The real business of the conference began at two o'clock in the afternoon. About 3,000 people attended. The first day, as usual, was occupied with the routine of getting conference organized for action. The First Presidency were appointed to preside over the conference, and to complete the organization and arrange the order of meetings. The first report to be received was that of the Credentials Committee, which was printed in the Daily Herald. President Frederick M. Smith then delivered his address to the conference which will appear elsewhere in this publication.

Clearing the Church Records

An important event of this day's business was the presentation and discussion of the Report of the Department of Statistics by Elder Carroll L. Olson, Church Statistician. Brother Olson said that repeated and diligent efforts had failed to reveal the addresses or whereabouts of 8,840 persons whose names were carried on the church rolls and counted among the total numbers of the church membership. Brother Olson therefore proposed the following resolution:

Resolved: That when persons have been reported unknown, and after a diligent effort to locate them has been made by the branch, district and stake officers, and by the general church office through publication in the Herald or other means, without success, the Church Statistician shall be authorized to subtract the total of such unknown names from the total reported membership of the church. Upon any such persons being subsequently located they shall be enrolled with the appropriate branch, district or stake and added to the total reported church enrollment.

Acting on this order the Statistician is authorized to deduct the names of the 8,840 from the total membership of the church, which reduces the present membership of the church to the figure of 101,774.

Graceland College Trustees Elected

The Report of Graceland College was then received and discussed by President G. N. Briggs of that institution. In the election of members for the Board of Trustees made necessary by the expiration of terms the following persons were selected: Blair Jensen to succeed W. E. Prall; G. L. DeLapp, Audentia Smith Anderson, and A. Carmichael all re-elected; and Charles F. Grabske to succeed W. E. Hayer.

Presiding Bishopric Reports

The Report of the Presiding Bishopric, together with the report of the Church Auditor concerning it, was the important business of the day. President Smith presented Bishop L. F. P. Curry, who discussed the report, the financial program of the church, and our responsibility concerning that program.

Bishop Curry reiterated a stand already explained in the columns of the Herald on various occasions. The obligation is very heavy, but it must be met. As long as it stands in the way, the work of the church will necessarily be hampered. It is possible, if everybody will work and sacrifice, to lift the debt and meet all outstanding obligations. Only disaster can face us if we attempt to avoid any part of our responsibilities. Honesty, honor, the character and reputation of the church, and plain common sense indicate no other course than to meet our obligations and to do it as soon as possible. And it is worth our while so to do, for the church, its work, and its message are of inestimable worth and importance to us. At a pace of steady giving, it is quite possible to rid the church of its debt in a period of about fifteen years. Bishop Curry advises against the hasty consideration of any other plan, and insists that we should know how we are to carry out the details of any plan before carrying it out.

The Report of the Appropriations Committee, covering the expenditures for various departments for the years 1930 and 1931, and the appropriation for the year 1932, was received and adopted.

Important Documents Introduced

A recommendation was presented that the General Conference reaffirm the belief of the people of the church in a number of teaching objectives for the church. Consideration of this document was deferred until next day. The document is of such importance that our readers may expect to read more of it in the columns of the Herald at some near date in the future.

Another document of great interest was presented from the Joint Council, entitled "The Next Steps in Religious Education." This was referred to a council of Presidency, Quorum of the Twelve, and Quorum of Seventy. It will also probably receive further treatment, contingent upon the disposal of it made by that body.

Saturday, April 9

The Presidency presented a document from the Joint Council affecting the manner of selecting the members of the Board of Trustees for the Herald Publishing House. Hitherto the membership of the Board of Trustees have been, ex officio, a member of the First Presidency, a member of the Quorum of Twelve, and a member of the Presiding Bishopric, and two others chosen by these three. After providing for the rescinding, with a certain exception, of General Conference Resolution found on page 3843 of the General Conference Minutes, the resolution made provision for the selection of Trustees by the Presiding Bishopric, subject to the approval of conference. Vacancies occurring between conferences were to be filled by appointments made by the remaining members of the Board.

Action on this important measure was deferred until Monday, when the resolution could be put before the conference in print for further consideration.

Action was taken approving the recommendations for the ordination to the office of high priest of the following men: Daniel B. Sorden, Alma K. Dillee, Carroll L. Olson, Howard Anderson, Leonard Lea, Harry Barto, J. Stanley Kelley, E. Guy Hammond, and W. John Swain.

Another important item of business concerned a document introduced by the Quorum of Twelve concerning the work and responsibility of the Presiding Bishopric, which will be treated more fully under date of further action upon it. Consideration of the document was deferred until Tuesday at 10 a. m.

The lengthy report on "Church Court Procedure" was adopted, and we may expect to have more about it in the Herald at a later time when its important features may be discussed.

Elder E. Y. Hunker was approved for ordination as one of the presidents of Seventies.

A motion for the reorganization of the Standing High Council was approved. The following men were approved as new members of the Council: A. B. Phillips, Amos E. Allen, Alma K. Dillee, Harry Barto, Howard Anderson, Carroll L. Olson, Leonard Lea, J. Stanley Kelley.

The document on the matter of selecting the members of the Board of Trustees of the Herald Publishing House was approved. The manner of selection is described in the following extract from that document:

"Be it further resolved, That it is the opinion of the Order of Bishops that the Articles of Trust Agreement of the Herald Publishing House be modified to provide that the Presiding Bishopric, in their selection of trustees from time to time, elect those only who are sustained by the General Conference; but in event of vacancies in the Board of Trustees by death or resignation between General Conferences, such vacancies be filled by the remaining trustees by and with the consent of the Presiding Bishopric."

In rescinding certain portions of the former resolution, the following matter was recommended for preservation:

"Be it further resolved, that the Board of Publication should recognize the First Presidency as being in general editorial charge of the various periodicals of the church."

An effort was made to remove the control of the editorial policy of church publications from the hands of the First Presidency, by an amendment to have the above passage stricken out. After considerable discussion this amendment was lost, and the original motion, including the above provision for editorial control in the hands of the First Presidency, was approved.

Sunday, April 10

Regular Sunday school work was organized for local residents and for visitors to the conference in various places in the Auditorium and the Stone Church. Devotional services were also conducted for young and older people. At the eleven o'clock hour President Elbert A. Smith spoke to an audience of about six thousand people in the Auditorium on the subject, "Go Ye Into All the World." He gave a stirring plea for the missionary work of the church. At 3 p. m. The Messiah was rendered before an audience that packed every seat and took all available standing room in the great audience chamber. A full account of this event is contained elsewhere in this issue.

At the evening service President Frederick M. Smith spoke to another congregation of fully six thousand people on the subject, "Sure Promises Concerning Zion." This theme provided a fitting close for a day that was filled with thoughtful activity and devotion.

Monday, April 11

Several important events occurred in the business of this day. The Joint Council presented a document entitled, "Ministerial Standards and Procedure." This document should go far toward unifying the procedure in the calling and ordaining of men for the priesthood, and help in the prevention of irresponsibility in this important matter. Action was deferred, and will be taken up again.

A time limit for the introduction of new business was set at 3 p. m. on Wednesday, April 13.

A motion for the refunding of bonds of $25 and $50 denominations to the amount of $22,475, which will fall due in July, was approved, in order that family allowances might the more easily be paid.

An Experience in Blessing and Baptizing Children

In his memoirs, President Joseph Smith, telling of one of his visits to Jonesport, Maine, speaks of having been called upon to bless a group of babies, and name some of them. Then he tells of another later visit in which he baptizes that same group. Let him tell it in his own way:

I was here permitted, on the last day of my stay, to engage in blessing some twelve or fifteen babies. None of these were many months old, for the Saints had evidently made it a rule not to neglect their privileges in regard to this beautiful ordinance.

It is of interest to know that fifteen years later, upon the occasion of my second visit to that branch, I was permitted to baptize most of these same children, then grown-up, youths and maidens. The ceremony was performed in a little cove, where the sea came up and receded with the regular movements of the tide—a most beautiful place for the service. There, with scarcely an exception, for there had been no deaths among them, I was privileged to induct into the kingdom these same precious souls upon whom I had asked divine blessing fifteen years before. This seemed to me a remarkable experience.

Faith and Confidence

Faith in the future of the church—confidence that we will pull through in spite of the enormous difficulties in our way—these are the dominant moods of the General Conference.

Discouraged by the effects of a prolonged depression, somewhat apprehensive of the changes that might be brought at the coming conference, many people saw its approach in a serious and somewhat troubled state of mind. It was hoped that the church would find a way to reach a happy solution of its problems.

But now that the people are here and the work of conference is actually under way, the atmosphere has clarified and everybody feels better about the prospects.

"Meet together often" is the commandment to the church, and it is probable that the people never came together to better advantage than at this time. The joy of reunions, the happiness of meeting old and new friends, and the exchange of testimonies of faith have brought courage anew to the hearts of the people.

The tasks are still there, but they do not seem insurmountable. The problems are still to be solved, and the work to be done, but with the aid of the people who have met here the work can be done.

In loneliness and solitude man has ever turned to despair. In the company of his friends he has found cheer and faith, and the courage to take up his burdens again and go forward with his work.

The association of our friends, the kindly words, the sincere greetings, have never meant more to us that they do now. If only all the members of the church could be here to enjoy the good feast of the spirit we feel certain that they would be immeasurably strengthened and cheered.

And those who have gathered to Independence for the period of conference have not selfishly enjoyed their happiness unmindful of others. They have daily remembered the friends who must remain at home, and they feel sure that some measure of the peace and assurance that they feel must be shared by all of the members of the church wherever they may be.

The prayers and faith of the conference go out to the people of the church. And we know that the people of the church everywhere are praying for the conference.

The plan of the Presiding Bishopric for the liquidation of the church debts provides a course of action. What is needed now is the faith and confidence and the sacrificial effort of the people to relieve the church of its burdens and make possible the resumption of our tasks of evangelizing the world and building the Zion of our dreams.

Of one thing the people of the church may be assured: this is a legislative conference. Officers, quorums and delegates are striving to work out upon the conference floor the plans for action that will lead the church forward toward the accomplishment of its ideals.

"The Messiah" Is the Big Event of Conference

The conference seven thousand strong, paused Sunday afternoon from its rush of services to listen to the performance of one of the most beautiful and famous oratorios ever written, Handel's Messiah. The conference chorus of four hundred and fifty voices, directed by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied by a fifty-piece orchestra, began its concert at three o'clock. Soloists were picked from the ranks of the church's best singers: Soprano, Mrs. Nina Grenawalt Smith, of Independence; contralto, Miss Pearl Kinneman, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; tenor, Mr. George Anway, of Independence, and bass, Mr. Colin Ferrett, of Graceland College. Pianists were Mrs. Lester Connelly, of Kansas City, and Mrs. Arch Campbell and Mr. Harold Buseth, of Independence.

This was the most outstanding rendition of The Messiah ever given in Independence, according to musicians, and the contribution of the singers was greatly enhanced by the work of the orchestra. The Spirit of the Messiah was there to give meaning to the beautiful solos, and the work of the chorus, especially adapted to the size and acoustics of the Auditorium, added height and depth to the conference musical message.

As a mark of respect to Patriarch John T. Gresty, the vast audience, at the request of President F. M. Smith, stood silent for a moment preceding the opening overture. Much of the success of the performance on Sunday was due to the zeal of Brother Gresty in rehearsing and arranging the orchestral score. His absence was deeply regretted. Also the work of the chorus reflected credit upon all local musical leaders who trained singers for the performance.

"I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes"

This morning I climbed a hill. It was an unforgettable experience for the slopes of the hill were in new spring dress of green and the line of its rounded summit ran before my eyes. Suddenly, miraculously, there burst upon me from over the hilltop a glorious sunrise.

The incident brought to my mind the opening verse of one of our beautiful Psalms: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." In this bit of Scripture the hills are regarded as symbols of the strength, help, incentive, and courage which come from higher and holier things. For these things we have but to lift our eyes. There are many people who all their life long have struggled against great odds but have been happy and helpful because they lift their eyes to spiritual hills and who, climbing, experience a sort of soul sunrise. They have prepared themselves and their friends for the light which latter-day revelation has said shall break forth.

Looking up, we shall make our own some of the wisdom and understanding of the Infinite. Looking up, we shall forget injustice, quarrelsomeness, pettiness, sordidness. Looking up, we shall be able, as the hymn words it, to "laugh and love and lift." Looking up, we shall be given grace to grow in the likeness of Christ.

Let us each one this day resolve: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills."

Death of H. R. Harder

Notice of the death of H. R. Harder, at Wilburton, Oklahoma, came by telegram to the church authorities at the business session on Saturday, April 9. Brother Harder was eighty-four years of age, a veteran in the work of the church. The death was sudden and unexpected.

The Mother's Club of Independence, which sponsors the nursery at the Sanitarium, has been working for some time to accumulate stock, anticipatory of the needs of the new and larger hospital.

At present they have several hundred garments on hand. An inventory has not been made recently but a previous check showed some hundred and fifty dresses, beside bands, mattress covers, squares and blankets.

About $250 of their $500 pledge has already been raised, and a quilt is on hand from which they hope to realize a nice profit within the next month or six weeks.

President Frederick M. Smith's Address to General Conference

A splendid spirit prevailed in the Auditorium as President Frederick M. Smith arose to deliver his annual message. The message follows:

To the General Conference:

The conditions under which we meet are unlike those surrounding other General Conferences. These unusual conditions will perhaps mark this Conference as outstanding in our history. The world is sick, economically, industrially and even politically; and the diagnosis as yet remains undetermined. The cause of the illness being thus unknown, there is confusion as to the therapeutics and even greater doubt as to the prognosis or course of the disease or disorder. The depression takes on the characteristics of panic, though we courageously try to call it by a milder name. Loss of confidence is quite evident though this may not be held to be the prime cause of our troubles. Anyway it is put, we as a church, along with others, have been affected by the prevailing slow up in the business world. To trace the course of the forces responsible for this is beside the purposes of this address. Suffice it to say that the effect was felt in at least two major ways, viz., reduction in income because of lessened financial powers of our contributors, and a curtailment of credit. Our creditors, also feeling the pressure of financial upset and stresses, began to make their presence quite emphatically known to us.

The whole debt of the church was not a matter of sudden development. Its growth covers the period of a decade or more, and crept steadily upon us because we had a false sense of security in that our credit remained good. Curtailment of expenses should really have begun ten years ago.

A year ago, however, or a little more, this problem was attacked by the officials of the church, and the history making councils of February and September, 1931, were the result. The results of the work of these councils is quite widely known.

There are some perhaps who even yet are disposed to concern themselves about fixing the blame. Important as this might be, it is far more important to find and feel our way out of the dilemma. This the councils tried to do and we are still trying.

Financially we started the program of rigid economy more than a year ago. The results of that are reflected in the report of the treasury, which will be presented in detail to the Conference Friday, the 8th. This report should be carefully and coolly scrutinized by the delegates and ex officios.

The errors of a decade can hardly be corrected in a year; but that we have made progress is apparent from observation of our financial report, for it shows that 1931 closed with a surplus of income over expenses in operating expense.

Whenever emphasis is of necessity laid upon a special objective, we are likely to lose sight temporarily of others. It is thought by some that we have in prosecuting our debt reduction plan laid or are laying greater stress upon raising the budget than upon spiritual and ceremonial activities. This is scarcely true, though it is generally conceded that we as others must reevaluate our spiritual stock in store. Everywhere there is an apparent return towards religious foundations. Adversity is again proving an ally of righteousness in turning people towards God. Our own difficulties, if properly faced, will doubtless be effective in turning us more definitely towards our fundamentals and objectives, in efforts to reevaluate them. And while we may be temporarily checked in putting into effect some of the practical applications of our religion in the way of contributions to social welfare in a religiously organized industry we can not but feel that in getting on safer and surer financial foundations we are but organizing for a more definite drive in the direction of Zion conditions later.

Our fundamentals remain always the same, even though they may temporarily be obscured or dimmed by the mist of misspent efforts. In God we still trust, and Christianity still shines as the hope of our world. Divine authority in church organization still holds us in its grip, while the social application of the Christian gospel and its principles still affords us our great goal and objective in the practical application of our religion to the construction of a social order which according to our beliefs will remedy the maladjustments of present disorders in society. And towards these goals we must ever keep our faces turned, constantly seeking those roads which carry us there.

Never for a moment can we afford to lose sight of that great objective of the church, "every man a steward." To cease teaching this is to forget one of the chief purposes of our organization as a church. The doctrine of stewardships should find its place in every missionary effort made by our missionaries, either individually or in groups. It may well be made the climax of such efforts, the principles of the gospel being presented as clearly bearing upon the regeneration of the individual being complete only when he emphatically declares under the impulsion of divinely motivated faith, "I will become a steward."

To inculcate the principles of Zion stewardship must become the dominant factor in every religious educational movement or activity in branch, district, stake, or center place. It must continue to find prominent place in every course of instruction calculated to improve the education and equipment of our ministers.

It must find place in every presentment of our financial or temporal plan as well as our spiritual program. The selection and making, or setting apart of stewards must ever be a chief concern of our leading quorums and officials. And this responsibility the Presidency and Bishopric can not escape. But of course in this as in other matters pertaining to the work of the church in carrying on to its ideals, there must be kept ever in mind the necessity for and wisdom of common understanding which makes for solidarity. In this we have been lacking far too much. The reasons for this lack should be carefully sought and rectifying measures instituted as rapidly as possible, so that when some present hindering obstacles shall have been overcome or removed the work of setting apart stewards may go on not only unobstructedly but on a secure and sound basis which will insure permanency, and with some degree of expedition. In this work false starts are painful and harmful. There are certain officers upon whom definite responsibilities have been fixed in this work, and these officers should have the support of the church in all its departments. The task is onerous; but it is glorious in its prospects, and the effective discharge of this responsibility is closely connected with the success of the church.

In curtailment of expenses for which the general church treasury was responsible, there was an apparent necessity to reduce the number of men under appointment to give all their time to church activity. This has in some quarters been looked upon as a reduction of man power; but the fine spirit displayed by most of the men released supports the belief of some of us that this curtailment of general appointive list has but shifted greater responsibility upon the local priesthood. It is not at all improbable that the presence of general conference appointees in branches and districts has at times slowed up activities by the local priesthood. Resumption of responsibility by local organization has already resulted in increased local activities in several directions. Add to this the unquestioned reawakened interest in religion, and we have several factors in view which afford opportunity for greatly increasing our activities throughout the church, despite the reduced force of general church workers. Every branch and district is urged to make every effort possible to have every man in the priesthood at work every minute he can, and every member alert to his church duties.

The apparent inability of the church in its scattered condition to be effective in alleviating distress among its members brought on by untoward economic and industrial conditions, to relieve the pinch of poverty by affording or offering means of self-help, presents to us in irrefragible argument the importance and necessity of the gathering as outlined to us in Divine command, lo! these many years.

To this, attention has been called, again and again. Once more we emphasize it. The reasons for the gathering by a people holding to our beliefs in a social order based on a religious dynamic in industry and economics, are logically apparent. Add to this the Divine commands given so long ago and so often repeated and emphasized, and we have left no excuse to dally in carrying into effect these self protective measures.

But it remains still necessary for the warning to be raised, Let the gathering be carried out in order and according to the methods outlined in Divine instructions.

To this problem the members of the Bishopric are addressing themselves. It is their duty so to do. And in cooperation with the Presidency and other officials, the details of the gathering will be worked out as time, opportunity, and Divine direction and wisdom will permit. In this task the Saints are urged to cooperate also, so that in due time the purpose of God may be worked out, and his will ultimately be achieved in the gathering of the Saints to Zion.

The ultimate goals or objectives of the church must never be lost to sight. That great ultimate goal is the perfection of the Saints in Zion the Beautiful, where in the midst of a perfected social order the will of God is done so nearly, that the Son of Man will be justified in coming again to his own. What a task, and what a goal! To catch even a faint glimpse of it in all its glory, involves us in a whirl of emotion which lifts us up into heavenly realms.

