savior of souls is not an advertising man. In the work of the church, both of these servants are necessary, but they are not all-sufficient.

The religion of words and the religion of works are supplementary—essential parts of the same great thing. One begins his knowledge of the gospel with the words of its teaching. And that is the period of the sowing and preparation in his life. But one ends with the period of reaping of good works.

The religion of words is the necessary beginning. Some must do the teaching, and every person who is to live according to the law must be taught. But all the teaching is in vain if it does not result in a life of good works.

What would some new Ezekiel, sent by the Lord to this generation of people, have to say to them? Would he bear a message like the ancient prophet was directed by the Lord to deliver to the children of Israel? L. L.

Are the Priesthood Preparing for Their Tasks?

There are about 6,800 members of the various orders of priesthood in the church. One tries to imagine all of them as they would appear gathered together in the Auditorium at Independence. What an inspiring sight such an assembly would make!

Out of that impressive assembly of 6,800 men, if those who had procured copies of the Priesthood Manual were asked to rise, how many would there be standing?

Less than 500!

A mere handful they would be, taken here and there from the large crowd—about one in every thirteen.

Numbers of these men have written to the First Presidency again and again, during the last few years, for material that would help them to prepare for their work.

On June 15 an announcement was printed in the Herald stating that the Priesthood Manual was ready for sale and distribution. It had been prepared with considerable labor on the part of the ablest leaders of the church.

It must be emphasized that the Priesthood Manual is for all members of the priesthood: the Elders (2,000 of them); the Priests (2,100 of them); the Deacons (1,250); Teachers (1,100); all groups of High Priests (350); Seventies (100).

The sale of this important booklet ought to move faster. Pastors and district presidents could help the work among the people under them by urging a systematic study of it.

Much has been said about preparation. Efforts have been made to develop among all of the priesthood a stronger sense of leadership and responsibility.

Of course the times are hard, and many are out of work, and have families who are facing want. But it does seem that a larger number of the men who have accepted the call to positions of responsibility should make what preparation appears to be next on the program. L. L.

Harvest Home Festival Concert

A new event is scheduled for the Harvest Home Festival this fall. A Chorus of five hundred voices is being organized, composed of all the choirs and other choral organizations within a convenient distance of Independence.

This chorus, in connection with the Auditorium Orchestra, which will also be enlarged for the occasion, will present a rather unusual concert at the Auditorium on Friday night, October 14. Rehearsals are starting this week in all the local choirs in Kansas City, Independence, and nearby branches. The music is now being distributed.

In order to simplify the important matter of rehearsal most of the rehearsing will be done at the weekly local choir practice in each branch, where part of the hour will be devoted to the preparation of the festival music. In addition to these rehearsals there will be three or four united rehearsals at the Stone Church on Sundays to be announced later.

Over four hundred are now enrolled and many more are yet to be heard from. The enthusiasm which has greeted the announcement of this event is intensely gratifying and we are anticipating a packed house for the performance.

All singers are urged to support this project and to get in touch immediately with the choir leaders in their various branches and arrange for enrollment and rehearsal.

There will be no enrollment after August 21.

For further information call or write Paul N. Craig at the Auditorium.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Request for Prayers

A friend writes to ask prayers for Sister Edna Shedd Tafferty, who is ill with tuberculosis in the Mount Washington Sanitarium at Eau Claire, Wisconsin. She is badly needed at home to care for her family of small children. Unless she is healed, her children are likely to be without a mother. She said: "Only God can heal me." Her friend, Sister R. S. Perkins, of Pepin, Wisconsin, says of Sister Tafferty, "She is a true child of God, and worthy of his blessing."

Elder Hollie Dennis, of Mapleton, Kansas, is sorely afflicted, being advised by doctors that he is beyond either medical or surgical aid. He therefore requests that the Saints of the church observe a fast and offer special prayers in his behalf during the morning services of Sunday, August 7. C. C. Martin, writing for the District Presidency, transmits the request and says: "We feel that he is worthy and should be remembered as he has requested." Those to whom this request comes too late for prayers on the date mentioned are asked to pray at a later date.

Dry Facts Refute Wet Claims

Against each of the major claims of the wets, answering data and arguments have been prepared and made public by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. . . . The general assertions of the wets have been answered by specific, concrete arguments from authoritative sources as follows:

Wet Propaganda: "Prohibition enforcement costs the country billions of dollars."

Truth: Total cost of enforcement, 1920 to 1931, $284,156,524; collections from fines and penalties and revenues from taxes on lawful and distilled and fermented liquors, $548,588,884. The net is a balance in favor of the Government of $264,432,260.—Colonel Amos W. Woodcock, Director of Prohibition.

Wet Propaganda: "Prohibition has caused an enormous economic loss."

Truth: Total national wealth in 1914 was $192,000,000,000; in 1931 it was $329,700,000,000.—National Industrial Conference Board, February 20, 1932.

Wet Propaganda: "Repealing prohibition would put 1,000,000 men at work."

Truth: Department of Commerce reported to the Senate, January 11, 1932, in 1914 only 86,000 men employed in the manufacture of liquor. "Increased employment in the brewery industry would take that much away from the soft drink trade and there would be no net gain in total employees of all industries."—Bureau of Business Research, College of the City of New York.

Wet Propaganda: "Beer will bring prosperity."

Truth: "To encourage the return of the saloon or even let up our efforts to control the drink trade will injure every legitimate industry in two ways: The average worker will have fewer dollars to spend for the products of industry; second, the liquor trade will get more of these dollars which ought to go for useful industries."—Thomas Nixon Carver, Professor of Political Economy, Harvard University.

Wet Propaganda: "Beer taxed three cents a bottle would produce $1,000,000,000 a year revenue."

Truth: To raise this fabulous revenue would require a consumption of 12½ gallons of beer daily by every family in states permitting beer.

Wet Propaganda: "Repealing prohibition would permit the Government to levy an internal revenue tax on liquor amounting to $2,000,000,000 a year."

Truth: Highest liquor tax ever received was $483,000,000, which included a special war tax in 1919. Average year's liquor tax was less than 10 per cent of what wets promise.

Wet Propaganda: "Prohibition has lost billions of dollars in taxes to the Government."

Truth: In the first decade of prohibition, although cost of government increased as the country increased, the Government paid off billions of indebtedness and reduced income taxes.

Wet Propaganda: "Prohibition has increased drinking."

Truth: The Government measured the amount of hops, corn sugar, rye, barley, etc., raised and imported, subtracted amounts used in known legal enterprises and reported the amount of raw material left would make less than a third of the former liquor consumption.—Colonel Woodcock's testimony before subcommittee of House Appropriations Committee, January 21, 1932.

Wet Propaganda: "Bootleggers thrive on dry vote."

Truth: Every corrupt city administration in America has been elected on wet tickets.

"Fillers"

Brave Lad

The promise of a successful life is often written in a boy's face, and one does not have to be a prophet to read it. Inheritance, character, and training make their showing early in life.

There is one young fellow—and how old he is I shall not attempt to say—who is doing his best to contribute his part toward the support of a large family. For many months his father has been out of work, through no fault of his own.

Seeing the family crisis, this boy went to work, after school hours, selling papers and magazines. Finding that yielded a small return, he tried candy. During the summer he is pushing an extra line of ice-cold beverages, and the people in the shops wait for him to bring the refreshments on hot afternoons.

There are dozens of boys who dabble at jobs of this kind, but this boy is one of the few who work. And he does work. He is on the job every day; whatever he sells is fresh and clean; he doesn't get discouraged or sour when people do not buy. When he makes a sale he closes the transaction with a pleasant "Thank you!" And he never gives up a prospective customer.

This boy's courage and patient industry offer a thrilling example for some of the grown men who have struck hard times.

He is the kind of boy that will bear watching as he grows to manhood. He knows the meaning of work, and the worth of money. He has tasted economy and hardship, and he stands up under responsibility. He is the kind of boy that will deserve some kind of endowment for a college education. If anybody is looking for a chance to make a profitable investment in character and career, that boy offers a fine opportunity.

Perishable and Ephemeral

"Writing in the sand" is not alone a figurative occupation. At the popular beach resorts where thousands gather to escape the summer heat and to disport themselves in gay and informal attire, poor fellows with a flair for art build tiny castles, with miniature forests, mountains, lakes and streams, out of the sand. While they labor to erect these ingenious and perishable works of beauty, the gathering crowds of curious persons toss coins to them as a reward for their efforts. In a little while the tide comes in, and all their work is reduced to nothing. Their art has lasted for a few moments, provided a passing interest for the crowds, and gathered a few coins. In the same manner, sidewalk artists make sketches for whatever crowds they can gather, hoping to gather a few dimes. And in a short while the feet of pedestrians have obliterated their work.

How many of us spend our lives in doing things that do not matter, in pursuing ephemeral pleasures, and wasting precious strength to purchase things of little worth. These are all like the artistry in the sand—when the winds and tide of a single day have rolled over them we have nothing left.

If we must carve, let it be in granite; if we must buy, let it be eternal pleasures. Whatever we do, let it not be alone for the moment, but let it be something that brings us nearer to a great goal that motivates our lives.

L. L.

There is nothing so hard as to exterminate a people. Many efforts—some unconscious, other, again, indirect—have been made within historical times, but the result is always the same. Israel tried to exterminate the Canaanites, quite consciously, as we see in the story of Samuel and the Amalekites. Rome tried to exterminate the Carthaginians, but only succeeded in destroying the city. Germany tried to exterminate the Poles by the method of destroying all that gave distinctive nationality; and white men have all but succeeded in exterminating the red men in America and black men in Australia. . . . Yet in no case is extermination complete.—Stanley Rice, in The Asiatic Review.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle C. F. Ellis in Southeastern Mission

The name of Apostle Clyde F. Ellis frequently appears in Herald news as he goes about his work in one of the largest missions in the United States. His field, the Southeastern Mission, includes Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi. And one must be well supplied with railroad time-tables to follow Brother Ellis as he goes from branch to branch and district to district, helping, directing, advising, and doing the hundred and one other duties expected of an Apostle in charge.

Last Sunday he spent with the Saints in Columbus, Ohio, leaving there in time to attend the annual conference of the West Virginia District, to be held at Harmony Branch, near Washburn, August 6 and 7.

Eleven Baptized at Dunn Center, North Dakota

Eleven were baptized July 17, into the little branch at Dunn Center. The service was held at two thirty in the afternoon, and the confirmation ceremony was in charge of Missionary P. T. Anderson and Branch President Lester H. Anderson.

Elder P. T. Anderson opened meetings at Dunn Center, June 22, and continued for a number of nights with increasing attendance and interest. The time seemed most opportune for a series of sermons, and his messages were deeply appreciated.

Canadian Saints Hold Reunion-Conference in Barn Loft

Southern Saskatchewan has just completed the "finest conference in years" in the face of crop failure and other adversities. The Saints met for their four-day reunion and conference July 14 to 18, in the loft of Brother William Neill's barn, near Weyburn, which was more spacious than the average hall. In spite of the fact that this was in the crop failure region, the crowd was large. Everyone worked for the comfort of all. Food was donated, and accommodations were extended to all visitors.

Spiritual prayer meetings, the baptism of four candidates, the ordination of three young men to the eldership, and the help of such workers as Apostle J. F. Curtis, Missionary O. W. Okerlind, Elders George Jordan, and J. R. Neill, and others, made this conference outstanding in the experience of Canadian members.

Bishop Cecil Hawley Dies

Bishop Cecil Hawley, associate and counselor of Bishop Edward Ingham of Northern California District, passed away Sunday, July 24, after an illness of only a week. He was an ardent worker for the church, giving unstintedly of his time and talent, and his death comes as a shock to everyone. At the time of his death he was forty-nine years old and had been a member of the church since 1892. He occupied in a succession of offices in the priesthood, being last ordained a bishop in 1926. Besides his immediate family of a wife and six children, he leaves a host of friends and coworkers who keenly feel their loss. Especially will the Saints in California miss him. The funeral was held on Tuesday, Elder G. P. Levitt in charge.

O. B. K. Program for the Year

At a special dedication service Sunday afternoon, July 24, at Central Church, the Kansas City Stake O. B. K. organization presented its schedule of activities for the year 1932-33, a schedule which includes many phases of young people's life—worship, camp, travels, ball tournaments, dramatics, leadership training, oratory, and others. The stake O. B. K. council is proud of its program. George Mesley is president of the council.

Dedication to the work of Christ and his church, to the needs of the local church, and to the program of stake activity were themes presented at the Sunday afternoon meeting, and there was also a social service. Guests and helpers were Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Stake President C. E. Wight, Stake Bishop C. A. Skinner, Stake Missionary J. Charles May, and the stake pastors and their wives.

Elder George H. Wixom in Texas

Since General Conference Elder G. H. Wixom has baptized twelve people, and twenty since January 1. He reports the gospel work progressing in Southwestern Texas, the Saints having recently closed a successful reunion at Hearne. This reunion was attended by the following general church officers: Apostle Roy S. Budd, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, and Missionaries J. W. A. Bailey and G. H. Wixom.

In the past two months Brother Wixom has been exceedingly busy. He conducted meetings at Dallas and Marfa, Texas, made a flying visit to his home in California, calling on Saints at Portales and Albuquerque, New Mexico, Pasadena and San Bernardino, California, El Paso and San Antonio, Texas, on this trip, and attended the Hearne reunion.

Our Task

Our Preaching for Today

By D. T. Williams

Preaching is the most potent instrument the Christian church has yet found for the purpose of disseminating the philosophy of Christ. Some have prophesied that with the coming of the machine age to its maturity such devices as the printing press, the phonograph, the radio, the talking pictures, etc., would emasculate the local Sunday sermon and render it wholly nonessential to the mechanics of Christian worship.

But how unreliable such predictions have proved. The sermon, though often neglected by those who might benefit most materially by it, has continued to hold a place second to none in the meetings of Protestant denominations. The number who attend the sessions of prayer in such institutions are smaller by far than those attending the service of the spoken word. It would seem, then, that no further argument were needed to substantiate the fact that the institution of preaching is not a dead form existing with no hope for the future. Rather it is a stimulating dynamic calling for ever to higher ideals in the days ahead and better performance in the present.

Preaching has a past most interesting, a present most vital, and a future most intriguing. We are dealing here, however, not with the past with all its interests nor yet with the future with all its mysteries, but with the prosaic present and its perennial problems. What of our preaching for today? One who is earnestly seeking a better way to perform his tasks is worthy of his profession no matter how humble his work may be. But, on the other hand, the man engaged in the highest profession is wholly unworthy of it if he is not increasing his capacity and ability to serve. You or I should be interested in becoming a better preacher that we might the better serve the cause of Christ.

There is much for every man to learn concerning the promulgation of the gospel by the spoken word. And I say this regardless of how many years of experience one may have back of him. Humility, which is a willingness to learn, is the touchstone of success in preaching as well as in prayer. Being teachable is the keynote of Christ's beatitude: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness." And the benevolent promise that followed, "and they shall be filled," is just as true today as it was a thousand years ago.

Paul's notable phrase: "The foolishness of preaching," may seem to some like a lamentable confession, an indication of a weakness crowding the heart of this age-old method of presenting God's revelation to the popular imagination. But it was not considered so foolish in Paul's estimation that he ever thought it possible to get along without it. The fact that he continued to preach up to the very time of his decapitation leaves us no doubt as to how vital he felt this method to be in the work of his ministry.

If, then, there are those who would displace this manner of dispensing the truth with some more modern contrivance, let them be reminded that they are pitting their small judgment against the decision of the ages. However, we are not bold enough, considering the multitudinous devices invented to further our progress in other lines, to say that there can be no improvement over the past in this connection; but we would say that before we desecrate the decision of such a long and illustrious history it would be well to think the matter through to a careful finality. Such a method, built as it is upon centuries of vital experience, deserves the character of analysis we here suggest.

But taking it for granted that all of us believe in the continuity of the preaching method and have faith in its future as an instrument of Christian culture and spiritual power, let us move forward to the consideration of the character of preaching that should engage our attention under the distressing conditions confronting us today.

First it may be observed that the gospel of the Son of God is a sure panacea for every problem now pressing upon the sensitive nerves of our civilization. In fact there has been no age so dark and no situation so acute that light and cure could not have been found in the philosophy of the Prince of Peace if only the pains had been taken to apply his teachings.

This being true, then, we are not running as those who have no tidings. Ours is the great and outstanding hope of nations distort with problems of such magnitude as may yet break the heart of the world. Suppose the heart of our little universe is thus disrupted, is the church prepared to point the disintegrated masses to something really substantial? When that time comes, and eventually it will come, for its coming is inevitable, the preaching program of the ministry of the church must be prepared to portray before the vision of the stampeded hords the rock of ages as a sure foundation upon which they can reconstruct out of their fatal fears a "faith that will not shrink though pressed by every foe."

The preaching of today must carry with it preparation for that period, as well as possess a present tense effectiveness. The recognition of this dual responsibility imposes upon us a two-fold trust which we must not seek to evade. We must labor toward these two ends, but this does not mean that we have a divided purpose, for the realization of the one is the avenue leading toward the achievement of the other.

In consideration of these vital facts our preaching for today should consist of a content consistent with the magnitude of our responsibility. To preach our own base opinions as contrasted with the revelation of God is the grossest kind of egotism. No ministry, however well educated, would deserve to prosper on such a program of personal aggrandizement.

There is only one avenue of success in this character of service and those who would follow it will find it well marked with the signposts of humility. "Teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," can prepare our souls and the souls of those who hear for nothing more prepossessing than the condemnation of conscience quickened by the knowledge of the disapproval of our Lord.

What the present situation needs is not a multiplicity of human "isms" and "ologies," but the certitude of Godly verities. As ministers for Christ we must stand in the gateway of life not dispensing stones and serpents, but with the bread and fish of a healthy spiritual virility. It is not enough that we preach, but we must preach the truth. It is not preaching, but the truth that makes us free. Heed, therefore, must be paid to Paul's admonition to Timothy, "Preach the truth, be instant in season and out of season."

Preaching for today must constitute a reinterpretation of the fundamental Christian truths in the light of our immediate and pressing needs. To present the same basic facts in the same setting and with the same emphasis as a century ago is to talk to a generation of dead men through the ears of the living. Our gospel must be a living reality—a present tense factor in human experience. If it isn't this is isn't the gospel of the Carpenter of Calvary.

Any truth that has the ability to burn its way into the souls of men must be an answer to a deep and present yearning. An answer to the ever-intruding problem is the conscious need of men everywhere. The gospel, therefore, must be modern in its application and like its divine teacher, never out of date.

The needs of today are in many ways more complex and more unanswerable from a human point of view than those confronting the world in any previous age. But all these can and must be answered out of the philosophy of the Great Physician. If this were not so Christ would cease to be all-sufficient and would fail as the ultimate hope of the human race.

This is the machine age, but it does not of necessity follow that the gospel must become a matter of mechanical devices to meet the challenge the age presents. Indeed, quite to the contrary to mitigate the lamentable condition generated through this strange combination of mechanical horsepower and human genius it will be necessary to give recognition to the influences which are the very antitheses of the hard unflinching forces against which the souls of men are thrown.

But regardless of the character of the age in which we live the fundamental wrongs and the fundamental truths are quite the same today as they were a thousand years ago. Greed is still pitted against love, and selfishness against fellowship; and whether the basic facts of our economic life is set in warm flesh or cold steel matters little in the last analysis. Attitudes are the things that really matter; so the preaching of the Sage of Nazareth is just as effective in principle today as in any period, for while the hand deals with things material the soul is still concerned with the matters of the spirit.

For this reason the fundamentals of our present preaching must carry forward the basic facts taught on the hills of Galilee and the mountains of Judea. The challenge of Christ to this generation is the challenge of an old truth to a new age. It calls for the application of a policy revealed to poets, philosophers and prophets of a day far gone to the problems and possibilities of an age which must seem to us most unpoetic and unprophetic.

If in a far less complicated civilization when the spiritual needs of humanity were not so manifestly revealed as today, a man of Paul's mental and spiritual equilibrium should become so responsive to his responsibility as to exclaim, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," what should be the attitude of the ministry who live in such an age as the present?

In these stressing and distressing times men and women it would seem need God more than in any previous age. About us on every hand are competitive forces which can be met only by the forces of a righteous determination. The preaching of today must be of that quality which will stiffen the spiritual nerve and moral stamina of the present generation to face with courage and vision the prospects for good and for ill and from these possibilities choose the elements which can be worked into a present tense program making for an immediate as well as a future happiness.

Our preaching for today must have foresight and vision backed with a powerful dynamic such as led Christ to sacrifice his home in the eternal world and his earthly comforts among men for the salvation of earth's unfortunate children. "As my Father hath sent me so send I you," sums the matter up for us. It was clearly the intent of Jesus that his ministry should go forth in the same spirit and under the same impulsion as he himself had undertaken his tremendous and spectacular mission.

It is for us as those representing that ancient company of Christian followers to develop such a program as will be prophetic in its outlook and courageous in its application. Otherwise Zion can not be a reality and the kingdom of God will prove only a farce; being reduced from a thing of beauty to a laughingstock for the vulgar.

The world is sighing for a practical message; one which when applied will answer the problems of today. One that will reduce taxes, increase wages, and justly distribute wealth, eliminate slavery, ignorance, superstition, vice, poverty, sickness and premature death and at the same time expand into a spiritual culture that will enlarge the souls of all men who come in contact with it.

The preacher of today who ignores these facts must do so at his spiritual peril. Again let us assert, the gospel of Christ has within it the elements of a successful response to these magnetic problems. Gigantic as they may seem, such problems as these compose a challenge to Christianity from which it can never escape as long as it maintains its claim as a universal religion.

To fulfill this dual function the preacher must be both spiritual advisor and economist. Either that or the ministry must be divided into two classes each specializing in his particular responsibility. And the latter we see ourselves rapidly approaching since one part is a sufficiently difficult part of play in itself.

In light of these varied tasks it behooves each of us to accept the arduous portion allotted to us with courage and vigor moving forward to the distinctive achievements that await our coming.

There are few things about which we can be certain in this life. It does not become us, as serious men and women, to permit ourselves to indulge in the current facetiousness concerning those certainties. Destiny, God, and the immortal soul are important.

After Twenty-five Years

By Estella Wight

"Did you know," said President Frederick M. Smith's voice over the telephone, "that this year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of Estella Wight's coming to the Herald Office?"

The Managing Editor was so startled that he gulped an ineffective reply, and nearly choked on it. "Fred M." has a faculty for remembering things like that—anniversaries, records of distinguished service, and such.

"Don't you think we ought to do something about it?" continued President Smith's voice.

We did. As one other of the office workers said, "That's something to make a fuss over!"

Some of the "fuss" was duly and happily made in a memorable gathering of editors at the home of President McDowell.

Among the things we wanted was this article by Sister Wight about her editorial experiences.

Now Sister Wight is very modest. And it is only with the greatest reluctance that she consents to write about herself at all. The Managing Editor begged, coaxed, and pleaded. Then he tried mild bribery, which also failed. Finally he offered to trade such and such quantities of stories and editorial goodies for the manuscript. But all of these devices failed most miserably. Finally he thought of a ruse. It was his last chance, but he was determined to "work it" for all it was worth.

He gave up! Of course he had to work a bit of drama and mock hysterics into the act, but the effect was that he gave up. Sister Wight could withstand everything but that. That one thing conquered her. And she produced the article. Here it is.—The Editors.

"How about an article for the Herald on 'Looking Back Over Twenty-five Years of Editorial Work'?"

The question came bounding toward me from the far corner of the editorial room like a swift ball over the net of a tennis court. With my usual caution in the face of either balls or such startling questions, I had a strong inclination to dodge. At the moment I was absorbed in the task of preparing material for the next number of Stepping Stones, and my first silent reflection was that while confronting each day's tasks, there never had seemed to be much time to think about what had happened last year, or five years ago, or ten. I felt as I thought a man might who has had a big family to provide for, and has been kept so busy trying to find their necessities in the matter of food and clothing for today, that he has never taken time to glance back and see how he had done it yesterday. No, my big family of Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope readers hadn't given me much time for that either.

Nevertheless, for the past year or two, I had been looking forward to the month of May, 1932, which date, (if my work in this capacity continued until then) would round out a quarter of a century since the Board of Publication had placed my name on the staff as assistant editor of Zion's Hope.

"Just hand me a three-thousand word article about circumstances leading up to this work, your introduction to it, and some of the outstanding features in connection with your experience." This briefly outlined requirement, following the question, was offered in the most matter-of-fact tone, as though the assignment were the easiest thing in the world to carry out. I assured Mr. Lea, the Managing Editor of the Saint's Herald, that it wasn't, that writing an article for the Herald was entirely out of my line, but he didn't seem to notice my objections. Instead, he kept right on talking, as though the matter were already settled. Before he finally stopped, I was obliged to take some retrospective glances and make a few mental notes on past experiences, preliminary to the task of putting them down on paper.

Twenty-five years, set out and isolated from the rest of one's life, can hardly make a story complete in itself. Some background is needed, and were I to begin at the beginning of my earliest acquaintance with one of the papers that has always meant so much to me, it would be necessary to drop back still another twenty-five years farther into the past—a half century, if you please, involving the great risk of somebody guessing at the quantity of birthdays. But after all, what does that matter, since white hair and numerous "crow tracks" will persist in telling secrets? And now, since the Editor has called my attention to this long-time trail, the present is for a time forgotten while my vagrant thoughts stray off and go

A-roaming in the Past

Memory recalls the picture of an old-fashioned farmhouse set on the crest of a hill. There is a long stretch of woodland, beginning at its very doorway, and extending down the valley, farther than the eye can see. There are wide, sun-swept expanses of green meadows and fields of growing corn. There are apple, and peach, and cherry trees, a vegetable garden, and an abundance of roses and old-fashioned flowers.

Inside the farmhouse, the furnishings are simple and plain, but there is a homey atmosphere. The father's skillful hands have made some of those pieces of furniture, as they have also built the kitchen and constructed the neat, roomy cupboards in the pantry. His is a cheerful spirit, with speech abounding in wit, coming from a merry heart that "doeth good like a medicine," and which even the toil and many hardships of a pioneer life have failed to override.

The mother's hands are equally busy. From her childhood days back in an old English home, they have been accustomed to run with skill the long seam, to do the finest of hemming on sheer, white garments, and to fashion delicate laces. Truly "She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness." She, too, has experienced the privations and hardships of pioneer life, and knows something, also, of those bitter days of '44 in old Nauvoo when the hopes of the church met with disaster and woe. Her faith has more than once been tried to the utmost, but being of that enduring quality that is builded upon a rock, it has withstood the storms and stresses of life, and will continue to do so unwaveringly to the end.

There are grown-up daughters in the picture (two of them), a grown-up son, and a sober-eyed, studious, adolescent youth, who is planning a future and dreaming ambitious dreams while he works. These have brought into the home music and books, and all the high aspirations and ideals that clear-eyed ambitious young people are wont to love and cultivate. The books are not many, but they are the right sort, and are read and discussed by all the family. Among them are always to be found the church books, and on the table beside the newspaper and magazine are the Saints' Herald and the other church papers. The mother has seen to that. They, too, are read and they are also discussed. All the inmates of this quiet farm home are acquainted with things going on in the outside world, and though isolated from church privileges, they keep in close touch with all its doings and progress.

In the living room of the farmhouse, lying flat on her stomach on the rag carpet, a small girl in a red print dress is poring over old papers. A long braid of dark hair, tied at the end with a crumpled ribbon, falls over either shoulder. Occasionally one of these is pulled forward, the end interwoven back and forth through her fingers, while her eyes follow uninterruptedly the serial story of "Maplewood Manor," or possibly "Nil Disperandum," or an equally fascinating short story which absorbs all her attention. The bundle of papers containing them consists of some of the very early numbers of Zion's Hopes. Several volumes of them have been carefully preserved and sewed together with strong cord by her mother's hands for the family's use, and especially for its younger members. That they have all made use of their privilege is plainly evident by the dog-eared and worn appearance of the papers, and the stories have so often been discussed together as to make a lasting impression on the mind of each one.

It was about this time that this small country girl in the red print dress occasionally began looking about for a pencil and a piece wrapping paper. Tablets were too expensive in those days for common use. One used them only for writing letters, and was carefull not to waste a sheet even for that purpose. With some sort of a vague notion of somehow learning the art of story writing, she toilsomely scribbled her thoughts down on the scraps of wrapping paper and hid them away in the box of her own personal possessions. There they would be kept some weeks, or perhaps months, taken out occasionally, looked over with a feeling of dissatisfaction, destroyed, and new attempts made whenever that strange urge came which would never let her rest until some kind of an effort had been made.

A few years later, when her oldest sister Sina was contributing stories and articles for both the Autumn Leaves and Zion's Hope, and had become an intimate friend with their editor, Sister Marietta Walker, the small girl, now grown into adolescent years, timidly approached her one day with two very short, very simple little stories. They were the first she had ever ventured to show anyone.

The grown-up sister read them, looked pleased, suggested they be sent to Sister Walker for the Hope, and forthwith took upon herself the responsibility of doing so. The young girl was not only thrilled when a card of acceptance came back from Sister Walker, but she was also startled; for, added to the acceptance was an invitation to her to write a story each week for the Hope. More than this, she was amused at the suggestion, for it had taken her slow-working brain weeks to concoct those first two stories, to write and rewrite, construct and reconstruct them, till they were passably satisfactory to herself. So that by the time the process had been finally completed, she had a feeling that they were the first, last, and only ones she could ever accomplish. The fountain was dry. Imagination was at a low ebb. There seemed to be nothing else to write about.

However, an idea bobbed up now and then, and whenever the urge came, as it did with more frequency after that, she continued to try, occasionally sending short manuscripts to the editor to help a little towards supplying the needs of the Sunday school paper she loved. How much she owes for the kindly encouragement and suggestions Sister

Walker gave in return for those simple manuscripts, the young author has never been able to determine, but has realized the debt is a great one.

Not long after the acceptance of those first stories she went to Lamoni and with her sister, Sina, called on Sister Walker. From the moment of that meeting the latter became to her a friend, a teacher, an advisor, and a literary counselor, directing her mind into new fields of thought, and urging her constantly to greater efforts.

I can assure you that it was with never a thought of whither all this might be trending, that I, as that young girl, was inspired by her confidence in me to write the little stories she requested, nor did I dream of such a thing as ever taking up with her any special work, other than merely aiding by sending in a story now and then as I could find time to write in the midst of my daily work. But I wanted to help her, I loved to help her, and was desirous of serving the church in any way I could.

During those childhood and adolescent years I was busy with the many small tasks and duties that fall to the lot of the average girl on a farm. A small farm home may seem a very simple and humble background, but a good many lessons can be learned there that will prove helpful in future years, if one is observing and willing to be taught. One learns lessons of patience while caring for sitting hens (that was the day before brooders were so universally used and the hen was allowed to mother her own flock.) You learn to love small, helpless things, and to care for them while you are helping those mother hens protect their babies.

You learn the meaning of responsibility, too, knowing that your clothes next winter, and possibly even your bread and butter depend on the eggs those chickens are going to provide. And so, when one of those old-fashioned, violent storms, so typical of northern Missouri, comes bellowing out of the west, and with its deluging sheets of water catches a dozen or so mother hens far afield with their broods, and sweeps seventy-five or a hundred frightened, helpless chicks into fence corners, woodpiles, and under the gooseberry bushes, you throw caution to the winds. You don't even wait till the ominous thunder peals let up or the rain stops pouring. You simply grab an old coat or a shawl and dash out into the marsh-like yard and garden, wade through the rain-soaked grass and spattering pools, and you gather up their pitiful, limp, drenched little bodies out of the mud and water by the dozen into your apron, and dash back to the house. There you spread them around the kitchen stove, cover them with warm rags, and rush out again for more.

When all you can find have been brought in, the work of warming and resuscitating is begun in earnest. A goodly proportion of their number respond to your efforts, but the rest are literally and figuratively dead losses. You count the yeping yellow bills of those recovered, and take them back to the comforting shelter of anxious mother wings, and then you count the "dead losses," and carry them out to a shallow grave. That day, and the day when you took eggs six miles to town in a lumber wagon and received only five cents a dozen were times when you discovered there could be such misfortunes in the world as "financial depressions." But when evening came, you went out and took another inventory of your chicken yard, then you gathered the eggs, arranged fresh straw in the nests, and placing new sittings of eggs under clucking hens, started all over again.

However, your sorrow and your disappointment could not all be placed under the head of mere financial loss. You had lived so near to those chickens, becoming so familiar with their individual traits and characteristics, that they seemed almost human to you. There was real grief in their loss.

Yes, the small farm in northern Missouri was rich in life and life lessons as that one small girl found out during the passing years. Although standing in some fear of the larger animals, the horses and cows and hogs, there was nevertheless a never-ending source of amusement to be found in the smaller ones, the fowls and the birds. A small black spaniel wasn't much account for driving the cattle, or anything else as a matter of fact, but he made a dandy companion. As for cats—they were more than comfortably plenty to suit the rest of the family but never too many so far as I was concerned. Any child that has never experienced the thrill occasioned when her pet tabby comes calling with the gentlest entreaties, and tolls her along to where the new baby kittens lie sleeping in their basket, has missed a most precious thing in life. To be the first one of all the household to be intrusted with her great secret! You are her sole confidant, and she is so proud to show them to you, that her joy reaches the height of ecstasy when you stoop to stroke her and exclaim over the loveliness of her children. How she trusts you!

But I become suddenly conscious in my thought wanderings that I am supposed to be writing a dignified article for the Herald! I was not asked to write about chickens and cats. Please pardon, and if this does not sound like a real, honest-to-goodness grown-up article, will you charitably remember that for lo, these many years I've grown so accustomed to writing for younger folks that I can not seem to get away from the things that are near to their hearts.

I know they are near to their hearts, too, because I have never forgotten those childhood thrills over Nature's friendships. I may be climbing rapidly towards sixty, but I don't seem to feel so terribly far away from that little girl who used to love to lie flat down in the tall bluegrass, make-believe it was a forest jungle, and watch the ants follow their tiny winding trails. Imagination gave to those small creatures all the color and life and intelligence of humans, and concocted marvelous tales of wonder and adventure in their subterranean caverns.

Wild flowers and forest trees were second only to animal and feathered friends. A very close second, indeed, for they seemed ever gifted with more than mere plant powers. I knew nothing about their long, botanical names, but was on common speaking terms with wood and prairie violets and the graceful black-eyed susans. The wayside sumac provided abundant and colorful millinery material for my doll hat shop, and the pig-nut hickories a shelter and support for my rope swing.

How does all this lead up to the writing of children's stories, and twenty-five years of work in a close, shut-in office with its atmosphere of books and papers, high-topped desks, and musty files? you ask. The most natural way in the world. I began writing during those childhood and adolescent years when I lived much of the time outdoors with the trees, the flowers, the chickens, and the cats. My first published story was written about my favorite cat; my second one about a wild flower. They were the things I knew and the things I loved. They were of utmost importance in my small world.

Just here may I pause to pass along a suggestion to young people who are aspiring to be authors? Begin by writing about the things with which you are familiar. The gray squirrel, frolicking through the branches of the maple in your back yard is as remarkable in character and habits as the African monkey that dangles his long limbs in a coconut palm; the chalice of a prairie buttercup is as golden as the heart of an Egyptian lily, and the wee, downy chick is more cunning than the most aristocratic babies of birddom. There are boundless resources on every hand, and they are yours only for the going after. You may have to seek for them in storm and in rain, but you will value them all the more for the price paid.

Meantime my "book" education was being looked after in a fairly regular fashion by study at home under the tutorship of my mother, or, whenever they were at home, by my older sisters and a brother, who were teachers, and at other times by an attendance at the country school. When I had thus completed a course in the common branches and "graduated," as it were, from the country school, and from chicken raising as a vocation, I went out to teach. After two winters of teaching I took up the study of shorthand and typing, then went to Argentine, Kansas, to work in the law office of my brother-in-law, who was at that time city attorney there. Later, my help being needed at home, I went back. My father having died, our farm was sold, and we moved to Lamoni, where I worked in a department store for a year. At the end of that time our home was broken up by the death of my oldest sister and my mother, so again I went to the city to take up stenographic work, gaining general office experience in positions that were opened to me.

By and by there came a demand in the church for the services of a stenographer to give full time in assisting various members of the Order of Evangelists by reporting and transcribing patriarchal blessings. I agreed to travel from place to place, attend reunions, district conferences, and two-day meetings, and give stenographic help where it was desired. I found joy and inspiration in this field of service. It was a pleasure, too, visiting among the Saints in the various places and trying to contribute to their happiness. Most of the summers and part of the winters for four consecutive years were devoted to this department of church work, and during that time it was my fortunate privilege to enjoy many happy spiritual experiences that I had no desire to forego for positions that would have brought greater material remuneration.

At the close of this four-year period, however, it seemed to me that service in this direction was not so much needed. By this time more stenographers were available. Almost anywhere the help of one could be secured for a few days, so it was not so necessary for one individual to travel about from place to place as a reporter. Besides, this, while my most necessary expenses had been met, it seemed advisable that I begin to make some provision for the future.

It was in the beginning of the year 1907 that I found myself in this situation, wondering whether there still remained work in the church for me to do, or if it might be better now to obtain a secular position. All during these years I had been occasionally writing short stories for Zion's Hope at Sister Walker's request, but the thought of ever having any permanent regular work in that line had not occurred to me. The future seemed impenetrable. But evidently a turning point in my life had come, and I was uncertain which way to go.

There was but one source to which I might safely go for direction and guidance. From earliest childhood I had been accustomed to taking difficult problems to that One who is all-wise and considerate of his children. I had faith that he would answer my prayer for guidance, for he had done so many, many times. And so, one day, in February I think it was, I went to my room, and kneeling down placed the matter before Him, confident that he would hear and answer.

Nor was I disappointed. Almost instantly, and with unmistakable clearness, many things were portrayed to me in an open vision, and the voice of the Spirit spoke directly to my consciousness, giving me the privilege to choose certain ways presented. With that privilege, however, there came a realizing sense of my own lack of wisdom, and the greatness of such a responsibility. Carefully, in those few brief moments, I tried to weigh values, and carefully I sought to discover that which might be wisest and best. Finally I asked my heavenly Father to decide as he desired things for me, promising that I would abide by that decision.

Immediately the vision closed, and I felt that he had made decision, though with no definite knowledge of what the result was to be. But I had no fear. I could wait now, knowing that the future was in the hands of my Master, that he held the keys to the unknown, and that he would lead aright.

Judging Points for the Harvest Home Festival

By Paul N. Craig

The exhibition of produce and gifts to the Harvest Home Festival has an artistic value that is distinctly important and results in a highly attractive exhibition.

The artistic display of these exhibits should be encouraged and the contest for the most attractive booth adds interest and stimulates our best efforts at artistic expression. A few suggestions may be of help to exhibitors.

The principal features to be considered are the four main points to be used by the judges in awarding decisions: They are: originality, composition, and design, color harmony, and suitability of materials used in decoration.

• An important point to emphasize first in planning your booth is the character, size, and possible lighting of the space in which your booth is to be placed; its relation to other booths and its location in the room. Make your plans to suit these limitations.

1. Originality. The world is always delighted when something new is discovered or invented. An original idea in art and science command immediate attention. If you can plan an original idea for your booth you have a big advantage.

2. Composition and design require a little study. There are excellent articles and books written on the subject that will help you immensely. A consultation with the librarian at the public library or some inquiries of an artistic friend on the subject will give you excellent ideas. The same sources of information will help you on the next point (3. Color Harmony). Composition and design involve the placing of main objects in the exhibit to maintain balance on the same principle that equal weights are placed on each side of a scale to obtain balance; the arranging of the decorations and all details of design to focus on the main attractions and keep the eye interested within the picture.

3. Color Harmony. Choice of color makes a great difference in the appearance of any exhibit. One should remember the complementary colors, which go well together: red and green, violet and yellow, orange and blue. Good effects can be achieved with combinations of light and dark shades of any one color. The reader will notice that in combinations of different colors, a predominance of the brighter color (as orange, yellow) will give a more cheerful effect than a predominance of the darker color.

This year it is planned to have a colonial scheme of decoration, (on account of the George Washington Bicentennial) and the colonial patriotic colors, red, white, and blue, will be in evidence.

4. Suitability of materials. The last point has a value which places it as one of the foremost points for judging. The most important thing in the booth is the exhibit which consists of produce in its various forms of preservation, canned and natural. These lend themselves readily to decorating: there are the many colored fruits and vegetables in glass cans, the colored labels of the tinned goods, the drab potatoes, the sunny pumpkins, carrots, corn, wheat, rye, and barley, and other grains on their stems. To these may be added other products of nature: foliage, some species of grasses and shrubs, flowers, and stones. These would be the most suitable materials for decoration for a Harvest Home Festival, combining as little other foreign materials as possible. Crepe paper representations of harvest products and symbols are good. Whatever else is used should in no way cover up the exhibit, but should enhance it.

Nature produces a vast store of decorative material which is inexpensive, adaptable and quite suitable to harvest festival decoration. The wise exhibitor will consider this point well, for it will be the strongest judging point in the contest this fall.

This will be an economical method of decorating. It is very desirable and proper to keep down expenses this year. The expensively equipped booth will have no advantage this fall.

The Truth About Liquor

By A. E. Phillips

NUMBER TWO

In the last address I presented statistical and other proof that the liquor business has been and is destructive of human freedom; that it has always been an evil in society and the home, that its record is a record of crime and deception; that its supporters have often been lawless and untrustworthy, and that life, liberty, and happiness have been constantly ignored and trampled upon by its wanton emissaries and users. To this appalling list of evils chargeable directly to liquor and its supporters, I now add other challenging indictments, every one of which is proved by facts that can not be disregarded.

Permit me to say that the statements I shall make, astonishing as some of them are to those who know little of the evils of liquor, are not overdrawn. On the contrary, I shall call attention to only a very few of the many proofs available. I have not the slightest desire to misrepresent the facts of the matter. The truth itself is what we need, and, I trust, is what the people of this country want to know. If these facts are shocking to the citizens of our land, it only proves how necessary it is that we do not return to the horrible conditions that prevailed when this evil was licensed and allowed to prey upon innocent people under the guise of lawful business. But those who are actuated by avarice, lust, or perverted appetites, are of necessity prejudiced witnesses, and such witnesses will not state the impartial truth.

Alcoholic Liquors Destroy Health

You will get the truth from those who are honestly seeking the health, morality, and well-being of the whole people. A great variety of misleading and untrue claims have been circulated by the liquor interests to convince people that beer, wine, and other alcoholic beverages are good for the health, and even doctors of questionable motives have been induced to make statements to that end. Investigation of these claims overwhelmingly proves them to be false or viciously misleading. In 1931 Doctor Evans, recognized health authority, exploded this notion. He states concerning alcohol:

Physicians have tried it for the cure of many diseases. Having found it valueless and even harmful they have discontinued using it in disease after disease, until now it is not claimed to be a cure for anything. . . . Based in part on this extensive experience and, in part, on other basic facts, the conclusion is justified that alcohol beverages have no place in the treatment of disease. They are neither specific to be used as cures nor are they therapeutic agents of value as secondary or contributing remedies. Practically, they are without value as medicinal drugs, just as they are without value as foods.—Alcohol Neither Food Nor Medicine.

Anyone who tells you that alcoholic drinks are good for you, is either a mouldy back number or is deliberately attempting to mislead you. The facts are so widely recognized today that twenty-four of the states of our union have prohibited intoxicating liquor of any kind for medical use. Not only is it harmful in cases of sickness, but it is also dangerous as a beverage, even in moderate quantities. Doctor Saleeby, of London, England, an authority of international fame, states concerning moderate drinking:

It causes moderate drunkenness, and this drunkenness goes through the body, and when it is maintained, the result is the destruction of the race.—Scientific Temperance Simplified, page 3.

Doctor Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University, states specifically some of the diseases that it produces. Among other things he says:

While it can not be said to cure any disease, it does undeniably cause thousands of cases of disease, all of them fatal in the long run. Its use is ruinous to kidneys, liver, heart, and the smaller blood vessels, and gives rise to that most common fatality, high blood pressure. . . . Its high potency as a dangerous drug is a million times more hurtful than any conceivable advantage. It has no place in medical practice.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, pages 66, 67.

The person who drinks even moderately takes his life in his hands, for when he is stricken by some deadly disease his chances of recovery are enormously reduced. Statistics have been scientifically obtained concerning the death rate in pneumonia and tuberculosis. They show that in cases of pneumonia more than fifty-two per cent of those who are immoderate drinkers die; twenty-five per cent of moderate drinkers die; but less than nine per cent of those who do not take alcoholic drink of any kind die in cases of this disease. In cases of tuberculosis nearly twenty-two per cent of alcoholic patients die, while less than ten per cent of patients die who do not drink intoxicants. The old outlawed King Alcohol is so dangerous that forty-six states now require the schools to give instruction on the subject.

Alcoholic Liquors Menace Our Lives

Make no mistake! the legalizing of liquor will not remove its poisonous nature, nor will it lessen its fatal effects upon those who drink it. But it will greatly add to the hazards of the whole people. Do not be deceived by the false claims of emissaries that conditions are worse than before prohibition. Accurate statistics prove otherwise. Doctor Emerson shows that the death rate from alcoholism is now twenty-five per cent less than it was before prohibition. Statistics also show that the death rate from alcoholism is much more in "wet" states than in "dry" states, and that there is less delinquency from alcoholism, less brutality and neglect of children, and fewer crimes against chastity than there were under liquor license.

It is an absolute certainty that legalized liquor will make more difficult its control. It will increase its use among drinkers, and will produce fearful results in deaths by auto drivers who drink. Let no one suppose that any drinker must be drunk to imperil the lives of others. Mr. Stoeckel, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles in Connecticut, disposes of this notion, and states:

The really dangerous driver is the man who has had one or two drinks only, who still thinks he is in possession of his faculties but his judgment has been slightly impaired. On the public highways moderate drinking is more dangerous than immoderate, and on this account the authorities in order to protect the public safety must reckon with the effects of moderate drinking.—Ibid., page 61.

In Canada they are having serious trouble with the liquor question, and at another time I shall present some facts which prove how false are the claims of certain booze boosters that Canada is having success with licensed liquor. It is quite otherwise. It is so serious there that the government requires schools to teach some of its dangers. For instance they state:

The first effect of drinking alcohol is to lessen one's self control. . . . Even small quantities of alcohol cause a man to lose the fine coordination of all his movements. . . . Those who value "Safety First," either for themselves or for others, should abstain from alcohol in any form. . . . There is no reason to doubt the testimony of scientists and life insurance experiences, that the so-called moderate use of alcohol shortens life. . . . It has been found that these evil effects have been transmitted to the children.—Ibid., pages 87, 88.

Who is there with a single grain of common decency that wants to give his children such heritages as these? The chairman of a leading organization opposed to prohibition admitted in Current History for April, 1928, that those who opposed national prohibition for selfish reasons were drinkers, or financially interested in the liquor business. Such as these will excitedly claim that bootleg liquor is killing thousands today, but the same sort of people called it heart's disease when a drunkard died before prohibition days. Railroads have long been compelled to prohibit drinking by train crews, for the safety of people.

We have about four times as many automobiles in the United States as there were before prohibition went into effect. This would normally increase the hazard of deaths by auto to nearly eight times as many, but they have not in fact increased one third of this ratio. Evidently the return of legalized liquor would result in many thousands of deaths more than at present. In 1919, the year before prohibition became our law, there were about seven hundred and seventy-two automobiles for each death by auto, while in 1926 there were under prohibition about one thousand one hundred and seventeen automobiles for each death by auto, notwithstanding the fact that there were about three times as many automobiles in 1926, and therefore greatly increased hazards for each driver. At the present time a large part of the deaths and accidents by auto are caused by those who drink. An increase of this number, which would be sure to result by legalized liquor, would be the means of killing a great many more people.

Liquor Breeds Contempt for Law

Do you want to kill off thousands of innocent people, perhaps some of your own loved ones and friends, by voting to make lawful such an iniquitous business? The person who will deliberately support the unlawful and dangerous schemes of those who care very little for the good of the people, should pause and consider the fearful consequences. It is said by some that people break the law just because it prohibits the use of liquor. I do not believe this is true of any great number; but if so, it would prove that such persons are willing to violate laws made to protect themselves, their friends, and other people. Such an example is criminal, and is destructive of the life, well-being, and happiness of the people of this nation. I refuse to believe that the majority of the people are evil enough to viciously commit such wanton acts in order to bring misery and suffering upon others.

If people are so degraded that they take pleasure in human calamity, it is doubtless the result of the liquor vice, and is not natural to human nature. This is but another good reason why the liquor business should never be legalized. The wets claim that crime has increased since prohibition, but they neglect to state that figures issued by the United States Department of Commerce show that the percentage of crime to population decreased after prohibition, as shown by the Department figures for 1923. It was at this time that the Wets began organized opposition to the Eighteenth Amendment prohibiting liquor. They began a deliberate campaign in which the Wets were urged to break the law and force their unlawful will upon the people. Shall they force lawful citizens to yield to their immoral and criminal tactics? God forbid!

It is almost certain that any increase of lawlessness in recent years is largely due to propaganda and efforts made by liquor supporters, and to the fact that the Narcotics Law, the Mann and Dyer Acts, and some of the movies have presented problems that did not formerly exist. The lawless influence exerted by organizations opposed to prohibition was under discussion at the hearing of the Subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations in January, 1932, and several such organizations were named. The lengths to which such persons will go in the effort to defeat the law is shown by Mr. Blanton when discussing one well-known organization headed by a woman of New York, of which he states:

This is the first time I have ever known in the history of the one hundred years' fight for prohibition of women being used actively in an organization against it. They have always been for it. My friend from Massachusetts objected to your using women to enforce the law. I object to the use of women to prevent enforcement of the law, which is being done in that instance.—Bureau of Prohibition Hearings, page 120.

That the liquor business breeds lawlessness is proved by thousands of instances. Let any who may be inclined to support such lawlessness on the part of their friends remember that government itself is undermined when there is no respect for law. Let them also ponder the fact that there never was a law that some one did not object to, and if we were to yield to vicious efforts against the law, it would bring down upon our heads the whole structure of our government, and safety, uprightness, and decency would give way to anarchy, crime, and corruption. The thief, the robber, the drug addict, the rake, oppose upright laws, and sometimes their ill-advised friends support them in their efforts to disregard such laws enacted to protect society. They are not the bulwarks of the nation, but are a menace to prosperity, progress, and happiness.

Does Prohibition Produce Crime?

After much experience with the lawless Wets, one learns to discount their claims, from the fact that their claims are hardly ever correct, and usually are quite misleading. One of their pet claims is that prohibition has produced a fearful wave of increased crime in the United States. It is probably true that the passage of such Acts of law as we have named would naturally list as criminals some who before that time were not so listed, simply because the laws had not previously existed, and therefore such evil persons escaped any persecution. Some in the organizations opposed to prohibition have not only tried to prevent the enforcement of the law, as reported by the United States Department of Justice, but they have also encouraged violations of the law, and thus have added to crime. Aside from these elements, none of which can honestly be charged to prohibition, crime has had a marked decrease. Doctor Kirchwey, former Commissioner of Prison Reform in New York State, and President of the American Institute of Criminal Law, speaks with authority on this question. He says:

Let us take courage from the official record covering the eighteen years 1910 to 1927 inclusive, which shows a marked decline of from thirty-five to forty per cent in the general crime rate in the United States, and this notwithstanding the immense number of "new crimes," resulting from liquor, drug, and traffic laws enacted since 1910.—Prohibition Facts, page 20.

These facts are clearly supported by the World Almanac for 1932, in its table of homicides, other felonies, and intoxication, shown by arrests in New York City. In the five "wet" years 1912 to 1916, for each 100,000 of population, there were 7.5 homicides, 247.4 other felonies, and 458.9 cases of intoxication per year. But in the five "dry" years, 1926 to 1930, the ratio was only 5.7 homicides, 212.3 other felonies, and 200.1 cases of intoxication. This shows 129 per cent more intoxication before the prohibition law was passed than occurred in a like period under prohibition (see Prohibition Facts, page 21). Minneapolis also showed a marked decrease in crime in the "dry" years 1928, 1929, compared with the "wet" years before the war, 1915, 1916.

That crime is not increasing because of prohibition is indicated even in Chicago, which showed a big decrease in crime in 1931, compared with 1927. Other cities show similar trends. Contrast this with the insufferable conditions that existed when liquor was lawful. For instance, in 1906 the Chicago News made this statement:

Vice and depravity are openly traded in as a commodity in Chicago. This public emporium of immorality and degradation exists by virtue of a regularly organized, protected, organization whose members laugh at law.—Prohibition Facts, page 24.

Support the Law-abiding People

Let us not join hands with those who have trampled upon the law and decency. Rather let us unite in support of morality, honor, and laws that prohibit criminal and disgraceful things that menace upright people. The immorality and crimes of liquor lust can never be purified and made respectable by plunging the people more deeply into the drink evil. Retreat means shameful defeat, increased crime, and vice on every hand. To unitedly support the splendid gains we have made, is the only way to preserve virtue and an unstained banner for our children.

A Standard for the Priesthood

(This set of standards was formulated by the active members of the priesthood of Kansas City Stake after five month's discussion of the various problems. George Mesley, who has kindly furnished the copy, reports some splendid meetings for this purpose. The outline may suggest similar meetings for other groups of the priesthood.—Editors.)

"I have chosen you and ordained you."—Jesus.

"O ye that enter in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day."—Doctrine and Covenants 4:1.

1. To have a living faith in God, in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the divine mission of his church in these the latter days.

2. To have a conviction of the divine call to minister to the people. This conviction may come through faith, inspiration, prayer, study and service.

3. To have a righteous pride in good reputation, fine character and cleanliness of mind and body and habits.

4. To have a desire to honor this priesthood through a study and an appreciation of the standard books of the church.

5. To have a reasonable record of attendance at all local church services.

6. To have a part in the support of the church through the annual filing of an inventory, the regular payment of tithing and local church support.

7. To have a willingness to sincerely cooperate with the approved operations and enactments of the local and general church.

8. To have a well planned cultivation of spiritual development through devotional exercises in private, in the home, and at the prayer meeting.

9. To have a definitely programmed time for service that shall be in harmony with the needs of this responsibility.

10. To have in one's possession a priesthood license is an honor without value unless the quality of a man's priesthood service is in harmony with the ideals and standards of his calling.

"Verily thus saith the Lord . . . continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto you have been called and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end." (Doctrine and Covenants 122:17.)

Hilo, Hawaii

Those of the membership who have given serious consideration to the conditions confronting the church have grown spiritually through attempting to assume their portion of the responsibility. The response of the members to the call of the two sacrifice drives has been encouraging.

The month of June was a busy period for this branch. The priesthood were active, trying to visit the homes of all the members and to acquaint them with the condition of the church and urge them to do their utmost to help. While the contributions were smaller than in the previous drive, it was encouraging to note that a greater number helped.

A special program was presented by the children on Children's Day, and was enjoyed. June 18, the Sunday school had its picnic.

Eight of the active young people of Hilo are this summer attending school in Honolulu, and their return is looked forward to. In this group are five of the department leaders and teachers. Those who are left are carrying on as best they can.

During the month of May the missionary pastor, Brother R. L. Macrae, was absent for two Sundays while he visited scattered members who live on the other side of the island.

Sister Macrae recently returned from a three-week visit in Honolulu, arriving in time to act as the organist during the absence of Sister Leilani Hapai who is one of the number attending summer school. Others of the branch who will be in Honolulu for the summer are Isma Hapai, Haru Shiota, Maud Yanagihara, and Brother M. M. de la Cruz and children, Pearl and Gilbert.

The sisters have been active this year, assisting as best they could. Since the first of January they have turned over to the treasurer approximately two hundred dollars. This enabled the branch to pay the Bishopric one hundred and ninety-eight dollars of the money it owes them. While the women are few in number they have demonstrated the principle that in unity there is strength. Their activities have included study classes and sewing, and food sales. Interest in a junior sewing circle has been increasing, Sister Macrae directing. This group takes the girls between eight and fourteen years of age. Their activities will include study classes, sewing, and recreational events.

The islands are in the midst of an epidemic of influenza. At present many hundreds of cases have been reported. Most of the Hilo members have thus far escaped, but Honolulu Saints have not been so fortunate. Most of the cases of illness have been mild, nevertheless some have been very sick.

The last sacrament service was not so well attended as usual, but there was a marked degree of the Spirit present.

Services for Isolated Colorado Members

Center, Colorado.—Sunday, July 17, Saints of Monte Vista and vicinity enjoyed sacrament and preaching services. Two babies were blessed at the communion meeting, it being a beautiful and impressive ceremony in charge of Elder N. L. Booker. Sister Booker sang a pleasing song.

Picnic dinner was eaten at the home of Sister Duvic, and everyone enjoyed the day.

Meetings had been held since Monday evening, Brother E. B. Johnston, of La Veta, being in charge until Thursday. Elder and Sister Booker arrived late Wednesday evening on their way to Independence.

The scattered Saints here enjoyed these meetings, and rejoice to renew once more their covenants with the Master. They hope with renewed courage, that they shall be more diligent in His service. Some of them realize more fully, as a result of these services, their responsibility as members of the church of Christ. They know that they must be ever watchful of their actions, and must so live as to draw people to Jesus. They want to do all they can in the work of latter days, that it may triumph.

President F. M. Smith and Bishop DeLapp Visit Kirtland

President F. M. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp arrived in Kirtland, June 10, to spend the week-end with Saints and to check over the properties held here by the church. Saturday was spent going through the Temple and other buildings, seeking to ascertain their immediate needs. Then a consultation was held with some of the local and visiting brothers.

In the evening Bishop DeLapp enjoyed splendid liberty in addressing the Saints.

At eight o'clock Sunday morning in the upper auditorium, President Smith lectured to about sixty-five members of the priesthood. His message was well received, and the men who came from a long distance felt repaid for the extra effort they had exerted to be present at this early service.

At the church school hour Superintendent Earl Curry arranged to have the adults meet in one large class, Bishop DeLapp the teacher. In his clear and forceful way he set forth on the blackboard the present financial condition of the church and explained the method by which the Saints will be able to free themselves from debt and present embarrassment.

President Smith addressed the gathering at eleven o'clock in the spirit of his prophetic office, and impressed his hearers that they must accept the objectives and goals of the church as the will of God today.

At the lunch hour basket dinner parties took advantage of the shady grounds about the Temple while others spread their lunch on tables in the Auditorium, and as they ate they retold gospel experiences.

President Smith was also in charge of the afternoon ordination and confirmation service. The opening prayer was given by Bishop H. E. French, of Southern Ohio District. The charge to the men to be ordained, was delivered by Patriarch J. E. Matthews, of Columbus, Ohio. The charge to the people was given by Elder A. E. Anderton, president of Southern Ohio District. E. G. Hammond was ordained to the office of high priest, and P. L. Glassford to the office of elder. Officiating ministers were John L. Cooper and James E. Bishop. Two brothers from New Castle, Pennsylvania, were ordained priest and teacher by the authorities of that district, and a sister from Akron was confirmed a member of the church.

Music was furnished by the Kirtland Choir, and there were solos by Josephine Ebeling, Amy Glassford, Lucretia Schneidhorst, and William Householder.

At the evening service President Smith continued his morning theme with much spiritual power and uplift to the blessing of all. Numbers who had heard President Smith at various times before remarked, "The greatest sermon I ever heard him preach!"

At the morning service the crowd exceeded the seating capacity of the Temple, and numbers were compelled to remain at the entrance of the building. Districts represented were Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Southern Ohio, Kirtland, and possibly there were others.

Dunn Center, North Dakota

Saints in this northern branch are growing under the faithful leadership of the branch president, Lester H. Anderson. Church school is held each Sunday morning at ten fifteen, and preaching at eleven fifteen. There is good attendance at each service.

The young people and children have given excellent programs on such special days as Easter and Mother's Day.

Brothers Lester and Odene Anderson and Sister Hanna Moffit and Sister Archie Moffit attended the reunion held at Logan, June 22 to 26. They reported it the best one in several years, and returned strengthened to carry on the local work. They brought home with them, Elder P. T. Anderson, North Dakota's missionary, who held a series of meetings here. This seemed an opportune time to hold meetings, for attendance and interest were good from the start. Brother Anderson presented the gospel message so clearly and impressively that all were anxious to learn more about it.

July 3, a wonderful sacrament service was experienced. The Holy Spirit was present to a great degree all during the hour, and the gift of prophecy was manifested. Elder P. T. Anderson was given divine direction and the entire membership, especially the young people, was admonished to live closer to God, that all might enjoy his Spirit and blessings.

At the evening service Brother and Sister Willie Adams brought their two youngest children to be blessed, the ceremony being in charge of Elder P. T. Anderson and Branch President Lester Anderson. Following was a sermon by Elder P. T. Anderson.

Services continued each evening during the following week. On July 10 after the morning service, quite a number drove about forty miles to near Taylor, North Dakota, to the home of Sister Allie Prowlo for an afternoon service. She is an isolated sister who is strong in the faith and anxious for her neighbors and friends to hear the gospel message.

July 17, was a day of rejoicing in this little branch. Eleven people had asked for baptism. Church school in the forenoon was followed by preaching service. At two thirty in the afternoon came the baptismal ceremony, confirmation being in charge of Elders P. T. Anderson and Lester H. Anderson. Those baptized were Mrs. Anna Moore, Glenna, Owen, Leonard, Ruth, and Wallace Moffit, Agnes and Mildred Rasmussen, Florence Tucker, Ella Mae Odren, and Elnora Dinehart. At the close of the confirmation they sang "Take Time to Be Holy," then Elder Anderson gave a short talk of counsel to the new members and admonition to the older members.

The meeting closed with the evening service which was spiritual and uplifting. All felt strengthened to carry on the gospel work in Dunn Center. They are thankful to have had Brother P. T. Anderson present the gospel message as the true way of salvation.

Birmingham, England

This branch enjoyed a unique experience not long ago. The Saints were happy to celebrate the golden wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister F. H. Edwards May 27. A reception was held at the Saints' chapel to which all branch members and friends were invited. More than one hundred were present. Old friends came from a long distance to wish them continued happiness. It was a happy gathering with that spirit of fellowship and brotherly love, deep, sincere, uplifting, and peculiar to Latter Day Saints. Pastor Peter S. Whalley wished that the congregation might have such a celebration every week. After a sumptuous feast and much toasting of the bride and bridegroom, a concert was given. Then gifts were presented consisting of a gold fountain pen to each, a basket of fruit and flowers, a sum of money, and an illuminated address written on parchment in script with old English lettering.

May 26, a young woman was baptized by Pastor P. S. Whalley. The font was beautifully decorated with an abundance of flowers. A wonderful Spirit prevailed emphasizing the sacredness of the ordinance. The members are rejoicing because another sister desires baptism on next Sunday.

The hearts of the Saints are overflowing with gratitude to God. The sick have been restored. The members are increasing in number and in zeal for missionary work.

The children's anniversary was held on two Sundays, June 12 and 19, the services being enjoyed by young and old.

Southern Saskatchewan Reunion and Conference

Tyvan, Saskatchewan.—Cheer and encouragement have come to the Saints of Southern Saskatchewan District as a result of the recent conference, said to have been the best one ever held in that region.

The meeting place of the reunion reminded one of the birthplace of the Savior. It was the spacious loft of Brother William Neill's barn near Weyburn. Our experiences proved that wherever God's people are met together in meekness, His Spirit will be in their midst, and all rejoiced.

On July 14, the opening day, Saints began to arrive from numerous points in Saskatchewan both by train and by car. Some came as far as from Manitoba and North Dakota. Such a splendid crowd was not expected, for this district is in the crop failure area, and the conference committee began to wonder just how they could accommodate them, but they proved themselves masters of the situation.

The visitors were surprised and pleased to find things so splendidly arranged. It required much labor to provide seats in the meeting place and there was a nicely decorated platform for the speakers. An organ had been hoisted into the loft, an approach to the entrance made, and many other things had been done which took labor. Meals were served without charge. Elder J. R. Neill killed the "fatted calf" and presented it to the conference, and many other Saints donated generously.

Apostle J. F. Curtis and Missionary O. W. Okerlind were present to assist with the conference. Brother Curtis lectured each day after the morning prayer service and preached again in the evening. His lectures were on church organization and the claims of the factions. His sermons were uplifting. Brothers Okerlind, George Jordan, and J. R. Neill also preached good sermons.

On Saturday four candidates entered the church through the waters of baptism. They were Erma and Gerald Toovey, children of Brother Roy Toovey, of Torquay, Saskatchewan; Edward Richards, son of Sister Richards, of Swift Current, Saskatchewan, and William Barnhard, of Macoun, Saskatchewan. Brother Barnhard is sixty-one years old, and having heard the gospel many years ago, he finally decided to accept it. Missionary O. W. Okerlind performed the baptismal rites in a near-by stream. The confirmation service was held in the evening, Elders George Jordan, Roy Toovey, J. R. Neill, and Apostle Curtis officiating.

Among the most enjoyable services were the eight o'clock prayer meetings. The Saints met in the spirit of peace and humility, and the Spirit of the Lord was present to a remarkable degree. At the Sunday service sacrament was served, and three young men, Anson Miller, Charles Bruder, and Victor Fisher, were ordained elders. The ordinations were in charge of Elders J. R. Neill, O. W. Okerlind, and Apostle Curtis.

Many reassuring prayers and testimonies were offered. Not least among these was the testimony of Sister Jordan, mother of Thomas J. Jordan, a woman over eighty years old who has spent the greater part of her life in the gospel. She told of the many evidences which she had received that the Reorganized Church is the church of God.

As Apostle Curtis bore his testimony the Spirit rested upon him and he began to prophesy. Addressing first the newly-ordained elders, the Spirit assured them that their calling was of God and that many people would rejoice because of their labors. The Saints assembled were told that the Lord was pleased with their gathering and that if they would be faithful, they should be blessed. Missionary Oker-lind then received words of encouragement and cheer. The message was a great blessing to the Saints, and comforted many.

During the business session the regular district officers were all sustained, and the district presidency was authorized to arrange for next year's conference and to decide whether it should be extended over ten days instead of four;
many felt this year's was too short and were reluctant to leave so soon. It was truly the finest conference in years which goes to prove that the church can and will function regardless of depressions or man-made predictions.

Clinton, Iowa

Church work in Clinton is progressing, the interest shown being good.

District President E. R. Davis and Missionary L. G. Holloway held services here and there was good attendance.

March 8 Sister Elizabeth Vickerstaff and Mr. Lee Reynolds were united in marriage at Oregon, Illinois.

April 29, the church was the scene of a pretty wedding when Sister Doris Wulf and Brother Clarence Beil, jr., were united in marriage, Elder C. A. Beil, father of the bridegroom, officiating. The young couple are making their home at Clinton.

May 8, Mother's Day, Brother D. M. Cassiday was the speaker, using as his theme, "Mother."

July 10, Elder C. A. Beil held a baptismal service in the Canal at Deer Grove, Illinois. Six persons were inducted into the church.

East Bay Branch

Berkeley, California

At General Conference the efficient pastor of this branch, Brother John W. Rushton, was appointed to work in the European Mission. Saints of Berkeley are glad that they enjoyed the experience of having Brother Rushton here, for he proved a worthy branch president, and the lessons he taught in service, love, and untiring effort will be remembered by his friends and coworkers. His excellent sermons were always an inspiration. After General Conference Apostle Rushton returned to Berkeley to remain until the branch had installed another pastor. At that time they enjoyed a short visit with President Frederick M. Smith.

June 7, a farewell social was given Brother Rushton and at the same time a reception was held for the new pastor, Elder G. P. Levitt and the new missionary to Northern California, Elder Arthur Oakman. Brother Levitt is also district president, and is employed by a life insurance company having offices in San Francisco, and so he is unable to give this branch all his time, but will render service as he is capable of doing.

Needless to say that Brother Oakman is fitting in well here. He seems to have a way of doing that, and is well liked by every one. His excellent baritone voice is often heard and his solos are always enjoyed. He is an able speaker and has a wonderful background of religious information for one so young. He should prove a real help and encouragement to all, especially to the young people. It is seldom that one with so short a missionary experience is so well prepared as is Brother Oakman.

Elder Eli Bronson and family are now living here. The branch gladly welcomes them. His sermon the evening of July 10, received much favorable comment. Other recent speakers were Brothers Dawson and Bussell, of Sacramento, and Brother J. B. Carmichael, of Oakland.

One evening's effort recently netted the branch sixty dollars for the church building fund. A short play was given.
The orchestra, under the direction of Walter Davis, played, and individual numbers were also enjoyed. This benefit was in charge of the women's department, assisted by the girls' club.

Practically everyone here has been affected by the economic disturbance, but they are trying to do all they can to carry on. Their desire is that all worthy efforts in that direction will succeed.

Central Texas Reunion

By far the best reunion held in Central Texas District closed recently. The first service was at 8 p. m., July 8, the opening address being by District President C. W. Tischer.

About eighty members of the church and ten or twelve nonmembers were camped on the reunion grounds. These grounds are owned by the church, having been donated several years ago by Sister M. A. Dotson. In spite of her age, this sister is always on hand at the opening session of the reunion, ready to welcome the Saints.

Saturday found the workers arranging the program of services. The first meeting that day was an eight o'clock prayer service Apostle Roy S. Budd in charge, assisted by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. A priesthood meeting followed, Brother Budd presiding. This service took the form of a joint meeting of priesthood and laity, not only for the purpose of teaching the priesthood their duty toward the laity, but also to teach the laity their duty toward the priesthood.
Too often the lay members forget the work of the priesthood and disobey their counsel.

Regular conference business session was held at 10 a. m. at which time such business was transacted as was necessary to bring about better spiritual conditions throughout the district. The following officers were elected: C. W. Tischer sustained district president; C. M. Mitchell, of Bryan, Texas, and H. H. Davenport, of Arlington, counselors; C. M. Mitchell, district secretary; A. V. Arnold, of Houston, Texas, treasurer of the district; I. L. Snedeker, church school director; Sister Nettie Tischer, of Houston, musical director.
A vote of thanks was unanimously given to Dallas Branch for the missionary tent which was used for housing the missionaries on the camp grounds. Also the conference voted to thank Saints of Hearne Branch for their support with vegetables and produce in the dining hall, and expressed thanks to Lynn Mitchell, of Bryan; Donald McCormick, of Houston, and Sister Pearl Arnold, of Houston, who helped, with others, to make the reunion a success. The vote of the body indicated its willingness to sustain the general church in its financial program. Another important action taken by the body was manifested when it ratified recommendations presented by Houston Branch for the ordination of three young men: Leslie Kohlman to the office of priest;
L. T. Mitchell, teacher, and Donald McCormick, deacon.

At 2 p. m. a fine talk was made by Leslie Kohlman who was appointed to represent Graceland College. He is a student from that institution.

At 7.30 p. m. a children's program, arranged by Sister Pearl Arnold, was rendered to an appreciative audience. At eight o'clock Elder G. H. Wixom preached a fine sermon.

Sunday morning found the Saints busily engaged in the service of the Lord. It was a pleasure to note the attention given to Brother Budd when he addressed the young people's eight o'clock prayer service. A large crowd assembled at nine o'clock for the general prayer service presided over by Elders J. W. A. Bailey and G. H. Wixom. Church school convened at ten o'clock with Brother A. M. Nunley in charge.

That morning at eleven o'clock the reunion heard Bishop
L. F. P. Curry speak. The timely thoughts presented by Brother Curry were to the point and worthy the earnest consideration of every member. At two o'clock in the afternoon he was in charge of a round-table discussion. His store of information is well filled, and he was able to answer many questions. The Saints regretted that he could not be present throughout the reunion. Just prior to the round-table meeting, the ordination of the young men previously mentioned, took place.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached in the evening, his sermon being most encouraging. Brother Bailey is loved by all the membership in this field, and when he speaks all ears are open and all eyes are on him.

At the close of the Sunday night service several carloads of people journeyed home in order to be there in time to go to work Monday morning. About sixty people camped on the grounds during the remainder of the reunion.

Week-day meetings were much the same, there being prayer hour early in the morning, then following the eight o'clock priesthood meetings, lectures and preaching until noon. Afternoons were filled with watermelon feasts, and such recreation at horseshoe, volley ball, and other games. Brother Archie Gatrost, of Marfa, Texas, carried away the horseshoe championship, and reunion members hope he will be back next summer. He is a great sportsman.

All services were well attended, and much good was derived from the reunion, which some of the old-timers say was the best ever held on the grounds.

The sudden death of Sister J. H. Post the morning of July 17, was a shock to all. Early that morning she was apparently feeling fine, but at about 7.45 she began to suffer with a severe headache. A doctor was called, but before he could reach her, she expired. Her death cast gloom over the entire community. Morning services were dispensed with. Sunday night preaching service was taken care of by Brother Bailey.

This brought to a close the Central Texas reunion with sadness in the hearts of many because of the departure of this sister and the breaking up of camp.

San Francisco, California

Danvers and Caselli Streets

Brother Howard Carpenter, president of the Idola Club and leader of the Department of Education on Sunday evenings, has moved from the Bay District to Michigan. The Saints of this locality regretted to see him go, but wish him success in his new endeavors. Sister Mary Steele was elected president of the Idola Club, and Brother Albert Boynton was chosen as leader in the Religious Education Department.

Elder George Lincoln has recovered sufficiently to be moved to his home from the hospital, where he underwent two serious operations, proving again the wonderful power of prayer as manifested in the ordinance of administration. The Saints are continuing to pray for his speedy recovery.

The Saints were blessed in a special series of services held in the Little Brown Church, July 20 to 22, also July 24, morning and evening. Missionary Arthur Oakman conducted these services, his preaching and singing being an inspiration. He has endeared himself to the Saints of the Bay District by his clear thinking and the scholarly manner in presenting his thoughts. Surely much good will come from his ministrations. After the service on Friday evening, July 22, the congregation was invited to the dining hall for an informal reception for Brother Oakman. Ice cream and cake were served by the young people of the church and the Idola Club.

News of the sudden death of Bishop Cecil Hawley, of East Bay Branch, reached the Saints Sunday, July 24, as they were assembling for worship. He had been ill only a few days. Sympathy is extended by this congregation to the bereaved family.

The Religious Education Department on Sunday evenings, is showing marked improvement, for Brother Albert Boynton is doing a good work among the younger group, and this is showing to good advantage in increased attendance.

Sister Hattie Putney is much improved in health at this writing.

Independence

The attention of musicians and singers of Independence, Kansas City, and other neighboring branches, is being drawn to a new event scheduled for the Harvest Home Festival this fall, a concert to be given by the Harvest Home Festival Chorus of five hundred voices the night of October 14. The Auditorium Orchestra will assist. Rehearsals start this week in most of the choirs of Independence, Kansas City, and other nearby congregations. Over four hundred voices are now enrolled, according to Brother Paul Craig, who is in charge of the chorus, and enrollment is open until August 21. Plans are to make this fall concert a brilliant and unusual performance. There will be three or four united rehearsals at the Stone Church on Sundays preceding the festival.

Stone Church

It was significant that on the Sunday preceding Missouri's primary election, August 2, the Stone Church congregation should have the opportunity to hear a forceful and informative lecture on Prohibition by Doctor W. P. MacGary, national lecturer for the Anti-Saloon League.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang two anthems, "As Pants the Hart," Lilly Belle Allen singing the soprano solo, and "Turn Ye Even to Me," Velma Brocaw Nunn, contralto soloist. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was the organist. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service and introduced the speaker, and Elder R. S. Salyards offered the invocation and benediction.

"Ye Must Be Born Again," another hymn theme was the thought about which Apostle F. Henry Edwards centered a fervent and appealing discourse Sunday night at the Campus. A large crowd of members from the several congregations in Independence, listened to this sermon.

A trio of singers from the Stone Church Choir, Mrs. Paul Wheeler, Mrs. Walter Isenhardt, and Mrs. Earl Nunn sang the hymn, "Ye Must Be Born Again," before the evening's discourse. They were accompanied on the piano by Mrs. George Miller. There was also music by the Auditorium Band. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder Perry Hiles, pastor of Englewood Church.

Enoch Hill Church

Elder C. Ed. Miller occupied the preaching hour July 17, his theme being "Observance of Law Is Liberty." Richard Bullard sang "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer."

In the evening the Enoch Hill young people joined with the young people of Liberty Street, Second Church, and Englewood in visiting the branch at Lees Summit. There was an unusually good representation from the different congregations. The visitors furnished the program and the speaker for the evening. There were numbers by the Liberty Street Orchestra, the ladies' quartet of Enoch Hill, Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Miss Ruby Johnson, Mrs. Rilla Johnson, and Mrs. May Worth, and Mrs. Leonard Lea gave a reading. Elder Leonard Lea was the evening speaker.

Sunday, July 31, was an enjoyable day for the Saints. The church school program hour was in charge of Brother Winegar's class. Their program effectively brought out the need of living our best every day. It consisted of a reading, "The House by the Side of the Road," by Mrs. Effie Winegar; a vocal duet, "I Shall Not Pass This Way Again," by Mr. and Mrs. Millard Pace; a reading, "Where Cross the Crowded Way," by Mrs. Henrietta Allen, and a talk by Brother Winegar on "The Little Things of Life." By using illustrations Brother Winegar made his talk so plain that the smallest child could understand. Taking a small nail, he showed how unimportant it is by itself, but when taken with hundreds of its kind, it holds houses and church buildings together. He illustrated the need of unity by showing how easily a single string can be broken, but when it is combined with a number of other strings, its strength is not easily broken.

Patriarch Ammon White occupied the morning preaching hour, admonishing the Saints to use their time and opportunity to advantage, doing the things which come to hand in the best way. "We are in the world for a divine purpose. In discovering that purpose lies our success," he said.

Spring Branch Church

Brother Frank Hill, the Sunday morning speaker, told several of his own experiences in the church in presenting his subject, "Faith." As a scriptural basis for his sermon, he chose to read Mark 11, and emphasized the great necessity of the Saints to have faith in the church, in the leaders, and in themselves. His discourse contributed much to the building of faith in this congregation.

All are happy that Brother A. L. Murdock is slowly improving, and hope that soon he will be back at church. He is very much missed at present.

Brother Joseph Farrow has been chosen to succeed Kenneth Davis who resigned as leader of young people. Brother Farrow has done this work before, and the Saints are confident that under his leadership the work will move forward.

The prayer services, Wednesday night and Sunday morning, compose a not-to-be-overlooked activity in this congregation. Brothers Delbert McClain and S. Andes presided over the service last Wednesday night, there being a good attendance and meeting. On Sunday morning Brothers Morris Jacobson and Thomas Nord were in charge.

Brother and Sister Robert Fish are happy to have a nephew, Norman Ward, of Mallard, Iowa, with them for a few weeks. His presence in the young people's group means much for he has a cheerful and helpful disposition.

Moorhead, Iowa

At the sacrament service May 1, two little children were blessed, LeRoy Deal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Adams, and John Everett, son of Brother and Sister Arnold Adams. Both were blessed by Mark Jensen, grandfather of John Everett. Previous to the blessing of these little ones, the congregation stood and sang the song, "Suffer Little Children" from Zion's Praises.

The alertness and activity of the Saints are manifested by their presence at the services each Sunday. Not so many attend the midweek prayer service though attendance is increasing. These are excellent meetings and the Saints are well repaid for the effort required to complete necessary tasks in time to assemble for the hour of prayer and testimony.

Elder Joseph Lane has been here. He talked one Sunday morning to the encouragement of the congregation.

Elder E. Y. Hunker was here for four days, beginning Sunday, June 26, and preaching each evening until Wednesday. He expressed some excellent thoughts.

During Sacrifice Week the Saints responded very well, giving an offering of more than eighty dollars.

June 14, a group of fifty-three people met at the church and went to the home of Brother and Sister T. O. Strand, where they presented them with a friendship quilt as a token of appreciation to Brother Strand for the service he has given the branch. He has served as pastor for the past ten years. Brother J. J. Boswell, present pastor, made the presentation speech. This was a pleasant surprise to Brother and Sister Strand, and the evening was enjoyed by everyone. Cake and ice cream were served as refreshments.

Three members have been added to this branch in the persons of Brother and Sister Thomas Ward, from Chillicothe, Ohio, and their son, Ernest, who has recently made his home in Long Beach, California.

The latter-day work is moving along. In the testimonies borne in the prayer services each Saint seems desirous of rendering service. If these desires are carried out, the work will surely progress.

Branch Organized at Regina, Saskatchewan

Apostle J. F. Curtis, accompanied by the president of Southern Saskatchewan District, Elder J. R. Neill, arrived in Regina, Monday, July 18. An organization meeting was scheduled for seven thirty in the evening, and opened with a score of Saints present, Apostle Curtis in charge, assisted by Elder Neill. Elder G. A. Jordan and family, of Prince Albert, North Saskatchewan District, and Brother Henry Neill, Weyburn Plains, honored the meeting with their attendance.

Preliminaries were quickly dispensed and business rapidly discharged due to the efficiency with which Apostle Curtis handled the meeting. A fine spirit was manifested. No time was wasted. The following officers were elected: Elder Charles Bruder, branch president; Priest J. W. Mountenay, branch priest; Teacher P. Carson, branch teacher, and Deacon R. H. Carson, branch deacon.

Early in the evening, prior to the organization meeting, two new members were added to the Regina group, Frank Warren and Robert Carson being baptized by Priest J. W. Mountenay. Confirmation of these brethren followed, being taken care of by Apostle Curtis and Elder Neill. Regina Saints welcome the two new brothers to their midst.

During the meeting Elder Neill arose, and under the influence of the Spirit, Brother Robert Carson was called to the office of deacon. Brother Carson accepted the call. He was ordained by Elder Neill, assisted by Apostle Curtis. Later Deacon Robert Carson was elected as deacon of the branch.

It is believed that the newly-organized branch is the only one in Southern Saskatchewan District which contains a complete set of officers. Both members and officers anticipate growth in the branch, and expect to see the work advance.

Anyone wishing to correspond with Regina Branch should address their correspondence to the secretary, Miss Elaine Carson, 687 Montague Street, Regina, Saskatchewan.

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch, Thirty-ninth and Grand Avenue

Apostle G. G. Lewis has been in this district for some time, and he has visited around considerably, encouraging the Saints with his cheerfulness and optimism. His good sermons are uplifting and inspirational.

The membership are trying in different ways to keep local finances up to par, and so far have made a very commendable showing, nothing spectacular, but a consistent amount compatible with the times. Some few of this number are led to think and seriously inquire into the law of stewardships. They are expressing themselves freely as looking Zionward, as the only hope for economic adjustment.

Church attendance is not all that could be expected, with the fine building here, the pipe organ, efficient choir, special numbers, and the high quality of sermons preached. Pastor D. B. Sorden is becoming better acquainted, and officers look for an increased interest in church activities which will automatically increase attendance.

The Children's Day program, under the direction of Sister Mayme McFarlin, was beautifully carried out. Three girls were baptized by Brother Ray Knowlton.

On July 4 about a hundred of the Saints enjoyed a picnic and celebration in honor of the day. The Idolas sponsored the picnic, having all the concessions, which cleared over forty dollars.

The Marthas, one of the women's organizations, expect to do very well during the Olympics. They have their booth almost ready. A good cement floor is already in, and the pipes for the canopy are ordered. They expect their booth to be attractive as well as remunerative.

Of course the Saints are worried about the financial condition of the church to a greater or lesser extent, and each one is working accordingly. Those who care are making sacrifices. The calamity that has befallen the church should teach the members to seek more earnestly for the Zionie condition of Enoch's day, and for an unqualified compliance with Christ's teaching of equality. Many among us are sick and afflicted; others are out of work and need the necessities of life. Please pray for them. Some have passed on, but the Saints are very glad to know that one of their number, Miss Lucille Crawford, who has been sick for a long time, is now on the road to recovery.

Brother Myron A. McConley is still required to remain close to his home and loved one. Sister McConley needs the prayers of the Saints.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Elder C. A. Edstrom, pastor of Saint Louis Branch for some time, left this city several weeks ago. His wife and family will join him soon in their home in Chicago. Brother and Sister Edstrom worked hard while here and made many friends. May God's blessings be theirs to the extent that Brother Edstrom shall soon find steady employment. He is one of the released missionaries.

This branch is blessed in having here Brother and Sister T. J. Elliott and family.

Interest in choir work has been renewed in the past year, Brother Ed Bell conducting. The help of the choir in services has been splendid and much appreciated by the congregation.

Also the women, old and young, are doing all they can to help in a missionary and financial way. They are striving to build up the work locally. Sister Ruth Crabtree and Sister Zora Davidson are in charge.

Prayer services have been uplifting and well attended considering the times of stress. Many more would probably like to come, but the carfare keeps them from attending as often as they wish. Saint Louis members are passing through the same experience as many other Saints; while they are being pressed financially, they are being built up spiritually. God has heard and answered united prayers in more than one instance, and they are thankful for an unchangeable and merciful Father in heaven.

Portland, Oregon

At the yearly business meeting, July 12, the following officers were appointed by the pastor, Elder J. L. Verhei, and approved by the congregation: Associates of the pastor, Elder Albert Livingston, director of Religious Education, and Elder Walter Barker, in charge of home visiting; Sister Margaret Appleman, director of women's work; Sister Verna Laird, young people's advisor; Sister Effie Verhei, junior department supervisor; Mark Yeoman, business manager; Forrest Moore, librarian, and Leslie Hunt, publicity agent. Elder Albert Nelson was chosen temporarily for the office of teacher and to assist Elder Barker. Elder Livingston will serve as advisor to the adult department. A welfare committee composed of Sister M. Appleman, Sister Agnes Smith, and Sister Allie Moore, was chosen to care for the needy, working under the direction of Elder Barker. Fred Hawes was elected auditor.

At the same meeting five names were presented for ordination, and approved: Floyd Sorenson, deacon; Earl Bryson, deacon; Fred Hawes, teacher; Perry Hunt, priest, and Mark Yeoman, elder. Brother Yeoman is the only one of the five who has already served in the priesthood, having occupied as priest for the past two years.

These leaders bring a new enthusiasm to their work along with a spirit of consecration which should make the coming year outstanding in the history of the branch. Portland is following carefully the program of the general church, and the members feel that the branch can not help but progress.

Elder Barker, in charge of home visiting, preached an inspiring sermon on the importance of homes Sunday, July 17.

He urged the Saints to have family prayer, daily scripture reading, and try in every way to make their homes Zionie.

Sherwood Mission

Harley Morris officiated at the baptism of Jack Livingston and Chester Toase, jr., in a creek near Sherwood Mission, July 17. Elder Verhei was in charge of the services following, and later the congregation enjoyed a community dinner.

Brother Clark Livingston and his wife have been appointed to take charge of this mission for the coming year, carrying on the work they have so ably done during the past year.

Mallard, Iowa

On May 1, this congregation had the pleasure of listening to Sister Dorothy Smith of the Government Hospital in Kentucky. She is a nurse and gave a fine talk on the church, the conditions in the South and an outline of the General Conference.

May 15, Elder E. Y. Hunker, of Independence, Missouri, spoke at the morning hour. He also addressed Mallard graduates at eight o'clock that evening. Another visitor during the month of May was Elder Gerald Gunsolley. In June Brother Hunker was again in this local, this time for four days. He arrived June 10, and held some good meetings. A fine sermon was also preached by Brother E. Y. Hunker July 17.

June 19 Sister Packard, of Long Beach, California, with the aid of Sister Albert Nesshoefer, of Burbank, California, presented the morning program which all enjoyed. At seven fifteen in the evening she talked to the children at junior church.

Mallard members are passing through their share of trial and stress, but are striving to do their bit, having faith that in time, conditions will be better and that those who are trying to do right will be rewarded.

The local men who meet with Brother E. L. Edwards, of Pomeroy, are doing all they can to help in the great cause of the redemption of Zion.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

Missionary P. T. Anderson visited Saints here and preached several sermons. He related many interesting experiences in the gospel work. "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" and "The Unknown God," were two of the themes.

The closing Sunday of Sacrifice Week the morning prayer service was in charge of Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe; his theme was "Sacrifice." Several earnest prayers were offered, then the beautiful story, "The Chimes in the Tower," was told in place of the usual testimonies.

Elder O. W. Okerlind spent Sunday in Fargo en route to his mission in Saskatchewan, Canada. He preached interesting sermons morning and evening.

On Children's Day the eleven o'clock hour was devoted to a program for both children and parents. The choir sang a beautiful anthem. Elder Ratcliffe gave an appropriate talk. The story, "Pippa Passes," was told. Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe chose "Bible Appreciation" for the theme.

July 4, some of the Saints picnicked at Oak Grove Park.

Not long ago the ladies' aid enjoyed a social evening at the home of Mrs. Frank Stowell in honor of her birthday. She was presented a handkerchief shower. Refreshments were served.

Courtney Rotzien, in charge of a Sunday morning service, encouraged the members present to do some missionary work among branch members not in regular attendance, that the empty seats in the church might be filled.

District President W. E. McElwain, of Lansford, North Dakota, visited the branch July 3. He assisted Jerome Stowell in the communion service and preached in the evening,

Weekly Health Letter

Typhoid Fever

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

In the care of a case of typhoid fever, the physician and the family have a double duty to perform: one is to assist the patient, and the other is to protect the community. It is the duty of the health authorities to find its origin, in order to prevent its further spread. Early diagnosis is essential and the symptoms come on gradually and slowly. Among the first symptoms there is a sense of fatigue, the bowels are usually constipated and the patient aches all over. About twenty-four hours after these symptoms appear, there is a feverish feeling and the temperature ranges about one hundred degrees. Then the next day, the fever gradually gets higher and the patient feels more achey. Before the Widal test, it was difficult to arrive at a diagnosis as many cases simulated malaria, but now about one half teaspoonful of blood from the patient's elbow can be used for laboratory diagnosis; then in two days, if the patient has typhoid, the bacilli will be seen multiplying in the test tube.

In cases where a blood culture has not been made, the first week, especially if it is not a typical case, a drop of blood can be taken from the finger or ear for another laboratory test, which is called the Widal test. The blood culture test usually shows the presence of the typhoid bacilli within the first two days, but it will take a week or ten days for the Widal test to show them. If a blood culture is positive it means that the patient has the typhoid germs floating around in his blood. If the Widal test is positive it means that the patient undoubtedly has typhoid fever and that reinforcements are being formed in the blood to resist the disease. During the second week, the fever begins to get higher and higher and the patient becomes more and more emaciated, but is more comfortable than during the first week. During the third week, the fever remains about the same as it was in the second week and the emaciation is progressively worse. The average case will escape diarrhea if the bowels have been properly opened at the beginning of the symptoms. If this has not been properly attended to, the diarrhea adds to the seriousness of the disease. During the first week, the lower end of the small intestine becomes swollen in places, and in the second week, they break down and form ulcers, which vary from the size of a pea to, sometimes, more than an inch in diameter. They may spread from the large intestine and thus increase the severity of the diarrhea. During the fourth week, the fever is noticeably less, the temperature becoming normal for several hours at a time. At the end of this week, complications are more likely to occur, which kill more people than the disease itself. Pneumonia is a very ordinary complication, but if we do not have pneumonia, we may have an inflammation of the veins or an inflammation of the glands. The ulcers may perforate, causing hemorrhages and peritonitis. The mortality, during the last decade, has not been so high. The doctor, in such cases, reminds me of the captain of a vessel, piloting the ship safely into the harbor. In the old days it was quite common to observe a greatly exhausted patient with a low, muttering delirium, and with flies crawling over the eyes. But, fortunately, in this day and age, what we may properly term the old style typhoid, seldom develops due to proper sanitation and treatment.

It is a curious fact that women are more frequently carriers—about four to one—than men. Sixty per cent of the temporary carriers are females and about eighty per cent of all chronic carriers. This is accounted for as women are more subject to gall stones and inflammation of the gall bladder. Children are less subject to gall bladder disease, and therefore, scarcely ever become carriers. Women handle our food, which makes it still more hazardous. At Hanford, California, ninety-three cases of typhoid fever were traceable to a pan of spaghetti and it was further discovered that the baking of it only served as an incubator for the bacteria instead of disinfecting the food. Many instances could be cited where the handling of food by carriers resulted in communicating the disease.

encouraging the Saints to keep the faith and live as one family.

Some interior decorating has been done at the church.

Elder Thomas Leitch preached recently to Fargo Saints. He is spending the summer on his farm at Clifford, North Dakota.

Saints were pleased to have Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe and wife return to the branch from their vacation in Kansas. They are efficient and willing workers. "The Restoration of the Jews" and "Marks of Sainthood" were two texts recently chosen by Pastor Ratcliffe.

Ferne Shackow attended the North Dakota reunion at Logan. She returned with her faith renewed to be of service in the Master's work.

Sister William Shackow attended the funeral of her brother, John Corliss, at Clarkleigh, Canada. He had been confined to his bed for years.

"Mine Elders Shall See That My Law Is Kept"

By Hubert Case

The heading of this little article should interest the elder at least; also all who have wondered why the law was so much neglected. "For he that keepeth the law, happy is he." The statement, "Mine elders shall see that my law is kept," in no uncertain way places the responsibility somewhere. No one will argue the question for one moment as to whose duty it is, for this charge was given by none other than the Master himself. The utter disregard for law and order has become appalling, in the world about us, and also in the church we all profess to love. Why? There are evidently many of us who have neglected our duty, to say the least. Self interests have so far claimed our attention that we have almost forgotten the needs of the group. The brotherhood of man seems to be doomed, so far as loving our neighbor as ourselves is concerned. Who is to blame? The elimination of poverty, the keeping of the law of the Lord, the redemption of Zion, is not in sight nor will it be until the elders do their duty, teach the law, and see that it is kept.

The Law of Tithing

Here is a law which should be known to every baptized person before he comes into the church; it should be made obligatory. We have all been negligent in the teaching of this very important part of everyone's Christian duty. If the elders are to see that the law is kept, where and when shall we begin? First we must set the example; then it must be taught by the elders. If this one part of the law were carried out in the spirit of righteousness, we would be the most blessed people in the world and Zion would become a reality very shortly.

The Sin of Omission

Herein lies our failure for one hundred years. Then why not begin the second century of church activities by teaching the law? Many people who have been counted rich are now poor; many who were poor are now in good circumstances; the keepers of the law have prospered while the rich have gone down in hundreds of instances, in my short life in this church. We have also neglected to go into the homes of the people and teach the law of Zion in homes. The sin of omission covers the one the same as the other. Our neglect of this imperative duty has let many sins creep into the church, and bear such a bounteous harvest, that it has choked the good seed of the kingdom of God, driven many out of the church, and many have become discouraged, lost interest, and wandered away.

The Example of One Little Branch

On July 3, one little branch voted unanimously to pay one tenth of all they have and take in, as an offering to God and his church. If every branch in the whole church would do this what would one year do for this people? Zion would be redeemed and the people of the Lord would be a free people instead of being in bondage as they are at the present time. How about it, brethren? Shall we set the example and see that the law is kept?

Remember what the Lord said to the seven elders who had charge of the seven churches in Asia. The lukewarm condition of those churches he charged to the elders, whose duty it was to see that his law was kept. He was ready to spew them out of his mouth. Who is to blame for the lukewarm condition today? Read the first, second, and third chapters of Revelation where the Savior returned to earth and told John who was to blame for such condition.

"Let Every One Learn His Duty"

Herein lies our safety: The book of Doctrine and Covenants is little known to the men and members of this great church; many of them do not even have the book, and many have never made a study of it to know their duty. Men have a ravenous desire to hold the priesthood, not knowing it means condemnation to them if they hold it and never use it as the law of the Lord requires. (See Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1.) The souls of the people of the church and the world, are in our hands when we accept such responsibility. So the Lord said if we fail to learn and do our duty we are "walking in darkness at noonday," and can not be among the chosen.

The Hastening Time

So many times ancient and modern revelations mention this time when the Lord shall hasten his work. No one can any more doubt the fact we are living in that marvelous period of time. Everything today is moving at a very rapid speed. Surely Nahum saw our time, for "the chariots seem like torches, they run like the lightning, they jostle one against another in the broadways." The radio can reach a million or more almost instantaneously. The time is here when "as birds flying" the Lord defended, preserved and delivered Jerusalem. What shall he do for Zion? That must be answered by our response to duty, to the teaching of the law, and seeing that that law is kept.

The Answer We Must Make

The call of the Lord this year is to unity, peace, and duty, to the study of the "three standard books" of the church. This calls for volunteers, and sets the church objectives plainly in view. Our response is our answer; by this we stand or fall.

She united with the church at Montrose a number of years ago. Had been afflicted with heart trouble for two years, and death came to end her sufferings July 20, 1932. The funeral was held from the Saints' church at Montrose, July 22, when a large number gathered to pay their respects to her memory. Left to mourn are her son, Merrill, an aged mother, an invalid sister, Vada, Mrs. B. F. Strange, of Montrose, also a sister, Mrs. C. E. Miner, of Fort Madison, and other relatives. Elder F. T. Those Who Endure

When Jesus was speaking to his disciples about the trials that would come to them he gave them this word of encouragement, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

There have been many in the past few years who could not endure. Some could not endure financial reverses and the loss of property, and they committed suicide, or gave themselves up to hopeless and lifeless drifting. It was suicide, whether of body or mind. Others could not endure the trials of the church, and they left it.

The quitter may have good reasons for giving up, but he is never a noble, never an admirable figure. He loses all respect with the cause he forsakes, and and he gains none from the new one he joins.

The real heroes are those who endure "to the end." It is true that they sacrifice more, but it is also true that they gain more. At the last, when all works are summed up and all accounts settled, the ledgers of the faithful show a good balance, with records of large gains in both tangible and intangible values.

No man can benefit his life by applying a charge of blasting powder to it—by severing all connection with the past. When you renounce your allegiance you also abandon your inheritance.

The great benefits of life are to be reaped by establishing a course and maintaining it. We have many little goals which we set from time to time, but there is only one Great Goal. If we change that, if we vascillate and turn from one thing to another, we are sure to lose.

"He that endureth to the end" shall be saved in more ways than one. He shall be saved in business, he shall be saved in education, he shall be saved as a citizen, he shall be saved in his spiritual life.

The antagonists of a unified world are confusion of mind, want of courage, want of curiosity and want of imagination, indolence and spendthrift egotism. These are enemies against which the Open Conspiracy arrays itself; these are the jailers of human freedom and achievement.—H. G. Wells.

Poison's Harvest

SOME NOTES ON PUBLIC SENTIMENT

Public sentiment is a powerful force, but it is fickle in the direction it chooses to exert itself. Ancient writers inveighed against the changeability of the mob, and the kind of leadership that popular opinion followed.

Public sentiment is capable of accomplishing great good, and of committing monstrous follies. We do not have to turn to ancient times for examples, for we have a modern instance familiar to everyone. That instance concerns prohibition.

Are we yielding to the guidance of the mob in the matter of prohibition? Let every man who claims the name of Christian examine himself, and decide whether he is thinking with a mature and civilized mind, or following with those who run and jump like sheep.

Public sentiment, aware of the terrible evil that festered in the saloon, banished it and attempted to suppress the alcohol that it dispensed. Impartial statistics show that while the suppression of liquor has not been completely effective it has accomplished great good. Public sentiment then appeared in the role of a wise benefactor.

But the memory of the people is short. They have forgotten the ubiquitous and iniquitous saloon, and its all-pervasive stench and its poisonous effects. They have forgotten the armies of reeling drunks that haunted them.

Public sentiment, misinformed by paid agents of the liquor interests, fed with lies, willing to believe almost anything that is repeated often enough, shows a tendency to favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. This poison propaganda of the "Wet" interests is false—it does not agree with the facts, as is being demonstrated in the articles by A. B. Phillips.

No one can deny the power of public sentiment; no one would wish to see its power destroyed. When it is led by constructive thinkers and statesmen it is a great power for good. But when demagogues lead it, or when mercenary and selfish men take the leadership it becomes a monster in its power of harm.

Poison propaganda against prohibition and the eighteenth amendment has prepared a harvest of bad opinions, which make the present trend of public sentiment a threat against the welfare of the people.

This one fact ought to decide the issue for ever: that the brewers and the distillers became millionaires, and saloon keepers grew fat and prosperous, all on the miseries and at the expense of the people. Those men want liquor back in order to make money, which they would do no matter what the cost to other men. Nobody becomes wealthy by promoting prohibition. Consequently much money is paid for publicity against it.

Let people consider these things as they decide the issue.

STUDY OUTLINES

For Class and Home Work

THE DEFINITION OF PRAYER By Fred Shepherd

1. What are some of the things that prayer can do. This may help you later in defining it.

2. How could public prayer be improved in your branch? Make some specific suggestions. (But better not mention names, in order to avoid injuring anyone.)

3. Let the class formulate a definition of prayer, discussing each item as it is entered. It may be well, before writing the definition, to make a list or graphic chart to indicate the various elements involved and the personalities affected.

4. Do you really believe in the effectiveness of prayer? Give your reasons, as if you were trying to tell someone that you wished to try the practice of it.

PERSONNEL OF LEADING QUORUMS OF THE CHURCH

1. This article is of such historical importance that readers who do not save the files of the Herald should preserve this one item for study and reference.

2. Who have occupied the office of President? At what dates?

3. How many first counselors have there been? How many second counselors? Who is the present First Counselor? the present Second Counselor?

4. How many men have been members of the Quorum of Twelve? Is the Quorum full at present? Name the present members without referring to the list.

5. How many have acted as Presidents of Seventy? Who are occupying at present?

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

To Those Who Need

The other day a friend was in the office and commenting on our "Circle of Prayer" idea. He said he liked it, but he thought of one improvement: those who ask for prayers are often discouraged and in need of some one to take a personal interest in them, if only to write them letters. He suggested that it is a source of strength to know that "someone cares."

That last phrase—"Someone cares"—impressed us. Perhaps we should do more to show our feeling for one another. We do care. And it means a lot to us that others care too.

The editorial typewriters are busy. But in a good work they could be a little busier. We are going to take our friend's suggestion seriously—and we are thankful that he cared enough to make the suggestion.

We will try, insofar as it is possible, to write letters to those who are in need of God's blessing and ask the prayers of the people. And, since we give the addresses of those who make these requests, it may not be amiss to suggest that others will wish to write to them too.

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. Henry Brown, of Newton Robinson, Ontario, asks prayers in behalf of Henry Robinson of Beeton Branch, who fell from a barn twenty-one months ago and suffered a fracture of the spine and lost all control of the lower parts of his body. The Saints of the district have prayed for him, and he is thankful for the great benefit received. Administrations have also brought much help. But he is still unable to walk and desires the prayers of the general church that he may recover.

A sister who does not give her name, residing at Eagle Grove, Iowa, writes that her family is passing through a very severe trial at the present time, and asks the prayers of the church that the Lord may help them and turn the course of events for their good. "He has been mindful of us in the past," she says, "and has blessed us in many ways," and expresses their faith that He will help them again if they have faith, and the prayers of the people.

Some Interesting Statistics

By F. H. E.

Concerning the records and statistics of the British Mission, Andrew Jenson, Assistant Historian for the Utah Church, recently wrote for the Deseret News as follows:

"Of all the missions established by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in foreign countries, none has yielded so much precious fruit to the preaching of the restored Gospel as has the British Mission. This mission was opened in 1837 by Apostles Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde and five other American elders who crossed the Atlantic ocean in the ship Garrick and arrived in Liverpool, England, July 20, 1837. These missionaries commenced at once to preach the Gospel in Preston, England, where the first baptism by divine authority in this dispensation in Great Britain took place July 30, 1837. . . .

"From Preston, as the headquarters of the British Mission, the elders extended their labors into the surrounding country towns in Lancashire, where a number of other branches of the church were soon afterwards raised up, and the missionaries also extended their operations into Northumberland and Bedfordshire, England, where converts were made and branches organized. Before the end of the year 1837 there were about 600 Latter Day Saints in England.

"The further progress made by the missionaries in England was somewhat slow during the years 1838 and 1839, but in the latter part of 1839 the Gospel door was opened to the inhabitants of Scotland.

"A fresh impetus to the work in Great Britain was brought about when Apostles Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball (on his second mission to Great Britain), Parley P. Pratt, John Taylor, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith and other missionaries arrived in England, in 1840. They remained about one year, during which missionary labors were extended into nearly all parts of England, Wales and Scotland, and also to Ireland and the Isle of Man.

"Branches of the Church were organized every where and Wilford Woodruff particularly made phenomenal success in preaching the gospel in Herefordshire, England, where an entire community known as the United Brethren joined the church, and were organized into branches and conferences. The branches organized in other parts of England, Scotland, and Wales were also organized into conferences during that period and the following years.

"At the close of the year 1844 (a few months after the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph Smith) there were between 9,000 and 10,000 Latter Day Saints in Great Britain, organized into 200 branches of the church; these were grouped into 25 conferences. The membership included about 400 elders, 600 priests, 300 teachers and 200 deacons.

"The zenith of successful Latter Day Saint missionary labors was reached by the close of the year 1852, when the British Mission contained 742 branches of the church with a total membership of nearly 33,000, including 2,572 elders, 1,913 priests, 1,446 teachers and 856 deacons. The branches in the British Isles were grouped into 52 conferences."

We have not checked these figures in detail, but from a cursory glance they seem to be substantially correct. Members of the Reorganized Church, however, will be interested in the statement in the last paragraph quoted:

"The zenith of successful Latter Day Saint missionary labors was reached by the close of the year 1852. . . ."

This was the year in which polygamy was publicly proclaimed by the Utah Mormon church. Prior to that time polygamy had been vigorously denied by church leaders. We believe that there is a direct connection between this fact and the fact that the steady growth of members in England from 1837 to 1852 was definitely checked at that time and the lost ground was never recovered. The British people never did like the idea of Mormon polygamy.

Offering What We Have

A group of one hundred women were wondering how they could secure two hundred dollars to complete some service for Christ. They talked for an hour and shook their heads sadly over the fact that they could do nothing. Suddenly the little daughter of one of them slipped away and ran to the leader with eagerness. "Here's all my money! That will help some," and she held out a precious nickel. Then something happened. The Spirit of God worked in the hearts of those present. In ten minutes more than the required sum had been offered. It was indeed a miracle, the work of God. How often we say, "I would like to help but—" and nothing happens. If we would only change it to "I want to help, and here is everything I have," anything could happen. I haven't money, but I have flowers in my garden for sale, I have a house to shelter a foreign student, I have influence which can be used, etc. Jesus Christ draws near to the heart which offers for his use such as it has.—Bertha Conde, in Spiritual Adventuring, Cokesbury Press.

NEWS BRIEFS

Elder J. J. Cornish to Celebrate Eightieth Birthday

On October 17, one of the mighty men of the restored gospel, Elder J. J. Cornish, of Senlac, Saskatchewan, Canada, will be eighty years of age. He has just returned home from attending the district conference at Saskatoon, and his letters to the editors are vibrant with faith and interest in the church. "I preach some yet," he writes.

Brother Cornish was born in Huron County, Ontario, the son of John and Mary Cornish, October 17, 1852, and his life is rich with experiences in the gospel. In his years of service to the church he baptized over fifteen hundred people, and among the people of North Central United States and Canada his name is uttered with love and gratitude.

Brother Cornish's life story is told in the book, Into the Latter Day Light, one of the "best sellers" of the Herald Publishing House. Here is just one sentence from chapter 29, which tells in Missionary Cornish's own words some of his works: "During the year 1886, I baptized and confirmed seventy people, and blessed eighty-four children, acting as president of the district." He has done much for the cause of Christ, and in the doing he has won a large circle of friends. This fall when he celebrates another birthday, his friends should not forget him.

Thirteen Baptized at Kentucky-Tennessee Reunion

Thirteen candidates were baptized members of the church during the successful reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District, held at Puryear, Tennessee, July 23 to 31. All services were well attended and a good spiritual time was enjoyed. Elder J. Charles May was the visiting speaker, assisting Elders Thomas Newton, E. P. Gallemore, and T. W. Thomas. A splendid spirit prevailed throughout the reunion.

Judge F. O. White Serves Community and Church

At election time the people of White County, Arkansas, were reminded of the splendid fourteen-year record of F. O. White, Judge of White County, by the following comment printed in a local paper: "Judge White has maintained the credit of White County, the county being on a strictly cash basis, while doing more development work during his tenure of office than had been done in the nearly one hundred years that the county had been an organized unit. Judge White has handled the affairs of the county in a manner that makes him the outstanding judge in Arkansas." It further tells us that because of his excellent administration of county affairs, people who once were opposed to him are now firm supporters, attracted by his business ability.

During this period of service to his county and community, Judge White also has found time to serve the church in ministerial and administrative capacity. Of him a fellow worker writes: "Not only has Brother White been of great service to our county as judge, but he has also served the church as president of our district, and when called upon has always been ready to go. I wish that we had more like him."

Brother White has been a member of the church for twenty-six years and has served as elder since 1920.

Canning for Harvest Home Festival

Several thousand quarts of vegetables have been canned by the women of the groups in Independence for the Harvest Home Festival, and these community-conscious workers are still busy providing for the winter needs of many people. The Laurel Club has turned over to the groups the equipment of the Auditorium lunch room for festival canning purposes. One group has also built a fireplace on the Auditorium grounds for outdoor cooking, its capacity being one hundred and fifty quarts (tin).

A very helpful aspect of this cooperative undertaking is the effort which is being made to have needy families can their own vegetables for winter needs. Many are coming to the Auditorium to can for themselves, and are furnished jars, vegetables, and other materials by the festival, individuals, and groups.

Missionary Meetings for Alabama District

There being little business to be transacted at the conference of Alabama District, held at Pleasant Hill Branch, July 6 to 10, officers and local ministry conducted a series of missionary meetings. Stirring sermons were presented on the first principles of the gospel and such other subjects as "The Kingdom of God" and "The Restoration," by the following speakers: E. C. Shelley, J. W. Baldwin, Franklin Steiner, W. J. Williamson, L. D. Flynn, H. H. Wiggins, and B. E. Barlow.

Though the weather was intensely warm, attendance and interest were good, and the Spirit of the Master was present to bless the congregation with understanding and appreciation. Music was furnished each evening by the young people.

The Definition of Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

This article is a chapter from a paper written by the author for one of his courses in psychology in the University of Chicago. While it was written with the academic requirements in mind, we feel that it offers some thoughtful material for our readers.—Editors.

There are numerous definitions of prayer from which to select so that anyone, be he orthodox or modern, can easily be satisfied. The simplest definition appears to be the one which tells us that prayer "is the soul's sincere desire,"¹ and that it is that purpose which becomes dominant in our attentiveness to God.² "The joy of communion and intercourse with God is the central feature of prayer, however, Saint Francis thought of prayer as a time of storing up grace and power through union with God."³ "The full fruition of the divine desires on earth requires the full cooperation of human desire rendered dynamic by union with the sublime forces of God in Christ,"⁴ and so we learn that "True prayer is the reflex of the divine desire itself . . . our prayer is the real expression of divine desire working within us."⁵ Another author defines prayer as a "process wherein work is really done, and spiritual energy flows in and produces effects, psychological or material, within the phenomenal world,"⁶ so that "prayer is the very soul and essence of religion."⁷ The generally accepted idea of prayer is that it is the way in which the believer comes into communion with the divine;⁸ or as further stated, it is a practical action of a practical need, and the act by which the soul communes with the controlling power.⁹ One of our prominent divines says,

Prayer is not crying to a mysterious individual off somewhere; prayer is not bouncing the ball of one's own aspiration against the wall of one's own soul and catching it again; true prayer is fulfilling one of the major laws of the spiritual world and getting the appropriate consequences . . . for prayer when it is real is the innermost way in which anyone who believes in God makes earnest business of his faith.¹⁰

From the above definitions it may be gathered that prayer is a term used generally for any humble petition, but more technically, in religion, for that mode of addressing a divine sacred power in which there predominates the mood and intuition of reverent entreaty. In advanced religion, indeed, "prayer is the chosen vehicle of the free spirit of worship."¹¹

From a more liberal point of view prayer is regarded as the method whereby the Christian may get into direct touch with God and reveal his thoughts and desires with reasonable expectancy of swaying the divine will.¹² As is to be expected, the

Typhoid Fever—No. 2

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

We have mentioned a few means by which typhoid fever may be spread. In this article, we will take some of them up separately. We must remember that it is a man to man disease and the source of infection must be traced with that viewpoint in mind. Water is one of the most common sources of typhoid, but now we know that there are other ways by which it may be contracted. All kinds of fecal matter finds its way into most water even in inhabited regions. Surface water is the most dangerous. Fortunately, under normal conditions, the typhoid bacilli do not grow and multiply in water.

psychologist sees prayer in a different light, and one suggests that "prayer is the direct interaction of two selves arising simultaneously in consciousness as the result of a need, a lack, a disturbance which demands the presence of a completer and more adequate self before it can be overcome."¹³ Somewhat similar is the idea that prayer, in its basal character, is conversation with another, but the "other" may be one of the idealized selves or a God represented by a symbol.¹⁴

After a little sober thought one feels that after all the definitions do not differ so very widely. What the fundamentalist calls the "divine desire," the psychologist calls "another self." Both recognize the stimulus but they give it different names. Perhaps a discussion of the origin of prayer will simplify matters a little more.

They succumb more quickly in some water than in others and more quickly in summer than in winter, usually dying in a few days. Experimenters have found that water covered by ice and snow, if contaminated, is much more dangerous than polluted water, during the summer months. Water-borne typhoid almost always occurs in the fall, winter, or spring when the water is cold. But thanks to preventive medicine, water plays a lesser role in the spread of typhoid fever than formerly, on account of the filtration, chlorination, and the sanitary control of it. Freezing does not kill the germs and it has been found that ice has been an occasional vehicle. But this has been overcome by the use of natural ice, especially the kind that has been manufactured from distilled water and handled by clean methods.

The typhoid bacillus grows well in milk and this is now more fully realized than formerly. Many outbreaks that were attributed to water, were probably due to milk. In the epidemic of 1908 Trask collected three hundred and seventeen cases that were caused by infected milk. In Europe, milk epidemics are less frequent than in America or England on account of the Europeans having the habit of boiling their milk. The milk may become contaminated on the farm by the carrier, or during transportation. Investigators, by following the route of the milk wagon, found that persons in better circumstances, generally, suffered less; those who consumed raw milk suffered most. The patients that come down with this disease, find the incubation period perceptibly shortened, and that two or more persons in a household come down with typhoid within a few days of each other.

Milk epidemics are known to have become very extensive. In 1908 an epidemic broke out in Boston, Massachusetts, and three hundred and forty-eight of four hundred and ten cases had been drinking suspected milk. In Washington (Georgetown) an examination of the feces of a milkmaid revealed pure cultures of typhoid bacillus and fifty-five cases were directly traceable to her.

Butter, fresh cheese, cream, and ice cream have been found to contain the typhoid bacillus and are a media of communication. Cream collects more bacteria than the milk and cream in coffee and cereals may produce the disease; coffee in the cup is not hot enough to kill the typhoid bacillus. Occasional specimens of cottage cheese have been found to contain the typhoid bacillus; buttermilk, also. But buttermilk is not quite as dangerous as probably the acidity and overgrowth of other organisms would destroy the typhoid germs within twenty-four hours.

The Truth About Liquor

By A. B. Phillips

NUMBER THREE

In my last discussion of the subject I showed that alcoholic liquors, even when taken in so-called moderate quantities, are destructive of the health, morality, prosperity, and safety of the people; that it is a menace to the lives of untold thousands, both young and old; that it breeds contempt for law, disregard for human rights, and disloyalty toward God, country, and the family. It is the source of more corruption, crime, and degeneracy than any other evil that ever cursed the human race;—yet some people want it back! They noisily object to any law that prevents them from openly and lawfully getting drunk when and where they desire, though they well know that such people are committing manslaughter on thousands of streets where they unlawfully drive motor cars while under the influence of liquor.

The liquor element among us can not be trusted to state the truth about the subject. They have sought to cover the earth with a flood of false statements which they hope will be believed by enough people to enable them to get rid of the laws that now measurably protect society. They have spread all over the country the assertion that the prohibition law is not constitutional, hoping to encourage more lawlessness and to discourage lawful means of enforcing the law. They have charged that to prohibit drinking robs men of their rights and liberty. This is in substance saying that we have no right to prohibit that which injures the people. The same argument is made by the dope fiend, the panderer, the swindler, and a long list of other criminals.

The Legality of Prohibition Laws

Such teachings as these lovers of liquor suggest are producing the crimes of anarchy and terrorism that break out in our midst. All law must prohibit that which is wrong and protect those who do right, if a respectable society is to endure. The public good is now recognized as the very foundation of law by the ablest minds of the world. Just laws can not protect society and at the same time license men to commit acts that menace society. Such laws would be a contradiction against themselves. Liquor men have tried in every way conceivable to overthrow the prohibition amendment to the constitution, but the United States Supreme Court has upheld the law on every point they have attacked. The last effort, made by a judge of a notoriously wet section of the country, asserted that the amendment was unlawfully adopted. The United States Supreme Court unanimously declared that the amendment was lawful, and exploded entirely the silly notion that inspired this latest wet effort.

Probably no one expects to see the day when there will not be any criminals in the land, and no one expects that drunkenness will be completely done away with. But this does not warrant anyone in seeking to repeal the laws against crime or in preventing their continued enforcement. Many young people of today know practically nothing of the vile conditions that existed when the saloon and liquor were protected by law. I have traveled for many years over most of the States of our Union, and I know that the conditions today are enormously better than they were when liquor was legalized. In liquor license days it was not safe for a woman to venture alone on the streets of our cities and towns where liquor was allowed. Even by daytime they needed escorts, and it was a common thing to be insulted by some one under the influence of liquor.

In liquor license days I saw about fifty times as many intoxicated persons on the streets as I have seen in recent years. Drunkenness and its attendant crimes are bad enough now, but they were immeasurably worse in the days of licensed liquor. I have discussed this subject with several others whose years of travel and experience enable them to know the difference, and without exception they all declared that the conditions under liquor license were very much worse than they are now. These facts certainly prove that our prohibition laws are justified both legally and morally. They are also abundantly justified socially and economically.

The Personal Liberty Scarecrow

Let us examine the claims which some have excitedly put forth, that our sacred liberty is being taken away by prohibition. Let us admit that liquor license gave them liberty to get drunk, to spend for booze the money that their families needed, to become brutes that abused, maimed, and killed their own offspring. Let us admit that it gave liberty to ruin health, morals, and decency, and to become a menace to the community and a pauper of the town. Let us frankly acknowledge that it gave liberty to become an evil example to the people, the family, and especially the young, and to inflict upon society a pestilential disease that multiplied sorrow and despair on every hand. For liquor users do all of these things and much more.

But in all honesty, is this liberty, or is it not rather a terrible bondage? It drags down the one who indulges in such so-called liberty, but its evil effects are even greater in his family and community. It makes them disreputable and covers them with shame. They either become brazen and callous to the morals and virtues of life, or they become walking skeletons of misery and deceit, and yearn for some of the decent ways that respectable people may enjoy. Is it not more truly liberty to recognize the rights of the family to share in the income of the bread earner? Has not the family the right to that liberty which protects it in an upright life and the enjoyment of decent things? We have the right to that liberty which the drinker seeks to take from us, a liberty which touches every home and every person in the land. Shall we let such ignoble motives as the drunkard has rob us of the liberty we now possess? Let us protect our rights and go forward, and not backward.

Did liquor license give liberty? Every one knows that it prohibited anyone from selling unless he could get a license, and sometimes he was prevented from getting it by others who sold liquor. It prohibited people under certain ages and during certain hours. This was just as surely taking away liberty from some one as does the prohibition law today. The truth is that no prohibition law would be needed if liquor was not an evil, and the old liquor license laws were necessary for this same reason. You can not live in peace without laws to prohibit liquor, and the more license you give it the more evil is suffered by the people of our country. The very fact that certain people insist upon using it to the harm of so many is proof that they do not care at all for the liberties of the people or for their welfare.

Prohibition and the Depression

If liquor users cared for the well-being of the people they would never seek to undo the splendid work that has been done since prohibition laws were passed. It is admitted by the ablest economists of our times that prohibition has made possible the wide-spread enjoyment of the radio, the movies, electric refrigerators, better homes, finer clothing, better foods, shorter hours of labor, fewer accidents in laboring industries, bigger savings, more education, and many other benefits. The fact that we have about twenty-eight million automobiles in the United States, more than all the rest of the world together, is due to our prosperity under prohibition, according to experts who have carefully analyzed the facts.

Some liquor users and sympathizers have charged that this world-wide depression is due to prohibition. This charge is so ridiculous and absurd that it should bring the blush of shame to those who presumed to suggest it. It is contrary to all available facts, and shows something of the desperate straits of those who support liquor. It is stated by those who are familiar with conditions in Europe that they are suffering much more from the depression that we are. Bad as it is, due largely in this country to orgies of speculation, it would be much worse here if the people had not been able to save large sums of money before the depression came. The American Bankers Association states that per capita savings more than doubled from 1916 to 1925, and by 1929 (year of the depression) it was much higher. The National Bureau of Economic Research reported in 1927 that the national income was forty per cent greater in 1926 than in 1918. The Wickersham Commission report says:

With all deductions we are satisfied that a real and significant gain following National Prohibition has been established.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, page 25.

Perhaps there is no one in a better position to know or more competent to state what the effects of prohibition have been than President Hoover. He stated:

There can be no doubt that prohibition is putting money into the American family pocketbook. The dry law has proved its worth in dollars and cents.—Ibid., page 25.

Professor Irving Fisher, one of the greatest economists of the age, has stated the facts in these terms:

We may say that prohibition is not only sound hygiene but sound economics; not only is it the greatest hygienic experiment but the greatest economic experiment in history and one of the most successful.—Ibid., page 25.

If the depression here were due to prohibition, then Europe with its abundant liquor would have escaped. Instead of this, they are suffering much more than we are from the depression, which would show that prohibition has been a great help to us, as in fact it has, according to our best economists. Roger W. Babson, with the greatest statistical organization of our times, gives us his summary as follows:

Prohibition has been a great factor in promoting business prosperity; probably one of the greatest factors.—Ibid., page 26.

After several years of prohibition, Mr. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation that then employed more than three hundred thousand workmen, had this to say:

In the last two or three years, the improved conditions among these people is one of the most remarkable chapters ever written in the history of civilization and it is attributable to prohibition.—Ibid., page 26.

No one will ignore that great student of human affairs, former President Roosevelt, when he voices his conclusions on the subject. He states in his usual vigorous manner:

Any man who studies the social conditions of the poor knows that liquor works more ruin than any other one cause.—Ibid., page 26.

Prohibition Aids Prosperity

Depressions have come and gone many times in the past, and this one will also pass and be replaced by a period of more prosperous times. What shall we do to make use of our opportunity when that time arrives? If we return to liquor, we shall greatly damage our cause, and meanwhile shall add to the degree of suffering already existing. Let us rather keep our gains and be prepared to reach new heights of prosperity. To cope with the world conditions requires clear brains and sound health and high morals. He who throws away reason and prudence in the time of trouble will but plunge himself into despair, and national despair may lead to national suicide. Professor Carver, of Harvard University, sets forth for us a truth so startling that we can not afford to ignore it, coming, as it does, from one of the world's greatest economists. He says:

So long as all the rival nations are wasting resources and man-power in drink there may be no differential advantage in favor of any one or against any of the others; but where one nation, such as the United States, makes a definite advance in this form of economy, unless it indulges in some folly that will neutralize the advantage thus gained, there is no reason to doubt it will gain on all others, year by year, decade by decade, and century by century, and eventually dominate the civilization of the world. They who refuse to take this great step forward in the economy of human resources, whether they understand it or not, are definitely choosing to occupy a secondary position in the civilized world.—Ibid., page 27.

The economic benefits of prohibition are further shown in the fact that from 1920, when prohibition went into effect, to 1925, the number of savings bank depositors increased twenty-three million, and the savings increased in that time by eight billion dollars. Between 1918 and 1928 savings accounts increased over two hundred per cent, and life insurance increased over three hundred and fifty per cent. The most noted wet editor of our day, Mr. Brisbane, admitted in 1930 that "Americans are saving money as never before," and that savings bank deposits increased more than one billion dollars in 1929. He then adds:

Other hundreds of millions were invested in real estate, stocks, bonds, etc. In the world's history there is nothing like the way the American people both spend money and save money.—Prohibition Facts, page 42.

Who Are Fighting Prohibition?

In order to overturn the gains made by prohibition, several strong organizations with millions of dollars back of them have been formed. Some of the daily press are paid to mislead the people and convince them that liquor brings prosperity. In this way some glaring misrepresentations have been published. European organizations, as well as some in America, are devoted to these detestable and mercenary ends. Monsieur DeMunn, chairman of the French Wines Export Commission said as reported by the Associated Press:

We have a hundred millions of people behind us and millions of dollars which we will spend in a merciless fight to destroy prohibition in the United States.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, page 75.

Many read their deceptive statements, not knowing how untrue they are. These foreign organizations have representatives in the United States for the express purpose of breaking down the law. Can any loyal citizen lend his aid to such seditious and meddlesome treachery as this? In 1928 a secret treaty made in Paris was reported found hidden in the files of the League of Nations, to which eight European nations were party. It states:

This alliance is to promote the consumption of wine throughout the world by proving its beneficial effects and its influence as an agent in the fight against alcoholism.—Ibid., page 77.

Within the past week my attention has been called to a financial announcement that a well-known ginger ale concern has been solicited by a noted brewing company of Europe and by several other liquor concerns to handle their liquors if the United States changes its liquor laws. These foreign vampires, and many in our own country, would betray the moral, physical, and temporal forces of progress here, in order to gratify their avaricious and degenerate aims. Such characters as these are the chief enemies of prohibition, but our best citizens of high morals and nobility of character will not be their consorts. I close this evening's talk by quoting and commending to you the words of that great martyr and savior of a united country, Abraham Lincoln, who declared in 1842:

When there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth—how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace of both those revolutions that shall have ended in that victory. How nobly distinguished that people who shall have planted and nurtured to maturity both the political and moral freedom of their species.—Prohibition Facts, page 97.

The mightiest miracle of all miracles is the human mind which can achieve anything in which it believes. All projects are feasible where there is faith and persistence, for progress must go on as immutably as time. The future will bring many marvels to our thought and consideration. Keep your eyes open for opportunity in your own field of endeavor. Do not stop to listen to what your neighbors may think for or against your aspiration. The world will laugh at your dream. What man has dreamed, however, spells our progress and civilization. Maybe some miracle awaits your hand over the threshold of tomorrow.—Richard Braunstein, "Miracles" Church Management.

After Twenty-five Years

Just before General Conference that spring [1907] I was offered a secular position at stenographic work, in fact, two were offered to me, one not long after the other. The temptation was strong to accept, yet I could not feel that I should. I hesitated. It seemed like a step in the dark, and almost folly to turn down the offer of a lucrative position with no prospect of anything else ahead of me. But following what seemed to be the Spirit's leadings, I did so, and went to General Conference at Lamoni.

A few days after my arrival there, Sister Walker sent word that she wished to see me. I went at once, and was confronted with this unexpected and startling proposition from her: "I am in need of help. If I present your name to the Board of Publication for consideration as to placing you as my assistant in editing the Hope, will you be willing to take the place?"

For a moment I could scarcely believe that such a thing was being offered me. I think my heart must have turned over a few times before I could find voice to say that if she thought I could be of help to her, I might try. To which timid acquiescence she gave her characteristic, emphatic nod and declared, "You can."

We had a long talk together then, in which she explained that advancing age and her affliction of deafness had convinced her that it was time she should have an assistant who could be in the office all the time and look after the detail work, and under her instruction learn to edit and revise manuscripts. Sister Walker had always done her editorial work in her own home. She was living at that time in White Gables, the home of Miss Mary Banta and Mrs. Lucy L. Resseguie, and she further proposed that I have a room there where I could be constantly in touch with her and receive instructions mornings and evenings in connection with the new work I would undertake.

Accordingly, when General Conference was ended and the Board of Publication held their usual sessions immediately following, Sister Walker presented my name for their consideration. They approved her suggestion, appointed me as assistant editor of Zion's Hope, assigning other duties in the editorial room, such as copying manuscripts for Saints' Herald and Autumn Leaves, and serving as secretary to Brother Elbert A. Smith, who was then editor of Autumn Leaves and on the Herald staff.

The compensation would be small, considerably less than had been offered me in either of the stenographic positions that had been recently rejected in the city, but that did not seem to matter, though I know it must have looked foolish to some. But I understood more fully now that manifestation of the Spirit given two months before, realized that the Lord had indeed chosen my way, and there was left for me to fulfill the promise I had made him then. The task looked altogether too big for my meager ability and preparation, but I could only trust and try.

There being no pressing need for immediately taking up the work, I went to Ridgeway, Missouri, to visit in the home of my brother Lyman for a week or two, and also while there to take a few lessons from him in photography. A little knowledge of it might be helpful sometime in furnishing illustrations for the paper. Sometime during the month of May, probably about the fifteenth or twentieth, I returned to Lamoni to enter upon the new work, and to take up my abode at White Gables with Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Resseguie, and Miss Banta.

The thrill of beginning my new work on that sunshiny day in May so long ago, lingers with me yet. I believe it always will. The first issue of Zion's Hope on which my name appeared as assistant editor is dated May 29, 1907. Sister Ethel I. Skank had been assisting for some time as editor of the little folks' department, "The Fold." She continued in charge of that department.

1907 was the year the Herald Publishing House burned. It had happened January 5, and while the new building was in process of erection the various offices and departments were scattered about in the business district of the town. The business office was located in the France Building; the pressroom, a block and a half away on another street in a room proffered by Bishop William Anderson. The composing and proof rooms were in another building about half way between them. The editorial office was in a newly finished room upstairs over B. D. Fleet's store. Adjoining it was the room occupied by Elder R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary. When we had made our copy material ready, we went downstairs, walked a half block, crossed two streets and, entering the second or third building from the corner, handed our work to the proofreaders. We had plenty of physical exercise that summer.

The room occupied by our staff was a light, sunny room, but the floors and windows had never been cleaned since the plaster was put on. The janitor was so much in demand at so many places and at the same time, that he could seldom get around to our quarters. Sweeping in the morning involved clouds of white dust which settled on desks and papers in a most disagreeable way. Brother Leon Gould was assistant editor of the Herald then. We got tired of the dust, and decided to dispose of it, so one afternoon we turned janitors, heated some water on the stove, and scrubbed floor, woodwork, and windows. He deserves credit for doing the most and hardest of it.

In November the new Herald Office building was completed, and its clean, sunny rooms and beautiful tiled floors were a welcome sight to all the employees. We took great pleasure in moving in and placing desks, machinery, and other equipment. Our editorial rooms were the two southeast ones upstairs. Adjustments were soon made, and we again settled down to work.

My duties were too varied and too absorbing to become monotonous. In the mornings there was Brother Elbert's correspondence to be taken care of and other work in the way of assisting him; the afternoons were devoted to my special task on the Hope, the typing of manuscripts, writing, and whatever else came to hand. Brother Elbert was always kindness and consideration itself, though I know he must have had to charitably overlook a good many blunders on my part. I owe much to his patience and instruction. In the evenings when I returned home to Sister Walker and talked with her and received her counsel, there came new inspiration and help for the work of the morrow.

I was not long in making discovery of some of the ways in which I was greatly lacking. One of these ways was a knowledge of English literature. My country school course had not included this important branch, and my ideas concerning it were very hazy and indefinite. I persuaded Miss Banta to associate with me in taking private lessons that winter from one of the college teachers. It took us out one or two evenings every week, and gave us plenty of intensive study on all the others in order to make any headway, but the lessons were of great benefit to me, giving me a little of the groundwork so much needed.

In the junior and intermediate Sunday school room at the Brick Church teachers were needed that year. A junior class of boys was soon mine. In two or three years the responsibility of superintending in the intermediate department fell to my lot, working in connection also with the junior department. Here in this room full of boys and girls I had the best kind of opportunity to take note of their attitude towards our Sunday-school paper. By and by adverse criticisms began coming to me from various sources that the paper was not as up-to-date or as attractive as it should be. I knew these criticisms were largely true. Too many of the papers were lying around in the church seats unread. Compared with other Sunday-school papers, ours was lagging behind. It seemed not to be meeting the needs of either the little folks or of the junior and intermediate boys and girls. But what could be done when our means and resources were so limited? It took money to buy pictures and attractive illustrations such as others had; and there seemed to be other deficiencies.

For a year or two I pondered on the problem, studying the make-ups of all the Sunday-school papers I could get hold of, as well as the graded textbooks in the schools, and conferring with teachers. In addition to this I prayed over the matter very earnestly. The latter-day mission of the restored gospel with its beautiful message of truth and hope and life, how worthy it was of being carried to the children of the church in an attractive form! How important that it should be told in language suited to their various ages! In response to this study and prayer light seemed to come, though gradually. Apparently, for one thing, we were trying to cover too wide a scope with a single paper. Other churches supplied a suitable, graded paper for each age. We could not do so much, of course, but might we not have two—one for the little people, and one for the juniors and intermediates?

The idea grew. Sister Walker and I talked it over together many times. She concurred in the project, but felt she did not have the strength to assume the responsibility of launching the idea, and encouraged me to push it ahead.

Plans were worked out by this time, concurred in by her, and with her approval, in the spring of 1913, I laid them before the Board of Publication. They listened to my appeal, unanimously adopted the plan presented, adding only that they hoped I would not wait till the end of the year to make the change, but would be able to do so the first of July.

Their unanimous and hearty agreement to the idea came so readily and quickly that I was now almost frightened at my own audacity in the undertaking, and the responsibility that remained with me to carry it out. It meant an almost unlimited amount of work, and it must be begun at once. More original material had to be gathered, cuts must be obtained from somewhere, I knew not where, more than we had ever had, a name was to be found for the new paper, and a multitude of details must be worked out in less than two short months. The Zion's Hope was to become the paper for the little people, from three to nine years of age, the new one for the older boys and girls.

I am aware that there are some of the Saints who felt then, and who still feel, that an injustice was done to Zion's Hope in this change. They had a feeling that it was lowered to a less important place than the one it had been occupying. No such idea or intention ever occurred to me when advising the change. Somehow the name, "Zion's Hope," seemed naturally to belong to the little folks. I still feel that way, and assure you that I had no thought of making it inferior. I considered that the paper provided for the wee ones of the church was of just as great importance as the one that was to carry the church's message to the older boys and girls. I still feel that way.

Perhaps I erred in this. I will not be too positive. I can only say that I had prayed earnestly over every detail of the plan, and that I honestly and conscientiously tried to follow the right leadings. If I failed to discern the true course in this, then it is one of the errors that I have made along the way, and doubtless there have been many which others can see more plainly than I.

Rallying to our support all those who were willing to send in new, fresh, and original material, the work of the next few weeks was somehow accomplished, and on the first week in July, 1913, two Sunday school papers were issued by the Board of Publication instead of one, Zion's Hope appearing in its new form, and the second paper coming out under the name of Stepping Stones. Hundreds of names had been submitted in a contest from which "Stepping Stones" was chosen, the award going to a little girl in Arkansas.

It took some months to get the adjustment made among the Sunday schools of the church, but after that was done, there came a steady, though gradual, growth in the subscriptions for some years that was gratifying to those so anxiously awaiting results.

From that time on, the daily need for material for both these papers constituted a constant and pressing urge to write and help meet the demand; for although there were those who loyally contributed, yet many times there was such a dearth of original stories that the editors had to write, and do so at once under pressure. It was in a time of such pressing need that the story, "In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage," was begun. It was run serially in Stepping Stones before being put in book form, the chapters written from week to week, often finishing one barely in time to get it into the next issue. Much of that story was, therefore, written under difficulties.

The next year its sequel, "The Vineyard Story," was commenced, and since it was to be published serially in Autumn Leaves, and would not lighten in any way the work of obtaining material for the papers directly in my charge, there was thus an additional weight and responsibility. It ran serially for seventeen months in Autumn Leaves, and this with the necessity of writing short stories, editorials, and one or two short serials in the other papers during the same period of time, came nearly proving too much for my strength. In the midst of this, in the summer of 1917, a rest seemed imperative, so when Sister Marcella Schenck finished her term of school, she agreed to take care of the general routine of office work for four or five weeks while I went away to the quiet of a Montana ranch for a rest. That vacation, taken with some good friends, who saw my need for rest and quiet, was a wonderful boon. Though not as long a one as needed, it was sufficient to enable me to regain a substantial amount of strength and health again, and to resume my work.

Other tasks in addition to those directly concerned with the interests of the papers often fell to my hands. The location of my office sometimes devolved on those "extras." At one time my editorial work was done in the northwest room of the building, which was then the Presiding Patriarch's office, and there I could at the same time look after his files and indexes. Later I occupied in the General Church Library on the south side of the building, where a small amount of time was required to care for the books. Occasionally there were sermons and patriarchal blessings to report and transcribe, and as secretary of the Lamoni School Board minutes of meetings were taken and records kept. From two to three evenings were spent at the church each week in the interest of the local Sunday school. Yes, and there was home work also to be done, for by this time I was not boarding.

Almost fourteen years in that Lamoni Herald Office building, and then it was decreed that the publishing house should be removed to Independence. Furniture was packed, my house rented, and with others of the employees and the office equipment, I journeyed to Independence where the work has continued to the present time.

Busy years, when spent at tasks that are near to your heart, are not unhappy ones. You may grow weary to the point of exhaustion sometimes, but afterwards, you don't begrudge anything you have ever done because of the joy and satisfaction it has brought. You count it all well worth while to get weary, if privileged to help a little bit here and there along the way. And as for that, the score is even; for what a lot of helpers have arisen, and in turn given their invaluable assistance. Who could accomplish anything without the help of his friends? How they encourage and help one along! It seems to me there have always been such a host of them to cheer and to give inspiration for each day's tasks—and they have not been chary in coming to my aid in times of need.

I want to pay tribute to all these friends right now—first to those older ones, who so often reached down the helping hand and smiled their encouragement. Many of them are gone to the other side now, but their memory is both beautiful and sacred to me.

And next I would speak of that host of young people who have grown up and are still growing up in the church. Somehow, whether I have met them or not, I feel to number them all as in some sense belonging to me. Since first beginning to write for them, many, very many have grown from boys and girls into manhood and womanhood. Their children and later their grandchildren have taken their places in my reading audience. They have been charitably kind all these years. These young friends, as they in turn came along, have been the joy of my life. They still are, and I trust they ever will be. Though I have tried to teach and guide them, yet they have taught me, and I am their debtor. I am not merely writing these words for the sake of putting them down. I mean them. When Christ wanted to teach his disciples a lesson he set a little child in their midst. He proved then that a child was among the greatest of teachers. It is true; I've found it so.

Pausing here, I would go back again for just a moment to that old farm home in grateful acknowledgment to that pioneer father of mine for his example of courage and cheerfulness; to the mother, in whose heart dwelt wisdom and faith, a faith that winds or storms or tides moved not; and to those older brothers and sisters who taught true literary values and breathed into the atmosphere of the home the high ideals of life and religion.

Before closing, there is One above all others to whom I would pay homage. That great Friend has never failed me. Through all conditions and circumstances of life He has stood comfortingly near, ready to give support when strength or faith faltered, and when I have made errors to patiently point them out and help me to avoid others. I have held on to that simplicity of faith which has caused me to feel that He has thought and care for even the smallest details of our work and our life, and I have not hesitated in asking Him about them. His response has strengthened that faith in Him.

In childhood I read and was deeply impressed with the beautiful promises made in John 14. I believed literally in those remarkable statements of Christ, and in the promise He made of manifesting himself. I continued through the years to cling to that promise until to my joy it was literally fulfilled to me. No human voice can speak such incomparable words of peace to the soul as the voice of the Master. No human eyes (not even those of a mother) can glow with that light of ineffable tenderness as can those of the Christ. No heart is ever so deeply stirred over our sorrows and griefs as the compassionate heart of the Savior of the world. This I know. I marvel at the kindness and the gentleness with which he has dealt, and the patience he has with us humans. His matchless character hourly becomes to me more wonderful, his influence and his nearness more desirable. Therefore, today I am content that a little more than twenty-five years ago I said to Him without reservation in my heart, "Choose Thou the way where I may serve Thee, and it shall be so."

Twenty-five years! Why, it doesn't seem so long after all, since I sorted out the material and arranged the copy for my first number that sunshiny May day. I glance down at the usual clutter of papers on my desk, across at my typewriter, up at the shelves where a long row of bound volumes of Zion's Hopes and Stepping Stones stand in their blue cloth covers. How familiar it has all grown—how much a part of life it has become—this routine work of copying, revising, writing letters, stories, planning—

"How about some Stepping Stones copy? Could you get some ready right away? I'd like to put two machines on it this afternoon." The foreman of the composing room walks in in his breezy, off-hand manner, abruptly breaking into my meditations with these questions proffered in the cheerfulest of tones.

"Why, yes, Gene, I'll see what I can do," I reply, murmuring a slight apology for being somewhat behind (who wouldn't be behind after wandering back twenty-five years?). Automatically my hand moves across the desk, reaching for a manuscript. As my fingers begin leafing it over, my mind still dreamily wandering, he adds, "If you can manage it, too, we might make up the Hope pages right after lunch. The galleys are all corrected."

And thus, fully aroused from these reveries of the past, I turn myself about, and begin to gather up the threads of today's tasks, preparatory to weaving them together for the morrow.

[THE END.]

The church has been built and has progressed on the heroisms of the people. Whenever the church has suffered because of her acceptance of the cross she has grown by leaps and bounds. But when an Emperor Constantine has given his official sanction to the church to save it from suffering it has decayed. As soon as the cross has been removed from the life of the church and smugness has taken its place, heroisms have died out.—Herbert Marsh, in "Balloon Tires," Church Management.

College Costs

By G. N. Briggs

In the issue of the Saints' Herald for June 1, I published the latest available figures, which were issued in June, 1930, giving the costs for ninety-eight colleges in eight states from which many Graceland College students come. In that statement I wrote as follows:

"The figures for years since 1930 when published will probably show slightly lower average costs per student, but the standards of dress, social and extra-curricular activities in most of the colleges of the country are such that rather large expenditures are required if students are to participate in those features which are recognized as part of a well-rounded development. At Graceland, because of the well-developed program of social, forensic, athletic and religious activities under the supervision of the faculty, students receive that opportunity which so many take advantage of to the extent that they receive the essential development with the minimum of outlay."

There has just been issued the report of American colleges and universities for the past college year, 1931-32, published in June of this year. Comparison of costs for 1930 with 1932 will be of interest and this comparison is shown in the following table:

State	No. of Colleges	Average Cost per Student
		1930	1932
Iowa	12	$ 857	$ 796
Illinois	18	1,003	942
Missouri	6	883	821
Kansas	10	795	735
Wisconsin	7	1,003	936
Ohio	20	948	875
Massachusetts	16	1,338	1,260
California	9	1,144	1,127
	98	$1,010	$ 951

The fixed charges at Graceland College range from $397 to $415 including the following items: tuition, incidental fee, room and board.

The above items of course do not cover such matters as transportation, laundry, books, clothing, etc. These items vary with the individual, but it has been found that the average cost at Graceland College is only about sixty per cent of the average cost of the ninety-eight colleges in the eight states tabulated above. It is expected that the expense at the College for the coming year will be considerably less than the average of past years due to the careful supervision of the members of the faculty in connection with miscellaneous expenditures. It is believed that these latest cost figures which were supplied by the various colleges and universities themselves will be of interest to parents and young people interested in attending college this fall.

Darkness and Light

By Anne Burhart

"And I caused darkness to come upon the face of the deep."

"And I God, said, Let there be light and there was light."

"And I God, divided the light from the darkness . . . And I God, called the light day and the darkness I called night."

So deep-rooted is our philosophy, that God is the author of sunshine and happiness, that when these influences cease to manifest themselves in our lives, we feel God has forsaken us.

According to the great plan of the temporal world, it is interesting to note that God first caused darkness, then created light. He divided the light from the darkness, and by reversing the order of things, caused the day to precede the night.

If it was necessary in the great temporal plan of creation, to set a night to follow the day, that our physical bodies through rest might find relief from the stimulating effect of light; to provide a way for the physical roots of our being to thrust themselves deeper into the soil of life; then it is sane to assume that there should be a spiritual nighttime—a time when our barren experience shall cause our souls to take deeper root in the elements of life.

The oak on the sheltered hillside becomes a shrub; but the tree that weathers the bitter driving winds and beating storms, is the one which makes the giant oak.

Let us see the beauty in the storm clouds, let us thrill to that force which manifests itself in the great storms of life. Let us trust Him, who causing darkness and creating light, harnessed them and bade them do His will.

The cross is a synonym for suffering. We suffer because of our limitations or handicaps. We have our thorns in the flesh. We have folks who hurt us from whom there is no escape. Everybody has something in his or her life he desires to be rid of because it causes pain. But this is not the cross. The cross is something we are called upon to take up for Christ. It means putting from us the easy, effeminate life for one of hardship and toil for his Kingdom.—Herbert Marsh, in "Balloon Tires," Church Management, March, 1931.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Bemidji, Minnesota

The Saints of this place are trying to go forward, that they may enter into the more abundant life promised by the Lord to his disciples. They note with pleasure the spiritual progress made by the church and the numbers which daily are being added to the kingdom of Christ on earth.

The sermons and articles written by President Elbert A. Smith are especially enjoyed by the Saints of this branch, and it is their desire to continue to give heed to the instructions contained therein. The Herald and Ensign, they believe, should be in the home of every Saint.

Bemidji Branch was fortunate in having Apostle J. F. Curtis from June 13 to 20. He preached a few nights first in one of the other churches in town, then occupied the Saints' church the rest of the time. Brother Curtis preached on the principles and beliefs of the church, using a large chart to good advantage and declaring our work plainly to the people. Many nonmembers were present, and expressed appreciation for the good things they heard. On the last two nights the house was filled, more people attending than the Saints had had in many years.

Brother Curtis promised to return next fall and carry on for two or three weeks. While here he recommended that Brother H. L. Bosshardt be ordained to the office of elder. The branch voted to approve. Brother Bosshardt recently moved here and he and his family are fine people. They will, no doubt, be a great help to the branch.

Sister Jennie Hayes and her family, too, have moved here lately and are active members, adding four more to this branch. So the good work goes forward.

Crops in this region look good. None of the Saints are out of employment here, and any member who is willing to work can make a living in this territory.

July 3, Bemidji had its rally day with good attendance. Brother W. C. Stauty, of Duluth, preached an instructive sermon, and a basket dinner was enjoyed by all in the church yard 'neath the jack pine trees.

Brother William Madison, an Indian brother from Independence, Missouri, and his wife and son visited here a few days ago, and stated their confidence in the church. They plan to locate at Cass Lake.

Brother George W. Day recently baptized Robert Hayes and visited a number of other towns where Saints live.

Local members are confident that the church will succeed in its work, and are resolved to be true and hopeful.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Attendance of Colorado Springs Branch is growing steadily better. Officers hope to make this same report from now on.

Children's Day was observed by a short program given by the boys and girls. They are to be commended for their efforts.

The young people's class enjoyed a two-day camping trip in Black Forest July 3 and 4. On Sunday morning church school was held under the shady protection of the great pine trees. This makes the second outing this summer for these young people.

July 10, the Young People's Dramatic Club of Denver, presented a religious drama at Colorado Springs, "A Sign Unto You." Preceding the play Brother Glaude Smith, pastor of Denver Branch, preached a sermon. The play carried with it a lesson which none will soon forget. All are grateful for the opportunity of seeing the play.

This branch has been favored with a visit from Brother

O. J. Tary and family, of Wheeling, West Virginia. Brother Tary occupied the pulpit on several occasions. His sermons were of interest to all.

Kansas City Stake

O. B. K.'s Program for the Year

The new Stake O. B. K. council of young people recently approved a year's program of work and made the committee assignments to plan the procedure for the various activities outlined for 1932-33.

Sunday, July 24, the council and all local cabinet officers were invited to a dedication prayer service at Central Church. About fifty leaders responded. Apostle F. H. Edwards spoke for the dedication to the Work of Christ and his church. Stake President, C. E. Wight spoke for the dedication to the needs of the local church, and George Mesley, the council president, presented the dedication to the O. B. K. program of church activity. A number of young people and several of the pastors participated in the social service which followed and each determined to give unreservedly this year to the service of the church and its young people. The meeting adjourned to the church lawn where a committee of girls from the Fourth Church had prepared punch, cake, and ice cream.

On Wednesday, July 27, the first of a monthly series of stake prayer meetings was held at Fourth Church. These meetings will be planned by the church that acts as host. The first meeting set a fine standard for all future effort. It was well programmed around the theme, "Purity." On entering the little white church, each person was handed a bulletin which featured the order of service, the O. B. K. pledge and some helpful suggestions for meditation. Marion Worden played the prelude and the service was in charge of three O. B. K. young men, Elder Marion Sneed, and priests Lloyd Siebert and Norman Carter.

There was active participation in prayer and testimony by the group which numbered one hundred and forty-five. After the meeting provision was made for social fellowship on the church lawn and hot biscuits and jelly were served buffet style. Only three groups were not represented at the meeting, and some others were there in full force. The August meeting will be held at Quindaro Church.

Plans are complete for a trip to the Stewartsville reunion on August 28, and the O. B. K.'s are looking forward to a Labor Day picnic September 5, and the visit of Independence young people on September 11.

Mount Washington Church

The young people's prayer service is conducted each Sunday morning at eight thirty. Will Gould and Max Gerber, both Graceland College students, sponsored this movement, and have been a great help in keeping the service going, arranging for speakers and making their own contributions. During the month both Elder George Mesley and Elder C. E. Wight met with them, and their messages were greatly enjoyed.

"Adventuring in the Gospel of Life," was the theme for the worship service during the month of July, these services being in charge of Sister Roberta Winegar, assisted by Brother Franklin Hunter, chorister, and Sister Lois Gibson, organist, and many others who took special parts on the program. Sister Berdie Gould, the Religious Education director, and Sister Irene Hunter arrange and prepare the worship service programs from month to month and much credit is due them.

In July the following speakers occupied the pulpit, giving timely instruction: Elder J. Charles May, Elder William Shakespeare, and Patriarch Ammon White of the general ministry, and Brothers Constance, Zink, Will Bolinger, R. L. Bishop, and Lyman Fike, of the local ministry.

Sister Zink, who has been ill for some time, was able to attend church Sunday evening.

The volley ball teams are improving, the boys' team giving Chelsea a close run for the series last week and winning two out of five games. They piled up fourteen points in the last game which ended sixteen to fourteen in favor of Chelsea.

Hibbard, Indiana

In the face of the many opposing elements of latter days, the Saints at Hibbard try to abide in the faith of the restored gospel. They are enjoying the privilege of worshiping in their new church home with Brother L. Bennett as the officer in charge and superintendent of the Sunday school.

At this busy season of the year for rural districts, the efforts at church work are not so concentrated as usual, but those who can carry on do not slacken in determination.

A fair-sized gathering of Saints and friends attended the annual all-day services June 19. There was a program for the children in the morning, and after the splendid dinner and social period, the congregation listened to a sermon by J. W. McKnight.

Hibbard Branch still feels sad at the loss by death of three of its officers, and others, too, have since gone into the great beyond.

Brother Pement has occupied the pulpit some of late, and recently Elder S. W. L. Scott, being called here to officiate at the funeral of Sister Lucinda Lichtenberger, has tarried, delivering sermons for a few evenings. The spirit of the pulpit is love, service, a pure heart, and the way of life.

The women's department which has been very successful, has discontinued its usual work during the warm weather. It will resume meetings in the fall.

The crop prospect is fine here. A downpour of rain broke a somewhat discouraging hot and dry period last week.

Columbus, Ohio

First Branch, Tompkins and Medary Avenues

Saints here have been very busy the past three months, carrying out the programs of the various departments.

The Children's Day program was a success and brought into the church ten new members.

The Fourth of July picnic was well attended and enjoyed by all. There were games for young and old, a basket lunch at noon, and ice cream was distributed free. Last but not least, the ball game was won by the married men.

The women's department is having some spiritual prayer services at the homes of the different sisters.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preached here Sunday evening, July 10, and the congregation was glad to hear him.

Apostle John W. Rushton stopped in Columbus July 13 and 14 on his way to sail for his European mission. He preached two inspiring sermons. Everyone wished him bon voyage.

Two new lights were bought for the choir by the Loyal Club, and these are much appreciated.

The Saints are looking forward to the Kirtland reunion.

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-Second Streets

Another baptism June 29, brought the number of baptisms in this branch in June up to seven. Leah May Morgan was baptized by J. E. Matthews. She is the third generation in this family that Brother Matthews has baptized.

Sacramento, July 3, will long be remembered, for it was a spiritual feast. The Saints were encouraged through messages given, and have a great desire to continue faithful. In the evening Elder John R. Grice preached a splendid sermon, using for his theme, "The Importance of a Spiritual Life."

July 10, the members were privileged to hear Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preach on "God Is Moving to Bring About His Purpose."

The women's department had its annual picnic at the Storage Dam, July 14. A good crowd was there.

District President A. E. Anderton preached at the morning hour July 24, on the subject, "Redemption Some Day, But When?" Elder C. W. Clark, pastor of First Church, preached in the evening on "Sacrifice."

July 31, after Sunday school and preaching, the Saints went to the cottage of Brother and Sister Hamilton, about twenty miles in the country and had a picnic dinner in the grove. Eighty-seven were there, and the afternoon was much enjoyed. At seven fifteen song service began and the choir sang an anthem. Elder J. E. Matthews preached an able sermon. The congregation was benefited by this day spent out of doors.

Other speakers this month have been R. E. Madden. G. H. Kirkendall, and Chester Carey.

Open-air Missionary Meetings in Salt Lake City

This is the time to enjoy open air services, and we have taken our Sunday evening service to the lawn of the park surrounding the city and county building here. We have been given privilege of holding these meetings on the northeast section of these grounds, far enough back from the street so that we are not bothered by the rattle and roar of the traffic. With our Bilhorn organ and folding chairs, our song service soon calls a fine audience, which is augmented until listeners are sitting not only in the chairs and park benches, but on the grass surrounding the speaker.

Elder Chase makes these sermons affirmative of our gospel ideals, but in doing so there can not fail to be some contrasts drawn between the two churches, and these contrasts are always emphasized by our Mormon friends when question time comes. This is particularly true with regard to the financial law of Christ.

In this time of depression many are questioning, Why should the apostles and other high church officials live in plenty and even luxury while others, equally devoted, should be found on the lists of the unemployed, and under the necessity of seeking aid from the charity organizations, both in and out of the Mormon Church? This is often referred to by our questioners, and we are asked if this condition exists in the Reorganized Church, or are we nearer the gospel ideals?

The above question was answered by the statement that our general officials, including the Presidency and Apostles were placed on a budget supposed to meet their just needs and wants, but that in this time of depression, they felt the same pinch of this budget that the lesser members of the priesthood, as well as other members were feeling. When Elder Chase declared that he could not visualize an Apostle or Prophet of Christ becoming a millionaire, some one asked, "How about your president?" The reply was that Joseph Smith, son of Joseph the Seer, who served this church fifty-four years as its President and Prophet, rendered this service, demanding and receiving only a budget sufficient for the needs of himself and family, and at his death owned only a very modest home which had been given him by one of the brothers; while the Mormons' most famous president, Brigham Young, in the days when millionaires were not common, died bequeathing over three million dollars, (or property valued at that amount) to his heirs.

Just here Elder Chase stressed the fact that the Reorganization has not ceased to teach the law of consecration and stewardship, even though not all of the members have fully obeyed it; and that in this line of obedience the church was making progress, instead of letting it go as something impracticable, while, according to a recent sermon by Elder B. H. Roberts, the Mormon Church has made no effort to put this law into force since 1885. Of course our speaker emphasized the declaration of the Master, "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself"; and the command of this same Master, "In your temporal things be equal, . . . For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things." The fact that the enterprise of establishing Zion is the business of the church was made impressive, and also, that the only disgrace attaching to this enterprise was that they quit the job, rather than persisting until they found the way to express in practical terms the ideals of Christ.

Baptism for the dead is a subject upon which many questions are asked, so the evening of July 17, this was the subject of the lecture. In this lecture the speaker showed that this is a permissive ordinance, limited both as to time and place, and also as to those to whom it is applicable. The time for its practice was the period between February and October, 1841, when this practice was stopped by a "Thus saith the Lord." The place, or places, are "In Zion and in her stakes, and in Jerusalem, those places which I have appointed for refuge, shall be the places for your baptisms for dead." (Not in the principle that, "where there is no law there is no con- on all the face of the land.) And the application of this law is only to those who have heard the message and refused to obey in this life, for the Bible and Book of Mormon agree in the principle that, "where there is no law there is no condemnation, and unto such baptism availeth nothing." He further said that until this principle is again commanded by divine revelation, it can not be of force. (See 2 Nephi 6: 51-56, Mosiah 1: 107-122, and 8: 58, 59, and Moroni 8: 25-28, and the revelation to Joseph Smith in Kirtland Temple, in 1836, Church History, Volume 2, page 16.)