But between the here and the then, between what we have accomplished and what we must do, between what we are and what we must then be, lies a road so long and so difficult to traverse, that many minor objectives lie between us and our great goal. These minor objectives may be seen more clearly because they lie nearer. It is well for us to keep these goals in the center of our activity. And while we have laid down a course of activity to follow in paying the debt within a certain time, as a preliminary to, or preparation for, the greater task lying still beyond, so, too, there should be concerted movement towards the minor objectives lying this side our major goal. In fixing these goals there should be common understanding, and common endeavor in reaching them. The officials of the church besides giving consideration to the financial problems have been working out the points of progress towards which we should next move. In due time these agreed upon markers of progress to be reached will be presented to the Quorums and to the delegates, and eventually to the church members.

And it will be well with us as a church if these will be seized upon by the entire membership as a guide to their churchly activities. Too long have we been weakened and our efforts dissipated by the Saints listening to the carping critics, and their progress hindered by doubts stirred up by mischief makers, inordinately ambitious office seekers, and self-appointed regulators. There is happiness and progress to be found by the Saints in keeping close to the commandments of God and following the leadership of those whom God has appointed.

Long ago Divine command admonished us to cease contention. This admonition has been iterated. Until we learn to work in unity our progress will be retarded. So long as we retard our development by persistent contention, so long we grieve the Master who would have us one in purpose and work. From contention the members holding priesthood have not been free. This has greatly hindered the work.

Once more the admonition is given, Cease contention and unite in endeavor to achieve the goals and objectives which have been fixed, marching steadily on towards the greatest of all our fixed objectives, Zion. For Zion the Beautiful still beckons us on, and is pleading to be redeemed, so that out from her the beauty of holiness may shine.

February Income

Below will be found a comparative statement of income for the months of February 1931 and 1932.

It is to be noted that there is a considerable falling off for February this year as compared with last. Thirty-five districts contributed more than last year, and forty-three contributed less. At the time of this writing all of the domestic reports are in with the exception of two, the Florida and Spring River districts. This is a big improvement over last month.

The amount received during February does not enable us to meet one month's expenses. We are hopeful that the next few months will show considerable improvement. We recognize, of course, the unfavorable financial condition of the country which has affected the ability of our members to contribute. The only way of offsetting this is to increase the number of contributors. This is being done in many districts and is bringing good results. The cooperation thus given is very much appreciated.

My final message to my friends: "Put first things first; make Christ central in your lives; live the life eternal in the temporal."—Dr. James M. Campbell.

Why Graceland?

To a boy or girl, going away to college is a great and grand adventure. To the parents, it is a mark of achievement, but with this feeling of having attained one of the successes for which the home is established, there comes a tinge of sadness, even sorrow, in the realization that in the future, in all probability, their children will be only visitors at the fireside of the home. In our present day social life, this breaking of the family circle is necessary. The rapidly changing conditions and keen competition of the world demand that young men and women study and prepare. Knowledge of past and present conditions forms the basis of anticipation for the problems and needs of tomorrow.

To send a boy or girl out in the cold materialistic world to gain a life's philosophy, friends and companions, truly is a serious leave-taking. Our church forefathers, in their prophetic vision, saw this great problem and established Graceland College—an institution where the young people of the church may study and yet not forget God.

Graceland is located in the only city in the world where Latter Day Saints predominate and city and civic affairs are in the hands of our church people. The city is large enough to encourage educational activities, but small enough to discourage those things which are not good, wholesome, collegiate environment.

The college serves a cosmopolitan student body, coming from many parts of the world. A recent survey of the graduates of the past five years who are in educational professions, shows that they are teaching in sixteen states, and others are attending colleges and universities in fourteen different states. Our church college is accredited by the highest accrediting associations in the educational world.

The cosmopolitan spirit of Graceland College is further illustrated by the fact that there is no distinction between those who have to work or depend on extended credit from the scholarship fund, and those who have money to take care of their expenses. Large amounts of money do not have to be spent for clothing and miscellaneous items. It is not necessary to be a spender in order to have a good time or to accomplish the thing for which the institution was established.

The physical plant at Graceland is in the best condition in the history of the college—class rooms, laboratories, dormitories, the library—every part of the educational plant is ready to receive students and give them optimum study and living conditions.

The well-trained faculty of Graceland College take a personal interest in every student. Hours are spent outside of the class room in an effort to help every individual solve his problems and meet the adjustments and decisions of life wisely and well. The student—his spiritual, educational, physical and moral development—comes first.

Recently two friends were traveling, both college-trained people, one having attended Graceland, the other, a nearby State College. In the course of their travels they stopped at many cities and always looked up our church people. Invariably the Graceland student found in the branch former friends and acquaintances and at once was at home and made welcome. You and I are travelers—whether we choose the high road or low road we meet people, make friends, select associates and build a life's philosophy—we plow, we pray, we sing, we sweat. God has planted the beginning of a high road; let us help our boys and girls find it.

Weekly Health Letter

Number 38

Influenza

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Since 1889 one of the most serious and common complaints in this country has been influenza or "grippe." At that time, it was a widespread epidemic and the people thought it a new disease, but it is far from being a new disease for it has made its visitation in various parts of the civilized world since 1773 and probably long before that. It is remarkable how fast this disease travels from one city to another and it is equally remarkable that very few people escape the disease. For instance, in May, 1829, the disease appeared in Asia and then traveled rapidly westward by way of the great caravan routes, reaching Moscow in September and Saint Petersburg in October. Still following the routes of trade and travel, from there, it reached Berlin in November and London in the middle of December and New York City the last of December. In the nineteenth century alone, it appeared in the years 1830, 1833, 1836, 1837, 1847, 1848, 1889, 1890. There are many other conditions called influenza and grippe, which is due to a careless diagnosis. No doubt, the disease is much aggravated by other pathogenic germs. It is estimated that in the world-wide pandemic of 1918-1919, there were 200,000,000 cases and 10,000,000 deaths in less than twelve months. In the United States, there were 450,000 deaths in less than six months, out of 20,000,000 cases.

It is a highly communicable febrile disease. The symptoms come on very suddenly, exhibiting a fever—lasting about three days—followed by extreme depression. The disease, itself, is not so serious as its complications, one of which is pneumonia. It is frequently called a "crowd disease" as the virus is spread, largely, by the spraying of the secretions in coughing, sneezing, spitting, and talking. Those who, in any manner, have lowered their health, should avoid crowds. The public needs education along this line, and should avoid sneezing or coughing in such a way as to convey the infection. The habit of some people of talking into other people's faces should be strictly avoided, and during an epidemic, sputum cups or gauze should be used, and subsequently burned. Sneezing is very dangerous, and should always be caught in a handkerchief or some other receptacle. All patients should be isolated, and gauze masks should be used over the nose and mouth of the attendants.

Influenza, or "grippe" prostrates the patient out of all proportion to the fever and lesions. Cough and pains in the head, back, and limbs is one of the characteristic symptoms. It is a noticeable fact that, instead of attacking some of the respiratory organs, it may attack the stomach, trying to find lodgment in the intestines. The disease is frequently mistaken for a cold. Investigators have been trying to find the virus that causes the disease. It is conceded by many that it is of a filterable variety, while others believe that Pfeiffer's bacillus (discovered by Pfeiffer) if not a cause, may be one of the secondary invaders, and the cause of so many serious complications. Most authorities believe that it is a contact, and mouth-to-mouth infection, but it is a well-established fact that water, milk, or food do not carry the virus. Influenza is no respecter of persons, as it attacks all ages and both sexes, and during the 1918-1919 epidemic, it was found to be more fatal between the ages of twenty to thirty, and strangely seemed to attack the stronger rather than the weaker. All races are subject to the plague and it takes the rich and poor alike, the clean and the dirty, the strong and the weak. Unfortunately, sanitation had practically no effect upon the control of this disease. It is an epidemic that occurs during all seasons of the year, but seems to have a preference for cold weather, though it is likely to occur through human contact, regardless of weather, wind, or climate. On account of its attacking so many in such a short time, it is more disabling to community life than any other disease, and all hospitals and social service facilities should be prepared to take care of any sudden epidemic that may occur.

The question of immunity is not settled, as some people seem to have attacks yearly, and investigations seem to indicate that immunity does not last more than seven months. Various kinds of vaccines have been tried, with apparently more or less success.

Autobiography

XII.—LIGHTS AND SHADOWS

By James Franklin Mintun

My family continued with me while I occupied nearly every night, preaching to interested, though not large audiences some of the time, in Plymouth County in schoolhouses, till January 10, when I came to Moorhead, holding meetings every night. During the time I was here I made arrangements through some of the brethren for an opening near Castana. At Castana lived the daughter of Elder John Thomas, who did some very commendable work in the Southern States. She was married to one of the prominent men of Castana, and held on to the faith of her parents.

Elder M. Larsen of the Seventh-day Adventists was lecturing against our faith in Monona County, where I had lately brought Brother and Sister J. C. Woodruff into the church, his wife being an Adventist. Propositions were sent to him through Brother Woodruff. I continued at Moorhead each night till January 30 when I came home with the family. I baptized two on the 29th. The reason that I had my wife and family with me during the time above mentioned was the death of her mother, and the care of her while she was suffering for almost nine months. This broke the health of my wife, and caused a nervous breakdown from which she never fully recovered. This condition made it a matter of wisdom either to discontinue the mission work for a time or take her away from her environment for a time on a vacation. The latter course I thought the wisest. The change proved of much benefit to her.

I note by my diary that on February 6 I read the account given by Sister Emma Burton of their trip on the Evanelia to the Society Islands, and "several times I found the tears starting and a choking sensation rise when I thought of the great sacrifice, and faith exercised while making it. I thought that even the angels must rejoice in such work." This gave me inspiration to make greater efforts, when possible, in my ministry. It will be remembered that Elder Hubert Case and his bride of but a few weeks were on that trip, their first missionary journey to a foreign land, and being so well acquainted with them and their parents for years made me think of that trip the more, possibly.

On February 11, I began services at Mondamin in the Christian Church, having the association and assistance of Elder Alma M. Fyrando. During these meetings a girl was brought to us wrought upon by an evil spirit. The power of God was with us, and she received a blessing. During these meetings I was led to give Brother Fyrando a subject on which to preach the evening of February 19. On that evening we found a question in the question box on the same subject, which shows that the Spirit of God was leading us. As a partial result of these meetings I baptized Brother William Davis and wife on the twenty-first, and Nancy Daywalt on the twenty-third. I was instructed by the one in charge of missionary work, Brother J. W. Wight, to go from here to Union Grove and minister. While there I enjoyed the hospitality of the Brethren Kemmishes, with others, most of whom have gone to their reward. I baptized two as a result of these meetings.

On March 1, the convention and conference began at Magnolia. Brethren A. H. Smith and J. W. Wight ministered there. At that conference Brother Willard Fallon was called by a prophecy to the ministry. On the third, Brethren S. B. Kibler and W. A. Smith were ordained elders; Brethren Samuel Wood and Robert Chambers, priests, and William J. Chambers a teacher.

On the seventh of March I began preaching in the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Smithland. On the ninth we were requested to vacate the church, and we then continued our services in Rice's Hall, till the fourteenth when I baptized one. At the close of the last service I received a very liberal contribution from the Ladies' Aid Society, some of whom were not members of the church. By request I went from there to the home of Brother Charles Hildreth, where I performed the marriage ceremony that made Brother Frank Cohrt and Sister Cora Belle Hildreth husband and wife. These remained true to each other till the death of Sister Cohrt separated them.

By previous arrangement I went to fill an appointment near Castana. No Saints were there, but some who were friendly to them, by whom I was treated with as great kindness as I could have been by any. The day I began I had a severe headache, and the next day I had a sore jaw, and while some thought I had the mumps, yet I could not so conclude, for I remembered I had had the mumps some years before. But I was forced to conclude that I had the mumps, for at the conclusion of the services many of those who attended had the mumps. I continued to preach every night, even though I did not sit up but little during the day for several days. Through the grace of God I took no harm in so doing. I preached at Maple Landing, at Little Sioux, and Missouri Valley on my way home to prepare for the General Conventions and Conference, to be held this year at Independence, Missouri. On April 5 there was an entertainment of a literary and musical character, of which my record says, "Objectionable, as to the character of the literary recitations and the manner of applause, as also the length of the entertainment." This condition was emphasized when on the following day I met a sister, whose husband had come with her to the conventions and conference to make inquiry of her faith from a practical point of view, as to the difference between us as a people socially and spiritually with other religious bodies with which he was acquainted, to which he took exceptions. She told me that her husband was much disappointed in witnessing what he did not expect, by our proceeding with our social entertainments in a sacred place as did other religious bodies. As a result of this another entertainment which was to follow was considerably modified in the nature and length of it, as well as the manner of applause, which was commented on favorably by both members and nonmembers. It was at this conference that I preached by appointment on Easter Sunday to the colored people in the African Methodist Episcopal Church, assisted by Elder James Moler. This was my first and last service held for the colored people, although I have baptized several of the Negro race, who have been an honor to God and the church. I was appointed on the committee to prepare a program for the next Sunday school convention with Brethren W. H. Garrett, and J. A. Gunsolley. I was appointed this year to the Eastern Nebraska Mission.

While at home I made out a part of my report as administrator of the Sarah W. Conyers' estate. As a result of this I received enough from commissions to pay, and I did pay the balance of tithing due at the time—forty dollars. I have felt the Spirit of God in giving approval for sermons and services in ordinances well rendered by the Lord, but I never had experienced more of the divine approval at any time for what I had done than I did when I completed the payment of tithing due the Lord. Such a happy freedom is seldom experienced.

After returning from the conference I began to make garden, to clean and paper the house, arranged my books to take with me on mission work, preaching Sundays, besides attending other services and conducting a teachers' training class in blackboard work during the week.

On May 5, I rejoiced in the privilege of baptizing my oldest child with four others of about the same age. My record says, "This was a happy day when my first-born became a child of God. When I prayed just preceding the baptism, the Holy Spirit in power rested specially on those to be baptized, and they with many of the audience were in tears at the conclusion of the prayer."

Before going to my newly appointed mission I visited several points in my former mission. I left my wife in poor health, but by counseling together we concluded that I should be about my heavenly Father's business in preaching to the poor, healing the sick, comforting the broken-hearted and bearing witness that Jesus is the Christ. I kissed my oldest and youngest farewell while they still slept, but the other daughter was awake to say, "Bye, Bye, papa." I started very early, and visited Lake Circle with Brother J. C. Crabb, then I came to Smithland by Onawa, where I preached Saturday and Sunday, when Brother Crabb came, and we continued, baptizing two aged people on the eighteenth, and four adults on the nineteenth, and one at Oto on the twenty-ninth. When I bid some friends farewell at Oto on whom I called before going elsewhere I left several in tears. I never knew how the people had appreciated my weak efforts, and how attached they had become to me till then.

I then preached a few farewell sermons at Moorhead, and visited with some of the aged ones. At Moorhead I baptized three. Of my leaving Moorhead this is recorded, "A vote of thanks was adopted by a large audience." "Many showed deep sorrow that I was called to leave them."

On May 31 I began my labors in Omaha where the district conference was held. Here I met many old-time friends, among others were Elders W. E. Peak and F. A. Smith. Brother W. W. Blair was present and ministered. The next week I tried to awaken an interest at Bee, but was not able to do so. I then went to Lincoln. Here I occupied one night in a cottage, then came to Palmyra Branch in the Southern Nebraska District where the convention and conference was held. By request I gave a talk to the Sunday school convention.

A Sad Event at Home

The conference was on Monday, when I was appointed on a tent committee with Brother J. W. Waldsmith to secure a tent for Southern Nebraska District. I then came to Bennett and secured the Danish Lutheran Church in which to hold a series of preaching services. But after making an effort I concluded that the interest would not justify further services, and went to Wilber, Nebraska, where I met my old time friend, Elder C. H. Porter. I preached in the church on January 25 to a good audience, spending the next day with Oscar and Wilber Savage. I was at the latter place when I received a letter from my home about supper time, informing me that my wife had given premature birth to a daughter, and that the daughter had died, and was buried, and wife not expected to live. The birth had taken place about five days before I received the letter. They had tried to get a telegram to me both at Lincoln and at Bennett, but neither telegram was ever heard from to this day. Brother Wilber Savage was the president of the branch, and as soon as I read the letter and informed him of the contents he asked me what we should do, and what about tonight's services. I replied that as there were no trains going from Wilber till in the morning, I would occupy as announced, and the audience need not know anything of what had transpired till at the close of the service, when it will be announced that I have been called home, and will not be able to continue the services arranged for. So it was done, God assisting me in my efforts to edify the Saints while my heart was filled with sadness. I returned home the next day but did not arrive till evening. I found my wife on the road to recovery. This was one day spent in prayer, and the next day was spent in thanksgiving and praise. As the question came at the time I first heard of this grief, so it has come at times since, "Why did the Lord permit this when I was spending all my time in his service, and my wife was willing to sacrifice so that I might do this?" Immediately there has come the Spirit of God giving me consolation, and I have used this experience in my life to assist to comfort others who might have thought for the moment that their trials were greater than others, and wondering why God had permitted it.

The Bitter Tongue of Gossip

If there is such a thing as a renewal of life, it comes when one has passed through the trial that wife and I had just experienced, and then following it about fifty Saints and friends gather in to commemorate a birthday with social chat, and music, followed by light refreshments, and all unexpected. This occurred on my fortieth birthday, and just at a time that I felt much older, not so much because of the illness of my wife and the death and burial of an offspring unseen, but as the result of surmises that came to our ears, charging me neglect and inattention to the needs of my family for unworthy motives. But happy is the man who has the utmost confidence of his wife, and no man is fully qualified to occupy as a missionary unless he has just such a wife. Happiness grew out of what might have resulted sadly. One of those who had repeated this false rumor that had brought it to our knowledge, was taken sick soon afterwards, and sent for me to administer to her. My wife said, "You are not going, are you?" I said, "Yes; I will do my duty. I have forgiven her for the part she has taken in this false rumor. That is what the gospel has done for me." I went, and did my duty, without a thought of what had been said while praying for her, and the sister was restored to health. God approved of my act. I continued with my wife till she was again feeling strong as usual. I assisted with work locally, as opportunity was presented.

On July 23 I began to assist in tent work at Omaha, which was in charge of Brother F. A. Smith, who was at the time in charge of the work in Omaha Branch. I continued here till August 12, when I went with a tent just ordered for the Southern Nebraska District, to begin work at Lincoln, to be associated with, and assisted by Elder Mark H. Forscutt. We held our first service August 16. The dailies were willing to print our notices. Here I met a Doctor Triplett, of the Swedenborgian faith, who attended some of our services, and by invitation I visited him at his office for the purpose of having religious talks with him. He was interested in hearing our defense of the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and quite willingly presented the claims of Emanuel Swedenborg. When I would present a text of Scripture in support of the work claimed for Joseph Smith, he would look up the interpretation that Swedenborg had given to that Scripture. In presenting the calling of Joseph Smith I used Isaiah 29: 9-12, where it refers to one to whom a book is delivered that was "unlearned," and to Zechariah 2: 1-5, in which an angel was to speak to a "young man." These puzzled the doctor, for Swedenborg had not interpreted these Scriptures, and besides, Swedenborg was a learned man, and not a young man when his work was begun. These applied to Joseph Smith and did not in any sense apply to Swedenborg. This ended our conversation.

Brother Forscutt continued with me till August 31, when Brother J. W. Waldsmith came to my assistance.

My experience here with Brother Mark H. Forscutt proved to me that he was a very humble and God-fearing man, and not given to excessive pride, and withal a very pure-minded person. He was also very unselfish, one of God's noble men.

From Lincoln I went to Wilber where I continued from September 9, till I went to Logan, Iowa, to assist in preparing for the "World's Reunion," where I again had charge of Sunday school work, having special charge of the training class work.

After the reunion I assisted Brother J. F. McDowell in a series of services at Magnolia, while I was preparing the home for the convenience of the family while absent in missionary work.

I began laboring at Decatur where the conventions and conference was held in the district tent, I was selected superintendent of the Sunday school association that was organized at this convention October 12. After the conference Brother F. A. Smith and I continued services in the tent, till Brother Smith returned to Omaha, when I continued the meetings in the tent alone, taking the tent to Decatur, where I continued till November 3, even though at times we had fire in a stove in the tent to make it comfortable.

After the tent work was over I began again in schoolhouses near the Lake Shore Branch, now disorganized. In that vicinity I continued meetings each night in different schoolhouses, and in assisting to get out logs to build a log church till December 15. Here I baptized two young people.

I then occupied in the Presbyterian Church in Decatur from December 17 till the twenty-second, to good audiences. On my way home for the holidays I came by Smithland and preached, administered to the sick, and performed a marriage ceremony for one of the daughters of Brother John Bowers. While at home during the holidays I baptized two and administered to many sick, besides ministering the word.

Who Is at Fault?

By Charles Hannah

The article, "The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire," in Herald of December 30, 1931, can be heartily indorsed by all who have had any experience in missionary work as absolutely correct, but the writer fails to place the blame where, I believe, it belongs.

For years it has been my experience in branch work and as branch president that when Saints were few and widely scattered our elders went without any means or way of travel, except as they were cared for largely by outsiders, but trusting in God. Now, in a few hours travel, they can come into contact with Saints having fine homes and all the luxuries that earth can afford. And yet, our missionaries are forced to call on the Bishopric for funds. Who is to blame?

The missionary who leaves a position that is paying him well or he who leaves a farm yielding a good living for himself and family to give his time and talents faithfully to the church should have our earnest consideration. For, if he is a successful missionary, he can make a success at other work. But too often he is looked upon as a man who is having a good time traveling around the country. He leaves his home and loved ones with no prospect of earthly gain and is supposed to act as a general adviser on any and every question that arises; whether it be the buying of a farm, a house, or settling disputes. He is expected, at all times, to give expert advice and, if he fail, then, "There must be something wrong with Elder _____."

As I see it, a great many people who come into the church are under the impression that it won't cost them anything; or, in other words, that this is a cheap gospel. Instead of this attitude they must be educated to the belief that it is one of sacrifice to the fullest extent, even to the giving of their lives, if necessary. True, this may not bring a large gain in membership, but the people will understand the true Spirit of the gospel.

According to the Bishop's report there is only a very small percentage of our people paying tithing and we are reaping the consequences.

Why should a missionary have to draw on the Bishopric for traveling expenses, money for clothes and necessities?

Before, or when a missionary enters a branch or district the Saints should be counseled by the president that they are to care for him; for, to quote our Savior, "He that will feed you and clothe you and give you money, the same is my disciple." If, previous to the missionary's arrival, the branch president is aware of his coming, all necessary arrangements should be made beforehand so that the elder may not be embarrassed by the discussion regarding his care.

Some will say that, if they give to the missionary, the general church will not receive its money. But, if I am correctly informed, only about fourteen per cent of the Saints are paying tithing. Therefore, the church is not receiving it and neither is the missionary.

Experience has taught me that if the branch or district president gives the Saints to understand that it is their duty to help they are always ready and glad to do so. The small change—e. g.—dimes and quarters—that would otherwise be spent for gum, candy and such trivialities and thus would not reach the church treasury in any case, would, if given at each service or for only one service, go far towards helping the missionary. Because, after all, a warm handshake will not pay railroad fare or laundry bills nor yet buy clothes. Why should the people and the missionary be deprived of the blessings that the Lord has promised to those who care for his messengers? We can not expect the Lord to bless a branch that is not doing its whole duty.

On whom, then, rests the blame for the Bishopric having to supply the needs of the missionary?

Does it not devolve upon the branch president to so educate his flock that they may understand the matter, for if each contribute his bit (no matter how small) each receives a blessing? Thus, the missionary is properly cared for out of the small amounts that are considered too small to give individually or to the general church.

Vindication

By E. Y. Hunker

Practically all Latter Day Saints are familiar with the succinct prophetic warning found in Doctrine and Covenants 45:12, 13, given over one hundred years ago. The prophecy and instruction declared:

Wherefore, I the Lord have said, Gather ye out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together ye elders of my church; go ye forth unto the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, insomuch that the wicked will not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion. And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. . . . And it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another.

In the past there has been the tendency on the part of some to brand as extremists the servants of God who lifted up their voices in warning with regard to the gradual process of fulfillment of this outstanding prophecy. Even among the ministry of the church were those who regarded this warning and the pronouncement of it to be fanatical and radical. Many have wondered or doubted because it was difficult to comprehend how, in our land of apparent law, order, peace, and republican organization, such conditions of upheaval, confusion, corruption, lawlessness, anarchy, and disorganization as indicated in the prophecy could come to grow and prevail.

But we are learning very rapidly that the fulfillment of the prophecy is neither impossible nor improbable. Especially since the close of the World War has there been a tremendous rising tide of lawlessness, the like of which has never been witnessed hitherto in the annals of United States history. So commonplace have become the events of crime that we scan with indifference the printed pages recording their organized escapades, taking for granted what a few years ago would have struck us as being next to impossible. In the midst of the increasing power of the underworld the majority of our citizens attempt to laugh off the seriousness of the situation when there should be an awakening to the threat of it against the common well-being of the nation.

The Omaha World-Herald for March 8 carried in its editorial section a reprint of a very recent editorial in the New York Evening Post under the caption "Is Crime Winning Against Society?" This timely article states with clearness the prevailing conditions and attitudes. After reading it, the truth and foresight of the warning prophecied in Section 45 should be more comprehensible. Quoted below are some excerpts from the editorial:

One of the most profound comments upon the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby is the Herald Tribune's statement: "We think the truth must be conceded and faced that the army of desperate criminals which has been recruited in the last decade is winning its battle against society."

It is with dismay that the mind grasps the meaning of this soberly worded verdict. Analyzed, we believe it to stand up as fact. . . .

We have become calloused to seeing a great army of bootleggers and hijackers spring up and then invade, sieze, dig in and make their own a vast section of the territory theretofore held by the law. We have become used to seeing these outlaws control the trade of this territory, make their millions in it, and, in the course of trade, pass sentences of death and execute them "on the spot" with their own mercenaries. We have not cared much, as long as they kept their outlawry within their own lines.

But now the lines are surging forward. A new "racket" is being developed. Sections of our lives heretofore safe and protected are being taken over by the enemies of the law. Our homes are no longer secure against the attack of the kidnaper. Our children are in peril. For that matter, so, too, are all the adults in our households or in our places of business.

These are not extreme statements. . . . This means a great new battle won for crime. Our "island of safety," reduced steadily inch by inch since prohibition began to finance criminals, grows suddenly smaller. Heaven knows that no one wants to make an antiprohibition argument out of the pitiful theft of the little Lindbergh. Yet all that we get from Washington is the suggestion that Congress "pass a law."

Such admission of the dangers and encroachments of crime, of the decline of safety and security, from the editorials of the leading papers of our land should cause us to realize that the dangers are not fancied but real. Newspapers do not point out often the black spots of our social structure, for papers are more usually joined in the effort to create optimism.

It is to be noted that this editorial declared that the inroads of modern crime have endangered such things among us as safety and security, and consequently peace, which are precisely the things mentioned in the prophecy of Doctrine and Covenants, Section 45.

The vindication of the word of God in the present transpiring events should serve to strengthen our confidence in this latter-day work. Furthermore, there should well up in the mind of every true saint the consciousness that in the Zionite plan as given to this people lies the only hope of salvation from the ever-increasing dangers all about us. Now, as never before, should the Saints attend to every work of preparation for the establishing and building of Zion.

The need for Zion is more and more apparent. This should be our day of preparation, not alone as individuals, but as branches of the church. Ours should be the task now to place ourselves in readiness to answer the call of Zion, which call must needs soon come.

Elder Robert W. Tarzwell—Church and Community Stalwart

Not sixty miles from Toronto, Ontario, lies Cedar Valley, the home of Robert W. Tarzwell, trusted citizen of the community and member and minister of the church. By trade he is a sawyer, for recreation he glories in fiddling, but above all other considerations, he is a Latter Day Saint who is living his faith and ministering to the people.

Though wood in Canada has gone off the gold standard and many mills are idle, Cedar Valley has escaped the timber blight. "There the pines and the hemlocks murmur no song of economic woe," writes Robert Reade in The Toronto Star Weekly. "There, indifferent to the Soviet timber menace and the world-wide glut of products, Robert Tarzwell still saws wood as he did fifty years ago and his father and uncle before him, seventy-five years ago. . . . Cedar Valley is a few miles west of Hillsburg, which is nearly a score of miles north of Georgetown. It is a valley well named, for there is a big cedar swamp at the bottom of the long sloping hills. And it is also a happy valley, for its one industry, the sawmill, is running to capacity. It has, moreover, two strings to its bow—it also grinds grain." Mr. Reade features the life and work of Brother Tarzwell in a press story entitled, "Sawing Wood in Slabtown."

The original mill in Cedar Valley was built in 1853. It has cut lumber continuously, using at first a "muley" saw that worked up and down and then a circular saw. It was bought by Mr. Tarzwell's father and uncle in 1856. Mr. Tarzwell has been operating the mill since 1887.

This is a good timber country, and the sawyer has never lacked for logs. Besides hemlock, the mill's mainstay in lumber, there are to be found in the valley and on the hills pine, white ash, red oak, hickory, basswood, beech, maple, spruce, and cedar.

The sawyer thinks his mill unique in the fact that he knows of no other mill in the southern part of Ontario that has operated so long and steadily. When the mill was first established (and many have come and gone since that time) it cut wood on shares; that is a farmer would bring in a load of logs and the mill got half of them for the sawing. Even yet there is little exporting of lumber. Mr. Tarzwell markets his goods locally.

When asked how long he thought his business would last, the old-time sawyer laughed: "I think it will last my time. There's still all the timber we need. We're not making a fortune, but we're making a living and always have. I've never gone broke, but I've never got rich." He thinks he has sawed more shingles than any other man in Canada. Years ago he installed a shingle machine in the mill, making cedar shingles. For thirty years he has been chopping and grinding grain. Farmers bring in oats and other grains, dump them into the hopper, then carry them away as cracked feed for their stock.

No electrically-run mill for Mr. Tarzwell. He has his own modifications of the water-power system. In the basement of the mill a galvanized iron pipe brings the water from the mill pond on the hill into a water turbine which turns the pulleys and belts. "The old mill," he told the visiting reporter, "had a 24-foot wheel, but we're still using the water though in a little different way. You don't see it tumbling over a dam. We run it off through a pipe in the floor to the creek in the swamp."

"Brother Rob still preaches a powerful sermon as well as wields a trusty bow," says Brother J. A. Morrison, of Owen Sound. "He is always to be found at district conferences, reunions, and special meetings where the Saints gather. The church in Canada, as it is throughout the world, is made of such stalwarts as the Tarzwells." He is now well in the seventies, a man hale and cheerful. John Shields baptized him into the church January 8, 1891, at Erin, Ontario, and he was ordained an elder August 28, 1895, at Hillsburg, Quebec, by John H. Lake. He lives only a short distance from Grand Valley, one of the oldest branches in Owen Sound District, and the early home of Sister Ada Clark Smith, Brother Joseph's last wife.

"The old mill is never going to go out of business for lack of water or for lack of Tarzwells," declares Mr. Reade. "Associated with the old-time sawyer in the mill is his son, Kirby, who has a twelve-year-old son, Paul." The Tarzwells live in what was originally called "Slabtown" because of the business, but it is by no means in the bush country. Not everyone there has a wood lot. And Cedar Valley has other claims for distinction besides its old but flourishing sawmill. It has given Canada several important people among whom is Sister A. C. MacPhail, M. P., Canada's only woman member of Parliament. Sister MacPhail taught school there for a time and took part in the literary society debates.

Music, however, is the valley's chief claim to fame. Here old-time fiddlers abound. "I guess," says Brother Tarzwell, "that there have been more prizes for the violin brought back Erin way than to most parts of Ontario. I got second prize once at the National Exhibition and my brother Dave at the same time got third prize although he's a much better fiddler than I." The Tarzwell family have always been fiddlers. When the grandfather from Somerset settled in Cedar Valley in 1829, he brought his fiddle. But now Brother Tarzwell thinks old-time fiddling is dying—the radio is killing it.

Brother Tarzwell took the Star reporter home with him and fiddled to him. Here is the reporter's story of it:

"We adjourned at the end of the day's work to his house on the hill and he tucked his violin lovingly under the chin and played me some of the concert pieces he had given the previous evening at the institute.

"And a fine picture he made as he sat in his kitchen and with firm hand rattled off with great gusto, "The Arkansas Traveler," "The Fisher's Horn Pipe," and "Turkey in the Straw." With his iron-gray curly hair and grizzled mustache and sturdy shoulders he looked not unlike Fritz Kreisler, the great master of gypsy tunes. . . .

"Do not imagine that the violin with which he played rustic tunes was itself rustic. It was a fine concert hall instrument. Older than the sawmill, it was made in Cremona in 1845.

"This light-hearted musician and lumberman contributes to the gaiety of the countryside not the great and growing symphony or cacophony of rural discontent. He would not admit that he had never before seen such rural distress as at present."

And there is more to be said than this. This staunch Latter Day Saint contributes to the spirit and purposefulness of the church, local and general. A veteran of the faith and spiritual leader, he has the respect of fellow citizens and the love of friends. Every day he makes his religion the gospel of hope and good will. Ask the people of Cedar Valley and the officers of his district.

One elder, who has been working in a western mission, was discovered wandering about the auditorium trying to locate a reported crack in the roof of the building. This may be the point of egress for all the wild rumors which so persistently fly into the outlying districts.

WORLD'S NEED MAY BE CHURCH'S OPPORTUNITY

Attitude of Many Leading Minds Revealed by Bit of Personal Correspondence

Divine guidance—prophetic leadership — increased spirituality—a clarified perception of human values—these are needed at the present difficult time to point the way for a bewildered humanity to follow toward a better future.

The following expressive extract is from a personal letter to Frederick M. Smith by his sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson of Lincoln, Nebraska:

"We are observing the fast and prayer for every day between now and conference. I don't know how others feel about things, but for one I feel that the trials we are passing through have materially increased my spirituality. I seem to sense as never before the necessity for living as closely as I can to the pattern I have been taught to consider the one loyal saints should follow. This effort has, I feel sure, yielded a result in spiritual vision and a clearer appreciation of the real values in life. Along with this clarified perception, old values seem to shrink in significance and the emphasis comes upon those things which, while immaterial, after all constitute the only values which endure.

"It seems amazing how the thinking men of today are coming to conclusions set forth by our leaders throughout the century past. Why, some of their articles and observations sound exactly like L. D. S. doctrine! They cry that the world is at the crossroads, and that what it needs is authoritative leadership, a new prophet, who with spiritual power and under the stress of divine urge will point the way out of the difficulties into which the selfishness of humanity has plunged itself. As I thrill to the thought, and realize that one hundred years ago God did open up the dispensation of authoritative message once more, I go down on my knees in pleading that he will endow you—that divinely appointed Leader-Prophet—with that spiritual power and prophetic vision which, speaking in no wavering or uncertain voice, will point the way back to the condition humanity must reach before God can bestow the blessings and permit the developments he designs for them, particularly the United States."

News travels like a Texas twister. Della Braidwood Haberlein said so at meeting at Leonard Lee's home. By the time news from a few blocks below her, she says, reaches her place of abode she is hardly able to recognize it any more as original.

Tithing Reports and Inventory Day in Des Moines, Iowa

Provision for a special gathering at the church in Des Moines was made by the conference in February for the Saints to make their financial reports to the Bishop, this gathering to be held before the general church conference in April.

On March 27, at nine thirty o'clock in the morning, a large and expectant group of people met to participate in the first meeting of its kind to be held in the district, or as far as we know, in the whole church. They had a definite purpose, as could be plainly seen in their countenances.

District President Henry Castings was in charge, with Clyde McDonald assisting him. District Chorister Eva Cook was in charge of the music for the entire day with Lucy Longan Orr as pianist. All classes were combined, the church school time being used for the special service.

The junior church with their pastor, Elder George Orr, were seated in the section to the right of the pulpit, there being fifty in number. The priesthood and their wives were seated in the left section. Twenty-seven members of the priesthood were counted. Including these, three hundred people were counted in the room.

Bishop Charles Fry spoke on the subject, "Faith"; his counselor, Stephen Robinson, spoke on "Finance"; and Bishop G. L. DeLapp on "Freedom." The relationship of these subjects was told plainly and effectively. Bishop DeLapp stated that freedom comes only through complete obedience to the whole law. He also said that a man who refuses to pay his tithing is dishonest, unjust, and unkind, not considering the needs of the church in caring for the missionary and other necessary expense.

Brother Castings made a short talk on inventories and the plan for filing them. A procession, headed by the district presidency, followed by the district bishopric and other district officers, the priesthood and their wives, the junior church, and then the membership, in regular order, filed by the table, each one laying his inventory before Bishop DeLapp.

One hundred fifty-seven inventories were turned in, and Bishop Fry reported that twenty-three had been mailed to him before the meeting.

Only one branch president in the district failed to make a financial report or to state his intentions to do so in a day or two. More than ninety per cent of the priesthood of the district complied, many sending in their reports because they could not be present. Many blanks were called for that will be filled out later.

This service was the culmination of a district campaign under President Castings in which every group and branch was visited and the Saints urged to make their financial reports on this date. Besides the district officers, Elders L. G. Holloway and A. L. Loving, the Bishopric, and men of the local priesthood, assisted in the campaign. Many individual visits were made and reports filled out immediately.

At the conclusion of the morning service, Brother Castings asked the congregation to stand. Then he presented them as a faithful and loyal group of Saints to Bishop DeLapp, who responded with deep feeling in a few well chosen words. A wave of spiritual feeling swept over the audience at this time.

This same deep spiritual feeling marked the prayer service at two o'clock. Clyde McDonald, William Robinson and Bishop DeLapp were in charge. The theme of the morning was the theme of this meeting which lasted until three thirty.

At 6.45 Bishop DeLapp preached a splendid sermon, the service being in charge of Stephen Robinson, assisted by Albert Loving.

At eight o'clock an Easter Cantata, "Jesus Lives," by Charles H. Gabriel, was presented by the Des Moines Choir, under the direction of Miss Eva Cook. Six interludes of Scripture and story were read by C. B. Hartshorn which joined with the story as presented in the cantata. The soloists were Ardith Olmstead, Mary Louise Mussell, J. B. Jordan, L. O. Mussell, and Alfred Richards. Near the close of the program a cross, immediately back of the choir, was lighted, all other lights being extinguished. This service was well planned and executed and brought to a fitting close the activities of the day.

During the morning service a men's quartet consisting of Lloyd and Lee Mussell, William Robinson and Alfred Richards sang "Take Time to Be Holy" and "Give of Your Best to the Master." Appropriate songs were also sung by the congregation between the sermons, which added beauty to the service.

Visiting Saints were from Newton, Knoxville, Webster City, and Winterset.

We are more convinced from this experience that the way to get the Saints to comply with the financial law is to follow the instructions given at the General Conference of 1925, that the Bishopric should get in personal touch with the membership and teach them how to make their financial reports and explain the financial law.

Moorhead, Iowa

Because of the weather, roads have at times been impassable, and at all times have been bad during the winter. For this reason, attendance at church services and activities has been much lower than usual. However, with spring and more favorable weather, the roads are improving, and we hope to see better attendance.

Today was Easter Sunday and there was large attendance both at church school and preaching. Pastor J. J. Boswell delivered the very appropriate morning sermon, "The Resurrection." He impressed on our minds the necessity for living the gospel and preparing for Christ's return to earth to gather his jewels.

Alfred Eugene, infant son of Brother and Sister A. H. Quilleash, was blessed at the morning service by Brother Thomas Strand and Brother Boswell.

We were recently saddened by the unexpected death of Brother Arlie Huffman. He fell ill and passed away within a very few minutes, heart failure being the cause of his death. He leaves his wife and one son. The funeral was by T. O. Strand. Brother Huffman was an active and respected member, and is missed from our services.

The priesthood seem to be taking on new life. They seem to sense anew the responsibility which is theirs and are desirous of faithfully discharging their duties. We of the laity realize that we also are not without responsibility, and want to do all we can to help make the latter-day work a success.

We look forward to the General Conference with much interest. Our prayers are for those who are laboring to make the conference all it should be.

Because of road conditions midweek prayer services have been discontinued for some time, but we hope very soon to resume them, for we realize the good to be derived from these meetings.