This lecture was so plain and conclusive that about the only comments made were in commendation and acceptance of the speaker's position.

The evening of July 24, the subject was "Endowments," and Elder Chase pictured the endowments as given to the early Christians, both in Jerusalem and on this continent, and in a constructive way presented the promise of such blessings to all who will pay the price of obedience, and the fact that without this preparation no man can be an effective witness for the Master. "This is not a secret ordinance, nor the result of secret work or ceremonies," was his statement.

Again the subject seemed to be quite conclusive, as the questions and questioners steered clear of it after the sermon, and at least one, sitting near one of our Saints remarked, "Quite a difference between that and the belief that a little, sheer garment can so protect us that even bullets can not go through."

Beginning with this week, we are taking our Wednesday evening service to the same place, making a missionary service of it there. The interest is good, and the audience seem to be hungry for reading matter. We are passing out many of these tracts which we found lying idle here. If this interest keeps up, we shall soon have to come to our Bishop for a new supply of literature. We have more inquiries and interested callers at our mission headquarters since these meetings began.

In addition to these open air services, we are holding an occasional cottage meeting with some of our Saints who are unable to attend regularly at the church, or who have some neighbors whom they wish to invite to a missionary service. An excellent spirit is enjoyed at these services, and we feel that much good is being done.

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

Far West Stake

The work of Far West Stake is going on in the usual way with everyone looking forward now to the reunion which commences August 18 and closes August 28. Plans are nearing completion and a fine program has been arranged. Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder Ray Whiting will be in attendance throughout, and several other general men are expected on Sundays.

The results of Sacrifice Week in the Stake were gratifying in many respects although, of course, the amount received is short of that needed. The Saints demonstrated the true spirit of sacrifice and gave all they could wishing it were more. Many of our people are farmers and many city people have been hurt seriously by the economic conditions.

King City Mission

The work at King City is developing nicely although the Saints are few in number. Class work has been carried on quite regularly and is well attended. Plans have now been made for regular preaching services to be held the third Sunday of each month. On July 17, Elder F. L. Hinderks, a member of the stake presidency, met with the Saints and spoke for them. Saints living in several nearby towns are giving their support and a few nonmembers are becoming interested.

Kingston

Bishop Milo Burnett visited Kingston Branch July 24, and preached for the Saints at the morning hour giving them a fine sermon.

Stewartsville

The Stewartsville Church has dismissed the Sunday evening service to meet with the other churches in the open-air community union service for the summer. On July 31, the Latter Day Saint Church furnished the speaker and had charge of the service. Rain prevented its being held in the park but the church was overcrowded as Stake President Ward A. Hougas represented the church. Brother Hougas also visited Stewartsville the morning of July 24, and Brother L. A. Keck was the speaker the morning of July 31.

First Saint Joseph Church

The quarterly amalgamated sacrament service brought a large crowd to First Church July 3, although many people took advantage of the week-end holiday to take short trips out of town. Bishop Milo Burnett was in charge of the service and was assisted by the pastors of the other churches in the city. The theme carried out was "After Sacrifice Week, What?"

The theme of "Patriotism" marked the vesper service July 3. The local choir, under the direction of E. J. Ehlers, presented a pleasing musical prelude of national hymns and anthems. Elder H. C. Timm gave a sermonet "The Greater Patriotism."

A large audience sat quietly in the sweltering heat to see and hear an experienced cast of the UI-Lik-Us Players present "The Wife of Judas," a religious drama written by Blanche Edwards Mesley, at the vesper service, July 10. Pastor Ward A. Hougas made the most of the play's lesson in his sermonet "I Shall Leave Thee Not."

First Church Saints were pleased to have the young people of Stewartsville present the prelude on July 17. About thirty young singers gave a pleasing cantata under the direction of Leonard G. Ehlers. This group of young people is blessed with an abundance of musical talent, and Saint Joseph members are happy to see them using it in service to the church. Elder Ward A. Hougas delivered a sermonet following the prelude. First Church Choir served the visiting choir a refreshing drink in the lower auditorium before they began their homeward journey.

The O. T. Z.'s presented "The Sin of Ahab," a Biblical drama, at the vesper service on July 24, after which Elder H. C. Timm delivered a sermonet on "New Wine."

A musical prelude was well presented on July 31 by the local choir assisted by the girls' chorus. Two beautiful anthems were sung by the choir, a ladies' quartet and a male trio each sang one hymn, and the girls' chorus gave several pleasing numbers. Bishop Milo Burnett delivered a sermon following this prelude.

The women's department has been active this summer. The women have been meeting for all-day services and recently spent several days canning vegetables for the needy next winter. They also spend much time quilting.

A special all-day meeting was held Thursday July 21, at the church. The women of the other churches in the city were invited for the covered dish luncheon which was served at noon and for the afternoon. The pastor gave a talk at the luncheon. In the afternoon all enjoyed a play "Wagging Tongues" given by a group of the women.

A good crowd gathered for the first O. T. Z. picnic of the season on Tuesday, July 12, at Bartlett Park. After a hot busy day the shade and picnic supper were very much enjoyed. The boys had a good ball game to interest them after supper.

About thirty-five young people with their leaders drove to Big Lake July 17. The Fortescue Saints joined the O. T. Z.'s and together they worshiped in Brother Easter's front yard which overlooks the lake. Stake President Ward A. Hougas delivered an effective sermon. A wonderful basket dinner was spread beneath the trees at noon. Although the sun was shining at its best, many of the young people took advantage of Brother Easter's kind offer of his boats and enjoyed a boat ride on the lake. The sunburn which came as a result was merely incidental to the trip. All cars headed back toward Saint Joseph in plenty of time for the vesper service.

Iowa City, Iowa

President F. M. McDowell gave the closing lecture of the Edward Partridge series, Sunday, July 17, on the subject, "A Minister's Interpretation of Life." The meeting was held at the Oathout Chapel, and was in charge of Norman E. Hield. Musical numbers were provided by a quartet consisting of Mrs. H. V. Meredith, soprano, Mrs. L. E. Flowers, contralto, L. E. Flowers, tenor, and James W. Evans, bass; Max White was the pianist.

The minister's interpretation of life President McDowell took to be the religious interpretation, the religious point of view. This interpretation, truly held, is the "background" upon which the painting of one's life is made. It gives purpose to one's life in whatever field he may work. The minister finds meaning and helpfulness in the experiences of religious men of the past, and speaks of these values to the people of today. He charges us to carry this interpretation of life to our highest and best achievements.

A reception for President McDowell was held Friday evening, July 15, at Mount Burge, the home of Doctor and Mrs. Lonzo Jones, several miles out from Iowa City.

H. Voas Meredith received his M. A. degree at the July convocation. He majored in character education, and his master's thesis was the construction of a correspondence course in that field.

Spring River Young People Meet

Joplin, Missouri.—The Spring River district young people met again in July at Forest Park with an attendance of about one hundred and forty. There were cars of people from Missouri, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

Group singing, games, and stunts, sponsored by Joplin members, were all enjoyed. Bath speeches were given by President Albert Coff, Tom Bath, of Pittsburg, Ellsworth Gilbert, also of Pittsburg, Frank Kyser, of Miami, Oklahoma, and Andy Jones, of Cardin, Oklahoma.

The next meeting is to be held August 23, at Miami, Oklahoma, at which time Miami will be in charge. These group meetings are creating a greater interest and desire for unity among the young people of the district.

Independence

The Independence Young People's Council of the church is sponsoring an early morning prayer service at the Campus for all young people next Sunday morning at seven o'clock. It has also announced a week end trip to the Far West stake reunion at Stewartville, Missouri, August 20, and the young people of the city are invited to make plans to go. The council held its regular meeting at the Auditorium Monday night.

In two days last week the Independence Fire Department made two runs to the Herald Publishing House, where a large quantity of coal in the bin at the rear of the building, was giving trouble by igniting from spontaneous combustion. The first run was made shortly after two o'clock the morning of August 3, and the fire was subdued before it damaged the building to any great extent. The blaze was discovered by a policeman on night patrol duty. The damage by fire was covered by insurance.

"Yes, the Redeemer Rose," was the subject of Apostle F. H. Edwards's sermon at the Campus Sunday night, and it was another of his summer series of sermons based on the themes of favorite and familiar hymns. The hymn was sung by a quartet from the Stone Church Choir, Mrs. Paul Wheeler, Mrs. Earl Nunn, Gerald Johnson, and Clarence Resch. Special music for the evening was furnished by the Auditorium Orchestra, and Pastor John F. Sheehy presided over the service and led the congregational singing. The opening and closing prayers were offered by Elder J. E. Kelsey, of the Stone Church.

Stone Church

The regular double sacrament service program was carried out at the Stone Church at eleven o'clock Sunday, the adult meeting upstairs in the main auditorium, the junior service downstairs.

In a brief sacrament talk to the adult congregation, Apostle F. Henry Edwards stressed the divine method of teaching men how to live by taking those things basic and fundamental in human life and sublimating them to mankind's spiritual needs. Since the world began men have struggled for bread, and so it is symbolic of mutual sharing, mutual understanding, mutual strength, and mutual helpfulness when the Saints come together in reverence, to share the bread and the wine of the sacrament.

The words of the Savior, "Love one another, as I have loved you" gave Bishop J. Stanley Kelley a text for his oblation talk.

Pastor John F. Sheehy presided over the service, being assisted by President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elders H. G. Barto and D. S. McNamara, and Bishops R. T. Cooper and J. Stanley Kelley.

Following the serving of the emblems and the singing of the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the congregation sat in meditation and silent prayer, each worshiper endeavoring to bring himself into closer communion with the heavenly Father while Opal Goode Doty played the hymn melody very softly on the organ. Then Elder H. G. Barto offered a special prayer for the church and its tasks.

Though the crowd was large, the communion service was marked by order, decorum, and the spirit of worship and solemnity.

Liberty Street Church

Pastor John R. Lentell, with his wife and son, has been attending summer school at the Central Missouri State Teachers College at Warrensburg, Missouri. They have left Independence on Sunday afternoon of each week and returned on the following Friday afternoon. School closes there this week, and the Saints in Independence hope now to have the Lentells at home the week around.

Attendance at the church school August 7 was two hundred and thirty-seven, and there were two hundred and ten present the Sunday before. Attendance at the August sacrament service numbered two hundred and thirty. In all church activities at Liberty Street the attendance is larger than usual for this season of the year, and this, workers believe, shows a substantial growth. There is a large increase of church school students who are working for credits in teacher training.

Also, a feast of spiritual blessings is being enjoyed at the eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer meeting of late.

The orchestra and the women's department will give an ice cream social together on Thursday evening, August 18, at the church. There will be good music by the orchestra, and refreshments will be served by the women. The proceeds of this function will be used to buy music and to help the women's department. All are cordially invited to come.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Alfred Waters, consists of fifteen devoted and well-trained musicians.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Chester Young, is doing a splendid work canning fruit and vegetables for the Harvest Home Festival. They have had a new fruit closet built to better facilitate their work and have lately contributed ten dollars to the local expense fund.

Sister Carr's Tuesday night class of young people is studying the Doctrine and Covenants. They also contributed to the local expense fund last month to the amount of five dollars.

June 12, Brother Harry Blake was appointed bishop's agent for Liberty Street congregation, to fill the vacancy left by Brother W. C. Patrick for the remainder of the year. Considering the financial difficulties which are so prevalent, he reports a splendid feeling of cooperation among the membership.

A quiet wedding was solemnized July 30, when Mrs. Bessie Curtis Bevens and Joseph E. Cain were married by Elder C. E. Blodgett at his home. They are now at home at 411 East Lexington Street, and have the good wishes of their friends.

Walnut Park Church

The eleven o'clock hour July 31, was occupied by Elder C. B. Woodstock. The choir, under the leadership of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "Thy Way Is in the Sanctuary" by Wilson, Fred Horne singing the bass solo.

Sacrament service last Sunday was in charge of Elder C. V. Hopkins, R. Barnhardt, and C. L. Olson, and a large number of Saints were present. Little Jean Cross, daughter of Brother and Sister Emil Cross, was baptized immediately after the early prayer meeting on that day, and was confirmed at the opening of the sacrament service.

Walnut Park Saints are sorry that Pastor Frank McDonald must be absent from the congregation for a period of about thirty days. Elder C. V. Hopkins has been chosen to act for him in the pastor's absence.

The young people of Brother Kenneth Morford's class sponsored a missionary effort the evening of August 7. About fifty of them met at the church and drove to Lees Summit where they were met by young people from Sugar Creek group. Musical numbers were given by both delegations and the sermons was by Elder H. V. Minton. The young people enjoyed this trip as well as the contribution to the happiness of Saints at Lees Summit.

Group 27 North had a social on the lawn of Brother and Sister William Campbell, August 2, Brother Erwin Moorman brought over some of his orchestra, and they played several hymns. Then the Saints listened to a talk by Patriarch Ammon White. The women served ice cream and cake. About eighty attended.

Spring Branch Church

Perhaps the most enjoyed services of the week at Spring Branch are the two hours of prayer, one on Wednesday evening, and the other at eight o'clock on Sunday morning. These, even during the warm summer months, are quite well attended, and participation is good. They are a real benefit to the branch. During the past week Jesse Smith and Thomas Nord presided over the Wednesday night prayer service, and on Sunday Jake Andes and Arthur Peer were in charge.

At the church school program hour Brother Kenneth Davis talked on the exodus of the Saints from Far West, Missouri, taking his story from church history. The Saints of early day, the school learned, suffered many hardships, and Saints of today should be grateful that they are not called upon to endure such trials.

The sacrament hour Sunday morning was fittingly introduced by a beautiful prelude played by Winogene Boyce. The service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood, assisted by Robert Fish and Clare Austin. A song was sung by Winogene Boyce, Irene Roberts, and Gladys Smith at the beginning of the service.

Sister Fred O'Brion, of Flint, Michigan, is taking active part in branch activities while she visits here a few months.

Englewood Church

Recent speakers to this congregation have been Elders Welton Wood and Thomas Richardson.

The sacrament service this month was well attended and many good testimonies were borne. Elder C. A. Kress gave the presacramental talk.

The pastor's "review" at the close of the church school lesson period each Sunday, centered about the theme of church organization, has been instructive to all. Subjects covered since the last report from Englewood were "The Bishopric" and "The Patriarchs." The object of these reviews is to better acquaint the children not only with the personnel of these orders but also with their functions and the benefits to be derived from their ministrations.

A beautiful spirit prevails in this little congregation, and except for the crowded conditions under which local activities must be carried on, the Saints feel that conditions are almost ideal.

Workers and wage earners are trying to "catch up" on a deficit occasioned by the depression with its unemployment situation, and the women's department is making every effort to assist in this cause. An ice cream social will be held on Friday night of this week on the church lawn, and local members would be happy to have all friends from other branches come out to help. The women have figured costs down to the point where families of small means may enjoy the blessings of the evening.

Local women are very busy with Harvest Home Festival preparations. They expect to work on these each day of the week. These workers have decided to take up a study in their department that will be helpful in the homes, and a lecture will be given August 17, after which a covered-dish luncheon will be enjoyed at the home of Sister D. S. McNamara.

Sister Florence Moore, sister of Sister McNamara, is in this district once more after having lived in Walnut Park district for some time.

Englewood Saints are glad to have Sister Hazel Honaker and husband and Earl Junior here again for a visit. They are from Honaker, Kentucky. Everyone was glad to see Earl and Hazel, and the Z. O. A. Class of which they were formerly active members, was especially happy to welcome them.

An effort is being made to boost Herald subscriptions in this branch, and workers would like to see Englewood one hundred per cent for church publications. Sister Fred Koehler is the publicity agent.

Pleasant Hill (Alabama) Branch

The district conference met with Pleasant Hill Saints July 6 to 10, District President H. H. Wiggins in charge. Reports were read, and it was learned that the work in the district is moving along with good aim and impetus.

Since there was little business of importance, a week of meetings was enjoyed under the leadership of the local ministerial force. E. C. Shelley laid the foundation for the services speaking from the Book of Daniel. He was followed by J. W. Baldwin who chose as the basis of his discussion Mark 16. Franklin Steiner gave two good lessons on the first two rounds of the gospel ladder, faith and repentance. W. J. Williamson presented three discourses, one on "The Kingdom of God," one on "Spiritual Baptism," and the last on "The Restoration." L. D. Flynn then presented the third step of the gospel ladder, baptism; H. H. Wiggins gave the fifth gospel principle, and B. E. Barlow, a summary of the week's meetings.

Though the weather was intensely warm, the meetings had good attendance, the average number present being 175, and order was splendid. Best of all, the influence of the Spirit of the Master was felt by everyone. The priesthood had made adequate preparations for the services in work and prayer, and were followed by the entire membership.

Music was furnished every evening by the alert and helpful young people of this group, there being something of special musical attraction at each service. The young people here do what they can to help the church. They respond to various calls, and they have a class in music once each week with G. W. Minard as instructor.

During the course of the meetings a baby was blessed by E. C. Shelley and L. D. Flynn.

Three prayer services are conducted during the midweek hour, one for the young people at the church, one for the adults, also at the church, and one at the home of A. J. Vickery, three miles from the church. Good attendance is enjoyed at each place, but the young take the lead in number and activity.

The children of this branch are ably cared for in church school by E. B. Adam, and there is a junior service each Sunday.

Poplar Creek Branch

New Orchardville, Illinois

This branch set aside the fourth Sunday evening in June for the children's program. There were no baptisms that day. A large crowd was present to see "The Ten Virgins," given by members of the senior, intermediate, and junior classes. The primary and beginner children gave readings and songs. At the close of the program Branch President R. H. Henson was given a surprise. He was presented a beautiful name quilt in honor of the long and faithful service he has rendered this branch. The quilt contained 273 names when it was presented, but since then others have requested their names added. This quilt added more than twenty-seven dollars to the treasury of the ladies' aid. A few of the women labored diligently under adverse conditions, and completed the quilt in two months' time. In honor of the Washington bicentennial year, the colors of the quilt are red, white, and blue. John Henson, of Xenia, presented the gift, reminding the branch of the firm faith and courage with which the presiding officer has labored, and the hardships he has often endured that he might serve. Brother R. H. Henson responded by confessing a complete surprise and a deep appreciation of the gift.

This branch continues to try to go forward. The faithful deacon, Hershel Harmon, has occupied the pulpit of late, giving wise instructions to the branch. Others who have preached are John Henson, J. M. Henson, and Arthur Henson.

A branch meeting was called July 21, and R. H. Henson was reelected branch president; Virgil Harmon, secretary; Pet Lawrence, organist, and Cora Henson, chorister.

An all-day meeting was held Sunday July 24, at the Green Schoolhouse. A very good crowd attended, a number of Saints taking their basket lunches and spreading the noon meal in the shade of Brother S. D. Goostree's yard. A good social time was reported. John Henson spoke in the forenoon and R. H. Henson in the afternoon. Saints at Green invited Popular Creek Branch to come again. They are trying to carry on a Sunday school there this summer.

Kirtland, Ohio

Kirtland Temple was the scene of an impressive marriage ceremony when Miss Anna Mae Gill and Mr. William Webbe, both well known in the community, were wedded there at six o'clock, June 22. Elder Guy Hammond, of Akron, read the ceremony. Preceding the wedding ceremony Mrs. Lucretia Schneithorst, cousin of the bride, sang, "Oh, Promise Me," and "At Dawning." She was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Maude Mason, and there was soft music as the bridal party approached the altar. The bride was given in marriage by her father, A. H. Gill, and was attended by her sisters, Miss Mary, a twin sister, and Mrs. Ruth Brain, of Cleveland. Little Phyllis Schneithorst was train bearer. The bridegroom, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Webbe, of Kirtland, was attended by Milton Lewis, of Kirtland. Nephi Brain and Doctor Jerome Andes, both of Cleveland, served as ushers. A reception at the home of the bride's parents at Waite Hill, followed the ceremony, covers being laid for fifty-five guests. Mr. and Mrs. Webbe took a wedding trip to Washington, District of Columbia, and are now at Temple View, where their house has been remodeled for them. Kirtland Saints wish the pair much happiness.

On Children's Day, June 19, eight candidates were baptized into the church, Carl Allen Sheppard, Dorothy Flack, Rose Parsons, Robert Parsons, Ruth Johnson, Gladys Wilcox, Percy Young, jr., and Mary Ellen Young. The children's program was presented that morning under the capable leadership of Sister Irene Flack.

Experiences in Administering to the Sick

Every person who as minister in the church has been called upon at various times to administer to the sick, in response to the admonition, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church," etc., has gathered a sheaf of experiences which furnish subject matter for much meditation. Some of our experiences though marvelous in effect have become so common as to excite little comment. We have seen the sick healed or relieved from pain many, many times. And we rejoice.

Yet, at times even when our feelings run deeply, and desire is strong to see the manifestation of divine power at once effective to the relief and raising up of loved ones or devoted Saints, we have seen the ravages of disease unchecked. And have our souls not been troubled?

In his memoirs the late Joseph Smith crystallized his experiences in the following clear-cut way:

"In my early experiences in administering among the Saints I found that they usually expected an instantaneous recovery, and my later ministry showed that this attitude was quite general among the membership.

"I believe this is an erroneous conception of the ordinance and its promise. The Savior told the disciples that their sick would recover, but we find nothing to indicate that he meant that such recovery should be, of necessity and in all cases, an immediate removal of the disease and its causes. Oftentimes we are left to the exercise of the virtue of patience as well as that of faith."

Left to the exercise of patience as well as faith!

Who can deny the virtue to be had in the exercise of faith and patience? To abide patiently the edicts of the Almighty, to keep warm and alive our faith in God, in man, and in the church, amidst the adversities of trials, afflictions, and reverses of fortune is the task of those who must walk by faith and not by sight.

The beautiful ordinance of administering to our sick, comforting and cheering when the sick are healed, has even in its negative aspects its compensations of spiritual development and expansion in "the exercise of the virtue of patience as well as that of faith."

We may rejoice still even in our adversities.

Wandering Children

Current social statistics tell us that there are more than two hundred thousand children and young people wandering about the United States, with no homes that they dare go to, no certainty of food or shelter, and no adequate care. It is not many months since our papers were printing horrified articles about the lost children of Russia. It is about time for us to become horrified about our own children.

Some young men of our acquaintance who have taken trips in search of work have returned with accounts of the treatment that these wandering children and young people get in some places. These accounts wring one's heart with pity and sorrow for the sufferings of the youths who have done nothing to deserve so unhappy a fate.

We have heard that some of the children of our own people have been among these forlorn wanderers. Other youngsters have taken trips in a spirit of adventure. This should be guarded against, and the young people kept at home with their families if at all possible. Those who travel for adventure are obtaining from the charities food and shelter needed by the many who have no homes. All who travel thus are in danger of brutal and inhuman treatment, and also in danger of being exposed to vices and abuses that are learned along the railroads, in the "jungle" and in the outlaw society of the vagabonds and "floating" population.

The best of advice is for the young people to remain at home. No one part of the country is much better than any other. Opportunities for them to secure work, especially if inexperienced, are so scarce as to be almost nonexistent. Families should remain together, do the best they can until the worst of this depression wears itself out, helping each other as best they can.

The Importance of Reporting

A good brother who is connected with one of the great railroad systems of the United States recently wrote to the office of the First Presidency regarding our reporting and recording system. Among other things his letter says:

"Should I come to your office as a matter of business, and ask you if you have an elder in your organization by the name of John Doe, you could no doubt consult your files and answer me. But could you answer:

1. Is he a representative minister of the church?
2. Do you consider him an active man?
3. What active service did he perform during last year?
4. Is he a dependable pastor?
5. Is he an active visiting officer?

"After consulting your files could you turn to me and say, 'Why, yes, Brother Doe is quite a representative man. He has been with us for twenty years and has held the Melchisedec priesthood for ten of those years. Last year he preached a hundred sermons and visited a hundred and sixty-eight times among the families of the Saints. His work is evidently productive, for the branch is in fine spiritual condition, and he himself has baptized twelve people so far this year.'

"It seems to me that there is a great need of better response from our priesthood in this matter of reporting. Personally, I think we should be up to the minute and should positively require a report from every active man. I should not retain my position for twenty-four hours if I refused to report for myself or to give official information regarding those whom I supervise."

The value of the information suggested in this letter is so obvious as to require very little comment. A man's record, compiled over a period of years of service in the church, speaks volumes regarding the quality of his ministry. Such a record can not be completely set down in a card index system. Indeed, everyone who has had to do with them knows how inadequate formal reports can be. Yet such reports have a very definite value and when followed up by personal reports of associates and ministers in charge such as may be secured in times of special need, these records become absolutely invaluable.

No record at headquarters, however elaborate or however simple, can be compiled or maintained without the cooperation of the brethren of the priesthood. Indeed, we have hesitated to attempt the compilation of such a record in view of the failure of so many of our ordained men to report to the branch and district authorities. Perhaps the publication of this letter from our friendly critic will stimulate the priesthood to be more active in fur-

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Articles on Prayer

We desire to call the attention of all who read this column to the special series of articles on prayer now appearing in another part of the Herald. Each article is taken from a separate section of a paper that was written by Fred Shepherd in connection with a university course. The author was under appointment in the mission field until the reduction of church income caused the release of some men. The articles, while not planned for the Herald, offer good material for our readers.

Prayers for the Sick

Sometimes the requests for prayer specify a certain date when prayer is to be offered. In order to avoid disappointment we suggest that the writers allow sufficient time for the announcement to reach the readers before the date named.

If group prayers are desired besides individual prayers, we suggest that the prayers be requested at the prayer meeting, or on the Sunday following the appearance of the announcement.

The Wednesday evening prayer service provides the best time of the week for prayers for the sick. One may also add the sacrament service where prayer and testimony are a part of the program.

As far as possible, every branch, as well as isolated individuals, should gladly respond to these requests for prayer. We can never know the heartaches, the physical suffering, and the distress suffered by those who make these requests. Kindness and sympathy impel us to do what we can to answer their calls.

W. E. Boyd and family, of Springfield, Missouri (formerly of Colorado), request prayers in behalf of the wife and mother, Mrs. B. Mae Boyd. Sister Boyd is afflicted with heart trouble and dropsy, which seems to be very stubborn and will not yield to human efforts. Administrations have brought relief and comfort, but Sister Boyd is very desirous of being completely restored to health. She and her family have served the church and the Saints will be glad to remember her in their prayers.

nishing the reports now required of them. If so, we shall be encouraged to make some obvious and necessary advances in this line of our endeavor. Undoubtedly much can be done if the cooperation of the local brethren can be secured, and no heavy burden need be imposed on any.

Reflections

ONE OF OUR CHICAGO READERS has kindly sent a clipping from the Tribune which tells of a plea for a prayer crusade made by the world service commission of the Methodist Episcopal church. The statement of the commission follows:

"We realize our utter inadequacy as a church in this period of world need and world crisis. We urge our people to return to the observance of prayer that our pastors and people may be possessed with a new spiritual radiance and with a fresh desire to enter upon the responsibilities for which the church stands in local, national and international relationships."

PEOPLE SCOFF AT OLD FAITHS. At the same time thousands who will not go near a church are running to the fortune tellers, soothsayers, quacks, card shufflers, palmists, astrologists, spiritualists and charlatans of all sorts are prospering.

Strange—isn't it?—that our "modern" minded people should choose the most ancient of superstitions and the black arts in place of rational religion.

Isaiah prophesied: "I will also choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them." (66: 4.) And we read from the words of Paul: "And for this cause God will send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie." (2 Thessalonians 2: 11.)

The tragic fact is that so many people who abandon religion because they want a "scientific view of life" do not read the real science at all. If they would devote their attention to science we could expect that they would inevitably come at a knowledge of some important truths. But instead they turn to fads and fancies which have no foundation in fact.

SUCH THINGS are abortive attempts at contact with the Infinite and Almighty. They indicate the general tendency toward the need that prayer answers. The need of prayer is universal, and those who will not use it are found seeking some of the unworthy and deceptive substitutes for it.

Some people have so little of the old faith left that the nearest they ever come to prayer is uttered when, confronted with great disappointment or alarm, they gasp: "My God!" To some this may seem more like an oath than a prayer. It is indeed the offspring of prayer, though many will regard it as an illegitimate descendant.

OUR CONTENTION is, that since the tendency toward religion and prayer is universal, men ought to seek true religion and honest prayer rather than the corrupted forms.

The very essence of prayer is contact with the divine influence. If it is less than that, it is a sham. When prayer does establish that contact, it makes the foundation of true religion.

A Cure for Leprosy

There are 4,000,000 lepers in the world. At least 416,000 are in the British Empire, and there are 150,000 in our African possessions alone. Already vastly increased numbers are coming for the new treatment, and in Uganda, for example, 2,000 are expected to be under supervision by the end of the year. In Great Britain there are not more than 100 cases—mostly noninfective.

Hydnocarpus trees are being planted in all suitable countries, so that ample supplies of the cure will be at hand. Doses can be had for a year for half-a-crown. Over 1,000 hydnocarpus tree "seeds" have been distributed in Uganda and other places. The tree won't grow in England—it requires a fairly warm climate. It has been established beyond doubt that nearly every case of leprosy can be cleared up and prevented from going on to the infective stage by proper treatment.

In any country with good education and civilization we can reduce leprosy enormously in a few years. In places like Africa, where leprosy is appalling, it will take longer.

Natives are coming in greatly growing numbers to the missionaries for treatment now that the new cure is becoming known. In Nigeria a year ago there were 350 patients; now there are 840. Our Association is supplying hut accommodation and drugs to the missionaries. Ten years ago the great difficulty was that before effective treatment we could do nothing but that wretched segregation, which meant imprisonment for life, with the result that we got only advanced cases. Now that we can treat them as out-patients they are coming forward in the early stages—Sir Leonard Rodgers, secretary of the British Empire Leprosy Relief Association, in the Manchester Guardian.

A great war like the war of 1914-1918 may never happen again. The common sense of mankind may suffice to avert that. But there is still much actual warfare before mankind, on the frontiers everywhere, against brigands, against ancient loyalties and traditions. All the weight of the Open Conspiracy will be on the side of the world order and against that sort of local independence which holds back its subject people from the citizenship of the world.—H. G. Wells.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle D. T. Williams in Canada

"I find a splendid spirit of progress among the membership of the church in this great country," writes Apostle D. T. Williams, who has spent two months in Canada since General Conference. "I trust God will continue to bless his work among these wholesome and earnest people."

Brother Williams has just attended the Toronto district reunion at Lowbanks, where he reports a splendid time with the Saints. He also considers the Port Elgin Reunion of Owen Sound District, held early in July, an outstanding success. Next he plans to be present at the Eastern Michigan Reunion at Cash, and then at the Park of the Pines Reunion of Northern Michigan District.

Ex-Senator Addresses Grand Rapids Branch

Members of the branch at Grand Rapids, Michigan, enjoyed the privilege of listening to a good lecture on "Prohibition" delivered by Ex-Senator H. E. Straight.

Elder A. C. Barmore, the newly-elected district president, has also visited this branch to help in services. Interest during the summer months has been good, and the young people are active.

To Observe District's Birthday

The recent annual conference of West Virginia District decided to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the district's organization with appropriate services at Goose Creek, West Virginia, October 9.

Elder John W. Peterson Passes Away

Elder John W. Peterson, for forty-four years a missionary in the service of the church, passed away August 11, in Seattle, Washington, where he had been laboring under church assignment. Though he had been in declining health for some time, his interest in missionary endeavor was unabated. Brother Peterson was sixty-seven years of age at the time of his death, and had served as a member of the Quorum of Seventy since 1892. He joined the church in 1880.

Besides giving his thought and time to active missionary work, this veteran of the gospel found other ways to serve the church. In former years he frequently contributed articles to the church publications, and was the author of a book, Joseph Smith Defended, and several tracts. He was a student, an evangelist, a worker, a writer, and a friend. The church will miss his loyal service.

Brother Peterson's body will arrive in Independence tomorrow morning, and the funeral will be held from the Stone Church at two o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Madison Priesthood Use "Priesthood Manual"

The priesthood of the branch at Madison, Wisconsin, are not lax in their work of preparation for greater service to the church while they perform routine branch duties. They are organized, alert, functioning, and every man owns and is using a copy of the Priesthood Manual. They find it very helpful. This group of priesthood has lately received invaluable instruction in Doctrine and Covenants from Missionary J. E. Vanderwood.

Apostle G. G. Lewis and Family Soon to Sail

Arrangements are almost complete for Apostle and Sister George G. Lewis and little daughter, Alice June, to sail from San Francisco, August 31. Their boat, the S. S. Monowai of the Union Steamship Company, will take them to Papeeti, Tahiti, in the Society Islands, where they plan to remain one month doing missionary work. Their only other stop before they reach Australia, will be at Wellington, New Zealand.

Because of limited church finances it was thought best that Apostle E. J. Gleazer should not accompany the Lewises to Australia. He has been asked by the church to remain in the United States, and is temporarily working with Apostle J. F. Garver in the Central Mission.

Twelve Baptized at Austin, Texas

Elder J. W. A. Bailey concluded a short missionary series at Austin, Sunday, August 7, with the baptism of a dozen candidates in the Colorado River. This was an encouraging event for the faithful members who for a period of eight years have sought to build up the work of the church there.

Local Men Act as Missionaries

In his work and travels in Southeastern Mission Apostle Clyde F. Ellis finds many of the local and district ministry engaged in missionary work. The results of their work are becoming evident. In several places the missionary spirit of pastor and other workers is reflected in the missionary attitude of the congregation. Local men seem to be awakening to the opportunity to serve in missionary work as well as the need of doing it.

Our Task

An Affirmative Ministry

For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. . . . And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.—The words of Paul to the Corinthians (I, 2: 2, 4, 5.)

The great figure in any Christian religion is Christ. We have no other excuse for being, but to bring men to Him. Brought to Christ, men are restored to all of their lost spiritual heritage, and all good objects for their sake are accomplished. But though we move heaven and earth, if we do not bring men to Christ, our efforts will all be in vain. "There is no other name under heaven," the scriptures tell us, "whereby men can be saved." And we read in the Doctrine and Covenants (46: 9) that "All things must be done in the name of Christ, whatsoever you do in the spirit."

We Must Share Christ

No sect, religion, or organization has a monopoly on Jesus or his teachings. We read of him, and draw our inspiration from similar versions of the scripture. He is accessible to all the world. At the same time he imposes a heavy responsibility upon every one of us, a special responsibility that we must meet.

There are those of our church who think that we ought to preach some exclusive and different kind of gospel from that which is preached by other churches. If a minister were to attempt to do this he would deprive himself of Christ, which would be to deprive himself of everything in religion worth having. If a minister can not preach Christ he has nothing to preach about worth hearing.

As a church we must face these two necessities in preaching the gospel: we must preach Christ; we must share him with the world. Any other proposal is a mistake; any other gospel is not his.

It therefore follows that on some of the points of the gospel, in order to preach the truth, "all truth," we must cover a part of the ground occupied by other Christian denominations. To do otherwise is to deprive ourselves of some of the strongest fundamentals of the gospel. We must teach all the truth and Christian doctrine that other churches teach, plus a great amount that they do not teach.

Our Exclusive Message

But we do have an exclusive message, we believe. We teach a full application of the complete law of Christ. Other churches may be content, for example, to set aside the divinely approved form of baptism; but our belief holds to the original. Other churches may think it all right to set aside the social teachings of Jesus, while trying to separate from them the spiritual program; but our church teaches the full gospel.

Our exclusive message lies, not in being different, or peculiar, but in being complete. We strive to represent, so far as it is humanly possible for us to represent, the full truth of the gospel.

We are not concerned to promote one part of the gospel and to forget and suppress other parts. We will not be prevented from preaching any part of that gospel by zealots, simply because some other denomination also preaches it. We not only have the right, but also the responsibility, of teaching the whole law and gospel of Christ.

Preaching the Full Gospel of Christ

It is the work of an affirmative ministry to preach the full gospel of Christ. It is only upon serious reflection that we may perceive how comprehensive that gospel is.

The gospel of Christ is, first of all, a spiritual program to bring salvation to men—salvation from the carnal, destructive, and atavistic natures which are a part of the human inheritance. Its mission is not only to save from the world, but also to save for Christ. It redeems us from the worst; it returns us to the best. The first work of the gospel is to reconcile man to the ways of God, and to bring God within the reach of man. Any church in the world can teach this message; most of the Christian churches do teach it; it remains our duty, regardless of what others do, to see that this aspect of the gospel is not neglected.

The gospel of Christ is, secondly, a law of social and economic justice, providing for equality of opportunity for all men. On the negative side, it condemns the unfairness of our present state of society, with all its selfishness, greed, suffering, and trouble. On the positive side it appeals to the noblest impulses of man to build a new social order in which these abuses shall be corrected and a better condition of justice and peace shall be instituted. To follow the social and economic laws of Christ requires more than a mere sentimental pleading for justice and fairness. It requires more than the palliatives of charity and legislative dabbings with our antiquated and unjust economic structure. It requires something new in the machinery of our social and economic society for the promotion of mercy and justice, for the security of our working classes.

The gospel of Christ is, thirdly, a program of individual development, a development that has its physical, technical, and educational aspects. Bodily vigor and health are necessary. One of the most prominent features of Christ's short ministry on earth was his devotion to healing, and his pity and compassion for the suffering of humanity marked him distinctly apart from all other great world leaders and prophets. The untrained man is fit only to live in a primitive state of society, or, if he lives in a highly developed state of society he can survive only in so far as he is protected and kept at work (often exploited) by those of superior training. Training and education are thus important essentials of his equipment for the mastery and competence which people need for progress.

An Affirmative Ministry

"Upon this rock I will build my church," said Jesus. From that rock, it is to be seen, Jesus had, figuratively, to clear much dirt and debris before he could build. His purpose was not to destroy, but to build. Certain destruction, however, was inevitable. He had to break down the walls of prejudice and tradition that he found reared against him. He entered a conflict that terminated in his physical death and the temporary triumph of the powers that opposed him. But his was a spiritual triumph, while his foes came to a spiritual death. Wherever he could he built faith, and taught the gospel of the kingdom. He did not linger upon destruction longer than was necessary.

It is unfortunate that the ministry must expend precious time and energy in defense. Our own history has made it necessary for us to give more thought to defense than probably any other denomination. How often we have regretted that it was not possible to go out and preach the pure teachings of Christ, the law of tithing and stewardship, and all that goes with the New Testament faith! Yet it has been the thorn in our flesh and the cross that we have had to bear, that everywhere we have gone we have had to face the necessity of making a defense of the history of the early church and of the integrity of our early leaders.

The spirit of combat engendered by this necessity has often been carried too far. On assuming the combative position, some men have been unable to leave it off. Having been forced to fight, and fight successfully, they did not know when to stop fighting. Some of them even came to think that it was the work of the church to carry on the battle.

The real work of the church can not begin until the fighting has ceased. The gospel of Christ can not be taught in any but a spirit of brotherly love. Tithing, stewardship, and the kingdom of God can only be built upon the basis of a structure of peace.

We read in the revelation that was given at Fishing River in 1834, after the church had suffered its first trials in Missouri:

Sue for peace, not only the people that have smitten you, but also to all people; and lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth; and make proposals for peace, unto those who have smitten you.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:11.

The law of Christ is a law of peace. Its "warfare," often spoken of, is of a spiritual kind.

Our Relations With Other Denominations

An affirmative ministry would require us to be in league with every other force for the benefit of humanity, to aid in every good work, to support all law and righteousness in whatever way possible. It should require us to give friendly help to all organizations that are in good ways helping forward the work of Christ.

An affirmative ministry would require us to avoid attacking or making difficulties with individuals or organizations of other churches, and to go ahead with our own work, tending to our own business. When we are attacked, of course, we must defend, and do it with all the power at our command, together with that Spirit which has been our shield in all times of trouble. But we should not go out of our way to seek trouble.

There is a movement on foot in the religious world today for the unification of all religious forces, and the obliteration of all denominational lines. Powerful associations are at work, and beneficially, too, for the consolidation of all Protestant Christian bodies. If we believed that the cause of Christ could best be served by our joining with that movement we would, undoubtedly, associate ourselves with it. But we do not believe that the pure and true teachings of Christ are to be taught by that method. We are not ready to merge ourselves, nor to trust our spiritual and religious life to the hands of others.

This church has a distinctive message, and a definite purpose, not held by any other churches. The very purpose of our existence would be lost if we were to join in the Christian unity program.

However, peace and friendship should characterize our attitude toward the others who do join in that movement. If other churches are willing to acknowledge, at long last, that they are only extra organizations in competition, working for no special ideals and serving no distinctive ends, then well and good; let them amalgamate. It is not our purpose so to do.

Our Responsibilities

Our first responsibility is to support the ministry and missionaries who are to preach the gospel. Time was when the church appointed and supported over four hundred men and their families. Our financial situation and the depression have forced us to reduce the numbers of men under appointment to about one third of that high figure. We still need to give adequate support to those that remain on the list of appointees. And many of them have had a very difficult time of it in recent years.

Our next responsibility is for increased activity of the personal missionary type. Those who were converted to the gospel in former years were so happy in their discovery of truth and salvation that they warned their neighbors and friends. Whenever possible they obtained a hearing for the gospel message. That ought to be done today. Friends should be invited to the church, and to group meetings in the home. There are many means whereby new people can be brought in contact with the church.

Another responsibility for an affirmative ministry involving all of the people of the church must be a determination to live according to the principles of the gospel of Christ. Too many of us have our names on the church records who are incompletely converted to its program and its ideals. The great blessings of God can not and will not be poured out upon a half-regenerated and a half-believing membership. We can not step into heaven with one foot while leaving another foot in the world to taste of its pleasures and partake of its evils. The change must be complete or it is of no effect at all.

The world will not believe in Zion until they have seen it demonstrated in our lives. That demonstration can not be made with money and wealth alone, even though we should be the richest people on earth. It must be made with a righteousness that will direct all the phases of our lives, our economic, industrial, social, educational, and spiritual life.

From Imperfection

Zion is not primarily the management of the collective pocketbook, though it involves that, too. It is first and last a condition of the soul and heart, that will produce good works becoming a Christian.

When the works are not present, we know that the mind and soul have not yet undergone the full regenerative processes which conversion to the gospel is to set in operation. "By their fruits ye shall know them," the scripture tells us. When regeneration has taken place, the works will follow.

Let none who would dispense with works say, "Zion is the pure in heart," and thus attempt to justify themselves in doing nothing. The words of the gospel will condemn them.

We must all start from where we are. The church is not an association for perfect people, but for the perfecting of people. If we have not yet come up to the high ideals, we are supposed to be on the way.

True faith will produce the works of righteousness. All of us have our part in an affirmative ministry, which is not the responsibility of the priesthood alone, but of all of us together.

The Origin of Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

Religious ideas are prized as the most precious possessions of culture, pearls of great price. How are they related to us psychologically? How do they come to be so highly esteemed, and what is their true value? Can we trace the growth of prayer from some origin to the present day? Sigmund Freud thinks that all religious doctrines are illusions because they can not be proved and because it is not possible to compel anyone to consider them as true.¹ No doubt Doctor Freud includes prayer under religious doctrines. Marett, however, is of the opinion that prayer developed from spell when spell failed to achieve the desired end. Wundt's view is similar. It is possible that spell antedated prayer, but whether it produced prayer is quite another thing; for it is not logical to argue from the chronological to the causal connection. Of course there is a mutual relationship between spell and prayer as well as a chronological one, and some spells may have passed into prayers. The earliest legible human records, the Pyramid Texts of Egypt, contain some prayers quoted from an earlier period and used as magical formulæ. Hence we may also pass from prayer to spell.² And, speaking of Egypt, it is possible that many of the spells used by the Egyptians were prayers which seemed to have been answered, and which still contained the charm when spoken.³ The Greeks prayed upon every occasion. They appealed to heaven for help before beginning any public or private ceremony. Demosthenes prayed for attentive listeners, and Socrates addressed a benediction to "Pan" before leaving a place where he had been talking with friends.⁴ Homer called prayers the daughters of Zeus that bring great blessings to the man who shows them due respect and said that the wrath of heaven would descend on the one who neglected prayer.⁵ The Romans placed great stress upon prayer and believed that the safety of the individual and of the group depended upon it. They had special prayers for all occasions, but later learned to pray more in the freer Greek manner. Seneca believed that prayer would not alter the will of God, but that it was possible to obtain blessings which otherwise would have been withheld. Before the days of Christians, pagans lifted up their voices to God in prayer.⁶

In the beginning, prayer was the most violently interested act of life but it has been transformed to be a pure act of trust and self abandonment. In this respect it is interesting to note that "sacrifice was at first a form of prayer." Originally, prayer was intended to bend the divine will to conform to the supplicant's; now, the supplicant desires to subordinate his will to that of God.⁷ There is no reason to doubt that prayer has evolved from a primitive form of appeal, and it seems that children and the more naive adults make such a use of it today. Wundt argues that the prayers of thanksgiving followed the prayers of petition, and that penitential prayers came much later. It is only through the antiquity of usage that the psychologist finds explanation for prayer.⁸ The first prayers were mainly external and the language was never exclusively that of supplication. "We may think of the beginnings as mere exclamations expressive of naive emotions that involve a sense of friendliness in any extra-human object that is felt to be important."⁹ Under great emotional strain anyone may be guilty of an audible conversational form of thinking, and it is probable that prayer has some such element in it. If this conversational form of thinking is projected into the mind or mouth of a divinity there is said to be divine revelation.¹⁰

This account of the origin of prayer is ample for this paper as it gives us sufficient evidence upon which to base ideas as to the antiquity of prayer.

The Truth About Liquor

By A. B. Phillips

NUMBER FOUR

There is an old saying that, "Error stalks abroad while truth is putting on her boots." This statement is true in regard to the false rumors and misrepresentations that liquor sympathizers have systematically circulated for a number of years. While they were doing this, very little was being done to educate the people by at least some of the organizations which were supposed to represent prohibition and the truth concerning the evils of liquor. The unlawful liquor supporters are aggressively pushing their campaign of error, and there is evidence that efforts have been made towards gaining influence over certain of the temperance organizations that at one time were sincerely working for the public good. For this reason it is well for those who desire to unite with some organization opposed to liquor, to ascertain whether or not the leading officers of the organization are actually working for the prohibition cause.

Reliable information on the liquor question may be obtained from the Department of Justice at Washington, and also from the Anti-Saloon League of Missouri and other states. The Allied Forces for Prohibition, with its central office in New York, may also be depended upon to keep on hand statistical and other facts dealing with the subject. My inquiry of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, of Kansas City, has not been answered. In some states there have been instances of state prohibition officers who were secretly supporting bootleggers and the unlawful liquor traffic. The booze supporters have stopped at nothing in their efforts to corrupt prohibition and temperance organizations and officials. These vicious and crafty criminals include but a small minority of our citizens, and some are not even citizens, but are foreigners who have only contempt for our country. Such enemies of the people should be given no aid or comfort by those who are loyal to this nation.

Why Liquor Was Outlawed

Many of the rising generation do not know the repulsive conditions that existed before the country adopted prohibition. For years the Wet press of the various states repressed and misrepresented the facts. Crimes due to liquor were often so reported that this fact did not appear, but in spite of this the enormous number of crimes and other evils that were known to be due to the liquor curse aroused the people until the prohibition amendment was finally enacted by the largest combined vote ever given by Congress on any constitutional amendment. If the prohibition law should ever be repealed, the same deceitful Wet press that distorted the truth in the days of liquor license will doubtless smother the news of liquor crimes, in order to make it appear that such crimes are caused by something else. Some of the reasons for prohibiting liquor are stated in the Outlook, January 27, 1926, as follows:

National prohibition did not come as a result of an effort to make men moral by law. It was only when public opinion became convinced that the legalized liquor traffic was hopelessly corrupt and corrupting, and traffic in alcoholic drink was an economic burden which the nation could not afford to bear, that prohibition became national.

The economic and moral reasons for prohibiting the liquor traffic are stated by Professor Farnum, of Yale University, in these significant words:

From the purely economic point of view, it preys upon productive industry, and, from the moral point of view, it preys upon the life, health and happiness of men, women and children.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, page 7.

The Wickersham Commission also gave a thorough analysis of conditions which brought about prohibition, and one of these was the influence of liquor in politics. Its report states:

The evils of the liquor system most responsible for the formation of public opinion leading to the adoption of the 18th Amendment, were the saloon and the corrupt influence of liquor dealers in politics, the latter linked closely with the former.—Ibid., pages 18, 19.

Liquor Dealers and Their Work

The return of legalized liquor to the United States, or to any state of the Union, would mean drunkenness and debauchery on every hand, the corruption of women and children, the dangerous increase of crime and manslaughter, and of poverty and abuse in American homes. It would mean the increasing power of corrupt men, the undermining of sound government and of morals in society, and the enormous increase of blind-pigs, speakeasies, and other places of vice and corruption. Let no one deceive you; to throw open the doors of the liquor traffic is to increase iniquity, lawlessness, and alcoholic diseases. This mean enormous increase in misery, disease, idleness, and immorality. The supporters of liquor as a class have never been supporters of the law, either before or since prohibition. This attitude was brazenly expressed in the Brewers' Journal of May 1, 1910, which said:

No matter what "laws" may be made to cripple the beverage industries of our present times, they can not and will not be observed by those managing these industries.—Prohibition Facts, page 13.

The liquor interests, by their own admission, do not intend to keep the law. But this is not their greatest menace to society. They are not only proved enemies of the law, but they always seek to corrupt law-enforcing agencies of both federal and state governments. The Wickersham Commission unanimously declared:

Organized liquor interests contributed to the campaign expenses of candidates for National, State, and local offices. Laws and ordinances regulatory of saloons were constantly and notoriously violated in many localities. The corruption of the police by the liquor interests was widespread. The liquor organizations raised large funds to defeat the nomination or election of legislators who opposed their interests. The liquor vote was the largest unified deliverable vote.—Prohibition Manual, page 1.

Eugene Hecker, the statistician, makes clear the greatness of the menace such men were to the business interests of the country, to say nothing of the immorality they encouraged. He states:

The Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate in 1918 took 7,000 pages of sworn testimony and discovered exactly the same situation, made worse by the fact that the United States Brewers' Association and allied interests were boycotting certain manufacturers, merchants, and particularly railroads which forbade drinking as a safety measure. The so-called "Whiskey Ring" corrupted Federal officials in the administration of President Grant. Certain liquor interests were invariably reported allied with prostitution by every body of impartial citizens who investigated the matter. (Authorities cited) . . . The reports of Police Commissioners were constantly full of complaints of juvenile delinquency, prostitution, and violation of liquor laws.—Ibid., pages 1, 2.

The Wets are today allied with the underworld, and are using every effort to coerce or frighten as many as possible, in order to break down respect for law. Decent and upright citizens can not become the sycophants of such immoral forces. To do so is to destroy their own safety and that of their children.

Improved Conditions Since Prohibition

If any one really wants to know whether or not prohibition has brought about better conditions, he can easily find the evidence, and the evidence is overwhelming. Commander Booth of the Salvation Army knew by experience what changes prohibition made among children, and stated:

The children were ragged and emaciated representatives of a condition that has, happily, greatly changed. Eighty per cent of the suffering among the families of the common laborers of our cities was wiped out by prohibition.—Prohibition Facts, page 25.

The delinquency of our children is not nearly so great as it was in liquor license days. Juvenile Court Statistics issued in 1927 showed that the number of cases per thousand in 1922 was much less than it had been in 1918. These years are well chosen for comparison, as prohibition became effective from 1920 onward. This report shows that delinquency was reduced after prohibition was adopted, as follows: In New York, 10.6 (1918) reduced to 6.8 (1922); Chicago, 5.8 (1918) reduced to 4.2 (1922); Detroit, 12.5 (1918) reduced to 9.6 (1922); Buffalo, 23.6 (1918) reduced to 9.8 (1922). Doctor

Wheeler has compiled the following facts on drunkenness. It shows official records of arrests for drunkenness in New York in 1917, a wet year, totaled 13,844, but in 1921 it had been reduced to 6,247, or less than half as many. In Saint Louis it was 4,958 in 1917, but only 993 in 1921. Other cities showed similar decreases.

Colonel Woodcock, National Prohibition Director, has probably more dependable information from all sources than any other officer in the United States. His official report contains the following statements:

There is less drinking by both girls and boys than before prohibition. . . . There is less drinking in homes than before prohibition. . . . There is less juvenile delinquency. . . . Conditions are not ideal, even though they now are far better than before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment.—Ibid, page 26.

Prohibition has removed many serious barriers to higher education. The results are not only gratifying, but are phenomenal. The National Education Association, in its Journal states:

The 18th Amendment has helped America to achieve the development of all types of schools so that millions of young people have richer educational opportunity. High school enrollment alone in the United States increased from two million to nearly five million—the most remarkable advance in the history of civilization.—Ibid, page 28.

Prohibition and the Farmer

There is not a single legitimate industry or vocation that is not much better off under prohibition unless one shall admit that liquor would produce more deaths and therefore would help the undertaking business. But even this would be modified by the fact that a person can die but once, and therefore the hastening of a death would not really aid the undertaking business in the long run of time. To produce a surplus of deaths at one time would cause a corresponding decrease at some other time.

But of all the deceptive fallacies that have been put forth, one of the most ignorant or willful errors is that of certain politicians who urge the return of liquor to help the farmer. The Congressional Record of last January printed the claim of Mr. Cochran, Congressman from Missouri, that prohibition was the cause of the farmer's trouble, and that a return to liquor would enable the farmer to sell his grain. This false theory has been exploded so often and so completely that no well-informed person should be deceived by it. Mr. Lloyd, editor of the well-known Ohio Farmer, states:

Prohibition has been a great benefit to American agriculture, to the increase of dairy products and the increased standards of living of the consumer. It takes more grain to make a quart of milk than a quart of beer, and the increase in the use of dairy products has been especially marked since prohibition.—Ibid, page 34.

At the Hearings of the House Judiciary in 1930, Mr. Taber, Master of the National Grange, stated that in the heyday of the liquor business corn averaged 59 cents a bushel, but in the first nine years of prohibition it averaged 72 cents. In the wet years before the war rye was from 39 cents to 86 cents a bushel, but in the nine years after prohibition it was from 65 cents to $1.25. Mr. Calderwood states some of the reasons for the farmers' increased prosperity to be:

Because the money formerly squandered for drink was released to buy family necessities. The consumption of milk jumped from 42 gallons to almost 60 gallons per capita. Consumption of cheese increased 50%.—Ibid, page 35.

Mr. Dayton, widely known merchant of Minneapolis, great grain market of the world, stated at a Business Men's meeting last October:

One of the most pitiful sights I used to see in the days of the saloon was the farmer's wife sitting in a lumber wagon in a country town waiting one, two, three or more hours for her husband to come out of the saloon—and when he did come out he was not fit to go home, and his money was gone.—Ibid, page 34.

How can any official of Congress or other place of public trust advise the farmers to resort to liquor as a means of becoming prosperous, in the face of the facts which prove it to be one of his worst enemies? It is not safe advice, either in money or morals. Liquor men themselves denied that they used enough of the farmer's grain to make any perceptible difference in the amount produced. A delegation of brewers, headed by Pabst, stated to the Senate agriculture committee years ago that the total amount of grain used in brewing was less than three-fourths of one per cent of all the grain produced in the United States. This statement was reported in the Washington Evening Star of May 7, 1917, or about three years before the prohibition law went into effect.

The Safety of Sobriety

Instead of prohibition hurting business, as liquor supporters have claimed, it has helped business more than any single factor the country ever employed. Instead of being a hindrance to prosperity, it has been a most remarkable aid to prosperity. The farmer sells by far more milk than ever before, saves the money that formerly went to saloon-keepers, and his wife and family are far safer from the abuses that so widely prevailed in saloon days. Much of the two billion dollars that formerly was wasted for liquor every year has been used under prohibition for the benefit of the people. Conditions in the home are greatly improved in comforts and conveniences, and contrast wonderfully with the misery and destitution that prevailed when booze was openly thrust upon the wage earner everywhere he went. Soft drinks are safer, are healthful, and cost much less.

There is not one sensible argument that can be maintained by those who advocate liquor license. From an economic standpoint the use of liquor has proved to be a miserable failure. The claim of the Wets that the return of liquor license would aid recovery from the present depression, is disproved by every economic law and every experience that concerns the subject. It is utterly absurd to suppose that it will increase prosperity if the people of this nation should take about two billion dollars away from productive industry and beneficial channels, in order to spend it for liquor that robs men of their senses, decreases their efficiency, causes them to lose their employment, brings distress to their families, endangers and even destroys health and life, and menaces the public on every hand. No one but a moron could believe such nonsense, and any candidate for public office that asks the people to support such a suicidal policy is not fit to be trusted with the people's welfare.

There is safety only in sobriety, and intoxicating liquors never did and never will make any nation prosperous. Statistics prove that a return to liquor license would throw far more people out of employment than it would cause to be employed. The Wickersham Commission unanimously reported that living standards have clearly established a gain as a result of prohibition. Who and what are the people that do the drinking today? Let the Honorable Seymour Lowman, in charge of Coast Guards, Customs and Prohibition, answer. He says:

The great masses of Americans do not drink liquor. Drinking is confined to the so-called upper crust and the down-and-out in the slums;—They Almost Had Me Fooled, pages 29, 30.

Everyone knows that the use of intoxicating liquor is a vice and a sin. People who are truly loyal to America do not want it legalized, for it is an outlaw and criminal by nature. Let us not open this deadly door of immorality, lawlessness, and crime, which this nation has shut in defense of the home, of society, and of decency.

An Answer to Prayer

When the story of an answer to prayer—a story seriously written and considered—takes prominent first page space in a large city daily newspaper, one feels that the forces of good in the world are still strong, and that there is reason to hope.

In the Kansas City Times for August 10, 1932, appeared such a story. Our people sometimes feel that they are alone in believing in answers to prayer. It may encourage their faith to find that others likewise believe.

We reprint herewith some extracts from the above story:

Eleven o'clock last Saturday morning, the word went out among the women's prayer groups of the Central Presbyterian church that Mrs. J. Layton Mauze, wife of the pastor, was critically ill; that physicians held little hope for her recovery.

The women were asked to pray—not to hold any public meeting, but to pray immediately in the privacy of their homes and to continue to pray as often as possible. It was a concerted plea for the life of a woman who, in the last four years, has come to be very necessary to them.

At two o'clock a report from the Saint Joseph hospital said Mrs. Mauze was improved. The next morning at the regular service at the church Doctor John M. Alexander, visiting pastor from Columbia, announced that Mrs. Mauze's condition had continued to improve. Yesterday physicians said they had every reason to believe the improvement would continue to recovery.

A Believer in Direct Answers

Since Doctor Mauze went to the Central church he has been known as a devout believer in direct answer to prayer. Yesterday he said, "Believing as I do, I can only think Mrs. Mauze's miraculous improvement last Saturday was a divine answer."

The prayer groups were organized several years ago, for the purpose of holding small meetings at the individual homes whenever the members desired them.

Scarlet Fever

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Scarlet fever is an acute, self-limited, contagious disease. The word scarletina is often applied to the mild form of this disease, but the two terms denote exactly the same disease. It is characterized by a sudden onset—high fever, sore throat, vomiting, rapid pulse, and a generalized scarlet eruption, followed by desquamation. The fever lasts about four days, then suddenly declines. The diffused scarlet eruption appears within forty-eight hours; it starts about the neck and spreads downward; it varies greatly—some cases are mild, but the disease is easily spread. The general appearance about the face is quite characteristic, as the cheeks are flushed and the mouth presents a peculiar pinched appearance.

There is great danger of kidney complications and in some conditions a grave nervous phenomenon takes place. After exposure, the disease may manifest itself in from two to seven days. It is rare in the tropics, and when introduced there, it soon dies out; it is especially prevalent in temperate climes. When a southerner comes North he is peculiarly susceptible, which illustrates an interesting example of the effect of environment upon disease. There is quite a difference in the outbreaks—varying greatly in intensity, and there are about twice as many cases in the cities as there are in the country.

A germ, under the high-sounding name of Streptococcus hemolyticus, is generally regarded as the principal factor in producing the infection. It is believed that during the stage of peeling off of the desquamated epithelium, is the time when the disease is the easiest communicable. The digestive tract may serve to carry the poison, but nearly all cases are originally from the secretions of the nose, throat and ears. Running ear, abscesses and discharges may remain infected for a long time, and it is known that wounds, such as surgical and the puerperal state harbor the germs. Children are more likely to contract scarlet fever than adults. Those having had the disease once seldom are attacked a second time. The mild cases are the most dangerous, on account of their liability to spread the infection. Many of them present little further evidence than that of a passing sore throat. It is not an air-borne disease, and the radius of danger is limited to droplet infection. So far as is known, infection usually comes from human sources and milk-borne forms of scarlet fever are less frequent since pasteurization of milk has become possible. Some cases of this disease have been traceable to ice cream. One of these cases occurred in South Kensington, England, and another in Flint, Michigan. It was found that the infections were started from those handling these products.

The seasons when scarlet fever is prevalent, resemble those of diphtheria, which has led some to call it a "cold weather disease." Infants are more susceptible than older people, and the susceptibility reaches its height the sixth year. Isolation should be insisted upon in each and every case. The patient should be given plenty of cold water to drink, should be placed in bed, given a liquid diet, and all articles that are used in the sick room should be burned or disinfected. Ice bags should be placed on the head, and the fever may be controlled by a cold bath—beginning at ninety degrees and gradually reducing the temperature. Most cases should be isolated for not less than six weeks. Just how long the infection may last, no one can say. One having had the disease, should not be permitted to mingle with other people if he has discharges from the nose, throat, or ears. It has been found that sufficient amounts of scarlet fever anti-toxin, if given early, are beneficial and often cause the temperature to drop rapidly, causing the rash to fade and the patient to experience great relief from the toxic symptoms. Drugs have been found useful, according to indications, but should be administered only by a competent physician.

"Until Shiloh Comes"

By John Fassnacht

The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh comes; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.—Genesis 49: 10.

The sceptre is the sign of authority to rule. Therefore the power and authority to rule shall not be taken away from Judah. Jesus Christ himself is of the tribe of Judah. (Hebrews 7: 14.) Christ is the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David. (Revelation 5: 5.)

A special covenant was made with David in order that this scepter should not depart from Judah. Observe the following:

"Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee, thy throne shall be established for ever." (2 Samuel 7: 16, 19, 25.)

Jeremiah, the prophet, speaks of the same covenant. (Jeremiah 33: 17, 20, 21, 25, 26, also Psalm 89: 35-37.)

Christ is to sit upon the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and his kingdom will have no end. (Luke 1: 30-33.)

Now in order for David to have a throne to sit upon and a people to govern, God has made a number of promises, some of which are indicated below. The reader must realize that there is a vast difference between the promises made to the Jew and those made to the ten lost tribes known as Israel.

The Distinction of Israel From Judah

Israel, when lost, was to become:

1. Unknown in name (Hosea 1: 9; Isaiah 65: 15.)
2. A multitudinous people (Hosea 1: 10).
3. Strong in power (Isaiah 41: 12).
4. A Monarchy (Isaiah 49: 23).
5. An Island Nation, having large Colonies (Isaiah 49: 1, 8).
6. A Christian people (Isaiah 54: 13). (N. B.)
7. The Chief of the Nations (Micah 5: 8; Isaiah 54: 15-17).
8. My Servants shall eat,
9. My Servants shall drink,
10. My Servants shall rejoice,
11. My Servants shall sing for joy of heart,
12. The Lord God will call His Servants by another name (i. e., shall not be known by their old name).

Whereas, note the other, Judah, when dispersed, was to be:

1. Known as a by-word (Jeremiah 24: 9)
2. Few. Bereft of children (Jeremiah 15: 7).
3. Without might (Jeremiah 19: 7).
4. Without a government (Jeremiah 17: 4).
5. Strangers tolerated in all foreign countries (Jeremiah 15: 4).
6. Under the Mosaic Law (Jeremiah 14: 12).
7. A trembling, faint-hearted people (Jeremiah 35: 17).
8. Ye shall be hungry:
9. Ye shall be thirsty:
10. Ye shall be ashamed:
11. Ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit.
12. Shall leave your name for a curse.
- (i. e., shall be known by their old name.) (Isaiah 65: 13-15.)

[N. B.—See Hosea 1: 10; John 1: 12.]

The Jew has not had a king since the days of Zedekiah, and will not have one until they recognize Jesus Christ as "Lord of lords and King of kings." It has been their lot to live scattered among other nations and be governed by them.

The principal promises of the scriptures are to Israel; in these the Jew will participate when he accepts Christ. When God created this earth "He formed it to be inhabited." After the flood he chose to "dwell in the tents of Shem" and later made covenants with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. When God commenced to build the Hebrew nation, he told them, "I will be your God and ye shall be my people." (Genesis 17: 8; Leviticus 26: 12; Jeremiah 24: 7.)

"Thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people, Israel, to be a people unto thee for ever, and thou

Lord art become their God."—2 Samuel 7: 24. (1 Chronicles 17: 22.)

When Israel became rebellious, he warned them that they would be scattered. "For lo, I will sift the house of Israel among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." (Amos 9: 9.)

Although Israel was scattered, God did not make an end of them as some would have us to believe.

"Though I make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee." (Jeremiah 30: 11.)

"Thus saith the Lord which giveth the sun for light by day and the ordinances of the moon and stars for a light by night . . . if these ordinances depart from before me saith the Lord; then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before me for ever." (Jeremiah 31: 35, 36.)

Israel, being scattered, are to become gathered again.

"Moreover I will appoint a place for my people, Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime." (2 Samuel 7: 10.)

They are to be God's hidden or lost ones for a time. (Psalm 83: 1-4; Hosea 9: 17; Amos 9: 9.)

Jeremiah, the prophet, was to perform a work for Israel which involved not only the scattering, but, "To build, to plant."

"See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." (Jeremiah 1: 10.) Also:

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand for ever." (Daniel 2: 44.) Once more we quote:

"I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it to him." (Ezekiel 21: 27.)

According to the tradition and history of Ireland, Jeremiah brought the daughter of Zedekiah to Ireland, and there married her to the chief prince of Ireland, who was himself of the tribe of Judah (the Zara branch). Here, then, began the reigning house of Great Britain, as Ezekiel said it was overturned from, Palestine to Ireland, and from Ireland to Scotland, and from Scotland to England where it is to remain until Christ comes.

This Israel kingdom that God set up has indeed continued to grow all during the days of the Babylonian image (the days of these kings). His messages to the "Isles" have been more or less heeded, and after the two thousand five hundred and twenty years of Israel's punishment burst forth into the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, Great Britain and the United States.

The Bible prophecies concerning the Jew have been literally fulfilled. Those concerning dispersed Israel have likewise been fulfilled. Those who took the land or North country route were indeed without a king for many days. (Hosea 3: 4.)

The covenant of kingship to David has likewise been fulfilled. When Christ as Shiloh (Prince of Peace) comes, he will find the throne intact, and two nations nominally ready to receive him.

To Christ shall the gathering of the people be. When he came the first time, he brought not peace, but the sword (Matthew 10: 34). Instead of gathering was dispersion, but during the millennial reign there will be peace, joy and understanding.

When I see God's plans in fulfillment, and his wondrous love for mankind, I am drawn to him as my heavenly Father.

Do You Know That—?

By M. H. Morgan

The 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon contained a preface not in the later editions, as follows: "I would inform you that I translated by the gift and power of God, and caused to be written, one hundred and sixteen pages, the which I took from the Book of Lehi, which was an account abridged from the Plates of Lehi by the hand of Mormon," etc. This was the transcript shown to Professor Anthon which was lost.

The Book of Mormon contains an account of the first American flag, on page 469: 41: "And it came to pass that he [Moroni] rent his coat, and he took a piece thereof, and wrote upon it, 'In memory of our God, our religion, and freedom, and our peace, our wives and our children,' and he fastened it upon the end of a pole thereof." Verse 42 calls this flag "the title of liberty." (See also pages 534, 490, etc.) Hundreds of years later we find a small colony moving from European shores with the intention of seeking religious liberty, and they, too, on American soil, erect an ensign or flag as a standard of their belief.

We are not the only ones to have taken an "oath of allegiance." Page 470, verse 48, finds Moroni appearing before his people, waving this flag or symbol in the air that all might see the writing; and the forty-ninth verse calls for all those who "would maintain this title upon the land . . . to enter into a covenant that they will maintain their rights, and their religion."

We found tribes of Indians in America in the fourteenth century, having chiefs over them. On page 620: 38 we read: "And the people . . . were separated into tribes . . . and every tribe did appoint a chief . . . and thus they became tribes and leaders of tribes."

The Nephites used bellows to blow their fires, and flint to produce them, as did the Indians when first discovered. Page 53 declares: "I, Nephi, did make bellows to blow the fire . . . and I did smite two stones together that I might make a fire."

The Nephites referred to God in many, many places as "The Great Spirit." Our present-day Indians do the same. (See pages 367, 368, 369, etc.)

Book of Mormon people, as well as the Indians of this age, gathered their dead from the battle fields and buried them. For one instance see page 500: "After the Lamanites had finished burying their dead," etc.

Some of the ancient Americans practiced shaving their heads, as did some of the American Indians of this day. Page 307: "Now the heads of the Lamanites were shorn." It was customary to leave a scalp lock in the crown, which was often braided.

They used war paint in Book of Mormon times as now. Page 307 speaks of the Amlicites using red paint on their faces.

They had lawyers, law courts, judges, policemen and even strikes in those days. See pages 338, 339: "Now the object of these lawyers was to get gain . . . every man who was appointed to be a judge should receive wages according to the time he labored . . . the judge executed authority, and sent forth officers that the man should be brought before him. . . . They received their wages according to their employ. Therefore they did stir up the people to riotings . . . that they might have more employ." It seems the judges incited the people to strike or riot that "they might get money according to the suits which were brought before them."

They had barbers, and evidently barber shops where men were hired to shave other men. On page 126 it speaks of "shaving with a ravor that is hired." There are many other passages relative to barbers and shaving. Back in the time of Ezekiel we find, in the fifth chapter, the statement: "And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thy head and upon thy beard."

Page 461 indicates there were dragons: "They did fight like dragons."

And dungeons are spoken of on page 329 and elsewhere: "They could not be confined in dungeons."

Page 393 refers to a fairly modern custom of "burying the hatchet." "All the people took their swords, and all the weapons which were used for the shedding of man's blood, and they did bury them deep in the earth." Page 396 also refers to their "burying their weapons of war," and there are doubtless many other instances.

They had ammunition centers. Page 474 declares: "Therefore he went forward to the place which was called Onidah . . . to the place of arms."

They sometimes hung criminals. Page 613: "Zemnarihah was taken and hanged upon a tree, yea, even upon the top thereof, until he was dead."

Page 356 speaks of earthquakes: "And the earth shook mightily, and the walls of the prison were rent in twain."

Medicines are spoken of on page 473, and apothecaries or dispensers indicated. "Not so many died [with fevers] because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared to remove the causes of diseases to which man was subject." What do we call that nowadays? Therapeutics? Our present-day Indians are more of an authority on herbs than our own doctors.

We find an analogy in Book of Mormon times, to the condition under which we are laboring today. On page 241, and other places, we find King Noah, son of Zeniff, laid a tax of one fifth of their possessions upon the people to support himself and his politicians; and with these burdensome taxes he built fine buildings for their idle rich; and he was a wine bibber (a Wet, in other words), planting vineyards and building wine presses, and "making wine in abundance." All our large breweries are polishing their immense stills for the anticipated immediate demand.

And concomitant with this condition is that found on page 547 and continuing, where the Gadanton robbers, a secret band of Capones, hijackers, racketeers, had reached the strength where they interfered with government; it says they "filled the judgment seat" (page 567); dictated the laws, (page 564); obtained possession of the government (page 567) and so on.

Some Assurances of God's Favor

By J. E. Vanderwood

The "Latter Day Message" comes to us with no uncertain sound. As we look into it we find it fraught with evidences of God's favor, and we are assured that it will triumph in the due time and wisdom of the Lord. True, the calling of the gospel places responsibility upon men, and there are certain things required of those who have come to accept the claims made by the church that has been established in these last days as a result of the Angel's Message that was vouchsafed to the youthful seer of Palmyra. As I come to understand more fully the nature of the work that has been committed to this church, the more I see the need of the membership becoming acquainted with its philosophy and its law. I am therefore using every means available to bring to the attention of the people of the church, as well as the people of the world, the requirements of the gospel teaching that is contained in the standard books of the church. In section one of the Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph seven, I read: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." This is either true or it isn't; and if it is, we are required to acquaint ourselves with the content of the book of Doctrine and Covenants; and if it is not true there is then no virtue in the claim made for a restoration of the gospel by the angel who brought to the youthful seer of Palmyra the glory of the restored gospel. Personally I am convinced of the truthfulness of this language, and I have proved to my own satisfaction the truthfulness of this statement. I have searched, and as a result I have found that which is sufficient to convince the honest investigator that this Latter Day Work is of God, and that God's favor is with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Let us not forget that the promise is, "The prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." This alone should furnish incentive enough to cause us to search carefully the content of the revelations of God to this church.

As we continue our research we read in Doctrine and Covenants 24: 1, these words: "Hearken unto the voice of the Lord your God, while I speak unto you, Emma Smith, my daughter, . . . thou art an elect lady, whom I have called." After I discovered that God had designated Emma Smith an elect lady, I put myself to the task of carefully rereading the entire book of Doctrine and Covenants to see if any other person had been so designated, and I found to my surprise that she was the only person of whom this statement was made. This is made the more significant by virtue of what is stated by Christ himself and is recorded by Matthew in the twenty-fourth chapter and twenty-fourth verse. We read: "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; inso-much that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Here the good Lord tells us these false persons would if it were possible, deceive the very elect. From this language I understand that it is not possible for the elect to be deceived, therefore Emma Smith was, by reason of being elect, endowed with that wisdom, and understanding that enabled her to detect the false, and to adhere ever to that which was true and excellent. Of this matter Paul has also spoken thus: "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." (Romans 8: 33.) These things are rather outstanding, and should command the reverence and the respect of every one who has come to believe in the promises of the Scriptures.

Now, that we might come to better evaluate these things, we wish to draw attention to another prophecy of the Doctrine and Covenants; remembering as we examine it that the promise is, "The prophecies and promises, shall all be fulfilled." In February of 1831 the Lord said to the church: "Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.) The previous appointment concerning this was as follows, in speaking to Sidney Rigdon in December of 1830: "A commandment I give unto thee, that thou shalt write for him; and the scriptures shall be given as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect; . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5.) Both of these quotations have to do with what is commonly known to the church as the Inspired Translation of the Bible. This work was begun by Joseph Smith in 1830, Sidney Rigdon acting as scribe for him, and according to a letter over their signatures, published in the Times and Seasons, volume 6, and bearing date of July 1, 1833, they say: "We this day finished the translation of the Scriptures, for which we returned thanks unto our heavenly Father." These prophecies show that the scriptures would be given as they were in God's own bosom, and the promise is that they should be preserved in safety. This again enables us to have some matters that are worthy of more than passing notice.

When in the winter of 1834, when Joseph Smith, with others, was confined to Liberty jail as a result of the persecution that followed the church in Missouri, the manuscript of this Bible was carried on the person of the "elect lady" as she left her blood-stained footprints on the snow and frozen ground of Missouri as she wended her way toward Commerce, afterwards called Nauvoo, Illinois. When conditions were made possible for Joseph Smith to have a hearing he was liberated and was permitted to join his family and the church in Nauvoo, where for a period of time the church enjoyed peace and prosperity. While here at Nauvoo the Lord spoke to the church, and gave them counsel that is worthy of our thought and consideration. The revelation bears date of January 19, 1841, and we read: "If my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken unto my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed they shall not be blessed, . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 13), and again I read: "Let no man go from this place who has come here essaying to keep my commandments. If they live here let them live unto me; and if they die let them die unto me; for they shall rest from all their labors here, and shall continue their works." (Ibid., paragraph 27.) Here the Lord tells the church that if they will hearken to his voice and to the voice of his servants whom he had appointed to lead his people they should not be moved from their place in the city of Nauvoo the beautiful, and that no one should go from that place who had come there with the avowed purpose of keeping his commandments. This was given to them during a period of peace and prosperity, and for this reason is worthy of even more careful thought and consideration. On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph and Hyrum Smith met death at the hands of the mob, and in a few months afterwards the body of the church was removed from Nauvoo the beautiful. They tell us they were driven out by the enemy, but the Lord said if they would hearken they should not be moved out of their place, and he further said, "Let no man go from this place who has come here essaying to keep my commandments." The evidences are that those who were removed were not obedient, that they did not hearken, that they had not come with the avowed purpose of keeping his commandments, therefore they were driven out. But Emma, the "elect lady," with her sons, did not leave. They remained in the vicinity of Nauvoo and continued to pursue the duties of life in the place where the Lord had bidden the faithful to remain.

When in 1860 her eldest son, Joseph, the late prophet and president of the church, was directed by the God of heaven to go to the Amboy conference and present himself and his services to the church, Emma, the "elect lady," went with him and, too, became a part of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The manuscript of the Bible, as translated by her illustrious husband, which she had preserved when the mob sought the destruction of the church in Missouri, she again preserved after the death of her martyred husband, and this she brought to the Reorganized Church. The Lord said this scripture should be preserved in safety, and the place of safety was in the hands of the "elect lady," one who could not be deceived, and by her it was again safely deposited with the church that bore the stamp of approval of the Almighty God. These things are so outstanding that they should convince any honest minded person that God is in this work, and that they who will honor and respect the teachings of the scriptures will come to share in the protection and blessing of God; that whether he live or whether he die he will nevertheless receive the favor of God and thus become the means of leading perishing humanity to the feet of the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world.

Onset Reunion

"Be with me, Lord, where'er I go;
Teach me what Thou would'st have me do."

These words were wafted on the breeze and over the beautiful inland waters of Buzzards Bay, on old Cape Cod, Sunday afternoon, August 7. It was the closing service of the Onset Reunion and many hundreds of Saints and friends had just listened to a wonderful discourse from President F. M. Smith, urging them on to Zion, the promised land. They had been reminded of Isreal of old who had heeded the faultfinding and pessimism of those who had been sent out to view the land of promise. They had returned and given a false report of obstacles too great to overcome, which caused the people to clamor for a return to Egypt. Only Caleb and Joshua remained steadfast and true to the ideals before them. "How long? How long will this people continue to wander in the wilderness before they are willing to move on toward the Promise Land?" was the question put to the reunion congregation. Thus were they urged to go forward, and thus were closed two weeks of spiritual instruction and sweet communion of Saints.

The reunion began Saturday evening, July 23, with a business session for organization of reunion activities. President F. M. Smith, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, and the district presidency were chosen to preside.

The Sunday services started with church school at eight thirty, followed by prayer service at nine forty-five. Three excellent sermons were delivered during the day by Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Doctor P. L. Weegar, and Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley.

The order of services during the week was, prayer service at nine o'clock each day, class work at ten thirty, and preaching at seven thirty in the evening.

Although the reunion was not quite as well attended as usual due to business conditions, there was a desire on the part of all present to get near the Divine, and to learn His will. Meetings were of a high spiritual order. In fact, many were heard to say at the close that it was the best reunion they had ever attended. Several prophecies were the prophecies and promises contained in the revelations of God, and this should serve to teach us to have confidence in the other promises that are contained therein. If we had time and space we could point out many more that have as literally and vividly had a fulfillment, and to me it gives assurance of the ultimate triumph of this glorious work that has been so graciously intrusted to the church. It, too, places upon us a serious responsibility, for unto whom much is given much is required. May we not come to deport ourselves as men who believe in the promises of God to his church, and put ourselves so unreservedly into the work that we may be able to hasten the culmination of the work and assist in bringing to pass the redemption of Zion. We have herein offered to us the most sacred privilege that was ever offered unto the children of men, shall we accept it in faith and devote our very best efforts to its furtherance among men?

given both to individuals and to the congregation. They were told that the Lord would have long since gathered his people but they were not willing, so they have suffered with the world. But they were told, the time is near when another opportunity will be given for the people to prosper, and the Saints were warned to store up their resources, not for themselves, but for the establishing of Zion, for another time of depression will come which shall be even worse than the present one. Many who came downhearted and discouraged were comforted; strength and new hope were restored.

The young people met together each morning in the commissary building and opened their hearts to each other in testimony. A sincere desire on the part of the young to assist in the building of Zion was expressed by them, and the church may well be proud of its young people, of whom this group is typical. A theme was given by their leader Elder Earle R. Bradshaw, each morning for the next day's meeting, which proved helpful and met with a fine response. Such themes were used as, "What Does the Church Mean to Me?" "Consecration," "Loyalty," "Prayer," and "Faith."

The class work during the first week was directed and taught by Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley, on the subject, "The Quest of Religious Education." The second week another class was added, "Church Objectives," taught by Apostle Paul M. Hanson. Excellent instruction was given and the classes were well attended. The brothers were highly pleased with the eagerness and the readiness to learn shown by the people. There seems to be a desire on the part of the Saints to know the laws of God, and the time when the church will make a definite step forward is surely near at hand.

The preaching services were well provided for and were of a high order spiritually and intellectually. The reunion was fortunate in having Apostle Paul M. Hanson who directed the activities of the gathering. His sermons were inspiring and masterful. Some expressed the feeling that they had never heard anything like them in all their years in the church. Brother Hanson has proved himself in every way to be a man of God, a true Apostle of Jesus Christ. One morning the Lord gave to him words of comfort which caused all to rejoice with him. He was told that the Lord had been with him in all his work wherever he had been in foreign lands, and would continue to be with him. He said, "Thou art to this people as was the Apostle Paul in his day, to the church." One of the outstanding statements of the reunion was made by Brother Hanson in a wonderful spiritual sermon. He said, "I had rather be in a foreign land, unknown, misunderstood, without a dollar in my pocket, conscious that I was where God wanted me to be, than to enjoy the luxuries of a mansion at Bar Harbor, or a palatial yacht, otherwise."

The other speakers were Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley, Doctor P. L. Weegar, Elder F. C. Mesle, Doctor W. A. Sinclair, and on Friday evening and Sunday afternoon the Saints were privileged to hear President F. M. Smith. The evening services were along the line of church doctrine and were clearly and masterfully presented.

Sunday morning, August 7, the large tabernacle was filled with one section left in reserve for the young people. President F. M. Smith, and the district presidency were on the platform, while the elders and priests in charge of the sacrament were in front, on the floor level. Suddenly the song, "Onward to Zion," was heard outside and a large gathering of young people marched into the auditorium singing. It was a very impressive sight and gladdened the hearts of the older ones. It seemed to fit in so perfectly with the motto on the wall, "We Will Go Forward." This was a spiritual meeting, and the Lord manifested himself through the gift of prophecy.

Sister J. A. Gunsolley did a fine work with the younger people in junior church, as did the other consecrated workers in charge of the kindergarten and other children's groups. Everyone was busy. Everyone was taught. Everyone had the chance to mingle with those of their own age group, to sing the songs of Zion, and to follow the leadership of those who are consecrating their time and talents to Christ and his people.

On two Sunday mornings the Saints gathered at the water's edge and were filled with joy when eleven young people consecrated their lives to the Master through the ordinance of baptism.

The Southern New England district reunion is over, but its influence in the lives of the people will go on. It has been as a call from God urging them on to Zion. Too long they have lived in the valley. Many have slipped into the slough of despond. It is time for them to arise now, to the place where Saints of God belong—Mount Zion. Zion, the beautiful, beckons us on, and the Saints of Southern New England have their windows open to the west praying that "the time will not be long."

With Idaho Members

From The Idaho District News

The reunion of this district will be held at Hagerman, Idaho, August 17 to 21 instead of August 24 to 28. This change in date was made necessary by the fact that Apostle J. A. Gillen will not be in Idaho during the latter period. It is planned to have the following speakers present, Apostle J. A. Gillen, Elder John L. Sandidge, Idaho district missionary, Elder A. M. Chase, Utah district missionary, and possibly some others. These will be assisted by the local priesthood. Officers have planned to hold the reunion expenses to a maximum of one hundred and ten dollars, the amount to be divided among the three branches and the nonresident members.

In an interesting narrative in the News Missionary John L. Sandidge recounts his summer activities in Idaho District. He has been touring the district, visiting with branches and nonresident members, administering to the sick, preaching, blessing children, baptizing, and just across the Wyoming line, he organized a Sunday school which has good prospects for growth. Among the places he has visited are Lava Hot Springs, Malad, Montpelier, Soda Springs, Wayan, Victor, Driggs, Felt, Newdale, Toton, Saint Anthony, Rexburg, Idaho Falls, Blackfoot, Pocatello, American Falls, Pingree, Springfield, Sterling, Rupert, and Boise.

Rupert Branch

Several families enjoyed basket dinner together July 4. They had planned to eat at the city park, but the weather was disagreeable, and so they went to the home of Brother and Sister Daniels.

Grandma Condit has been ill, but her friends are hoping for a speedy recovery.

Some of the members have been away from the branch this summer, working or visiting. On the other hand, visitors have attended church services here and helped by their presence.

Hagerman Branch

Hagerman Saints are looking forward to the reunion when they hope to meet old friends again and to make new ones.

Boise Branch

Sunday, June 5, Elder John B. Cato, branch president, baptized Brother and Sister James Harder, of Gooding. Confirmation service was held in the evening.

July 24 Sister Josephine Anderson was married to Mr. Everett Smith, of Riverside, California. Theirs was a quiet home wedding attended by only the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom. The ceremony was read by the bride's father, Elder George B. Anderson. The bridal pair took a wedding trip to Payette Lakes. On July 26 the branch gave a party for the newlyweds at the Anderson home.

July 31 Elder John B. Cato preached the funeral sermon for Mr. John Alton at Nampa. Many other Boise Saints also attended the funeral.

Since warm weather arrived the Department of Recreation and Expression has been holding its service at the City Tourist Park, playing baseball and volley ball and having an occasional swimming party. The Book of Mormon study period has been shifted from Friday to Sunday evenings. The young people's class has begun to study the Doctrine and Covenants.

Northern England Conference

The quarterly conference held at Manchester Saturday, July 2, and Sunday, July 3, was a unique experience for the Northern England District. To use the words of the district president, it was "unknown in the history of the church in this country," inasmuch as the whole of the activities of the conference was contributed by the young people of the district. After the transaction of necessary business, a concert and social were arranged for Saturday evening and the program, which was comprised of vocal and instrumental solos, games, sketches, and community singing, was well balanced and enjoyed by all. The experiment is worthy of repetition. The theme chosen for the conference was "High Ideals."

The Sunday morning program was arranged so that there were two speakers. The first, Brother John Taylor, of Leeds, approached his subject from a worldly aspect. He said that the church, as an organization, makes a stupendous claim that it has the plan which will solve all the world's difficulties, and he interrogated the people as to their contribution to the claim made. How many of the members are in responsible government positions? How many of the members have developed their talents in the field of art? How many of the members have inventive ability? And yet the church claims to be the "beacon light" set on a hill that can not be hid; that it has a plan that will save mankind from sin, and yet how is it progressing along these lines? The members of the church have to save ourselves first. They are a part of the organization; they are within the scheme; they must get themselves to a state of perfection so that they can turn to the world and say, "This is what we propose to do and we know it will work."

The second speaker was Deacon Thomas Heywood, of North Manchester Branch, who took for his text the eleventh verse of the third chapter of 1 Corinthians: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The highest ideal in the minds of all Latter Day Saints should be to reach the state that Jesus exhorted them to reach, Perfection. No ideal can be reached without endeavor. The members must first be sure they have the right foundation. At one time during his ministry Jesus asked his disciples whom and what the people thought he was, and then He asked, "But whom do you say that I am?" Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the Living God," a very definite statement. Unless the Saints of today have that assurance in the same way that Peter had it, that Jesus is the Christ, they are not building on the right foundation, for Jesus said that flesh and blood have not and could not reveal it.

After lunch and prior to the afternoon service, a procession, organized by the officers of the James Street School and augmented by members from the other branches, proved to be a very pretty addition to the services of the conference.

The two speakers for the afternoon service were Sister Doris Gallop, of Warrington, and Sister May Holden, of North East Manchester Branch, and the soloist was Brother Colin Spargo, of Wigan, who sang "Jesus Is Calling."

Sister Doris Gallop stated that the church offers to the world the highest form of idealism; its ideals are the practical solution of the ills of humanity, and it challenges mankind to try them. God has set himself an ideal "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man," and he desires willing cooperation. What a splendid chance is offered to man to fill the place assigned in the beginning, "to have dominion over all things"! How his knowledge has expanded in these modern times until it is far greater than that of his predecessors, and yet in face of all this, in the conquest of nature, man is unable to control his own soul and destiny. He does not understand why men live and then die, and are seemingly forgotten. But the Son of God said, "I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." To know God and understand life men must be acquainted with (1) the missionary policy of the church; (2) the law of temporalities; (3) intelligent understanding of the church books and papers; (4) regular attendance at church services; (5) intelligent and alert and efficient participation in the work of the church, and (6) Godly walk and conversation, along with devotion to God and his great ideal.

Sister May Holden's talk dealt with the practical side of the theme, "We Must Stop Letting Today Be the Effect of Yesterday, and Begin to Make it the Cause of Tomorrow." Men of today are the products of yesterday, and the creators of the tomorrow. If they plan and work according to high ideals they will build ideal homes, ideal citizens and an ideal community.

She stressed the importance of the influence of women on the church. By caring for the physical needs of the members of the household, woman is responsible for the service rendered. She pictured the wonderful influence of Miriam who persuaded the daughter of Pharaoh to engage his mother to nurse Moses and who thus saved the nation, the sacrifices and devotion of Emma, the Elect Lady, during the dark days, and then as a contrast Delilah and her influence over Samson.

High Priest Nephi Dewsnup expressed the appreciation of the presidency to the officers and members of the Northeast Manchester Branch for housing the Conference and to all who had taken part in the services for the splendid way in which they had carried out their duties. The Conference services were bright and interesting.

May God help the young people of the district sense their responsibilities and opportunities in the furtherance of the work.

Sault Sainte Marie, Michigan

Lock City Branch

Members and friends of this branch are happy in the recent local developments. Lately Missionary J. J. Ledsworth, of Port Huron, Michigan, preached a series of ten sermons. The meetings were conducted in the high school auditorium at the village of Brimley, Michigan, fourteen miles up the Saint Marys River from Sault Sainte Marie. Brother Ledsworth was introduced to the five members of the school-board by a Mr. Raymond Mitchell of whom the church will hear more, for his good standing in the village among the business men, gained for the cause the privilege of the use of the auditorium without charge, the members to pay the light bill. A Mrs. Sanderson and the Mitchell family including father, mother, and two daughters, were baptized July 10. Others are much interested among these being the husband and children of Mrs. Sanderson.

In the confirmation service Brother Raymond Mitchell was told that he is in the line of the priesthood, and this has inspired him to greater study. He is a man of sterling qualities, and these qualities are also apparent in his wife and children. The Mitchells heard the gospel through Elder

R. D. Davis some few years ago and have since been studying and reading about it. They have obtained valuable instruction from the church literature given them by members of the church here.

Elder Ledsworth has promised to return in the fall for another series of meetings at Brimley or at an Indian village on the banks of the Saint Marys River, six miles from Brimley. The Indians have heard much about the latter-day work, and extend an urgent invitation to Brother Ledsworth to spend some time with them in their village and to hold meetings in a Methodist Church, which, because of their broad-mindedness, is a community church.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Saints of this branch are happy to report a marked increase in interest and attendance at all services held here since the local's last letter to the Herald. Priests Lee Root and Carl Wirth, of Madison Branch, and Brother Maas, also a priest, from Watertown, Wisconsin, have given helpful instruction and encouragement. The last named preached a good, old-fashioned sermon from his gospel chart July 31, to what, workers believe, is the largest group ever assembled at a regular preaching service at any time in the history of this branch.

The midweek prayer meetings are well attended and the testimonies of the young people are a source of joy and comfort to those grown old in the service of the Master. May their zeal and efficiency increase that through their efforts this glorious work may accomplish all God desires in this great city as well as throughout the whole earth.

Holden Stake

Atherton

The adult class, of which Roy M. Young is teacher, has been having ministers from Independence, each Sunday, to act as teachers. Those who have participated thus far are T. A. Beck, R. T. Cooper, Leonard Lea, and J. Stanley Kelley. These men have also occupied at the eleven o'clock hour.

The women met at the home of Sister Myron Holman, and organized a study class. Subjects are chosen suited to present needs, such as "Sanitation," "Home Hygiene," and "Food and Its Functions in the Body."

The branch had a nappy gathering on the Fourth. Games were played after which the young people gave an interesting little comedy. Candy was served.

An adult class from Walnut Park visited the church school on a recent Sunday after which they made a tour of the church lands. The congregation also had the pleasure of having Apostle Roy S. Budd and family present at a recent Wednesday evening prayer service.

Marshall

It was with much pleasure Marshall Group received the large delegation of young people from Independence, July 10. The inspiring sermon by President F. M. McDowell, in the morning, and the fine musical entertainment by the young ladies' chorus in the afternoon, was greatly appreciated. The visitors picnicked on the church grounds, being joined by local young people.

A little daughter named Shirley Maxine came June 12 to the home of Brother and Sister Wilson Beard.

Brother Marion Johnson gave an impressive sermon Sunday morning, July 17, on "Thoughts," starting with Saint Paul's admonition of "Whatsoever things are lovely, or of good report, think on these things." Brother Will Ridge spoke at night on "Habits." These were good instructions to the Saints. It is believed that this visiting of groups will do good.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion

The reunion of this district is the most important event of the year. Nearly everyone, both Saint and nonmember, look forward to it each year with keen anticipation. I have been present at six of these annual events, and while they all have been wonderful this year's has excelled. God poured out his Holy Spirit in every session throughout the week.

The prayer meetings commenced at nine thirty every morning and little time was allowed to go unoccupied until it closed at twelve o'clock. The gift of prophecy was manifested at every session, and in one meeting the Spirit spoke through the gift of tongues and the interpretation. The Saints were revived in spirit, and expressed their determination to make a greater effort to do their duty.

District members were pleased to have with them Elder J. Charles May who was a great help. Not only did he preach to the people, but he entertained them with his guitar and ocarina and gospel songs.

During the reunion we had the pleasure of baptizing thirteen fine people into the church. Brothers Homer Ross, Parvin Jimmerson, J. Charles May and I participated in the administration of this ordinance.

The outlook for the work is very bright in this district. Elder C. B. Gallimore with his wife, Sister Flossie, and others are doing a good work in reviving the latter-day cause in places which have laid dormant for a number of years. The Oakland Branch has been reorganized with Brother Gallimore elected as pastor. Good interest is again manifested there. We have a church building and during our last service, it was filled with a good congregation.

Brother Gallimore and I have again organized the branch at Mays Hill. He was also elected pastor of this branch, and at our last meeting had the pleasure of baptizing a sister, the wife of Brother Connie Nash. Several others are about ready for baptism, and the prospects are good. I feel that I am leaving the work of the district in good hands.

Brother T. W. Thomas is doing a good work at Foundry Hill. Besides his pastoral duties he is educating the Saints in singing, and they are making good progress in that line.

Missionary Experiences in Southern Missouri

The Southern Missouri conference which convened at Thayer, was a spiritual feast. Apostle J. F. Garver was with us, also Elder Birch Whiting, of Rich Hill, Missouri, and our old friend, Elbert Hogan, of Carthage, Missouri.

There was little change made in the working staff of the district. Walter Christenson was chosen as counselor to the president of the district. He will give good service in the western part of the district. With so excellent a group of workers, we have reason to expect to accomplish much this conference year.

After the district conference closed I was called to Hayti, Missouri, to administer to a worthy Saint, Brother William Handspire, who realized that his life's work was ended but felt that he did not want to go until he had fully complied with God's law. He had made his will but neglected to pay his tithing. This burdened his conscience day and night until the Lord appeared to him twice and told him that he had made a mistake, that he must make a second will for he had left his tithing unpaid, and that he must attend to this sacred matter before he died. He was told: "When you do this, you will be ready to die and a crown will await you." The crown was shown to him, and he said it was beautiful to see.

As soon as I reached his bedside he told me what he had experienced. He paid his tithing and his soul seemed to be at ease, and he passed peacefully into the great beyond to reap the reward that we feel sure awaits those who comply with God's law.

This was a wonderful experience for all of us, and we hope to be able to profit by it. We wish to go forward in God's way, hoping and praying for success to come to his church which we love above all else.

W. E. HADEN.

Madison, Wisconsin

A good representation from Madison attended the district conference at Lancaster. Apostle J. F. Garver came from there to Madison and preached the evening of June 21, to a large crowd which had assembled to welcome him back to this city. On Wednesday night Brother H. W. Woodstock took him to Evansville, where he preached to the Saints.

June 26, there were no services at Madison for most of the Saints attended the all-day meeting held at Evansville on Sister Hoague's lawn. Bishop C. J. Hunt and Elder J. E. Vanderwood were the speakers at the services which were held in spite of showers of rain. This was reported to be the largest gathering held there for a long time.

One more has been added by baptism to the number here, a little girl who is a pupil in the church school. She was baptized by Elder H. W. Woodstock.

Lee Root, bishop's agent for the State, attended the reunion at Chetek, and also has of late visited at Appleton, Milwaukee, and Beloit, preaching to these groups on Sunday and advising and instructing.

District President H. W. Woodstock assisted by his associate, Harry Wasson, has visited Beloit and Milwaukee and helped in the election of branch president at the former place. This office was given to Frank Loomis.

The women of the branch have enjoyed the outdoor meetings held on the lawns of some of the sister's homes.

Brother Harold Carpenter and family, also Sister Nora Root have moved to Racine. They are very much missed in the church work. Brother Harold was teacher of the adult class and Sister Nora was director of women. Sister Brigham was chosen to take her place.

During the church school hour July 31, the baby girl of Sister Grace Bender was blessed by Elders H. W. Woodstock and L. Houghton and given the name of Dona June.

Madison Saints gladly welcome Brother Paul Utneher to this branch. He is attending the university here. Brother Paul attended Graceland four years and will be a great help to the branch. He is filled with the Graceland spirit.

Prayer services have been very spiritual. The themes selected have greatly helped. Some of these are "What Material Should Be Used in Character Building?" "What Material Should Be Used in Spiritual Structure?" "Building Zion," "Keeping Temporal and Spiritual Laws," "The Golden Rule," "Spiritual Assets," "Keeping Fit Spiritually," "Religion in Action," and "The Light of the World."

All the priesthood of the branch attended the joint meeting at Evansville the evening of August 1. They reported a good service. Brother J. E. Vanderwood instructed them in the study of Doctrine and Covenants. After reading the article in the Herald of August 3, with regard to how few of the priesthood have the Priesthood Manual, officers at Madison are glad to report that every member of the priesthood in this branch has it besides two owned by members not of the priesthood. They feel that the Manual is well worth the money, and think it a great help to them.

The directors of the church school are sponsoring class work the second week of August. Three hour classes are being held in the afternoon besides a class in the evening. J. E. Vanderwood teaches Doctrine and Covenants, Church Objectives and the Priesthood Manual. Lee Root teaches "Church School Plan."

July 31 Brother Lee Root was invited out of town to a place called "Little Norway," to preach in the evening. One man in the crowd was a Latter Day Saint. The rest were Lutherans. Brother Lee says he had good interest and liberty. He preached on "The Power of God."

Independence

About three hundred singers gathered at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon for the first general rehearsal of the Harvest Home Festival Chorus, under the direction of Paul N. Craig. For several weeks individual choirs have been working at regular rehearsal hours on numbers to be presented by the chorus at its fall concert, October 14. Officers in charge were pleased with the response of the singers, and some splendid training was done in the almost two-hour rehearsal Sunday afternoon.

The many Independence friends and neighbors of Elder John W. Peterson were shocked to learn of his death in Seattle, Washington, August 11, where he had been laboring under church appointment. His body will arrive home for the burial service tomorrow, and the funeral will be held from the Stone Church next Sunday afternoon at two o'clock. His wife, Sister Lillie Peterson, was with him when he passed away, and accompanied the body home to Independence. Besides his widow, there survive Brother Peterson a daughter, Fern Peterson, of New York; two sisters, Mrs. W. A. Stevenson, of Independence, and Mrs. Ardelia Cox, Kansas City, Kansas; four brothers, Frank Peterson, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Bert E. Peterson and E. O. Peterson, Independence, and Fred Peterson, Bristol, Tennessee.

Brother Peterson was born May 27, 1865, at Salt Lake City, Utah, and was baptized a member of the church March 7, 1880, at Harlan, Iowa, by D. H. Bays. He was first ordained an Aaronic priest December 5, 1887, and has served as a seventy since 1892. He married Lillie F. Ackerly October 19, 1894. Independence was his home, and many here will miss him as also will hundreds of Saints all over the United States.

Stone Church

Pupils of the junior, intermediate, and adult departments of the church school were happy Sunday morning to have Elder C. B. Hartshorn take charge of their session of school Sunday morning. He talked on "The Human Touch of the Savior," showing how Jesus in his life exemplified love, understanding, and sympathy. Several years ago Brother Hartshorn was the superintendent of the Stone Church Sunday School. Everyone was glad to see him again.

Sunday morning the Stone Church congregation was privileged to listen to a favorite, old-time speaker, Doctor Joseph Luff, who preached an inspiring and instructive gospel sermon. He chose his text from 1 Corinthians 9: 15, beginning, "We are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." Coupled with these verses he read 1 Peter 2: 9: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

The speaker emphasized the thought that we are laborers with God, not merely onlookers or observers, and that as such laborers we should work according to his plan, and not in ways pleasing to ourselves. God has shown us how we should work; in Jesus Christ were the plan and manner of working manifested. Christ was the Master Builder, and if we work with him, we work according to the plan and specifications given; otherwise our work perishes. Building with him, and working according to his will, we build for eternity. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." We become like him, concluded Doctor Luff.

The half hour of radio broadcast music by the Stone Church Choir, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, made a pleasing and harmonious background for the sermon. Two anthems were sung, "Far From My Heavenly Home," Nina Grenawalt Smith, the soloist, and "Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem," J. Glenn Fairbanks, tenor, singing the solo part. Dorothy Koehler Waters was the organist. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Bishop M. H. Siegfried.

Threatening weather brought the Campus Sunday evening service to the Stone Church, and Elder Leonard Lea, the speaker, chose for the theme of his sermon, the title of a familiar hymn, "Shout the Tidings of Salvation." Just before the speaker was introduced a quartet composed of Mrs. Paul Wheeler, Mrs. Earl Nunn, Gerald Johnston, and Clarence Resch, sang the hymn.

That salvation is the main objective of the Christian life and the culmination of the six principles of the gospel is the belief of Brother Lea who described the tidings of salvation as a message which brings joy, gladness, hope, and release to the world, in addition to the promise of future reward. He concluded his discourse by calling attention to the Great Commission given by Christ: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

A large congregation of Saints and their friends listened to the sermon, and sang hymns under the leadership of Pastor John F. Sheehy, who was in charge of the entire service. He was assisted in the pulpit by Elder A. K. Dillee, pastor of Second Church.

Funeral services for Marie Lucile Athey, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Odess Athey, who died in the Sanitarium August 11, were conducted at the graveside in Woodlawn Cemetery Friday morning. The child's mother was formerly Miss Vivian Raschke, a worker in the accounting department of the general church offices.

Spring Branch Church

More than thirty members from this congregation joined the Liberty Street Saints who, on August 7, attended church at Atherton. The music and program were given by Liberty Street members, and the speaker, Elder E. T. Atwell, was also from that congregation.

The many Saints who attended the Wednesday night and Sunday morning services last week were comforted and blessed. Brothers Robert Fish, Elmer Peer, C. J. Dixon, and Pastor G. W. Eastwood presided.

The Sunday school Sunday morning was well attended. Brother Ira Weeks gave a short talk on the worth of prayer.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Alma Tankard, assisted by Leonard Roberts, and the speaker was Elder L. E. Hoisington who devoted his attention to the prophetic warnings to the people in ancient times and today.

The choir sang the anthem, "Hosannah to the Lord," Beulah Stewart Donkawich taking the solo part. The choir is busy rehearsing for the Harvest Home Festival concert. Sister Jalmer Nelson is the music director, and she is trying to have a one hundred per cent response by the choir to the chorus which is to present the concert. Saints of this congregation realize that the musical part of a meeting is very important, and should have God's Spirit as well as the rest of the service.

West Virginia District Conference

The forty-first annual conference of West Virginia District convened at Indian Creek, Harmony Branch, August 6 and 7, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis in charge, assisted by Brother A. C. Silvers. At two o'clock Saturday afternoon business meeting opened with song and prayer.

The various branches of the district were well represented. Brother Harry B. Smith brought before the conference the subject of celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the organization of West Virginia District. The question was discussed, and the conference voted that the celebration be held at Goose Creek October 9, 1932.

The subject of programs to commemorate the birth of Joseph Smith, the second President of the church, was discussed and it was decided that each branch in the district would hold its own program.

The choice of officers resulted in the reelection of the old officers.

That evening the Saints as well as those not of the faith heard and appreciated a splendid sermon by Apostle Ellis.

Regular Sunday school services were held Sunday morning, opening at half past nine, and followed by prayer and sacrament service which generated a burning of the Spirit of God in the hearts of the members that will continue for many months.

Brother Ellis spoke again at two o'clock in the afternoon. The minutes of the conference were read, corrected, and approved, and the conference adjourned. Brother Ellis remained until Sunday night and delivered a fine sermon on character building.

Lake Orion, Michigan

Words inadequately describe the excellent musical program which it was the privilege of the people of Lake Orion and others from Detroit, Pontiac, and Oxford, to enjoy Sunday evening, August 7. It was given at the Saints' chapel.

The hour began with a fine talk on music by Lloyd Heaviland, of Detroit. There were organ, piano, and violin numbers. The organ used is only a little common church organ, but under the skilled fingers of Sister Mona Knight, it was made to sound like a real pipe organ. An octet sang "God's Glory in Nature," and Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor," by Ilene Lively, pianist of Detroit, was much enjoyed. Phyllis Schaar told the story of "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and the composition was played by organ, piano, and violin by Mona Knight, Verlyn Janrow and Verna Schaar. Two solos were sung by Harold Clark, "My God and Father While I Stray," Marston, and "If With All Your Hearts," Mendelssohn. Harriett Borland, of Romeo, sang "I Shall Not Want," by Ellis and "Great Peace Have They That Love Thy Law," by Rogers. Phyllis Schaar then told the story of Rubenstein's "Kamenoi-Ostrow," and the composition was played by Mona Knight on the organ and Verna Schaar on the piano. Two more vocal solos added charm to the program "Blow Ye Winds and Waves," Handel and "Hills of Home," by Fox, by Herbert Lively, of Detroit.

Lake Orion Branch is proud of the talent possessed by the Schaar family. Each member is well versed in music. Mr. Clark lives at Lake Orion and is noted for his musical ability. Mrs. Borland, from Romeo, was formerly a resident of this place, and is always ready and willing to help with her contralto voice. Brother Lively and sister, of Detroit, are well known musical artists and Verlyn Janrow is also one of Detroit's accomplished pianists. Dean Schick, of Lake Orion, who sang in the octet has a pleasing voice and is a willing helper.

The chapel was packed with listeners and perfect quiet reigned throughout the program.

This branch wishes to express its thanks to all who made the program possible.

San Diego, California

San Diego Branch met at the church on Alabama Street July 31, with a good number of local Saints present, also several Saints from Long Beach and Manhattan Beach. Brother H. L. Holt, an old-time missionary from Whittier, California, with his good wife, also Sister Moorhouse, of Paso Robles, California, and District President W. A. Teagarden, of San Bernardino, were here.

The Saints met to celebrate the branch rally day, and had a splendid time. Sunday school opened at 9.45, prayer being offered by Brother Teagarden. Instead of the usual classes, a rally day program was presented by the young people. There is considerable talent in this group, and the older workers expect the church to hear in the future from San Diego young people.

Elder Teagarden preached a rally day sermon, then everyone ate lunch in the basement. The women of this branch know how to prepare and serve a delectable meal.

Prayer meeting opened at one thirty Elder Teagarden and Pastor Munroe, of San Diego, in charge. The meeting opened with a short talk by Brother Teagarden in which he admonished the young to pay more heed to the words of the older, more experienced members, men and women who have spent years in the service of the Master. Then Brother Holt gave a fine talk. The members were glad to hear him say after so many years of service, that he is glad he is a Latter Day Saint and that he has faith Zion will be redeemed. Some spiritually helpful testimonies were offered by the members. During this meeting Brother Teagarden stated that he felt the spirit of prophecy would manifest itself, and so the congregation prayed that if it was the Lord's will he would speak to his people. Toward the close of the meeting a good brother from Long Beach was the instrument through which a prophecy was given admonishing the Saints, especially the priesthood, to be faithful, and promising many blessings. Brother Shimmel was directly addressed in this prophecy, being told that if he is faithful he has a great work to do.

After the prayer hour the priesthood had a meeting, Brother Teagarden in charge. He gave some wise advice, and charged the men to be patient, kind, and forbearing with the erring ones.

A "surprise" program came at seven o'clock, and all enjoyed it.

The members of this branch are hopeful over present prospects. President Munroe is a good, spiritual man, and his counselors are Brothers Kellerby and Wetherbee. Brother Long is the Sunday school superintendent. This is a great field in which to work, and there are some dependable helpers in this group. Among these is a sister very deserving of mention, Sister Pickel, who is always at her post of duty. Though she is advanced in years, she is filled with hope.

Austin, Texas

The few Saints here are proud to let the church know how the gospel work is progressing in the capital city of Texas. Eight years ago when the first members came to this city, there seemed to be no prospects of getting the work started here, but later, other members moved in, and four years ago a Sunday school class was organized which met in the home of Brother and Sister W. A. Millner. The interest has grown until there are now three classes and the average attendance is twenty-two.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey visited Austin last week and preached out on the lawn nearly every night. He used his beautiful stereopticon views, and the Saints had larger crowds than ever before with good interest.

Mention should be made of the work of two little boys whom Brother Bailey called "deacons." They were very helpful, carrying out the folding chairs to seat the people and putting them away after service each evening.

Sunday, the last day of the services, was a time long to be remembered especially by those who have worked to get the church started here. Sunday school was dispensed with in order that the congregation might listen to Brother Bailey preach. Three babies were blessed following this service. Then the members went in a body to a beautiful spot near here on the Colorado River, where Brother Bailey baptized twelve people. A bountiful dinner was spread on the ground under a big pecan tree, and after all had eaten and the remains of the feast had been cleared away, the confirmation was held. God's Holy Spirit was present to a great degree throughout the day and especially through the confirmation service.

The Saints also greatly appreciated a visit from District President C. W. Tischer and wife, and Brother and Sister Mitchel, from Houston, and the help they rendered.

If there are other Saints living in Austin who are not aware of the organization of the church there, Brother and Sister W. A. Millner extend an invitation for them to call at 804 Patterson Avenue.

The Stirrings of Patriotism

Most men, of whatever nationality, have experienced the stirrings of the spirit of patriotism when viewing some historic landmark, or on some spot made sacred to the country by having been the site of sacrifice in heroic endeavor. And in the midst of such environment when one's innate love for the land of his birth and being is lightened by the memory of past events and deeds, it is well when our patriotism does not blind us to either national errors or failures.

The late President Joseph Smith in his memoirs tells of his emotions when first visiting Boston, where so many historic events occurred in the birth and development and beginnings of America. He writes of having stood near the spot where the first blood was shed in the American Revolution:

"Standing with bared head and mind busy with the events of the past, I was deeply moved by a spirit of patriotism and loyalty which surged through my heart. I was humbly grateful to know myself a descendant of several men who participated valiantly in those long-ago struggles for peace and liberty through which our country passed before it attained its present high place among the honored and independent nations of the world.

"I was shown the spot near the State House where the first blood of the American Revolution was shed. It seemed strange and significant that that blood was from the veins of a Negro. Musing over the circumstances, I reflected how the Lord had watched over the destinies of the Colonies, and had endowed men with wisdom to write the Declaration of Independence and to form a Constitution under the protecting ægis of which the land was dedicated to the principles of political and religious liberty, and how, in spite of this, the curse of slavery had continued to stain the escutcheon of our proud and favored nation until wiped out by a bitter and bloody internecine warfare!

"Pondering thus, I could not refrain from thinking that when the great record on high shall finally be opened and Crispus Attucks, a Negro, shall be revealed as the first hero to pour out his blood in the cause of freedom for this Nation, a certain degree of Divine displeasure must of necessity be directed towards us as a Republic!"

While he felt the exaltation of recalling the events of the nation's struggle for independence, he could not but sense the stigma of slavery which stains the escutcheon of that nation. F. M. S.

Seeking God

It is in times of prosperity, when wealth is easily acquired, that men think they are sufficient unto themselves. Atheism becomes popular, the ease of an irresponsible agnosticism attracts many followers, and popular thinking takes a materialistic trend.

It is in times of distress, when men do not know what to do to save themselves, and their man-made world seems to be crumbling in ruin, that they seek God.

One who follows the newspapers and magazines will notice that public sentiment is more favorable toward religion now than it has been at any time since the World War.

Writers agree that the war that made wholesale murder respectable also bred a feeling among the people that private murder was excusable. And under the specious pretense that the soldiers "ought to have anything they wanted" before they died, morals were relaxed to give them carnal pleasure. That slackening of moral principle, too, had its effect on the civilian population. Since that time we have suffered from decadence of morals, disrespect for law, disregard of life, and a cynical attitude toward religion.

Today religious leaders are saying that the churches lost prestige because they encouraged the war spirit, and looked tolerantly for the time on the evils that it encouraged.

While the country was rolling in wealth there seemed to be no possibility of ever turning the thoughts of the people toward God. Congregations declined in numbers; the influence of the churches waned. Men took up golf instead of religion, and women played bridge instead of helping the church or taking care of their families. Home became a filling station where the family took in food and repaired their clothing so that they could carry on their real life at the cafes, clubs, and parties. Family relationships were weakened, and parents were lucky who knew where their children were. The only treatment that the Great National Headache received was aspirin and more liquor.

Economic disaster came just in time to save us from moral and spiritual disaster that might have had far worse consequences than any we have yet seen. We may cry to the Lord to save us from the Depression, but it is just possible that we ought to be very, very grateful to Him that he sent this, and not something worse.

People are ready now to listen to reason. They are in a sober and reflective state of mind. It is possible to talk to them without being answered by a sneer. Now that our social pandemonium has quieted down, there is a chance for the "still, small Voice" to be heard. We are ready to seek and listen to God.

The present time offers religion and the church its greatest opportunity in many years. Would that we were ready to take advantage of the favorable time. Now if ever we should be diligent in our labors and strong in the warfare for the Kingdom. Let us do what we can while conditions favor us.

Education Stabilizes Marriage

STATISTICS INDICATE GREATER CHANCES FOR PERMANENCE IN MARRIAGES OF COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Every co-ed knows that Cupid is not exactly a stranger to the campus, and that he is especially busy during commencement time.

And now it seems that the matches he arranges there are more permanent than those which have had no such romantic start.

One out of every six marriages in the United States ends in divorce. But recent studies of marriages of couples who met while attending coeducational institutions indicate that not more than one in seventy-five results in failure.—Literary Digest, August 20, 1932.

The authority for the statements quoted above is Doctor Paul Popenoe, Director of the Institute of Family Relations of Los Angeles.

The colleges now have an answer for some of their critics at least. Those who have asserted that the teachings of the campus have been subversive to home life are definitely checked.

Some people have humorously called the colleges "matrimonial bureaus." It seems that they are the most successful matrimonial bureaus in the world, both in the training of candidates as well as the arranging of matches.

The meaning of all this for the parents of our own faith would result in this advice: "Don't be afraid to send your boys and girls to Graceland!"

The matrimonial aspect of college life is no longer considered a laughing matter by those who know.

The campus is the best place in our present hectic world for young people to meet, study each other's characters and personalities, and select their companions.

And while the market value of a "B. A." rests at a temporarily low level, a good marriage is as important to life success as ever.

Reflections

Margins of Safety

WE NEED larger margins of safety.

In the boom days, American recklessness was lauded as courage. In these depression days it is loudly criticized as mere folly.

In the stock market and in all lines of business men allowed their enthusiasm to put them in perilous positions. They thought it silly to bother about the margins of safety. Then the crash came.

A TRUCK LOAD of our people were going to a reunion. A highway collision with another car took the life of one woman and brought several to death's very door. We know nothing of the responsibility for the tragedy; but it seems to us that if both parties could have foreseen the event they would have allowed a wider margin for safety.

IN MORAL AND SPIRITUAL WAYS, too, we must learn to watch our margins of safety. We must learn to keep within our strength and not expose ourselves to temptations that are likely to overcome us.

It is a common mistake for people, especially young people, to overestimate their strength, to be too confident of their powers. In the testing time they break, and then it is too late for any amount of regret or repentance to regain that which was lost. Lost honor, corrupted virtue, and dissipated resources can not be restored without much suffering, and some of them never are.

We need larger margins of safety, greater caution, and more balanced wisdom in all the affairs of life.

L. L.

Three Things That Give Success

The first thing you need to do is to work hard. The second thing is to work harder. The third thing is nearly the same but more so—work hardest. It is the one who works the hardest who wins, though hardest may mean the best planning, or studying, or thinking, or working, or running fastest, or working most speedily. If you work to the greatest degree you can not miss success.—Young People.

2. Who can set the world again in the right way?
3. What did Jesus come to save the people from?
4. Wealth has always been regarded as a blessing. In what ways can it be a curse? Has it cursed the world recently?

7. What does the author say is needed as a remedy for the world's ills? What would be the main features of the new social order? What its ideals?
8. What name do we give to our ideal of society? What conditions do we expect to exist when it is established?

If the cooperation of some thousands of millions of cells in our brain can produce our consciousness, the idea becomes vastly more plausible that the cooperation of humanity or some section of it may determine what Comte called a "Great Being." Just as, according to the teaching of physiologists, the unity of the body is not due to the soul superadded to the life of the cells, the superhuman, if it existed, would be nothing external to man or even existing apart from human cooperation.

To my mind, the teaching of science is very emphatic that such a Great Being may be a fact as real as individual human consciousness, although of course there is no positive scientific evidence for the existence of such a being.—J. B. S. Haldane, in a lecture on "Science and Ethics."

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

It is suggested that prayers for the sick can be made effectively at the Wednesday evening prayer services, and at the monthly sacrament services. We hope that our readers will also remember the sick in their private prayers.

Friendly letters will be written by members of the staff to those who are discouraged or isolated from church privileges, and to those requesting prayers whose letters indicate that they are able to receive mail.

Testimonies

Undoubtedly many of those who request prayers will receive a degree of blessing. That has been the experience of the past. Under the ordinance of administration the Holy Spirit many times is manifested.

It would be a means of encouragement to many to read of these blessings. We hope that those who do receive such blessings as a result of prayer will write their testimonies for the edification of others, especially those others who have participated in praying for them. Thus we may share our blessings and strengthen our faith.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Emma A. Vickery, of Winfield, Kansas, has been afflicted for a number of years with partial paralysis, and in recent weeks she has suffered another shock, this time a light one. Since she feels that there are years of opportunity for usefulness ahead of her if she can be healed of her affliction, she desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health and normal activity. Her faith in the work is strong, and she desires to be an instrument for the accomplishment of good.

Miss Matilda Bath, of Scammon, Kansas, writes that she has suffered very severely from nervous disorders of a sinister nature, resulting in loss of sleep and prolonged distress. Medicines have failed to give her the needed relief. She is confident that the faith and prayers of the people, together with her own, will help her. She asks to be remembered in our prayers to the heavenly Father.

Mrs. Virginia Hay, of Bandera, Texas, makes a special request for prayers in her behalf that her eyesight and hearing may be improved. The impairment of these two functions make it very difficult for her to read or to hear the reading of the church papers, and she finds it hard to endure the trial of this loss.

W. H. Gilstrap, of Seneca, South Carolina, asks prayers in behalf of his daughter, Mrs. Jennie Miller, of Jarrell, Texas, who has been dangerously ill for some time, and quite recently near death.

NEWS BRIEFS

President F. M. Smith at Maine Reunion

Maine Saints enjoyed the presence and help of President F. M. Smith at their reunion at Brooksville, August 12 to 21. He proved a good leader, speaker, and camper.

At present Brother Smith is spending his time in the branches of Southern New England District, speaking, counseling, and helping. He is expected to return home to Independence and Kansas City about the middle of September.

Ava Branch Forging Ahead

The branch at Ava, Missouri, has now raised eighty-five percent of its budget quota for the year, and workers are confident that they will be able to raise the entire amount. Missionary work has gone forward in this community. There have been helpful and wholesome contacts with general church workers and with Saints of nearby branches. The local ministry are active. Crops are good. And the Saints are actively supporting the program of the church.

Choir Visits Kirtland Reunion

One of the early attractions of the Kirtland reunion was the visit of the New Philadelphia volunteer choir of thirty-five voices, which came to the reunion grounds by bus and auto Sunday morning, August 14. The choir, under the direction of Brother Samuel Mansell, took active part in morning and afternoon services at the Temple.

Official Exodus From Independence

Things are rather quiet at the Auditorium right now. A number of the officials have been called out of town on church business. "And so," says one who knows, "there isn't much news, but—"

President Frederick M. Smith is busy in the New England District.

President F. M. McDowell is in the State of Washington, attending a special meeting at Spokane.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith has been out of town a number of weeks, looking after the work of his quorum. Lately he attended the Eastern Michigan reunion at Cash.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp sought counsel of Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, at Dallas, Texas, and spent a week-end in the Lone Star State about ten days ago.

Practically every member of the Quorum of Twelve is busy with reunions and special missionary meetings in the regions of their assignment.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards, whose big duty since

General Conference has been to remain at home to help with the administration of the activities of his own Quorum and the Presidency, has been attending the Kirtland Reunion.

Apostle John W. Rushton is being happily welcomed by the Saints of the British Isles. He landed at Southampton, July 31, after a safe but somewhat sultry passage.

Last Thursday Sister George G. Lewis and little daughter left Independence on the first lap of their trip "to Australia." They will join Brother Lewis at Salt Lake City, and then travel to the coast.

Pioneer Spirit Among Maine Campers

Expenses at the Maine reunion, held August 12 to 21, were cut to minimum, and this challenged the pioneer ingenuity of the campers. The people set about making the camp as comfortable and convenient as possible. They needed a tabernacle, and so they built one, covering a rustic frame with sails from coasting vessels. The pulpit was a dry goods box covered with fir boughs and beautifully decorated with roses.

This was one of the most successful reunions of the season, being characterized by a deep and pervading spirituality and mutual consideration and helpfulness.

Elder S. W. Simmons Passes Eightieth Birthday

Elder S. W. Simmons, veteran missionary of the Southwest, passed his eightieth birthday August 1. In honor of the event the Saints of Beaver Branch at Tigris, Missouri, and of the branch at Ava, combined in all-day services August 7.

He was born in Rapides Parish, Louisiana, August 1, 1852, and has been a member of the church for more than forty-seven years. Active in the priesthood since his ordination to the office of deacon July 28, 1885, he has faithfully served the church. Was called to act as a seventy in 1896. Since his superannuation in 1923, he has served in voluntary missionary capacity as much as health permitted.

Independence Young People to Reunion

Two hundred young people journeyed to Stewartsville to attend a few sessions of the Far West Stake reunion Saturday and Sunday, August 20 and 21. The trip was sponsored by the Young People's Council of Independence. With several hundred other visitors the young travelers were privileged on Sunday, to listen to excellent sermons by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, of Independence; Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, and Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

“Forward to Christ”

By John F. Sheehy

(Sermon delivered at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. A. Morgan, reporter.)

FORWARD TO CHRIST

(Solo, sung by George Anway before the sermon.)

Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today
 Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!
 Who is among us the Truth can say,
 Till he has passed through the 'narrow way'?
 Forward to Christ, all ye people;
 March! march, today!

And Jesus said: “Why call ye me Lord, Lord,
 And do not the things I say?
 Why call ye me Lord, Lord,
 And do not the things I say?”

“Ye call me the ‘Way’ and walk me not,
 Ye call me the ‘Life’ and live me not;
 Ye call me ‘Master,’ and obey me not,
 If I condemn thee blame me not.”

Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!
 Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!
 Know ye the Christ and the life are one;
 Know ye the Christ-life has scarce begun?
 Forward to Christ, all ye people;
 March! march, today!

The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then Peaceable, gentle; full of mercy and without hypocrisy.
 And he rebuked them saying: “Ye hypocrites,
 Ye whited sepulchers, ye blind, leaders of the blind!

“Ye call me ‘Bread’ and eat me not,
 Ye call me ‘Truth’ and believe me not;
 Ye call me ‘Lord,’ and serve me not,
 If I condemn thee blame me not.”

Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!
 Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!
 Who then shall scorn, who his name deride?
 Till his teachings the world has tried?
 Forward to Christ, all ye people:
 March! march, today!

—O'Hara.

The last verse of the fifth chapter of Matthew reads: “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.” We should not be disturbed when we measure our lives by that admonition, for we are all conscious of our imperfections. We strive toward that perfection through many difficulties.

The inspiring song that we have heard this morning, “Forward to Christ,” leads in just one direction—Forward to Christ. I marveled the first time I heard it, especially when I was informed that it was written by O'Hara, the same man who wrote that comic song, “Beautiful Katie,” which was popular during the World War. When O'Hara wrote about beautiful Katie, I presume he wanted us to be singing in order to forget some of our troubles. There was nothing in “Beautiful Katie” to indicate that O'Hara could write, “Forward to Christ.” Doctor Grabske told me this week that he heard that song in France, with many variations, and I suppose you have heard it sung with many variations, too.

O'Hara, just a few weeks ago, happened into a church in New York City—just happened to go to church like a great many people who had no other place to go, and for that reason, and that reason only, went to church.

During all this time, people have been talking about getting “back to Christ,” but this preacher took for his theme, “Going forward to Jesus,” and the preacher, as O'Hara listened, was very much disturbed because people were talking about getting back to Jesus. This preacher stirred O'Hara when he said, “We haven't yet caught up with Christ; we can not get back to him until we first get in step with him”; and O'Hara didn't pay much more attention to the sermon. The preacher had done a great deal for him. He said, “It is true the command should be Forward to Christ; forward to him, and forward with him. There's only one direction to travel. Turn about and go forward to Jesus.”

A few weeks ago a man died in the Jackson County Home for the Aged. Years ago, when he was one of the wealthiest young men in Kansas City, and was known to be worth almost a million dollars—years ago when we didn't even talk about millionaires—he met and married one of the finest girls in the city, a girl of refinement and deeply religious. They were social leaders, among the best young people of the time. A beautiful relationship was established. They were very happy for a year. Then her health failed. He took her to Colorado. Tuberculosis has been a dreadful enemy of the white man. It was not only taking away his beloved young companion and wife, but it was breaking his heart, and as he sat with her, by her bedside, just before death came, she opened her eyes, looked at him and asked, “How far is it to heaven? How far is it to Christ?” and through blinding tears, with a breaking heart, he said to her, “For such as you it is just a breath, but for me, it is a million miles away, and it would take millions of years." And then she turned to him and said, "You say that because I have been a Christian; because I have been trying to follow Jesus, and you didn't believe in Jesus. But you must, and it doesn't make any difference how long it takes, I will be waiting for you to come." Then she closed her eyes in death.

How far is it to Jesus? How far ahead of this world is Christ? How much higher are the standards of Jesus above the standards of this world? How much higher are the ideals of the Christ than the ideals of this world?

Jesus came. One of the most dramatic scenes in all New Testament history was written when the writer told us about the preaching of John at the Jordan, when he turned to the Pharisees and Sadducees in the great company of people and with a sweep of his hand declared, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance," refusing to administer the beautiful sacrament of baptism to them. Then he said to them, "He that cometh after me is mightier than I. . . . He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Over the hill John saw the Messiah coming, and he called the attention of the people to Him, saying, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Coming down quietly and alone, having left Nazareth now to begin his great work as the Redeemer of the world, the Son of God came to John the Baptist, and he stood on the shores of that river requesting baptism. John said to him, "Why comest thou to me?" and Jesus answered him. Not only did Jesus answer him, but he spoke words that gave us to understand the work behind all that he would now do; and so he said to John, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Even the Son of God must do all things to fulfill the righteousness of God. And you know that he went from that place of baptism with the words of God ringing in his ears, for out of heaven spoke a Voice which said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." That Voice can be heard ringing in the ears of all men, when they, with consecration, go about doing the things that fulfill all the righteous requirements of God. That Voice with the same message can ring in your ears, "My child, in whom I am well pleased." Jesus went to the wilderness where he could be alone and talk with God, for forty days and forty nights he talked with God. He had great need to talk with God. He was confronted with his task, and when he turned from his place of prayer to face the world of men, to challenge its standards, he met a group of men who believed in Moses and the prophets, who had the written law and a religious organization that was powerful enough to break any man of another group. From that place of prayer he came, but before he reached the people the Devil met him with a strong temptation. How well the power of evil knew that this man's physical body was demanding food, for he had been fasting for forty days; and he suggested that the Lord command that bread be made of the stone. That temptation is before all of us. "Do this and I will give thee—" says temptation, pleasure for the moment but misery for the rest of your life. Jesus, tempted with hunger and knowing that by speaking a word he could turn stones into bread, resisted the temptation. Knowing that he could sway all the nations of the earth by His power, he also resisted that temptation. A man who came as the Son of God could have all the world following after him; but it wasn't for that that he came. Not his purpose to do spectacular things, nor to deceive the people. He had a greater purpose than that in living and in coming; he would teach them how to live.

On the pinnacle of the temple the Devil again appeared and said, "Cast thyself down, for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." The glory of the world and the praise of men were in the hands of the power of evil to give. The people of Jerusalem and regions round about would have gathered in the court of the temple to see the great display of supernatural power—a man casting himself down and a host of angels come from heaven and supporting him. It could be done. It would have been easy. Jesus had the power, but he didn't come to do that.

After this great temptation, people followed Jesus because he commenced to teach in the synagogue, in the market places and everywhere, and in the fifth chapter of John, we read of a multitude of people on the mountain, and Jesus sitting down, and the first verse of the fifth chapter of Matthew says, "And he opened his mouth and talked with them," and the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters contain the Sermon on the Mount.

Go back to Christ? Read the Sermon on the Mount, and you wonder when did we ever walk with Christ, when did we ever advance far enough to even keep in step with Christ. The preacher and O'Hara; and the preacher saying, "It is not going back to Christ; it is going forward to Christ," and O'Hara says that's the message of this age—Forward to Christ—and so he wrote his beautiful hymn when he sat in the pew of that great church in New York.

Some things we must do in order to step up with Christ. After you have read the Sermon on the Mount you don't have to read anything else to know some of the beautiful ideals of Christ; to know something about the high order of Christian living. The Sermon on the Mount contains it all. Jesus declared himself. It was the platform of the new way of living. Jesus declared in that fifth chapter, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill." In former days there was no punishment for anger. No one had anything to say about anger. No one had anything to say about your rousing of the passion of hate. But Jesus taught that it wasn't so much the striking of the blow as it is the anger behind the uncontrolled passion of the individual. He attempted to teach a world a new lesson in attitudes as well as conduct. Until he comes to this last verse, "Be ye therefore perfect." You may be able to explain the whole story like this. A young man entered the ministry of Jesus and started to preach. And another young man, a member of a great religion, the religion of his day, was commissioned with authority to persecute even unto death any preacher of the new religion. So Paul met Stephen face to face, and Paul gave orders to his men to stone this preacher to death. So they stripped the garments from Stephen, and they threw them down at the young officer's feet. Then this Saul of Tarsus ordered the men to stone Stephen to death, just as an officer of a squad of men would lead his squad out to the firing post, where the victim was placed, and then order them to shoot him down. So this young officer of the Sanhedrin Council in old Jerusalem stood Stephen up to the stake, stripped him of his clothing, and then gave orders to his men to stone him to death. As they did it Stephen said, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit." Stephen, looking at the people, the mob that was stoning him, looking at the young man who had ordered his death in such a cruel way, Stephen again lifted his eyes to heaven, and out of his heart went this prayer to God, "Let not this sin be laid to their charge."

Now, compare the religion of Saul at that time with the religion of Stephen at that time. Stephen was a young man of Jerusalem as Saul was a young man of Jerusalem; but all Saul knew about religion was a religion that could hate, that could punish, that could wipe away by fair or foul means any other religion that dared to oppose him. The religion of Stephen was the religion of Jesus. Although they put him to death yet he could pray, "Lay not this sin to their charge." Stephen in his quiet way of living the Christian religion was going forward to Christ, so that at his death, like his own Redeemer who died on the cross, he could say, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

your home relationships only? Be ye therefore perfect in love; perfect in service; perfect in mercy; perfect in forgiving; and don't think that you can accomplish that in a minute.

In this day, many of the people of Independence are disturbed, and many would invite you to get back to Jesus. May you be conscious of this fact that we haven't yet gone forward with Jesus. Let us go forward. When Moses was leading his people out of Egypt, and every turn seemed to be in vain, and the Israelites were claiming the mountains were too steep to climb, and they were facing a river, Moses went to his God and said the people are complaining, the people are murmuring, the people are talking about going back, what will I say? And out of the heavens came the voice that was familiar to Moses, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." Go forward.

The message of the church today is, Bear up under your trials; keep your face toward God and his heaven and go forward with Christ until Zion's redemption. With the challenge of Jesus still ringing in your ears, Be ye perfect in all your human relationships, even as you would expect your Father in heaven to be perfect in all his dealings with you. Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect.

The Forms of Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

For most people petitional prayer is the most important, but, although it was the original prayer form it is not the only kind. There are, among others, prayers of habit, communion, thankfulness, silence, and confession.¹ Originally, some object became the abode of the divinity and also possessed His powers. This was a result of an emotional experience with the object and brought about a change in the form of prayer. At a later date this object became a mere symbol of the divinity. For instance: "The Catholic of today prays before the crucifix and not to it, and he uses pictures of saints and of the stages of the cross, theoretically at least, merely as helps to concentration of mind."² The rosary, used by the above denomination, is a mechanical prayer device used to gain meditation upon prescribed topics.³

That prayer can exist without form and doctrine is shown by the fact that it began as a simple cry for help. Now, however, it shows submission, faith, and confidence in God's will and as such has need of form and doctrine.⁴ As a form of prayer is of the utmost importance, and in the sense of reverent entreaty "prayer is a characteristic feature of the higher religions, and we might even say that Christianity . . . ritually viewed is, in its inmost essence, a service of prayer." Confined to forms of explicit address, prayer may be grouped into three divisions. (1) If the deity is regarded as superior to the applicant, prayer is proper and reverent. (2) If the worshiper places God on a level with himself he makes of prayer a bargaining or flattery. (3) If the God is dependent upon the prayer of the supplicant, the prayer is merely dictation, threatening and abusive.⁵

The form of prayer may be spontaneous or formal. The trouble with the latter is that it is too often addressed to the audience instead of to God.⁶ In such cases prayer must of course belong to the field of psychology. It is possible that in formal prayer "the thought follows the words of the book, and that in spontaneous prayer thought precedes the words." Psychologically this is doubtful, for with many people, thinking in terms of verbal imagery is so large that thought preceding spontaneous prayer would be of little significance; in formal prayer the repetition proves foreknowledge.⁷ Whether the words be preceded by thought or whether they be vocal or not, or whether the body assumes one of the regular positions, is of little importance in prayer; the necessary thing is that the thoughts and desire be in the direction of God. The worshiper does not look for the causes of his state of being, nor for the power producing his sensations, but just as in conversation with a friend he converses inwardly with God.⁸ For some reason the form of prayer is a little difficult for the psychologist to handle, and "there are mysteries no doubt attached to intercessory prayer which we can not solve with our intellect or by our efforts at rationalizing."⁹

By A. B. Phillips

NUMBER FIVE

Something has already been said in regard to the kind of people who are fighting for booze. We are not unkind, but state the simple truth when we say that no one can fight for intoxicating liquors who has a decent respect for the morality and welfare of his children, his home, his community, his state, or his nation. Proof of this is so overwhelming that many booze supporters attempt to divert attention from the disgusting nature of their cause, by making extravagant and questionable statements against prohibition. Many of these false statements have already been refuted by facts which we have presented from Government and other sources of unquestioned authority. There is abundant evidence to show that many Wet claims are made without any intention of proving them, in the hope that they will be believed and repeated by people who are ignorant of the facts.

Within three years after prohibition became the law of our nation there was a remarkable decrease in drunkenness and those crimes and misdemeanors that usually accompany the liquor habit. This was noted in the falling off of the number committed to prison for offenses of the kind mentioned. Judge Cochran of Virginia, in a public address, in June, 1929, made this statement:

Despite the increase in population, actual commitments dropped one third from 1913 to 1923, and the ratio has not increased materially since.—They Almost Had Me Fooled, page 31.

The Census Bureau has published the following statistics, which show that commitments had dropped off greatly in 1923, as compared with 1910. The falling off in drunkenness was 55.3 per cent; disorderly conduct, 51.5 per cent; vagrancy, 52.8 per cent; larceny, 52.3 per cent; assault, 53.1 per cent; prostitution, 28.8 per cent. Overwhelming proofs refute Wet claims that prohibition has increased crime. The fact is that prohibition laws give this nation a strangle-hold on the sources of crime to an extent that never before existed. The criminal and lawless elements are pouring out millions of dollars in a vicious struggle to overthrow morals and orderly government. They are ruthlessly using the tactics of the racketeer and gangster, hoping to deceive, coerce, or frighten the people until they yield to their corrupt designs.

The State Control Humbug

One of the most deceptive pleas that the Wets have ever made is their demand for state control of the liquor business. The Wets do not actually want state control, but they fear the federal government with its resistless power to punish law violators. It is far less difficult to corrupt officers of the various State and municipal agencies, as a rule, and punishment therefor is less certain. Therefore the Wets want to get rid of this Nemesis of federal law. Get this straight! It is not now and it never has been the law-abiding people who want to overthrow prohibition. The United States Treasury Department in 1930 printed the following quotation from the Railroad Trainmen of February 1 of that year, which says:

Law enforcement is causing grave concern at this time, due almost entirely to the desire on the part of a lawless element in several sections of the country to dominate politics or to engage in illegal enterprises for private gain. We have had these sporadic outbursts before from time to time in the past, but law enforcement has invariably won over the powers of evil.—State Cooperation in the Enforcement of National Prohibition Laws, page 3.

Before prohibition was enacted as the law of this nation various States had enacted bone-dry prohibition laws. Before 1919 twenty-eight States had passed prohibition laws, and in that year four more States adopted prohibition. Some of these States had been under prohibition laws for many years. Of the remaining Wet States, the Treasury Department reported:

In the sixteen other States there were counties and sections comprising over fourteen million inhabitants that had prohibition under local option laws.—Ibid., page 2.

What was the result of State control before the Federal Government was intrusted with enforcement of prohibition? According to the Treasury Department the situation was shown in Congress to have been as follows:

One reason for national prohibition was that a majority of the people of the United States were living, of their own volition as expressed in State laws, under prohibition at the time, and that State laws were often nullified in effect by the minority States that were wet, in so far as much liquor was shipped illegally into dry States and that these States had no control over such shipments. Advocates of prohibition urged the passage of a national law to remedy this situation.—Ibid., pages 2, 3.

This proves beyond question that a Wet State will not respect the laws of a dry State, but will pour its death-dealing poison over its own borders until it becomes a national nuisance and a plague. When certain States of our Union determined to force the slave traffic upon the whole nation, they loudly proclaimed the virtue of State rights as against the rights of the entire country. The fallacy of this notion has been shown so many times that no person of right motives will seek to foist upon the people the evils which a minority may be willing for a time to endure. In making this same plea the insincerity of the Wets is shown in the fact that they make no such objection to Federal control of infected corn areas, the boll weevil, diseased hogs or cattle, or the food products of the States. They are willing for the Government to protect hogs, but not men, women, and children. Is there any sane person who believes such emissaries of evil are sincere?

What Happened Under State Control

The same sort of persons that fought tooth and nail against liquor control in their own States are now shedding crocodile tears over their lost rights of State control. These tricksters hope that the older people have forgotten and that the young people have never learned of the intolerable corruption suffered everywhere the arrogant liquor supporters pushed their unlawful and misery-making business. Some of the evils that were suffered in liquor license days are briefly stated by Wayne Wheeler, as follows.

The purveyors of liquor would not recognize the right of any State to deal with the liquor traffic within its own borders. They broke every law that interfered with their manufacturing of drunkards, murderers, orphans, paupers, lunatics, corrupt politicians and brewery barons. If State rights are dead as a political issue, it is not because the dry forces of the nation used the executioner's axe, but because the brewer and the distiller played the assassin.—State Rights and National Wrongs, page 10.

In 1792 the advocates of State rights secured an act of the Legislature that deprived the National Government of its army. In the War of 1812 the States had over half a million soldiers fighting against a British army of sixteen thousand five hundred without winning a single victory on land until after the war was over. At a terrible cost this nation has learned that success and security are not founded on a confederation of States, but upon a United States. No State can possess any right without incurring a corresponding duty, and its rights can safely endure only as long as it performs its sacred duties toward others. The wet States refused to perform their duty toward the dry States by preventing illegal traffic in liquor, and it is certain that they can not be trusted to do any better now, for in many instances they have not only refused to support the laws on the subject, but their officers have actually attempted to prevent Government officers of the nation from discharging their duty.

Let it be remembered that at the time prohibition was adopted by the nation, there was not a single State that did not have some part of its territory under dry laws. In several of the fifteen States listed at that time as wet, the dry territory comprised fifty-two to eighty-five per cent of the population. Yet the States did not respect the dry territory of their own citizens, but permitted the liquor interests to force intoxicants upon places under dry laws. The spirit of the cutthroat and the assassin is still rampant in the land, and is eager to debauch and prostitute and kill the virtue, honor, and morality of your children as soon as the vigilant arm of the nation is stayed from its work of protection. No self-respecting person will lend his aid to those who are avowed enemies of law. A full-page advertisement was published in various wet papers, by the authority Vanity Fair of New York, in defiance of the Eighteenth Amendment. It said, among other things:

I call upon every free-thinking American who can think at all to break this law; break it repeatedly; break it whenever you can. Drink what you please when you please. Urge others to drink. Don't betray the bootleggers who are smuggling liquor for you.—Prohibition Facts, page 90.

The Folly of State Dispensaries

The Wets will advocate most anything that they think will give them greater freedom in their unholy traffic. Some have suggested State dispensaries as substitutes for the Eighteenth Amendment and prohibition. That they are not sincerely seeking the people's welfare is clear to those who know the history of State dispensaries. South Carolina, in 1893, first tried this method of control, but soon found that it did not control. Great claims had been made for it, but while it closed saloons, it opened dispensaries which continued to increase until everyone could easily get liquor everywhere. Under the system blind pigs flourished. For instance, in Charleston, a city of fifty-five thousand at the time, there were two hundred and eight blind pigs in the business district alone. It resulted in political corruption that caused an investigation by the legislature, and the State dispensary system had to be abolished.

It is significant that within three years after the State abolished its dispensary system, all but five counties in the State had become dry, and six years later the State adopted prohibition by an overwhelming majority. The vicious nature of those who support the liquor business is a matter of public record. There is no reason to suppose that they have changed in this respect since the old saloon days. Those who still want to dabble in drink are more than three thousand years behind the Chinese, for in 1116 B. C., a Chinese dynasty prohibited the making, selling, or drinking of intoxicants on pain of death. After several States went dry, the Wets advocated license and local option as a means of defeating the fast-growing sentiment for prohibition. The result was that under local and county option almost half of the area of the United States went dry.

Government Sale in Canada a Failure

In Canada the Wets tried to overthrow prohibition by adopting Government sale methods. Certain irresponsible wets in the United States claim that Canada has solved the problem. This claim is absolutely false, as we shall prove. Under a law prohibiting the sale of liquor, but permitting its manufacture, Canada more than a decade ago reduced drunkenness 58%, and materially reduced crime. It reduced consumption of spirits 76% and of malt liquors 55%. Through deceit and misrepresentations the Wets have secured a change to the Government sale system, but results have been almost opposite from what the Wets declared would follow.

Under Government sales, crime in Canada increased 47% in 1929 as compared with the dry year of 1923. Indictable offenses increased 27%, convictions for drunkenness 32%, hard-drinking criminals 63%, and violations of the liquor law increased 77%. The Saskatchewan Liquor Board reported that bootlegging increased 111% the first year, and the British Columbia Liquor Board reported: "As much liquor sold by bootleggers as sold in government stores." Official Canadian figures show that by 1928 drinking of spirits increased 98% as compared with the dry year of 1923. Beer consumption increased 52%, and the Saskatchewan Liquor Board stated that under government sale drunkenness increased 125% in eight months.

Liquor conditions in Canada have become much worse than they were under prohibited sale laws, and the Montreal Daily Star reported an increase of 53% in drunken women, while the problem of child welfare has been increased enormously. So bad are the conditions that former Police Commissioner Burton, of Manitoba, said of the increased drunkenness under the government sale system:

If all the drunks were arrested, there would be no room for them in the jails.—Prohibition Facts, page 74.

Canadian officials themselves admit the failure of the government sale idea. The editor of the Minneapolis Journal reported:

The mayor of Winnipeg finds conditions there "a thousand times worse than under prohibition."—Ibid., page 73.

It has been proved time and time again that you can not trust Wet motives or statements. The very nature of their aims is evil and deceitful. I have no desire to call anyone bad names, but the simple truth is necessary to protect the country from designing men. Their lack of decency and morals is illustrated by the case of the Moderation League of Canada, which pretended to be working for sanctity of the home and sobriety of youth, but was in fact paid nearly a half million dollars by liquor interests to promote liquor sales. The Canadian government discovered the fraud, and in court a witness for one of the liquor corporations made this admission:

We figured that investing nearly a half million dollars in the cause of the repeal of prohibition and the establishment of a government system of sale would so greatly increase our business that we were quite justified in so large an expenditure. Time has proved us right.—Ibid., page 76.

Evil Methods Reveal Evil Motives

It is not necessary that we shall judge men by their claims, for a far more certain method is to judge them by their methods. Any man, politician or otherwise, who advocates repeal of dry laws may be able for a time to conceal his real motives, but soon or late it will be found that his motives are purely selfish and unworthy. He may be an orator, but if he has the interests of the whole people at heart, he will never advocate the business of booze in any form. Throughout human history the devious lanes of liquor have been strewn with the debauched bodies of men, women, and children; with the crimes of arson, rape, murder, and assault; with moral, mental, and physical deformity; and with poverty, disease, degeneracy, and dishonor. He who chooses any of these lanes does so with improper motives. In the cause of your nation, your community, and your own family and children, such evil advisers must be opposed. Their hearts are not right in the sight of God.

In every instance where these would-be robbers of reason have demonstrated their proposals of maudlin magic, it has enormously increased the deadly debt of dissipation. The sad world has learned that there is no security or happiness to be obtained from the demons of dipsomania. Bibulous bipeds who go through the gateway of grog are soon enshrouded in the damp dews of spiritual and moral death. The curse of Cain was pronounced by God upon the man who raised his ruthless hand against his brother and denied that he was his brother's keeper. The word of God warns us of our responsibility and also of the condemnation that shall follow use of the inebriating cup. The great Apostle Paul declares:

Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.—Galatians 5: 21.

For decency's sake, let us not degenerate below the Chinese standard of more than three thousand years ago.

Whooping Cough

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Whooping cough, sometimes called pertussis, is an infectious disease characterized by a convulsive, paroxysmal cough of forceful expirations followed by a deep, loud paroxym (the whoop). Its virulence varies in intensity and mortality in various epidemics. It occurs more frequently in cold and changeable climates and is always associated with a catarrhal condition of bronchial tubes. It is very properly in class with the other respiratory infections and contagious diseases and is more prevalent in rural communities than in the cities. While it is considered a disease of childhood, adults may be attacked and one attack usually secures immunity from others. It is more prevalent among children between the ages of five and six. Unfortunately, the dangerous nature of whooping cough is not generally realized and it is conceded by many authors that there are more deaths from whooping cough than from scarlet fever. Bronchitis and bronchial pneumonia are frequently serious complications. During the summer months, when gastrointestinal diseases are more prevalent, it is more serious than in young children.

The disease is thought to be transmitted from person to person, not unlike that of diphtheria and other infections. Namely, from the secretions of the mouth and nose. Handkerchiefs, roller towels, toys and drinking cups or any other object that may become contaminated, tend to spread the disease. Whooping cough is quarantined and strict isolation should be insisted upon and no patient should be released from quarantine less than four weeks after the onset of the symptoms. Like all other infectious diseases, the control is largely in the hands of the public itself, and the people should be taught the contagiousness and seriousness of all cases.

Medicines are useful in this disease and the special vaccine has been used with some success. The room should be well ventilated, and have plenty of sunlight, but it is not necessary that all patients be confined to bed. Catching cold is dangerous, but on favorable days, it is best to allow them in the open air as much as possible. Nourishment is of great importance because of the frequent vomiting in some cases. Inhalations of various medicines have been found to be beneficial. These medicines should be used only under the advice of the physician in attendance.

The World's Need of the Redeemer

By W. J. Haworth

(A sermon delivered at the Australasian Mission Conference, Saints' Church, Rozelle, New South Wales, Easter Sunday, March 27, 1932.)

Though the nations of earth do not acknowledge it, their need of the Redeemer is very great and decidedly urgent. The world has always had need of a Savior, but never before, in the entire history of mankind, has such a necessity been so obviously pressing. The mechanisms of international relations, of national and even social life, are so complex and intricate that no man can understand them or devise means for their regulation and control. Man has unlimited confidence in himself and his powers to set things right, but unfortunately what is right for one section of the community is wrong for the remainder.

The job of setting the world right is a super-human one. No man or group of men will ever be able to accomplish it. It is a divine task and none other than the Redeemer can hope to bring it to a successful conclusion. The work of the Redeemer and the benefits of the Lord's covenant with the redeemed are clearly indicated in the following prophetic utterance:

When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.—Isaiah 59: 19-21.

This prophetic promise gives assurance, not only of the fact that the world's Superman—the Redeemer—Christ Jesus, will come and set things right, but that they will stay right. The promise is that the Redeemer will come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression. The Spirit of God, and the word of God, which would be instrumental in causing them to be redeemed through turning from their transgressions, would remain with them for ever, thus insuring the indefinite continuance of righteous conditions.

Rejected by His People

Over nineteen hundred years ago, this same Redeemer came into the world and became God manifest in the flesh. The chosen family, Israel, had looked forward to the coming of the Messiah who was to deliver them from bondage, but they failed to recognize Him when He made an unobtrusive entrance into their country, as a lowly babe, born in a stable and cradled in a manger. A Messiah, born in a Bethlehem stable and reared in Nazareth, forsooth! They would have none of Him, nor of His teachings. They refused to consider the prophetic announcements that He would come after the manner of His humble appearing; they persecuted Him, and finally fulfilled the prophetic declarations that He should die at their hands for the sins of His people.

Today we have been celebrating the greatest triumph ever won over the powers of evil—the victory of Jesus Christ over the death He met at the hands of His chosen people; the wounds He received in the house of His friends. The Jewish idea of a Messiah was all wrong. It was narrow, small and selfish. Christ did not come to be the Savior of the Jews; but to be the Redeemer of the world. He did not come to deliver them from Roman bondage, but to save them from their sins.

They loved their sins too well; they did not desire to be saved from them; but in them, to be delivered from the Roman bondage. How like the modern nations! They want salvation from their perplexities, unemployment, debt, and the like, but not from their sins. These desires, however, can not alter the fact that the whole world is in urgent and dire need of the Redeemer.

The Curse of Gold

We hear it stated on every hand that the world has known many depressions such as that through which we are now passing. True, the world has known many commercial and industrial calamities; but have they been quite the same as that from which we are now trying to make a recovery? We think not. Life, industrially and commercially, has never been so full of complexity as it is at present. This very complexity is one big reason for the common perplexity which exists throughout the world at the moment.

There is practically universal unemployment upon a scale never before dreamed of. Many conjectures have been made as to the reason. One reason prominently set forth is that those who have money find it unprofitable to employ men in the promotion of industry. Money as a medium for measuring the value of commodities may be a good thing. It may be a good thing as a substitute for driving or carrying about one's wealth in the form of goods or property. But when it becomes an end of life to pile up money in vaults it becomes a curse rather than a blessing.

America and France today possess the bulk of the world's real money—gold. The rest of the world has to depend upon the token-money dubbed "currency." Yet, a recent returning traveler from the United States, described America as "Misery seated on a heap of gold." Why has America all this gold? Largely because of war debts. England and her allies borrowed vast sums from America during the world war. Nominally, they borrowed money, but really, they borrow goods; for commodities, not money, went from America to the Allies.

The United States of America is a self-contained nation. She can not take goods from the debtor nations in settlement of their debts with her. They have been making up adverse trade balances in gold and so the New York bank vaults are glutted with gold. Still, this fact does not seem to be of any benefit to the people of that country. It does not give employment to the millions who urgently want work.

Another reason advanced is that machinery has taken the place of men and that because of the powers of production of the machines the world is overstocked with commodities. There may be a great deal of truth in this statement. Machinery is irrevocably attached to finance, and the owner, as well as the operator of the machine, is to some extent in bondage to the financier.

Problems and Perplexities

Still another reason put forward is that primary production, assisted by modern machinery, has been very unscientifically managed. But is it possible to arrange for world-production of commodities upon a perfectly scientific basis? I doubt it. High tariffs in different countries artificially stimulate the production of commodities which are much more economically produced elsewhere. Nations care alone for their own nationals and while this state of things exists, there can not be scientific control of production, primary or secondary.

So the world goes on trying to make the best of a bad situation. Let us hope that times will improve; but is it reasonable to hope that peace will come with prosperity? Will those who have gold and property be at peace with those who have not? And will those who have not feel at peace with those who have? You know these questions must be answered in the negative.

Aside from the perplexities arising from the failure of industry and commerce to maintain its erstwhile buoyancy, there is the tremendous drag upon society of vice and paganized pleasure. Gangland levies tribute barefacedly. Political bribery and corruption are common. Secret commissions, blackmail and the like, eat, like cancerous growths, into our social system. Clearly, society can not afford to continue to finance this tremendous over-head!

Wanted—A New Social Order

The pity of it all is that sin enters so deeply into the complex problems the world is facing that the situation can not be saved except through changing the entire Social Order. This would be a very large task. It can only be managed upon the basis of a complete change over in the life of every individual. He who said that except a man be born again he could not see the kingdom of heaven, touched the vital spot here. Ideal conditions can only be attained in the kingdom of God.

What, then, hinders the world from realizing its ideal of Liberty, Fraternity and Equality? Nothing more than the reluctance to change over to a life of righteousness. These wonderful ideals are not to be realized aside from that truly social basis which is called the righteousness of God. This is revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The world faced a terrific crisis in the time of Noah. For one hundred and twenty years he preached the gospel of righteousness. Then, as now, it was the paramount issue. Exercising the perilous gift of free agency, the masses turned from the overtures of God. They did not wish to turn from their evil ways. That ever-present and steadily progressing structure, the ark, made no appeal to them. They continued in their unrighteous ways till the flood came and swept them out of existence.

As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man, prophesied the Savior. Just as they walked in their own ways before the flood, so will men persist in following their willful, worldly ways in the days before the coming of Christ. Somehow, the majority of men will not heed the warning voice. Yet it is stated in Holy Writ that the "wise shall understand." Who are the wise? Those who hear and obey that measure—the gospel of Christ—that is able to make them wise unto salvation.

As real as was the menace of the flood, is the menace of the times in which we live—the time of the end. The terrible reality of that early tragedy in which the bulk of the world's population perished will, if anything, be eclipsed by the certainty of the fiery trial which awaits the world at the second advent of Christ.

We are informed that the world is to be cleansed with fire, after which the Savior is to establish His Millennial reign upon earth, during which He will exercise justice and judgment for the meek of the earth. (See Isaiah 11.) Then there will be a ruler upon earth who will have such marvelous powers that He will be able to deal with all the complex situations that may be brought to Him. We are informed that He will not judge after the sight of His eyes, nor after the hearing of His ears, for He shall possess qualifications which will make all His judgments just.

That is the day referred to in our text, when, in the very hour when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord is to be used against him, and the Redeemer is to come to Zion. He is to bring industrial, commercial, social and individual peace—a peace which will last for ever, for the people to whom He shall come will be those who have permanently turned from their transgressions and have learned to walk in the ways of Christ.

Our Ideal—Zion

Zion must be established. - Just as essential as was the building of the ark in the days of Noah, is the building of Zion in our time. It is to be a place of safety. Latter-day revelation tells us that the time is coming when he who will not take up the sword to fight against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion. Further, he who would enjoy the benefits of living in the company of a free and equal brotherhood, will find it only in Zion.

Visualize, if you can, a new social order, from which are eliminated the grafter, the racketeer, the thief, the gangman, the gunman, the gambler, the perjurer, the public house bar and the speakeasy, the red light district, the fight promoter, and all the other vice-promoting parasites who prey upon the present social order. Think of the financial saving to such a community. Add to this the social advantages. Would it not be preferable to "cut to the bone" in this "standard of dying" than to be obliged to make deep cuts into the real standard of living while retaining these economic extravagances?

Glimpse, if possible, a social order in which true liberty, fraternity and equality are guaranteed to every citizen; in which every person produces for the welfare of the community and not for individual profit; in which distribution of the common product is made to every man according to his needs and just wants, insuring that every man shall have all that he needs and none more than he can use; a community in which righteousness is the principle governing social relationships; a body of people being organized into the kingdom of God.

If you can get a mental vision of these things you can "see" the kingdom of God. You will be able to see the only way out of the social tangles of the present order. The Redeemer said that such vision is denied to the unregenerate (John 3: 3). A man must be born again before he can "see" the kingdom. But "seeing" is not realization any more than being born again is growth and development in the new life. Zion must be redeemed, not merely seen.

Our text says that the Redeemer shall come to Zion. Before that time, she must be redeemed. The land must be redeemed, the city built up, the people established in the surrounding stakes. But the work of redemption must not stop at these things. Redemption must saturate the activities of the people of Zion. Their working conditions must be redeemed from the taint of the present social order. Their pleasures, their commerce, their social conventions, everything must be redeemed from the pagan influences and sins of the present system. There must be a thorough redemption.

Then Zion, the pure in heart, "them that turn from transgressions," shall receive the Redeemer, and enter into His peace and the continuous enjoyment of the Holy Spirit and His divine Presence, for ever more. "A pretty, but impossible dream," is a common verdict. We concede that in human strength and with man's wisdom directing, it is impossible of realization; but God has set up His Church as a latter-day ark of safety. He has directed in the planning of Zion, and we feel assured that all who enter the modern ark and who assist in building up the City of God, will escape the fiery flood in the last great day, just as surely as those who entered the ancient ark survived the watery flood in the days of Noah. "The Redeemer shall come to Zion and unto them that turn from transgression."

The "Nine-to-One League" Offers Help

By Reed A. Chambers

Can you unemployed pay the church debt?

What—

Would you like to be able to pay the church debt?

Who—

You who are unemployed and you who can not contribute to the revenues of the church in tithes, offerings, and consecrations—

Me?—

Yes, you! You can get in on this if you are unemployed. For there are needed at least fifteen thousand of you, and another fifty thousand under-employed to the extent that you are not "breaking even" and are not "getting by."

How?—

You join the "Nine-to-one League." Just make a definite promise that in return for all that you receive you will keep nine shares and return one share to the Giver.

Does It Work?—

Every fundamental law always works. In addition, this Party has gone on record and said, "Try me and prove me."

Objections—

- "Special conditions in my case."
- "Can't be done."
- "Difficulties to be encountered."
- "Tomorrow."
- "Too expensive."
- "Excuse number 9999."
- "Danger possibly ensuing."
- "Church ruling so-and-so."

Answers to Objections—

How can you get into difficulties by using nine shares of all that you are blessed in receiving and returning one share to the Giver as an offering of thanks? This plan does not interfere with any of the church plans for the raising of revenue.

You who feel that you "have not a nickel to give"—have you anything to lose by proving Him on his promises?

When?—

Now.

You need the money, don't you?

You are not satisfied to put this over till tomorrow, are you?

Your Promise Will Reach Him Any Time and From Where You Are Now.

Making the Word Flesh

By Anna Burhart

There is a tale current of a missionary who went to China to tell the "Old, Old Story," of the love of Jesus and the message that he taught. One day the missionary was informed by a man who heard him that the One of whom he spoke had been there. The man had seen him, and heard him speak. To substantiate his story he pointed out the place where he had been buried.

The missionary, a kindly man, did not care to hurt the feelings of his new acquaintance, so he undertook a bit of quiet investigation.

It developed that a missionary had preceded him and died there. He was a true disciple of the Master, and had lived the kind of life that Jesus himself would have lived in that place. In his loving service and his selfless devotion he had "made the Word flesh." Truly the simple hearted follower had seen the Christ.

John was one time in prison. In the midst of his trials and afflictions doubt assailed him. He began to wonder whether indeed Jesus was the Christ.

John sent his disciples to inquire. They found Jesus busy, and asked him the question that was uppermost in their minds. Jesus, in his wisdom, answered well, instructing them to watch what he did and convey their findings to John.

They obeyed. The import of their message was to the effect that Jesus was busy: healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind, cleansing the lepers, feeding the hungry, and bringing newness of life to men.

John was satisfied.

Are we as the church taking the name of our Lord in vain? We call ourselves by his name, but do we do the things that he did? These are the times that the world will challenge us on that point. Can we meet our responsibilities of proving our faith by our works? We believe that, with the grace of God, we can, and that the result will be the realization of our hopes: "Zion."

The Discipline of Faith

There are probably some highborn souls who would remain clean and pure in thought and action even though they were convinced that there were no spiritual Spectator of their deeds and no Great Companion in intimate fellowship with their lives. It will usually be found, however, that such persons have formed the lines of their character in the spiritual atmosphere of the great religious tradition of the past. They have drawn upon a stock of spiritual resources which the faith of many generations before has made a quick and vital part of the air they have breathed in their youth.

There are, however, many other persons whose moral fiber weakens and wanes away with the loss of religious incentives and with the disappearance of the inspiration of faith in eternal realities. The moral breakdown of lives that lack such inspiration and fortification is an ominous recurrence. The collapse of family life when it has no depth of spiritual soil is frequent enough to arrest attention, like an alarm bell. A contemporary writer has recently said:

"Our cynicism, our lawlessness, our cleverness, our substitution of the appeal of economic determinism for the appeal of righteousness, our blurring of ethical distinctions, our shallow and showy sentimentalism, our incapacity for moral wrath—these are the precise phenomena one would expect to find in a society which has allowed the moral dignity of its individual members to be dethroned by their indifference to any life beyond this one."—Rufus M. Jones.

Lamoni Reunion

From every standpoint except that of weather, the Lamoni stake reunion, July 31 to August 6, was regarded as a decided success. Week-end heavy rains prevented many from attending from nearby branches not on the highways, and kept the floor of the tent muddy during the entire time. The meetings were largely attended, however, by Lamoni people and a number of visitors were recorded from other parts of Iowa and from Independence and other Missouri towns.

The morning prayer services evidenced a large degree of spirituality and while no outward gifts were manifested, the determination to go forward as expressed from all walks of life, brought a divine recognition which was noticeably felt. At an ordination service held the first Sunday the following were set apart as previously ordered at a stake business meeting: J. W. Barr, of Lamoni, and Bert DeLong, of Andover, to the office of elder; A. E. Lewis, Ed Stoll, of Lamoni, Harold Leland, of Detroit, Graceland student; Walter Johnson, of Australia, also student at the college, and Harley Lorange, of Davis City, to the office of priest; Israel Brown and Mitchell Carter, Lamoni, to the office of teacher, and Peter Duyzer, student from Holland, to the office of deacon.

Apostle Roy S. Budd reached an effective climax in his series of sermons Sunday afternoon, on the subject, "What Is My Life?" His discourses were practical and timely, easily understood and applicable to the lives of all. Apostle J. F. Garver and Bishop G. L. DeLapp also assisted with the preaching, delivering two interesting discourses each during the reunion.

Three class periods daily created some discussion and brought out much information of a timely nature. The eight thirty class was in charge of Apostle Budd; Apostle Garver and Bishop DeLapp divided time at the eleven o'clock and two thirty hours. The objectives and program of the church, present conditions and problems and how to meet them, both economically and spiritually, were the main general themes.

The church school work was under the general direction of Roy Cheville and included in the various groups worship periods, study classes, recreational hours, campfires, handiwork, nature study, etc. Mrs. Dona Haden supervised the kindergarten and pre-school age at her home, assisted by Misses Nina Barrows, Ina Campbell, Emma Anderson, and Mary Banta. The primary children were under the general direction of Miss Martha Young and she had as able helpers, Misses Minnie Mader, Juanita Stevenson, Helen Midgorden, Vesta Stevenson, and Alice Dickey. In the junior department Misses Vera Kline, Tess and Anne Morgan, Lois Barrows, Mrs. Tom France, Mrs. H. D. Steekel, and William Haden and Roy Derry with the Boy Scouts, were the principal workers. The junior high school activities were directed by Monroe Carter with Misses Hazel Jones and Vesta Stevenson, Ezra Crown, and Sidney Barrows assisting. Fred Condit supervised the high school age and older young people. A class taught by E. E. Closson, who discussed social problems of young people, proved a great drawing card. A general recreational period conducted by Mr. Cheville, assisted by Mr. Condit, was held each evening after the preaching service. The Patronesses of Graceland operated a stand during the reunion and held an ice cream social one evening, which netted them a nice sum in their work for the college.

The reunion music was in charge of the stake chorister, Mrs. Burnham Silsby, assisted by her sister, Mrs. John Muceus. This proved to be an inspirational and pleasant part of the services.

Miss Florence Thompson and a class of summer students in expression did much toward the entertainment of reunion visitors in presenting a number of one-act plays and recitals at intervals during the ten-day period.

The financial report of the stake was very encouraging. The income in the stake for the months of May, June, and July this year exceeded that of a corresponding period last year, which under the stress of present conditions is a splendid showing. The report read by G. W. Blair, of the stake bishopric, also showed an increasing number of tithe payers.

At the closing business meeting, August 6, the disorganization of the Hiteman Branch was ordered, and it was made a mission under the care of T. S. Williams of the stake presidency. The elders' quorum was reorganized with J. W. Barr, president; Ellis Bedwell, counselor. It was also decided to hold a reunion next year.

Kirtland Reunion

We are quite sure that hearts will beat in unison with ours and the souls of many will rejoice with us to know that God is most wonderfully manifesting himself at the Kirtland reunion not only through the still small voice which speaks peace to the soul and envelopes with its melting influence, but also with the gifts of prophecy and tongues and interpretation, also by his healing power through administration of his servants.

The song, "In the Light," sung so often by Saints, takes on a new significance, and hearts and souls yearn for the time when we shall be gathered together in Zion, removed from the troublesome things that perplex and so often turn us aside from the path of right and rectitude.

From the very first service, experienced here in the place of historic fame, the Lord has been near to bless. Wednesday evening, preceding the reunion, the Saints of Kirtland Branch met in the Kirtland Auditorium across from the Temple, and held their prayer service. The Lord poured out his spirit, all present felt that it was a splendid omen of good for the services to come, and thus far we have had no reason to be disappointed. Every prayer meeting is like a Pentecost and the evidences of God's willingness to bless are witnessed in every service held in the Temple of the Lord. In fact, our experiences are very much like those had by Saints of former days when Kirtland was young, and the Saints were giving their best to the Master.

Those visiting Kirtland this year are here because they have really felt the need of association as Saints of God, and extraneous things are being forgotten in the wonderful demonstrations of God's loving watchcare and protection. "What a privilege to worship here," is an expression repeatedly voiced by those who are experiencing these things.

The work of the reunion committee has been characterized by the spirit of willingness to do anything required of them that will be for the good of the most people concerned. There are no hitches or feelings of being slighted or oppressed, but rather they feel it is a privilege to be able to serve and make possible so many wonderful blessings for others.

From the time of the rising bell at six o'clock in the morning until the close, when it rings for the prayer hour at ten o'clock at night, the campground is a place of bustle and activity. The spirit present seems to manifest itself in all the varied activities and the recreation is being entered into with zest and the spirit of good fellowship.

The preaching is of a high order, the Lord being present to bless for the good of the listener.

Two young persons, not of the church, this morning in the prayer service dedicated themselves to God and stated their desire to unite with the church. Thus the good work goes on and men respond as they feel the touch of divinity.

People are visiting here from Canada, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Wisconsin, and other States, and from these there come statements such as this: "Isn't it a wonderful thing to be a Saint in latter days"? "Oh, if we could only stay here together for ever under this pleasant atmosphere!"

While we are enjoying these wonderful experiences we are hoping and praying that God is blessing his people wherever they are.

JOHN R. GRICE.

Maine Reunion

The Maine reunion is once more in full swing at Brooksville under the most auspicious circumstances of its ten years of existence. The reunion committee has done everything within its power to make attendance at the reunion as inexpensive as possible. Under the capable management of Newman Wilson, meals (and good ones) are served for only ten cents on all week days as well as Sundays to young people. Cots, bedding, tents, and sleeping space may be had gratis. As a consequence a large group, over half of them young people, has met to receive encouragement and inspiration.

W. E. Rogers is again in charge of the camp store and is doing a flourishing business because that which is not spent at the dining hall is certain to be spent at the store.

A friendly spirit of "at homeness" pervades the grounds, and the stranger is soon made welcome.

The group of missionaries and elders present is one which any reunion in the country would be proud and happy to have. This group includes President F. M. Smith, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley, Sister J. A. Gunsolley, Patriarch U. W. Greene, Bishop E. L. Traver, and Elders E. F. Robertson and N. M. Wilson. These people will conduct classes, care for the children and young people, and assist in all services.

Perhaps the busiest man on the grounds is Brother Archie Begg who has charge of the cots and tents, helps in the kitchen, acts as policeman, and has the responsibility of the recreation. Yet he is always willing to stop a moment to help some one who needs him.

A spirit akin to the ingenuity fostered by pioneering is apparent about camp. A most adequate tabernacle has been made by covering a rustic frame with sails from coasting vessels. The pulpit, though it is a dry goods box, becomes a thing of beauty when covered with fir boughs and roses.

This combination of inspired leaders and devoted Saints, in a setting of secluded, natural beauty, augurs well for a reunion unsurpassed in spirituality and truly recreational activities.

Mason City, Iowa

The group here is progressing, and all members seem to enjoy getting together. On July 17, they had a splendid time. After classes, everyone drove to East Park and shared a sumptuous picnic dinner. Mr. Frank Pool, of Nora Springs, furnished ice cream for all, and was given a hearty vote of thanks. Thirty-five enjoyed the dinner.

After the meal Brother Clyde McDonald, of Des Moines, gave a splendid talk on the truth of the church and scripture prophecies. Sister McDonald accompanied him to the picnic.

Saints of Nora Springs, Charles City, and the country around Mason City, were here, and some friends from Plymouth. This was a happy day for everyone.

Eastern Michigan Reunion a Success

The Eastern Michigan district reunion opened August 7, at Cash, and was housed in a large tent in the grove on the farm of Brother and Sister Albert Dukert on the banks of a fine running stream, Elk Creek. The tent was wired for electricity and this made lighting accommodations very convenient. A refreshment stand was in operation during the entire session. A few of the campers occupied tents on the grounds while others were entertained in the homes of Cash Saints.

The reunion committee met at the opening of the reunion and effected complete organization, making out the schedule of services and class periods.

On the ground for the opening service and forepart of the reunion were the following prominent speakers: Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elders John Grice and David Dowker, with local forces available, and for the latter part of the reunion these names were added: Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Elders James Davis, Bruce Brown, William Patterson, and A. C. Barmore. John Hewitt, of Ontario, was in full charge of the recreation hour throughout the reunion and also acted as stenographer for Patriarch F. A. Smith.

Class work each morning following the social hour was in charge of the following: Adults and young men, Earl Diem; young women, Mrs. M. A. Carr, and the children's division, Mrs. Harold Muir, and as many helpers were used as was necessary. Ten classes were held each morning, and much interest was taken in lesson study. Mrs. C. C. Whitford, district chorister, had charge of the music and rendered valuable help.

A program was prepared by the class committee and given on Friday night. The nature and success of the entertainment spoke well for the committee in charge. Following was a musical contest between the women and the men in which the former were given the prize.

Very spiritual social services were held each morning, the Lord manifesting his power through gifts as well as the melting influence of his Spirit which spoke peace to all. The young people held a few early morning services and good reports came from them. The preaching hours in the afternoon and evening were attended by the power of the Holy Spirit, and the messages were well received. Large crowds attended, increasing in number as the reunion continued.

Patriarch Smith seemed at his best as he stood under the power of God and presented the word of the Lord to large audiences. The spirit of his high calling was much in evidence as he declared the "whole counsel of God." Many took advantage of his visit and obtained their patriarchal blessings.

Saturday, August 13, found the Saints assembled in district conference capacity. Following the reporting of district accomplishments at two o'clock in the afternoon the district officers were chosen for the year: President, Bruce Brown; associate presidents, William Grice and M. A. Carr; director of Religious Education, E. Diem; secretary, William Swoffer; treasurer, Thomas Isles; pianist, Eleanor Maxwell; chorister, Mrs. C. C. Whitford; musical director, L. Bender; historian, M. Mitchel; publicity agent, Bruce Brown. By unanimous vote the district decided to hold a reunion in 1933, leaving the time and place to the reunion committee which consists of Bruce Brown, William Grice, M. A. Carr, H. E. C. Muir, C. C. Whitford, John Fetting, and Herman Fetting.

Sunday night, August 14, brought to a close a very successful, spiritual, educational, and social reunion. Everyone felt that he had a new hold on eternal life and greater spiritual strength to resist the power of the Adversary. The members were filled with a determination to go forward and redeem Zion in this day rather than shift the responsibility to the shoulders of oncoming generations.

Saints of Cash, Michigan, can not be commended too highly for their many courtesies extended the visiting people. They made everyone feel welcome.

The entire expense of reunion and conference was cared for by the few collections taken at the reunion services.

Pisgah, Iowa

Saints of this branch are striving to progress under the leadership of Branch President George Meggers whose untiring efforts are devoted to caring for the spiritual welfare of the people. The members are interested in their efforts to carry out the programs of the various departments, and this is resulting in the presentation of some elevating numbers.

This branch is fortunate in having a faithful Sunday school orchestra which is a fine help in devotional programs. Sister Mark Hutchinson is leader of these young people, and a faithful worker.

During the early summer Pisgah Saints had for some time Elder J. W. Lane, of Lamoni, who preached and visited among the scattered members in the interests of Sacrifice Week. His labors here are always acceptable. Local Saints hope that Brother Lane shall be permitted to labor here very often.

July 24, Elder E. Y. Hunker, of Independence, began a series of meetings which continued three weeks. He drew a large and attentive audience by his masterful treatment of different subjects. Several evenings were devoted to Book of Mormon talks, proving its divinity by the Bible and archaeology. As a result of these meetings the Saints were much better informed on gospel subjects, and their faith and hope were encouraged.

Western Oklahoma Reunion

Western Oklahoma district reunion was held at Eagle City, Oklahoma, August 5 to 14, inclusive. As the sun sank to rest in the west on the evening of the fourth, its last rays rested upon thirteen Saints assembled for the opening of the reunion. W. C. Beck and family, of Claremore, Central District, were the first to arrive at about 3.15 p. m., and about 5 p. m. Elder Z. Z. Renfroe arrived, bringing six with him and also the large tent, which was erected before sundown.

The meeting tent belongs to the Central Oklahoma District and Western District greatly appreciates the use of the tent. Its own district tent is not so large and not in very good condition.

There was large attendance during the reunion. Davidson Branch had almost forty present; Calumet a like number; Seiling and Freedom Branches were represented also although they did not have as many present. A goodly number of the isolated members were there. Present at the prayer service the first Sunday and taking active part were Saints from Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and Nebraska.

Saints of Western District appreciated having members from Central District, Brother Beck and family, of Claremore, Brother Stevens and family, of Sperry, and F. E. Dillon, district president, came bringing his wife and her sister and brother, and Sister Vickery, of Oklahoma City.

A spiritual time was experienced throughout the reunion. The gift of prophecy was given a few times, and there were three baptisms and two children blessed.

Nearly all of the visiting Saints came prepared to do their own cooking on the grounds. Many games were played between services, and a free program of songs, readings and plays was given on Wednesday night.

Apostle Roy S. Budd was the only general church worker present, and he was unavoidably delayed and did not arrive until three o'clock Thursday afternoon, the eleventh. We appreciated having him with us and regretted that he was unable to be present for all services. The local priesthood of the district contributed their help in preaching and class work. Six separate services were held each day.

The Saints voted to have another district reunion next year.

An auto load of Saints, relatives of Sister L. A. Carrow, arrived from Missouri for the last two or three days of the meeting.

Reunion members were gladdened to hear from Samuel W. Simmons, of Keltner, Missouri, that he was improved of some of his affliction. They were sorry that he could not be present, but were happy to welcome his son Sam bringing his son Sam. Elder S. W. Simmons's brother from Texas was here for part of the meeting.

This reunion was fortunate in having no serious sickness or accidents.

Albert District Conference

The district conference of Alberta was held at Edmonton, August 5, 6, and 7, under most favorable weather conditions. Apostle J. F. Curtis, District President William McLeod, and a number of the local priesthood and members were there. The conference was held at the Saints' church, and, considering the trying times through which the people of this region are passing, the Saints gave good attendance.

Prayer meeting convened Friday morning in charge of Apostle J. F. Curtis and Elder H. Seaman. At eleven thirty that morning Brother Curtis delivered a fine sermon, and he was also the evening speaker. That afternoon Elder William Osler preached to the conference.

Prayer meeting and preaching service occupied the forenoon of Saturday, and at two thirty in the afternoon the business session of the conference opened under the supervision of the district presidency and the minister in charge, Apostle J. F. Curtis. By request of the conference, Brother Curtis took charge of the session. Reports were read and ordered spread on the minutes. New district officers are: President, Elder Ira I. Benham; counselor, Elder William McLeod; secretary, Elder J. P. Benham; superintendent of church schools, C. B. Gibson, sustained treasurer, and bishop's agent, Lee Roy Allen, sustained, and W. A. Cooper was sustained district auditor.

Two were recommended to work as officers in the priesthood, and were approved by the conference, Lee Roy Allen, of Edmonton, to the office of elder, and Bert Gibson, of Calgary, to the office of teacher.

After the business session Apostle Curtis conducted a round-table talk, and much valuable information was given to the Saints on the condition of the church and what the Presidency and other quorums are trying to do to pilot the church through the crisis.

Sunday morning was bright and clear, and the young people assembled at the church for prayer meeting at eight o'clock. At nine the sacrament service began, prayer and testimony meeting lasting until eleven o'clock. Many prayers and testimonies were offered, and the sweet influence of the Spirit of the Lord was felt.

In the afternoon many motored to White Mud Creek where Burton James Jenkins, a little boy, was baptized by Elder H. Seaman. He was confirmed in the evening by Apostle J. F. Curtis and Elder J. P. Benham.

At 2.30 p. m. Sunday, Elder William Osler gave another fine discourse, his theme being, "He That Overcometh." Apostle Curtis was the evening speaker, talking on the organization and law of the Church of Christ.

Elders William McLeod and Ira I. Benham each gave a fine sermon, and all the discourses of the conference were full of instruction and spiritual uplift. A good feeling prevailed throughout the conference.

Independence

"Glorious Things Are Sung of Zion" was the theme of Elder Leonard Lea's Sunday night sermon at the Campus. It was estimated that fifteen hundred people heard the discourse and the evening's musical program by the Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace. Elder H. G. Barto presided over the service, assisted by Elder C. C. Koehler.

A large crowd attended the funeral of Elder John W. Peterson Sunday afternoon at the Stone Church. Brother Peterson, who was sixty-seven years of age and a long-time missionary in the church, passed away at Spokane, Washington, August 11. His body was laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery not far from the burial spot of the late President Joseph Smith.

The Wahdemna Choral Club of young people, directed by Paul N. Craig, was awarded second place in the entertainment contest which closed August 19, at Kingston, Missouri, under the auspices of the North Missouri Fox Hunters Association. The award gives the club one hundred and fifty dollars in cash. Last year the club won the first prize of a hundred and seventy-five dollars. Seven organizations competed in the contest this year.

Two hundred young people of Independence responded to the invitation of the young people's council to attend the Stewartsville reunion of Far West Stake the week-end of August 20 and 21. Cars were leaving Independence reunion bound Saturday afternoon and evening and Sunday morning, and the association with reunion visitors and campers was much enjoyed. There the young people had contact with such excellent reunion workers as Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and Elders Blair Jensen and Ray Whiting.

A motor car crash at the highway intersection at Cameron, Missouri, Sunday morning, when a truck in which fourteen Saints from southeast of Cameron were riding to the reunion, was struck by a motor car, resulted in the death of Sister H. O. McKee, of Far West, and three others were critically injured. This accident brought sorrow to the reunion.

Stone Church

There is no time in our record of Jesus' life in which we find that he forgot the trust God gave him. He was about His Father's business. We have entered into a sacred covenant with God which only we can fulfill or violate. The conditions under which Jesus entered his work were more adverse than are the conditions which surround us. Are we about our Master's business? So spoke Elder A. B. Phillips Sunday morning in his sermon to the Stone Church congregation, "Our Master's Business."

Choosing for his text Luke 2:49, Brother Phillips continued. God has promised us that all who believe in him shall never die. Our task here is to fit ourselves for eternity and for association with God. The speaker urged a more sacred relationship between man and God and a greater effort on our part to comprehend the scope, range, and effectiveness of "Our Master's Business."

Under the direction of Paul N. Craig, the Stone Church Choir sang two anthems, "Come Holy Ghost," by Roberts, and "Hark, Hark, My Soul," by Shelley, soloists being Mrs. Alice M. Burgess and Mrs. Minetta Isaacks. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was the organist.

This year warm weather has not stopped or retarded the work of the choir. Its contributions to the Sunday morning eleven o'clock service, except on sacrament Sunday, are thankfully received by the congregation. Choir attendance both on Sunday morning and at rehearsal Thursday evening is large, and the officers of the choir are spending their best efforts in summer work and looking toward the choir's contribution to the Harvest Home Festival Chorus.

Elder J. Stanley Kelley was in charge of the Sunday morning service, assisted by Elder C. J. Hunt.

Walnut Park Church

Walnut Park Saints were happy to have as speaker, August 14, Patriarch Ammon White. A quartet composed of Sister E. E. Moorman and her three daughters, sang, "Hark, the Voice of Jesus Calling," in the new Saints' Hymnal, and in harmony with the hymn Brother White called the Saints to greater consecration of self to the work of the church.

August 21, Elder George Jenkins was the morning speaker, and a fine violin solo was played by Gomer Watson, accompanied at the piano by Thelma Countryman. Congregational singing was led by Brother E. E. Moorman. The Saints were very glad to have Sister George Jenkins back with them after a long illness as the result of a fall.

A number of the young people attended the reunion at Stewartsville Sunday, August 21.

The Walnut Park Quilting Society which meets regularly on Thursday afternoon, entertained thirty-three sisters at dinner August 18, in honor of Sister Ellen Kepley's eightieth birthday. Several friends from the quilting society at the Stone Church were present and the association was much enjoyed by all. Sister Goldie Schretfer baked a huge angel food cake.

In the afternoon the women of the district met with Elder John F. Sheehy and Sister C. C. Koehler, supervisor of the women's work in Zion. Sister Mansell Williams was chosen and accepted by the body, to take the place of Sister F. R. Schafer as supervisor of women's work at Walnut Park. Local workers are happy to have her. At the close of the meeting the women of the quilting society served light refreshments.

The marriage of Miss Helen Louise Griffin, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. T. B. Griffin, and Rayburn Baker, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Baker, took place at Walnut Park Church, August 9. Patriarch Ammon White read the service. Preceding the ceremony Drexel Mollison gave an organ program. Miss Delta Nace sang "Love Everlasting" and "At Dawning." Fred Mollison played a trombone solo; "Love's Old, Sweet Song," and Kenneth Morford sang, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms." Betty Baker, sister of the bridegroom, lighted the candles. A poem, "To the Bride," was read by Mrs. Laura Scott Pennell. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attended by her sister, Mrs. J. D. Shupe, as matron of honor. Wilbur Baker acted as best man for his brother. Glenna Den Jacobs was flower girl and Edwin Dale Shupe carried the ring. Friends of the couple, in district three, wish them much happiness.

The Galilean Class held an ice cream social on the lawn of Brother and Sister Fred Horn, August 20. About twelve dollars was cleared, and this sum will be applied to the purchase of an electric sign to be placed on the church lawn.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday's services were not so well attended as usual due to the fact that many from this congregation, including the pastor, attended the Stewartsville reunion. Assistant Pastor Robert Fish was in charge of the day's meetings.

At the eleven o'clock service Elder Clair Austin was the speaker and chose for his scripture reading Genesis 4:1-14. "Hiding the Scar" was his subject, and he made it plain how we try to hide our sins and in so trying hinder our growth and development. He reminded the congregation that when we come to the time of judgment, we can not deny or hide the scars these acts have made. The choir sang an anthem, "Jesus Lover of My Soul."

The members were happy to have present a former pastor, Elder J. E. Cleveland, and wife, at the morning services.

Gudgell Park Church

About thirty from this church school went to Stewartsville reunion last Sunday and had an enjoyable trip. A few from Walnut Park went with them. But though some of the most faithful students were absent from the local morning session of the school, there was good attendance.

Prayer meetings in this branch have generated a great interest in the spiritual values of life. Attendance at the midweek services has been good.

Preaching at the eleven o'clock hour August 14 was by Elder Amos E. Allen, and there was special music by the choir.

Last Thursday night Walnut Park and Gudgeon Park played volley ball, the latter winning the game.

The sacrament service, August 7, was well attended, and a good, spiritual hour was experienced. That evening Gudgeon Park members went to Bates City and furnished the program. There were numbers by a boys' quartet, Kenneth Sherman, Gilbert Gordon, Clarence Martin, jr., and Paul Gerber. A double quartet also sang, and there was a duet by Mrs. Raymond Johnson and Mrs. Roy Sherman. Englewood furnished the speaker, Elder Ammon White. About thirty-seven from this branch attended that service.

Second Church members visited this local's Religio service August 5, and presented a fine program of songs and readings.

Kansas City Stake

The Kansas City Stake O. B. K. organization is sponsoring an outing August 28, a trip to the Stewartville Reunion. They plan to start from the south end of the A. S. B. Missouri River Bridge promptly at five o'clock in the morning.

Central Church

The service Sunday morning, August 14, was in the form of a baptismal ceremony, nine children and one adult receiving the ordinance of baptism administered by Pastor C. E. Wight. The candidates were Alta Evelyn Young, Betty Moore, Gene LeRoy Cochran, Gerald Dunn, Richard Johannes, Cecil Harvey, Franklin Moats, Harold Short, Harold Sandy, and Mr. Balda Walker. During this ceremony Sister Irene Wolfe played the organ. The font had been beautifully decorated with shrubs and flowers. This was a very impressive service. At the third period Pastor C. E. Wight, F. B. Blair, F. S. Anderson, John Gardner, and Arthur Koehler officiated in the confirmation service.

Preceding the eight o'clock evening service, the choir sang several anthems to a large congregation. Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg was the speaker of the evening, talking on the "Charter League," an organization in Kansas City organized for the promulgation of clean city government. Despite the fact a heavy rain fell, the church was filled to capacity and every seat taken by the time the opening of the service arrived. This rain was welcomed by Kansas City and vicinity as the humidity had been very oppressive for a number of days.

Sunday, August 21, was a beautiful day. The end of summer is not far distant, and a touch of fall was felt in the breeze that made its appearance through the morning. The Sunday school was well attended. Brother LeRoy Smith, assisted by Sister Lucy Bowser at the piano, sang a baritone solo, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains."

Elder George Mesley was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour. The Central Choir made a splendid contribution to this service.

The monthly priesthood meeting was held at three o'clock in the main auditorium of the church. The principal theme of discussion at this meeting was the articles written by Apostle John W. Rushton, appearing in the July 6 and 13 issues of the Saints' Herald. Many good points were brought out in this discussion.

Elder C. E. Wight was the speaker at the eight o'clock service, giving a splendid discourse. Special music in the form of a duet, was furnished by Sister Stella Moore and Brother Clayton Wolfe. Sister Wolfe was at the organ.

Sister Helen Skinner has been very ill at the Independence Sanitarium; but is reported showing some improvement. Brother Adam Young who has been confined at the Trinity Lutheran Hospital since May 31, has been able to be taken to his home.

Brother Evan Fry and Sister Dorothy Louise Eden were married Saturday evening, Elder George Mesley officiating. Brother Evan was a former chorister at Central, and Dorothy has been an active worker in the choir and church school. To these young people is extended the love and good wishes of their many friends.

Plans are being made for the annual Labor Day picnic at Swope Park. Congressman David Hopkins will be the principal speaker and a good time is planned for all.

Argentine Church

The O. B. K.'s furnished the features of the evening service August 21. The local O. B. K. Quartet presented numbers and Elder C. Ed. Miller gave a slide lecture covering the history of the church from the birth of Joseph Smith to the present. He noted many places of interest. Brother Miller's collection of scenes of historical interest and significance to the church is growing.

Brother Ralph L. Goold has been suffering for the past month with two large carbuncles and several boils on the back of his neck. He is now much improved and on the road to recovery.

Elder W. S. Brown has been suffering for some time from blood poisoning which originated in his left foot, but he is now back to work, nearly well.

Ava, Missouri

July 14, local Saints enjoyed a brief visit from Apostle J. F. Garver, Elder Hogan, and Elder Birch Whiting as they were on their way to the district conference at Thayer. Brother Garver spoke at the church that night using as his text, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Ava Saints were greatly uplifted and encouraged by this visit, and hope that they will soon enjoy another visit from these men.

Two carloads of Ava members and one carload from Tigris went to the conference at Thayer, July 16 and 17, and they deeply enjoyed the gathering.

In June some of the local members attended the Children's Day program of Beaver Branch at Tigris. Again on August 7, Ava members drove to Tigris to attend an all-day meeting in honor of S. W. Simmons, a retired missionary who was eighty years old on that day. In the past Saints of Ava have not been able to associate with the members at Tigris as much as they would have liked, but they are hoping that in the future, they shall be able to work together in establishing the work of latter days in this part of God's vineyard.

Another soul has been added to the kingdom in the person of Frankie Elliott, the young son of Brother and Sister F. V. Elliott. He was baptized July 31.

Some time ago a certain church announced a three-week series of revival meetings, but abandoned the meetings after continuing for only one week. Too many of the Saints attended their services, and they were unable to work up an interest among other people. As soon as the meetings were closed, the man who owned the property invited the Saints to hold meetings there. Local elders eagerly accepted the invitation and with the help of Elder Walter Chrestensen who is vice president of the district and Elder J. C. Chrestensen, of Tigris, held meetings nearly two weeks.

Brother and Sister G. Maitland left a short time ago to attend Kirtland reunion. They expect to be gone from home three weeks.

This branch is forging ahead. The local members are back of the church program and trying to help the church in its present crisis. They have now raised eighty-five per cent of their quota for this year, and are confident that they will go over the top. Crops in this part of the country are good, and the workers feel sure that they will be able to help the church more in the future than in the past.

The Saints' church building is located eight miles north-east of the town of Ava, and the members extend a welcome to anyone who happens to pass through here, to stop and visit. Elder James Dobson is pastor.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

A volunteer choir of thirty-five voices, under the direction of Brother Samuel Mansell, left Sunday morning, August 14, for Kirtland reunion, where they took active part in morning and afternoon services. A special bus and several cars conveyed the party. All enjoyed the fine services of the day, and the reunion of old acquaintances added much to the trip.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis visited this branch Sunday, July 31, and occupied the pulpit at both services of the day.

The women's department enjoyed its annual picnic and regular business meeting July 21, at the country home of Sister Bernie Watkins, at Goshen.

The adult membership of the church acted as hosts to the young people the evening of August 9. A feature of the evening was an "old-fashioned album" which was much enjoyed. Refreshments were served.

Elder John and Sister Vera Carlisle are rejoicing over the birth of a baby daughter, Lois Ann, June 28. She was blessed by Elders Charles Cramer and William Goudy, July 17. Brother Carlisle is pastor of the local branch.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Heid, nee, Margaret McMillen, was blessed Sunday, July 24, by Elders John Carlisle and A. B. Klar, and given the name, June Shirley.

A little son was born July 12, to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Patrick, nee Margaret Robson.

A special baptismal service was held June 12, when three children were inducted into the kingdom by Elder William L. Goudy, and confirmed that afternoon by Elders John Carlisle and William L. Goudy. Those baptized were Lewis Robson, Edythe Rees, and Betty Stein.

Thayer, Missouri

Considering the recent happenings at Thayer, this branch has a most encouraging outlook for the coming months. The Saints were glad to welcome Brother and Sister Davenport, of Dallas, a few days ago.

The latter-day work here is being carried on in a wonderful way. Sister Waite has shown this congregation how to have a better choir, and all are happy as they go about their duties.

On election day the women of the local branch club served luncheon for the people downtown. This proved successful as do all their undertakings, and they cleared about nineteen dollars. The sum will go to help pay the church debt. Sister Hancock is president of the club and has some wonderful ideas for making the work pleasant.

Efficient organization is perhaps the reason many branches have so fine a spirit in their work, and Thayer Branch is always looking for ways in which to become a better branch.

For the past few days Missionary J. Charles May has been here, giving some outstanding sermons. His experiences among the people of the South Sea Islands with whom he labored some six or seven years, were much enjoyed by Saints and their friends. Brother May's message caused the local members to see more plainly the uplifting and up-building of the kingdom of God. He left Thayer bound for Jefferson City, where he was to labor several days.

Sunday, August 14, a pleasant baptismal service was held here. The congregation was happy to welcome into its midst

Sister Rosy Coose, wife of Brother Eric Coose. The confirmation service took place in the home of Brother Davis, Brothers Hancock, May, and Davis officiating. This gathering was rather large and represented five States.

Manchester, England

Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford

The services of a day recently set aside by this branch to honor "mother" proved most attractive. Brother Brien, a veteran helper, opened the day's services. The call to worship by the children's choir was, "Take the Name of Jesus With You"; then the congregation sang, "Met in Thy Sacred Name, O Lord." Invocation and the Lord's Prayer, and the congregational hymn, "Lord, Let Thy Power Attend Thy Word," preceded the scripture lesson read by Sister Annie Leggott from Psalms 1 and 23. The choir then sang, "We Are But Little Children Weak."

The first speaker, Brother J. Tapping talked on the theme, "The Mother." This was Brother John's maiden speech, a great venture, and he talked impressively. Sister Minnie Brien sang, "Moment by Moment." "Behold, Thy Mother," was the topic of Brother George Wilson's talk, and he paid homage to the mothers. He asked the congregation to stand in silence for a moment in reverence to the mothers present and to commemorate the work of those who have gone on before.

The dedication service to "Our Mothers" continued in the afternoon at two thirty. This delightful hour and a half of worship was opened by the hymn, "Come All Ye Sons of Zion," and invocation. Brother H. Barrington, who presided, gave the opening remarks, and the congregation sang, "O Jesus Our Lord, Thy Name Be Adored." The scripture reading by Sister Sloane, a solo, "Catch the Sunshine," by Sister L. Leggott, and reminiscences from her life as a mother by Sister Tapping, held the interest of all. Then Sister May Holden sang "My Stubborn Will," and Sister Barrington, senior, addressed the meeting. A solo by Sister Minnie Brien, and then Sister Florrie Barrington depicted the part the mother of the first Prophet of latter days, played in rearing her son until he was of age to fulfill his mission.

Pastor G. W. Leggott was in charge of the evening service which took the form of an organ voluntary by Curtis Leggott; a call to worship by the choir, a song by the congregation, prayer, and the scripture reading from 1 Samuel 19: 28. "Will Your Anchor Hold?" was sung by the choir, and Sister Olive Wade presented her baby for blessing. In this ceremony the pastor was assisted by Brother Tapping. She was given the name, Ann Rita. Sister Florence Barrington was administered to by Elders Tapping and Dewsnup. And then, having in mind the theme of the day, Sister Eleanor Wilson addressed the meeting, giving a synopsis of the day's services, and presenting a paper entitled, "Motherhood." Sister Hayward sang, "At Rest."

Elder F. Tapping also gave an address on "Mother," and the congregation again paid tribute to her in silent and deep thought.

Sister Lula B. Woslum, of Skiatook, Oklahoma, writes that her daughter, Mrs. Lucille Woslum Duncan, now lives at 111 West Sixth Street, Del Rio, Texas, and would like to have the members of the church living in the vicinity around Del Rio, call on her, or write to her. Mrs. Duncan is a member of the church and was formerly of the Foraker Branch, Shidler, Oklahoma.

Men are born with two eyes, but with one tongue, in order that they should see twice as much as they say.—Colton.

Time Is Precious

Wisdom comes to us with full hands. In her left she carries wealth and honor, which would seem to be a sufficiently generous gift; but in her right hand, where the best things are carried, she bears the gift of long life, without which wealth and fame are of little worth to us. Time is really the basis of value; but is there not a foundation under time which goes still deeper?

Once a woman was complaining of the many tasks she had to perform, tasks which crowded her life and kept her from doing much that she would like to do. She had not had time to look after her children as she should. She had a sick friend, but had not found time to visit her. "And so," she said, "don't ask me why I haven't gone to the church committee meeting. Time is too precious."

"Time is precious—for what?" quietly asked the person with whom she was talking.

The question is well worth asking and deserves a thoughtful answer. If wisdom carries your time in her right hand, and if you receive it from her hour by hour and minute by minute, you will use it first for the matters of chief importance, and will not fritter it away on trifles. Time is no more precious than its use. If spent on worthless things, it is worthless; it is precious only when it is spent on precious things.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

A man is an immense congeries of cooperative cells, but a man is not a "person" until he, too, finds his place in a living cooperative social whole, of ever more inclusive scope and range.—Doctor Rufus M. Jones, in World Unity Magazine.

The best portion of a good man's life is his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love.

Carthaginian women used to give their black locks to string their country's bows and to furnish cordage for its shipping.—Augusta Evans.

Our Departed Ones

LICHTENBERGER.—Lucinda A. Warner was born in West Township, near Hibbard, Marshall County, Indiana, October 22, 1861. She was a resident of this section of country the greater part of her life. March 13, 1878, she was united in marriage to William Henry Lichtenberger, and to them was born a family of six children, three passing away when young. Her husband, W. H. Lichtenberger, and one son, Harry C., preceded her in death in 1930. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints October 5, 1919, and lived a faithful child of God until death summoned her from earthly confusion and suffering July 24, 1932. For five years she suffered a complication of diseases. Surviving are one son, Oliver, one daughter, Mrs. McKinney, four grandchildren, one half brother, Marion Triplett, other relatives, and a wide circle of friends. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' new church at Hibbard, July 26, 1932, and was largely attended. Elder S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, officiated. She was a kind and loving mother, gentle, and genial and strong in the faith. Committal services were conducted at the McElrath Cemetery, where she was laid to rest beside husband and children.

SWIFT.—Maria Turner Thorp, daughter of George and Sarah Thorp, was born October 20, 1856, at Alton, Illinois. She married Joseph A. Swift November 22, 1876, and to them ten children were born. Six of these preceded her in death. She joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when she was thirteen years of age and has been a devoted member for sixty-two years. Was a good worker in the church, also in the Sunday school department. She was cradle roll superintendent in Saint Louis, Missouri, Branch, for several years, and was a faithful and devoted wife and mother. All her children were blessed in the church, and all who lived to be old enough were baptized members. She was also an Eastern Star member. She leaves behind a character and a work that will not be forgotten. Passed away July 16, and her funeral was conducted at the Saints' church in Pleasanton, Iowa, July 18, by Elder J. E. Leeper. Interment was in Hamilton Cemetery. Besides her aged companion, Joseph A. Swift, of Pleasanton, she leaves four children: Joseph E. Swift, Oliver Swift, Mrs.

Carl Wehri, of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Mrs. Lillian McInish, of Lamoni, Iowa; sixteen grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and a host of friends.

SHINN.—Hulda E. Blackleach Shinn passed from earth life at Monterey, California, June 28, 1932, just seventy-three years from the date of her birth. She was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints fifty-four years during which time she lived an exemplary life, being active in spreading the gospel to the extent that her circumstances and health permitted. Always she valiantly bore testimony to the truth of the gospel which meant so much in her life. Her husband, B. F. Shinn, preceded her in death several years ago. She leaves one sister who is not a member of the church. Elder John A. Lawn, of Hollister, conducted the services at the funeral chapel in Monterey, and interment was in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Cemetery. She was a member of the Castroville Branch. Two days before her death, she met with the Saints in prayer meeting at Salinas and bore her testimony, and was administered to by the pastor, Doctor A. R. Lawn.

WERGES.—Sidney James Werges, eldest child of Fred and Maggie Werges, was born on a farm near Saint Olaf, Clayton County, Iowa, December 27, 1884, and passed away at his home at Prairie City, Iowa, August 6, 1932. He married Christiana Sweely at Lamoni, Iowa, December 10, 1913, and they resided on the farm where he was born until 1926, when he purchased the farm where he lived at the time of his death. Three children blessed this union, Lawrence, seventeen years old, Kathryn, twelve years, and Byron, three years. Besides his wife and children, he is survived by his mother, a brother, Leroy, and a sister, Mrs. Gordon Luce. All his life, until December, 1931, Mr. Werges enjoyed good health. At that time an internal cancer developed from which he suffered almost constantly for nearly nine months. June 8, this year, he was baptized into the church at his home and had the pleasure of seeing his two older children also become members. He was a Christian gentleman and enjoyed the respect of all who knew him. The funeral was held at the home in Prairie City, August 8, in charge of Elder Henry Castings, assisted by Clyde McDonald. Interment was at Lamoni, Iowa. Elder L. G. Holloway, an old friend of the family, offered the prayer of commitment and benediction.

Health Greetings

God loves all the Saints, but all sinful conduct is grievous before Him and he can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. When you suffer the LORD is also compelled to suffer as you truly have been ingrafted and become a part of the Vine. PLEASE don't partake of foods that are detrimental to your own welfare, that of others and the LORD also. Be a good Saint. If Hog is not good for dogs why use it as a food? If white flour is destructive to all animal life why do you tamper with it?

Over 90% of all Cancer, Tumors and skin trouble come directly from HOG—dirty, filthy, diseased, scavengers. Go slow on white sugar, vinegar, tomatoes, lard, imitation butter, coffee, tea, hot foods of any kind.

If you are not normal, if your living is high, if we can't solve both problems our foods are free. Send us one or two dollars for food. If we don't please you in every way, we will refund every penny. Truly we can be of great service to you. Our 31 years of active business in the Food game has brought us to the point that we can say, "I KNOW."

Write today—don't delay.

Membership in the Church

There is one kind of fallacious thinking gaining ground among the churches, and even touching some of our own people, that ought to be checked.

"I don't think it matters what church you belong to," some people say, "so long as you lead a good, clean life." This kind of statement is warmly applauded by many Christians as an evidence of the growth of the spirit of liberalism. They call it "tolerance."

The trouble with this kind of tolerance is that it has encouraged the repetition of another statement that is far more ominous for the churches:

"I don't think it is necessary to belong to any church," many people are saying, "so long as you lead a good, clean, life." And on the basis of this idea the churches are empty and the ministers who should be the spiritual leaders are without flocks.

You can not say that church membership is not important without implying, to the popular mind at least, that the churches are not important. And you can not lower the prestige of the churches without undermining the influence of religion. It is all a part of the same process.

Of course we are happy to enjoy the freedom of belief and worship. This is a privilege for which our ancestors gave their lives. We look forward to a time when we hope the world will be free of all persecution. And our people know something about persecution.

It is one thing to make men free in religion; but it is quite another thing to cast them adrift from all religion.

The distinctive message and contribution that our church has to make can gain nothing from the movement for church unity. In any great movement for amalgamation of churches we can only lose our identity, abandon our special work, and give up our ideals. We are not of sufficient numbers to wield any influence with the larger Protestant Christian bodies.

Latter Day Saints have always put strong emphasis upon the importance of membership. It would be fatal to the church and its work for them to adopt any other attitude. Religion, the church, and membership are all of great importance.

It does matter whether you belong to the church, and it does matter what church you belong to. Can you imagine a politician saying to the voters that, "It doesn't matter who you vote for, so long as somebody gets elected." Can you imagine a doctor saying to a patient, "It doesn't matter what treatment you take, so long as you do something." Can you imagine an automobile manufacturer saying, "It doesn't matter what grade of gasoline you buy, so long as you put it in the tank." No, you can not imagine these people saying anything like that.

Then why should the men who are called to be the physicians of souls say that it does not matter what religion we choose?

Remember the Harvest Festival

Now is the time to be thinking seriously of the Harvest Festival. Fruits and vegetables must be gathered and preserved, and exhibits prepared. Time passes rapidly, and delay will lose good opportunities to gather the goods.

The dual character of the Harvest Festival makes it doubly important. The interest in the displays that the art and ingenuity exhibited in their arrangement gives them one value. A greater value, however, is found in the use to which the goods are put. Many worthy families have been saved from bitter suffering in the last few winters, and the last two especially, by the stocks of preserved fruits and vegetables.

This winter the need will be greater than ever. More people are out of work. Savings and reserves have dwindled for many to the vanishing point. More children are without clothes. More mothers are underfed. Consequently, there is a greater demand for us to remember them and give.

Those who are interested should refer to the official communication of the First Presidency in the Herald of July 13 regarding the manner of conducting the Harvest Festivals of this year, which will differ from the plan followed in preceding years. High costs of transportation make it inadvisable to ship all goods to Independence. Local festivals should be held, and the bulk of the goods should be retained for the relief of the local poor. Only prize winning exhibits should be shipped to Independence.

The main thing at the present time, however, is to see that local organizations are working on their plans and getting their exhibits ready.

A Graceland Family

The Jones family, of Lamoni, Iowa, are record breakers. And they found Graceland College a place to break records. For a period of twenty-four years, without interruption, they have had at least one of their children at Graceland, and sometimes there were several. The story of this remarkable family, written by Marcella Schenck, begins in this issue of the Herald.

This story is a tribute to the family and a tribute to Graceland. It is a tribute to the family for its steadfast devotion to an ideal of giving an education to all of its young people; and it is a tribute to Graceland for the satisfaction that the college must have given both to the parents and to the young people.

This is one more convincing bit of evidence concerning our church college. Graceland is good: good as an educational institution, good as a social environment, and good as a place to send young people during some of the most important years of their lives.

"The Way Back"

Now that there is some promise, however slight, of a coming improvement in economic conditions, writers and cartoonists are making a stir over finding "the way back."

The "way back" is not what we want and need. What we should seek is the "way forward." If we think only of getting back to that unhealthy prosperity which threw us into a riot of extravagance and unwise living, we are short-sighted indeed. The old spirit of selfishness, the mad scramble for money, the unsound investments, the wasteful and senseless expansion—these were what plunged us into disaster.

For a time it looked as if the suffering brought on by the depression had made the world conscious of its folly and sin. Some people seemed to be on the verge of repentance. Some were even inclined to say, as others had said of the World War, "This must not be again."

We are not very much smarter than the children of Israel, who while they had to be driven toward the Promised Land, were continually looking back over their shoulders towards the flesh pots of Egypt. No wonder it took forty years of punishment and want in the wilderness to fit them for Canaan; and even then their succeeding history proved them to be not very well fitted for it.

Since the latter part of the eighteenth century the leading races of the world have been inventing machines because they felt the need of new and tireless servants to keep up the endless stream of production demanded by commerce. But the machines did not long remain servants, and they soon became the masters of the world. They changed society, they created new barons of wealth, they weakened the old landed aristocracy, they took people from the farms and country and put them to work in stuffy factories and crowded them together in unhealthy city tenements. The whole new world was organized around the machines, and those machines became veritable tyrants.

It looked for a time as if the depression would break up the course of events so that some new and beneficial changes would be in order. Perhaps out of our suffering would come equity and justice, and a real chance for all men to have the right to that "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," which the Constitution has promised us, but which society has not permitted all men to have.

Let us not be deluded by this talk of "the way back." Zion is not back, but forward. The way is, "Onward to Zion."

Reading the Bible

The Bible has served many purposes in its long and not always peaceful history; a counselor and solace in time of trouble; a source book of inspiration and ideals; a moral guide; and a debater's handbook in religious controversy.

It may come as a surprise to the younger generation of aspiring writers to know that it is also a literary style book, and that many of the authors who are now regarded as master artists in literature owe a debt to an early and copious reading in the Book of books. Yet such is the fact; and those who know their Scriptures will recognize again and again among the most picturesque and effective phrases in modern writing, either in actual words or pithy form, something that was originally written by an ancient Hebrew prophet or one of the disciples of Jesus.

It should not surprise us that this is true. From the time when Wyclif and his followers first translated the Bible into English in the fourteenth century until the scholars of King James the First finished the "Authorized" edition in 1607, no generation of Englishmen passed that there were not some scholars working at the text, trying for a more accurate translation, and polishing the lines for a more beautiful and effective phraseology. Wyclif, a humble but valiant worker, almost a contemporary of the great Geoffrey Chaucer who was called the "father of English poetry," might have been called, in a sense, the "father of English prose," for he was defying the Roman church to give the Scripture to the common people in the plain colloquialism of their native tongue. It is not surprising that the scholars and poets of two and a half centuries should have produced something very fine and beautiful in English.

While those two and a half centuries were not the formative years of the English language, they saw the language growing and strengthening itself, stripping itself of the superfluities of grammar, and making rich importations and adaptations from foreign tongues. In that important time it was to rise in prestige from the lowly tongue of the despised descendants of a conquered race to the language of a world-wide empire, one that was to make itself felt in art, science, culture, and letters, as well as in the fields of statecraft and diplomacy.

The Bible is a great heritage. It is a source book of experience, human and divine. The experiences of men over a period of thousands of years with Good and Evil, with each other and their neighboring nations, with all the sensations brought to them by their colorful and varied world, called forth expressions ranging between all the extremes of human emotion in language unsurpassed for beauty and power.

That generation of young people who are permitted to slide through their cultural training without liberal readings from the pages of the Bible will be most unfortunate indeed. Even in immature minds, its lessons and teachings sink home to be remembered in later life; and when one has reached maturity the old and beautiful phrases come trailing back through the shady avenues of memory like loved and familiar friends.

Religion and Health

We human creatures suffer terribly from fear, and we suffer also from inner conflicts. Many a man is wretchedly unhappy because he is a house divided against itself. The saint in him is at war with the sensualist, the gentleman with the cad, the hero with the coward. And for the self-same reason many a man is nervously unstrung. He can not eat and he can not sleep because he is not at peace with himself. He is subject to all sorts of nervous disorders just for the reason that there is no unity in his life. One part of him is trying, or at least wanting, to do something against which the rest of him is violently protesting, and the resultant strain affects not only the state of his mind but the state of his body. . . . Everywhere there are people who are suffering in one way or another through failure to adjust themselves to their environment. Instead of making a brave attempt to change some distressing situation which might be changed, they are allowing it to embitter, enfeeble and defeat them; or instead of accepting some distressing situation which apparently can not be changed, accepting it and rising above it, they are giving way to futile complaint because life has not dealt with them more gently and generously. . . .

Now, inasmuch as bodily health is greatly affected by thought and emotion, religion may play a very large and important part in promoting it. The surest cure for fear, and for all the disabilities which result from it, is faith. . . .

What a tremendous difference faith makes in the minds and, therefore, in the bodies of men! Victims of tormenting, devitalizing fears, going through life under the handicap of all sorts of mental obsessions and physical ailments, let human beings begin to develop faith in something or somebody and almost immediately they will feel noticeably better. And, when all is said, what other force that we know anything about has such faith-producing power as has religion? It has been said that when human beings feel that life is too much for them some of them swear, some of them pray, and some of them get drunk—a statement which might be expanded so as to include the well-to-do few who run down to Florida and lie on the beach or play on the links. . . .

Not long ago one of my clerical friends went to the Mayo Clinic in great distress of mind and body. He could not eat, he could not sleep, he had sledgehammer pains in the back of his neck, he was terribly worried about the future. How long would he be able to carry on? Would it be necessary for him to resign his pulpit? On examination it was found that there was nothing organically wrong with him, his tissues were all healthy, every organ of his body was sound as a dollar. But the nerve specialist into whose hands he finally fell said to him, "As a clergyman you read the New Testament?"

"Yes."

"Well, why in — don't you believe it? It says, among other things, 'Be not anxious for the morrow,' and you have been nothing but anxious. You have worried over your sermons, wondering how they would be received. You have worried over your position in the community, wondering how you yourself would be received. You have made yourself ill through needless anxiety. Go home and stop worrying or even thinking about yourself, and for heaven's sake put a little trust in the God whose minister you profess to be."—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in "We Need Religion."

NEWS BRIEFS

Graceland Opens September 13

Class work at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, will begin September 13. The Old West Door will stand open. Another school year will have begun. Preparations for the opening are now under way on college hill.

The annual faculty meeting will occur September 8, and registration opens September 9, Friday and Saturday being set apart for the freshmen to enroll and make the acquaintance of Graceland and her faculty. Sophomores and juniors are expected to arrive Monday, September 12.

Prospects for enrollment this year, according to the Lamoni Chronicle, continue to look promising. Advance registration blanks are coming in every mail and inquiries are more numerous than the average for this time of year.

Apostle J. F. Curtis Finishes Reunion Season

With a record of six reunions attended Apostle J. F. Curtis completes the season. He was present at the following: Chetek, Wisconsin; Logan, North Dakota; Weyburn Plains, Saskatchewan; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and Edmonton, Alberta. Though the entire North Central States Mission has felt economic depression and hardship, reunion attendance was good, and Brother Curtis commends the spirit of devotion and earnestness which characterizes the Saints.

In addition to regular reunion work Brother Curtis has found time to effect some other very constructive labors. For instance, at Bon Accord, Alberta, he held ten days of meetings, organized a branch of thirty-five, a Sunday school of about forty, baptized twelve, ordained an elder, priest, and teacher, and blessed two babies. At Ribstone, Alberta, he conducted a short series and baptized five persons. With his help a branch was organized at Regina, Saskatchewan, which promises good work in the future.

Many Baptisms in News of the Week

The number of baptisms reported in the News which comes to the Herald this week is unusually large and encouraging.

San Bernardino, California, Branch reports twelve baptized at an impressive service August 8. Seven of these were adults and three family circles were made complete in the gospel by the ceremony. This makes a total of twenty-three baptized there since last October.

Five new members were added to the growing group at Caraway, Arkansas, as a result of two weeks of missionary meetings conducted by Elder A. M. Baker. Caraway Saints have a thriving Sunday school, and hope soon to establish an active branch organization.

Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth have just closed a series of gospel meetings at Long Rapids, Michigan, three miles from Lachine, and eight souls were added to the church.

Two more have been added to the thriving South Bend-Mishawaka Branch, at Mishawaka, Indiana.

In the midst of the wonderful and inspiring events of the Kirtland reunion, Brother Leon A. Burdick and his daughter-in-law were rebaptized into the church, Elder J. L. Cooper officiating.

Ten were baptized, four of them adults, July 10, at Logan, Iowa, at an all-day meeting.

In a report of his reunion and missionary work in the North Central States Mission this summer, Apostle J. F. Curtis mentions baptizing five persons at Ribstone, Alberta, and twelve at Bon Accord, Alberta.

Harvest Festival Chorus Arouses Interest

Musicians of Independence and surrounding points are glad to see the interest shown in the work of the Harvest Home Festival Chorus which will give its concert at the Auditorium the night of October 14, near the close of the Harvest Festival. A large number of younger singers have been recruited for the chorus, and it is hoped their interest in the music of the church will continue after the fall event is over. Rehearsals are weekly events in local choir organizations. Paul N. Craig will direct the chorus.

Elder J. Charles May Takes Missionary Trip

During a twenty-eight-day reunion and missionary trip into Kentucky, Tennessee, and Southern Missouri, Elder J. Charles May was exceedingly busy. His report lists twenty-eight sermons delivered at eight different places, baptized or assisted in baptizing fifteen, made forty-five visits in the homes of Saints and nonmembers, and saw that several hundred "Gospel Ladder" song tracts were handed out. He was happy to find the Saints in good spirits and faithfully at work.

Why a First Presidency in the Church?

By Elbert A. Smith

[EDITOR'S NOTE: In the Saints' Herald for November 25, 1925, there appeared an editorial entitled, "Why a First Presidency?" This editorial was subsequently printed in tract form, and two editions were published and sold. The author has revised and reedited the article in question and it is herewith presented to the readers of the Herald. It will be reprinted in tract form.]

Some propaganda is being carried on, intended to convince Latter Day Saints that there should be no First Presidency in the church. Ill-tempered disputation over religious questions has done much harm in the past. We have lost interest in such controversies. But it should be possible to set forth our views in a spirit of fairness and moderation in such a way as to avoid unnecessarily hurting those who are in disagreement with our positions. In that spirit we would approach this question.

As we see it the First Presidency has had a legitimate and divinely appointed place in the organic structure of the church from its very beginning.

Joseph Presided From the Beginning

As a matter of fact the place of the president of the church was recognized from the very day of organization. Note the following:

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, it being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April; which commandments were given to Joseph Smith, jr., who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was also called of God an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand: and this according to the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be all glory both now and for ever. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.

The text of the above is slightly different in the Book of Commandments, but in another paragraph of the same revelation as found in the Book of Commandments, the same thought that Joseph was the "first elder" is stressed, as follows:

For, after that it was truly manifested unto this first elder, that he had received a remission of his sins . . . etc. —Book of Commandments 24: 6; Doctrine and Covenants 17: 2.

In what sense was Joseph Smith the "first elder of this church"? He was not first in point of time, because Oliver Cowdery was ordained first: "I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' after which he ordained me to the office of an elder of said church." (Joseph Smith. See Church History, volume 1, page 77).

According to the foregoing revelation Joseph was an apostle, though never one of the Quorum of Twelve (members of the Presidency are apostles), and he was from the beginning of the organization the "first elder"; not first in time but in authority. He presided at the meeting of organization April 6, 1830, and continued to preside over the church until his death. He was not formally set aside as president until January, 1832; but from the beginning of the church he was the first in authority and that by the voice of God, and acted as president of both the high priesthood and the church.

The "Threefold Cord"

The church is not ready to abandon the Book of Doctrine and Covenants or any other one of the three standard books. President Joseph Smith, standing in the General Conference, placed the three books together, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and remarked, "Brethren, a threefold cord is not easily broken." The message of the three books is intertwined. No one of them should be torn from the others. Probably there is no argument brought against the Book of Mormon that has not been urged against the Bible by infidels. Few if any arguments urged against the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that have not been brought against the other two. The three stand together. To the three we appeal.

Modern Revelation Necessary

We are asked why the First Presidency is not more specifically named in the Book of Mormon and New Testament. We might ask in return why bishops and deacons are not mentioned at all in the Book of Mormon (at least not under those titles) and their work only vaguely indicated in the New Testament. Yet without question there were such important offices in the church that Christ founded, as the New Testament indicates.

As a matter of fact, modern revelation directed very largely in the restoration of the church:

Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call upon our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandments which we had received.—Joseph Smith, in Times and Seasons, volume 3, pages 944, 945.

If the Bible and Book of Mormon had been perfectly clear and explicit on every point, modern revelation would not have been so greatly needed. The New Testament by no means contains all of Christ's words; the Book of Mormon is an "abridgment" of the things said and done. However, neither the Bible nor the Book of Mormon is silent on the subject of presidency, even though the modern English terms may not always have been used to indicate the office.

The following passage clearly indicates a presiding high priest over the church in Book of Mormon times; it also indicates the law of lineage, which appears in many other places in the Book of Mormon:

I, Alma, having been consecrated by my father Alma, to be a high priest over the church of God, he having power and authority from God to do these things, behold, I say unto you, that he began to establish a church in the land which was in the borders of Nephi; yea, the land which was called the land of Mormon; yea, and he did baptize his brethren in the waters of Mormon.—Book of Alma 3: 3, 4.

Alma thereafter exercised presidential watchcare and direction over the whole church and set other officers to "preside" in local congregations:

And now it came to pass that after Alma had made an end of speaking unto the people of the church, which was established in the city of Zarahemla, he ordained priests and elders, by laying on his hands according to the order of God, to preside and watch over the church.—Book of Alma 4: 1.

The very fact that they were to preside indicates presidency, the right of presidency, presiding officers in the church, etc.; or as we have it in the Doctrine and Covenants: "Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.)

In the Book of Mormon church Alma presided over the whole church and others were selected to preside over local churches. Note the following from the standpoint of an opponent who did not believe in the "foolish traditions" of the true church:

Now Satan had gotten great hold upon the hearts of the people of the city of Ammonihah; therefore they would not hearken unto the words of Alma. . . . Nevertheless, they hardened their hearts, saying unto him, Behold, we know that thou art Alma; and we know that thou art high priest over the church which thou hast established in many parts of the land, according to your traditions; and we are not of thy church, and we do not believe in such foolish traditions.—Book of Alma 6: 10-13.

Like some today the presidency was to the people of Ammonihah but a "foolish tradition."

The general supervisory charter of Alma's work as president over the entire church is further indicated by the following:

And it came to pass that Alma was appointed to be the chief judge; he being also the high priest; his father having conferred the office upon him, and had given him the charge concerning all the affairs of the church.—Mosiah 13: 63.

This language is strikingly in accord with modern revelation to the First Presidency:

And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

(In the foregoing I refer to Alma's work as high priest and not to his position as chief judge.)

After the Order of Jesus Christ

Thus when we go back to the Book of Mormon for a pattern, we find Alma as president of the church doing exactly what the president of the church is told to do in the revelations through Joseph Smith in Doctrine and Covenants. Alma presided and called other men to "preside." The very word "preside" (book of Alma 4: 1) carries in it the variations, "president," and "presidency." The president may officiate with or without counselors. (Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6.)

It may be argued that this was the Mosaic church over which Alma presided. But he says it was the church of Christ. He preached the gospel of Jesus Christ. His administration was after the order of Christ: "For I am called to speak after this manner, according to the holy order of God, which is in Christ Jesus." (Book of Alma 3: 73.) And lastly his church was called "the church of God or the church of Christ":

And they were called the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward.—Mosiah 9: 49.

The above referred to the organization over which Alma presided. Those who would say it was the church of Moses rather than the Church of Jesus Christ may argue the matter with the Book of Mormon. The church generally will accept the latter. And since it was verily Christ's church, why cavil if there be found today over Christ's church a presiding high priest, even as Alma (a president, if you please); like Alma, to "have charge concerning all the affairs of the church." Yea, verily, like Alma, "having been consecrated by his father" to occupy in that position.

Indeed, if the church of Christ today were not after that order, something would be very wrong, for Alma says that he worked after the order of Jesus Christ. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ does not need any man to "call it back to the Book of Mormon plan," for the good reason that it has gone forward on that plan.

Thus like Alma, "having been consecrated by his father," the late President Joseph Smith presided "and had charge concerning all the affairs of the church" for a period of more than fifty years. President Frederick M. Smith succeeded him in like manner, in accord with the Book of Mormon pattern.

A Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy in Mosaic Church

The Mosaic economy itself was a "pattern" after which the Church of Jesus Christ was to be builded, a "schoolmaster to bring us to Christ" (Galatians 3: 24); "a shadow of good things to come" (Hebrews 10: 1). "Behold, I say unto you, all these things were types of things to come." (Book of Mosiah 8: 8.) In its organic structure were found a presidency of three, a leading body of twelve, and another of seventy—all of which appear later in the New Testament regime and all of which are set forth in light as clear as noonday in modern revelations. The witnesses of three dispensations agree.

Note the following from the Old Testament scriptures:

And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the Sun.—Exodus 17: 11, 12.

Then Joshua called the twelve men, whom he had prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man: And Joshua said unto them, Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God into the midst of Jordan, and take you up every man of you a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel.—Joshua 4: 4, 5.

And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone.—Numbers 11: 16, 17.

It was not just an accident that Aaron and Hur upheld the arms of Moses. That he was the leader and director (to use modern parlance, president) and they his associates (counselors) is very evident from the following:

And he [Moses] said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them. And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount.—Exodus 24: 14, 15.

It has been argued by one writer that these three were but "a committee." If so they were a divinely appointed "committee" in the same sense that the Twelve Apostles might be considered a "committee" of twelve. The Lord made Moses the chief presiding officer of the church in that day; and the other two were associated with him and officiated during his absence. And this was a "pattern" after which the Church of Christ was to be organized later.

In the New Testament Church

Particularly as his ministry drew to a close, Jesus seemed to recognize three and prepare them for oversight of the church. This was after the pattern given in the Mosaic economy. We read:

And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.—Matthew 17: 1-4.

As his departure drew very near, after he had taught all of the disciples in the upper room at the last supper, he took three apart again into the Garden of Gethsemane:

Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.—Matthew 26: 36-38.

After Christ's departure these three appeared as in charge to speak for the church:

And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.—Galatians 2: 9.

At a time of grave crisis one of these men, James, gave a decision "in council," exactly as one member of the Presidency might speak for the entire quorum:

Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God.—Acts 15: 19.

One of the three, Peter, is indicated in the Inspired Version of the Bible as holding the office of seer, which is significant in the light of revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants pertaining to the Presidency:

Thou art Simon, the son of Jona, thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a seer, or a stone.—John 1: 42, Inspired Translation.

To Peter the Lord said:

I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.—Matthew 16: 19.

At the time when Christ thus addressed Peter the latter had long been one of the Twelve apostles

Yet now Christ promises to give him still further "keys" of authority. Why? Peter already was of the Twelve. He also selected Peter for the final charge, "Feed my sheep." The Twelve were to go into all the world and preach the gospel; but Peter received a special charge to look after the church.

The Reorganized Church is in accord with the pattern found in the Mosaic Church, the Book of Mormon Church, and the New Testament Church; also in accord with the law found in modern revelation:

Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

Well did the revered Heman C. Smith say:

If the church is to be according to the pattern of heavenly things, there must be the quorum of three holding the chief authority on earth.—Truth Defended, pages 74, 75.

Granville Hedrick, one time President of the "Church of Christ" on the Temple Lot, wrote:

It is out of place to have a bishop or apostle, or seventies, before the presidency of the church is selected.

Moved by the foregoing considerations Daniel McGregor truthfully declared:

In name she is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized after the apostolic model.—Saints' Herald, April 28, 1909.

Such considerations also one time moved the late T. W. Williams to declare:

The President of the church holds the keys which entitle him to receive the oracles of God for the whole church. His ordination gives him this right. It is through him that God reveals his mind and will to the church. This may at times take the nature of prophecy. More frequently it is direction, counsel, admonition. He possesses this right, not as a prophet, but as an apostle and high priest.—T. W. Williams, March 15, 1921, Herald for October 21, 1925.

The truth is that most of us are fairly happy now. We have much to make us happy. And one thing that makes us happy is exactly this daily, hourly, minutely uncertainty of happiness. We can never tell, from the instant at which we are born, what disaster may not be lurking in our neighborhood, ready to pounce . . . Great numbers of human beings attain maturity, even old age, with their limbs, their organs, and even their hearts unbroken. It is a miracle; but it is also a commonplace, so that we often do not realize it with sufficient clearness and thankfulness.—Frank Swinnerton.

"Keeping Up With the Joneses"

HOW ONE FAMILY HELPED KEEP GRACELAND COLLEGE FILLED

By Marcella Schenck

PART ONE

The Sacrificing Parents

Last year a certain little pony in Kansas that had been carrying a family of children to school for twenty-two years, received academic honors. The youngest child of the family was graduating from the eighth grade of a rural school, and since the pony was also finishing, he received his diploma along with the girl.

This interesting happening found place in the daily newspapers. But I assure you that pony never "kept up with the Joneses." I mean the Lamoni Joneses. Mr. and Mrs. Grant Jones of near Lamoni, Iowa, have had one or more children attending Graceland College each consecutive year for twenty-four years! Had President George N. Briggs known of this last commencement time when the youngest Jones finished, he most certainly would have decorated those parents with merit badges at Honor's Chapel.

Now since every student enrolled in Graceland since 1908 must certainly have met one of the Joneses, you will be interested to know more about them. First, let's have the roll call, so you can recognize the Jones of your Graceland days, and then we will begin the story back at its beginning:

Lewis Jones, 1909, 13, 14, 15, 16; 1921-23.

Christina Jones, 1909-10.

Lonzo Jones, 1911-13; 1917-19. (Returned later as an instructor for several years.)

Leah Jones, 1912-13. (Deceased.)

Eliza Jones, 1919-21.

Hazel Jones, 1921-26.

Donald Jones, 1926-28.

Gertrude Jones, 1928-30.

Gerald Jones, 1930-32.

That's the ten. David didn't attend Graceland, but he believes in education, and having completed his high school education at home, has attended night school in Los Angeles, California, where he now resides. Perhaps fate will let him enroll in Graceland yet to complete the family record. Who knows?

Now for the story.

Grant Jones, at an early age, lost his father, who was a well educated man; but poor Grant, thrown upon the hardships of the world, had little opportunity for schooling; but he didn't neglect the chances that came his way.

As the lad grew up, making his own way, he got notions of his own, as young men are apt to do.

First: A man had no right to have a family unless he could attempt to give his children a chance at the better things of life.

Second: Grant, himself, meant never to marry. He would care for his mother as long as she lived, and when that duty was ended, the young man intended to travel and see the world.

What happened?

Riding along over the hills one day, he met a young lady in checked gingham, with a head shawl tied under her chin, and riding a sorrel horse and driving some cows to a pond for water. Now, in spite of his resolve never to marry, he thought immediately within himself, "If I ever do marry, there's the girl for me." Alas, that stray little thought kept him from traveling and seeing the world!

I promised Mr. Jones not to make a love story out of this. I don't need to do so for Grant and Sadie made the love story themselves, as real a romance as could be made, for how could they have reared the eleven children and given them a chance to go to college unless there had been love abundant?

Grant tried very hard not to love Sarah Snethen. Every little while he would find himself leaning a little too far Sadie's way, so would take himself to task thus, "Stay away from Sadie, Grant Jones. You won't get to see the world if you see very much more of her." Then he would stay away as long as three weeks at a stretch, but it always ended in another call! Finally, he just gave up trying to remain away, and so they were married one January day—married in her little home and had invited guests and a wedding dinner.

Then they established a little home of their own, which has changed its locality a few times, and in it his mother was cared for, and Sarah's mother and father when they needed it, and their own eleven children have been given that chance at the better things of life.

Most of their life the Joneses have lived on a farm. Years of poverty and toil have been experienced in the past which the older children remember most. These older brothers and sisters began early to add little comforts which the younger children mention with loving appreciation. For instance, Cosie bought the first silverware after she had begun to teach.

But what is poverty where love abounds? "We had no bickerings in our home," says one of the younger children. "Father and mother stood solid in their ideas and ideals."

"I don't know why it was," says the mother, "but our children never quarreled or fought."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Jones are strong for the home unit. "Working together, sacrificing together, and sharing together," says Mr. Jones, "makes you love each other more. Living on a farm adjusts a family to each other. The children aren't off with this one and that one, which gives you a chance to talk your ideals to a gathered family."

"Once you establish ideals with the older ones," said Mrs. Jones, "the younger ones just fall in line. You don't say much to the younger ones, they sort of imbibe from the older ones."

The younger Jones children bear witness that the progress of their older brothers and sisters, and the companions they brought home from college had great influence upon their lives.

"I suppose it was a great sacrifice educating so many children," I suggested when I interviewed Mr. and Mrs. Jones. "Educations are expensive and you must have needed the assistance of your children on the farm."

"I wouldn't say it has been any sacrifice," answered the low-voiced mother. "I've enjoyed it."

"Well, it was a sacrifice and it wasn't," mused the father. "I guess just the extra work it sometimes threw on us was the only hard part. But you see we had good children, so that made it easier. They always helped with the work during week-ends. The boys would shuck corn and the girls do the washings. Everyone hurried right home from school and pitched in, and were up early in the mornings doing their share."

"Many is the time," recalled the mother, "I've known our boys to take a round in the field and have out a load of corn before school time. The best part of it was that no matter how hard our children had to work, they never seemed to consider it a hardship."

"Of course," admitted the father, "we did try to teach them that work was an honor. We never meant to give our children an idea that education was to obtain jobs without work. We just wanted to fit them to accomplish better the tasks that came their way."

Mr. and Mrs. Jones rather infer their children were the sort that liked to assist themselves. We will grant that, still there had to be encouragement somewhere, and one wonders how a pair of parents manage to send ten children to college. So let's go back to 1908, when Cosie, the eldest, had finished the eighth grade.

Young people were allowed to teach when they had soared thus far in the educational realm of those days. She attended a summer normal school, passed the examination, and became a teacher. At the close of her first term, through no fault of Cosie's, she found herself without a school. This was rather discouraging, for a dream dwelt in the girl's heart of college, fostered there by her parent's desire that their children progress. She had expected to finance her next step with school teaching money.

The reasons for the loss of her position were of a nature to arouse the indignation of Mr. Jones, and when he feels an injustice has been done it stirs the huge man to action.

"We must do something," said he to his wife. "We have always wanted our children to go to college. We'll begin now."

"How?" asked she.

Yes, how? That he did not quite know, but after much wondering and pondering they conceived the idea of a revolving fund, loaning to the first child who would return the money to help the next.

In Mr. Jones's words this is what happened: "I hooked up a span of colts the next day, to take Cosie over to inquire if she could enter Graceland at that time of year. The weather was cool and the colts were a 'raring' to go. The ground was all sleety, and the colts would hardly stand still long enough for Cosie to get in. They kept plunging about till even when we got started I could hardly hold them between the fence rows, so we got to Graceland in a hurry. When we arrived I was no good to Cosie at all. I had to stay out and hold those colts while she went in by herself and made the arrangements."

"That's how it started," said Mrs. Jones. "Cosie became so enthusiastic about Graceland that all the rest wanted to go. You know Cosie not getting that school to teach seemed hard at the time, but now it kind of seems like an act of God, the way things turned out. It helped us discover how a college education could come to our children."

So was the beginning, and since then, one by one, and three by five, the children have gone forward to Graceland and most of them beyond. Hazel says, "But none of us has ever reached a pinnacle. Why write about us?" We are not writing about the children in particular, the story is about the parents who managed to send ten children to college. That was reaching some sort of pinnacle. How did they do it? With the revolving fund in part; by a great deal of encouragement, by keeping uppermost certain goals to be reached, by letting nothing stand in the children's way. The parents have lived simply in a home modestly furnished. Of course time came when the family grew out of poverty years and hardships, but there were years when they have weathered finances as well as the long nine miles to Graceland.

The memories of hardships are mostly forgotten, and what is remembered best is the week-end visits when the children came home bringing the college friends to enjoy the farm. Many a Friday night when Mr. Jones took the children home he had no idea what the Sunday evening weather would be or the youngsters might have remained at school for that week-end. But whatever he faced has been considered worth while.

Lonzo went home for the week-end once and Saturday and Sunday brought so severe a snow storm, that on Monday morning the drifts lay deeper in some places than a man's head. But the father started back with the boy at daybreak, and the two scooped their way. After scooping two and a half miles they fell in with a Mr. Hill who was scooping his way to Graceland also for the sake of his daughter. The men decided to put up Mr. Hill's rig at one of the neighbors and they all go in together. So the girl was transferred to the Jones sled and given the reins and the three men scooped on. At four o'clock that afternoon they reached Graceland and ate dinner and supper in one. Good-byes were said and the fathers started home finding the drifts had so filled in behind them that the snow had to be scooped away again for the return. At one o'clock that night two tired fathers dropped exhausted to sleep, but their children were back in school. They had accomplished a goal.

Sometimes several young people went out for one week-end singing along the way or making up rhymes for fun and merriment. Once on a home-going trip something rather unusual happened. Mr. Jones, out on the farm, decided to purchase some hogs on the same trip that he brought Cosie.

Now, Cosie, knowing nothing of her father's intentions, had invited a girl friend home with her. When he arrived at Graceland with the lumber wagon in which three hogs were penned in the back, the girls didn't mind, but laughed and climbed in. They had not gone far toward home when a rain storm struck them pouring torrents.

Here was a situation. Mr. Jones put the spring seat at the front end of the wagon and spread the horse blankets over the side boards to protect the girls. The maidens were good sports and rode down with the hogs. Mr. Jones, himself, stood up to drive and took the drenching.

After a while the storm set in for a drizzle. Nearing home they met a neighbor who stopped to visit. Mr. Jones told him about the new hogs of which he was so proud, so the neighbor climbed up and took a look at them, failing entirely to discover the girls huddled under the blankets. Then the neighbor's young son had a desire to see the hogs, too, but he looked at the wrong end. "Oo! They're not hogs!" he cried and fled, thinking a joke had been played upon him, for it was the girls he saw. How everyone did laugh!

Oh, the Joneses have ridden to Graceland in everything, advancing as the times have advanced—lumberwagons, top buggies, carriages, bobsleds, and automobiles. Patroness Hall was new when the first Jones saw Graceland. Patroness is gone now and the younger children have enjoyed the new comforts and progress of Graceland. "They haven't been any happier," Cosie thinks, "than we who enjoyed the beginnings of Graceland."

For fear you think Cosie the most important Jones, I must tell you about the others. Cosie has been mentioned most because she was the pioneer, being the oldest. Her name is Mrs. Ralph Johnson now. She found her husband at Graceland. They live northeast of Lamoni, parents of six children, each with an ambition to attend Graceland.

Lewis lives in Lamoni and is married to a Graceland girl. They boast of two sturdy sons. He began teaching school at seventeen and has been an instructor most of his life. He spent fourteen months in France during the World War, and is known in the family as the "sandwich," because when there was no other to attend Graceland he always came back and filled in the space. He has taken advanced work in Ames, and is a thorough schoolman.

Christina, more familiarly known as "Christie," is now Mrs. George Brenizer and lives on a farm southeast of Lamoni. She is the mother of five, with three in Lamoni high school, looking forward to their mother's college.

Lonzo is probably the most widely known to Graceland students. He took his academic work there, two years of college, and after advanced work in Iowa City returned as an instructor at Graceland. He found his wife at Graceland, too, and they are the parents of three, two boys and a new little girl. At present he is located at Iowa City, working as assistant dean, also an instructor, and specializing mostly in personnel work. He now has his doctor's degree.

These first four have been teachers; so also have Hazel and Gertrude.

Leah did two years of academic work at Graceland and found there her husband, Newt Braby. After three years of happy life together, she died leaving one son now fourteen years of age. He is visiting in Lamoni at present and having a glimpse of Graceland in vacation.

Eliza found John Taylor at Graceland. Their home is in Independence, Missouri. They also have six children. Eliza had a serious illness this summer and is now recuperating at the home of her parents while the children enjoy the freedom of the farm home.

Hazel, having finished her college work at Graceland, has taught several years and specialized in Home Economics at Iowa City. She is interested in young girlhood and does much for the Girl Scouts in Lamoni when at home during the summers.

Donald lives near Iowa City and operates a dairy farm. He took a short course at Ames after his work at Graceland. Don also boasts of a Graceland wife.

Gertrude teaches home economics and physical training. She is the family chauffeur this summer since they are back on the farm. I saw her today clad in coveralls, a very dependable errand boy in the absence of brothers.

Gerald, the youngest of the flock, hasn't had a chance to show his talents yet. "Ye Olde Scribe," Jerry, is on the dairy farm with Donald at the present writing. I don't know whether he is milking cows or mowing hay or going to school, but I'll warrant one thing that he is poking his nose into something and seeing the amusing side of life.

Yes, taking "in-laws" and all they are quite a Graceland boosting committee. The parents sort of figured these young people were going to fall in love when they chose a background with wholesome young people at college. One of the girls proudly boasted once, "As for personal vices we are a clean family. I have five brothers and four brothers-in-law and not one of them chews, smokes, drinks or swears." Neither do the girls and wives.

"And which were the hardest of all the years?" I asked the parents.

"The last two," said Mr. Jones. "Seems queer doesn't it? Still we made it through, and we are proud we did. All along we haven't done anything but what any family can do. I don't know what you want with this story unless it is to encourage others. You tell them to let anything we have accomplished be a lesson to them to try to educate their children. They can if they will. And another thing—tell them to put their children on their own. Don't just hand out money to children and let them idle their time and waste the money. If they have to return it, even if you can afford to give it to them, the plan is best. The responsibility does the children good."

Yes, you can do it. In this respect you can be granted permission to try to "keep up with the Joneses." You will find your reward and we hope you will feel what Mrs. Jones feels as she nears the sunset of life. That little quiet mother has a sweet way of putting things. One of the last things she said to me was, "The best part of all has been that our children have always appreciated what we tried to do for them. I don't know anything that cheers a parent like the appreciation the children give."

Which brings us to another chapter, written by the children. Let us call it "The Return Tribute."

The Truth About Liquor

By Bishop A. B. Phillips

NUMBER SIX

The proof is overwhelming and indisputable that the liquor business always has been an evil influence among the people, leading everywhere to immorality, crime, disease, and poverty. All people of high ideals and unselfish aims have been and are opposed to it, and the safety and welfare of the people have always depended upon its suppression or abolishment. Whenever and wherever it has not been prohibited, iniquity, corruption, and crime have always marked its polluting ways. Every conceivable method has been tried in the attempt to compromise with this evil, but it has always refused to abide by any terms or laws that would tend to restrain its vicious course. The prohibition laws have proved to be the most effective means of controlling this monster that experience has revealed, and only the Wets and their dubious sympathizers are opposed to this control.

Laws against crime are made necessary because there are always some people who want to commit acts of a criminal nature or that lead to crime. Such people and their sympathizers often make false and misleading statements about those who seek to enforce the law, hoping to gain sympathy and to mislead the people. This clearly implies that they have no more worthy means of defense, and is a tacit admission of their guilt. False claims of this sort have recently been made in the press and over the radio concerning President Hoover and the Wickersham Commission which have the appearance of being deliberate attempts to deceive such as may not know the facts.

President Hoover—The Wickersham Report

Among the inaccurate statements recently made are these: that President Hoover; and the Wickersham Commission, favor repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, and that the Commission concluded that it can not be enforced. In its issue for February 6, 1932, Collier's contains an editorial in which it is asserted:

The Wickersham Commission wrote the doom of the Eighteenth Amendment. . . . It concluded that prohibition is unenforceable in this country.—Page 58.

How anyone with guileless motives can be so careless with the truth, is not clear to one who reads the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission, of which numbers 1, 2, 4, 6, and 10 are quoted verbatim, as follows:

1. The Commission is opposed to repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.
2. The Commission is opposed to the restoration in any manner of the legalized saloon.
4. The Commission is opposed to the proposal to modify the National Prohibition Act so as to permit manufacture and sale of light wines or beer.
6. The Commission is of opinion that prior to the enactment of the Bureau of Prohibition Act, 1927, the agencies for enforcement were badly organized and inadequate; that subsequent to that enactment there has been continued improvement in organization and effort for enforcement.
10. Some of the Commission are not convinced that Prohibition under the Eighteenth Amendment is unenforceable and believe that a further trial should be made with the help of the recommended improvements, and that if after such trial effective enforcement is not secured there should be a revision of the Amendment. Others of the Commission are convinced that it has been demonstrated that Prohibition under the Eighteenth Amendment is unenforceable and that the Amendment should be immediately revised. But recognizing that the process of Amendment will require some time, they unite in the recommendations of conclusion No. 9 for the improvement of the enforcement agencies.—Official Report of Commission, House Document 722.

The Commission specifies nine definite recommendations for improvement of enforcement agencies, but it will be noted that while some believe the law can not be enforced, others of the Commission believe otherwise, and the Commission therefore does not conclude that prohibition can not be enforced, but recommends greater efforts at enforcement. President Hoover submitted this report to the Congress on January 20, 1931, at which time he said:

The Commission, by a large majority, does not favor the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment as a method of cure for the inherent abuses of the liquor traffic. I am in accord with this view.

I am in unity with the spirit of the Report in seeking constructive steps to advance the national ideal of eradication of the social and economic and political evils of this traffic to preserve the gains which have been made and to eliminate the abuses which exist, at the same time facing with an open mind the difficulties which have arisen under this experiment.

I do, however, see serious objections to, and therefore must not be understood as recommending the Commission's proposed revision of the Eighteenth Amendment which is suggested by them for possible consideration at some future time if the continued effort at enforcement should not prove successful. My own duty and that of all executive officials is clear—to enforce the law with all the means at our disposal without equivocation or reservation.

No well-informed person of worthy motives could so willfully misrepresent President Hoover as to assert that he favored repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, in view of his published statement to the contrary. Such falsehoods must therefore be charged either to ignorance or malice aforethought.

The Cost of Enforcement

Similar misleading statements have been made as to the cost of enforcing the prohibition law. Some have even claimed that hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent for enforcement each year. The truth is that prohibition is costing the nation many millions less than it cost when the saloon and liquor license prevailed, and most of the cost of enforcement is paid by those who violate the laws. This is as it should be, but it explains why so many Wets are howling about the cost of enforcement, in which they are joined by a few millionaires of great wealth who think to avoid the payment of surplus taxes by shifting the tax burden to alcoholic liquors by means of a liquor license or tax system. The poor people who are so foolish as to consume their earnings for liquor would then be paying a greater part of the nation's tax bill. The memorandum of an aggressive Wet discovered by the Senate Judiciary Committee is made known as follows:

Captain Stayton, the organizer of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, was testifying under oath before the Lobby Investigating Committee. He identified a memorandum of his which stated that Irene DuPont, one of the multi-millionaire DuPont brothers, had stated that if beer should come back under a 3c-a-glass tax, he (DuPont) would save ten million dollars taxes on one of his corporations. The whole memorandum argued that the return of taxed beer would make money for the rich.—Prohibition Facts, page 56. See also Hearings, April 1 to May 2, 1930.)

From a financial viewpoint the only people who would benefit by a return to liquor license, are liquor dealers, bootleggers, criminals, and perhaps some of the rich. But it is quite possible that the cost of government, due to crime, dishonesty, and general demoralization, would so increase that the rich would be taxed more, instead of less. But Government sources reveal the fact that enforcement of prohibition is not a financial loss, even if the great moral and industrial gain to the nation be disregarded. The Director of the Bureau of Prohibition, Colonel Woodcock, presented the figures showing that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, the total amount appropriated for enforcement was $9,623,390, but that collections of fines, penalties, etc., amounted to $4,138,211.11, leaving the net cost of enforcement only $5,485,178.89. But aside from this he states:

There were fines imposed in the State courts in cases made by the Federal juries, without any expense whatever to the State except the salaries of the judges and officers while these cases were being tried, of $1,091,996.45. . . . Then we seized property appraised at $21,484,730, and automobiles appraised at $3,218,323.—Subcommittee Hearing, page 2.

These figures of the Director show that the value of fines, taxes, penalties, seizures, etc., was $29,933,250.56 for the year named, or $20,309,870.56 more than the cost of enforcement. For the entire period from 1920 to 1931 inclusive the collections and seizures in excess of the cost of enforcement are stated at $264,432,260. In view of the fact that only commercial violators of the law are prosecuted and fined, this vast revenue comes from criminals, vicious lawbreakers, and professional vipers of society. Prohibition is therefore performing a great service to the nation at no ultimate cost to its law-abiding citizens.

College and High School Drinking

The charge has been broadcast by the Wets that drinking has increased in colleges and high schools to an alarming extent. If this were actually true, it is doubtful that they would be so eager to make it known, at the risk of having such practice curtailed or stopped entirely. But their assertions on this point, like many others, are without the foundation of proof. President Hoover's Law Observance Commission reported concerning high schools:

Conditions in the high schools are much better than in 1920 with respect both to drinking and to general behavior. This is doubly significant in view of the fact that high school enrollment has grown since 1920 from two million to more than five million students—an achievement unparalleled in any country in all history. Unquestionably the Eighteenth Amendment has benefited the schools beyond measure.—Prohibition Facts, page 28.

Various university officials report better conditions in the colleges also. Professor Clark, for 21 years on the Committee on Discipline at Yale, reports as follows:

In the old days our Committee was constantly busy with cases involving intoxication and the disorders originating with it. Now we have practically no business of the kind at all to transact. Moreover, this is in spite of the fact that in the old days we rarely troubled ourselves about a case of mere intoxication if it had not resulted in some kind of public disorder, whereas now intoxication of itself is regarded as calling for the severest penalty.—Ibid, page 28.

On June 2, 1930, the Associated Press reported a poll of 255 college presidents, of which 237 reported less drinking or no drinking, while only three reported worse drinking than before. The fact appears to be that most of the drinking at colleges is done by Wets who visit there and then spread reports of drinking, but neglect to say that they were the drinkers. Dean Edmonson, for twenty-nine years on the faculty of the University of Indiana, reports:

Drinking among students is much less than in former days. It is true that there is some drinking. . . . Most of it is done by visitors.—Ibid, page 28.

Has Liquor Production Increased?

It will be conceded that if drinking has greatly increased, there must have been increased production of liquor. Extravagant assertions have been made by the Wets that production of liquor has enormously increased, but as usually is the case, they are long on claims, but short on facts to support them. Probably the most careful survey has been made by Director Woodcock, who states that after accounting for all possible materials for the production of liquor, the result "indicates that the possible per capita production in 1930 was 35 per cent of the lawful production in 1914" (Hearing, page 87). This is believed to be the maximum amount that could have been produced for drinking purposes, as a careful check is made of alcohol that is denatured and of the other liquor produced. While the production of denatured alcohol has increased, there has been only about one-third as much liquor that could have been used for drinking.

In addition to this evidence that liquor production for beverage purposes has decreased, we have convincing proof in the fact that drunkards seeking to be cured at Keeley institutes are but few in comparison with those of saloon days. Mr. Calderwood states:

The "Banner of Gold," a magazine published in license days by the Keeley "graduates," printed a list of 123 branch institutes in the United States. There are now but 14, and the original or parent Keeley Institute at Dwight, Illinois, has shrunk from a hospital of 280,000 square feet of floor space to a bungalow of 3,300.—Prohibition Facts, page 84.

When they tell you that drinking is worse than before prohibition, you can be sure that they are either ignorant or vicious or dupes of untruthful men. The United States Census report shows that New York City had 123 per cent more arrests for drunkenness in the five years before prohibition ending with 1916 than in the five prohibition years ending with 1930. If liquor production and drinking were now greater than in saloon days, we would have more drunken people. Instead of this we have but few in comparison. This is convincingly shown in the work of the Salvation Army, of which Commander Booth states:

Before prohibition came, we used to have a horrible time of it every Saturday night, picking up the drunks—men and women—lying intoxicated in the gutters and in the streets. . . . It was a common thing in New York to collect from 1200 to 1300 in a single night. Prohibition reduced this gathering to 400, and now, a dozen years later, we average no more than seven in all.—Proof of Prohibition's Success.

A reduction from 1300 drunks to only seven does not mean increased drunkenness to anyone who has respect for the truth! The Wet claim of an alarming increase of drinking among our youth is no more truthful than their other false assertions. But why are they so greatly concerned about it, if liquor is a good thing and their contention is true that "all have a right to drink whenever they want to"? Statistics prove that drinking among the youth has decreased. The Literary Digest states:

The poll of college publication editors and college presidents indicate decrease in drinking in colleges and by the youth at large.—September 17, 1926.

The Economics of Prohibition

The Wets claim that the repeal of prohibition would give employment to a million men, but admit that the saloon should not return. Yet "wet" congressmen themselves showed in 1914 that only 498-901 men were employed in the liquor business, and 409,465 of these were bartenders. Without the return of the saloon, liquor would add little or nothing to employment, and would throw out of employment thousands engaged in soft drink and other occupations.

Money spent for liquor also means an economic loss. In the "wet" year 1914, for instance, a dollar spent for beer meant only 7 cents for wages and only 10 cents for the farmer. But a dollar spent for bread yielded 16 cents for wages and 37 cents for the farmer. A United States Bulletin for 1910 showed that labor got only 7.6 cents on the dollar in the liquor industry. In agriculture labor got 19.6 cents, in shoemaking 19.4 cents, in automobile work 19.5 cents, in lumbering 27.5 cents, and in hosiery 22.3 cents, or three times as much on the dollar for labor as the liquor business paid. Within five years after prohibition came there were 23,000,000 more persons with money in savings banks, besides an enormous increase of funds on deposit and in building loan institutions. From the "wet" year 1914 to the "dry" year 1931, bank deposits increased from 19,000,000,000 to 52,000,000,000, and by 1929 United States wealth had increased 88 per cent. Former President Theodore Roosevelt said:

There are few things more important to our social advancement than the loosening of the grip of the liquor interests on the labor movement. The saloon represents economic loss.—Prohibition Facts, page 39.

Prohibition Builds—Liquor Destroys

No nation which legalizes liquor has survived this world depression with as little real suffering as has the United States. Prohibition has been a bulwark of great strength, and has accomplished more for the progress of our country, both morally and industrially, than any other law that was ever enacted. Much of the fight being waged against it is promoted by foreign criminals who would destroy our Constitution and our laws. Director Woodcock submitted figures at the Subcommittee hearing last January (page 42), which show that nearly 32 per cent of liquor law violators convicted are either not citizens at all, or else are naturalized foreigners or of unknown nationality. They are not our honorable and upright citizens. Make no mistake! To legalize liquor would cost us billions in money, and would enormously increase suffering, immorality, and crime. All honor to the Eighteenth Amendment, the greatest moral and economic safeguard existing in any nation of the world!

Tetanus (Lock-jaw)

By A. W. Teel, M. D. Church Physician

Tetanus (Lock-jaw) is characterized by paroxysmal, tonic spasms of the voluntary muscles, the paroxysms recurring with increasing severity as the disease progresses, the mind remaining clear. It is caused by a specific germ known as the bacillus Tetani which occur in the soil and usually gain access to the system through a wound or an abrasion. This bacillus has been found in the intestines of horses and in the excreta where horses are kept. For this reason, the bacillus is frequently found in cultivated soil. There are cases where no open wounds are discoverable.

The treatment is often a failure because there are several types of the germ. After death, the muscles, lungs, brain and spinal cord show minute enlargements. It is one of the small group of infections common to man and many mammals. Horses, mice, dogs, rabbits, cats, guinea-pigs, and goats are the most susceptible, but rats and birds are very resistant. During the World War, the soldiers in the trenches were especially susceptible and the death rate was frightful before anti-toxin was discovered. It is now used as a routine preventative in all wounds. Before the discovery of antiseptics, the infection was often spread by the fingers, surgical instruments, dressings, etc. Contused wounds, punctured or lacerated, are more likely to be infected with this disease than clean-cut or open wounds. It frequently develops in trivial cuts such as pin scratches, small splinters, insect bites, etc. Pus infections of all kinds, foreign bodies and other irritants favor the development of the Tetanus. Strange as it may seem, the germ is harmless when taken through the mouth, and has been found in the intestines of humans whose death was caused from other disease, sudden, or accidental death. Experimentors have given susceptible animals large doses of the virus without producing the disease.

The incubation period in man is from six to fourteen days. The onset of the disease varying according to the cause. It has been found that the spores ("baby microbes") are not affected by gastric digestion but afterwards pass from the stomach and the intestinal tract, polluting the soil from the dejecta. For this reason, great precaution should be used where man and domestic animals live, as the soil is almost continuously contaminated with Tetanus.

As shocking as it may seem to some, not infrequently contaminations are found upon fresh fruits and vegetables, clothing, skin, soil and street dust; the microscope revealing innumerable Tetanus spores.

It is needless to say that in all cases cleanliness is very important and that means should be provided in our cities, to eliminate street dust as much as possible, and fresh vegetables should be scrupulously clean as there may not only be germs of lock-jaw found on them, but other disease germs as well. On account of dust being blown, germs of all kinds may be carried great distances. They have been found in hay-dust, horse hair, dust of houses and in the greatest variety of places.

Cure for Discouragement

What greater misfortune in life could come to any one than that which came to the great musician Beethoven, whose soul was filled with wondrous harmonies, who became deaf at thirty-one, so deaf that he could not hear the applause his wonderful symphonies aroused. Yet deaf to all the exquisite harmony he only could produce, he went on writing his wonderful music.

Discouragement is one of the things we have to fight in the world. We must not give up to it ever. It is so overwhelming when it comes, because it takes us unawares when we are unprepared for it.

Pilgrims on the Way of Life, when your feet touch the Slough of Despond, fix your eyes on the Way beyond, and on Him who is going before and struggle bravely through.—DeWitt Lincoln Pelton, in A Modern Pilgrim's Progress; American Tract Society.

Religion provides a faith that life is worth living. It reveals ends that are worth living for. It nourishes desire to live for such ends. It creates the vision and inspires the devotion needed to achieve unity in divided and tormented lives. Religion therefore, is to happiness so essential that without it no deep and abiding happiness is ever likely to be found.—Ernest Fremont Tittle.

Little Journeys with the Editor in Chief

Dear Herald Readers: After an absence of many months from this column I once more salute my readers with "Hail, Saints! Are you on your way to Zion?"

Since the first of the year I have been on the move rather constantly, except when "at home" and "in the office" during preconference council meetings and the conference itself. I shall not here attempt a chronological record of my movements. I have tried to avoid this in my writings herein, and there are one or two trips past which I may later tell about. But for the present I shall begin where I am.

Setting of Maine Reunion

I am at Brooksville, Maine, on the reunion grounds of the two Maine Districts, Eastern and Western. It is usually designated the "L. D. S. Camp," Brooksville, Maine. The ground itself is located on the northwest shore of what is locally known as Walker's Pond, and on the topographical map of the U. S. Geodetic Survey is termed "Walker Pond." The "Pond" is a beautiful sheet of fresh water, fed by springs. Its surface is perhaps twenty or thirty feet above the sea level, and though its southern extremity is perhaps less than one half mile from the waters of Eggmoggin Beach, yet the "Pond" is the source of Bagaduce River, which flows north and west to empty, after a few miles of travel, into Penobscot Bay. Surrounded by typical Maine woods and small meadows the "Pond," as viewed from the surrounding hills, lies like a blue sapphire jewel in its setting of variegated greens. In the parlance of bubbling youth, "It is perfectly beautiful!" And yet, though a little over two miles long and from one half to three quarters of a mile wide, this strikingly picturesque body of water is called a "Pond," "Walker's Pond." Fie upon these matter-of-fact Yankees! Because "Tom" Walker, or some other now forgotten Walker once lived and farmed on the shores of this pretty lake, it was dubbed pond. Why even the Indians could do better than that. They had enough appreciation of the beautiful to call it a lake, and to them it was "Lake Winneagwanauk." Now how much better that is. I move, Mr. Chairman, that we call it Winneagwanauk. Is there a second to the motion?

Places of Beautiful Scenery

There is so much scenery about here of rare beauty that the "natives" seem surfeited. The summit of "Caterpillar Hill,"—how's that for esthetic name of one of nature's observation towers—about two miles from the camp, and about four hundred feet above mean sea level, one can see, under the most favorable conditions of visibility, more than two hundred islands, large and small. These green wooded islands with their brown shore lines of granite and sand, scattered about the bosom of the blue Atlantic, form a scene so entrancing to the "Westerner" reared on the prairies of Iowa that he is awed almost into silence. Every time I pass over Caterpillar Hill I want to stop and "drink in" the beauty of the view. The Maine archipelago is there seen at its best.

But that is not all. A couple of days ago Brother and Sister M. H. Emerson, of Indian River, and I, with two others in his car had gone to South Brooksville to inquire for mail. Then someone said: "I wonder where that road goes." "Let's follow it," said another. We did, and got the pleasure which comes from traveling an unknown road. And scenery! Every once in awhile someone would exclaim: "Just look at that!"

We were traveling in a general northerly direction, and off to the westward, and northwestward we would catch views of water and islands and mainland shore which were extraordinarily fine. We were seeing the upper reaches of Penobscot Bay as it narrowed into the river of the same name. A little village lay on the west shore of the river, its white houses clearly outlined in the bright sunshine, the shades of green so characteristic of Maine woods and meadows forming a soft setting of fine effect. Granite rock shorelines, stretches of clear blue waters, islands and mainland, hills and rivers, all blending into a picture one longs to look at in leisure and record on camera films.

We returned from that short trip, once more convinced that maritime Maine presents views and scenes unrivalled. Puget Sound Saints, take notice.

The Prayer Meetings

This combined reunion of the Maine Districts began a few years ago. Following the advice of some of us who were trying to look forward a few years, a piece of ground was bought. The site selected was on Walker's Pond, Lake Winneagwanauk. It is about forty acres in extent. Last year the debt was paid off. A permanent wooden structure has been built. It is a combined dormitory and commissary. The cooking and eating are all done here. And this year the regular meals served numbered about one hundred and ten. Of course many more are served on Saturdays and Sundays. But that gives some idea of the number of "campers" on the ground. It is the best attendance yet had.

Here is something interesting: The first Sunday the prayer meeting was a union one, old and young. Monday morning the oldest and youngest divided, the oldsters meeting in the main tent, the others in a small building on the west side of the grounds. I presided over the "old folks" meeting. We had about twenty-seven present. When I learned that there were over fifty at the young people's meeting, I suggested a "swap" in meeting places, for the youngsters were crowded. So since the first day we old ones have been meeting in the auxiliary building, and the youth in the main tent, sixty to seventy strong. And I am told that the youngsters have been having good meetings. Well, so have we.

On Monday morning last, about one hour before prayer meeting, I noticed a large number of the youth in the water of the lake having a fine time in water sports. I wondered what would be the condition at prayer meeting time. Well, every youth in the camp was at the meeting. And throughout the camp quietude prevailed, and that has been the rule every morning.

And if you think these youngsters can't play, well you've got another guess. Afternoon is given to recreation, and after evening meeting a play hour is had. And I want to tell you it is refreshing to an oldster to see the zest with which those youngsters play.

Reasons for Good Attendance

Now, why the good attendance this off year? There may be several reasons; but here are two. First, the authorities have striven to make the reunion attractive to the youth, and have succeeded. Second, this year the reunion committee is feeding the campers for ten cents a meal. Think of that! How do they do it? Can't say exactly, but here are some factors: Newman Wilson, high priest and president of the Eastern Maine District, is cook. He presides over the kitchen and is, I think, about the hardest worker there. But I am not sure of that; for one seldom sees a better corps of workers. The work is well divided, and each tends to his own job, and not one cent is paid for labor. Wholesome food and plenty of it, but plain.

And here's another reason for cheap meals. One day I heard some one say to "the cook," "Who picks blueberries today?" The answer was, "The Vinalhaven crowd." And that afternoon I saw the "Vinalhaven crowd" returning from the blueberry field with well-filled pails and basins. And such blueberry pies as "Aunt Rose" does make!

And here's another reason: The "cook" one day says: "I'm going to have clam chowder, and want a clam digging gang." He got it, volunteers, in a few moments. And we had clam chowder, and plenty of it.

Now here's the result. There are many young people on the grounds, camping, who could not be here were it not for the low-priced (not cheap) meals and the free use of camp property like tents and bedding. And despite the low-priced meals, it looks now that the commissary will pay its way. "Newman's" happiness will be complete, if it does.

Up at Jonesport there is an organization of young Saints, known as the "Zion Builders." That group is learning the benefits of teamwork. All year they planned for this reunion. They earned money by plays, selling ice cream, and several ways. At the opening of the reunion they placed in Brother Wilson's hands a sum of money large enough to pay for all their meals at ten cents per meal. They are here. And who says they are not enjoying the reunion?

These Yankee Saints seem to have the idea that this camp is a training place for Zion. Well, if they keep on learning how to cooperate, and to pool their interests, and to work for a common cause, we may be assured there will be places where they will fit into the plan of Zion and her redemption.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

BROOKSVILLE, MAINE, August 18, 1932.

Blenheim, Ontario

Many fine sermons have been enjoyed by the Saints of this branch since last they wrote to the Herald.

Elder and Sister R. H. Jones are conducting church school in an interesting way.

The adult and senior young people's classes are studying Jesus and His Message by Sister Christiana Salyards. This is a book which should take a place of importance in the literature of the church. Blenheim students think that they will have a liberal, religious education when they have finished it. Lately they have been learning more about the material of which God's church is made. While the members read the references Elder Jones has been making black-board drawings to represent the true church. It is a superb structure with Christ as the chief cornerstone. The information these Saints are gaining from their study brings new realization that they should be the happiest people in the world. They are making preparation for life in the kingdom of God.

The women's department has earned some money sewing, and was able to have the church floor newly painted.

There are only a few Saints in Blenheim but they are growing and they hope to do many things for the Lord.

A. M. Baker at Hot Springs, Arkansas

Recently the Saints of this territory experienced one of the best conferences ever held at Hot Springs. The Spirit of the Master was truly in control. Elder A. M. Baker, missionary and district president, was in charge and the little church was filled to the last seat. Many sat out in their cars at the evening service. Brother Baker is highly esteemed not only by the Saints but by many other people of various faiths.

During the conference Apostle Roy S. Budd was here and delivered three wonderful sermons, admonishing the Saints to lay aside all things that hinder worship and loyalty to God and to give full support to the church. His visit was a happy occasion, and his ministry will not be forgotten.

Elder Hale W. Smith and wife attended the conference, Sister Smith acting as secretary. Brother Hale is a grandson of Joseph the Seer. He was asked to preach the closing sermon Sunday evening, and gave a splendid message.

Judge F. O. White and wife, of Searcy, Arkansas, were also present at the conference, and Brother White was in charge at the eleven o'clock service. As he stepped to the rostrum to introduce Apostle Budd as the speaker, the Spirit of the Master rested upon him and passed to the congregation of at least one hundred souls. All were made very happy, for the Spirit verified the truthfulness of the words of Brother White as he introduced an Apostle of Jesus Christ and his church.

Local Saints are looking forward to another meeting in the near future. Elder Baker just closed a fourteen-night series of gospel sermons preached on the lawn of Brother George F. Kettner's home. He used his picture machine at the close of each service, and attendance numbered between two hundred and two hundred and fifty. Surely Brother Baker has done much good in Hot Springs.

Local Saints have remembered Elder S. W. Simmons in their prayers, that his health and strength may be restored. Brother Simmons's visits to Hot Springs are well remembered, and his testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel still rings in the people's hearts.

Kirtland Reunion Is Outstanding

The Kirtland Reunion Association just closed an outstanding reunion at the historic Kirtland Temple. Ministers who have been present at many reunions, both at Kirtland and elsewhere, stated repeatedly that it was the outstanding experience of its kind within their memory.

The outstanding feature of the reunion was the daily prayer meeting. These meetings were characterized from beginning to end by the abundant presence of the Spirit of God. The gifts of the gospel were manifested, and much inspiring and comforting instruction was received through the medium of these gifts. The testimonies and prayers were of a singularly high order. Church members of all ages participated freely and intelligently.

The spirit which pervaded the prayer services extended to the class work and the preaching services. These, too, showed a quality very rarely excelled. Every man who participated seemed to feel the sympathetic helpfulness of the audience, and the blessing of the Spirit of God, and consequently arose to his best possibilities. Among the ministry who thus contributed were Patriarchs F. G. Pitt, Gomer T. Griffiths, and G. W. Robley, who added much to the reunion by way of their inspiring counsel, and Elders James E. Bishop, Thomas M. Carr, John L. Cooper, John R. Grice, A. E. Anderton, A. C. Silvers, and others. Bishop H. E. French was present the closing week-end of the reunion and made his usual able contribution. I have never seen a group of ministry work together in greater harmony or with a better spirit of mutual cooperation.

A number of administrations during the reunion were attended by a marked outpouring of the Holy Spirit, one such experience being the most outstanding that I have ever known and bringing to those who participated a rich assurance of the loving kindness of our heavenly Father and an important testimony of the authority of the priesthood when rightly exercised.

The spirit of reconciliation and mutual helpfulness was very abundantly present. The whole reunion was very happy to have Brother Leon A. Burdick present in the meeting, and to learn that he had repented of his withdrawal from the church and, impatient to be back where he belonged, has not waited for the slower processes of legal reinstatement, but has willingly submitted to the ordinance of baptism. It was very encouraging to have this one-time minister of the gospel back with us once again, and to share his joy in the presence of the Spirit.

The music of the reunion contributed much to the beauty and spiritual quality of the meetings. Sister Householder is to be especially commended for her excellent leadership in this department. Paul Weegar made a valuable contribution with his violin, and the singing of Amy Glassford and others was truly inspiring.

It is hardly to be expected that we can constantly maintain the high plane of spiritual understanding which was achieved during the reunion, but if such experiences can be repeated at frequent intervals throughout the entire church, there is no question but that we shall move rapidly to those higher planes of spiritual endeavor and understanding our Father desires us to occupy.

F. HENRY EDWARDS.

Charles Wildermuth Passes Away

The many friends of Elder Charles Wildermuth, son of Missionary and Sister L. O. Wildermuth, will sorrow to learn of his death a few days ago at the Pine Ridge, South Dakota, Government Hospital, after five weeks' illness of typhoid fever. His father was called from his field in Montana and his mother from the old home at Plano, Illinois, to be at his bedside during the last ten days. Nurses and other attendants were hopeful of his recovery until the last, but complications set in.

Brother Charley who was a teacher and an ex-Grace-lander, had taught for four years in the Government Indian School Service, in addition to several years teaching experience in Illinois. He leaves a wife and four small children, who are now in Plano.

The body was brought to Plano where funeral services were conducted August 21 from the church. Relatives and friends crowded the building, and beautiful floral offerings were sent, several from government officials and friends in the West.

The young man was following in the footsteps of his forefathers in love for and consecration to the church. His heart and soul were in the latter-day faith, and he acted as pastor of Sandwich Illinois Branch several years. He was a grandson of Eli M. Wildermuth, a charter member of the Reorganization with the Gurleys and Briggses, at Zarahemla and Beloit. Many will miss him.

Reunion for Saints of Northwest

Saints of Seattle, British Columbia, Spokane, and Portland Districts met August 5, at Silver Lake, Washington, to hold their joint reunion. That morning the group assembled to organize the reunion committee, and from the very first meeting the Spirit of God was present in great power.

Every day the campers labored, played, studied, and worshiped under the outpouring of this wonderful influence. Continuous class work filled the time each morning following the early prayer meetings. President F. M. McDowell and Elders A. C. Martin and H. I. Velt were teachers.

Two afternoons were taken for conference business of Seattle and British Columbia District. Otherwise the afternoons were left open for recreation. The following district officers were elected for the coming year: District president, Monte E. Lasater; director of Religious Education, Sister Emma McDole; treasurer, Frank Holmes; director of music, Austin Earl; secretary, Florence Earl. Bishop D. S. McDole, Frank Holmes, B. C. Wheeler, S. R. White, and Brother Stover were placed on the reunion committee.

From the ranks of the general church the Saints were glad to welcome Floyd M. McDowell of the First Presidency and James A. Gillen of the Quorum of Twelve. From Portland District came Brother Justin Verhy, district president, and Sister Fay Buchanan, who found her place in the musical work. Brother Stanley Fout, Spokane's district president, and Sister Fout were also present. Brother and Sister Alma Andrews, from Spokane, pleasingly contributed to the success of the reunion.

Many declared that this was the best reunion they had ever attended, and all confessed that it was wonderful. The Spirit of the Master was felt in every session, and the members enjoyed each other's companionship.

Story of Auditorium Lunchroom and Summer Canning

Many Thousand Quarts for Harvest Home Festival

Two thousand quarts of tomatoes, a thousand quarts of corn, three hundred and seventy-two glasses of jelly (pints and quarts), besides beans, plums and other vegetables and fruits. No, this isn't the inventory of a chain grocery store. It is the work, up to Thursday of last week, of the Three-I Club in preparation for the Harvest Home Festival.

The lunchroom at the east end of the Auditorium foyer is the scene of these canning activities, the Laurel Club having donated its use for this purpose during the summer months.

Almost the first sight as one enters the Auditorium is that of a counter of empty fruit jars near the lunchroom door. And through this door, on Thursday, poured the pungent odor of cooking tomatoes. Just inside stood a cart of half gallon jars filled with tomatoes and ready to be taken away. And everywhere were containers overflowing with the rosy fruit of the bush.

Everyone Eager to Help

It was early afternoon, and all the workers had not yet responded to the hurry-up-come-can call. But Mrs. W. L. Crull, head of the club canning committee, was there with her enthusiasm and directive ability. She is the one who is "responsible" for the summer work of the club, but she is never too tired to praise her helpers. "I could never get anything done if it were not for the faithful help of so many of the club and of some who are members of the groups in Independence."

"Those tomatoes are ready, Brother Johnson," she said replacing the lid on a huge, steaming kettle. "It just seems that everyone wants to help, old people, middle-aged, young people who are unemployed, and members of such organized classes as the Y. K. T. Class."

"Yes," contributed Brother Johnson, as he prepared to take a load of tomatoes to the "skinning" tables, "we work here every day and sometimes half the night."

"That's true," smiled Sister Crull. "It has been as late as one o'clock in the morning when we quit work."

Working With the Local Bishop

The Three-I Club (Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana), of which Brother W. A. Kelley is president, is working with the local bishopric in its summer canning undertaking, and the name of Brother J. Stanley Kelley is often on the lips of the workers. Some of the canning is done on shares; that is, for instance, in the case of a very busy housewife and mother, the club does the work of canning for a certain share of the canned fruit. From a list given her by the local bishop, Sis-Crull has called many who found it necessary to ask help of the Harvest Home Festival last winter, and has requested their help in the lunchroom, or has offered to show them how to do their own canning for the winter. Always she has received an enthusiastic response, and because of present hard times, many jars of fruit have already been carried into the homes of the people. They need it even before cold weather sets in.

"Yes, we're canning for the Harvest Home Festival," the canners agree. "There must be an abundant store this year."

Fruit and Vegetables Are Donated

And where do they get the fruit and vegetables? Just another evidence of mutual helpfulness and cooperation—it is donated. To Brother S. O. Smith, head of the garden committee, goes much of the credit for securing these donations. He keeps a watchful eye upon the community and whenever he learns of a farmer or grower with an oversupply of fruit or vegetables, he pays him a visit, tells him of the worthy effort of the Auditorium canners, and comes away with a generous gift of beans or tomatoes, corn, or whatever the farmer has. Sometimes, when the giver hasn't time to harvest his own crop, the workers go into garden, field, or orchard and get it. Only a few days ago a troop of sisters did valiant work picking a patch of sweet corn which had been given to them "for the Auditorium canners." In one day they picked, prepared, and canned this gift of corn.

Many Learn Canning Secrets

Canning is really an art, and moreover it is an art which not every housewife knows. The coldpack method of canning is used exclusively by the Three-I Club for the putting up of fruits and vegetables, and this summer many who have been unskilled in the art, have learned the secrets of the various processes. Not only are the canners helping to crowd the Harvest Home Festival shelves with good things, but they are teaching men and women how to do these things for themselves.

The lunchroom has the appearance of a canning factory. True it is not very large, but there is room enough. In the busiest seasons the three gas ranges keep the great kettles steaming. The workers who peel or skin the fruit, or cut the corn from the cob sit at long tables, and how their fingers fly!

Perhaps a piece of equipment of which the club is the most proud is the large steel vat made and donated by a steel mill in Kansas City. In it can be coldpacked at one time one hundred and sixty quarts of fruit. The vat is used in an outdoor oven. With the proper numbers of workers on hand, this vat greatly speeds up the canning business at the Auditorium.

Meanwhile canning goes on. The Three-I members and their friends and helpers are not tired of good works. And it is still more than a month until the Harvest Home Festival opens.

Kentucky, Tennessee, and Southern Missouri

During the first three weeks of July, I had the pleasure of holding services at the Bennington Heights Church, of the Kansas City Stake. Considering the intense heat which lasted throughout the meetings, the interest and attendance were excellent, and through follow-up work encouraging results are materializing.

Immediately after the closing Sunday night service of this series, I left for Saint Louis so as to reach Puryear, Tennessee, the following evening to attend the Kentucky-Tennessee reunion which was already in session. It was a great pleasure to meet again with Saints and friends in whose midst I had labored eight years ago. I was made happy to see the many faithful Saints standing at their post of duty. As I met the members from the different parts of the district, I was reminded of many pleasant experiences enjoyed together in times past.

Throughout the reunion the spirit of harmony and good will prevailed, and we felt the good spirit in the preaching of the word. The prayer meetings were very spiritual and uplifting. One morning a prayer and testimony service was permitted to continue as long as the interest justified. This meeting lasted from nine thirty o'clock until ten minutes after twelve, over two hours and a half. There were no real lengthy prayers or testimonies. The majority of those present were eager to occupy, so no time was lost. Many encouraging testimonies were offered and the spiritual gifts and blessings were manifest.

We found the district in much better condition than when we were last privileged to be there. It has progressed spiritually and increased numerically, and the opportunity for missionary effort apparently has never been better. Brother Thomas Newton has been an untiring worker as president of the district, and many words of appreciation were spoken the closing day of the reunion, as he was about to leave them, complimenting him for his work in the district.

Immediately following the reunion Brother Newton and I visited the Saints and friends of Springville and Paris, Tennessee. The midweek prayer service at Paris was attended by sixty. The following evening preaching service was held on the lawn, and we preached to one hundred and twenty-six Saints and friends. From this point Brother Newton went south and I went north. I held three-day services at Oakland and High Hill Branches. I have never seen the people anytime, anywhere more eager to hear the gospel than I did on this trip. The churches were filled to capacity at both places, and I was sorry that it was impossible for me to remain for an extended series of meetings at each place.

Some forty years ago, I understand, Elder T. C. Kelley organized High Hill Branch. This church stands on the crest of a high hill in southern Kentucky. It was here that a most wonderful interest was shown. I was told by the brothers that more than one hundred were unable to find seats the last night. Some stood in the aisles and others were unable to gain entrance. Over three hundred nonmembers were present that night. As stated in last week's Herald by Brother Leonard Lea: "People are now ready to listen to reason. They are in a sober and a reflective state of mind. . . . The present time offers religion and the church its greatest opportunity in many years. Would that we were ready to take advantage of the favorable time." And may we, as our brother further suggests, do what we can while conditions favor us.

I left the Kentucky-Tennessee district feeling very happy in having met once more the Ross families, the Gallimores, Seatons, Jamersons, Caldwelles, Bowlines, Shupes, Adairs, Dortchs, and many others too numerous to mention. Elder T. U. Thomas, who is president of the Foundry Hill Branch, is doing his part to build up the work there. We enjoyed his association in the reunion work.

On returning home by way of Poplar Bluff, Missouri, I spent a few days at Thayer, where I found a fine group of Saints, and a beautiful little stone church, which would be a credit to any community. On the hillside nearby is the beautiful home of Brother G. W. Davis and family. I occupied the pulpit at this place five times, and made several visits to the homes of the Saints, and appreciated the great welcome and southern Missouri hospitality and generosity. Following this I preached one evening at Torch, Missouri, and at Saint Louis was asked to speak to the Saints at the Wednesday evening prayer service. Jefferson City was my next stop, at which place I remained from Thursday evening over Sunday, preaching five times. The Jefferson City Branch deserves much credit for their faithfulness. They now have a very neat commodious place of meeting of their own, which is nicely arranged, and in a splendid community for missionary effort. Sunday evening we had over forty nonmembers present.

Thus ended a very pleasant twenty-eight day reunion and missionary trip. My report shows that during this four weeks I preached twenty-eight times at eight different places, fifteen were baptized by the writer and others, forty-five visits were made in the homes of Saints and nonmembers, and several hundred "Gospel Ladder" song tracts were handed out.

Southeastern Illinois Reunion

The annual reunion of Southeastern Illinois District was held at Brush Creek from August 12 to 22. Officers in charge were Apostle J. F. Garver, Patriarch Richard Baldwin, and the district presidency, R. L. Fulk, C. H. Wesner, and Ernest Roberson.

The prayer meetings were outstanding features of the reunion. God spoke through his servants by the spirit of prophecy a number of times.

Classes for adults were conducted by Brother Garver and Brother Baldwin. Sister Baldwin had charge of the children's classes. These sessions were held before and after noon each day. Preaching services, preceded by half an hour of congregational singing, came each evening.

A good spirit prevailed throughout the entire reunion, and the Saints who attended eagerly look forward to another reunion season.

Toronto District Reunion

Toronto district reunion commenced July 23, and continued until August 8, with an attendance during the week of about one hundred persons and two hundred and fifty for weekends, on the beautiful camp grounds at Lowbanks, Ontario. The grounds are situated on the north shore of Lake Erie, lying between Dunnville and Port Colborne, and afford wonderful facilities for bathing, on account of the excellent beach. Brother James Wilson, district president, and William Wilson, his brother, are the owners of the grounds, and generously give the Saints the use of them each year for the district reunion.

The reunion was in charge of the district presidency, who chose as their assistants Apostle D. T. Williams, and the district bishop, A. F. McLean. The Saints were favored in having with them the presiding patriarch of the church, Frederick A. Smith, Patriarch John Shields, Elders William I. Fligg, Grant St. John, Percy Farrow, and during the last of the camp, Patriarch John F. Martin and Elder R. S. Salyards dropped in.

The mornings were devoted to family prayer at seven in the preaching tent, then general prayer and testimony service at nine. The first week at 10 a. m. Apostle D. T. Williams taught a class on the subject, "Family Evangelism." He portrayed the advantages that might be gained to the church were each family of the church to select a family of non-members for evangelism, in this time of shortage of missionaries in the field. At 11 a. m. Elder J. L. Prentice, president of Toronto Branch, taught the subject, "The Background of Church History." These classes were well attended and appreciated. As these brothers had to leave to attend duties elsewhere during these hours the second week, Patriarch F. A. Smith conducted a round-table and gave much valuable information regarding the sacrifices and diligence of the Saints in his grandfather's time and since. Preaching followed at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m., the speakers being chiefly Patriarch F. A. Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elders Percy Farrow, William I. Fligg, R. S. Salyards, and Grant St. John. The sermons portrayed the old Jerusalem gospel in all its glory.

Patriarchs F. A. Smith and John Shields were busy giving patriarchal blessings.

The young people presented an inspiring spectacle marching down the beach where they held their prayer services, singing the songs of Zion. At the general prayer service the Spirit was poured out upon the people to a marked degree, and on three different occasions the gifts were enjoyed. The people were admonished to put from their minds and hearts anything that had a tendency to weaken or discourage them in the faith. They were reminded that God is still guiding in His church till the end, and although there would come crises in the church that would shake the confidence of many, those who remained faithful should return and build up the waste places of Zion. Also they were told that wars, pestilence, and famine would come, as His Son said they would, but He would stay in the hour of perplexities and discouragement, and would turn and overturn till His work was completed, if they put their trust in Him.

Elder B. H. Hewitt was in charge of the sports and was there most of the time. The leader of the girls, appointed by the reunion committee, was Sister Farrow, and the junior girls, Sister Prentice and Sister Marion McDonald. The leader of the boys, Bertram Gozzard. All these helpers made things jolly with their arrangement of activities, viz.: baseball, volley ball, swimming, and other games, and all those having sportive desires gleefully participated therein. The news-getter, the Camp Chatter, edited by B. H. Hewitt, Mary G. Clark, Bill Dean, et al, also provided a mirth-provoking element, after evening service.

Two Saturday evening concerts presented a variation of talent, the program including the singing contest, boys versus girls, (from 12 to 80 years inclusive). The boys got the decision. Both sides were splendidly conducted by S. G. Clark and Sister Daniels, respectively. Also a pantomime entitled, "Wanted, a Wife," was amusing and enlightening.

The reunion meals were delightful, and a reduction in price was made this year to meet the leanness of the times.

So the campers returned home, feeling that the Lord had been with Israel as they dwelt in tents, protecting them from weather conditions and renewing their faith.

Conference of Northern California

The conference of Northern California District convened at East Bay Church in Berkeley, California, from the evening of July 29, until the evening of the thirty-first. On the evening of the twenty-ninth institute work was begun under the direction of Miss Elva Sturges and Apostle G. G. Lewis. The general theme of this work was centered around the need for continuing guidance and intelligent direction of our religious educational program. The conference enjoyed the spirit of light which prevailed in these classes. Two worship services were conducted by Elder Arthur Oakman, district missionary.

Saturday morning, July 30, the conference opened officially with the singing of the traditional "Redeemer of Israel." After the prayer the organization of the conference proceeded; the district president, G. P. Levitt, Apostle G. G. Lewis, and Elder Arthur Oakman, were chosen to preside and to arrange the program, and the secretarial work was delegated to Mr. Schaffer in the absence of Miss Mary Steele, district secretary. Various statistical and ministerial reports were read by the president who afterwards delivered his opening address. In a very able manner he analyzed the status of the district and pointed out several ways in which the work might be enhanced, bringing to the conference several recommendations which were afterwards adopted. From this address came also the theme for the conference—"Carry On." The financial reports both of a general and local nature were read and adopted subject to audit.

The afternoon session transacted the business of the coming year. Reports from the departments of Religious Education, music, and finance were read and adopted. The following officers were elected. G. P. Levitt was reelected to the office of district president. He chose as his assistants, W. H. Dawson, of Sacramento, and J. A. Dameron, of Tulare. Mary Steele was chosen district secretary; Bishop Edward Ingham, district treasurer; Hazel Blohm, head of Religious Education, and for the department of music Miss Christiana Waller was selected. Bishop Ingham was sustained as bishop for the district. Growing out of the district president's report, some matters discussed one of which contemplated the election of a committee to report to the spring conference on the state of the reunion grounds at Irvington, this committee to recommend what in its opinion was the most profitable course to pursue with regard thereto. J. B. Carmichael, H. A. Hintz, J. A. Dameron, M. F. Ralston, and Frank Greer were chosen as this committee. Elder Levitt urged, at the close of the business session, a greater sacrificial endeavor in order that the expenses of the district work might be cared for effectively during the coming year. The evening classwork was much enjoyed as also was the inspiring sermon delivered by Elder Arthur Oakman.

The activities for Sunday began with an early morning prayer service held in the upper auditorium of the church. This was well attended and a fine spirit was manifested which carried over into the worship service which followed.

The morning message, delivered by Apostle G. G. Lewis, stressed the need of individual contact with God and the vision which always comes thereby. Elder G. P. Levitt addressed the conference in the afternoon, urging the necessity of a heartfelt Christianity. The evening classwork and sermon were conducted by Apostle G. G. Lewis.

This district was saddened by the passing of Bishop Cecil Hawley on July 24. He was an able minister and well loved by all. The conference paused for a moment in memory of him, and a resolution of condolence was sent by authority of the conference to his family.

Apostle G. G. Lewis was well received. His simplicity and genuine affection for people have won him many friends here. The conference was well attended; the spirit of light was present, and although the tasks ahead are big, the Saints feel that no right effort is going to be lost, and the final purposes for which the church exists must be triumphant. They are heartened for the future.

Independence

Independence members were happy once more to hear Apostle F. Henry Edwards at the Campus Sunday night. After a two weeks' absence from this city while he attended the Kirtland reunion, Brother Edwards took up his Sunday evening series of sermons with a masterful discussion of the song theme, "'Tis a Glorious Thing to Be in the Light." Music for the evening was furnished by the Auditorium Band and by a quartet.

Numbers of Saints, young people and middle-aged, went on missionary trips Sunday evening in accordance with the following assignments: Enoch Hill and Englewood to Ather-ton; Liberty Street and Walnut Park to Blue Springs; Second Church and Gudgeon Park to Grandview; Spring Branch, East Independence, and Sugar Creek to Bates City, and Stone Church to Lees Summit. It is the custom of these visitors to help the branch visited by supplying an appropriate musical program and the evening's speaker. A surprisingly good response is being given this movement, which is sponsored by the Young People's Council of Independence. This council will also sponsor a historical trip to Far West September 25.

Independence boys and girls are hunting up their school books in preparation for the opening of school next Monday, Labor Day. High school students are registering this week.

Exceedingly good and helpful prayer meetings have been enjoyed in many of the groups in Independence during the summer months, and are a source of encouragement to the members.

Local plans for the Harvest Home Festival are going forward. Such worthy organizations as the women's department, the Three-I Club, the Northwest Club, and many others are thoroughly interested in working with the bishop to provide for winter needs among church and community groups.

Church school workers are preparing for the Training School of Religious Education, to be conducted by the general Department of Religious Education at the Stone Church September 12 to 23. Teachers for the ten night sessions include several general church officers and others specialized in their fields of activities, and classes will stress study materials, program, and methods. More definite announcements of the school's organization and plan will be made later.

Stone Church

About once each year the Stone Church congregation is privileged to hear a sermon by Elder C. E. Wight, president of Kansas City Stake. Last Sunday morning was one of these rare occasions, and he presented an optimistic sermon, proving by events of history that the people of the present day, even though passing through the exigencies of hard times, have many blessings for which to be thankful. He emphasized the idea that it is better to have tried and failed than never to have tried.

"O Lord, Our Governor" was the anthem sung by the Stone Church Choir, led by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied by Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee. LeRoy Smith, bass soloist, sang "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains."

Enoch Hill Church

The class of girls taught by Ruth Hayes was in charge of the church school hour Sunday morning, August 21, and the program consisted of a piano solo by Dick Maloney and several numbers by the girls. C. E. Beal offered the benediction.

A quartet composed of Martha and Pearl Chrestensen and Helen and Margaret McDonald, sang "The Rock That Is Higher Than I," at the eleven o'clock service.

Elder William Cowan, of the Stone Church, was the speaker Sunday morning, and for a Scripture lesson he read 1 Nephi 3 and Doctrine and Covenants 94. He classified our religion in three parts—Restoration, Reorganization, and Redemption. At the close of the sermon the chorister requested Dick Bullard, to sing as a solo the hymn "It Was Spoken for the Master." This song harmonized well with the sermon.

Under the direction of Sister Amos Allen the choir which has been recently reorganized, is doing excellent work. It is growing in attendance.

About thirty young people from the classes of Ruth Hayes and Gene McKean had a special treat last Wednesday night when they were guests of Brother and Sister L. R. Street. Brother and Sister Street who live at the edge of town on Blue Springs Road, have equipped their lawn similar to a miniature park. Here the young people enjoyed watermelon and games, and left thanking their host and hostess for the good time given them.

The worship program of the church school Sunday morning, August 28, was in charge of Elder H. L. Barto's class. They selected "Loyalty" as their theme and the following program was rendered: Song, "Loyalty Unto Christ," by the congregation; talk on "Trust" by Fred Burrows; vocal solo, "Give of Your Best to the Master," Marjorie Thomas; story, "His Place for You," Marguerite Maloney; piano solo, Richard Maloney.

At the morning preaching hour Alfred Waters played a clarinet solo, "The Holy City," and Mrs. Henrietta Allen sang "Open the Gates of the Temple," after which Pastor H. L. Barto preached to the Saints, admonishing them to come up higher and occupy in the high places in which it is their privilege as Saints of God to be.

The attendance of both church school and the preaching hour was affected by the burning of Brother Richard Bullard's house. The fire was under such headway before it was discovered that nothing was saved. The sympathy of the Saints goes to this family in their loss.

A good representation of the young people went to Ather-ton Sunday night on a missionary tour. The program consisted of two numbers by the ladies' quartet, a piano solo by Richard Maloney, and a vocal solo by William Worth. Elder Barto was the evening speaker.

The young people at a meeting Monday evening reelected their three representatives on the Independence Council of Young People, Fred Burrows, Ruby Johnson, and E. H. McKean, and also reorganized for activities on Enoch Hill. Fred Burrows was chosen president of the local organization, his counselors to be Ruby Johnson and E. H. McKean. Ruth Grayer was chosen secretary; Pauline Alexander, treasurer; and Dick Maloney, pianist. September 9 this group will sponsor a social which will be their first of the winter social activities. The club will meet once each month.

Spring Branch Church

Pastor George W. Eastwood talked to the young people on "Going Forward" Sunday morning at the church school hour. He told them that he was sure they were willing and ready to go forward when the opportunity comes.

The speaker at eleven o'clock, Brother Jesse Smith, used for his topic, "Tithing or the Financial Law." He took his text from Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments." The assistant pastor, Robert Fish, was in charge of the service, assisted by Brother Clair Austin. An anthem was sung by the junior choir.

Brother C. D. Brewer, in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer meeting last week, read the twenty-third Psalm. Songs in harmony with this reading were sung, and many who were present bore fine testimonies. The prayer meeting Sunday morning was in charge of Alma Tankard and Omar Sedoris. An encouraging number attended, and a fine spirit was there.

The young people enjoyed a "hob" party the evening of August 23, under the leadership of Brother Joseph Farrow, at the home of Gladys Smith. More than thirty were present. Games were played and Mulligan stew was served.

East Independence Church

This branch regrets the removal of the Alvin Christensen family. They had been here only a short time, but had been of valuable service in music, teaching loyalty and dependability by their promptness and presence at services. The health of Sister Christensen made the move necessary. A farewell party was given them at the home of Brother and Sister C. Edgerton on the eve of their departure and most of the branch was there. Games, a social time, and refreshments passed the time, and the pastor and church school director, in short speeches, told Brother Christensen of the gratitude of the congregation for their help. A small gift was presented in appreciation of services.

Among the recent speakers was T. W. Thatcher, local bishop's agent, who spoke on "A Live Church," reminding the members of the necessary services and attitudes to make a live church. Elder C. A. Kress, missionary, appealed to the Restored Church to rise to the issues of the day, urging the members, with Zion in their hearts, to blot out sorrow and suffering by deeds of love and kindness. Brother Cornelius Edgerton, director of Religious Education, spoke on "The Doctrine and Covenants," telling what the book is and its uses, and stressing the need for the Saints to be filled with the spirit of understanding. Elder D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education in Zion, closed the month's sermons with the subject, "Road to Zion," showing the roads that lead away from Zion and those that lead to Zion. His effective sermon held an especial appeal to the youth.

The priesthood are making a great effort to visit all the homes of the members in the district. They meet at the church each Tuesday evening and prayerfully prepare to go out two by two to visit in the homes.

Successful junior services are held two Sundays of each month, Sister Alta Dutton in charge.

A pleasant evening was spent by many of the local members Sunday evening when the Spring Branch Community Chorus with which many from East Independence are associated, was invited by the Unity School of Christianity, at the Unity Farm about fifteen miles south of Independence, to present a song program at an open-air service. This is one of the most wonderful farms in the country, there being several hundred acres beautifully landscaped, fine commodious homes and public buildings, a dairy farm, and orchards and vineyards well plotted and maintained. A natural amphitheater on the farm is comfortably seated and with a large concrete platform for speaker and band or chorus, makes an ideal place for out-door services. The chorus of about forty members received much praise for its work.

Two-week Series at Caraway, Arkansas

Local Saints are rejoicing over a two weeks' series of meetings held here by Elder A. M. Baker. Such an opportunity is afforded only about once a year.

Large crowds heard Brother Baker's messages. He preached in a grove which was equipped to seat all the people, and seemed to interest many not of the church with his pictures pertaining to the teachings of the Book of Mormon. He also showed scenes from the life of Christ and Paul's missionary journeys.

Five new members were added to this group, and these young people will be examples to others. Surely good seed was sown here. Caraway members will welcome Brother Baker at any time, or others of the traveling ministry. Local Saints hope that an elder will locate here in order that a branch may be organized.

Three children were blessed during Brother Baker's visit. This ordinance was new to some people here. Also an aged sister was administered to, that her health might be restored in her old age.

The meeting closed August 14.

Caraway has a nice Sunday school attended by about fifty. The young people's class went on a picnic August 17, and spent the day swimming and fishing. They are planning a surprise for Brother Baker.

The Saints are working to establish an active church organization in this place. They look forward to a time when they can be of more service to God and his church.

An Apostle Completes Busy Reunion Season

Kavanagh, Alberta, August 20.—The reunion season is now over, and we feel that the time has been well spent. The fine reunions that I have attended have had a fair number present and a splendid spirit has been manifested. These reunions were held at Chetek, Wisconsin; Logan, North Dakota; Weyburn Plains, Saskatchewan; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and Edmonton, Alberta.

While the depression is felt everywhere, the attendance at these different gatherings has been good. More and more the Saints are realizing their need of the gospel and anxiously looking forward to a Zion where conditions will be much improved.

As some of the reunions have already been reported to the Herald, I shall not repeat. The Saskatoon reunion and conference was the largest gathering I have ever seen in that district. On my way West from there I stopped at Ribstone, Alberta, and preached four times and baptized five persons.

Then I went to the Cornish settlement, near Senlac, Saskatchewan, and held meetings for four days. On Sunday a basket dinner was served on the grounds. Attendance was large and the day was well spent. Sunday night the hall was crowded and several stood outside. A fine spirit was present and all seemed happy in gospel work. Elder J. J. Cornish is ripening in years but happy and full of faith in the gospel of Christ.

A fine crowd gathered at Edmonton, Alberta, for the three-day conference which proved to be of much interest to all present. A number of Saints from Bon Accord, Alberta, attended the conference. I was invited to go home with them, so on Monday night, after the conference, we began a meeting that lasted ten days during which time we organized a Sunday school of about forty members, baptized twelve persons, organized a branch of about thirty-five, and ordained an elder, a priest, and a teacher. Two babies were also blessed.

Some members of the Baptist Church attended our meetings part of the time, and later I was requested to meet their minister and talk over the differences between us. Arrangements were completed and two Baptist ministers and I spent three and a half hours canvassing the differences between the two churches in the presence of several members. We believe much good was accomplished.

Last night I held a meeting in our church at Millet with a fair-sized crowd and will continue for a few days, then on to Calgary for a week.

The harvest is great and many more laborers are needed to fill the numerous calls for preaching. We have many fine Saints in this mission, and while great numbers of them are isolated, they are rejoicing in the gospel of Christ.

While in Southern Saskatchewan District we organized a branch at Regina, Saskatchewan, which gives promise of good work in the future. We have about thirty-five members there.

J. F. CURTIS.

Lachine, Michigan

Saints of this branch have of late been encouraged to go on to do their best. Elder J. J. Ledsworth and wife have just closed a series of meetings at a little town called Long Rapids about three miles north of Lachine. Brother Ledsworth is the district missionary. Much good was accomplished, and eight souls were added to the fold. Others are near their decision and waiting for the return of the Ledsworths from the Northern Michigan reunion, held at the Park of the Pines at Boyne City.

Lachine Saints tried to do their duty by being present and helping with the music, and Brother and Sister Ledsworth made many friends by their pleasant and winning ways.

The loss of a sister in this group has saddened all. Mrs. Murdock McLennen passed away a short time ago, and her pleasant smile is missed. She leaves her husband and nine children. May God be with and comfort the family.

Sister J. B. Cole, an aged woman whose leg was injured over a year ago, made the local congregation rejoice when she was present at a recent meeting and bore her testimony, "God be praised," as firmly as ever before.

Logan, Iowa

A two-day institute was held in the branch, June 4 and 5, for the benefit of the members of the district, beginning Friday night with a preaching service. President Floyd M. McDowell was in charge of the class work which was along the line of training for leadership. Apostle J. F. Garver and Elder E. Y. Hunker were also speakers.

An all-day meeting with a basket dinner at the park July 10, was well attended. Ten were baptized, four of them adults, and four little ones were blessed.

The branch was saddened by the passing, August 11, of one of the younger members, Sister Darlene Spanswick. Besides her husband, David Spanswick, she leaves to mourn her loss her father and mother, Brother and Sister H. R. Salts, six brothers, two sisters, and many other relatives and friends. Though but twenty-three years of age, her life has been such that we mourn not as those who have no hope, but feel that death is but the gateway opening to her feet to a life of richer, fuller joy and service beyond.

In addition to the work of the local priesthood the pulpit has been filled at different times during the summer by brothers from neighboring branches, among them E. L. Edwards, of Pomeroy, and Fred Fry, E. R. Rosenberger, and Howard Reynolds of Woodbine.

Under the leadership of Floyd Hirst the young people have been meeting for recreation at the school grounds each Friday evening. Volley ball and kittenball form the chief means of entertainment.

The happy culmination of a Graceland romance was solemnized at the church Thursday morning at seven o'clock, August 18, when Mabel Alice Killpack became the wife of Lester Warren Hill, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, Bishop W. R. Adams officiating. The bridal party entered to the strains of the wedding march, played by Mrs. George Carlile, sister of the bride. Under a white, flower-trimmed archway the young couple took their vows, attended by Miss Neva Carlile as bridesmaid and Don Chesworth of Fall River, Massachusetts as best man. The double ring ceremony was used, little Donald Carlile carrying the rings on a white pillow. Alice Carlile, flower girl, strewed the path to the altar with flower petals. Preceding the ceremony Miss Pearl Darrington sang "O, Promise Me" and "Because." After a wedding breakfast at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. J. J. Killpack, the happy couple left for their home in Saint Joseph, followed by the good wishes of a host of friends.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Attendance has increased at nearly all meetings, and it is hoped that the coming of cooler weather will bring new zeal to the members.

Among the visitors to Lincoln during July were Elder and Sister C. B. Hartshorn, of Des Moines, and Doctor David Allen Anderson, of South Dakota, brother of Lincoln's pastor. These men each spoke at a morning service.

Sister Esther Schrunk with her class of boys and girls enjoyed a picnic at Epworth Park last month. Swimming and boating were the chief recreations.

The Loyal Workers are quilting the second quilt pieced and given to them by Sister Horn who is advanced in years. While she is unable to attend church services, her heart is still full of love for the church and her interests are centered about it.

Several weeks ago Sister B. M. Anderson and two daughters, Mrs. A. W. Hulmes, of Kansas City, and Rogene Anderson, and granddaughter, Barbara Hulmes, visited Sister Doris Fredrick at Joliet, Illinois. They also visited at Nauvoo and at Carthage, Illinois.

June 27, being the anniversary of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Sister Anderson talked at the morning service on Sunday, June 26, describing Carthage jail and the death and burial of the Martyrs.

Lincoln Saints responded liberally to the call to sacrifice in the month of June. Brother Wall reported a sum of three hundred and fifty dollars sent to the Bishop from this branch. The programs outlined in the Herald were faithfully carried out here.

At the June meeting of the department heads Brother Poague introduced plans for the church school and programs were made for the last half of the year. At the teachers and officers meeting July 11, the young adults were merged with the older adults, as each class was studying the Book of Mormon. Sister Anderson is the teacher. Weekly recreation was planned to be in charge of Brother and Sister Schrunk.

Institute at Carthage, Missouri

About two hundred and fifty attended the two-day institute held at Carthage Branch, Spring River District, and this number represented sixteen branches.

Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, was the instructor and presented a goodly portion of the Spirit which enabled him to present his message in a splendid manner. His subject was "Building up the Local."

The meetings were in charge of the district presidency, Amos T. Higdon, of Independence, Andy Jones, of Columbus, and Ronald Smith, of Pittsburg.

Sister Mollie Davis, Sister C. C. Koehler, Brother and Sister Harvey, and Vera and Marjory Sheehy, of Independence, attended the meetings. Brother and Sister McIntosh, formerly of Independence, also were present.

A good prayer meeting was enjoyed Saturday morning and followed by classes. An entertainment was held after the evening preaching service. Brother Amos T. Higdon preached the closing sermon Sunday night.

Our Departed Ones

CHRISTENSEN.—Carrie Larsen Christensen was born near Copenhagen, Denmark, May 1, 1850. Died August 20, 1932, at her home at Tigris, Missouri. She was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints into which she was baptized October 7, 1877, in Fayette Township, Iowa, by A. S. Carpenter. Died firm in the faith. Surviving are her husband, J. C. Christensen, one sister, Mrs. Mary Anderson, of Sutton, Nebraska; one brother, Chris Larsen, of Denver, Colorado; four sons: George G., Alfred A., and Lehi L., of Independence, Missouri, and Walter W., of Tigris; one daughter, Mae M. Lionberger, of Wichita, Kansas; twenty-three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Two sons preceded her in death. She had been a resident of Tigris for thirty-three years. Was an excellent home-maker and a woman well loved and respected by the community. She bore great affliction until the last and passed away surrounded by her children. The funeral was conducted on the lawn of her home, Elder C. B. Freeman officiating, and witnessed by a large gathering of friends and neighbors. Her sons acted as pallbearers. She was laid to rest near her home beside her son, Nephi N.

WILDERMUTH.—Charles Rex Wildermuth was born August 18, 1902, near Necedah, Wisconsin, died August 17, 1932, at Pine Ridge, South Dakota. He was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester O. Wildermuth, and grandson of Eli M. Wildermuth, of Plano. Until about four years of age he lived at Necedah, Wisconsin. He then moved to Plano, where he spent his school days, graduating from both the grade school and the community high school. He attended Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, for two years. He then entered the teaching profession spending much labor in the local vicinity. At the age of twenty-one he married Miss Doris Barnes, of Los Angeles, California. Two sons and two daughters were born to them. The last four years he and his wife have been teaching and caring for an Indian day school on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation near Kyle, South Dakota. He was ill about five weeks with typhoid fever and succumbed to this illness August 17, 1932. He was baptized into the church at an early age, ordained a teacher in 1921, and an elder in 1925, after which he took charge of pastoral work in Sandwich, Illinois, until he went West to begin work with the Indians. He was laid to rest in the Plano Cemetery August 21. The funeral services were in charge of J. M. Blakely, local pastor, assisted by Roscoe E. Davey. He leaves to mourn, his wife; two sons, Rex and Blair; two daughters, Elsa Jean and Helene May; his parents, and two brothers, Jerome and Richard, besides a host of other relatives and friends.

Health Greetings

God loves all the Saints, but all sinful conduct is grievous before Him and he can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. When you suffer the LORD is also compelled to suffer as you truly have been ingrafted and become a part of the Vine. PLEASE don't partake of foods that are detrimental to your own welfare, that of others and the LORD also. Be a good Saint. If Hog is not good for dogs why use it as a food? If white flour is destructive to all animal life why do you tamper with it?

Over 90% of all Cancer, Tumors and skin trouble come directly from HOG—dirty, filthy, diseased, scavengers. Go slow on white sugar, vinegar, tomatoes, lard, imitation butter, coffee, tea, hot foods of any kind.

If you are not normal, if your living is high, if we can't solve both problems our foods are free. Send us one or two dollars for food. If we don't please you in every way, we will refund every penny. Truly we can be of great service to you. Our 31 years of active business in the Food game has brought us to the point that we can say, "I KNOW."

Study Manuals for the Ministry

The new church school year begins October 1, 1932. As part of the church school effort for the new year, pastors and church school leaders are invited to organize special classes for the priesthood. These classes may be held during the week or on Sunday at some time other than the regular church school hour, if possible, so as to free the members of the priesthood for participation in the regular church school activities. If this is not desirable because of local conditions, then the priesthood study classes may be included as part of the church school.

The Priesthood Manual (forty-five cents) has already been issued, and while it is planned primarily as a reference book it will be found valuable for systematic class study. We are anxious to sell out the remaining copies of the priesthood manual which should be in the hands of every member of the priesthood, so as to free the money tied up in them for the printing of other priesthood material.

In addition to the Priesthood Manual two series of lesson study pamphlets are being prepared for use in priesthood classes and for guidance in individual study. These series will include pamphlets bearing the following titles:

These study manuals are being issued as near cost price as possible. Under present economic conditions it is not possible to stock up a great number of them in the hope of having them purchased at a later date. As fast as a reasonable number of the earlier study manuals are sold out money will become available and will be invested in the later pamphlets.

Printing by Mail—A New Herald Office Service

The Herald Office has paid its expenses during the last two years by handling commercial printing as well as the regular periodicals and publications. It is fortunate that this is true, for otherwise the office would have to be sustained by general church funds.

A good commercial printing business will enable our publishing house to be a financial asset to the church rather than a liability.

Our people can help the church by sending their printing business to the Herald Publishing House, rather than having it done locally. Write for prices and suggestions, and make your own comparisons. We can probably save money for you, and you know that whatever profit is made goes to help the church.

A special quick service is being arranged, and the processes of the shop speeded up for a twenty-four hour schedule from the receipt of the order until the shipment of the finished product.

We offer more than a printing service. We will also help you plan your work if you wish it.

Remember that the Herald Publishing House is a church institution. When it makes money, the profit goes to the church. If you can turn some of your business our way, you will help the church.

Ward A. Hougas Takes Charge of Herald Publishing House

The Herald Publishing House will have its affairs directed by a new Business Manager, Elder Ward A. Hougas, according to a recent decision of the Board of Trustees.

Brother Hougas will at the same time continue to serve in his present capacities as President of Far West Stake, and Pastor of First Saint Joseph Church, in which work he has made an admirable record and won many friends. The people there feel that they can not spare him, and he is trying to keep up the several tasks. We are glad, at the same time, to welcome Brother Hougas and his family to Independence.

Brother Hougas has a record of achievement that promises good times for our publications: He is a successful newspaper man, and something of a specialist in building up the business of publishing houses. He is also a devoted church worker. His energy and enthusiasm have been greatly appreciated wherever he has gone.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

It is suggested that prayers for the sick can be made effectively at the Wednesday evening prayer services, and at the monthly sacrament services. We hope that our readers will also remember the sick in their private prayers.

Friendly letters will be written by members of the staff to those who are discouraged or isolated from church privileges, and to those requesting prayers whose letters indicate that they are able to receive mail.

Sister E. D. Smith, of Spring Branch congregation, Independence, requests the Saints to fast and pray for her on the Wednesday of September 14, and to remember her at the prayer meeting. She has been an invalid for a number of years and has two children depending on her for their care. Her husband died a few years ago, leaving her with all the responsibility. Her need is great.

Sister Effie Mae Smith, of Lincoln, Nebraska, writes that her mother, Mrs. Susan J. Mecham, of Chico, California (Route 3, box 190), has been confined to her bed for more than six weeks now as a result of an injury received in a fall. The doctors say that it will be a long time before she can walk, if ever. Her suffering is severe. Sister Smith herself is unable both physically and financially to go to her mother, and asks the Saints to remember her mother in prayer that if it be the will of the Lord she may recover and be relieved from her suffering. Sister Mecham has been a faithful member of the church and is in great need of a blessing.

A sister in the mid-west asks earnest prayers for two young friends, both of whom have suffered from nervous breakdowns and serious mental disturbances. One is a college girl, and the other a young married woman. Under the circumstances the sister does not feel like giving their names, but she has faith to believe that they can be restored if it is the will of God.

Laymen, as a rule, do not realize the importance of church attendance. If they did they would not so often allow a cloud, or a shower, or a wind, or a snow, or a caller, or a newspaper, or a headache or a fit of laziness to keep them home. A minister deserted by his representative men dies. He dies by inches. No man can preach with sustained fire and hope whose leading people show by their desultory attendance that public worship is to them one of the incidentals or electives of life.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.—George Washington.

OFFICIAL

Financial News

We are submitting herewith a comparative statement of income for the month of July, 1931-1932. It is to be noted that seventeen districts reported larger receipts for July this year than for the same month a year ago, while 68 stakes and districts reported less.

The total budget requirements for operating expenses alone are $24,000.00 per month. The amount received in July was $21,880.28, leaving a deficit of $2,119.72. It is to be noted, however, that four reports are still outstanding at the time of closing the books for July and the amount received may make up most of the deficit.

In the face of existing conditions we think the July report is quite gratifying. We ask the continued support of the Saints in the succeeding months of the year.

Joseph Smith Centennial

The General Conference of 1932 set apart Sunday, November 6, for church-wide celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, late president of the church. This date is now but two short months away and the authorities of districts, branches, and church schools should be pushing their plans for the occasion toward completion.

It is suggested that wherever possible district meetings be held, so that the combination of talent will make a more outstanding celebration possible.

An ably written pageant has been prepared by Mrs. Alice May Burgess, author of the Centennial Pageant, covering a number of the outstanding scenes in the life of our late president. This is being published in the September Vision. Work on preparation of this pageant will need to begin at once. Extra copies of Vision can be secured from the Herald Office fifteen cents per copy.

Further suggestions will appear in the Herald from time to time. Watch this column. F. H. E.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle J. W. Rushton in His Mission

When Apostle John W. Rushton landed at Southampton, England, July 31, he was met by Brother Judd, and taken at once to Enfield, where the annual reunion of the Southern District was in session. There he experienced a busy time, helping, making new friends, and meeting old ones. In August his work as Apostle in charge of the European Mission took him to other points in England: Birmingham, Clay Cross, and Mansfield.

Brother Rushton's immediate plans include a trip to Norway and after that, a survey of the church work on the Continent.

In Kirtland One Hundred Years Ago

One hundred years ago this month and next, the elders of the church were gathering from their "several missions" to Kirtland. There on Saturday and Sunday, September 22 and 23, they were blessed with the revelation on lineal priesthood, now section 83 in our Doctrine and Covenants. Of this communication church history says: "This is an important revelation, containing much instruction and many glorious promises, and is a cheering recognition of their arduous labors, which they had performed by much sacrifice and under adverse circumstances."

At this season of the year Joseph Smith was spending his time translating the Inspired Version of the Bible and ministering to the churches in Ohio.

Signs of the Fall Season

Now that the children are marshaling their books and pencils and going back to school, church workers are reminded that there are numerous signs of the fall season.

The summer reunion season is closed. This week's issue of the Herald carries a report of the latest scheduled reunion, that of Far West Stake, Missouri.

Word comes that President Frederick M. Smith is working his way home, branch by branch. After a summer of church work among the Saints in the East, he is stopping with many groups on his way home. He plans to arrive in Independence about the middle of the month.

The increased volume of letters to the Herald indicates that numbers of correspondents are now home from vacations and "back on the job."