San Bernardino, California

The regular annual branch business meeting was held January 6. Reports from all officers of the branch and leaders of the departments were given. These reports show that great improvement has been made in the past year. It was voted at this meeting that the branch adopt the new plan of Religious Education in full this year. Brother Teagarden was unanimously elected pastor for the coming year and Brother Scannel and Brother Draper were elected as counselors. The following were elected as officers under the new plan: Sister Ella Harris, church school director; Brother A. D. Logeman, home visiting director; Sister Dell Kraschel, adult divisional leader; Sister Olive Draper, young people's divisional leader; and Sister Wilma Dexter, children's divisional leader.

On January 13, the council met at the pastor's home and the work of the different departments was outlined for the year. The council feels that it has the work outlined for a good year in 1932.

Once a month dinners are held in the rear auditorium of the church in charge of the women's department. The one for the month of January was held on Friday evening, January 29. About sixty-five attended this dinner, but this was not as good an attendance as we hope to be able to have at future dinners.

This branch was fortunate during the month of January in having Missionary George Wixom for two Sundays. Brother Wixom is well known in San Bernardino, his parents having lived here for many years, and a good number of the pioneers of San Bernardino enjoy coming to hear him speak.

District conference was held at Los Angeles, February 6 and 7, and a good many of the members of our branch attended. So our sacrament service was not so well attended as it was on January 3.

On Tuesday evening, February 9, President Frederick M. Smith visited San Bernardino, and we had the opportunity of hearing him speak. We endeavored to send word to all of the scattered members of the branch in order that they, too, might hear the President's message. Our efforts were well repaid as many attended who have not been coming to services for some time. We hope this may encourage them to join with us more often. We, also, had a good number of the Utah Church out to hear him.

Friday evening, February 12, the Temple Builders gave a Valentine party at the home of their leader, Sister Hattie Tait. This party was for the young people of the branch.

On February 14 both morning and evening sermons were given by the pastor.

Brother E. J. French, one of the pioneer missionaries of Southern California, passed away on February 20, and the funeral services were held February 23. The funeral sermon was delivered by Brother Teagarden.

On Sunday, February 21, the morning sermon was given by Brother Eli Bronson, pastor of Central Los Angeles Branch. Brother Bronson is a busy man and is not able to visit us very often, but his sermons are always enjoyed.

At the regular cabinet meeting, held February 1, it was voted to have separate opening services for the children's department of the church school. Now the entire school assembles in the main auditorium and then after the musical prelude and the opening prayer, the children of the kindergarten, primary and junior classes march to the junior auditorium while the opening song is being sung by the school, there they have their own opening services under the supervision of their leader, Sister Wilma Dexter. It was also decided at this cabinet meeting that the men of the branch meet at the church on Monday, February 22, to prepare the church yard for the planting of the lawn. The shrubs and trees have previously been planted around the building. So in the evening after the men had finished their work, the women of the branch served dinner for them in the rear auditorium.

Friday evening, February 26, the women's department gave their regular monthly dinner. At this dinner we had an attendance of ninety-two. These dinners are not given with the main purpose of raising money for our branch expenses but to have a social time for young and old. After the dinner we had a half hour concert by the orchestra, followed by the play, "The Trysting Place," by Booth Tarkington, given by the dramatic class, under the supervision of Sister Leola Nice.

Sunday, February 28, the morning and evening sermons were given by Pastor Teagarden.

Owing to so much sickness in the branch, our services have not been so well attended, but we hope it will be better in the future.

Bradford, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street

It is pleasing to write you again of our activities. This time I wish to tell of the "gentlemen's effort," held in the Gospel Hall, James Street, Bradford, February 27 and 28. This was a great success and I make note that it was "all carried through by the men and what a show!" One might say, "Well, if mere men can carry this through, it would speak well for us to remain bachelors." But, Mr. Editor, I will let you in on the secret. We have some who think so much of us and would grieve to "let us down," and so the "hand that rocks the cradle" comes in when nobody is looking, sets our tables, places our decorations, and then disappears. And lo, the effect is ready, and we men swank and glorify ourselves. So we took the field under the guidance of Pastor G. W. Leggott, and were bedecked to represent our "strong arm," the Navy.

One hundred adults and thirty children were seated at tea. And in accordance with the rules laid down by our "police force," we became active. Numbers of the lady guests had to be fined or taken to the guard room.

Following the tea, everyone prepared for the entertainment. Many old friends were with us and we were glad for their company.

Mr. Mayne, chairman of the evening, introduced the varied program with a short talk. Then Master Tetlow gave a piano solo. Mr. Holland mystified the audience with tricks of illusion. J. Wright sang "There Is a Land." Mr. Cooper with feats of juggling and a supply of good jokes kept the crowd in gales of laughter. Mr. Brook Whiteoak, pianist, sang two solos in falsetto voice. Miss Jones and her father gave splendid music on their concertinas. Our old friend, Mr. Yarwood, brought "Ginger Green" to see us again. Mr. Yarwood is a master in the art of ventriloquism. In behalf of the members of Gospel Hall, we thank everyone who contributed to the success of this entertainment.

Continuing our effort, special services were held on the Lord's day, February 28, the morning meeting convening at 10.45. Our choice of little children opened the service singing "Oh, for a Faith." The congregational hymn was "Come, Holy Spirit, Come." Mr. Tapping gave thanks to God and included special mention of the sick. The Bible reading was from Phillipians 2, and the choir sang "Joy Bells Ringin'." "Did You Think to Pray?" was sung by Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, then the congregation sang, "O God, Whose Presence Glows in All." Then Pastor G. W. Leggott introduced Pastor T. Taylor, remarking on the long years of friendship between them. The latter addressed us on the theme, "The Life of Christ."

The afternoon service convened at half past two, and the young people spent a good time together. Speakers were Mr. Cyril Chorlton and Mr. W. Baguley, both of whom delivered fine talks. Soloists were Florence Holden and Edith Noble.

The choir opened the six thirty evening service, singing "Praise Ye the Lord," and the congregation sang "Let Us Walk in the Light." The invocation was by Mr. G. Wilson; congregational hymn, "Lift up Your Head," and Bible reading from Mark 1. "Take Time to Be Holy," the choir's contribution, preceded announcements and a solo by T. Taylor, "We Shall Know Each Other Better." Then Pastor T. Taylor talked on the lives of Jesus and John the Baptist.

Special Decision Day services were held March 6, nine young people making their decision and being baptized. Reverent inspiration and deep solemnity characterized the performance of the ordinance. High Priest N. Dewsnup officiated, charging those for baptism and the congregation with the necessity of consecrating our lives to the service of God. The meeting opened at ten forty-five in the morning, Pastor G. W. Leggott in charge. Curtis Leggott played an organ voluntary, the choir sang a call to worship, "Stepping in the Light," the congregation, "We Come with Joy the Truth to Tell," then everyone joined in the Lord's Prayer. Elder F. Tapping read the scripture lesson, Acts 2:22-38, and Patriarch W. H. Greenwood presented a short address on "Baptism." During the performance of the ordinance the organ played softly, "Jesus, Mighty King in Zion, Thou Alone Our Guide Shall Be." Then came a duet by the Misses E. Noble and F. Hayward, "O Jesus, I Have Promised," and the congregational hymn, "God Is Marshaling His Army." High Priest G. W. Leggott delivered a short address on "Decisions and What They Mean."

It was the first Sunday of the month and we partook of the sacrament. High Priest G. W. Leggott addressed the congregation on the need of confirmation, and our young people were confirmed. District President W. H. Chandler assisted in confirming together with High Priests Dewsnup, Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, and Elders F. Tapping and H. Barrington.

Sault Sainte Marie, Ontario

The Sault Branch has been holding a series of meetings which lasted seven weeks. Elder H. A. Dayton, district president and the speaker, delivered some fine sermons. Members were heard to remark that this was the best series of meetings they had ever attended. Because of stormy weather, we had no nonmember friends out to hear Brother Dayton's sermons. Our winter did not set in until about February 1, and we are getting our share now. The Saints, however, were faithful in attendance, and numerous questions were asked by them and answered by Brother Dayton.

Though there were no baptisms, we feel that much good was accomplished by these meetings. All of us received a better understanding of the restored gospel. This is the first opportunity that some of our people have had to experience a series of meetings and some attended every service.

While here Brother Dayton was kept busy between preaching, visiting, and doing his district work.

March 2, the branch held its first banquet at the home of Sister William Routledge. Covers were laid for forty. The house was beautifully decorated in the church colors. Supper was served in royal style. The priesthood sat together and Pastor G. A. Edwards was chairman.

We began with songs. After the chairman's remarks, came a speech by Elder Dayton who paid high tribute to the women of the branch for this banquet. They labored together under the leadership of Sister Alex Brechin, supervisor of the adult division. The teachers of each class were called upon to give a short talk. Two solos were given by William Thomas, a nonmember who sings in one of the big churches of this city. This banquet was the first real get together we ever held, and we shall not soon forget it.

March 7, the home of Brother and Sister Edwards was blessed with the arrival of another son.

March 22 we gathered at the home of Sister Miller for a social evening. This took the form of a farewell party in honor of Brother Dayton. Following games and songs, a surprise gift was presented him by the women's work group and the adult division. The presentation was made by Brother Matheson representing the Bible class and Sister Brechin for the women's group.

A few nights before, the young people also surprised Brother Dayton. This was in charge of Sister George Hannah. The honor guest remarked that the Sault Branch was famous for surprises. He left next day for his home with the intention of attending General Conference.

The present depression is felt on every hand, yet we feel that God has blessed us here. The Saints pray that He will bless the conference, and we will try to support the church in every way possible. In offering and sacrifice count on us.

Alva, Oklahoma

Saints here are rejoicing over a ten-day series held by Elder E. B. Hull. These meetings closed March 20. Brother Hull informed us that he had visited a number of branches in western Oklahoma. His lectures on the ten lost tribes were educational. His sermons and counsel were spiritual, and we were strengthened and encouraged to carry on the gospel work at this place.

Good crowds heard Brother Hull's messages. One of the local ministers came to hear his talks on the lost tribes. Some not of our faith seemed interested. One woman asked for a copy of the Book of Mormon to read. Another who was present at the blessing of the little babe of Sister Ina Armstrong, expressed pleasure; she had never before witnessed the ordinance.

Surely good seed has been sown in Alva. We will welcome Brother Hull at any time, or others of the traveling ministry. The members are hoping that some elder will locate here in order that a branch may be organized.

The services of Sister Ina Armstrong, who faithfully furnished music for our meetings, were much appreciated.

The pageant, "The Ten Virgins," presented the evening of March 13, by the young people, was most impressive and beautiful.

And so we march on praying and working for the redemption of Zion.

Battle Creek, Michigan

Battle Creek Branch is growing after having experienced a treat by having a series of services for a period of six weeks. Elder James Pycoc, of Toronto, Canada, occupied the first two weeks, delivering sermons filled with instruction, and inspiring his hearers with a desire to delve more earnestly into the teachings of the Master and learn his truths.

We appreciate the efforts of our pastor, David A. Young, in securing for four weeks the services of such an able speaker as Elder Jesse Hardin, who is consecrating his life and devoting his time to the service of the Master, by going out without purse or scrip to spread the glad tidings of the gospel to the honest in heart.

As a result, four precious souls have been inducted into the kingdom, and those already in the fold have been inspired by the undeniable assurance that God's work can not be frustrated but will go on; his church will triumph, and all who will be faithful to the end will receive the promised reward. If we fail in our mission, it will not be because we have not been warned.

We were also glad to have Sister Hardin with us for a few days, and she has received the stamp of approval by endearing herself to the hearts of all who had the pleasure of meeting her.

Apostle D. T. Williams has delivered the last one of his series of lectures which were so beneficial and greatly appreciated.

The women's department, under the leadership of Sister Robert Evans, is doing good work. Special effort has been made in welfare work, supervised by Sister Ribble, who besides doing two hundred and seventy dollars worth of work among the poor and needy, regardless of church affiliations, has been instrumental in the release from the Kalamazoo State Hospital, of a widow, and the restoration of her two children to her. She also negotiated plans by which the widow has a steady income and is buying her home. This department is always ready to assist those in need. Sister David A. Young has charge of the Easter program.

While the world is suffering from a financial depression, there is no spiritual depression in this branch owing to the faithful service and devotion of Pastor David A. Young, who does all in his power to keep the branch growing. While we do not have an elder here, we are blessed with a leader who, with his wife, is always ready and willing to do all he can to assist in building up the work.

Our object is to assist in the establishing of zionic conditions, and our prayers are for the success of the coming conference and the church in general.

Southern New England Conference

The annual conference of Southern New England District was held in Providence, Rhode Island, March 5 and 6. It opened Saturday afternoon at two thirty with a business meeting which included the reading of reports and other routine matters.

The meeting at 7.15 p. m. was presided over by Apostle Roy S. Budd. Associated with him were District President E. L. Traver, Bishop M. C. Fisher, and High Priest D. F. Joy. Bishop Traver was elected to serve as district president for the coming year, and Elders D. F. Joy, of Providence, and Raymond Bradshaw, of Attleboro, as first and second vice presidents.

Although there were differences of opinion on various articles of business, all were thrashed out in a harmonious manner.

A resolution, unanimously carried, was sent to High Priest William Patterson in appreciation of his earnest labors as worker for Christ and his church while serving recently in this district as a General Conference appointee. Brother Patterson acted as missionary and district president.

The priesthood met Sunday morning at eight o'clock with many present. Brother Budd addressed the group in a pleasing and masterful way, calling attention to the fact that our church is distinctive above all others and that in our preaching and teaching, we must not lose sight of its fundamental principles and doctrines. He said that we, as members of the priesthood, must have a deep conviction within us that we have been called of God and authorized to represent him, in order that we may have faith, courage, and determination to represent him effectively. He stressed the point that God will never call anyone to an office without giving him the opportunity and power to perform the duties of that office. He made an urgent plea for each member of the priesthood to arouse himself and become more active in his divine calling, to rise to the emergency created in the church because circumstances have compelled it to withdraw so many of its workers from the field. Brother Budd stated that if only we move forward in doing the work God requires of us, he will work with us and empower us to take the church onward.

The sacrament service at nine o'clock Sunday morning, in charge of Brother Budd and the district presidency, was of an exceptionally spiritually character. The Spirit of God was with the Saints to a marked degree, lifting us from carnal things and thoughts to such spiritual heights that Apostle Budd was heard to say: "If there are to be other difficulties to come to our church, let them come. I have no fear as long as we have such a spirit and power working with us as are present now."

Two prophecies were given to the priesthood, stating that the Lord would provide for his Saints if they were faithful.

The priesthood were admonished to put in their sickle and reap, and given assurance that God will be with us in mighty power such as we have not before known. We were told that the present young people would grow up to be a righteous and delightful generation in the midst of a wicked and perverse world, and that Zion would be redeemed.

At eleven o'clock a duet was rendered by Mrs. Florence Simmons, of New London, and Mrs. Louise Fox, of Providence. A short talk was ably and interestingly given by Elder Sanford Fisher, of Somerville, whose subject was "Family Budgets." An anthem, under the leadership of Sister Helen Coombs, was sung by the combined choirs of Attleboro, Massachusetts, and New London, Connecticut, followed by a short talk from Bishop M. C. Fisher on the subject, "Our Problem." Messages of greeting and encouragement from the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric were read and greatly appreciated by the Saints.

At 2.30 p. m., Apostle R. S. Budd delivered an inspiring sermon on the subject, "Is There a Life Hereafter?" For a text he used, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He brought out the fact that our acts in life are governed by our belief or disbelief in a life hereafter.

Brother Traver requested Elder Earl R. Bradshaw, of Attleboro, to express to Brother Budd in behalf of the priesthood and men of the district our sincere love, esteem, and appreciation of his friendship and labors while among us. It is not certain, according to Brother Budd's statement, if after General Conference he will be returned to the East. Brother Bradshaw spoke fittingly of Brother Budd's life and labors in this region.

Sister Lucie Sears spoke to Brother Budd in behalf of the women of the district.

Brother Budd was noticeably touched by these appreciative remarks and feelingly responded. He pledged himself to try, by the grace of God, to live worthy our continued love and confidence by patterning his life after the life of Christ and conducting himself as becomes an apostle of Jesus Christ.

His evening sermon, "The Second Coming of Christ," was a masterpiece.

This was unanimously declared to be one of the best conferences held in the East in late years because of the wonderful and harmonious spirit attending.

Lock City Branch

Soo, Michigan

We appreciate the unity manifested by the priesthood. Our interest is with them in these critical hours. Our prayers are for them.

Elder J. J. Ledsworth and wife, of Port Huron, spent two weeks here. They did a good work among us and their efforts were attended by a great degree of the Spirit of God. They left March 21, preparatory to going to General Conference and our prayers are for their return in the near future, to carry out plans for a series of meetings in the early summer. Even though Elder Ledsworth was released from general church appointment, as many others have been, he has endeavored to continue in missionary work, and his efforts have been crowned with success. Many new friends have been made for the church here through their efforts, and while we labored under some difficulties, we have been greatly blessed. Brother Ledsworth so well represented the church that nonmembers were heard to say: "He is indeed a man of God." Sister Ledsworth proves a worthy companion and a real asset to the church as she mingles with Saints.

By recommendation from District President Allen Schreur, Elder Ledsworth helped us organize a branch since we have been laboring in a disorganized condition for about a year.

We as a branch pledge our best as an expression of appreciation for all the church is giving us.

Northern England Young People Hold Convention

Plans of the Northern District presidency and a committee of representatives from various branches in the district reached culmination in the young people's convention held at Wigan Sunday, February 14, under the supervision of the presidency.

Teacher Harold Hope, of Farnworth, chairman of the morning service, introduced as the first speaker, William J. Entwistle, jr., of Wigan, who talked in line with the convention's theme, "Youth and the Church." This talk told us that Brother Entwistle's belief in the church is grounded in the revelation of God's will to his faithful children, a belief that God has revealed himself to his church, is still revealing truth to us, and that he will continue to reveal his mind and will to us in the future. He pointed out the church's place in the life of youth, and urged the young people to prepare for service when the call comes.

Brother Colin Spargo, of Wigan, sang "Jesus Is Calling," then Mr. Cyril Chorlton, a nonmember who has been attending North East Manchester Branch for some time, was announced as the second speaker. For his subject he had chosen "Community Stewardships." "Zion," he stated, "is the goal of all Christian endeavor, but most people seem contented just to sing its praises and picture it as some beautiful garden city. But it must be builded on a sound foundation. The religion that is worth while offers a plan for the solving of the present social and economic problems, and for improving the qualities of human living. This church offers something definite." He defined community stewardships as "group righteousness," which recognizes 1) the Fatherhood of God, (2) the Divinity of Christ, and (3) the brotherhood of man; and its objective is to make these ideals the principles of government. He appealed to the young people to acquaint themselves with the plan so that we shall be prepared when opportunity arises to make definite strides to realize this church ideal.

Sister Annie Waugh, of North East Manchester Branch, sang "Look for the Beautiful." Closing the service Brother Hope remarked that we are serving our apprenticeship and that by careful climbing we shall eventually reach the top.

After lunch the service was devoted to the women, Sister Marie Walker, of Beresford Road, in charge. Sister Doris Gallop, of Warrington, the first speaker, talked on "Youth and the Church," speaking highly of the faith, loyalty, willingness to learn, courage, and working qualities of the young people. She urged a greater recognition of God and the need of sacrifice in his cause. Sister Ada Davies, of Wigan, sang "Sanctuary of the Heart." Then Sister Olive Heywood, of North Manchester Branch, continued the theme of "Youth," showing the love the heavenly Father has for youth, and the protection he has given many who have been his helpers and workers. She particularly stressed the thought that we are indeed laborers together with God.

"Spiritual Insurance," was the theme of Miss May Holden, a nonmember who attends North East Manchester Branch. "The term 'Insurance,'" she said, "means the act of insuring against risk or loss. The conditions of agreement are (1) a good life. You must be in a reasonable state of health and have a fair expectation of life. The better the life, the better the benefits to be obtained. (2) Premiums which must be paid for. Benefits are conditional upon the extent to which you are prepared to make investment. 'With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.' The objects of the society are to get new business (missionary work) and to administer in the contract.