News from the branches discloses the fact that the church school year is drawing to a close. September 25, is Promotion Day, and then the church schools begin a new quarter and a new year.

Preparations for the Harvest Home Festival in Independence and for local festivals are beginning to take definite form. Already the Harvest Home Festival Committee at the Auditorium is receiving raw products for display at the festival in October.

Apostle J. F. Curtis is home from an extensive summer's work in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Canada. His smiling face was a welcome sight at the Stone Church Sunday morning.

Politics is taking its share of attention, reminding everyone of the approaching November election.

"Little Calumet" at Western Oklahoma Reunion

Thirty-four young people from Calumet Branch attended part of the reunion sessions of Western Oklahoma District, at Eagle City. Their camp, "Little Calumet," was a lively place, and much fun was had. The young visitors gained many spiritual and social benefits during their stay "at reunion." They were particularly inspired by the sermons of Apostle Roy S. Budd.

Missionary H. I. Velt Testifies of Reunion

That the reunion of Seattle and British Columbia, Spokane, and Portland Districts, at Silver Lake, Washington, was a "foretaste of heaven," is the testimony of Missionary Harold I. Velt who was there. In a letter to the Herald, published in another column of this issue, he tells of the perfect harmony, the spiritual peace and fraternity, the large attendance, the responsiveness of the Saints, the order, the dignity and the many other characteristics of this reunion.

Marked Gratitude of Arkansas Young People

At the close of the very successful missionary meetings recently conducted by Elder A. M. Baker at Caraway, Arkansas, the gratitude of the young people took a very material form. They took the missionary's measure for a new suit. Not to be outdone by their elders the little boys and girls of the Sunday school class waited upon Brother Baker to learn the size of his head. They intend to pick cotton "to buy a new hat for the preacher."

Birmingham, England, Saints Grow

Many blessings have been enjoyed by Saints of Birmingham, England, in the past few months. Nine have been baptized into the church. The congregation gave Apostle John W. Rushton a special welcome. Prayer services are most helpful, and attendance is good. Indeed all their activities attest to the fact that this congregation is growing in faith and works.

Why a First Presidency in the Church?

By Elbert A. Smith

In the Latter-Day Dispensation

Under the glory which shone around Cumorah and the divine light which came with the angel's message, Joseph Smith moved out to organize the church. Think you he made a dismal failure within the first two years? This is what we are sometimes asked to believe.

Joseph worked according to the will and commandment of God. And it was said:

For thus saith the Lord God, him have I inspired to move the cause of Zion in mighty power for good, and his diligence I know, and his prayers I have heard.—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2. Book of Commandments 22: 8.

No suspicion here in the mind of Omniscience that within two years Joseph would be "moving the cause of Zion for evil" by exalting himself to a position foreign to and incompatible with the kingdom of God. Who is wiser than our Lord in this matter, let him speak.

As early as March, 1832, the following was given to Joseph Smith by revelation:

Verily, verily I say unto you, my servant, Frederick G. Williams, Listen to the voice of him who speaketh, to the word of the Lord your God, and hearken to the calling wherewith you are called, even to be a high priest in my church, and a counselor unto my servant, Joseph Smith, jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood. . . . Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1.

Passing by other revelations, the principle "shadowed" forth in the Mosaic economy is clearly set forth in the following:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

The Book of Commandments ends abruptly in the midst of a revelation given September, 1831. We are now asked to believe that the prophets have been bogus and the seers spurious during the intervening years, to discard the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the work and vision and sacrifice of President Joseph Smith, and the major portion of the work and revelation of Joseph the Martyr, to go back to 1831 (or some other date).

This progressive discard of revelation knows not where to stop. One goes back to 1835, another to 1832, another to 1830. The Methodists go back to Patmos. The Christian Church ("Campbellites") go back to Pentecost. The Jews go back to Sinai. The atheist finds no stopping place even in Genesis. We like not this creeping blight of atheism. We do not believe that God started his work in glory and power and then went away and forgot about it. We see rather his moving hand with the early church and his light and power with the Reorganization. We believe that the Lord is still at work with his church.

From the Man Who Cleaned a Brother's Boots

We believe that God set his hand to restore his church according to his own pattern in these last days. He selected Joseph Smith, jr., as the chief instrument and first elder in that work. We are not prepared to throw that work into the discard.

We believe that after the dark and cloudy day incident to the apostasy wrought by Brigham Young and his associates, the Lord moved in power and light to restore his work through the Reorganization under the leadership and presidency of "Young Joseph."

Years ago on an occasion three people were in a room adjacent to the Kirtland Temple. Two of the three are gone to their reward. Elder C. Ed. Miller, the third one of the trio, then a silent witness, now reports the incident. It was between sessions of a General Conference. In one corner of the room a man of gigantic stature was laboring to remove mud from his huge boots. The third person entered and said cheerily, "Brother David, what are you doing?" The one addressed replied, "I am trying to remove some of this Kirtland mud from my boots." The newcomer said, "Let me help you, David."

And so President Joseph Smith knelt down on the floor and cleaned and polished David Dancer's muddy boots. It was not an official or formal act; but it was as significant as the washing of the disciples' feet. The man who could humble himself to cleanse the boots of the disciples rose to the very throne of God and came back with this message:

I was, on the fifteenth day of the fourth month, of the year 1894, in fasting and prayer before the Lord, and being commanded of the Spirit I arose from my praying and wrote:

Thus saith the Spirit unto the elders and the church:

My servants have been harsh one with another; and some have not been sufficiently willing to hear those whose duty it is to teach the revelations which my church has already received. Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members.

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 1, 2.

The Work and Revelations of President Joseph Smith

Thus through the late President Joseph Smith the Lord clearly recognized the presence of a First Presidency in the constitutional organic structure of the church. Again:

The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9.

Hearken unto me, O ye elders of my church. Lo! I have seen your efforts in my cause, and they are pleasing unto me. I declare unto you, It is my will that you ordain and set apart my servant William Marks to be a counselor to my servant Joseph, even the president of my church, that the first presidency of my church may be more perfectly filled.—Doctrine and Covenants 115: 1.

Hearken to the voice of the Spirit, O, ye elders of my church; the prayers of my people have prevailed with me. Behold, it is wisdom in me, and expedient in my church that the chief quorums should be more nearly filled, and their organization more nearly completed. Thus saith the Spirit. Let my servants, William W. Blair and David H. Smith, be chosen and ordained to be counselors to my servant, the presiding elder of my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 1-3.

The foregoing is as good scripture as any that the church has. Thousands have received personal testimony that the late President Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God. He did not deceive the people in giving these revelations supporting a presidency and in occupying as president for fifty-four years. Neither did God compound a felony and wink at apostasy by recognizing him as president when there was no scriptural and rightful place for such office in the church.

Joseph Smith Neither a Dupe Nor a Deceiver

We are not ready to repudiate the splendid work of the Reorganization and put the stamp of "false prophet" on that good gray prophet who gave his life to the church as truly as his father gave his life at Carthage.

When he came to the First Presidency of the church in 1860 he said that he came in obedience to a power not his own. That power led him to that position. And thousands had evidence to the divinity of that call.

When he issued his wonderful First General Epistle in 1861, in the "name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob" calling upon the scattered Saints everywhere to return to their first love, and upon the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe, and be baptized, other thousands said, "The man who wrote that epistle is a prophet of God."

That God who led him to the office of President of the church never by whisper or hint conveyed to him information that the office was bogus and a sign of apostasy. Instead he said, This is your calling. It was the calling of your father before you. It shall be the calling of your son after you.

For fifty-four years Joseph occupied as President. He was the friend of man, the student of the law, the recipient of the Holy Spirit. He was neither a dupe nor a deceiver. He was the President of the church and as such stood where God placed him. And the people who for a half century sustained him in that position are not so easily shaken by every wind of doctrine as to abandon his revelations or his work or his office.

"First Apostles"?

Our argument has been mainly affirmative; but it may not be amiss to consider certain stock objections. One frequently urged is that Paul wrote:

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing," etc. (1 Corinthians 12: 28.)

It is argued that this language puts Apostles first and leaves no room for a First Presidency. Paul did not say whether he meant that apostles were set in the church first in point of time or of authority. It does not especially matter. In neither event are we in conflict with his declaration.

Members of the First Presidency are apostles, though not of the Twelve Apostles. Joseph Smith was an apostle, though never one of the Twelve: "Which commandments were given to Joseph Smith, jr., who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.) The Book of Commandments, preferred by our "Church of Christ" friends, has similar language: "Joseph, who was called of God and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of this church."—Book of Commandments 24: 3.

Again, both the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Commandments are in agreement in a revelation given April 6, 1830, the day the church was organized:

Behold there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the father, and the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; being inspired by the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation thereof, and to build it up unto the most holy faith; . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 1. Book of Commandments 22: 1, 2.

These two books agree that Joseph was an apostle, though not of the Twelve. (They agree further that he was to be inspired not only to lay the foundations of the church but afterward to build it up in the most holy faith. No warning here that Joseph would go astray before well started in his work.)

The foregoing, accepted by the Church of Christ as well as by our own people, is strictly in accord with a later revelation: "The First Presidency and the Twelve, who are apostles and high priests. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 14.)

Members of the Presidency and Twelve are Apostles, and so under certain conditions are the seventies: (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.) T. W. Williams, as already quoted, said of the authority of the President: "He possesses this right, not as a prophet, but as an apostle and high priest."

The First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventies are apostolic in their office and calling. These are the three leading, presiding quorums of the church. So we are quite in accord with the statement, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles."

Did the Lord Merely Tolerate a Presidency?

Some who, having first found in the Reorganization the light and truth of the gospel, and being therefore disinclined to reject in toto the church through which that light came, have sought to compromise on this question. They argue that it is in opposition to the Lord's will that there should be a First Presidency; but since men through their own ambitions instituted such an office, the Lord tolerated it and even consented to give light to the church through that channel.

This argument is utterly untenable. There is no room for such compromise. The fence can not be straddled in that way. The revelations supporting a Presidency are too explicit. Either the Lord himself voiced them or they are spurious and the prophets false. To Frederick G. Williams the Lord through Joseph Smith said: "Listen to the voice of him who speaketh, to the word of the Lord your God." (Doctrine and Covenants 80: 1, given March, 1832.) The Lord then proceeded to call Williams to the Presidency as counselor to Joseph: "Unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood." To the late President Joseph Smith the word was no less explicit: "It is wisdom in me," "it is my will"; these were statements made when men were called to the Presidency. We must either reject three successive prophets to the church and trek back to 1832, or accept this as the will of the Lord himself and go forward. He was not winking at something wrong that he merely tolerated. It was his will.

It is worthy of note, too, that not only have the men accepted by us as prophets so spoken, Granville Hedrick, at one time sustained by the "Church of Christ" as prophet, seer, and revelator, and president of the church, taught likewise in equally clear terms and to them committed his church:

Granville Hedrick as "President"

Granville Hedrick seems clearly to have recognized the force of revelation in favor of a First Presidency in the church. He wrote:

Then comes the subject of the presidency of the high priesthood, which is pointed out as plain as language can make it, that one from the high priesthood should be chosen and appointed to preside over the priesthood . . . this is the highest office in the church. . . .—Spiritual Wife System Proven False; and True Order of Church Discipline, page 97.

Again, "The true order of church discipline" indicated to him the following:

It is out of place to have a bishop or apostle, or seventies, before the presidency of the church is selected.—Ibid., page 111.

According to the Truth Teller, "Granville Hedrick was ordained president, prophet, seer, and revelator of the church by members of the Quorum of Twelve." (Truth Teller, 1864, volume 1, pages 30, 31.) It is now claimed that he occupied as president only by election from year to year as any man might do; but it seems by the foregoing that he held office also by ordination. In the first issue of the Truth Teller appeared a "revelation" headed, "Revelation given August 16, 1863, to the Church of Christ (of Latter Day Saints) through Granville Hedrick, President of the Church." (Truth Teller, volume 1, number 1, page 5.) Not only was the office of president recognized, but also the name "Latter Day Saint" was used.

Land in part composing the "Temple Lot" came to the "Church of Christ" by way of Granville Hedrick as "president of the church." (Saints' Herald, volume 73, number 6, page 124.)

Every prophet yet recognized by our church as having the right to give the word of the Lord to the church has sustained the idea of a presidency in the organic structure of the church. While Granville Hedrick acting professedly as "prophet, seer, and revelator" for the "Church of Christ" supported the same idea.

Personal Testimony

In conclusion a word of personal testimony may not be out of order. Joseph testified that the Lord led him to the Presidency. And in my own experience many testimonies were given to me that the call to the Presidency was divine. These came to me directly and also through others. As for example: Two days before the revelation of 1909 came, I was seated in the General Conference at the reporter's desk with my associate on the press committee, Brother T. W. Williams. During the session Brother Williams wrote me a letter in which he stated that it had been made known to him that the time was near at hand when I should be called to take my revered father's place in the First Presidency. This he dated, April 16, 1909, signed, and sealed in an envelope and told me that I should not read it until he gave permission.

April 18 the revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 129) was given and was duly read in public April 19, and in it the call came: "The Spirit saith further unto me: To fill the vacancy caused by the release of Counselor R. C. Evans, present the name of my servant Elbert A. Smith, the son of my servant David H. Smith, who was taken and who awaits his reward, to be chosen, appointed, and ordained as counselor to my servant Joseph Smith and to be one of the Presidency."

As I passed out of the church following the reading of the revelation, Brother Williams touched my arm and gave me permission to open and read the sealed missive. I still have it. The following is a true copy:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 16, 1909.

My Dear Brother Elbert:

I had a singular experience this a. m. While in conversation with another, your name coming up I was given to realize that the time was near at hand when you would be called to fill the same position in the church which your father occupied. It may come this conference. If it does, and I am not to say now whether it will or not, it will give you comfort to know I have received this.

With confidence, your Brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

This was but one of many confirming testimonies. And for myself in my soul I know that God was not permitting me to be thrust into a position contrary to his will, or one which he merely "tolerated." The good Lord who sets men in his church as he wills, of his own will called me to a position of his own appointing. The position should not be judged by any man's poor attempts to occupy; it is divine in origin. This, in conclusion, is my testimony.

Remember, continued revelation is a principle vital to the latter-day work. Discard it, and we might as well join a popular denomination. And every prophet yet recognized by the church as having right to speak to the church and for the church has given the word of the Lord in support of the office of the First Presidency in the church. Through what mouth comes any contrary message? And by what spirit speaks that mouth?

What I the Lord have spoken I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth shall pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8, 9.

There are two kinds of loneliness—loneliness of body and loneliness of soul. The first is nowadays almost impossible; the second was probably never more acute.—George A. Buttrick, in Church Management.

"Keeping Up With the Joneses"

PART TWO

By Marcella Schenck

Cosie's Tribute

So you want a story do you? You want to know "what makes the wheels go round"? I think I will have to go back into family history that you may know that.

My maternal grandfather was born in Pennsylvania, one of a large family, in the days when children were "bound out" to learn a trade. He was put out at the age of seven to be taught how to be a blacksmith and was also sent to school. I do not think he was sent long and from the stories of his school days I do not think the urge of learning bothered him much. His tales to us grandchildren were mostly of mischievous pranks. At any rate, his school days ended definitely at the age of thirteen.

My grandmother spent her girlhood in Wisconsin and Missouri when there were as yet no public schools. The only school she ever mentioned to me was one which a man opened privately. He charged a certain sum for tuition and it seems the scholarship was transferable. Grandmother's father paid one tuition and sent his three oldest boys "turn about." The man taught them to "read, write, and figure." He must have been very proficient since at the end of three months the oldest boy could "figure as well as the teacher!" Certainly that was sufficient, and their school days were over.

Grandmother's father must have thought it a waste of money to educate girls. At least she was not given the privilege of even those three months. In 1849 she crossed the plains to California with her father. At this time she was about sixteen years old. The trail was marked by signs and she has often told me how terrible she thought it would have been to have to travel that trail alone and not be able to read the signs. A man in this "train" (a collection of covered wagons traveling together) who had some education and some books, offered to teach grandmother to read. This opportunity she gladly accepted and each day she learned something, then taught her younger brothers, until by the time they reached California they could all read.

This urge for an education never left my maternal grandmother and she exerted all her influence and will power to the end that her own family should receive a public school education. My mother, brought up under her training, naturally considered school as much a necessity as bread and butter. My grandmother's home was with us from the time I was seven years old until her death in 1917. So you see we all had the influence of two good women to urge us on.

Now for my father. His parents were pioneers in Missouri. His father was born in Scotland, and came to America with his parents at an early age. They located in Ohio where he received a good education. Grandfather Jones owned at one time near Cincinnati a farm, sawmill, and store. He was in those days a "well-to-do" man. This grandfather had been married three times and the grandmother twice, so my father was one of the children of the third set on one side and the second on the other. But this grandfather died when father was but seven. My grandmother, cheated out of her property, took her own little flock and moved away, living at different times in Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri, and Iowa.

The schools of father's childhood consisted of a term of about three or four months each winter, taught in a log cabin about five miles from father's home. But these he could not attend. When quite young he started once to school, one of his brothers carrying him part of the distance, but in a week's time the weather was too cold for one so young, and that one week was his only cherished schooling until he was fourteen years of age.

At fourteen, being one of the family supports, he cut his lip badly and had a forced vacation. This allowed him eight or ten days more of school, and so frantic was his thirst for knowledge that in these short two weeks he finished both his first and second readers. He learned writing from an old lady who set him a copy of the "A, B, C's" upon a scrap of paper. This he carried about in his pocket and at every rest period occupied his time tracing these letters on his thumb-nail. Thus he learned first to write his name and later other words.

He did a man's work when thirteen years of age and received twenty-five cents a day, which was given over to his mother for family support. He says that many a time he cried himself to sleep because he was too tired to rest.

As life brought him into competition with others he recognized himself as greatly handicapped by a lack of education, and proceeded to attempt as best he could to educate himself.

When a person, man or woman, becomes a parent they just naturally begin to think of an inheritance for their children. My father did. Of course he might have set a goal to leave us property or money, but his own father had left property which they lost by his mother's lack of business education. He had seen other men left property who lost it, and feeling his own lack of learning so keenly, he resolved that insofar as he was able he would give his children an education for their inheritance. He has often said, "You can lose money or property, but if you have an education you will always have it."

Another reason of his was that with the aid of education we could accomplish so much more with the same amount of effort. I believe he always expected us to give to our job all we had in the way of thought, energy, and time, but he felt we could do so much better if we had the help of "knowing how."

My father is a man with the ability to "hew to the line and let the chips fall where they will." So to school we went, even though he had to curtail his farm operations for the lack of help the boys might give. Although he had to borrow money to send us to Graceland College and my mother had to do without things that make life pleasant, we marched right on through school, all eleven of us. I hope their faith in us and in education may be justified.

What did Graceland do for me personally? What has it brought into my life? My husband says the best thing was R. W. Johnson. But really, never having had to do without Graceland, how can I measure it? You know you never realize the value of water until the well runs dry, and my inheritance can not be taken from me.

Education has increased my desire and ability to keep right on learning. I suppose never a day goes by that I don't read something that gives me either a thought, a fact, or an ideal to help me or to pass on to another.

Perhaps the greatest thing Graceland did was to strengthen my desire for service which I had received in my home, to bring me into social contacts, and to surround me with high ideals in a formative period of my life. Yours sincerely,

COSIE JONES JOHNSON.

Lewis's Tribute

My parents' educational advantages were meager, especially those of my father. His only educational institution was a little log schoolhouse out in the timber five miles from his home, and even this he was permitted to attend but little. Mother fared considerably better and acquired a grammar school education.

Being continuously and deeply conscious of the social and economic handicap accompanying the lack of an education, my parents were always determined to educate their children.

The growth of our educational vision or goal is somewhat interesting, and in this Graceland played a major role. The first goal established by my parents for us was to qualify as a rural school-teacher, which required then only that one finish the eighth grade and pass a county examination. As we had to pass the college buildings on our way to town, some of the children had dreams of a day when they should attend.

After my oldest sister attended the academy at Graceland, her year's work changed our educational goal to a high school education and established within us the highest regard for Graceland. Our aim was again raised when a younger brother began his college course.

Financing the education of eleven children is no small task. In fact it is an almost insurmountable barrier for people as financially poor as my parents were. This was accomplished by a revolving fund in the family, which worked so well that ten of the eleven children have attended Graceland.

The record of our family is due to an average intelligence plus an early formed habit to accept a responsibility and see it through.

Very truly yours,

LEWIS JONES.

Christie's Tribute

As far back as I can remember I heard my parents talk education. My father was deprived of it, which made him realize its value. So with mother's support they made their goal to give the children enough to enable them to educate themselves farther if they wished.

We older children did not live near high school, so we took our academy work at Graceland. My parents living in town at the time the younger children had finished the grades, these children went to high school and took their college work at Graceland.

In my days at Graceland it seemed we were one big family. Each one was considerate of his fellow student. The college took you in her arms as a mother would a child, and set forth the very highest of morals for you. She sent you to Sunday school, church, and prayer meeting, put you out in the field for physical training, made use of your talents, and all this, together with the study of books, brought out the very best in every one.

So each one boosts for his or her Graceland College.

CHRISTINA JONES BRENIZER.

Lonzo's Tribute

(At his suggestion we are quoting from what Lonzo had to say about Graceland in the Graceland Tower of May 27, 1932. His tribute to his home will form the third chapter of this article.)

Twenty years ago this year, I entered Graceland as a freshman in the academy. I had the influence of such personalities as R. V. Hopkins, Mrs. Royce, and J. A. Gunsolley as teachers during that first year. Others whom I was to know better included F. M. McDowell and Mabel Knipschild. Among the students who effected my life during that year and subsequent years were Arthur Benc, Allan Brakie, Charles Grabske, Jim Curtis, and the next year such men as Lee and Ralph Travis and David Hopkins. The companionship of students such as these men holds equal value in my memory with that of my instructors. The activities of the school were also vitalizing to me. The debates and forum meetings in the Athenian, our parliamentary wrangles and jousts will never be forgotten either in memory or experience. The picnics in the south woods, and the social influence of the young men and the young women on those occasions was also a tremendous educating influence. The prayer meetings made a profound impression upon me, and when reacted to with balance and judgment, I am sure were of great good.

. . . I naturally remember these student days rather than the years I spent on the faculty, for Graceland's greatest service is in terms of her influence on youth, and she touched my life in the most formative period. Either the opportunity for development, which she offered, or the transformation which she effected, is one for which I have been profoundly grateful.

. . . With best wishes from an old Gracelander to all the others, I am,

Respectfully yours,

LONZO JONES.

Eliza's Tribute

I was only eight years old when the first of our family entered Graceland, so I don't even remember when the idea of attending entered my head. All through my elementary schooling I took it for granted that I, too, would enter Graceland.

It is hard to put your finger on the incentive when it has come as a gradual growth all your life. I have often heard my father say, "Get as much education as possible, but always with the idea in mind to never be too good for any task." We were never to feel above our task, but prepared for any.

It was held up to us as a great privilege to have an opportunity to obtain an education, consequently we always appreciated the sacrifice our parents made to send us.

Also we children were taught that it wasn't the material things that we could gather around us that counted, but the character we could build. We were taught rigid discipline and proper choosing such as it takes to build character.

I never think of what Graceland gave me in terms of book learning, although certainly that should not be neglected. Graceland has had accomplished instructors and high standing credit, but far greater is the attitude the college gives the students through their social life there. One can not absorb the Graceland spirit and come from it selfish, thinking in terms of self alone. They unconsciously think in terms of the group and the service to be given to others.

I can't give Graceland all the credit for the attitude I hold toward life, but I feel the college provided the proper environment to develop the embryo philosophy given me by my parents.

Sincerely yours,
ELIZA JONES TAYLOR.

Hazel's Tribute

My first great influence has been just the lives of my parents. One could not live with them without catching some of their spirit toward work and life. My earliest memories include the family working together in the onion patch pulling weeds, or in the cornfield hoeing corn. The family, father, mother, Grandmother Snethen, and eleven children worked as a unit. We all had tasks in the home from the oldest to the youngest and we were not so very old when we started.

Besides this spirit of cooperation and working together the next big thing was our respect for our parents and their wishes. As I grow older and come in contact with more people my respect deepens and their standards and values of life I come to admire beyond words to express.

They gave to us children the heritage of good bodies and minds with an example of clean living ever before us. A man said to my older brother, "If you ever have the education your father has, you will be a well educated man." Yet it was because father felt his handicap of not having an education that my parents were determined their children would not likewise be handicapped.

They used to say, "We can't give you wealth but if you get your education you can live your life more fully."

Another bit of advice that helped us over many a rough spot when clothes seemed scarce, was, "It isn't the richness of your wardrobe that counts, but what you are. Keep yourself neat and clean and be yourself and do your best."

The confidence they expressed in us gave us confidence in ourselves. They thought no task too large or too small for us to do. It was not just a college education alone that was stressed but theory and practice together.

Mother read aloud often to the family group, then the articles were discussed. How fast and furious some of my older brothers and sisters could talk! Maybe that made them good debaters in later years.

Often mother would line us up for a spell down or we took slate and pencil and had a ciphering match. School was always thought of as a privilege, a pleasure, and lots of fun. Father used to say, "You can't get too much education but use sense with it." We worked to go to school for we never tired of it or never got enough.

I have often heard father say that Lamoni was the type of community he wanted his boys and girls to grow up in, to be the men and women he wanted them to be. He chose Graceland because she stressed so nearly the values of life my parents wished. So when several of us were ready for college and high school he rented the old home place and bought a farm near Lamoni, a mile and a half from Graceland. We all went to school.

Every student leaving Graceland has had a chance for four things:

1. Association of young people with like ideals.
2. Instruction by a faculty of superior instructors who give you real friendship and understanding as well as guidance.
3. A chance to become a leader in music, dramatics, athletics, or business.
4. If not a leader, then one who participates in many phases of life.

All in all, Graceland gives a greater appreciation for life.

HAZEL JONES.

Donald's Tribute

Ever since I was a small boy there was some one of the family in Graceland. Graceland and an education were among the main topics of the home. Education probably predominated. To educate their children was the main object for which father and mother were working. They could see where the educated person had many advantages over the uneducated. Father, especially, for his opportunities along those lines were few. Mother also was a strong supporter of such ideas and did much sacrificing in sending us and obtaining this or that as we needed.

We surely can not say it was money that sent us through school, for that was scarce and when needed was usually obtained by some personal sacrifice on the part of our parents. Yet, I am sure they did not consider it such, but a gift from them because of their desire for their children to become men and women which a community could value as good citizens. They saw where an education, coupled with good home environment, was a means to that end. Yes, the atmosphere of our home made us want to go to school.

In my own case, my parents sacrificed the income of their farm, and moved to town that I might have the advantage of high school. I could enumerate several incidents of sacrifice.

Good advice has been given to us at right times. I used to think at times, as young men do, that father and mother were mistaken about some ideals they stressed, but I see now they were right.

I can not express in words what my education meant to me, and a Graceland education even more. I am happy to have had the close association of teachers and students there in clean living.

Yours sincerely,

DONALD JONES.

Gertrude's Tribute

All of the older brothers and sisters had gone to college, in fact my oldest sister started to Graceland the year I was born. College, therefore, was a natural thing to me. As some people think of grammar school or high school as a necessity, so I thought of college. I can not remember any time in my life that I did not expect to go to Graceland. Not alone because of the fact that my brothers and sisters had gone, but I remember distinctly my parents' advice to all of us: "Go ahead and get an education even though you have no desire to teach. You will gain something that can never be taken away from you."

Another point they stressed was, "No matter how capable you grow to be, you must not be too good to do the lowly things."

Of course it was no little task to send such a group of youngsters to college, and we were reminded to make the best of the opportunity.

Graceland, as a college, was a family tradition by the time I was old enough to enter. Nevertheless, since attending, I still think of Graceland as the only place to get a good start. Our college gave me something that I am not capable of expressing in black and white, but I'm always one hundred per cent for Graceland.

Sincerely,

GERTRUDE JONES.

Jerry's Tribute

Father has always been able to see the educated man as a man with tools and equipment with which to work. That which he lacked, father felt deeply all his life. He has tried to realize his ambition through his children. He has done what he could through every sacrifice, every bit of encouragement, each morsel of advice to keep us going on to school.

I can hear him saying now, "Don't expect an easy job, son. Expect to work and work hard, but go on to school and equip yourself the best you can to meet life. because the best will be none too good."

So while father advised, mother backed him up, his helpmate and friend, our helpmate and friend. She picked up our books with us and helped to solve the problems. Her time and understanding heart were ours for little everyday troubles, so that she kept a watchful eye over our meager wardrobes, and dug down into her purse for the nickels and dimes for pens, pencils, etc.

Money was a thing that was scarce, but by saving, careful management, and everyone working it was made to reach around. It gets to be a bigger wonder to me every day how they accomplished it.

When each of us took our turn at Graceland education was considered the main thing, but a close second was the advantages of church environment that Graceland offered.

I value my two years at Graceland in terms of comradeships. Graceland has a type of narrowness that after I got out and thought it over I discover to be broadening. Do you understand what I mean? Whatever I received in the line of book learning, might have been gained in almost any other institution, but through my associates I have gained a change of attitude. The change was slow and by a "rocky road to Dublin," but from comparing this summer with that of two years ago before I entered Graceland, I can notice a great change. I am mighty happy I went.

Sincerely yours,

GERALD W. JONES.

Which brings us to Chapter 3, in which Lonzo answers the question, "What were the influences in your home that sent you forward in your educational progress?"

The Eighteenth Amendment Issue

By A. B. Phillips

After a fierce battle lasting for centuries, during which millions of men, women, and children have been ruthlessly killed, maimed, or deprived of the benefits rightly belonging to them, the brutal attacks of King Alcohol have been strongly repulsed. In order to protect the people from his destructive invasions, the bulwark of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was erected by the greatest army of defenders this country ever witnessed. Today enemies of the Constitution and traitors to the safety and well-being of this nation have poured out a flood of dangerous propaganda and misrepresentation, hoping to destroy this great bulwark erected by the people as a defense against the evils which these enemies seek to renew in our midst.

The Eighteenth Amendment was adopted by the greatest majority ever given any amendment of our Constitution. It was enacted after a century and a half of expensive experiments with other methods of dealing with the liquor vice, and was the outgrowth of the wisdom, patience, and virtue of our ablest minds, supported by the integrity and judgment of the people. Before the month of March, 1919, made its appearance, this Amendment had been ratified by forty-five of the forty-eight States of the Union, and subsequently one more State gave its ratification, leaving only two States which did not formally accept it as constitutional law to the people. Of this all-but-unanimous acceptance by the States, there were twenty-two States which had previously become dry by enacting prohibition laws.

Noisy and Defiant Violators

A certain type of people have always opposed any law that would protect the people from alcoholic crimes. They have insisted upon their so-called right to get drunk when and where they may desire, regardless of the crimes, immorality, and misery they may cause in doing so. It is not strange, therefore, that such characters as these have loudly proclaimed against what they call the "damnable affliction of prohibition." They either do not know or else disregard the fundamental law that no one has the right to do that which injures another person. It is the right and also the duty of governments to protect against such injurious acts, and a government that will not protect its people in this manner is not worthy of support.

In order to gain sympathy and support of their unlawful disregard of prohibition laws, these friends of the flowing bowl have almost flooded the country with false statements concerning the effects of prohibition. They have asserted that it has increased crime, when the fact is that it has remarkably decreased crime. They have charged that it is making more drunkards than ever among our youth, though a careful investigation proves that it is causing a noticeable decrease of drinking among them. They have even claimed that it was the vote of women that made it possible to enact the Eighteenth Amendment, evidently losing sight of the fact that it was not until afterward that the franchise was given to women by the adoption of the Nineteenth Amendment.

I have carefully examined more than thirty assertions of these admirals of alcohol, and have proved them to be false and misleading, by facts of unquestioned authority. Many of these I have mentioned in previous addresses, and have presented facts which prove my statement to be true. I will here mention another false claim which seems to have had wide circulation; it is the assertion that prohibition was foisted upon the people by taking advantage of the absence of our soldiers in France who, it is claimed, would have voted almost solidly against it if they had been here to vote. But several States that have voted on the question since the soldiers returned home give us evidence to the contrary.

In 1918, before the soldiers returned from Europe, Ohio adopted a prohibition amendment by a majority of 25,759. But in 1922, after the veterans came home, they defeated a measure to manufacture beer by a majority of 189,472, a dry gain of 163,713 votes. In 1916, the dry majority vote of Michigan was 68,- 624, but after the veterans came home in 1919 the dry majority was increased to 207,520. While the veterans were overseas, California voted wet by 85,119 votes, but after the boys returned a dry measure was adopted by an increase of 119,062 dry votes, and again in 1926 the dry majority was even greater. While the soldiers were in France, Missouri adopted a prohibition amendment by 73,964 majority, but in 1926, after the veterans had returned, a repeal effort of the Wets was defeated by a dry majority of 275,543. Evidently the soldiers are not so wet as liquor supporters have claimed.

The Rights of the People

Respectable and law-abiding people want security from crime and immorality, and they rightly insist that their Government shall not condone vice or fraternize with criminals. We have had nearly a century and a half of experience as a nation in attempting to protect society and the home against the vices and crimes resulting from liquor, and it is beyond question that prohibition has yielded that protection to a far greater extent than any and all other methods that have been employed. In giving this protection prohibition has hurt no one and has benefited society and the nation as a whole. It is only those who violate the laws that insist upon removing this protection.

In their frantic efforts to destroy the law that protects the people from the evils of liquor, the friends of intoxicants protest that prohibition robs them of their rights and liberties. But no person can possess a right to commit an act that menaces the safety and well-being of society. No such right has ever existed in any well-ordered and just government by the people and for the people, for it would be destructive of stable government and of human progress itself. Bitter and costly experience has proved conclusively that those who indulge in intoxicating liquor quite commonly are lawbreakers in various ways and persistently disregard the rights of men, women, and children, destroying their safety and happiness.

Even slavery, with all its vice and injustice, never injured a tenth part as many people as have suffered from the crimes, immorality, pollution and misery caused by liquor. The people of this nation have suffered untold agonies for much more than a century because of many persons whose regard for the rights of their fellow men and the welfare of their own families was less than their desire for a bottle of booze. After many years of such flagrant disregard of our rights, the people by overwhelming majorities decided to protect themselves against the intolerable conditions caused by the liquor business. More than a century of liquor indecency surely gives us the right to at least a century of protection against its evils.

The Question of State Rights

If we have no right to secure protection against demoralizing evils that some people would ruthlessly inflict upon us, what is the law and government for? Is it designed to protect only those of low morals and those who disregard the rights of society? We live under a government by majorities, but that fact does not mean that there are no principles by which government shall be administered in equity and justice to all. Several leading supporters of liquor are now advocating what they are pleased to call State rights in regard to the return of licensed liquor. A similar plea was once made for slavery which produced much less misery than liquor has caused in this country. But that which is fundamentally wrong can not be made right by the foolish expedient of legalizing it. If so, then murder, robbery, arson, rape, kidnaping, and a host of crimes might doubtless be made lawful.

We not only have a State, but many States and a union of States. Most of these States are surrounded by other States and engage in interstate traffic and divers kinds of business with them. If one of these States should legalize the liquor business, who would bear the enormous expense of keeping liquor out of adjoining dry States? In justice the State that legalizes liquor should be compelled to bear such expense, for it would be manifestly unjust to force a dry State to protect itself against neighboring States. Such conditions could in time disrupt the Union itself. It would also be unjust to compel the Federal Government to bear the expense caused by the unlawful citizens of wet States. Every State should bear the expense of its own policies, and should never be permitted to adopt any policy that makes itself a nuisance to its neighbors.

The principle of abating a public nuisance is recognized as well founded in law. The Eighteenth Amendment is in effect a constitutional requirement that prohibits the nuisance of liquor manufacturing, selling, or transporting into or within any part of the United States. Ages of sad experience have proved liquor to be one of the worst public nuisances ever suffered by any nation of the world. It would still be a nuisance if it should be made legal by State law, and the consequent annoyance to neighboring dry States would become intolerable. The claim that the Federal Government would protect dry States against the wet States is not convincing. The Wets themselves have repeatedly charged that the Federal Government is not enforcing the prohibition law, and if any State should legalize liquor it would be practically impossible to give adequate protection to dry States, unless the wet States themselves should give protection, which they would not do.

Testing the Eighteenth Amendment

When discussing the issue of the Eighteenth Amendment, let us not forget that its purpose is admittedly noble and good. Let us not forget that it has proved to be a great benefit to the people economically, morally, and physically. Let us not forget that less than a year and eight months ago President Hoover and the Wickersham Commission report both stated emphatically that they were opposed to its repeal. Let us not forget that they urged further enforcement of prohibition, and that Director Woodcock stated this year that the effectiveness of prosecutions for violations of the law had advanced from 86.2 per cent to 89.1 per cent in the six months which had just ended at the time of his statement. (See Hearing Before the Subcommittee, page 36.)

When considering whether or not the Amendment should be repealed or changed, let us remember that in 1909 under liquor license the total of all incomes in the United States was reported at $29,605,000,000, while in 1928 the total increased to $89,419,000,000, an increase of over fifty-nine billions eight hundred millions of dollars. Let us also remember that the majority of the people do not want liquor, and do not care to use it as a beverage. Many of them could never be persuaded to vote for it in any form, and many more will not do so unless they are first deceived into believing a change is necessary.

Until recent years no effective effort was made to enforce the Amendment, and since this has been attempted in real earnest enforcement has rapidly increased in effectiveness, and drinking and attendant crimes have decreased. Statistics prove that even in New York City there is only one third as much drunkenness as in England, and other parts of our nation are still drier. Methods of liquor control tried in Canada, England, France, Sweden, and other countries of Europe are less than half as effective as prohibition has proved to be in the United States. Prohibition has not yet been given a fair trial, for it was well known from the start that it would in all probability require years of diligent enforcement and educational work before the deadly disease of liquor lust could be conquered and healed. The degree of success that enforcement has demonstrated thus far is more than sufficient reason for its continuance.

National Sobriety or State Corruption

Many of those who today loudly demand State rights and control of liquor have broken the laws of their own States which have adopted prohibition. Before the National Prohibition Act was passed, thirty-two States had bone-dry laws, and over seventy-one per cent of the territory of all other States was dry under local option. The Volstead Act itself was largely made up of laws previously enacted in various States. Prohibition therefore represented the deliberate judgment of many years of experience by a large majority of the States and of the territory of the other States. Let us not lose sight of the fact that for mercenary or other reasons some of the very States that adopted prohibition have refused to spend money to assist the Federal Government in its enforcement. Liquor supporters have taken advantage of this fact.

From the failure of such States to enforce their own laws against liquor violators, we are warned that without Federal enforcement these States would condone corruption within their own borders, and certainly would not attempt to prevent the pouring of unlawful liquor into neighboring dry States. An example of this sort of corruption is partially revealed in the State of New York, where the Federal court cases for liquor in 1929 numbered 13,882, which was more than in any five other States. In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, Federal informations filed in New York numbered 13,704, which was more than thirty-five times as many as in Pennsylvania, and more than fifty times as many as in Ohio (see Hearing Before Subcommittee, pages 5, 7). New York is the source of much Wet propaganda, and from there comes support of many lawless activities against prohibition.

If the Federal Government encounters such opposition in States of this type under National prohibition, who is so foolish as to believe that these States will give less trouble if they are permitted to legalize liquor? The history of past experiences, and knowledge of liquor supporters, completely discredit such credulous notions. It is a practical certainty that we must have laws requiring National sobriety, or we shall suffer intolerable evils of State corruption, with our bulwark of defense destroyed. For such reasons, no constitutional law of our nation should be hastily cast aside at the behest of men who desire to indulge passions that debauch and defile the people.

People Who Demand Repeal

Three types of people comprise those who favor repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. First, are the drinkers and those in the liquor business, largely law violators. Second, are their friends and those whose sense of moral ideals and justice is vague or degenerate. Third, are those whose credulous natures have caused them to be deceived by the false assertions of the Wets and their sympathizers. To none of these types of people can we look for that far-seeing and wise statesmanship which has brought this great nation to the preeminence it so securely occupies among the governments of earth.

The Reality of Zion

By Anna Burhart

Today, we whose vision of Zion is glowing and sparkling with life, are looked upon with tolerance by those who would advise us to "bury our dead." They challenge us for a demonstration.

A little more than two thousand years ago, the Jews were looking for their king. Mapped out in their minds was a clear picture as to just how he should appear.

He came in God's own appointed way. They rejected Him—crucified Him, because he did not give the demonstration of kingly power demanded of Him.

Today, we are making much of our preparation for His second coming. Are we, too, blinded by our vision of material glory, unable to perceive that the time is near at hand, even at the door?

Zion is a reality. It is the hope of the care-worn traveler. The forces that will bring it about are in operation today. It is not entirely a future dream. As the delicate beauty of the lily lies dormant in the apparently lifeless bulb, waiting for proper conditions to make manifest its beauty; so the beauty and reality of Zion lies hidden in the hearts of men. It is glowing and burning with life and will blossom in its own due time, as surely as the day follows the rising of the sun.

This vision is sustaining His people now and will continue till that day dawns so often spoken of by the prophets of old. The wicked shall die of their own hand. The plagues, which evil has brought upon the land and will continue to bring upon the earth, shall devour them. But the righteous shall "abide the day, and the earth be given unto them for their inheritance."

"And that if the fire can scathe a green tree for the glory of God, how easy it will burn up the dry trees to purify the vineyard of corruption."

What do we see in China today? Nothing but mal-administration, treachery, bribery and wars. China is suffering more than anything else from too many rotten generals. They are everywhere, fighting and marching, backward and forward—not for China, but for their own personal gain.

It is not sinecure to be emperor today. A good emperor must be a representative of and father of his people, and I am not good enough morally or mentally to be father to the people of China. I am sure the time will come when there will again be an emperor in united China, but it must be somebody greater than I.—Henry P'u-Yi, deposed heir to the vanquished Manchu empire of China.

Harmonious Work at Brooksville Reunion

I think I never saw a group of Saints who work together more willingly and cheerfully than do these at the Maine reunion. I guess one reason is the example set them by their leaders. From early morning till late at night such men as Brother Newman Wilson, president of Eastern Maine District; "Archie" Begg, president of Vinalhaven Branch, and others are constantly at work at tasks, the results of which contribute to the comfort, convenience, or pleasure of the camp. Brother Wilson, chef, has only to express a desire to have something done, and there seems some one always ready to do the job. Brother Begg seems to be in general charge of affairs about the grounds and as he works from place to place, he has willing hands to help him.

Of course, in this camp, as in all other places where Saints are gathered, there are the standbys who seem always busy and always ready to do what needs doing, and when assigned a task can be depended on to do it on time and well. There seem here to be many such standbys.

The ministerial work is being easily and well cared for, because there is plenty of help. Of the general ministry there are present U. W. Greene and J. A. Gunsolley of the patriarchate; Brother Paul M. Hanson, of the Twelve; Brothers Wilson, Rogers, Eaton, and Begg of the high priests; Brother Robertson, of the seventy; Brother Traver, of the bishopric. Sisters Gunsolley and Roberta Lewis are conducting classes for children and youth, and Brothers Hanson and Gunsolley hold classes for adults.

I have not attempted to name all of the ministry present, nor all the willing workers contributing to the comfort of the camp; but have mentioned a few as illustrative of the general spirit of helpfulness.

The Camp Goes for a "Sail"

A feature of each reunion for the past few years has been the "sail." Sometime during the session, Captain Pearl Billings, of the numerous tribe of Billings of Little Deer Isle, most of whom are sea-fearing men, puts his vessel, Mercantile, at the service of the camp for a sail. This year it was had on Tuesday, August 16. After lunch the Mercantile was laid alongside the dock at Sargentsville. The whole camp was transferred by cars to the dock, and when the vessel was "kicked" away from the dock, there were ninety-four Saints aboard. And we were not crowded, either. The vessel is a schooner of about one hundred tons' capacity, and when mainsail, foresail, and jib were set, it was not long before the Mercantile was demonstrating her seaworthiness. Some eight miles down Eggemoggin Reach and return, in a good breeze, afforded the Saints a fine sail, which I am sure all enjoyed, and by which Captain Billings again placed the camp under obligation to him for a pleasant occasion.

A Rare Find—A Young Moose

A few of us a couple of days ago saw a rather unusual sight. A family near Sargentsville had a baby moose, we heard. So Brother Wilson, in his car, and Brother Traver, in his, and one or two other cars, took a group over to see the young moose. It is at the home of a Mr. Gray whose wife is the daughter of Brother Campbell. Some days ago the women were out in the woods "berrying." They heard some animal "crying"; they knew not what it was, but found in the bushes a baby moose. Why it had been abandoned by its mother can only be conjectured. On their return to the house, the women told Mr. Gray about it. Going into the woods he found the gangling moose calf, gathered it into his arms, and carried it home. There Sister Ruth (Mrs. Gray) began the task of feeding it. A quart bottle was fitted with a nipple, and "Tony" began taking regular rations. His gratitude is apparent by the readiness with which he responds to his mistress's call, and follows her about.

Shortly after we arrived at the place, the moose was fed. When I first saw him he was quite a distance away. He seemed almost as tall as Sister Ruth, and he was apparently "enjoying his bottle." Well, I soon saw his height was due to long, wobbly legs. Body small, neck short, head large, he made a queer sight teetering around on those long, uncertainly-working legs. We all enjoyed making the acquaintance of Tony. He even tolerated the familiarity of a few pats, and seemed not in the least afraid of anyone. We asked Sister Ruth if they kept him under restraint, and learned that he goes where he wishes, into the fields to browse and even to the lake to swim. But he always returns for his bottle. When we left, to return to camp, Tony had folded up those long legs under him, and a small but contented woods animal under strange environment, he was lying near the kitchen door, evidently expecting to take "forty winks." He didn't tell us to go, but we could see with half an eye that he would be glad if we did, and we did. I hope it pleased him.

Good weather or bad! What's the difference? Not much to people who know how to adapt themselves. The forepart of the reunion was characterized by almost perfect weather, and appreciated, too. But last night just after "Old Glory" had been ceremonially lowered, it began to rain. And it rained. But Brother Hanson had the tent full to hear him answer the question, "What Must I Do to Be Saved?" Today it still rains. Nevertheless the Saints are cheerful, and meetings are going on according to schedule.

Where my next journey with you, my readers, will be, I do not now know. Tonight a few of us go with Brother Clark, to Castine, for a visit in his home, and tomorrow and next day are all that is left of this reunion.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

LAKE WINNEAGWAMAUK, MAINE, August 19.

Washington Reunion a Foretaste of Heaven

On August 14, came to a close at Silver Lake, Washington, a reunion, the memories of which should remain precious with us while life shall last. The good news of this gathering has undoubtedly been sent in by the committee appointed. We feel, however, that a further testimony will not be amiss, for experiences such as we enjoyed for ten days we want to share with the Saints throughout the world.

From the very first meeting until the closing service there was the best attendance ever had, Spokane and Portland Districts having joined with Seattle and British Columbia for the occasion. A pleasing feature was the large and regular attendance at class periods, of the representative workers of the three districts. Three adult classes followed the prayer meeting in regular succession every morning. In the early afternoon another class was held for teacher training, and each evening before preaching a priesthood class was largely attended; these besides appropriate classes for every age group.

That which we desire to mention chiefly though, and that which caused our gathering to be like heaven, was the perfect harmony which prevailed throughout. Spiritual peace and fraternity pervaded the camp. Not a discordant note (except when, by the request of President F. M. McDowell, the orchestra purposely played a few lines of discord to illustrate a point) not an unkindly criticism, not a complaint that we know of, not an unkindly feeling; no disorder or lack of punctuality. But with dignity, order and beauty the whole program was carried out.

Truly did the Psalmist say, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," and that principle is accentuated when God's people are united in their earnest endeavor to qualify for more efficient service for God and humanity. Not only were the prayer and testimony meetings vibrant with the expression of desire to take back home to others what was experienced and learned, but such expression found vent in the filing of inventories, the payment of tithes, and other ways more concrete than by merely speaking in testimony. And no wonder! To sit, for instance, in a class conducted by President McDowell every day, and not to be filled with spiritual determination to live more Christ-like than ever before would be quite incongruous. Brother McDowell also conducted a class for young people every day, about one hundred young people attending regularly, and it soon became apparent that he had won their hearts, and that under his guidance they were willing to consecrate their entire lives to the service of their Master.

Personally I regard those ten days of close association with Brother McDowell as among the experiences that have made our coming to this country worth while. Ability, diplomacy, marked humility, and wonderful love make a happy combination in a man of God, and surely the Lord can work through such a man to abundantly bless his people. And who could associate with Apostle J. A. Gillen, and not feel a desire to sacrifice more for the great work entrusted to us? Many times, as the Spirit of God flowed through these men and others to us, we felt constrained to say, "Thank God for such men whom he can use to bless mankind."

We appreciated too, hearing these men say that this reunion was one of the best for regularity of attendance, orderliness, dignity, beauty, and harmony, that they had ever experienced.

It really does seem that God's people are about to put aside those things that have hindered the redemption of Zion so long, and with firm determination be willing "not only to say, but to do the things that the Lord requires at our hands."

May the desire to learn God's word, the willingness to cooperate, the spirit of prayer, the intelligent devotion, the spirit of self-sacrifice, the fraternal fellowship, and the wonderful peace and harmony that pervaded our whole camp for ten days be with God's people everywhere as they endeavor faithfully to discharge their duties before God.

British Weddings Attract Interest

The James Street Church, Bradford, England, was the scene of two weddings this summer which won considerable attention in England and America, and were reported in lengthy write-ups in The Reporter.

The first was the marriage of Miss Annie Bancroft and Mr. Charles Curtis Leggott in June. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bancroft, of Levenshulme and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. Joseph Curtis Leggott of Clayton. Elder G. W. Leggott, grandfather of the bridegroom read the marriage ceremony. The church was crowded with relatives and friends, and the congregation sang "You May Sing of the Beauty of Mountain and Dale" and "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Mr. A. Roberts played the "Wedding March" and the "Bridal Chorus" from "Lohengrin." The bride, who was given away by her father, was attended by her sister, Miss Ada Bancroft, and Miss Vera Leggott, sister of the bridegroom. Mr. Curtis Bancroft, cousin of the bridegroom, was best man, and Messrs. Alfred Whitlow, A. Gent, W. Bancroft, and W. Baguley were the groomsmen. One hundred guests attended the wedding reception.

Miss Edith Edge became the bride of Mr. George Curtis Bancroft August 1, Elder G. W. Leggott, grandfather of the bridegroom and pastor of the James Street Church, reading the ceremony. The bride who is the daughter of Mrs. Edge and the late Mr. Leonard Edge, of Dukinfield, was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. W. Edge. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bancroft, of Droylsden. The bridesmaids were Miss A. Edge, sister of the bride, Miss E. Baguley, cousin of the bridegroom, Miss I. Edge, cousin of the bride, and Miss Doreen Gent, cousin of the bridegroom. Mr. Bancroft was attended by Mr. Joseph Curtis Leggott, his cousin, as best man, and Messrs. C. Chorlton and W. Baguley, another cousin, as groomsmen. The bridal party entered the church to the "Bridal March" from "Lohengrin" played by J. C. Leggott. One hundred guests attended the wedding reception.

Far West Stake Reunion

From the opening sacrament service on Thursday evening, August 18, to the closing sermon on Sunday, August 28, Far West Stake Saints and their friends and neighbors worshiped together in a truly outstanding manner. The reunion was not spectacular but a spirit of fellowship and sincerity reigned throughout.

The daily activities were well attended in spite of predictions to the contrary. Prayer services, class work, women's work and priesthood work filled the mornings. Several afternoon services were held including a comedy, "Wagging Tongues" given by the First Saint Joseph women and a W. C. T. U. meeting. On Saturday afternoon a special stake business meeting was called to act upon some resolutions from the joint council of the stake. Approval was given to the following ordinations: Lawrence Keck to the office of priest, Gilbert Bowser to the office of priest, Orvall Carpenter to the office of deacon, Robert Farnham to the office of deacon, and Frank Mauzey to the office of deacon. Trenton Branch was declared disorganized due to a lack of interest on the part of the majority of Trenton Saints.

The young people's prayer services opening the day's activities at eight o'clock were truly inspiring. The young people were quite active and a wonderful spirit was felt. Stake President Ward A. Hougas had charge of the services and spoke under the inspiration of the Spirit to the young people one morning, encouraging and warning them.

Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, was in charge of the general prayer services which were of a high quality. Apostle J. F. Garver spoke in prophecy at the last service on Sunday, August 28, giving a direct and lengthy message.

The ten o'clock hour found the priesthood enjoying class work under the leadership of Elder Blair Jensen and Apostle J. F. Garver. The women had an interesting period at the same hour under the direction of Sister Letha Timm, stake supervisor of women. Talks and discussions on various subjects of interest to the women were led by women from different parts of the stake. On the last Saturday an interesting debate was staged between the Stewartsville and Maple Grove women and the Cameron women. The question was "Resolved, That the Women Today Are as Consecrated as the Women One Hundred Years Ago." Many good examples were brought out on both sides, but the negative speakers were declared the winners. The women were also responsible for a very fine lecture by Miss Alice Stone, secretary of the Y. W. C. A. in Saint Joseph, at a general meeting on Thursday. Miss Stone is an effective speaker and almost teaches Latter Day Saintism.

If you had come on the grounds at about five or ten minutes to ten any morning and had seen the young men and young women making their way in great numbers to the young people's tent, you would have wondered just what the drawing card was to keep so many young people interested. Many of the adults wondered, too, and it was only with great will power that they remained away. The interest was a young people's class taught by Elder Ward A. Hougas on the subject, "The Little Grey Home," which, in other words, might be termed, "The Fine Art of Living Together." A splendid group of young people gathered every morning and listened intently to these interesting lectures on problems affecting their future happiness.

A general class was conducted at the eleven o'clock hour by Elder Blair Jensen and Apostle J. F. Garver on the subject, "The New Evangelism."

The night services were a great success. Elder Ray Whiting, pastor of Council Bluffs and Omaha churches, delivered a series of sermons on the theme, "Jesus the Christ of 1932," in his strong, characteristic way. Attendance was large and steady from night to night with many townspeople and other visitors present.

Following the evening preaching hour was an enjoyable hour when the young people of the various groups presented either religious dramas or sacred musical programs. Much splendid talent was shown in these productions and a great many young people participated.

The Sunday services drew enormous crowds. On the first Sunday a large delegation from the Independence churches joined with the Saints and were very welcome. The young people's prayer service and the general prayer service were held at the usual hours and were augmented by many visitors. At nine thirty Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, gave a fine lecture which was followed by a sermon by G. Leslie DeLapp, of the Presiding Bishopric, at eleven o'clock. Brother Jensen again spoke in the afternoon. In the evening the religious drama, "The Wife of Judas," was presented by the Ul-Lik-U's Players of Saint Joseph as a prelude to Elder Ray Whiting's sermon.

The day was marred, however, by the tragic accident which brought death to the mothers of two families in Far West Branch and sorrow to the entire stake. Mrs. H. O. McKee was killed almost instantly, and Mrs. C. O. Johnson died without regaining consciousness. Several others were quite seriously injured, but are now convalescing. The Saints extend sympathy to the bereaved families and trust that God's grace may be sufficient at this trying time.

The second Sunday found many carloads and several truckloads of young people from Kansas City on the grounds. A program much the same as the previous Sunday's was carried out with a lecture by Apostle J. F. Garver followed by a sermon by President Elbert A. Smith. Apostle Garver delivered another strong sermon in the afternoon.

Perhaps the largest crowd ever known to remain for the evening service of the last day, when everyone is anxious to get home after the pleasant ten days, enjoyed the dramatic prelude, "Pilgrims of the Way," as given by the Ul-Lik-U's Players and the closing sermon of Brother Whiting's series.

The credit for the smooth working of the ten days' activities goes to too many to mention, but their work was much appreciated. The children were well cared for by Mrs. G. Scott Daniel and Mrs. Ernest Sherman and their corps of workers every day as well as on Sundays. The musical activities of the reunion were cared for by E. J. Ehlers, stake chorister, and Leonard G. Ehlers, who were assisted by several faithful pianists, and other musicians.

Long before Monday noon the tents were down and packed away for another year, and the grounds looked very lonesome and unlike the busy place of the previous day, but in the memories of perhaps thousands of people the 1932 reunion will live for a long time.

Fanshawe, Oklahoma

Though few in number Saints at Fanshawe are striving to carry on the Lord's work. The young people are to be commended for they are always ready and willing to render their part of service.

Sunday school and prayer meeting sessions are held each Sunday morning. And at seven thirty in the evening they have preaching, Brothers P. E. Sartor and J. J. Jackson preaching the sermons.

The young people's society has discontinued activities until fall.

It is the hope of local Saints to continue their work and to be numbered with the faithful.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Street

During the heat of the summer and with vacation time there usually comes a lull in church activities, but this branch has been fortunate in that its attendance at nearly all services this summer has been good. In spite of intense heat all who have attended the midweek prayer meetings have been blessed.

Brother Roy Healey who has been ill and not able to work for many months, is up and ready to assist in the Master's work. His three Sunday evening lectures on "The Signs of the Times" were well attended. Much research and time were given by Brother Healey to his subject, and he used a chart to illustrate his points.

Two splendid sermons by Brother C. E. Edstrom have also been enjoyed. His themes were "What Is the Objective of the Church?" and "Why I believe in God." This brother has had many experiences which have increased his faith in God, and the telling of these helps the entire congregation. He is eager to go forward.

Others of the priesthood, Roscoe Davey, Clem Evans, H. P. W. Keir, J. J. Oliver, and Steve Lester, have also given sermons.

The Fourth of July outing and picnic at one of the forest preserves was much enjoyed by all who went. Games and races added to the fun.

The music department, under Arthur Sherman, has been faithful in its part of the services. While the choir disbanded for the summer, special musical numbers have been much enjoyed and appreciated.

Brother T. J. Scott, of California, gave the opening remarks at the July sacramental service, and a peaceful and quiet spirit prevailed. August 7, Brother J. J. Oliver impressed the members of the congregation with their individual responsibility in the work of latter days, urging the necessity of the Spirit of the Master in the lives of every one. Both services were well attended and much liberty was enjoyed. Brother Keir spoke of how impressed he felt at the blessing of his youngest grandson, infant son of Brother and Sister Dick Keir, who was given the name, Richard Henry. Sister W. Kimball told how God had heard the prayers of the Saints for her son who was seriously injured in an accident out West. Brother Clem Evans told of an added testimony of the work given to him. From these and other talks the congregation gained strength and courage.

Visitors this summer have come from Oklahoma, Illinois, Missouri, California, and other States.

July 31, at three o'clock the Tri-Stake priests met at the church to reorganize, Brother Roy Healey in charge.

The Saints were glad to see Brother Alex and Sister Eva Keir at church once more. Brother Keir has been ill with pneumonia. They were both injured while on an auto trip out West, but God's watchcare saved their lives.

Sister Winnifred Wood was married to Mr. Albert F. Martin, of Council Bluffs, August 6. They will live in Council Bluffs. Chicago Saints wish them joy and happiness.

The women's department has been busy this summer quilting for each other. Class work has been enjoyed at the church in the afternoon and luncheon at the noon hour. This has been a good lesson in learning to live together. They recently had a birthday surprise party for Sister A. Sherman, sr., who has been in ill health for some time, but is now better.

Chicago Saints extended heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and family of Brother Charles Wildermuth.

The congregation is enjoying the improved condition of the church home since it has been repaired and painted. Further plans for the improvement of the church property include a wire fence and the lawn seeded to grass.

South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

902 Reddick Street, Mishawaka, Indiana

Saints here are busy preparing for the home-coming and rally day September 18. They hope every branch in the district will be well represented, and judging from the response they have already received, this will be the case. District President A. C. Barmore who is also the missionary will be here as well as Elders S. W. L. Scott, J. W. McKnight, and Philemon Pement. The Saints are invited to bring their basket lunch and join this branch September 18.

Local members were agreeably surprised Sunday morning, August 21, to find in their midst Brother and Sister Charles Ferry who returned from Missouri on a business trip.

There have been two more baptisms since last report to the Herald, a young brother, Eddie Ray Myers, and Sister Ilah Torrence.

The progress of the latter-day cause, considering the slump to be contended with during summer months, is encouraging. Sunday evening services have kept up to standard in interest and attendance, there being from forty to fifty present. Many of these have been nonmembers who have gathered every Sunday evening to hear the gospel story. This condition is due to the untiring efforts of the devoted members to bring their friends and to the increasing efforts of the ministry to make the Sunday evening services a strictly missionary campaign. These Saints feel that neither ministry nor laity should hesitate to declare the gospel in its fullness and that the Restoration must be vividly presented. In Mishawaka, especially, an affirmative campaign of these truths has aroused the interest of nonmembers. The Saints are trying as Paul says, to "be bold in the truth."

July 29, the women's division, under the capable leadership of Sister Bertha Granger, superintendent, and Sister Elizabeth Baney, assistant, held another successful sacrifice party at the home of Brother and Sister Ernest Mills. After an evening spent in games, refreshments of home-made ice cream and cake, were served. Then came the reckoning, and the men found that in their effort to raise more money than the women, they had been hopelessly defeated. More than sixteen dollars went into the sacrifice fund.

Elder J. W. McKnight was the speaker on a recent Sunday evening, delivering a real, old-time gospel sermon. He also joined Pastor Myers in the blessing of three little ones of a nonmember family. Local workers are sure the work will continue to find place in the home of these people.

Others who have occupied of late are Deacon Albert Taylor, Priest William Hardy, and Elders Pement and Myers.

San Bernardino, California

This branch enjoyed having Apostle George G. Lewis a few days during the month of June, and his sermons were well received. Missionary George Wixom was also with us during this month, and his visit was greatly enjoyed.

Children's Day, June 12, was observed in an unusual and interesting way. Beginning with the church school worship period and continuing throughout the day, all services were in charge of children, assisted by the regular officers as they were needed. The junior choir rendered special songs and at six thirty in the evening, the Oriole Girls gave a play, "In the Palace of the King." Two children were led into the water of baptism. This was a very instructive day for the children.

Branch business meeting was held July 6, and reports from all officers and departments were very gratifying.

A most beautiful and impressive baptismal service was held at the church August 9, when twelve new members were added to the number. Seven of these were adults, and three families were completed in the gospel. The platform and font was a bower of ferns and flowers, and as each candidate entered the font, he passed through a snow white gate opened by a member of the priesthood. During the baptismal rites a medley of old hymns was softly played. Between the baptismal and confirmation services the orchestra played a group of old hymns. A violin solo, "A Medley of Love," a vocal solo, "I Come to Thee," and another orchestra number completed a beautiful and reverent interlude. The pastor was assisted in the confirmation services by Brothers Lacey and Givens, of Ontario Branch. Brother Givens also baptized two of the candidates. This makes a total of twenty-three baptized since last October.

The women are busy this summer, working for the Harvest Festival which will be held November 4 to 6 inclusive. They have canned several hundred quarts of fruit which will be displayed at the festival, and then be placed in the branch storehouse. Each family is arranging an individual display, giving of one tenth of their canned fruit, vegetables, etc. Every department, from the tiny tots in the "kinderband" to the dramatic class, is preparing something special for the festival program. These Saints can recommend a harvest festival as a splendid factor in putting life into a branch.

Attendance has been very good this summer, and the branch is not suffering from the summer slump as it usually does during the hot months.

Independence

The Auditorium Festival Chorus will have a special rehearsal Sunday afternoon, September 11, at four o'clock, at the Stone Church, Paul N. Craig directing. This will be the second combined rehearsal of the various chorus units this season, and all singers are urged to be present. The chorus will present its fall concert at the Auditorium the evening of October 14, during the Harvest Home Festival.

A large Campus congregation listened Sunday night to the sermon by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, "Eternal Judgment," a stirring presentation of the true word of God. Music for the evening was by the Auditorium Orchestra and the Men's Chorus from the Stone Church Choir. Under the leadership of Brother John F. Sheehy, the priesthood sang three hymns, "I Can Hear My Savior Calling," "Take Time to Be Holy," and "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." President F. M. McDowell was in the stand and offered the invocation and benediction.

Yesterday morning the several thousand school children of Independence began a new year of study. Registration was chiefly cared for last week. Most of the country schools of the county opened Labor Day.

A ball game between the Independence Merchants and the Kansas City East Side Merchants at three o'clock in the afternoon, drew a Labor Day crowd to the Campus, and in the evening several thousand saw the moving picture, "All Quiet on the Western Front." These two were the only holiday events scheduled for the Campus.

The all-day picnic and excursion on the riverboat Idlewild, sponsored by the Young People's Council of Independence in behalf of the combined church schools of the city, August 30, proved a gala occasion for several hundred Latter Day Saints. Armed with midday lunches and free tickets children and grown people crowded the boat for a trip down the Missouri River.

Stone Church

Reverence, dignity, and order characterized the September communion service at the Stone Church, and the largest congregation in several months was present to participate in the ordinance. The theme, "Onward to Zion," thrilled the Saints with new understanding of and new purposefulness in the gospel, and many resolved during the coming fall and winter season to reconsecrate their lives to God.

The principal talk of the service by President Elbert A. Smith was one intended to cheer and comfort the workers. In the stand with Brother Smith were Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Pastor John F. Sheehy, Elders C. Ed. Miller, and H. G. Barto, and Bishops G. L. DeLapp, J. S. Kelley, and R. T. Cooper. Brother DeLapp gave the oblation talk. Behind these were seated the priests who served the sacrament emblems, and the ranks of the priesthood of the congregation.

The meeting closed with the reverent singing of the hymn, "Onward to Zion," and it was with new appreciation of the task ahead that the Saints left the house of worship.

Liberty Street Church

Much credit is due Liberty Street congregation for the wonderful spirit of unity prevailing among its members, and the enthusiasm and work of the various departments.

The young people's council has sponsored several interesting trips this summer. August 20 a truckload of people from this congregation went to the Stewartsville reunion, bringing back with them strength and encouragement in the gospel cause.

Missionary trips have been made to several outlying branches where music and speaker have been furnished by the visiting Saints.

Sister Carr's Doctrine and Covenants Class continues to meet on Tuesday evening, and many interesting topics are being discussed.

Sunday, August 28, the children from the primary department, under the leadership of Sister McConnel, gave a program at Enoch Hill Church.

This branch was saddened a few weeks ago by the death of a young brother, Albert Bly. He leaves in memory a life of service to his fellow men. A lesson of love is to be learned from his devotion to his mother, and his desire to live a Christian life.

The women's department meets every week to continue their work of quilting, canning, and other activities. Much good is accomplished by these workers.

Paster J. R. Lentell with Brothers Elbert Mock and Cecil Walker, has organized a young people's missionary group which meets early Wednesday night at the church and in a body goes to one of the group prayer meetings. The older brothers and sisters have expressed the opinion that much strength is gained by seeing the interest manifested by the young people.

The orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Waters, is doing splendidly. They furnish music whenever it is needed and lend attractiveness to the services. An ice cream social was held August 18, the proceeds to be used by the orchestra and women's department.

Walnut Park Church

Early morning prayer service, August 28, was marked by a large degree of the Spirit, and this extended through the church school in charge of Albert Chapman. Attendance was good at both meetings.

Elder C. K. Green occupied the next hour and instructed the Saints as to how the scriptures tell us to treat each other and our neighbors. Brother Green has labored in the church many years, and his advice is always well taken for he has had much experience in the gospel.

That evening Brother W. T. Gard's class sponsored the missionary effort to Blue Springs. They left the church early in the afternoon with the young people from Liberty Street, and all enjoyed picnic supper together. They took for the speaker of the evening Elder Benjamin Bean, and after several numbers, including a selection by the Liberty Street Orchestra, a piano solo by Isabel Garrett, a trombone and trumpet duet by the Mills boys, Brother Bean directed his talk to the young people concerning the home. Much benefit was derived from this message. About seventy-five went from Independence to Blue Springs.

The women workers of Walnut Park have pooled their funds and painted the walls of the church. For several years the Saints of this congregation worshiped in the basement of the church. In 1921, under the supervision of Elder J. A. Dowker, pastor at that time, the upper part of the building was added. The inside basement walls had never been painted and considerable dust had accumulated. On September 1, young and old met at the church and spent the entire day cleaning seats, floors, and woodwork. Lunch was served in the basement by the women of the district, and they felt that much had been accomplished.

The A. W. Z. Class enjoyed a corn roast September 2. About fifteen attended, and after playing games on the lawn of Sister Violet Chase, social leader of the class, they roasted corn on an open grate.

Sacrament service, September 4, was presided over by Elders Frank McDonald, C. V. Hopkins, and Carroll L. Olson. There was a large gathering. A very fine opening talk, also a closing talk, were given by Pastor McDonald, who urged the Saints to wipe the dust from the three standard books of the church, read them, and apply them to their lives. If this is done, Brother McDonald thinks, a Zion condition will exist very soon.

The little son of Brother and Sister Joseph Roby was blessed at this service by Elders George Jenkins and C. H. Belham.

The Saints of this congregation will miss the cheerful smile of Sister Victoria Parman, who passed away at her home the evening of September 1. Sister Parman had lived many years in this district, and though unable to attend services during the last year of her life, was known to and beloved by the congregation. Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Stella Wille, three sons, Frank, James, and Fred, and many other relatives. Her funeral was conducted from the Forester Funeral Chapel in Kansas City, and interment was in Elmwood Cemetery.

Sister Nellie Criley, wife of J. J. Criley, passed away at her home September 1. She is survived by two sons, Clifford and Reginald A. Criley. Sister Criley's funeral was conducted from the Stahl Funeral Home, and burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Englewood Church

Pastor Perry Hiles's "reviews" to the church school each Sunday morning following the class period, take up church organization and the functions of the priesthood, and afford splendid opportunity to bring these matters before nonmembers in an acceptable way. Also reports of sermons are made attractive by a faithful staff of young workers directed by Sister Fred Koehler. When this was begun Brother C. Ed. Miller was giving a series of lantern talks on the Book of Mormon, thus affording opportunity to present the truths of that wonderful message to the people whose interest in the gospel workers are trying to hold. Not all the local membership regularly attends church services, and through this reporting of sermons, workers hope to arouse their interest and bring them to church. Truly many are eager to do their part and are working harmoniously together to build up the church at Englewood.

Attendance and interest in the Sunday morning preaching services and also the Wednesday night prayer meeting are being stimulated. This is due in large measure to the faithfulness of the priesthood in their membership visiting program.

Of late, prayer services in this congregation have been seasons of spiritual uplift. The Lord has been present with his Holy Spirit to a very satisfying degree.

Among the visiting speakers was Bishop A. B. Phillips who urged the Saints not to be forgetful of the word of the Lord to the church ninety-nine years ago this month in which he urged the people not to neglect their obligation of duty to their country, but to seek out good, wise, and honest men to place in office to run the affairs of the government.

Elder S. S. Smith has also spoken. Elder C. B. Woodstock was here speaking to the class of married people mostly fathers and mothers, and also to the children. Brother C. A. Kress addressed the sacramental service of August, and Elder D. S. McNamara, former pastor, was here last Sunday.

The women's department is meeting regularly, and Sister R. D. Weaver is conducting a class in the study of phases of psychology.

Spring Branch Church

The last Wednesday evening prayer meeting was outstanding in that half of those present were young people many of whom took active part in the meeting. The service was in charge of Elder Jake Andes and Ellis McLees. Brother Andes talked briefly on letting our light shine by living our religion. Sunday morning's hour of prayer was in charge of Arthur Peer and Jake Andes. Several who were sick and unable to attend, were remembered in prayer.

Bessie Totty, a young woman of this congregation, gave a special talk on supporting the leaders at the church school service. There was large attendance.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood. Sister Winogene Boyce played the prelude. Deloris Marie, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Chester Andes, was blessed by Brothers Jake Andes and G. W. Eastwood. Robert Fish gave a talk on the altar and sacrifice. Brothers Jacobson, Brewer, Sedoris and McLees assisted in taking up the oblation. Pastor Eastwood read a few verses from the book of Romans, and stressed the necessity of the Saints helping each other. Sister Beulah Stewart Donkavich sang a solo, "Nearer, Still Nearer." Elders Alma Tankard and Jake Andes and Priests Joseph Farrow, Jesse Smith, Arthur Peer, and Elmer Peer assisted in the sacrament.

Monday night there was a teachers' and officers' meeting.

Arkansas Missionary Activities

Thayer, Missouri, August 29.—Arkansas and Louisiana form a field so large that one missionary can scarcely make the circuit in one year. But some of the local ministry are assisting and doing what they can to help.

June 19, I commenced a series of meetings in Brother Fred Kettner's yard on the lawn. The Pentecost people gave us the use of their church seats for about three weeks. At the close of each service I put on a few Bible pictures. Our crowds and interest continued to the last meeting. Brother Roy S. Budd, apostle in charge, dropped in on us the last night, and everyone gave splendid attention to his remarks. Sister Cook presided most every night at the piano. There were no additions to the church membership but much good seed was sown. One lady is ready to be baptized on my return.

Brother Kettner's and Arthur Cook's families did all they could do for the success of the meeting. We stopped most of the time at Brother Cook's home and will never forget that Bulgarian butter milk.

July 17, was the closing day of the semi-annual conference which convened with the Hot Springs, Arkansas Branch. It was the best conference it has been my privilege to attend for months. Apostle Roy S. Budd was present, presiding with us at the different sessions. The Saints appreciated Brother Budd's preaching and counsel. Elder Hale W. Smith and wife and Granville Trowbridge and wife added interest to the conference by their presence, also the Jacksons from Dierks, Arkansas. Sister Hale W. Smith was installed as secretary pro tem. Judge F. O. White and family as usual mingled in the Sunday service. The preaching was by Brothers Budd, Hale W. Smith and Granville Trowbridge. The Saints seem to be strengthened in the work, and manifested strong determination to go forward.

At the close of conference I stopped at Bald Knob, where

I was privileged to preach in the Christian church for a few nights.

July 30, I commenced meeting at Caraway in the school-house yard that had been seated by the Latter Day Saint group and the Church of Christ and it was lighted with electricity. Crowds were large, averaging each night about four hundred people. They took great interest in the Bible pictures at close of service. Five precious souls were baptized, viz., Sister Cleo Carmack, Sister Orville Booth, and three of the Wood boys. While I was there the young people came around and took my measure for a new suit, and even the Sunday school class of little boys and girls came to see how big my head was as they intend to pick cotton to buy a new hat for the preacher.

From here I went to Hardy, Arkansas, five miles north-east, and engaged in a ten-day meeting. We were greeted with a full house each night. Brother Joseph Ward and C. J. Spurlock opened up this place about forty years ago. A "community" church building has been erected. The people listened splendidly to our preaching. We were also assisted by Mr. Smith a singing master who lead the song service. The last Sunday of the meeting, dinner was had on the ground. Brother Port McClain and wife and J. W. Hancock and wife drove from Thayer, Missouri and spent the day with us. Brother Hancock preached at the eleven o'clock hour. We left a regular monthly appointment for Brother Hancock. Undoubtedly some in this neighborhood will eventually obey the gospel.

Next Thursday night at Needham, Arkansas, I commence a debate with the Church of Christ people on church propositions. This is to continue for ten days. My opponent is Bynum Black.

A. M. BAKER.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

Attendance during the month of August was very encouraging considering that there was no special missionary effort as had been previously planned. Stake Missionary J. Charles May, who was to have helped here, had been called away in reunion work. September being rally month should see an increase of attendance and interest in church school and all other services.

Brother Zink led the worship service during August, and the theme was "A Purpose True." This service is inspiring and gives each one the opportunity to enter into the spirit of worship. The call to worship, the prayer, special numbers, songs, discussion of the theme, story, and closing thought blend well together.

Sermons in recent weeks have come from the following speakers: C. B. Woodstock, C. I. Carpenter, Perry Hiles, H. A. Gould, W. F. Bolinger, and J. R. Lentell.

Sunday, August 28, marked the culmination of a local sacrifice offering drive, and at the morning service many told how they saved or earned their offering. The young people's department or O. B. K.'s did not go to the Stewartsville reunion as they had previously planned, giving the money they would have spent on this trip to the sacrifice fund. A class of young girls baked and sold cup cakes to earn their sacrifice offering. One boy did not attend the picture show or eat candy during the month. A three-year-old youngster washed dishes and dried them for his mother. Other children went to the store and performed other errands for mother.

A basket lunch on the Van Horn property followed this service, and after all had eaten, Brother Fike spoke briefly on the spirit of sacrifice. Then came an informal "experience" service which many enjoyed. Several told the place of their birth, the State in which they were baptized, and some outstanding experiences since they had entered the church.

Birmingham, England

Saints here were delighted to welcome Apostle John W. Rushton August 19. A reception was held at the chapel and a supper and program were arranged. Elder J. Schofield gave the opening speech and welcome to Brother Rushton and afterwards Pastor P. S. Whalley spoke. Apostle Rushton responded with deep feeling to the cordial welcome, speaking reverently of the stalwards and pioneers of the gospel in Birmingham. He mentioned Thomas Taylor, Charles Caton, E. Meredith, and others, and spoke of the fidelity of F. H. Edwards who still labors here after long years of service. A happy time was had in spite of the heat. This was the hottest day in England for twenty-one years.

Sunday, August 21, saw a gathering of Saints from all parts of the mission, pastors coming from Enfield, Manchester, and Gloucester. The Saints were grieved to learn that Brother Rushton was ill, and it was only with great difficulty, self-control, and the aid of God's Spirit, that he fulfilled the day's obligations. The Saints were richly blessed. The hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers," was sung by the congregation with a deep feeling and inspiration, for the influence of the heavenly Father was in the midst of the meeting. The words of admonition of Brother Rushton were administered with power and authority yet they fell upon the ears of the people gently, comfortingly. Brother Rushton stressed the necessity of reverence and dignity in the church services, and expressed gladness at seeing the observance of sanctity in many parts of this country.

Sister Jones was baptized Sunday, July 17, by Elder F. H. Edwards, and confirmed by Elder W. B. Arrowsmith. A beautiful Spirit testified to the truth and sacredness of this ordinance. Sister Jones is the mother of five children. Two of her daughters were baptized in May.

On the following Sunday Sister Doris Allen made her choice for Jesus amid great rejoicing, and a wonderful day was again spent.

Patriarch Greenwood visited the branch and stimulated the thought of the congregation.

Birmingham members thank God for the great blessings he has bestowed upon them the last few months. Nine precious souls have been added to the kingdom. Their prayer services have been well attended and are truly "spiritual feasts." They are working, watching, and praying that God will continue to bless them and help them grow in truth and love.

Brentwood, Missouri

Marshall and Berry Avenues

The little Bungalow Church now presents a new inside appearance. The walls are newly papered, floors varnished, and an organ has been loaned for use at services.

Patriarch Richard Baldwin, district missionary, occupied the pulpit Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, August 5, 6, and 7, before a large crowd of Saints and friends. His sermons were very instructive. The church needs many more men such as Brother Baldwin; he accomplishes good wherever he goes. He is a man of God, an instrument in divine hands. He plans to hold a series of meetings here early in the fall.

The Young Men's Club again came to the front with financial support for the insurance due on the church building. This club is growing.

Due to the missionary work of a brother and sister, two new members were gained through the ordinance of baptism August 28, at the district conference held at East Saint Louis, Illinois. These members are welcome.

Forty Brentwood Saints attended the district conference on Saturday and Sunday, August 27 and 28. In addition to the regular routine of business the names of six young men were submitted to the conference to be ordained to the priesthood. At the testimony meeting Sunday afternoon the Holy Spirit was strongly felt by everyone. This was a helpful hour. The conference adjourned in the evening to meet December 2, 3, and 4 at Saint Louis.

Brentwood Branch is progressing as well as may be expected since several are out of employment.

Northern and Western Michigan Reunion

The Park of the Pines reunion opened its twelfth session Friday, August 12, at ten o'clock, with a social service. About four hundred people camped out and there were eighty-one tents. All felt that the ten days of reunion were most successful, and hope that next year will bring many more to the Park of the Pines, a chosen spot on Lake Charlevoix.

Elders Allen and Dirk Schreur, B. H. Doty, and Hubert Case were in charge of the business and organization meeting, and Apostle D. T. Williams was selected to preside over the reunion, being given power to choose his associates. Sister Ada Allread was chosen secretary. The reception committee was appointed as follows: Dirk Schreur, Grace Schreur, Brother and Sister Ledsworth, Hector McKinnon, Richard Hartnell, Brother and Sister B. H. Doty, Mary and Marjorie Nicholas, Henrietta Laur, Ammon Schreur. Dirk Schreur and wife had charge of the dining hall, and they appointed four group leaders: Henrietta Laur, Sister B. H. Doty, Sister Ledsworth, and Ada Allread. Other committees, necessary to the organization of the reunion, were also selected. Brother Lamblin, of Bay City, was in charge of the auditorium; Hector McKinnon, patrolman of grounds; Vern Hartnell and Sister B. H. Doty, editors of the camp paper. Not many on the reunion grounds escaped having their names in the paper, and much fun was derived by the reading of this journal.

The music added much to the meetings, Brother B. H. Doty having charge of the band and orchestra and Sister Louise Evans of the vocal division.

Leaders of class work were Brothers Case, Clark, and Brother Hewitt, from Canada. All are capable and their instruction was very interesting. Sister Mildred Chattem had charge of the junior department.

Social life at the camp was varied, and provided entertainment for young and old. There were baseball games, volley ball, swimming, corn roasts, and programs.

The young people held their prayer meetings in the new auditorium, a fine place, and the services were much enjoyed. On the last Sunday morning there were one hundred and ten present and one hundred testimonies. At the close, they marched in a body to the main auditorium for general prayer meeting.

Patriarch F. A. Smith was kept busy giving blessings, and his presence at the reunion was much enjoyed.

Sermons were preached by Elders Williams, Ledsworth, Clark, Doty, Patterson, Burt, Schreur, Pohley, and all were along the line of building character.

During the reunion seven candidates were baptized into the church.

Business meeting was held Saturday, August 20, in the afternoon. Allen Schreur reported district resources as $391.65; disbursements, $366.57; balance on hand, $25.08. Brother Dirk Schreur reported a debt of $917.32 standing. Pledges were taken Sunday afternoon to raise some money; $61.31 paid in cash and $73 pledged.

Northern and Western Districts invited the other Michigan Districts to permanently participate in reunion work. The reunion committee for the coming year is composed of Dirk Schreur, Richard Hartnell, Brother Carter, Byron Doty, Allen Schreur, Hector McKinnon, and Jay Doty. Ada Allread is secretary for the coming year.

The program given Friday evening, under the leadership of Grace and Ella Doty, was enjoyed by about five hundred people. Brother William Patterson's bird and animal calls were wonderfully entertaining. The campers were glad that he came to visit the reunion.

President Smith's Itinerary Turns Homeward

President Frederick M. Smith is now in Boston, according to letters received, visiting with members of the church there. It is reported that he will soon be turning toward home, but will visit the following cities in the interests of the church work: New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, and Columbus. After that it is expected that he will return to Independence to help with the church activities for the fall.

Facing Our Teaching Tasks

The news column for Independence carries an account of the opening of the two week's institute for teachers and for all interested in teaching problems. Although Independence, like other places, has had its difficulties in trying to find able teachers, it is indicative of healthy interest that more than five hundred people are participating in the study work of the classes.

Next week we can promise more information about the institute and its courses. The studies are outlined from a practical laboratory viewpoint, and deal largely with methods and technique.

It is the business of the institute to inspire, as well as to inform and train. The enthusiasm manifested in this work is contagious; and many a church member has made a new consecration of his time and talent during an institute.

Institutes are growing in popularity. They are short and effective; they can be crowded, if necessary, into a week-end; and they can be held often. They are not expensive, and they can be conducted with few workers. There have been large numbers of institutes this year, and some districts have had several during the summer, holding them in different cities.

L. L.

The contemplation of celestial things will make a man both speak and think more sublimely and magnificently when he descends to human affairs.—Cicero.

God never wrought miracles to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it.—Bacon.

The Glory of God

One does not ride far in the country before a certain double-barreled phrase is running through his mind: the works of God and the mistakes of man.

And quite often one discovers that the mistakes of man—in the form of ugly signs, hot dog stands and filling stations—obscure the beauty of the works of God.

An old proverb says: Man made the city, but God made the country. But there is no reason to believe that man, working under divine inspiration, can not make his cities both beautiful and good, free from poverty, dirt, and wickedness. Sometime it may occur to man to experiment in the building of such cities. Saint Paul tells us that Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." But Saint Paul does not tell us that Abraham ever found such a city, and if he did it has long since passed unrecorded in the history of earth. Nevertheless it is a tribute to the soul and heart of Abraham that he looked for such a city. That city could reflect the glory of God as well as the country, should it ever be built.

The ancient writers of sacred scripture found the contemplation of the universe a source of inspiration and faith: It is probable that no language ever more beautifully expressed this one thought: than the opening of the nineteenth Psalm:

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard.

Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world.

This is poetry; but it is also truth. The heavens do declare the glory of God. They do reveal his handiwork. Every day shows in some new way the clearer vision of Great Truth.

In the latter part of the nineteenth century, our infant science thought it found evidences in the world to prove that the universe was mechanistic and that there was nothing in it to correspond with the Christian conception of God.

The most recent writings of the greatest scientists have gone heavily against materialism and its philosophy. Robert A. Millikan, Arthur H. Compton, and others are saying that the universe shows that there is some directive intelligence at work.

It is a long step from saying, "There may be a God," to saying, "There is a God." And to some people, who already believe in God, the latter statement may not be very much news. The devout Christian will not be much excited: he will say, "I knew it all the time." But the worldly skeptic has not believed. He has taken the scientist for his spiritual advisor.

What will the worldly skeptic say now, when his scientist informs him that there is a God?

The fact that there is a God makes all the difference in the world. No greater piece of good news can come to any man, no greater realization burst upon his intelligence than this: There is a God.

Now we need no longer be disturbed because "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." But yesterday we thought that fool was a scientist. Now we have discovered that he was only a fool.

Facing the Winter Now

Now is the time to make the most of our preparations for what threatens to be a winter filled with want and suffering for many people. Two months later, when the winter is actually upon us, it will be too late.

Many people, and our own included among them, look forward to this winter as a great question mark of uncertainty. They don't know where the jobs are coming from to provide the necessary money for food and fuel, for rent and badly needed new clothing. And numbers of them are fairly certain to find themselves without these primary necessities for the maintenance of life and health.

Of course we know there are the unworthy and improvident poor, whose condition will never be any better no matter what we do for them. They always stand first in the bread lines, and they make the loudest clamor for help, while those who need help most starve ashamed in seclusion. But this year there will be more honest and worthy people suffering than ever before.

"We don't let them starve!" should be the motto of every community, although there have been, and will probably again be actual cases of starvation. It is a good thing to make the lazy uncomfortable, and to put the improvident to work; but the trouble with any course of neglect is that it makes the innocent members of the family suffer along with the unworthy.

Crops are fairly good, and prices are such that many things useful for winter for food can be had very cheaply, and in some cases for the picking of them. These things should be stored up by everybody for the winter, for they will certainly be needed.

The Harvest Festival

AN AID TO THE BISHOPRIC

During the last few years the Harvest Festival has become increasingly important in the work of the Bishopric. Each year it has provided means for the partial support of the poor and needy of Independence, Kansas City, and surrounding territory. The assistance it will be required to render this year will undoubtedly be greater than during any preceding year.

While there appears to be an upward trend in general economic conditions it is quite apparent that recovery will not be rapid enough to assuage the distress and want of many of our people during the coming winter. The financial means of the church are extremely limited and alone will not suffice to meet the needs, but augmented by the food-stuffs made available through the Harvest Festival will undoubtedly enable us to meet the situation.

The Harvest Festival has developed as a definite part of the Storehouse and has taken a rightful place in our church program. We earnestly solicit the continued support of all who have made its success possible.

Careful supervision of the distribution of food-stuffs is given by Bishop J. S. Kelley who is also in charge of the Harvest Festival.

Happiness and Unselfishness

Irrespective of his environment, a man is bound to be unhappy if he lives in a world whose center is self. Undoubtedly one of the great sources of happiness is affection. People who feel that they are unloved are seldom if ever happy, whereas people who have abundant reason to feel that they are loved are seldom if ever completely miserable. . . .

In order to be happy a man must cultivate an impersonal attitude toward life. He must not demand that the world shall revolve about him, or even that it shall take any unusual note of him. The day is coming when he will be obliged to retire and yield his place to another, and if when that day arrives he has not learned to rejoice in something beyond himself, if what seems to him to be all-important is not that his work should go on but that he himself should go on, he will of course be utterly miserable. In order to be happy a man must cultivate a number of interests which are relatively independent of his own private affairs—interests in the pursuit of which he may derive a great deal of satisfaction regardless of the way in which fortune may deal with him.

Happiness comes through the satisfaction of all normal desires but of none at the expense of others. It comes through the cultivation of an impersonal attitude toward life, through the development of out-going affections and interests which keep you from centering all your thought and concern upon your personal affairs, enable you to live objectively in the lives of others, and lead you to play some part in the worth-while movements of your time. It comes through the discovery of something to live for, something of such great and enduring worth that it appears to justify all the risk and pain of human existence.—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in We Need Religion.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

It is suggested that prayers for the sick can be made effectively at the Wednesday evening prayer services, and at the monthly sacrament services. We hope that our readers will also remember the sick in their private prayers.

Friendly letters will be written by members of the staff to those who are discouraged or isolated from church privileges, and to those requesting prayers whose letters indicate that they are able to receive mail.

A Prayer of Repentance

By Fred Shepherd

Our heavenly Father, thou who knowest the thoughts and aspirations of all people, we beseech thee to help us. We confess our faults.

Not only in our deeds, but in our hearts have we committed sins against thee and against thy people. From this we suffer even as they against whom we have sinned have suffered. We pray thee to spare us and them this suffering. Watch over us and help us, and when our actions are not in accordance with thy ways wilt thou minister unto us so that we can put those things away. Without thee we are as naught but with thee we are mighty; and we desire thy help so that being delivered from the bondage of sin we can put forth all our strength in the saving of thy kingdom on earth.

Repentant we approach thee and bow our heads in shame and mortification; shame and mortification because we realize our past offenses and likewise our past repentance. We know of thy loving kindness, of thy compassion, and of thy long-suffering; but we fear that some day we may force thee too far and thou wilt then forsake us. Again and again have we heard thy voice and have answered thee, but again and again have we failed to do thy will. We are thy favored people resting in a choice corner of thy vineyard; we know thy will concerning us; we recognize in our leaders those whom thou hast given to us; we have seen thy hand in many things; we have received thy assurance of what shall be if we carry out thy commands; and we have seen the downfall of those who failed thee.

All these things we know, Almighty God, but still we move not forward. We become too concerned with other-worldly things; we set up for ourselves leaders in other walks of life and follow them; we count personal material wealth as of greater value than spiritual possessions; and we surround thy assurance with doubts.

Excepting once a year, we forget the majesty of thy power over death which was exemplified in the raising of thy Son from the dead; we forget thy gift of the promised land; we forget the records of fulfilled prophecy; we forget the lives of Moses and Saint Paul; we forget how thy help was instrumental in overcoming ancient enemies; and we forget the fate of Sodom and of the wife of Lot.

Help us, we pray thee, to build first thy kingdom and to seek thy righteousness. Wherever we may be may we ever seek the extension of thy kingdom. Hasten the fullness of time so that we may witness the union of thy kingdom on earth with thy kingdom in heaven. Grant unto us wisdom and grace; strength of will and tenacity of purpose; a measure of thy holy power and compassion; and, dear Lord, give us love, hope, and truth, and a desire for justice and obedience.

In the blessed name of thy son Jesus, Amen.

Sister Mabel Wyman, of 119 Edgemere Road, R. F. D. 1, Springfield, Massachusetts, writes requesting prayers for her daughter who has been severely injured in an automobile accident. An operation seems inevitable, according to the doctors; and if this may not be avoided, the Saints are asked to pray that the operation may be successful, and that the daughter may be fully restored to health. Sister Wyman herself has also been suffering for some time, and requests that she, too, may be remembered, that she may be relieved. She says, "My heart seems burdened, but I am trying to lean hard upon Him who never yet has forsaken me."

Brother and Sister J. S. Allen, of Springfield, South Dakota, ask to be remembered in our prayers. Sister Allen is afflicted with rheumatism, and Brother Allen has had a nervous breakdown. They need our prayers.

Mrs. Martha Turnbow, Route 2, Palmersville, Tennessee, writes that she has received benefit from the prayers of the Saints, but that she is still badly afflicted with rheumatism and heart trouble. She asks that they continue to remember her.

Mrs. Nettie Doggett, of Pond Creek, Oklahoma, is suffering of a complication of disorders. If there is an elder near her she would be glad to have him administer to her. Meanwhile she requests prayers that she may recover and be restored to health.

There is a catchword that has been running round the world since the war. It emanated, I think, from America. At any rate it has been used widely, and is this: "We must make the world safe for democracy." I will give you a much truer catchword than that, and one which means a much more difficult task. We have got to make democracy safe for the world.—Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of England.

NEWS BRIEFS

The Ruches Welcome Apostle Rushton to Norway

A few days ago Missionary V. D. Ruch, his family, and the Saints of Norway welcomed Apostle John W. Rushton to Scandinavian soil. Brother Rushton's help will be gratefully accepted in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, where Elder Ruch is the lone missionary.

Almost four years ago Elder and Sister Ruch and their little daughter, Velma, left American shores bound for Norway, to begin their second mission in the Scandinavian countries. They have been kept very busy in the gospel work, and their services are in constant demand by native Saints. Indeed there is much more than they can do, but they speak of the loyal support of the Saints of that country and their interest in the progress of the general church.

The summer's work has taken the missionary family to Oslo, Porsgrund, Kragero, Arendal, Grimstad, and Sandefjord, Norway. The residence address of the Ruches is Villa "Marienborg," Grafsen, Norway.

Fanning Saints in Community Event

Sunday, August 28, was Chautauqua Day at the thirty-sixth annual, four-day picnic at Sparks, Kansas, and the Saints of the branch at Fanning figured largely in the program. Before a crowd of eight thousand Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, represented Fanning Branch as speaker, and the entire musical program on Sunday was furnished by Fanning talent. The Fanning quartet, Mabel Mortimore, Marie Sheppard, James A. Thomas, and Virgil Sheppard, sang three selections, and Edna Williams sang a solo.

Indians Cherish Memory of Missionary P. R. Burton

The Omaha Indians of Northeastern Nebraska cherish the memory of Elder P. R. Burton, who, they say, was the first white missionary to meet with them in their prayer services and pray with them and ask them to pray for him. He ate at their feasts, buried their dead, administered to their sick, and preached the gospel of Christ to them, making them better men and women. Today they pray for the help of other ministers as consecrated as big-hearted Brother Burton.

These things and other interesting facts concerning the Omaha Tribe are told in a letter by Amos Lamson, in another column of this issue. Brother Lamson is secretary of the tribal council.

Young People's Camp Conducts Nauvoo Church Service

The Young People's Camp attended the Nauvoo church in a body the first Sunday of camp, marching to reserved seats and presenting a well-prepared service. For a theme they chose "Follow the Gleam," and told in story and song of the search for the Holy Grail by knights of old, and later of the hardships endured by those in search of light during the Reformation, and then of the trials of those in the early days of the Restoration. An address was given by Elder E. E. Closson.

The Young People's Camp, held from August 15 to 26, though small in number, was outstanding in the spirit of unity and fellowship which prevailed. Under the leadership of Roy Cheville, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Closson, Miss Anne Morgan, and Delmar Jones, thirty-five young men and women enjoyed morning classes, recreational activities, camp fires, and many other happy experiences.

Fiftieth Baptismal Anniversary for Patriarch U. W. Greene

While in Maine this summer on a month's leave of absence from his duties as KMBC radio pastor, Patriarch U. W. Greene passed, on August 10, the fiftieth anniversary of his baptism into the church. The event was fittingly celebrated by Saints of Stonington, Maine. Brother Greene was invited on that night, to occupy the regular prayer meeting hour, and the theme he presented to a large crowd of attentive listeners was "What the Church Means to Me After Fifty Years." Almost forty-seven years ago Brother Greene began his ministry in the church at Stonington, and since that time has occupied in many offices of the priesthood, and labored in high quorums of the church. At the close of the service, though the night was foggy, the Saints took Brother Greene as guest of honor to Moose Island where in true "Maine" style they enjoyed a clam bake, hymn singing, and social time. Brother Greene was presented a fine birthday cake with candles and surprise gifts in the form of gold pieces.

From Independence Patriarch Greene accompanied Brother Charles Eaton to his former home in Maine, and while there he visited and labored among the Saints. Everywhere large crowds of old friends greeted him. A record of Brother Greene's activities on this trip reads as follows: Sermons delivered, 19; prayer services conducted, 8; baptisms, 9; confirmed 2 and assisted to confirm 2; funerals, 2; marriages, 1; blessings given, 14; other services attended, 10.

Moral Problems in Political Government

By A. B. Phillips

Nearly two thousand years ago Jesus of Nazareth gave to the world the only perfect way of living together. Many nations have tried many plans of government in their attempts to solve this great problem, and the nearer they have followed the advice of the Lowly Nazarene the more successful have been their efforts. The reason for this is becoming clearer age by age. The chief causes of difficulty and defeat attending political governments have been injustice, vice, disloyalty, and selfishness. When these evils continue to dominate both government officers and citizens, the downfall of that government is sure to result in the course of time. This has always been the case in every instance known to history.

Injustice is destructive of political, social, and industrial prosperity. It rapidly breeds a multitude of evils in favoritism, ruthlessness, deceit, and oppression. The growth and influence of vice among any people must be checked, or decay will be certain and swift. It manifests itself in unnumbered forms of immorality, brutality, and corruption, until the lower passions rule instead of moral courage and integrity. The menace of disloyalty reaches the nation when it threatens the home, but it may also take other forms and invade other places. Unfaithfulness, conspiracy, and treachery in any of the walks of life endanger the very foundations of society, and must be effectively put down by government action whenever they undermine the social structure.

Those who are guilty of these demoralizing acts almost invariably manifest selfishness in one or more of its many forms. It may be greed, fraud, or a countless number of lawless deeds, amounting to crime or misdemeanors. It may be committed in more subtle ways, such as nepotism and patronage in political offices, or in the purchase of votes and the prostitution of the right in order to gain favor with a particular class. No government is safe in the hands of unjust, vicious, disloyal, or selfish men. And he who votes for such candidates knowingly is an enemy of his country, of society as a whole, and even of his own future and posterity.

The Citizenship Test of Jesus

No stable government can be built out of selfish and corrupt men, nor can the people of any government so constructed be happy, peaceful, or loyal to each other. If we are wise, we may learn great truths from Jesus concerning sound principles of government, for he gave long ago instructions which comprise principles of government for all mankind. Hundreds of millions of people since then have claimed citizenship and affirmed allegiance to these principles. One of these principles Jesus declared to be peace and nonaggression. From the beginning his message taught all people to observe "peace on earth, good will toward men," and he issued the solemn warning that "they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

The economic distress of great nations today has resulted from their disregard of this word. Had peace and good will ruled the hearts of men, the most disastrous war ever suffered by the human race might have been avoided. Many governments have fallen, and others are on the verge of economic and political collapse. Our own soldiers are demanding billions in bonus money immediately, regardless of the fact that the government does not have the money and can not raise it without increasing the enormous tax burdens already heaped upon citizens who are staggering under crushing loads, many thousands of whom have lost their property because of increasing debts. Peace and good will in the heart is required of citizens who would build a government for the peace and good of all.

The evils of bad government, like the evils of bad private conduct, grow out of the selfish and harsh natures of those who disregard the rights and well-being of others. No government dominated by these harmful influences will seek the common good. Men actuated by such wrong motives combine together in the attempt to secure unjust advantages. The result is that hundreds of self-seeking groups are formed that care nothing for the general welfare. Equity becomes impossible under such conditions, and unless adequate remedies are found and used the whole nation must disintegrate. Jesus prescribed the only principle that will bring men into more harmonious and just relations, when he commanded:

As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6: 31.

Selfish Men Cause Political Corruption

Unjust advantages conceded to any group are disruptive of the peace, prosperity, and loyalty of others. The more groups are accorded special privileges, the greater become the forces of discontent and resentment. This is a grave danger that has proved a menace in the administration of government by political parties. In order to secure votes, political platforms are adopted that do not represent the unselfish judgment of the parties adopting them: or of some candidates that accept them. Planks are deliberately framed for the purpose of attracting sectional, group, and partisan votes. These platforms may contain planks that are bold, daring, boastful and brazen; or they may be cautious, involved, restrained and oily. In either event they are too often the result of deceptive and mercenary motives, or of unworthy ambitions.

When such factors dominate politics and political parties, of which we have had many disgraceful examples, each party strives to maintain itself by an extensive and costly system of patronage that becomes a threat to economical and moral government and to the taxpayers. We are glad to note that some government officials appear to be aggressively opposed to these evils, but in many instances they are unable to wholly stem the tide of corruption that arises. One of the most pressing needs of our country today is more extensive facilities, surer methods, and stricter laws for eliminating these vicious forms of patronage, nepotism, intrigue, and graft. If milder forms of punishment prove inadequate, the penalties should be increased and prosecution made easier and more certain.

It is both costly and demoralizing for a political party in power to be practically without restrictions which would prevent the unjust removal of officers and employees of other political faiths. Many efficient and experienced men who have given long and satisfactory service have been removed in order to find places for other men of a different brand of politics and without necessary experience or ability. When such conditions prevail, the natural consequence is that corrupt men and cabals gain control of those government departments which yield unguarded power and illicit gains. It shocks honest citizens to learn that various officials of federal, state, and local governments have been proved guilty of thus betraying the people, protecting racketeers and bootleggers, and conspiring with criminals of the underworld.

Moral Responsibility of Citizens

Such conditions as these do not develop in a day, nor does the sole responsibility for such abuses begin with the officials who have betrayed our trust. In many instances our citizens have winked at immoral and even criminal conduct on the part of men holding public office, as well as lawless acts committed by persons in private life. We are beginning to reap the disastrous harvest that has grown up from our own moral laxity, recklessness, and worldliness in the past; hence our only safety is in a return to the path of rectitude and regard for duty.

It is a shameful fact that men have been elected to high and responsible public offices by the votes of people who knew that these very men had previously been convicted and sentenced for the commission of crime. He who intentionally casts his ballot in favor of a dishonest or immoral candidate performs a dishonest or immoral act in a double sense, for he becomes responsible for his own attitude and conduct and also for assisting another who has sought office with wrong intentions. In a sense he becomes his partner in crime, and expresses his own corrupt character. Such men unwittingly, prove the truth affirmed by Christ when he said:

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.—Matthew 7: 16, 17.

Citizens can not maintain political government without incurring moral responsibility for the kind of candidates they support for public office. They also share responsibility for the kind of government their successful candidates administer, at least to the extent that their principles and purposes are known. But one of the most despicable and depraved of all characters is he who votes fraudulently, either repeatedly under assumed names, or by impersonating lawful citizens. This vicious practice, and other methods of illegal balloting, could be almost entirely stopped if both political parties would support proper corrective measures. The signature of every voter should be registered, and should again be submitted for comparison when he appears to cast his ballot. Other safeguards should also be employed.

The Ethical Basis of Government

The improper and selfish methods that are employed in political government may begin (and doubtless do often begin) with dishonest acts of politicians who were believed to be upright at the time they were placed in office. But dishonesty in government will not be general and continuous in a democracy such as ours, unless the general morals of the people are so low that they are moved by selfishness more than by integrity and high principles. When such a state as this exists, the whole nation is in grave danger of disintegration and ultimate collapse. Nothing except repentance and reformation can prevent the final downfall of a national government that fosters and spreads corruption among a people who prefer expediency to honor and moral rectitude.

The ethics of any society represent the ideals of those who form and maintain it, and these always constitute the very foundations of upright and successful government. The unsound and outrageous advice of Caiaphas, the Jewish high priest, when he put expediency above principle and urged that Jesus be put to death to satisfy the wicked demands of the people, is startlingly like some political advice being urged today. Jesus had taught sound and righteous principles and had given his utmost to save the people from their corrupt views of religion and habits of life. The Jews feared greatly that they might lose their place and power in the nation, for many were turning to Jesus, and the Jews said: "If we let him alone, all men will believe on him." With diabolical meaning Caiaphas answered and said:

Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.—John 11: 49, 50.

Thus was the meek, pure, and faithful Savior betrayed because of the demands of unrighteous and designing men. The Jews did not know it, but their perverted attitude and conduct already had undermined their national existence. Less than fifty years later came the end of the Jewish nation, and for nineteen centuries they have remained a scattered people. It is extremely important that the American people shall support and insist upon proper moral and ethical standards in national, social, and home life. Our future well-being and peace, and even our very existence, depend upon it. We are admonished by the Scriptures that, "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." Napoleon foreshadowed his own doom when he said: "My dominion ends where the dominion of conscience begins." The world's history proves that government by people without conscience brings misery, decay, and ruin.

Individualism That Aids Political Progress

It is a false philosophy that holds individualism to be inherently opposed to social or political government and union. The essential property of individualism is individuality or personality, and this is just as necessary to the well-being of the social body as it is to the individuals who compose it. Every one of the constructive and good qualities possessed by the individual should have free exercise and development in himself, while at the same time it should contribute to the good of the whole social group, either directly or indirectly. It is that which harms the individual, either morally, mentally, or physically, that is harmful to the political or social body. To properly develop individuality is to become a more helpful power in public affairs. It is not individualism of itself that hurts the general interests of mankind, but its perverted use.

The personality of the individual is expressed through qualities which he has acquired or developed. They may be expressed in a great physician, a philanthropist, an orator, or in a man distinguished for wisdom, honesty, or friendliness. Every desirable quality distinguishing the individual, if rightly used, will benefit both himself and the social group in which he lives. Such expression of his powers should be encouraged by the political or social body of which he forms a part.

The greatest steps to political progress are those by which individualism is expressed in accordance with sound moral, ethical, and social principles. When so used they are always constructive, for sound principles never destroy that which is good. That which injures does not need expression by any person. One of the chief functions of political government is to facilitate all proper development of its people, and to guard against destructive forces that threaten from without or within the political body.

The Moral Forces of Government

No democracy can indefinitely maintain higher moral and social standards than its people hold, for they are responsible and determine the conditions that are desired. The strongest moral force of the government is therefore the character and energy of its people. If they permit the various functions of government to be controlled by officials of selfish, conflicting, and low moral aims, the entire political and social organizations will become diseased with treachery, corruption, and degeneracy. For these and other reasons, no person should be elected to public office who manifests greed, dishonesty, loose morals, injustice, or duplicity. Such characters do not serve their country, however loud or smooth may be their profession of loyalty, but they usually betray even those who are vile enough to join forces with them.

It is not our economic issues that constitute the most important problems of our nation. These can be effectively dealt with in the course of time. But the issues of most far-reaching importance to our future happiness and well-being are those which concern the moral and ethical standards that we shall decide to maintain. To lower these standards will jeopardize our most precious possessions, but to go forward with them will lead us to still greater heights of peace and accomplishment.

Since 1847 I have always defended the monarchical principle, and I have held it aloft like a banner. But now I have seen three kings naked, and often enough the behavior of these exalted gentlemen was by no means kingly.—Bismarck.

"Keeping Up With the Joneses"

By Marcella Schenck

PART THREE

(Written by the second son.)

Memory Pictures, an Added Inheritance for the Children

The home I knew as a child was a humble one when measured in terms of this world's goods. We were poor people—so poor that a depression even today holds no terrors for me. I know on how little a family can live and yet be happy and wholesome. Our home was a crowded home—there were many children. I can scarcely remember a meal for a period of twenty years that my mother did not eat with a babe on her arm. Our grandparents lived and died in our home. Our relatives and friends stayed not only week-ends, but weeks on end with us from summer to summer. For a time there were fourteen of us to sit about the table for three meals a day. We slept two in a bed. And on occasions three in a bed. Yes, in times of housing standards ours was a crowded home.

In many ways our home was barren of the marks of culture. There was little or no music; there were few papers; there were no magazines, and few books besides our school texts. As poor and crowded and barren as I know it would be judged by those who see only the outward things, yet for those who see the spiritual values it was rich and fertile and fruitful.

Looking back with the eye of memory, I see first my grandmother, small and stooped and gray. Physically she was and is beautiful to me. Her skin had a texture and fineness that one associates with aristocracy. Her features were even and smooth and kindly. Her hands though always busy during the eighty-four years of her life were soft and gentle. I can well believe the genealogical stories that she was descendant from an aristocratic English family.

Her father was of pioneering stock. He blazed trails into the unknown of America's frontiers. She lived on the edge of the westward march as a girl. In her early womanhood she followed the California trail in the gold rush of '49. She knew hardship, privation, tragedy. But instead of daunting and defeating and hardening her soul it had taught her courage, patience, kindness, and faith. She was a silent woman, even shy with strangers. She seldom laughed and rarely joked even with the members of her own family. She was puritanical yet forgiving. However, if she talked little with visitors or strangers she communed often with God. Through all the years I lived at home, three times each day we bowed our heads about the family board to hear her offer thanks for the food before us and ask upon it a divine blessing. I remember a part of her prayer was that it should strengthen "our feeble and frail bodies," and I always understood it to mean not physically frail but spiritually prone to weaknesses. Every night at bedtime she knelt long beside her bed in silent prayer. Many times I tiptoed through her room when she was on her knees, quieted by the sense of a spiritual presence. One time when I had been disturbed by harrowing dreams I asked her how I could avoid these frightening experiences. She told me to think of "heaven and heavenly things."

I have been gone from home nearly twenty years, and grandmother has been at rest for sixteen, yet as I write these lines I feel the power of her spirit with me and find my eyes moist with tears. No home is barren or poor or crowded that has room for a grandmother like her. In her presence I find cause number one influencing us children for good.

The second picture is of my father. As one of the older children I remember him when he was a comparatively young man. He was tall and lean and muscular. Even in the rough garb of a farmer, patched by the patient stitches of our women folk, he was always clean and neat in his attire. I remember distinctly how as a boy I was fascinated by his hands. They were large, lean, strong, brown hands. They toiled at rough hard work, and the veins stood up like whipcords upon them. There was power and firmness and dependability in those hands. His face likewise lean and brown in those days added to the impression of strength and firmness, a sense of unflinching rectitude. His chin was square and firm; his cheeks were flat or even sunken; his mouth was broad and straight; the upper lip was long, full and strong; the cheek bones appeared high and broad; the forehead was high and full. This was the face from which looked out a pair of steady gray eyes which then and now gives one the impression of seeing both the good and the bad in a person. He was a man of rugged honesty. No obligations of his were ever repudiated. He was poor, but he paid his debts. He was a man of strong will power; he controlled himself as well as others. No habit, however strong or of long standing was his master. After I was born, but before I can remember, he gave up the use of tobacco because he did not want us children influenced by it. He was a man of judgment and foresight. He protected us children from bad influences long before they would have appeared dangerous to the casual observer. We sometimes felt he was too strict and limited our freedom too much. But looking back I can see where he knew and provided for the "bent of the twig." He was never demonstrative in his affections. I can not now recall having seen him kiss or caress my mother, or one of the children except when they were infants.

Yet he was proud of every one of us. He used to say to us, "I want you to grow up so people will be glad to see you rather than shun you." He was firm with us and exacted obedience. Yet with it all he was just and tender toward us. As a child I had a very tender conscience. Whenever I disobeyed, if it were very serious, my conscience would not let me sleep. On such occasions I would finally give up the struggle, and go into my father's bedroom and confess to him my disobedience. He would listen to my troubled confession, then reach out and take me in bed with him, where I would soon be sound asleep. I trusted father and believed implicitly in him.

He was proud of our school work. He had never had much schooling and our progress in reading and arithmetic in particular was a source of pleasure to him. He gave us every chance to use in practical ways what we learned at school. I can remember, when I was not more than ten years of age, how he would have us two older boys figure out the tons of hay in a stack he had bought; the bushels of corn in a crib; and when he sold the semi-annual crop of hogs we figured their value before he accepted the check. He was careful not to praise us in our presence, but I learned in later years that he had boasted to others of our prowess in school.

I can not recall when the idea of going away to school really originated. We talked of it among ourselves as children as far back as I can remember. Cosie and I were going to Graceland on spotted ponies! It was only the fancy of children's day dreams. Yet when Cosie was sixteen she began teaching a country school. The next year she lost her school in November, and then began the series of crusades from our home to Graceland. From that December day in 1908 until June 1932 there has been one or more of us at Graceland.

In those first years father always drove out for us every Friday afternoon and took us back on Sundays. When Cosie was teaching again and Lewis and Christie were in college he would bring them all home on Fridays even though it meant two drives which totalled thirty to thirty-two miles. That was time consuming and wearisome when the drive was made with team and buggy, but he always believed that home was the place for his children. It was hard for him to let us go, yet when the time came he gave up his dream of having us near him on farms of our own to see us go into one field or another which seemed more in keeping with our education.

This was father, a man of character. I have met and dealt with thousands of men in my work as dean. Many are rich, others politically powerful, some are great business men, most of them are common folk. But whatever their station or their renown, I have yet to meet the man who in my judgment is more genuine or who is a wiser judge of human nature than is my father. This sounds extravagant, but it is true. A father such as he was and is, I place as influence number two in the lives of us children.

Mother always was so intrinsically one of us that I remember her not in reverence as I do the memory of grandmother. Nor with pride as I do father, but with a warmth of comradeship which characterized her life with us. Mother was one of us. She was young in years and in spirit. She never crossed grandmother nor often opposed her will to father's. Like us she looked up to and trusted them. She felt it her duty to make us obey her, but aside from that she lived with us and enjoyed us. She was ever at work inside the house and out. She went with us to milk the cows; we hoed the garden together; I have husked corn beside her. She played the games with us and would take turns in reading when books were brought home. She had a capable mind and liked to help us with our school work until we had gone beyond her schooling.

She was father's counselor, not only in the business of the farm but in questions of policy with us children. She was not one to oppose nor acquiesce blindly. She had ideas of her own, but could cooperate when they were not approved. She had and still has a great faith in providence. She it was who saw not calamity but a blessing in Cosie's losing her school. Now she could go to Graceland. What a blessing that proved to be to all of us who followed! That faith of hers has been as beneficial as father's judgment and foresight.

Another trait of mother's which I have learned to admire is her guilelessness. I think I have known few people who were as innocent of intended wrong, whose acts were more free from selfish ends, or whose spirit was more willing to forgive than hers. I wrote the following tribute to her on Mother's Day, May 11, 1930:

Mother, Comrade, Guide

Mother of mine! Not mine alone,
But shared with half a score of kin,
Whom thou has reared without a groan,
But sustained by thy faith within!

As I look back o'er half my years
And forward to the half untried,
I thank our God with grateful tears
For thee, my mother, comrade, guide.

Mother of mine, whose years are filled
 With patient toil for those you love,
 I think of thee as one well skilled
 In arts of home 'mongst which you move.

Unknown to fame, by thine own choice
 Thy life to good thou has applied.
 I thank our God with grateful voice
 For thee, my mother, comrade, guide.

Mother of mine, whom God has loved,
 And fashioned with his spiritual wheel,
 I look to thee with faith endowed,
 And trust thy prayers when thou dost kneel.

Today, thy sons in foreign parts,
 By memories' want are at thy side
 To thank our God with grateful hearts
 For thee, our mother, comrade, guide.

Here, in mother's goodness and faith I find influence number three.

To summarize in brief the influences in our home which turned each member of our family toward high school and college I should say; first, an inheritance of good mental ability and physical stamina; second, a series of habits of industry, obedience, health, and morality; third, spiritual influences that left us trying to realize our dreams.

These did not just happen. They were the product of the adult influences under which we grew to manhood and womanhood. Grandmother is gone, but father and mother have returned just this year to the farm where we grew up—the farm they left nineteen years ago to put the younger children nearer school. Not a child lives at home with them, where there used to be so many.

I can not think that in the years we were in school and coming home on week-ends they felt our going a sacrifice. Duty came before personal preference with them. The splendid thing they did for us children would lose its beauty if it had been accompanied by a feeling on their part of personal sacrifices. But now as they are growing old, to be alone with us all gone seems to me to be their time of sacrifice. Knowing them as I do, I know they miss us and every day are thinking of us. I wonder if they doubt the wisdom of their plans and the success of our going on to college. I hope they are not too lonely and disappointed. I hope the memories of our childhood and the knowledge of our present status peoples the places we have left vacant with happy images to comfort their passing years and to confirm the efforts they have made. I hope we, their children, though we forget all else we have learned, may ever remember the Christian character of grandmother, the firm integrity of father, and the goodness and faith of mother. LONZO JONES.

What more can we add? We leave the curtains raised upon the pictures of these three great influences, with a wish that every child in all the land could go forward to meet life with such endowments and such heritages.

(The following letter from David, the only one of the children who did not attend Graceland, arrived too late to be put in its place in the last installment. We present it here.—Editors.)

David's Tribute

I attribute a great deal of this success to a habit Father had formed early in life which made him a successful farmer; that was to do things on time and be steady at any job. In my early life I can well remember that five o'clock in the morning was getting up time and my father would not miss calling "boys" by five minutes, and with promptness he taught obedience so that the one word spoken once was sufficient to bring three boys out of bed at the first call. Then he had his work all laid out so there was system and harmony about the farm. There was no arguing as to who was going to milk the cows or who was to feed the horses for each one knew what he was to do and when, and as these things made for success on the farm, so did they in school.

When it came time to go to school, we went and nothing was permitted to interfere. I have known parents who would keep their children out to help with one thing or another until they were behind in their studies; and the habit of staying out became so strong that they soon stayed out altogether. Father always urged us to get all the schooling we could as he wanted us to overcome the handicap that he had been forced to labor under. While he had obtained a good education from that hard old teacher, the world of hard knocks, he was short on what the old-timers would have termed "book larnin'."

When I was about nine years of age my oldest sister entered Graceland. From then until some twenty-three years later there has been a Jones in Graceland, and one time there were three there at one time.

Unfortunately I am the only one of eleven children that did not attend Graceland, but the spirit of Graceland has so been instilled into both my wife and me that one of our greatest desires is to send our three children there.

Now to get back to how it was done. Starting with my oldest sister, each worked for all her or his expenses as much as possible. Father and mother furnished the rest. Then when each was through and ready to teach, he paid back to the folks the money that had been advanced, and this was used to help the next one through school. But each and every one had a desire to get an education, or all the money in the world couldn't have helped them; in fact, I think many an education has been spoiled by too much money.

I have told you my father's part as I have seen it. Now I will try to tell you mother's part in this large undertaking of educating eleven children. Any one who has ever sat down to a meal with the Jones family, which consisted of eleven children, father, mother, and grandmother for years, and has seen the bountiful supply of food and traced it back to its origin, would not need an explanation of my mother's part. Although many of us are drawing good salaries, we would shudder at the responsibility of feeding such a family.

Mother worked from morning until night, helping milk the cows, raising chickens and raising the family garden which consisted of about an acre and a half of all kinds of vegetables. Then there were pounds of butter to be churned and canning of both fruit and vegetables to be done. To mother fell the job of feeding the Joneses without depleting the bank balance, and anyone who has ever dined with the Joneses knows how that has been done.

Then, too, mother was our spiritual guide. It was mother who tucked us in as little tots and taught us our little prayers, and as we grew older insisted that we attend Sunday school and church. So through the cooperation of a good business manager, a good housewife and spiritual guide and mother, and the willingness of the children, the thing was done.

New Quarterlies for October

By C. B. Woodstock

A new Church School Curriculum for the year beginning October 2 has been published recently and may be had on request at the Herald Publishing House. This is a descriptive list of the study materials available for each of the age groups from the nursery to the most advanced adult courses. There are thirty-two years of consecutive study carefully planned to cover the entire range of religious experience and of the gospel plan as contained in the standard books of the church. The materials are selected and organized to be most helpful for each particular age. Copies of the Curriculum should be used as the basis for the organization of Church School classes and the ordering of supplies.

New Quarterly Courses

Adult. A study of the Doctrine and Covenants by Apostle F. H. Edwards. For a number of years this material has been in preparation. It will now be available in quarterly form for adult, Priesthood and older young people's classes. The author has made a careful study of the historical setting and the spiritual background of the times in which the revelations were given. The nature and purpose of present revelation is set forth as a necessary part of the restoration of the gospel in latter days. The revelations are discussed in the light of the truth revealed which should serve as a guide and pattern in the work of the church today.

A study of the Temporal Law, by Bishop G. L. DeLapp.

Fundamental in our spiritual and material welfare is our appreciation of our responsibility to God and our fellow man in the discharge of our stewardship. The temporal law of the church is essentially spiritual in its outcomes. If we are to grow spiritually and accomplish in a material way the work God has designed for this church to do, it must be done in harmony with the revealed will of God and according to sound business principles. This study is especially timely in the present period of industrial depression. At least we must learn the lessons experience should teach us, and go forward in the work of the church.

There are three quarters in the above course; the Financial Law, Stewardship, and Zion. These were prepared by Bishop DeLapp in 1930 as a part of a Church History Series and are especially well adapted for present study. Each quarter may be ordered separately.

Many classes will still use the adult quarterly of last year, The Message of the Book of Mormon, also the text, Jesus and His Message, by Anna Salyards. There are several other electives from which choice may be made.

Older Young People. The Call of the Church, by Alice May Burgess and Elva T. Sturges. This is a unique study of the call of the church to young people, being written for the year. The lessons will be found to contain most valuable material for young people's classes, presented in a most interesting and challenging manner.

A Study of the Restoration, and other electives are also available.

Senior Young People. What It Means to Be a Latter Day Saint, by Roy Chevillie. This course has been developed by a class in Religious Education at Graceland under the leadership of the author. It discusses in a unique and interesting way the meanings, responsibilities and opportunities of membership in the church. The first quarter is entitled, "The Relation of Our Church to Other Churches."

Intermediates. The current quarterly, Discovering God With Youth, by Margery Williams, gave excellent satisfaction in its first printing three years ago. It will be enjoyed the coming year.

Junior. The third of the three years of Junior Bible study is entitled, The New Testament and Its Writers, by Hallie Gould. This is being freshly written by a careful, interesting, and inspiring editor.

Primary. The third primary year, Working Together With God, is being revised and made ready for use by Myrtle A. Weber who has sufficiently regained her health to begin helping again in a field for which she has exceptional qualifications.

Kindergarten. This is the first of the two years of kindergarten lessons. They, too, are being prepared for use by Miss Weber under the title, Leading Childhood to God.

The above are the quarterlies being freshly printed for this year's use. In most cases they are the third-year courses of a three-year cycle in each department. First year and second year courses in each department are also available for schools with more than one class in a department. Directors and supervisors are urged to secure copies of the Church School Curriculum and to study carefully the needs of their classes. Order supplies early. Yearly subscriptions save much in labor and inconvenience and twenty per cent on the cost of a year's supply.

Spiritual Realities

Christianity's power to survive in this present world and to be a religion of life depends upon the capacity of its prophets and guides to understand the conditions, the needs and the spirit of this new time and to reinterpret the message of human salvation and the mission of the Church in the light of the accumulated truth of the centuries and in terms of the spirit and wisdom of the Galilean Founder of this stream of life. . . .

If there are no basic spiritual realities to be discovered, if life is by the very nature of things bound to be a sheer biological process, with no legitimate upper story to complete it, we must, of course, face the facts and make the best we can of our one-story compartment of life. The severely honest modern person abominates hypocrisy and sham more than most things, and he has a deep-seated dread of fancy-built additions to the realistic world. He will not save his own face, nor will he even save civilization, by imaginative supplements to the universe as it actually is. If religion is ever to be his personal comfort, and if it is to be accepted as a creative power toward a better civilization, we must find realities that are as stable as mountains for the foundations of the spiritual structure.

There will always be some persons who are content to satisfy their hopes and drown their fears with iridescent dreams, and there will be a comfortable residue who will accept unquestioningly ancient faiths just because they are ancient. But a stage of the maturing of the human mind has now been reached when henceforth a large and ever-increasing proportion of enlightened people will insist that religious truth, if it is to be truth to them, must not rest upon less secure foundation than is adequate for any other kind of truth. The days are over, almost certainly for ever over, when easy-going, jog-trot, "good-enough" faiths will hold the allegiance of the mature and solid section of our communities.—Rufus M. Jones, in "A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age."

Omaha Indians Welcome Missionary Spirit

Macy, Nebraska.—It has been some time since there has been news from Northeastern Nebraska District and especially from the Omaha Indians. Being a member of the tribe and secretary of the tribal council, and taking part in all tribal affairs and ceremonies, I come in close contact with these people daily and understand their condition.

As a people the Omaha Indians are passing through some very trying times during this widespread depression. Though once wealthy and the owners of many acres of fertile land, they are today in poverty and want. They realize that they have gone to the world and drawn upon its resources, and that these have vanished, leaving them still in want. They have begun to feel their spiritual need and are ready to listen to God's servants when they bring to them a message which comforts, cheers and strengthens.

Many of these people still cherish the name of Brother P. R. Burton who, they say, was the first white missionary that met in their Indian prayer meetings and prayed with them and asked them to pray for him. He ate at their feasts, buried their dead, administered to their sick and preached the gospel of Jesus Christ to them, making better men and women of those who embraced the gospel. Talking to a judge, Brother Burton once said, "I find among the Indians those who belong to the Latter Day Saint Church, are better people." Thank God for that. I have had the privilege of holding meetings where almost every member of the tribe was present. There are about sixteen hundred Omahas.

The City of Omaha, Nebraska, is named after this tribe. Even the name Nebraska, is an Omaha word meaning "flat water." The Hotel Fontenell in Omaha, one of the largest in the West, is named after Logan Fontenell, one of the Omahas's greatest chiefs.

A few weeks ago I accepted an invitation to a birthday party held in honor of a little child which had just completed its first year in life. A few weeks before this the mother of the child brought it to the church, and under the hands of Elder H. A. Merchant and the writer, it received its blessing. After relatives and friends had given many gifts to the little one, and a dinner was prepared, the guests, according to Indian custom, were seated in a large circle on the ground. I was asked to speak, and stepping to the center of the ring with the grandmother carrying the child in her arms, standing beside me, I spoke a short time, then I bowed my head and offered prayer. The Holy Spirit accompanied my words to such a degree that some present cried like little children. A young Indian girl whom I heard spoken to in prophecy, the Lord telling her to develop her talent in song that she might be a help in bringing her people to a knowledge of the gospel, asked me why she cried. I told her that it was God striving with her as well as with others, and warned her that his Spirit will not always strive with man, advising her to do his will.

Sunday, August 14, was the first day of the Omaha Indian Pow-Wow, a ceremonial event held every year. The whole tribe as well as many from other tribes camp together, singing songs and dancing as of old when the tribe would return to camp from a fruitful hunting trip, bringing buffalo meat which they had killed upon the plains. This is the way in which they show their thanks to God for providing them with food for the winter months. I preached both Sundays, having a large crowd of white people and Indians. We have a member of the tribe who is a composer of Indian songs; also he translates the church hymns into the Indian language. An Indian choir sings these songs, and is always willing to help in our services.

The last Sunday, August 21, we held services before a very large crowd. Brother Bern Case was in charge, and the Indian choir sang, also Sister Lena Brownrigg, Betta Walker, and J. Grayfox, all Indians, sang "My Faith Looks Up to Thee." Then I was announced as the speaker, and can say that I enjoyed the abundance of God's Spirit, and know that if we live humbly, he will assist us in all that we do for him.

One man was heard to say: "That is real preaching. Who pays him?" When he was told that the speaker was a farmer, and received no pay, he marveled.

I know that God is with every one of his servants who is trying to get his message before the people. These Indian people are willing to listen, and God is moving upon them greater now than ever before to my knowledge.

The Indian does not look up into heaven only to find God. He goes out into the forest in the very midst of nature, and there in the trees, flowers, and plants, he finds God and talks to him. Every Indian knows how to pray. He does not pray with a multiplicity of words, but he talks to God.

I believe the Saints among all people are called to make greater sacrifices than ever before with an eye single to the glory of God, that his work will go forward and Zion be redeemed. May our prayers ever be that these copper-skinned people will learn the teachings of Christ and that with what little material things they have left, they will sacrifice to establish Zion.

Summer Activities in Norway

Ninth Annual Meeting at Oslo

On May 15 and 16, a two-day meeting was held in Oslo, which was attended by several of the Saints from different places in the country. This was our ninth annual two-day meeting, and I think it was the best one we have held from a spiritual standpoint. The Saints came together fasting and praying and had made considerable spiritual preparation and as a result, God met with us and blessed us. Again this year, at our annual meeting, Sister Ruch and I were alone as general church representatives. However, the local priesthood stood loyally by us and assisted materially in the meetings, being blessed in their efforts. Three brothers were ordained to the priesthood. Brother Otto Anderson, from Bøn, who has been a teacher for many years was called to the greater responsibility of the office of elder. Two young brothers, at Oslo, were ordained to the offices of teacher and deacon. This gives us a full set of officers at Oslo, namely: Elder, priest, teacher, and deacon. Three children of nonmembers were blessed at the special ordination and blessing service, which proved to be the best meeting of the two days. Sister Ruch represented the women's department and her lecture Monday afternoon was well received. The two days came to a close all too soon and it was with deep regret that the Saints were forced to separate and return each to his home.

I had the privilege May 26, of baptizing a young married couple who have been attending our meetings for some time. The influence of our two-day meeting as well as a moving, spiritual sermon on the following Sunday helped them to make their decision to unite with the church.

Open-air Meetings at Oslo

Because of the difficulty during the summer months of attracting people to indoor meetings, I sent an application to the Oslo Police Department requesting the use of two parks in the city for open air meetings, one night a week each. As one of the parks was in use every night, I could not occupy there, but was given permission to use "Kiellands Plass" each Monday evening. Beginning in May we held open-air meetings one night a week there until I left the city in July to visit other points in the mission. We took our little folding organ to the park with us and its music was a wonderful help during the song service. The local Saints assisted with the singing. Sister Ruch's vocal solos also added much to these meetings. While a great deal may not be accomplished with open air meetings, they are a means of advertising, and help the people to get acquainted with us and our work. One often has opportunity for conversation after the meetings and is able to answer questions and clear up misunderstandings in regard to points of doctrine.

Missionary Family Visits Scattered Saints

In July, Sister Ruch, Velma, and I left Oslo for a few weeks' visit with Saints at Porsgrunn, Kragerø, Arendal, Grimstad and Sandefjord. We have just a few members at some of these places, but I try to visit them at least once a year to bring them a little encouragement. They are always glad to have a visit from the missionary, to partake of the sacrament, to hear a few sermons, to sing the songs of Zion and to talk of the events and progress in the general church. I sometimes feel as though their faith and joy in the gospel gives me more encouragement than is possible for me to bring to them.

At Grimstad, I baptized a sister who is seventy-four years old. She has been a Christian all of her life and has experienced many unusual blessings as a result of her great faith and prayers. God has enlightened her mind even from her girlhood days in regard to his plan of salvation, so that she was prepared to accept it when the sound of the true gospel reached her ears even in her old age. I was pleased to baptize her.

A special service for the blessing of a baby was held in Porsgrunn which proved to be very impressive. Some of the relatives were much opposed to having it blessed, and desired to have it sprinkled according to the custom in this country. But the father who is a priest in our church insisted on having it blessed in harmony with the example given us by Jesus. Our heavenly Father blessed the service with the presence of his Holy Spirit. The sermon on the subject, "The Blessing of Children Versus Infant Baptism," was well received. The Spirit was present in power during the ordinance of blessing and all were moved to tears. A deep impression was made upon those present, especially the non-member relatives who before had been so opposed. They thanked us for the service and said that they had not thought that the blessing of a baby could be made so sacred and impressive.

After returning to Oslo for a few days, we went to Bøn to visit the Saints, and endeavored to inspire them with new spiritual life. The local brothers hold regular meetings at that place as well as in Porsgrunn and Kragerø.

Too Much Missionary Work for One Minister

The Saints in Sweden and Denmark often write me and urge me to come to visit them. I am the lone missionary in these three countries and find that it is too much for one man to take care of. Some places where Saints are living have to be neglected. As a result, the work is going down at some points. Especially is this true in Sweden and Denmark.

And now, Sandhetens Banner, our little monthly mission paper, has been taken away from us again and discontinued because of not enough financial support. That is a hard blow to the Scandinavian mission as the isolated Saints have absolutely no communication with the general church nor even with the Scandinavian mission, and the only connection the other Saints have is what they get through the lone missionary and his wife. It will not be surprising then if some die a spiritual death or seek other churches for the nourishment they feel like their souls must have. We hope that after this terrible depression when better times come again, it will not be long until our little paper can be published once more.

We are looking forward with happy anticipation to the visit of Apostle John W. Rushton whom we are expecting to arrive here from England next week. I am sure his visit will mean much for the mission. The very sight of a brother from America will bring joy to the heart of the missionary and his family, and his presence and association will be deeply appreciated. A branch is to be organized at Oslo while Brother Rushton is here.

Although it has been nearly four years since we left America, we remember with pleasure our many dear brothers and sisters whom we learned to know and to love. We often long to see you and enjoy your association once more. May God richly bless all of you, especially during this trying time through which the church is passing. Keep up courage. We will finally, with the help of God, gain the victory.

VILLA "MARIENBORG," GREFSEN, NORWAY, August 28, 1932.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Nauvoo has been the scene of many activities during the summer months. On June 19, occurred the conference of the district, which was held across the river in Bluff Park. The owner of the dance pavilion kindly gave permission for its use, and the Saints of Montrose made the necessary seating arrangements for church services. It was a beautiful day and the Saints gathered from far and near. A splendid spirit prevailed and the sessions were very enjoyable. Church school at 9.45 was in charge of Joe Reed and Bishop Charles Fry was the speaker at eleven o'clock. A basket dinner was served at noon and Brother L. G. Holloway was the speaker in the afternoon. All dispersed at the close of the afternoon session, and Brother Holloway crossed the river with Nauvoo Saints and preached for them in the evening with a marked degree of liberty on "Man's Personal Experience With God."

The following Sunday the Saints throughout the district met in Nauvoo for the memorial services commemorating the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith at which time Elbert A. Smith of the Presidency was present. Church school convened at 9.45, and a prayer and testimony service followed. Elbert A. Smith addressed the congregation and called to their attention the pressing needs of the church. At the close of the service all went to the Nauvoo House where a basket dinner was spread. A baptismal service followed and Leon and Leslie Weinrich, two little boys from Burlington, were baptized by F. T. Mussell. At the close, all wended their way to the graves of the martyrs where the confirmation was under the hands of Bishop Charles Fry and F. T. Mussell. Sister August Lee sang "I Came to the Spot Where the Two Martyrs Lay"; prayer was offered by Bishop Fry, and Elbert A. Smith delivered a splendid address on "Joseph Smith as a Prophet," citing a number of the prophecies given and showing how they had been literally fulfilled. A quartet composed of Emma Broman, Mrs. Seth Phillips, Joe Reed, and Jack Sanford sang "Elegy," composed by Eliza Snow in 1840. Elbert A. Smith preached a fine sermon in the evening at the church and then remained in Nauvoo a few days as a guest of the Lees.

The district reunion beginning August 6, was held in the church, which was fortunate as it happened to be a rainy week. Brother C. Ed. Miller opened the reunion Saturday evening with an inspiring sermon. The church school the following morning was in charge of the local officers. The prayer and testimony meeting which followed was a spiritual feast to those who had come prepared. A basket dinner was served at noon under the trees by the river, and in the afternoon Bishop Charles Fry addressed the congregation and Brother F. T. Mussell in the evening. On Monday evening C. Ed. Miller delivered an illustrated lecture on astronomy to a large gathering. Classes were held each morning in charge of Bishop Fry and preaching services in the evening. Toward the end of the week the leaders of the Young People's Camp arrived and gave their aid to our services. Blair Jensen was the speaker Friday night and Roy Cheville Saturday night. A prayer and testimony meeting was held at eight o'clock on Sunday morning, church school at 9.45 and three excellent sermons were given during the day by F. T. Mussell, Roy Cheville, and J. E. Vanderwood. Another basket dinner was to have been spread by the river, but a shower changed the plans, and it was served in the church. A spirit of unity prevailed throughout the reunion, the services were of a high order, the Saints were blessed and strengthened and several expressed the belief that it was the best reunion that had been held here for some time.

The Young People's Camp opened Monday morning with an attendance of thirty-five. Although few in number, the group was an exceptional one. A spirit of unity such as had never been known in previous camps brought joy to the hearts of the leaders, Roy Cheville, "Gene" and "Judy" Closson, Anne Morgan, and Delmar Jones. The morning classes, recreational activities, in the afternoon, camp fires in the evening and the many spiritual experiences they enjoyed together, will not soon be forgotten.

The first Sunday the camp went to the church in a body and marched to seats reserved for them and presented a well prepared service. Taking as their theme, "Follow the Gleam," they told in story and song of the search for the Holy Grail by the knights of old, and later of the hardships endured by those in search of light during the Reformation and then during the early days of our church. An address was given by Eugene Closson and "Faith of Our Fathers" was sung.

At four fifteen a vesper service was held by the river with "Home" as the theme. Short talks were given by the boys and girls on what their home meant to them and what kind of a home they hoped to have of their own some day.

In the evening a pageant, "The Call to Youth," written by Roy Cheville, was given on the lawn just north of the Nauvoo House. Nona Walker, of Madison, Wisconsin, represented the church in the challenge to youth. Monroe Carter, representing youth, made the response. Scenes from the early history of the church were depicted by various groups in tableau form while songs written during the various periods were sung by a quintet.

On Wednesday evening, just as the sun was setting, a beautiful baptism took place when Dorothy Miller, of Lamoni, was led into the water by Eugene Closson. The camp had planned to hold their prayer and testimony meeting in David's Chamber, so the confirmation took place at this time under the hands of Roy Cheville, Blair Jensen, and Eugene Closson. At this meeting a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit took place and a prophecy was given to the young people, telling them that grave responsibilities awaited them and admonishing them to prepare themselves.

On Thursday evening occurred the Camp Nauvoo banquet, held in the Nauvoo House in honor of "Gene" and "Judy" Closson. The rooms were decorated to represent a garden, "The Garden" being the theme for the evening and the basis of the many beautiful thoughts expressed.

At flag lowering Friday evening, honors were distributed, then all gathered about the last camp fire and listened to the farewell speeches of the camp leaders and toasted marshmallows presented by Brother and Sister Blair. Soon the camp took on a deserted appearance as the various groups departed for their homes.

The Saints of Nauvoo feel that they are fortunate in that they are able to share, in a measure, many of the pleasant experiences that are going on about them. The branch has taken on renewed activity and the outlook is encouraging.

The sacrifice offering amounted to $124, averaging more than two dollars a member and represented a real sacrifice on the part of the Saints.

More Saints from other places have visited Nauvoo this year than any previous year: Audentia Anderson and daughters, Rogene and Bertha, and granddaughter, Barbara; Mabel Carlyle, father, mother, and brother; Apostle F. Henry Edwards and family; George Mesley and family; Raymond Butterworth and family; Brother and Sister Dawson and a truckload of Saints from Moline, and one from Centerville, Iowa. Joseph F. Smith and others of Hyrum Smith's family have also been recent visitors.

A wedding took place at Layton Lodge on August 5, when Iona Smith was united in marriage to Joseph Dale Willis, both of Fort Madison, by J. W. Layton.

Mary Lee has returned from Warrensburg where she took a twelve weeks' course, which completed her three years of college work. She will teach the Columbia School this coming term.

Mildred Sanford spent the summer at Onset and visited many places of historic interest. She will teach third and fourth grades in the town school.

Bertram Lewis, who has earned his M. A. degree, continued his studies in Albany during the summer and then came home for a couple of weeks' visit with his parents. He was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service last Sunday morning. He is to teach in the high school in New Rochelle, New York, this year.

Irene Layton spent the summer at home and returned to Independence to continue her teaching in the high school there.

Mobile, Alabama

During July Brother and Sister Lyle D. Flynn spent a week in this city, and Brother Flynn was the speaker in a series of revival services. Everyone enjoyed their stay.

Apostle Roy S. Budd's visit Sunday, August 21, was delightful to all. He delivered two sermons, one at eleven o'clock, the other in the evening. During the afternoon an informal discussion of local and general church problems was enjoyed. Many visitors from the near-by branch, Escatawpa, came to Mobile's services that day, and they were welcome.

This month the choir, which has been discontinued for the summer, resumes its work.

Every Tuesday evening the young people meet to participate in a program prepared not only for amusement and social benefit but also for literary value.

The following members of this branch were privileged to attend the young people's convention at Dixonville, Alabama: Pastor Franklyn Steiner and wife, Elsie Steiner, Vida E. Steiner, Mary Margaret Orr, Fannie Hough, Fritz Westcott, Mr. and Mrs. La Rue Steiner, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Steiner, Mrs. Lottie McDowell, and Anna Mae Hough. These will not soon forget the kindness shown them by Dixonville members.

Clinton, Missouri

The Clinton Sunday school had to give up its meeting place in the old Family Theater Building, and has returned to its first home with Brother and Sister Roy Payne at 305 East Elm Street. This good sister always has one room set apart and ready for the Saints.

There are nearly forty members in Clinton, but all of these do not regularly attend Sunday school. They are missed when they are not there to help.

Early Sunday morning, August 7, three carloads of Saints were on their way to Post Oak, Missouri, to attend communion service. Clinton Saints have been without this service for several months, and they feel an intense need of spiritual food. Twenty-four members went, and they stopped at Shady Nook on their way home and enjoyed a basket dinner.

August 14, local members enjoyed having Elder Davis and family from Independence. Such calls are most helpful, and especially where a little flock needs a shepherd. Local members feel their need for spiritual food in these trying times, but they are endeavoring to remember that in time of need, spiritual or financial, the heavenly Father will help and bless. Several here have been blessed with work. Crops are good. The Saints of Clinton ask the church to pray for them, that they may continue in unity of faith and helpfulness.

Kansas City Stake

Labor Day Picnic

Three hundred people attended the annual Labor Day picnic of Kansas City Stake, held at Swope Park, and participated in the program of games and entertainment. Among the features of the day were tennis and horseshoe tournaments, the big family dinner with ice cream and lemonade free, children's races, contests, ping pong and volley ball, croquet, and playground ball. Prominent among those in charge of the day's fun and recreation were R. J. Crayne, C. L. Conklin, C. G. Mesley, Lloyd Siebert, Clayton Wolfe, and Ralph Anderson. At the noon hour the picnickers paused to bow in prayer for Sister C. A. Skinner who is seriously ill.

O. B. K.'s to Far West Reunion

In their program for the year's activities the Kansas City Stake O. B. K.'s included a trip to the Stewartsville reunion August 28. This event was in charge of R. J. Crayne, and about two hundred motored to the reunion of Far West Stake. They started at five o'clock in the morning, reaching Stewartsville before the eight o'clock prayer meeting. Following this service came a prayer meeting in the Auditorium tent in charge of Elders Ray Whiting, W. E. Shakespeare, Ward A. Hougas, President Elbert A. Smith, and Apostle J. F. Garver. The singing of the hymn, "I Would Be True," was followed by the bearing of thirty-two testimonies. At this service the Saints were blessed with a word of prophecy through Brother Garver, being assured that Zion shall be redeemed.

At ten o'clock Apostle J. F. Garver spoke to a large crowd of people. He was substituting for Bishop G. L. DeLapp, who may be assured that his interests were not neglected. Brother Garver's message was very plain and clear as to the financial duty of the Saints. Bishop B. J. Scott offered prayer.

"Hail to the Brightness of Zion's Glad Morning" was the opening hymn for the eleven o'clock service and formed a fitting prelude to the sermon by President Elbert A. Smith. For a text Brother Smith chose the first section of Doctrine and Covenants, and presented a discourse which pictured the progress of the church from its inception to the present time. Attention was called to the "signs of the times"—present stress of financial circumstances, God's promises fulfilled and those yet to be fulfilled.

Dinner was served in the dining tent at twelve thirty and picnic style. Two thirty found the Saints ready for the next service, and Apostle J. F. Garver took for his theme the words of Saint Paul, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," reciting instances of godly men receiving visions, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, Peter, Paul, Joseph Smith, jr., and the late Joseph Smith, who said when he accepted the Presidency of the Reorganization, that he had come to that conference "by a power not my own." "We need vision," declared Brother Garver.

At eight o'clock a religious play was rendered by talent from a Saint Joseph, Missouri, church, "Pilgrims of the Way," and was followed by a sermon by Elder Ray Whiting.

This was a very busy day for the reunion and for the visiting Kansas City members.

Malvern Hill Church

Elder Ross Higdon, pastor, has been called out of the city for two or three months, and Elder J. Ray Lloyd is occupying in his stead until he returns.

Borger, Texas

Saints of this oil city on the Texas prairies were made sad at the death of Billie Laughlin, four-year-old son of Brother and Sister A. L. Laughlin. Little Billie, trying to siphon gasoline from a car tank, drew the gasoline into his lungs, and strangled. He was rushed to the hospital, but in spite of all the doctors could do, he passed away.

Elder J. R. Sutton, of Genoa, Colorado, came by special request to preach the funeral sermon. Brother Sutton baptized Brother and Sister Laughlin and blessed little Billie in 1929.

While here, Brother Sutton held a week of meetings at a nearby schoolhouse. His sermons were delivered in a convincing manner, presenting to the people the truthfulness of this gospel and comforting and strengthening the isolated Saints of Borger. His help was greatly appreciated, and several families were interested in the gospel message. There had been no preaching here for more than two years.

Brother Baker was the first elder to visit Borger, then Brother J. R. Sutton, Brother G. H. Wixom, and Brother and Sister McDowell were here for a short visit. Borger Saints would much appreciate a visit from elders coming near this place.

Graceland News

Welcome Freshman Class

Graceland College welcomed its thirty-eighth freshmen class to the campus Friday, September 9. Sophomores and juniors enrolled on Monday, and classes began at 8.00 a. m. Tuesday, September 13. The 1932-33 school year is under way.

In describing Graceland opening days of this year one might mention a number of things and events. He might speak of the beauty of the campus—of the new shrubs and trees and expanse of green clover that surround Walker Hall, of the absence of the frowsy old catalpas that once were scattered about the main lawn, of the flower beds bright with color. He might speak of the assemblies in which the new students learned the songs and cheers of Graceland, of the groups in which they went through the program of enrollment, physical examination, and instruction in library lore and time budgeting. He might speak of the social events—the mixer on Professor Platz's lawn, the annual reception by the young people of Lamoni, the freshmen picnic at South Woods.

To the freshman, of course, all these are new. But to one who has seen many Graceland openings come and go, these events are much the same from year to year. He wonders what he can say about it all that is new or different.

The very newest thing about a college opening is, of course, its freshmen, its new students. So why not talk about them?

To an alumnus of five or ten or fifteen years ago, it is a revelation and a rejuvenation to see another freshmen class come in and take its place in the halls of Graceland. The eagerness and the vivacity with which they enter into the spirit of the place warms the heart of one who, despite a deep-seated loyalty to the old school, may have allowed the haze of passing years to dim the memory of his own freshman days and the anticipation with which he approached the Hill for the first time.

A few freshmen, of course, having had things pretty well provided for them all their lives, are not especially impressed with Graceland. (These are yet to discover the experiences that will touch them and remake them.) But most of these students have had to work hard themselves and have seen their parents plan and sacrifice that the year or two at Graceland might be possible. These young men and women realize their presence on the Graceland campus with something approaching awe. To meet these folk assures one that the college continues to hold and to serve its place in the life of young people and of the church.

Only a few months now and these freshmen will be full-fledged Gracelanders. They will attend their first church service in Lamoni and will find it like their home branch in some ways and different in others. They will be received by the faculty at their annual occasion, September 16. They will participate for the first time September 21, in a Graceland prayer meeting, of which they have heard so much. They will attend football games and will cheer for Graceland's team as if every man on it were a bosom companion.

For these freshmen and others like them yet to come, Graceland College exists, and throws open its doors each fall. New minds to train and new hearts to mellow—these the opportunity and the responsibility of each Graceland opening.

Houghton Lake, Michigan

Local members were happy to hold a one-day meeting August 28, in this corner of Central Michigan District. Every service was enjoyed. Elders Matthew Humphry and George Bailey were in charge. The branch chorister, organist, and other home-talent helpers furnished programs and music.

Fellowship meeting in the morning was followed by preaching by Elder George Bailey. There were three services in the afternoon and two in the evening, speakers being Elders Matthew Humphry, Ash Lenoir, and George White.

Much good was accomplished by this meeting, and the time was well spent. The following places were represented in the congregation, Harrison, Gladwin, Belding, Detroit, Lansing, Midland, Bently, Beaverton, Traverse City, Flint, Pigeon, and Grand Haven.

Sherwood, Oregon

Ninety-five people attended an ice cream social of Sherwood Mission, held August 18, on the lawn of the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Tooze. There were five booths beautifully decorated. The Oriole Girls sold ice cream, hot dogs and buns, candy, root beer, and coffee and cake. Mrs. Vincent Shultz was the gypsy fortune teller. After the food was sold, games were played and some of the people sang. A prize of a box of candy was given to the one having the lucky ticket. A sum of twenty-three dollars was made, eighteen dollars being cleared. This money is for the benefit of the church.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Thirty-four young people from this branch enjoyed a part of the district reunion at Eagle City. Though they were unable to attend the entire reunion, their camp, "Little Calumet," was a lively place. Many social and spiritual benefits were gained from the reunion, and the young men and women came home determined to put forth a greater effort to mount the heights of true sainthood. They were inspired by the wonderful sermons and talks of Apostle Roy S. Budd and others.

A two weeks' series of meetings has just been closed at Calumet. Apostle Budd was there and preached one night, but almost all the other evenings were occupied by Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, president of Western Oklahoma District. At the close of the series six people were baptized.

After the church service one night the entire branch and a number of nonmembers enjoyed a social hour in the form of a wiener roast. Several evenings after church services, the young people played games, led by Brother Renfroe.

Western Montana Reunion

The Western Montana reunion was held at the district reunion grounds at Race Track, Montana, August 25 to 28, inclusive. The Saints were greatly gratified to have with them this year President F. M. McDowell and Apostle J. A. Gillen, Patriarch G. W. Thorburn, who has so faithfully labored among the Saints of Montana for so many years, and representatives of the district presidency, N. P. Coleman, E. E. Eliason, and F. L. Casey. Much regret was expressed that District Missionary L. O. Wildermuth was unable to attend because of the untimely death of his son, and hearts go out to him in sympathy in his hour of sorrow.

The first morning prayer service in charge of Brothers McDowell and Gillen marked the first spiritual feast which manifested itself in each of the other services throughout the four days. At the eleven o'clock hour, Brother Gillen gave a splendid discourse, relating some of the incidents of his life concerning the gospel.

Class work, in charge of President McDowell, began Thursday afternoon. His subject, entitled, "The Ministry of the Church," was interesting, instructing, and inspiring, making clear the fact that the business of the church is to build men in the likeness of Christ. The evening sermon also by Brother McDowell was an inspiration. Many souls were touched with the sincerity and earnestness which was manifested in the speaker as he unfolded the possibilities of the church and its work. The only regret was that every soul in the district could not have been in attendance.

The Friday morning prayer meeting was well attended. Class work followed, continuing the subject of the previous day. Another class period preceded the meeting of the women's department in charge of Sister G. W. Thorburn at 2.30 p. m. The women spent an enjoyable hour together, giving a program and refreshments for the benefit of the entire group. A priesthood meeting came next. The evening hour was given over to a program rendered by various persons of the district and a musical play by the members of the Race Track Young People's Choir.

Saturday was another profitable and busy day, with good prayer meeting and two class periods in the forenoon. At two o'clock the business meeting of the district conference was called to order, President McDowell and the district presidency in charge. Various items of business were taken care of and the election of officers of the ensuing year stands as follows: Elder N. P. Coleman, district president, and Elders E. E. Eliason and F. L. Casey, associates; Sister G. W. Thorburn, director of Religious Education; Elder D. L. Allen, secretary, and Sister Fred Kendall, director of music.

The evening sermon by Apostle J. A. Gillen on "The Doctrines of the Church" was enjoyed by an attentive and appreciative audience, and was followed by an impressive baptismal service, the little stream being lighted with lanterns hung among the trees. Elder Joseph Beck led five candidates, clothed in white, into the water and brought them forth into the latter-day light. They were three boys, Ralph Schuyler, Robert Beck, and Billy Kendall, and two adults, Sister Peggy McKee and Brother John Nicholas. Before being immersed the candidates stood on the water's edge and received a charge from Patriarch G. W. Thorburn, which made all feel again that sacred vow in becoming a child of God.

Each afternoon from half past three until five o'clock was devoted to recreation under the leadership of Fred Kendall. This feature was appreciated because of the fact that so many meetings had to be crowded into the day's program and exercise helped to cast away the weariness of sitting so often in class periods.

The Saints arose Sunday morning with rain falling to dampen and chill the surroundings but not the spirits of the people. The climax was reached when the early morning prayer meeting was devoted to the young people. Many were impressed by the interest of the young people and were gratified to hear expressions of their love for the gospel and their determination to carry on the great latter-day work and be of service to the church. The church school, under the direction of Sister Thorburn, was a demonstration of the possibilities of the new plan for creating the spirit of worship in our meetings, and was carried out by the young people.

At eleven o'clock the meeting was again in charge of Brothers F. M. McDowell and J. A. Gillen. Here three of the beautiful ordinances of the church were fittingly carried out, the blessing of the babies of Brother and Sister Louis Peterson and Brother and Sister Harvey Eliason; then the confirming of the baptized candidates which was very impressive when they were again given a charge by Doctor F. L. Casey, after which Brother McDowell extended the hand of fellowship while the congregation sang softly, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds"; then followed the partaking of the Lord's Supper. The Spirit of the heavenly Father was present at this service to own and to bless. A short time was left for testimonies.

At the afternoon service a charge was given to the district officers and leaders of organizations by Brother McDowell, which made each one feel more keenly the responsibilities resting upon him, and gave all a determination to go forward to reach the goal. Sister Anna Statton was presented a second grade certificate in Religious Education, and commended for the effort put forth and the interest she has in qualifying to become efficient as a worker in the service of the Lord.

Night found the people tired but reluctant to leave the spiritual feast which had been so much needed and enjoyed, and sad to have to say farewell to the Brothers who had been so kind in administering that aid, and the friends that were made dearer because of the association.

Today Tests Our Faith

Wells, Michigan, August 28.—The Herald, bringing to us glad news from different parts of the world, the reports of reunions and the spiritual uplift as a result of these gatherings, causes the reader to rejoice. Though many have not been able to attend the special meetings of the season, the Spirit comes as a witness when they read the reports. We wish to join the Herald family with a small contribution in expression of our happiness at seeing the progress of the work though the depression has hindered in a number of ways.

Experience is teaching us that conditions are causing men, in many respects, to build more constructively for the future. We find many Saints profiting by the past and adjusting themselves spiritually and temporally to the situations of the day. This assures a better future for the church when the joys and hopes of the Saints shall be realized in a practical Zion.

The solving of our problems under the present conditions is putting the faith of the Saints to a test, and those who are pressing forward with faith in the program of the church are shedding light to people about them. The problem of leadership is of vast importance in many of the branches. I recall once attending a Wednesday evening prayer meeting at a certain place. The pastor was there but had not, until this evening, been present for months, though he lived in reaching distance. Attendance was small (Could it be wondered at?). The pastor suggested that there was no use of holding the meeting with so few present. We are glad that today such a lack of interest is not easily found in the church. Should there be, such a condition would be reported to the district. The literature offered by the church to the priesthood for study and preparation, presents a fine opportunity to make ready for useful service.

We have enjoyed our work, assisting with the church school, also with recreation. Have met with some fine young people and obtained good reports from them. I had the privilege of baptizing and confirming five of them, and of blessing some little children. Throughout the summer very encouraging experiences have been mine.

One experience may be of especial interest to Herald readers. One Sunday night it was raining and only a few were at the service. We thought of different subjects to talk on, but they did not seem to be what was needed. As we prayed over the matter, we were impressed to suggest a round table talk. "What Can I Do?" was the topic, and we called on the superintendent of the junior department of the church school. Her face lighted up with the Spirit as she spoke, and others took up the subject until all had participated. Everyone rejoiced, and we felt as if we had consulted God in the matter. Our humble prayer was heard, and those present were served in God's way. We find that the latter-day work grows grander as we go along.

Duluth, Minnesota

Sixtieth Avenue, West, and Bristol Street

It has been some time since the Herald heard from "the inland ocean port," but the Saints of Duluth are continuing to strive to move Zionward.

The Sunday school held its annual picnic at Jay Cooke Park up the Saint Louis River, near Carlton, Minnesota, August 11. A number of visitors were present from surrounding points, and a fine time was experienced.

Now that the majority of the members are home from vacations, workers are looking forward to greater activity in the branch. The spirit of unity prevails among those actively engaged in the work of the Lord.

This congregation is now preparing for the Minnesota district conference which convenes here September 17 and 18. An invitation has been extended all isolated Saints to be present. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle J. F. Curtis are expected to be present at the conference.

The Saints who live at Bennett, Wisconsin, only three in number, have caught the spirit of this work, and as they are warned, they are striving to warn others by holding an all-day meeting with picnic at noon. W. C. Stauty, of Duluth, has been asked to come and tell the gospel story.

Brother Samuel Case, of Warba, Minnesota, was in charge at prayer service Wednesday evening, August 17. Sister C. A. Silverthorn, Sister Julia Case's mother, came down with Brother Samuel Case to stay with her daughter at Proctor. She is fast losing her eyesight. She asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

Quite a few of the wage earners of this branch have been out of work because of the world-wide depression.

Officers have borrowed a stereopticon machine from the Minneapolis Saints, and expect soon to hold lectures during the week with slides from the Graphic Arts Bureau of the general church.

The program and recreation sponsored once a month by the women's department for young and old of the branch, will soon be resumed. Sister Mollie Feathers is leader of this group, and the women meet once each month to study.

Sister Eva Tourville, musical director, with the help of Sister Lottie Zuelsdorf, is engaged in training a junior choir.

The prayers of local members are for the general church officers during this trying time. Duluth Saints look forward to the time when conditions will foster unity, and the church can launch out in a great missionary effort. This congregation feels very small in comparison with the city of Duluth and with another city, Superior, Wisconsin, just across the bay, where also, no doubt, dwell many honest-hearted people. The people who call themselves followers of the Master should abide in his strength and with their hearts filled with love and faith, go forward in his name.

Southern Chapter of Graceland Alumni Association

As a result of N. Ray Carmichael's suggestion to Faith McCall Higdon through correspondence, that there were enough ex-Graceland students in the three districts, Alabama, Florida, and Mobile, to form a local chapter of alumni, one was organized at the young people's convention held at Dixonville, Alabama, August 27.

The following former students met in the auditorium of the church: Mr. and Mrs. Earl Higdon, of Munson, Florida; Mr. and Mrs. Lyle D. Flynn, of McKenzie, Alabama; Walter McQueen, of Milton, Florida; Lucille Garrett, of Monroeville, Alabama; Marion Garrett, of Bay Minette, Alabama, and Anna Mae Hough, of Mobile.

It was appropriate that these alumni began with a Graceland pep meeting. Everyone joined in and imagined he was back in the "old hall."

Faith McCall Higdon acted as chairman of the meeting with her husband, Earl, as secretary. After an informal discussion Lyle Flynn moved to organize a local chapter of the Graceland Alumni Association. The motion was seconded by Anna Mae Hough, and passed unanimously.

The following officers were chosen for the chapter: President, Lucille Garrett; vice president, Lyle Flynn; secretary-treasurer, Anna Mae Hough.

The chapter has set four objectives for the year: (1) That a memory folio be compiled by the members to be permanently kept by the association; (2) That College Day this year be observed with greater emphasis than ever before; (3) That throughout the year programs and the like be given to finance the local chapter, and (4) To try to obtain one hundred per cent membership in the Graceland Alumni Association as charter members. Charter membership to the local chapter is to be left open until January 1, 1933, so Graceland students of these districts are urged to get busy and send their dollar to the secretary, Anna Mae Hough, 1250 Seneca Street, Mobile, Alabama. In this way they can become charter members of the association.

Fanning, Kansas

The summer vacation days which are drawing to a close, have been busy days for Fanning Saints since this is an agricultural community. Crops, vegetables, and fruits, have grown in abundance and in spite of low prices, the Saints have much for which to be thankful.

Attendance at the various activities of the church has kept up well during the warm months.

On Children's Day, June 12, five babies were blessed, and on the following Sunday, another infant received its blessing.

July 1, in the evening, a number gathered on the banks of Spring Creek near Brother Wiley's home, south of Fanning, and four were baptized by Elder Samuel Twombly. One of these, David Vern Simpson, is a prominent teacher in Doniphan County. The other three were children, Charles Deming, jr., Naomi Maud Twombly, and Leonard Twombly.

Brother Samuel Twombly was called to Beattie, Kansas, July 16, to officiate at the wedding of Sister Capitola Wright, eldest daughter of Brother and Sister Wright, to Mr. George Mechling, of Lincoln, Nebraska. Sister Capitola has been living at Lincoln for the last six years and is a member of the branch there. After dinner had been served the guests, the newly-wedded couple drove back to Lincoln.

July 31, Sister Geneva Dyer and Brother Glenn Pipergerdes, of Far West Stake, drove to the home of Brother Samuel Twombly, where they were united in marriage by Brother Twombly.

The young people of the branch have been active during the summer. On the last Thursday of each month the regular social meeting of the young people's class has been held. August 25, the meeting was at the home of Brother and Sister Ed. Thomas. Late in July the volley ball team from Second Branch, Saint Joseph, Missouri, met the Fanning team on the Fanning court. This being just before the primary election, the crowd was considerably increased by the presence of practically all the candidates for nomination to offices in Doniphan County. A large quantity of ice cream and cake were sold by the young people.

The women's department has kept up its social activities during the summer. Three silver teas were given and the women have contributed assistance in other lines.

The thirty-sixth annual four-day Sparks picnic opened August 25. On this day the Fanning Junior Girls' Chorus, under the direction of Sister Mabel Mortimore, furnished three musical numbers on the program. These were well received by the large crowd, also two readings by Sister Marie Sheppard.

On Chautauqua Day, Sunday, August 28, the Saints felt highly favored in having Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, represent them as their speaker before the crowd of about eight thousand people. Favorable comments on his sermon continue to be heard. The entire musical program on Sunday was furnished by the Saints of Fanning. The Fanning quartet, composed of Sisters Mabel Mortimore and Marie Sheppard and Brothers James A. Thomas and Virgil Sheppard, sang three songs, accompanied by Sister Mary Helen Thomas. Sister Edna Williams sang a solo, accompanied by Sister Bertha Denton, of Saint Joseph.

As the warm weather diminishes and cool weather comes, the Saints are hopefully making preparation to push forward the work of the Lord with renewed vigor.

Spring River Young People Have Comprehensive Program

Two years ago the young people in Spring River District organized themselves as the Young People's Organization. They have held several meetings including two conventions, institute work, and other activities. All services have been very well attended. The past few months the young people have met at different locations in the district for an evening's outing once each month. They have had some wonderful times. Games, singing, speaking, other entertainment and always refreshments served in a pleasing way, help to make a happy time.

The last meeting was held August 23, at Miami, Oklahoma, about two hundred attending. The Saints of Miami worked hard to make this a successful event in every respect. They prepared a large playground with flood lights on Brother Kayser's farm, two miles south of the city. They planned a program of games and entertainment, and served abundance of ice cream and cake. Since the evening was very hot, this was especially welcome.

The young people were more than pleased to have District President Amos T. Higdon and Missionary Lee Quick there. These two ministers enjoyed the games and refreshments. Brother Higdon stated that the benefit of these meetings was apparent in that the young people in the district were getting acquainted as a result of their frequent get-togethers. They have for each other a feeling of love and friendship which is found in few places.

This meeting was outstanding, the people attending from an area the radius of which was one hundred and ten miles.

Brother Albert Cobb, president of the organization, called the executives together August 28, Sunday afternoon, at Joplin, Missouri, and planned activities for the balance of this year and the first three months of 1933.

The next meeting will be held at Columbus, Kansas, Tuesday evening, September 20, in the park. All young people of the district who may not be acquainted with the present program of the group as well as those who are actively engaged, are invited.

Besides the meetings, the young people have planned several goodwill tours to different branches, taking a large delegation of their number this winter.

The young people as well as the older members in this district are earnest in their desire to carry the latter day work forward. Their hopes are for the future, and they expect to see much good come from their organization. They pray that God will watch over and keep them, that they may always have love in their midst.

Independence

Among the many Independence young men and women who this year are attending college, the following have entered the Old West Door at Graceland: Hazel Davis, Eunice Kinsfather, Helen Moorman, Thelma Moorman, Violet Peterson, Olena Plain, Howard Snead, Edna Resch, Anita May, Delpha Hawley, Nora Moore, Ivan Dillee, and Paul Page.

The total school enrollment in Independence stands at 4,418, which is a substantial increase over that of last year. School officials think that the number will come very close to 5,000 before the end of the school year. Of this, 2,259 are pupils in the grade schools.

The Training School of Religious Education opened Monday night at the Stone Church with an attendance of five hundred workers representing all the congregations of the church in Independence. Classes designed to meet the program, subject matter and methods needs of church school directors, supervisors, teachers and leaders, including the priesthood and all who wish to engage in earnest preparation for service in the church, are offered in two class periods during the evening, the first at 7.30, the second at 8.45. President F. M. McDowell is directing the school, and each evening presents a thirty-minute message. "The Teaching Ministry of the Church" was his opening theme on Monday night. The faculty of the school is composed of the following: Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elders John F. Sheehy, C. B. Woodstock, George Mesley, and S. A. Thiel, Mrs. Charles Koehler, Miss Leta Moriarty, Mrs. John R. Lentell, Mrs. Fred Koehler, Miss Ruby Williamson, and Mrs. C. R. Smith. Last Friday night this group enjoyed an inspiration meeting at the home of Brother C. B. Woodstock, who has done the large share of planning and organizing the school. After prayer had been offered, Brother McDowell presented definite objectives for the work of the fall institute, and these were informally discussed by the faculty.

The school dismissed all its sessions Tuesday evening in order that the leaders and workers in Religious Education might hear the lecture of Doctor William P. McGarey, member of the national committee of the Anti-Saloon League, given to the people of Independence at the Campus. The lecture was preceded by a dinner in the Auditorium dining room to which the Anti-Saloon League of America invited a number of persons active in business, civic, educational, and church life of this city. This is one of about sixteen thousand similar dry meetings being held by the League throughout the United States.

The booth unit plan for making the Harvest Home Festival attractive and beautiful was adopted at a meeting of the women supervisors and group representatives the afternoon of September 6. The colonial atmosphere will prevail at the festival this year in honor of the Washington Bicentennial, and all exhibits will be shown at minimum expense. Workers had originally planned one mammoth display for all the groups of Independence, but at the last moment this did not seem feasible. Scores of people are now hard at work on plans for their festival display. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of this meeting of the women, and Bishop J. Stanley Kelley was present to assign booth space to the congregations and other groups.

About four hundred voices of the Auditorium Festival Chorus rehearsed Harvest Festival concert music Sunday afternoon at four o'clock in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. "And they're not all here yet," declared Brother Paul N. Craig, director. This rehearsal combined the Independence and Kansas City Stake choruses. Next Sunday afternoon, the Independence singers will meet in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church at four o'clock, and Kansas City singers will rehearse at Central Church.

A large Campus congregation listened on Sunday evening to a forceful discourse on "The Glory of God Is Intelligence." by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

Stone Church

President F. M. McDowell in his Sunday morning sermon to the Stone Church congregation spoke of many things close to his heart—the responsibility of the members in the work of growing and training men and women for the kingdom of God; the imperative need of religious leaders; the sacrifices of many faithful members of the Northwest with whom he has this summer been associated; the ultimate objectives in bringing about Zion as adopted by the 1932 General Conference. For a scripture lesson he chose to read from Doctrine and Covenants 85. Brother McDowell's personal testimony concerning the God-given teaching task of the church, and his sincere appeal to mature members to help build a society which will make Zion possible, moved the congregation to deep consideration. Many, as a result of this sermon, are this week and next studying in the Training School of Religious Education.

The choir's program at eleven o'clock, broadcast over KMBC, afforded Brother McDowell a pleasing musical background for his sermon. After the processional the choir sang, "This Is the Day the Lord Hath Made," and Robert Miller at the organ played Kriesler's "The Old Refrain." "God Is Marching His Army," was the opening hymn sung by congregation and choir under the direction of Paul N. Craig. Elder D. S. McNamara offered prayer, and the hymn response by the choir was "Jesus Savior, Pilot Me." Then Robert and George Miller at organ and piano played the offertory number, "Coronation March," by Wilson. A pleasing solo, "The Mighty God Hath Spoken," by Case, was sung by Mrs. Nina G. Smith, and the anthem, "Savior, When Night Involves the Skies," by Shelley, was sung by the choir, Albert Brackenbury taking the bass solo.

Elder T. A. Beck has been chosen supervisor of the young people's department of the church school which meets at the Auditorium each Sunday morning. Brother Beck will be assisted in his new work by his wife, Sunshine Beck, by Jason Woodside, in charge of music, and possibly by others. These are at work perfecting plans for the beginning of the new church school year, plans which will mean growth and expansion to the department.

More than sixty-five young people of the Stone Church congregation visited Central Kansas City Church Sunday night, on their last missionary trip of the season. They were in charge of Brother T. A. Beck. At eight o'clock they presented the evening's program: a solo by Mrs. Paul Wheeler, a trio number by Irene and Mildred Shupe and Evelyn Shupe Flournoy, and a solo by Pauline Crawford. The visiting group also furnished the evening's speaker, Elder Harvey Minton. Roy Smith was in charge of the service, assisted by S. A. Thiel. Mrs. Sunshine Beck played the organ. After the service a reception was held in honor of the visiting members.

The young people's midweek prayer meetings are the source of joy and comfort to the worshippers. Last Wednesday the theme was "Faith," and Brother Roy McNeil made the opening remarks. All testimonies closely followed the theme. Brother T. A. Beck has had charge of these services for many months, endearing himself to the young people by his kind and wise leadership.

gation, led by Roy Settles, went to Heathwood Church in Kansas City Stake, to present the program. As speaker these young missionaries were privileged to take with them Apostle James A. Gillen, just returned from a summer's work in the Northwest. Elder D. S. McNamara who has charge of Religious Education in Independence accompanied them. The visitors found a warm welcome, and at the close of the evening service were invited to partake of refreshments.

A number of the choir members in this congregation are singing in the Auditorium Festival Chorus.

Spring Branch Church

Elder H. L. Barto, pastor of Enoch Hill Church, was the speaker here Sunday morning taking the text for his sermon from Doctrine and Covenants 6 and 7. He stressed the keeping of the financial law, and warned the congregation that the Lord will not always wait for the Saints to keep the law; we are told if we do not do our part, we shall have no place in the redemption of Zion. Pastor G. W. Eastwood was in charge of the service, assisted by Clair Austin. The prelude was played by Fern Belk and the choir sang a response and the anthem, "Lead on, O King Eternal," directed by Mrs. Jalmer Nelson.

Elder Robert Fish made a fine talk to the Sunday school, relating an experience which was his as a small boy when God answered his prayer.

The Spring Branch Choir is making progress on the Harvest Festival Music. All the singers are members of the Auditorium Festival Chorus.

On Sunday evening Spring Branch young people were scheduled to visit Bennington Heights Church in Kansas City Stake.

The theme for testimonies at the Sunday morning prayer service was, "What Am I Going to Do for the Lord?" Joseph Farrow and George Bilquist were in charge, and a number of young people were present. C. D. Brewer and Arthur Peer were in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service last week.

Englewood Church

The thirty-five young people from this congregation who on Sunday evening, went to Chelsea Church, Kansas City Stake, received a royal welcome. This was the last missionary trip scheduled for the young people for the summer season, and leaders were proud of the number who went. They gave a good program. At the close of the evening service at Chelsea, the visitors were served refreshments.

Elder H. V. Minton was the morning speaker Sunday at Englewood.

We want them to become acquainted with our books and periodicals, learn to know our personnel, and come to feel that they have a part in the work of the church here, the same as they have at church school. The profits from the sales will help the church, too.

We can't supply everything they need in School Supplies, but we are offering a few of the major items on which we save you money. Here's a few of the leaders:

September 5, 1872, she was married to John Fitzpatrick, and three children were born to them: Robert (deceased) and Edward and Emma who survive. Her husband died January 5, 1893, and in 1901, she married David Stewart, who passed away June 30, 1904. February 24, 1889, she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Vales Mills, Ohio, being baptized by L. R. Devore, and for forty-three years she was a Saint, active in church work and deeds of kindness. She leaves to her family and friends her life as a memorial of loving service. Surviving besides her son and daughter, are eight grandchildren, seven great-grandchildren, and many friends. The funeral was at Radcliff, Ohio, in charge of Francis May, assisted by D. V. Cummings and A. B. Kirkendall. Interment in Radcliff Cemetery.

Health Greetings

God loves all the Saints, but all sinful conduct is grievous before Him and he can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. When you suffer the LORD is also compelled to suffer as you truly have been ingrafted and become a part of the Vine. PLEASE don't partake of foods that are detrimental to your own welfare, that of others and the LORD also. Be a good Saint. If Hog is not good for dogs why use it as a food? If white flour is destructive to all animal life why do you tamper with it?

Over 90% of all Cancer, Tumors and skin trouble come directly from HOG—dirty, filthy, diseased, scavengers. Go slow on white sugar, vinegar, tomatoes, lard, imitation butter, coffee, tea, hot foods of any kind.

If you are not normal, if your living is high, if we can't solve both problems our foods are free. Send us one or two dollars for food. If we don't please you in every way, we will refund every penny. Truly we can be of great service to you. Our 31 years of active business in the Food game has brought us to the point that we can say, "I KNOW."

Merger Will Unite Church Periodicals

HERALD, ENSIGN, AND VISION WILL BE COMBINED

What is believed to be a long step forward in the development of our church publications is shortly to be realized in the merging of the three church periodicals, Herald, Ensign, and Vision, into one enlarged all-purpose publication, which will carry the historic title, Saints' Herald. This change was recommended by the Board of Trustees of the Herald Publishing House, after a thorough investigation of circulation possibilities and publication costs, and was approved by other leading church officials. The new publication will carry the best features of all three.

The change came as a result of a growing realization that the competition between our publications has scattered our efforts and kept the church from having any single medium through which any very large number of church people could be reached. The depression has enforced the conviction that our people can afford only one periodical.

It will now be possible for church people to take one official paper and know that they are getting all that they should of articles, news, and official communications. We believe that our readers will benefit by the change in many ways. They will receive the best selected material that formerly appeared in all three periodicals, and at the price of one.

Both Vision and the Ensign have been losing circulation until they were kept going at a considerable loss. Even the Herald was not entirely paying its way. Commercial printing has aided in keeping the publishing plant operating and the employees at work, but the margin of safety has not been wide. The economy effected by the merger will bring greater financial security to the publishing house, and consequent benefit to the church.

The merger with Vision will be effective immediately, and some of the material for church workers is appearing in this issue of the Herald. The Ensign will complete its issues for the month of September. The first issue of the Herald in October will bring the complete new publication to our readers.

We are very hopeful at the prospects that are before us. We feel that the publication will have an unprecedented opportunity to serve the interests of the church and the needs of the people. L. L.

Spiritualizing the Branch Business Meeting

The First Presidency are in receipt of a letter from a branch president which reads in part as follows:

Our branch met in special business session Tuesday, September 6, 1932, to elect officers for the new church year commencing in October.

A very pleasing and spiritual meeting was the result of the faithfulness of the branch. The pastor asked the Saints to fast the evening meal preceding the Wednesday evening prayer meeting of August 31, also the morning meal preceding the sacrament service Sunday, September 4, for the necessary spiritual food for this particular session.

Selecting branch officers is a serious task and requires good judgment. All of the officers selected have had quite a number of years of service in the church.

Very frequently the branch business meeting may be characterized as a free-for-all fuss. Among my early memories of church associations are those connected with these periodic "scraps." In fact, I quite clearly recall that about the only time I was permitted to stay up after eleven o'clock was on those occasions when I was in attendance at the business sessions in our little branch.

The pastor who writes the above letter seems to have recognized the seriousness and spiritual import of a branch business meeting, and the fundamental truth of the statement that "the way we go about the conduct of our church affairs has more to do with the character growth of the members of the branch than any amount of formal instruction or class discussion."

We congratulate this pastor upon his apparent ability to so order his branch business meeting as to make it a spiritualizing agency. We commend his example to other branch presidents.

F. M. MCD.

It has been customary to demand of a philosopher that he should show that the world is good in certain respects. I can not admit any duty of this sort. One might as well demand of an accountant that he should show a satisfactory balance sheet. It is just as bad to be fraudulently optimistic in philosophy as in money matters. If the world is good, by all means let us know it; but if not, let us know that.—Bertrand Russell.

Independence Takes Her Task Seriously

The pamphlet on Church Objectives which comes to us as the unanimous action of the General Conference of 1932, and has, according to the expressed opinion of the church, divine approval, includes the following:

The encouragement of a training program which shall make possible the discovery, enlistment, and training of teachers and leaders, including men of the priesthood, that the teaching work of our branches shall be done with increasing efficiency.

The training program may well include correspondence courses, supervised reading, local classes and institutes, and regional or church-wide institutes and conventions.

The purposes of such training must be:

1. To furnish the teacher and leader with a clear and ready knowledge of the teachings of the church and of its program.
2. To encourage a personal, spiritual experience and development in a quality of life that will embody the gospel message.
3. To give a mastery of the technique of Christian teaching and leadership.

In Independence there are ten congregations with a total membership of six thousand five hundred. In this number are approximately five hundred men holding the priesthood and two hundred and fifty church school teachers, leaders, and officers.

The magnitude of the educational task for the City of Zion is immediately apparent. To those most closely in touch with the needs of Independence this task is appalling. Here are gathered together more persons requiring more officers and teachers than any except the largest of our universities. When one takes into consideration what the church is attempting to do in its endeavor to establish a Godlike society of Godly men and women, the difficulty and importance of the above task can hardly be overestimated.

Independence has taken this task to heart and has set aside the period September 12 to 22 as a period of intensive training. Every night for ten nights the pastors, teachers, leaders, and members of the priesthood have been asked to assemble for class work. The first period each evening is devoted to a study of subject matter. In other words, what to teach. The teachers here receive instruction in the very courses which they expect to teach during the next twelve months. The courses offered during this first period are as follows:

A. Study of Doctrine and Covenants	F. H. Edwards
The Message of the Book of Mormon	John F. Sheehy
Young People's Courses	C. B. Woodstock
Intermediate Courses	Leta Moriarty
Junior Courses	Mrs. Fred Koehler
Primary Three Years	Ruby Williamson
Beginner Three Years	Tessie Smith

During the second period every evening the entire group assembles for a thirty-minute worship and inspirational period. Following the Scripture lesson, suitable music, and prayer, a brief inspirational message is given, by the writer, on the general theme, "Guiding Growing Persons to God," in other words, the objectives, the "why" of our teaching.

The third period is again devoted to class work in which methods and programs are discussed, the "how" of our teaching work. Classes offered in this period are as follows:

Adult Division	S. A. Thiel and Mrs. Charles Koehler
The Young People's Division	George Mesley
Junior Methods and Problems	Mrs. Fred Koehler
Children's Division Methods	Mrs. John Lentell

At the present writing the first week of this effort has just been concluded. We are happy to report that the average attendance for the week has been over five hundred. What an inspiring sight to see five hundred teachers and leaders in one assembly with every congregation in Zion represented, and knowing that from the institute they expect to return to their local congregations not only inspired but with very definite preparation for their tasks.

Not only is this effort in harmony with the action of the recent General Conference, it is wholly consistent with the word of God to this church since its very beginning. Consistent, too, with the teaching and practice of Christ. Since the church was organized in 1830 its leaders have consistently and repeatedly urged this sort of preparation. Then, too, the needs of the church at present, together with the social and economic conditions in the world—all would argue for an intensive effort on the part of the church to fulfill its divinely appointed task, that of building men and women for God.

The general church officers have felt that if they had any right to call men and send them to spend years in foreign service for the church, they likewise were justified in requesting teachers and leaders, both of the present and future, to devote certain definite periods to intensive training for their work. In this spirit of sincere concern and determination this institute was organized and, we are happy to say, has met with unprecedented response.

The work of the institute immediately precedes the reorganization of the church school in Zion for the coming year, beginning October 2. New classes must be formed and in many cases new teachers secured. It is the work of directors and supervisors to supply the classes from year to year with teachers well informed, inspired, and trained for the task. Our concept of Zion necessitates intelligent, consecrated effort as we progress toward the goal.

Adjusting Your Subscriptions

Readers who are subscribers to more than one of our periodicals will wonder how their subscriptions are to be adjusted. The method to be followed is according to approved practice in other publication mergers. Since the Herald costs twice as much as the Ensign, the ratio of adjustment will be one unit of Herald for two units of Ensign. Thus, if the reader has eight months subscription to the Ensign still to run, he will receive in its place four months subscription to the Herald. Vision subscriptions will be turned to the Herald on a month-for-month basis, which will be to the advantage of the subscribers, since Vision costs less. An example of how this plan works may be illustrated: a member has just sent in an order for a year's subscription to the Herald, Ensign, and Vision. He will receive the new Herald for two and one half years.

Incidentally, the new enlarged Herald will cost the same: two dollars per year.

Quarterlies Mailed This Week

This week the Herald Publishing House is mailing the quarterlies for the next period beginning October 1. All quarterlies will be sent to subscribers as rapidly as possible. The Business Manager is pleased to note an improvement in the promptness with which the writers are sending in copy for our quarterly studies, but the publishing house is still laboring under the handicap of having to handle a great deal of material in the last few weeks of the quarter.

Concert by Auditorium Festival Chorus

The concert by the Auditorium Festival Chorus, Friday night, October 14, will be the charge event of the Harvest Home Festival. Tickets of admittance will be $0.35 for adults, and $0.25 for children; reserved seats, $0.50. These may be obtained from any member of the Auditorium Festival Chorus, and are on sale in advance at the Herald Publishing House and the Pastor's Office, the Auditorium.

Money from the sale of tickets will pay the actual costs of the concert production, and the remainder will go into the Harvest Festival Fund for needy people and for Auditorium maintenance expenses.

I have seldom known any one who deserted truth in trifles that could be trusted in matters of importance.—Paley.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

It is suggested that prayers for the sick can be made effectively at the Wednesday evening prayer services, and at the monthly sacrament services. We hope that our readers will also remember the sick in their private prayers.

Friendly letters will be written by members of the staff to those who are discouraged or isolated from church privileges, and to those requesting prayers whose letters indicate that they are able to receive mail.

Grateful for Improvement of Health

Not long ago a request came for the members of the church to pray for Brother Charles F. Mottet, of Webb City, Missouri. The pastor at that place, Ira O. Waldron, who sent the request, now transmits the letter below and confirms its contents.

I am pleased at being permitted this opportunity of thanking the Saints throughout the world for their prayers in my behalf, also to tell them their prayers have been answered. My tuberculosis was an advanced case and I am much better, the doctor being surprised at my improvement. In James 5: 13, 14, 15, the Lord tells us what to do when we are sick and if we are faithful and obey his word He will as surely fulfill his promise. Our family has been wonderfully blessed time after time by our heavenly Father through prayer and administrations by the elders, for which we thank God and give to him all the glory, honor and praise.

Our prayers are for the Saints always and I ask for a continuation of your prayers in my behalf.

CHARLES F. MOTTET.

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI.

Brother and Sister Orris Salisbury, of Glidden, Iowa, request prayers for their four-year-old daughter who is dangerously ill with a disease that is baffling the doctors. They hold no hope for the child's recovery. The distressed parents earnestly request the people of the church to remember their child in prayer to the Great Physician, to Whom all things are possible.

Prohibition Punches

From a Speech of Doctor William P. McGarey

What America needs today is a little less talk about personal liberty and a little more talk about personal duty. . . .

Is it not reasonable that before any man undertakes to tear down that which has been made possible by the tears and the toil of the people of the past, he should prepare an acceptable substitute? And shall that substitute not be something which has not already failed in America? . . .

Abraham Lincoln said that a Nation can not exist half slave and half free. No more can a Nation exist half drunk and half sober. . . .

These fellows who want to drink are not making nearly so much noise as the fellows who want to sell it. . . .

Number of Contributors Increase

Some statistics just compiled reveal a favorable trend in the number of contributions to the general church as evidenced by the following figures:

Year	No. of Tithe Payers	Total No. of Contributors
1929	14,717	17,704
1930	15,804	21,386
1931	18,051	25,907

It was the increase in the number of contributors in 1931 over 1930 which made possible the raising of almost as much money in 1931 as in 1930. A comparison of the number of contributors by districts for the two years is given below. A study of the figures will reveal the standing of your stake or district for the two years in respect to the number of contributors. Additional statistics bearing upon finances will be given in subsequent issues of the Herald.

We need a religion which will steadfastly insist that man's true objective is something spiritual, not something material. . . . It does not follow that in order to provide for his physical necessities he must become so absorbed in the making of money as to lose sight of his spiritual destiny. . . . Any man who consents, year in and year out, to grind the money-mills in order to provide luxuries for his wife and children may hardly be said to have a very clear vision of his own spiritual destiny, or of theirs.—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in "We Need Religion."

NEWS BRIEFS

Spiritual Revival in Poland

Since the news of the last General Conference reached them, the few Saints in Poland have experienced a spiritual revival and growth. The revelation given to the conference strengthened these members in their belief in the church. John Stebel, conference appointee to that country, baptized a woman at Makoszyce, July 17, and at Czarnylas held a sacrament meeting, three church school lessons, two Bible lessons, and preached two sermons. He reports interest in the church on the part of some Catholic friends. Brother Stebel and all other Saints in Poland and Germany eagerly await the visit of Apostle John W. Rushton.

Senlac Group to Conference

To the Saints of Northern Saskatchewan, district conference is a time of gathering, visiting, sharing experiences, and enjoying the spirit of true brotherhood. They exert every effort to attend conference.

Such an instance was connected with the July conference of that district. Brother A. J. Cornish, of Senlac, drove his large truck a distance of two hundred and thirty miles to Saskatoon, bringing twenty-three enthusiastic members to conference. The truck, with its big canopy top, not only provided transportation during this jaunt, but a shelter for the party, and they arrived at the Saskatoon church in the early hours of the morning and camped in the pews until daylight, their good humor not at all less for the experience.

Did the Senlac group help at conference? Sister A. J. Cornish and her young people presented the playlet, "Faith," the outstanding feature of the Friday evening program, and in many other ways this company contributed to the happiness of all.

Three Hundred Years in America

The Olmsted family, from whom President Frederick M. Smith derives descent, celebrated on September 16, the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of their American ancestors.

Happy School Days Again for Graceland

Nine days ago class work began at Graceland College after several days of enrollment and getting acquainted with the new freshmen of whom there are almost seventy this year. On the morning of September 9, Graceland's faculty and board of trustees made welcome the thirty-eighth freshmen class of the college. This assembly of welcome in the Ad

Building was followed by numerous activities of introduction—registration, getting acquainted with the faculty, survey of college buildings and grounds, mixers, programs, receptions, church school session in the chapel on Sunday morning, a band concert. On Monday came the sophomores and juniors. Graceland's enrollment on Tuesday, September 13, was one hundred and sixty, a total comparing favorably with last year's enrollment.

Outside Help for Pittsburg

During the summer Saints of Pittsburg, Kansas, have profited by the splendid help given by a number of General Conference appointees and district workers. In July the following visited Pittsburg Branch: District President Amos T. Higdon, District Missionary Lee Quick, President Elbert A. Smith, and Brother G. E. Carter, of Joplin. In August, Elder Evan Davis, of Independence, spoke on two Sundays. And September 17 and 18, Elder Leonard Lea, of Independence, will preside over a special institute.

New Branch in Ontario

A new branch is taking its place among the other thirteen branches of Chatham District, that of Essex, Ontario. For several years Windsor Branch maintained a mission in or near Essex, but early in 1932, plans for a definite branch organization began to take place, and these have just been consummated. A place of worship was secured. Missionary William I. Flegg was called to hold missionary services, and aroused great enthusiasm among Saints and their friends. The new branch is going forward often with one hundred per cent attendance at services.

Kansas City Central Choir in Big Bar Association Program

Ten thousand people in Kansas City's Convention Hall last Saturday night heard the Central Church Latter Day Saint Choir, directed by George Anway. The occasion was a drama presented by the Kansas City Bar Association, enacting the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1787, which gave to this nation its Constitution. The production was divided into four episodes, Central Choir furnishing the musical background. Considerable press notice was given this event, and without doubt Central Church Choir and Brother Anway have earned many new friends.

Promotion Day and Rally Day

By C. B. Woodstock

The general authorities of the church have advised that the last Sunday in September be set as the day for the closing up of the Church School work for the year. The new courses all are planned to begin on October 2, and the entire organization of the Church School should be set in motion for the new year on that date. This will mean that the previous year's courses should be closed in September, and we may well arrange for annual promotions on Sunday, September 25. This may be made the occasion for a local rally and home-coming in an effort to interest all in the progressive work of the church.

Promotion Plans

Progress is always marked by movement, the attaining and passing of goals. It is well that in the work of our Church School our study materials are planned in quarterly and yearly units or groups, each suited to the probable interests, needs and capacities of the age for which they are prepared. The successful covering of this material constitutes a series of convenient and meaningful goals. The entire quarterly series thus constitutes a series of thirty-two years of consecutive work, the completion of each one marking a figurative milepost in progress. This makes it possible to reorganize the classes each year about the new experiences possible as we enter enlarged and enriched fields of study and class work.

Actual promotion takes place usually from one department to another as a whole class moves forward. It is a pleasant custom for certificates of promotion to be awarded in a formal exercise to those being promoted from the Kindergarten, Primary, Junior and Intermediate departments. The occasion, if well planned, may be made very impressive and stimulating. Neat certificates may be purchased at the Herald Publishing House at sixty cents a dozen. In some places accustomed to the continuous service there may be a short, impressive meeting in departments, followed by the general promotion exercises, followed in turn by a short sermon appropriate to the occasion.

Promotion Day Program

We suggest the following for the general promotion ceremony:

Processional: Organ or other music, during which all who are to participate march to their places.

Opening song and prayer.

Address: "Working together with God." A ten-minute talk.

Presentation of classes for promotion, by their teachers and superintendents, with a brief statement of commendation.

Awarding of certificates.

Acceptance of new classes, by their new superintendents, in a brief word of welcome.

A charge to the school for the new year, by the director of religious education, or by the pastor.

Special music should vary and enrich the program. Such words as "Onward to Zion" are especially appropriate.

If this exercise is to be followed by a sermon, the theme should appropriately follow the idea of education, training, building for Zion and the kingdom of God.

Organizing for the New Year

In last week's Herald appeared a list of the new study courses available for use beginning October 2. A complete statement of the Church School Curriculum may be had on request. The selection of study materials to meet the needs of each class should receive most careful consideration. So far as possible each class or group should be encouraged to use the quarterly especially prepared for their use. To select otherwise, on the basis of personal prejudice or whim will probably result in inappropriate selection, will break the continuity of the courses and rob the members of the class of many most vital experiences.

Election of officers for the new Church School year and the selection of teachers should occur in September, and all be ready to take their places in a spirit of earnest consecration on October 2. A dedication service may well be held early in October.

The Church School Handbook contains most helpful discussions of all phases of church school work. Copies may be had from the Herald Publishing House at thirty-five cents each.

Rally Day

Either September 25 or October 2, or both, may be observed as occasions for a rallying of all the membership and friends to the work of the church. The former date has the advantage of specially prepared exercises marking the achievements of the year, while the latter date permits all to enter upon the first work of the new year. Perhaps both days should be "rally" days, and then the same spirit of earnest endeavor maintained throughout the year.

The conquests of Christianity at critical epochs of history seem like marvels of romance rather than records of sober fact. A little band of disciples of a crucified carpenter from an obscure town inaugurated a missionary movement which in less than three centuries conquered the Roman Empire. The spiritual conquest and transformation of the virile pagan races which emerged out of the northern forests and, in the fifth century, overthrew the Roman civilization was perhaps an even greater marvel.—Rufus M. Jones.

The Foundations of Our Faith

By Elbert A. Smith

I.—Our "Creed"

The foundation of God standeth sure.—2 Timothy 2: 19.

Our elders have frequently quoted the slogan, "Our Creed, all truth." The origin of this saying is not known to us, but the priesthood have used it for more than sixty years, and for thirty years, from 1891 to 1921, Zion's Ensign ran that motto on its cover page. At first glance such a motto might seem (to quote the late Bishop Ellis Short) to be "too scopitive." When properly analyzed it becomes not too inclusive nor yet boastful or egotistical. It does not mean that we have yet discovered all truth; certainly it does not mean that we have reduced all truth to the terms of a creed. It does mean that as soon as new truth is revealed to us or is discovered by us through study and demonstration, it becomes a thing for us to believe, and if necessary, to affirm,—a part at least of our "unwritten creed." Christ promised that his Spirit should guide us "into all truth." (John 16: 13.)

However much remains to be revealed or discovered in the realm of universal truth, the fundamental doctrines of Christ, the rules of human conduct and relationship affirmed by him, the essentials of his plan of salvation and reconciliation for man, were long ago revealed. They do not change. God himself is unchangeable; and in the larger sense human needs do not change. Human passions and temptations, human needs, human problems at bottom are the same in all ages. If God may say, I am God and I change not; man may in one sense reply, I am man and I change not. The plan of salvation was designed not alone to meet the arbitrary demands of God; but rather to meet human needs. "It is written" not alone in his word; it is also written in human nature and needs,—in life itself. Thus any statement of faith truly based on divine revelation does not need revision in its essentials; and in its fundamentals is not changeable or progressive.

The prophet Joseph is reported to have said:

I can not believe in any of the creeds of the different denominations, because they all have some things in them I can not subscribe to, though all of them have some truth. I want to come up into the presence of God and learn all things; but the creeds set up stakes, and say, "Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further"; to which I can not subscribe.

As a matter of fact we have never had a formal set creed such as some churches have adopted, to which members are required to subscribe and to which ministers are pledged before ordination. There have been numerous attempts to set forth our faith, mainly for the edification of investigating minds and prospective converts. The most historic of these attempts was made by Joseph Smith in 1842. In that year he prepared an article in response to a request from the Honorable John Wentworth, editor and proprietor of the Chicago Democrat. This article was entitled, "Church History." It reviewed briefly the history of the church to that date, and closed with an exceedingly comprehensive and concise statement of the faith of the church. The article in full was published in Times and Seasons, March 1, 1842, and the statement of faith is found in our Church History, volume 2, pages 569, 570. Also it was published in Religious Denominations of the United States, by I. Daniel Rupp, in 1844.

It has never been found necessary to revise this statement in the sense that any essential affirmation therein has been deleted or altered in its fundamental character. It was considered necessary in the early days of the Reorganization to add paragraphs, relating particularly to marriage, denouncing polygamy and affirming monogamy. With these additional paragraphs, the original statement of faith as prepared by Joseph Smith in 1842 has served us to the present time, and has been in constant publication by us under the head, Epitome of Faith. It has also served as a classic model in the preparation of more recent statements of our faith from time to time issued in the course of our work of proselyting and evangelizing the world.

It is almost inevitable and in the very nature of things that the statement of faith of any religious body especially any religious body known as "Christian," whether Protestant or Catholic, should begin with an affirmation of belief in God. We are neither Catholic nor Protestant. Our claims and beliefs regarding the apostasy and the subsequent restoration of the church and the gospel, as opposed to Catholic "succession" on the one hand and Protestant "reformation" on the other hand, put us in a class unique and distinct and by itself, as becomes our faith. Yet we have this in common with others, that our statement of faith almost inevitably begins with an affirmation of belief in God. The differences between our position and that of others develop as we attempt to analyze and interpret the character and attributes of God. These differences are fundamental. It was quite to be expected, then, that the very remarkable statement of faith prepared by Joseph Smith in 1842 should begin with the declaration: "We believe in God the Eternal Father." The entire statement of faith is now reproduced to give students a preliminary brief or survey of the grounds of our study:

We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in the Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.

We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

We believe that these ordinances are: 1st, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; 2nd, Repentance; 3d, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; 4th, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We believe that a man must be called of God by "prophecy, and by laying on of hands" by those who are in authority to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church; viz.: Apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.

We believe the Bible to be the word of God so far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.

We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes. That Zion will be built upon this continent. That Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisaic glory.

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law.

We believe in being honest, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "we believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—Joseph Smith, in Times and Seasons, volume 3, pages 709, 710.

Peter admonishes us to be ready always to give a reason for the hope that is in us. (1 Peter 3: 15.) Man is moved by his emotions and by his reason. Religion appeals first to the emotions. Hope springs in the heart. But religion must be more than emotional. The mind must be enlisted and in accord with the heart. A man divided against himself can not stand. Hence the injunction to be prepared to give a reasonable, a logical, a well thought out answer to the hope that is in our hearts. We are to love God with "all our heart, might, mind and strength." Heart first, then mind, and after that all our strength in his service.

A belief in God lies at the foundation of our faith and is first set forth in our articles of belief. What are our witnesses to his existence and his beneficence? Those witnesses are found in his personal revelations in the Scriptures. They are found in the revelation of his Son; in the moral character of his plan of life; and in the operation of the laws of nature as scientific study reveals them to us. They are revealed to us in our own experiences and spiritual testimonies. All of these may be evaluated by the mind as well as treasured by the heart, and long and diligent study of them establishes our faith as the lines of reasoning converge to a fixed and illuminating focal point: a confirmed belief that grows rapidly to the status of knowledge. Thus as we examine the foundations of our faith we render a reasonable answer from the examining and critical mind to the hopeful heart. From such an examination one returns profoundly strengthened in his religious convictions and rededicated to service. The foundations of our faith stand sure.

Right Emphasis Needed

During my first years in the pastorate the main emphasis of my work was upon adults, and upon the sheep rather than the goats at that. I thought of adult needs when preparing sermons, and I went from house to house in the afternoon and evening to call upon adults. I began to feel the needs of boys and girls but I did not know how to meet them.

My case was not different from that of most other ministers thirty years ago. Indeed it is only recently that a few of the more alert students for the ministry have sought to fit themselves for the spiritual leadership of boys and girls and young people. The average present-day pastor, if he will think through the way he spends his time, will see that it is the morning sermon, the men's Bible class, the evening sermon, the mid-week address, and the administration of adult activities generally, which are his chief concern. The children and youth are on the margin of his program and not at the center.

But is it not plain that this overemphasis upon work with men and women is mistaken? Jesus took a little child and set him in the midst, and the truly Christian church today must be child-centered rather than adult-centered. It is not by looking after adults who have gone astray, important as that is, that we chiefly advance the kingdom of God, but by leading boys and girls into the Christian life, so that they will never go astray.—James Elmer Russell, in Church Management.

Faith

Faith came singing into my room,
And other guests took flight;
Fear and Anxiety, Grief and Gloom,
Sped out into the night.
I wondered that such peace could be,
But Faith said gently—"Don't you see!
They really could not live with me."

The Credibility of Modern Revelation

By F. Henry Edwards

(This article is a part of a new quarterly by the author, entitled, "A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants.")

The high point of revelation is that God is love. He is also the cause and center of all truth and beauty and goodness. In him resides all power. But all the other attributes of Divinity are made available for our well-being through the love of our Father. No human imagination can plumb the depths or scale the heights of his provision for our good. He is God, the Father, Almighty. Our ideas of what may be good for us may be mistaken, but nothing which is truly for our benefit is beyond his will or his power to provide.

We have dwelt so long in the kingdoms of this world that our philosophy of life has come to be "Blessed is he that expecteth nothing, for verily he shall not be disappointed." We tend to think in minimums, and count ourselves fortunate to wring a few dollars or a few creature comforts out of life. Slavery is in our blood. Yet in the kingdom of God it is a fundamental law that the Lord has decreed to provide for his Saints (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2), that it is the work and the glory of Divinity to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23), and that "he that hath eternal life is rich." (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 3.) We are more truly Christian when we expect great things of God. We are no longer servants but friends. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Light, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James 1: 17).

It is not "too good to believe" that our heavenly Father should speak to us in these last days, or that the record of his revelation to men in this dispensation should be compiled for our instruction and guidance. Indeed, the very reverse is true. Latter Day Saints affirm that God has spoken for the guidance of his people. We present as coming from him messages which promote belief in God, love for all humanity, self-sacrifice in the building of his kingdom, and a rich spiritual purpose that glows through all life. The responsibility for unbelief is on the unbeliever.

The book of Doctrine and Covenants can well be accepted for what it claims to be: a compilation of inspirational documents given to the church and to individuals for their guidance in personal righteousness and in the building of the kingdom of God. The revelations therein contained have been received through men of prophetic quality of heart and mind. They have been given to meet definite spiritual needs, their message has been in accord with the high spiritual quality of other revelations recognized to be of divine origin, and the results have been favorable in the lives of individuals and of the church.

The Prophets

All through history God has revealed himself through persons who have found him in their own lives. Great religious leaders have been convinced that they have been commissioned of God to speak for him. While the prophets of past dispensations were uniformly unpopular, and ahead of their times, they have entertained no slightest doubt of their call. The testimony of Isaiah is characteristic: "I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send? Who will go for us? Then I said: Here am I, Lord, send me."

The prophet-leaders of this dispensation have been men of truly prophetic character of heart and mind. It is admitted by them and by those who recognize them as prophets, seers, and revelators, that these men have not been infallible. But it is submitted in all confidence that they have been men of honesty and of integrity and that they have been liberally endowed with the spirit of the seers. It is only the uninformed, and those who are blind because they do not want to see, who attack the personal character of Joseph Smith and his successors in an attempt to discredit their work. These have been good men, whom our heavenly Father might well have used. Moreover, they have been sustained and upheld by many good people, who have asked the Lord to bless them for their sake, and for the sake of all humanity. Their spiritual power has therefore been representative as well as intrinsic.

The Need

That the fundamental principles of Christianity are demonstrated in the life and teachings of Jesus are admitted by all of the many groups of his followers. Yet the very diversity of belief between these various groups is an indication of the need for the ministry of the Spirit of Truth. It is the function of this Spirit to guide the disciples in the way of truth, to show them things to come, to glorify the Lord Jesus, and to demonstrate that which is of him (John 16: 13, 14).

The New Testament does not give us a complete picture of the church in action. Nowhere is the structure of church government presented in clear outline, nor are the duties and mutual relations of the officers of the church clearly defined. Many hints are given, references are made from which it is possible to reconstruct a fairly complete picture of the apostolic church with its ministry, its basic teachings, its gifts and blessings and something of the ethical standards of its people. There is need, however, for current inspiration to correct and to confirm our interpretation of the New Testament, and to fill in omitted parts whose presence is vital to an understanding of the whole. There is need, moreover, for inspired guidance in piloting the church through the uncharted seas of our modern industrial life, and for illumination regarding problems which have arisen in our attempt to apply the principles of the gospel in circumstances which are different from any which have previously existed.

There is need for modern revelation, moreover, for the guidance of the church in the selection and support of ministers approved of God. It is encouraging and heartening to know that Peter and Paul and other ministers of the apostolic age were called of God and that the signs of his approval attended them. It is necessary for us, however, that we shall know that his ministers are called by God to work in His vineyard today, that we may confidently look to Our Father to bless us through such leaders. For our guidance in matters such as these, modern revelation is imperative.

The need of the world is the kingdom of God. This kingdom, however, is not merely the perfection of the kingdoms of this world. It is a new creation, born from above. It is inspired with the life of the Spirit, and moves toward the accomplishment of its eternal destiny under the guidance of its heavenly king. If this is true, and its truth is becoming more apparent every day, then our imperative need for the kingdom of God is directly paralleled by an equally imperative need for spiritual enlightenment. Without this there is no hope that the kingdom can be built. Certainly such a book as the Doctrine and Covenants, which is so fully concerned with the coming of the kingdom, is needed at a time when men are becoming acutely conscious of the necessity for the kingdom but are utterly at a loss to know how it shall be brought into being.

The Message

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is worthy of belief because of the high moral and spiritual quality of its teachings. In a revelation given to Hyrum Smith in May, 1829, he was instructed:

Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good; yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit. (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 6.)

When the revelations of the Doctrine and Covenants are measured by this standard they prove worthy of the credence of good men.

The doctrinal teachings of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants are in full and rich accord with those of the other standard books of the church. The instruction on baptism (Doctrine and Covenants 20; 16: 6; 17: 6, 7, etc.), eternal judgment (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1, 2), life after death (Doctrine and Covenants 76), priesthood duties and responsibilities (Doctrine and Covenants 104, 120, 122), tithing (Doctrine and Covenants 106), etc., are all enlightening and uplifting. Belief in the doctrines elucidated in these revelations will not degrade men but will ennoble them and will make them Christian in the best sense.

The revelations contained in this book set a high moral standard. Consider, for example, the revelation on the basic law of the church received before the church was one year old, and before the young prophet was twenty-six years of age (Doctrine and Covenants 42). Its teachings on such matters as murder, lying, marital fidelity, gossip, property rights and responsibilities, pride, cleanliness, industry, has not yet been excelled. One of the strongest evidences of the falsity of the so-called "revelation on celestial marriage," published by the "Mormon" church eight years after the death of Joseph Smith and attributed to him, is its utter disharmony with the other revelations received through Joseph.

The Doctrine and Covenants is eminently credible in view of its emphasis on proper preparation and education. It is itself a witness to the necessity for inspired guidance yet nowhere does the book put any premium on ignorance or prejudice or superstition. It affirms that "the glory of God is intelligence" and incites men to "seek learning by study and also by faith." Its emphases are on light and growth and progress, and it is admittedly best appreciated by people who are anxiously engaged in building the kingdom.

Most of all, the picture of Divinity presented in the book of Doctrine and Covenants is in accord with our best understanding of our heavenly Father. He is depicted at all times as a God of love and wisdom and power, passionately concerned that justice and equity and fraternity shall reign among men, and that his people shall recognize their responsibility to him for using their gifts and talents in promoting righteousness. Every mention of the Father and of the Son shows them to be concerned in the building of the kingdom and in the salvation of the obedient. Moreover the Doctrine and Covenants definitely states that further understanding of the nature and purpose of God and his work among men is directly dependent on further spiritual progress on the part of the people. Teachings such as these do not come from any source but Divinity. The forces of evil never prompted a would-be-prophet to tell his disciples "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care." (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.)

The Result

Bishop Charles Gore, outstanding Anglican prelate, has said:

It is impossible not to feel that men who exhibit a new power in life are thereby proved to have come into closer touch with reality, and if this new power appears as a direct consequence of the theological beliefs the new power so far accredits the beliefs.

In the Restoration Movement such a power was actually let loose on the world, and the early Saints directly attributed the presence of this power in their midst to the fact of divine guidance in their endeavors to build his kingdom. In such matters of public concern as slavery, war, education, industry, etc., the ethical standards of the Saints were far in advance of those of their times. When the ministry were asked why they believed what they believed they pointed repeatedly to the book of Doctrine and Covenants and read therefrom the word of God in regard to these matters of public concern. According to the test proposed by Doctor Gore the facts of their lives accredit their belief.

A book which insists upon the necessity for divine endowment in order to do the work of the world effectively, which promises the possibility of that endowment, and which bases the gift of the endowment upon the observance of fundamental physical and mental and spiritual principles of a high quality is the kind of book which men ought to trust to influence their lives creatively. Such a book is the book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Summary

Latter Day Saints believe that the heavenly Father desires to speak to those who earnestly desire his guidance. Indeed, we believe that the more we expect him to do for us, for our good, the more accurate our picture of him and his purpose is likely to be. Certainly it is not too much to expect that such a Father would make possible the preparation of such a book as the Doctrine and Covenants.

We believe that the men through whom the revelations contained in the book were received have been worthy men. They have not been infallible, but they compare favorably with other men whom God has admittedly used. We believe, further, that their messages have been needed, that they bear the marks of their divine origin, and that their value has been demonstrated in the results achieved when men have studied them and have put their teachings into operation.

Attitude in Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

The spiritual attitude of prayer is individual, and "whether one prays with others or alone, one is required to pray in one's own spirit and to do it sincerely."¹ The individual usually takes some special physical attitude while praying. Sometimes he inclines or bows the head; sometimes he sits erect with head bared; and sometimes he kneels down or fully prostrates himself. Usually he seeks some secluded place to eliminate distraction and interruption. These attitudes, which are usually associated with humility and inferiority, imply respect as if in the presence of a superior being. The necessity for this position is comprehended when we understand that the position associated with an emotion or feeling is of aid in arousing that feeling.² Most of the external aids in prayer are natural developments of attention. Closing the eyes, bowing the head, and kneeling have a very helpful effect in obtaining a prayerful attitude. From earliest childhood we associate kneeling (which is self-abasing) with the emotion of religious reverence so it is easy to see what a real help it is in attaining the attitude of prayer.³

To some people, faith seems to be a necessary element of the Christian prayer. In this light, then, prayer is related to autosuggestion, but it is not autosuggestion. Autosuggestion abandons all voluntary effort and saturates the mind with the thought of the result desired, while prayer involves dependence upon God and voluntary effort.⁴ If autosuggestion does play a part in arousing the attitude of prayer its "part" "is to arouse and establish the prayer; the prayer being a certain personal attitude or habit of response, which clamps the cable."² It is often said that there can not be success in prayer without the attitude of faith, but it is probable that the prerequisite in prayer is not faith, but a particular direction of attention. "The main point is that attention should fix upon the appropriate organizing idea."³

"It is possible to observe a human being in church before an altar, saying a prayer. The whole attitude as well as the facial expression indicates a meditative, relaxed, peaceful state of mind."⁵ There is a conscious or unconscious preparedness for prayer when the subject thinks of the greatness and glory of God. The individual then becomes actively conscious of his own inferiority. The result is the prayer of confession, with a substitution of the will of the divine instead of the will of the supplicant.⁶

Most of our thinking is done in words; and we obtain great assistance by actually speaking the words. Some people have a habit of talking to themselves, which is merely an aid in the process of thought.

In just the same way many people better realize the meaning of their religious aspirations by speaking their prayers. If there is not a mumbling of words, or some sort of articulation, then for some people there is no prayer. With other people, of course, there may be verbal recitation without meaning, but even this is helpful. The reciter "knows that he is praying and means the unintelligible syllables as a prayer, and this puts him into the prayerful state of mind." Then, there may be people who find the use of words harmful in prayer.⁷ But the "ultimate effective form of prayer consists not in the words we utter, nor in the ideas we entertain, but in the habitual attitudes which the words and the ideas serve to engender and to establish." Prayer is not merely a matter of words and ideas. It is the adjusting of the self to God, aroused by words and ideas with the prayer contained in the attitude and self, and not in the words and ideas.⁸

The attitude of prayer is characteristically religious. It is that of reverence in which the powers must be approached with humility and won with flattery to obtain the gifts desired.⁹ The supplicant should approach God in the belief that He is the giver of all good gifts; that He is all-powerful, all-wise, and all-loving; and that full provision has been made for every sin, difficulty, injustice and request.¹⁰

What I get from the great lights in the banking world are discourses which strike me—forgive me!—as intellectually feeble denunciations of Socialist experiments, cheap sneers at faddists and the like, and not a gleam of light upon the real and true methods the banker on the defensive would have us believe he keeps hidden up his sleeve. I do not believe, therefore, that he has very much hidden up his sleeve. I do not object to his not knowing—we are all born ignorant—but I do object to the fact that in this rapid and needy flow of events he does not seem to be exerting himself very much to find out and tell the world of better things.—*H. This brings the total enrollment of the church past the 112,000 mark. However, this figure should be reduced several thousand because of the inclusion therein of names of persons who can not be located. In the near future we hope to be able to list some of these names in the Herald in an effort to locate them, after which, if they are still unknown, the total of such names will be transferred from the formally counted membership of the church, in harmony with the authority given by the last General Conference.

In addition to the above the following miscellaneous types of reports were also received during these two months:

Type of Report	July	August

Saginaw, Michigan	5
Shellbrook, Saskatchewan	5
Stonington, Maine	5
Williston, North Dakota	5

The stakes lined up as follows during the two months:

Stake	July	August
Kansas City	20	22
Far West	19
Independence	17	7
Holden	7	3
Lamoni	1	16
	<hr/>	<hr/>
	64	48

A comparison of the three summer months of 1932 with the same months of 1931 is very interesting; showing the number of baptisms:

Month	1931	1932
June	531	622
July	373	437
August	373	366
	<hr/>	<hr/>
Totals	1,277	1,425

The above comparison shows that more baptisms were performed in 1932 than in 1931 during this period, even though we have fewer missionaries in the field now than we had then. In our opinion this is a reflection of the fact that the church is very definitely recovering from the condition of uncertainty which prevailed a year ago.

In harmony with the promise made in our previous report, we have made an analysis of the baptisms reported during these three months, and find that on Children's Day a total of five hundred and thirty baptisms were performed. This shows a very general observance of Children's Day throughout the church.

Somebody

Somebody made a monthly pledge,
Testing his purse strings to utmost edge;
Somebody paid it through the year,
Brightening the world with Christian cheer.
Was that somebody you?

Somebody handed cheerfully in Money to help God's cause to win;
Somebody kept his promise to pay,
Writing each check on schedule day.
Was that somebody you?

Somebody let the year slip by
Heedless of payments piling high.
Somebody said: "No more delay;
Quickly settle that debt today."
Was that somebody you?

Somebody's pledge was only a scrap,
Paper that had no value, mayhap;
Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small;
Failing, he grieved the Lord of all.
Was that somebody you?

Weekly Health Letter

"Cough"

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

There is always a reason for a cough. The cough center in the brain is always irritated when there is a cough. A brain center has incoming and outgoing "wires" like a telephone switchboard. A person may drown in their own secretions if there is any trouble with the incoming or outgoing wires or with the central causing a lack of ability to cough and the bronchial tubes to fill up with secretion.

(1) A cough may be caused by wax in the ear or some irritation of the ear canal.

(2) A trunk line frequently used is located in the upper and back part of the nose and mouth.

(3) The trunk line located on the back of the tongue and reaching down to the windpipe and to the vocal cords keeps the windpipe and vocal cords clean.

(4) The trunk line from the lower part of the windpipe and lungs keeps the smaller air tubes clean, prevents and permits the air to enter.

(5) The trunk lines leading to the esophagus, stomach and the heart have important functions.

If any of these trunk lines become irritated the frequent results is a cough. For instance; if trunk line number four or five becomes irritated something has got into the air passage a message to the owner of the trunk lines and switchboard to help remove the obstruction.

If pus and mucous collects in the bronchial tubes air is being kept out; the tubes send in an alarm to the coughing center, this center sends an impulse to the muscle which causes a cough resulting in the offending materials removed.

There are both helpful and useless coughs. A helpful cough is one that clears out something. A useless cough that removes nothing annoys and weakens the patient. This kind of cough needs a remedy. If it is some irritation in the external ear canal such as wax or eczema the proper remedy should be applied to these parts. If it is from tobacco smoke or dust the proper remedy is easily apparent. Cough may be due to polyps in the nose, enlarged turbinates or tonsils or elongated uvula. Whatever is the cause of the irritation the remedy is its removal. If a coughing spell comes on after one lies down the uvula should be examined; if after being confined to a warm closed room or sleeping in a poorly ventilated bedroom causing the skin to become chilled or overheated, the remedy is the removal of the cause by better temperative regulation.

If a coughing spell comes on after exertion it may be caused from heart disease, an aneurism or tubercular gland pressing an air passage. Then the question is, how shall we get rid of the cough. Undoubtedly in the days gone by, the improper prescribing of cough remedies was harmful and many dope fiends were made. Useless coughs should be discouraged and treated by cool fresh air, as in the tubercular hospitals. "Cough drops" are worse than useless when the cough is due to warm bad air. Another remedy used in sanatoriums is training the patients not to cough needlessly. They are taught to cough only when necessary to clear out the bronchial tubes. After a little practice they learn to know the "feel" and to resist the "feel" when not present. Cough medicines are quite often highly beneficial, even those containing an opiate but do more harm than good if used too long or indiscriminately. Patented cough medicines containing habit forming drugs have done an untold amount of harm. Fortunately now they are compelled by law to have the amount contained printed on the label.

Question—I am having a buzzing noise in my head. What is the best remedy for catarrh in the nose and throat?

Reply—Catarrh is a loosely applied term covering several conditions. You should consult an Ear, Nose and Throat specialist.

A Lesson From the Jewish People

By Annie Twaddle

Today we are in the midst of a world-wide depression, the inevitable result of the last war. Germany and England are passing through grave crises and every nation faces its problem of unemployment. Individual nations fear to lead the way in the reduction of armaments for fear that the others will not follow. There is general unrest throughout the world and actual warfare in Manchuria. The outlook is indeed dark.

Through all this darkness there runs a gleam of hope—God. From the beginning of time He has been interested in mankind and has watched over them with loving care. If this were not true, the Jews could not have carried out their mission which was to perpetuate the knowledge of God, receive training for higher revelation, and proclaim the gospel to the world.

In faith Abram obeyed God and left home and loved ones to found a new nation. God was true to his promise and many years later Abram's descendants were forced to leave their home and settle in Egypt in order to secure food during the seven years' famine. God had provided for this very contingency by having Joseph in a place of grave responsibility.

He was able to have them settle in Goshen where they lived and prospered for many years. When they had accomplished God's purpose, had absorbed of the best of the Egyptian culture, and were in danger of becoming engrossed with the things of the world, He permitted Pharaoh to enslave them and treat them cruelly. Life became intolerable and in their wretchedness they cried unto God who heard them and answered their prayers by sending Moses to deliver them.

With their deliverance from bondage, the Pharaoh and his followers drowned in the Red Sea, and a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to lead them in their journey through the wilderness, they should have been filled with thanksgiving. They were not, and continually grumbled and complained, saying, "We know not where we are or whither we are going. We have left our homes in Egypt only to starve to death in the wilderness. Come let us go back to our bondage." Though God had done so much for them already He was still willing to forgive them and show them His love by bringing water from a rock and sending manna to them. The journey could have been accomplished in much less time had they not been hard-hearted, but God had a plan whereby his people were to become a God-fearing, strong, independent, liberty-loving people, and He caused them to wander for forty years.

In their conquest of Canaan they were successful when they kept the commandments and unsuccessful when they failed to do so. Under the able leadership of David, their second King, "a man after God's own heart," the conquest was completed, a national capital was established at Jerusalem and their religion was reestablished with its headquarters at the capital. Israel rose to the position of a world power. Solomon, David's successor, ruled as an Oriental monarch and in order to strengthen his kingdom politically, married an Egyptian princess. Though he was zealous in building the temple he was lax in Jehovah worship and allowed idolatry and its evils to secure a foothold.

At his death the kingdom was divided into two sections; the Northern or Israel and the Southern or Judah. Some one hundred fifty years later the people of Israel were taken captive by the Assyrians and were gradually assimilated by them and other nations. Judah survived one hundred thirty-five years longer.

The outlook was indeed dark. Their national identity was lost and they were strangers in a strange land. Even now God was with Judah and while their captivity was seemingly a dire misfortune, it was really a blessing in disguise, as God was preparing them to take their part in his plan. During their captivity idol worship completely disappeared, and synagogue worship, in lieu of temple worship developed. Though exiled, they developed national unity, perfected a ritualized religious ceremony and began to look for the Messiah, the coming of whom the Prophets had foretold for many years. They supposed he was to liberate them and then set up an earthly kingdom which would surpass any then known.

By the edict of Cyrus many returned to Judah. At the time of Christ they were still anxiously awaiting their Messiah and were so intent upon keeping the letter of the Mosaic Law that they killed its spirit. Into this environment Jesus Christ, the Author of our salvation, was born. His own knew him not and rejected him.

Are we who profess to be His followers, who are proud of the title Latter Day Israel, going to keep the letter of the law only, and kill the spirit of it, or are we going to profit by the experience of the Jews and learn that our sins will be forgiven also when we repent and keep his commandments? Can we, as Latter Day Saints, sit idly by and keep our wonderful heritage to ourselves? NO! If we really believe that which we profess, we will put the precepts into practice and leave the results with God. Then will the world know that we have that which they need and for which they are blindly groping. Love will take the place of fear and all weighty problems will be solved. Let us learn our lessons well and step forward to do that which we are bidden—teach the world the principles of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God.

Speeding Nowhere

Talking of the habit of hurrying, an American friend gracefully told me a story against himself. He had been visited "down town" by a Japanese whom he wanted to take to his home somewhere "uptown" for luncheon. At one of the junctions in the subway he pulled the Japanese out of the train, rushed him across to another platform, and shoved him into another train that was about to start. "I thought," said the Japanese when he had recovered from his surprise, "that the train we were originally in went to your station?" "So it does," said the American, "but I saw that we could change to this train, and now we shall save a minute and a half." "And what," asked the Japanese simply, "are we going to do with it?" My friend admitted that to this relevant but unexpected question he had no answer. The conventional assumptions of the West were faced, tested, and found wanting by the philosophic inquiry from the East.—J. B. Atkins, in the London Spectator.

The Church School

Worship Programs for October

The following suggestions are submitted for church-wide use by Elder Arthur Oakman and Miss Elva Sturgess, Berkeley, California.

HYMNS. As many of the hymns chosen for this month which are not known to the congregation should be learned in preworship periods arranged for this purpose.

PROCEDURE. It may be that several people will be chosen to take part in a single program. These people should all be assembled in front of the congregation so that no distraction will come from them coming from the rear.

PICTURES. The pictures suggested may not be available in all places. The worship service can be enhanced, however, if these pictures are presented and their interpretation intelligently outlined. Provision can be made for this by rearranging the program accordingly.

PROGRAMS. It will aid much in the smoothness of the service and in the general participation if mimeographed or printed programs may be passed out to each worshiper as he arrives. It will be well for worshipers to stand for the response, for the challenge, for the first song and prayer, also for the closing song and prayer.

Theme Talk: Power of Purpose.

Build around the idea of the investment God has in us. All Nature finds its ends in man. Every man is the center of the universe. Even God exists for him. This purpose is good. This is the purpose of God. He has demonstrated his power in his works. We ought to seek to make God's purpose ours, too. That we merely have "a" purpose, is not enough. We must possess the purpose, and work to possess it. All the power there is in this purpose. The power a man has, consists in the purpose he has.

Challenge: "And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body that is filled with light comprehendeth all things. Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him: for he will unveil his face to you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 18.)

Hymn: "Take My Life," new Saints' Hymnal, 307, or Saints' Hymnal, 350.

PUT THE HERALD IN EVERY HOME!!

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for October

By Elder Richard and Mrs. Alice Baldwin

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "THY KINGDOM COME."

FIRST SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1932

Sacrament Sunday

The Juniors should meet with the adults on this Sunday, and participate with them in the Sacrament Service.

SECOND SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1932

Theme: "Through Consecration."

(Decision and Rally.)

Note: As Rally Day was set by the General Church for last Sunday, and the Juniors met with the adults for Sacrament on that day, it has been thought that a continuation of the thought of Decision and Rally Day would be helpful for this theme of "Consecration."

Voluntary.

Call to Worship: (Read in Unison.)

Save us, O Jehovah, our God,
And gather us from among the nations,
To give thanks to Thy holy name
And to triumph in Thy praise.

(Psalm 106: 47.)

Hymn: "Jesus Is Calling," new Saints' Hymnal, 332; Zion's Praises, 111.

Sentence Prayers: Theme, "What I Am Willing to Consecrate to God."

Scripture Reading: Philippians 3: 7-14.

Hymn: "I'm Pressing On," new Saints' Hymnal, 241, or Zion's Praises, 19.

Poem: "The Call."

You who are young in the world today
Have you heard the ringing call?
Are you ready to heed? Will you walk the way
Of the Lord who needs us all?
It is sounding down from the heights above,
It is Christ's word, "Follow Me."
Ah! straightway answer the mighty love
His servants and soldiers be.

Sermon, "Decision."

We must decide to:

Be Reverent: To God and to our parents.

Keep the Sabbath Day: On this day we must worship God, and make it different from all other days of the week.

Be Grateful: To God for all his gifts to us. To our parents who give us so much. They make many sacrifices for us. Father works to provide for us, and mother works hard all the time to take care of our needs.

Be Clean: In our bodies. In our minds.

Be Honest: Respect property rights. To tell the truth.

Be Generous: In forgiving those who hurt us. In sharing and in giving. In loving.

As next Sunday is Graceland College Day and a special offering will be given, tell the children of the use of this offering, and ask that they remember this good work and bring their offering next Sunday for Graceland.

Hymn: "Forward Be Our Watchword," Hymnal, 357, or Zion's Praises, 141.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1932

Theme: "Through Study."

(Graceland College Day.)

Call to Study: "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom, seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.)

Hymn: "Come, Learn of the Meek and Lowly," new Saints' Hymnal, 258; Zion's Praises, 7.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: "Call to Wisdom."

"My son, if you take to heart what I say, and set store by my commands, bending your ear to wisdom and applying your mind to knowledge; if you cry to intelligence and call for knowledge, seeking her out as silver and searching for her like treasure; then you shall see what is reverence for the Eternal, and find what the knowledge of God means (for it is the Eternal who supplies wisdom, from him come insight and knowledge, he has help ready for the upright, he is a shield for those who live honestly, a safeguard for the straight life, a protection for the pious); then you shall understand duty and goodness, and keep to every honest course, living the life of honest men and keeping to the good man's road." (Proverbs 2: 1-9.) (Moffatt Translation.)

(Explain the different translations of the Bible to the children.)

Poem: "Suppose There Were No Books!"

"Suppose there were no books!
No books to read in cozy nooks!
No books to fill the hungry mind
And teach the art of being kind.

No books to while an hour away
To link today with yesterday,
No books to charm us for awhile
To bring a tear or lure a smile.

But there are books, praise God above!
If we have books, and we have love
We can dispense with other things,
'Tis books, not crowns, that make men kings."

—I. B. Roberts.

Sermon: Text, Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.

In this section we are commanded to study. In your talk take the different studies mentioned in this section, and analyze the meaning of the whole paragraph. This is a wonderful paragraph, and shows that God wishes us to study extensively. It may be simplified for the children.

Then tell the story of Graceland College, and try to inspire the children with a desire to attend Graceland when they are ready for college.

In 1889 Joseph Smith wrote an editorial in the Saints' Herald concerning a college at Lamoni. In April, 1890, at General Conference a committee was appointed to push the matter and open a subscription for its erection.

The cornerstone was laid November 12, 1895. In the cornerstone was a little box in which were placed copies of Chicago newspapers, Lamoni weekly newspaper, Saints' Herald, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Ensign, Holy Scriptures, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and a copy of the church articles of incorporation. The children will be interested in knowing why these records were placed therein.

President Frederick M. Smith was Graceland's first graduate.

There is a wonderful spirit at Graceland which most of its students "catch." This spirit is composed of:

The Spirit of Study: It stands high among other colleges.

The Spirit of Work: Nearly half the students each year are working their way through.

The Spirit of Play: Graceland has a well planned program of activities.

The Spirit of Reverence: The college prayer meetings have become a tradition throughout all the church.

The Spirit of Devotion: Many of the teachers sacrifice larger salaries because of their devotion to the church. Our offering will now be received for Graceland College.

Have the offering brought to the altar, and ask God's blessing upon it, that it may help those who are worthy to qualify for service to God and to the church.

Hymn: "O Lord, Thy Benediction Give," new Saints' Hymnal, 84, or Zion's Praises, 90.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1932

Theme: "Through Work."

Prelude.

Call to Worship:

Leader: Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Congregation: I must work the works of Him who sent me, while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work.

Hymn: "O Master Workman," new Saints' Hymnal, 152, or Zion's Praises, 228.

Prayer by Leader: Thanking God for the workers who have gone on before (naming some of them and the work they have done). May we, too, be workers.

Poem: "Christ Has No Hands But Our Hands."

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do his work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way;
He has no tongue but our tongues
To tell men how he died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to his side.

What if our hands are busy
With other work than his?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things his lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help him
Unless from him we learn?

Sermon: Three Texts: Have three children read them:

1 Corinthians 3: 9.

Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

To be happy we must work. If we get anything without working for it, we do not appreciate it as much as if we earned it. The people who work hard in the church are happy. Jesus did his Father's work.

A church is formed of people worshiping and working together. The church helps us to form good characters. Jesus left a great deal of work to be done by the church. Therefore we must help him in working for the church.

We must study to answer the call of the church, for we must be laborers together. Some of us will be called to the priesthood, others to teach, some to be musicians, nurses, etc. We all have some gift or gifts, and we must cultivate them and use them in the church.

Our parents and the older Saints have worked hard and they are trusting us to carry on their work. We must be true.

We shall get our reward. Not money, perhaps, but joy. We shall feel that God is pleased with us. There is no happiness in doing wrong. We shall love the association of our friends in the church who are working with us. And by working for God we shall be blessed.

Special Number, or Chorus of Children: "Earnest Workers for the Master," Zion's Praises, 99.

Closing Thought, to be read in unison:

I am only one! But I am one!
I can not do everything,
But I can do something!
What I can do I ought to do,
And what I ought to do,
By God's grace I will do.

Benediction.

FIFTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1932
Theme: "Through Devotion."

Prelude.

Call to Worship: To be memorized by one of the children.

When we walk softly into church
We feel upon the air
A summons that is like a hymn
A call that tells of prayer.
So on this Sabbath may we come
To worship God in house of prayer
What though the church be small and plain
If He be there.

Hymn: "Again Returns the Day of Holy Rest," new Saints' Hymnal, 63, or Zion's Praises, 45.

Scripture Reading: Psalm 122.

Prayer.

Hymn: "I Was Glad and My Heart Did Rejoice," new Saints' Hymnal, 67, or Zion's Praises, 168.

Poem: "Worship."

In God's most holy presence
We meet with one accord,
To grasp the hand of friendship,
And learn of Christ, our Lord.
We leave the week behind us,
With all its toil and strain,
With grateful hearts to welcome
The Sabbath once again.

Our worship will be fruitless,
And all our prayers be vain
If, holding this day sacred,
We make the week profane,
In every daily duty
High purpose we must show,
And as we hope for heaven
Make earth a heaven below.

If we but love thee truly,
Our love is not confined
To thee, but grows expansive
Embracing all mankind.
Help us, in mutual service
For all, abroad, at home,
To share the conquering labor
That makes thy kingdom come.

The Pathway of Duty

By Nellie Grubb

Each one has a path stretched before him;
Probably twisted and weed-grown and rough,
But each step of the way is rewarded
With one more smile from above.

In the pathway of duty there's pleasure;
Not always just what you expect,
But the joy that is found in well doing
Has a much more lasting effect.

If you've tried all the worldly pleasure;
And found that they're useless and wrong,
Just seek out your duty, then do it
And you'll feel more like singing a song.

For each one there's a different direction
That their duty path calls them to go.
Some one's path may lead over the ocean
And some over ice and snow.

Some o'er mountains or rivers, or valleys,
Through hardships and sufferings sore,
But most duty paths if we knew it
Start right at our own back door.

"Oh, what joy! What peace and contentment!"
You will say when your life has been spent
Since I found my pathway of duty
And followed the way that it went.

Tho' sometimes it was rather rocky
And I felt so weary and worn;
Yet I knew when I did my duty,
My Lord would not leave me alone.

And you'll think of the worldly pleasures
How frail and thin they'll seem then
Compared with the pleasures in duty
And in serving your fellow men.

One's pathway of duty does not always
Lead over the rocks and through strife,
Oh, no! There are millions of nice things
That you will just love to do in this life.

Just a kind little word now and then,
Or a friendly nod and a smile
In the sight of your friends and the Savior,
It will set you ahead a mile.

And when the path seems the roughest
And life seems useless and cold,
Some one will remember your kindness
And return it an hundred fold.

Oh, let us follow the pathway of duty
From the vile of the world turn aside,
And see in the world only beauty,
Then He'll come and with us abide.

Little Journeys With the Editor in Chief

Maine Reunion Closes

Quite early on the morning of August 22, the folks about the home of Sister Etta Gray, at South Brooksville, Maine, were astir. The occasion for the early rising was a trip to Boston to be made by Brother and Sister E. L. Traver and their guests. And so about the time old Sol had put in his appearance we bade farewell to "Aunt Etta," whose guests we had been while attending the Maine Reunion, and hied away for our last meal at the commissary on the reunion grounds. Brother Newman Wilson, the genial and efficient cook, had promised to have breakfast ready for us at five o'clock. And he did, though we were a few moments late.

Then the last of the farewells of the 1932 Maine reunion were said, and we left the small group of faithful workers who were clearing the camp, storing equipment, etc., and with Brother Traver at Wheel the Buick was headed for Boston, nearly three hundred miles away. Those who have ridden with Brother E. L. know he has a faculty of putting the Buick over the ground at a steady, distance-eating pace. In the car besides Brother and Sister Traver were Sister York and her daughter Joan, Sister Roberta Lewis, and myself. The day was pleasant, the weather fine, the company congenial, and the trip was made in about record time, for about three o'clock that afternoon the Buick stopped in the yard of Brother Traver's home in Arlington, and a stop of an hour had been made near Portland, Maine, for lunch. Good time that, and comfortable riding, thanks to the combination of fine roads, careful driver, and able car.

With the Travers in Boston

It is not the purpose of this "journey" to tell of that trip, but of what happened next day. For after breakfast on Tuesday the twenty-third, Brother Traver handed me some keys saying: "Here are the keys to the Buick coupe and here is something by which you can secure oil or gas at any 'Gulf' station." And Sister Traver handed me another key saying: "Here is a key to the house. Come and go as you please." Both evidently knew there were some places I wanted to visit. But there were some repairs necessary on the car. So I asked to take the car to the Medford Buick Company for that purpose. I did, and finding they would take some longer than we had thought, I left the car at the shop and looked about Medford Center a bit, then found the public library and spent two or three hours reading about George Washington. A popular subject that in Medford, to judge from the fact that many of the books on Washington were on a shelf handy to the reading table. Well, I presume that most of the public libraries throughout the country this year have an extraordinary demand for books on our country's father, and that there are many, who, like me, have had requests for "talks on Washington," and have defined a new approach, if possible, to this most interesting historical character.

Well, the Buick ready, about 1 p. m. I left Medford by the aid of some maps and well-marked roads found the way to Topsfield, a town which heretofore had merely been a name in my life. Many times in passing along Highway No. 1, to and from Maine, I had seen the sign "Topsfield," and knew we were in the "town," but to be in Topsfield Center had not been my privilege. These New England "towns" are as big as some counties spread out over the map in various odd shapes and expanses, and may be divided into east, west, north, and south, and "center." Government in New England towns is about the nearest approach to the democratic form that we have anywhere on this continent. It has never been my pleasure to be present at a typical "town meeting," conducted by the "first selectman"; but I hope I may sometime have that privilege, for I would surely enjoy seeing one in operation.

Getting Acquainted in Topsfield Center

Topsfield Center is not a large place, just a few buildings along a short business street, with several comfortable dwellings surrounding the business section; but one has only to get a glimpse of the village to see that it is historic. Really old buildings seem to have the characteristics of their age, and old buildings mean history. I first saw the village as one enters on the road from Salem. I had entered that way from Highway No. 1. The "Green," in front of the old church building was the first I saw. These old New England towns seem all to have one or more fine old church houses, well painted white ones, with spire and doorway that attract one. And what is a New England town without a "common," or the "village green"? Across the green from where I entered I saw a building with two signs which emboldened me to approach the two women sitting on the porch. I guess they call it porch. It may be portico, or stoa, or stoop, or if it were in Long Island it might be stoep. The size and use might have something to do with it. Perhaps portico is the most classical sounding. Be that as it may, the signs which I saw were: "Rooms for Tourists," and the other was the widely distributed "blue bell" of the Bell Telephone Company. As a one-time employee of that company, one of those signs always used to make me feel at home. Have not gotten over that feeling entirely when I see a blue bell. So I left the Buick at the side of the street and approached the porch (portico). One of the ladies arose and met me at the steps.

"Madam," said I, "I am from Missouri." There I paused; I always do, for I know what's coming.

"Oh, you are, are you?" she said. "I suppose you want to be shown." And she laughed. Now just why is it that everybody laughs at one from Missouri?

"Yes, Madam, I do," I replied. "What I'm looking for is the Topsfield Historical Society. Can you tell me where its headquarters is?"

"Well," said she, "I presume you had better see Mr. Dow, George Francis Dow."

"Yes," I answered, "that is right." For I then remembered that my sister, Audie (Mrs. Anderson), had said to me after she visited Topsfield once some few years ago: "When you visit Topsfield, if you ever do, be sure to call on Mr. George Francis Dow." I had for the time forgotten the name; but recalling the instructions, I said, "Where can I find him?" And I was told to go down the street, across the railroad tracks, and turn at the first street to the left, and a certain house on the left, the one with the conservatory attached is that of Mr. Dow. In the East here directions are usually given in terms of "straight ahead," "turn right (or left)," "bear left, (or right)," etc.; seldom "east" or "south," or either of the other cardinal points of the compass. Streets and roads run in all directions at all angles, and seldom straight for anything more than short distances. To go "straight ahead" may mean to follow a winding road. To "turn" means to leave the street or road onto another. For example, to go straight ahead on Beacon Street in Boston means finally to complete almost a circle.

A Visit With George Francis Dow

I followed directions, and by making one inquiry after passing by my objective once, I found the place, and in response to the doorbell a gray-haired, gray-whiskered (for he wore a short Van Dyke) man answered the door. He was about average height, clear-eyed, vigorous. He eyed me straight and with a curt but polite, "What do you want?" bade me make my errand known.

"My name is Smith, and I am from Kansas City," said I.

"Well," said he, "you're a bit of a way from home."

"Yes," I returned, "and many years ago some of my ancestors coming from England made Topsfield their stopping point. What can you tell me of them? I understand you are connected with the Topsfield Historical Society."

"Yes," said he, "I am. I am just about the society," and he accompanied the remark with a slight laugh. I afterwards found this was true.

Then he asked, "Who were your ancestors who settled here?"

"Robert and Mary Smith, in about 1638," said I.

"Oh, yes. Come in and sit down and I'll tell you about them."

Leading the way to a porch or portico, screened in by both wire and heavy vines, he pointed to a chair for me to sit, and seating himself in another he told me briefly of Robert, his son Samuel, and Asael or "Crooked-necked Smith." After a brief tale he said, "And that's about all I know." And he looked at me in such a way that I could guess just about what was in his mind, and I said,

"No I'm not from Utah. I'm from Missouri, but I am a grandson of Joseph Smith, the so-called 'Mormon' prophet."

This introduction over, we had what was to me an interesting chat or conversation for a half hour or more, and I learned that Mr. Dow is quite versatile in his qualifications and activities, interested and active in historical matters—antiquarian, museum, and library affairs. Of course he was interesting. Who wouldn't be with all those lines of activity to draw on? I learned that he was largely responsible for the creation of the Topsfield Historical Society, and held the active offices of secretary (or president, I do not now recall which) and editor of the annals or collections of historical papers, which issue at periods somewhat irregular. Concerning the publications I learned quite a bit, bought a copy of one containing an article on Asael Smith and became a member of the society. The method of "joining" is unique and has considerable merit. If you are interested in Topsfield history sufficiently to apply for membership, Mr. Dow enrolls your name. That's all. Then when a new number of the magazine is issued, you with all other members receive a notice of its publication, you send fifty cents to Mr. Dow and receive by mail copy of the publication. Simple, isn't it? And efficient, I guess. No annual dues to pay irrespective of whether or not you receive anything further than the honor of membership, and when you do pay you get your money's worth. For from what I've seen of the magazine or "collections" they are worth the money.

If I remember aright several of our people have carried memberships in this society; to some advantage, I hope.

The Graves of Smith Ancestors

From Mr. Dow I learned where the cemetery is in which I might find the graves of some of these ancestors. It lay to the northward from the church and the green. I also learned about where to look for the graves. So I drove to the cemetery, and about it for a moment or two, then alighted from the car and sought the graves. In the oldest part of the cemetery is a red sandstone monument, the base about two and one half feet square, the die tapering from about a foot at the base to about six inches at the top, surmounted by an urnlike ornament. The whole monument is about five and a half feet tall. Scattered about this monument are quite a number of small blockstones, unmarked, which indicate the location of various graves. On the red shaft there is lettering. On the north side of the die the lettering informs one that Samuel Smith, son of Robert and Mary, was born in Topsfield, Massachusetts, on January 26, 1666, died July 12, 1748, and that Rebecca, his wife, daughter of John Curtice, died at the age of sixty-five years on March 2, 1753. On the south side of the die other lettering gives the information that "Samuel Smith, 2d," was born January 26, 1714, and died November 14, 1785. Priscilla, his wife, daughter of Zaccheus Gould, was born August 4, 1707, died September 25, 1785. On the base of the monument was the word "Smith," while on the east side of the die or shaft are the words: "Erected by George A. Smith and other descendants in Utah, 1873."

Somewhere near this monument, I was told by Mr. Dow, are the graves of the Smiths of Topsfield. So as I stood beside that small shaft, I was on soil beneath the surface of which lie the bones of my earliest ancestors in America. I do not now know where Robert and Mary are buried. It may be there. But there was a monument marking the resting places of forebears six and probably seven generations removed. Why they had moved from England to the then new English colony I do not know. Probably for the same reasons their own descendants moved further west later. It would be interesting to know. It would also be interesting to know what had been the participation in the development and progress of Massachusetts and the stirring and trying times through which the Bay Colony passed. What part did these Smith ancestors of ours play in town, county, and State affairs? In Indian wars, in the witchcraft activities, the Revolutionary War period? Of course we know something about all this; but, after all, we know little.

It is rather difficult to tell how I felt thus standing for the first time on soil covering the bones of some of my ancestors. Their names were not strange to me, not even unfamiliar; but after all they are not linked up in memory images made vivid by my own experiences. I have many times stood beside the sarcophagus holding the mortal remains of my father, or the stone marking the last resting place of my mother, and the experience opens the flood gates of memory. I live again many experiences called up by those memories. As I stand meditatively by the grave of my father, I feel anew the urge towards the ideals for which he strove and suffered. We shared those ideals, and to an extent shared the pain which accompanied the efforts to achieve them. But standing beside the grave of an ancestor several generations removed I sensed a lack of contact which springs from common experiences giving rise to common memories. Only the traditions of the family connected us. But even at that there is something stirring about standing for the first time beside the grave of an ancestor and so I let the flow of thought take its course for awhile uninterrupted, feeling that I might even take new courage to struggle on in a cause which has demanded so much of sacrifice and labor and suffering on the part of the family and those associated with them in the work for the accomplishment of the ideals always held in view.

I noted that in several places the monument was weather-bitten, and I recalled that Mr. Dow had said something about the lettering having become dimmed by being weather worn. So I examined it more closely. On the whole the lettering is yet quite plain, except that on the east side the weather-wearing is more pronounced, and will probably become quite dim in a few more years by the disintegrating effect of the elements. The monument according to the information of the lettering on that side was erected in 1873. That was one year before I was born, or fifty-nine years ago. How much longer before it will be necessary to recut the stone to preserve the lettering distinct?

I wanted to have it done now. Then I recalled an experience I had a few years ago along such lines. I visited the cemetery at Richmond, Missouri, in which is the grave of David Whitmer. The stone marking the spot, sandstone if I remember aright, was showing disintegration by weather-wearing so much that the lettering was obscure. On returning to Independence I consulted with Brother Mark Siegfried. We agreed that the stone should be recut. And thinking that nearly everybody would feel as we did about it to such a degree that they would help bear the expense, Mark and I made arrangements to have a monument man take the stone down, recut and reset it. This was done and Mark and I paid the bill. Not a cent was given to us to help.

So as I contemplated the condition of that near sixty-year-old stone marking the last resting places of Samuel and Samuel, 2d, and perhaps others of the Smiths, and recognized the need of repairs, I curbed the desire to have it done at once, for I remembered in time the experience Mark and I had; and I also recalled, having many reminders of the "depression" through which we and the church have had to pass (and are yet passing) and decided to let matters remain status quo ante depression, until such time as I might have in hand (or bank or pocket) enough money to pay for the job myself.

Anyway, it is probable that the stone will be successful enough in resisting the rigorous weather of Topsfield to keep the lettering legible for several years to come, and the whole matter can remain for the present one of the unfinished tasks of which there are quite a number.

And that's all I have to say now about the graves of the Smiths.

Colonial Edifices in Topsfield

How much of present Topsfield was standing when the Samuels first and second lived and shared the activities of the community, I can not say; probably very few buildings; but while talking with Mr. Dow I had learned of an old building which he said displayed a fine type of colonial architecture, the Copen House. So I decided to look that up. It stands not far from the church. It was at one time, I believe, used as a parsonage. Built in 1683, it is in a good state of preservation and under the auspices of the Topsfield Historical Society has been restored to its original lines quite faithfully. One pays ten cents to enter, but it is worth that just to see the fine old kitchen which has been cited as one of the best in the country to typify the kitchens of that date. I did not spend much time there, just looked about a bit, asked a few questions, went outside again and viewed for awhile the exterior building. It is picturesque and in every line bespeak the vigorous times through which it has passed. Without doubt these ancestors of mine were familiar with this building, and may have had many occasions to visit the parsonage. So here was perhaps the main contact in Topsfield between me and those ancestors.

The year 1683 goes back rather far into the early history of Massachusetts Bay Colony, and another idea had been developing in my mind. I had heard something about a "Colonial Village" in Salem, and in a copy of "Old Time New England" for July, 1931, I had that day secured, I had briefly read about it. So I determined to see it if possible. With this in mind, I entered the Buick again, and turned its head towards Salem.

F. M. S.

EAST SANDWICH, MASSACHUSETTS, September 4.

Pleasanton, Iowa

Saints of this branch met the morning of September 4, with good attendance both at the church school hour and at sacrament service. The Lord is blessing this branch in many ways. A beautiful Spirit was present especially during the communion hour. Three were administered to, Sister Mildred Turpen and Sister Fern Lafollet and baby. Three members of the priesthood of the branch were present, J. Emmett Leeper, John R. Keown, and Lewis Moffett.

There are some in the branch who are seriously afflicted at this time, but we hope for their speedy recovery.

The presiding elder, Brother J. Emmett Leeper, was the evening speaker on that day, his subject being, "The Fulfillment of the Gospel."

A large attendance of nonmembers is enjoying the Saints' meetings and is eager to hear the scriptures explained.

Northern Saskatchewan Conference

One of the most spiritual conferences ever held in this district, was enjoyed when the Saints from all parts of Saskatchewan assembled at Saskatoon July 21. The members of Saskatoon Branch had felt rather hesitant about entertaining the conference this year, owing to the financial depression, but now declare themselves more than repaid for the sacrifices they made. Visitors arrived in trucks, in buggies, in cars, by train, and in fact, used every available means to come to conference. One large truck with picturesque canopy top, owned and operated by Brother A. J. Cornish, provided transportation and shelter for twenty-three enthusiastic Saints on a two hundred and thirty mile jaunt. They arrived at Saskatoon at one thirty in the morning, camped in the church pews until daylight, and it is reported that the good humor of even the baby of the party was undampened.

The chapel which is supposed to seat one hundred and fifty, with an elasticity nothing short of marvelous, accommodated approximately two hundred and fifty when it was necessary. The locating committee was sometimes at its wits' end to provide sleeping accommodations for the visitors, but several nonmember friends graciously opened their homes to accommodate the overflow, and as a last resort, two garages were cleared of movables and beds set up therein.

All visitors were supplied with appetizing and nourishing meals under the efficient charge of Sister Christy, Sister George Baker, Mrs. Eric Boland, and Sister Walter Pettit. Ample supplies of vegetables, meat, dairy products and home cooking were contributed by the visiting Saints. If there were hard times in Saskatchewan, at least Miss Depression was not present at the conference, nor was her absence deplored.

Among those present were Apostle J. F. Curtis whose message is always enjoyed by everyone; Brother J. J. Cornish, who though frail in body is strong in spirit, and who delivered an old-time sermon on Sunday evening; Brother J. R. Neill, president of the Southern Saskatchewan District, and his pedagogue brother, Henry, who provided the car in which Brother Curtis traveled to Saskatoon, and Brother Hadath, of Winnipeg Branch.

The prayer services were well attended especially by the young people, and were marked by a deep spirituality. Excellent music was provided at most services, among those who contributed numbers being Mrs. Eric Boland, Mr. Alex Mackie, Brother and Sister Christy, Mrs. Causgrove, Mrs. Van Eaton, Mrs. Millie Cunningham, the junior choir, and the children's chorus. Miss Pearl Mogenson and Mrs. Steeves played the piano.

On Friday evening the chapel was packed to capacity and many were unable to gain admittance. The program of readings and musical selections was of a high character. Perhaps the outstanding number was the playlet, "Faith," taken from June Vision and presented by the Senlac group. The plot was interesting, the moral good, and the play was dramatically rendered by Sister A. J. Cornish and her group of young people.

Brothers Curtis, Bowerman, and Christy presided over the business session. Brother Bowerman's presidential address gave much food for thought. He presented a resolution suggesting the appointment of a committee to investigate the possibilities of designating a place or places for the gathering or colonization of the membership of the Northern Saskatchewan District. This resolution was adopted after considerable discussion. It was decided to carry on the radio work for another year if funds can be procured. Brother G. A. Jordan offered a timely suggestion, that there should be a follow-up filing system for the radio work, and offered the services of the students in the commercial college of which he is principal.

The district membership was reported as six hundred and fifty-five, and that of Saskatoon as one hundred and fifty-five.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Brother Bowerman was sustained as district president with W. J. Cornish and C. E. Diggle as counselors; Sister Grace Beckman was sustained as secretary, and James Cornish as director of Religious Education; Sister Christy was reappointed field worker and Sister Pearl Morgenson was chosen chorister; Brother Diggle was sustained bishop's agent, and Sister Schrank as home department superintendent.

Doctor R. J. MacDonald addressed the women of the church on Friday evening and chose for his subject, "The Purity of Woman." He also spoke to the men and boys on Saturday evening.

Brother and Sister Christy jointly conducted a class on Thursday afternoon on the topic, "Loyalty."

On Sunday morning the sacrament service opened at eight o'clock, and was followed by the church school in charge of Brother A. J. Cornish and Sister Christy. Overflow classes congregated on the lawn at the home of Brother and Sister Diggle.

Vanceleave, Mississippi

A series of meetings was started in this branch of Mobile District by Elder A. G. Miller August 14, and lasted one week. It was attended by much interest, and drew everyone closer in the unity of the faith.

Two were baptized by Brother J. C. Yocum the first Sunday, and on the following Sunday seven were baptized by Brother A. G. Miller.

A question box was the source of much help. All who wanted to ask questions, placed them in the box, and these were answered the following night by Brother Miller. Such an arrangement proved very educational.

Port Huron, Michigan

Port Huron is happy to report an increasing attendance and interest at all services despite the usual summer attractions, and many members on their vacation.

May 24, Brother William Patterson, of Providence, Rhode Island, arrived here and on June 6 assumed pastoral duties. And from this date he has seemingly been untiring in his effort to build up the work of the Lord in every way possible. It is gratifying to know his work is not in vain.

Sunday evening sermons by the pastor are greatly enjoyed by members and friends, the discourse being of a high spiritual order. Surely the Lord is pouring out his spirit upon his servants when they live for it.

A. C. Barmore, former pastor here, but now missionary of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, paid Port Huron a visit recently, but has been delayed in his return owing to the illness of Sister Barmore, who is to accompany him to his new field. She is now recovering.

Local members who attended reunions at the Park of the Pines, and Kirtland, as well as Eastern Michigan District, at Cash, report spiritual feasts.

Plans are now being made for the usual fall and winter activities including the Harvest Home Festival. Saints are hopefully anticipating success in the efforts put forth in all departments.

Thursday, September 1, at five o'clock, the church was the scene of a pretty wedding when in the presence of relatives and friends Elder James G. Ferguson assisted by William Patterson, united in marriage Miss Ethel Lillian Robideau, granddaughter of Mrs. William Abbott and Ernest Siegler, of Waterbury, Connecticut, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Siegler, of Berlin, Germany. Miss Ralene Ritchie and Melvin Loeding were the attendants. Miss Nina Keener played the wedding march. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the Abbott home and the happy couple left for a trip to Washington, District of Columbia, and the Atlantic coast. Mr. and Mrs. Siegler will make their home in Waterbury, Connecticut.

Pittsburg, Kansas

During the summer this branch was blessed with outside help. On July 2, Elder Amos T. Higdon arrived to visit among the Saints, and on July 5, he presided over the communion service.

Beginning July 10, Elder Lee Quick held a two-weeks' meeting, and although this was a period of extremely hot weather, interest was good. Eight were baptized: Orson Margraves, Jack Lewis, Velma Dee Bath, Ruth Cunningham, Margaret Jones, Irene Kirk, Robert Pallett, Doralea Wheeler.

President Elbert A. Smith, of Independence, visited here July 31, and preached morning and evening.

Brother and Sister G. E. Carter and Brother and Sister Wyatt, of Joplin, were here July 17. Brother Carter had charge of the morning service.

The following week the young people met at Forest Park on Spring River with groups from other parts of the district to enjoy a wiener roast and good program.

Sunday, August 14, and again August 21, this congregation was favored by fine discourses by Elder Evan Davis, of Independence. Pittsburg was Brother Davis's former home, and he is loved and respected by the Saints here.

Local workers are now looking forward to a two-day institute to be held here September 17 and 18. Elder Leonard Lea, of Independence, Missouri, will preside.

The women's department discontinued study during July and August, but have met in all-day meetings at different homes. At such times they have enjoyed a covered dish luncheon, and have completed a quilt for the hostess.

Sister E. E. Gilbert has been confined to her home by illness for three or four months.

Brother and Sister T. W. Bath have a fine baby boy, born August 13.

The Sunday school and department of recreation and expression are doing a good work.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

August is the month when many take their vacations, and this made church attendance small. Several from here were privileged to attend the Kirtland reunion, and received there new spiritual buoyancy.

At the communion service August 7, the Saints enjoyed a portion of God's Spirit and felt encouraged to continue in their work. Elder G. H. Kirkendall preached on the theme, "Onward and Upward," that evening.

The women's department met August 11, at the cottage of Sister Ruth Hamilton there being seventeen members and two visitors present. Blonde Carey read a splendid paper on "The Restoration." Sister Ruth Hamilton read a paper on "Tolerance."

Prayer services for the month were of a high spiritual order, and attendance was good.

The woman's study class finished reading the New Testament of the Inspired Translation of the Bible August 29. They plan to begin the study of the new Book of Mormon quarterly at their next meeting.

The priesthood meeting each month is very beneficial to those who are taking part in their discussions.

Sermon topics for the month were "Words and Works," "God With Us," "Endurance," "Faith and Works," "Perseverance," and "Gifts of the Spirit." The sermons were edifying, and speakers were Elders C. W. Clark, A. H. Nieman, R. E. Madden, W. B. Reeves, Bishop H. E. French, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews.

Essex, Ontario

A new branch is about to take its place among the other thirteen branches of Chatham District. Definite action in this direction was taken last Wednesday evening when at a special business meeting of the group of Saints who have been earnestly looking forward to such an opportunity, it was unanimously voted that they be organized into a branch.

Heretofore a mission has been maintained in or around Essex for several years by Windsor Branch. Prayer services were held from house to house each Wednesday evening and Sunday school in a schoolhouse about two miles out of town each Sunday afternoon. It was not until January of this year, that a regular house of worship was maintained.

In January the desire to secure a place of worship began to take definite form, and a committee composed of the three elders of the group, was appointed to select a suitable place. These men are J. A. W. Kettlewell, who has been in charge of the group almost continuously since 1928; Elder Ezra Mifflin, released from active missionary service last year on account of church finances, and Elder William Andrew, district director of the Department of Religious Education.

In a very short time a suitable house was located on the main street of the town, and leased with the privilege of altering to suit the needs of the group. Soon a band of workers with hammers and saws was at work, and after a thorough renovation, a commodious and pleasant assembly room was had with classrooms annexed and ready for occupancy.

In February the building was ready and dedicated temporarily to the service of God by a sacramental service, and from the east came Elder William I. Flegg, missionary to London District.

For two weeks the Saints enjoyed hearing the gospel story from a pioneer missionary. Their faith was increased and their zeal fired by the Spirit of God. Nor has that zeal languished. It is not an uncommon occurrence in this group to find almost one hundred per cent attendance at any service.

With the organization of a branch at Essex, the Saints pray that greater opportunity may be opened for the promulgation of the gospel in this place.

Southern Indiana Conference

Conference of Southern Indiana District convened at Louisville, Kentucky, August 20 and 21. Weather conditions were favorable, and the district was well represented considering the fact that many of the members are now out of work. Since there had been considerable doubt about his being able to attend the conference, the Saints were agreeably surprised when Apostle Clyde F. Ellis walked into their midst.

Business session opened promptly at 2 p. m., August 20, and by the vote of the conference was presided over by District President J. O. Dutton and the minister in charge, Apostle C. F. Ellis. Ministerial reports were received from practically every member of the priesthood in the district. These reports indicated that the priesthood had been active and progressive.

The district moved the adoption of the church school system of operation as recommended by the general church, this to be carried out in the various branches. J. O. Dutton was elected district supervisor of the church schools.

The old officers were reinstated: District president, J. O. Dutton; counselors, H. W. Burwell and A. W. Gage; treasurer, W. O. Robertson, and secretary, Nita R. Ferguson. It was moved to sustain General Conference appointees to the district: Apostle Ellis, minister in charge; district missionary, J. O. Dutton, and bishop's agent, W. O. Robertson. It was voted to have the next district conference at Indianapolis, Indiana.

On Saturday night Apostle Ellis addressed a large audience, impressing hearers with the fact that there is more in life than "mere material things."

Sunday morning at nine o'clock, those who wished to be administered to, met at the church. Nine-thirty found a large gathering present for the sacrament service in which the sweet influence of the Spirit was felt to a great degree, making stronger the determination of each one more fully to consecrate his life to the service of God and humanity.

At eleven o'clock Apostle Clyde F. Ellis preached to the Saints, a message applicable to everyday life. In the afternoon Brother Dutton was the speaker, and again in the evening Brother Ellis occupied.

Saints throughout the district were greatly benefited by the fine spirit which prevailed over the conference. They are now resolved to serve faithfully and well the cause which is growing nearer and dearer to their hearts each day.

Southeastern Illinois Reunion

What was described by many as the most successful reunion ever held in southeastern Illinois was held at Brush Creek August 12 to 21.

From the rising bell at six o'clock in the morning the spirit of peace and unity reigned over the camp the entire day.

The campers were grateful to have throughout the reunion Brother and Sister Richard Baldwin whom everyone learned to love. Apostle J. F. Garver was greeted on Wednesday noon by the entire camp with a tin can band and parade. He was presented a large gilded key by Brother Baldwin giving him free access to the whole camp.

The reunion committee, composed of Brother Baldwin and the district presidency, R. L. Fulk, C. H. Wesner, and Earnest Roberson, effected the organization of the reunion.

The day started with a fifteen-minute worship program at a quarter of eight in the morning. These were well planned and arranged, and helped to start everyone for the day's activities.

At nine fifteen the prayer services evidenced a degree of spiritual uplift. There were two young people's sunrise prayer services held on the spot where the oldest branch in the church was organized in 1842. Brother Baldwin was in charge of these meetings, and the Lord spoke through him in prophecy on the last morning. All rejoiced because of the message given.

Two daily class periods at 10.30 a. m. and 1.30 p. m. were conducted by Brothers Baldwin and Garver and well received by everyone. Brother Baldwin took up a discussion of "The Art of Worship," and Brother Garver taught "Moral and Spiritual Obligations."

The evening sermons by Brothers Baldwin, Garver, and Fulk were heard by large crowds which increased every evening.

On Thursday evening before the preaching service, the crowd was favored with a large collection of pictures of old pioneers and church officials, these being shown on the screen by Arthur Henson who for some time has been collecting old pictures and making them into slides.

A well-prepared program was presented on Saturday evening by Mount Vernon Saints under the direction of Mrs. Leslie Ellis.

The children's division of the reunion was under the supervision of Sister Baldwin. Her years of experience in children's work proved a treat to the boys and girls.

The campers were glad to have present many visiting Saints from Saint Louis District, Central Illinois District, and Vincennes, Indiana. They contributed to the success of the reunion.

Brother Garver in his last sermon to the reunion, at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, a discourse delivered with the power of the Lord, stated this to have been the best reunion he had ever attended; he had never before witnessed the spirit of calm, peace, and unity which characterized this gathering.

The Saints departed feeling a desire to go forward as never before to help in the building of Zion, realizing their responsibility as members of the kingdom of God.

Apostle John W. Rushton in England

Thousands of miles by rail over the United States and a nine-day voyage over the blue Atlantic landed Apostle John W. Rushton at Southampton, England, the evening of July 31. Reaching London, he was joyfully met by Brother J. A. Judd, of Enfield, Middlesex, and Joseph Holmes, of Langwith, Nottinghamshire, and taken to the southern District reunion then in session where a royal English welcome awaited him.

Brother Rushton left his Los Angeles home June 30, and spent some time in Kansas City, Independence, and Saint Louis, Missouri; Columbus, Ohio, and Brooklyn, New York. He preached at all these places except Independence, where he was invited to address a priesthood meeting. July 22, he sailed from New York on the S. S. Minnewaska, and experienced a pleasant voyage.

Because of the cancellation of the annual reunion of the mission, due to the economic depression, the apostle in charge thought it advisable to call an executive conference as soon as convenient, and through the courtesy of the Birmingham congregation in charge of Elder P. S. Whalley, this was arranged for Saturday and Sunday, August 20 and 21. To this council were invited the presidencies of the three districts (North, Midland, and South); the mission bishopric, A. T. Trapp and his counselors; the head of the Religious Education Department, Nephi Dewsnup who is also mission secretary, and the General Conference appointees, W. H. Greenwood, Patriarch, Fred Davies, missionary, and Peter Whalley, pastor. They met Saturday evening and had two sessions on Sunday. At these meetings the ministry present were given opportunity to present their views and ideas, followed by the bishopric, then by the leader of Religious Education Department and finally by the missionaries. This experience through discussion of mission matters gave Brother Rushton a better background from which to develop a plan of work. He was given a good response, and all the workers showed a fine disposition to cooperate. As a result of this conference Brother Rushton was able to compose a pastoral letter to the district and branch presidents of the British Mission which expresses to the English Saints Brother Rushton's appreciation of their problems and task, his pleasure at being associated with them once again, and contains the following significant passage:

"The Cause must at all costs and hazards have our utmost and best support. Nothing can excuse or justify the abandonment of the church and her interests as represented in the 'restored gospel.' Let us not go back upon our proved testimonies of the truth because of adventitious circumstances or disagreements with men and policies. The times are critical for the church, but always the church of Christ has thrived in times of challenge and of crisis. The times of ease and prosperity have been the times of moral and spiritual lassitude."

In this letter as well as in his preaching in England, Brother Rushton has given strong emphasis to the content of the pamphlet, "Church Objectives," adopted by the 1932 General Conference, explaining and inviting a thorough study of this document.

Some of Brother Rushton's activities in England were cut short by the condition of his health. For a period of several days he suffered from a cold and other discomforts. This condition for some days made uncertain the exact date of his intended trip to Oslo, Norway. Health permitting, he plans to visit the various countries in the European Mission, making a survey of the church work and growth in each. Already he has received pressing invitations from workers in several of these countries, to visit them and give of his help and inspiration.

Haverhill, Massachusetts

Haverhill's ranks seem to be gradually thinning until at times the scarcity of numbers proves a discouraging factor. However, the workers are reminded because of the very spiritual nature of their prayer services that where two or three are met in God's name, there he will be to bless. This has proved a comfort at times when, longing for association with those of like faith, the Saints are tempted to envy the opportunities of their brothers and sisters in the well organized branches.

The Wednesday evening services have recently been held in the homes of the different members so that the pastor could be present. An attack of angina pectoris in the early part of the summer, robbed the branch of the pastor's active services for several weeks. He is gradually improving in health although there is much yet to be desired in his condition.

The other members of the priesthood have loyally carried on during his absence from the activities of the group.

Sunday morning services are held in the Saints' hall as usual. Lack of attendance makes it inadvisable to hold evening sessions.

Recent visitors to this branch have included Saints from Portland, Boston, and other points. Bishop M. C. Fisher and Elder E. H. Fisher and their wives stopped on their way to Boston from Maine on a recent Wednesday evening. The association of these Saints strengthens the "tie that binds."

Five of the branch were able to attend the Onset reunion the second Sunday. Their souls were revived not only through the spiritual uplift, but through several contacts made. These could say with the poet:

"The friends that most cheer me
On Life's rugged road
Are the friends of my Master,
The children of God."

Saints of Haverhill know that Zion, the beautiful, beckons them on. Sometimes when faith is weak, the goal seems far away and elusive, but when Zion extends her hands to her people for aid, she must not be denied. The lives of the Saints must be as beautiful garments to enhance Zion's beauty in righteousness. If in these trying times, the Saints can present themselves as reasonable sacrifices, acceptable to God, this period of economic strife will not have been in vain.

Conference for Eastern Colorado

A fellowship meeting opened the Eastern Colorado district conference, at Denver, the evening of August 26. Denver presented a play, and outlying branches contributed to the program.

Saturday, August 27, a prayer service at nine o'clock in the morning was enjoyed by twenty people. An hour later the district business session opened and reports of branches and officers were read and placed in the district records. Part of the district officers for the new year were elected before noon and in the afternoon, the rest were chosen, and other general business was attended to. Following the afternoon session Elder J. W. A. Bailey gave an inspiring talk on Zion, and that evening Brother J. D. Curtis preached on "The Things We Leave Undone."

Forty were present at the early Sunday morning prayer service. Then the people of the district worshiped with Denver Saints in church school service. During the session

Floyd H. Engstrom, of Colorado Springs, Glen E. Holmes, of Denver, and Glaude A. Smith, district president, gave short talks. At the morning church hour J. W. A. Bailey favored the congregation with a fine sermon on "Go Ye, and Preach."

After lunch a number of baptisms were attended to before the communion service at two thirty. Then came the confirmation ceremony of those baptized.

Nearly all the out-of-town people had to leave the conference following the afternoon service. The evening message, "The Rise and Fall of Man," was given by J. W. A. Bailey.

Though the conference was not so well attended as usual, an excellent spirit prevailed. Denver Saints served good meals in their church basement at a very reasonable charge. Brother Bailey is remaining in Denver to hold a series of meetings.

Late Summer in Utah District

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Arrangements with Apostle Myron A. McConley made it possible for Apostle G. G. Lewis to attend the Utah district conference. He came from San Francisco, and arrived in Salt Lake City August 11, giving two fine sermons the evenings of the eleventh and twelfth. Then he went to Ogden for the evening of the thirteenth, and the conference the following day. Elder A. M. Chase and wife accompanied him from Salt Lake City.

The conference opened with a prayer service Sunday at nine o'clock. This was quite well attended and accompanied by an excellent spirit. A business meeting lasting well towards eleven o'clock was next on the program, the reports of branches and officials and the election of officers claiming most of the time. With one exception all district officers were sustained. Elder Lohmolder, one of the associates in the presidency was soon to leave for Kansas City, and Elder J. A. Conyers was appointed and approved to fill his place. District officers are now: the presidency, A. M. Chase, R. R. Robertson, and J. A. Conyers; secretary, Mrs. Wells Cunningham; treasurer, Roy Hewes; director of Religious Education and publicity agent, Mrs. A. M. Chase; director of music, A. M. Chase.

Good appetites and good fellowship characterized the basket lunch at Farr Park following the business meeting.

Returning to the church, the Saints joined in an interesting round table discussion conducted by Brother Lewis. This was followed by general priesthood meeting. Apostle Lewis spoke again in the evening, closing a busy and profitable day for the district which was well represented from each of the three southern branches, Provo, Salt Lake City, and Ogden. No one was present from Malad.

Monday evening, August 15, Elder Chase and wife took Apostle Lewis to Provo, where he was greeted by a good audience of Saints who enjoyed his sermon, but were disappointed that he could not give them another evening.

The next evening was spent at Ogden, Apostle Lewis with the district presidency meeting with the branch for consideration of local problems.

Saints of the district greatly enjoyed making the acquaintance of Apostle Lewis. His sermons were well presented and received. Everyone wishes him Godspeed in his work.

Elder Chase was obliged to depart for the Idaho reunion or institute at Hagerman where he was billed for class work. He conducted a class in the Book of Mormon from August 18 to 20 and returned to Salt Lake City Sunday.

Brother Lewis was expecting to meet his wife here the seventeenth, and was unable to go to the Idaho gathering. He spent his time helping locally, accompanying Elder R. R. Robertson and other Saints to the park the evening of August 17. Each gave a talk to the audience gathered for the service. Sister Lewis and daughter, Alice June, arrived the morning of the twentieth, and the family left that same day for San Francisco, from which point they were scheduled to sail for Tahiti August 31.

July 24, Salt Lake Branch enjoyed a visit and sermon from the bishop's agent, Elder Roy Hewes, who as chaplain of the Reserves was attending the Citizen's Training Camp at Fort Douglas, and responded to an invitation from Elder Chase to occupy at the eleven o'clock service. Elder Chase was in Provo for the day, but returned in time for the open-air service at night.

Elder Lohmolder, wife and son, Elmer, left for Kansas City, August 30. They had a fine trip and reached their destination September 3. The best wishes of the branch accompanied them but local workers could not help feeling a little desolate at their departure. There is not an over-supply of earnest workers here. Brother Elmer Lohmolder gave efficient service as financial clerk of this branch. He is now in attendance at Westport High School in Kansas City, (his last year in high school), and is looking forward to Graceland.

Provo and Salt Lake Church Schools held a joint picnic at Saratoga Springs on Labor Day. Basket dinner was served and bathing and games were the order of the day. Provo carried off the honors in the indoor baseball contest. Brother John Gracie was in charge of recreation.

Elder J. A. Conyers, genial policeman, was enjoying his vacation the first week in August and invited the branch to spend a day with the family at their summer camp in Emigration Canyon. The invitation was accepted and a day away from the excessive heat of the city was much enjoyed.

The evening of August 27, in spite of a storm, (one of the worst here this season) which raged almost all afternoon and only stopped about eight o'clock, nearly all the active members met at the church for a farewell party for the Lohmolder family. It was a fine tribute and testimonial of the Saints' respect and regard for the family.

Just now local Saints are missing the Robertson family who are east on a vacation outing. Elder Robertson planned to visit friends and relatives as well as the Saints in Independence, southeastern Missouri, northeastern Arkansas and northwestern Tennessee. By note from Brother S. A. Burgess, Salt Lake members learn that the Robertsons spent Sunday, September 4, with Saints in Independence, participating in the sacrament service at the Stone Church, and afterward, by invitation from Brother and Sister S. A. Burgess, met the Lohmolders and Fluehys, and enjoyed the noon meal at the Burgess home. The Robertsons plan to be home September 19. They, too, are workers.

Brooklyn, New York

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here in July preaching and visiting the homes of the Saints. His inspiring, spiritual talks were deeply appreciated, and the Saints wish he could be here oftener.

Apostle John W. Rushton was also here for a few days, preparing for his voyage to the European Mission. He, too, preached, in the vigorous and forceful fashion for which he is noted.

Six young members of the junior church were baptized and confirmed in one of the most beautiful and inspiring baptismal services ever held in this little church building. In the work of redeeming Zion the church looks hopefully to such as these. Their names are Katherine Hawkins, Charles Harris, jr., LeRoy Squire, jr., Jean Potts, Pauline Dermody, and John William Hawkins.

Mrs. Nellie Stephenson (nee Foy) was also baptized and confirmed at this service.

At the last business meeting it was voted to set aside a certain sum every month to be contributed to the general church treasury. During sacrifice week this year Brooklyn Branch contributed a substantial sum to aid the church in its hour of need. It was also voted to make some alterations in the church building in the basement to facilitate the work of the junior church.

Holden Stake

Grandview

Home-coming day was enjoyed by a number gathering back to the little church at Grandview. A short program was rendered at the close of the church school classes. Brother Atwell occupied the eleven o'clock hour. Brother Atwell has many friends of long standing in the group, and has visited Grandview many times.

It was a merry group that met in the basement for lunch, and an enjoyable time was had. Services at two o'clock, Brother Joseph Curtis occupying, proved a feast to the Saints.

Both Brother Curtis and Atwell spoke with good liberty. It was fifteen years ago the twenty-fourth of July that the Grandview group was organized. The work first opened at Marbu City, a few miles away. Only two families of the organized branch are left; Brother and Sister Charles Taylor and Brother and Sister Henry Kountz, who have proved their worth among their friends and the group. Many families have moved away and others have come to take their place, and the work goes on. We miss a number of people who have met with us in former years and trust they will some time come back to the group.

The night meeting was omitted to permit everyone to attend a temperance lecture.

August 7, a group of young people from the Stone Church visited us and the numbers rendered were both fitting and appreciated.

They were accompanied by Brother R. D. Weaver and wife. Brother Weaver occupied the evening hour, taking for his subject, "Prayer." We appreciate these visits from outside groups.

Sister Morse was again able to attend meeting in the morning after months of illness.

Brother and Sister C. V. Hopkins, now of Independence, were faithful workers here for years. Brother Hopkins acted as pastor most of the time since the organization. Brother Gomer R. Wells has also served as pastor here.

Atherton Group

The young people attended the evening services at the Campus, August 21.

Last Sunday evening local members had the privilege of welcoming the Saints from Enoch Hill and Englewood. A musical program was rendered by these visiting Saints preceding the sermon which was delivered by Brother H. L. Barto, pastor of Enoch Hill. Brother Perry Hiles, pastor of Englewood, was in charge of the services.

The local choir is practicing the songs and anthems to be used in the chorus during the Harvest Home Festival at the Auditorium.

Thursday evening the dramatic club entertained the branch at the home of Brother Ira Curtis. This entertainment consisted of readings, musical numbers, a pantomime, and a playlet entitled, "The Exchange." The evening seemed to be much appreciated.

On a recent Tuesday morning the Sunday school met at the church, boarded trucks and cars, and made its thirteenth annual pilgrimage to Swope Park for a picnic.

Some of the Atherton Saints assisted in the Square-Deal Dining Hall during the State Fair at Sedalia. Also a truckload of produce was taken down as a donation from this branch.

Marshall Church

A peaceful spirit prevailed at the sacrament service September 4. Elder Harold Thayer assisted Pastor Ralph M. Ridge in presiding.

The young people's department is preparing for its basket ball season. September 16, will be the opening evening, and the juniors are arranging to have a pie supper and bazaar that night in the basement of the church. The little folks are busy making pretty and useful things for the bazaar. They want to equip the basement room for their own use.

This Year a Confidence Builder

Independence, Missouri.—This year is a confidence builder. The Saints are feeling much better in the work than for years, being more willing to do the Master's bidding and make Zion a reality rather than the theory it has been for the past hundred years. Contention and bickering disappear when we learn of the Spirit of the Lord and its working for peace on earth and good will toward men.

My visit home for a few days has made me feel better than for a long time. Last Sunday's sacrament service caused us to realize how good it is to be a Latter Day Saint. Brother Elbert A. Smith's talk in the beginning was one of the best I ever heard. The service was so very beautiful and orderly, and the Bishop's talk on the oblation was so out of the ordinary from the standpoint of our helping those in need, that the offering was a third more than usual, so the pastor told us.

Our reunion at the Park of the Pines, Michigan, was a great meeting, very spiritual, a very great faith and confidence builder.

The district in Michigan, where I have supervision, is at work building the church of the Lord. Our stalwarts of the past are all at work and happy in the good spirit. Brothers White, Burt, Umphrey, and almost all the younger men are active and feeling the presence of the Lord is returning to the church as we are willing to return to him and build the kingdom of God. In the language of Brother J. A. Koehler, "We want kingdom of God men and women."

A letter from Brother Turner, of Midland, Michigan, tells of a picnic of the Coleman Sunday school at McDougal grove where a goodly attendance of Beaverton and Rosebush Saints was had. Everyone enjoyed a good time. Brother Turner baptized three, and Brother Johnson, one. Brother Turner is the man who reported for work some time ago, saying, "I will go anywhere and do any work you want done." His is a willing heart, and I hope to see the whole church manifest this willing disposition to serve God.

HUBERT CASE.

Houston, Texas

The Saints of this city are happy and striving to do their best. It is taking real sacrifice to keep up expenses on their pretty church home.

In the past few months there has been a goodly number of baptisms. Houston members were sorry to lose Elder J. W. A. Bailey from this district. He always has a store of good things to tell.

All were grieved to lose Sister Adiene Post, but her mind always turned to the home where she has gone. In this thought are the Saints happy.

Brother Leslie Kohlman has gone again to finish work at Graceland College. Surely if he continues in the path he now travels, Brother Leslie will be a power for good in God's hands. His friends are glad that he has the privilege of qualifying for greater service.

There are three young men in this branch who hold the priesthood, Brother Leslie Kohlman, Brother D. McCormic, and Brother John Charles Thoman. With Brother Leslie gone, the other two find greater responsibility falling upon them.

Brother Rexford Post has just recovered from a serious operation. The blessing of the heavenly Father rested upon him with healing to the extent that his convalescence was remarkably short, and he is now active again.

Branch President Charles Tischer is an untiring gospel servant. He with the rest of the branch looks forward to the coming of Brother G. H. Wixom, who is reported to arrive here soon to hold a series of meetings.

Houston Branch misses Brother and Sister Billy Root who happened to have an accident as they were driving to Colorado, both being seriously injured. Their friends are remembering them in prayer.

Toledo, Ohio

Many of the Saints in this branch have suffered from want of work for the last two years, but no disasters have resulted, and the work of the branch goes on just about the same due to the fact that a year ago officers were able to burn up the mortgage against the building. At this time the building was dedicated to the service of God.

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis was here the latter part of June, and preached twice on Sunday. This Sunday happened to be listed in the Herald for a talk on the Society Islands Mission, and Toledo members were happy to hear first hand of this mission. Brother Ellis used for his subject, "Obedience Is Better Than Sacrifice." There was one in the congregation not yet a member of the faith, but investigating, who was baptized July 10. "After hearing Brother Ellis," this prospective member testified, "in this wonderful discourse, I could see only one word, obey." She confessed that she tried to get around the things Brother Ellis said, and to forget them, but she could not. This woman is a fine addition to the congregation. She is the mother of five children who now are prospective members.

Brother Ellis was also here July 3, 4, and 5, occupying in all services to the delight of the Saints and the honor of God. District Missionary J. G. Halb arrived July 4, and held a series of meetings lasting three weeks. July 24, he baptized a young woman.

August 14, two boys who had reached the age of eight years were inducted into the kingdom, Elder Clarence V. Holmes officiating.

More than a score of Toledo members went to the Kirtland reunion at least for a few days. There they enjoyed a wonderful, spiritual feast. For several years past the Holmes family has wanted to go to Niagara Falls, Palmyra, New York, and to Hill Cumorah. But never had they been able to make it until this year when they went to reunion. Kirtland is about midway between the falls and Toledo, the total distance being about three hundred miles; then it is another hundred miles from the falls to Cumorah. A pleasant trip was made by auto, and the Holmes visited the sacred grove and the house in which much of the translating of the Book of Mormon was done. They also drove the car almost to the peak of Hill Cumorah.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths was here September 4 to 7 and gave some blessings and preached some sermons. He was on his way to Sylvania and Oak Harbor before returning home to Uniopolis September 12.

Missionary Travels and Work in Ontario

Sault Saint Marie, Ontario.—The Sault Branch was favored with a short visit from Apostle D. T. Williams, Patriarch F. A. Smith and Elder H. A. Dayton, district president. Brothers Williams and Smith motored up from the Park of the Pines reunion. While here they divided time between the two cities. One would preach in the Canadian Sault while the other labored in the American Sault. The Saints heard some inspiring sermons and believe that much good was done by this visit. Apostle Williams remained here from Monday till Saturday night when he left for other parts of the field, and Brothers Smith and Dayton stayed to preach four more nights. Brother Dayton preached twice in MacLennan, twenty-five miles from the Sault, during this stay.

On September 1, Brothers Smith and Dayton in company with W. A. Bushila left for the Manitoulin Island to visit other branches. On their way they called on isolated Saints who were happy to talk with them. Thursday night Brother Smith preached to the Saints in Little Current, meeting in the home of Brother Myle Sagles. About thirty were present. On Friday night they visited Manitowaning where Brother Smith again preached to the Saints.

Saturday and Sunday a two-day meeting was held at The Slash Branch. Prayer service was held on Saturday at 10 a. m., Brother Smith occupying; 3 p. m., preaching by Brother Bushila, and at eight o'clock another sermon by Brother Smith. On Sunday sacrament service convened at nine thirty in charge of Brothers Dayton and Smith, and during that day Brother Smith preached twice and Brother Dayton once. While there the officers blessed several babies and administered to the sick. On Sunday afternoon a young man was baptized by Elder M. K. Brown and confirmed at the water's edge by Elders Smith, Brown, and Dayton. Many of the Saints at Manitowaning desired patriarchal blessings, but unfortunately there was no one to take them down. This was the first visit of Patriarch Smith to the island in twenty years.

On Monday, September 5, the three workers left Manitowaning for Little Current to attend the Sunday school picnic, but it rained. This was the first disappointment with which the trio had met on their missionary trip. That night Brother Smith again spoke to the Saints in Little Current. After this service Brother Dayton returned to Manitowaning where he is holding a series of meetings. The following day Brothers Smith and Bushila left the island and went to Espanola where the former was to take train to Toronto then to Niagara Falls.

Though this is a busy season for thrashing and all of the Saints on the island are farmers, they were ready to help and very hospitable.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

The latter day work is progressing under the pastorate of Ray Whiting. Branch activities have somewhat slowed up during the summer months, but officers are looking to the fall and winter with expectation of good work outlined by department leaders.

O. A. Currie called a meeting of the teachers and officers of the school Thursday evening, August 25 to discuss the objectives of the school and to plan for a more intensive effort to build up the work in that department.

The educational department is contemplating taking up some new courses of study in the church school and the young people's services on Sunday evenings. Among the courses under consideration are the Doctrine and Covenants course being put out by Brother F. H. Edwards, a teachers' training class, and possibly a class in dramatics.

Brother Currie is to give up the educational department in Council Bluffs the first of October and take up the church school work in the district. Brother Lee Landon has been selected by Brother Whiting to succeed him.

A special business meeting was called for September 2, at which time it was voted to change the fiscal year of the branch. The object is to have the year start the first of October instead of January 1. Also the group decided on the purchase of new hymnbooks.

There is a desire on the part of many to organize a dramatic club. They feel that it would be a good thing, as it would give the people an opportunity of expression which they do not now have. Dramatization in teaching religion is one of the most effective methods of impressing the lessons to be taught.

On July 22, 23, and 24, President Floyd M. McDowell and Apostle J. F. Garver were here for a workers' institute. From the opening session on Friday evening until the closing service Sunday evening they were greeted with large and attentive audiences. The weather was very hot, but this did not seem to keep anyone away. The brothers gave some wonderful instructions.

This was a joint institute of the Omaha and Council Bluffs Saints, and, workers think it helped to bring the two branches closer together. Dinner was served in the church at noon Sunday and the Omaha Saints stayed for the afternoon session. Brother McDowell preached in Omaha and Brother Garver in Council Bluffs in the evening.

Council Bluffs welcomes back one of her former young people, Sister Winnifred Wood, who was married to Mr. Albert Martin of Council Bluffs August 6. They will make their home in this city.

Another local girl, Sister Helen Currie, was married recently. The name of her husband is Irvin Lee, and while he does not belong to the church, he is a fine young man. The Saints wish both the young couples all the success and happiness in the world.

Independence

"Why I Am a Latter Day Saint" was the theme of Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Sunday evening speaker at the Campus. This was the last night of union services at the Campus, and also the concluding sermon of Brother Edwards's summer series. Next Sunday night the Saints will resume services in their own congregations feeling that another summer of helpful Sunday evening services is over. Music for the evening was by the Auditorium Orchestra.

Several of the church clubs in Independence whose influence extends far beyond the bonds of the center place, have held "first" meetings in their fall and winter programs. Among these were the White Masque Players who on the evening of September 12, enjoyed their annual club party on the lawn of the J. W. Hagler home, Mrs. Louise Hagler Austin acting as hostess. "Fashion" was the theme of the party, and club members were asked to come in costumes none less than ten years old. Some of the gowns worn by the ladies were of considerable historical interest. Mrs. Leonard Lea, program director, presented one act from the play, "Fashion," written in 1845, by Anna Cora Mowatt, and also gave an outline of the year's work and study. Other feature entertainments were the "Old Family Album" of live photographs and selections by the Wahdemna Choral Club Male Quartet and members of Mrs. Allegra Luff Smith's classes.

The Independence Patroness Society held its first meeting since the summer vacation all day September 16. A covered luncheon was served at noon, about fifty members being present. Luncheon guests were President F. M. McDowell, Apostle F. H. Edwards, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Bishop J. S. Kelley, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Elder C. B. Woodstock, and Miss Leta Moriarty of the Herald editorial staff. Talks made by Brothers McDowell, DeLapp, and Edwards on the program of work for the women of the church during the coming year. Then Pastor Sheehy presented a beautiful friendship quilt pieced by members of the society for their president, Mrs. H. L. Loosemore. In a short business session the society voted unanimously on important recommendations by the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric.

The Independence Music Club met at Paul Craig's studio the afternoon of September 14, in charge of the president, Mrs. Belle James. Following the business session, the musical program consisted of piano numbers by Mrs. Hazel Withee and vocal selections by Mrs. Pauline Arnson. Mrs. Ada Winters, chairman of the hospitality committee, was hostess.

The Religious Education institute is continuing with growing conviction and enthusiasm among the students and teachers. More than five hundred have attended the classes almost every night. This week the people of Independence are privileged to have the help of Elder George Mesley, of Kansas City Stake, with the group of young people's leaders. Many are attending this school who already are teaching and working in the various divisions of the church schools in Independence, and others are qualifying for future service.

The Cantanina Chorus or "Singing Girls," directed by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, is singing this winter over the Columbia Chain and may be heard from twenty-seven stations west of Kansas City, Missouri. Their program is broadcast each Sunday at 5.45 p. m. The chorus began its fall and winter broadcasting September 11. This group of young women has been in training a number of years and is well known in Independence and Kansas City. They have broadcast over WOQ and WHB, Kansas City, and have contributed generously of their services to the church and the community. This summer alone they have sung at several functions in Kansas City, in Independence, at the Unity Farm several miles from Independence, and at Marshall, Missouri.

Stone Church

Nine candidates, eight children and one adult, were baptized at an early morning baptismal service Sunday in the lower auditorium. They were Bertie Marie Thomas, Jack Duane Young, Arlene Young, Walter Lienau House, Marcine Lienau House, Vernon House, Clarence Albert Resch, Shirley Anne McFarlane, and Mrs. Mildred Thomas. Pastor J. F. Sheehy and Elder J. J. Teeter officiated.

Confirmation of these candidates occurred at the service of blessing and confirmation at two thirty in the afternoon. During this hour the following babies were blessed by Elders S. A. Thiel and H. G. Barto: Doris Elaine Barnes and Ruby Pauline Barnes, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Barnes; Tommy Lloyd Stribling, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence L. Stribling, and Warren Dillon Barrett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren D. Barrett.

Church school attendance and collections are increasing. Sunday, September 11, almost eleven hundred were present with a corresponding number September 18. Preparations for Promotion Day next Sunday are now drawing the interest and attention of every department.

In his sermon at eleven o'clock Bishop A. B. Phillips took his congregation back to a consideration of fundamentals—Jesus and his mission to mankind, Jesus the divine Philosopher, the great Teacher, the Healer, the Master Builder, the Son of God.

An uplifting musical program by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, added much to the service.

The Stone Church congregation is enthusiastic over the Religious Education institute which opened September 12, and will close this Friday evening. From its number it is contributing many students to the school.

Second Church

Following the church school at 9.30 a. m., Elder Harvey Minton talked at the eleven o'clock service. His text was, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Brother Minton urged everyone to keep alive, as the dead branches are constantly being removed. Quite a number of favorable comments were made on his sermon.

In the basement of the church at the eleven o'clock junior service Brother R. J. Lambert spoke on "Religious Education." His talk was plainly and interestingly stated. "Religious education," Brother Lambert said, "is to be derived from our outside life as well as from the church books."

Tuesday, September 13, the women met. They are busily planning for the Harvest Festival.

Lately there has been quite a number of the congregation attending choir practice, preparing for the Harvest Festival concert.

Walnut Park Church

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp delivered the sermon at eleven o'clock September 11, taking for his Scripture lesson Isaiah 35 and part of 52. He left with the Saints a picture of Zion which if they are faithful to their trust will well recompense them for their labors. Preceding the sermon Mrs. Margaret Gard Bullard sang, "Love Never Fails," (1 Corinthians 13), by Ward Stephens.

The eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer service is growing in numbers as well as in spirituality. Attendance of the church school hovers about the four hundred mark.

On that Sunday morning the young people from Kenneth Morford's class gave the program which consisted of a piano duet by Thelma Schwab and Dorothy Barrett; a vocal solo by Dorothy Peak, and two accordion solos by Doris May.

MISCELLANEOUS

About forty members of Elder William Gard's class and several members of the senior class drove to Fourth Kansas City Branch in the evening on the last missionary trip of the summer. A fine program was there presented by the junior choir, and Elder Frank McDonald delivered a helpful message. After the service Fourth Church young people invited the visitors to the church lawn and served popcorn and apples.

Elders Fred Lanpher, C. K. Green, and Welton Wood were in charge of a fine prayer service last Sunday morning. The church school opened under the spirit which had ruled the prayer meeting. As usual the orchestra helped with its musical support, and the singing was led by Sister Violet Chase. Elder Benjamin Bean gave a five-minute talk after class work on the text "Beware of covetousness. Man's life consists not of the abundance of the things he possesseth."

Patriarch Ammon White took for his text at eleven o'clock Doctrine and Covenants 119. This revelation contains much instruction for the Saints, and Brother White did not fail to recall all its message to the people. The young people's choir, under the leadership of Miss Delta Nace and accompanied at the organ by Drexel Mollison, sang "Oh, for a Closer Walk With God."

About twenty-five members of the Galilean Class left the church at two thirty September 17, and drove to the farm of William Gard near Holden. A large camp stew furnished the evening meal after which Holden Saints joined the group for a wiener roast. Hymn singing closed the day and tents were erected for the night. Next morning the group was joined by about twenty more from Independence, and all drove to Holden for the Sunday school. Pastor Frank McDonald, of Walnut Park, was the morning speaker. At noon the Independence visitors enjoyed a basket dinner with Holden Saints, then they paid the Holden Saints' Home a visit.

Friends of Mrs. Margaret Gard Bullard were happy to have her with them for a short stay. September 8, the Walnut Park Choir held a social evening in her honor at the home of Sister Thelma Masterson. Elder and Sister Frank McDonald and Sister William Gard were also guests.

Quite a number of Walnut Park people are attending the institute at the Stone Church. They have the second largest enrollment.

The funeral service of Lewis L. Cook, sixty-eight years old, who died September 16, from a paralytic stroke, was conducted from Walnut Park Church the afternoon of September 18. Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Bina Cook, two daughters, Mrs. Virgie Barnes, and Mrs. Maud Knoch, of Kansas City, and a son, G. L. Cook, of Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

A little daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Roland Tignor September 9. She has been named Virginia Elizabeth.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The ministry of the stake met at 3 p. m. Sunday to discuss further the articles by Apostle John W. Rushton, appearing in the Herald from time to time, beginning with the issue of July 6. Stake President C. E. Wight who was in charge outlined the work of the hour on a blackboard. He first emphasized that the matter of "living is hard. There is no easy way to work out our salvation." By diagram it was made clear that the work of the church comes under two headings—priestly and prophetic. Brother Wight's talk was both faith inspiring and faith confirming. And at the close of this meeting the teachers and deacons (of late not organized) were organized into quorums. Hereafter all quorums will meet separately immediately after the regular monthly ministerial meeting held the third Sunday of each month.

Central Church Choir, directed by Brother George Anway, exhibited a commendable spirit of community helpfulness

Reports were read from most of the branch presidents indicating that the work is being carried on largely by local men. A motion was carried approving the recommendation of the apostle in charge, that a branch be organized at Fawn Grove, Pennsylvania, at which place a mission has been carried on for several years. Two preaching services and a sacrament service on Sunday were very well attended. During the Sunday school hour talks were given by a number of the ordained men and Sister Myrtle A. Weber spoke on the junior department work. The conference adjourned Sunday evening to meet at the call of the district presidency.

Ten thousand Kansas City people witnessed on that night a drama portraying the constitutional convention of 1787, which gave to our nation our Constitution. Musical prelude, interludes, postlude were effectively presented by Central Church singers, and the branch is proud of them.

Stake Missionary J. Charles May was the speaker the evening of September 11, and will be with that congregation morning and evening next Sunday in the interest of the work of the stake bishop.

Elder C. J. Carpenter told the story of the first sacrament service held in America as recorded in the Book of Mormon, Book of Nephi 8 and 9. His talk September 18, was heard by a small but interested congregation.

LONG.—Eliza Virginia Stucky was born August 6, 1852, at Midway, Coneuh County, Alabama. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when a girl. Married S. M. Long in March, 1897, who preceded her in death January 20, 1929, after a short illness of pneumonia. He was the last and youngest of his family, and she was the last and youngest of her family. She brought the gospel to her husband and family, and they lived the faith. Were administered to and healed many times. They enjoyed going to church and having the Saints visit in their home. She died July 4, 1932, after two years and five days illness from a stroke of paralysis and other diseases from which she was almost helpless and could talk little. She suffered a grave illness five weeks and five day before she died. She was the step-mother of nine children, five boys and four girls and a foster son, David Nelson, fifteen years old, who had been with her eight months. All survive her except the youngest, Joseph Robert, who died in 1912, from an abscess in the back of his head and throat. Left to mourn are: William M. Long, Katie A. Long, Bessie J. Long, and John T. Long, all of Range, Alabama; Mrs. Sallie L. Johnson, Brewton, Alabama; Mrs. Mollie E. Bell, and George H. Long, Wallace, Alabama; and Charles B. Long, Canoe, Alabama, besides other relatives and friends. She was a kind mother and will be greatly missed. The funeral sermon was by elder Luke Mize, of Flomaton, Alabama. Interment was in Hall Cemetry beside her husband.

EVANS.—Prudence Ellis, daughter of John M. and Laura B. Ellis, was born October 9, 1895, at Springville, Tennessee, and passed away August 16, 1932, at Indianapolis, Indiana, after a long illness. She is survived by her parents; two sisters, Ruby Shupe, of Paris, Tennessee, and Della Wilson, of Russellville, Kentucky; three brothers, Vernie Ellis, of Bowling Green, Kentucky, and Leon and Halford Ellis, at home; a daughter, Mildred Evelyn Evans Godsey, and many other relatives and friends. She married Solly Evans at an early age, and her husband preceded her in death. Joined the Baptist Church when sixteen years old, but in 1921, at Russellville, Kentucky, she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. During the last nine months of her life Mrs. Evans was confined to her bed, but always she was patient, courageous, and cheerful. She was kind to her aged parents and her brothers and sisters and to all her friends, and was always willing to do her part. Unable to stand the strain of her daughter's long illness, the mother is now ill. During the time of suffering her father carried on as best he could, caring for his suffering daughter and more recently for his wife also. Interment was at her birthplace in Springville, Tennessee, the funeral services being conducted at the home August 17, by Elder Arthur W. Gage, assisted by Elder Charles H. Fish.

DAWSON.—Ella W. Dawson was born March 6, 1858, at Jackson, Ohio. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints April 12, 1931, at Jackson, by Elder J. R. Grice. She was a widow and had no children. Died August 27, 1932, at Jackson, Ohio. The funeral was in charge of the Reverend Sqheifenstine, of Dayton, Ohio.

HARE.—Charles La Verne Hare was born at Williams Bay, Wisconsin, January 24, 1896. Died September 2, 1932, at Independence, Missouri. When five years of age, he came with his parents to Missouri. For some time they lived at Holden, later moving to Independence. April 22, 1906, he was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder C. H. Burr, his grandfather, at Holden. December 3, 1927, he was united in marriage to Miss Florence E. Ballinger, and they made Independence their home. He leaves to mourn, his wife, father, T. J. Hare, and mother, two brothers, four sisters, other relatives and friends. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. The funeral was conducted from Liberty Street Church, Independence, in charge of Elder Perry Hiles, the sermon being by Elder W. A. McDowell.

METZ.—Josephena Hall, daughter of W. D. and Typhena Hall, was born at Creston, Iowa, March 27, 1886. Departed this life August 30, 1932, at Clarinda, Iowa. She was married to F. J. Metz, June 28, 1919. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints early in life and lived faithful to her covenant. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband, five brothers, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral was held at Creston, Iowa, the sermon by L. G. Holloway. Interment was in Creston Cemetery.

HUNTER.—David Hunter was born July 11, 1854, at Windham, Ontario. In 1883 he moved to Wardsville, Ontario, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints there in 1892, by the late Arthur Leverton. Thirty years ago he moved to Windsor, Ontario, and passed away at his home in that city September 4, 1932, having been afflicted for the past seven years. His wife, Mary Jane Hunter, two daughters, Mrs. Nellie H. Harkness, and Mrs. Steward McBrayne, both of Windsor, and one grandchild, Lora Lavada Strachan, of Independence, Missouri, survive him. The funeral was held from Chapen's Parlors, Windsor, in charge of Elder L. D. Campbell. Interment was in Grandlawn Cemetery, Detroit.

JOSEPH SMITH

Born November 6, 1832. Died December 10, 1914
President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 1844-1914.org

The Joseph Smith Centennial

The Sunday of November 6, this year, will mark the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, late President of the Reorganized Church, the third of his successive line to bear that name. To his memory we specially dedicate this number of the Herald, hoping thereby to contribute to the perpetuation of the fame which he enjoyed in his own day.

Today we have only his memory and his writings left. But that memory and those writings are a rich spiritual heritage. Reading what he wrote, one becomes conscious of something like a presence—one visualizes what he must have been: a powerful but gentle character, with a mind at once noble and courageous, yet tender. Although he was continually absorbed with the cares of the people he led and with the problems of the immediate future they faced, he had a way of setting himself against expediences that had no other quality to recommend them, and of judging all issues for their permanent effects. He lived prophetically: that is, he lived as if the future had become a regular part of his present work. He was always conscious of that future, and in his writings the reader finds much that could be addressed to the people of our day as well as to his own contemporaries, even those of his earlier years. The writings testify of the spirit of the man. One could read them without seeing the signature, and know that they were the utterance of a great man.

This celebration is not alone to celebrate the memory of the man, but to bring him and his message to the present generation. It would be tragic if his leadership, which guided the destiny of the church for more than fifty years, were to lose its effect with us. He can not and must not be lost to us.

We place this memorial number several weeks ahead of the actual birthday anniversary in order that the play and program materials may be in the hands of local leaders in plenty of time.

It is hoped that every branch will undertake some special program for the week-end of November 6. Those that do not will miss an opportunity. The play will teach some important details of church history. Outlines for class discussion and sermon materials will be of real help to speakers.

Even with our extra space, it was impossible to include all of our materials for the celebration of the Joseph Smith centennial in this issue of the Herald. In next week's issue we plan to present suggested sermon outlines, materials for class study, and other items of importance to the celebration.

Payment of Allowances

Attention is called to the announcements appearing in another part of this issue of the Herald and addressed to the holders of debenture bonds and interest-bearing notes, and also to "The Program for Payment of Allowances for Missionary Families."

No creditors or other interested parties should "view with alarm" the attempt being made to reduce the interest on bonds and notes payable. This procedure is in harmony with sound finances, will tend to secure the principal, and has been followed by many reputable concerns. It is not unreasonable to expect cooperation from our creditors in this matter if the members of the church will continue to do their utmost in the matter of tithes, offerings, etc.

We commend the program for the payment of allowances for missionary families to the careful scrutiny of the Saints, and particularly of local presiding officers. Missionary families have sacrificed without complaint, and in spite of their urgent need have absorbed the deficit created by the excess of operating expenses plus necessary debt reduction over income. Now, however, we face a winter in which such families will suffer real privation unless the allowances to which they are entitled can be made available for them. We bespeak the continuous support of the Saints to this end, and particularly ask that district and branch authorities read this program through carefully and make special effort to lay this matter clearly before the Saints during the services of Sunday, October 9, following this up with personal visits directed to securing the full cooperation of the membership.

The Saints are to be commended for what has already been done. Let us now go forward, making such sacrifices as are necessary with faith and cheerfulness, and keeping constantly in mind the example of our great Leader and goal of our endeavor. With such an exemplar and such a goal triumph is certain.

CHANGES AND ADDED FEATURES IN THE NEW PUBLICATION

Next week the Herald undergoes a metamorphosis, and will appear as a new and changed publication. A cover page, new types for headings, an arrangement for the news that will make it more easily read, and a different plan of makeup will be just a few of the features to be noted in it.

Readers have already been informed that the

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Ensign and Vision will cease as separate publications, and that the purposes which they served will be carried on in modified form by the Herald in addition to its regular work as the official organ of the church.

Now for the first time in many years one periodical will carry the whole message of the church to its people. One subscription will care for everything. Although an increase of pages will be necessary to accomplish this, there will be no increase in the price of the Herald, according to the decision of the Board of Trustees.

We believe that our readers will like the new publication. We shall strive to please all those who take an active interest in the work of the church. Criticisms and suggestions will be gladly received, although we can not guarantee to satisfy every person who writes, for there are many differences of preference among the widely distributed and varied membership of the church.

We do believe that the publication will be good—better than it has ever been before. It will be our earnest and sincere endeavor to make it so, and to make it serve the needs of the church and its people.

The Herald Publishing House is planning a few released missionaries in selected territories to solicit subscriptions for the new Herald. These men are authorized agents, and will be able to identify themselves to members. The cooperation of our people will be appreciated. We believe they will be carrying on an important work.

What We Believe About God

The first pamphlet of a series of Studies in Latter Day Saint Belief will soon be off the press and ready for sale at the Herald Office at twenty-five cents per copy.

This series of studies and the companion series of "Studies in Latter Day Saint Ministry" are being prepared for the special benefit of the priesthood of the church, but they will be found of great interest to other students of our philosophy and practice. The pamphlet now issued contains seven lessons prepared by President Elbert A. Smith, accompanied by appropriate Scripture readings and questions. It is admirably suited for individual study or for use in priesthood classes, and local administrative officers are urged to see that it is widely recommended among members of the priesthood for this purpose. If possible such classes as are formed to study this pamphlet and its successors should not conflict with the classes in the Church School, since we are eager to have the assistance of the priesthood in the church school activities.

Financial conditions are such that it will not be

OFFICIAL

Notice

To Owners of The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Ten Year Five Per Cent Gold Bonds (Also called Debenture Bonds):

Immediately following this notice you will find an article entitled, "Program for Payment of Allowances for Missionary Families," to which your attention is directed. This article outlines the program whereby an effort will be made to pay wholly or in substantial part the past due allowances to missionaries' families.

As an important part of that program, and to further enable the church to meet the principal of its obligations, you are hereby requested to agree to an annual rate of interest on the bonds you hold of 3 per cent instead of 5 per cent for a period of two years from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1934.

A formal agreement to this effect will be mailed to each registered bondholder to be signed and returned immediately. Those holding unregistered bonds should write their acceptance to the Presiding Bishopric at once.

After you have read the article mentioned, and realize perhaps more fully the hard fight the church must make to safely come through these troubled times, we believe you will hasten to agree at whatever cost to yourself.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By FREDERICK M. SMITH.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Program for Payment of Allowances for Missionary Families

For months, because of decreasing income, details of which have been published in the Herald, one of the most urgent problems with which we have wrestled has been the obligation for allowances. As of September first the total owing up to that point possible to publish further pamphlets unless and until the Herald Publishing House has reasonable guarantee of an early return of the investment made in this pamphlet and in the Priesthood Manual issued a few months ago.

The priesthood have been calling for material of this quality for a long time. We urge that Brother Elbert's study pamphlet be purchased at once for two major reasons: the Saints and the priesthood need this instruction, and we need to sell out this first edition so as to make possible the publication of further valuable material.

was $83,043.80, representing slightly over ten and one-half months accumulation in most instances; Canadian and foreign allowance, however, being paid practically up to date because of unfavorable exchange rates between countries, which makes it inadvisable to transfer money to the United States.

Hitherto we have been slipping behind on an average of about 50 per cent of the total monthly allowance budget requirements each month. The effect of this failure to pay is becoming increasingly distressing, and calls for extreme measures on our part.

We have, therefore, gone to certain of our major creditors and have told them that until these allowance debts have been brought more nearly into line, payments upon principal are practically impossible. In this stand we have received cooperation, and we must approach, in like manner, other creditors as our obligations mature. This, you must realize, however, is an expedient only temporarily possible.

There are two things for which now we must unitedly call upon the members of the church:

1. To increase, by more extreme effort than hitherto, their contributions of tithes and offerings so as to wipe out or greatly reduce this past due allowance obligation to the missionaries, and

2. That those who hold the general church debenture bonds and those members to whom the church is owing in the form of interest bearing notes or accounts, reduce the interest rate they are receiving as follows:

Debentures from 5 per cent to 3 per cent from July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1934, saving annually.....	$ 7,000.00
Notes and accounts payable, reduce an average of 2 per cent, during their life, saving annually.....	4,200.00

Thus effecting total savings of.....$11,200.00

We have scanned the possibilities of moving in some other way to accomplish the results sought, but no feasible method appears which does not carry with it serious disadvantages. For example, we might further reduce the missionary list; but if this were done vital areas, including stakes would be left without full time officers and ministers. Aside from a very few items on which some little savings may be effected, the budget has already been trimmed to such an extent that reduction seems almost impossible at practically all points without "closing up shop." The budget for the first eight months of 1932 has been strictly adhered to. While some of the expenditures are slightly over the appropriation, others are under, so that the total expenditures, subject to adjustments which may have to be made, appear to be within the total appropriation. We wish to emphasize, however, the necessity of increasing our income to take care of the amount appropriated and expended.

You may ask why we should appeal at the same time for money with which to pay allowances and for a reduction of interest rates. There are several reasons:

1. Nonmember creditors can not be asked to forego payment on their principal, nor to withhold application of legal remedies, unless our own people show full inclination to take the lead in bearing the load. Our proposal, we believe, will prove the attitude of our people to be as completely loyal as in the past.

2. The joining of these two appeals will demonstrate to those of our number who are not creditors how urgent is our need, and to those who are creditors, that we are not turning to them simply because it is easy to do so. All are called upon to sacrifice jointly.

3. Furthermore, for those on the allowance list, the coming winter must in some manner be provided for if privation is to be avoided, and for those on the interest list, we must have time to act before January interest dates are upon us.

4. The proposal for the reduction of member interest is a part of a plan for the reduction of our interest obligations as a whole, which can not hope to succeed unless our members, as stated above, take the lead.

Both in February and in September 1931, we attempted to face the facts as they existed. That is exactly what we are trying to do now, fearing grave results if we continue to postpone, on the one hand, the payment of allowances so sorely needed by almost every family; and on the other, the reduction of our expenses more nearly in accordance with our income.

A recovery in the general economic situation is beginning to be manifest, but progress, most authorities believe, will be slow. Certainly, we should not put off to a possible prosperous tomorrow what should be done in an impoverished today.

We will not be alone in asking our creditors to reduce the interest to which they are entitled. Many mortgagors, representing public utilities, manufacturers, apartment houses, hotels, and even state and municipal governments have done likewise, and have succeeded with their request. Banks have been put to the necessity of reducing the interest rates on savings accounts. Creditors realize, in the final analysis, that safety of principal must be considered primary to the rate of return. It has always been the policy of the church, and continues so to be, to pay every dollar of just obligations, and our proposal is to make that policy more certain in its operation.

What has faced us in the past has been the lack of income enough to pay allowances in full and at the same time make the highly necessary debt payments. What we are now doing is temporarily putting the shoe on the other foot. Haste must be made in putting our plan into effect while the patience of the creditors holds. This would have been impossible sooner, as we, being new to the task, first had to gain the confidence of the major creditors, at least. It is to be noted that the missionary families are also creditors of the church and have cooperated in every way possible to enable the church to carry on. Even though in many instances they have been compelled to borrow in order to finance themselves they have not been drawing interest on their past due allowances. Coming to their assistance at this time will relieve their burdens and result in greater efficiency.

The steps to carry this program into effect may be divided into two parts:

First, with respect to the acceptance of our proposal to lower the interest rate on general church debenture bonds, a notice to such bondholders appears in this issue.

Second, with respect to bringing before the church the problem of unpaid allowances, several things are to be done:

1. On Sunday, October 9, next, district and branch authorities are asked to cooperate with local bishops, bishop's agents, and solicitors in laying this matter before the Saints in the services of the day; and thereafter personally visiting the membership to secure full cooperation.

2. Thereafter, particularly for the remainder of this year, to reemphasize and present anew the financial law of the church, by obedience to which the problems of the church may most surely be solved.

3. In consonance with the foregoing, the women of the church in stakes, districts, and branches are being asked to accept responsibility for bearing a portion of the load. Many women have asked to have a more specific part in the task of meeting the debts of the church. This opportunity will undoubtedly be responded to gladly.

4. Finally, the exigencies confronting us have led to assigning from Thanksgiving to Christmas for the "Sacrifice period," which in these trying times is so necessary a part of our activities. This time will add to the opportunity of our people to assist.

Application of funds raised during the working out of this program will be as follows:

First, funds arising from the efforts of the organization of women will be applied to the payment of allowances. In our opinion this is possible because these funds will not materially alter normal tithing payments.

Second, the funds arising through the usual tithing channels will be applied to nonpostponable current operating expenses and debts, with the balance to allowances. Because of the conditions through which we are passing we dare not state otherwise as to funds from the second source, for it would be folly to promise what we might not be able to do. We wish to reemphasize that it is necessary first of all to meet our operating expenses to keep the church running. To do this will enable us to more efficiently meet every obligation. Since we have gone and are going to such lengths to secure creditor cooperation while these allowances are being wholly or substantially met, it will be apparent to everyone that every possible cent will be applied to the reduction of the allowance obligation.

Special "Herald" on Prohibition Question

The prohibition issue has become so important, and the fighting strength of the Wets is so arrayed against the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act that the full power of those who want to continue the fight against the liquor evil must be marshaled. The Herald has already printed a series of strong articles on the subject by Bishop A. B. Phillips. Now that election time is approaching, and the people will have to choose between Wet and Dry candidates in both parties, we feel that some special attention to the subject is necessary. The flood of false propaganda put out by the Wets, with their extravagant and ridiculous claims and statements, has tended to pervert public sentiment upon the subject.

The Herald of October 19 will devote special space to this question, and will be a special "Prohibition Number," to which a number of church men will make some important contributions. It is felt that this special number should be in the hands of every voter of the church. Some people in every branch are interested in the Dry cause, and it is hoped that they will order extra copies of this issue for distribution to our people and possibly to others to enlighten them upon the subject before the election.

Orders for the extra copies should be in the Herald Office by Saturday, October 15. Be sure to allow time for the mails to reach us. Single copies will be mailed to any address for five cents apiece, and they may be secured in lots for fifty cents a dozen.

NEWS BRIEFS

Wales Firm in the Faith

Welsh Saints stand firm in the faith. Interesting meetings are being held and there is improvement in the latter-day work, according to the Southern England and Wales District Herald. July 17, a young man and his mother who had been investigating for some time, were baptized, bringing to four the total baptized this year in Llanelly. Members in this region were favored this summer with a visit from A. T. Trapp, bishop of the British Isles.

Quindaro Branch Prepares for Rally Day

The way in which Quindaro Branch, Kansas City Stake, chose to prepare for Rally Day, last Sunday, was both effective and pleasant. Beginning with a special service Sunday evening, September 18, at which President F. M. McDowell was the speaker, they launched into a week of meetings and a preview of the new year's work on Monday night with a workers' banquet and conference.

These Rally Day preparations were expressive of the development of the branch and its workers in dignity, personality, expression, and consecration. The forward-looking program which Quindaro has enjoyed during the past two years is training the workers, producing effective church services, paying the branch bills, and helping everyone. Elder H. A. Higgins is the pastor at Quindaro, ably assisted by Sister Higgins and H. A. Hallier, church school superintendent.

Things Are Happening

Apostle John W. Rushton's first address in England was given to the Saints at the Southern England and Wales district reunion within four hours of landing, Sunday, July 31.

Of the thirteen church members at Birmingham, Alabama, two are this year attending Graceland College. They are Wilbur and Elbert Chandler.

While at the Maine reunion in August Patriarch U. W. Greene baptized William G. Porter, jr., the fourth generation of his family to be baptized into the church by our veteran missionary brother.

Saints living in the region surrounding the Silver Lake, Washington, reunion grounds, responded to an invitation of the reunion committee, and gathered at the reunion grounds on Labor Day. There they worked hard getting the place in shape for the winter and making it more convenient and beautiful for next year's reunion. Enthusiasm was high, and they report a gladsome experience of working together.

July was Inventory Month in the Australasian Mission, and district and financial workers combined in an intensive effort of teaching the financial law. Their efforts were rewarded. Many more inventories are now filed in this mission than ever before, and the Saints have a better understanding of the law.