The agreement takes the form of a covenant between God and man. God promises to restore man to his spiritual condition, providing man is ready and willing to keep God's commandments. A very interesting clause in 'Spiritual Insurance' is that a free policy is given to every child up to eight years of age, whether associated with the church or not. Benefits are unconditional and rank equal to the highest paid adult policy."

Tea was served after the service, then at 6.30 we re-assembled under the direction of the presidency, High Priest Nephi Dewsnup, director of Religious Education, in the chair. After the opening services District President William H. Chandler offered fraternal greetings and words of commendation, encouragement, and advice to the young people. The anthem, "Onward Christian Soldiers," was sung by the Warrington Children's Choir.

Elder Fred Davies, missionary, was the first speaker. He stressed the need for vision and for youth, and related some of his experiences when he visited the Centennial Conference, telling what the young people there were doing.

Miss May Holden sang "Tell Us" from "Jubilate," and Elder George Aldridge, of Bradford, addressed the convention. He challenged our love for and devotion to the church, asking us to remember our promise to Jesus to serve him. The Lord said to Moses to tell the Children of Israel to "Go forward." This word comes to us.

Patriarch William H. Greenwood then expressed appreciation of the efforts exerted to make the convention the success it was. He predicted greater things for the young people of the district in the future, and in behalf of the church, conveyed the compliments of the leading authorities in our future efforts.

Before the convention closed and at the suggestion of Brother Dewsnup, a message of greetings and assurance was sent by the young people of this district to the young people in Zion. We pledged them our support in the building of Zion.

All musical arrangements of the convention were in the hands of Sister Lilian Fawcett, of Wigan, who had been appointed musical director for the convention. The district is grateful to her and her helpers.

Detroit, Michigan

April 1, 2, and 3, Detroit Branch celebrated its forty-first anniversary. The week-end program consisted of the following events: Lura Forbes Tompkins gave a program of dramatic impersonations and smiles Friday evening. Receipts from the presentation went to the W. H. Forbes Memorial Fund. The children's spring festival came Saturday afternoon at one thirty, being a mass meeting of the children from all parts of the branch. There was a children's party in the lower auditorium, Mrs. Henrietta Forbes and Miss Lucy Volz in charge. At two o'clock the adults had a mass meeting in which they enjoyed old-time songs, stories, and anecdotes interesting to all members of the branch. Elder D. E. Dowker was in charge, assisted by Mr. V. Schaar. The Saturday evening program was chiefly musical and very pleasing. There were organ, piano, vocal and saxophone numbers. Mrs. Nettie Gault gave the story of music in the branch for forty-one years. A feature of special interest was a committee meeting Wednesday evening, seven thirty, year, 1892.

On Sunday morning all churches of the branch held sacrament services, observing the special request of the Presidency of the church for a period of fasting and prayer for the General Conference. For lunch home-made sandwiches and cake were served in the lower auditorium of First Church. At two o'clock in the afternoon Elder J. Charles Mottashed was in charge of the preaching meeting. Elder A. C. Barmore, of Port Huron, spoke on the theme, "Christ, Our Passover." A historical review, "Past Forty-one Years in Detroit Branch," was given by Mrs. Nettie Gault.

"My Experiences in Detroit Branch Young People's Organizations" was the theme of Elder Robert H. Coates' talk at the young people's league at six o'clock. There were special musical numbers. In the evening Elder Thomas L.

Clarke, of Flint, Michigan, preached on "Millions Now Dying Have Never Lived."

The anniversary program committee consisted of Elder D. E. Dowker, chairman, Mrs. Nettie Gault, historian, Mrs. Henrietta Davis who arranged all musical numbers, Mrs. Henrietta Forbes, Al Grosfield, and A. Henry.

Formerly known as the Evergreen Branch, Detroit Branch was organized April 2, 1891, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Shaw, 179 Champlain Street, by R. C. Evans and H. Rathbun. Elder George W. Shaw was the first pastor. Elder J. Charles Mottashed is the present pastor.

The Men's League has had a successful season and has furnished the branch some interesting speakers who have talked on educational subjects. On the night of February 12 the league sponsored the program of the father and son banquet held at First Church. George J. Russell, president of the league acted as chairman; David E. Dowker was toastmaster. March 13, Robert F. McKee spoke on "Good will Industries." This was the closing meeting of the season. During the summer the league will be securing the best speakers possible for the 1932-33 season.

The regular monthly mass meeting of the department of women was held at First Church the afternoon of March 8. Group No. 3, led by Mrs. Irlke, gave a program number and the annual report of their activities, turning over money earned during the year. Mrs. Esther Cary, of the American Red Cross, talked on "Volunteers."

Attendance seems to be increasing at the services held in the various churches. Some inspiring sermons have been preached. There is increasing interest in the work of the church school which means that teachers and officers are actively at work. Some of the choirs are very busy and have the loyal support of the congregations.

Brother and Sister Robert L. McGee, of Wyandotte Church, mourn the loss of their one-year-old daughter, Joan Marie, who passed away at her home January 9, with pneumonia.

Rock Island, Illinois

Saints of Rock Island Branch have been engaged in several interesting projects. The latest venture was the presentation of "Easter Dawn," a drama written by Elsie M. Barracough and directed by Sister Nellie White and Sister Winifred Stiegel. The cast was as follows: Mother Mary, Nellie White; Mary Magdalene, Helen Lindley; John, A. J. Gray; Pilate, Thomas Willets; guardsmen, L. A. White, Russel Armour, and Lon Mercer, jr.; angel, Annlee Welday; other Mary, Florence Lindley; Joanna and Salome, Marjorie and Marion White; Peter, F. C. Bevan; reader, Winifred Stiegel. The accompanying music and choir were under the direction of Sister Emma Lindley with Sister Hazel Gray, Sister Lettie Willets, and Brothers Leonard and John Stiegel in the quartet. A large number attended, many from neighboring branches, and all seemed touched with the vivid message of Easter.

The Men's Club, under the leadership of A. J. Gray, have been meeting every other Thursday evening. A Father and Son's Night was observed recently to which every man was required to bring his own son or some other boy. Games and refreshments were thoroughly enjoyed.

The young people were given a Saint Patrick's day party with L. A. White as general director and Helen and Winifred Stiegel as sponsors. Green was very much in evidence, even in the refreshments. Games and contests furnished the evening's fun which closed with songs and prayer and a unanimous demand that we "meet together more often." Social functions make for unity in branch life. The younger group were entertained a week later by Nellie White and Ethel Spengler.

The women's department, with Sister Emma Lindley as president, has been quilting and is planning to give a supper in the near future. Sister Lindley is also in charge of the music department which has been giving some splendid music at the evening preaching service. Each Friday evening choir practice is held in the homes of the members and light refreshments add to the enjoyment.

The Oriole Girls have been meeting regularly every other Saturday under the direction of Sister Helen Lindley. They have begun rehearsals on the play, "Truants," by John Preston, which they hope to give soon. In February they were entertained at a Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister John Stiegel.

President F. M. McDowell's visit, February 20, was thoroughly enjoyed, and District President E. R. Davis was the speaker on the following Sunday evening. His sermon on "The Unused Talent," was well received. On a recent Wednesday evening he occupied again, and the Saints were very sorry that the illness of his daughter, Joy, caused him to leave for home earlier than he had planned. Joy, a former resident of Moline, has been an honor student at Graceland this year, and the Saints hope that she may soon be able to resume her studies. Bishop C. J. Hunt paid this branch a brief visit early in March on his way to Independence. His enthusiasm and unflinching fund of information and humor are always welcomed.

Branch President F. C. Bevan is busy with his branch activities and his new position with the fruit company of which Brother R. R. Welday is president. We are glad to report that Brother Welday is improving satisfactorily from his recent serious operation.

The interest of the branch is now centered on the General Conference. Special prayer service is planned for this week in behalf of those in charge and for the general welfare of the conference.

Fanning, Kansas

Easter Sunday was a day of worth-while services for Fanning Saints. Brother James A. Thomas delivered an inspirational and helpful sermon at the morning service in which he pointed out some of the qualities of the worth-while life. He expressed the thought that our aim should be to live so that men are brought to know God through our lives. Brother Virgil Sheppard continued his series of missionary sermons at the evening hour. With the aid of a chart he reviewed the organization and tenets of the New Testament church.

Elder Samuel Twombly was the speaker at the joint service of the Atchison and Troy Knights Templars Easter service held in Troy Methodist Church in the afternoon. A number of Fanning Saints attended this service.

Promotion Day exercises, postponed from an earlier date, were held Sunday morning, March 20. Pastor William Twombly spoke on "Progress." Then the Sunday school superintendent, Fred Marsh with a few well chosen remarks presented the certificates to the twelve being promoted.

Marvin Dittmore and Paul Emory entertained the young people's class and teachers, Brother and Sister Virgil Sheppard, at the W. H. Dittmore home on March 31. About twenty-five were present. The next meeting is to be at the George Hopkins home.

The April sacrament service was in charge of Elders Samuel Twombly, William Twombly, and James A. Thomas. A wonderful spirit was present in the prayer and testimony meeting. The Saints are united in their wishes for the success of the coming conference. A wave of thanksgiving and appreciation swept over the congregation when Brother A. Wiley, who was recently healed of a cancer through administration, arose and in his humble manner testified to the goodness of God to him, saying that he is a living witness to the miraculous power of God's healing. Brother Wiley stated that while a short time ago he was weak and scarcely able to walk about the house, he now feels better physically than he has for years.

Elder Samuel Twombly was called to Stewartsville, Missouri, Monday, March 28, to preach the funeral sermon of George F. Ehlers, one of the pioneer Saints of Stewartville Branch.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Easter Sunday morning the junior choir presented a pleasing Easter service. The members, under the leadership of Alfred Davies, chorister, assisted by the school-teacher and M. Hedglin, the pianist, gave songs and recitations.

In the evening a cantata, "The Song of Triumph," by Edward W. Norman, was given. Soloists were E. W. Lewis, bass; Ellis Lewis, tenor; sopranos, E. Evans and Hannah Lewis. The duet numbers were by Ann Evans and Ruth James. Quartet numbers were greatly appreciated. The senior choir under the leadership of John R. Jenkins is showing great possibilities. We have a capable pianist in Sister M. Hedglin, and are pleased with the musical efforts in the branch.

In this program Pastor Thomas Jones gave a short address on the theme of the cantata, emphasizing the great events of the immaculate birth and resurrection of Christ.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

On the first Sunday morning in March, Second Church was closed in order that the members might meet in district conference with First Branch.

The women met March 10, with twenty-two members present. The group study this year is "Our United Purpose—the Church." Lucinda Madden read a splendid paper on "The Priesthood." Mrs. Netta Caslow read a good paper entitled "Is Life Worth a Serious Effort."

The sacrament was served March 13, to a large attendance, and the Spirit was present to encourage and bless.

The "Jolly Jesters" organized March 14 with E. C. J. Swanson as leader and Chester Carey his assistant. Vera M. Hunter is secretary, and Blonde Carey, treasurer. This organization takes in a group between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five, to provide wholesome recreation. Thirty-six were present at the meeting.

The Sunday school had one hundred and forty-seven present March 27 at which time our race for membership ended. The Gold side won by a small margin, and the Purple side will have to entertain the winners.

The Sunday school gave an impressive program on Easter morning, commemorating the resurrection of our Lord.

A quartet of women sang the cantata, "The Thorn-Crowned King," that evening. The singers were Hazel Gribben, Lucinda Madden, Ethel Kirkendall, and Ada Bierly.

Sermons for the month were good, speakers being G. H. Kirkendall, J. E. Matthews, C. W. Clark, pastor of First Branch, Doctor W. B. Reeves, and Bishop H. E. French.

Brentwood (Missouri) Branch

Marshall and Berry Avenues

Brother Gillespie has lately passed beyond. He was much liked by all with whom he came in contact. He was a great church worker and enjoyed doing things for others. He is sadly missed by the branch.

At the district conference which convened at Saint Louis February 27 and 28, Brother Elmer Kaler was ordained to the office of teacher and Brother R. C. Hands to the office of Aaronic priest.

Lately the young men's class has organized a club called the Brentwood Young Men's Club. They are attempting to have various social activities that will be of benefit to the church and to our fellow men.

Arthur Oakman, district missionary, held services from March 7 to 25. Due to inclement weather and illness among the members, many were unable to attend. Brother Oakman was ill and did not preach for about a week, but several of the local priesthood preached until he had recuperated. Although there were no baptisms, much good was done. Several in this neighborhood are interested in the gospel message.

North Manchester Branch Has Annual School Party

On Saturday, January 30, North Manchester, Branch, England, held its annual school party and prize distribution. The catering committee had been well chosen. After tea the tables were cleared away and an interval allowed in which the younger ones had a good romp. Then at 7.30 p. m. Patriarch William H. Greenwood, chairman, announced the commencement of the evening's entertainment, a playlet entitled "Peter and Polly," by four juniors. Sister Maud Nelson, Brother Greenwood's daughter, sang "Only a Rose," and then Sister Olive Heywood gave her representation of the way three people would say a poem. Games were organized for the adults and young people under the leadership of Sister Nelson and Brother Thomas Heywood and for the children by Sister Olive Heywood. Then the little folks showed what they could do in reciting and singing. Instead of the usual rounds, Nursery Rhymes were substituted, and the children's group had the longest list.

Under the supervision of High Priest Nephi Dewsnup, director of Religious Education, the prizes were distributed to the children with a word of encouragement and praise for each one. Sister Nelson sang, "I Bring a Love Song," from "Viennese Nights," and Sister Heywood and Olive gave "Faulty Receptions," which somebody said were very true to life.

This was followed by a farce by two of the juniors, "Muffins and Crumpets." Games finished a very enjoyable evening.

We are anticipating a special service by the juniors shortly after Easter, "The Victorious Cross," the sister production to the "Golden Ladder," which the children have given several times.

Denver, Colorado

Eastern Colorado District met in conference in Denver, February 27 and 28, with a large crowd in attendance. Very profitable sessions were much enjoyed by all. We greatly appreciated the presence of President Elbert A. Smith, who made a special trip from Independence in order to be with us, and we received much good from his two excellent sermons. All regretted the absence of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who had expected to be here, but was kept at home by illness. Delegates to General Conference were elected, and other business was transacted.

Mrs. Eva Grace Vawter, mother of Sister Ethel Kemp, passed away Friday, February 26, after a long illness.

Leo C. Newland, husband of Sister Elizabeth Newland, died in Huntington Park, California, February 11, 1932, of bronchial pneumonia. The funeral service was held in Denver, February 16, in charge of Elder Glaude Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Newland lived in Denver for many years, but have been living in California for some time. Sister Newland is a daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Beardsmore of this city.

On Sunday, March 6, President Frederick M. Smith visited Denver and preached the evening sermon. He addressed the members of the priesthood in the afternoon.

The Young People's Dramatic Club presented a three-act comedy at the church the evening of March 17. This was a very entertaining play, well acted. A dramatic class has been organized by the young people, with Elder E. P. Darnell as teacher. They have enrolled for the annual tournament of religious drama sponsored by the Colorado Council of Religious Education, to be held in April. The play selected is "A Pilgrim Mother."

During the church school hour on Easter Sunday, the children rendered a program consisting of songs, recitations by Edgar Jones and Amneh Robertson, and a piano solo by Elaine Salyards. At the eleven o'clock service Elder E. J. Williams gave a short talk, "The Significance of Easter," which was followed by the cantata, "From Cross to Crown," most beautifully rendered by the choir under the direction of E. W. Fishburn. In the evening we had the pleasure of hearing Apostle M. A. McConley, who was on his way to Independence.

Denver Saints were made sad to learn of the death of Brother Charles E. Everett on Sunday evening, March 20, at his home in Oregon City, Oregon. Brother Everett was closely connected with the development of Denver Branch for many years. He served as pastor for some time, and had much to do with the financing and building of our church edifice. We shall always remember his unselfish service.

Brother Glaude Smith has made several visits, as district president, to the other branches of the district. During his absence from Denver, Elders E. J. Williams, J. B. Wildermuth and E. P. Darnell have preached for us.

Holden Stake

Atherton

On March 20 an all-day get-together was held at Atherton, visiting branches being Buckner and Blue Springs. The object of the meeting was to bring about a spiritual uplift. At noon the members were served sandwiches. Apostle J. F. Garver was the speaker morning and evening, giving two splendid sermons. A prayer service was held in the afternoon.

At Easter the dramatic club gave a play, "Easter Dawn," to a large and appreciative audience. Songs were sung by the men's quartet and the women's quartet.

Brother and Sister L. L. Bogue, who have been faithful and active workers in the branch for several years, moved to a farm near Grandview, Missouri. A farewell evening was held in their honor, a short program preceding a prayer and testimony meeting. Brother and Sister C. Austin, who have been with us only one year, were included in this farewell meeting. They are moving to the Spring Branch Farm.

Local men have been occupying the pulpit most of the time during the last two months. Their talks were appreciated and their powers of expression are improving.

Dunlap, Iowa

District Missionary E. Y. Hunker held a series of meetings here the latter part of February. Because of bad roads the crowds were not so large as they otherwise would have been. Brother Hunker delivered some good sermons and those who were able to be present benefited greatly by these meetings.

The women of the mission meet once a month for work and social purposes. One day they had a fruit shower on the pastor's family.

The junior church services are proving successful. One Sunday in each month we hold a junior prayer service and nearly every child takes part.

We are glad to welcome Brother George Hansen and family to this group. They recently moved into this vicinity.

Following the short program Easter Sunday Mrs. Elvin Baughman and Ruth Stewart sang, "Suffer Little Children," and Carolyn Joyce, baby daughter of Sister Minnie Quick and husband, and John Paul, son of Brother and Sister Dean Stewart, were blessed under the hands of Elder D. A. Holcomb and Elvin Baughman. The Easter sermon was by Elder George Hansen.

Santa Rosa, California

This branch holds regular services every Sunday morning in Germania Hall, on Third Street, with an attendance of from twenty to thirty-five. Pastor Herbert E. Walker, who holds the office of priest, conducts the services except on the third Sunday of each month when an elder comes from Oakland. This month, March 20, District President G. P. Levitt delivered a splendid sermon. He was accompanied by Missionary H. W. Savage.

At the close of the service David Lawrence, infant son of Brother and Sister Ben H. Budworth, was blessed. During the afternoon the brothers visited Sister Etta Cooper Walker who is convalescing from a major operation. She is rapidly recovering.

The Sunday school under the leadership of Sister Ben Budworth, the superintendent, presented a good Easter program.

Though the members in Santa Rosa are scattered, they are loyal and sincere, and peace and harmony prevail.

Revelation Given Through President Frederick M. Smith

MESSAGE BRINGS PEACE AND ASSURANCE TO THE WHOLE CONFERENCE

The release of Albert Carmichael from the Presiding Bishopric, the calling of George G. Lewis to a place in the Quorum of Twelve, the calling of L. F. P. Curry to the position of Presiding Bishop, the naming of Bishop G. L. DeLapp as counselor to Bishop Curry, the direction that Bishop Curry should select another counselor as wisdom and inspiration should direct, the selection to be ratified by conference, and the call to the church for unity, effort, and brotherly love, were the subjects treated in the revelation given through President Frederick M. Smith and delivered by him to the conference assembled the afternoon of Thursday, April 14. The body was immediately adjourned and copies given to all of the quorums for consideration. At the meeting next day it was reported that all quorums had voted to approve the revelation. In all of the leading quorums the vote was said to be unanimous.

"To the Church:

"To the condition of the church and the personnel of the Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric I have in official capacity as well as in personal meditation and prayer given much thought, and have earnestly sought Divine wisdom and guidance. Believing that such wisdom and inspiration have been given me, I present the following as the word of the Lord to us now:

"Under conditions existing it is well that Bishop Albert Carmichael should be released from further responsibility as Presiding Bishop, he being commended for the faithful devotion to the onerous tasks which have been his to perform. In his stead let Bishop L. F. P. Curry be chosen to give such time and energy to this office as opportunity and the conditions surrounding him will permit, working towards the time when he can give his full time and attention to the work of the office to which he is thus called. In the work of the office Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp should be associated as counselor, and one other be named by Bishop Curry, as wisdom and the voice of inspiration may indicate, the selection to be ratified by the Conference.