Young people of the Maine reunion wonder if they have a record. At one of their early morning prayer meetings fifty-eight persons were present, and there were fifty-seven testimonies.

Oelwein, Iowa, women are organized in an "Emma Burton Circle." At a regular meeting not long ago they exchanged favorite canning recipes. But the most popular recipe that afternoon was one for old-fashioned soap making.

The branch at Lorain, Ohio, organized May 27, 1928, under direction of Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elder James E. Bishop, has sent its first News letter to the Herald. It reports growth, and its aim is Zionie conditions among its own membership.

The congregation at Rock Island, Illinois, is appreciably increased. Davenport, Iowa, Saints just across the Mississippi River, are making that branch their church center.

Apostle Roy S. Budd is driving from fifty to two hundred miles a day in Colorado, speaking at a different place each evening. His help is much appreciated by the Saints of that district.

Late September Birthdays

Now that the attention of the church is drawn to the birth date of the late Prophet Joseph Smith, the commemoration of which will occur in November, it is interesting to think of the late September birthdays of former and present members of the church. Here are only a few birth dates of those known for their good works: Peter Whitmer, jr., Heman C. Smith, and Henry Kemp, September 27; Alvin Knisley, September 22; Myron A. McConley, September 17; Albert Carmichael, September 14; Eveline Allen Burgess, mother of the present church historian, September 19; Martha Eleanor Kearney, well known church writer, September 23; Charles Lake, September 20, and John T. Gresty, September 29.

Joseph Smith

By Inez S. Davis

(This article is intended to be read, or to be memorized and delivered, as a part of the program in celebration of the Joseph Smith Centennial.)

One real misfortune of our Latter Day Saint youth is that they are too young to remember "Brother" Joseph's day. For that was a glorious day, and worth much to remember. Our grandfather's time-yellowed letters welcomed its dawning with kindling hope; our fathers gloried in its high noon; and those of our own time who saw its afternoon shadows deepen recall that the sun still shone beautiful, strong, and warm to the very hour of its setting.

A century ago this month the little village of Kirtland, Ohio, bustled with unsuppressed excitement. Every cottage, however humble, was filled to its doors with those who came by horseback, by stage, or even on foot to learn of a much-heralded new religion. Strangers unloaded their families at the very door of the prophet, announced that they had come to do the "will of the Lord," and stood waiting the dictum of the servant of God. That great man was away on some mission in the East, but beds had been made on the floors all over the little frame building to accommodate the strangers who waited to see him. Into such a scene on November 6, 1832, was born the third Joseph Smith who was destined by his loved personality to dominate the greater part of a century of Latter Day Saint history.

But the church in the heyday of its glorious beginnings carried on with enthusiasm, scarcely noting the babe in Sister Emma's cradle. They could not see the impending doom towards which their excitement was rapidly carrying them, least of all could they foresee that in the latent character of that young child were qualities destined to prove the salvation of the church in its hour of need, for the day was soon to come when this grave little Joseph, son of Joseph with his solemn mien and deep, brown eyes was to become the earthly hope of a sorely tried people, betrayed, scattered, broken-hearted by the perfidy of those who should have led them to victory.

In the shifting scenes that swiftly followed his birth "young" Joseph had his share, even though it were only the part of a serious-minded little boy in the midst of great adventure. On through moments of great peril, and moments of great rejoicing he saw the drama of his father's life move swiftly to the final tragedy at Carthage, that left him standing by his father's blood-stained form, feeling the weight of the world on his shoulders. He was only twelve, and the sole dependence of his mother in an unfriendly world, for even those who should have been her friends fell from her now, when she refused to share their ambitious schemes.

The city "young Joseph's" father had built melted away as magically as it had risen. He watched the people go. Many to the westward, rejoicing in affluence, singing hymns, others to east, north, and south, and in the hearts of many of these there was nothing but bitterness as they looked back on the beautiful city where they had hoped to spend their days, praying only through their blinding tears that they might never again hear the name of Latter-Day-Saint. But there were those, too, although cruelly betrayed by their brethren who saw the vision of a new dawn, when "young Joesph" came into his own. Ah! It was no idle pen that first called the Saints of that day "bleeding Zion."

The cohesive force that had made the church a great organization in but fourteen short years had suddenly dissolved and left it to fly apart in many irreconcilable fragments. One time brothers and comrades became cherished enemies; unity became chaos.

And Emma Hale and her sons stood aloof from it all, in the ruins of a deserted city, and the silence of a deserted home. Nauvoo, once the most magnificent city in Illinois, was now a dusty village of long rows of empty houses, and unoccupied shops and stores; the "Mansion House" that had once echoed with the cheerful laughs and witty repartee of great visitors to this strange new city was empty now save for the chance traveler or rough river man. Young Joseph thought little of the tragedy that had befallen the church, but the tragedy that had befallen him was very real. He wanted to study, to be a great scholar, and he had no earthly heritage except poverty and a name that his father's professed friends had coupled with ignominy and shame. He longed to lift up his head, and walk free of this burden of disgrace as other men did. Out of this first great mental conflict of life came this firm resolution: "If the father shall be judged by the son, then with the assistance of God I will so order my life that it shall be a living testimony refuting the accusations against him."

How well he kept that youthful vow may be judged by the untarnished record of the man who was more than once elected to public offices by the suffrages of the community in which his father was mobbed to death. He says for many years the very thought of ever taking his father's place in church activity was actually repulsive to him, but his repulses did not affect the faith and prayers of his father's old-time friends who still clung desperately to the idea that "young Joseph" would yet gather up the fragments and carry his father's cause on to victory.

Then came the time when their vision came true, and Joseph, young Joseph, as he was always known to old-time Latter Day Saints, came to Amboy and offered himself to the handful of Saints in conference there, came, he told them, impelled by a power not his own. The Saints who welcomed him with joy and tears on that memorable day are all gone now, but the promise he made to them there still rings down the years. The scattered ones who read with brimming eyes his first "epistle" and hastened to his standard are fast disappearing, but we still read it after many years with an old-time thrill. And there can be no feeling in written words unless there was feeling in the man who wrote them, no thrill in spoken vows of fidelity unless there is a thrill of faith in the man who spoke them.

Joseph Smith loved men, and they loved him. He enjoyed mixing with people. He liked the give-and-take of life. A group of men and women quickly gathered round him and gave him their devoted loyalty and life-long friendship. They did not always agree with him, nor did he ask that. He had that reverence for personality found in great leaders of men, and that very respect for personality made him an emancipator, a maker of strong men. His own strong individuality caused him to demand for others the right to become free and independent souls. Liberty in thought and action was his watchword. The men who would be his friends must think their own thoughts, be their own selves, not weak echoes of him. And yet in that great spirit, the great love and understanding he showed to all, was an awakening force. To come in contact with "Brother Joseph" made even those who were "down-and-out" feel that they were yet good for something.

Joseph Smith blended gentleness and virility, forgiving love and uncompromising courage. He never forgot the purpose of his youth, to make his father's name honorable in the earth. To this man and those who worked with him and to the untarnished public and private records they made, we Latter Day Saints of today owe the privilege of holding up our heads, and looking the world in the face while we say that we are Latter Day Saints! It was these hands now crumbling into dust that opened the doors of opportunity in life for us to enter unencumbered.

With infinite patience this great leader of men built of broken fragments a united whole. With love and understanding he weeded out the wild, new growth of later years that was forcing the different groups apart, and brought them back to the old paths to walk together once more a band of brothers. And he was "brother" to them in very truth. No adulation could spoil him. Constantly he insisted that those who loved him accord him no privileges above his brethren. No man was too poor, too ignorant, too maimed, or too unfortunate to be left outside the circle of his great fraternity. No home was too humble, no table too meager for him to grace as a guest.

How rich those who knew him and walked with him; how poor those who never can. The loving

A Message From "Young Joseph"

EXTRACTS FROM THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT THE AMBOY CONFERENCE, APRIL 6, 1860

I would say to you, brethren, as I hope you may be, and in faith I trust you are, as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume.

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any men or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

God works by means best known to himself, and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do.

For two or three years past deputations have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church; but I have answered each and everyone of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people.

I do not propose to assume this position in order hearts of thousands clung to him, pleaded daily for the lengthening of his days, but the great man himself as he grew older looked without fear toward the setting sun. "I am not afraid to go," he said. "I have never owned a dishonest dollar in my life. And I have never knowingly wronged man, woman or child." And thus he went down into the west as he had lived, calmly, sweetly, with undimmed hope for the future.

Of the grief of his people little need be said; of the success of his life's purpose, we all know. Perhaps it was summed up best by the editor of a great newspaper in the city near which he lived when he said:

"He was the Prophet, but first of all he was the Christian gentleman and the good citizen. As such he lived; as such he died; as such he will be remembered by all outside the household of his faith. His followers themselves can have no legacy of remembrance more honorable than this appraisal of the people among whom he lived and labored so many years.

"Kindly, cheerful, loyal to his own creed, tolerant of those of others, standing for modesty, simplicity, good citizenship, embodying in his private and public life all the virtues which adorn a character worthy of emulation—such is the revelation which Joseph Smith leaves to the world, as the real interpretation of an ecclesiastical message translated into terms of human character."

to amass wealth out of it, neither have I sought it as a (source of) profit.

I know opinions are various in relation to these matters. I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as the leader of this people. But I have been well aware of the motives which might be ascribed to me,—motives of various kinds, at the foundation of all which is selfishness,—should I come forth to stand in the place where my father stood.

I have believed that should I come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father.

I have endeavored as far as possible to keep myself unbiased. I never conversed with J. J. Strang, for in those days I was but a boy, and in fact am now but a boy. I had not acquired a sufficient knowledge of men to be capable of leading myself, setting aside the leading of others.

There is but one principle taught by the leaders of any faction of this people that I hold in utter abhorrence; that is a principle taught by Brigham Young and those believing in him. I have been told that my father taught such doctrines. I have never believed it and never can believe it. If such things were done, then I believe they never were done by divine authority. I believe my father was a good man, and a good man never could have promulgated such doctrines.

I believe in the doctrines of honesty and truth. The Bible contains such doctrines, and so do the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants, which are auxiliaries to the Bible.

I have my peculiar notions in regard to revelation, but am happy to say that they accord with those I am to associate with, at least those of them with whom I have conversed. I am not very conversant with those books, (pointing to a volume before him). Not so conversant as I should be and will be. The time has been when the thought that I should assume the leadership of this people was so repulsive to me, that it seemed as if the thing could never be possible.

The change in my feelings came slowly, and I did not suffer myself to be influenced by extraneous circumstances, and have never read the numerous works sent me which had a bearing on this subject, for fear they might entice me into wrongdoing. It is my determination to do right and let heaven take care of the result. Thus I come to you free from any taint of sectarianism, taints from thoughts of the varied minds I have come in contact with; and thus hope to be able to build up my own reputation as a man.

It has been said that a Mormon elder, though but a stripling, possessed a power unequaled by almost any other preacher. This arises from a depth of feeling, and the earnestness with which they believe the doctrines they teach, and it is this feeling that I do not wish to trifle with.

I know that Brigham Young is considered a man of talent, by some a bold and fortunate man, and by others an unscrupulous and bad man, accordingly as circumstances differ.

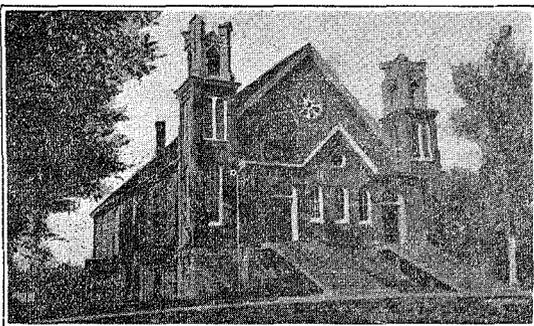

Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew; but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church.

Some, who had ought to know the proprieties of the church, have told me that no certain form was necessary in order for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage; yet I know that if I attempted to lead as a prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now. And so I have come not of my own dictation to this sacred office.

I believe that we owe duties to our country and to society, and are amenable to the laws of the land, and have always considered it my duty to act upon this principle; and I do say that among the people where I live I have as many good and true friends as I could desire among those of any society.

In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability, and the influence my name may bring, together with what little power I possess; and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals.

I do not care to say any more at present, but will simply add that if the same Spirit which prompts my coming, prompts also my reception, I am with you.

Hymns for the Joseph Smith Centennial

By Mabel Carline

Church music found a warm and friendly supporter in the person of the late Joseph Smith. It was he who, through the voice of inspiration, said, "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song." This knowledge of divine sanction together with Brother Smith's kindly attitude gave immeasurable encouragement to our musical workers in the earlier days of the church as well as later.

His interest in music was manifold. Instrumental music, vocal music, choral renditions and hymn writing all profited by his abundant patronage. Many of the Saints now living in Lamoni recall that he often found time in his busy life to add his voice to the bass section of the Lamoni Choir and various choir directors gratefully received his help at conferences and reunions throughout the church.

A hasty survey of the old Saints' Harp shows that the words to over thirty hymns were attributed to him. Of these five have been selected for the new Saints' Hymnal. When one studies these hymns he can not help being impressed with the fact that Joseph Smith was a man who walked with God.

Among his favorite hymns were, "Father When in Love to Thee," number 151; "Redeemer of Israel," number 190, and "I Know That My Redeemer Lives," number 256. The excellent quality of these stately hymns will serve to show his fine discrimination and musical taste.

It is appropriate that the music for his memorial service should include some of his favorite hymns. Then one or two of the hymns that speak so strongly of the spirit of the Saints during those trying early days of the Reorganization could be selected. "Let Us Shake Off the Coals From Our Garments," number 188, and, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," number 415, are representative of this period.

Of Brother Smith's own poetical settings, "Send Forth the Sowers," number 390, would be an excellent hymn-anthem for the choir. Many congregations do not sing this hymn well and the choir will enjoy working out a fine expressive rendition of it. The Saints' Hymnal contains good expression marks, if followed carefully. "Tenderly, Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On," number 267, was written after the very sudden death of Brother Smith's little six-year-old daughter, Azuba. Lucy Smith Lysinger writes that he seemed to suffer more at the loss of Azuba than at the death of any of the others who preceded him. While still grieving from this agonizing experience he wrote this tenderly beautiful hymn. A mixed quartet of good voices will add greatly to the

The Manuscript of the "Book of Mormon"

At the conference of 1884 it was decided it would be advisable to secure the privilege of examining the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, then in possession of David Whitmer, of Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, for the purpose of comparing it with the editions put out by the church, in order to correct errors of any description which may have crept into them through transcription and publication.

. . . We found, next day, that Elder Whitmer had arranged for one or two others also to be present during the examination of the manuscript, as he felt himself unable to undertake alone the responsibility of the important supervision. Accordingly, Philander Page, a relative of Elder Whitmer by marriage, and John C. Whitmer were assigned this duty, Mr. Page spending the greater part of the time with us.

After lunch we began the solemn task. Repairing to the house of Elder Whitmer, in his presence we all knelt down and implored Divine sanction and the aid of the Holy Spirit to direct and confirm us in the duty we were striving to perform.

It was agreed that one of us should hold and read the manuscript, while the others, holding respectively copies of the Palmyra edition, the Nauvoo edition, and the edition published by the Reorganization, carefully compared what was read with what they held; also that we were to "take turns" in reading aloud as might be found desirable.

The committee continued at work daily, from seven in the morning until six at night, with an intermission for lunch. . . . We felt that the work was well and faithfully done. Brother T. W. Smith and Alexander kept a daily record, making notes as the work proceeded.

. . . In reflecting upon this work it must be con-service if they sing this number in the gentle, trusting spirit it breathes. One of the most beautiful closing numbers in all hymn literature is "Brethren Breathe One Fervent Prayer," number 97. Our congregations always seem to enjoy singing this hymn before being dismissed from a particularly impressive service.

All of the above selections are given numbers as listed in the new Saints' Hymnal. These are also in the old Hymnal with the exception of "Tenderly," which may be found in Zion's Praises.

ceded that it was timely, for a great deal had been said and much speculation indulged in about the differences said to exist between the various editions and the original manuscript. The result of our examination showed plainly that there had been no vital divergences from the text and descriptions, the supposed errors being chiefly in verbiage, by few of which was the sense even slightly altered. The list of differences showed a few variations in spelling; and, except in one instance, the members of the committee were entirely in unity in their understanding of the manuscript as found. In one place in the published book occurs the phrase arrest the Scripture, while in other places, under similar construction in the sentence, the word arrest is found as wrest, meaning twisting or changing out of place. In one place in the manuscript we found the word written in such a way as to warrant the opinion that the word was really arrest—at least, so thought the majority of the committee. From this conclusion I disagreed, believing it to be the same word with the same meaning as the word wrest found in other places.

My remembrance of the time spent in the home of Elder David Whitmer while engaged in this work was one of the pleasantest episodes of that period. It was especially appreciated because it afforded us an intimate association with the aged patriarch, and because we thoroughly enjoyed the friendly and interesting communion together, as we read and discussed the passages of the sacred and historic old document.

At the close of our work, those who had sat with us from time to time—John C. Whitmer and the other relative, Philander Page—expressed their satisfaction and approval of the fairness and courtesy with which Father Whitmer was treated by the committee.

Upon a few occasions during the sessions, Elder Whitmer was visited by citizens or strangers calling upon one business or another. Once Colonel Giles, a resident of Richmond, brought a stranger by the name of Captain Fall, and their interview with Elder Whitmer resulted in their being brought into the room where we were at work, where they were introduced to us and permitted to see the manuscript.

The Colonel, in an affable and friendly manner, discussed with Elder Whitmer the evidence the latter had borne as a special witness to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Rather suggestively he asked if it might not have been possible that he, Mr. Whitmer, had been mistaken, and had simply been moved upon by some mental disturbance or hallucination which had deceived him into thinking he saw the Personage, the Angel, the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the sword of Laban.

How well and distinctly I remember the manner in which Elder Whitmer arose and drew himself up to his full height—a little over six feet—and said, in solemn and impressive tones:

"No, sir! I was not under any hallucination, nor was I deceived! I saw with these eyes and I heard with these ears! I know whereof I speak!"

Everyone present, including the Colonel and his friend, stood under the spell of the impressive silence which followed this emphatic declaration. It was as if we were in the very presence of the Angel himself!

I went out of the room with the visitors, and the Colonel remarked:

"It is somewhat difficult, Elder Smith, for us everyday men to believe the statement made by Mr. Whitmer, but one thing is certain—no man could hear him make his affirmation, as he has to us in there, and doubt for one moment the honesty and sincerity of the man himself. He fully believes he saw and heard, just as he has stated he did."

We felt wonderfully blessed at being permitted to hear, for ourselves, this positive and emphatic testimony of Elder Whitmer. At the close of our task (which had lasted nearly a fortnight), as he bade us goodbye he expressed his gratitude to God that the manuscript had been preserved thus far, and for this visit of our committee and the complete and satisfactory examination and comparisons which had taken place; for he believed, as we did, that it would set at rest much controversy—which, indeed, it has done.

An Echo of Earlier Days

At one visit to this place (Maysville, Missouri,) I found the principal hotel in charge of an LL. D. by the name of Dowd. His wife was the daughter of John Dykeman, marshal for two or three terms at Plano. With this officer I had become acquainted soon after removing my home to Plano, when a controversy had arisen between us over his having cited me to work out my taxes on the road. He had come into my office in a very brusque manner, stating that he supposed I had been in the village long enough to be counted a citizen and presenting a bill for poll taxes.

I was quite well acquainted with the statutes of Illinois concerning taxes and their collection. I also knew that local road supervisors and marshals were often in the habit of allowing denominational clergymen to escape the payment of poll taxes. So I decided I would have a bit of sport with the officer. One preacher in Plano was a Mr. Fisher, and another was a Mr. Strout, a small but spirited man. When Dykeman presented the bill I asked if he had collected taxes from Preachers Strout and Fisher.

Rather shortly he asked what had that to do with me.

I said, "Mr. Dykeman, I know what my duties under the statutes are, and I am willing to pay my road taxes according to the State law. But you just order out Elder Strout and the other ministers of the town to work their taxes out on the road, and then notify me, and I will be right there, too, with any tool you may name, as provided in the law. I will cheerfully work on the State roads along with them, my fellow ministers, but I want you to understand clearly that I will neither pay nor work these taxes if you or the Town Council allow these other men to go free from theirs. They get salaries from their congregations, while I work with my head and hands for my support, but I do not propose to pay any taxes from which you exempt other ministers!"

He grew a little angry at first and said, "I know how to proceed to collect the taxes."

"Yes, sir; of course you must know. But I give you to understand that I know, also, and before you can compel me to pay in cash you must allow me an opportunity to work them out on the road. So you give notice of work to be done and I will be there providing the other ministers are also there to work theirs. We will work together."

A few days after this he came in and again asked me to pay the taxes. I told him I was of the same mind as I had been before, but added:

"Mr. Dykeman, I do not want to get you into trouble, and I will tell you what I will do. If you will show me the receipt or entry on your records where these other ministers have paid, the money is ready and forthcoming from me, all in friendship and good will. But if you attempt to collect from me by law what you have not required of those others, we will just have some fun over it!"

The fact was, some of the inhabitants of Plano, including the aldermanic authorities, were a bit inclined at first to treat us "Mormons," as they called us, as if we were interlopers and had no right there, and I proposed that we should be treated as citizens—honest, upright citizens as long as we conducted ourselves in that manner—and further, that I, myself, should be recognized as a minister of the Gospel. And so I informed the officer, with an earnestness that convinced him of the sincerity and fairness of my position. I assured him I had no intention of shirking the tax, but did not propose to be discriminated against if the other ministers were allowed to evade theirs.

He was mollified in spirit and some little time afterwards came again into my office with the remark, "Well, Mr. Smith, Preacher Strout has paid his taxes!"

"All right, sir, and here is the money for mine."

I paid him and took a receipt, and even today, more than forty years after, I am forced to smile as I recall the hateful expression which was on the face of Elder Strout when next I met him in the street! I could see he had been informed of the stand I had taken and that he was offended. All the time he remained in the village our acquaintance went no further than the tip of the hat and a "good morning," when we chanced to meet, for he was "sore" to the very last.

I had no further trouble about my poll taxes throughout the period of my residence there. John Dykeman became quite a friend to me, and his daughter, the Mrs. Dowd whom I found at Maysville, treated me very courteously, inviting me to be their guest for the several days while in the town. I accepted the urgent invitation, spending two nights and one day with them. Mrs. Dowd commended me very warmly to her husband and her other guests.

Such instances as this I have related at least allow me to rejoice that as a citizen I had tried to conduct myself, in Plano and elsewhere, honorably and with due respect to my duties in the community as well as in my obligations as a member of the Church of Christ, the great body politic of Christianity. Other ministers that came into contact with me sometimes treated me cavalierly at first, but upon better acquaintance there was usually established considerable cordiality in our relations—for which I have cause to be thankful.

What About Deathbed Repentance?

Referring to the man in our neighboring town who had said he was afraid to join our church, I may say that I have indulged in considerable speculation about him. I had frequently come in contact with individuals whose lives showed a deliberate disregard of the moral responsibility which should motivate members of society. Their conduct evidenced a lack of proper intellectual balance which amounted almost to an obliquity of the moral perceptions. In such cases it might be questioned whether or not their conduct were the result of willful sin or of an ignorance for which they could hardly be held responsible.

I recall a young man who, though of otherwise irreproachable conduct, was a helpless devotee of the drink habit. This weakness caused him to gradually neglect the responsibilities of his home and his duty to his wife and children, and to be satisfied with the scant living afforded by a Governmental annuity received for services as a railroad employee rendered during the war. He became a periodical drunkard, utterly oblivious to the usual restraints of citizenship, general association, or church relations. The questions have often arisen in my mind:

"How far will God hold this man responsible? When and how did his responsibility begin and end, if any ever existed?"

Similar questions had occurred to me during —'s later life and last illness. I had knowledge of several episodes in his life that showed him to be hopelessly immoral in some directions, and I have wondered how far he would be held responsible for his conduct. Was his weakness due to some mental defect for which he was not to blame? Did he become thus indifferent to righteousness of conduct through a gradual course of development in that direction, gradually immunizing himself from all ministrations of a better spirit? Was it a stirring or awakening recognition of such moral responsibility that caused him to say, with tears in his eyes when I suggested his yielding obedience to the Gospel of repentance:

"Joseph, it is too late!"

Did there flit through the mind of the dying man, then incapable of committing any more sin (other than those mental ones which may amount to sinning) thoughts of his long life unmarked by regard for the moral restraints and inhibitions? Did such thoughts and memories cause the hopelessness expressed in his reply? Did he fear that the yielding to the formal act of confession of sin and plea for forgiveness, such as baptism implies, would be regarded by the Great Judge as blasphemous and therefore unavailing?

So I also wondered at the statement of this man who, in listening to Evangelist Jones, had been made conscious of his own sins yet had expressed a "fear" to unite himself in church relationship to me and my comrades—a body of people trying to keep in view that golden mean of Christian responsibility which lies between extreme fanaticism and emotionalism on the one hand and cold, unfeeling reason on the other.

I asked myself: Did he fear—and had he reason to fear—that such a step of obedience on his part—expressing repentance, confessing sin, asking forgiveness—would be regarded in the great Judgment Day as a worthless act because of the enormity of his prior misdoings, and the steady disregard of moral regulations and of man's duty to God and to his fellow men which had marked his former years?

Was there borne in upon his consciousness at that hour the finality and inexorable nature of the fiat of the Almighty:

"The soul that sinneth shall die!"

Did he feel that he had already forfeited his right to a better life and that he must be resigned to take the awful consequences of an unforgiven and unregenerated entity as a result of the evil already wrought in his life? Is it possible that the mercy and loving-kindness of the heavenly Father, who is also the Great and Infallible Judge of all things human, are in reality limited in their scope, and that a life of sin, steadily persisted in, finally removes a man beyond the field of their operation and thereby prevents the exercise of leniency? And in the moment of great soul stress does a man who has lived as this one and many others had lived have a full and overwhelming consciousness of this decree and of his hopeless ostracism from saving grace—such a consciousness as would cause him to say, "Joseph, it is too late!" or "Mr. Smith, I am afraid!"

Pondering and speculating over these questions as I often have in an effort to reconcile such thoughts with others which insist that salvation is for the sinner at whatever point he chooses to avail himself of its privileges and obey its conditions, I have not been able, in my human weakness, to solve it to my entire satisfaction.

However, this I may confess: I am absolutely sure that, though I believe in probation after death, I dare not preach from the pulpit or advocate in private conversation the thought or theory that men to whom has come in this life an opportunity to see the light of God revealed in the person, life, and teaching of his Son Jesus Christ and who, in spite of that opportunity, have persisted in living an utterly careless life, indifferent to and scornful of that obedience to that Light spread abroad upon the earth for their guidance, shall be given beyond the grave a further opportunity to yield that obedience to the command, "Ye must be born again," which they were unwilling to give on this side of the portal. I have not been able to promise that to such "sinners by omission" shall be granted that splendid fulfillment of development and progress toward God which those who hear and obey and strive while in this earth-life have been privileged to make.

Reflecting thus, I find consolation in the thought that the final destiny of all individuals rests in the just and wise hands of Him who has not erred in the creation of the world nor in the establishment of the moral laws to rule therein. He has, as yet, made no mistake, nor will he. And in his counsel he has assured me that it is my duty to forgive all men, even while to him, who knoweth all things, is reserved the right to forgive whom he will.

The Foundations of Our Faith

II.—GOD AS CREATOR

By Elbert A. Smith

In the beginning God created.—Genesis 1: 1. (King James Version.)

By these things we know that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God, the framer of heaven and earth and all things which are in them, and that he created man male and female; after his own image and in his own likeness created he them, and gave unto them commandments that they should love and serve him the only living and true God, and that he should be the only being whom they should worship.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

If it is inevitable (as has been stated) that our confession of faith should begin with the words, "We believe in God," it is almost equally inevitable that in our study of Deity we should consider him first as Creator. The origin of things is a problem intruding itself at once into any consideration of life, whether it be religious, philosophical, or scientific. Most other conclusions, as we develop our philosophy of life, will be determined by our conclusions concerning the question of origin. If we came by chance and there is no purpose or system in our life, and no future, many men will feel that they may as well shrug their shoulders and make the best of it, getting pleasure by any means within reach out of the passing moment of conscious existence:

If my body came from brutes, my soul uncertain, or a fable, Why not bask amid the senses while the sun of morning shines?
—Tennyson.

But if we have faith that back of us is an infinite Creator who has certain purposes concerning us, and in us an immortal soul, the matter takes on a vastly different aspect. Revelation as found in the Bible addresses itself at once to this problem of origin: "In the beginning God created."—Genesis 1: 1. (King James Version.)

(The Inspired Version has an important variation here which will be considered when we come to the personality of God: "In the beginning I created,"—obviously the revelation of a personal God.)

"In the beginning God created." We have thus in five short words at least three great ideas brought to our attention: The beginning or origin; creation; and God. All of this is crowded into a single sentence as a rich promise of the revelations that follow.

The Panorama of Life

Quite literally, as soon as we become self-conscious, we "find ourselves here," and we discover that we are surrounded by life. We see about us innumerable forms of plant, animal, and human life, almost infinitely varied and complex; so many forms that no one knows how many there are. As we look out into the universe we discover that there are other worlds, so many of them that no one knows how many there are.

In view of the fact that this earth is crowded with life "from pole to pole," it would be strange if some of these other worlds were not also carriers of life. (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 6.) Be that as it may, on this earth we find ourselves viewing a marvelous panorama of life. We see the miracle of birth, through the fleshly portals of which we ourselves came by the grace of our mothers, who suffered that we might be. We witness the struggles of mature life. We see the procession going down in old age, until it disappears within the marble portals of the tomb; and we know that every step we take, whether we dance or walk, takes us that much nearer to those portals.

The Problem of Origin

Inevitably, then, we are led to ask questions, especially about origin. Even ordinary curiosity would prompt us to ask questions. Doctor Talmadge said that he was born asking, Why? At least, as soon as we are able to ask questions, we wish to know, "Why?" We continue that process as we grow older, though perhaps, learning more, we direct our questions more intelligently: Whence? Why? Whither?

There is involved in these questions more than idle curiosity; our present and our future hope is wrapped up in the answers we receive. We have people coming to us with sad tidings. Clarence Darrow tells us that the world is a "mad house" and that "life is a purposeless, senseless, fool thing" that must be lived because we are in it, and when it is over we are done with it for ever. On the other hand, the angel heralding Christ's advent declared, "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Philosophy and Science

If we can get at the origin of things, we have a key to the situation; we have a starting point. And so men have gone to the schools of the philosophers of all ages. O Socrates, Aristotle, Confucius, what does it all mean? What is back of it? Who started it? When they endeavor to answer, they very soon fall into arguments among themselves, and we decide that they do not know very much more about it than we do.

The study of philosophy is exceedingly interesting; but not very enlightening, so far as the origin of life is concerned. Walter W. Smith used to say that the study of philosophy is like walking around a block. The exercise is good and we see interesting things; but we come back to the point from which we started.

The banks of the Euphrates, Tigris, Jordan, Nile, Orontes, Po, and Tiber, were the silent places of meditation of thinkers during many centuries . . . Pythagoras, Plato, Zeno, Epictetus, Socrates, Pliny, Seneca, Hegel, Spinoza, Kant, Newton, Stuart, Berkeley, Hume, Paine, and a hundred others . . . More than one hundred philosophical systems were the product of these wonderful and long-continued series of mentation. None of these found the Creator.—Larkin, Within the Mind Maze, page 385.

We turn to the schools of modern science, and though they tell us much that is both interesting and important and often confirming to our faith, they have little light upon the question of origin. They have dug into the earth and read its strata, they have looked far into the heavens, they have studied atoms and electrons and cosmic rays, they have projected the X-ray through the heart and brain of man, but the puzzle of the origin of life, even of the nature of mind itself, evades them. Kelvin used to say that the Infinite has reserved a place for his own appearing in the beginning of all life.

Lodge declared: "Let us admit, as scientific men, that of real origin, even of the simplest thing, we know nothing, not even of a pebble."—Science and Immortality, page 26.

Edwin G. Conklin, professor of Biology at Princeton, says:

Science can not solve the great mysteries of our existence—who we are, whither we are bound, what it all means. Faith alone assures us that there is a definite purpose in all experience. This knowledge makes life worth living and service a privilege. . . . Atheism leads to fatalism and despair, while theism leads to faith, hope and love. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Has Science Discovered God, by E. H. Cotton, published by Thomas Y. Crowell.

The Answer in Revelation

We go next to religion with our questions. With hands uplifted, almost from the beginning man has voiced this plea, "O Lord, tell us!" In answer to that question comes the declaration, "In the beginning God created." That is the beginning of God's revelation of himself and his purposes concerning us, of our origin and our present duty and our destiny. That is the keynote, the beginning of it all.

The answer comes to us dogmatically; it comes ex cathedra—Almighty God speaking officially from the great cathedral of the universe. We can take it or let it alone. But there is a great deal at stake as to whether we shall take it or leave it alone. There is only one alternative, one other choice: Either we and the things we see about us came by design, by creation, or they came by blind chance. On that point, Ernest Haeckel, who, a generation ago, was one of the most prominent proponents of materialism and atheism, made this statement:

There is no definite aim and no special purpose to be traced in it, there seems no alternative but to leave everything to "blind chance." . . . The development of the Universe is a monistic mechanical process, in which we discover no aim or purpose whatever . . . all is the result of chance. —The Riddle of the Universe.

Mark well the statement that we have choice between two alternatives, and no other choice. Lord Kelvin said:

There is nothing between absolute scientific belief in a creative Power and the acceptance of the theory of a fortuitous concourse of atoms.—Christian Apologetics, page 26, speech by Lord Kelvin before Christian Association, University of London, May, 1903.

This expression, "fortuitous concourse of atoms," means simply that things came by chance, that atoms fortunately fell together to form living creatures. Lord Kelvin says that is the only hypothesis we have left if we reject the idea of creation by design. Cicero in the name of philosophy rejected that theory, and Kelvin in the name of science rejected it. Long ago revelation rejected it in the name of God.

Blind Chance at Work?

When we see a canvas that is covered with a beautiful painting, we realize that back of it was design and personality. We do not think for a moment that some artist mixed together a pot of colors haphazard and then threw the paint on the canvas and the picture came by chance. (I am not now talking about impressionists and cubists, because that may be the way they paint their pictures.)

The materialist and the atheist would ask us to believe that in the beginning blind chance threw the box of paints on the canvas of eternal time and infinite space, and the atoms fortunately fell so as to create worlds which eternally revolve in their orderly courses; and on the hills and in the valleys of this old earth they so fell as to form green grass and flowers and growing trees; they so fell by accident as to create birds in the air and running horses and laughing children and intelligent men and women. Atheism asks us to believe too much. It is easier for faith to believe in God than it is for blind credulity to believe in blind chance.

The Creator at Work Now

Concerning the processes and methods of creation we may not form any clear idea: "Man may never secure a glimpse of creative processes."—Larkin. At that point even revelation does not help us much in the present state of our own development. The Lord might explain all clearly and in detail and yet we could not understand, more than the layman could understand a perfectly logical explanation of higher mathematics as perceived by a master mathematician.

It is easy to become lost even in fruitless speculations as to the steps of creation. Were the six days of creation in Genesis of twenty-four hours or of a thousand years each? Who shall say? One fine thought emerges from Genesis as in the Inspired Version: "For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth." (Genesis 2: 5.)

Life and intelligence do not spring out of dead matter. Life and intelligence gather round them to themselves the atoms and cells that are built into definite preconceived forms. Section 85 of Doctrine and Covenants tells us that God is in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars: "and the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presense of God to fill the immensity of space."

Thus, in ways beyond our comprehension the intelligence of God associated with light fills all space and quickens the intelligence of all living things, however humble, as they are clothed with the material bodies that he designs. Thus we think not alone that he did create, but that he does create. His work of creation goes on all around us. We plant seed in the ground and each springs up, first the blade and then the stalk, and each bears flowers or fruit according to designs formulated before the dawn of time—created spiritually first.

It were idle, however, to lose ourselves in speculations. "In the beginning God created," gives us our start in faith upon the problems of life. "He that would come unto him must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Hebrews 11: 6.)

With that belief in our souls as a part of the foundations of our faith, we may go forward to the fuller revelation of God that is in his Son. Christ was with God in the dawn of time in the initial act of Creation. (See Genesis 1: 27, Inspired Translation; Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3; John 1: 1-3; Colossians 1: 16; Ephesians 3: 9, King James Version.)

He came in the meridian of time and made it his especial work to develop this initial revelation of origin as it has application to our lives. Paul tells us that Jesus Christ "brought life and immortality to light." How did Jesus bring life to light? Can not any man see life? Yes, he sees it constantly all about him; but its significance escapes him—seeing he sees not. Christ has revealed life, its

Milestones

In the Life of Joseph Smith III

(A play assembled and written by Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Burgess.)

Prologue—Birth

During those momentous days a hundred years ago, two and a half years after the restoration of the church of God to the earth, by the quiet miracle of birth, there came into the world one who would some day serve with steadfast strength to unite the scattered forces of latter Day Israel.

In a modest home in the pioneer village of Kirtland, Ohio, there was born to "The Elect Lady" one snowy November day, a little son, who was called Joseph, after his father. The illustrious father, his life crowded with endless activities for the establishment and spread of the marvelous work upon the earth, had been called away on a brief trip to the eastern states and though he hurried home in anxious haste, his son arrived a few hours before he reached home.

Small wonder that a baby should cause little excitement in that thrilling time. The Saints were being established in Kirtland in a movement which was soon to culminate in the building of the Temple and pentecostal experiences within those sacred walls. Zion had been founded in Independence, the church was growing by leaps and bounds, God was leading his people in a marvelous way and the triumph of the gospel restoration seemed assured.

On the sixth day of November, 1832, Joseph Smith III was born in the midst of hope and glory and achievement. But by the time he was six years old his young life was overcast with the rising clouds of persecution and distress.

(Set the stage to suggest the combination living room, dining room and kitchen of a log house of the pioneer period. Use furniture of the period or else very simple pieces. A door is in the middle of the back stage. A fireplace with settee, benches, and rockers occupy the back of the stage at right of door; a table kept partly set is at the left with a chair or two around it. The stage may be set as simply or as fully as desired. A group of men, women and possibly a child or two, sit on either side of the fireplace. Four to ten people may be used as is convenient. Emma Smith sits meaning, its opportunities, its duties, and its glories.

So religion goes a great deal farther than either science or philosophy dares to tread. God has spoken. The only one who knows has told humanity how things came; he has revealed to us our duty now that we are here; and he tells us something about our destiny hereafter. Out of the confusion of human speculation, scientific, philosophic, and theological, like a light on a great rock rises this declaration: "In the beginning God created." It is a great deal more than that, it is like a rising sun illuminating the world and all life in it. Life and everything that pertains to it (including morality and ethics) is revealed in a new light. All other things contained in the rich fullness of the gospel follow that initial declaration.

beside the table knitting with her six-months-old baby—Alexander Hale—lying in a cradle at her side, which she gently rocks with one foot. Frederick, two and a half years old, stands close to her knee. At center of stage and well forward Joseph, six years old, and his foster sister Julia, a year or two older, sit on a rag rug listening and watching the older people. The group by the fireplace include Lucy Smith, John Murdock, from De Witt, Captain Evans and an immigrant woman from Haun's Mill, and Agnes M. Smith, wife of Don Carlos Smith, from Adam-on-di-ahman. A life size doll may be used for the baby in cradle. The door is flung open and a man rushes in shouting.)

MESSENGER: Alas, hope is gone! The prophet is doomed. They are determined to take his life!

(He rushes out again. All have started to their feet. Emma sinks back again in despair. The two older children rush to her side, and Lucy Smith walks over to place a comforting arm across her shoulders.)

LUCY: Do not despair, Emma. I feel that he will yet be spared to us and to the church. Last night as we held our vigil of prayer my heart was touched with peace and assurance.

JOHN MURDOCK: Surely the Lord will save his servant. It may be as it was with us at De Witt that you will be driven from your homes, your cattle stolen, your property taken and your persons roughly used. But surely God will not permit our prophet to be killed.

IMMIGRANT WOMAN: Is it thus our faith is rewarded? We left our homes and kindred to obey the Lord's command and at Haun's Mill we met the destroyer in our path. Pray God we are not destined to go through another such bloody scene!

CAPTAIN EVANS: Aye, my heart would echo that prayer! Even at night I can scarcely sleep. I see again the dead, the mutilation of the wounded and the dying by the brutal militia-mob. I hear cries of innocent children so savagely butchered there. Can God forgive such barbarous acts?

AGNES SMITH: We must pray earnestly for strength to meet what is yet to come, that He who has guided us through the terror of the past weeks will continue to lead us out of danger into safety. Often in my dreams I live again that scene of fire and pillage that robbed us of our home. I see the flames against the sky, and wake to find myself in fancy in the icy river with my babes upon either shoulder. How I reached the temporary refuge of Adam-on-di-ahman I can never understand. Then we were soon driven from there, again with loss of cattle and property and homes. Now we can only pray to be allowed to flee again, without further bloodshed.

SECOND MESSENGER: (flinging open the door): The soldiers are coming, dragging Joseph among them.

(Shouts and cries are heard outside and the tramp of feet. All rush out—Emma and children reach the door last—too late, the way is barred by an armed guard. Little Joseph slips under the guard's sword and rushes out.)

EMMA SMITH (holding the baby, Alexander, and Julia clinging to her skirts): Let my husband come in if I can't go out. Give us a few moments together!

JULIA: Ooh! They are pushing little Joseph away with their swords. He's fallen!

LITTLE JOSEPH'S VOICE (shrill with terror): Father! Father!
EMMA: Now his grandmother has him. He's not hurt. (To guard) Oh, sir, let us out! Let me go to my husband!

GUARD: None of that now! Can't allow any conferences. Got to hang onto the prophet, he might get translated or some other disappearing act. Hah! Hah! Hah! (Loud coarse laughter from other guards outside.)

EMMA: Joseph!

VOICE OF JOSEPH: God keep you, Emma!

EMMA: God save you, Joseph!

GUARD (joined in jeering laughter by guards outside): Hah! Hah! Hah! Take some tall savin'. Ain't nobody can save him now! Better say good-bye to your prophet, Ma'am.

LITTLE JOSEPH (pushing in under guard's arm, pulls on his mother's skirt to get her attention. Emma is leaning hopelessly against door jamb, head bowed in grief): Mother! Mother! Will God take care of him? Can't we pray for him, Mother?

(Guard leaves the door and there is noise of receding crowd. Emma sinks to her knees by the door with her children around her.)

CURTAIN

Hidden quartet sings two verses of, "Oh for a faith that will not shrink."

II. Nauvoo

SCENE I, ROOM IN THE MANSION HOUSE, JUNE 24, 1844.

(Fireplace, chairs, table, etc. Lucy Smith is sitting with an open Bible on her knee. Her grandson, Joseph, now twelve years old, sits at the other side of the table leaning with his elbows on the table and listening in great absorption.)

LUCY SMITH: There, Joseph, is the very verse in the very Bible that started your father off on the search for a more perfect church. You may read it to me aloud, Son. You can not read that verse too often.

BOY JOSEPH (reads slowly in reverence): If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

LUCY SMITH: That's it. That is what led to the establishment of this great and marvelous work. Some day you will have to carry it on in your father's place. How many times has your father blessed you, Joseph?

BOY JOSEPH: A number of times, Grandmother, but two that are most impressive to me. The time that Mother took me to see Father when he was at Liberty Jail and he blessed me there to be his successor. Then the recent event when he anointed and blessed me in his office and then presented me in the grove here before the large assembly of the Saints. He set me apart as his successor and the Saints accepted the appointment. You were there, weren't you? (Comes round the table to her side in agitation.) But how can I lead them? The church is never at peace. Must we continue to go through persecution and trouble?

LUCY SMITH (drawing him within her arm): This church must go through much deep water yet. But you must stand firm, Joseph, and get ready for your work.

(Enter Joseph Smith and his wife Emma, followed by Hyrum.)

JOSEPH SMITH: The die is cast, Mother. We have decided to go to Carthage and face this matter.

HYRUM SMITH: The brethren think this is the wisest course. But we might cross the river again and remain in Iowa till this blows over.

JOSEPH SMITH: I am weary of evasion. Let us not be accused of cowardice in facing our responsibilities. This is the result of that piece of folly. I knew it would bring distress upon us.

LUCY SMITH: What is the charge this time?

JOSEPH SMITH: It is Riot, for the destruction of the Nauvoo Expositor. Though I opposed its destruction, as Mayor I was compelled to sign the order. Now let us get ready quickly. But first I would leave a last blessing upon the head of this our little son. Hyrum, will you assist?

(Boy Joseph is seated at front center of stage. Joseph and Hyrum place their hands upon his head and Joseph prays.)

JOSEPH SMITH: Almighty Father, Thou who seest every sparrow fall, take this child under thy protection, guard and keep him for the great work he has to do. At thy command we have set him apart to lead thy church as our successor. Thou Knowest the assembly of thy Saints have accepted him. But the way looks dark before us. Thy church is torn by dissension and transgression within and persecution from without. There are those of my brethren who desire my life, yea, even now, I go as a lamb to the slaughter! Hold this young life in the hollow of thy hand, I pray. Direct him in preparation for his work and rule and overrule for the good of thy kingdom. May peace and grace and thy guiding hand be and abide with him in the name of thy Beloved Son. Amen.

SCENE II, SOMETIME IN THE FALL OF 1853

(Joseph Smith III's bedroom—contains bed, old-fashioned dresser, chairs, etc. Joseph, almost twenty-one years old, is propped up in bed, convalescent from a severe illness. His mother enters with a glass of water which she places on a small bedside table. She straightens covers, plumps up pillows, etc., as she talks.)

EMMA SMITH: Here's water fresh from the well. You're looking fine. Thank God, you will soon be around again.

JOSEPH SMITH: Yes, I'm better. Perhaps I'd get up if you didn't make me so comfortable here. Sit down a moment, can't you, mother? I want to talk to you.

EMMA SMITH: Can't stay long. Much to do downstairs.

JOSEPH SMITH: This coming back from the very brink of eternity, Mother, has made me wonder what my life is to be. Will I ever have anything to do with Mormonism? Was my father mistaken when he insisted I would lead the church? What people could I lead? And how may it come about? Could I ever with good conscience go to Utah? Yet surely the Lord has spared my life to some purpose.

EMMA SMITH (speaks in some agitation): I would not bias your thought nor take responsibility for your choice. Live an upright life, pray and trust God to show you the way. He will direct you my son. (Kisses him on forehead and leaves hurriedly.)

JOSEPH SMITH (praying): Father, show me the way. Surely that gospel for which my father gave his life is still true. Am I to have no part in the unfinished task my father left?

(Use a projecting machine if possible to cast upon the wall at back of the stage a representation of Joseph's two visions: (1) A teeming city, and (2) a beautiful country scene of small town and rolling prairie. If this is impossible illuminate the face of Joseph and the white-clad figure of the heavenly messenger who stands at the bedside during the vision.)

MESSENGER: Look well upon this scene. Behold the busy marts where fame and success await you. Note clearly and think of the life that may be yours if you choose it here.

JOSEPH SMITH (slowly): I see—and understand.

MESSENGER: Now behold a different scene. Regard the peace and beauty of a quiet life in an obscure country place. Here awaits a life of peace and service with God's people.

JOSEPH SMITH: This must be the country of a happy people!

MESSENGER: Which would you choose? A life of success and renown among the busy scenes you first saw: or a place among these people without wealth, worldly honor or renown? Think well on this matter for the choice will be offered to you sooner or later and you must be prepared to decide. Your decision once made, you can not recall it, and must abide by the result.

SCENE III, NOVEMBER, 1858—ROOM IN THE MANSION HOUSE

(Joseph Smith III, and Elders Gurley and Briggs enter and close the door.)

JOSEPH SMITH (turning to the others): If you men have been commanded by God to do anything, why can't you do it without reference to me; for I know that no man, nor the angels from heaven can lead the church in the condition it is now in.

BRIGGS: Mr. Smith, we can do our duty without any reference to other men, for we do not recognize any man, priest or king, as our leader, save Jesus Christ only, neither would we receive you except you are called of God yourself. But as ministers sent to scattered latter-day Israel, we call you as one of the spiritual stones of the house of God to come and take your place, as it has been shown to us by the gifts of prophecy.

(Briggs and Gurley raise their hands up with palms toward Joseph.)

JOSEPH SMITH: You would not ask God to curse me?

GURLEY: That be far from us. We rather bless than curse. We would present you before the Lord with uplifted hands. (Prays.)

Oh, thou God of Israel, we present to thee this thy chosen one. Bless him with wisdom to discern thy church. Show him the path that he must take for thy people's sake. Visit him in vision and dream and lead him into thy work, that he may guide scattered Israel and comfort them. In the name of Jesus Christ we ask it. Amen.

BRIGGS: Amen. (Both men lower their hands.)

JOSEPH SMITH: Are you now through?

GURLEY: Yes.

JOSEPH SMITH (raising his hands heavenward): Heavenly Father, keep me from wrongdoing and direct me in the right way. Grant that my face may be like flint that I may not fear the face of clay. In the name of thy dear Son. Amen.

BRIGGS AND GURLEY: Amen.

JOSEPH SMITH (shaking hands with them): I like the spirit of you men and we may see many things yet. Of one thing I can assure you, I'll have nothing to do with the practices of the Mormons in the West.

BRIGGS: And that is not from lack of invitation to join them out there.

JOSEPH SMITH (nodding affirmative): Many times I have been urged to go to Utah, not only by Utah people, but even by my friends here. They think it is my duty to try to break up that system out there. Finally I found myself asking the question, Why not go to Utah? There are men out there who were with my father as well as a number of my relatives. That is the only people today who are doing anything with Mormonism. Why not go to Utah?

BRIGGS: And the answer?

JOSEPH SMITH: In the midst of my perplexity there came to me with great force these words which meant so much in my father's life: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God." I believed that he who had enabled my father to decide which of all churches should receive his allegiance, could give me wisdom to decide whether I should have anything to do with Utah Mormonism. I asked therefore for divine wisdom and then waited patiently with a mind at rest, for the Lord's answer.

BRIGGS: And a definite answer came?

JOSEPH SMITH: Entirely definite. In a vision I saw descending toward me a sort of cloud, funnel-shaped, with the wide part upward. It was luminous and of such color and brightness that it was clearly seen, though the sun shone in its summer strength. It descended rapidly and settling upon and over me, enveloped me completely so that I stood within its radiance.

As the cloud rested upon the ground at my feet, the words "Because the light in which you stand is greater than theirs," sounded in my ears clearly and distinctly. The other question, "Is polygamy of God?" was as distinctly and definitely answered to me as was the first question, and the answer was, "No." I was directed to have nothing to do with it, but to oppose it.

(Rising as if to conclude the interview.) For this direction I thank God. And I have faith that he will continue to direct me in his own due time. Until such direction I dare not take such grave responsibilities as you suggest.

CURTAIN

(Quartette sings one verse of, "Let Us Shake off the Coals From Our Garments.")

III. Amboy, April 6, 1860

(Curtain discovers Joseph Smith standing behind a pulpit addressing the conference. Zenos Gurley, William Marks, W. W. Blair, Samuel Powers, E. C. Briggs, and Isaac Sheen are seated back of him on the platform. Gurley is in the chair.)

JOSEPH SMITH: I would say to you brethren, as I hope you may be and in faith I trust you are, as a people that God has promised his blessings upon, I came not here of myself, but by the influence of the Spirit. For some time past I have received manifestations pointing to the position which I am about to assume.

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any man or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

God works by means best known to himself and I feel that for some time past he has been pointing out a work for me to do.

I have believed that should I come without the guarantee of the people, I should be received in blindness, and would be liable to be accused of false motives. Neither would I come to you without receiving favor from my heavenly Father.

Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew; but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church.

Some who had ought to know the proprieties of the church have told me that no certain form was necessary in order for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage; yet I know that if I attempted to lead as prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now. And so I have come not of my own dictation to this sacred office.

In conclusion, I will come to you if you will receive me, give my ability and the influence my name will bring, together with what little power I possess; and I trust by your prayers and faith to be sustained. I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals.

I do not care to say any more at present, but will simply add that if the same spirit which prompts my coming, prompts also my reception, I am with you.

GURLEY: Brother Joseph, I present this church to you in the name of Jesus Christ.

JOSEPH SMITH: May God grant in his infinite mercy that I may never do anything to forfeit the high trust confided to me. I pray that he may grant to us power to recall the scattered ones of Israel, and I ask your prayers.

IV. Plano—Early Summer of 1867

(Scene.—Living room of the house of Joseph Smith III; kerosene lamps, table, chairs, etc. Joseph is seated at a desk with a large family Bible and a pile of manuscript before him, working busily with pencil on the Inspired Translation. Three little girls, ten, six and four years old tiptoe in from side entrance and wait for him to notice them.)

JOSEPH SMITH (in kindly tone, finishing a notation before he looks up): What do the three Graces want tonight? (They come quickly to his side.)

EMMA: Mother said not to disturb you unless you spoke to us. But are you going to read to us tonight, Father?

JOSEPH SMITH (carefully puts aside his work, lifts the smallest child to his lap while the other two lean against him): No, Dear, I must go preach tonight. Brother Rogers is coming to drive me out to that schoolhouse again. Have my little daughters had a good day?

CARRIE: Oh, yes, Papa! And a nice old lady has come to live here because she hasn't any home. And she tells good stories.

(Knock is heard on outside door at back center of stage. Joseph goes to the door and admits Israel Rogers, a man of middle age, and William Marks, an elderly man. They shake hands with Joseph with a word of greeting and put their hats on the table.)

ROGERS: Did you get much farther with the Inspired Translation today?

JOSEPH: Yes, we're getting near the end of this task. If you and the rest of the committee can help me verify the new work tomorrow, we can perhaps finish it in the week. It has weighed heavily upon me, the completion of so important a part of my father's work. But we've been blessed in the doing of it. Now aren't you gentlemen early? (Looking at watch.)

MARKS: Yes, Joseph. There is an afflicted child who lives near our appointment. His parents want us to stop to administer on our way.

JOSEPH SMITH: We must hurry then. I have an errand on the way also. Children will you ask your mother to bring the basket she has prepared? It will take but a moment to leave these supplies at a house where they are sorely needed.

MARKS: Is the Herald made up for the week, Brother Joseph?

JOSEPH SMITH: All in good shape for this week. (His wife, beautiful Emmeline Griswold Smith, enters carrying basket and Joseph's hat.) Ah, now we can proceed. . . . Thank you Mother. (Takes basket and hat from her, then puts both on the table and turns earnestly to the others.)

How rich is the opportunity daily before us—to work for God and for our brethren. The church is small and on every hand work presses to be done. I know you, my brethren have the same crowded days, preaching and administering, writing and organizing. This church must go forward and the task is enormous. Let us pray together a moment. (Raises his right hand and closes his eyes and stands with uplifted face. Others stand with bowed heads.)

V. Lamoni—Summer of 1896

EDITORIAL OFFICE AT HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
LAMONI, IOWA

JOSEPH SMITH (rising and greeting them warmly): Doubtless this means more news of the college. Will you sit?

BLAIR: No, Joseph, we are on our way to another consultation with the builders. But here is the list of gifts and subscriptions for the college, brought up to date—some encouraging additions to print in the next Herald. Have you seen the building lately? It is assuming encouraging proportions. We may not have to meet in the France block for long.

JOSEPH (glancing over the list): That will help. What a noble people we have! I tell you brethren I have felt to thank God many times for the enterprise and generosity which have made possible the opening of the Saints' Home for the comfort of our aged. But for the realization of this long cherished ideal of an institution of higher learning under church supervision, I am doubly grateful! To have in our peaceful community the opportunity for our boys and girls to gain an education surrounded by church influences and away from the insidious temptations of the world, this is indeed an important step toward Zion.

(Mrs. Marietta Walker enters with a hand full of manuscript. The four men withdraw, Alexander pausing to speak.)

ALEXANDER SMITH: The Graceland board meets at eight in this office, then?

JOSEPH SMITH: At eight. (Turns to Mrs. Walker.) Some more material for the Mother's Column? Thank you. Since your contributions of interest, land and effort have played so important a part in the founding of Graceland this new list will be of particular interest to you. (Hands her the list.)

MRS. WALKER: This is splendid! I will mention it in the Autumn Leaves. Brother Joseph, our dreams are coming true! God is moving among his people!

JOSEPH SMITH (softly): The Lord is remembering again Zion.

HEMAN C. SMITH (entering in leisurely manner): Sister Walker, let me congratulate you on your recent work with Hope as well as the Autumn Leaves. They are giving our children and young people the things they need and they are both well written and interesting.

MRS. WALKER: Thank you, Brother Smith. You are encouraging. I am getting more help these days—more contributions.

JOSEPH: Here is a poem that might fit your young people better than the Herald readers. And tell friend Lucy that the new Hymnal is well liked. We are getting good reports from it.

(Mrs. Walker takes the poem, thanks him, and goes out.)

HEMAN C. SMITH (seating himself at left of the desk): This Church History gets more interesting every day.

JOSEPH SMITH: You have an important work, Heman. Your gift of integrity and discernment together with your scholarly thoroughness fit you well for the job.

HEMAN C. SMITH: It is not an easy thing to do, but that is part of its fascination. But I wanted to ask you a question, Joseph. Do you recall clearly your experience of 1853, when you were recovering from a serious illness?

JOSEPH SMITH (quickly): You are referring to the vision in which I was shown two destinies which were possible before me?

HEMAN C. SMITH: Yes. Do you still recall those scenes?

JOSEPH SMITH: I could never forget them. Like all spiritual or divine experiences they were more vividly seen than a natural view.

HEMAN C. SMITH: Have you ever seen anywhere that identical vista of beautiful prairie countryside, with its peaceful homes and villages?

JOSEPH SMITH: Come with me to the window. There lies the scene of peaceful farm and hamlet. Look upon that landscape and you see the view presented to me in the vision of 1853—except that it is not as extensive. I suppose the natural eye can not see as far as the spirit. This view is a great comfort to me—a confirmation of the impressions and experiences which led me to choose this church and this people—and this community. The Lord has indeed led me into green pastures, beside the still waters of fulfillment and peace.

ander Smith, I. N. White, Joseph Luff, Charles Derry, W. W. Blair, Reverend Palmore of the Methodist Church, and Joseph Smith III. To the left stands choir or smaller group of singers. As curtain goes up they sing an appropriate anthem or hymn. Then W. W. Blair steps forward to pray.)

W. W. BLAIR: God of Our Fathers! We would thank thee today for this opportunity to build a house unto thee in Zion, the place appointed for the gathering of thy people. Bless us that this act may be not only the beginning of thy house in this place but that it may signify also the return of thy people to this place. That the establishment of Zion may not be far off, give us greater light and bless thy people as of old with power and wisdom and the richness of thy favor, in temporal as well as spiritual affairs. In the name of thy Beloved Son. Amen.

(Choir sings another anthem.)

JOSEPH SMITH: Many years ago a little handful of men hailing from the East gathered around a stone designed to mark the resting place of an altar to be erected to the worship of God, and there in the midst of dangers similar to those once pending where the Huguenots sang and prayed, dedicated the labor of their hands to God.

How changed—a half a century later. Sons of some of those men, with others whose fathers were made exiles on America's free soil for religion's sake and many who believe on Christ through their words are gathered in hundreds today to place in its bed a stone marking a spot where Israel's wandering and waiting children propose to raise an altar. The Lord promised the men who laid the first stone with their comrades, on Fishing River, fifty years ago, that if they would hearken to him, and do as he counseled—they should find "grace and favor with the people." The men to whom the promise was made failed in even trying to keep those last words of counsel given them on Zion's borders. Their children taking these words as if addressed to them have essayed to keep that counsel and the Lord has blessed them as he covenanted to bless their fathers.

In peace by the common consent of this entire community, the people of this church, once driven from the state, today in open daylight, with the watchful guardians of public safety careful that they be not disturbed, set up a stone designated to show the place where the "sanctuary and the true tabernacle has been pitched."

It is with inexpressible thankfulness that we take part today in this significant ceremony. May this people value highly this land over which their fathers wept and died. May they by their lives build here a monument to the heroism of those former days. May we see modern Israel returning hence with songs of everlasting joy.

Epilogue—The Last Address

(Joseph Smith III, now eighty-two years old, is represented alone on the stage delivering the following excerpts from his last address to the General Conference, in Independence, April 15, 1914.)

JOSEPH SMITH (speaking of the revelation presented by him at that conference):

No one knows better than I, who stand in the presence of God today, I shall have to answer for the genuine character of that which has been presented. I have a right to believe that I stand before God to answer for my honesty and unrightness of purpose, of intent and integrity of duty which I have performed under this calling, knowing full well that I stand nearer to answering before God than perhaps any other man in this assembly. Hence I feel very grateful to God and to this people for their treatment to me in the discharge of this duty of answering to the call of the people in imploring divine direction.

I would if I could put within the mind and soul of everyone present today what I have felt . . . in discharging that duty. For the wisdom of it, I do not answer: for the reason of it, any portion of it, I do not answer; I know not beyond what was given, what was in the divine mind, and should anyone ask me about this or that in any of the revelations which I have been permitted to give to the church, I must answer, inevitably, unless the revelation itself contains a reason, or the reasons for them, I am not able to answer. I am but an humble instrument in the hands of God, as are all of you: I claim no higher tribute, no higher characteristic or qualifications of honesty, of intent or purpose, than each one of you may claim. I am not to be considered as within the counsel of the Almighty, only so far as that counsel is transmitted by the voice of inspiration to me, when action on my part is required. I dare not listen to the cries of disaster, loss of damage . . . I can only as the rest of you do that duty that lies nearest to me and leave the result in the hands of God.

I have for the past year studied earnestly what might result, should the Bishopric not be able to meet the demands of those abroad in the fields or those officers necessarily gathered to the centers for transaction of the affairs of the church. For years the church existed and we had no systematized administration, but individuals went out, taking their lives in their hands and trusting the charity of those among whom they labored for daily bread to them and those dependent upon them.

I have concluded that should some of the things occur, which some seem to foresee, it could but be the duty of the church in the magnificent faith of those faithful unto Christ again to take up the peripatetic work of the church and continue the preaching of the gospel until the fortunes of the church are resuscitated by divine assistance, and by those able to help.

It seems to me that we ought not to faint, that we ought not to fail; that we ought not to quail. . . . For years we have been trusting to God and to Christ in the defense of this work. Shall we fail now? In the name of God, NO! in the name of Christ, NAY! in the name of the Holy Spirit, which has stood by us from the first to the last, I say, NAY!! And I hope brethren, I say, NAY with you, and that you say NAY with me to this question!

I thank you my brothers for the faith you have still reposed in me. If by reason of advancing years it is feared that disaster should result from my being continued in the trust, I pray that you will relieve me and put in younger and stronger man or men, and I shall feel no regret. I am ready to lay down the weapons of my warfare, either to be taken to my final rest or to continue in sessions with you shorn or unshorn of any responsibility.

Again I thank you one and all for the confidence you have expressed in the vote which you have taken this day.

With God

To talk with God no breath is lost;

Talk on.

To walk with God no strength is lost;

Walk on.

To toil with God no time is lost;

Toil on.

Little is much, if God is in it;

Man's busiest day's not worth God's minute.

Much is little everywhere

If God the business doth not share.

So work with God, then nothing's lost;

Who works with him does well and most.

In the Australasian Mission

The Work Is Onward

The work is onward in the lands comprehended in the Australasian Mission. The depression holds Australia and New Zealand in its relentless grip, but the banner of the latter-day work is outflung to the breeze and we are resolutely trying to keep it there. Considering the times in which we live, the Saints are making noble effort, not only to maintain spiritual equilibrium, but to keep the work of the church going in this mission as usual; and they are succeeding, with the blessing of our heavenly Father.

July—Inventory Month

July was inventory month and the officers of various districts were invited to cooperate with those controlling finances in a series of intensive teaching efforts among the Saints. The work of the writer was confined during that month to the Southern New South Wales District, where, with Elders Corbett and Swain, of the district presidency, special services were held in every branch and group.

At Leichhardt, Balmain, Hamilton and Guildford we worked together, using every feature of our work and worship as a means of teaching and impressing the financial law and of obtaining inventories. The best efforts seemed to be those put forth in the church schools. Two classes were operated, the adults under Elder Corbett and young people under the instruction of the writer. Sometimes, in places where numbers were not sufficient for two classes, we made two class periods and one teacher followed the other. At Wallsend, Terralpa, and Campsie we had to divide forces, for there were not sufficient weeks in the month for us to give each branch a combined effort.

We are very pleased with the results to hand at date. Many more inventories are on file than ever before, and the Saints understand the incidence of the law better than they ever did. A membership educated along these lines is a membership ready to honor the law in spite of every obstacle.

Missionary Series at Brookstead

The writer is at present at Brookstead, Queensland, where he is conducting a missionary series. Owing to much sickness and other conditions the attendance is only fair, but the enthusiasm of the faithful Saints here is unbounded. I am domiciled with the Scott family, relatives of Elder H. I. Velt, and the cheerful saintliness of Sister Scott and family, the persistence of Brother and Sister Elsdon, and the ready support given by Kevin Jasch and his brother Stanley, are an inspiration for one to do his very best in telling the gospel story to their neighbors. It is unfortunate, though, that all are not as loyal.

Queensland a Fertile State

We find Queensland a great and fertile State. Some people have the impression that Queensland is too hot, dry and primitive, but they have been misinformed. The parts I have visited have sometimes been hot, but it is cold in Brookstead just now, frozen water pipes and abundant morning ice bearing frigid witness. It is sometimes dry, but from the Prohibition aspect it is decidedly wet. Sugar cane, bananas, pineapples, pawpaws, custard apples and other tropical fruits are as plentiful here as in Honolulu. Added to this there are a fine wheat yield, abundant dairying operations, bacon export, and this is Australia's greatest cattle state, to say nothing of the immense flocks of sheep. This is a dry state, but not too dry to be healthy and prosperous. In a way the state is a bit primitive in parts; but I have not been to many of those parts and therefore can not speak of them. Primitive conditions, it is said, exist in the interior of the state, but in the prosperous coastal districts and tablelands (themselves large enough to make a very big state) the people are modern and employ all up-to-date agricultural and industrial methods.

During the month of June, in company with Elder W. J. Vaughan, I visited the branches of the Northern New South Wales District and preached and held other services in each. We also visited the isolated Saints along the route. Found a general desire to attain to spiritual perfection and to honor the law of God as circumstances permit.

Social and Cultural Clubs

Numerous social and cultural clubs have grown up in the various centers in this mission, each in its way endeavoring to help forward the work of the church. While on the north coast of New South Wales with Brother Vaughan, we organized a Social and Cultural Club at John's River. My information is that it is flourishing in both the cultural and social activities. Fine clubs of this kind exist in Balmain, Hamilton, Wallsend, South Wallsend, Guildford, Westgarth, Richmond, Adelaide. Clubs with purely cultural objects exist in Balmain, where the Kimnor Klub fosters elocution, debates, etc., and Leichhardt, where the Dorian Society fosters literature. Our young people have a desire to serve and to qualify thereby for more effective service.

Little Journeys With the Editor in Chief

Finds Colonial Village at Salem

Having made up my mind to visit Salem (that decision being reached at Topsfield), and the distance being somewhere about ten miles, it was not long before I reached there, for that Buick coupe was adept at "eating distances." I had no accurate idea where the "Colonial Village" was situated and as this was the first objective of the visit, before I reached Salem Center, I inquired of a policeman where I could find the "Colonial Village," for such it was termed in the article I had sketched in Old-Time New England. The policeman did not know it by such a title, but courteously gave me directions to find the "Pioneer Village," as he termed it. I followed his directions, and soon found signs at street intersections marked "To Pioneer Village."

Following these directions took me through Salem Center out into the southeastern part of the town. It is situated in one of Salem's public parks. The park is a small one, and about the Pioneer Village, or the Colonial Village at Salem, which is the better term, is a fence. Its purpose seems to be to keep out the curious, and to call out the "25c admission," as a sign at the entrance announced. "Admission 25c" is a rather common sign in the East, around these historic grounds. On inquiry I learned that the village though owned by the town of Salem, is kept up by the funds gathered from charging admittance.

Following the Guide

Once inside the grounds, I saw a group of persons evidently in charge of a guide. I attached myself to the group and listened to the guide's story of the various buildings, etc. It is always interesting to hear these guides "spiel." There is the ubiquitous pun, the far-fetched humor, the chatter so evidently acquired by rote, breaks in English construction and pronunciation. Well, I presume these "paid guides" do not draw a sufficiently large "salary" to attract talent of a high order and these "tip" jobs are not much more attractive to genius. But one learns the story, or the rudiments, and what he learns is quite helpful in after reading but not always found to be correct. But where "admission" is collected guides are a concomitant, at least usually are.

I stayed with the group until dismissed by the guide, who pointed the way out. But I had not the desire to go out just then, so I went in another direction and spent some time in wandering about the place viewing the "exhibit," and "listening in" on my own meditations concerning them.

Village a Tercentenary Feature

The first impression one gathers on entering is that of being in an "exhibit." Well, it is just that. The year, 1930, marked the three hundredth anniversary of an important year in Massachusetts history, and the tercentenary was celebrated in the State in ways varying according to communities. It was on June 12, 1630, that John Winthrop, as governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, landed from the good ship Arabella which with eleven others had brought about three hundred passengers with various articles of furniture, materials, seeds, shrubs, and goods from England. So Salem as its contribution to the tercentenary designed and built this exhibit of a pioneer village. The Arabella was reproduced, and typical buildings were built with strict fidelity to original designs, methods, and materials. The whole setting gives one an adequate idea of the conditions under which our ancestors workers and lived which reading alone will not give. The wigwams, the dugouts, the wide chimneys constructed of wood and clay plastered, the more pretentious houses built of whip-sawed lumber, the oiled paper windows, the thatched roofs, the open fireplaces for both heating and cooking—all bespeak the straits to which these early settlers were put to withstand and ease up the rigorous life of pioneers. But perhaps they were as happy and contented then as we are now under the improved conditions of comfort and ease. I wonder if they had periods of depression then.

Difficulties in Pioneer Life

There are many things in that reconstructed village to remind one of early difficulties and make one appreciate this age of plenty. In one corner is a contraption of oven, open pans and shallow vats which, we are told by a placard, illustrates the methods employed to get salt for culinary and other purposes. They evaporated sea water, and each little village had such an outfit. It was slow and the "salt" was doubtless such a collection of salts of sodium, potassium, phosphate, and other minerals as ordinary salt water contains and which without other methods of refinement would result from mere evaporation. But they got along with the product, and probably gave thanks for the salt which they earned by the sweat of their brows.

And from their large rendering kettles came tallow, lard, and other fats. While other kettles made soap, apple butter, and what-not.

The jail or elaborate prison of modern towns is represented in that exhibition village by a reproduction of the stocks in which scolds, naggers, and moderate sinners were punished in the public square by having hands or feet shackled by the stubborn blocks of wood. The punishment consisted chiefly of the disgrace in the public eye; but it surely was far from comfortable to stand or sit for hours with hands and feet fixed in wood. I wonder if the flies, mosquitoes, and gnats could bite as fiercely then as now? If so, what a torture! And there seems to have been no provision for shelter from either sun, rain, or sandstorm. Well, it is no wonder our Puritan ancestors were well-behaved. It would be interesting to know whether conscience or fear of the stocks were the dominant deterrent factor.

A "saw pit" illustrates the method of creating lumber. A combination of pit and platform permitted one man to work above and one below the log to be sawed, and a one- or two-man saw was the tool for ripping out the boards and planks. I doubt not the carpenters were more careful in ripping up material than are our modern ones.

In another place was a typical blacksmith shop with primitive bellows and forge, where on anvil with crude instruments were wrought the iron implements used such as nails, hinges, hoes, rakes, axes, etc. Just think of nails, small and large, being hammered out by hand. I'll venture the guess that any carpenter in those days who dropped a nail would stop work long enough to pick it up. It paid.

Furnishings in "Fayre House"

One of the most interesting of the buildings in the exhibits is the reproduction of the "Fayre House" which was occupied by the governor. As houses went in the village this is pretentious, a palace, and hence was the "faire" house. It shows most interestingly the methods of house construction of those days, the hand-hewn timbers, hand-decorated clapboards, etc. How plain the houses were! The floors of wide boards, bare of rugs or carpets; the beds without steads laid on the floor; the pegs in walls and chests on the floors serving instead of closets—all bespeak the great simplicity and a scarcity of comforts characteristic of the times.

Of course the fireplace with andirons, spits, cranes, kettles, pots and pans, is there. I should have said are there, for nearly every room had a fireplace. But the main or kitchen fireplace is always the most interesting and elaborate in these old New England houses. Along the mantel of the main fireplace in the "Fayre House," hung bunches of dried herbs such as were gathered for medical purposes. The pharmacopoeia of those days would not have been a very large volume. It seems their treatment of diseases consisted of using a comparatively small number of medicines, mostly concocted from herbs, probably by the infusion method largely. Synthetic drugs were quite unknown then, I guess, though perhaps some "remedies" consisted of compounding a number of the simple remedies.

These English people, familiar with their own materia medica, and not knowing the flora of the new country to which they were going, and wishing to "play safe" on the matter of medicines, decided to bring their own. They not only did so for immediate purposes, but with foresight, brought the seeds and roots of such herbs as they needed in compounding their simple and few remedies, planted them in the new colony, and thus in some instances at least, added to the flora of America.

It would be interesting to know how many plant species and even genera were added thus, brought to America by the various colonies which came from England, France and other countries. Food plants were also imported.

Early Brick-making Plant

In one corner of the village I saw something which reminded me of early days in Lamoni. It was a brick-making plant. It was just such an equipment as was used to make the brick for the church building erected about 1885, and which burned a couple of years ago. The making of those brick at Lamoni held much of interest to me as a boy. The methods followed at Lamoni were probably identical with those at Salem three hundred years ago, even to the use of wood for burning purposes.

My curiosity at least partially satisfied, but far from satiated, I wended my way to the gate which answers at once the purposes of exit and adit. I paused there for a moment to ask a few questions of the bright young woman dressed as a Puritan maiden, who collected the admission fees, and sold cards and literature descriptive of the village. My questions had to do with the ownership of the exhibit, the matter of upkeep, the disposition of the funds gathered from admission fees, etc. To all of which I received courteous and prompt replies from the demure Puritan maid.

As I entered the Buick and backed a bit for the purpose of turning I saw a car with a Missouri license tag enter the park. Of course I wondered whether the occupants were from Kansas City or Saint Louis, the prairies of the northern part of the State, or the hills of the Ozarks. My curiosity in this matter was not satisfied, however. I stopped the car (the Buick I mean) and watched. I presumed those Missourians were there to see what I had just seen. But to my surprise they paused near the gate for a moment, and without dismounting they turned the car about and drove off. One crowd from Missouri who apparently did not want to be shown. Perhaps it was the "25c admission" sign which repulsed them—don't like the idea of tolls anyway.

East Sandwich, Massachusetts, September 9.

You can't live in Fleet Street these days and let the news of the world pass through your hands without being convinced that we are rapidly approaching a big climax. If one did not believe in the reality of God one would feel as helpless, as hopeless, as straws on the edge of a whirlpool.—Hugh Redwood, night editor of the London News Chronicle.

Spirit of Maine Reunion Outstanding

Large Number of Young People

In a setting of unexcelled natural beauty, white tents on a green slope extending to the shore of Lake Winnepesaukee, Indian for "Place of Beautiful Waters," surrounded by wooded hills, with pleasant weather for nine of the ten days, Saints and visitors enjoyed the largest and best reunion ever held in the State of Maine.

Regular attendance, unbroken interest and a deep desire for a more thorough knowledge of the gospel characterized every gathering. After ten days' intensive training, good fellowship, and spiritual uplift, all returned home cheered and encouraged to "carry on."

Each evening, one could see carloads of people coming towards Brooksville from neighboring villages and from nearby islands. They filled the tabernacle to capacity and listened hungrily to the "good old gospel sermons."

Of the group who stayed on the grounds all week, the young people far outnumbered the older ones. It was found the small building usually used for the young people's prayer service was inadequate for them, so they promptly exchanged their building with the adults for the large tabernacle.

Early Morning Meetings

Patriarch U. W. Greene who had charge of the young people's meetings reports that they were of a high spiritual order. Almost without exception the young people on the grounds attended regularly. The participation throughout the services averaged about sixty per cent, culminating in a splendid meeting Saturday morning when from a group of fifty-eight, there were fifty-seven testimonies.

The adult social services, presided over by President F. M. Smith, were the high points of the reunion for many. Earnest, active participation, enriched by the blessing of the Spirit of God manifested in prayers, testimonies and by the gift of prophecy, made these meetings long to be remembered.

The children from six to thirteen were cared for by Sister J. A. Gunsolley, in junior church. Her group was small but intensely interested in learning more about the history of their church and other phases of the work she presented. Her services were much appreciated by the committee and the mothers of the children attending.

During the first hour of the day the camp grounds were deserted. Everyone attended one of the three groups. The spirit of active participation pervaded the whole reunion and helped make it a success.

Class work was conducted by Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley who called his course, "The Quest of Religious Education," and by Apostle Paul M. Hanson in "Church Objectives." The Saints appreciated this chance to learn more of the vital problems confronting the church and their responsibility in solving them and wish to thank the teachers for their invaluable lessons. Many enrolled for certificate credit and most of these had perfect attendance records.

President F. M. Smith's Contributions

The tabernacle was not large enough to hold the large crowds that came to hear President Smith on both Sunday afternoons. He spoke to his people with the liberty, power, and authority befitting a Prophet of God. He considers the most tragic moment in the life of Christ the time when He sat looking out towards Jerusalem and exclaimed, "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but ye would not." That anguished cry has been repeated in the time of latter-day Israel. How much longer shall we refuse to be gathered? He urged everyone to make every possible preparation against the day when we shall be called to go up unto Zion and take up our stewardship. When our spindles and distaffs are ready, God will send the flax.

One afternoon, President Smith gave a splendid talk, "Camp Conduct," to the young people. He spoke in a frank, meaningful way that went straight to the heart of each one who heard him. He gave the following six rules of conduct that might be very profitably adopted by any group of campers: avoid undue familiarity; avoid suggestive talk; avoid vulgarity in conduct, speech, humor and dress; avoid piggishness (running for first place in dining hall, etc.); avoid selfishness, and think of the welfare of others. Many felt that this one talk alone was worth the effort made to attend the reunion.

Fourteen Baptized

Fourteen persons were baptized and confirmed during the reunion. On the first Sunday, Helen, Fern and Elmer Billings, of Stonington, were baptized by Bishop E. L. Traver. Myrtle Snowden, also of Stonington, was baptized by Elder Robertson, and Pearl Conary, of Blue Hill, by Elder Newman Wilson. Patriarch U. W. Greene officiated Sunday, August 21, in the baptism of the following: Austin and Shelden Billings, Rockland; Marguerite Wallace, Stonington; Ethel and Verna Merrill and William C. Porter, jr., Dixfield; Levi Wilson, South Portland; Joseph Moore Smith, Surry, and Linnie Parker, Little Deer Isle.

The hearts of the children of God were made glad to see so many added to their ranks and they were inspired to be the best church members they could be, in order to make it as easy as possible for these young members to keep their newly-made covenants.

William C. Porter, jr., is the fourth generation of his family to have been baptized by Brother Greene, veteran missionary in this region.

The reunion was fortunate in having two patriarchs, U. W. Greene and J. A. Gunsolley, present. Twenty-five persons took advantage of this opportunity to obtain their patriarchal blessings.

Sister E. L. Traver, of Boston, presented a group of girls with material enough for each one to make a cellophane belt. Their appreciation for this gift was shown by the enthusiasm with which they tackled the fascinating work and by the pride with which they wore them when completed. From surplus material, the girls decided to make a belt for Sister Archie Begg. They presented it to her one evening, and she prizes it very highly, both for its beauty and for the thoughtfulness it represents.

Camp Goes for a Sail

The Maine reunion has one happy institution that probably no other reunion enjoys—a whole afternoon's sail in a two-masted coasting vessel. Brother Pearl Billings owns the boat and through his generosity makes this treat possible. This year over ninety-five campers enjoyed a glorious sail among the islands, down the "reach" and home again, with President Smith at the wheel. A paper signed by seventy-five of those who took the trip was presented to Captain Billings, attempting to express the gratitude of the group for this privilege.

Working Staff and Camp Organization

The kitchen crew under the direction of Newman Wilson, gave its annual entertainment Friday evening, after the regular service. The Jonesport people presented "Old Sol Hicks and His Choir," in costume, as a feature of the evening. Popular songs, and nonsensical farce by "Ene" Rogers and Levi Wilson, and a camp newspaper were among the other numbers.

It seemed to be a joy to work in the cook-shack at Maine reunion. Willing helpers were on hand every day to help with the cooking, and there was always a group of young people wiping dishes. Aunt Rose Pervear was again on duty every day, making her famous blueberry pies. Through reunion meals were served for ten cents except on Sunday. Brother Wilson managed, not only to come out even, but a little ahead. The expense of coming to reunion was made almost negligible, so that all could attend.

Sister E. F. Robertson acted as camp nurse, taking care of all minor accidents and illnesses.

Among the young and middle-aged folks could be seen a sprinkling of gray heads of those advanced in years. Sister Etta Gray again had her home full of people, and was often seen about the grounds. Sister Tainter, from Dixfield, though eighty-seven years old, has attended most of the reunions held in Maine. Of them she says, "Every reunion is the best one." Her hope now is that she may live to see a permanent tabernacle built.

That spirit of forward-lookingness is manifested in many ways. Those who attended this year for the first time regret that they have missed the good times in past years, and are determined to come again and bring their friends. Those who have attended regularly and have seen the gradual improvement from year to year feel that they can not miss a year. The general sentiment is, This has been the best reunion so far, and we will make next year's even better.

The presidency of the reunion consisted of President F. M. Smith, Apostle P. M. Hanson, Bishop E. L. Traver, Elder E. F. Robertson, and Elder N. M. Wilson, presidents of the Western and Eastern Maine Districts, respectively. They are to be congratulated upon the smooth-running organization, and they in turn wish to thank all those who contributed so willingly to the success of this reunion.

Birmingham, Alabama

Regular group activities were resumed September 11 after a month's vacation during which the majority of the members left the city, to visit friends and relatives in various parts of the State and country.

Doctor Gaston G. Booker and family spent part of the month's vacation at their home in McKenzie, Alabama.

Brother Horace White and wife visited their relatives in Bay Minette, where Brother White lived before coming to this city. Brother White and wife are a new addition to Birmingham numbers. Mrs. White is not a member of the church but manifests a lively interest in the search for truth.

V. R. Chandler and wife have recently returned home after nearly a month's absence. They, in company with their two sons, Wilbur and Elbert, visited the homefolks in Des Moines, Iowa, and also friends and relatives at Williamson and Lamoni, with a stop-over at Independence, Missouri. Wilbur has returned to Graceland to continue his study of music. Elbert is also attending Graceland College, enrolling for the electrical engineering course.

Birmingham Group is proud of the fact that out of thirteen members two of their number are permitted to attend the church college. After visiting this institution and meeting and conversing with some of those on whom the burden of this school rests, one can not help but feel that there a noble work is being done for the youth of the church and the result of the sacrifices made in behalf of the students is readily discernible in their attitude toward the church.

Brother John Harper, son of Brother and Sister James Harper, of McKenzie, Alabama, is now numbered with this group, having secured work here. Workers welcome the addition of another one of the priesthood to the group.

Brother and Sister Marvin Salter are the proud parents of a son, born August 22, to whom they have given the name of Marvin Lee, jr.

The names and addresses of any members known to be in Birmingham or vi-city would be appreciated. Anyone able to supply such information please write to V. R. Chandler, 1618 Fifty-first Street, Central Park, Birmingham, Alabama.

Lorain, Ohio

The branch at Lorain, Ohio, is located about fifty-three miles west of Kirtland, on the shores of Lake Erie. It belongs to the Kirtland District, and consists of fifty-three members, who are scattered over an area the radius of which is twenty-three miles, and in six different towns and villages.

The branch was organized May 27, 1928, under the direction of Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elder James E. Bishop. Clifford G. Minkler was ordained an elder and chosen as president of the branch on the same day.

This is the branch's first letter to the Herald, and it is impossible to innumerate the many blessings which the Saints have received from the heavenly Father, notable among which have been the ministrations of many of his worthy servants. Such men as Elder F. T. Haynes, of Lakewood; Elder Guy E. Hammond, of Akron; Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley, and others of the priesthood, have sought to stimulate the members to higher and nobler endeavor.

Among the most recent visitors was Elder James E. Bishop, district president, who arrived August 4, preaching on August 5, at Grafton, seventeen miles from this center, and confirming two boys who had been baptized in the afternoon by Lorain's pastor.

On the morning of August 7, Patriarch G. T. Griffiths arrived, staying until August 11, and presenting a series of five talks. At the close of Kirtland Reunion, he was directed by the Spirit of God to return here for the purpose of finishing his message, which was accomplished by the teaching of the senior class of the church school, and by a morning and evening sermon on the Sunday, August 28.

In his evening sermons, "Little Foxes Spoil the Vines," Brother Griffiths treated of those sins which can not be dealt with according to the letter of the law, but violate its spirit in such a manner as to hinder progress Zionward. Among these sins are indifference with regard to church attendance, lack of dependability, and an "I can't" spirit. Refusal to work without continual prodding, may not be considered a sin to be dealt with according to the law, but is contrary to the spirit of the gospel, which is that of positive, spontaneous righteousness, in contrast with the spirit of servitude which characterizes the slothful member of the church.

He spoke of the circumstances attending the taking of the city of Jericho by the Israelites under Joshua, as illustrative of the principles of obedience and concerted action, which are the prime requisites for the redemption of Zion. "Now, all these things happened unto them for examples; and they are written for our admonition also, and for an admonition for those upon whom the end of the world shall come." (1 Corinthians 10: 11, Inspired Version.)

On September 4, William Webbe, district superintendent of the Department of Religious Education, visited Lorain in the interests of this phase of the work.

On the evenings of September 11 and 12, Brother Homer Doty was here, giving two illustrated lectures based on his visits to the Holy Land.

The goal for which the local workers strive is the creation of a branch, the members of which are so versed in the principles of social righteousness, and so habituated to rightdoing that they will easily make the adjustments which must be made within the borders of Zion. Such a branch requires unceasing effort on the part of its officers, in teaching and enforcing the law. Such diligence, if manifested in each of the branches of the church would reduce to a minimum the number who must be sifted from the ranks, when the "judgment and cleansing" of Zion begins.

Rock Island, Illinois

District President E. R. Davis conducted a week's series of lectures here, August 20 to 27, on the lawn of Brother and Sister Lee White's home. Missionary topics such as "America in Prophecy," and "The Sealed Book of Isaiah 29," were of interest to the Saints and several neighbors who attended. In fact, they were enjoyed so much that other local members expressed the desire to have a series of meetings at their homes so that their neighbors might also have a better opportunity to hear the gospel. The missionary spirit is effective in building better branches. Another series is planned for the first of October preceding the regular district conference, to be held here October 14 to 16.

The congregation of Rock Island Church has been appreciably increased by Davenport Saints who are making that branch their new church home. The young people of the former Davenport Branch presented a delightful program for Religio Sunday evening, September 18.

Brother Lon Mercer, Brother Earl Brynor, and other local workers, have completed painting the exterior of the church, making a decided improvement in its appearance, more in keeping with the attractive lawn.

Pastor F. C. Bevan and Elder John C. Stiegel held an all-day's meeting at Millersburg a few weeks ago. Brother Bevan and family spent this Sunday in Ottumwa, Iowa, his former pastorate.

Brother L. A. White, superintendent of Religious Education, has made elaborate plans for Rally Day with the usual promotions and program features. The Sunday morning service has become an effective hour beginning at nine forty with a musical prelude, followed by congregational singing, prayer in which the congregation joins, presentation of the theme by L. A. White, sermonet by Brother L. W. Stiegel, song by the Intermediate girls with the congregation rising and joining in the last verse, and processional during which regular class places are taken. A musical interlude is the only pause between the church school and the following preaching service, and during that meeting for the adults the children are engaged in junior church work in the lower auditorium.

Brother Kenneth Cady has been appointed director of the branch orchestra, a phase of work which has been somewhat neglected, and he has found considerable unused talent. The new Hymnals have been enthusiastically enjoyed by the entire congregation.

Bound for Southern Seas

To our many friends in America, Greeting: After many months of waiting, we are at last on our voyage to the southern seas. There is always a thrill attached to going on a sea voyage, and we have enjoyed that thrill. The gathering of many friends at the wharf to bid one Godspeed, the rush and bustle incidental to the disposal of baggage, the sounding of the warning blast for visitors to retire from the ship, the rattle of the chains as the gangplank was withdrawn, and then the final glide out from the dock amid the strains of "Auld Lang Syne," completed the thrill that we had been anticipating.

There was a very nice group of Saints and friends gathered at the wharf to say farewell to us. We found it rather hard to leave the hospitable shores of America for we realized that we were leaving many, many friends behind. Pent-up emotions would find their way to the surface as we realized that good old U. S. A. was slipping away from us. Sailing for "home" was a pleasant experience for me, for even after an eight-year absence one can not down that feeling of longing for home. With Edith, however, it was different. She was leaving her native land for the first time, not knowing what was beyond.

But the restless ocean does not give one much time for meditation and reminiscence—at least for the first few hours out. The strange surroundings, the uncertain stepping as the boat lurches forward or sideways add novelty to the situation. Brisk walking around the decks soon made us used to the motion of the boat, but the specter of having to pay tribute to Neptune seemed to be hanging around. By night time, queer feelings were being experienced by Sister Lewis. Bravely she went to the supper table, but a quick exit was necessary. Others were in the same predicament. However, Edith came back to table and finished her meal. Since then she has been feeling fine, although at times she does not feel quite certain whether she would rather be on land or sea.

The boat is very comfortable and well-appointed. The passengers are pleasant and with their charming ways soon made friends of us all. Alice June has a grand time running from one passenger to another. She makes friends of all of them. We eat well, sleep well, play well, and rest, so we are enjoying the trip.

We were very pleasantly surprised to have such a host of friends remember us with letters, telegrams, fruit, candy, cookies, and many other things. We spent three afternoons reading the messages of remembrance, good wishes, and expressions of confidence. We hope that we will be true to the trust and confidence imposed in us. We may not find it possible to answer all the letters personally so we take this means of thanking our many friends for remembering us and to tell you that we appreciated each message.

It is very warm. We will cross the equator today. And then we will see the stars of the southern hemisphere. Already new ones have appeared. It has been cloudy at night time, however, so we have not seen much of the sky.

Later, September 9.—We will arrive in Papeete in the morning. The past few days have been very hot and we have enjoyed the coolness of the swimming tank. We see land today for the first time since leaving San Francisco—ten days ago. We expect to pass one of the islands at about 4 p. m.

A month in the Society Islands will be spent by us before we resume our journey to Australia.

We think of our many friends back in America and wish we could write to you. We hope that we can sometime. We pray for the success of God's work in the mainland as well as in the islands of the sea.

EDITH, GEORGE and ALICE JUNE LEWIS.

On board S. S. Monowai, near the Equator, September 6.

Waterloo, Iowa

Evening services have been resumed including Thursday night choir practice and Sunday night preaching. These had been suspended during hot weather.

The sympathy of the branch has been extended to the families of A. J. Fisher and children on the death of their oldest son and brother, De Wayne, who, on August 18, took his own life in a period of mental derangement caused by protracted worry. He was thirty-nine years old, had been a member of the church since childhood, and was loved and respected by neighbors and friends. At the time of his death he was living on a farm near Bassett, Iowa. He was buried in the Charles City Cemetery, Elder Robert Allen, of Waterloo, preaching the funeral sermon.

Leland Roosa has been called back to the Navy yard in Vallejo, California, after a short stay with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Roosa. He was accompanied by his sister, Alice. His wife and small daughters will extend their visit here some time before returning.

The young people gave a party for Helen Wood to help her celebrate her birthday. All report a jolly time.

Puyallup, Washington

This branch was well represented at the reunion held at Silver Lake, Washington, in August, which event has already been reported in the Herald. It was an unusual reunion and Puyallup Saints were encouraged to try harder than ever to live in a way becoming to Saints.

Members of this branch have been gladdened during the last few days to have Sister Harold I. Velt here. She came to the Wheeler home a few days after reunion.

Three young women have left the branch to attend college. The Saints rejoice that they are exerting themselves to better prepare for the Master's service, and yet they regret to lose these young workers even for a short time. Elma Stong left for California to be with her sister and attend college, and Ruby Wheeler and Leila Smith are now at Graceland College. Ruby and Leila were each teaching a class in the church school, and all the girls were real helpers. A party was given for them at the home of P. P. Reid shortly before their departure.

In July a lawn party and pie social were held at the C. E. Wheeler home. The young people presented one of the plays that appeared in Vision and games were enjoyed. The Seattle Choir and several members from Tacoma were present. Pies were furnished by the women and purchased by the men who gave a piece of silver as each felt he could afford. In this way money was raised for Puyallup's quota of district expenses.

The branch is going forward, and a good degree of the Spirit is felt in all meetings. The Saints have been blessed during this trying time and none have suffered for the necessities of life. As a whole they are contributing well towards the finances of the church.

Some unusually good prayer meetings are being enjoyed. Two weeks ago everyone in the house save one offered prayer. Some of these were children not yet old enough for baptism. It was indeed a wonderful meeting.

There were some changes made at the recent branch business meeting. Lester Bronson who has been the pastor since the organization of the branch was sustained with C. E. Wheeler as assistant pastor. B. B. Bronson was chosen head of the visiting department and Charles Hufferd was chosen church school director. Brother C. E. Wheeler has been acting as financial clerk for some time, but Deacon Robert Pentland is to try it this year with Brother Wheeler assisting. Brother P. P. Reid has been musical director for several years, but this year one of the young sisters, Leah Hufferd, is going to take this over.

The Saints of the district had an enjoyable time Labor Day. At the call of the reunion grounds committee, as many as could gathered at the grounds and accomplished an amazing amount of work. Nor was work the most important thing of the day; the association together promoted a better acquaintance and greater love in the group. One well-known brother in the district said at the Wednesday prayer service in his branch that the reunion services were wonderful, he thought, but that the experience of the Saints as they met and worked there together was even more wonderful.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

Designating the month of September as rally month and using for their theme "The Torch Bearers," Saints of Mount Washington have put forth an effort to increase attendance of both church school and morning and evening worship services. Church school increased its attendance ten plus per Sunday while the two worship services increased their attendance thirty-five plus per Sunday. The speakers for the worship services during the month were Bishop F. B. Blair, Elders T. C. Lentell, L. W. Fike, W. F. Bolinger, Walter Chapman, and Priest Lyle Davis. Brother Davis was also in charge of the nine thirty worship service.

The O. B. K. fellowship service the first Sunday evening in September under the leadership of Will Gould, presented a pleasing program. Lida Budd Robertson gave a reading and Wilbur Chandler sang a solo accompanied by Anita May. Then Doctor Mangum, pastor of Wornall Road and Meyer Boulevard Baptist Church, gave an interesting talk on his trip to the Holy Land.

Several Saints from Mount Washington attended the Labor Day picnic of Kansas City Stake at Swope Park.

The young people of Gudgell Park and Sugar Creek Branches gave a program here, there being several instrumental and vocal numbers followed by a timely sermon by Elder Walter Chapman, pastor of Gudgell Park.

Elder L. W. Fike held a series of meetings at the home of Brother and Sister McCartney, 525 Blue Ridge, and reports interesting meetings.

"Thy Kingdom Come" will be the theme for October in this branch.

Grandview Church

Special programs were planned for Grandview during July and August, and as a result, the attendance was doubled. For the morning service during July three young men of the priesthood addressed them, Brother Edward Baker, Brother Adelbert Withee, and Brother Howard Cook. A series of sacred musical concerts were given in the evening, preceding the preaching service, by Sister Marguerite Johnson Blaine, soprano;

Brother Colin Ferrett, baritone; Brother George Anway, tenor; Sisters Elizabeth and Elinor Smith, harpists; Brother Stewart Tandberg, cellist; the Grandview Orchestra and the Grandview Choir. Speakers have been Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Bishops J. A. Koehler and A. B. Phillips, High Priest C. J. Hunt, Elders C. Ed. Miller and R. E. Jones, and Patriarch Albert Carmichael.

September 18 was Rally Day and President Floyd M. McDowell was the morning speaker. Using as his subject "Zion the Perfection of Beauty," he emphasized, "The ugliness of this world is in our foolishness, not in God's handiwork." It is ugly because the elements of life have been torn apart. "The best things of life are harmonious," he stated. "Beauty is harmony of relationship." He pointed out three things all can do to find Zion: (1) Practice the art of harmonizing our own lives; (2) Practice the art of blending our homes, and (3) Practice the art of blending the elements of our branch.

The twin girls of Brother and Sister James Hawkins were blessed September 18 by Brothers George Mesley and Floyd McDowell, and given the names of Sylvia Alletie and Sarah Ammetie.

Argentine Church

Elder J. Charles May was the speaker morning and evening September 25. In the morning he chose his subject from Romans 12: 1, "Sacrifice." This sermon did credit and honor to the occasion, Bishop's Day. That evening his theme was "The Body of Christ—the Church of God."

Oelwein, Iowa

Members of Oelwein Branch were happy to welcome to their midst through baptism Edythe McFarlane, niece of Pastor George McFarlane, and Margaret Shippy. Both were baptized in June by Brother McFarlane.

The annual church school picnic was held at Eagle Point, a pretty spot on the Volga River, a few miles northeast of Oelwein. A happy time was had especially by the children. Wading, swimming, a baseball game, hikes, and an abundance of good things to eat helped to make the day enjoyable.

The church school classes of Brother and Sister George McFarlane enjoyed an overnight stay at Eagle Point. They fished, chased mosquitoes, and lost plenty of sleep, but report "a lot of fun." The boys and girls in these classes range in age from nine to fourteen years.

The Emma Burton circle sponsored two picnics at local parks. The second picnic was preceded by the regular circle meeting at which time the ladies exchanged canning recipes. The most popular recipe, however, was not one on canning, but one for soap making. Sister Laura Clark offered it to the women who were more than glad to receive it in a time when they are trying hard to economize.

Three babies have been blessed this summer, Ronald Adna Clark, son of Brother and Sister Adna Clark; Deloris Westendorf, daughter of Brother and Sister August Westendorf, and Joyce McMillan, daughter of a former Oelwein member, Gladys Pieplow, now Mrs. Ernest McMillan, of Vicksburg, Mississippi.

Some time back Brother W. B. Weston, an aged brother, delivered a sermon characteristic of his life testimony. He talked of his confidence in the church and admonished everyone to live close to the Lord. Brother Weston is a very quiet and unassuming person as he goes about his missionary efforts.

Elder L. G. Holloway, district missionary, has been holding preaching services at a country church ten miles east of Oelwein. Each night a group from here has accompanied him to help with singing and add to the meeting generally. Saints of this district are happy to have Brother Holloway working in this region where he labored a number of years ago.

Dow City, Iowa

This branch is now enjoying the comforts of a modern church home with the exception of a baptismal font, which workers hope soon to install. Improvements have lately been added to the basement of the building. All these things have been made possible by consecrated local workers.

Brother Everett Landon and family are here again. Brother Landon is a valuable aid in all phases of church work. They have lately passed through some trying experiences. Their six-weeks-old son had to be operated on for an abscess on the bronchial tube and for a time was very ill. For the past three weeks their eighteen-months-old daughter has been the victim of a severe case of erysipelas. The family is being sustained by the prayers of the Saints.

This branch feels keenly the loss of the Allen family now living at Randall, Iowa. A farewell dinner was sponsored for them in the church basement on Sunday. Following this event four young people were baptized, a tank being installed for the occasion. The words of Jesus, "Follow me," were displayed in colored letters above the tank, and a profusion of garden flowers added to the setting. The ordinance was administered by Fred Baber and Warren Oliver.

Since there is no branch at Randall, the Allen family would appreciate visits from Saints living nearby.

The church school has been making use of the fine outlines in Vision, and appreciates their monthly appearance.

Speakers recently heard have been M. O. Meyers, Warren Oliver, and Guy Johnson, of Deloit; Fred Fry, Howard Reynolds, and Frank Fry, of Woodbine; Elvin Boughman, George Hansen, and Cecil Talcott, of Dunlap. Of the home priesthood the congregation has listened to Fred Baber and Everett Landon.

The opening of the high school brought Brother Lynn Talcott who teaches mathematics and science. He is aiding church school activities.

Sister Clara Birkhofer recently lost her husband by death which came suddenly while he was about his work on the farm. Elder Fred Fry, of Logan, was in charge of the funeral services which were held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, September 13.

Thursday evening prayer meetings have been resumed and interest is good.

Ellington, Missouri

Logan Creek Branch

Faith is not waning in this branch. Though few in number, the Saints have an intense desire to carry forward the work of the Lord. They want to increase in works of righteousness.

Logan Creek Branch is blessed with the help and presence of Brother and Sister J. E. Wildermuth and family.

For two weeks Elder W. E. Haden was there, delivering splendid sermons to a fine congregation of interested people.

This branch happily welcomed Brother and Sister H. A. Higgins, from Kansas City, Kansas, August 28. They were accompanied by Brother Higgins's mother, of Nebraska. There have also visited Ellington this summer other helpful members of the church from Chicago, Illinois, Kennett, Missouri, and from Oklahoma.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

Since the last letter from this place to the Herald, Saints here have had cause to rejoice. Brother O. A. Rexroad had the privilege of conducting six precious souls into the water of baptism, three adults and three children, Brother and Sister Albert Beaves, Sister Charlotte Rose, Clayton White, Shirley Culp, and Brother Charles Monroe's eight-year-old daughter. Two more adults were baptized September 11.

The Saints have enjoyed the spirit of prophecy in their meetings. Though times are hard, work scarce and the Saints are poor, they are thankful for the goodness of God.

This mission has no church home of its own in which to worship. A dwelling house was rented for meeting purposes but did not prove suitable, and so another house has been obtained which is more pleasing.

District Missionary John R. Grice, of Columbus, Ohio, is coming in the near future to hold a series of meetings. Local workers feel that good will be accomplished.

Sister May Crabtree is in poor health and needs the prayers of the faithful.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, Rockwood Court and South Cherry Street

At the close of the prayer meeting the evening of September 7, First Branch held its annual business meeting, electing the following officers for the year: Pastor R. W. Jett; assistant pastor, Floyd Jett; visiting priest and church school supervisor, Rouss Eastham; musical director, Mary Hall; treasurer, C. A. Jarvis, and secretary, Stella Duke. This was one of the most peaceful sessions had in a number of years. A harmonious spirit prevailed, a spirit which, the Herald tells us, is being experienced by the Saints in many different branches and districts. Surely the Lord is working with his people.

The women's department has been reorganized. Sister Florrie Miller is president and Sister J. A. Robinson assistant president. This group has not been active during the past year, and everyone is eager to begin work. They are planning a bazaar for December. Because of the depression some of the members have moved from San Antonio, and as a consequence the treasury of the branch is greatly depleted. Church payments are behind, and so the women are hopeful that they will be able to assist in this work.

San Antonio Saints are looking forward to a visit from Apostle Roy S. Budd and Bishop L. F. P. Curry who have promised to attend the district conference to convene October 9.

Evening services for the past month have been devoted to missionary topics. J. A. Robinson, of Second Branch, kindly assisted in these services, alternating with Pastor E. L. Henson. The choir, led by Sister Mary Hall, has done good work furnishing special anthems and solos. The congregation appreciated the solos sung by Miss Hazel Canyon, a nonmember friend who has willingly contributed to the beauty of these meetings.

Fulton, Iowa

There was good attendance at Sunday school and church Sunday, August 18. Brother John Heide was the speaker.

Gale Sherman, teacher of the young married people's class, is back with her class again after an absence of several Sundays on account of the illness of her little son, Floyd. The little boy went through an operation, but is able to be with his class once more. Brother John Heide substituted for Gale Sherman while she could not meet her class.

Almost everyone is busy filling silos in this region. It has been quite cool, and several think frost will be early.

Some of the young people are practicing songs for the Farmers' Creek Sunday School Convention to be held in two weeks at Iron Hill.

Independence

Next Sunday begins the new church school year—new classes, new studies, new work and social groups, and always the big task of growing men and women for God. It was with a greater appreciation of their gigantic task and a deeper consecration to the service of the Master that the students and teachers of the Training School of Religious Education met in their final service Friday night. A check taken during this hour showed that a large majority who had been attending class were hopeful of obtaining credit on Religious Education certificates. "The Cost of Service" was the topic of Apostle F. Henry Edwards's brief, inspirational talk to the school before its dismissal. President F. M. McDowell who had charge of the school, had been called out of town on church business and was therefore unable to be present on the closing night. This school has meant much in inspiration, conviction, and helpful suggestions to its five hundred students.

The Harvest Home Festival is beginning to be the principal topic of conversation in Independence. Districts are perfecting their booth plans, and already some are at work with hammer and saw in the lower room of the Auditorium. The calls have gone to the people—Let us remember the poor. Let us share as we have never shared before.

The entire Auditorium Festival Chorus will rehearse next Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium at three o'clock with the Auditorium Orchestra, Brother Paul N. Craig in charge.

The Boy Scout Rally of the past week-end in Independence and Kansas City has been of significance to church boys of scout age, mustering with the rest Troop 222 of Spring Branch congregation; 223, Stone Church; 224, Liberty Street (and the newest troop in the district); 226, Stone Church, and 227, Walnut Park-Enoch Hill. Several church scouts received awards at the Court of Honor held Sunday night at Mount Washington Methodist Episcopal Church.

Stone Church

Sunday being Promotion Day, all departments of the Stone Church School, with the exception of the beginners, had their promotion exercises. Each year on this day a great number of children are passed from class to class and department to department in this congregation. In the main Auditorium of the church Superintendent S. A. Thiel spoke to the graduating intermediate class on "Preparing Ourselves," and the juniors had their own exercises at their eleven o'clock service downstairs. Next Sunday will bring the actual moving of the graduating classes into new departments in the following numbers: Beginners to primary department, 50; primaries to junior department, 65; juniors to intermediate department, 59, and intermediate to the senior young people's division, 65.

Elder C. Ed. Miller, the speaker at eleven o'clock, addressed a plea to the congregation in behalf of true brotherhood, the sharing of goods, and stewardships, and vividly presented situations which teach how the bread and butter needs of a people affect their morals.

Preceding this stirring sermon the Stone Church Choir, led by Paul N. Craig, gave a pleasing musical program, its regular contribution to the KMBC radio congregation, as well as the Stone Church group.

In the evening Elder E. Y. Hunker presented a discourse full of missionary zeal and sincerity. Reading for a scriptural basis of his discourse Acts 4: 10, 11, he urged the importance of group regeneration to effect the social righteousness taught by the Savior of men as an important factor in the redemption of Zion.

After a summer of missionary work in Iowa, Brother Hunker returned to his family in Independence in time to welcome a new daughter, born September 19.

Second Church

Sunday, September 25, forty visitors attended the church school service at second church.

Elder Amos E. Allen spoke at the eleven o'clock service in the main auditorium while downstairs at the junior service, Mr. Miller, of Enoch Hill, talked. At the morning preaching service the choir gave two numbers and George Street and Mrs. Ethel Schuyler sang a duet, "Did You Think to Pray?"

Patriarch W. A. McDowell talked at the evening hour. His text was Ezra 7: 10 and his scripture reading was from Romans 7: 15-23.

Several persons in Second Church congregation are ill. Mrs. Conyers, who has been ill for some time, is understood to be improving. Leonard McCormick, one of the younger members, is dangerously ill at the Independence Sanitarium.

Second Church was well represented on the Far West historical trip last Sunday.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday, August 18, was young people's day in this congregation, and all the services centered about the contribution of the young people to the church. In the morning Brother David Stewart talked at the Sunday school hour, setting forth the young people's appreciation of Pastor G. W. Eastwood and expressing their willingness to work with him for the good of the latter day cause at Spring Branch.

Twenty-seven young men and women with Jake Andes, their teacher, and Joseph Farrow, their supervisor, sang "I'll Go With Him All the Way," at the eleven o'clock service, and Pastor Eastwood talked to the younger members of the congregation on the theme, "Make Religion Real."

On the following Thursday a party composed mostly of members of the young people's department, went to the Jackson County Home for the Aged and Infirm, and put on an act followed by music. David Stewart is doing stage work as "the original Popeye in person," and his helpers are all members of the church except one. This cast entertained the inmates of the Home for half an hour, then thirty minutes were occupied by Bessie Merle Totty, Margaret McClain, Fern Belk, and Mrs. Beulah Stewart Donkawich. In this event members of the party proved themselves "minute men" and "minute women," rendering help at almost a moment's notice.

The promotion service of the church school occupied the eleven o'clock hour last Sunday, all the children of the school marching to the platform to the strains of "Redeemer of Israel." Following the violin rendition of "Onward to Zion," by David Stewart, the congregational hymn, "We're Marching to Zion," and the invocation, the various departments of the school presented their program contributions. Each child did excellently. Brother Alma Tankard awarded the certificates. Twenty-two were promoted, five from the nursery department; seven from the beginners; three from the primaries, and seven from the juniors.

The church school opened Sunday night after a summer's vacation, the director of Religious Education in charge. After the class period G. F. Weston read an article he wrote about the local play nights in 1930. Violin and Hawaiian guitar duets were contributed by David Stewart and Ira Weeks.

Between the evening church school and preaching services, there was a congregational sing. Brother Robert Fish was the evening speaker, his text being a part of Mark 10: 17: "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

The Training School of Religious Education, held during the past two weeks at the Stone Church, cut midweek prayer service attendance at Spring Branch, a number from her having enrolled as students in the school. But Sunday morning prayer hours have been well attended, and the time profitably spent. Prayer meeting is a service which the people of this congregation do not forget.

Fanning, Kansas

Nearly one hundred were present to enjoy the splendid sacrament service September 4. Elder Samuel Twombly was the speaker at the evening meeting.

Brother James A. Thomas was called to Scranton, Kansas, September 14, to preach the funeral sermon for Brother James Bailey, a Northeastern Kansas pioneer elder and one who was intimately acquainted with the Saints in the various branches of the district. He had served in various official capacities in this region. Fanning Saints extend sympathy to the bereaved family.

On Sunday, September 18, the monthly junior church service was held. The junior girls' chorus, under the direction of Sister Mabel Mortimore, sang several selections. Sister Grace Thomas told the story, "The Other Wise Man," which was in harmony with Brother William Twombly's sermon on the subject, "Consecration." In the evening Brother Will Marsh spoke from the words of Christ as found recorded in Luke 12, and gave a fine exhortation to the Saints on keeping the law of the church. Other recent speakers have been Elders James A. Thomas and Virgil Sheppard.

A number of the Fanning women attended a miscellaneous shower given on Saturday, September 17, by Sisters Elsie Long and Virginia Tilden Keller for Mrs. Katharine Abbott Mason, an attendant of the Saints' church, who was recently married.

Fanning Saints were glad to have Brother and Sister Harry Sprague and son, Harold, of Independence; Sister O. B. Thomas, of Lamoni, Iowa, and other visitors, present at the morning service September 18.

Welcome Apostle Rushton to Manchester, England

A long-awaited-for and splendid day's services were held in North East Manchester Church, James Street, Bradford, Sunday, August 14. It was long-awaited-for because the principal figure in the meetings was an esteemed brother and one-time collaborer in old Manchester District, Apostle John W. Rushton.

More than twenty-five years ago Brother Rushton took part in a service in the James Street Church then a wooden tent, and many changes have taken place since he left for the United States, both in the structure of the building and in those who worshiped therein. Many familiar faces are missing; some have gone home, and others are scattered in many parts of the world and have been the means of spreading the gospel in almost every part of the British Empire. The wooden tent, familiar to Brother John has vanished, and in its place stands a fine brick building with an organ that cost over four hundred pounds. There are many other structural beauties in the interior of the building and these two were noted by Brother Rushton.

The service in the morning, Brother Rushton speaker, was of a local character for North East Manchester Branch, and the major portion of the time was spent by him in renewing his association with the Saints. The evening service brought together the three locals—North East Manchester, North Manchester, and Beresford Road Branches, and a splendid number of Saints heard the message of Brother Rushton and felt the Spirit behind his words.

The Saints are assured from the experiences of this day that the ministry of Brother Rushton in England is going to be a pleasant one even though a little arduous, for he has the love and esteem of all who know him by reason of personal associations and also of those too young to remember him but who because of the experiences of their elders, have already learned to love this minister. The Saints wish for him the blessings of God in his labors.

Pasadena, California, Loses Worker

Silas Collins Elliott Accidentally Shot

It will be a shock to his many friends throughout the church to learn that Silas Collins Elliott, known to many as "Collie," was killed by accidental gunshot on Saturday, August 20, at Pasadena, California.

True to form, Collie was helping some one else in that which caused his death. His nephew was preparing to hitch-hike across the country, and Collie had prepared a little German automatic for him to take with him. A few minutes before the accident, Collie was talking the gospel to a neighbor lady and her son and brought out his new church pin to show them.

He was alone when the accident occurred. Shortly after he reentered the house, the neighbor heard a shot, but thought it something out in the street. It appears that Brother Elliott either knocked the gun off the stand, or picked it up by the holster and it fell out, striking butt down and discharging. The bullet entered the lower right abdomen and lodged in the back of the neck. He managed to walk across the room and dial his sister's phone, but was unable to talk, and when found, sat there with the receiver in his hand.

Thus passes one of the most faithful and active workers of Pasadena group, one who was a friend and a brother. The span of life is indeed uncertain. And such accidents emphasize the necessity of preparation for any of life's emergencies.

Brother Elliott married Ethel Kelley, daughter of Apostle William H. Kelley, but lost her during the flu epidemic. He never seemed to recover from the loss and never remarried. For the last eight years he has resided in California, and it was due to his persistence that the work was begun at Pasadena which resulted in a mission organization that is being successfully carried on. Elder Lawrence Brockway has recently been put in charge. Brother Elliott not only invited people to come to church, but he went and brought them and sometimes came with a half dozen or more. His auto was a real missionary car.

He talked the gospel wherever an opportunity afforded and has distributed hundreds of tracts, and loaned many books and other periodicals. He demonstrated the value of his religion in many practical ways. He was always ready to assist missionaries with finances, and if he had one outstanding fault it was perhaps his generosity. Since his death, a restaurant owner, not a member of the church, informs us that during this depression Collie has sent hundreds of people to his place to eat with instructions to charge the bill to him.

His mother passed away about a year ago. Collie has missed her much. Now there has been a reunion with her and other loved ones on the other side. Our loss is his gain.

Our brother was quite an inventive genius and this last spring designed and manufactured a church pin, President F. M. Smith being presented with one on his visit to Los Angeles this spring. This has been favorably received in leading official circles wherever seen, and it is hoped by the writer that it may be adopted as the official pin for the church throughout the world. Though he is gone and will be greatly missed, the work Collie did still lives on, and the results therefrom will only be revealed at the judgment day.

Honolulu, Hawaii

The three branches in Honolulu are actively trying to keep up their past records though they have been handicapped for the past eighteen months since the missionaries to the islands, Brother and Sister R. L. Macrae, have been stationed at Hilo.

The three Sunday schools held their summer picnics separately. The Chinese and Hawaiian Branches held their outings on the east end of Waikiki Beach. The Japanese Sunday school held their picnic seven or eight miles west of Honolulu on the beach. Each picnic proved a success, furnishing outdoor sports such as swimming and hand and volley ball games.

The summer vacations are over now, but this year Honolulu members were glad to welcome many visitors from the other islands. School days are here once more, and many are busy with new work. The Saints miss Sister Dowsett and daughter. Sister Dowsett went with her daughter to the States to enter Vassar College. It is the hope of Island Saints that this trip will be a prosperous and happy one.

Brothers Waller and Moore are in good health and very active. Both are elders and past their three score and ten years. They with several other faithful ones keep the younger members in good faith.

Labor Day was spent at the Main Branch as a real labor day. Saints had a general cleaning up, and the spirit of helpfulness was shown. Lunches were brought and all joined in a real dinner at noon. Also, Main Branch had to put in about one hundred feet of sidewalk. The city asked about one hundred and fifty dollars to put it in, but the church boys decided to purchase the cement and rock and donate their labor. This saved the budget about seventy-five dollars.

The Saints in Honolulu also are feeling the depression.

At the Japanese Branch the young deacon was ordained to the office of priest and another young man was ordained a deacon. Also Main Branch gained a young man by baptism a few days ago.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalov Church, 1423 First Avenue South

Fargo held its annual business meeting September 14. Elder H. E. Ratcliffe was elected branch president; Courtney Rotzien, treasurer and solicitor; Irma Walker, secretary; Ferne Shackow, chorister, and Elsie Brown, pianist. Elder H. E. Ratcliffe was reelected church school director. The new supervisors elected were: Adult division, Mrs. Thomas Hunter; young people's division, Mrs. Avis Halbett, and children's division, Mrs. J. F. Rotzien. The meeting was well attended and a good spirit prevailed.

Missionary P. T. Andersen held a three-weeks series of meetings in August, using illustrated charts. He clearly presented the first principles of the gospel, the three glories, the different dispensations, signs of the times, the church in the wilderness down to the Restoration. Only a few nonmembers attended, but the faith of the Saints were strengthened. A picnic dinner was enjoyed at Oak Grove Park on Sunday. Saints from LaMoure, North Dakota, and Lake Park and Borup, Minnesota, were in attendance.

The ladies' aid held an ice cream social at West Fargo on Brother Lewis Spillman's lawn. Proceeds will be applied on the church taxes.

Vera and Vaneeta Stowell met with an accident returning home from delivering the ice cream. The milk truck they were driving overturned three times, the girls suffered several cuts and bruises. But they were not seriously injured.

"Pride in Workmanship Is a Real Factor in the Lives of Real Men," quoted from Apostle F. H. Edwards's in the Ensign, and "Repentance" were themes used in recent prayer services by Elder H. E. Ratcliffe. His subject for preaching Sunday evening was "How Christianity Might Apply to Our Lives Now."

Eleanor, little daughter of Brother and Sister Jerome Stowell, who has been very ill of infantile paralysis, is recovering. Their baby has also been suffering from an abscess in the ear. Saints are thankful for the blessing of God to these children.

Gay Christensen, of Ava, Missouri, expects to stay here for sometime. Roy Weddle, of Lamoni, Iowa, has been in Fargo several weeks. These two young brothers are welcome additions to the branch.

The Saints desire to be "overcomers" and hope to keep the work moving on.

Trials and hardships borne patiently and in faith, will purify the soul. Elder C. J. Smith, former missionary, before leaving, earnestly pled with the Saints "to carry on and go all the way." He stated, "We dare not fail in this great work."

Mitchell, Ontario

On Sunday, August 21, Elder Percy Farrow and wife came from Stratford where he preached in the morning. He preached in the afternoon, his sermon being heard by Saints from McKillop, twenty miles from a meeting place. In the evening the sermon was preached from the bandstand and Sister Farrow sang a beautiful solo.

Since the weather was very warm, Brother Edmond Bell hung his Coleman lantern on the veranda of Brother John Blazey's home and meetings were held on his lawn for two evenings. The citizens were attracted by the bright light and the melody of hymn singing.

Elder Farrow visited nearly all the homes of Saints in Mitchell Branch, and as a result of his visiting and preaching, a young woman was baptized in the waters of the River Thames and was confirmed a member of the church by Brother Farrow. On that day Brother Farrow preached at Rostock Church in the morning, at Mitchell in the afternoon, then on to London, a distance of forty miles, to preach at night.

Peace, love, joy, and unity were enjoyed by the Saints during these happy weeks Brother Farrow was here. All are working together after having enjoyed a foretaste of heavenly love. The spiritual blessings promised the people of God are here being enjoyed. On the first Sunday in September three of the priesthood were divinely spoken to.

Piedmont, Oklahoma

A two-weeks' series of meetings conducted by Elder Z. S. Renfroe, of Davidson, Oklahoma, opened August 28, at the farm home of H. K. Rowland, seven miles from Piedmont. The members of the Rowland family wished to warn their neighbors in a more outstanding way than they had ever done before.

Years ago Elder Hubert Case did much preaching in this neighborhood, and a goodly number were baptized, yet many heard who did not obey. So with the help of Brother Renfroe, H. V. Pratt, and others, this meeting was planned.

The district tent, forty by sixty feet in size, was raised, fairly comfortably seated, and being already wired, was connected with the farm lighting system. It seemed very inviting to those interested.

Most of the time the crowds were fair to good and on Sundays excellent. The El Reno Saints, eighteen miles away, attended loyally the first week and some from Oklahoma City, thirty miles, came every night the second week. To these Saints and friends belong the credit for the music. There was also some attendance from Calumet Branch, the same distance away, their pastor Brother Owings, preaching one night to relieve Brother Renfroe whose throat demanded a rest.

There were some outstanding days for Saints and others. Sunday, September 4, Sunday school opened at ten o'clock, followed by preaching service. At half past two sacrament service was held, preceded by talks on oblation by Brother Kemp and sacrament by Brother Dillon instead of the usual testimony meeting. Preaching at eight in the evening. Sunday, September 11, Brother Dillion, occupied the eleven o'clock hour; at half past two Brother Kemp, pastor of the Oklahoma City Branch, spoke, and Elder Renfroe occupied the evening hour. Song services were most enjoyed on these days.

While there were no baptisms, the Rowland family feels that good was accomplished. Many expressions of appreciations came from the neighbors such as: "I could have listened another hour!" and "This tent should be left standing right here for a gathering place each Sunday." A Saint was heard to say, "This has been a wonderful day," and the young people were saying, "I want to start going to church with you," and "We are going to quit wasting our lives." Appreciation was also apparent in the offering given.

Brother Renfroe's services, given so cheerfully, strengthen the Saints in the belief that men are sent of God. And the messages seemed so clear and powerful that some of the hearers wondered how men can refrain from obedience. Members of the Rowland family and people in the community wish that this might be an annual affair.

Cleveland, Ohio

East Side Branch

Cleveland Branch wishes to report a gain in attendance and a wonderful feeling of fellowship and good will existing among the Saints. Those who attended the Kirtland reunion came back feeling greatly refreshed and with new strength and vigor to carry on the work here.

At the last prayer meeting of the reunion, the Saints were told that the wonderful Spirit attending the reunion would continue with them on their way home and into their branches, and this same spirit continued with the Cleveland Branch and was manifested in the communion service on the first Sunday of the month. Several people were spoken to through the Spirit, and the congregation was told that the Lord was pleased with them.

On Labor Day the Religio held a picnic in the Rose Garden at Wade Park which was well attended, and everyone had a good time.

Brother Arthur Hanna was baptized into the church on the eighteenth of this month, and another baptism is scheduled for next Sunday.

Our Departed Ones

BEESELEY.—Emma Runie Gomillion was born at McKenzie, Alabama, September 24, 1892. She grew to womanhood in that vicinity, and married George Ed. Beesley March 28, 1909. This union was blessed with five children, namely: Emma, who is now Mrs. Arthur Rogers, of Montgomery; Luther Elvin; Edna Evelyn, who is now Mrs. Erbie Lee Barlow, of McKenzie; Ander Jackson, and Eunice Ostell. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints July 21, 1929, being baptized by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. She passed away at her home near McKenzie early the morning of September 6, 1932. All who knew Sister Beesley loved her. All who knew her are now determined to carry on her work that all might have the same glorious reward that awaits her when the trump of God shall sound. Funeral services were held at the Pleasant Hill Church of McKenzie, Undertaker Barrow in charge, he being assisted by Elder Lyle D. Flynn. The sermon was delivered by Elder H. H. Higgins.

WHATTAM.—Merle Orion, son of Gerald and Ella Mae Whattam, was born March 23, 1927, at Weyburn Plains, Saskatchewan, Canada. Died after a short illness September 1, 1932, leaving to mourn his departure his parents, one sister, three brothers, other relatives, and friends. One sister preceded him to the land of rest. Merle was a regular attendant at Sunday school and was one of the best scholars in his class. The funeral was from the Saints' church in Weyburn, in charge of Elder O. W. Okerlind. Elder John R. Neill preached the sermon. Interment was in Hillcrest Cemetery.

CHADWICK.—Mary Adeline Raymond, was born February 16, 1863, in Clarke County, Missouri, and passed away on September 14, 1932, at Wichita, Kansas. Her parents were members of the church, her father being Elder J. T. Turner, of Peabody, Kansas. She was married to O. J. Raymond at the age of twenty, and to this union eight children born, two of them having preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when she was sixteen years of age. On Sunday morning, September 11, she attended the church school and preaching service and on Tuesday, the 13th, she was stricken with a paralytic stroke, and passed away Wednesday morning about 2.40 without regaining consciousness. She attended the services regularly and especially enjoyed the prayer services. She leaves to mourn her husband, Joseph Chadwick, four sons, Lewis F. Raymond, Doctor Olie J. Raymond, Francis M. Raymond, and Charles Raymond, all of Wichita; two daughters, Mrs. Elsie Estes Cutten, New Mexico, and Mrs. Florence Griffith, of Houston, Texas; nine grandchildren and many friends. Services were in charge of Arthur E. Stoff, pastor of Wichita Branch.

JAQUITH.—Corinne Ruth Jaquith was born July 12, 1920, at Sealing, Oklahoma. Passed away September 13, 1932, at Wichita, Kansas. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints September 16, 1928. Being an only child, she was a bright and shining light in the eyes of her parents, Clyde C. and Inez R. Jaquith. Moved to Wichita, Kansas, with her parents when she was twenty-two months old. Attended Lowell and Franklin Schools. Her affectionate and kind disposition made friends of all whom she met. Left to mourn are her parents, her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Jaquith and Mr. and Mrs. M. Moldrup, both of Sealing, Oklahoma, five uncles, four aunts, five cousins, and a host of friends. Interment was September 15, in Wichita Park Cemetery. Arthur E. Stoff, pastor of Wichita Branch, was in charge of the service.

BROWN.—Alice Brown, daughter of George W. and Secly Rouse, was born March 13, 1855, in Lee County, Iowa. Died September 7, 1932, at Oskaloosa, Iowa. November 29, 1875, she was married to Elder C. B. Brown, and to them one son was born who preceded her in death. In 1891, she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and remained faithful till death claimed her. Surviving are her husband, one brother, three sisters, and many other relatives. Interment was in Forest Cemetery, Oskaloosa.

DARROW.—Matilda E. Darrow, one of the faithful members of Stockton Branch, has passed to a well-earned rest. For many years she made a home for missionaries, and helped to spread the gospel in other ways. She was born at Dent, California, July 20, 1863, and was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Stockton, February 19, 1887, by Thomas Daley. She died July 6, 1932. Her children laid her away in the New Mausoleum in Stockton in which city she lived and made many friends. The funeral was a private service and the sermon was by W. H. Dawson, July 9. Relatives from Los Angeles and San Jose, as well as Stockton, were present.

COOK.—Lewis L. Cook was born at Modena, Wisconsin, April 6, 1864, and passed from this life September 16, 1932, at his home in Independence, Missouri, where he had resided the past five years. Previous to coming to Independence he lived in Post Oak, Missouri, for a number of years. July 4, 1885, he was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Sanders, and to this union were born two sons and two daughters. August 25, 1895, he and his companion were baptized at Ono, Pierce County, Wisconsin, by Elder H. P. Curtis, and confirmed members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elders H. P. Curtis and A. V. Closson. Brother Cook held the office of teacher in the church for a number of years. January 3, 1918, his companion passed from this life. One son, Lewis Calvin Cook, has also preceded him, dying in France during the World War. June 23, 1931, he married Vina Marco whom he leaves to mourn his passing. He is also survived by two daughters, Mrs. Virgie Barnes, of North Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Maude Knoth of Kansas City, Missouri; one son, G. L. Cook, of Independence, Missouri; one brother, George Cook, of Menomonee, Wisconsin; nine grandchildren, other relatives, and a host of friends. The funeral was held in the Walnut Park Church at Independence, in charge of Paul R. Davis; sermon by W. A. McDowell.

ELLIOTT.—Silas Collins, son of Silas P. and Elizabeth Elliott, was born at Conifer, Colorado, October 22, 1887. Died from accidental gunshot wound at Pasadena, California, August 20, 1932. Was baptized by Columbus Scott at Conifer, Colorado, September 19, 1909. He moved to California about eight years ago and one of the leading workers at Pasadena. The funeral was at Pasadena August 23, in charge of Apostle M. A. McConley, assisted by Elder Lawrence Brockway. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery, Pasadena.

What did the Restoration restore? The original teachings of Jesus Christ in the fullness of the gospel, the organization of the church, and the authority of the priesthood, all of these to sound again the fundamental note of the prophets of the ages—social righteousness.—E. Y. Hunker.

While the human reason has a lofty place in the council chamber of the faculties of the soul, we should bear in mind that it has its limitations, and that what passes for reason with many men is often something else.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

The Pigeonhole

HERE'S A TRUE STORY:

He was just a young man; anybody could see that. He had recently married the finest and most beautiful girl in the world, and he could hardly contain his happiness. He had a job, and for the first time in his life he was renting a house like a regular citizen. This experience was even more important to him than his first pair of long trousers had been, or his first vote. The world was a beautiful place.

Then the work at the plant where he was employed became slack. He was employed only a part of every week. He worked hard, and he was kept long after other men had been dismissed. But in spite of all his conscientious effort, the days of idleness became more than the days of work.

Things were desperate. He could not tell his young wife how bad they were—or so he thought. He did not want to see her suffer. Lines of worry crept around his eyes, and there was the strange light of fear in his eyes.

One week his last remaining handful of small change was not enough to bring home all of the groceries they needed. At last he had to tell her. It surprised him when she was not frightened. In fact, the information aroused in her a revelation of strength and courage that amazed him.

She had an idea. It involved the manufacture and sale of an inexpensive product that everybody could use; that everybody would want. She would help him. And he would sell it.

Business came slowly, but they managed to pull through. Then they found that they could barely supply orders. Their profits were not great, but they made a living; and they gradually lost fear of the disaster that threatened them.

This story, known to so few, is such a lesson in faith and courage, such a living example of the gospel of work, that it ought to be of value to church members who have encountered difficulties in our recent hard time.

AFTER YEARS OF NEGOTIATIONS three great English bodies of the Methodist Church have united: the Wesleyan, the Primitive Methodist, and the United Methodist branches. This will include from three to four million British Methodists, who have church property totalling more than $300,000,000 in value. This reminds us of the song that Gene Closson used to teach us at the "pep" meetings: "The more we get together, the happier we'll be!" Interchurch unity is a fine idea for organizations that have much in common. But for a church that has a distinctive program and message, it is out of the question.

OF COURSE, we only know, like Will Rogers, what we read in the papers, but it looks as if New York can stand anything but an economical mayor. Jimmy Walker, play-boy and wise-cracker, could do anything he wanted to with city money for years and nobody had a word to say. Joseph McKee, who steps into Walker's place when that worthy could no longer stand the light of investigation and resigned, finds practically the whole city aroused against him when he tries to effect economies and shut down on graft. Tammany is against him, too, which is a pretty fair indication that he is right. We wish that our greatest city could set a better example for other communities in the matter of good government.

THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT has sent one hundred and five people into exile, most of them of the former nobility of Spain. The place of exile is said to be a very hot place down on the coast of Africa. Most of them will probably die. This is much more humane, of course, than the Russian method of shooting them, or beating them to death, or letting them freeze on the trail to Siberia. It occurs to us that the United States needs a desert island for the exile of its gangster and corrupt politicians. It will need to be a large island.

Editorial

Introducing the New "Herald"

In this issue the Editors present the new Herald, which continues its regular features and incorporates selected items from the Ensign and the Vision. Some not previously included in any of the publications may be added as time goes on, dependent upon the conferences of the Editors and the reports they get from the membership of the church.

Numbers of readers have already written in expressing their satisfaction at the proposed change, and we hope that this and succeeding issues may measure up to their expectations. The Editors will be glad to have comment and suggestions, and solicit the interest and contributions of those who have helped with the work of all three former publications.

"First Be Reconciled to Thy Brother"

The First Presidency is in receipt of a letter from a member of the Quorum of Twelve which contains a suggestion of such merit that we not only pass it on for the benefit of the readers of the Herald, but are happy to make it the basis for a definite recommendation to the Saints throughout the church. The letter reads in part as follows:

As I sat in the sacrament service yesterday, waiting to partake of the sacramental emblems, my thoughts turned to "Joseph the Peacemaker," the centennial of whose birth we shall celebrate one month from now. As my mind slipped back along the years I was impressed once again with the enduring splendor of the foundation which Brother Joseph has laid for the building of Zion, and I felt a growing eagerness to celebrate his birth by taking a definite step forward along the lines indicated by him.

There was nothing trivial about the ministry of the late President Joseph Smith. He dealt, always, with fundamental values. Perhaps this grew out of the fact that his early years had been clouded by the blighting of our hope for the early building of Zion. He knew that the fundamental reason for our expulsion from the land of our inheritance was the prevalence of "jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strife" among the children of the kingdom. So, his whole ministry was given to the perfection of a firm foundation of righteousness and peace, and the Lord was able to use him repeatedly to admonish the Saints in this regard. The last part of his last message to the church was a plea that the Saints should exercise "that charity which Paul, an apostle of Christ, declared to be the quality of Christian virtue which thinketh no evil."

With these thoughts in mind, and in the atmosphere of the sacrament service, it seemed to me eminently fitting that we make a special effort to celebrate the centennial of Joseph by making this a month of special endeavor on the part of every member of the church to eliminate contention and envy and strife, and to initiate an era of mutual helpfulness. Such a spirit has already been poured out upon the church in large measure, but many a branch is still held back from its high destiny because of contention over trivial things. If discord can be banished from every heart and every life, and if the pure love of Christ can in truth reign among us, there is no obstacle that shall be insurmountable.

Nearly ten years ago I was with the late P. R. Burton on the Indian reservation in Northeastern Nebraska. "P. R." had baptized quite a number of Indian converts during the month, and we came at last to the week prior to the Sunday on which they were to receive their first communion. Brother Burton called them together and said to them, "If you were asked to go to the White House and partake of a meal with the President of the United States, what preparation would you make?" "We would dress up in all our tribal regalia," said one of the older Indian brethren. "That is exactly what I want you to do for your meal with the King of kings next Sunday morning," answered Brother Burton, "and remember that the robes which delight his eyes are the robes of righteousness. He can not welcome you to the feast unless you have first made peace with any one against whom you hold hardness or whom might hold hard feelings against you." The days immediately following were busy ones for the new converts; some of them actually traveled many miles to make peace. That Sunday I attended one of the most spiritual sacrament services that I have ever attended, at any time, anywhere. I believe that the Saints throughout the church will respond to such an appeal and the Lord will meet such a response with a generous outpouring of his Spirit.

What greater tribute could we pay to "Joseph the Peacemaker" than to apply in our relationships as Saints the principles of Christian living which he so earnestly and continuously taught? All that we know of the life and character of Brother Joseph assures us that no expression of our esteem could please him more.

"To eliminate contention, envy, and strife, and to initiate an era of mutual helpfulness" would certainly be a worthy objective for followers of the Master at any time. Just now the church that bears His name is in the midst of one of the most critical periods of its history. If ever we should unite in a common cause, if ever we should live at peace one with another that time is now.

We therefore suggest and urge that the Saints, during the next few weeks especially make an earnest effort to eliminate "jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strife" from their midst.

We recommend that this matter be made the subject of prayer, the theme for prayer services, and the objective of the spiritual ministry of the priesthood, to the end that before we approach the Communion table on November 6, each shall "first be reconciled to his brother" and can worthily and unashamed plead for that courage and wisdom which our heavenly Father alone can provide.

The Rock Island Lines Celebrate Eightieth Birthday With a Present to the Public

Railroad Offers a Cent-a-mile Rate October 8 to 12

The Rock Island Railroad has adopted a novel and, from the standpoint of the public, a practical plan of observance of their eightieth anniversary which occurs on October 10. Announcement is made through the passenger traffic department that on October 8, only, the Rock Island will offer a rate of approximately one-cent-a-mile for the round trip between all points on the system, good for return trip until midnight of October 12, tickets to be honored on all trains, including the Golden State Limited and Rocky Mountain Limited, not only in coaches but in sleeping and parlor cars as well on payment of Pullman charges, with the usual half-fare for children. The announcement offers as features a preview of the Chicago Century of Progress; family reunions; special shopping days in all towns along the railroad under the supervision of local chambers of commerce, etc.

The anniversary also will be featured on the railroad's dining cars and eating houses throughout the system. President Gorman has addressed a letter to all employees, urging them to make united effort to attract attention of the public to the Rock Island's eightieth anniversary observance.

The Rock Island Railroad ran its first train between Chicago and Joliet on October 10, 1852, and was the first railroad to cross the Mississippi River, bridging that stream between Rock Island and Davenport in 1855. Later this structure attracted national attention when Abraham Lincoln, as an attorney, defended the railroad against the river interests in the maintenance of the bridge. By 1862 the Rock Island had increased its mileage from 40 miles to 434 miles; 1872 to 1,288 miles; 1882 to 2,218 miles; 1892 to 3,537 miles; 1902 to 5,370 miles; 1912 to 7,100 miles; 1922 to 8,096 miles, and 1932 to 8,353 miles; serving fourteen western states. In 1931 the Rock Island completed one of the largest railroad construction projects in the middle west in building a short line between Trenton and Kansas City, Missouri, a distance of 83 miles. The same year, a new line was reconstructed between Dallas and Galveston, Texas, thus giving the Rock Island a direct seaboard connection on the Gulf.

L. M. Allen, vice president and passenger traffic manager, in commenting on the one-cent-a-mile eightieth anniversary rate, said:

"We hope that this low rate not alone will attract attention to the Rock Island Lines' anniversary but, likewise, will help to lead the way back to better times. We are applying the rate to Pullman passengers as well as to coach passengers, in order that all our patrons may benefit equally. We believe this is an unusual opportunity to take a social or business trip at little expense. We offer it as a friendly gesture on our eightieth anniversary."

October 23 Is College Day

For fifteen years the church has been setting aside one Sunday each year as College Day in the interests of the Graceland Scholarship Loan Fund. The response of the people of the church has been generous, and the college by means of this fund has been able to extend its service to many young men and women who otherwise could not have enrolled. There are still many others who have not yet had their desired opportunity to study. On their behalf, we announce to the Saints this year's College Day, October 23.

In many branches those in charge have in former years carried out College Day programs that were not only gratifying in result but which also provided pleasant experiences for their respective congregations. We recommend the example of these to branch and district officers everywhere. Preparations should begin now for the College Day service. Friends and former students of Graceland should be given the opportunity and the responsibility of speaking on her behalf. Young people who are anxious to go to Graceland should give voice to their ambitions and ideals.

The record of Graceland's service to the church is worthy. If this service is to be enlarged, the Scholarship Loan Fund must be enlarged. The College could accommodate a student body twice as large as the present one, and this increase in enrollment could take place now if the Loan Fund were large enough to assist all who are anxious to come.

Those in charge of College Day programs should strive to be fully informed as to the purpose of the day and as to the administration of the Loan Fund. Articles in the October 12 issue of the Herald will furnish information and illustrative material. If difficulties were encountered in the preparation of last year's programs, they may be avoided this year by early, careful planning. The church or college offices will be glad to respond to any questions or requests for assistance.

This year, more than ever before, it is important that young people who wish to do so should have the opportunity of continuing their education. To loan them the money to do this is to enable them to help themselves. To fail these boys and girls is to leave them to face an extremely difficult economic situation.

We commend to the Saints Graceland College, her students, present and to come, and the opportunities of College Day, October 23.

Not only wrongdoing and dishonesty are sin. There is the sin of not understanding your world to your utmost. There is the sin of not making your way plain to your fellow creatures so that they can judge and help you. There is the supreme sin of finding power in your hands and letting the occasion pass you by. And since you ask me about it, these are the sins that I lay at the door of the banking community of the world today.—H. G. Wells.

The church is a powerhouse supplying current that is needed throughout the night. If something goes wrong in the night or in the powerhouse, that defect must be set to rights without stopping the dynamos, for that must not be done.—Richard K. Morton.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle E. J. Gleazer at Webb City

Sunday, Apostle E. J. Gleazer left Independence for Webb City, Missouri, where he will conduct two weeks of missionary meetings. Though the church financial condition made it unwise for Apostle E. J. Gleazer to accompany Apostle G. G. Lewis and family to the Australasian Mission to which he was appointed to labor by the late General Conference, Brother Gleazer's ardor in missionary work is undampened.

In recent months the Webb City territory (Spring River District) has responded well to missionary efforts, and good results are expected from Brother Gleazer's work there.

Rally Week for Sioux City

This year Rally Week for Sioux City, Iowa, Branch, beginning September 18, included a variety of features. A "pantry party" was sponsored by a women's group Monday evening, and on Tuesday the music department had an old-fashioned "singing school." On Wednesday evening a spiritually moving prayer meeting did much to cheer and help everyone. Another group of women held regular Doctrine and Covenants study class on Thursday, and Friday night was recreation time for the branch, a wiener roast being enjoyed. Sunday was the annual Rally-Promotion-Home-coming Day. This is the second annual Rally Week Sioux City has held, and is a period designated for intensive activity along departmental lines.

Things Are Happening

Eleven people have been baptized at Sacramento, California, this year. These new members vary in age from the eight-year-old child to a woman almost eighty years of age.

Another missionary opening has been added to the record of J. O. Dutton, veteran missionary of the gospel. This time it is Cannelton, Indiana.

The Saints of Beresford Road Church, Manchester, England, know the meaning of real teamwork between the young and the aged. The entire membership is included under the title "young people."

There are now forty-four Saints at Caraway, Arkansas, where Missionary A. M. Baker held meetings this summer.

Graceland College students are making the acquaintance of Elder and Sister N. L. Booker, in charge of the college commissary, in more ways than one. The other day Brother and Sister Booker and their daughter, Aarona, entertained at chapel by taking the students on an imaginary trip in the West Indies. The Bookers were once stationed there as missionaries.

Idola Club at State Fair

Spiritual growth and financial profit have resulted for the Idola Club, of Sacramento, California, whose members conducted a large lunchstand at the State Fair this summer. Cooperation was their watchword, and everyone donated his work for love and need of the church. Though the Fair this year was not so well attended as last year, the Idola lunchstand receipts were larger, whereas some of the other lunchstands on the grounds reported loss.

Among the many who helped in this venture was Sacramento's pastor, W. H. Dawson, who washed dishes every evening after his other work and watched over the workers. His daily prayer was that they would be given strength for their task. To Sister Ella Dawson, chairman of the business committee of the club, goes much of the credit for the success of the enterprise.

Charles Edwin Willey Passes Away

Charles Edwin Willey who contributed many years of service to the church under conference appointment and a long life of usefulness as a local worker, passed away at Lamoni, Iowa, September 22. He was a man of faith and integrity, ever zealous in the cause of Christ. Brother Willey was born in 1851, in Ohio, and joined the church in 1889. In the priesthood he occupied the offices of priest and elder and then was called and ordained a seventy. From 1902 to 1920, (when he was superannuated) missionary work took him to Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, and Washington.

District President Is Zealous Missionary

Rock Island District (neighboring portions of Iowa and Illinois) is fortunate in having not only an excellent and industrious district president, but one whose work is enhanced by real missionary zeal, Elder E. R. Davis. Busy though he is with the district presidential duties, he finds time to conduct missionary meetings.

Yesterday he began a series at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. And recently he held week-day evening services and an all-day get-together on Sunday for a group of farmers at Deer Grove, Illinois, at the home of Brother L. E. Burgess. Attendance was encouraging. Eight Latter Day Saints lived in that community when Brother Davis opened up the work in June, last year. Six more have been baptized this summer, and there are other prospects.

Political Aims of the Church

By A. B. Phillips

Occasionally when the church of any denomination expresses itself on questions of great importance to the well-being of the nation, either through conference enactment or from the pulpit, a certain type of people become greatly incensed. The subject may be concerned with marriage and divorce, prohibition, honesty of national, state, or local government officials; or it may relate to morality, justice, or the rights of the people. In such cases it is not uncommon to hear some indignant person repeat with an insistent tone of outraged justice: "Let the church keep out of politics."

It may be that these would-be guides of religious conduct are convinced that politics will defile the church that has anything to do with it. Or it may be that they fear to have the light of sound religious scruples turned on the pathway of politics. On the other hand, it is quite possible that they have no clear understanding of the rights and duties of the church toward the Government and the people, an ignorance which is commonly due to a lack of interest or devotion in anything that insists upon high moral or religious principles. In order that such objections may not lead anyone to distrust the integrity or motives of the church, however, we shall present briefly some political aims which the church rightly may cherish, and the religious grounds upon which these aims are justified.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH

The supreme Ruler of mankind has definitely commanded all men to deal uprightly and justly with their fellows. This obligation is not confined to dealings within the church, but is required of all in every occupation of life. To love your neighbor as yourself is a command that Jesus has sent forth to all nations and peoples, and he has placed upon his church the obligation to teach justice, truth, and righteousness to all the world. No one of mature judgment will deny that the church is rightly concerned with religion. Religion is defined as relating to human conduct and duty to God and man. Specifically, then, it is the duty of the church to teach right conduct in life, and also to warn men of the evil and disastrous consequences of wrong conduct.

No man is so insignificant or so important as to be exempt from the duty of right conduct toward God and man. And no nation, State, or community can evade that duty by the expedient of acting in concert by agreement. If a State or community should enact laws permitting robbery, fraud, adultery, or drunkenness, such acts would still be wicked and unlawful in the sight of God, and he has forbidden all men to do any of them. In past ages God has found it necessary to warn high government officials against acts which violated their duty to others, and he has commanded his ministry to boldly denounce the deeds of men who despise justice, truth, virtue, and the well-being of others.

It is the purpose of the church to promote the principles of Jesus in the actual deeds of life and in all the walks of life, whether in the home, in business pursuits, in social conduct, or in political life. It is a famous axiom of Christ that "No man can serve two masters." He who chooses to serve mammon can not find acceptance as the servant of God. It may be possible for men to appear upright to the superficial observer, even when their hearts are corrupt and their purposes are evil. The great Master Teacher prescribed the revealing test of human conduct when he said: "By their fruits ye shall know them." The man who thinks to divorce himself from his obligations to God and man by forming corrupt political connections, is deceiving himself.

HOW POLITICS CONCERNS THE CHURCH

There are some aspects of politics with which God and the church have always been concerned. Whether conduct is private or public, if it affects the morals and equity of human relations, it is of concern to the church as the upholder of morality, justice, and righteousness. The church is not confined to generalities, but must teach in specific terms. Jesus himself was specific when he rebuked the lawyers of his day with the significant words:

Woe unto you also, ye lawyers: for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.—Luke 11: 46.

These words might almost have been uttered today, so well do they describe the lawyers of our own time who have legislated taxes and unnecessary expenses to be paid by people who already were groaning under the heavy burdens which politicians had thrown upon them. It is a well-known fact that under political corruption by these "lawyers" dishonest systems of useless offices and clerkships have arisen, until about one in every seven persons today is receiving money for some public office held at the expense of the people. It can hardly be for-

Joseph Smith--A Biographical Sketch

By AUDENTIA ANDERSON

(From Joseph Smith—A Centennial Tribute.)

Joseph Smith was born in Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832, the son of Joseph and Emma (Hale) Smith. From both parents he inherited splendid qualities which had marked a large company of colonial ancestors, the latest of whom to arrive on these shores were here before 1685. With fair accuracy and detail his pedigree is traced to seventy-three immigrant families, all of whom landed in New England. The blood of six individuals who stepped upon the famous Plymouth Rock in 1620 flowed in his veins, as well as that of preacher John Lathrop, imprisoned weary years in London for his liberal religious views, of John Gould, intrepid Colonial arrested for resisting unlawful taxation, courageous Captain Samuel Brocklebank, cruelly killed by Indians while defending pioneer homesteads, and many other worthies, including a half dozen or more patriots of the Revolutionary struggle and later conflicts.

In the introduction to his forthcoming book of Memoirs he says: "My ancestors in the flesh on the sides of both my parents were stalwart men and women of sturdy pioneer stock. They were not deficient in powers of brain or body, so far as their struggle for a successful existence was concerned, and I feel I owe to them a greater debt than I can ever repay for the heritage they left of faithful devotion to the spirit of freedom, of integrity and nobility of purpose and character, and of intelligent acceptance of the burdens and responsibilities of this life. For generations back, so far as I have been able to trace them and discover, these characteristics have shone out as qualities of the families involved."

EARLY YEARS

With his parents he came to Missouri, and was an eyewitness, so far as a child of tender years could be, of the cruel persecutions suffered by the church members at Far West. Roughly shoved away from his father by a sword in the hands of a heartless guard, he saw that beloved parent led away to a long, weary imprisonment in a jail in Liberty, which later, in company with his mother, he was permitted to visit, once staying over night. Upon the occasion of one of these visits his father laid hands upon his head and pronounced upon him the blessings which had come down to him through the blessings of his forefathers.

After days of distress he fled from the hostile

State of Missouri to the friendlier one of Illinois, clinging to his mother's dress as, with two children in her arms and two at her side, she walked across the frozen Mississippi River. As well as a child of six could do, he shared the anxiety and privations of that faithful woman, who, he says in his Memoirs, was ever to him the embodiment of truthfulness, "Hating intensely any lie, whether spoken or acted, as well as oppression of all sorts, especially the kind displayed by the strong against the weak, she early impressed upon my mind the conviction that under Divine Providence only truth and right would live, and that error and wrong must perish."

His father rejoined his family at the friendly home of George Cleveland in Quincy, in the spring, and soon thereafter the settlement was made at Nauvoo, then called Commerce. His boyhood memories are wound about the magically growing "City Beautiful" by the "Father of Waters," which stream, he declares, was his playground, summer and winter. In and out of the many buildings as they were being erected, watching the oxcarts hauling stones for the Temple, a thrilled spectator when the Nauvoo Legion paraded through the streets, headed by a band with a drum whose reverberations when beaten by Isaac Manning was heard, it was said, in Fort Madison, twelve miles away, or dashing about the city with his cousin John, the one upon a white horse and he upon "Old Charlie," the spirited black animal which had accompanied the family in all its wanderings and vicissitudes, he passed a few carefree years—such as should be the birth-right of every child.

DEATH OF HIS FATHER

And then came bleak tragedy, when on a June day the shrouded bodies of his slain father and uncle were brought into the home, and he stood, an elder son though not yet twelve, beside his stricken mother and heard her despairing cries of grief and desolation. Solemnly he recalled the earnest charges given by his father just before that fatal journey to Carthage, when for the third time he felt those tender, yearning hands upon his head and heard the well-loved and deeply-moved voice invoking the blessings of God upon him.

We see the lad assuming, with premature gravity and sense of responsibility, the toil and anxiety of an elder son loyally helping the burdened mother who was his idol. We see him during the days of perplexity, persecution and dreary poverty uncomplainingly laboring, studying and enduring, developing strength of body, mind and spirit as he unselfishly attempted to comfort and sustain his widowed mother.

There was one trying time when, fleeing from the ruthless mobs which ransacked the city after the "exodus" of church members, his mother took her little family and a few faithful friends, and went by boat to Fulton City where they remained until it was safe to return. In the spring of 1847 the young lad was once more hostler, porter, clerk, and handyman about the hotel from which they obtained an uncertain living.

It was in the following December that a stepfather, Major Lewis Crum Bidamon, came into his life, a man who was destined to exert a definite influence upon the mind of the growing lad, then in the midst of formative ideals and impressions. There was a venture in storekeeping and grain exchange which did not meet with success, and was followed by some strenuous years of farm life, more or less profitable. In his young twenties he was associated with his brother Frederick in managing and working the family farms, a life and labor he very much enjoyed.

INFLUENCES

Schooling had been desultory. The new settlement had few facilities for education for several years. A teacher in the home was followed by the efforts of others more or less proficient in a series of makeshift schoolrooms. Grammar, history, and literature were his delight, but mathematics his Waterloo. He records that he wore out several copies of Ray's elementary arithmetic books before he made much headway beyond "vulgar fractions." Here again his loving loyalty to his mother was the source of special effort on his part, for as he realized he could not be of much assistance to her without a practical knowledge of the "art of figures" he later supplied himself with textbooks and with determination won at least a creditable victory over numbers.

There was a period of study of German with Orson Pratt, recently returned from a mission abroad, and a later series of French lessons with Victor Jeannault. While they were but superficial, he says they implanted in his heart a love for languages, and he later indulged in regrets that he did not take more advantage of the opportunity along these lines afforded by the really excellent schools of the Ica-rian Society.

Then there was a year of law study in the office of a judge at Canton. While he recognizes that this was of great value to him throughout life, he never felt he was particularly gifted along that line, and used to say that "the Major spoiled a good blacksmith to make a poor lawyer" out of him.

However, all learning is not obtained in the schoolroom. As he puts it: "Having inherited a desire for information, if I did not acquire it the fault could not be traced to my progenitors." One of the thoughtful sentences that dropped from his lips in his last illness, as he reviewed his life of eighty-two years, was one rich in meaning: "Ah, how I have loved to learn!—And I have learned to love, as well!" From childhood he had a faculty for "seeing what he looked at," and for storing his memory with all sorts of useful and desirable knowledges.

On October 22, 1856, he married Emmeline, the beautiful eighteen-year-old daughter of a widow, Mrs. Elias Griswold. They lived on the farm until the middle of the following summer when their first child was born and they removed to town, staying first with his mother at the Mansion House, and then fixing up the "old homestead," which place became his home for the rest of his stay in Nauvoo.

BEGINNING HIS WORK

There came a time when he became convinced it was his duty to take up actively the work laid down by his father. He had been baptized by that father and confirmed under the hands of his Sunday school teacher, and what religious faith he had was centered about the gospel which he had heard from the lips of his parents and the public teachings from the pulpit and in class work. But the church body had split up into many fragments following the dark deed of June 27, 1844, which were led by as many aspiring men. Of his perplexity he writes:

The question where to go, and with which body of believers in the restored gospel to identify myself could be easily canvassed and answered now, in the light of events that have passed. It was not so easy at the time I had first to decide it. Many things were involved over which I prayed earnestly, greatly needing and desiring light and guidance.

The chapter in which he discusses the various phases of the question is most interesting, as well as are the remarkable and definite answers he received to his plea for direction. No less so are his narratives about the petty persecutions which were directed against him in Nauvoo and environs when he cast his lot with the Reorganization and assumed the position of leader. His sense of justice was outraged by a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of citizens which sought to proscribe him in the exercise of his religion. This move only served, however, to fix more firmly his determination to stay right there, live the life he had a right to live as a

The Work of the Church

Two Important Items This Week,
by C. B. Woodstock, Associate Director of Religious Education.

The Christmas Offering

In less than three months we shall be celebrating again the anniversary of the birth of Jesus as the Christ child in Bethlehem. We shall sing anew the anthem of joy that the Christ and his message came to the world. We shall be expressing love and good will in our gifts and good cheer. Perhaps more than ever before does this world with its selfishness and sin, need the redeeming power of that message, and those who suffer in unemployment and want need the sustaining help our gifts may bring them.

Annually for over forty years the Saints, and especially the children, have brought their gifts at the Christmas season and made their offering to the church, in the name of the Master, that through their gifts the gospel might be carried to the world and comforting help might be brought to the needy. In this way alone a total of over one million dollars has been laid on the altar of sacrifice and service. A wonderful gift to carry our love and good will! "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these—ye have done it unto me."

The months of November and December are being designated as a period of sacrifice in which the Saints will unite in an earnest endeavor through economy and sacrifice to raise the budget necessary to meet the immediate needs of the church. Funds received through the Christmas Offering will be applied directly on the quota assigned to each branch and district. All through the year our Christmas Offerings have been accumulating. Now, in these closing months, we must increase our efforts. Personal self-denial within reasonable limits should be encouraged. The church is greatly handicapped in its work by lack of means. Only by united effort and faith and prayer may the Master's cause move forward.

Remember the Christmas Offering. Even a small offering given each week for the next twelve weeks will make a commendable gift. The united offerings of all will help materially to do the work the church must try to do.

". . . inasmuch as there are those who have hearkened unto my words, I have prepared a blessing and an endowment for them, if they continue faithful. I have heard their prayers and will accept their offerings."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 5.

Junior Notebook Contest

Running in the Junior quarterly of the past year have been suggestions for a notebook contest. The idea originated with Miss Weber, editor of the first quarter. The plan of the contest was given publicity in Stepping Stones and in an article in Vision for December, 1931. We have the enrollment of over 100 juniors in some 20 schools and have reason to believe there are many others who have been keeping notebooks of their class work.