"To fill a vacancy existing in the number of the Twelve, let George G. Lewis be set apart and ordained as an apostle, and take his place with that Quorum, and enter with his brethren upon the active work of the Apostolic quorum and as representatives of the church.

"The movements towards better understanding of ministerial responsibilities, duties, and goals, and towards unity of endeavor in teaching, preaching, evangelizing, and the perfecting of the Saints, are pleasing to the Lord. Contentions, bickerings, and strife are unseemly, hinder the work of the church, and should not find place among the Saints. Only in the peace of fraternity and the unity of those caught up in the spirit of Zion's redemption can the work of the Lord be accomplished. To this task let the church devote its energies."

"FREDERICK M. SMITH, President of the Church.

The Events of Conference

Tuesday, April 12,

A Program of Religious Education Adopted

Routine business of a minor nature occupied the attention of the conference. A communication came from the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy recommending the adoption of a document entitled, "The Next Steps in Religious Education." On this recommendation the document was adopted by the conference. Owing to its length it can not be presented here, and our readers may expect to see it printed in some future issue with appropriate explanation.

Officers for Quorum of High Priests

The conference next approved a motion that Ward A. Hougas be ordained as President of the Quorum of High Priests. A similar motion provided for the ordination of John F. Sheehy and Blair Jensen as counselors to Brother Hougas.

Board of Trustees for Herald Publishing House

The Presiding Bishopric nominated and the conference approved the following men as members of the Board of Trustees for the Herald Publishing House: John Luff, Ward Hougas, A. Carmichael, Clarence Skinner, and G. Leslie DeLapp.

The Presiding Bishopric was advised by the Standing High Council to seek authority of the conference to dispose of the radio interests of the church. This permission was granted.

Superannuated

The Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric recommended the superannuation of the following men: R. S. Salyards, W. A. McDowell, Thomas Newton, and C. J. Hunt.

For Reinstatement and for Ordination

The Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric recommended that J. E. Matthews be restored to his office in the Order of Evangelists.

Elders Dana S. McDole and J. Stanley Kelley were recommended and approved for ordination to the office of bishop.

New Financial Policy

On Saturday, April 9, a document was introduced from the Quorum of Twelve concerning the general matter of responsibility for the financial affairs of the church. Action on it was deferred, and it was made the special business for 10 o'clock Tuesday. The significant part of the document was contained in a single recommendation:

Resolved, That the Presiding Bishopric shall assume and are hereby directed to assume full responsibility to see that the finances of the church are used strictly in accordance with the laws and enactments of the church, and for the faithful performance of such responsibility they shall be held answerable to the church in General Conference assembled.

A motion to adopt prevailed.

Tribute to Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson

The death of Sister Wallace N. Robinson, former director of the Department of Music, on January 18, having occasioned the church at large much sadness, the following tribute to her memory was approved for entering in the minutes and transmission to the family as the sentiments of the conference:

In Memory of Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson

In His inscrutable wisdom, God has permitted the passing from this life of our beloved sister, Louise Alcorn Robinson.

We recall that through many years of happy association with the church of her choice, the time, efforts and talents of this gentle sister were freely used in advancing the cause of worship in music and song. We recognize that her splendid judgment and excellent wisdom were effectively exercised in guiding the activities of the Department of Music, that her own beautiful and cultured voice was frequently heard in the assemblies of the Saints, that her friendly encouragement and consecrated example, unflinchingly given to the younger students in our ranks, has left to all a rich heritage of inspiration.

Sorely as we do now miss the presence of this noble woman among us, and the solace and comfort of her generous gifts of song, we are conscious that such a life as hers can never die, that its memory will remain with us, and continue to exert a benevolent influence throughout the church.

In consideration of these sentiments we, the members and visitors of the conference do hereby express our grateful appreciation of the rich beauty and grace of her life and ministry, the sorrow we so deeply feel at her passing, and our tender sympathy for her family in their grief and bereavement.

A document was presented from the Order of Evangelists calling for the reaffirmation of General Conference Resolutions number 317 and 377, touching dancing, card playing, and also the reference to the spirit of speculation in Doctrine and Covenants 127:7. This resolution called forth more eloquent oratory than any other single motion brought before the conference. After various means of disposing of the document were proposed, it was finally referred to the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. The document and the recommendations of the council will be printed in a later issue.

A document was presented from the Quorum of Twelve stating their conviction that the time had come for the return of John W. Rushton to the Quorum. It was addressed to the First Presidency, then presented to the conference. The body finally returned the document to the First Presidency for report to this conference.

Approval was given to recommendations for the ordination as High Priests of the following men: H. L. Livingston, of Philadelphia; William T. Wellman, Omaha; Frank Gray, John MacGregor, and James F. Winegarden, of London, Ontario.

Rushton Back to Quorum of Twelve

Great rejoicing was manifest when the Presidency, after consideration and conference with Elder John W. Rushton, approved the recommendation of the Twelve that he be reinstated in the Quorum of Twelve. Speeches were made which indicated the genuine quality of the reconciliation, and the feeling of fraternity which caused the move to be made. Thus is settled happily, and we hope for ever, an incident that had caused sadness. All present gave evidence of unaffected pleasure over the event.

Financial Policy

There was presented to the body at this time from the Order of Bishops a communication entitled "Financial Policy," covering the aims and acts of our present financial administration, which have already been discussed in the Herald of February 15, 1931. It is possible that we may have further material to present at some future time when space permits. The full matter has been treated in the Conference Daily Herald.

Sister Audentia Smith Anderson has been arranging and editing the memoirs of the late President Joseph Smith. Sister Anderson brought to the audience short excerpts from the memoirs, displaying great enthusiasm in her subject, and much interest in the proposed volume was evidenced.

At the afternoon session the principal event was the reading by President Frederick M. Smith of a revelation to the church. The text of this document appears elsewhere in this issue. Conference was adjourned early and copies of the documents were given to the quorums in order that they might report upon it.

Friday, April 15

Revelation Received and Accepted

This was to be the long day of the conference, with much to be done to complete the business. The first matter for attention was to receive reports from the various quorums as to their approval of the revelation received the previous day. After all quorums had reported their approval, Apostle Paul M. Hanson moved and Elder James E. Bishop seconded that the document be received as a revelation from God and included in all future editions of the Doctrine and Covenants, and that provision be made for the ordination of the men named therein. A standing vote was taken, visitors being also allowed to add their approval, and the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," was sung. A prayer of thanksgiving was offered by President Elbert A. Smith.

Ordinations in the Afternoon

President Frederick M. Smith spoke of the priesthood, its duties and obligations. Elder George G. Lewis was ordained to the office of apostle; Bishop Albert Carmichael to the office of patriarch and evangelical minister; Elder Ward A. Hougas to the office of president of the Quorum of High Priests; Elder E. Y. Hunker to the office of President of Seventy; and Elders Blair Jensen and John F. Sheehy to the office of Counselor to the president of the Quorum of High Priests.

The following men were then ordained to the office of high priest: James F. Winegarden, Henry L. Livingston, Carroll L. Olson, Howard Andersen, J. Stanley Kelley, Leonard Lea, Alma K. Dillee, and Daniel B. Sorden.

President F. M. McDowell delivered a charge to the men ordained and President Elbert A. Smith delivered a charge to the membership of the church.

Events of the Evening

A service in honor of the superannuated ministers was held, during which Elder R. S. Salyards and Mrs. Salyards, Elder W. A. McDowell and Mrs. McDowell, Elder C. J. Hunt and Mrs. Hunt, and Elder Thomas Newton were called to the platform and honored by the conference and presented with decorations.

The following high priests were ordained to the Standing High Council: A. B. Phillips, Amos Allen, Alma K. Dillee, Harry G. Barto, Howard Andersen, Carroll L. Olson, Leonard Lea, and J. Stanley Kelley.

Appointments of fields of labor were read by the chairman. These may be read elsewhere in this issue. While the appointees and their wives were on the platform they were given a charge by the chairman. All sang, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go."

Conference was officially adjourned to meet on April 6, 1934.

Sunday, April 17

Post-Conference Ordinations

Since Bishop Curry had been unable to be present at the time of the other ordinations, a special ordination service was held in the Auditorium on Sunday at 11 o'clock prior to the preaching service. Brother Curry was ordained to the office of Presiding Bishop under the hands of President Elbert A. Smith. Immediately following, G. L. DeLapp was ordained as Counselor to the Presiding Bishop under the hands of President F. M. McDowell, and, under the hands of President F. M. Smith, J. Stanley Kelley was ordained to the office of bishop. A meeting of the priesthood, filling the main floor of the Stone Church, is accounted for in the news columns of this issue. At night a large audience greeted Apostle John W. Rushton at the Auditorium and listened to a sermon delivered by him.

2. What arguments can you bring to prove the resurrection?
3. Do you believe that the doctrine of the resur-

Bishop Carmichael Retires

HONORED AND LOVED, HE LAYS ASIDE HEAVY DUTIES

(From the Conference Daily Herald.)

Tired in body but courageous in spirit and working to the end—thus Albert Carmichael retires from his position as Presiding Bishop of the Church, taking with him the universal love and respect of the people. With honesty and integrity that have never been questioned during his career, and that today are the most shining attributes of his character, this man who has stood by his trust in good times and in bad ones is permitted to take a period of well-earned and badly needed rest.

We can imagine Brother Carmichael taking his hat off the peg in his office for the last time—a swift glance around, a flash of a smile for the staff of workers that have labored with him, and one of his quick-thrusting Scotch jokes—that is the good Bishop's kind of a departure.

A. CARMICHAEL

Presiding Bishop since April, 1925; a bishop since August 11, 1908; bishop of Lamoni Stake from November 5, 1916, until the higher appointment; an elder since December 6, 1893—that is his record. Born in Sacramento, California, in 1863, the sunshine of his native plains has never left him. It was but little more than ten years later that he was baptized.

As a man he is a rare combination: he has never been able to overcome his Scotch ancestry, nor to

Letters to the Editor

Pray Earnestly for Guidance

The Saints' Herald of December 30, 1931, contained an article entitled, "Have We a Practical Religion?" I have read and reread that article, and can fully appreciate the sentiment of the author.

I came in contact with the latter-day work in January of 1927. I heard a few sermons preached that spring, but not one that would assist a non-member to learn of the doctrine. However, I attended some classes, studied the Book of Mormon, and became very much interested in the work. In April we moved and I had no further opportunity to meet with the Saints, but I subscribed for the church papers, bought some books, and borrowed others. For two years I studied diligently.

Many times as I read the financial reports in the Herald I was shocked at the indifference of many of the members. I realized that if all the members were paying their tithing, there would not need to be one dollar of indebtedness on the church, and the missionary work could be going forward.

As I read and studied the sermons and articles, looking up references in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, I realized that I had found the true teachings of Jesus Christ. Nevertheless, I wondered if the work could succeed with so many failing to keep the financial law. But through earnest prayer and meditation, it was made clear to me that I should do my duty regardless of the faults of others.

I was baptized in August of 1929. Since then I realize how unworthy we are of the many blessings we receive from our heavenly Father. I am trying to keep the commandments of God including the financial law, and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may continue faithful.

I feel if the author mentioned would pray earnestly for guidance, he would see his duty to himself and God.

forget his Californian nativity. Generous to a weakness where he saw suffering, always tender hearted, shrewd in his judgment of men, a fearless champion of what he believed to be right, kindly and full of the wholesome fun that makes life worth while, Brother Carmichael has endeared himself to innumerable people of all ages.

Our hearts go with Brother Carmichael as he retires, and it is our sincere hope that he may live to enjoy the rest that he so well has earned.

The Resurrection From the Dead

By James E. Bishop

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.—2 Corinthians 5: 1-5.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believeth thou this?—John 11: 25, 26.

The resurrection from the dead is the greatest boon ever preached to men. It is not even second to being cleansed from sin and saved to righteousness; for without eternal life such salvation would only be a promise without realization; almost a mockery. However, salvation from sin and growth in righteousness are part of the general plan of salvation. "Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead." Such is the voice of latter-day revelation.

Resurrection of the body from the condition of death was preached repeatedly by the early apostles and the same reasons exist for preaching it today. It is the ultimate compensation. It is the restorer of lost jewels and the revealer of new joys. It is the destroyer of suffering, pain, sorrow and death. It is the reward of God. It is eternal life, the greatest gift of God. It is the fulfillment of the highest ideals that men have striven for. It is the continuation and exaltation of personality. It is the recoverer of friends and dear ones. It is the atmosphere of life in a celestial world.

Belief in the resurrection carries with it the cogent and logical consequence of using this life in preparation for that fuller life. "He that hath this hope purifieth himself." What other doctrine could cause a man to work assiduously for the social program of the church? What other doctrine offers such comfort and consolation to the bereaved? What other doctrine, when believed, is as stimulating? Why, then, try to lessen its effect? Why try to show that Jesus had more to say about immediate social problems than the resurrection and eternal judgment?

Life as we now live it, is a valley of mists and tears. It is a time of trial and testing.

What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? . . . And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.—Revelation 7: 13-17.

Life as we know it now, compared in duration with the years that fail not, is exceedingly brief. It is a vapor and a mist that before the heat of the sun wafts away. It is like the grass that today is green and tomorrow withers. It is like the flower that blooms when picked, but fades and dies in our hand. But in the eternal and celestial world things will not be transitory, for an angel has sworn by him that lives for ever that time should be no longer.

Life as we now live it has its share of disappointments. Twenty-five years and more are spent in preparation for some worth-while task. "And when he thinks, full good easy man, his powers are a ripening, comes a frost, a killing frost, that nips his root." Old age has set in with its infirmities. The elasticity and physical joys of youth have vanished. Looking backward takes the place of fond anticipations and building castles. This is particularly true of those who have not yet believed and studied the Scriptures and the life of Christ in the light of the glorious hope of the resurrection.

But one may ask, Is it a hope grounded in fact or was it developed in the mind of man? Was it born as a projection of radical egoism because of the cruelty of Roman times, and the terrific persecution heaped upon the early Christians? Is it not merely a "wish" doctrine and is it not a scientific impossibility?

The question can be cleared up with as much reason and evidence as many other matters. The existence of molecules, atoms, and electrons is not believed because seen or heard, for they are not discerned by the greatest and most powerful microscopes. Their existence is a matter of inference and faith. No one ever saw gravity. Its existence is inferred. No one knows the essence of life, of thought, of mind, of consciousness and for that matter of light and sound, or of electricity. But we enjoy them and thank God for them.

It is not science that says that the resurrection is impossible. Some half-informed interpreter of science does that. Listen to Professor James Ward:

What we have to note is the existence in our time of a vast circle of empirical knowledge in the whole range of which the idea of necessary Being or first Cause has no place. . . . If modern science had a voice and were questioned as to the omission of all reference to a Creator, it would only reply: I am not aware of needing any such hypothesis. . . . But vast as the circuit of modern science is, it is still of course limited. On no side does it begin at the beginning, or reach to the end. In every direction it is possible to leave its outposts behind, and to reach the open country where poets, philosophers and prophets may expatiate freely.

Huxley said there were no natural impossibilities.

In nature many analogies may be pointed out. If leaves turn brown and golden and fall and leave the trees bare and gaunt, they return again in the spring of the year. If the sun sets amid clouds of fleecy amber and gold of an evening, it rises again in the morning. The butterfly was once in a moth state. The grain that is planted dies, but it brings forth manifold of its likeness. The log that is burned of an evening, cheerily giving off its heat as it is dying, gives up in radiation the waves of heat that it gathered from the sun, which also made its life possible.

It is not impossible to find more than analogies in nature of the resurrection. Perhaps we can find principles that are identical. The great power that ushered in the present industrial era was steam. Steam became commercially possible because of the discovery of coal. Coal had died and was buried in the carboniferous age. Those great forests "had their day and ceased to be." While they lived they gathered in the energy of the sun. They bore their fruits and flowers and their rich colors. Great geological changes came and those primeval forests were buried under the accumulation of years. But they did not live in vain. Their vast treasures were hidden under the garments of the earth until the voice of man called them forth. Coal came forth in a resurrection. It yielded its energy. Its energy drove the wheels of industry, drew great trains over continents and liners over the seven seas. Presently it was discovered that it contained other treasures. Coal was made to yield the perfumes of fresh violets and honeysuckle, the flavors of a hundred fruits and the colors of a thousand gardens. From coal was distilled the sprays that shield living trees from blight and destructive parasites. The discovery of coal and its rich treasures is the resurrection of the carboniferous age.

Perhaps science has more to say in favor of the resurrection than against it. "For us it is oxygen which thus summons the dead from the tomb; which vitalizes the dead molecules and atoms. The energy is stored in certain of the atoms of the molecules of protoplasm in the form-widened orbits of rotations of the electrons. It is this which gives them the power of reacting and passing back to the dead. When such electrons fall back to more stable configuration, the atom and molecule reverts to the dead and inert form such as we keep in bottles. It is the oxygen, then, which vitalizes all animals; but it is from the sun that the vital, radiant energy has come." In the previous paragraph we have this amazing statement:

It is perfectly correct, therefore, from this point of view to speak of living and dead hydrogen atoms. We can even go farther with the simile if we wish, and say that when the living highly reactive form of the atom escapes at the moment of death, for a ray of light leaves the dying atom and travels onward in space, until perhaps it encounters and is absorbed by some other dead hydrogen atoms, which again raises to life by thus giving it a soul. What is this soul? It is a minute portion of the luminiferous ether; of time and space; of eternity and infinity. (Quoted by Edwin Slosson in his Creative Chemistry.)

There are analogies of the resurrection in philosophy. Nietzsche recognized that the human body was incapable of realizing all the aspirations and ideals of life. The vital urge is strong, the flesh is weak. Many thinkers expect that biological processes will produce new forms of life, which will more perfectly reflect and be servant to the inner urge. In effect this is identical with the need and provision of the resurrection. The Scripture of the lesson says, "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened." That house will be dissolved and we shall inhabit a house eternal in the heavens and thus mortality will be swallowed up of life.

The spirit and the body is the soul of man. The spirit is imperishable. The body of flesh and blood decays and dies. The death of the body does not destroy affiliation of the spirit with God when established according to the gospel. That is the meaning of the text, "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die," and the challenge, "Believeth thou this?"

As direct testimony we have the following from Peter: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty." The resurrection of Jesus is the first fruits of the dead. If Jesus had not been resurrected, there would have been no Pentecost in Christian history. There would have been no Primitive Christian Church, no Apostle Paul, and nothing would have been heard of Peter as a "fisher of men," after the arrest and trial of Jesus.

After the death of Jesus the disciples were utterly discouraged. Nothing short of some strong external power could reorganize and encourage them. Nothing short of the appearance of Christ as their resurrected Lord could be that external power. This filled them with joy unspeakable and gave them grounds for belief in the greatest of all themes; the most wonderful of all events and the greatest manifestation of the grace and power of God.

And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

The apostles staked their lives on the resurrection of Christ. Nothing could move them and that event stands out as the greatest in Christian history. Just as long as men will have to live in the flesh and face the problem of death, the resurrection will constitute the greatest boon to them. Blessed is he that believes in it and preaches it and lives accordingly.

The collateral matter presented by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15, which he concludes with his personal testimony is strong evidence of the resurrection of Christ and it also certifies that the righteous shall share in the glories of the resurrection.

The day of Pentecost and the outpouring of the Spirit of God is unimpeachable evidence of the risen Lord.

All these lines of evidence are pointed out in the personal experience made possible to all by him who "hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit." This Spirit is possible to all. It is promised to all who obey the gospel. We are not converted until we have been born of the Spirit and we are not Christians until we bear the fruits of that Spirit, which are, "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

A lively belief in the resurrection is a vital part of Christian equipment. It was a living reality in the lives of the early apostles and primitive Christians. Faith in that doctrine should not wane in our lives. It should become brighter. It should be preached on other seasons than Eastertide. It is the great redemptive act of God for man. It is the gateway to eternal life. It is a human necessity that no human can supply. It is a redemptive process found only in Christ.

Confidence in that great redemptive act begets faith and all good works.