The purpose of the contest was to stimulate interest in the lesson study and to provide competition in the making of notebooks which would contain the best of the year's work. The conditions of the contest were announced as follows:

1. Open to all Juniors from 9 to 12 years of age.
2. Notebooks to be made of any convenient size—preferably of the loose-leaf type.
3. Parents and teachers may supervise, but it is essential that the actual work be the pupil's own effort.
4. Notebooks to be judged on the following scale.
 - Appearance—25%.
 - Harmony of color, neatness, balance.
 - Content—50%.
 - Completeness of year's work, carefulness of English, good penmanship, aptness of illustration.
 - Originality and skill 25%.
 - In mechanical make up, in composition, in illustration.
5. Judging. Best three books in each school to be selected by a local committee. Not more than three books may be sent to headquarters for final judging. If only three books or less are finished in the local school, all may be sent for judging at headquarters. Address, The Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. In each case postage must be sent for the return of the books.

Notebooks received before October 20 will be judged by an impartial committee. In each case entries from a local school will be ranked first, second and third. Then all entries from a district will be ranked and later all entries in the church.

Announcement will be published of the best in each school, best three in each district, and best ten in all the church.

The Foundations of Our Faith

III.—Modern Science as a Witness for God

By ELBERT A. SMITH

Mathematics and dynamics fail us when we contemplate the earth, fitted for life but lifeless, and try to imagine the commencement of life upon it. This certainly did not take place by any action of chemistry, or electricity, or crystalline grouping of molecules under the influence of force, or by any possible kind of fortuitous concourse of atoms. We must pause, face to face with the mystery and miracle of the creation of living creatures.—Lord Kelvin.

During the nineteenth century science made great and real gains, which have been carried over into the present century. There is no reason why Latter Day Saints should depreciate true science or fear its findings. It is no mere coincidence that such a man as John Fiske, noted American Philosopher and historian, should definitely and positively name the year 1830 as "the opening of a new dispensation," the dawning of a "new era."

1830 BEGAN A NEW DISPENSATION

In his address delivered before the Concord School of Philosophy and published in book form in 1885, Fiske said:

This century, which some have called an age of iron, has been also an age of ideas, an era of seeking and finding the like of which was never known before. It is an epoch of grandeur which dwarfs all others. . . . The men of the present day who have fully kept pace with the scientific movements are separated from the men whose education ended in 1830 by an immeasurably wider gulf than has ever before divided one progressive generation of men from their predecessors. . . . The men . . . of all future time, will no doubt point back to the age just passing away as the opening of a new dispensation, the dawning of an era in which the intellectual development of mankind was raised to a higher plane than that upon which it had hitherto proceeded.—The Idea of God, pages 56, 57. (Houghton Mifflin Company.

Every gospel dispensation brings a quickening of human thought, even among many who are not consciously religious. The opening of the Mosaic dispensation saw Egyptian culture at a high point of development. For two centuries before Christ came and for three centuries after him human thought was profoundly stirred—the cultures of Greece and Rome rose to their most sublime heights. And so in the "dispensation of the fullness of times" there came a similar quickening to the intellectual world. The emanations of divine power and light spread abroad in all the world.

Fiske says 1830 marked the beginning of a "new dispensation" in science. To us it was the beginning of "the dispensation of the fullness of times." (Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3.) We may go on confident that out of this quickening will eventually come truth in the field of science as in that of religion. How wise and how timely was the quest of Joseph Smith who in the very beginning of such an era sought God for his revelation of truth! How inevitable that there should have been a prophet to proclaim the opening of such a "dispensation": "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he reveleth his secret unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3: 7.)

Coincident with the amazing developments and discoveries in the field of science there were, as was to be expected, many wild guesses made and many unfounded theories advanced. Paul spoke of "science falsely so-called," even in his day. (1 Timothy 6: 20.) William James declared: "Humbug is humbug, even though it bear a scientific name." There is also religion "falsely so-called," and the two may be in conflict when real science and true religion are at one. Be that as it may, many scientists "so-called" chose to conclude that science had discredited religion and ruled God out of the universe. They were materialistic to the last conceivable degree. To them the universe was a self-operating mechanism that had accidentally sprung into being. Man himself was a mechanism, without soul; all his functions, including thought and emotion, the results of chemical reaction. Dreary pessimism and hopeless paganism are always the inevitable results of such conclusions. A flood of atheism came into modern thought; not so much the result of the findings of science as the result of theories and conclusions erroneously built up on the findings of science.

The Prophet Joseph had announced that the creeds were wrong. This fact began to dawn upon religiously-minded people, adding to the confusion of thought incident to the astonishing discoveries of science. In 1885 Fiske said:

We find ourselves in the midst of a mighty revolution of human thought. Time-honored creeds are losing their hold upon men . . . everything is called in question . . . there are those who deny the existence of God. There are those who would explain away the human soul as a mere group of fleeting phenomena attendant upon the collection of sundry particles of matter . . . religion as practically ruled out from human affairs.—The Idea of God, page 58.

Ernest Haeckel, materialistic disciple of Darwin, gathered the spirit of his day into these words:

The development of the universe is a monistic mechanical process in which we discover no aim or purpose whatever . . . all is the result of blind chance.—Riddle of the Universe.

OLD MATERIALISTIC THEORIES DEAD

Fortunately and inevitably there came a change of thought as the light of truth dawned more clearly in the "new dispensation." Today it is not too much to say that science is becoming another of the witnesses for God. The materialistic beliefs that were to have overthrown religion are now themselves utterly discredited. H. A. Overstreet, head of the Department of Philosophy and Psychology, College of New York City, writes:

The old, confident nineteenth-century materialism, among the alert scientists, lies in ruins. Modern physicists are not even bothered about that old materialism, save, with as great expedition as possible, to remove the debris.—The Enduring Quest, page 26, published 1931, (by W. W. Norton and Company, New York.)

Physics, once in the forward sweep of materialistic thinking, is now in the forward sweep of anti-materialistic thinking. Biology has not as yet in full measure felt the power of this new up-going wave. But it begins to feel it. Especially in the recognition of a creative emergence, biology enters upon a nonmaterialistic view of the life processes.—Ibid., page 269.

The same author quotes J. S. Haldane, outstanding biologist of England:

Materialism, once a scientific theory, is now the fatalistic creed of thousands, but materialism is nothing better than a superstition on the same level as belief in witches and devils.—Ibid., page 209.

The old thought that intelligence is but a fleeting and inconsequential by-product of matter rapidly gives way to the view that intelligence dominates matter and runs through all the universe. Men of mature years have in their own lifetime thus witnessed tremendous revolutions of thought. First science with its modern instruments revealed a universe of such astounding and far-flung magnitude that the mind of man was stunned. The earth and its inhabitants by comparison shrank into seeming insignificance. The result should have been an increased reverence for the power and wisdom of the Creator, but it was not so. Atheism flourished.

Now comes a reaction which again sees that after all mind is greater than matter: "The big star is still at the small end of the telescope." And now, paradoxically, exploration into the almost infinitely small, the things right at hand, has reawakened the old reverence for the unseen. The atom which was once fondly thought so solid and stable, the ultimate indivisible unit of matter, is found to be a universe in itself. Even the rocks are in motion within themselves. This so solid matter is found to be shot through with light rays invisible to the eye; with sound waves that the ear of itself can never hear. The unseen world returns to dominate the world that is seen. Men stand again reverently at the threshold of mystery. This revolution of modern thought is astounding, even within the past five years. Unfortunately public perception lags behind. If human thought shall presently respond to this new lead as it did when science seemed to point the way to atheism we may hope for a change of attitude that will make easier the preaching of the gospel.

LORD KELVIN

The church is certain that true religion and true science are not in conflict; equally positive is the testimony of noted scientists themselves. Going back about thirty years we have an epoch-marking statement by Lord Kelvin. Kelvin was president of The Royal Society, a physicist of world renown, sometimes termed "the Prince of Scientists." Of him Sir William Ramsay said, "He it was for whom no honor that men have it in their power to bestow could be too great." Kelvin delivered a remarkable address before the Christian Association of the University of London, May 1, 1903. It was reported and much discussed in the London Times, but we quote from Christian Apologetics, pages 25, 26:

Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matter that we live and move and have our being, but in the creating and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief. . . . If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion.

A great many sophomore students in our universities digging a little into physics have turned atheist—aided by the half-baked materialistic theories of their instructors. Deeper thinking, Kelvin asserts, compels a belief in God and creative and directing power.

LARKIN

Edgar Lucien Larkin, head of the Lowe Observatory, in California, a man who looked out nightly upon the stars, said:

I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the Sidereal Universe, a Dominating Mind.—Within the Mind Maze, page 346, (published in 1911, by Standard Printing Company, Los Angeles.)

CURTIS

Another man who studies the stars, Heber D. Curtis, director of Allegheny Observatory, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, (later of Detroit Observatory, University of Michigan) in his book, Religion and the Modern Mind, states conclusions based on logical processes of elimination:

My individual reason is forced to the conclusion that more facts in this supremely wonderful universe are explained by the working hypotheses of a God than by any of the other possibilities . . . the postulate of an omnipotent God seems necessary. (As quoted by Halsey, in "Evidences of Immortality," page 145, published by Macmillan, 1931.)

Again Curtis declares:

Scientific study leads us inevitably to a wider, more wonderful and more awe-inspiring comprehension of the universe; nor can such study, if it be rightly regarded, diminish any belief in God or the teachings of the Nazarene. —Readers Digest, November, 1927.

STOKES

In 1913 there was published in London by Arthur H. Tabrum, a book entitled, Religious Beliefs of Scientists, (Hunter and Longhurst Publishers Second Edition). The book reproduces excerpts and conclusions from the correspondence of considerably more than one hundred scientists, men preeminent in their respective fields, and including four former presidents of "The Royal Society." These men were united in their opinions to the effect that there is no real conflict between the facts of science and the fundamentals of Christianity. I quote but one, Sir George G. Stokes, for fifty years professor of mathematics at Cambridge, thirty-one years secretary of the Royal Society, afterward president. He says:

I know of no sound conclusions of science that are opposed to the Christian religion. . . . I am of the opinion that true science and true religion harmonize. (Pages 9, 10.)

EINSTEIN

Edward H. Cotton is author of a book published by the Thomas Y. Crowell Publishing Company, 1931, entitled, Has Science Discovered God? It is termed, "A Symposium of Modern Scientific Opinion." Sixteen eminent living scientists are represented, nine of them by original essays. This list includes such men as Robert A. Millikan and Albert Einstein. The thesis of the book seems to be that modern science is discovering God not only as evidenced in the distant stars, but in the close-at-hand atom, the electron and proton.

Einstein (who is very devout) is quoted as saying, "All the finer speculations in the realm of science spring from a deep religious feeling."

Millikan is quoted: "Modern science of the real sort is learning to walk humbly with its God, and in learning that lesson it is contributing something to religion." (Page 39.)

The author closes his book with this statement: "We are closer to the first cause and the purpose back of creation than we ever have been." (Page 298.)

THOMPSON

In the year 1924, J. Arthur Thompson, professor of Natural History at the University of Aberdeen, and a scientist of renown, delivered a lecture in New York City under the auspices of "The Morse Lecture Foundation." His lectures were published in book form in 1925, by Charles Scribners Sons, under the title, Science and Religion. He begins his consideration with this qualified admission:

We can not by scientific searching find out God. . . . It is not by science that we pass from nature to nature's God. The pathway is that of religious experience. . . . It is possible, however, that science, with its disclosure of the order of nature and all its wonder, may suggest and enhance the religious view. (Page 197.)

Proceeding from this basis and considering the continuity, order, and purpose revealed in the universe, he reaches certain conclusions:

Science discloses a pervading order. . . . There is no capriciousness. (Page 201.)

When we think over the intelligibility, the order, the beauty, the advancement, and the progressiveness of nature, we feel that the world is more divine than daemonic, that it is not unlike a great thought, that it is congruent with the concept of a Creator. In any case, the more we know of the world, the more it becomes like a home in which the religious can breathe freely. (Page 207.)

The scientific picture of things as they are becomes more and more congruent with our conception of God, and even enhances it. The modern scientific picture has given the material universe a new unity . . . the world is one, and our vision of God is a vision of the One. (Page 57.)

It seems shrewder to get back to the idea of creation—the world is in God's hands. In his infinite wisdom he has ordained all things "by measure and order and weight."

COMPTON

Doctor Arthur H. Compton, who in 1927 shared the Nobel prize in Physics with C. T. R. Wilson, of England, was quoted in the New York Times Magazine, March 13, 1932, as a result of an interview with George W. Gray:

"Does science show you intelligent direction in the universe?"

"Yes," said Doctor Compton. "The study of physics has changed my conception of the kind of god, but has strengthened my confidence in the reality of God. I feel surer of a directive intelligence than I did at 20."

"Why?"

"Because I have seen something of the mechanism of nature—the symmetry of the hydrogen atom, the myriad combinations of carbon molecules, the protoplasmic cell—all built up out of simple units: electrons and protons. It seems to the nth degree improbable that such an intricate and interesting world could have ordered itself out of particles with a random character. I can not conceive the thing happening wholly by accident—Bertrand Russell's 'fortuitous concurrence of atoms.' A world of such organization and character as modern physics reveals can only be the result of an intelligence working through nature."

MILLIKAN

Robert Andrews Millikan, Doctor of Philosophy and Doctor of Science, winner of the Nobel prize for revolutionary discoveries in electricity, is quoted in Collier's Weekly, October 24, 1925:

There is no scientific basis for denial of religion—nor is there in my judgment excuse for a conflict between science and religion, for their fields are entirely different. Men who know very little science and men who know very little of religion do indeed get to quarreling, and the onlookers imagine that there is a conflict between science and religion, whereas the conflict is only between two species of ignorance.

And Millikan added:

Without the moral background of religion, without the spirit of service which is the essence of religion, our new powers will only be the means of our destruction.

Those were prophetic words. They recognize the moral values of religion, "the power of God unto salvation." Modern discoveries in chemistry, for example, may greatly bless mankind if there be the spirit to serve; but used in chemical warfare they may in the next world war destroy civilization. It was by no accident that Joseph Smith, early in the remarkable era that began in 1830 called upon humanity to reconsecrate itself to the gospel of service, to regard all things given into their hands as a "stewardship." He warned also of the calamities coming upon the earth unless there should be repentance and reconsecration. (Think not that his warning was not heard around the earth, for it was. Probably no movement of that remarkable century had more publicity than was given to "Mormonism" in its various phases, and there still continues a flood of books about Joseph Smith and his work.)

PUPIN

In September, 1927, Michael Pupin, newly elected president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, was quoted in the American Magazine, in an interview granted Albert Edward Wiggam. (Reprinted in Reader's Digest, December, 1928.) This eminent scientist, Doctor Pupin, declared:

Wherever science has explored the universe, it has found it to be a manifestation of a coordinating principle. It leaves us no escape from the conclusion that back of everything there is a definite guiding principle. We are faced with two alternatives: either the law and order of the universe is the result of haphazard happenings; or it is the result of a definite intelligence. Now, which are you, as an intelligent being, going to choose?

Personally, I believe in the Divine Intelligence, because it is simpler and more intelligible. It harmonizes with my whole experience. When you see the stars, each moving along its own prescribed path with a precision impossible to attain in any mechanism constructed by man, when you see a seed grow after a definite plan into a tree, or a baby develop into a self-directing human individuality, can you believe that it is the result of haphazard happenings? Such a belief is beyond my understanding.

Science will strengthen religion—as it has strengthened mine. . . . Science has simply brought me to a higher, broader view of the Creator. . . . I believe it will make better Christians of all men and women who try to understand its simple and beautiful laws, because they are the laws of God.

LIMITATIONS OF SCIENCE

The foregoing statements are rather general in character regarding the relation of science and religion, but have specific bearing on the question of God as Creator, which is at the beginning of our religion. They are presented to help clear away a popular misapprehension that science refutes the revelations of religion. Moreover this brief survey has been made with full realization of the limitations of human wisdom however cloaked about with learned pretensions. William James, himself both scientist and philosopher, confessed: "Our science is a drop, our ignorance a sea."

Millikan also says:

The map of science is still a great, blank sheet with only here and there a dot to show what has been charted, and the more we investigate the more we see how far we are from any real comprehension of it all and the clearer we see that in the very admission of our ignorance and finiteness we recognize the existence of a Something, a Power, a Being in whom we live and move and have our being—a Creator by whatever name you may call him.—Collier's, October 24, 1925.

Yet we may well approve the search for more truth, and hail its discovery from time to time. Truth is one, whether revealed or discovered: "Seek learning even by study and also by faith." Paul admonished us in the name of religion to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thesalonians 5: 21. John Fiske in the name of science says: "Let bold but reverent thought go on and probe creation's mysteries, till faith and knowledge make one music as before, but vaster."—A Century of Science, page 146.

GOD MUST REVEAL HIMSELF

Faith opens to us the riches of revelation. Study, experiment, demonstration, open the riches of natural law. Nature reveals the existence of God, to an extent only; to a lesser degree his character. The Psalmist said, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork." (Psalm 19: 1.) Modern revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12) tells us that:

The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

Michael Pupin, the scientist, saw God in the stars. Pope affirmed, "The undevout astronomer is mad." When we behold the stars and planets we do see God, but there is a veil. We do not comprehend him. Again William James wisely said:

If there be a divine spirit in the universe, nature, such as we know her, can not possibly be its ultimate word to man.

On the same line Millikan says:

There is an interrelatedness, a unity, a oneness about the whole of nature, and yet still an amazing mystery.—Scribner's Magazine, February, 1930.

"Great is the mystery of Godliness" whether revealed in Nature or otherwise. The finite mind can not unaided grasp the infinite. "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" (Job 11: 7.) The infinite must stoop down and reveal itself to the finite mind and "quicken" the finite mind until there is comprehension: "The day shall come when ye shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.)

There are many witnesses to the divinity of our work. We may welcome now the voice of modern science as it tends to become "another witness for God." More and more shall he emerge as the "dispensation of the fullness of times" draws to an end: "as in the roaring loom of time the endless web of events is woven, each strand shall make more clearly visible the living garment of God."

Sonnet

When we can all so excellently give
The measure of love's wisdom with a blow,
Why can we not in turn receive it so,
And end this murmur for the life we live?
And when we do so frantically strive
To win strange faith, why do we shun to know
That in love's elemental overglow
God's wholeness gleams with light superlative?

Oh, brother men, if you have eyes at all,
Look at a branch, a bird, a child, a rose,
Or anything God ever made that grows,—
Nor let the smallest vision of it slip,
Till you may read, as on Belshazzar's wall,
The glory of eternal partnership.

The Cup

By ANNA BURHART

All of us are familiar with the scene that transpired in the garden of Gethsemane. We stand awed as we vision the Master of men shedding great drops of blood. We try to sense the grief and agony—the pressure that weighed so heavily upon his groaning spirit. We strive to understand the significance of the words He uttered, "Let this cup pass from me, but Thy will not mine be done." With a mingling of grief, admiration, and amazement, we make an effort to analyze the content of that cup; we wonder just what bitter potion it held that could be so forbidding to our Savior.

Some say He did not want to die upon the cross—did not want those cruel nails to pierce His flesh—wanted to shrink from the shame and cruel mockery that was sure to follow, that it was the vision of all this torture wrung from his lips that tragic plea, "Let this cup pass from me."

Others can not accept this theory. They see ordinary men with heads held high, walk to their death, privileged to pay with their lives the price that will enable their cause to go on. No plea for mercy comes from their lips, no sweat from their brow, but with a song of praise in their heart, they give their all. Mothers and fathers risk their lives and even die for their children without regret. Can we count the Master less than these?

No, we can not accept that analysis of the cup. How could death hold terror for One whose call would bring twelve legions of angels to His side? But Jesus—that great shepherd of men, could not bring himself to leave his sheep unprotected, when he saw wolves even dressed in sheep's clothing, in their midst.

The shadows gathered and made his vision incomplete. His weary brain was tortured by questions he could not answer. Death itself held no terror; but to die in vain, to leave His work unfinished; to see those for whom it was fitting He should give His life, the victims of cruel deception—those who would die for their goal could they but see the way; these were the fears that wrung from the brow of the great Shepherd.

The clouds lifted. His vision cleared. He saw us catch the torch; saw His work go on. Under his burning gaze the evil one stood rebuked; men rose with the glory of heaven on their faces. His work was consummated; Zion blossomed in all her beauty.

Gone was the cry; the drops of blood no longer lingered on His brow. With a calm, the depth of which can not be measured, he gave His life. The cup that once seemed so bitter, he placed to His lips, but God's finger had touched it; it was sweetened by His touch.

Prayer and Testimony

In this new department we are combining the Circle of Prayer of the Herald with the Correspondence Department of the Ensign. Letters of church experiences, testimonies, requests for prayer, and accounts of answer to prayer will be featured on these pages. It is hoped that we may have one short article on prayer or some related subject to lead the department. Our readers are invited to write and add their testimonies to aid the work. These letters, as they have appeared in the Ensign in the past, have brought comfort and courage to many an isolated member. We hope that many may feel inclined to write.

The Cause of Prayer

By FRED SHEPHERD

Most prayers have as their motive either religious experience or duty. One may be a cry of distress, doubt, or grief; and the other may be hallowed by age or the consciousness of duty. "Of course all men can and ought to pray, and the Old Testament regards prayer as an instinctive act. . . ." It "starts as the assertion of any desire; it ends as the organization of one's own desires into a system of desires recognized as superior and then made one's own." At first man desires to use God for purely selfish reasons, but ends by man's putting himself at the service of God. However, there are no real prayers said until there is an absolute need for help. For a long time communion with God is a mere pious act until the discovery is made that the business of living needs an inward resource to fall back on. There is a psychological necessity for prayer as long as there is an active belief in God. And we pray according to our desires. Whether a man calls his "inner self" conscience, better self, or God, he can not escape it, and a form of converse persists. The form of converse is determined by the person and it may be petition or communion, meditation or day-dreaming, or surrender to a supreme being.

"It is the helplessness of the creature that drives him to supplication, his knowledge of infirmities of temper and will which it is vain labor to try to cure." Times of crises are usually causes for special prayers. During the last influenza epidemic prayers were offered for the abolition of the disease. Special prayers were offered to save the life of the late President Harding. During the last coal strike prayers were offered for relief and the reasons given to God were not even such as would convince the participants in the strike. In war we have the curious spectacle of each side praying for victory. When prayers are offered for something the issue of which is in doubt, intimations are usually offered as to what God's will should be.

As children we are taught to pray and often continue as a matter of habit. If it is continued through adolescence and adult life the chief reason is because they have need of it and believe that they will get what they want through prayer.

Missionary Activities in Texas

By G. H. Wixom

We are pleased to report that the work in this part of the field is moving along nicely, and as a missionary I have been kept very busy since the close of the district reunion, held at Hearne, Texas, July 8 to 17.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was left to preach the closing sermon of the reunion, and I came on to Dallas, where I was the speaker Sunday evening, July 17, and where I continued to labor until August 1. I was then called to hold a series of services at Breckenridge, Texas, where arrangements had been made for me to preach in Lion's Park, and I held forth from August 2 to 21. This park, well seated and well lighted, was a pleasant place for services. This gave me an opportunity to reach a fine lot of people and to acquaint them with this wonderful message, the gospel of Jesus Christ restored.

Many friends were made to the cause, and at the close of the series it seemed that I had only introduced the work at that place. I was urged to return as soon as I could arrange it, to give them another series of not less than three weeks and longer if I could spare the time.

On invitation of Elder Ribble of the Church of Christ at South Bend, Texas, I held meetings in his church for two weeks. At this place I met fine people, some of whom have become very much interested in our message.

At the close of my services at South Bend, the pastor of the church arose and announced that he intended to hold a series following mine, and urged all to attend. He also announced that he did not believe one word of what I had presented. I was not surprised at this, for I know that when a man has spent many years in studying along a certain line it is hard for him to change his mind on any question which he has believed to be right. The restored gospel seems new and so strange to people who have been taught to believe that the gospel has been changed and that God will not reveal himself to mankind today as he did in Bible times.

If all those who are members of any Protestant church would take the time and trouble to read just what their leaders have said, finding out the real position of these reformers, they would learn that the leading reformers all looked forward to the time when God would reveal himself again to restore the ancient gospel with all its gifts and blessings. Hear the late Alexander Campbell, one of the leading men in establishing what is known today as the Disciples Church, what he had to say about the conditions in the modern church: "It is obvious to the most superficial observer who is at all acquainted with the state of Christianity and of the church of the New Testament, that much, very much is wanting, to bring the Christianity and the church of the present day up to that standard. In what this deficiency consists, and how it is to be remedied, or whether it can be remedied at all, are the points to be discovered and determined."—Christian Baptist, volume 2, page 127. Again we hear from Mr. Campbell on this subject: "The primitive gospel in its effulgence and power is yet to shine out in its original splendor to regenerate the world."—Hayden's History of the Disciples, page 36.

After I left South Bend and had come on to Dallas to hold a series at this place, I was informed that Mr. Ribble spoke one evening on "Mormonism" and read from several histories which condemn Joseph Smith as a deceiver and false prophet. At the close of this address, Sister George B. Ritchie, the only member of the church who was present, arose and asked Mr. Ribble for the privilege of speaking to the question then before the audience. This was granted, and in a few well chosen words Sister Ritchie asked the speaker if he was willing to accept the writings of the enemies of Christ and his gospel as true and final. She told him that he had passed by the books that were reliable and set forth the true faith and teachings of Joseph Smith, and had contented himself to read that which was decidedly unfair and untrue in the light of that which was well authenticated and reliable. She cited the findings of the courts of the land, which had rendered decisions regarding the vital teachings of Joseph Smith and that these decisions had disqualified these books which deal in slander and falsehood. She asked him if she might present some of this evidence at the next meeting. The minister said she might do so if she desired.

Sister Ritchie had to drive twenty-five miles the next day to secure some of her books which were loaned out. She marked just what she wanted to be read and asked her husband, who is a member of the Methodist Church, to read it for her. When Mr. Ritchie began to read, it was noticed that Mr. Ribble was not at all at ease. In a few moments he shouted he had heard all of that he cared to hear. Mr. Ritchie then paused and asked the audience if any one objected to his continuing to read, and as there was no objection the pastor told him he might proceed. Instead of Mr. Ribble hurting our cause, he helped to make friends for the restored gospel; now there are those who are anxious to read our literature to find out for themselves just what we believe and teach. Some of those who attended remarked they thought Mr. Ribble was very unfair in his attack, but that he was ably met by Sister Ritchie. Sister Ritchie's father and grandfather were elders in the Reorganized Church, and she is determined to let the people of her neighborhood know that we have the true gospel, which can be defended any time or place.

On September 8, I was requested by wire to return to Breckenridge to speak at the funeral of Sister Lillie Miller, who passed to her reward September 7. Arrangements had been made to hold the funeral at the undertaking parlors, but when I arrived I met the pastor of the First Christian Church in Breckenridge, and he offered to give us the use of his church, which has a seating capacity of seventeen hundred, and is equipped with a pipe organ and supported by a large choir. Sister Miller had many friends, and all appreciated the Christian spirit of Reverend Ben Parker in his kindness. Mr. Parker was not at all discouraged when he learned that both his chorister and organist were out of town, for he was not long in filling these vacancies with good, capable substitutes. The choir renditions were beautiful and much appreciated.

Sister Miller was baptized with others, February 22, 1932, and was one of the teachers in our church school at Breckenridge. She was devoted to this church, and before she passed on asked her husband, Brother Vern Miller, to be faithful and true to this gospel for she knew it was God's church, and one that was approved of him. Brother Miller is also very devoted to this work and is ready at all times to help in any way he can. Before joining this church, Brother Miller made a careful study of our message, and when he was baptized he did so because he knew that he had found the right church. He is still reading the church literature, and is preparing himself to be of the greatest possible service.

I organized a church school at Breckenridge, and Sister Ritchie was elected director, with Sister Olive Andes, secretary.

I am now nearing the close of a series of meetings at Dallas. I plan to go from here to Houston and then on to San Antonio, to be present at the district conference, October 9.

While here, I was called to speak at the funeral of Sister Grace Omega (Hancock) Campbell. She leaves her husband, J. M. Campbell, and six children: Wynona Blanch, Thurman, James, Melvin, Loren, and Richard; her father, Jonas William Hancock, Thayer, Missouri; four brothers, Daniel Hancock, Frederick W. Hancock, Harold V. Hancock, all of Thayer; and Hubert O. Hancock, whereabouts unknown. Sister Campbell's mother preceded her in death nine years. Sister Grace was baptized by James E. Yates in 1911.

The Unity of the Faith

By Hortense S. Cramer

I am in accord with the faith of the faithful who write from the heart of their experiences and their firm belief in the Church of Christ. My early years were spent in association with the Saints; then a period of isolation followed by many years with the Saints at Denver. Now I am alone again and I miss the meetings of the church, but my interest is still with the people of God. My daily prayer is for those for whom prayers have been asked; for the Saints, that we may be prospered and that we may be willing to give that the debt of the church may be paid; for the leaders of the church; for the missionaries, that the way may be opened for the gospel to be preached in many places.

Feeling a responsibility toward my neighbors, I recently procured the Busy Man's tracts and addressed a set to each family, and delivered them in person with a little explanation, and I have loaned church papers. I have read and laid aside "The Riddle of American Origins," which appeared in Zion's Ensign. It would be very convenient to have the articles in pamphlet form, as has been suggested. They are exceedingly interesting and enlightening.

I have read with interest the reports of reunions. My sister wrote me of the Lamoni reunion and the spirit of humility and unity which was there manifested. I was glad and thankful. I rejoice that I am a member of the household of God, looking forward "Till we, in the unity of the faith, all come to the knowledge of the Son of God." (Ephesians 4: 13, Inspired Translation.)

QUESTION TIME

Has Elijah, promised by Malachi, already come, or is the time yet in the future?

The name of Elijah, as used in the Old Testament, is identical with the New Testament form, Elias, concerning which Jesus declared: "Elias is come already." The question of his disciples, with his answer, reads thus:

And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 10-13.

This makes it clear that John the Baptist was the Elias promised by the prophets, and this Jesus further indicated when he said of John:

And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come.—Matthew 11: 14.

This term, Elias, evidently stood for a certain kind of divinely sent messenger to prepare the Lord's way, and not necessarily to one by the name of Elias or Elijah, for John was not so named. The name indicated the spirit of the work rather than the name of the person, and this fact is made clear by the statement of the angel to John's father, in which he says:

And he [John] shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.—Luke 1: 17.

It is therefore clear that John did come as the promised Elijah or Elias, preparing the way of Jesus. But Jesus stated (Matthew 17: 11) that Elias "truly shall first come, and restore all things." This appears to be a time in the future, and the church understands that it was fulfilled when the heavenly messengers appeared to Joseph Smith with the restoration message and with authority for the new dispensation. As recorded in church history, these messengers included John the Baptist with the Aaronic priesthood, and some years later Elijah, in fulfillment of prophecy.

Which is the oldest literature of Biblical nations?

The literature of the Bible extends to a very remote age, but we have no remnant in any original record, the time of Moses probably giving us the beginning of this compilation. Babylonian literature in the form of clay tablets was kept in libraries, remnants of which have been discovered. The British Museum has the most valuable collection, extending back of 1700 B. C., and traces of similar writings extend beyond 300 B. C. Egyptian records include the Pyramid texts, probably the oldest religious literature now existing, and believed to extend to more than 3000 B. C.

Sanskrit literature is very ancient, and is interesting because of its affinity with the English. The Vedic writings are supposed to date from 1500 B. C., and is the most important of their old literature. Greek literature is traced to 900 B. C., or earlier, and from the seventh century B. C. a great variety was produced. Persian literature includes the Zend-Avesta, begun about 1400 B. C., additions being made for a thousand years. Chinese history extends to about 2357 with some certainty, and from the eighteenth century B. C. much poetry existed. These are some of the oldest literary nations now known.

How many years was it from Adam to the Exodus from Egypt?

The Authorized Version estimates it at 2668 years, The LXX figures are 3919 years, the Samaritan text makes it 2754 years, and Josephus gives us 2510 years. Indefinite factors account for these differences in estimates.

Little Journeys With the Editor in Chief

Back in Salem

Two days after the time indicated in my last "Little Journey," Salem was again the objective of a visit. Quite a number of years ago I had visited there, and had some memories which I thought to revive, and so not long after breakfast at Brother Travers' home, I had again put the Buick over the road to Salem. In the driving about Boston and vicinity, to Topsfield, Lexington, Concord, Salem, etc., I had learned that while Massachusetts has some excellent roads, well marked, it is not difficult to get off one's way, even when there is a map right before you. But I reached Salem without undue delay, and after driving through the center of the city and about a bit, I parked the car west of the business center, and took to my feet.

The "Old Witch's House"

Getting my bearings, I made for the "Old Witch's House." Though a number of the old New England towns other than Salem persecuted, prosecuted, and executed persons called or believed to be witches, yet Salem seems to be the one eastern city most generally connected in the popular mind with the history of the unhappy witchcraft delusion. It had been a number of years since I had seen Salem's Old Witch's House, and though I had parked the car within a half block of it, I walked past it without recognizing it, and went into the business district where I first visited the Peabody Museum, which is a fairly good museum of ethnology and history, particularly of the whaling and shipping industry, with which Salem has always been actively connected. And then inquiring the directions, I found the Old Witch's House, near where the car was parked.

It had been greatly changed in appearance by an addition. It seems the present owner, a woman, had married a druggist, and with commercial advantages in view a storeroom for the drug business had been built on the front and the east end of the old house, a one-story addition, but enough to change the appearance. A signboard, however, with an arrow pointing towards the house, tells the visitor where the house stands, and another sign informs the observer that the admission is ten cents. While I was pausing to consider whether I really wanted to go in and spent some time looking over the old place again, two women walked briskly to the door and entered. I followed. "Upstairs," said another sign. So we went up the old narrow stairs and pushed open the door to the east. We entered a room crowded with antiques, and a woman somewhat past middle age greeted us. At once one of the women began asking questions: "Where is the room in which the trials were held?" was the first one.

"Across the hall," said the lady in charge. And we were taken across the narrow old hallway, and ushered into another room well filled with still more antiques. A few questions were asked and answered about the room, the furniture, etc., and the court which is supposed to have been held therein when the trial of the witches was on. Then a query about literature on the witchcraft delusion resulted in our being taken back to the room into which we had first entered. A small book, by Fiske, was shown us, which would, we were informed, tell us all about it, "the best yet written on the subject."

"Does it give the names of those executed?" was the next question. And on being informed it did, the woman who had inquired about the trial room bought the book.

"Was one of your ancestors executed as a witch?" asked the lady in charge, of the woman who bought the book.

"Yes," was the answer.

"What was the name?"

The name given was one among the many executed. It was rather interesting to be there for the moment, fortuitously to be sure, with one descended from one of the "witches." I could have told her that there was another in the room, one whose ancestors were slain through religious persecutions, but I refrained; just listened to the resulting conversations.

Antique Dealer Has Poor Opinion of Ministers

The two women soon left, and I engaged the lady in charge in conversation. I learned she did not own the place, simply leased space from the owners to display her antiques. These she sells, and from the profits pays the rent and her living expenses. I priced several articles, and concluded that either there was a handsome profit or else she was a bad buyer. I did not buy any antiques. Didn't even buy the book she was selling. I did buy two postcards. I asked her something about the genuineness of the antiques, and was assured that all hers were the real things. I told her that throughout New England I had seen so many places where "antiques" were being sold, I had reached the conclusion that either the early inhabitants had an overabundance of lasting furniture and fixtures or there were some modern Yankees who are very shrewd in making newly-made articles look like old. She admitted there were some (perhaps many) antiques made to order, but of course emphatically asserted none such found their way into her stock of trade.

Then I changed the subject back to the witch question. I told her I had observed that she, in speaking with the woman visitor, had spoken rather disparagingly of ministers, and intimated that some of the ministers of early days had played conspicuous part in the prosecution of the witches. I asked her if that were true.

"Of course it is," she asserted rather emphatically. "Parris was a minister."

"Well," said I, "you do not seem to have a good opinion of ministers."

"I do not," said she. "Why should I? Are they not hypocrites?"

Now what should I say to that? I know many ministers, of various denominations, and among them are some splendid, earnest men, who have the courage of their convictions, and among whom pretense is quite absent. I decided not to argue with her on that line, also not to reveal myself to her as a minister. So I asked her why she disliked ministers. Then she launched into a bitter denunciation of Parris, and the part he played in inciting the ire of the populace against the witches. She seemed to think it was with malice aforethought that Parris directed attention first to one then another of the persons against whom he had a grudge, and got "the girls" to testify against them.

I let her talk, and urged her on by question; and as there were no customers for her antiques or literature, she seemed not to begrudge the time she was giving me. After I had heard her story, I made up my mind I would gather some accurate information concerning the Salem witchcraft delusion. So, leaving the old house, with no desire whatever to see it again, and thinking that if the commercial instincts or proclivities of the present owner should prompt her to raze it and erect a modern building in its place, Salem would lose little, I went down into the business section of the town again, this time looking for the Essex Historical Institute. I found it, spent a few minutes looking over the fine collection of historical pictures, prints, articles, etc., and then sought the library. On inquiry I found several books and a number of magazine articles on witchcraft in general, the Salem delusion in particular; among them the address by Fiske, later published as a booklet. And for some hours I read.

Salem Witchcraft in Brief

The history of witchcraft shows that belief in witches was prevalent over wide territory prior to 1692, and may have existed this side of the time of the Salem delusion. Witches were executed in many New England towns, and in old England professional witch catchers plied their trade. And what a chapter in human progress or retrogression is the history of witchcraft!

A witch, according to the belief in witchcraft or sorcery, was one supposed to be in league with the Devil, and by the aid of Satanic forces was able to work magic and deal in black art. In England, on the Continent, and in America, efforts were made to discover these witches (men and women) and destroy them in the interests of common safety.

The outbreak of the delusion in Salem of the climax of it was about the year 1692, when in about eighteen months some thirty men and women were "tried," under special laws drafted for the emergency, and executed. The movement seems to have begun in the family of a minister by the name of Parris. He had come to America from Haiti, or somewhere South, and with the family brought a colored servant. This servant, saturated with the traditions and superstitions of the colored people of her native land, had taught these to a daughter of Parris, she being about twelve years of age. Some neighbor girls, three or four in number, all from ten to fourteen years of age, formed themselves into a sort of mystical "society," had meetings, and developed a mastery of tricks and "magic," accompanied by queer antics, which finally attracted so much attention that they gave quasi-public demonstrations. The girls developing forms of nervous disorders, Mr. Parris became interested in determining who was "hurting" them.

The colored servant, to protect herself, taught the girls to say that two old women, both odd and disliked by the public, were exercising magic art and thus "hurting" them. Matters developed rapidly, and the terror of the girls at the turn affairs had taken added to the trouble. More and more persons were accused. Judges were appointed to try the accused; even special courts were formed to hear the cases.

I read pages and pages of the "testimony" on which the verdict of guilt was based, and it is nothing short of astounding to see what was done and the kind of evidence adduced. Both men and women were charged, found guilty, taken to Gallows Hill, and hanged. Even one aged minister was executed. Finally the girls carried their accusations so far as to point their finger at prominent citizens in Boston. Then people awoke to the terrible seriousness of the situation, and the Salem witchcraft delusion collapsed. The special laws were revoked, the court abolished, and witchcraft in America came to an end. But not till in Salem alone some thirty people had been executed.

Well, I left the library, after thanking the attendants for their courtesies, considerably better informed on the Salem witches than I had previously been, and having read of one more demonstration of the caprice of the popular mind. How often the few have had to suffer because of the delusions of the many! Another conclusion I had reached was that if Parris truly represented the ministers of his day, and of the present, I can not blame the woman at the Old Witch's House for the bad opinion she has of ministers.

Shore Dinner at Marblehead

I left the Essex Institute, found the Buick where I had left it quite early in the day, and was convinced that Salem could furnish summer days quite similar to some we have back home. It was hot. It was about time for the evening meal, so I drove to Marblehead, not far away, found a place in which many years ago Brother M. C. Fisher had treated our family to a real "shore dinner." I went in and for auld lang syne, ate by myself a shore dinner. How much alone on occasions the mutations of time leave one.

Then once again at the wheel of the Buick I found the way back to Arlington, reached the home of Brother Traver, and turned the car keys over to him.

But I had quite enjoyed three days of visiting spots made sacred by their contacts with the early developments of our country.

Midland, England, District Impressed by Apostle John W. Rushton

Saints of Midland District assembled at Clay Cross Sunday, August 28, to meet Apostle John W. Rushton. Many met him for the first time; others renewed old acquaintance and were proud to find themselves remembered by Brother Rushton. Throughout the day a most uplifting spirit prevailed.

Brother Rushton spoke at the first session at 10.45 a. m., proving that he has lost none of his command of language or his ability to impress home a salient point.

In the early afternoon the priesthood listened with great interest as Brother Rushton analyzed the present crisis of the world and the church, and received some very pointed and valuable instruction as to personal conduct and development.

At three o'clock a fellowship meeting was greatly enjoyed by a large congregation. Among many interesting testimonies was one by Elder John Austin, of Sheffield, who is one of the oldest Saints in the mission. With enthusiasm he declared that he attributed his longevity to the application of our church philosophy. Testimonies were also forthcoming from several very young members.

Brother Rushton preached to a crowded congregation in the evening. To the skill of a natural orator he added the zeal of one who has proved his religion. All he said bore the stamp of truth and inspired his congregation to new ideals of service and of life. It has been said of Apostle Rushton that he is a thorough Christian gentleman. He evidently desires others to be Christian gentlemen, too.

The district president, Elder Joseph Holmes, presided over the gathering, and the invocation was offered by Elder Franklyn Schofield, of Birmingham; benediction by Elder E. R. Chappell, of Leicester.

Young People's Services at Manchester, England

Beresford Road Church

The young people proved that old and young can work with the spirit of real cooperation Sunday afternoon and evening, September 11, when they had full charge of the branch services. They asked two veteran workers to take the chair, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood at the afternoon session, and High Priest W. R. Armstrong in the evening.

The platform had been specially prepared to seat the young people, and the entire program was carried out under the direction of Elder Abel Hall, director of Religious Education.

The scholars had been formed into a choir for the occasion and their director was the conductor. They sang "The Golden Day," "The Conquering Cross," "The Lord of Love," and solos were sung by William Hall, "A Thankful Heart"; Marie Walker, "Did You Think to Pray?" and Eric King, "Thy Children." Readings were contributed by William Towers and Ivy Stevenson, and a splendid five-minute talk was given by twelve-year-old Eric King. These constituted the afternoon program, and the chairman who was due at Stockport Branch for the evening service, expressed appreciation of the Spirit of the Master that had been present.

In the evening the choir again helped, and the children sang alone an appropriate number, "Let the Children Sing." Readings were given by Lillian Kingston and Eric King, and S. F. Mather and William Hall sang a duet number, "The Open Door." There were also solos by Marie Walker and S. F. Mather. Speeches were made by Alma King, fifteen years old, and Frederick Hall, a young man who has just started out to make his own living. The first was an essay on the church, and the second had for a title, "Service." Miss Betty Schofield, of Clayton, Manchester, played the organ.

For some time Beresford Road Church has not been privileged to have so many in attendance, and it was good to see members from Stockport, North Manchester, and James Street Branches. Surely this service gave new impetus to the work of the church in this branch.

The next effort of the young people will be to arrange for a harvest festival to be held in the church. Please note that the title "young people" is comprehensive. It includes the youngest scholar of four years in the person of Manda Towers to the "young" man of seventy-two in the person of S. F. Mather who has spent a lifetime as a teacher in the day schools and does not think himself too big to be associated with the youth in their efforts. Brother Mather, Pastor W. R. Armstrong, and Elder George Towers, are men who have passed the three score year and ten and these three constitute the presidency of Beresford Road Branch.

The church edifice is a beautiful place of worship, possibly the largest in the British Isles Mission, though only a few attend. Under the pastorate of W. R. Armstrong and his associates, many splendid, spiritual meetings are held and the old-time spirit of work is constantly in evidence, causing those who attend to feel encouraged in the warfare of life.

Disappointment was felt that Brother John W. Rushton did not get to visit this church during his visit to Manchester prior to his going to other countries in the European Mission. It was arranged for him to speak at Beresford Road in the morning of his Sunday stay in Manchester, and then he was to be at James Street in the evening. Public announcement had been made and invitations given to friends, but at the last minute plans were changed, and a joint meeting of the branches was held at James Street.

Caraway, Arkansas

One More Added to the Church

Sunday, September 25, Brothers Turner, Daniels, and Jackson, of Jonesboro, visited Caraway, Arkansas, Saints. Sunday school opened at ten o'clock, and preaching at eleven.

At two-thirty in the afternoon Mrs. Maud Swain was baptized. She had attended Elder A. M. Baker's sermons every night for two weeks, searched the Scriptures, and concluded that she had found the old Jerusalem gospel with its gifts and blessings enjoyed in the days of Christ and the apostles. The ordinance was administered by Brother Turner, and Brother Daniels was in charge of the confirmation.

Though the afternoon was rainy and disagreeable, the Lord blessed the Saints' service. The baptismal hour opened with the Saints standing under the bridge across Buffalo Ditch, but by the time the candidate was ready to go down into the water, the rain had almost ceased.

This new member makes a total of forty-four Saints at Caraway.

Sacramento, California

The California State Fair has gone down in history, also the activities of the Idola Club at the Fair. Last year the club had a lunch counter on the Fairgrounds, and this year, with permission, the counter was enlarged. Twenty people worked at this stand, all labor being donated for love and need of the church. Though the Fair attendance dropped off considerably this year because of business conditions, the stand receipts showed an increase over last year's. There were some forty other eating places on the ground, and most of them reported business not so good; some said they went behind. Frequently Idola workers heard what people thought of the cooperative spirit among them.

Among the visitors to the Idola lunch counter were Elders Arthur Oakman and G. P. Levitt, from Berkeley; the lieutenant governor of the State; Mayor Bidwell, of Sacramento, and a Jewish rabbi, who went away and told his people how harmoniously the Saints worked. Pastor Dawson, of Sacramento, washed dishes every evening after his other work was over and watched over the workers with much concern. Discerning at one time a failing in the strength of some, he prayed over the matter, and all were able to finish their work. All the workers prayed that their effort might be successful, and feel that their prayers were answered.

Credit should be given Deacon Ralph Ensley, Brother Honeychurch, and son, Ives, and Mr. Moke, who prepared the counter and were useful throughout the Fair. Sister Ella Dawson, wife of John B. Dawson, who has been chairman of the business committee for several years, and her coworker, Sister Agnes Ensley, deserve much credit for the success of the enterprise. Sister Ella began the venture last year, and her fertile brain and untiring efforts can not be overestimated in what she has accomplished toward raising money for the branch. One other who deserves special mention for credit is Brother Roy C. Barmore, "the best cook anywhere." He came from his home at New Castle, leaving his ranch and family and other work, to cook in the kitchen. All the pay he asked was a place to sleep and something to eat. The help of nonmember friends was also appreciated.

In late weeks this branch has been visited by Elder Arthur Oakman and Apostle G. G. Lewis who preached wonderful sermons.

Within recent months several baptisms have taken place in Sacramento. Mrs. Lydia Amelia Hayter, almost eighty years old, was baptized by the pastor, and confirmed by President Frederick M. Smith. She has a testimony of the Martyr preaching to the Indians, given in a dream. Brother Esaias Epling baptized his two boys, Edward and William, and a nephew, Delbert Price, the day before Children's Day. They were confirmed at the close of the program the following day. June 19, the pastor baptized Mary L. Hook and Rosie Martin. Eleven have been baptized here this year. Nancy Jane Price was baptized June 12, by W. H. Dawson and E. C. Burdick. And Mrs. L. Fox was baptized in July.

A number of the local priesthood have occupied in other branches of the district, and Sacramento has, in turn, been visited by other ministers.

The branch sacrifice offering was approximately four hundred dollars.

Sister C. E. Ball, wife of Elder Ball, who was stricken with a paralytic stroke some time ago, has been confined to her bed, and has suffered a great deal. The Saints have been faithful in their visits and prayers, and she is much better.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

At the Idaho district reunion and conference, August 17 to 21, it was voted to make the District News a permanent institution in the district. The editorial staff remains the same for the coming year: John R. Mamerow, editor, Boise, Idaho; Winona Porter, associate editor, Barber, Idaho. On August 31, the District News began its second volume.

Though on account of economic conditions this year's reunion was the shortest held for many years, much encouragement and spiritual advancement were gained by the members, and their desire to carry on was intensified. The meeting place was Hagerman. Everyone was helped to a great degree by the inspiring sermons of Apostle James A. Gillen, the classes of Elder A. M. Chase on the Book of Mormon and the classes on the church school, its organization and purpose by Sister Whiting, of Spokane. Missionary J. L. Sandidge was also present.

During the month of August, Missionary J. L. Sandidge was occupied in the interests of the reunion. He visited Rupert, Boise, Spokane, Hagerman, Meridian, Caldwell, Payette, Weiser, Council, New Meadows, Grangeville, and other points, talking with and encouraging the Saints.

In Spokane, Brother Sandidge was called upon in the absence of the pastor, to conduct the funeral services of Elder J. W. Peterson who passed away August 11. While in Spokane the missionary was making final preparations for the reunion, and Sunday evening, August 14, he met Brother Gillen who was returning from the combined reunion of the Seattle and British Columbia, Portland, and Spokane Districts, and took him to the church where he delivered a fine sermon, giving a glowing report of the reunion from which he had just come.

Sioux City, Iowa

Events of Rally Week

This branch has entered into a vigorous program of fall activity. Vacations are over, and crisp, cool, autumn days are bringing back workers ready for endeavor.

Annual Rally Week, the feature of the fall program, opened the morning of September 18, with an early prayer service. Other services of the day were church school, preaching, and Church History class. During Rally Week it is the custom for each department to occupy an evening with a program designed to stimulate new interest in its particular line of work.

On Monday evening the Riverside group of the women's department, entertained the branch with a "pantry party." A miscellaneous program was presented, and various pieces of the women's work were on display. Admission was gained simply by bringing some article of household needs or clothing that could be "made over." This material is stored at the church to supplement the church pantry and to have on hand for distribution to needy families of the branch. The women of the branch have canned between ninety and one hundred quarts of fruit and vegetables for this purpose. The work of "making over" clothing is being done by the two women's groups.

On Tuesday evening the music department invited everyone to an old-fashioned "sing school." The chorister, Sister Tiller, was in charge of a program of old songs to bring back memories of days gone by. A prize was given for the most complete old-fashioned costume, and each guest laid aside his name and took one from old-fashioned days. The lower rooms of the church were converted into an old-fashioned sitting room for this occasion by means of oil lamps, a red-checked tablecloth, rag rugs, etc.

Wednesday night was occupied by a second prayer service, the Saints feeling that this is one feature of the program that can not be overdone. The need of a closer communion with God is ever present.

The downtown group of women sponsored on Thursday evening their regular class in Doctrine and Covenants conducted by Pastor G. M. Vandel. The good that may result from this more industrious application to the study of the laws and commandments of the church, probably never will be measured.

Friday night was recreation time. A wiener roast was planned for everyone.

Sunday morning presented the annual Rally-Promotion-Home-coming Day program which consisted of special music by the junior church school, the presentation of certificates of promotion to members of that group, and various other features. The general plan is under the direction of C. J. Smith.

This week of intense activity was introduced in this branch first a year ago with encouraging results. Sioux City

Saints hope for each branch in the church the same success and spiritual "livening up" for which they in their branch are striving.

Spring River District's Fourth Institute

A Full Program for Winter Months

The fourth institute of the season for Spring River District was held at Pittsburg, Kansas, September 17 and 18, District President Amos T. Higdon and the district church school supervisor, Ronald G. Smith, being assisted at the different sessions by various other members of the priesthood. Bonita Bothwell, the local chorister, and Sister A. N. Deavers, district chorister, had charge of the music.

The opening meeting was a prayer service at ten o'clock Saturday morning, Elder Higdon presiding. Then came class work at eleven o'clock. Elder Leonard Lea, of Independence, Missouri, and managing editor of the Saints Herald, was the instructor, assisted by his wife, June Whiting Lea, who conducted the class on "Plays and Play Production."

"Ideas and Ideals in Church Work" was the institute theme taught by Brother Lea under eight topics of discussion.

Three sermons were preached, and other sessions were handled as regular class work.

Following the Saturday evening preaching hour the young people of Pittsburg with Estel Weaver in charge, entertained their guests at Lakeside Park. Games were enjoyed by the young people while the older ones visited. Then delicious refreshments were served.

The church school Sunday morning was in charge of Brother Ronald Smith. This was an impressive service to which a splendid contribution was made by Sister Lea who read "The Twelve Young Gideons," by Turnbull. Dorothy Mottet, of Webb City, sang a solo.

"The Kingdom of God" was Brother Lea's morning sermon theme, and a duet was sung by Bonita Bothwell and Esther Boone.

Chicken dinner was served at Lakeside Park by the women's department, Sister Stella Wiley directing.

The following branches were represented, Independence, Joplin, Carthage, Webb City, Sarcoxie, Missouri; Cardin and Miami, Oklahoma; Columbus, Parsons, Independence, and Weir, Kansas.

Brother Higdon announced the following activities for the district covering the next few months, and all of these show that the work is well organized: Young people's meeting at Columbus, Kansas, Tuesday night, September 20. All-day meeting at Cherryvale, Kansas, October 2. All-day meeting at Hepler, Kansas, October 9. All-day meeting at Independence, Kansas, October 16. Hobo party by the young people at Pittsburg October 18. Joseph Smith Centennial, Webb City, Missouri, November 15. Conference at Joplin, Missouri, November 25 to 27. Apostle J. F. Garver plans to be with the district at the Christmas program at Joplin, Missouri, the evening of December 3, and the slogan is "Bring your gift to the church." Good-will tours will be made to various branches during January and February.

Home-coming and Rally Day for South Bend-Mishawaka Branch

Has Large Representative Gathering

Saints here are happy at the wonderful response given their Home-coming and Rally Day, September 18. Many visiting Saints arrived on Saturday evening, and enjoyed a prayer meeting in charge of District Missionary A. C. Barmore and Elder David A. Young, of Battle Creek, Michigan. This was strengthening with its assurance.

As Sunday dawned bright and clear, the appointed time for the opening service found almost a hundred Saints and friends gathered to hear Elder J. W. McKnight deliver the opening address based on an outline of the development of the branch as it is today, having grown out of a small group of isolated Saints back in 1925.

The younger people had not been forgotten, and under the direction of David Young, assisted by Elder V. L. Coonfare, a junior service was being held in the lower classroom at the same hour.

During this time there was a continuous flow of new arrivals, and a thirty-minute recess at ten-thirty allowed time for handshaking and meeting of old acquaintances.

The room was crowded to the doors for the eleven o'clock service. District Missionary A. C. Barmore being speaker for the occasion, delivered a powerful sermon on the need of spiritual strength among our people today, and the dangers of entangling influences of the world.

In the meantime Sister Baney, with her assistants, had spread the contents of numerous baskets on the long tables in the lower classrooms, and at the close of the service over two hundred happy Saints and friends partook of the meal which showed no hint of "depression."

Seven States were represented in the Saints who came and went during the course of the day. Hammond, Buchanan, Hibbard, Clear Lake, and other branches were well accounted for. The attitude of the crowd throughout the day was spiritually joyful. Cooperation was splendid. Smiling faces were in evidence wherever one looked, and genial friendliness prevailed.

The musical program at two o'clock in the afternoon (Thanks to the young people.) was splendid, and at two-thirty the afternoon service opened, Elder Philemon Pement, speaker. This was followed by a priesthood meeting in charge of Elder Barmore, twenty-two of the priesthood being present. During this meeting the rest of the Saints enjoyed two hours of recreation. Brother Barmore drew on his experiences as a missionary in his talk to the priesthood, and in the general discussion much encouragement and help were given.

Supper was served at five-thirty, and at seven the church was again filled until standing room was at a premium. The helping hand given by Buchanan friends in the evening program was appreciated, and Elder Barmore, in his sermon, made the Saints more acutely conscious of their responsibility as Saints of latter days.

After the benediction had been offered, the Saints lingered though many had long distances to drive home. One brother living eighty miles away, declared, "We are going to stay till the last light is out." And so they did. It was a happy group of Saints that betook themselves home that night, hoping for many more such wonderful days.

Tigris Branch

Ava, Missouri

This branch rejoices as it goes forward in the latter-day cause with C. B. Freeman as pastor. Everyone is lending a hand in improving the appearance and condition of the church building. The men are re-covering the building, and the women and young people are re-decorating the interior, and financing the project. The women are led by Sisters Freeman and McGinness. The young people, directed by Sister Zuberka, are planning big things for the future to help finance the church.

At the last district conference W. W. Chrestensen was elected counselor to District President W. E. Haden. Since that time Brother Chrestensen has been visiting groups and branches, preaching the message of truth. Brother Haden recently held a series of meetings at Rome, Missouri, where there is a small group of Saints.

The dramatic club, composed of the branch young people, has been active this summer. They realized a tidy sum of money from an ice cream social at the home of W. W. Chrestensen. September 16, they held a minstrel show in connection with another pie social, the scene of acting being a large vacant building in Tigris neighborhood. These workers show signs of becoming efficient Zion builders.

Brother J. C. Chrestensen was preaching at Ava Branch when called to his wife's bedside. Sister Chrestensen was stricken with paralysis. She passed away August 20. The branch extends heartfelt sympathy to the family.

September 11, Brother Leo Reigle, of Michigan, was the morning speaker. Brothers Frisbe, Ecker, and Reigle occupied the pulpit in the evening also. They were in Tigris investigating land for a home in Zion. They are preparing all things before coming here to live. During August another church man visited this region to look at land, Elder H. H. Davenport.

The Religio meets regularly on Sunday evening, using as study material the Bible and Book of Mormon. A short program follows the class period.

August 7, a surprise birthday dinner was held at the church in honor of S. W. Simmons, veteran missionary, and Saints were present from Tannyville, Chadwick, and Ava, Missouri.

The women, too, are sponsoring enterprises which promote friendliness with those not of the faith. They are planning a carnival for the near future.

Boston, Massachusetts

Branch Organizes for New Year

"Comin' at you from the old Bay State," writes Ruth Alice Carter, newly-elected correspondent of Boston Branch.

Boston Saints held a business meeting the night of September 14, and elected the following officers: Pastor, Doctor W. A. Sinclair; director of Religious Education, Ralph Herrick; secretary, Harold Gunsolley; treasurer, Everett York; home visiting committee, Frank Dobbins; chorister, Beatrice York; book agent, Chester McGuire. The budget committee will be composed of the heads of departments.

It was the honor and pleasure of Boston Branch to have President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle Paul M. Hanson present at the business meeting.

"We have in our branch," Sister Carter continues, "a new family named Van Nieuwenhuylse. Needless to say we call them simply Van. Suppose you try to pronounce it. Mr. Van was especially endeared to us after the business meeting. When we were almost to the "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow" of the meeting (in other words, almost the end), the aforementioned gentleman arose and said: 'When are we going to have one of those famous New England suppers?' We were with him, one and all. And before he sat down he had promise of a supper inside of a month.

"In spite of the reputation of the New England dinners, I think the 'strictly fish' dinner we had not so long ago beat that. We had fried clams and scallops, clam chowder, French-fried potatoes, and—oh, why go on? I think it's about time for another."

Beatrice York, the reelected chorister, already has begun to organize the orchestra. This musical section met with great approval last year, and the members enjoyed their work. They are doing their bit, and doing it well, too.

To the Saints of Boston Cape Cod means only one thing—Onset. That is where is held each summer season the far-reputed Onset reunion. Most of the Boston Saints attend this reunion and find there "something to write home about."

Friday evening, September 23, the "younger" young people held their first meeting at the home of Miss Genevieve Sinclair. The meeting was primarily one for organization, and the following officers were elected: President, Wallace Sinclair; secretary and treasurer, Genevieve Sinclair, and monitor, Ruth Carter. This group will meet every other week and devote the first quarter or half hour to church history, the next half hour to some special topic by a member, and the end of the evening to social fun. While this group is smaller and less experienced than the "Crusaders," the older young people, the members hope to make its activities of much value.

The district departmental conference is to be held in Boston Branch November 12 and 13, and local members are expecting a fine gathering of Southern New Englanders who will receive that for which they come, spiritual and social encouragement. Everyone is welcome.

Westerners and Mid-Westerners have heard of Boston, but there is a side they have never heard unless they happened to be listening to the radio the other night. Those radio and stage entertainers, Olson and Johnson, had a humorous opinion of the "land of the beans and the home of the Braves." "That city," they said, "was laid out by Oliver Twist, and he used a pretzel for a blue print." At the end of their hilarious version of "Paul Revere's Ride," Mrs. Paul Revere was heard to cry: "Why, Paul, where are you going? You've warned all the Americans." And Paul, riding furiously called back, "I'm going back to warn the British."

Santa Ana, California

Visiting speakers have contributed to the enjoyment of local Saints. Doctor A. W. Teel and Brother Chambers, of Los Angeles; Brother Johnson, of Long Beach, and Brother Rhodes, of Downey, have occupied the Santa Ana pulpit at various times this summer.

The young married people's class of the church school invited the young people's class to Irvine Park for a steak bake. Here under beautiful, old oak trees about thirty-five enjoyed a happy evening.

Sister Charles Calkins, who is in charge of the junior church school, provided recreation for her young girls this summer by meeting with them each Saturday afternoon. The little girls were entertained by the telling of religious stories and kept busy sewing on quilt blocks. This fall the women of the church will assist them in putting the quilt together and in the quilting of it. These little girls did not understand the sacrifice of time involved on Sister Calkins's part, but they have greatly enjoyed meeting their friends each Saturday. The strengthening of friendships in the church means greater happiness in church service, and these girls have benefited in a very real sense from their summer association together.

It has been the custom to disband the Ladies' Aid Society for the summer, but this year the need of money for church activities was so great that each Thursday afternoon found a number of women presenting themselves for work. Under Sister William Kuhn's energetic leadership, several quilts have been quilted and sold.

Sunday evening, September 25, Sister Taressa Koonce, who is a teacher of piano here in Santa Ana, presented a few of her older pupils in a recital of sacred music. The audience greatly enjoyed the program.

Santa Ana Saints are looking forward to the district conference which meets at Los Angeles in October.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Have Thriving Group of Young People

Vancouver Branch has just closed a very successful church school year, all officers reporting that they enjoyed their work and that the spiritual condition of the Saints is very good. The report of the treasurer was one which gave him pleasure to read to the congregation. The Saints have made many sacrifices to pay tithes, branch dues, and offerings.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year: Branch president, Elder George E. Miller; counselors, James E. Johnston and Isaac McMullin; branch clerk, Sister Emily McMullin; treasurer, Edwin Spargo; financial secretaries, Chase Taylor and John Gerrie. In the church school Brother Norman Morrison is director; adult supervisor, Leonard Quance; young people's superintendent, Edwin Spargo; junior division, Sister Gerrie; chorister, Tom Spargo; assistant, Viola Miller; organists, Grace Lee and Hazel Stanbridge; secretaries of church school, Natila Krause and Dora-thea Stoyloff.

The young people closed the summer season with the most successful ice cream social they ever held. Over eighty people were present. Lawn games and a splendid program were given to the delight of all. Sister Stanbridge opened her home for the occasion and proceeds were given to the women's department for their new Hymnal fund.

The women served a corn and hot dog supper in the basement of the church some days ago, and a program of games followed.

The young people's division is planning a busy year. They hope to adopt the plan that is being suggested by the district young people's president, Dwight Davies, and want to make their efforts equal those of any young people in the district. Vancouver has every reason to be proud of her young people. They have the support of the older members of the branch who are always willing to help.

Elder Arthur Oakman arrived September 18, at the home of Brother Joseph Spargo. He was kept exceedingly busy during his stay here.

New Opening in Indiana

Missionary J. O. Dutton at Cannelton

Elder Jasper O. Dutton began a series of meetings in a rented hall belonging to the Cotton Company at Cannelton, Indiana, September 12, and closed there the evening of September 25, with a good audience. Some are talking of baptism in the near future.

There are only three Saints at that place, and two of them Brother Dutton baptized at Millstone, near Dodd, Indiana, in a two-weeks' series he held there before going to Cannelton.

This is the first time the gospel has been preached at Cannelton, and Brother Dutton considers it a good opening, and hopes to return. Saints and friends from Millstone and Derby Branch attended and gave help.

"Everyone," Brother Dutton writes, "is glad to note the merger of the church papers, and we will do all we can to get Saints and friends to take the Saints Herald. I am happy in the work and feel that God is blessing me in preaching the word."

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

A wonderful spirit was felt by the Saints at the sacrament service September 11. Usually sacrament is had on the first Sunday of the month, but on that day in September, most of the priesthood were absent from the group, and so this very significant service of the church was postponed. Sacrament was also carried to the sick of the branch, Sister May Crabtree, Sister Anna Tacket, and Sister Cora Clayton.

That afternoon a beautiful baptismal service was held in the Scioto River near Rushtown, Ohio. A young husband and wife were baptized by O. A. Rexroad and confirmed by him that evening.

The Sunday school was reorganized Sunday, September 18, Luther Crabtree being elected superintendent. O. A. Rexroad is teacher of the adult class; Sister Rexroad is teacher of the juniors; Sister Harvey Culp has the primary grade, and Sister May Culp the beginners.

The mission is now located on Pool and Fifth Street, City View, Portsmouth West Side. This has required considerable labor. The men have been busy cleaning and papering and making ready for the ministrations of Elder J. R. Grice, of Columbus, Ohio. He is expected to commence missionary meetings September 25, and continue for some days. Local members feel that the Lord has opened the way for a spiritual revival at this place. The Saints are in fine condition spiritually and are looking for much good to be done.

Brother J. K. Bealor passed away September 16, and the funeral was held at Pleasant Valley Branch the following Sunday. Elder Richard Shope, of McDermott, Ohio, officiated. Brother Bealor was eighty-two years of age. He was laid to rest in Rushtown Cemetery. His wife and daughter passed away a few years ago.

Toronto, Ontario

September 29.—The summer vacation and Lowbanks reunion being over, Toronto Branch is settling down to work. J. L. Prentice is again the genial and level-headed president, with assisting pastors, Elders W. J. Bavington, and S. J. Bell. The branch voted to go back to the old order of Sunday school and religio departments instead of the new church plan, and elected Elder B. H. Hewitt Sunday school superintendent, and William Archer religio superintendent. Mrs. J. A. Wilson was returned as women's department leader, this being but a small tribute to her efficient work.

Cottage meetings are being held in the north, east, and west ends of the city, and about seventeen members have been added to the fold as a result of the north-end activities. Elder R. S. Sal-yards has been in this vicinity since reunion, comforting and cheering by his presence and sermons. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith bade good-bye recently, and the Saints felt sorry to lose the comradeship of this good brother.

Local activities of necessity assume a practical basis on account of large indebtedness, so the women's department has undertaken to pay the local church interest, amounting to approximately two thousand dollars per annum. Last year they raised twenty-five hundred dollars, paying off five hundred dollars on principal. This department is organized into twelve groups, consisting of ten women to a group. Sister Sadie Clifton's group recently had one hundred and fifty women attend a business concern's demonstration called a Housewives' Conference for which they received forty dollars. Thursday, September 22, Sister Molly Clark's group gave a concert arranged by Professor G. E. Boyce, assisted by Gueden's Juvenile Concert, a forty-piece orchestra, G. Noakes, cornetist, and C. N. E. gold medalist. Needless to say, it was enthusiastically received by music-lovers. This group expects to have handed in three hundred dollars for the first nine months of this year.

The men's groups have a drive on to clear off the remaining five hundred dollars due the contractors by October 1, and are nearing their goal.

The district conference convenes in Toronto commencing Saturday, October 1, at 10 a. m., and on Sunday, October 2. Members hope to see many Saints from other branches. It is planned to repeat the much-appreciated cantata, "David the Shepherd Boy," Saturday evening.

Independence

It was fitting that the church in Independence call its workers together early Sunday morning for an hour of prayer and worship as a way of beginning the new church school year. President F. M. McDowell was in charge of the service in the main auditorium of the Stone Church, being assisted by Elders C. B. Woodstock and D. S. McNamara. The hour was outstanding for its feeling of unity, reverence, worship and the expressions of purposefulness and consecrations. Pastors of the various congregations were seated in the choir loft.

The spirit of love and harmony apparent in this meeting continued in all the services of the several congregations throughout the day and promised much for the year to come.

The words of Brother McDowell aptly describe the evening workers' conference at the Stone Church, "the most inspiring sight I have ever been able to witness in Independence." Religious Education officers, teachers, and leaders, responding to invitation, assembled at the Stone Church three hundred strong and occupied reserved seats during the evening hour, everyone eager to hear President McDowell's inspiring address on "The Unfinished Portrait."

Impressive features of this service were the presentation of the workers, each group led by its pastor, by Elder D. S. McNamara; the charge to the workers by Brother McDowell; the prayer of blessing upon the church and its workers and its task during the new year, by President Elbert A. Smith; the musical contribution by the Stone Church Choir led by Paul N. Craig; the organ rendition of "Come, O Come, Sweet Comforter," by Robert Miller following the special prayer, and the congregation hymn dismissal, "Consecration."

The Stone Church was crowded for this service, and everyone was inspired to a more consecrated effort in the months to come. Pastor J. F. Sheehy, President Elbert A. Smith and Elders C. B. Woodstock and D. S. McNamara assisted Brother McDowell in the stand.

Sunday afternoon beginning at three o'clock a good rehearsal was had at the Auditorium by the Auditorium Festival Chorus, numbering not far from four hundred. Paul N. Craig was in charge, and the Auditorium Orchestra accompanied. Pastor J. F. Sheehy, who is a member of the chorus, talked briefly, and Bishop J. S. Kelley gave a short "pep" talk concerning the sale of tickets for the Harvest Home Festival concert, October 14. The chorus will assemble again next Sunday at the same hour and place.

About one hundred and fifty young people from Independence took the historical trip to Far West Sunday, September 25, Elder John F. Sheehy acting as speaker at such historical points as the Richmond Cemetery where David Whitmer is buried; the courthouse at Richmond where stands the statue of Brigadier-General A. W. Doniphan, friend of the persecuted Saints of early days, and the temple lot at Far West. The company arrived at Far West in time to take charge of the eleven o'clock service, Elder Sheehy being the speaker. Lunch was eaten in a grove between Far West and Cameron, and after a mid-afternoon song service at the Cameron church, the travelers returned home.

This is a busy week for Harvest Home Festival builders. Every day and often far into the night workers are in the lower room of the Auditorium, making and arranging their booths. The festival opens the evening of October 11. This year a colonial atmosphere will prevail in honor of the bicentennial of George Washington. There will be much more to say about the festival next week.

Stone Church

Three children were baptized early Sunday morning at the Stone Church, Robert Lee Fenn, Ethel May Hyatt, and Joseph William Jones, Pastor J. F. Sheehy officiating. They were confirmed by Elders Ephriam Brown and David Van Trump.

The shifting of classes from one department to another, listening to addresses of welcome, and making the acquaintance of new teachers, class locations, and study courses occupied the church school hour Sunday morning in the various divisions of the Stone Church school. At the Auditorium the young people's department, under the supervision of Elder T. A. Beck, received the sixty-five members graduated on last Sunday from the intermediate department. Elders S. A. Thiel presented this group, and the talk of welcome was given by Guinn Bronson, a member of the young people's department.

A deep spirit of unity and sense of responsibility ushered the Stone Church congregation into the new church school year at the morning sacrament service. In his opening talk President F. M. McDowell impressed the Saints with the significance of God's way of life—the Cross—and the love, pain, and sacrifice it involves. Favorite old hymns, the association with friends of the faith in worship, the special prayer by Patriarch U. W. Greene, the period of meditation, the order of the service—all served to stir the hearts of the large crowd of worshippers.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, and others in the stand, who helped to conduct the service were President F. M. McDowell, Patriarch U. W. Greene, Bishop J. S. Kelley, Elders H. W. Harder, H. G. Barto, E. A. Thomas, and Priest Earl Audet.

One has passed from the midst of the Stone Church congregation who will be greatly missed, Sister Kate Sheridan

Davison, who died at the Sanitarium early the morning of September 29. She was taken there from her home several days ago following a stroke. Sister Davison was seventy-six years old, the widow of Holmes J. Davison, who for forty years was a missionary for the church. He died in 1922. She had belonged to the church for many years, a faithful member. Surviving are a daughter, Miss Nina Davison, of Independence; two sons, Glenn L. Davison, Syracuse, New York, and Leo E. Davison, Newton, Massachusetts; and one brother, Henry P. Sheridan, Harvard, Massachusetts. The funeral service was held from the Stahl Funeral Home last Saturday afternoon.

The unexpected death of Sister Alice C. Crick at her home in La Jolla, California, came as a shock to her many friends in Independence. She suffered an attack of acute indigestion. Sister Crick was the widow of William Crick who died three years ago, and they lived in Independence a number of years. She leaves a sister, Mrs. Florence B. McKinney, of La Jolla; a brother, Homer Robinson, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and other relatives. The body was brought home to Independence, and the funeral was held from the Stone Church Monday afternoon.

Girl Scout Troop No. 37, of the Stone Church presented "Patsy," a two-act comedy at the Dining Hall Friday evening, affording entertainment to a group of friends and parents. Proceeds from the event will be used to pay the troop annual fee. Though the troop has been organized and active sixteen months, this is the first money-making enterprise it has sponsored, and the girls are happy at the response given them. Mrs. Helen Brackenbury directed the play.

Second Church

Last Sunday being the first Sunday in the month, the communion service was held. At the beginning of the service a short period of organ music was played by Mrs. Gladys Inman.

Apostle F. H. Edwards read from Mark 10: 17-22, following which, Mrs. Kathern Inman and Mrs. Ethel Schuyler sang a duet. J. H. Miller gave the invocation. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Alec McIntosh, Robert Alexander, was blessed by A. K. Dillie and William Inman. During the service Mr. Edwards spoke on the growth of the church and man. The emblems were served and the meeting was closed by Mr. Edwards.

At the seven thirty service J. H. Miller was the officer in charge during the absence of Pastor A. K. Dillie. R. L. Fulk was the speaker and his subject was from Isaiah 6.

Leonard McCormick who had been sick for sometime, died Tuesday evening, September 27. The funeral was held at Second Church, Thursday, September 29, at 2.30 p. m. Elder D. A. Whiting preached the sermon.

Walnut Park Church

After a fine prayer service at eight o'clock Sunday, September 25, the church school opened with large attendance. This being Promotion Day, there were some changes among the younger classes, and a good program was presented at the close of the class period. A talk by Brother C. G. Closson regarding these changes, was followed by the song, "Savior, Like a Shepherd, Lead Us," sung by the intermediates. A double quartet sang, "Take Time to Be Holy," then those promoted from the lower auditorium, marched up and took their places. They were welcomed by a short talk from a young boy, Johnnie Crandall. "On Higher Ground" was sung by the intermediates, and the quartet closed the exercises with "Onward to Zion."

The speaker at the morning hour was Pastor Frank McDonald who was heard by a large congregation. Preceding his sermon two little boys were confirmed, their baptisms having taken place after the morning prayer service. The candidates were Charles Edward, son of Brother and Sister Ammon Badder, and Lee Otis, son of Brother and Sister Jesse Hart. They were confirmed by Elders John Taylor and Paul Davis. Also, the little son of Sister Earl Phillips was blessed. Brother Erwin Moorman, assisted by Drexel Mollison at the piano, played a cornet solo, "The Lost Chord."

In the evening Brother McDonald was again the speaker, his theme being found in the question of the rich young ruler, "What Lack I Yet?"

A union prayer service was held at the church the last Wednesday of September, and a fine spirit prevailed.

Sunday, October 2, local Saints were happy to have as sacrament visitors President Elbert A. Smith and Sister Smith. Brother Smith made the opening remarks which were very helpful. Little Aileen Curtis, who was baptized early in the morning, was confirmed at the sacrament hour.

The first study class of the season was held that evening at six o'clock. There was good attendance, and officers were chosen for the year. Brother Mansell Williams will be the teacher of the older members, and Sister Mansell Williams has taken charge of the young people. There was a piano solo by Barbara Closson.

Elder George Jenkins was the evening speaker, and the choir which has been absent for some time, sang "Seek Ye the Lord," by Roberts. The obbligate solo was sung by Erwin Moorman. Walnut Park Saints are happy to have the evening services back at the church and are responding well with attendance.

The Swastika Class, Brother Kenneth Morford, teacher, enjoyed an outing the evening of September 30. About thirty-five drove to the City Park, where those who had been promoted into the class were "initiated." After that a wiener roast and long hike over the hills concluded a happy evening.

Enoch Hill Church

Sunday, September 25, was Promotion Day, and promotions were made in the beginner, primary, junior, and intermediate departments. In the upper auditorium the following program was given: March, song, "Tell Me the Story of Jesus"; the charge to those promoted, and presentation of diplomas by Church School Director C. E. Beal; vocal solo, "Onward to Zion," by Mrs. Zadie Young; charge to the school, Pastor Herbert L. Barto.

While Enoch Hill Saints enjoyed the Campus services this summer, it seemed good to be back in their little church on Sunday evening, listening to the voice of their own pastor.

Friday evening the senior young people with their leaders, E. H. McKean and Mrs. Ruth Hayes, went to Swope Park for a wiener roast. They report a good time.

The new church school year was started with the theme, "Consecration and Faith." Most of the officers and teachers were reinstated, and they are starting the year with renewed zeal and vigor, determining to make it a year of spiritual growth and development. Especially do they want to see every member an active worker.

The church was filled for sacrament service Sunday morning. Elder D. S. McNamara was present and gave an instructive talk to the Saints concerning the work for the year.

Attendance Sunday evening was somewhat affected by the number of Enoch Hill people who took part in the workers' conference at the Stone Church. Those who remained on Enoch Hill for the evening enjoyed a constructive sermon by Patriarch Ammon White.

Spring Branch Church

Forty-seven teachers and officers from this small branch participated in the workers' conference at the Stone Church Sunday evening, and heard President McDowell's address.

The sacrament service Sunday was in charge of Pastor G. W. Eastwood, assisted by Elders Alma Tankard, T. A. Beck, and Clair Austin. Brother Beck based his opening remarks on events in the life of Christ, and the spirit of harmony and peace of the hour was deeply enjoyed by everyone.

In the branch services, especially in the prayer meetings, the members are being reminded that this is the season of the year when we should count our blessings and should express thanks to the heavenly Father for his loving care. It is also a time when thanks can be expressed in a material sense, in making contributions to the Harvest Festival, in helping each other, in paying our tithing, and in remembering the church at all times in prayer.

At the Sunday school hour last Sunday, Imogene Dixon read a report of the historical trip to Far West.

The sick of the branch have lately been remembered with earnest prayer.

The branch mourns at the death of Sister S. T. Jennings, a faithful member of the church, and extends sincere sympathy to her family.

Far West Stake

Cameron Branch

Cameron's summer activities have been quite successful. Attendance has been consistently high. The church school work has been well supported. A short program each Sunday, given by one of the classes, precedes the lesson study and adds to the interest.

The midweek prayer services have been blessed with a comforting portion of the spirit and have proved worth while to those attending. Following reunion the attendance has nearly doubled.

Early in the summer Apostle E. J. Gleazer conducted an all-day service, assisted by Ward A. Hougas in the evening. His sermons were delivered on the theme, "God Consciousness."

Perhaps the greatest evidence of the progress in the work of Cameron Branch this year has been the visibly growing interest and attendance of the young people. The young people's convention here was a source of joy and strength to many as was also the work at the recent reunion.

A young people's class, meeting at six thirty each Sunday evening, under the supervision of Sister Lottie Daniel, has carried on a series of interesting, vital discussions, being aided at times by a member of the priesthood. Early morning prayer services have been introduced and a band of young people are going bimonthly to some grove to take part in active testimony and prayer. These services are also creating a greater degree of participation on the part of the younger ones in the midweek services and communion services.

The young people are eagerly looking forward to Young People's Rally to be held at Stewartville, November 12 and 13, where they can enjoy the renewal of associations with other young people of the stake.

In a Harvest Home Festival service held at the church on Sunday, August 13, there was found to be more than three hundred quarts of canned fruit and vegetables which became an integral part of the Far West Stake display. This was considerably above the quota for the branch.

Varied recreational activities have made many pleasant summer memories. Two ice cream socials have added financially to the branch expenses. The church has been repapered and numerous small repairs have also been made during the reunion. Conditions in the branch point toward a continuation of the peaceful relations between the members of the priesthood, and toward a more united effort to serve in the upbuilding of Zion.

Saint Joseph Branch

The work in the four groups in Saint Joseph is being carried on faithfully by local workers, and a general increase in attendance and interest seems to be noticeable since the beginning of fall activities. A general branch business meeting was held Monday night, September 12, at which time five men were approved for ordination.

First Church

The month of September has been a transition month. Plans were all looking forward to and getting ready for the opening of the church school year on October 2. On September 25, the children's division had their promotion exercises, and group leaders were announced. The various organizations have renewed their activities for the fall and winter months. The senior choirs and girls' chorus have again begun regular rehearsals. The dramatic club had its first meeting of the season on Friday, September 23, when officers for the coming year were elected and the season's activities outlined. The O. T. Z.'s have had a marshmallow roast and also a wiener roast during September. Officers were elected and the prospects point to a splendid year. Social activities will be held every two weeks and two devotional services will be held each month, one on the second Sunday morning and the other on the third Wednesday evening with the adults. Several other classes have come in for their share of the wiener roasts, including the Anti-Can't Class, the older young people's class and the children's division.

Perhaps the most noticeable gain in any service has come in the Wednesday evening prayer service. Attendance has increased through the efforts of the priesthood, and the spirituality and activity have increased to a marked degree.

We miss the full-time efforts of Brother Ward A. Hougas, president of Far West Stake and pastor of First Church, who has moved to Independence to take on added responsibility in managing the Herald Publishing House. Elder Howard C. Timm, associate pastor, carries on the work in his absence. Brother Hougas returns to the city about every two weeks for the Sunday services. On September 11 and 25, he preached both morning and evening at First Church and also at Third and Second Churches following the vesper service at First. At First he is giving a series of sermons at the vesper hour on the art of "Nest Building." He also was in charge of the communion service on October 2.

A truly outstanding service was the free man on free soil, and conduct himself in such a manner that the religion which animated him and for which his father had sacrificed his life should become honorable in the sight of men.

Considering the hurt once inflicted by those fellow citizens, his grateful joy may well be imagined when, in December of 1877, he received a petition from Nauvoo requesting the Reorganized Church—then with headquarters at Plano—to return to that river town and make it the center of their religious activities. He says there was a list of signers to this petition, three and a half feet long, some of it in double columns. The names embraced all the respectable and permanent citizens of the city, some even who had once made an offensive step towards him. What a pity it is that the Herald Office fire of 1907 de-amalgamated sacrament meeting at First October 2. The five men who had recently been called to the priesthood were ordained following the serving of the emblems. Gilbert Bowser and Lawrence Keck accepted the responsibilities of the office of priest, and Orvall Carpenter, Frank Mauzey, and Robert Farnham were ordained to the office of deacon. Seeing these young men willingly accept added responsibility at this time made many of the Saints realize their duties in this great work.

Second Church

Saints are happy that they are still able to carry on the gospel work. Pastor O. Salisbury is giving very fine sermons, especially on the gospel fundamentals. He has written short playlets to be given before these sermons. Special music is also furnished by the choir.

A young people's society has just been organized and given the name of Lo-Se-Jo, which means Love, Service, and Joy. Officers were elected as follows: Mary Belle Bear, president; Arthur Caselman, vice president; Virginia Moffet, secretary treasurer; Dorothea Moffet, pianist; and Ailene Mae Baker, chorister.

The women of the church gave a baked chicken and ham dinner in the basement of the church Friday, September 23. They have made the basement more attractive by putting curtains over the windows and doors and over cabinets.

Sunday night, September 25, the members listened to a good sermon by the stake president, Elder Ward A. Hougas, his subject being, "Hand in Hand With God."

stroyed this interesting historical document!

The first agitated years of getting adjusted into the harness of his life work witnessed the turmoil of the nation as it passed through the internecine struggle called a "civil" war. Just how to reconcile his intense patriotism and almost overpowering impulse to enlist, with his religious convictions against the shedding of blood was a problem which not only concerned him but his brothers as well. Counseling with Saints, they "took it to the Lord in prayer," and when direction came it was clear and unmistakable. "Do not enlist. Enlisting makes it an individual action whereby you will be responsible for the blood you shed . . . Wait, if drafted, . . . do not hesitate to take your places . . . and do your full duty . . . for through the conscription the deed becomes a national sin. . . ."

The rest of the narrative, traced through conscription and a readjustment, runs the gamut of exciting interest, through which he is made to recognize a supervising Power exercised over his life, to prevent him from shedding the blood of fellow men.

The missionary spirit that was born when he took up his presidential duties in 1860 continued to burn within his heart throughout his life. First building up a little branch at Nauvoo, busy with secular and religious affairs, the days were not long enough for the ministry he longed to do. Many early lessons were learned, such as that bitter one when first he realized that not all to whom they administered were able to recover. The first loss by death in this manner seemed to him almost an evidence of a personal guilt, as if in some way he were at fault for the withholding of the blessing. It was a long time, he writes, before he could throw off the depression caused by this feeling.

Then there was the time when, disgusted at having an audience of only three or four which gathered in response to generous advertising, he made up his mind to call the service off, and by a strange manifestation was gently rebuked and shown it was his duty to minister the word to even one soul with all the earnestness, interest and care he would use were a thousand listening. On another occasion he rebelled when, in going to administer to the sick, he found evidences that a doctor was also in attendance, and declared he would not go again under such conditions. That time a personal messenger from the spirit world came to instruct him that it was his duty to perform what ministry he was asked to give, and if the member had not faith to be healed through means of the ordinance alone, that was a matter he should leave in the hands of the Lord.

PLANO—1866

It was in January, 1866, when he removed his family to Plano where he assumed full charge of the church publishing house. His diary for this period of life in Plano—1866-1881—shows a ceaseless activity which only a strong, virile man could endure. At the office every day for periods of from six to sixteen hours, administering to sick, preaching in all the countryside about, on committees for financing and building the stone church there, seeking subscriptions for publications, writing assiduously for Herald, Advocate, even serial stories for the children's paper, planning missionary work at home and abroad, listening to troubles and doubts, bolstering up the faltering, encouraging the laborer, giving home and shelter to the friendless, attending two conferences yearly, lecturing in the temperance cause, attempting to give his children educational and musical opportunities, absenting himself for months at a time on missionary efforts, sitting on councils, answering letters, helping to fold and wrap and mail the periodicals, packing baskets of provisions to take to the needy in the evenings,—just to read the record of those days and to realize that, even so, it is but a fragment of the full sweeping tide of the years, wrings the heart in a grip of understanding tenderness the while one gasps amazed! Modestly he expresses his review of some of those years:

My memorandum books seem filled with brief entries, indicating the routine of labor performed as minister, editor, president, and missionary. My zeal for occupying a pulpit burned brightly in those days. This may appear quixotic to some, but I can only confess that it had, indeed, taken a great hold upon me. I was enthusiastically eager to use every possible opportunity to present my message to the public.

In the interim sorrow entered my home, and I lost the companion of my youthful vows. Peace and a degree of comfort and happiness returned with the coming of my second wife and the advent of children born to us. All such mutations are to be found in the history of every human being, and though I here touch them lightly, in the passing they left their imprints for grief or joy upon my very soul. In humility I acknowledge the kindness and beneficence of the heavenly Guardian of my life. While in those years of most particular and arduous labor I seemed never at rest or leisure, yet I was never left without a modicum of that Spirit upon which I learned to rely as the Source of my inspiration. Director of my ways, Companion of my labors, and Consoler in my trials and disappointments.

MISSIONARY JOURNEYS

His first long missionary trip from home occurred in 1875. It was anticipated with mixed feelings. Drawn by a sense of duty and desire he was held back by a definite feeling of reluctance to invade new and strange fields. He opines that this conflict may have been caused by some power seeking to interfere and hinder, or it might have resulted from a dread of persecutions such as had impressed themselves upon his earliest years. True to the call, he stifled all doubts and fears, and prepared with much prayer and earnest meditation for the task. For the encouragement of young elders he records that for many years, not until he was well past fifty, did he ever stand before a new audience without trembling.

This first mission was to the Atlantic Coast, with some calls at intermediate cities en route. It happened that he was in Boston on the day that city celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill—a fact he accounted a great privilege. He recites his visits to many historic spots and records the fervent thrills with which he viewed them.

His first trip west was in 1876, California, Nevada, and other points receiving his ministry prior to his arrival in Utah. When he reached Salt Lake City, he was in a pitiful physical condition from neuralgia, that arch-enemy which kept up a battling warfare against his peace the rest of his life. Then, too, the question of how he should meet the situation there gave him great concern. He did not wish to antagonize the people he had come to help and enlighten, and yet did not wish to lay himself open to the charge of cowardice by avoiding the issues which constituted the main points of difference between his church and theirs. His reception was a cool one, considering he was in the midst of a people who had once professed to be his friends and the friends of his father. Though aware of his presence in the city, his own cousins did not come near him until he, first, took the initiative and hunted them up.

His quandary increased for several days, as he realized certain opinions regarding conditions out there were very much tabu, and that an open attack on his part might mean open antagonism. Then, all at once, light came, his perplexity vanished, and his mind became at rest as he contemplated his first appearance before a public in that "benighted" city. All he had to do was to preach, affirmatively and constructively, the doctrines of the church as they had been preached from the pulpit and taught in the Sunday schools during the lifetime of his father, using the three standard books of the church as a basis for that effort. He sensed that enough had been given to the church of an affirmative nature which if preached plainly would show up the falsity and heresy of that doctrine which was dominating the members out there, that doctrine his father had called false and pernicious.

This, then, was the tocsin he sounded all up and down the length and breadth of the Territory, upon that and subsequent missionary trips. He felt the urge of calling the people who had been unwittingly led into error, back to the paths which needed no subterfuge of explanation, no evasion in support, and no excuse in justification. In 1885 and 1889 his labors in those regions were very extensive, and again in 1905 he sounded his ringing and clarion note of warning and recall. Having been told as a young man that the light wherein he stood was greater than that in which the Utah faction moved, and that he should have nothing to do with polygamy except to oppose it, he consecrated a large part of his manhood's effort to the task of helping to abolish it from the lives of people or from the records of a nation which should be pledged to policies of righteousness in personal conduct.

Several times he went to Washington, District of Columbia, in an effort to keep in touch with legislative and administrative measures which were likely to affect, one way or another, the interests of the church over which he exercised such careful oversight. The first of these, 1866, was in answer to summons when the House Committee on Territories was considering matters pertaining to Utah. The next, in 1883, in company with Elder Z. H. Gurley, jr., was for the purpose of making clear to the Secretary of State the distinction between the two organizations. This step followed an attempt on the part of the Government to prevent the emigration from foreign countries of Mormon converts who sought to come here planning to enter into polygamy. Again, in 1903, he was summoned to the hearings of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections trying the Reed Smoot case. It was a gratification to him to note how clearly national leaders drew the line between the two main Latter Day Saint organizations.

He early knew bereavement. His wife Emmeline bore him five children, two of whom died in infancy, one a prized son. After her death, March 25, 1869, he married Bertha, daughter of Mads and Mary (Thomason) Madison, the ceremony taking place November 12, 1869. To this union were born nine children, two of whom died at birth, one at the age of six and the other—another first-born son—at the age of fifteen and a half. In April, 1879, he laid his beloved mother away in the family plot in Nauvoo. The third daughter of his first wife died in January, 1891, leaving three small children to the care of her husband, Richard S. Salyards. On October 19, 1896, his wife Bertha passed away, her death caused by internal injuries received in a run-away accident. Fortunately the lonely man was able to form another matrimonial alliance which proved a comfort and blessing through the remainder of his life. It was January 12, 1898, when he married Ada Rachel, daughter of Alexander and Mary (Middleton) Clark, of Waldemar, Ontario. This kind woman bore him three sons, cared for him tenderly in his declining years, and within the year after his demise followed him into the Great Beyond.

In October, 1881, he removed his family to Lamoni, Iowa, where a new Herald Office and a large comfortable home were built under his supervision. In 1894 he had oversight of the erection of Graceland College, an institution which came into being largely through his active propoganda.

His missionary labors took him into two thirds the States of the Union, and various provinces of Canada. In 1903 he took his first trip abroad, prosecuting a summer's mission in the British Isles. In 1907 he crossed a portion of the Pacific and ministered in the Territory of Hawaii. Of these foreign trips he writes most entertainingly in his Memoirs.

In December, 1905, owing to failing health, he gave up "Liberty Hall," his large home near Lamoni, and moved into the town, the following summer removing to Independence where he spent the remainder of his sojourn on earth. Gradually he laid down the activities of life and relinquished his hold upon church affairs, though continuing to attend its conferences. In 1910 a church-wide celebration was held to mark his fifty years of service as president of the church. Deeply he appreciated the many tributes then showered upon him, for while conscientious in the performance of duty, he never felt such performance required encomiums.

Reaching quiet waters after the swirl and rush of the rapids of life, he occupied the last few years of his life in dictating his memories, his last summer being especially prolific in this direction. Shortly before his last illness he told his stenographer that he felt he was about through and would begin to wind things up. There came a day when he felt he had finished all he set out to do, with the exception of a chapter devoted to a consideration of Revelation, particularly as it had reference to those instructions he had received as guidance for the church. Of these he writes, in part: "Their character is of such spiritual fiber they are not easily described or recorded. That wonderful contact with the eternal forces which has resulted in there being impressed upon my consciousness veritable truth and the divine will of God has afforded me considerable joy, for I have recognized it as a manifestation of the prophetic power and vision which should attend the office of responsibility I have filled in the church."

THE END

And there came a day when this, too, was accomplished, the final portion being dictated from his bed, only a few days before his passing, which event occurred shortly after noon on Thursday, December 10, 1914. On the following Sabbath his body lay in state all forenoon, in the Stone Church, with friendly guards at head and foot and loving friends dropping coins into a basket instead of bringing floral offerings, the money to be used for the needy—according to the expressed wish of the truly great man they mourned.

In quiet unostentation he lived, loving everything that was pure and ennobling, and hating nothing but lies, hypocrisy, and deceit. The example he left for uprightness and integrity, for kindly sympathy, honor and purity has seldom been equalled nor often excelled in the annals of mankind. Universally beloved by those who knew him, and universally respected by even casual acquaintances, he was universally mourned as one greatly missed from the walks of life, where his path had been clean, straightforward, manly, inspirational, and generously strewn with the kindly and thoughtful deeds which spring from a great, loving, and understanding heart. As expressed by himself, in a meditative mood shortly before he passed away, the mainsprings of his daily living might be summed up.

"I am not afraid to go. I have never owned a dishonest dollar in my life. And I have never knowingly wronged man, woman, or child."

Thoughts From My Workshop

The measure of my religion consists not in how little evil I do, but in how much good I accomplish. . . .

gotten that our National Congress spent months of time devising taxes to be paid by the poor people to a great extent. But it was only at the very last that they yielded to pressure sufficiently to make a small reduction in the salaries of those working for the Government.

The injustice of this becomes more apparent when we consider that the reduced cost of living is much greater proportionally than was the reduction in salaries, yet the poor in many instances have had their burdens increased, instead of being reduced. This is not justice, but inequality and partiality. Does any person so lightly esteem Jesus as to suppose that he would remain silent under such practices as these, if he were here today? Our Lord commanded the church to teach all people to observe the things which he taught, and to this extent the church is concerned with politics. When corruption and injustice are indulged in, whether political, social, or private, the church would be untrue to its mission if it did not utter its protest.

POLITICAL ASPECTS OF CHURCH TEACHING

In order to make more clear the sense in which the church is concerned with political acts or methods, it may be well to note the definition of politics given in Webster's International Dictionary, edition of 1894, as revised by Doctor Noah Porter of Yale University. He defines politics as follows:

1. The science of government; that part of ethics which has to do with the regulation and government of a nation or state, the preservation of its safety, peace, and prosperity, the defense of its existence and rights against foreign control or conquest, the augmentation of its strength and resources, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, with the preservation and improvement of their morals.

While the preservation of the people's safety, peace, and prosperity is always of great interest to any Christian people, because the love of their fellow man is fundamental to their religion, yet their loyalty to Christian principles and to just government requires particular attention to those aspects of politics which Webster defines as the protection of citizens "in their rights, with the preservation and improvement of their morals." It ought to be apparent to every right-thinking person that the moral and social integrity of the nation, and of all people in it, must be of vital concern to any church that is worthy to represent the great moral and social principles of Christ.

If the church did not deal with such principles as these in a constructive, sincere, and fearless manner, it might justly be criticized for unfaithfulness to its high mission in the world. The church can not afford to forget that Christ has commanded it to teach his message. Some of the specific things which he taught are truth, virtue, justice, honesty, morality, love, fraternity, and equity as principles of life. He also commanded his church to aggressively oppose hypocrisy, deception, falsehood, vice, and sin in all the walks of life. He did not hesitate to rebuke those who were guilty of disregarding the rights of others, or whose moral and ethical conduct grew out of an evil heart. It is the duty of the church to maintain the standard of Christ, whether in political, social, or private life.

SOME POLITICAL FOUNDATIONS

So far as religion is concerned there can be no distinction between political and private acts of men, except so far as the consequences or the example may be of more far-reaching importance. An evil or sinful act does not change its nature simply because it is committed by some one in political life. Each one must be responsible to God for his deeds, but he must also properly be made to answer to those whom he wrongs. Man's accountability is a fundamental thing, whether it relates to the home, the community, the State, or simply to his neighbor. From the time men began to associate together they began to recognize that obligations toward each other were mutual. They found common aims and needs, and in satisfying them they found that they must recognize their interdependence with each other.

Society grew out of these relationships, and in the development of society the State came into being. Yet personal obligations on the part of each member of the State toward all the rest still existed, and the successful State required them to be recognized and discharged. Jesus taught the fundamental obligations which God, justice, and reason demand shall be properly assumed by every person in life. The very life of our nation depends upon the honesty, justice, morality, and dependability of those who compose it. Political corruption is only an evidence of the private corruption that always precedes it. For no man becomes politically corrupt unless he has previously been corrupt in other things. In any event his bad conduct becomes a part of himself personally, though he may be held accountable to the whole nation whose well-being he betrays.

For these reasons and others, no person can escape responsibility for his individual status in society or the State. Develop the individual properly and you develop the social body and the State, which are only the sum total of individuals politically organized. Life must be lived in association with others, and each one either helps or hinders the rest. A bad example is of vital concern to every one within the government, or who is directly or indirectly affected by it. Political life is the outgrowth of personal life and associated lives. The church and religion are therefore vitally concerned with its moral and social aspects.

GOVERNMENTS ARE STABILIZED BY RELIGION

The morals of political life are so closely related to religion that God established the whole Jewish nation under a code of laws that embraced both religion and political affairs. The ideal government of the future, the millennial reign of Christ, will conduct its civil affairs on religious foundations. The religious principles held by the founders and builders of our own great nation safeguarded its amazing growth, security, and progress. Each of the most successful nations of the world today rests upon religious foundations, either formally acknowledged or actually existing and influencing its moral and social state.

The importance of religious influences toward the stability and probity of governments has always been recognized by great empire builders. Our own Government sought to preserve these valued influences for all time to come, and therefore protected them by constitutional law, which prescribes:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."—Amendment to the Constitution, Article I.

When civil rulers have persecuted religion persistently, the result has been eventually the downfall of that government or of the ruler himself. It is significant that after tyrant Domitian had banished John the Revelator to the lonely Isle of Patmos, because John had proclaimed against vice and corruption, the monarch is said to have become insane. Not long afterward the forces of national disintegration set in and in the course of time the mighty Roman Empire reaped the reward of corruption in its own downfall.

POLITICAL VIEWS OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH

The Reorganized Church holds that men are accountable to God for the laws they enact, and for the manner in which the laws are administered, and believes that its members should seek and uphold men who will serve the nation with equity and justice. The law of the church includes the following statements of its belief:

1. We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man, and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, either in making laws or administering them, for the good and safety of society.

3. We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same, and such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people (if a republic), or the will of the sovereign.—Doctrine and Covenants 112: 1, 3.

To the members of the church has also been given the following inspired command:

I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; . . . nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for diligently, and good men and wise men ye should observe to uphold.—Ibid. 95: 2.

It is the duty of every member of the Christian body to live uprightly and to promote upright conduct among all men, whether engaged in business, in society, or in politics. Men who hold principles of Christian virtue, honesty, and equity should therefore be steadfastly and aggressively supported for all public offices within the nation.

THE MORAL ASPECT OF POLITICS

The church does not desire to control the civil government, but it does desire that the government shall so far as possible prevent crime, vice, immorality, injustice, and selfish aims that defraud the people. Political matters involving the menace of such evils as these require the special attention of the church membership, for they not only endanger the moral rectitude of social groups and individuals, but of the State and nation as a whole. Nations exist and function by the sufferance of God, who has always rebuked rulers and government officials that had become corrupt. The prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Micah, and many others were sent to kings, princes, and judges of past ages, to whom they voiced the warnings of God because of unrighteousness.

As the bearer of Christ's teachings to men, the church is deeply concerned with such problems as the civil laws of marriage and divorce. Whatever the civil laws may permit, the law of God on this question is unchangeable. Inequality and oppression of the poor are also to be opposed in political as well as private life. James, the Lord's brother, did not fear to denounce oppressors of the people, and Jesus himself condemned the unjust distribution of wealth. Slavery and liquor have been outlawed, largely through the efforts of the church. To secure the well-being and virtue of all in such matters as these, which involve the moral safety of the people, are the chief aims of the church with respect to political activities. It is strictly opposed to all attempts to legalize or encourage such vices in any form.

DAVISON.—Kate Sheridan was born August 27, 1856, at Lockhartville, Nova Scotia. She married Holmes J. Davison February 28, 1878, and six children, four boys and two girls, were born to them. Three preceded her in death; Burpee A., Merrill B., and Bico E. Her husband, a missionary in the church for forty years, also passed away in December, 1922, at Stockton, California. She is survived by two sons and one daughter; Glenn L., of Syracuse, New York; Leo E., of Newton, Massachusetts, and Nina L., of Independence, Missouri; four granddaughters, and one brother, Henry P. Sheridan, of Harvard, Massachusetts. Mrs. Davison was baptized a member of the church June 4, 1882, at Delhaven, Nova Scotia, by J. F. Burton. After a faithful life in the gospel, she passed away September 29, 1932, at the Independence Sanitarium, leaving a host of friends all over the United States and in Canada as well. The funeral service was held October 1, 1932, at Stahl's Funeral Home, U. W. Greene in charge, assisted by Richard Bullard. Mrs. Davison had lived in Independence since November, 1927, having moved there from Somerville, Massachusetts, at that time.

Death claimed her September 10, at the hospital at Fort Madison. Her parents, husband, one sister, two brothers, two grandfathers and grandmother, and numerous other relatives mourn her passing. The funeral services were conducted from the Clements Funeral Home, Fort Madison, September 12, a large number being assembled to pay respect to her memory. Elder F. T. Mussell conducted the service. Sister Nellie was a member of the Burlington Branch and was loved by all with whom she came in contact. At the beginning of this year she was chosen leader of the S. The Pigeonhole

A Worthy Offering

This week's true story came to us from the mother of a lad who had ambitions. It is especially appropriate to this week; here it is:

His freshmen year was marked by the usual uncertain groping of youth to find his place. However, even then the dreams of Graceland were becoming more definite to the lad. Graceland's entrance requirements guided the choice of his high school course.

It was not long before the lad's preference for mathematics was evident. His teachers said of him, "He just eats mathematics." By this time he had definitely decided that he would be an accountant.

His parents thought he would make a better teacher but did not insist. On one or two occasions he was invited to take charge of high school classes. One of the grade school teachers turned her pupils over to him for a part of a day so that she might hurry away for Christmas vacation. Yes, he liked to teach.

Then, at just the right moment Graceland offered a sort of combination of business and teaching course. He would take that. He could follow it latter with special courses in accountancy and be able to follow that work or teach those subjects.

High school closed. With high hopes the lad started out for a summer of work at the first job that offered, work on a farm. Harvest came on and then threshing and there was more money in this than in regular farm work. There was a bumper crop of small grain. A bumper crop of straw, too. Men came out from the city to work in the harvest, many of them to return, unable to endure the unusually heavy work. With dreams of Graceland beckoning the lad stayed by the task.

Fall came. He had done well but not quite well enough. He was not downcast. He would borrow a little. But the depression had filled the people with fear and had reduced the earnings of others.

Disappointments, discouragement. Then a sort of apathy that could substitute a business school for Graceland. A few months of this and his job failed that brought his bread and butter. The depression again! Further schooling was impossible. Gone the last hope. Such black despair that if he could he would have joined the army and buried himself from civil life for a time. But he couldn't even join the army—a defective eye.

Home. No work. Life going past with an eager youth as on-looker. Hope returned with the spring. On the farm again. Long days of hard work with pitably low wages. Still he might make it. A brother could lend him a hundred this year. It was just possible. Hope!

Less wages. Low wages for harvest promised. Hope dying the death of slow torture.

And what has it done to the lad? Gone is the arrogance and conceit of youth. Through humble prayer there has come to him a sure knowledge of an overruling Power, a kind Father who softens the blows of life and gives strength to endure its disappointments.

The call comes to sacrifice. The church needs money. The call strikes a sympathetic chord. The lad knows the meaning of those words. He will give a week's wages. A week's wages! A small offering as dollars and cents go. But, measured in the coin of youth's dreams and ambitions—a worthy offering.

The Spirit of the Volunteers

They Are Needed Now More Than Ever Before

An incident in the life of Saul when Israel was surrounded by the enemy hosts that threatened destruction strikes the imagination. It is one of those bits of historical drama of which one wishes most fervently the records had preserved a fuller account. In preparation for the inevitable contest with enemies without and doubters at home, Saul retreated for what seems to have been a time of spiritual strength.

And Saul also went home to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men whose hearts God had touched.

One tries to picture them. They were men of faith, men of devotion. Their personal welfare was not an object in time of national trouble. They were undoubtedly volunteers. In the words of the text, God had touched their hearts; and that is all we need to know about them. How they conducted themselves in the ensuing days, when they formed a nucleus of power about Saul that enabled him to take the leadership of Israel—a nucleus inspired by its faith and fearless devotion—and overwhelmed their foes, is well known from the record. It was entirely to be expected. When men get in a position that God can touch their hearts, they are always very strong in a righteous cause. Theirs was the spirit of the volunteers.

Today the church needs volunteers: volunteers for missionary work in the home branches; volunteers for teaching in the church school; volunteers for all sorts of things that an army of paid employees could not do.

This church was started by volunteers. It was kept going largely by volunteers during the great days of growth prior to 1844. The men who worked for the Reorganization from 1852 to 1860 were volunteers; and it was led by a President who started his work in 1860 as a volunteer.

Of course it is necessary to sustain the families of men who give their entire time to the work of the church. But no number of men that this church or any church could expect to hire would be able to carry on its entire work. Any church that loses the volunteer spirit is doomed; extinction is ahead of it.

All members should be volunteers in some sort of church work. There is something for everyone to do. Somebody must preach the Word, and somebody must sweep out the church and dust the pulpit. It will not be all singing and hosannas in the kingdom of God. There will be work to do, and somebody must roll up his sleeves and get his hands soiled to do it. And in many cases, those who do the most noble service will be the volunteers. L. L.

Special Prohibition Number of "Herald"

Order Copies Immediately for Distribution

Special articles on the prohibition situation will appear in the Saints' Herald for October 19, and we are calling this advance attention to the special issue so that the Saints can make whatever arrangements are necessary in order to secure extra copies.

In the present presidential campaign economic conditions have taken precedence over the prohibition question, but the situation is nevertheless critical for the future of the movement to control the liquor traffic.

Other factors will of course have their bearing in determining how the Saints will cast their votes, but so far as the Wet and Dry issue is concerned the election of a President sympathetic to the Wets would decrease the possibility of a veto on any Wet bill which might pass Congress, while the election of a President sympathetic to the Dry Cause would increase the possibility of a veto of such legislation. A majority of each House can pass a bill up to the President, but only a two thirds majority can pass it over his veto.

Before Congress adopts any Wet legislation, however, the make-up of the present Congress will have to be changed considerably. This change is likely to come if the people of the United States permit themselves to be stampeded by the nation-wide drive for the election of Wet Congressmen. It can not come if the men and women of the nation recognize the importance of this issue and elect legislators whose dryness is a matter of conviction rather than of political expediency.

It is extremely desirable that the Saints who have been in the habit of passing our missionary paper to their friends shall transfer this habit to the new Herald. All missionaries and local officers are requested to secure as many copies as possible of this special Herald and see that they are distributed as widely as practicable. Since the supply will be limited we suggest that orders for the Herald of October 19 be placed immediately. No better start can be made in interesting good people who are not yet members of the church than by bringing to their attention our stand on this matter of such great moral and spiritual significance for the life of the nation.

F. H. E.

(Orders for the extra copies should be in the Herald Office by Saturday, October 15. A few extra copies will be printed in anticipation of orders coming in later. You should act immediately. Single copies, postpaid anywhere for five cents apiece. In lots, fifty cents a dozen.)

A Stronger Faith

We read from the pages of our history the stories of the valiant sacrifices and the heroic spirit of the men and women of early days. Some have expressed a doubt as to whether the people of modern times are as devoted to the church as were those of olden times.

For answer we can only point to specific instances. It is heartening to find those who have the faith and devotion to give up lucrative positions to enter the church work. We know what a trial it must be for them in depression times for them to see their chances of regaining their positions slip from them, and then to be released from the church service shortly afterward. One who can keep his heart right under such circumstances leaves no doubt as to the strength of his devotion.

The following letter recently came to President Smith from one such man, who admirably served the church while under appointment, and who is continuing to serve after his release.

Gradually we are getting reestablished in our home. I left Saint Louis last June and my family followed me late in August. I regret that it seemed impossible for us to remain in Saint Louis longer, but since certain matters required our return to Chicago we deemed it advisable to move out in that direction.

I greatly enjoyed my labors among the Saints in Saint Louis, having had there experiences and blessings which neither gold nor silver could persuade me to part with. I came out of that experience with a stronger faith, in fact, a new kind of faith, not child-like, but more matured. I am deeply conscious of a God who knows and understands the needs of the human family. I am also more conscious of the fact that a consecrated priesthood is needed. I find the people dying spiritually for the lack of this kind of priesthood. Something must awaken them. This something I have been trying to discover.

You and other members of the general organization may feel assured that I shall do all in my power to carry on. I am in no way soured on the gospel because of the unfortunate ending of my general ministry, but have come out with a determination to do my best as a local minister. My voice shall be raised and my arms extended in an effort to build up the faith of the people.

I have obtained employment, though it may be only for a time. Then again it might carry on for some time. I am connected with the vocational and insurance department of the Joint Emergency Relief organization in Chicago.

Sundays have found me preaching in various branches whenever appointment could be made. I am at present arranging for a series of Sunday evening sermons to be preached in the West Side Branch during October and November. I will report the results to you later.

My prayers always ascend to the throne of grace in your behalf.

Any time you are in the city of Chicago, you are welcome to the hospitality of our home.

My wife joins me in sending our best regards,

Your brother in Christ,

C. A. EDSTROM

What Latter Day Saints Believe About God

A New Study in Doctrine by President Elbert A. Smith

This fine new pamphlet outlines a condensed study course for a period of seven weeks, covering this fundamental item in our church doctrine. For each week there is a list of suggested daily readings in preparation for the class discussion. This is one of the best pamphlets it has been our privilege to publish within recent years. It is of convenient pocket size, printed on a good quality paper, and stapled in a heavy cover. Our readers do not need to be told of the quality of "Brother Elbert's" writings. Here he is at his best.

While this informative work is designed to suit the needs of both men and women students of the church, it is urged that the priesthood especially should buy it and study it, if possible, as a class in each branch. (Price 25 cents. Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.)

A Word of Encouragement From Veteran Church Worker

Editors the Saints' Herald:

The merging of the three church papers fills a long-felt want. The first number (October 5) is a full meal. I am pleased with it. This new and enlarged Saints' Herald should be in every member's home. It has a vitalizing power for good.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. HUNT.

Immortality

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
The soul that rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar;
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home.

"Enforcement Through Education," is the slogan of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

Are Your Hands Clean?

It takes at least two good minds to transmit any great thought. It takes one to phrase it and write it, and another to understand it and keep it. I have often envied those who seem to have that alert kind of genius that enables them, in the midst of their casual reading, to recognize the worth of gems of thought and clip them out for future use. Roused from a comfortable abstraction they sit suddenly erect and say, while reaching for the shears, "Now that would make a good subject for an editorial!"

Such a friend recently let us have a poem that seemed to have a message pertinent for all professing Christians, and especially for the members of the priesthood. It is entitled, "Clean Hands," and it was written by Mrs. Eddie Dushie:

Once, in my childhood days long gone and dead,
I watched a supper table being spread
By busy hands; and eagerly I said—
Wishing to help—"Please, may I bring the bread?"
Gently, reprovingly, a kind voice said,
"Are your hands clean?"—
Abashed, I hung my head.

Oft, when I see the multitude, unfed,
And waiting hungry for the living bread,
My heart and hands are eager to be sped
To bring the manna that they may be fed.
But One Voice says, e'en as a voice once said,
"Are your hands clean?"—
I only bow my head.

For the work to which the Master calls us we must have clean hands. Otherwise we soil and spoil the work we do. And this cleanness is necessary in all lines: clean hands, clean bodies, clean minds and clean hearts; clean clothing, clean thoughts, and clean speech.

STUDY OUTLINES

THE FOUNDATIONS OF OUR FAITH—PART IV.

By Elbert A. Smith

1. What important question did Jesus put to his disciples? How did Peter answer the question? How does the modern world answer it? How do you answer it?

2. What did Jesus mean when He said, "Upon this rock I will build my church"? What is the real foundation of the church?

3. Upon whom, finally, must we depend in our spiritual life?

A WORD TO THE AGNOSTIC

A Talk for Home Missionaries

1. Every member of the church should engage in some missionary activities, telling the gospel story to his neighbors. Especially should we try to bring the message to those who have drifted from affiliation with any Christian bodies, and to those who have never been affiliated.

2. We hope to present short missionary articles on fundamental subjects like these in every issue of the Herald. How would you meet the arguments of a man who does not believe in God, the Bible, or religion?

3. How can you teach people about the spiritual way of life? What will you tell them?

4. Why must the world get back to God? to Christ and his teachings? Has experience taught us that we have been on the wrong track?

NEWS BRIEFS

Harvest Home Festival Opens

With a blare of band music last night the fourteenth Harvest Home Festival in Independence, officially opened its doors, and hundreds of visitors trooped in to gaze admiringly at a transformed place, the basement of the Auditorium. This year economy has been rigidly practiced in booth construction, but everywhere there is beauty, harmony, ingenuity. Commemorating the George Washington Bicentennial, the colonial atmosphere prevails, practically every exhibit featuring some decoration of national historical significance.

Features of the Festival this year are the first annual harvest concert Friday night, given by the Auditorium Festival Chorus directed by Paul N. Craig; band or orchestral programs all other nights; ribbon contests for fruits and vegetables, a Better Baby Show, a bake contest, and a Flower Show, besides a variety of ceremonies and demonstrations sponsored by the individual booths.

Elder James Baillie Is Dead

Kansas members mourn the passing of Elder James Baillie, of Scranton, September 11. Brother Baillie was a pioneer church worker in Northeastern Kansas District. Born October 6, 1853, his name was known for good in the church and the community. He was the first elder in the early organization of Topeka Branch, and was a personal evangelist in word and deed. He belonged to the church more than forty-three years, and loved and lived the gospel.

Things Are Happening

This year Madison Branch has eight young people attending the University of Wisconsin.

Saints of Owen Sound District, Canada, welcome the return of Missionary George Njeim after a summer's absence from that territory during which time he spent some weeks in the Sanitarium at Independence.

The thirty-third anniversary celebration of the church at Creola, Ohio, brought together more than three hundred Saints who spent a most happy and successful day listening to instruction from Elders A. E. Anderton and John R. Grice, Bishop H. E. French, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews, all of Columbus.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith is again at home in Independence after a summer spent in church work in Canada and northern States. He visited scores of branches, delivering sermons and patriarchal blessings, and taking part in special meetings. Brother Smith has made many new friends in the church.

Officers and young people in many branches are making plans for observing College Day October 23.

G. Leslie, jr., who arrived August 31, in the family of Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, at Independence, is growing. The DeLapp family now includes two charming little daughters and the new son.

Seventeen have been baptized into the church in Western Maine District since the April General Conference. Every branch in the district, except one, has added to its membership by baptism, and the workers are much encouraged.

Bishop L. F. P. Curry in Independence

Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry paid Independence one of those much-talked-of "flying" visits Sunday, October 2. He arrived from his home in Dallas, Texas, Sunday morning and left in the afternoon. Church business was the object of his visit, and he and his counselor, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, spent the day in the office.

A United District Priesthood

Its united priesthood, according to Missionary J. E. Vanderwood, is one of the blessings and outstanding characteristics of Southern Wisconsin District. The fruits of this unity are real cooperation, loyalty, and good courage among the membership, expressed in progressive activities throughout the district.

Brother Vanderwood visited his home in Independence a few days, returning to his mission field last week in time to take part in the all-day meeting at Beloit on Sunday. All-day meetings are being held in each of the seven branches in Southern Wisconsin this fall as a means of bringing the Saints together and keeping them in touch with the general church. Beloit's was the second of this series.

Missionary Feature for First Chicago Branch

A Sunday evening series of missionary sermons, inaugurated October 2, is one of the attractions of First Chicago Branch, 4416 Gladys Avenue. In charge of the series is Elder C. A. Edstrom who has had pastoral experience in Chicago and Saint Louis. Assisting him are Elder Harry Passman who spent four years in the Palestine Mission and one year in Central Europe, and Elder Frank Almond, one-time missionary to the South Sea Islands.

Their Fate Is in Your Hands

Forty-eight Who Wait With Hope and Anxiety

Forty-eight young men and women are at Graceland College working, studying, and hoping that the Loan Scholarship Fund will receive enough money from the College Day contributions received in all the branches of the church this year to enable them to continue their studies. They wait with hope, because one of their most pressing needs at present is to train themselves for life. Life's opportunities are shut behind closed doors unless they get their training. They wait with anxiety, because they know times are hard and money is scarce. Whether they can stay at Graceland this year depends upon the gifts of the church. Their fate is in your hands.

If you do not help, and help liberally, it means that some of them will have to give up and go home, perhaps with never another opportunity to resume their educational careers. Until College Day, on October 23, is over and the contributions counted, they wait, torn between hope and anxiety. Their fate is in your hands.

They are not just standing there with their hands out. They are workers, not beggars. All they want is a chance. They will work for their board and room—the College is helping them to do that. But they haven't the money to pay their tuition, and the College can't afford to pay it for them. They don't want a gift; they only ask a loan. And they will pay it back. Through the years nearly all Gracelanders have paid back—the brothers and sisters who have been there before them. Very few have failed. The students have an honest record. Their fate is in your hands.

They are good youngsters, clean youngsters, fine youngsters. They deserve the chance. Your brothers and sisters, and my brothers and sisters. Children of our friends and neighbors, children of people who have been hit by the depression. They will be good citizens, good church members, and good church workers.

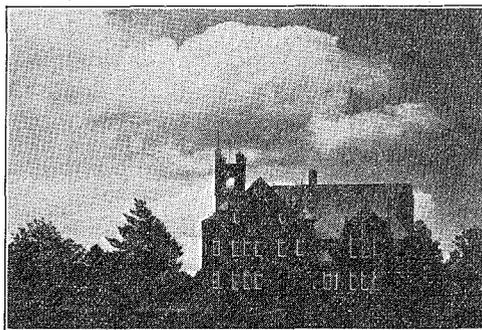

Over half of the student body work for their board. Students work for their expenses at some of the greatest educational institutions in the country. The young men and women who have the grit and determination to go through the grind of study and in addition earn their living are sure to have the material of which useful citizens are made. Anyone who has ever tried earning his way through college knows what a test of stamina and character it is. If the passing of any test can prove the value of young people, the passing of this test ought to do so. But it is almost impossible to go to school, earn your living, and pay your tuition at the same time! That is the critical point of the whole situation. These forty-eight young men and women are faced with this problem of paying their tuition. Their fate is in your hands.

The Loan scholarships into which our Graceland Day offerings go provide for the loan of a tuition scholarship of $125 to a student, without interest as long as he continues his education. The scholarship is repaid in installments beginning October 10 of the year the student is not studying. Then the money is loaned to some one else. Thus the money is repeatedly doing good. The money you send this year will not only serve to help these forty-eight, but it will also be used in the future to help many others, for a long, long time to come. Your gift is always working.

You who are pastors, or alumni holding membership in the branches of the church, would do well to remember these forty-eight young people in your talking and your giving on Graceland Day. Their fate is in your hands!

THE OLD "AD" BUILDING
It has Seen Many Generations of Gracelanders

The Graceland Alumni Association

Since its organization in April, 1932, the Graceland Alumni Association has been steadily increasing its numbers. Every ex-student and faculty member is eligible for charter membership by sending the first year's dues of one dollar to the General Secretary. It is hoped that at least two thousand Gracelanders will respond this year by asking for charter membership. Here is a chance for you to show some of that loyalty toward your Alma Mater and at the same time put your name on the permanent alumni records of the institution. This first year of its organization the Association should receive its greatest impetus and enter into its work with the same old "fight" that has always characterized Graceland's participation in any activity.

Facts for College Day

College Day this year is October 23, the fourth Sunday of the month. This annual observance was authorized by General Conference in April, 1917, and the day is designated each year by announcement from the First Presidency.

The purpose of College Day is to direct attention to the place of Graceland College in the program of the church, and to provide the occasion for offerings on behalf of the Scholarship Loan Fund. From this fund loans are made each year to deserving young people who wish to continue their educational work at Graceland.

A Graceland "scholarship loan" is a loan to the amount of one year's tuition, $125. A loan which is paid on the installment basis and is without interest if paid when due. Each student who receives one of these loans repays the full amount after leaving school. The fund is thus kept revolving, and as money is returned by outgoing students it is loaned out again to new applicants for scholarships.

The idea of a revolving scholarship fund was first proposed by Edward Rannie, a missionary of the church and a friend of young people. In 1913 he presented a resolution to the annual convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society by the adoption of which the Religio subscribed $300 a year for the beginning of such a fund. Brother Rannie also presented to General Conference in 1917 the resolution that made the Scholarship Fund an official church-wide project and put College Day permanently on the church calendar.

The authorization of the Scholarship Fund may be found in General Conference Resolution Number 775, adopted April 11, 1917, and reading as follows: "That we look with favor upon the adoption of a scholarship plan for Graceland College; and recommend that such portion of the College Day collection as may be necessary to provide such scholarships be set aside to assist worthy young men and women desiring the advantages which Graceland offers; and that the placing of these scholarships be left in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric and the president of the college."

Edward Rannie was also the sponsor of two other important church resolutions. He started in the Religio in 1910 the movement which led to the publication of the Young People's History of the Church. In the same year he fathered a General Conference resolution providing for the preparation of an authoritative statement of the temporal law of the church. This resolution resulted in the publication of "The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment."

The money subscribed to the Scholarship Loan Fund is not used up. On the other hand, the entire fund already subscribed is, of course, not available each school year. Many students go on to universities after leaving Graceland, and can not begin paying on their loans until they are out of school. Borrowers from the fund have in recent years had an excellent record in the payment of their loans, but while the loans are coming back there are many new students who must be assisted.

Forty-eight young men and women, coming from ten States and two foreign countries throughout the church, have applied for loans from the Scholarship Fund this fall and are depending on its help to enable them to stay in school this year.

The Scholarship Loan Fund is administered by the Presiding Bishopric and the Board of Trustees of Graceland College. College Day offerings in the branches should go into the Bishopric through the regular channels. Individuals who can not participate in branch offerings may send their contributions directly to the Bishopric at the Auditorium, in Independence.

"Every Student a Person"

The Slogan of the Graceland College Faculty

By L. E. Flowers

Pictured on this page are twenty-two of the best reasons I know of why the Graceland Scholarship Loan Fund should receive the hearty support of the people of the church: the men and women of the Graceland faculty and administrative staff.

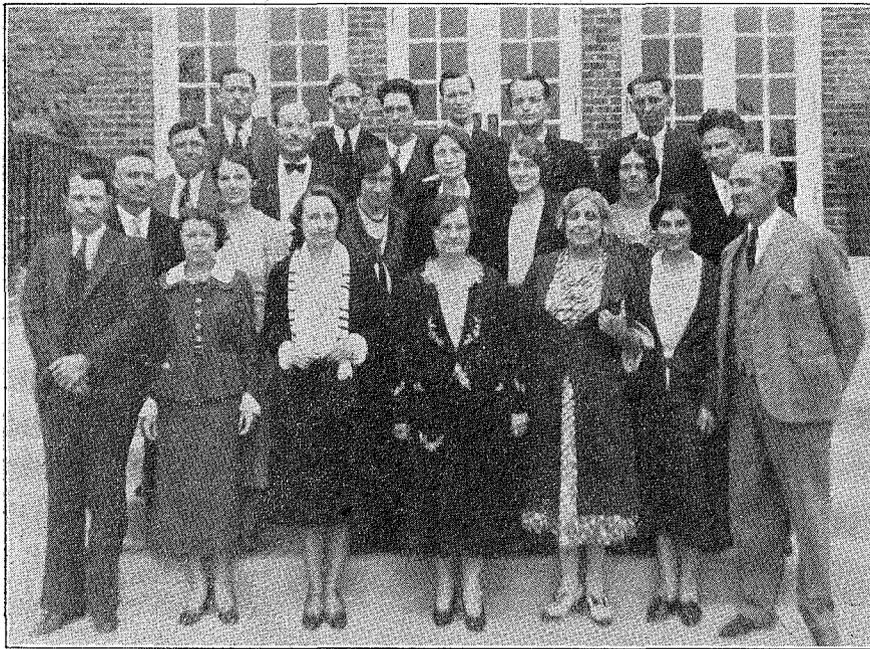

These folk are not just instructors in their designated departments. They are also pleasant associates, sympathetic counselors, inspiring leaders. The warmth and intimacy of the Graceland atmosphere is nowhere more clearly expressed than in the daily contact of teacher with student. Most of the faculty members are alumni of Graceland herself, and are therefore well schooled in the ideals and traditions of the college. They are thus especially able year by year to welcome and make at home those who come for the first time into the Graceland circle.

Members of the Graceland faculty have the best of academic and professional training. They could command relatively high salaries in the competitive field of education. They might, if they would, sit in fine offices, have elaborate equipment at their disposal, follow less strenuous academic schedules, and have more time for their individual inclinations. As it is they have rather heavy teaching schedules and handle many supervisory duties in addition to their regular classroom work—as sponsors of student activities, members of administrative committees, deans of dormitories, and leaders in community life. They have comparatively little time for their own personal and family affairs.

"Book learning isn't enough—that's why Graceland gives more." Through her faculty she gives more. They teach facts, information out of books, the theories of men of science and of letters, and their own opinions on these matters. They also teach how to face life courageously and faithfully; they teach viewpoints and outlooks, attitudes toward oneself, one's work, and the world in general. This they do, not formally, perhaps not even in the classroom, but in the lives they lead as men and women of Graceland campus and the Lamoni community.

"Graceland—where every student is a person!"

THE FACULTY
Graceland College

The college offers her students fellowship with these teachers in the classroom, on the field of play, in the chapel, at the table, on the campus, across the desk. Not for a moment do they cease to be interested in your boy or girl not only as a student but as a person. In a large university, where the student body sometimes runs as high as thirty thousand, every student can't be a person—there are too many just like him! He is a name on a card, a face to be lectured at—in the classroom one moment and gone the next until the class meets again.

Graceland's teachers live among those whom they teach. Day after day they are fellow members of a small family of folk engaged in the business of seeking out the great values of life—wisdom and the ends to which that wisdom shall be used.

On College Day it is well to think of this group of fine men and women—the faculty of Graceland. They are just men and women, after all—human, most human, but devoted, how devoted! Their loyalty commands our respect and our support.

The Scholarship Fund gives no direct service to these folk. But it loans money to students now in

Stories From Graceland Diaries

They Couldn't Be Stopped

Ross Mortimore

Leora, Ontario, Canada

"Just a minute, young man!" cautioned the customs officer at Port Huron, Michigan, as he dove deeper into Ross Mortimore's traveling bag and came up with his hands full of American money. It was then necessary for Ross to explain that he was not a highwayman but a student on his way to Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa.

For the past year Ross had been thinking of attending Graceland and making his plans to that end. In July the unfavorable exchange rate between Canada and United States would have made it necessary for him to sacrifice a prohibitive percentage of his money. He had just about given up going to Graceland when it occurred to him that with the aid of a number of his friends who were in business, he might be able to pick up enough American money in Canada to get the full benefit of his money. A number of people, including storekeepers, helped Ross by keeping all of the United States money that came to them in change. He exchanged Canadian money for that of the United States, and by the first of September had accumulated over a hundred and fifty dollars in copper, nickel, silver, and a small amount of currency.

With what had been a new suitcase bulging and sagging out of shape from all this weight of coin, he staggered as he changed trains on his way to Graceland. As he got off of one train, he set his valuable load down for a minute and a porter hurriedly attempted to pick it up. This was the first time that it had been out of his hands. The porter said, "Boy, what you all got in that bag?" Ross laughed and said, "A part of a college education."

Miss Aleen Preston

Bedford, Wyoming

"Yes, I believe in Santa Claus," said Miss Preston, who just enrolled at Graceland and who comes from Bedford, Wyoming. "He sometimes comes in August. At any rate, that is how it happened to me this year.

"I was visiting my brother when I received a letter from home stating that the Superintendent of Education in Wyoming had called to see my parents and told them that there was an opportunity for me to continue my education and that I would be given material assistance, and here I am at Graceland."

It happens that Miss Preston and a former Graceland student, Susan Barnes Turney ('25) were great friends and it was at the suggestion of this former Graceland student that Miss Preston enrolled at Graceland this year in the combined Liberal Arts and Teacher Training Course.

Pataha Samuella

Pataha Samuella comes from Paputi Tahiti, Papute, Society Islands. After more than eight years in the United States in which time he has completed the grade school education, four years of high school, and now is in his last year at Graceland, is the record of Pataha Samuella.

He is one of the few students at Graceland who has earned his way and had help or support from no one and is now beginning the last year of his college course practically out of debt.

Each day as this year shortens, Pataha thinks more and more of the day when he will sail for his home in the Society Islands.

Pataha knows Graceland as few other students do. He has fired furnaces, dug ditches, painted walls, mowed lawns, planted gardens, worked on the farms, helped in the dining room and kitchen, and is now assistant breakfast cook at Herald Hall.

Pataha plays football, tennis, and is enthusiastic and anxious to learn as much as possible in every field in order that he may take home the many pleasant and profitable things that are to be learned here. Through all of his experience, he thinks in terms of our church and what he may be able to do to carry on the Latter Day Gospel in his native islands.

Clement Cochrane

Lamoni, Iowa

Because of this boy's interest in things mechanical and electrical, and, too, because of his ability as a student, came the opportunity as a senior in high school, for him to learn the operation of motion pictures and projection, and sound equipment. This interesting employment will permit him to take three years of the preengineering course at Graceland. The manager of the local theater was interested in cooperating with the college in securing some one who would be both a good worker and a good student. This boy has an enviable assignment and position.

Paid in Advance

A New Form of Education Is Devised by Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Woodward

1949 is a long way off, but Grenfell S. Woodward, age five months, has his tuition paid at Graceland College for his freshman year, which will probably fall about that time. In the interval between, the money will be known as the "Grenfell S. Woodward Scholarship," and will be loaned to students who need this form of aid.

Thus Mr. and Mrs. Woodward, Grenfell's parents, have devised a new form of education insurance, not only for their own son, but as well for numbers of the children of other people. Life is uncertain, and the affairs of this world are unpredictable. They want their son to have an education, no matter what may happen to them. They have the money to pay for his tuition now, They are not sure of having it in the future. So they are paying it now, and making it possible for other young people to go to school in the meantime.

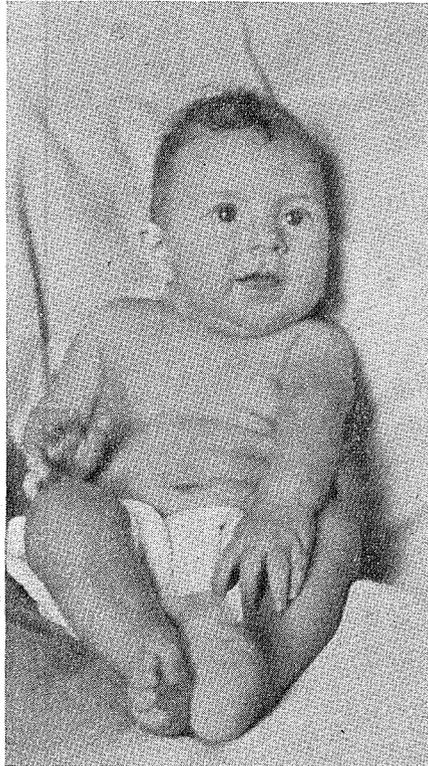

At the top of this page is a picture of young Grenfell himself, smiling, undoubtedly, at the pleasant prospect that is before him. His parents express the hope in the extract of their letter given below, that he will wish to repay the scholarship after he has used it, so that others may use it after his time. He probably will, if he is like his parents.

The letter from Mr. and Mrs. Woodward will be of interest to our readers:

"Inclosed please find a bank draft for one hundred and twenty-five dollars ($125.00) which is to be used as a scholarship in Graceland College until our four - months - old son, Grenfell, desires to use it.

"Our ambition is to add other scholarships as soon as possible.

"We are hoping Grenfell will have the desire to continue this scholarship after he has taken advantage of it. . . .

Grenfell S. Woodward

"We hope the money will make it possible for a few more young people to receive the heritage which Graceland alone can give. We shall ever feel that our lives have been greatly enriched by her influence."

A picture of the check is shown at the bottom of this page. It is doubtful if any other check, out of all the millions of them that are written in the world, was ever put to such a use as this; and certainly none could be put to better use.

The idea, according to our notion is a very good one. An original thought like this ought to be worth a great deal to the thousands of Graceland alumni who are scattered about the world.

There are many hundreds of Graceland couples, now married and raising their families, who plan to send their children to Graceland. By establishing other scholarships like the Woodward scholarship they would at once insure the education of their own children and do a great service to other deserving young men and women.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodward are both Graceland alumni, and proud of it. Mrs. Woodward was well-known to many church people as Bertha Constance, and made a notable contribution to the study curriculum of the church, while Mr. Woodward, who was in Graceland in '25, and who gave excellent service during a period in the mission field, has made an important contribution to the country by sponsoring the advent of one more good Graceland student. "The student body could be doubled right now if we had enough scholarship loan funds," says the business manager of Graceland. The Woodwards and others like them will assure this.

The Tuition Check That Became a Scholarship

How Mary Potter Gave Thanks

A True Story

It was nearing Thanksgiving time. Mary Potter, teacher of the Hillcrest School, looked dreamily out of the window. Her thoughts were far away from the little, white, one-room building that stood alone and unshaded on its hilltop.

Mary had been making plans for Thanksgiving. The children had been decorating the windows with paper Thanksgiving turkeys, and in the classes they were having stories of the first Thanksgiving and the sturdy Pilgrims, and of the many, many things for which modern children may be thankful. But Mary was thinking of something different; she was planning something else for Thanksgiving.

Oh, yes, she was going to have a lovely Thanksgiving dinner with the folks at home, but that wasn't it. They might even go into the city for the evening, too; but that wasn't it either. It had something to do with Mary's looking out of the window, with a scene in her mind that was farther away than that cornfield across the road or than the cottonwood grove that bordered the horizon over beyond Lone Creek valley.

The year before, and the year before that, Mary had been at college, at a little college in southern Iowa. Her attendance there had been made possible by means of a loan fund from which she had been able to borrow her tuition money. Now that she was out teaching school, she was anxious not only to get out of debt, but to pay back her loan as quickly as possible so that some one else might have the use of it. And she was so thankful for the opportunity that her college had given her, that the people who subscribed the loan funds had given her, that she thought it would be especially appropriate to send in a payment for Thanksgiving Day.

But it was not to be. When the time came that she had planned to go to town and send the money, the heavens had opened and the countryside was being drenched with a veritable flood of rain. Mary was to go neither to town, nor home for the holiday. It was a dreary Thanksgiving.

But Friday morning was as bright as the previous day had been dark. By dismissal time that afternoon, Mary was anticipating with high spirits the trip home for the week-end. And when she went through town on her way, she dropped the following letter at the post office:

"Mr. N. Ray Carmichael
"Graceland College
"Lamoni, Iowa.

"Dear Mr. Carmichael:

"I wanted to get this payment to you on Thanksgiving, but I was 'rained in' out at my school.

"I am inclosing a check for fifty dollars ($50) and even if it is a day after Thanksgiving, I want to say, too, that I'm thankful for 'our Graceland.'

"Very truly yours,
"MARY."

WALKER HALL
Women's Dormitory

And Mr. Carmichael, at the college, reading the brief, characteristic message, thought of Mary, of many others who had gone before her, and of many who were yet to come—and was thankful, too.

Lucinda Waterman Bowen Gave First Bequest to Graceland

The first bequest to Graceland College was made by Lucinda Waterman Bowen, of Providence, Rhode Island. Although she spent many years confined within her home as an invalid, she was actively interested in the work of the church and made contributions from her income all through the years. Her interest in young people was strong, and her belief in the church program of education for them led her to bequeath her estate to Graceland. The story of her life became known through Bishop M. C. Fisher, of Boston, who was executor of her estate, and through Mrs. George M. Spinnett, of Providence, where she lived. Sister Bowen's name will be remembered as that of one who served bravely under great handicaps.

Short Talks for Home Missionaries

A Word to the Agnostic

By LEONARD LEA

It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matthew 4: 4.

In this short statement Jesus indicated the great truth, everywhere taught in the Scriptures, that man is a citizen of two worlds: the natural and the spiritual. Physically he is a child of earth, but spiritually he is a son of God. Physically he is cradled upon the soil, nourished by its products, and made happy with all the sights and sounds, wonders and enjoyments of a beautiful and varied environment. Physically, the scientists tell us, he is a brother to the higher orders of the creatures of earth, and shows his kinship in bone and flesh, and in structure and function of his body. In this sense he is a citizen of the natural world.

But man, too, is a citizen of the kingdom of God, for his dual nature makes him also a creature of another kind.

This dual nature has never made it easy for man to determine his course of life. As a creature of earth he must nourish the flesh, and as a creature of spirit he must care for the spirit. Each of the two great worlds—the visible and the invisible—makes its demands upon him; and neither will be denied without inflicting its penalties for the violation of the laws of its realm. Standing between his two worlds, man has sometimes neglected one and sometimes the other, but only rarely has he achieved the balance of interests that would at once give him physical health and spiritual power.

Each world offers the advantages of a full and free citizenship, but this citizenship imposes its duties and its obligations.

And yet, though these two worlds with their laws and their claims upon man seem often to draw him in opposite directions, they are strangely interdependent, for in neither world can man reach his highest development unless he has regard for the other.

Though the body may reach perfection, if the soul and intelligence of the spirit are not there, its physical perfection is in vain, and man is little better than the beast of the field. The spirit is the light of the body, even as the sun is the light of the earth. But the body is also the temple of the soul, and he who lets that temple fall into decay must at last see the soul depart or die.

Man's recorded history extends back only a matter of some six thousand years, and scientists can do no more than guess the length of time that he has been a tenant on the earth. And yet it is only within the last one hundred years that man has begun to arrive at an understanding of his own body and his physical nature. Is it any wonder that he has so far failed to understand the mysteries of his own subtle spiritual nature?

But we must, no matter what the cost, try to understand our spiritual natures. Our life and our happiness depend upon it. That inner nature means more to us than anything else, and if there is anything of permanent significance about us, if there is anything immortal within us, it is that spiritual nature.

The recent years have shown us what men are when they live only for the pampering of their bodies and the satisfaction of their appetites. They have shown us a world that has lived by the libertine's motto: "Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." They have shown us a world that has lived in wealth for selfishness. And the spectacle that those years have shown us has been bestial and revolting.

We saw a world that was wild with the spirit of speculation, and obsessed with the desire to live by the sweat of other men's brows. Our banks were bulging with money, but our spirituality was at a low ebb. People built magnificent churches and paid high-priced preachers, and then spent their Sundays on the golf links, or at home recuperating from the Saturday night headache. It was a world that knew all about pleasure, and nothing at all about true happiness. It was a world that learned its ethics from gangsters, its morals from social vampires, and its code of honor from corrupt politicians. It was such a world, as we see now, that deserved to be punished, and badly shaken.

Who is there to sympathize with a man who builds a trap for other men, and then steps into the trap himself? Who is there to pity a man who plots to rob his fellow men, and then is stripped of all his property by the very processes that he had designed to enrich himself?

Men make their own misfortunes, as they make their own happiness. If they prosper in the good way of life, it is because they have obeyed the immutable laws of justice and righteousness; and if they fall into social and economic sin, they inevitably suffer. They have found it possible to prolong life and to combat disease; they have learned to avoid the natural discomforts of earth; but there is one thing that men will never be able to escape, and that is the consequence of their own acts.

Thinking people will rejoice that men, at the cheap price of losing their fortunes, have regained possession of their own souls. If money brings us to spiritual damnation, then we have paid too high a price for money. The poet Goldsmith expressed this thought in his "Deserted Village":

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

From many viewpoints, the depression may be one of the most fortunate things that has happened to us in many years. It has taught us the worthlessness of carnal pleasure, it has taught us that wealth is transitory, and that fame is fickle. It has taught us that there is something for a man to do in this life besides pursuing wealth and feeding his appetites. And it has taught us to learn again the teaching of Christ that we are responsible for the welfare of our fellow men.

Above all, the depression has taught us again to seek God. The Psalmist wrote: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." And some of us who read that statement in the years of prosperity thought of it as good poetry and nothing more. But that statement is not only poetry; it is truth. It is a truth that has been tested and found true by generation after generation of men and women who faced a world of trial and trouble and uncertainty. And when circumstances jolt us out of our complacency and self-sufficiency, we search again for that help which is not within ourselves. Then we learn that "God is our refuge and strength."

Why is it that so many call on the Lord in time of trouble? Why are we so ready to cry for help, and so reluctant to give thanks? Why do we take credit for our successes, and blame Divinity for our difficulties? And yet it is better for a man to seek God in time of trouble, than not to seek him at all. If men can only learn the truths of their own spiritual natures through their sufferings, then that suffering is worth what it costs. Continuous pleasure is an opiate of the conscience, but pain is a disciplinarian of the soul.

A good many people think that our present troubles and discomfiture are due to the market crash. The market crash which introduced the depression was itself an effect, and not a primary cause. And the peculiar thing about it is that the farther back we go in our search for the causes of the world's trouble, the less they tend to relate to the material things, and the more they concern the moral and spiritual aspects of life. Our trials come not so much from our bad economics as from the bad ethics on which they are based. You can not habituate a whole nation to the spectacle of the creation by the hundreds of millionaires who have never earned an honest cent in their lives, without corrupting the moral perceptions of your people; and you can not show the crash of false values in a market debacle without shattering confidence.

Chiefly, our present troubles are with us, because we have forgotten, as a nation, the principles of common honesty, of honor and integrity. We have scoffed at religion, and we have departed from God. That is the course that every nation has followed, no matter how great and strong it was, when it became corrupt. It is safe to say that our national security will always depend largely on our national conscience. We can never be really safe until we have learned to be really honest. Prosperity will always be fleeting and impermanent until we have firmly established morality and spirituality. We can not be well and strong ourselves until we have looked out for the welfare of our fellow men. Our national welfare depends, not upon a finer adjustment of the machinery of economics. It can not be established by multitudes of laws. These things are only externals. You can do nothing to make an honest banker out of a man who has a wicked heart. You can do nothing to make an honorable statesman out of a man who has the soul of a corrupt and venial politician. You can not make a nation of law abiding citizens out of individuals who continually make personal violations of some of its laws.

To put it briefly, we are in our present suffering because we have, like the Israelites of old, departed from God. We have scrapped our ideals and Christian principles. We have considered them obsolete and unscientific. And we have nearly wrecked the structure of our so-called civilized world.

And our troubles will not end until we get back to our Christian principles, back to God. As we said in the beginning, man is of a dual nature. He is a citizen of two kingdoms. But he has tried to live for the carnal and material world alone. He has tried to repudiate his spiritual obligations, and he has attempted to forget his spiritual destiny. This conduct can only lead to one end, and that end is the disaster which we have witnessed, and which we will witness again and again, until by trial and suffering men learn their lesson. We will be in trouble until we get back to our moral principles—until we get back to God.

Recent Statements on Education

Christian men and women are conscious of the great need of carrying into the Educational Program the love and teachings of Jesus Christ. Why should small colleges like Graceland be continued—these men give the answer in terms that strike to the depth of our civilization.

President N. F. Coleman, Reed College, Portland, Oregon: "Long ago John Milton compared the suppressors of free speech to the ridiculous country gentleman who tried to keep out the crows by closing his park gates. In these days of popular magazines, newspapers, and radios it is impossible, if it were desirable, to waterproof young people's minds against the rain of ideas. The way to protect young people against false doctrines is to train them to recognize true ones; not to shelter them from dangerous suggestions, but to sharpen their wits for the detection of error and the perception of truth."

Doctor William B. Munro, of California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, California: "The school of hard knocks is a very efficient educational institution; but it takes a whole lifetime to graduate, and it has the highest tuition fees of any school in the country."

Principal L. P. Jacks, Manchester College, Oxford University: "I believe that our civilization has now to choose between two things: education and catastrophe. Unless we can succeed in raising the quality of human beings to a higher level beyond mentality, physically, and morally, it seems to me certain that sooner or later, and sooner rather than later, the fabric of our civilization will collapse. . . . I look upon education as the great adventure of the twentieth century. Unlike those who explore the riches of the material world, we are engaged in exploring and developing the far greater riches that lie hidden in human nature. We are beginning to see that man in his haste to develop the material world has neglected to develop himself."

Charles R. Mann, director of the American Council on Education: "We are fighting on a new social frontier striving to create a social order that reveals an intelligence comparable with that shown in our material achievements. We can not win this fight with machines and money alone. Nor will technical skill by itself prevail. We must have also that social and moral intelligence which develops when high native ability is disciplined through human struggle and meditation. . . . In achieving this end, the liberal arts colleges must play an increasingly important role."

Bishop John M. Moore, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Dallas, Texas: "The problems of life do not diminish with the development of the race. They increase. They can not be avoided or outflanked. They must be met and they can not be met except by hard and responsible thinking. . . .

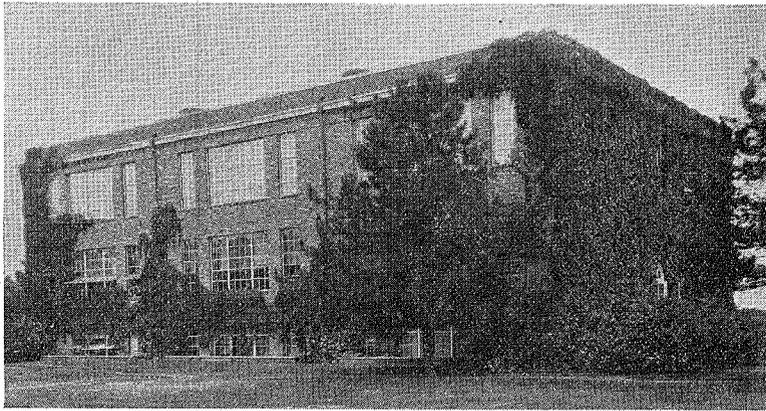

"The education that gives vision gives leadership. The horizon must be pushed back. The race stumbles in a world of low visibility. When souls are to grow, minds develop, horizons broaden, the atmosphere must be clean and clear, and conditions must exist for vision toward the far regions.

"But only fog and dust and uncertainty prevail when the world is reduced to a mechanism, mind to chemical action, and God to a social synthesis. The human mind and life die and their greatest realities atrophy, when education is conducted in a moral and spiritual vacuum. . . ."

State Superintendent Francis C. Blair, Department of Education, State of Illinois, Springfield, in his broadcast, "The State and the Liberal Arts Colleges," November 14, 1931, says: "If the State could by any means establish a complete monopoly of education, it would be suicidal for it to do so. With a people so heterogeneous in its antecedents, bringing to our shores such variety and richness in cultures, it would be contrary to the highest principles of statesmanship, as well as to the highest in-

The Foundations of Our Faith

IV.—On This Rock

By Elbert A. Smith

Questions play an important part in life. Children are notorious for their ability to ask questions. They do not do this out of idle curiosity or to annoy and vex their seniors, as adults sometimes seem to think, but because they have come into a new world and have a great deal to learn in a very short time. Much depends on the answers that children receive from their parents and teachers. Their philosophy of life is shaped largely during these inquiring first years.

Then there is the question that we so often ask of the doctor when some loved one is in danger, "Doctor, is there any hope?" There is the question that the judge presents to the accused man, "Guilty or not guilty?" There is the question that the young man sooner or later propounds to the girl of his choice. Unborn generations may be presumed to listen for the answer. When Thomas Lincoln proposed this question to the woman who was to be the mother of Abraham Lincoln, did the unborn hosts that were to wear the blue and the gray in mortal combat listen for the answer? Did slaves yet unborn wait with bated breath to see if the great emancipator should have right of way into the world?

AN OUTSTANDING QUESTION

Since questions play such an important part in life, it is not surprising that we find outstanding questions all through the Scriptures. There was the first great question in Genesis, "Adam, where art thou?" Adam had transgressed, and like men today in transgression was seeking to hide from God. A little later there appeared the question that Cain asked concerning his brother, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Cain had sinned against his brother, and just as men do today he was seeking to evade the responsibility. There is the question that Pilate asked, "What shall I do with this man called Jesus?" There is the question that was propounded on the Day of Pentecost, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" But perhaps the most vital question that appears in all Scripture stands out from a conversation that Jesus had with the disciples:

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsaria Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, but whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 13-18.

When Jesus asked the question, "Whom do men say that I am?" it is not probable that he was moved out of curiosity. We ourselves are sometimes unhappy until we know what people are saying about us, and after we find out we are even more unhappy. A decent regard should be given to the opinions of others but not sufficient to sway us from our sense of duty. It is impossible to please all the people all the time. A little verse which is more wise than poetical says:

Yield, and you're called a coward,
Stand fast, and you're called a mule,
Weep, and you're called a baby,
Laugh, and you're called a fool.

Jesus was not moved by idle curiosity or vanity. This first question merely paved the way for another more vital question. It was his method to teach by asking questions. That is one of the best methods of teaching; to propound questions and let the listener think out the problem for himself. It was time for the apostles to think for themselves; the air was full of rumors, but immediately he switched their attention from those rumors to the field of their own thought and consciousness and propounded the question straightly to them, "Whom say ye that I am?" We would expect to find the disciples questioning Christ, but here we find him questioning them. Rather, it is God questioning humanity, for this remains the most vital question propounded to the world. It marks the line between loose-thinking modernism and true fundamentalism. Some are saying that Christ was indeed a good man, perhaps inspired, better than any other man, but only a man and the son of Joseph. What do you say?

PETER MAKES ANSWER

Peter gave the answer as straightly as the question was given. He did not say I think or I guess, but under the spur of the moment all his past thinking on this question was brought to a focus, and the focal point was further illuminated by the divine revelation from on high. Peter answered and said, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." A moment later came the statement from the Master, "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The disciples had no way of recording conversations verbatim as we have today. They remembered

Prayer and Testimony

The Effect of Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

"The first place in which to look for the effects of prayer is in the experience of those who practice it, and . . . those effects are very real and important." . . . "There is an elevating effect in sincere prayer that is proportionate to the moral dignity and worth of a man's conception of God." Prayer enervates and ennobles; it tones up thought and feeling, and widens the perspective. "Burdens are lightened by the thought that they are burdens to another also, through his sympathy with me. The value of prayer in sickness, distress and doubt are by no means measurable by the degree to which the primary causes are made to disappear." It is a source of great strength to know that one is fully understood. This is the secret of the success of confessional prayer—we share our troubles with another.

It is no theory that the prayer of confession relieves and clears the conscience and strengthens the will; it is a fact established by empirical observation. "The culmination of prayer is, psychologically, very analogous in the moral sphere to the hedonic narcosis that Schopenhauer ascribes to the moment of the most intense aesthetic contemplation with surcease of all pain. This is why mystic prayer is sometimes so regenerating."

Prayer has a profound subjective effect. Even suggestions of ideal aims if only inaudibly breathed have marvelous results. A wish or hope, having faith as a basis, and rising to expression, is sure to be more or less constructive and creative in its effect if it meets with no retaliation or inhibition. Suggestion is peculiarly effective in the moments of hush and silence in worship. However, there is much in prayer that is not subjective in its effects because we must have an objective before we pray. One subjective effect of prayer is "the enlargement of the self so as to make it better able to bear the sorrows of living and to make it more responsible to the beauties of the universe." This results in the attainment of a "completer self," or a "more adequate self." The actual self is called the "me self" and the attained self is called the "alter self." The former is the self of immediate desire, and the "alter" is the objectified self. In this light prayer is a social relationship and has a social end.

Unconsciously, prayer affects the individual by its constant reiteration. There is probably an autosuggestive effect in prayer. The fact that the Jews did a great deal of prayer reading helped them to sustain their confidence in life and the future. There is no doubt of the power of prayer. As to whether prayer may stir the God of the supplicant is beyond the answer of psychology, but the mere fact that a person realizes that prayers are being offered for him will spur him on to new efforts. Prayers, effectively worded, may be said in public by some one who has no desire to commune with the divine, yet some of the listeners will be stirred to do so.

The stimulation obtained in mystic worship permeates the entire being and renders the psychological and physiological processes more plastic and ready to take the form of any new purpose. If, therefore, in this state, one prays for anything for the upbuilding of self one should receive it; for in this state the mechanisms of organism are most completely under the control of the individual. It is in this state that achievement can reach its maximum. Therefore the answer to prayer in so far as it deals with our upbuilding rests upon our ability to control and redirect our energies. This is not prayer to self and answer by self; it is a self filled with faith and interpreting the stimulation received as the will of God working upon him to reconstruct him and his world. It is by these means that God works in answered prayers in the remoulding of self. As regards the ability of prayer to modify matters outside the self we can not say; but as new facts are brought to light it is possible that many "established laws of science" will have to be reconstructed. In this respect it is interesting to note that in answering a questionnaire sent to five hundred ministers of different denominations; 64 per cent believed that prayer has the power to change conditions in nature such as drought; but 11 per cent were uncertain and 25 per cent disbelieved. As to whether prayer for others directly affects their lives even if they are not aware that such a prayer is being offered for them, 9 per cent were uncertain, 8 per cent disbelieved, but 83 per cent believed.

The preacher can not be successful without prayer. The divine help in the preparation and delivery of the sermon comes from prayer. It is prayer which softens the fiber of the natural man and makes him more plastic to the refined spiritual impressions.

The psychological effects of prayer are well illustrated in the following case: "A skeptical student was advised to determine for himself whether or not there be a God by the experiment of praying . . . he offered the same prayer to the Christian God and then to Buddah . . . in each case he got the same results, such as peace and feeling of elation." Of course this may be explained by the fact that in prayer we may express true and false desires, and just as each desire is a seed carrying within it its own development, so each will bring its own reward or punishment.

It is true that body and mind sickness has been cured by prayer, and it is likewise true that prayer has often failed in such cases. Psychologists have discovered that many mind and body ills have their roots, not in germs or organisms, but in the subconscious self or nervous responses. If a given situation arouses a strong desire or fear and receives no expression or primary response, it roves around, upsets the nerve centers, and produces a disease. Obviously this disease is entirely functional and nonstructural and so it can be removed by a functional process. By psychoanalysis the psychologist can cure a patient suffering from such a disease, and so can prayer. And just as no one can tell why prayer removes such a condition, so no one can tell why a complex, or the above functional disorder, is caused to disappear.

"Real prayer involves analytical thought of the highest type." It is not a mere petition for something that seems good, but a lifting up of each situation, and, while inspecting every element, questioning what we may expect of God and what we ourselves ought to do about it. Thus, prayer should result in a clearness of mind, the dismissing of deceptive desires, and the uniting of the inner life with the good elements of the prayer.

In this new day, if the church is to remain a world factor and uplift the lives of the masses of men, it must do more work than it is now doing. Its plant must be more efficient in its operation. Its power must be sent further.—Reverend Richard K. Morton, in The Christian Union Quarterly.

Prayer and Testimony

Requests for Prayers

Mrs. Annie Provine, of Reydon, Oklahoma, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may soon have opportunity to join the church. She has not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon since she was a child, but she has been diligent in reading the books and periodicals of the church and has made her decision—she believes this is the true church of Christ. Her parents, Brother and Sister S. B. Malone, of McLean, Texas, belong to the church but are isolated. For them Mrs. Provine also asks prayers and the attention of members visiting or living in McLean. They are aged and in poor health.

Mrs. Estella Kimble, of Boomer, Missouri, asks the prayers of the Saints. For some weeks her health has been waning, and she is losing in weight. The doctor advises an X-ray examination. There are no elders living near to administer to this sister, and so she writes the Herald, desiring remembrance of the prayers of the church.

Sister E. S. Heaviland, 11827 Ohio Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, desires prayers in behalf of her seventeen-year-old daughter who is seriously ill with lung trouble. The girl graduated from high school last June but overwork caused her to contract her illness, and she is confined to her bed. Always she obtains relief from administration. Her entire family of father, mother, brothers, and a sister ask the prayers of the Saints for her.

Mrs. Herman Solberg, 617 Windsor Street, La Crosse, Wisconsin, asks the Saints to remember in prayer her aunt, Mrs. E. E. Melvin, of Pewamo, Michigan, who for sometime has been in poor health.

E. B. Johnson requests prayers that he may obtain relief from the injuries received in a gas explosion in a coal mine. The trouble has been worse of late weeks, and he has suffered more since the death of his companion. He asks that the prayers be offered on the Wednesday following the appearance of this request.

PUEBLO, COLORADO, 134 Lamar Avenue.

Florence Madden has been confined to her bed for sixteen months, and treatments have brought little improvement. She has strong faith that Divine mercy may be extended to her, and believes that our prayers will help her.

THE DALLES, OREGON, Box 461.

W. H. Gilstrap of Seneca, South Carolina, writes in behalf of his daughter, Mrs. Jennie Miller who is near death at the state hospital at Terrell, Texas. The Saints are asked to pray that she may be restored to health for her family's sake as well as her own.

Has Faith in the Efficacy of Prayer

By Mrs. Isabel Meisenheimer

I have been isolated from the church for many years, but my faith in it has never wavered. For some time I have been suffering from a lung infection, and request the people of the church to remember me in prayer to our dear Lord and Master. I am able to sit up part of the time, and should greatly appreciate encouraging letters from any of the Saints.

Healed by Faith

By John A. Judd

During May of 1926, I received a letter from Brother William Schlotter, of Ontario, Canada, stating that he had received my address from the Presidency's office. He requested me to visit his sister, who resided at Bognor, on the south coast, about one hundred miles from Enfield. He also requested me to take another elder with me, and my wife, as his sister was very ill and needed administration. After an exchange of letters with his sister, (Mrs. Cole was not a member of the church) we went as requested.

Arriving there, we were met by Mrs. Cole, an elderly, stately, God-fearing lady, and her daughter of equal spiritual tone. We received a welcome as the children of God and as friends of her brother. Our short prayer service and our attention to her desires for administration were all that could be desired, and we were asked to visit them again the following day, Sunday.

As agreed, we met on Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Cole asked if I would take charge of the meeting, as she usually spent the time holding Sunday school although unable to go out. The selection from the Scriptures for the afternoon was Acts 2. I remember that I was very much impressed and was led to point out the presence of the principles of the gospel recorded in the lesson, particularly baptism. The lady objected to baptism.

We remained until the evening when Elder John Worth, who had accompanied us, returned to London. Sister Judd and I were extending our visit till the following day.

Before returning home, we called to give our newly-found friends our good wishes. Immediately upon our entering the room, the elder sister said, "I want to receive baptism into the church." Not knowing the locality or a suitable place in which to carry out her wishes, we invited her to Enfield. This was a big consideration, as her doctor had forbidden her to travel, owing to heart trouble.

Some time after, accompanied by her daughter, Ethel, she made the journey to Enfield, being determined to leave herself in God's good hands. Just before her baptism, I was informed by her daughter that she had been warned by the doctors to prepare for her mother's collapse at any moment. We who were in attendance shall not forget the presence of the Spirit at the administration of baptism and confirmation. Sister Cole returned home safely, much relieved and blessed.

Many months afterward, during a visit from Patriarch Richard Baldwin, I received an urgent call from Sister Cole and her daughter to come at once as a new doctor had diagnosed her heart trouble as being caused by a large cyst under her heart, making an immediate operation necessary.

Early in the morning Brother Baldwin and myself set out by road and reached our destination before our sister was taken to the hospital. One of the greatest witnesses of the Spirit's presence was given during our administration, and as I write of this experience, a vision comes to my mind of the little gathering of four, in the humble room, for God's presence blessed us there.

After a few days we learned with joy that our sister had had no operation as she had been healed by the power of God. We rejoice in the presence of God and his power among his people.

QUESTION TIME

Did prophecy foretell the discovery of America?

While the name of America does not occur in ancient prophecy, which would hardly be expected, several texts are found which some believe refer either directly or indirectly to this continent. The warning to the recreant Jews, found in Deuteronomy 28: 64, that they would be scattered from one end of the earth to the other, of course must include the land of America. The prophecy of the patriarch Jacob concerning the posterity of Joseph is believed to more directly refer to this land. It states:

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall. . . . The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.—Genesis 49: 22, 26.

This figurative language is interpreted somewhat as follows: the well represents water, the wall being the boundary of the ocean or sea, and the utmost bound of everlasting hills seems to describe the mountain ranges of North and South America, being located at the "utmost" or farthest point from Palestine. Another prophecy which even some rabbis of repute declare means America, is that of Isaiah, who says:

Woe (rendered "Ah" in some versions) to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: . . . All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.—Isaiah 18: 1, 3.

The land of wings suggests in appearance America. Ethiopia of Isaiah's time included to the ocean coast of Africa, and the land beyond its rivers which empty into the ocean would be America. Some believe the "ensign" to be the gospel, while others think it is the United States. Isaiah 16: 8 is believed by some to specifically foretell the movement of Jews to America, under the words, "over the sea." A more definite prophecy of the discovery of America, however, seems to be indicated in the Book of Mormon (page 34), which describes a Gentile being moved upon so that he "went forth upon the many waters" to the "promised land" of the Nephites, which of course was in America.

Does any prophecy indicate what form of government America should have?

I do not recall anything that specifically indicates this point, except that it is declared in the Book of Mormon that kings shall not prosper on this land, but it shall be a land of liberty "unto the Gentiles." The language is quite significant:

And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me, shall perish.—114: 18-20.

It is a remarkable fact that America appears to be a land of republics in general principle, and autocratic governments do not seem to prosper here. Attempts were made about the time of our Civil War to establish an empire in Mexico, European powers being interested in the move, and Maximilian was selected for its throne, but the effort was a miserable failure.

Was the Mosaic Law temporal? If so, explain Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9

The word temporal, as used here, is defined, "pertaining to this life." As both the Mosaic and the Christian laws concern conduct in this life to some extent, they are to that extent temporal when they relate to what is known as temporal affairs. But this is true only in a subordinate sense, and as a term of convenience, for God gave them in order to produce spiritual results,—righteousness and eternal life.

For this reason, laws that we call temporal, because primarily concerned with things of this life, may be spiritual to God because of the spiritual ends they accomplish. The word temporal is to us a term of convenience to distinguish things of this life from those of the next, but to God they are inseparable from the spiritual ends to be reached, temporal things being divinely appointed means of development toward spiritual life and immortality. It is in this sense that the text mentioned says:

All things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal.—28: 9.

This evidently means that things known to us as temporal have a spiritual design to God. It is in this sense that the law of Moses, termed by Paul "a schoolmaster," had a spiritual aim, though much of it concerned temporal things which had ceased to be in force at the time Paul declared, "We are no longer under a schoolmaster" (Galatians 3: 25).

When was Joseph Smith first told of the Book of Mormon plates?

In September, 1823, the messenger informed him of the plates, which appears to be the first time the promise was made to him that he should eventually obtain them.

Little Journeys With the Editor in Chief

A Visit to Lexington

To Americans who may be especially interested in the history of those developments, incidents, and social and political forces which led to the separation of the American Colonies from the Mother Country, England, there are few things which furnish more pleasure than to traverse the road over which Paul Revere made his real and reputed ride in the night following the day of April 18, 1775.

It has been my pleasure to do so on several occasions, and on August 24 was the last. I am for the opportunity under obligation to Brother Traver. He loaned me his Buick coupe. I was alone on the trip, so I could go, stay, and go again as I pleased.

It was quite early in the morning when I entered Lexington over Massachusetts Avenue, too early for some of the historic buildings to be open. Even the library was not yet open. So I went to the Commons, wandered over it, read the placards, and tried to picture the stirring events of that memorable April 19, 1775, the day following Revere's ride, and in which, his ride played no small role. It is quite stimulating to stand where Parker's men, a mere handful, stood and decided that if England wanted war it might just as well start there as anywhere. And it started.

I walked past the Harrington home, from an upper window of which Mrs. Harrington saw her husband fall at the first volley fired by the British regulars; I read the resolutions adopted by the Minute Men, as inscribed on the monument erected above the grave containing the bones of those who fell on that fateful morning, when their blood as martyrs fertilized the soil of liberty and freedom.

Those men were animated by ideals for which they were willing to work, sacrifice, and even die. Out of that idealism grew a patriotism which has carried America to the forefront of progressive nations. In the light of conditions existing today, when law is being disregarded, authority defied, and self served, one can not but wonder if patriotism as those Minute Men understood it, exists today. Are there men today who for the sake of our country or State, or for the common weal will do as did Parker's men when their captain commanded: "Stand your ground, but do not fire till you are fired upon!" They were determined to resist England's encroachment upon their rights, even to the breaking of relations; but the first overt act of violence had to be made by England's representatives. Those men knew well that if the regulars fired some of their number would fall without having fired a shot. That would be martyrdom.

And so it proved. Those who fell on Lexington's Green were veritable martyrs to the cause of American liberty. One can not stand on Lexington Common and devote his mind to the task of libeling to evaluate the contribution to liberty's cause made by the Minute Men whose bones rest there beneath the sod without wondering whether today there is in our midst an equally strong devotion to principle, and a willingness to sacrifice wealth, position, and even life to the cause. I am wondering if to our own cause, the ideals for which the church stands, the cause of Zion, we bring the spirit of devotion and sacrifice which those Minute Men exemplified. Perhaps time, and that somewhat sooner than some expect, will tell.

Inspects Historic House

As I thus meditated, the time came for some of the buildings to be opened for inspection, and I went to the Hancock-Clarke House. Built in 1698, it is a fine type of early houses, and was, because of the Hancocks and Clarkes who dwelt in it, prominently connected with the historical events of the Revolution and before. It has been saved to us of today, by the Lexington Historical Society. This society purchased it, restored it where possible to its original condition, and now use it for the storing of a fine collection of historical things owned by the society. In fact, it has become necessary to build on one side a more nearly fireproof room, with vault, to keep the more valuable papers and articles. One can spend hours and days studying these things.

The morning I was there a very pleasant lady, Mrs. Hatch, was substituting for the regular attendant, and she charmingly told me about the outstanding events and of some of the articles and papers to be found in the house.

I presume the most outstanding thing for which the house is famous is that here as the guests of Reverend Jonas Clarke, John Hancock, and Samuel Adams were staying during the night of April 18, 1775, and hence was one of the chief points towards which Paul Revere was riding in his famous ride. To warn Adams and Hancock was of prime importance, for as members of the Safety Committee these men were wanted by the British.

The Concord Minute Man

I reveled in the sights within the historic place. To picture in one's mind the conditions of the times, the tenseness of the early morning hours of the nineteenth of April, the work of Hancock and Adams in the cause of liberty, such as one is wont to do when visiting the old house, occupies one's time and mind quite pleasantly. I bought a pamphlet to read, and also some picture cards to post. And I was privileged to sit at the table on which Hancock and Adams were served tea on April 18, 1775, and write some messages on the cards to homefolks.

On Lexington Common

Thus having somewhat refreshed my memory of the events of the Battle of Lexington, I went out again on the Green, and looked about. From the boulder which marks the line where stood the Minute Men, I went to the south end of the Common, to look again upon the statue of Captain Parker. The statue shows him as a comparatively young man. In fact he was forty-six at the time he held his Minute Men in their stand against the British regulars. A farmer living some two miles from the Battle Green, this man was typical of the spirit and character of the men he led. Captain of militia, he knew full well the enormity of the task of confronting regular troops of the King with a mere handful of untrained troops. Yet with less than eighty such men he calmly faced the companies of the regulars and uttered those memorable words: "Stand your ground. Don't fire unless fired upon; but if they mean to have war, let it begin here."

He was in poor health at the time; but with fine courage he gathered his Minute Men, scattered by the fire of the regulars, marched towards Concord to meet the British on their retreat, and took part in the running fight which harassed the British from Concord to Charlestown. Parker did not live to see the successful outcome of the war he and his men started at Lexington, for in September of that year he died from the effects of the illness from which he was suffering at the time of the Battle of Lexington. Of such stuff were the men of 1776, made.

A visit to Buchman's Tavern is always of interest. What tales one would hear, if the walls could talk and we could learn firsthand the scenes this fine old building has witnessed and in which it has participated.

On the Battle Green at the time of the battle stood the meeting house. A stone marks the spot where it stood. It has long since disappeared, and been succeeded by two or three others. Fire, the wear of time, need for larger quarters, and the demand for a more elaborate and decorative church building, all were factors in the elimination of the old Lexington Church. But across the Green from Buchman's Tavern stands a beautiful edifice quite typical of New England churches. Its graceful, slender spire surmounts a simple but beautiful doorway, and the whole as seen through the fine trees on the Green makes a striking picture. The church contrasted with the old meeting house on the Common as one sees it now in pictures of the Battlefield, typifies the evolution of the old meeting house into the beautiful New England church building. I spent some money on a picture (photograph) of that church, and will add it to some others I have of church edifices.

The Road to Concord

After a short visit to the Old Cemetery, I started to Concord along the road over which Paul Revere and his two fellow riders attempted to reach Concord on the morning of April 19, 1775, warning the Minute Men en route. Only one of the three was successful in the attempt, and that was not Revere. They met some British officers who scattered and separated them, and captured Revere. But the Americans were warned, as was later evidenced by the warm reception they, under Major Buttrick, gave the British at the North Bridge over the Concord River.

Statue of "The Minute Man"

However, after one visits the spot where was fired "the shot heard 'round the world," he can, I am sure, find interest in seeing it again, if for no other reason than to stand near the Concord Minute Man and catch anew the spirit of courage, patriotism, and devotion to principle depicted in the beautiful statue sculptured by French. It is a masterpiece. It is the figure of a resolute farmer, with musket caught up in his hands, turning away from his plow and leaving pastoral field for that of battle, responding to the call to arms which reached the Minute Men on that memorable day.

I sat down on one of the benches nearby, and again indulged in meditation. And again I wondered, Where are the Minute Men of today who will resolutely respond to the call of duty when that duty may lead to sacrifice and even death? I think I know where some of them are. Again I say, time will tell.

I secured a pamphlet descriptive of Concord and the battle, and sitting down on another bench near where the unique stone marks the grave of the British soldiers who fell at the east end of the bridge when the "embattled farmers" fired in the defense of home and liberty, I reread the story. To these unknown British soldiers Lowell paid poetic tribute, one verse of which is inscribed on the stone:

"They came three thousand miles and died,

To keep the past upon its throne;
Unheard, beyond the ocean's tide,
Their English Mother made her moan."

Many thousands of American boys have read the story of the retreat of the British harassed by Continentals from behind rocks, trees, and fences. And they have thrilled at the recital of that story. They may have followed the Continental Army under Washington's masterly generalship through the long hard years, and thrilled again and again at the courage and tenacious fighting of the army. They may have also followed the story of the political struggles of a young nation to take its place in the sun—struggles which gave us the Constitution and the corps of earnest men who on battle field and in forensic arena stood for right, principle, and law. I wonder how many of these boys and men who thrill at the story are conscious now that our country still needs loyal devotion, courage, and even martyrdom to keep the banner of real liberty afloat.

Lexington and Concord! What memories they arouse! It does one good to visit them. I felt repaid, and I may say I felt encouraged to carry on in the fight for better things. F. M. S.

EAST SANDWICH, MASSACHUSETTS, September 13.

Thirty-third Anniversary Celebration for Creola Church

The branch at Creola, Ohio, A. B. Kirkendall, president, most successfully celebrated the thirty-third anniversary of the dedication of its church building on a recent Sunday. Early in the morning visitors from surrounding areas began to arrive, and about three hundred people were in attendance during the day.

Those present to help in the services were Elders A. E. Anderton, and John R. Grice, Bishop H. E. French, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews, all of Columbus, and Elder Gray, of New Lexington.

Every service of the day contributed to the enjoyment and profit of the Saints. The social service at 9.30 in the morning was spiritually outstanding. Of the preaching services the Republican Tribune (McArthur, Ohio), says: "The preaching was of the highest order. The preachers were at their best. Bishop French, (probably the only ordained minister in the world who acted for years as the chief of police of a large city like Columbus) gave an inspiring sermon on cause and cure of the depression. It was not a visionary scheme of Farm Relief or Bonus paying or Federal Loans, but an urge to return to the God-given plan of stewardship to God."

Saints attended the anniversary services from Racine, Sinking Springs, Dayton, Ironton, Chillicothe, Limerick, Jackson, Vales Mills, Nelsonville, The Plains, Lancaster, and all three of the branches in Columbus.

Madison, Wisconsin

2119 Jackson Street

The study classes held from August 8 to 12, were a wonderful success. Attendance was regular. People were so interested in the Priesthood Manual that its study continued another week, the class being taught each evening by Lee Root.

August 13, the Walker family, Brother and Sister Woodstock, Sister Leah and Ora Miller, Sister Houghton, and Brother Robert Brigham's family went to Nauvoo and remained over Sunday. Nora Walker and Ora Miller stayed for the Young People's Leadership Camp. They returned to Madison much enthused and fired with a greater determination to render service to the church.

Nora Walker received a Graceland scholarship besides two other honors.

August 14, Brother Paul Utenehmer preached in the evening, his text being "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself."

Sister Clara Miller with the Hoagues from Evansville, attended the Kirtland reunion.

August 28, the young people were in charge of the evening service directed by Lee Root and Paul Utenehmer. "Be Ye Transformed" was the theme. They met in the lower auditorium for prayer, and marched upstairs singing "Onward to Zion." The congregation then sang "Faith of Our Fathers," and the invocation was by Lee Root, the young people's hymn response being the Lord's Prayer. The scripture reading was Romans 12, then came hymn and instrumental music, violin and organ. A solo, "Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart" was sung by Deloris Root. Paul Utenehmer gave a short sermon on the theme, reading at the close a poem, "Transformed," written by Brother Charles Fields.

From September 4 to 18, Brother and Sister Lee Root, Leda Colbert and Charles Fields made a tour to different places in the State, visiting Saints at Milwaukee, Antigo, Tomahawk, Ladysmith, Chetek, Clam Falls, Porcupine, Eau Claire, Black River Falls, and Weyville. They found most of the Saints strong in the gospel and willing to do what they can for the church.

September 18, three carloads went to Soldiers' Grove to help in their rally day. The district superintendent of music was included in the singers.

One more has been added to the branch at Madison by baptism. This completes another family circle. Brother J. E.

Vanderwood baptized the wife of Brother Robert Brigham.

Madison Branch has eight young people attending the University of Wisconsin this year.

The last Sunday of September the young people gave another program, the theme being, "Following the Gleam."

Prayer meetings are rising to higher spirituality. Subjects for the month were, "Our Pledge to God," "Spiritual Vision," "Christian Attributes," and "Fulfilling Our Obligations."

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

Now that reunion and vacations are over and the interior of the place of worship is being remodeled to give more seating room, the Saints of Topeka look for increased interest and attendance.

The members are unanimous in their appreciation of Elder George E. Harrington's help in the work of remodeling, and also his assistance given the priesthood. He preached twice August 14, and returned the latter part of September to begin work on the building.

Apostle Roy S. Budd's initial effort the evening of September 4, in this branch was based on "Forgiveness." He was accompanied by his family from Independence to Scranton, Kansas, where he preached the morning sermon. District President Dave Little and family accompanied them to Topeka for the evening.

September 11, was the occasion for another encouraging service, the message being delivered by Patriarch Ammon White, of Independence, Missouri. Brother White accompanied Brother and Sister L. A. Fowler, of Kansas City. In the evening Brother Fowler gave an illustrated lecture, "The Christ of America." This was the climax of a Book of Mormon review on the first number of the Book of Mormon Quarterly. Recently C. F. Wolf, of Kansas City Stake, worshiped with Saints here, bringing joy as he led in the music.

The midweek study class, under the supervision of Sister F. O. Kelley, took their first test on "Outline Studies" recently printed in the Herald.

The juniors won four blue ribbons as awards of merit from the State Department of Religious Education at the Kansas Free Fair. Two were for notebook work and the others were for posters.

A unique Promotion Day program was had September 25, by the junior and primary departments, under the supervision of Fern Weedmark and Mildred Goodfellow. The sermonet was by the pastor and the diplomas were presented by the church school director, F. O. Kelley.

October 2, Saints brought to the church their donations for the Harvest Home Festival at the Auditorium, Independence. These were received by F. O. Kelley and presented in behalf of the branch to the bishop's agent, O. E. Weedmark. These Brother Weedmark accepted in behalf of the Bishopric and invoked the blessing of the heavenly Father upon them.

Saints of this city mourn the passing of a respected member of the priesthood, Brother James Baillie, of Scranton, Kansas. Sympathy and love go to the bereaved family. Brother Baillie was the first elder in the early organization of Topeka Branch and his interest and prayers as those of a father were never lacking.

Lansing, Michigan

Greater Unity in This Local

October 1.—This branch has just finished a very satisfactory year. In spite of the financial condition, the Saints have been able to keep up local obligations besides aiding the general church with tithes and offerings. They have been wonderfully blessed spiritually, and a greater unity is present.

At the annual business meeting held September 26, Branch President S. A. Barss was again chosen to serve. Other offices were filled as follows: Branch secretary, Orien Fiscus; treasurer, Bruce Douglas; Clarence Dudley was recommended for bishop's agent. The church school will operate this year with Brother John Luce as director, assisted by Maurice Baker. A resolution was presented to the effect that the Saints of the branch establish a storehouse in a more complete form than that which they have had during the past year. The resolution was accepted by the Saints and a committee was chosen to formulate plans for the storehouse. Local endeavor in this line has been very successful in giving aid to the needy.

Early in June the district conference met with Lansing Branch. Apostle D. T. Williams was here, and has since visited the branch upon one occasion.

Although the Saints were sorry to lose Missionary O. J. Hawn, they feel that no one could have been chosen who could fill his place better than Elder A. C. Barmore. His wide experience as a missionary in Australia, Canada, and the United States, makes him an interesting speaker and helper. His visits have greatly profited the branch.

Lansing Branch gave a farewell party to Brother and Sister Joseph Wellman and family who moved to Escanabo, Michigan, in September. Brother Wellman holds the office of teacher. They were presented a Book of Mormon and a Doctrine and Covenants as a parting gift from the Saints.

Brother and Sister M. Wharton and daughter also moved from Lansing to Coleman, Michigan, in August. Sister Wharton was an active worker in the women's department, and is greatly missed.

President F. M. Smith Visits Pittsburgh District

Considers Church Objectives With Lock No. 4 Branch

Pittsburgh District has been greatly benefitted by a visit from President F. M. Smith. Twenty-eight years ago, then a young counselor of the President, Brother Smith visited the Monongahela Valley and met with the Saints in Fayette City Branch. Five years ago he made an hour's visit and preached at Pittsburgh, while passing through to the East, where the Saints of the district gathered on short notice to hear him urge the marshaling of the forces of the army of the Lord in preparation for spiritual battle. Once again the district members gathered to meet with the Prophet, and September 24 and 25 were busy days in the Lock No. Four Branch, Charleroi, Pennsylvania. The visit was promised, if nothing prevented, when Brothers F. M. Smith and G. L. DeLapp were in Kirtland last June.

Perhaps many of us are too sophisticated about meeting the officials of the church; perhaps we allow familiarity to make us indifferent; perhaps our humanity is shown in our tiring of or growing careless of the privileges that come easily. Perhaps we have people like that in our district, but people in the outlying branches and district appreciate meeting the men of the leading quorums of the church. At the Sunday meetings nearly two hundred people, a third of the district membership, assembled to hear the President, some of them coming more than one hundred miles.

The Sunday services began with an early morning priesthood meeting at which twenty-four of the thirty-nine members of the district priesthood were present. The dangers of hobby-riding, of debates, lack of unification, jealousy regarding rights and prerogatives and neglect of duties were stressed and all were urged to the prime work of the ministry—that of ministering to the needs of the people. And, in order to do this work effectively, the need of being clean and devoted was stressed. The new Priesthood Manual was presented and explained in part. The talk was concluded with a statement that trials will continue, for not yet have the worthless been sifted out. Not yet has the Lord clearly made known those upon whom he can place confidence and trust. The ministry were instructed to assemble together often; to study their duties; to bind themselves together in love and willingness to sacrifice.

A prayer service, presided over by T. M. Carr, E. B. Hull, and F. M. Smith, of quiet but devoted intensity, followed the priesthood meeting.

The morning sermon, at eleven o'clock, was about the church objectives. Church finances the church budget, composed the subject of the afternoon talk. The budget was examined and explained with some interesting and intimate sidelights which brightened up an otherwise serious subject.

A baptismal service was conducted at 5.30 p. m., at which time six candidates were immersed in the font of the Baptist Church of Charleroi. The Baptist congregation having dissolved, the church is now rented by the Spiritualist congregation and the pastor kindly allowed us the use of the church and font.

The speaker had announced his intention of continuing the subject, "Church Objectives," at the last meeting, but gave a forceful sermon of comfort, encouragement, exhortation to steadfastness, trust, and willingness to sacrifice based on the statement, "He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief."

On Monday a visit was made through Charleroi, and through the efforts of Sister Mary Barker, we were able to visit the glass plant of the Macbeth-Evans Company, where we were conducted through the factory and had the processes of glass making and blowing explained to us. This visit was made Monday morning, September 26, and in the afternoon we made a visit to Fort Necessity (near Uniontown, Pennsylvania), a small stockade fort built by George Washington in his retreat from Fort Duquesne, when his four hundred Virginia troops were being pressed by nine hundred French troops and their Indian allies. The fort has been reconstructed this year and with its surroundings, is now a national park.

Vancleave Branch Revives

Mississippi People Respond to Pastor's Leadership

Late in July, Vancleave Branch organized for a missionary campaign. All visiting was detailed to the young people, who set themselves at their task with interest and zeal. Cases of question or difficulty were followed up by members of the priesthood. On the day before the campaign opened, Pastor A. G. Miller called the branch together and asked every member to pledge himself to be present every night regardless of weather, and the choir members to be in their places before the services opened.

During the series of meetings eighteen were baptized, sixteen by Brother Miller, and two by Brother Yocom. Several more are now near the kingdom, one entire family of nonmembers being intensely interested in the gospel message. A good feature of the meetings was a question box placed at the entrance by the front door. Each night ten minutes were given to the answering of questions.

Vancleave Branch is now very active. Wednesday night is prayer meeting, and Friday evening is the time for recreation for young people from fifteen to thirty-five years of age. This group numbers about fifty-five. Sunday at ten o'clock the church school is held, and at eleven comes preaching service with exercises of interest. A sermon is also heard at 7.45 in the evening. The women's department is at work, and the young people are organized into two groups under the supervision of their own officers. The membership of this branch is principally composed of farmers.

Brother A. G. Miller, one-time missionary, moved to Vancleave in January of this year, and was made branch president March 1.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty- second Streets

Sunday school work is growing. Seldom does attendance fall below the one hundred mark, and several times there have been as many as one hundred and seventeen present. Credit for this splendid school goes to Superintendent Carl E. Turvey and his helpers.

The Jolly Jesters met at the Storage Dam for a corn roast and hamburger fry this month. Sister Vera Hunter also took her class of intermediate girls on a wiener roast.

Sermons this month have both inspired and given valuable information. Some of the speakers have been Elders R. E. Madden, G. H. Kirkendall, John R. Grice, A. H. Nieman, A. E. Anderton, Bishop F. E. French, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews.

The beautiful spirit and the testimonial expressions at the September sacrament service denoted a desire on the part of the members to come up to a higher plane of living and to qualify for greater service.

The evening of September 7, Mrs. Josephine Brush was baptized by Patriarch J. E. Matthews.

The women's department met September 9, in the social room of the church for their potluck dinner at noon. At two o'clock prayer opened the meeting under the direction of Sister A. H. Nieman, leader. A paper on "Prophets of Last Days" was read by Sister Dora Hoffman. Sister Ethel Kirkendall read a paper on "Wisdom," written by Sister Leah Turvey.

The spirit of study seems to permeate the branch. They have two classes organized to study the Book of Mormon. Every other Monday evening the women meet with Sister J. E. Matthews as teacher. And the men meet every other Tuesday evening with Patriarch J. E. Matthews as teacher. Each class is using the Study Outlines of the Book of Mormon.

Service is dependent on not what we do alone, but what we do together.—E. Y. Hunker.

Independence

The Harvest Home Festival

The fourteenth annual Harvest Home Festival of the church in and near Independence officially opened yesterday evening at eight o'clock, and will continue until six o'clock Sunday evening. On the opening night several hundred visitors passed through the lower rooms of the Auditorium, and there was music by the Auditorium Band.

Everywhere the colonial atmosphere prevails in commemoration of the George Washington Bicentennial. Arranged around the outside wall of the mammoth room are more than a score of artistically decorated booths containing thousands of quarts of canned fruits and vegetables in addition to raw provisions. In the center of the room, sometimes called "the pit," effective landscape gardening leads up to a reproduction of Mount Vernon's veranda. This year the platform and front central floor space have been reserved for band concerts.

Everyone is proud of the Harvest Festival this year, for almost every man, woman, and child has had part in making it what it is, beautiful, colorful, cheerful, a great gift to the church and community. During the spring and summer many raised gardens and did extra canning for the Festival, and during the last ten days the forty-six groups in Independence and people in near-by stakes have been busy bringing together their canned goods. Booths had been made ready and most of the foodstuff was brought to the Auditorium Monday and early Tuesday of this week. And what a rush there was to get things in their places! The Young People's Council of Independence assumed the responsibility of decorating all the space in the hall not occupied by booths, and the special decorative feature, the veranda of Mount Vernon, was erected by the Y. K. T. Class of the Stone Church. In the shower rooms a little distance from the main hall the Girl Scouts have established their headquarters, serving the Festival guests with a lounge in the form of an Indian lodge.

"The thing of which we are proudest this year," says Sister Charlotte M. Koehler, head of the women's department in Independence, "is the economy used in making the booths. We can't afford to spend money for elaborate trimmings." Weeks ahead of the Festival, the women, in their meetings, were urged to be frugal in view of the times. It is reported that one group has spent only twenty-nine cents on booth decorations, another fifty-nine, and few have exceeded two or three dollars. Instead there has been much borrowing of household goods, resurrecting of old furniture from attics, re-vamping of decorations, and employing of ingenuity. Sister Koehler is the wife of Brother C. C. Koehler, originator and promoter of the Harvest Home Festival movement, and has been associated with it from its beginning.

Special events of the Harvest Home Festival this year include the Auditorium Festival Chorus in concert Friday evening. Under the direction of Paul N. Craig this chorus of more than four hundred and fifty voices will present a program of special harvest-time music. The chorus hopes to make this concert an annual event in connection with the Festival.

Each night at the festival there is music. Tonight the Auditorium Orchestra will play, and tomorrow night the Auditorium Band will again be on hand, also Saturday night.

In the ribbon contests fruits and vegetables were judged this afternoon at two o'clock. The Better Baby Show occurs tomorrow afternoon beginning at two o'clock; the bake contest Friday afternoon, and the flower show Saturday afternoon.

Stone Church

Sunday for this congregation was, as usual, a very busy day. Its activities began with an adult prayer service in the main room of the church at eight o'clock.

Church school attendance is growing now that fall and cool weather are here, and the departments are rapidly adjusting themselves to new classes and conditions brought about by Promotion Day. In these departments approximately twelve hundred pupils are taught. Each age group continues to meet in its regular place: Beginners in the Dining Hall; primaries downstairs in the Stone Church; juniors, intermediates, and adults upstairs; senior and older young people at the Auditorium.

Pastor John F. Sheehy, the morning speaker, gave an earnest discourse to a large congregation. He was supported by the regular musical broadcast program of the Stone Church Choir.

Though attendance was not so large as usual, the afternoon general prayer meeting, in charge of Elders C. I. Carpenter and H. G. Barto, proved a very helpful service.

In the evening the congregation was happy to hear one who has been absent from Independence for some time, Apostle Paul M. Hanson. After four months of strenuous work in his field, the North Atlantic States, Brother Hanson is spending a few days at home, and generously consented to speak to Stone Church people on this evening. He delivered a sermon of spiritual uplift and excellence. Special music was by the Wahdemna Choral Club Male Quartet.

More than a hundred Stone Church singers and musicians participated in the Auditorium Festival Chorus rehearsal Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium. This number includes the choir, other singers, and members of the Auditorium Orchestra.

Second Church

Roy Settles, in charge of the church school October 9, announced the total attendance to be two hundred and seventy-three. However, one hundred of the branch were absent.

During the junior service at eleven o'clock a new program was introduced whereby all the young people will have an opportunity to participate in the meetings. Each Sunday different ones will be chosen to be in charge, lead the singing, tell a story or play the piano. Last Sunday Brother Richard Dillee was in charge and Marvin Hershey offered the closing prayer. Geraldine Fields and Helen Willoughby were in charge of the music.

At the eleven o'clock preaching service Elder E. Y. Hunker was the speaker. Brother Hunker's text was from Hebrews 12: 1; an additional reading was from 2 Peter 1: 5-7. The sermon was very clear and interesting.

Mrs. J. T. Westwood played a beautiful special number on the cello during the evening service. The choir hummed "A Calm and Gentle Quiet Reigns Tonight." The speaker of the hour was Patriarch H. O. Smith. Brother Smith's text was from Matthew 21: 21.

Elder J. T. Curtis is in the Independence Sanitarium after undergoing an operation. As soon as advisable another operation will be performed.

Recently Mr. Charles Street, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Mintun and Miss Lucille Street, of Second Church, returned from a trip through the Western States. For six weeks they enjoyed traveling through Washington, Oregon, California, and Old Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. William Totty have arrived at Santa Ana, California, and will make that city their home during the winter.

Englewood Church

Englewood Saints have not been sleeping even if the Herald has not heard from them for some time. Reporting to two community weekly papers keeps the Herald correspondent quite busy, and she is happy to have the privilege of sending church news into the homes of nonmember friends through these mediums.

A recent event in Englewood was Promotion Day. The promotion service, an impressive ceremony for the children, occupied the Sunday school hour. Those who were promoted went "through the gates," diploma in hand, and were received by new classmates. The setting for these exercises consisted of the church assembly room beautifully decorated with flowers and foliage, and a little white, vine-covered fence lengthwise of the rostrum with a double gate in the center held ajar by two of the receiving class. Each department gave a short program, and two copies of famous paintings were presented by the classes. "The Hope of the World," by Copping, was presented with appropriate ceremony by the graduating primaries to the oncoming primary class, and the juniors presented "The Lost Sheep Found," to the new junior class.

The program was arranged and presented by the supervisor of the children's division assisted by the superintendents of the departments. The superintendent of the church school, Arthur Welch, announced the program and presented the certificates of promotion. Elder C. B. Woodstock was present and spoke to the children at the conclusion of their program. He also addressed the entire congregation at the following sacrament meeting.

A number of good speakers have occupied the stand of late. President Elbert A. Smith spoke the evening of the first Sunday of the month, delivering a sermon of appeal and helpfulness. Elder C. Ed. Miller preached last Sunday morning. His dynamic presentation of his subject held the interest of the boys and girls who remained for church. Brother Miller has the capacity of reaching into the lives of all his hearers when he speaks, especially the children. He does not talk "over their heads."

That evening Elder R. D. Weaver presented a graphic, clear-cut discourse, and Mrs. Theresa Weeks sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd," by Liddle. Sister Theresa is one of the new choir members. Attendance at choir rehearsals has of late been encouraging.

The Z. O. A. Class is taking up the study of Apostle F. Henry Edwards's quarterly on Doctrine and Covenants. Elder A. G. Hougas continues as teacher.

The church was again decked out with beautiful colors of the season last Sunday, the occasion being the baptism of Edwin Gossett, a junior boy just graduated to the intermediate department, and the installation of the graduates in their new classes. The confirmation of this new little brother in the gospel was spiritually strengthening. Elder A. G. Hougas gave the charge.

The young people from fifteen to thirty years are back of a movement for six o'clock evening services for the youth, also for older people and children. The leading activity of the young people will probably be dramatics and the children also may be trained in the art. This will be the young people's project.

Spring Branch Church

Pastor G. W. Eastwood baptized Byron Frank Shippy in the font before the preaching service Sunday morning. Sister Bernice Griffiths sang "The Holy City." The baptism and song were impressive. Brothers D. S. McNamara and G. W. Eastwood confirmed the candidate.

Elder D. S. McNamara was the speaker and told of his baptism twenty-one years ago. "Roads to Zion" was his theme.

Lewis Walter Shippy, infant son of Melvin and Beulah Shippy, was blessed by Brothers Eastwood and Fish.

At the Sunday school hour Sister Alma Dixon spoke interestingly of their trip to Florida last Christmas.

At the night church school the Boy Scouts of Troop 222, of this branch, presented the program. Before the eight o'clock service all enjoyed themselves in a fifteen-minute congregational song service.

The eight o'clock service was in charge of Brother Eastwood, and Elder Clair Austin was the speaker. He took his text from Romans 6. "I Would Be True," a duet was sung by Alma and Gladys Dixon.

Harvest Festival Thanksgiving at Manchester, England

Gospel Hall, James Street

Harvest Festival services opened on a glorious Sunday morning, September 25. As the Saints looked at the beautiful array of good things, they thought of the words of the poet.

"God's in his heaven,

Morning service convened at ten-thirty, the call to worship being given by the choir. Elder Tapping presided over a service of praise and thanksgiving, and Elder H. Barrington read the Scripture lesson. "Praise Ye the Lord," and "You May Sing of the Beauties of Mountain and Dale," hymns, were sung by the congregation. Miss Lowe, soloist, sang, "O Lord, the Harvest of the Year," taken from "Under the Palms." Preceding the morning's address the choir sang "Hark, 'Tis the Shepherd's Voice I Hear!" Brother Lowe told the children a story, "Thou Crownest the Year With Thy Goodness," and then spoke to the adult portion of the congregation. He was blessed in his ministration as he dwelt on God's goodness to his people.

An organ call to worship by Curtis Leggott opened the two-thirty afternoon service, and the theme centered about "Service." Hymns permeated with a sweeping feeling of gratitude were sung by the congregation, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," "Lord, Thou Art Good," and "O Reapers of Life's Harvest." Elder H. Barrington was in charge, and Miss Ethel Witty selected and read from the Scriptures the nineteenth Psalm. Florence Hayward, a young girl, sang "To Thee, O Lord," and Sister Doris Gallop, of Warrington, was introduced as the speaker. Her talk centered about the young people and service. Then Miss May Holden sang as a solo, "My Shepherd Leads," and the next speaker was Sister Noble who talked on "Partners With God." Her text was taken from the thought found in the Scriptures, that we plough the fields and scatter the good seed on the land, but that the seeds are fed and watered by God's almighty hand.

The third service of the day was called at six-thirty, and again the choir and Curtis Leggott, organist, assisted. Pastor G. W. Leggott was in charge, and introduced the speaker, Mr. C. Rose, who addressed the children in story form. For a text he chose Galatians 6:7: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." He spoke of the lessons of life, and his text, he said, was a law of God, an eternal law. During this service Miss Lowe sang two solos.

The Harvest Festival was concluded by a fruit banquet on Monday evening which opened at eight o'clock and was well attended. Pastor G. W. Leggott was chairman. During the evening there were readings, hymn singing, prayer, and bags of fruit were distributed to everyone in the room, also a supply of fruit was sent to the sick who were not able to be present. The remainder of the choice fruit and vegetable display was offered for sale and quickly disposed of. Mr. Noble acted as salesman. This hour brought to a close a happy week-end dedicated to harvest thanksgiving.

Guelph, Ontario

Visited by General Church Helpers

May 28, the women's department of Toronto Branch brought their play, "The Fascinating Fanny Brown," to Guelph. It was acted by the young people, other special talent coming with them to help make the program a real success. All were enjoyed by the audience.

The Saints were made glad by the visit of Patriarch F. A. Smith and Patriarch John Shields one Wednesday evening. Brother Smith's sermon was on the words of Jesus, "Come, follow me." The visits of Apostle D. T. Williams, July 6 and 15, were also much enjoyed. His texts were, "Hitherto hath the Lord blessed us," and "There are giants in the land."

The following babies have been blessed during the summer: the little daughter of Brother and Sister Cromwell, the daughter of Sister Illingworth and husband, and the son of Sister Hall and husband.

The branch picnic was held August 1, at Riverside Park and Saints were pleased to have Elora and Fergus Saints with them.

Elder Fred McLean, of Arthur, was the speaker the evening of August 27. His sermon was on character building.

A corn and wiener roast was held in the church basement September 9, when the Saints had a jolly social time.

Guelph members are glad to welcome Missionary George Njeim back into this district after his illness at the Sanitarium, at Independence.

September 18, little June Brain was baptized by Brother Hockaday, jr., and confirmed by Brother Njeim.

The business meeting was held September 12. The following officers were elected: Pastor, J. R. Hockaday (re-elected); church school director, Brother Hockaday, sr.; adult supervisor, Archie Cromwell; publicity agent, Lloyd Cooper; secretary, Sister Hockaday, jr. New officers will start their work October 1.

An all-day meeting was held September 25. Many were present from all parts of the district. Patriarch John Shields; Elder John Taylor, of Grand Valley; Elder Belrose, of Owen Sound, and Elder Njeim were the day's speakers. There was an opening prayer service at nine thirty in the morning. The whole day was spiritually enjoyable, and the Saints went home much benefited.

Fanning, Kansas

Enjoy Uplifting Communion Service

The October sacrament service was in charge of Brother Will Marsh. Many worth-while and encouraging testimonies were given by the Saints in this meeting. In the evening Brother Samuel Twombly was the speaker, using as his text John 17: 3 wherein Christ said: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Promotion Day exercises were held Sunday morning, September 25, Superintendent Fred Marsh presenting the certificates to those being promoted. James A. Thomas followed the presentation exercises with suggestions to the students on the meaning of promotion. Floyd Mortimore was the morning speaker that day, and James A. Thomas in the evening.

About twenty-five young people attended the monthly meeting of the young people's class at the home of Brother Mortimore September 29. The usual social time was spent. At the business meeting it was voted to take enough money from class dues to purchase a ton of coal for the church.

Patriarch Samuel Twombly went to Carbondale, Kansas, October 4, to hold a series of meetings lasting a week.

The women's department meets each Thursday afternoon to quilt on an embroidered quilt which they hope to sell in order to raise money to help with branch expenses.

Brother Samuel Twombly preached the funeral sermon of Mr. Frank E. Powell at the Christian Church at Sparks, October 3.

Going Forward in Western Maine District

This summer Patriarch U. W. Greene revisited some of the scenes of his early missionary experience in Maine. His coming was hailed with much pleasure by the Saints. He held a week's series of meetings at Stonington besides filling several Sunday appointments, and attended the Brooksville reunion throughout. He had the pleasure of baptizing nine of the fourteen who were inducted into the kingdom at the reunion. The other candidates were baptized by Bishop E. L. Traver and Elders Newman M. Wilson and E. F. Robertson.

Since Brother Robertson's return from General Conference, he has averaged over five sermons a week and has preached in all the branches in Western Maine District.

Including those baptized at the reunion, additions have been had in every branch of Western Maine District except one. Vinalhaven has had two added by baptism; Stonington, five; Little Deer Isle, one; Rockland, two; Sargentville, two, and Dixfield, five. Altogether there have been seventeen baptisms in this district since General Conference. The Saints are much encouraged.

Wagner, South Dakota

"Christ has no hands but our hands, to do his work today.

He has no feet but our feet to lead men in his way.

He has no tongue but our tongue to tell men how he died,

He has no help but our help to bring them to his side.

"What if our hands are busy, with other work than his?

What if our feet are walking where sin's allurements is?

What if our tongues are speaking of things his lips would spurn?

How can we hope to help him, unless from him we learn?"

This thought in conjunction with the picture, "Light of the World," and the song, "The Savior's Knocking at Your Door," composed the theme of the meeting September 25. About twenty regularly attend Sunday school here.

On the second and fourth Thursdays of each month a social evening is enjoyed. The group is divided into two sides, each serving once a month as entertainment committee, under the leadership of Calvin Chrisman.

October 3, a business meeting was held following the class hour and these officers were elected: Superintendent, Sister Nina Amundson; assistant, Sister Ida Caldwell; secretary, Brother Merle Caldwell; pianist, Sister Kleta Finley. The teachers are: Primary department, Sister Kleta Finley; young people, Sister Nina Amundson; adult, Sister Ruth Buhler.

All collections from the first of September are being put into the Christmas Offering fund.

When I go to church on Sunday

Chicago, Illinois

First Branch, 4416 Gladys Avenue

This branch will celebrate its annual home-coming with a New England dinner Friday, October 14, the meal being served from six to seven o'clock in the evening. A program of entertainment is being prepared and a good time is expected. All former members of First Chicago have been invited to come "home" for this annual reunion.

A series of special Sunday evening sermons began October 2, the discourses being of a missionary character. This series was inaugurated under the direction of a former pastor of the branch, Elder C. A. Edstrom. Brothers Harry Passman and Frank Almond are associated with Brother Edstrom in this effort. The Saints expect much help from the meetings. Brother Edstrom's pastoral work in Chicago and Saint Louis has put him very closely in touch with the needs of individual members. Brother Passman spent four years in the Palestine Mission and one year in Central Europe. He loves missionary work, and this love is reflected in his sermons. Five years' missionary labor in the South Sea Islands in addition to local work have given Brother Almond a vision of the mission of the church, and this illumines all his pulpit utterances.

First Branch will be host to the conference of Northeastern Illinois District October 28, 29, and 30. The Saints hope then, to enjoy the presence of visiting members.

Lennox, California

September 28.—Activities at Lennox Mission have been going on much the same as usual. With the passing of summer and the young folks returning home to attend school, attendance has increased. There are also quite a few new children enrolled in the Sunday school. The Saints have heard some very good sermons lately. Brother Cameron Stewart, of East Los Angeles Branch, spoke last Sunday morning. His theme was, "How Can I Be a Better Latter Day Saint?"

July 3, one of the young people, Frieda Morris, made her covenant and went down into the waters of baptism. Local members were happy to have her make this decision.

With the coming of winter workers hope to make some improvements that will make the church building more attractive and comfortable.

September 4, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter June was blessed by the pastor.

On Wednesday evenings there are cottage meetings at the home of Sister Watrous. These services have a large attendance, and everyone is being rewarded for attending.

The Fourth Man

(From the Gospel Standard.)

By C. W. Butterworth

On the fertile plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon, a stupendous golden god stood watching with unseeing eyes, the pageant of all nations in compulsory worship at its feet. At the sound of the music, the masses prostrated themselves, but the three Jewish rulers stood alone.

After giving them a second chance to obey him, the King, in his anger, committed them to the flames of the sevenfold fiery furnace, but his satisfaction at thus ending the mutiny and proving his superiority to their God, was rudely shattered by the appearance of The Fourth Man. "Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire?" said the king, "and now, lo, I see four, and The Fourth Man is like the Son of God."

Such are the salient features of one of the world's most astounding dramas, played in an eastern land, twenty-five centuries ago, but it holds for every worker of righteousness ever since, right down to the present time, an amazing measure of strength and assurance.

It is not in the unparalleled spectacle of a despot's power, or in the barbarous splendour of a prodigious golden god, or in the terror of an awful fire, whose flames leaped madly out to meet and devour its victims; it is not in any of these things that the story holds a lesson for us, but it is in the manifestation of the presence of The Fourth Man.

He did not suddenly come to cool the thirsty tongues of the fire.

He was with the Hebrews as the momentous time drew near for all to bow at the sound of the music. His unseen presence stood by and strengthened them as they refused the second chance offered by the king, and by his power they were able to face a hideous death, and yet answer the king with calmness and confidence. The Fourth Man was with them through it all unseen, but to teach a mighty monarch what you, and I, and all of us should know, His presence was momentarily made visible.

When the way is dark and lonely and even the stars seem to have closed their eyes against you, what a comfort to be able to reach out the hand with confidence for the guidance of The Fourth Man.

When sorrow and grief overwhelm you like a flood, what peace to feel the loving sympathy and nearness of Him who was "acquainted with grief."

When the hour demands that more strength, more power, greater zeal than you possess, shall be thrown into the battle, lest unrighteousness obtain the mastery, what a never-to-be-forgotten moment to see the limitless power of The Fourth Man and to feel yourself surcharged with the faith and power that can move mountains.

Today, perhaps more than at any other time, we are surrounded and almost submerged by sin, wickedness and violence, therefore, that, which everyone who desires to attain the heights, needs most of all, and that also, which is freely available to every single one who tries so to do, is the inexhaustible power and help of The Fourth Man—the gentlest, strongest, most amazing power in the world.

High Spots in the Training School of Religious Education in Independence

Five hundred men and women here learning to be leaders and teachers! What greater message can Zion send to the church than just that fact?—D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education.

We must be what we would that our pupils should become, and during this institute we have been outlining what we want our pupils to become. Now we must make the changes in our own lives that we have been saying must be made in the lives of our pupils. That is our task of training. . . . Increasingly, if we are to transform the lives of our boys and girls into kingdom builders, we must become the Word Incarnate.—President F. M. McDowell.

This institute is grand. It is encouraging to see the concern of all these workers.—Mrs. C. C. Koehler, leader of women.

When we take up this matter of serving, I think we don't demand enough of our young people. . . . We as a church can place a lot more responsibility on the shoulders of our young people. It was largely young men who followed Jesus, and young men followed Joseph Smith. And today there are greater challenges for young people to meet than ever before—the challenge of poverty, of indifference, of illiteracy, of hopelessness. Without a vision of all these things that need to be done, we find young people getting satisfaction from little things. This is one of the tragedies of our work with young people.—George Mesley, teacher of young people's leaders.

There is no field in which men can work with God with such rich promise of reward and such fine sense of fellowship as in the work of building themselves through building others.—Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

It's wonderful! I don't know how to express it—but here in this school we've been getting the information we've been needing so long.—Roy E. Settles, president of the Independence Young People's Council.

Recent Statements on Education

terest of the country, through unification and standardization to prevent these varied cultural elements from finding their place in our civilization.

"... I can not avoid thinking, that throughout the ages the church and private academies and colleges have held aloft certain ideals which in their own way and in their own time have brought forth things of beauty and loveliness and utility. Beautiful things in architecture, painting and sculpture. Beautiful music and poetry. More proficient doctors, lawyers, and professional men and women. Better and more wholesome life and living. Even the vast public school systems of modern times gratefully acknowledge that they are the products of these ideals of education which the privately endowed colleges and universities kept burning on the altars of learning before public education was dreamed of.

"I, therefore, come as a public official to express my appreciation of the work that these private liberal art colleges and universities are doing—and to urge persons of wealth to see to it that these institutions do not have their usefulness impaired by the present financial crisis."

Robert L. Lester, assistant to the president, Carnegie Corporation: "Manifestly there is now and will be for years to come, a place for the church college, for the state is not yet equipped to assume the education of all who qualify for college training."

President W. P. Few, Duke University: "I believe that the small college, especially the small college that rests upon moral and religious sanction, has a rare opportunity to serve American civilization."

President George H. Denny, University of Alabama: "As a product of a denominational college myself, I have a keen sense of appreciation of the value of any institution, public or private, that recognizes God as its rightful Head and most important member of its faculty. The Christian college happily stands for the type of training that subordinates material gain to the integrity of moral character."

From "Annual Report, Division of Educational Institutions June 17, 1931," issued by Board of Education, Methodist Episcopal Church: "President Coolidge, at the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Phillips Academy, stressing the idea that religion is the basis of society, issued this challenge to the church-supported and independent colleges and secondary schools: 'For our independent colleges and secondary schools to be neglectful of their responsibility in this direction is to turn their graduates loose with simply an increased capacity to prey upon each other. Such a dereliction of duty would put in jeopardy the whole fabric of society. For chartered institutions of learning to turn back to the material and neglect the spiritual would be treason, not only to the cause for which they were founded, but to man and God."

them and wrote them out later. Sometimes it is rather obvious that they did not get the conversation exactly in its continuity. But when we analyze this conversation there are three statements that stand out consecutively in their relation to each other. First, there is the question, "Whom say ye that I am?" Second, there is the answer, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then there comes the final statement, "Upon this rock I will build my church." The fundamental fact that Christ is the Son of God underlies the whole structure of his church. If that fact were to be removed in any way the church would be but a human institution; but that fact is eternal. It is like a rock upon which the church can rest securely, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus."

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST

The importance of a secure foundation can never be overestimated. If any sort of structure is to have a permanent endurance it must have an adequate foundation. The structure itself can be repaired or altered if mistakes are made, but there must be an assurance that it rests upon a foundation that will uphold the building so long as it is designed to stand. Christ admonished his hearers to dig deep and build upon the rock. His church rests upon the rock. It is at the very foundation of our faith, and not only does the church rest upon that rock, but individually we should build our faith upon that rock. Nothing that other men have done or can do should shatter our faith.

Occasionally in the past individual ministers of the church have become convinced that Joseph Smith was a polygamist. That conviction seemed to be the beginning of the overthrow of their entire spiritual structure. I am using this as an example. Personally I do not believe that Joseph Smith was in any way involved in the introduction of polygamy into the church. Whenever his case has been heard before an unprejudiced tribunal the evidence against him has fallen down. But if at some time evidence should be brought to my attention convincing me beyond doubt that he was guilty of teaching or practicing that doctrine, my faith in the church and its message would not be shaken in the least; neither would my course be altered in the preaching of the gospel, for this is not the church of Joseph Smith, it is the church of Jesus Christ.

I think that it is important that each individual member of the church should seek to receive spiritual assurance in his own soul that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. With that assurance in his heart he will not be shaken when mistakes are made by men in the church, either past or present or future, or even by mistakes made by the church collectively. He can always fall back upon his fundamental convictions.

THE MATERIAL USED

There is an assurance in this thought to comfort us in hours of perplexity and despondency. Jesus said, "I will build my church." We can trust the builder. He said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." The foundation is secure. We might ask ourselves, then, why the delay in the culmination of his work and the redemption of Zion. The trouble is not with the builder or with the foundation, but with the material that is used, and that material is composed of human beings like you and me. If Zion were to be built of brick and stones alone the task might long ago have been accomplished, but the church is to be built up of men and women and children. We have our agency. God deliberately gave it to us and abides the delay incident to our choice, and that choice is not made once for all but from day to day and year to year we must renew and repeat our decisions. We may choose to rest a while. We may hesitate. We may blunder. The membership of the church is varied, all classes of minds and characters, coming from all sorts of environments with past traditions. It is composed of finite beings. That is why there is such demand upon us that we should have charity one for the other. If we would only constantly recognize our own deficiency we would have more patience with those of other people.

Christ, deliberately recognizing all of these frailties in human nature, chose to build of that material and abide the time that might be taken in the process, because he saw the possibilities in man. It may revive our faith to remember that these possibilities were so great that he was willing to leave the courts of glory and come and dwell with such men as we are required to work with daily and finally to die upon the cross that he might establish his work and build it of that sort of material. Probably the nearest that we ever come to his vision is when we draw together around the communion table monthly, forgetting for the moment our differences, laying aside our prejudices and our quarrels and our contentions and under his Spirit renew our covenant, partaking of the emblems of the sacramental supper. Why can we not carry that spirit with us in all our work?

To extend this article might be to diminish the force of the central thought that it seeks to present: "On this rock I will build my church." In analyzing the foundation of our faith that statement stands forth boldly commanding our belief and confidence. Let us stand upon that rock and trust the builder of the church to work out his design in us and through us. (To be continued.)

Doctor Charles F. Grabske, of Independence, Missouri, is the president of the general alumni organization. Mrs. Edith Woods Lewis, now en route to Australia with her missionary husband is the vice president, and Eugene Closson of the Graceland faculty is secretary. Already a large number of Certificates for membership have been issued and the executive committee will not be content until every ex-Graceland is given the opportunity to join the association. During the Home-coming period at Graceland this month there will be a special meeting of all alumni members. The president of the association urges you to be there is possible; if you can not come let us hear from you by letter. Help make the Graceland Alumni Association an effective organization! Your name and address, your first year's dues of one dollar, and your loyal and enthusiastic support are what Graceland is asking of you today.

"Every Student a Person"

school and to many who shall come after them. And a generous support of these students is a vote of confidence in the men and women of the Graceland faculty. It is evidence that the church, too, is willing to do its part, just as the faculty members are doing their part every day of the college year.

A new member of the faculty recently said that his return to the college as a teacher was the realization of one of his greatest ambitions. If he could live and serve worthily of the high honor that he felt his position to be, he would be assured that he had not worked in vain. His declaration is undoubtedly echoed in the hearts of his fellow teachers.

These men and women serve at a personal sacrifice because of their belief in young people and in the aims of the church. Can we do less than indicate by our contributions that we, too, believe in youth? They have dedicated their lives to the service of these, our own boys and girls. Can the church do less than to dedicate one day each year and on that day give of its substance that the influence of the college and her teachers may be extended to still greater numbers of young people?

They give themselves. We, too, must give.

Our Social Program

"Our Present Discontents.—it is very much like being between the devil and the deep sea. Man has had a rough time under the devil of Capitalism, but the stormy sea of Communism is not an inviting alternative. Is there any other way out? Can man devise a system which will so order society as to give the largest possible freedom to the individual, and yet not allow man to prey on man. It may well be that private property is not as vital to personal freedom as it has seemed to be. Man can be desperately blind to what he does not wish to see. The Christian Church justified slavery in days gone by, and has long since seen that she distorted her theology in so doing. In like manner she has thrown her cloak over war, and is now beginning to see that the mind of her Master can not be reconciled to such teaching. It is possible that she will one day see that the greatest evil of these times is the very institution on which this present civilization is built, that to which each one of us clings so lovingly. There are as many sayings of her Master which tell against the ownership of private property as tell against slavery and war. If taken seriously, the sayings of Jesus add considerably to our discontents. However, it is not a matter of sayings, but a matter of the spirit of the life. In that spirit there was an attitude to property which was certainly not that which is prevalent among those who bear His name today."—E. H. Burgmann, in "The Morpeth Review."

The social programme of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints provides for a change in the social order (among those who are willing) upon the following basis:

(a) Social reform by individual regeneration.

(b) Love the motive power.

(c) Righteousness, the governing principle.

(d) Justice, the basis of social relationships.

(e) Men and women, as stewards unto God, are, by adherence to these principles, organized into the kingdom of God.

(f) Every man and woman shall be given the task which by natural gift and training he is best able to perform.

(g) Stewards shall produce with the object of creating community and not individual wealth.

(h) The product of labor shall be distributed so that each steward and his dependents shall have all that they need, and none more than he can use.

We firmly believe that the carrying into effect of this programme by a community of twice born men and women will remove "our present discontents."—The Gospel Standard.

Pastoral

To Branch Presidents and Members of the Church in Rock Island District; Greetings: As has been my custom in the past, I am now planning my annual tour of the district, to be present at the several branch elections and the service of installation of officers. During this tour I want also to bring to the attention of the Saints the program of the general church for the remainder of the year. The important points in this program are: (1) Graceland College Day, October 23; (2) The Joseph Smith Centennial, November 6; (3) special sacrifice period, from Thanksgiving to Christmas; (4) "The Saints' Herald in Every Home," and (5) helps for the priesthood. Information regarding these projects has been sent to all branch presidents from headquarters. My proposed program is as follows: Oelwein, October 9, installation of officers and teachers. Cedar Rapids, October 17, election and installation service. Waterloo, October 19 to 23, election Friday. Installation Sunday. Anamosa, October 30, all-day meeting. Savanna, November 1, election Thursday. Installation Friday. Deer Grove, November 6, all-day meeting. Lamoni, November 7 to 14, rest period. Muscatine, November 15 and 16, election Tuesday. Installation Sunday. Millersburg, Deember 19 and 20, election Monday. Installation Tuesday. Moline, December 21 and 22, election Wednesday. Installation Thursday. This is an extensive program, but if local officers will cooperate we can have a profitable time in each branch. The work of the church is so important that we need to approach these special occasions with much prayer and consecration, therefore, I suggest that each branch observe one or two periods of fasting and prayer in the interest of the coming election of officers, that the Lord may direct and bless the several annual business meetings throughout the district.—E. R. Davis, district president.

The funeral was private and in charge of Elder Ernest G. Davies. Interment was at Almedia, Pennsylvania.

McKEE.—Louisa Wilhelmina Weber, daughter of John and Carolina Weber, was born March 27, 1886, in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. Met a tragic death August 21, 1932, at Cameron, Missouri. Louisa with her parents moved to Harrison County, Missouri, and there grew to womanhood. December 5, 1906, she was married to Hiram McKee, and to them were born four children. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints August 6, 1911. Left to mourn are her husband, four children, father, mother, four sisters, one grandchild, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral services were conducted by Elder F. L. Hinderks, of Stewartville, Missouri, at Far West Church, southeast of Cameron. Interment was in Kingston Cemetery.

HARPE.—Mary Ellen Lambkin was born February 3, 1858, at Alton, Indiana. Passed from this life at the home of her son, Elder C. E. Harpe, at Lamoni, Iowa, September 18, 1932. The deceased was united in marriage to Marion Harpe November 3, 1874, and to this union were born four sons and one daughter all of whom survive except the daughter who passed away in childhood. Mr. Harpe passed away in 1927, since which time she has made her home with her son Charles and family. Mrs. Harpe was affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church in her youth, but was converted with twelve others of her faith to the belief of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and was baptized in 1878. She remained faithful to her belief to the end. Funeral services were conducted from the White Funeral Home, in charge of A. E. Loving; sermon by T. J. Bell. Interment was in beautiful Rose Hill beside her husband.

WOOD.—Donald Robert Wood, son of Benjamin H. Wood and Daisy M. Richards Wood, was born October 21, 1912, at Erie Beach, Ontario. He was baptized in June, 1921. He died as a result of hemorrhage of the brain, at the London Hospital, September 24, 1932. He was loved by many relatives and friends, and leaves his father; two sisters, Mrs. Charles Mifflin, of Kimball, Ontario, and Mrs. Richard Rae, of Detroit, Michigan; two brothers, Richard H. Wood, of Detroit, Michigan, and Harry, who is at home near Blenheim, Ontario. The funeral service on Monday, September 26, was held in Blenheim church, Elder D. J. Williams preaching the sermon.

MILLER.—Rhoda Jane Blancett was born November 1, 1877, at Honeywell, Greenup County, Kentucky. Died suddenly at her home at Cleveland, Ohio, September 13, her death being caused by a paralytic stroke. October 13, 1894, she was married to Robert N. Miller who preceded her in death in 1927. To them were born four sons and two daughters of whom three sons, Robert E., Roland E., and Richard E., and a daughter, Rhoda Eleanor, are left to mourn her passing. She is also survived by her father, I. P. Blancett, and a brother, James Blancett. She united with the church with her husband Thanksgiving Day, November 29, 1895, under the ministry of Gomer T. Griffiths, and was faithful to the end. Interment was at Kirtland, Ohio, September 17, the funeral service being conducted by Elder William Patterson, of Port Huron, assisted by Elder E. Guy Hammond, of Akron, Ohio, in the Kirtland Temple, September 17. She and her husband were loyal supporters of the church, and their home offered hospitality to the ministry.

What More Can I Do?

Mr. Pastor, Publicity Agents, Members, and All:

What better thing can you do right now than to back the church in the effort to put the new "Saints' Herald" into every home? Pastors should sponsor campaigns in their branches to the end that not one family shall be deprived of the advantage of the church publication. Latter Day Saints need the new "Herald." Now that it contains both the "Vision" and the "Ensign" material, it becomes indispensable in every forward-looking church home.

WHAT YOU CAN DO - - - -

Pastors

1. Take the initiative in launching a subscription campaign.
2. Organize branch forces so as to insure a complete coverage of your families immediately.
3. Appoint a publicity agent if the branch or group does not have one.

Publicity Agents

1. Work with your pastor in the big campaign.
2. Collect for all subscriptions and issue receipts for same.
3. Be sure that every family is visited.
4. Report at least weekly to the Herald Publishing House.

Members

1. Subscribe for the "Herald." There is no $2.00 investment which will bring as much of real life to the family as a "Herald" subscription—not even an investment in food.
2. Assist the pastor and publicity agent in the canvass.

Congregations

1. Support the campaign.
2. Provide the few families that can not afford the "Herald." You provide physical food in their times of want. Why not provide some spiritual food, too? A "Herald" subscription means spiritual life to them at a time when they need encouragement.

The Pigeonhole

Just a Smile or a Nod

By Edna Cox

The couple had just moved near the church and of course were strangers. The man was willing to attend with his wife, although he didn't belong to the church. Sunday after Sunday they went, but it was only to sit on the back rows and jealously watch the others laugh and talk and shake hands with each other. Only once did anyone speak, and that was to hurt the woman's feelings and make the man angry. Even when they attended Sunday school and a class formed right in front of them, almost, nobody asked them to join or even seemed to see them. If some one had only smiled or nodded at them they might still be going to church, and the husband might have joined. A smile would have made them feel at home. But that church was like so many of our institutions today—the people too deeply engrossed in their own interests. That is a hard statement, but it is true, nevertheless. It is fine to be engrossed in one's work, but a person doesn't have to be so selfish that he can't notice other people and things. This matter of speaking or smiling, or otherwise being cordial, is a small thing, so small that it is a very important one. A habit like this one just described can be and is helping to keep us from building Zion. Both the community Zion, and Zion within ourselves. Small things always have and always will build large ones.

When I had lived in Independence one year I felt my responsibility for making strangers welcome. One day I saw a middle-aged lady standing by herself, looking very lonely and sad. "Ah," I thought to myself, "she is a stranger. No one has paid any attention to her. I will speak to her." I did. She responded very civilly, but without enthusiasm. My good scout act was not going so well. In desperation I asked her when she had come to Independence. "I have been here ten years," she said. And kept right on looking sad. And if you think that wasn't cold water on the cordial spirit of a yearling recruit to the good old Center Place, try it yourself.

Newcomers who don't get spoken to should not feel that they are being discriminated against. A lot of old-timers don't get spoken to, either.

However, we mustn't let a few circumstances change the manner of our lives, or our attitudes. I believe in friendship more than I ever did, for I see more than ever how very necessary it is. We must not imitate the worst examples in society. We should rather imitate the best ones.

I believed in the smile and the friendly nod. I believe in kindness as firmly as I believe in righteousness.

I will speak to any one who shows the slightest sign of wanting to speak to me in church. I enjoy friends and friendship, and I think that they are blessings which are among the finest privileges afforded by the association of Christian people.

I would rather be snubbed than snobbed. A person who is snubbed can forget it, but one who has the heart of a snob is hopeless and rarely gets over it.

The Women of the Church to the Rescue

In the Herald of September 28, under the title, "The Program for Payment of Allowances of Missionaries' Families," the Presiding Bishopric outlined the present financial needs of the church and set out some rather definite proposals as to ways of meeting these needs.

Of these proposals the following is one of the most significant: "That the women of the church in stakes, districts and branches be asked to accept responsibility for bearing a portion of the load."

The situation confronting the church may be briefly stated as follows: Pressing obligations, for the most part from without the church, and decreasing income have made it impossible for the Bishop to pay with any regularity allowances to those dependent upon the church for support. As the months have passed the situation resulting has become increasingly distressing. At present allowances are eleven months in arrears. In other words, the total amount due missionary families and others dependent upon the church is eighty-five thousand dollars.

In the opinion of the Bishopric these allowances must be more nearly brought up to date if privation is to be avoided. It is for this purpose that nonmember creditors have been asked to forego payment on their principal while those holding general church bonds and interest bearing notes have been asked to accept a reduced rate of interest. In addition to these very definite measures the appointees and priesthood of the church will be asked to continue to emphasize the financial law of the church and urge compliance thereto in the payment of tithes and offerings. The period from Thanksgiving until Christmas of this year has been set apart as "sacrifice period."

In addition to these measures, however, it was definitely felt that an appeal should be made to the women of the church to pool their efforts, concentrating upon the raising of funds which are to be applied in meeting these pressing obligations.

The history of the church is replete with illustrations of the courage and devotion of her women. The walls of Kirtland were made stable and beautiful by their sacrifices. On more than one occasion they have kept open the doors of our institutions, have rescued local buildings from burdening mortgages, have kept missionaries in the field, and in many other ways have demonstrated a practical ongoing faith always so essential to the success of the church.

Now the welfare of the general church is at stake. The task at hand is not for a small group. No small group will be enlisted. There are more than fifty-one thousand women in the church over eighteen years of age. Such a splendid army of workers will not readily admit that any task is too great.

The women of the church have never failed her. They will not fail her now. F. M. McD.

Remains of J. T. Gresty to Mound Grove Cemetery

The finding of the remains of Patriarch J. T. Gresty brought an end to months of searching and anxiety on the part of friends who had sought for him in vain. An account of the funeral and the memorial service will be found in the News columns of this issue.

All that knew the genial and lovable man, who contributed so much with both ministry and music to the church, must keenly regret the conditions which made living intolerable for him. The consciousness that they could not help, because of the nature of his suffering, increases their sorrow. We are profoundly moved that our brother should have felt it necessary to terminate an existence that had become insupportable. Only those who have suffered can sympathize and understand. The voice of the critic must be hushed in the presence of a tragedy that was manifested in life as well as in death, for pain and suffering are often worse foes than death.

Brother Gresty will be remembered for his life and service. The nobility, sacrifice, and kindness that filled his career to the limit of his seventy years, are imperishable monuments that endear him to the people. L. L.

ENTHUSIASTIC ABOUT NEW HERALD

Subscriptions Being Pushed in Many Branches

The Editors have been encouraged by the letters of encouragement and commendation that have been received concerning the new Herald. Meanwhile, the Business Manager has been receiving other letters from many who are interested in the wider distribution of circulation, and the addition of new subscriptions. Within a few minutes the Business Manager shuffled the following out of a deep pile of letters:

I am anxious to sell the new Herald for the church. Keep the commissions. I am glad to help put the Herald in every home. This is one of the most important steps the church has taken in a long time. I'm going to work today.
 (A brother on the West Coast.)

Put me down as one who is going to do his best to put the Herald in every home in this section of the vineyard. I want nothing for my work. It is a privilege to help the church in this crisis. The Herald in every home would certainly help right now. You can count on me.
 (From a released missionary.)

May I sell Herald for you up here? I am anxious to do what I can to help the church. The consolidation of the papers offers every family a chance now. Let me know at once. In fact, I have five subscriptions promised already.
 (A sister of the north.)

I'm just a pastor, but if I can help in putting the Herald in every home, I shall certainly do my best. I believe in it, and I feel that it is the best move that we can make right now.
 (An Iowa Pastor.)

Many others are needed to help push the circulation of our periodicals, especially the Herald. The work of the church is hampered badly unless the officers of the church can communicate with the membership; and the only means that provides steady communication are the publications. Responsible agents, both volunteers and those that work for commissions, are needed for boosting our Herald circulation. Communicate with the Business Manager, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

OFFICIAL

Appointment Apostle E. J. Gleazer

To Labor in South Pacific Slope Mission

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 11, 1932.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that Apostle E. J. Gleazer has been appointed to labor with Apostle Myron A. McConley in the South Pacific Slope Mission.

Apostle McConley, as the readers of the Herald undoubtedly know, has been detained at his home for many months on account of the serious illness of Sister McConley. Sister McConley's condition continues to be critical, so critical that Brother McConley has little or no opportunity to attend to the affairs of the mission under his supervision.

It is intended that Brother Gleazer will relieve Brother McConley from these responsibilities in every way possible. We congratulate the Saints of this mission that they are to have available the splendid service which Brother Gleazer is qualified to render. We urge for him the loyal support of all.

Brother Gleazer will begin his work in the mission in the Northern California District on or about October 20.

Respectfully submitted,
 THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
 By F. M. McDOWELL.

An Official Call

To the Women of the Church:

The Presiding Bishopric have been unable in the present emergency to meet the accumulated obligations of the church in the form of allowances to missionaries' families and others dependent upon the church for support. These accumulated obligations now amount to approximately eighty-five thousand dollars, the payment of a substantial per cent of which is necessary if actual privation is to be avoided. We therefore hereby call upon the women of the various stakes, districts, and branches throughout the church to organize their forces and pool their efforts for the purpose of raising funds to be applied in meeting these pressing obligations.

The need is so great that we feel justified in suggesting that wherever possible the programs and activities of your various organizations should be postponed and funds arising from these activities which ordinarily would be used to meet local needs or in support of special institutions in the church should be diverted to the general church treasury. In some branches there will be pressing local obligations which must of course be met. For such a part of the funds raised by the women may be required. The contracting of additional obligations should, however, wherever possible be avoided. Any unnecessary local or institutional expenditures will only serve to make more difficult the task of financing the church.

The methods to be employed in the raising of these funds is to be largely left to your discretion. Wisdom would seem to dictate that as far as possible organizations already established should function in carrying out this endeavor. The work of the priesthood as provided for in the law should not be interfered with. Neither should this effort be allowed to detract from the contributions coming to the church through the regular channels.

The First Presidency will take whatever steps are necessary to assure the cooperation of district and branch officials. This and succeeding issues of the Herald will carry material calculated to assist you in your endeavor to respond to this call.

Respectfully submitted,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Statistics on Missionary Allowances

From time to time we have been attempting to present figures which will be of interest to the Saints throughout the church. The following figures covering family allowances will undoubtedly prove of interest in connection with the program set forth in the Saints' Herald of September 28, last:

1. Total allowance in arrears, October 1, 1932, was$85,261.43
2. Average time period covered, eleven months.
3. Number of families involved is as follows:

	Number		Total
	Under 60 yrs. of age	Over 60 yrs. of age
Under active appointment.....	65	27	92
Under active appointment, but drawing Elders' Expense only	6	2	8
	71	29	100
Released Ministers	1	20	21
Superannuated Ministers		27	27
Widows	7	33	40
	79	109	188

The total monthly allowance paid is $9,840.83 which is divided as follows:

Active ministers above 60 years of age, released and superannuated ministers and widows	$5,135.43
Active ministers under 60 years of age.....	4,705.40
	$9,840.83

These figures show that it is not only practically impossible to further reduce our missionary force, but that over 50% of the total allowance is paid to those who are aged and unable to provide the means of subsistence for themselves and families. Because of the long years of devoted service to these families we think it imperative that the church make a special effort to discharge its obligation to them at least in part, if not in full. Letters are received daily in the office of the Presiding Bishopric which reveal the dire need of many of these families.

NEWS BRIEFS

Harvest Festival Closes

The fourteenth Harvest Home Festival at Independence is over. It closed Sunday at 10 p. m. This year's festival brought to the community a new interpretation of harvest home—a time for the giving of ideas, time, labor and goods for the benefit of the needy, without elaborate ostentatiousness. Economy was one note struck by the exhibits, ingenuity another, good will, a third; and there were others—beauty, generosity, cooperation, friendliness, and happy pride.

Impressive among the events of the week was the concert given by the Auditorium Festival Chorus and assisting artists.

Church Growing in Germany

"The work here in Germany is getting bigger and bigger," writes Elder J. Smolney, missionary in Western Germany who is again in Berlin after three months at Augsburg, Bavaria. Five were lately baptized at Offenbach, and in other places, too, the gospel message is being received. But this mission sorely needs workers, men and women and young people.

The Saints of Germany eagerly await the visit of Apostle John W. Rushton. It is hoped that he will organize a branch in Bavaria where there are twenty-four members of the church.

Meetings in Midst of Coal Miners' Strike

Elder and Sister Richard Baldwin gained special permission from authorities to hold meetings at Taylorville, Illinois, in the midst of the coal miners' strike in September. There was a riot and troops patrolled the city, but the Baldwins conducted quite a successful series, the services including priesthood meetings in the morning, classwork in the afternoon, and a sermon each evening preceded by exercises for the children.

Later on when the minds of the citizens are less confused, and the economic outlook for the winter is more hopeful, Brother and Sister Baldwin believe more effective work can be done at Taylorville. They hope to return.

Things Are Happening

A pretty wedding occurred in the Graceland College chapel, Saturday afternoon, October 8, when Miss Doris Rae Lysinger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Lysinger, of Lamoni, and Mr. Colin Ferrett, recently of Sydney, Australia, were married. President G. N. Briggs officiated in the ceremony. The bride, a granddaughter of the late President Joseph Smith, is serving her fourth year as a member of the Graceland faculty. The bridegroom came to America in 1930, and was a soloist in the Centennial Conference oratorio. At the completion of two years' study at Graceland, last June, he entered the Gorrell Vocal Art Studio of Kansas City, Missouri.

Elder S. S. Smith closed a two-week series of meetings at Osawatomie, Kansas, Sunday, October 9, baptizing five candidates. He was assisted in missionary services there by his brother, H. L. Smith. Osawatomie is in Holden Stake.

Fifteen new members have this year been baptized in Shidler, Oklahoma Branch. The Saints are happy at this gain, and are moving forward.

General church appointees who have recently visited and helped the branch at Colorado Springs, Colorado, are Apostle Roy S. Budd, Missionary J. W. A. Bailey, and Elder Glaude A. Smith, president of Eastern Colorado District.

Elder William Bradbury, eighty-six years of age, and an early pioneer worker in the branch organization at Providence, Rhode Island, passed away several weeks ago.

President Elbert A. Smith left Independence last Thursday night, bound for Los Angeles, California, where he will engage in church work for about a month. He will also visit other branches in Southern California District.

Missionary C. E. Harpe has returned to labor in his field, Western Michigan District. He was called away several weeks ago by the serious illness of his mother.

Apostle J. F. Garver in the Sanitarium

Apostle J. F. Garver was brought to the Independence Sanitarium a few days ago by Sister Garver and Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni. He was suddenly attacked by severe pain, and his trouble was diagnosed as kidney stones. His recovery was rapid, however, and Monday he was again out and about his work.

Eleven Baptized at Bellaire, Michigan

Eleven candidates were baptized into the church at Bellaire, Michigan, September 25, by Elder J. J. Ledsworth. This day brought to a conclusion Brother Ledsworth's series of meetings there which outgrew the capacity of the church building and compelled them to seek larger quarters. Local Saints are very happy at the fine interest created in the community and the response given Brother Ledsworth.

Prohibition Versus Liquor License

By Bishop A. B. Phillips

The Prohibition Amendment was adopted in 1917 by both houses of the Congress of the United States. In the Senate there were twenty and in the House one hundred and twenty-eight who voted against it. Some years later the Wets claimed that a majority were opposed to prohibition, and in 1932 they succeeded in obtaining a test vote on the matter. The test vote in the Senate, on January 21, recorded only fifteen wet votes, or five less than when the Amendment was passed. The House, on February 24, recorded only one hundred and two Wet votes, a Wet loss of twenty-six.

The Eighteenth Amendment was adopted by forty-six States, leaving only two that did not ratify it. The total votes cast in both houses of the State legislatures referred to gave 5,084 votes for, and 1,263 against prohibition, the Wet vote being less than one fourth of the total vote. In spite of this fact many of the Wets still insist upon repealing prohibition and permitting all kinds of liquors, including wines and beer, to be sold to the people. They have worked feverishly for several years, breaking the prohibition laws, using bribery, conspiracy, intrigue, and even intimidation, perjury, and murder, in the effort to break the law and induce or force the people to repeal the Prohibition Amendment.

REMEMBER THE "FORGOTTEN MAN"

But the iniquity of the Wets today, bad as it is, does not descend to lower depths than existed in saloon days, and is not nearly so widespread and far-reaching. The Wets are hoping to capture the votes of young people who remember but little of the horrors of the liquor evil as it existed for years prior to prohibition. Those who seek votes for the return of liquor license ask us to remember the "forgotten man," and it is the forgotten man of liquor license days that repeal would bring back to us in a shocking manner.

In those days the "forgotten man" was often seen by the thousands throughout the nation, staggering along so drunk that he could not reach home. He was found in streets, gutters, and many other filthy places, without money or food for his starving and shivering family. His small wages had gone to the liquor dealer. In such families theft, prostitution, and the most abject misery often resulted from habitual drinking by the "forgotten man." Death, starvation, and rags were his common experience. Literally thousands of such instances are recorded in the daily papers of those days, and yet the papers did not contain a tithe of the revolting conditions that prevailed because of the ease with which the "forgotten man" spent his all for liquor.

HUMAN EXPERIENCE DEMANDS PROHIBITION

More than a hundred generations of experience have proved that liquor is an evil and a curse to the human race. As long ago as 1116 B. C. the experience of the Chinese with this enemy of mankind caused them to prohibit the making, selling, or drinking of intoxicants, and he who disregarded this law was punished with death. Various nations have tried to make laws that would enable people to indulge in liquor without incurring its evil consequences, but no nation has ever succeeded in doing so. Canada tried it in various ways, and Wets in the United States often claim that Canada has succeeded much better than have we under prohibition. The claim is absolutely false, as scores of official statements prove. E. C. Drury, former premier of Canada, is quoted in the Globe-Democrat of March 27, 1930, as declaring that Canada's liquor system is "an absolute failure."

Under the Canadian system, so beloved of the Wets, the sale of spirits increased 21.3 per cent, beer 50 per cent, native wines 234 per cent, and imported wines 77.2 per cent, in the first five months of the second year. Some of the results of liquor sales by the Canadian Government were: drunkenness increased 32 per cent; bootlegging, etc., increased 77 per cent; alcoholic deaths increased 98 per cent; convictions of drunken drivers increased nearly 1,300 per cent. Since the World War crime has enormously increased in England, as has drunkenness also, and is ruining boys and girls there to an alarming extent. Over a period of five years after prohibition, France had a ratio of drunkenness 303 per cent greater than New York City. Professor Caille states that 50 per cent in the insane asylums and 64 per cent of the convicted lawbreakers in France were alcoholics.

Norway, Russia, Sweden, and other countries show similar evil results of liquor, and the conditions in various ways are much worse than in the United States. These and other proofs of liquor evils have caused eminent men of science, business, state, medicine, society, and all of the great walks of life, to denounce liquor and advocate prohibition. Among these men are such notables as Presidents Lincoln, Roosevelt, Harding, and Hoover; also many others of the wisest and most experienced men of the world.

PROHIBITION PROTECTS OUR LIBERTY

The results of liquor are evil in a thousand ways. Alcohol weakens the organs of the body and injures the brain. It also lowers resistance to disease, and induces immorality and crime to such an extent that its general use would threaten the very existence of our nation, and largely lessen our ability to defend ourselves against aggression by superior forces. Prohibition is a powerful safeguard of our liberty as a nation and as a social body. It is also a protector of our economic independence, and preserves the working forces of all our people. It guards against those destructive agencies which liquor would set in ever-increasing operation to our detriment, and thus helps us to greater liberty of mind, body, and soul.

But prohibition is a protector of liberty in an even more intimate way than those we have noted. It protects a man against his own weak will to a great extent, and helps him to assert his independence of those evil forces that would destroy his happiness. It protects him against open places where otherwise he would be tempted to obtain liquor and get drunk. It protects his wages from liquor dealers who would ruin him and his family. It protects his wife, his child, and his home, and preserves their liberty and happiness. And it also protects the public from insult, crime, outrage, shame, immorality, accident, and death.

PROHIBITION PREVENTS ACCIDENTS

Let no one deceive you by the claim that prohibition is worse than liquor. Such claims are absolutely false, and are disproved by years of bitter experience and by the history which that experience has caused to be written. Under liquor license many more accidents occurred in various ways than occur now in the same occupations. The use of dangerous machinery, automobiles, locomotives, and many other instruments of labor require clear heads and steady hands. This has forced many employers to prohibit liquor by their workmen, both to protect laborers themselves and the public. Commissioner Stoeckel of Connecticut says:

"On the public highways moderate drinking is more dangerous than immoderate, and on this account the authorities in order to protect the public safety must reckon with the effects of moderate drinking."—Prohibition, by Feldman.

PROHIBITION DECREASES CRIME

The claims of the Wets that crime conditions were better under liquor license, which some have repeated frequently, is an absolute misrepresentation that should warn everyone of their evil motives. One of the foremost criminologists of the United States and perhaps the highest authority on that subject,

Doctor Kirchwey, notes that the United States Census figures for eighteen years 1910 to 1927 show "a marked decline of from 35 to 40 per cent in the general crime rate in the United States, and observes:

"That the offenses of assault, fraud, vagrancy, prostitution, and larceny, the last the most common of serious offenses, should have fallen off by 50 per cent or more, and burglary by 10 per cent or more, should give pause to the Jeremiahs."—American Issue.

The World Almanac for 1932 shows that intoxication was 129 per cent greater in wet years than in dry years in New York. Delinquency in New York was greatly reduced after prohibition came, and the same thing happened in Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo and other cities. Director of Prohibition, Colonel Woodcock, states this also for the United States. The Census Bureau has shown that by 1923 drunkenness was 55.3 per cent less than in 1910. Doctor Grenfell, who lectured from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coasts, said:

"Everywhere the splendid results of prohibition are becoming more and more plain. This country will never go back on it."—Prohibition, by Fisher.

PROHIBITION PURIFIES POLITICAL GOVERNMENT

What prohibition has done for the improvement of moral conditions in the whole country, it has also measurably accomplished in political affairs. In 1794 several States formed an insurrection because a small tax had been placed on whiskey, and President Washington called out fifteen thousand militia to suppress the rebellion. If you vote for the Wets you will increase the danger of worse revolts in the years to come, for they have repeatedly attempted to gain control of the administrative offices of our government in the past. Mr. Hecker, the statistician, notes discoveries made in 1918 by the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate that the brewers boycotted merchants, manufacturers, and railroads which forbade drinking by employees, and says:

"The so-called 'Whiskey Ring' corrupted Federal officials in the administration of President Grant."—Prohibition Manual, pages 1, 2.

The attempts to establish government control or sale have been miserable failures. At one time the saloons were used by both political parties for caucus meetings, and notices of such meetings appeared in the press of that period. When government sale was adopted, it operated through the so-called "dispensary system" for some time. Mr. Calderwood states:

"Under the dispensary system there developed a political machine which for corruption was scarcely exceeded by Tammany at its worst . . . the machine covering the whole

How the Presidential Candidates Stand On the Prohibition Question

From the Public Statements of Both Men

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Democratic Nominee

"This convention wants repeal. Your candidate wants repeal. And I am confident that the United States of America wants repeal. . . .

"I say to you now that from this date on the Eighteenth Amendment is doomed. When that happens, we as Democrats must and will rightly and morally enable the states to protect themselves against the importation of intoxicating liquors where such importation may violate their state laws. We must rightly and morally prevent the return of the saloon."—Franklin D. Roosevelt, in speech of acceptance of the Democratic presidential nomination, as reported in the Kansas City Times, August 12, 1932.

In a subsequent speech, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"If the present Congress takes no action, I shall urge the new Congress to carry out these provisions," referring to the party platform recommendations for repeal and for "immediate modification of the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution."

HERBERT HOOVER

Republican Nominee

"We are on common ground in a desire to rid this civilization of the evils of the liquor traffic. We may not all agree on method as I have come to the belief that we must, through constructive and not destructive changes, revive the energies of the states to deal with the new evils, with federal constitutional guarantees against the return of the old evils. We must drive steadily toward disarmament and world peace. We must fight for economic recovery, not only for its material values, but we must secure from this period a reevaluation of the purposes of life and shift our drift from materialism to a higher note of individual and national ideals. We must awaken a sense of national consciousness of the purposes of life itself. We must contend every moment for the wider development of free men and women through the one road to that end, that is, loyalty to a century and a half of our own American aspirations."—President Herbert Hoover, in a letter to Daniel A. Poling, Chairman of the Allied Forces.

Liquor Fatal to Newspaper Careers

O. O. McIntyre, Famous Newspaper Columnist, Says Sober Reporters Predominate on Big Papers

The mistaken notion that many great newspaper men are boozers continues among some people. This old illusion of the devotees of the mug and bottle is given a heavy blow by the following excerpt from the column syndicated by O. O. McIntyre:

"The hard-drinking reporter has been glamored by fiction, the screen and stage—a reputed symbol of a sentimentality toward drinking in the newspaper shops. A standard dose from this pharmacopoeia of romance is that the drunken writer turns out the most brilliant copy while in his cups.

"With rare exceptions this has never been true. Henry L. Mencken, a robust defender of wassail, recently admitted: 'As a city editor my views of the traditional drinking genius soon changed. I was a discoverer that the best copy was turned out by sober men.'

"In my somewhat varied and migratory experience in print shops I do not recall a single boozier who beat boozing. Some rushers rose to momentary pinnacles but dropped like plummets. Final chapters were a record of suicides, straight-jackets in psychopathic wards, and wooden crosses in potter fields.

"While there are still irrationalisms from drink in editorial rooms they have been generously ironed out. Newspaper publishers have learned no matter how brilliant the reporter, he is a dangerous experiment in emergencies if drinking.

"Reporters graduating to high editorial posts, to play writing, or authoring best selling novels, may have had flings but they tapered off before they went to responsible posts. I can count eleven whose inebriety brought professional oblivion.

"Twenty years ago the sober reporter was in the minority on staffs of newspapers. On one newspaper in the Middle West was only one teetotaler and he was regarded as a trifle effeminate. Today the picture is reversed. I do not know a single forthright reporter who is a souse."

Great Britain Pays

Great Britain's "drink bill" is twenty-five million dollars every week. All that is spent for education, for pensions, old age, and orphans (1930) is but little more than the drink bill. Abstinence from intoxicating drinks would save enough to provide all the milk and all the bread now consumed, pay all the war pensions, all police protection, and have nearly five million dollars over. It costs only a few cents per year per person in the United States to administer the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act. The amendment has closed 170,000 saloons, 1,247 breweries, 507 distilleries, and 224 out of 275 liquor-cure hospitals. These will all come back sooner or later if prohibition is repudiated.—The Christian Advocate.

Prohibition and the Home

By Cyril E. Wight

The currents of world unrest have today become veritable storm centers. The winds of adversity have lashed these currents into raging torrents.

Some one once said that the majority of men do not think—they merely rearrange their prejudices.

Caught in the swirl of the present economic torments, it is not strange that this natural habit of mankind has been intensified. There is but little question as to the tendency of men to revolt against present conditions, and usually this revolt is of a spontaneous rather than a thoughtful character.

This revolt is not confined to the political arena. It concerns moral issues as well. People do not take kindly to a force encroachment upon their so-called personal liberties. They are therefore apt to voice and vote their prejudices rather than any well thought out conclusions.

Those of us who value the moral elements which are at the very root of the church and the home, have need to pause for a careful analysis of the effect that our present policy concerning prohibition is having.

ADVANTAGES OF PROHIBITION

In my opinion the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment has brought advantages to our nation which far outweigh its weaknesses. These advantages have been so often stated from pulpit and press that it is needless here to do more than merely summarize them. Briefly, they may be listed as follows:

1. Increased the savings accounts of the laboring class.
2. Increased the purchase of useful articles.
3. Increased the safety of motor travel.
4. Increased home ownership.
5. Increased the moral fibre of our home life.

It would be useless to attempt statistics as to the increase or decrease of drinking under prohibition, but we do have a right to question the logic of the antiprohibitionist when he says that drinking has increased under prohibition and in almost the same breath declares that with the overthrow of prohibition we will have an additional outlet for millions of bushels of grain to be used in the manufacture of liquor.

When caught on one of the horns of this dilemma, the usual answer is that with the repeal of prohibition we will replace the present "bad" liquor with "good" liquor—whatever that may be.

PROBLEMS OF PROHIBITION

Yet with all the gains that have come to our nation under the eighteenth amendment, we can not fail to recognize that there have come some outstanding problems.

Even after discounting the wild stories of subsidized agencies which have suddenly become solicitous for the morals of our communities—telling us that we can be saved from moral degradation only through the repeal of the amendment—we must open our eyes to the flaunting of the law on every hand.

There are many indications that the majority of the people today are not in favor of the continued enforcement of the amendment. This majority includes thousands just as anxious for moral and economic betterment as are we, but who honestly feel that prohibition can not be enforced.

REASONS FOR PRESENT UNPOPULARITY

In order to appreciate the meaning of the present wave of sentiment against prohibition we must recall the circumstances attending the fight to place it upon the statute books.

Beginning entirely as a moral issue, it was gradually discovered that more converts could be gained through an economic appeal. Regardless of our personal convictions as to the value of the arguments, we must admit that the victory was won through the stress placed upon the economic value of prohibition.

Then we thought the war was over. We disbanded our armies and rested, content with the glorious victory we supposed had been won. The army of the enemy did not disband. Persistently its poison gases have been sent out and almost too late we have discovered that our smug satisfaction was without justification.

There are untold thousands who remember the terrible tragedies of saloon days. They know that with all of its failures, the present system is better. But there are increasing numbers who have had no personal experience and therefore can make no comparison. These are easily persuaded that conditions today are terrible and should be changed.

We made our most tragic mistake when the educational forces which had created the sentiment for prohibition were dismissed—when we placed our reliance upon legal rather than moral authority.

This is perhaps best illustrated by making a comparison of our activity in support of other moral issues. It is often argued that we should not think of repealing the statutes which make murder a crime. But just because these laws are upon our statute books, does it mean that we have left their enforcement to our governmental agencies?

The answer is obvious. In our homes, in our day schools and in our church schools, we are constantly attempting to build up the type of character that will support the legal with moral authority. We take nothing for granted. We know that the savage instincts under the thin veneer of our civilization can not be controlled through law alone.

Even now we are in the process of a long educational campaign against legalized murder, otherwise known as war. We know that all the international agreements in the world will become mere scraps of paper unless the educational forces of morality are enlisted in a supporting effort.

Can we expect the war against liquor to be won through legal means alone when history demonstrates to the contrary.

THE REMEDY

If our present home life is to be protected against the return of the evils of other days, our armies must be called back into action.

The teaching of temperance and abstinence must become a regular part of our organized educational activity. From the pulpit and the press must come the facts as to the moral and economic value of these principles.

We must recognize the principle that has been the genius of the Gospel through all ages—that the spiritual fibre of men must first be built if the outward forces are to be resisted.

Let us use the vote to protect society and the home wherever possible—but let us not forget that the eternal forces that will save the world come from within.

Educate for Battle

The Eighteenth Amendment is but a single battle in a much larger war against the liquor traffic as a whole. Liquor slavery can no more be shoved aside than could Negro slavery. No great problem is solved until it is settled right.

The liquor evil should be thoroughly presented to our young people in its two important phases—first, the effect of liquor on the individual life; and second, the effect of the liquor traffic on our social and political life. Let us bring to the attention of young people the testimony of such scientists as Dr. Charles Mayo, Dr. David Starr Jordan, and the great Dutch psychiatrist, Dr. K. Herman Bouman.—Dr. Joy Elmer Morgan, Pres. National Education Association.

The Foundations of Our Faith

V.—The Atonement of Christ

By Elbert A. Smith

"This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."
—Acts 4: 11, 12.

Christian attention has been focused upon the act of death as the most significant part of the mission of Christ. But we should remember that his birth, his life, his teaching, his character, his death, his resurrection, form a complete whole. No part is to be regarded as nonessential. He did not come to deal in nonessentials. The cross had its place in the work of redemption but should not be exalted above the open tomb, symbol of the resurrection,—nor yet above the open book which records his teachings. When we look for the significance and necessity of his atonement; let us not make the blunder to suppose, as one confession of faith affirmed, that Jesus came "to reconcile God to man." The spectacle of Christ on the cross was not to soften God's heart and turn away his wrath and reconcile him to man. He had not gone astray or at any time ceased to love man: "God so loved that he gave his only begotten Son."

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16.

We may look for the necessities prompting the atonement in the needs of humanity and in the response of divine love thereto. Exactly such a birth, such a life, such a death, such teaching and example, and such a resurrection were needed to impress mankind, to melt the stubborn heart, to draw man to God, and to bring again hope and regeneration. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." (John 13: 32.)

To an extent only has that promise yet been realized. Men of many religions profess to follow Jesus. Both branches of the Catholic church, the many Protestant denominations, all phases of "Mormonism" so called, devotees of spiritism, socialism, and what not profess to march under his banner. Tolstoy used to tell the old Russian fable of the man pursued by a wicked sorcerer who sought to destroy him. The man fled to a friendly magician. The magician turned him into a kernel of corn. The sorcerer then turned himself into a rooster and was about to swallow the corn. But at that point the friendly magician poured a whole measure of corn over the one kernel and the sorcerer could not tell which to eat nor could he swallow it all. Thus, Tolstoy affirmed, the world has covered Jesus under a mass of imitations until no man can tell where he is to be found.

The element of hope in the situation is the ability and intention of Christ as teacher to reveal himself. The fact that so many eyes from so many ages and so many lands are turned upon him promises in the end the very thing that he announced, an ultimate drawing toward him of all men.

We hold that to us in this latter day he has revealed himself again in a clear and especial manner. We should be then the more devoted to learn and do his will. We should rely upon his power and his promise to be with us to the end of the world.

THE FALL OF MAN

Some people regard the story of the fall as being historical; that it occurred in all its details; that the woman was literally tempted by the serpent and actually ate of the apple or some other forbidden fruit. Others regard it as allegorical. I will not enter into that question. You will agree that the lesson that comes out of the story is the important part. We can not change what happened or did not happen long ago. We can draw from the biblical record conclusions that will help us today. It is very obvious that the great lesson that comes out of the story of Eden is this, that disobedience to law debases and destroys and drives man from the presence of God into unhappiness. On the other hand, obedience to law saves and ennobles (because it does ennoble it saves) and brings men back into the presence of God. That was the philosophy wrapped up in Paul's statement, "As in [disobedient] Adam all died, so in [obedient] Christ shall all men be made alive." And that is the philosophy stated in the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment."—85: 8.

That statement is just as true as it was in 1832 when the revelation was given, and it was just as true in the days of Adam. The great lesson of Genesis, then, is that through disobedience to law men fall; and the great lesson of the gospel is that

Prayer and Testimony

The Use of Prayer

By Fred Shepherd

By prayer God knows the miseries of man, and man obtains the communion and help of God. It is through prayer that we recognize our dependence on some other power and receive liberty by that recognition. It is a liberty of dependence, for prayer absolves us from the power that bows us down. Many people do not realize that the real power of prayer lies in this power which bows us down—the will of God.

Jesus found great use for prayer. "In an agony he prayed . . . In twenty-six passages he is reported as having prayed to God; and he received response from heaven strengthening him. There are more than a dozen verses which report him as seeking the will of God." He was consciously subordinate to God as his Father and recognized this through prayer. He also taught others to use prayer to obtain their desires when he said:

"For verily I say unto you, that whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye shall receive them, and ye shall have them."

There can not be religion without the use of interior prayer; but, even if there is an absence of religious forms and doctrines, if there is a stirring of the soul by this interior prayer there is living religion. Religion without prayer would give the participants merely the spectator's part at a play; but with prayer in religion the participants are the actors in a very serious reality. To make worship satisfactory the worshiper must be made to feel that in prayer something really happens. Not that the weather can be influenced or answer be received to special prayers, but that in prayer one puts oneself in touch with a world beyond the powers of perception. This gives one a feeling of inwardness and a sense of spiritual reality. It is dangerous to make prayer a utilitarian scheme to obtain desires, or to be used as a magic in fear. This will not happen if prayer is purified with love and cooperation.

"Through prayer when it is sufficiently earnest, man can will to do an act which he has never done before, which he has never seen another do, which he has never imagined could be done—provided as the man prays God sends him forth to do it." This is contrary to psychological belief but it is no stranger than the fact that religious persons believe that any natural facts connected with their lives and destinies are suggestive of the divine purpose. This purpose comes to their knowledge through prayer, and energy from on high flows down to them. This spiritual energy which would otherwise be inactive becomes active in prayer."

Prayer in the religious sense is the establishment of a state of suggestion, submissiveness, or complete docility with the power of the other world. This may be for strengthening the bonds between the human individual and the other worldly person; but often it is merely to aid the individual in other worldly salvation.

In the psychological connection between prayer and health three things are worthy of consideration. First: an attitude of confidence towards the world is a necessary element in perfect health. It tends to produce health through a right functioning of the psycho-physical organs. Depressing emotions have a poisoning effect, and so do perplexing inhibitions. The removal of these makes the processes of life easier. The confidence may rest in anything, for anything will do. Thus we find diseases cured by prayer and religious ceremonials which we might characterize as non-ethical. Second: there is a positive stimulation resulting from the contemplation of a pleasurable idea. This has a tonic and stimulating effect upon the individual's health. Third: it is sure that certain diseases can be removed by suggestion; so that any disease which is at all affected by nervous conditions comes within the possibility of cure by prayer. The modern psychologist believes that there is a close connection between autosuggestion and prayer; hence the possibilities in the realms of soundness of body and well being of soul.

The supplicant may use prayer for furthering his mundane interests or for attaining the perfect life. However, he must be careful, for praying about sin does not help to get rid of it, but keeps it active. The best way to become free from sin is to so pray that one seeks a better type of life. Hence the prayer should be positive and not negative; it should always indicate the desired life, and not the one from which relief is sought.

Comfort From the Holy Spirit

By M. H. S.

There comes a time in the life of everyone when we find ourselves in the Garden alone. Our friends can not come in. They are either asleep at the gate or are afraid to be seen with us or maybe have never seen the Garden, much less know what is being wrought out within. The time comes when not even father or mother, brother or sister, wife or husband, or child, can join in the distress through which every soul must pass.

One may be baptized in water but no one can be baptized into Christ Jesus our Lord without having an experience which is at once outstanding because it is convincing. Convincing to the one who has it, though perhaps to no one else.

When we find ourselves either standing or sitting or kneeling in this tragic Gethsemane, then as at no other time, does the baptism of Jesus Christ grip us. Not the baptism of water, but the baptism of fire and a Holy Spirit, and back to us comes that experience which came not from books or sermons or lectures or classes or pictures, but through the fire that burned into the tabernacle of our hearts the knowledge of Christ Jesus; and we find ourselves saying, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him," and though this cup has come to me, "Thy will be done."

Recently I saw an exhibition of the finest type of Christian faith, fortitude and endurance. It was not from among the priesthood; it was not from among those accustomed to being recognized as leaders. It was from a humble member sitting in the quiet of her own room alone—in the Gethsemane of life when one loved long and well had fallen asleep in the cold embrace of death. That was a living faith, a tangible fortitude, born only of experience with the beloved Christ.

She sat and with the calmness of a summer morning (not evening) discussed the passing of her loved one; how faith, through the last trying hours, had borne up the soul of the departed as well as her own. She spoke with assurance of the sleeping body, but of a living spirit. She breathed an atmosphere of assurance as certain as could have been that breathed by the weeping sisters to whom Jesus said when

Prayer and Testimony

He stood beside them, "—weep not; your brother is not dead," for to her He was saying, "Your mother lives" just as certainly as He had spoken to those girls long ago. No fear; no doubt; not a blind faith; but an assurance which bears the living, up the mountain, across the valley, over the river and into a paradise not made with hands, but created of God for those who trust Him.

My wife and I had gone there to comfort and offer our help in any way possible. We came away fed and clothed and warmed. We went to give; we came away richly laden.

Soon We Shall Need Zion

By G. L. Sweet

I want to do what I can to encourage my brothers and sisters in this Christian warfare, also to lead others to investigate and obey the restored gospel. My faith is firmly grounded in the latter-day gospel, and though I am isolated and have not means to help the church to any extent in a financial way, I am daily praying that God will inspire his people with greater zeal for service.

I was thankful for the privilege of attending the Eagle City reunion this summer, and greatly enjoyed the services and the association of Saints. Unity and love were manifested in every meeting.

Surely the time is not far distant when we shall need Zion. And as Zion is the pure in heart, we should be very careful to live pure and holy lives, free from selfishness and false pride. We should pray that we shall have the spirit of truth with us. When I see the wickedness, the confusion, the discontent in the world, I am thankful that we have a God whose mercy endures forever and who punishes for correction, not just to appease his wrath. Even though we are passing through trials and trying times, I am thankful to God for the peace and patience he has given me. Will the Saints pray that I may be given grace to continue faithful? Also, please remember my family in your prayers.

Pentecostal Experiences at Kirtland Reunion

By Dora Lydick

I remember with joy our experiences this summer at Kirtland reunion. Sitting in the Temple of the Lord with God's chosen people, we were privileged to enjoy the same Spirit that was present on the day of Pentecost. God's servants were filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak in tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance. I was made to exclaim: "God in his abundant mercy hath revealed again his word, giving each a testimony that the work is of the Lord."

After reading the account of the Onset reunion, given in the Herald, we were made conscious of the fact that God is mindful of his children in every clime, and forewarns them of things to come. The same admonition was given the Saints at Kirtland. They were told that they would be given an opportunity to redeem themselves and to prepare and store up their resources. They were told that a still greater depression will come but that if the Saints are faithful, God will be with them. Can we ask for more?

Kirtland reunion was a spiritual feast, and all who were privileged to attend returned home refreshed in spirit and determined to be what God wants them to be. I would say in the language of the Apostle Paul to the Philippians: "Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say, Rejoice. . . . And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

Aged Saint Desires Services in Home Town

By Mary E. Stuart

Though I am isolated now and have been since the first three years after my baptism in 1877, I am trying to live true to the gospel. Many trials and disappointments have been mine in the long pathway of life; I have lost loved ones in death and passed through other sorrows, but I thank God for his mercy and love. He has always been ready to give me strength and courage to bear my burdens, and by his grace I hope to continue faithful.

I am now in my ninetieth year and have been praying for the Lord to send a Latter Day Saint minister to Wakita. There have never been any of our ministers here, and there are many good-hearted and honest people in Wakita. The Christian Church is always open for any kind of preaching services.

Will the Saints pray that I may be healed of my afflictions and that I shall always be faithful?

Prayer Brings Back the Dying

By E. B. Johnston

About noon one Sunday in September, 1927, Sister Seeley came over to the place where I was visiting with M. N. Stewart. She said that her husband was dying, that the doctor had stated he could not live. We were asked to come over and pray for him.

Brother Stewart and I prayed for the sick man, and then Brother Stewart went home. I remained for a time. About three o'clock in the afternoon I looked at the sufferer and he seemed to be sinking. His finger nails had turned dark and his lips were blue and his eyes were becoming glassy in appearance. And so I rubbed his head with the consecrated oil and knelt to pray for him. In that prayer I asked the heavenly Father to heal Brother Seeley, or if it was not his will to heal him, that he would bring peace to him, and that from that hour he should be eased of pain. As I knelt the power of God's Holy Spirit fell upon me.

When I arose, I went to inform the doctor of the sufferer's condition. I was gone about twenty minutes, and when I came back, Brother Seeley was sitting up and much better.

We immediately got down on our knees and thanked God for his goodness in answering our prayers. Then the Holy Spirit rested upon us in greater power than ever, and the spirit of prophecy visited Sister Seeley. Great promises were made to me, promises which cause me to look forward to the time when they shall be fulfilled, that others may rejoice in the gospel and be blessed as I have been blessed.

The healing of Brother Seeley was the first miracle I had witnessed and the second time I had seen the power of God's Holy Spirit so strongly manifested. This experience is written with the consent of Sister Seeley.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I shall always be faithful and ready to bear a testimony to the truthfulness of this work. I want to do what God would have me do.

QUESTION TIME

In what sense is the kingdom of God "within you," as stated in Luke 17: 21?

This passage has been the subject of much disagreement among readers of the Scriptures, as it is rendered differently in various versions, and appears to be susceptible of at least two interpretations. The Greek term translated "within" in the text mentioned is entos, and is found thus rendered in only one other text (Matthew 23: 26), where Jesus says: "cleanse first that which is within the cup." Usually the Greek words used for within are en and esōthen, but en is more often translated among, while entos is nowhere so translated except as it occurs in one or more translations of Luke 17: 21. The Emphatic Diaglott so renders it, making the phrase to read: "God's royal majesty is among you." But in the text in Matthew 23: 26 the Emphatic Diaglott renders the same Greek word "inside."

In the margin of some teacher's Bibles the words "or among you" occur at the Luke 17: 21 text, and the Moffatt Version renders the phrase: "for the reign of God is now in your midst." Some commentators state in substance that the term may mean "in your heart," or may mean that the new dispensation "is even now among you." This appears to be the sense of the text as rendered in the Inspired Version, which reads:

"Neither shall they say, Lo, here! or, Lo, there! For, behold, the kingdom of God has already come unto you."—Luke 17: 21.

Please harmonize Luke 22: 36 with Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13.

In the beginning of their ministry the disciples were sent out by Jesus without purse or scrip (Luke 9: 3; 10: 4). Afterward he instructed them:

"When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one."—Luke 22: 35, 36.

From these facts it would appear that the beginning of Christ's ministry was distinguished by the testing of the people by those who proclaimed his message, but that after this test had been completed they were to provide for themselves such necessary things as the text mentions. In the beginning of the preaching under the era of Joseph Smith the same kind of requirements appear to have been made, hence the revelation states:

"It is expedient that I give unto you this commandment, that ye become even as my friends in days when I was with them traveling to preach this gospel in my power: for I suffered them not to have purse or scrip, neither two coats; behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13.

In these requirements we have similar aims, the testing of the world, and perhaps also the proving of the faith of those who were sent. The Greek terms rendered "purse" and "scrip" would mean in plain English a girdle and bag or satchel, as explained by various translators. Anciently men wore girdles in which they put their money, and also they often carried a bag in which provisions against hunger were carried. The "shoes," which the disciples were at first forbidden to carry with them, were sandals, and this is the term used in Mark 6: 9 concerning the same incident. The ancients appear not to have had shoes such as we now wear, but of course they were worn for similar reasons, the protection of the feet.

May we have spiritual life during our present earthly existence?

Perhaps it is well to distinguish the difference between spiritual life and eternal life. While spiritual life possessed and retained will result in eternal life in a future sense, yet it appears that eternal life is constituted of spiritual life, and hence one possessing spiritual life possesses that life which is eternal—therefore, eternal life. But the word eternal means that which is endless, and the question arises: Can one possess it at one time and then lose it. This, it seems to me, is nearly parallel to a common experience of the child of God, who may possess the Spirit of the Lord, which is eternal, but may at a subsequent time lose the Spirit by transgression. Possession is not absolute ownership, but is in the nature of a trust.

From these observations I would conclude that we may possess spiritual life during our present existence, that life being derived from God and our possession of it being also dependent upon him and our acceptance of the conditions under which we may receive it. In another sense, also, we may have spiritual life, the life of righteousness. For an upright life is a spiritual life, maintained so long as righteousness is observed.

Who were the "barbarians" mentioned in Acts 28: 4?

These were people inhabiting the island of Melita, now called Malta. Their language was unintelligible to the Greeks, hence they were called barbarians, a term meaning an alien or foreigner. It did not mean a barbarous people, as we now use the term.

The Work of the Church

The Church School

Worship Programs for November

(Arranged by Elder and Mrs. D. B. Sorden, Los Angeles, California.)

Introduction

The theme for the month of November is "The Nature of Divinity." The fundamental purpose of Divine revelation is to reveal to mankind the nature of Divinity. We worship a self-revealing God, the most important work of whom is to bring us to an appreciation of Himself. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God." When we come to know God as He is, surely we will so appreciate the wonder and glory and greatness of His person that with Paul, we will say, "We are persuaded that nothing shall separate us from the love of God." "The goodness of God leadeth men to repentance," said Isaiah. So when we understand Him, we will surely repent and whole-heartedly try to become like Him. Now, those to whom He has revealed Himself, in a measure, have frequently left written for all who follow to profit by, their understanding of God. From these scriptures and experiences we learn that our God is a "God of Majesty"; that He is a "God of Wisdom and Loving-kindness" and also that He is a "God of Power." So, in our worship programs for the month, we will sing and pray and read scripture and talk about these characteristics of the "Nature of Divinity." And because these qualities are a part of His inherent nature, on the last Sunday of the month we will consider our obligations to Him.

Officers in charge of these and all worship programs, must realize that considerable time and thought are necessary to the successful conducting of these services. Sufficient advance notice should be given the ones offering prayer, using the call to worship, reading the scripture, and making the theme talk. The service as a whole is to be considered and it is advisable when practicable that the ones taking part should study the program through together, that the continuity may be flowing and smooth.

NOVEMBER 6, 1932

Theme: "The Majesty of God."

Prelude: "Adoration"—From Gaul's "Holy City."

Call to Worship:

Leader: "I will speak of the glorious honor of Thy Majesty of Thy wondrous works. . . . Of Thy works, O God, there is no end. . . . Thou art Lord of Lords, and King of Kings . . . and honor and glory and power and Majesty be unto Thy name for ever and ever."

Response, sung by congregation: "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art." (First verse only) new Saints' Hymnal, 133.

Prayer: The one offering this prayer should spend some time in reading references in the scripture and in thought and in meditation on the theme for today, the Majesty of God, before presuming to voice a prayer on this sublime subject.

Lesson Reading: (An excerpt from "Windows of the Soul," by Ella W. Wilcox.)

Let there be many windows in your soul,
That all the glory of the universe
May beautify it . . . Tear away
The blinds of superstition. Let the light
Pour through fair windows, broad as truth itself,
And high as heaven . . . Tune your ear
To all the wordless music of the stars,
And to the voice of Nature; and your heart
Shall turn to truth and goodness as the plant
Turns to the sun. A thousand unseen hands

Reach down to help you to their peace-crowned heights;
And all the forces of the firmament
Shall fortify your strength.

Seed Thoughts: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power, and the victory, and the Majesty." (1 Chronicles 29.) David here surely sensed one of the important characteristics of Divinity. Some of the Lord's works are awe inspiring in their Majesty; like causing the great change in all the face of the land on the American continent at the crucifixion of Jesus; and like the flowing down of the ice at the presence of the prophets of the Lord's people from the north country when they shall come to Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 108.) To be able to apply such terms as Eternal, Infinite, Endless, Sublime, Alpha and Omega denotes His Majesty. The beauty and order of the universe make one think, not of power, but of Majesty which includes power. As we meditate and ponder on the wonders of creation, we are made to feel that "great is our God and worthy to be worshiped."

Hymn: "The Spacious Firmament on High," new Saints' Hymnal, 119.

Offering: And Jehovah spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they take for me an offering: of every man whose heart maketh him willing ye shall take my offering. (Exodus 25:1-2.)

Hymn: "Blessed Be Thou, O God of Israel," new Saints' Hymnal, 121.

Benediction.

Classes.

NOVEMBER 13, 1932

Theme: "The Wisdom and Loving-kindness of God."

Prelude: "By the Sea," Franz Schubert.

Call to Worship: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

Hymn: "God Is Love," new Saints' Hymnal, 127.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: 1 John 4:9-11.

Seed Thoughts: "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works! in wisdom hast Thou made them all." (Psalm 104.) Since we can do nothing constructive only as we are familiar with and in correspondence with laws concerning that thing, we can only assume that, of necessity, God has vast wisdom in order that the work of creation could be. "Great is our Lord, and of great power; his understanding is infinite." (Psalm 147.)

"The Lord of hosts is wonderful in counsel." (Isaiah 28.)

Now we see particularly in the Doctrine and Covenants that nearly every command given is "in order that you might escape destruction," or that certain "plagues might not be visited upon you," or that "you may sit down with me in my kingdom," or that "you might escape the evil designs of men"; and so we realize that God is anxious for our welfare and is a God of love and kindness. We are the workmanship of his hands and because of that he loves us, and while talking with Enoch he wept because his children so often would not be obedient and were doomed for destruction. "In all their afflictions, He was afflicted." (Doctrine and Covenants 108:10.) Yet, "in His love, and in his pity, he redeemed them." "Behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer." (Doctrine and Covenants 18:2.) He so loved us that, like a mother for her children, he was willing to suffer for his children.

Hymn: "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy," new Saints' Hymnal, 132.

Offering: "And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man or woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing. For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much." (Exodus 26: 6, 7.) Since we do not have enough to carry on the work of the Lord, we must needs bring an offering. It will be received at this time.

Hymn: "Awake, My Soul, in Joyful Lays," new Saints' Hymnal, 35.

Benediction.

Classes.

NOVEMBER 20, 1932

Theme: "The Power of God."

Prelude: "Angelus," from Scenes Pittoresques, Jules Massenet.

Call to Worship: "The Lord God said unto Moses, . . . Worlds without number have I created. For behold, there are many worlds which have passed away by the words of my Power. . . . The heavens they are many, and can not be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine, and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works." (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 7.)

Hymn: "Heaven and Earth and Sea and Air," new Saints' Hymnal, 118.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 1.)

Seed Thoughts: With the God who created the universe, who covered the whole face of the earth with water, who divided the earth from the water and set the bounds of each, who will one day put all the continents in one land and push all the seas back into their original places, who "doeth whatsoever He pleases in heaven and in earth and in the seas and in all deep places," (Psalm 135) there is great power. Truly, "God is mighty in strength and wisdom." To know that he can and does open blind eyes; can and has instantly knit crushed bones; miraculously healed afflicted bodies; brings life into being; knows the end from the beginning; to know these things is to realize that as Jeremiah said in chapter 32, "there is nothing too hard for Thee," and with Jesus, "with God all things are possible." Such a God is entirely worthy to be worshiped, and his counsel to be heeded.

Hymn: "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works," new Saints' Hymnal, 123.

Offering: "And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses. And they come, every one whose heart stirred him up, and everyone whom his spirit made willing, and brought Jehovah's offering, for the work of the tent of the meeting, and for all the service thereof, and for the holy garments." (Exodus 35: 20, 21.)

Hymn: "The Lord Jehovah Reigns," new Saints' Hymnal, 120.

Benediction.

Classes.

NOVEMBER 27, 1932

Theme: Thanksgiving.

Prelude: Air ("Caro Mio Ben"), G. Giordani.

Call to Worship:

Leader: "All things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made." (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4.)

Response by Congregation: "In nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled save those who confess not his hand in all things." (Doctrine and Covenants 59: 5.)

Hymn: "Unmoved by Fear, My Praise Is Due," new Saints' Hymnal, 21.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Book of Mormon, Mosiah 1: 48-54.

Seed Thoughts: To those who are physically and spiritually healthy, life is a privilege. Though there are discouragements and disappointments, there are many joys, many friendships, many happy memories, much satisfaction. To one who helps build or construct or create anything, so that a feeling of ownership comes to the builder, be it house or tree, or plan or character or church, an abiding peace and satisfaction with life comes to one. For these things let us give thanks. The gospel of which we believe we have the clearest conception, inspires us more than any other one thing, to build, and construct and create—to be coworkers with God. So not merely in words but in real helpful gratitude, should we give thanks to God that the fullest measure of the gospel had by any people, has come to us personally. Let us remember that in nothing do we grieve our heavenly Father more than in failing to recognize his benevolence to us.

Hymn: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," new Saints' Hymnal, 428.

Offering: Thanksgiving is an abstract term, the manifestation of which must be seen in order to be understood. Let us now give a specific and concrete expression of our thanksgiving to God for his manifold blessings to us individually by our contribution to the work of God's church.

Hymn: "Praise to God! Immortal Praise," new Saints' Hymnal, 431.

Benediction.

The Children's Division

Worship Programs for November

(Prepared for Junior Worship by Patriarch and Mrs. Richard Baldwin.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "BEING THANKFUL"

FIRST SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1932

Sacrament Sunday

It is suggested that the children meet with the adults for this Sunday, to participate with them in the Sacrament Service.

SECOND SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1932

Theme: "For Peace on Earth."

(Armistice Program.)

Prelude: Familiar hymn played softly.

Call to Worship (Read in Unison):

God of the strong, God of the weak,
Lord of all lands, and our own land,
Light of all souls, from thee we seek Light from thy light, strength from thy hand.

Hymn: "Hymn of Joy," new Saints' Hymnal, 8.

Prayer.

Poem:

PEACE

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, "Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.

—H. W. Longfellow.

Hymn: "In Christ There Is No East or West," new Saints' Hymnal, 342.

Story: "The Iron Cross," page 73 in Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Eggleston.

Sermon: This week we have honored our heroic dead. We went to the cemeteries and laid wreaths on their graves. They died that we might have peace. There is something better than dying for peace—that is to live for it. We must help to bring about God's kingdom upon earth. We must live at peace with our brothers and sisters, with our friends, and with our neighbors. When we become pure in heart Jesus will come to Zion. There will be no war in Zion.

Hymn: "These Things Shall Be," new Saints' Hymnal, 187. Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1932

Theme: "Being Thankful for an Abundant Harvest."
(Thanksgiving Program.)

Prelude: Thanksgiving Hymns.

Call to Worship:

Oh, that men would praise Jehovah for his loving kindness,
And for his wonderful works to the children of men;
Oh, come, let us sing unto Jehovah;
Let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.
Let us come before His presence with thanksgiving.

Hymn: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," new Saints' Hymnal, 428.

Scripture Reading (Responsive):

Leader: O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good.
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: O give thanks unto the God of gods:
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: O give thanks to the Lord of lords:
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: To him who alone doeth great wonders:
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: To him that by wisdom made the heavens;
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.

Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: The Sun to rule by day:
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.

Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: Who giveth food to all flesh;
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.
Leader: O give thanks unto the God of heaven:
Children: For his mercy endureth for ever.

(Psalm 136: 1-9, 25, 26.)

Poem:

WE PLOW THE FIELDS

We plow the fields, and scatter
The good seed on the land,
But it is fed and watered
By God's almighty hand;
He sends the snow in winter
The warmth to swell the grain,
The breezes and the sunshine,
And soft refreshing rain.

He only is the Maker
Of all things near and far;
He paints the wayside flower,
He lights the evening star;
The winds and waves obey him,
By him the birds are fed;
Much more to us, his children,
He gives our daily bread.

We thank thee, then, O Father,
For all things bright and good,
The seed time and the harvest,
Our life, our health, our food;
No gifts have we to offer,
For all thy love imparts,
But that which thou desirest,
Our humble, thankful hearts.

Prayer.

Hymn: "Now Thank We All Our God," new Saints' Hymnal, 427.

Sermon: Talk with the children about the things for which they should be thankful. We should thank God every day, not just on Thanksgiving Day. Help the children to think of kindnesses by which they can show their gratitude for their homes and parents. They may be led to appreciate their church, and to show their love and gratitude. They should be thankful for their friends, and teachers. Thankful for an abundant harvest. Talk about fruits, vegetables, grains, etc. Many do not have these bounties. Maybe a project can be planned, and a basket be filled and given to the needy. We should share our abundance with those in need. We must be thankful to God for everything.

Closing Thought:

Father, we thank thee;
For peace within our favored land,
For plenty from thy bounteous hand
For means to give to those in need,
For grace to help in thought and deed,
For faith to walk, our hands in thine,
For truth to know thy law divine,
For strength to work with voice and pen,
For love to serve our fellow men,
For light the goal ahead to see,
For life to use alone for Thee,
Father, we thank thee.

—Glenville Kleiser.

Hymn: "Praise to God," new Saints' Hymnal, 431. Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1932

Theme: "Being Thankful for the Sacrifice of Pioneers."

Prelude.

Call to Worship:

Leader:
The memory of the righteous is blessed,
Put me in remembrance.

Response:
Be glad in Jehovah, ye righteous;
And give thanks to his holy name.
The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance.

Prayer.

Hymn: "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," Hymnal, 415.

(A brief history of the death of the two martyrs should be related before the following poem is read.)

Poem:

Praise to the Lord for the great restoration,
Brought by the Angel to Joseph the seer,
Blessed to open the last dispensation—
The church to establish, the gospel declare.

Hail to the prophet, ascended to heaven:
Traitors and tyrants now fight him in vain;
Pleading with God in behalf of his brethren;
Death can not conquer that hero again.

Great is his memory—he died as a martyr,
Honored and blest be his ever great name;
Millions will love him, and justice will triumph
For he will arise with his Savior to reign.

Great was his calling and endless his priesthood,
 Ever and ever the keys will he hold;
 Faithful and true he will enter the kingdom,
 Crowned in the midst of the prophets of old.

Hymn Appreciation: "Let Us Shake Off the Coals From Our Garments," new Saints' Hymnal, 188.

(This hymn was written by David Smith, the father of President Elbert A. Smith. In Nauvoo there is a beautiful spot, a quiet glen with a waterfall. The waterfall has worn away the rocks until they resemble the roof of a room. In this secluded spot David Smith wrote a great deal of his poetry. In the "dark and cloudy" day, when workers were few and the church was calling for leadership, this hymn was written. It was in these days that the young Joseph began his work. The rhythm of this hymn is appealing to juniors, and the words are easily understandable after a brief explanation. It is a distinctly Latter Day Saint hymn.)

Sermon:

We can think of no better sermon for this theme than chapter 81 in the Young People's Church History, entitled, "The Blessing of Little Joseph." It may be used to bring to the consciousness of the children the fact that God calls boys and girls to a special work. A sense of responsibility and calling to a task should be developed. The sacrifices of the early Saints are a proof of their love. We wish the children to know that the church has been built up through noble sacrifices of boys and girls, and men and women. When we think of the price they paid we must resolve to be worthy.

Moment of Silence:

(We have tried a moment of silence many times with juniors, and if properly led up to, they are high spots in the worship experience.)

Let us bow our heads for a minute while silently we remember with love and honor those who suffered and died that our wonderful church might be. We thank God for their lives, and we dedicate our lives to carrying on the work they have left for us to do.

The Heavens Declare the Glory of God

By L. L.

It is a hard thing to tell a world of men to get back to God when they do not believe in God. It is a hard thing to teach the laws of spiritual life to a generation of atheists and skeptics. We hold stubbornly to our antiquated disbeliefs. This is the crux of the whole thing. Men need to believe. They must have faith. They need a spiritual and moral code. They need a consciousness of God, of a great purpose and destiny. Without this consciousness they are out of gear with the universe, and their lives become futile and worthless. Man has tried to live without God, and he has made a sorry mess of his life in doing so. If there were no other proof of the existence of God, man's desperate need of Him would be demonstration enough. But, happily, we have at hand greater proofs of the existence of a Creator, upon which we can build our faith. Scientists, once regarded as the foes of religion, now leave us every reason to believe in the existence of a Supreme Being. The scientific materialism of the nineteenth century is as obsolete as the Stone Age.

The world once looked to the clergy as their teachers and moral guides, but unfortunately the clergy has for a time, lost much of the intellectual leadership of the world. Scientists have been regarded as the custodians of truth, and today the world accepts them as their mentors. Must the world learn about God from the scientists? Very well, we can teach the world about God from the words of the scientists. I could bring many statements here from the leading scientists of the world, all pointing to the fact that there is a great Creative and Directive Intelligence at work in the universe. But I will have only time and space for one, and that a recent one.

In the New York Times Magazine for March 13, 1932, Doctor Arthur H. Compton, a winner of the Nobel prize in physics, is quoted as saying: "I can well believe that if intelligent direction is back of the universe, life may be the greatest reality in it."

Then he was asked: "Does science show you intelligent direction in the universe?"

"Yes," said Doctor Compton. "The study of physics has changed my conception of the kind of god, but has strengthened my confidence in the reality of God. I feel surer of a directive intelligence than I did at twenty."

"Why?"

"Because I have seen something of the mechanism of nature—the symmetry of the hydrogen atom, the myriad combinations of carbon molecules, the protoplasmic cell—all built up out of simple units: electrons and protons. It seems to the nth degree improbable that such an intricate and interesting world could have ordered itself out of particles with a random character."

And all of this is consonant with the writing of the Psalmist, who said many centuries ago:

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.

Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world.—Psalm 19: 1-4.

It is pathetic to see a professing Christian get out of the choir-loft and retire to the smoking room, after the morning song service in our recognized churches. It is equally pathetic to see a young man light his cigaret on the church steps after the morning service. As a physician, I am always downhearted to see the future motherhood of our society light her cigaret after the meal.—J. A. William Johnson, M. D., in Christian Standard.

Harvest Festival the Season's Event for Church in Missouri

Thousands of Visitors Thronged Hall

Thousands of visitors thronged the lower hall of the Auditorium at Independence, scene of the fourteenth annual Harvest Home Festival of the church in Missouri and surrounding regions. Between six and seven thousand people viewed the festival on the opening night, October 11, and until the closing hour, six o'clock Sunday evening, visitors from neighboring States and all parts of Missouri flocked to the Saints' Auditorium. Their interest in the mammoth exhibit acknowledges the festival as an established community and State event.

Each evening, with the exception of Friday, concerts by the Auditorium Band, or the Auditorium Orchestra gave musical background to the festival.

Colonial Atmosphere Prevailed

This year commemorating the Bicentennial anniversary of George Washington, the colonial atmosphere prevailed, beginning with a reproduction of Mount Vernon's veranda beautifully landscaped on the lower floor of the room. This piece was contributed and erected by the Y. K. T. Class of the Stone Church. Surrounding the outer walls of the hall were ranged more than a score of interesting booths and counters representing Far West and Kansas City Stakes, Northeastern Kansas District, the Sunny South, Great Northwest, Three-I, and Laurel Clubs, Graceland College, the Herald Publishing House, and all the congregations in Independence. There was also a place for the Harvest Home Festival gift display (mostly quilts and fancywork). The proceeds from the sale of these articles go into the Harvest Festival Fund.

Independence was proud of the Harvest Home Festival this year for almost everyone had part in making it what it was. Outstanding characteristics were the colonial atmosphere and the beauty and uniqueness of booth treatment at minimum expense. The workers were urged to spend as little as possible on decorations, donating the money they might plan to use to the Harvest Festival fund for winter charity. At first the Harvest Festival Committee, composed of Elders John F. Sheehy and C. C. Koehler, and Bishop J. S. Kelley, hoped to combine the entire Independence Harvest Festival gift to the community in one gigantic display with a central colonial theme, but later it was decided, in the face of circumstances, to revert to the old booth plan of display. Workers rallied with original ideas. They borrowed household furnishings and antiques. They ransacked dusty attics, re-vamped decorations, and when they were through, they looked upon their handiwork and proudly told how little money was spent to make it attractive.

Booth Builders Frugally Work Out Clever Ideas

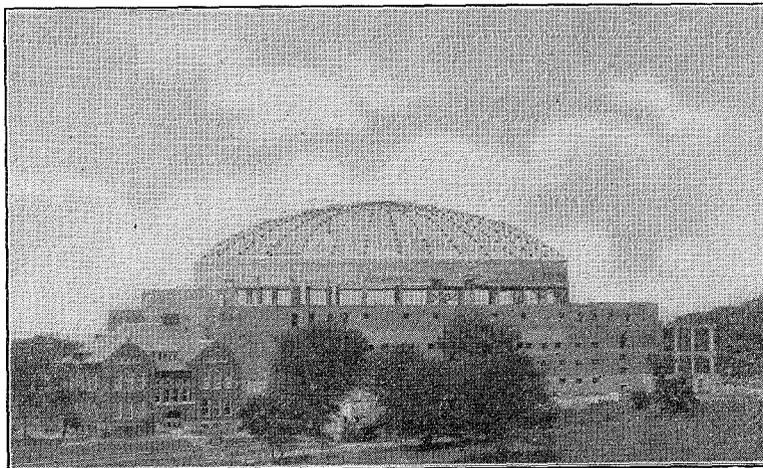

Among the unique booth ideas this year is that presented by Gudgeon Park congregation, a miniature representation of Washington and his soldiers crossing the Delaware. This congregation, composed of less than seventy people some of whom are unemployed, had little money to spend on booth trimmings, but they recognized the value of a good idea. They are proud of their little, throbbing Delaware River with its cotton batting ice chunks, the stockade fort, the tiny colonial soldiers, the dark forest; but most of all they are proud of their gift of fruits and vegetables to the festival. Gudgeon Park spent twenty-three cents on their booth.

Right next door is something very attractive. Spring Branch's booth is draped in sand-colored paper on which is pasted the bright leaves of autumn. The place is a riot of color, and presents one of the most novel and economical layouts of the festival.

Antiques are the Stone Church's specialty in their colonial kitchen.

From the oaken ceiling beams to the many brightly-colored, braided rugs on the floor, everything is decidedly colonial. Here are found a family Bible and mirror more than two hundred years old; a tea canister brought over from England in the family of Jonathan Edwards; an antique clock; candelabra of the "tree of life" design from London; a sturdy spinning wheel; pewter dishes, blue chinaware, and dozens of other articles. With faithful accuracy this room presents old English refinement and comforts in a pioneer setting.

In addition to its usual attractive booth the Great Northwest Club presents a fine exhibit of grains raised in that part of the United States—wheat, barley, grass, oats, timothy, and flax.

On the west side of the hall Englewood congregation has reproduced the home of Betsy Ross, "The Birthplace of Old Glory," and next to it Walnut Park's "Statue of Liberty" stands out in relief before a dark background.

The Sunny South Club exhibits the typical southern cabin of 1899 in contrast with that of 1932. A sunflower-decked spot tells of the presence of Northeastern Kansas District and their gifts.

Behind a roughly-hewn rail fence, covered with climbing beans, the Three-I Club displays its thousands of quarts of goods.

In the Kansas City Stake booth are beautiful paintings of the Father of our Country, Washington at Valley Forge, and Washington the commander of the Colonial troops.

East Independence congregation introduces an innovation, a sand map of the United States, showing the topography of the country, the chief industries, and the extent of the church work in various sections. In the midst of the map (in Missouri) is a tiny Auditorium done in soap, and other places of church history and significance such as Kirtland and Hill Cumorah are appropriately indicated.

Every booth is attractive regardless of the amount that was not spent on it. "Not one cent did we spend," said Sugar Creek workers who rustled about for autumn leaves with bushel baskets. "Only twenty-three cents' outlay for us," from Gudgeon Park. "Fifty-nine cents for us," from another group. And yet this the fourteenth Harvest Home Festival is one of the most beautiful ever held in Independence, and there are on display twenty thousand quarts of canned goods not to mention the raw products of fields, orchards, and gardens.

Booths were judged Thursday and ribbon prizes awarded. Ranks were given under three divisions as follows: Visitors' exhibits, Kansas City Stake, first; Far West Stake, second, and Northeastern Kansas, third. Independence booths: Englewood, first; Walnut Park, second, and Liberty Street, third. Clubs: Three-I, first; Great Northwest Club, second, and the Y. K. T. Class, third. The exhibits were judged on: first, their originality; second, neatness, and third, the amount of fruit displayed.

The school children of Independence, as is the custom every year, were taken to the Auditorium by classes to view the exhibits which always prove of great interest to them.

First Harvest Concert in Auditorium Festival Chorus

The big event of the festival occurred Friday night when the Auditorium Festival Chorus presented its first harvest-time concert. Four hundred and fifty singers from choirs of Independence, Kansas City, Saint Joseph, and other points, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, sang a pleasing variety of numbers, being assisted by Mrs. John Isaacks, soprano soloist; George Anway, tenor soloist; the Midwestern Male Quartet; the Wahdemna Choral Club, and the Auditorium Orchestra, directed by Bishop R. T. Cooper.

From the hymn invitation, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," by the chorus to the closing National Anthem, the audience showed approval and appreciation by respectful attention and applause. Early in the program a group of favorite early hymns of the church touched the heart of every Latter Day Saint present: "The Spirit of God Like a Fire Is Burning"; "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet"; "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel," and "Israel, Awake From Thy Long Silent Slumber." Orchestral contributions were a selection from "Tannhauser," and "The Great Beyond," by Brooks, and the Wahdemna Choral Club sang, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," by Noble; "Wake, Awake," and "Beautiful Savior," arranged by Christiansen.

"Where'er You Walk," by Handel, and "The Eagle," by Sir Carl Busch, were sung by George Anway, director of Central Church Choir, Kansas City, and Mrs. John Isaacks sang "Ava Maria," by Bach-Gounod. Two numbers, "In the Gloaming," and "The Drum," by the Midwesterners Male Quartet composed of Duane Swalley, Roderick May, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold, appealed to the listeners.

But the major part of the program was presented by the chorus which was accompanied in six of its numbers by the orchestra, and sang another half dozen a cappella. "Bless the Lord, O My Soul," from the Russian Liturgy, by Ivanoff, was exceptionally well executed and followed by a beautiful composition of Haydn, "The Heavens Are Telling," from "The Creation." Probably the greatest variety of the concert program came in the last group of numbers by the chorus: "Would God I Were a Tender Apple Blossom," Londonderry Air; "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?" a Negro spiritual; "Steal Away," another Negro spiritual; "Onward Christian Soldiers," and a festival arrangement by O'Hara of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The chorus hopes to make this harvest concert an annual event. Money from the sale of tickets went into the Harvest Festival fund and will be used for charity.

Other Festival Events

The Harvest Festival's program was planned to comprehend the interests of many classes of people. Other events of interest were the ribbon contests. Judging of fruit and vegetables occurred Thursday afternoon. A Better Baby Show for children between two and six years of age was in charge of Mrs. D. S. McNamara Thursday. Friday afternoon the baking contest drew the attention of many housewives. Flower lovers found much to please them at the festival on Saturday afternoon when the Flower Show was in full swing.

Girl Scouts Help

In the northeast corner of the lower auditorium a little apart from the main festival, the Girl Scouts of Independence, remembering their "helpful" law, established a lounging room for the guests of the Harvest Home. This was in the form of an Indian lodge with bright blankets, tepee, posters, handcraft, and other things dear to the hearts of scouts. There the scouts were on duty in out-of-school hours to serve their guests. Troops 10 of Walnut Park, 14 of Liberty Street, and 37 and 46 of the Stone Church and their officers have made possible this service.

Little Journeys With the Editor in Chief

Learns of Olmsted Family Reunion

In the latter part of last August, while on Cape Cod, at the pleasant summer place of Brother and Sister Albert N. Hoxie, where I was reading, writing, and trying to catch up with the work of my perambulating office, I one day received a letter from my sister, Audie, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, inclosing some printed sheets. They were information letters relative to the Olmsted Family, Inc., and the eleventh reunion of the Olmsted Family. Announcement was made that the 1932 meeting (reunions every two years) would be at Ridgefield, Connecticut, in the Parish House of Saint Stephen's Church, "celebrating the tercentenary of the arrival of our ancestors in America (on September 16, 1632)." All of this meant little to me, but my attention was focused on the sheets by a statement in Audie's letter. She said:

"Dear Fred: I am wondering if you expect to be in the East in the middle of September. I am inclosing the material that came today from the Olmsted Family Association, relative to their meeting on September 17. This is such an unusual date, being the three hundredth anniversary on September 16, of the coming to America of our ancestors, that I would give my eyes, almost, to be able to attend."

Now when Mrs. Anderson would give those large, expressive, brown eyes of hers (almost) for the privilege of attending a family meeting, it must hold not a little interest for her. I confess that up to the time she wrote that letter to me I did not know (or if I had known, had forgotten) that among our ancestors was numbered an Olmsted. But knowing her great interest in and extensive knowledge of the various lines of our ancestors, I conceded that if she said there was Olmsted blood in our veins, why it must be so. I had already made an itinerary which would fill dates till my expected arrival at home about the middle of October; but by making a slight change, I found I might squeeze this Olmsted meeting in. Scanning the literature a little more closely and consulting some maps, I learned that Ridgefield is in the extreme southwestern part of Connecticut, about fifty miles from New York City, and near White Plains, and that I could reach it without much trouble en route from Boston to New York, by leaving the main line of the New Haven Road at South Norwalk, Connecticut. And so I made my plans accordingly.

On the Way to Ridgefield, Connecticut

It was on September 16, that I left Boston for Ridgefield. For a few days I had been in Boston, staying at the home of Brother E. L. Traver, while Brother Hanson and I attended a branch business meeting which had considerable local interest.

It was a rainy day, and before leaving the city I went with Brother A. H. Nichols, who had called for me, to see a process of food preservation in which he was interested. Having visited the plant and listened to descriptions of the processes, etc., Brother Nichols and his friends set me and my traveling bags down at the South Terminal Station in Boston, and at eleven o'clock I left the city on a Boston and Albany train which was bound for New York via Worcester, Springfield, and Hartford. At South Norwalk I left the train about four o'clock, in order to go on a branch road to Branchville, whence by bus we were taken to Ridgefield.

Ridgefield is not very far from South Norwalk, which is on the waters of Long Island Sound. In fact, I am told, that from points of vantage in Ridgefield on clear days the waters of the Sound are visible; but in going from Norwalk to Ridgefield the terrain changes markedly from coastal country to hills. Just across the State line between Connecticut and New York, which passes Ridgefield only a few miles away, lie the picturesque Highlands of the Hudson.

Ridgefield itself is some eight hundred feet above sea level, and nearby hills rise to thirteen and fourteen hundred feet. So one can expect the road to Ridgefield to be beautiful. It is. And as we approached the town by bus evidences abounded to substantiate the claim that Ridgefield lies in the midst of one of the most beautiful sections of the State. The road, well laid out and in good condition, winds its way over hill and dale, through forests, and past farms and estates which hold the attention by their beauty. Ridgefield is, I think, one of the prettiest old towns I have ever visited. Trees of great height and beauty hang their graceful boughs over buildings and homes which bespeak the taste of the citizens for aesthetics, cleanliness, and art. Far more than the usual number of large dwellings in spacious and well-kept grounds attract the visitor's attention.

Ridgefield, Center of Wealth

I made mental note of this as we entered the town, and wondered what particular industry indigenous to the town was responsible for such prevalence of wealth. I learned later it was due to emigration, immigration, and propinquity to a great metropolis. The descendants of the old settlers, seeking their fortunes (or misfortunes) elsewhere, sold out to wealthy New Yorkers seeking quietude amidst rural environment, and these New Yorkers have built large homes in settings of more than ordinary beauty. Fine homes and buildings, stately trees, excellent landscaping, and prolific flower gardens all combine to give Ridgefield unique picturesqueness. But then, I saw it at perhaps the most beautiful time of the year, and one can well guess that between the winter solstice and vernal equinox the appearance is somewhat different.

I had sent word ahead for accommodations at "The Elms," as suggested in the letters of information, and from what I had seen of the town on entering, I was not surprised on being set down at that hostelry, to find it standing among some beautiful old trees which had been not a few years in reaching their present proportions. But they had plenty of time for that, for the signboard in front of the building advertised the fact that "The Elms" had been that "since 1799." The well-kept condition, however, disguised the age of the buildings, and only when one observed the architecture, the room arrangement, the wide floor boards, etc., did he see evidences of the age.

Meets Some of the Olmsteds

On registering along with several others who had also come on the bus, I discovered that I had traveled for a short way with some of the Olmsteds. It was near seven o'clock, so cleaning up a bit, I repaired to the dining room, and found my table-mate was a fine appearing elderly gentleman whom I had seen on the bus. I made myself known by saying I was "Smith from Kansas City." Said he: "I am George Olmsted, from New Jersey," and gave the name of a town I did not catch, but which I afterwards learned was Towaco. Thus I met the first of many Olmsteds I was to meet that day and next.

After dinner, in the hall, I saw several men chatting, and gathering from the drift of their conversation that they also were Olmsteds, I approached the group, and when opportunity permitted, addressed one man by saying:

"Are you Mr. Frank Lincoln Olmsted?"

He said he was.

"Well," said I, "I have a message for you. My sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, of Lincoln, Nebraska, wishes to be remembered to you. She has told me of the pleasant correspondence she has had with you relative to family matters." And I gave him my name.

He greeted me kindly, and then I was introduced to the others, another George Olmsted, a Frederick Olmsted and a Colonel Edward Olmsted. And we chatted awhile.

Later in the evening about fifteen of the family gathered in the parlor of the hotel, and after introductions all around, a very pleasant but quite informal meeting of the group was had. The formal meetings were not till the next day.

It was an interesting experience to me to sit thus among a group of people who up to that day were quite unknown to me, who bore another name than mine, and yet who accepted me in their "family circle."

I have at times observed that at these family gatherings there is sometimes a snobbish air displayed. Mother Cobb, my dear old mother-in-law, used to have terms of her own for most things, and this snobbishness she termed "codfish aristocracy." It is a sort of superciliousness which springs from innate desire to be something extraordinary without having the qualities to be such. I had wondered if any of that would be displayed by the Olmsteds. I was much pleased to see none of that spirit among them. There was, of course, much talk about the family, present and past, but it seemed prompted entirely by a desire to know as much as possible of the history connected with it.

The Connection of the Smiths With the Olmsteds

Of course I was asked where I, a Smith, came into the family. Mrs. Anderson had given me an outline, and having memorized part of that, I was able to tell them I was descended from Sarah Olmsted, daughter of Nicholas, who was in turn the son of James Olmsted, who, with two sons and a nephew (Richard), had come over from England in 1632, which event was being duly celebrated by this reunion. But of the movements of the family afterwards I knew little. So I was an interested listener at that family gathering, and picked up quite a bit of information along that line.

I discovered that Frank Lincoln Olmsted seemed to be the historian of the group, and after hearing him tell entertainingly of several historical matters, was not surprised to learn he was a Harvard graduate, his specialty being history.

There may be one or two of the readers of these Little Journeys who have an interest in knowing the connection of the Smiths with the Olmsteds. So I borrow from Audie's letters to me enough to tell you. Quoting from her letter of September 14:

"Dear Fred: I was thrilled to get your letter this afternoon telling me you thought you would try to make the Olmsted meeting at Ridgefield, Connecticut, next Saturday. I know the time is short, but I will try to get this to you, sending it in care of the president of the Olmsted Family Association. . . ."

"James Olmsted was a widower when he came to America in 1632, and brought with him two sons, Nehemiah (who died young leaving only one daughter, so the name died out at once in that line) and our ancestor, Nicholas. He also brought his nephew, Richard, from whom many of the American Olmsteds are descended, and a niece, Rebecca. The family came from Essex, and it was out to old Olmsted Hall that I went with Brother Judd and Brother Paul M. Hanson in the summer of 1929. The old hall was listed in William the Conquerors' tax survey, the 'Domesday Book,' of 1085, or thereabouts. I saw the original Domesday Book in a Museum in London. It is all written by hand in careful Latin characters. Had I not the page references I could not have found the entry which interested me. I do hope the Olmsted family of America will find a way to buy the old hall, or at least get some permanent foothold there.

"James Olmsted was not young when he came to America; he did not remarry. It was that family that brought the famous baby christening blanket, which is carefully cherished. The church yard at Fairsted, the last English home of the family, is the resting place of a number of children and of the wife of the American immigrant."

From another letter, also written on September 14, I quote again:

"Dear Fred: In my haste a few minutes ago (in order that Rogene could mail the letter as she went out) I neglected to give what perhaps would be the most interesting information to you, about the Olmsted connection, viz., your line of descent.

"1. James Olmsted married Joyce Cornish, in England. He died in 1640, at Hartford, Connecticut.

"2. Nicholas Olmsted married Sarah Loomis, of Windsor. He died in 1684.

"3. Sarah Olmsted married Captain George Gates, and lived in Haddam, Connecticut. Their seventh child was:

"4. Daniel Gates, born 1680; married Rebecca Dutton. Their first child was:

"5. Daniel Gates, born 1706, at East Haddam, Connecticut, who married Lydia Fuller, a descendant of Edward Fuller of the Mayflower. Their oldest child was:

"6. Lydia Gates, born 1732; married Solomon Mack, of Lyme, County, a soldier in French and Indian Wars and in the Revolution.

"7. Lucy Mack, youngest of eight children, was born four days after July 4, 1776, the day of the Declaration of Independence. She married twenty years later Joseph Smith, descended in the fifth generation from Robert Smith, immigrant settler at Topsfield, Massachusetts.

"8. Joseph Smith, born at Sharon, Vermont, 1805; died at Carthage, Illinois, 1844; married Emma Hale in 1827, a descendant of John Heald, of Concord, Massachusetts, in 1635, native of Berwick-on-Tweed, in north of England.

"This is hasty, but will perhaps give you a birdseye view of 'where you are' among the Olmsted members. As you see we stayed in the Olmsted family but the one generation, for it was through Nicholas's daughter we descended. However, that does not matter in a genealogical relationship except in some groups, such as the Founders and Patriots, which demand a descent through the male lines."

So there! You know as much as I do about my being of Olmsted extraction. In the course of the evening's talk and the meetings the next day I learned that from the same source come all the Olmsteds in America, that the family is scattered well over the entire United States. In the gathering on Saturday some eight States were represented: Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Indiana, Michigan, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Missouri.

It was quite late when the informal gathering broke up for the night, but before retiring I wrote a letter to Audie telling her of the happenings.

Mr. Rockwell, the Historian Postmaster

The next morning, inquiring of the landlord, Mr. Wallace, where the post office is located, I was directed to the spot, and told to be sure to introduce myself to Mr. Rockwell, the postmaster. On reaching the post office I inquired, found Mr. Rockwell, introduced myself and received a hearty welcome. He is the author of a large volume on the history of Ridgefield, and is full of the subject. He is a steady talker, jovial and genial, and a descendant of one of the early Ridgefield families. While I was talking with him two of the Olmsted men came in, Frank L., and Frederick H., and Mr. Rockwell insisted on showing us about a bit. So in his Dodge car, going first to the hotel, where we were joined by Mr. George Olmsted, of Chicago, we were taken for a fine and interesting ride about Ridgefield and some of its environs.

Mr. Rockwell seemed to know every home and person about the country, and conversant as he is with the early history of Ridgefield, in a running fire of talk, he most entertainingly told us of the Revolutionary battle fought there on April 27, 1777; of General Wooster's fight and death; of Arnold's fight and escape; of the burning of many of the houses by the British under General

Tryon, etc. Homes of famous persons were pointed out—Farrar, the ball player and father of Geraldine; the Baileys of show fame; Charles Dana Gibson's son; Ogden Mills now United States Secretary of the Treasury, and many others.

One thing however detracted somewhat from our pleasure. Mr. Rockwell is an earnest and rapid talker, but I would say not so skillful in driving as in telling history. At any rate, so it appeared to us. With the car running at thirty-five or forty miles an hour on a narrow, and at times steep road, bordered by rocks and trees, while Mr. Rockwell waved his arm towards houses here and monuments there—well, it was not exactly nerve quieting. I wondered if the others felt as I did about it, and learned afterwards that they did.

We quite thoroughly enjoyed this ride, and Mr. Rockwell's knowledge of local history and his power to tell it with facility. But of this I am quite convinced: for real comfort on such trips, the man at the wheel and the man describing the country and pointing out its beauties and places of interest should not be the same person. I believe the others in that car will agree with me.

Religious Ceremony Opens Reunion

We got back to town (the trip had taken us into New York State) in time for the first meeting of the day. It was a religious service held in Saint Stephens and conducted by the Reverend H. B. Olmsted, of Rockville, Connecticut, and in which the names of the recently deceased members of the family were read.

Saint Stephens Church in which those exercises were held, while housing a congregation whose beginnings go back more than two centuries, was built in 1915. It was designed by an architect who was the son of a former pastor. Architecturally it is one of the neatest and prettiest small church buildings I have seen. Its interior reminds one of that of Kirtland Temple, and I hope later to get some photographs of it for use.

Formal Meetings on Saturday

After the religious services, the Olmsteds met at the parish house of Saint Stephens, and the formal meetings began. What with registration, and address of welcome by the pastor of Saint Stephens, individual identification of those present, and an interesting paper by Mr. Rockwell on "The Olmsteds in Ridgefield and Early History of the Town," the forenoon was well and busily spent, and at The Elms at the noon hour the "dinner" of the family gathering was held. An interesting feature was that an Olmsted from Detroit, who was celebrating his ninety-first birthday, was present. With his son, grandson, great-grandson, and some women of the family, he had by auto come from Detroit, and was en route to Saint Petersburg, Florida. Their table was decorated with an appropriate birthday cake, illuminated by candles in plentiful number.

At the afternoon session an interesting paper was read by Mr. Frank Olmsted in which was presented a journal of one of the family who as seaman and officer had passed through some thrilling experiences in the early wars of the country. Mr. Olmsted also had with him a photographic reproduction of the "Domesday Book," or at least of that portion giving the survey of Essex County.

Of course the usual photograph was taken. Altogether the day was one of interest to me and I enjoyed meeting and becoming acquainted with those whose ancestors were also mine.

When it came to looking up the matter of finding transportation out of Ridgefield, I was confronted with some difficulty. Trains ran at rather long intervals, and after three thirty it was impossible to make train connection. But in the course of the day I had met an Olmsted from Trenton, New Jersey, who in his car had come alone. He planned to return to New Jersey on Sunday, and gave me a cordial invitation to ride with him as far as New York. I accepted.

Attends an Episcopal Service

Saturday evening I spent largely in writing and also part of Sunday morning. But I went to Saint Stephens Church, and as one of a rather small congregation heard the Reverend Lusk read his ritual, make his prayer, and preach his sermon. It is not often that I have opportunity to see and hear an Episcopal service.

Mr. Rockwell in his car took me back to the hotel, and on the portico a number of us were exchanging addresses, etc., when a newspaper reporter for a Danbury paper came to learn from Colonel Ed. Olmsted something about the meeting, the attendance, etc. I, too, was subjected to an interview.

After dinner, Mr. Theodore H. Olmsted, of Trenton, called for me, and in his car we started for New York City, going via White Plains. It was a very pleasant day, the scenery fine, Mr. Olmsted a good driver (a locomotive driver by profession), and I enjoyed the trip.

Now a little more about Ridgefield. I was, of course, interested in learning what I could about its history. And here are some things I learned from various sources:

Early Days in Ridgefield

In 1708, Catoonah, sachem of the Ramapoo Indians, sold for one hundred pounds sterling, a tract of land bounded on the north and east by the town of Danbury, south by the town of Norwalk, and west by the State of New York, a tract of land approximately twenty thousand acres. The purchasers were twenty-nine men from Norwalk, and three from Milford. Later other parcels were added by further purchases, the last being in 1739. The Indians called the place or land Candatowa, meaning high land. The elevation is about eight hundred feet. Three surveyors were appointed by the General Assembly, and it is interesting to note that the Indians gave a regular deed, which was duly recorded, the deed being dated September 30, 1708.

The town site was selected along the central of three high ridges, commanding views of both Long Island Sound on the south and east and the Highland of the Hudson on the West. The town was laid out along a street six rods wide planned generally north to south. It is Main Street. On either side lots were laid out, two and one half acres in area. In the center of the town a "Green" was formed, to be used or occupied by town house, meeting house, and school. On the east and west ridges five acres of pasture were assigned to each town lot. At the north end of the street stands a large rock called Settlers Rock. It is recorded that the settlers on first coming slept on this great rock, as a protection against the howling beasts of the forests.

In November, 1708, the twenty-five home sites, or lots, were distributed by drawing. "Lottery" may be derived from this and similar instances of "drawing" for "lots." Among the list of those drawing lots I saw the names of a Samuel Smith, an Ebenezer Smith, and a Thomas Smith, all of Milford. I have no idea that these were of our ancestors—probably not; but among the other names is that of Richard Olmsted, one of the ancestors of the Olmsteds who had gathered to keep alive family traditions. It is interesting to note that the lands other than town lots, or home sites, were at first open, and pastured in common. Then they were distributed among the owners, about 1760, and enclosed.

The town grew quite steadily. Industries were added as needed till with agricultural facilities the citizens became quite self-sustaining and had surplus to sell. And so the community grew in wealth and influence.

Ridgefield During the Revolution

It is quite to be expected that Ridgefield played its part in the developments of the Revolutionary period. It is worthy of note that in January, 1775, in a public meeting in the town hall, the people of Ridgefield avowed their loyalty to Great Britain; but by December of that same year they had reversed their opinion on the question of loyalty to the Mother Country, and on the seventeenth of that month rescinded the action of January and joined with the Colonies in the long struggle for national independence. They contribute both means and men to carry on the fight.

In April, 1777, General Tryon, a British officer, at the head of a force of English troops, marched to Danbury to destroy some military stores. He was returning to the coast when General Wooster, of the American forces, fell upon him while the men were at breakfast in camp just north of Ridgefield. And during the day Tryon's troops were harassed by the American Continentals. The outcome was changed probably by the fall of Wooster who was mortally wounded in the second engagement of the day and died five days later. Just in the north edge of Ridgefield the Americans made another attempt to stop the British. The Americans here, a mere handful, were led by Arnold, who narrowly escaped capture or death. Sixteen royalists and eight patriots were killed in the skirmish.