The world stands at the moment between two eras—one is dead or dying, but the other is hardly yet born. The one is dominated by a complex of fear, the other by a passion for fellowship. The one is committed to the belief that security can be attained only by guns and bombs and submarines and battleships; the other believes that only by mutual trust, open-minded conference, and whole-hearted cooperation can that objective be reached.—Reverend Frank T. Woods, Federal Council Bulletin.

True friendship is a harmony between souls rather than between minds. Our best friends are those with whom we are most in unison at heart. It is not needful that friends always think alike. Often they hold opinions as far apart as the poles, but there must be a unity of spirit and a mutual heart throb if friendship is to be of the enduring kind. When two persons hold this relation to each other, they are then more than mere acquaintances—they are friends.—Exchange.

God With Us

By Merl B. Grover

"No man can do the work thou doest except God be with him."

Those words, spoken to a young man who had diligently set about his Father's business many centuries ago, should not be unfamiliar to Saints of his church in the latter days of history. The above statement impresses us with two facts: first, that this young man conducted his life so that he was able to have God's spirit with him; and second, that he lived in such a way that his very life, and the work which he was able to accomplish proclaimed that the spirit of his Father was with him.

When this statement was made to Jesus, his work was already being done; the man who had so spoken had witnessed the fruits, in part at least, of the work Jesus was doing. It was of such a character of greatness, it was so outstanding, it was so marked with divine strength that the wise man who came to Jesus on this occasion could not help saying, "No man can do the work thou doest except God be with him." Even as all productive things are measured by their products, so was this man considering the product of the Master and finding it of such great merit that it could be explained in no other way save by the spirit of God.

We as Latter Day Saints must all agree that were we, even in the slightest extent, accomplishing the mission God wants us to accomplish, the eyes of the whole thinking world would be upon us, and the lips of the wise would bear the age-old tribute, "No man can do the work God doest except God be with him." But already we have waited too long; already we have condemned ourselves too much; already we have talked too much about what we ought to have done, and thought too little about what we must do now. Our task is no longer to be looked upon as a task, but rather as an opportunity to rise to the same level with Jesus and his virile disciples in bringing to pass in a different generation of men the identical purposes and ideals for which those men labored, and lived, and in many cases died. The assignment given to this tiny band of men and women is of such magnitude, and so startling that even those of us who are most familiar with that undertaking must solemnly aver in our hearts that truly no man or group of men can do the work we would seek to do, except God be with us.

The repeating of that statement and the applying of it to our present day church brings before us two more facts: first, it is possible for us, even as Jesus, to have God's Spirit with us; and secondly, our task is so great that we can not even dream of succeeding in it, unless we do have his Spirit with us. The promises given to us are the same as those given to Jesus and his coworkers of the days when he lived on the earth in flesh—namely, that if we keep his commandments, and live his teachings he will pour out upon us blessings that we shall be scarcely able to bear. Our challenge, then, is to live, to talk, to work, and to think in such a way that in spite of all the opposing forces of a sin-ridden world, God will be with us.

Autobiography

XIII.—A YEAR OF DEBATES

By James Franklin Mintun

On January 4, I was in attendance at the business meeting of the Lake Shore Branch, now disorganized. The next day I occupied in the Presbyterian Church on the Omaha agency by invitation of Reverend W. A. Galt, who had charge. I preached in the afternoon and evening, both sermons being on the Book of Mormon, showing it to be a history of the Indians. To these sermons the minister urged no objections, although I lodged with him that night. About forty Indians, and a few white people attended. The young Indians, and most of those who attended were young men, showed an excellent example of church decorum.

I then spent two nights in a schoolhouse near Craig, where there were a very few who desired to hear, the majority were more interested in driving nails in the lock so that we could not get in the second night, and in throwing stones at me while I was preaching. Their aim was not accurate, so none struck me. I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. Blackstone and family. This family thought some of the people there might do us personal injury if we remained longer, and thought it wise that we should not stay.

On the fourteenth of January I began meetings in the Presbyterian Church in Decatur, having large and interested audiences from the first, through the respect the people had for the Saints living there.

A Healing Performed

On the twenty-first I began meetings at the church in Fremont, but was called to Decatur to preach the funeral sermon on the twenty-second of Brother James Walter Williams, a young man held in high repute, so much so that at the Methodist Episcopal Church where the sermon was preached about four hundred people were assembled. I then returned and continued preaching in the church at Fremont till the thirty-first when I attended and presided over the Sunday school convention that was held at the Platte Valley Branch. Assisted at the conference that followed on June 1 and 2.

At the close of the evening services on Saturday an urgent request came from a family living not far from the schoolhouse where the conference was held that the elders be sent at once as one man was possessed with an evil spirit. Brother Alexander Smith, the missionary in charge of Nebraska this year was present, and he said to me, "You go." I hesitated for the reason that I was very wearied with the duties of the two days preceding, and also because of the report that one was possessed. Brother Smith answered when I hesitated, "You go; and take what elders you wish with you." I said, "If that is your decision, I will." I selected of the elders present three or four, and we went and found a house filled with excited people. This young man and the family were not members of the church, although his young wife was. I found the young man on the floor his hands tied, and feet also, and three men on either side of him trying to keep him from butting his head against the wall, which he was apparently trying to do when I entered. When he could not do this he was raising his body up and throwing it down on the floor with considerable force, and the men could not prevent it. I learned there was no oil present so I sent for some, and while the oil was being secured I sought the young man's father, who was weeping and quite concerned, and asked him if he desired us to seek the Lord for the deliverance of his son. He said, "If you do not he will kill himself." I then sought his wife who was hysterical at the condition of her husband, and brought quietness to her, and the realization to her that she should exercise her faith, since she was in the church, and she became quiet and went with me in the room where her husband was still on the floor. As soon as the oil came, I requested that his hands be untied, when he raised up on his knees. I then took a teaspoonful of oil and got between him and the wall, and gave it to him. I then stepped to one side, when he began to spit the oil out all over the people on both sides of him, turning his head to first one side then the other. I then requested that his legs be untied, and a chair be secured for him to sit on, and his wife to sit on his lap and hold his head. for he became very weak at the time all this was done; then the oil was placed as an anointing on his head, and I rebuked the evil spirit, and prayed that he might be perfectly restored, and he was, and then went to bed. The doctor had been sent for, arriving after he was in bed. He examined him, and said, "What did you send for me for? There is nothing the matter with this young man." The next day being Sunday, he, with his wife, came to the services in the afternoon. Meetings were held during the week, and the next Monday week he was baptized, with one other, by G. M. L. Whitman. He told me that the first thing that he knew was when he was trying to spit the oil out of his mouth. But few of the family came into the church, and I do not think that the Saints profited to any great extent by this manifestation of God's power. Christ's answer to those who were accusing him of casting out devils by the prince of devils, said, "If I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you."

On the eleventh of February I returned and continued meetings at Fremont. One was baptized on the seventeenth by William T. Owens. I note that previous to going to Fremont that I held services in Waterloo, near the Platte Valley Branch, and there I was "heavy-hearted and gloomy," extremely so, but I continued to preach each night, when on the ninth "God gave me relief from my burdened feelings and answered my secret prayers openly."

I closed the meetings in Fremont on the twentieth and came to Omaha on my way home, and baptized one on the twenty-first. It became necessary that some improvements be made on my home property, and I had to do it on the account of not having means to hire it done. I had no musical instrument in the home, and my daughter who was now past nine years of age had a great desire to learn music, and we felt it wise that an effort be made to secure an organ, which I did through Brother Ray Potter, who was representing a music firm in Omaha, and secured it on such terms as enabled us to pay for it in a short time. This may not be an important item to many, but it was to us just at this time, and we saw the wisdom of it in more ways than one.

I returned to Decatur and began meetings in the Presbyterian Church by previous arrangements. There I baptized five, closing on the twenty-first. On the twenty-third I began preaching in the log church in the Lake Shore Branch. While preaching there I had another experience with one possessed with evil spirits. A boy about twelve years of age, not large for his age, or robust, was possessed, and when he was in this condition it took three strong persons to hold him. When the spirit was commanded to come out of him he was free. At the time I was with Brother M. V. Owens, who with his wife and daughter accompanied me to the house, but did not go in. They had no oil, and when I came out of the house the girl began screaming, and I went to see what was the matter, and she said she had evidence that if the devil was cast out of the boy it would enter into her, so that I took her to another house where there were Saints, where I secured oil, and returned to administer to the boy. This occurred on March 24, and again on the twenty-sixth the boy was possessed again, and again I was called. I found Brother George Walters there when I arrived. When I opened the door to go in, there came from the boy one of the most unearthly yells, such as I never heard before. It was frightening. I at once proceeded towards the bed where the boy lay, taking off my overcoat as I went, and said, "Thou son of demons, you will have to come out of the boy." He made lunges for me, but was held by the three men who had hold of him. The face of the boy was more in appearance like that of a bulldog than a human. Many of those present at this time were not of the church, and I called attention to the antagonism between the spirit which was with me, and the one possessing the boy. When I requested that the boy be administered to it was impossible to put the oil on his head till I had raised my right hand and rebuked the evil spirit, then the boy was quiet, and he was anointed and the prayer of faith rendered, and the evil spirit bid to depart to its own kind, and the boy was free. He broke out in a heavy sweat. I asked him how he felt, and he said, "I feel like I have been at hard work." But he could not remember anything else. He was possessed at other times following this. But on May 18 I returned to this home and took with me Brother Alma M. Fyrando to assist me in administering to him, and from that time he was troubled no more to my knowledge. I returned home via River Sioux where I conducted a funeral service and baptized one on March 28.

On the thirtieth I started for general convention and conference, held at Kirtland, Ohio, this year.

We arrived at Kirtland on April 3, to view the Temple of the Lord for the first time, and to take part in services therein. Was entertained by Mr. M. S. McFarland and family in one of the old houses built at the time the Temple was built. Here we learned much of the past history of Kirtland from one who had personal knowledge of it, not of the faith. I heard nothing but what was commendatory of the Saints. At this conference section 113 of the Doctrine and Covenants was considered with a view of eliminating it, or associating with it an explanation of what it purported to be. An explanation was finally decided upon, which now appears.

Death of W. W. Blair

On the way home Brother W. W. Blair took sick, and on the train before reaching Lamoni he died. I had returned home by way of Lamoni, and remained until after his funeral which occurred the following week. I arrived at home April 27, where I remained preaching Sundays while I repaired and cleaned the house preparatory to entering upon another year of missionary work.

On July 25, I began work in the Central Nebraska District at Meadow Grove, at the district conference. I organized a Sunday school in Meadow Grove Branch, then went to Inman for a season stopping one night with Sister J. H. Logeman, and her husband, and preached for them one night. At Inman we held meetings in the schoolhouse. Good audiences. The Reverend J. Grant Shick, of the Methodist Episcopal Church lectured against the Book of Mormon, to which I replied, and he apologized for calling the Saints fools. Propositions were presented to him for public debate, but he refused to debate and permit us to defend what he had voluntarily made an effort to destroy.

The district tent was taken to Valley, Nebraska, and Brethren J. S. Strain, James Huff, and J. M. Stubbart were occupying, while I was meeting opposition at Inman. I returned to the tent at Valley August 8, Sister Cora Huff coming with me to assist with the music. We continued there till August 18, when the tent was taken to Fremont. I baptized two at Valley.

Defending the Work

The tent work began in Fremont August 21, assisted by J. M. Stubbart. On the twenty-third I baptized two. At the time of these tent services Elder J. A. L. Romig, of the Christian Church, was holding evangelistic services in a large tabernacle erected for his services. He made some reflections on the work of the Saints, and an item in the paper informed him that we were willing to defend the principle he had attacked. He accepted church propositions with the understanding that he was to furnish a substitute in the debate. Elder J. A. Seaton was selected by him to meet me in the debate which was to begin on October 12, in the Christian Tabernacle, to continue twelve nights.

During these tent meetings a Mr. Samuel F. Cushman attended nearly every night, and remained after the services to ask questions. He was a deep investigator. He had been a Methodist Episcopal minister for about forty years, and was anxious to be sure that his investigations would lead him to something better, if it led him at all.

In September I returned home to get material for the coming debate and to do some study and investigation in preparation for it, so that our defense would be all that God would wish it to be. While at home I was requested to act on two cases in Elders' Courts, in this work I tried to bring about a reconciliation of the transgressors with the church and her requirements, but was not able to. While away from my field of labor I, with my family, attended the reunion at Woodbine, Iowa, which began September 19. I was chosen assistant superintendent of the Sunday school work at the reunion. Was associated with Brethren T. A. Hougas, W. N. Robinson, and others. The two brethren and I did much to revise the constitution and by-laws of the Sunday school association. Left for missionary work in Nebraska September 30, attending a camp meeting in the grove near Clearwater associated with Brother F. A. Smith. At the close of this meeting I continued at Clearwater, having for a few nights as an associate President Joseph Smith. I returned to Fremont October 9, stopping on the way at Norfolk, where I preached at the residence of J. H. Logeman, who was investigating. Convention and conference were held at Fremont from the ninth to the eleventh. There were present and ministered President Joseph Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The debate with Elder J. A. Seaton began in the Christian Tabernacle the twelfth on church propositions, with Brother F. A. Smith as my moderator, and Samuel F. Cushman as chairman most of the time. On the 16th Elder Seaton requested that the debate be shortened to five nights on each proposition, then requested one of the night sessions be held in the afternoon, so that he could get away sooner. This afternoon session was a failure. Only a minority of the people who had been attending could come in the afternoon. During the closing time of one of the sessions Mr. Seaton was conversing socially with some of the Saints and friends, when he told some of them his name and requested them to not spell it by leaving out the letter "e," for that would be pronounced more like the evil one. The chairman, S. F. Cushman, said, "It looks to me more like it should be pronounced "sat on." This caused a laugh, and it had its effect on Elder Seaton. At one of the sessions Elder Seaton made an appeal to the audience by telling them that he was a member of several fraternal societies, and seemed to be bidding for sympathy. At the close, when bidding him "good night," I made him acquainted with the fact that I was a Mason. No one knew of this only as I told Brother F. A. Smith on our way home. I said you notice that he will not try to ridicule me as he has done, tomorrow. Brother Smith asked me what I had done to him, and said, "Did you let him know that you were a Mason?" I told him to take notice of the change in his demeanor towards me. "Well," said Brother Smith, "if that will make a change in his demeanor, then I will conclude that there is some little good in masonry." The next night on going home he remarked at the great change in Elder Seaton. Elder Seaton had been during the debate making boasts of what he was going to do. One thing he was going to do: to play the prelude in the beginning, then the grand march, and close with the funeral dirge for us. I thought there was but little for me to do but to write the epitaph. I prepared a chart about ten feet by twelve feet, on it was the representation of what he claimed for his church, and what I claimed for the one I represented, in separate columns, in large letters to be seen by the audience, to be used in my closing speech. The epitaph I prepared and had on the chart under his representation was, "Should the Apostles and early Christians be here they would weep at beholding it." A. Campbell. And under my representation I had this, "On earth peace, good will toward men." With a hand with the index finger pointing up to each representation. This had an effect. It had more effect on Elder Seaton than on the audience, so far as I could see. He was mad, and he showed it. When he made his closing speech he could hardly stand still, but would dance around, so that every one could see that he was mad, as well as in what he said did he show it in his deportment.

On October 27 I arranged for a debate between Elder A. Adams of the Church of God, and Brother C. Scott, to begin January 11, at Blair, to continue twelve nights. This was held in the Christian Church. The Methodist Episcopal minister refused to let us debate in his church giving as a reason, "I am afraid that the debate might effect some of the members of the church."

At this time an Elder Hull was making an attack on the faith, and requested propositions for debate, but after sending them to him he concluded otherwise, and nothing more was said by him about debate. On November 6 I returned to Fremont, and baptized Brother Samuel F. Cushman, and his son, Gilbert H. Brother S. F. Cushman said that the tent meetings about convinced him we were right, but the debate brought him to a conclusion. On the next day I went to Norfolk by request and baptized Brother J. H. Logeman, a noble-spirited man, and the gospel has been represented in his life. From there I came to Meadow Grove by request and preached a memorial sermon of the wife of C. N. Hutchins, Sister Mary E. Hutchins, who had died some time previously. I continued to hold meetings there till November 17, when I came to Clearwater, being associated part of the time with Elder David M. Rudd, continuing till December 17. I made a visit during the time I was at Inman, December 14, at O'Neill, to visit the mother of Brother Heman C. Smith, who was visiting with one of her daughters living there. I closed my year's labor in this part at Clearwater in a hall part of the time, then at the church near the town, then to Meadow Grove. Arrangements had been made for a Sunday school institute at Council Bluffs, Iowa, of which I was one of the instructors. On my way home I stopped to attend this on December 26 to last three days. While there I lodged with Brother T. Riley at the courthouse, associated with W. N. Robinson. Here were assembled workers from Lamoni, and from many parts of Western Iowa, and Nebraska. I was chosen assistant superintendent of the institute, to associate with Brethren Joseph Roberts, T. A. Hougas, W. N. Robinson, T. W. Williams, and others in the teaching. From here I came home arriving December 30.

From the time of closing the debate at Fremont, Elder Seaton was writing me with an apparent desire to renew the debate in his home town of Marion, Iowa, and I was in correspondence with Brother L. E. Hills, and his wife's sister who lived there relative to holding a debate there. Elder Seaton requested us to use their church, but they would want five dollars a night from us for its use. Brother Hills went among the business and professional men of Marion and they agreed to pledge the amount necessary to renew the debate and pay the amount required by Elder Seaton. Then he proposed another condition that I must comply with in order to hold the debate, all the time indicating that he would like to find some legitimate excuse to not hold the debate after he had requested it. The condition was that I must come to Marion and raise up a local congregation of Saints as many as he had of Christians. But previous to this he had said that we did not make any converts only such as were soured on other churches and people whose minds were slightly affected. Then I asked him what kind of people Marion was composed of for me to make about five hundred converts of this kind there. I concluded that he did not wish to debate, and so we had to let the matter rest.

"I'm going to drive an Austin around these ramps some Conference—five cents a ride."

It was a woman on crutches who made the remark.

Perhaps some of us acquired the depression we hear so much about; others, beyond doubt, had it thrust upon them; but it is a safe bet that to this woman there is no such animal.

A depression could not travel fast enough to catch up with the individual who sees a joke (and a neat profit) in situations which, to others, are only trying conditions to be borne with Christian fortitude and patience.

Pneumonia

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Pneumonia is an inflammation of the lungs and is one of the most prevalent and fatal of all acute diseases, and is due to a lance-shaped germ, enclosed in a capsule, called the pneumococcus. This germ is not only found in the respiratory tract, but is frequently found in the blood. As a cause of death, it rivals and almost exceeds that of tuberculosis. When one is attacked with pneumonia, the air cells and passages become filled with blood corpuscles and fibrin, thus preventing the access of air to the parts. It frequently follows chilling of the body, especially in those having low natural resistance, therefore, most cases of "lung fever" occur during the changeable weather of spring and fall. In old people, it is frequent during February and March. Those who are weakened by any chronic disorders are much more susceptible.

There are two types of pneumonia: the lobar or croupous type, and the other type known as broncho-pneumonia. All cases of pneumonia, like influenza, are aggravated by other pathogenic organisms as well. Like influenza or grippe, pneumonia is no respecter of persons; occurs in all climates; but shows some geographic differences, for it is more virulent in the United States than in England. This is probably due to our overheated offices, homes and workshops. Anything that will lower the resistance, such as cold weather chilling of the body, fatigue, indulgences in alcohol and tobacco, breathing in irritating dusts and gases, and improper diet, will aid these germs. The Negro races are more susceptible and it is much more fatal among them than among the white people, being more prevalent among the males. Children under six years of age seem peculiarly susceptible.

Undoubtedly, pneumonia belongs to the great group of contact diseases. A pneumococcus germ is not strong, robust or healthy, but is weak and does not multiply outside of the body. Laboratory technicians have trouble in keeping it alive, and for experimental purposes may pass it through animals, such as the rabbit or mouse, in order to keep up its virulence. Heat at 50° C., for ten minutes, is sufficient to kill it. It lives much better in low temperatures. The mouth and nose are its best incubators, and the usual methods of transmission. It is one of the first causes of death, after an attack of influenza. It is a germ that is frequently found in healthy mouths and noses, and there are no known measures, whereby, pneumococcus carriers may be prevented.

From Catholicism Into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

By Mrs. W. T. Hayworth

In a little village in the hill country of Alsace, lived a very pious Roman Catholic couple, Mr. and Mrs. Amen, into whose home a baby girl was born. It is the duty of a Roman Catholic Father and mother to have their children taken to the church and baptized, (sprinkled) as soon after their birth as possible, and as these were very devout people the baby was taken to the church on the second day after birth, by its father, godparent, and friends, and baptized and given the name of Louise, the subject of this autobiography.

The French and Prussian War had been over but a few years, in which the Germans had taken Alsace away from the French and as father and mother were French and father had been an officer in the French Army, it was hard for them to live in their dear homeland under German government. Consequently before I was one year old father had made arrangements to take his family and cross the great Atlantic to seek a home in America, landing in Toledo, Ohio, in 1873. After remaining there one year they decided to go to the southland settling at Fernandina, Florida.

Father had hired to a Mr. Kydd, owner of an orange and fruit farm two and one-half miles south of the city. Mr. Kydd was a merchant at Fernandina. He and his wife became very dear friends to us through the fourteen years that father was under his employ.

There were several French and German families in this city who became acquainted with us and through them my parents learned the English language. Time was drawing near when I must be sent to school. My parents were very anxious that I should be well educated both in the Catholic religion as well as the English language, therefore I was taken to the Saint Josephs Academy to be educated. I was only seven years of age and the only girl that stayed at the convent all the time, going home only on the first Friday of each month to remain until the next Monday.

There were a few French sisters to whom I could go and make my desires known as I could not speak a word of English. I would get very homesick, but the sisters were all very good and petted me a great deal until I loved them very dearly. With them I spent nine months of the year for eight years.

The Mother Superior—Mother Antonia—was a mother to me in the absence of my mother and I was her companion in her business life as well as religious. The sisters never go on the street alone. Therefore when she had business trips uptown she always took me with her. She always took care of the sanctuary and altars at the church and after I had grown up large enough, she always had me to help her with this very sacred work, for sacred work it was to both of us. How we worked together reverently and silently cleaning and dusting the altars, arranging bouquets and candles. How I enjoyed to work in the church scrubbing and cleaning "God's house," as I was taught.

I attended mass every day, went to confession and communion once each month. How I loved the communion because I was taught that I received Jesus into my heart through the communion. One day my young heart wondered how long Jesus remained with me. I asked Mother Antonia the question to which she replied, "As long as the wafer remained in the body." Knowing that it would not remain longer than any other food, I was disappointed and wished from the bottom of my heart I could go to communion every day, that I may have Jesus with me all the time.

From my earliest recollection I loved God, the Catholic Church, and religion. I wanted to become a sister, too. I admired their devotion to God and the church. One day the sisters dressed me up in their "Habit" or robes and I felt so happy, which more than ever increased my desire to become a nun.

At fifteen I told Mother Antonia I'd like to become a sister, to which she replied, "Very well, dear child, finish this school year and in the summer you may take "Novice" veil, (which is white veil, with black dress) which will give you two years in which to decide if you wish to spend your life in the convent. Then at the end of that time if you still wish to remain you can make your profession." (Take the black veil. They were sisters of Saint Joseph) to which I agreed, but before the end of school I met with a young man to whom I became attached which turned my thoughts away from becoming a nun.

Then, too, my father had left the farm and gone to Pennsylvania to see a former employer expecting to receive employment from him. On his return home he got as far as Virginia from where he wrote a letter home. He then mysteriously disappeared and never was heard of again, so grieving my mother that her life closed two years later broken hearted, leaving a brother and me alone without a relative.

He was only past twelve and I not quite sixteen, so I needed to remain with him because he was so young.

Our parents had a great many friends, so we were taken care of. One of their personal friends was appointed guardian, he and his wife had care of us until nine months later when I was married, but not to the man that saved me from the convent, for he had died in less than a month after my mother. I felt so bereft of father, mother, and home that I decided I needed a home of my own which would also make a home for my brother.

I married a Mr. Crosby, whose parents lived in Indiana. Through their influence we left Florida and moved with them to a farm close to Richmond. In January of the next year the Campbellites held a protracted meeting at a small country town, near their farm. Husband's folks holding to the Campbellite faith, we all went to revival meeting, I with the rest. Of course my Catholic faith was being ridiculed, how wrong it was, etc. My husband didn't belong to any church but wanted to join this one, and I must join also. After much persuasion, and to please them and him, I was immersed to become a member of the Campbellite faith, February 15, 1890. But immersion in the creek didn't take Catholicism out of me. I was still one at heart, and when we later moved to Indianapolis I attended the Catholic Church when it was possible for me to go. A little daughter, Ida, had come into our home. We lived across the city from a Catholic Church, consequently didn't get to attend very often.

In the year 1892 we moved to Dunkirk, Indiana. There was no Catholic Church there at that time, but I had been raised to go to church every Sunday—that still remained with me. I longed to go to church somewhere. Finally I went to the Methodist Church one Sunday morning in order to become acquainted with good people, as I was a stranger there. Some of the good people learning I was a Catholic became interested in me and persuaded me to join them, which I did. I had been raised to go to church every time the bell rang so I took my early training into the Methodist Church, attending Sunday school first.

They were studying the new birth, and I became deeply interested, asking a great many questions. I had never read the Bible—never had heard of such teachings, and all seemed so new and strange, so interesting. An elderly lady of my class, a very spiritual woman, became very much interested in me, making herself a special friend, trying to guide me to a knowledge of God, but it was not very long until my husband was compelled to move us to another town so he could get employment, this time to Albany, Indiana, where a great natural gas boom was on, when I went to bid my spiritual friend good-bye, she made me promise that I would be faithful to attend the services of the church and always take part in the testimony meeting.

My first service in the new home was a testimony meeting. The members began to tell of their experience when they were converted; some were in the cornfield, some in the homes, others in the church, etc., which all became very interesting to me. When finally it was becoming my turn to testify, as I had promised, I didn't have any experience to tell. I didn't know my sins were forgiven, I didn't have the Holy Spirit as they had, and the only thing I could say was, "I was not converted, but I would like to be," which of course in the Methodist Church was occasion for an Altar Service which was called. The minister in charge praying for me. I went home from the meeting not feeling any different, but the next day as I was contemplating the services of the day before, the spirit of prayer and hunger to realize God's Spirit with me came upon me and for the first time in my life I prayed the prayer of my heart instead of the prayer book, pleading for a knowledge of sins forgiven and to have his Spirit. As time went on I began to feel God's Spirit causing me to love God and to love his people. Day by day I learned more of the Bible and my life was a changed life. Catholicism was gone, root and branch, and to this day I have never desired to go back. I could now worship God in spirit and in truth instead of worshipping him out of a prayer book or a rosary. Each day I would study the Bible and pray. I was taught to pray when a child—the Lord's prayer and the "Hail Mary," which are so familiar to every Catholic. If we desired any favor of God we were taught to pray to the Virgin Mary, and to repeat "Hail Mary" as follows: "Hail Mary, full of Grace! The Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, mother of God! Pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen." I haven't used the prayers for forty years, but so indelibly were they stamped upon the young mind that they are still there. But now this was all gone and I went to God instead of Mary with the desires of my heart.

I became a very active member of the Methodist Church at one time holding office of "class leader," conducting meetings of several kinds. I enjoyed missionary work in the homes and loved to work around the altar in revival work, felt the Lord's call to that work and was trying to serve God as faithfully as I did when I was a Catholic going to mass, confessing to the priest, and partaking of the communion. I committed a great many passages of Scripture to memory by using one verse each day, writing it on paper and having it about my work until each day I had a new verse stored away that often comes into my mind at a time when so much needed. When Paul wrote to the Ephesian Saints admonishing them to be strong in the Lord and the power of his might. (Ephesians 6: 10-17.) He told them to put on the whole armor of God and went on telling them what this armor consisted of. The seventeenth verse says, "And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." How can we use this sword unless we have the word of God treasured up in our minds? I enjoyed a great deal of God's Spirit and was blessed in sunshine as well as shadows. (For as the years passed by I experienced both in my life.) My wish in childhood, that "I may have Jesus with me all the time," was in part being realized, but I still wanted to enjoy more of his Spirit and presence.

While living at Albany two more little girls came into our home, Lillian and Grace, and finally a little boy, Lawrence, who only remained with us twenty-two months, when he was taken to the heavenly home. In about four years his father passed on, leaving me and the three girls alone. The two older girls had joined the Methodist Church and have been active members since.

At this point it will be necessary to go back into my life several years, bringing into the story my husband's youngest sister, Marie, of whom I thought a great deal, as she did of me. I had tried to get her into church and live a Christian life, but she didn't seem to take any interest. She married a Mr. W. T. Hayworth, later moving to Nowata, Oklahoma, where her husband was engaged in the oil fields. After being there about four years one of her letters informed me of the fact that she had joined a church; had been baptized into the Latter Day Saint Church, but not to get her mixed up with the Utah Mormons, also inclosing a tract. In reply I told her I was glad she had joined a church; it didn't matter which one, so they believed the Bible, (Methodist doctrine.)

She was baptized in February, 1911. In May the same year her father died at Marion, Indiana. She and her husband returned for the funeral, and while at her mother's they came over to my place to visit me before returning to Oklahoma, Marie began to tell me about Brother Lee Quick and the meetings that he had been holding and tried to tell me something of her faith, but I had never heard of this church; only heard of the Utah Mormons and their doctrine of polygamy with which I didn't care to come in contact; but I listened and thought if that was her choice all well and good, I was satisfied with my church.

In six weeks from the time her father was buried, her body was brought back from Oklahoma to be buried in the family lot. Marie and I had been more like sisters than sisters-in-law, so I felt very sad over her departure. Her husband, Mr. Hayworth remained in Indiana, making his home with my mother-in-law, which was also his, and visiting among her relatives. We felt very sorry for him and tried as best we could to cheer him in his loneliness. Part of his time he divided with us as well as the other sister-in-law. His visits began to be very enjoyable, while he was not baptized when his wife was, yet he believed this Latter Day work and would often tell me about it. As the months passed on we began to think more of each other than just brother and sister-in-law, and before we realized it we were planning on getting married. At the first of the following year he decided to go back to Nowata, and again go to work in the oil field

He had told me enough about this restored gospel that I was beginning to get interested and the thought came to me, "can it be possible that I am in the wrong church?" I realized that my present religion was far superior to that of my youth, and was satisfied with it, but if it was not the right church I wanted to get to the right one, for I was worshiping God, not the church nor the preacher, and if God had his own church on earth I wanted to worship there. Therefore when Mr. Hayworth left for Oklahoma I began to pray as never before. I said to my heavenly Father, "Thou knowest I love thee, dear Lord. If thou hast thy true church in Oklahoma, cause my friend to find work and cause us to be joined together that I, too, may be able to hear this new doctrine and join the church."

About middle of February a letter came from my friend telling me that he had accepted a position in the oil field and to come to Nowata by the first of March, and we would be married there. Ida, my oldest daughter, had married a minister of the Friends Church. Consequently I had to leave her in Indiana. Lillian, Grace and I arrived at Nowata Saturday evening, March 2, 1912. Mr. Hayworth and some friends of his met us at the depot, from whence he took us to the Methodist parsonage where he and I were joined together as husband and wife.

The house on the oil lease was still occupied, so it was necessary that he and I stay with his sister and family, Brother and Sister Wiley Coldren. They had both been baptized by Brother Quick while Mr. Hayworth was in Indiana. We stayed with them five days. During those days, my new sister-in-law, though young in the work, preached the restored gospel to me, related how the gospel was restored through Joseph Smith who was killed by a mob. I thought to myself, "Well if a mob killed him he sure enough was a bad man and I didn't believe I'd be interested in his church." At once something said to me, "Wasn't Jesus crucified? Wasn't Paul beheaded, Peter crucified on a cross with his head down and the rest of the apostles, and the prophets in the Old Testament put to death?" I said, "Yes, that's all true." So then and there that obstacle was broken down. Then another thing she said that staggered me was that this church believed that it was the only true church. Well! I was taught when a child that the Catholic Church was the only true church, that Jesus ordained Peter the first pope, and the church had continued down through the ages to the present time. I was also taught of purgatory where souls may become cleansed and eventually enter heaven; but the Methodist Church had taken both of these teachings out of me; and now here was this Latter Day Saint Church claiming it was the only true church. It seemed to me very hard to accept; but I didn't say what I thought, and kept that to myself.

We finally moved by ourselves and we were very happy together. I had prayed that if this gospel was true that I be placed right there where I could hear it. How good of my heavenly Father to answer my prayer and bring me within a quarter of a mile of where Brother Quick held his meetings, and right in the midst of the group of Latter Day Saints. The Saints' Herald came into our home, my sister-in-law's subscription before her death that had not yet expired. I read in it; and when weather was fit we attended the Sunday school of the Saints in this way getting acquainted with them.

About May the first Brother Quick wrote a letter stating he would be there about the middle of May to hold a series of meetings. I had been in the habit of taking all of my troubles to God in prayer, so to prayer I went. I said, "Lord you know I'm trying to serve you as best I know how and I'm thankful thou has guided and directed me in times past, now I need thee as never before. Here is this Brother Quick coming, if this is thy church I want to know it, and if it is not I want to know it, too, so that I won't make any mistake for I want to do thy will." Brother Quick came, started his meetings and we went to every meeting. I went praying for light. I was satisfied with the light I had, but if there was more light I wanted it. Brother Quick used several of the old texts that I had heard preached before, but now in a different light. Every night I was asked, "How do you like that sermon?" I would have to say, "All right. It's in the Bible." When he came to his sermon on "Authority of the Priesthood," showing from whence these other churches received their authority, followed by the sermon on the Angel Message, how the angel appeared to Joseph Smith and restored the gospel. I began to feel that this must be the true church. The words of John came to me time and again, "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his son cleanseth us from all sin." I had been walking in the light, all the light I had. Thoughts would come to me—"I will live a good Christian life in the Methodist Church," but the new light stood before me as a high wall, in my Christian path, and unless I embraced this new light I would not be walking in the light, but would be in darkness and would go backwards in my Christian experience. I rather expected God to give me a dream or vision to get me to come into the church, but not so. "These signs follow those who believe." But all this time I was still praying for God to cause me to love this doctrine if it was the truth, and if not true, to make me so disgusted with it that I would not have anything to do with it.

As the last Sunday service came with its last baptismal service, such a strong desire came over me to be baptized that I wept like a child. I wanted Mr. Hayworth to be baptized with me, but he said he wasn't ready. So neither one of us went prepared for baptism, but when he saw how I wept, his heart was touched and he said, "I came very near going in anyway. Had I known you wanted to be baptized that bad we would have been baptized." Consequently Brother Quick prolonged his meeting another night and we were baptized together May 28, 1912, and were confirmed that night. I didn't have any change in my feelings. I had been blessed with God's presence and Spirit times without numbers, but not as on this occasion. I had obeyed the gospel and felt like a newborn babe in Christ with much to learn.

Brother Quick left, not having time to preach anything but doctrine, there was no one to instruct me in spiritual things. The Saints were all new in the work, left without a shepherd. Here I was in a strange land among strange people in a strange church. I felt lonely, but I had obeyed what I concluded was right.

The next week a Methodist minister came to call on me from Nowata. I told him of the meetings and that I had joined the Latter Day Saint Church. He said they were Utah Mormons. I said, "Brother Quick said they were not." He said, "I know Quick, and he knows they are Mormons and he knows he lied." Well, this was as far as I could go in argument for I didn't know, I just took Brother Quick's word and he was gone. As I look back I can see how weak I was, but God had brought me into this marvelous work and he could take care of me.

The next summer Brother Silvers came and preached some sermons that helped me a great deal and he also helped me a great deal in our home, making plain the spiritual life of the church. Brother Budd was among us a great deal, finally having charge of the work here when we were organized into a branch; by his life of prayer and consecration I was built up in the faith and God had often times blessed me with an outpouring of his Spirit so that I was caused to rejoice in this Latter Day work.

I was privileged to attend a district conference at Joplin. At the Sunday afternoon prayer service the gift of prophecy was given through Sister Graves. I had gone there praying that God would speak to us. As our Lord was speaking through his servant, his presence came upon us as a mantle, and as he pleaded for his children to come closer to him, every heart was melted and everyone was in tears. How wonderful is this beautiful gospel with its gifts and blessings. How I love this gospel and this church. I have helped to sing the old Methodist song which I loved so much.

I love thy church, O Lord,
Her walls before thee stand
Dear as the apple of thine eye
And graven on thy hand,
For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend.
To her my cares and toils be given
Till cares and toils shall end.
Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion solemn vows
Her hymns of love and praise.

How much more this song means to me now than it did then, and how my heart swells in thanksgiving and praise that he has led me into his true church, where we can enjoy the inspiration of his spirit to guide and direct us through life for in these perilous days we need God's directing hand as never before.

In my patriarchal blessing is the following paragraph which has been a great comfort to me:

The Lord hath known the peculiar situation that thou hast been in and the longings of thy soul to know more and more of God. He hath heard thy prayers and hath led thee to the true church where the inspiration of God can direct thee and open up thy understandings, and if thou art faithful and true thou shall be blessed with evidence upon evidence of this work with manifestations of the power of God in thy behalf, and to thy loved ones that shall make thy soul glad, and thou shall have comfort and cheer in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Thou shall learn of the Lord if thou will study his word and pray often in private as well as in public, and there shall come to thee those visions of God that shall help thee and strengthen thee, and the experiences of thy life shall be a strong factor in establishing thy virtue and fortitude in thy faith if thou art faithful and true to thy covenant.

Since Brother Hayworth and I have accepted the gospel we have been greatly blessed in many ways. A daughter, Eleanor, has been given us, who is now nineteen years of age, and a son, George, thirteen, past, who are a great comfort to us. They both enjoy working in the church. George was baptized when nine years of age, and is now in high school. My older girls are still affiliated with the Methodist Church, but I am praying that in time their eyes and hearts will be opened to the truth and that all will embrace the gospel that has become so dear to me. The Lord has also blessed us with health and strength for people our age, and blessed us with a comfortable home and often a voice has spoken to our minds directing in temporal affairs and also warned us of approaching dangers. How wonderfully the Lord deals with his children. He does for us abundantly more than we can ask or think if we will only live a life of consecration and prayer. I have found so many plain and precious truths in the Book of Mormon that have been left out of the Bible through its many translations. I have received great joy and comfort through its study.

As I look back over my religious life I feel that I have learned many valuable lessons in the Catholic Church. My parents and the sisters taught me virtue, honor, and righteousness. I loved their reverence in their church. I'm so glad that we as Latter Day Saints are beginning to be more reverent and quiet in our churches. If we would do as they, bow in secret prayer when we enter God's house, we would enjoy more of God's Spirit as well as the gifts and blessings of the gospel in our services. I enjoyed my experiences in the Methodist Church. It was better than Catholicism, but that was like being in shallow water when compared to the gospel in its fullness. Therefore I am thankful for the privilege of hearing and accepting the Angel's Message. May I ever be kept humble and faithful to the end.

Canadian Visitor Feels Encouraged

A. C. Martin reports a long, cold winter in Spokane, Washington. Snow fell the last week in October and remained until March. In his trips over the Cascade Mountains, Brother Martin found snow seven feet deep on the level.

The lumber business has been closed down for more than a year and a half. Last winter fourteen thousand to sixteen thousand unemployed were taken care of by the city charities. But in spite of the general depression, Brother Martin is not "depressed." He feels cheerful over the interest, good attendance, and excellent spirit shown by the Spokane Branch which numbers more than two hundred and fifty active members. Up to date, only two men were reported to be out of work.

Maintaining the Dignity of Home

By Ernest Crutcher, M. D.

A flippant flapper, by chance, was calling at a southern gentleman's home. She soon began to be nervous, fidgety, crossing and recrossing her naked legs, and finally asked: "May I smoke?"

"Not in my home," replied the gentleman.

"Why, why?" demanded the flippant flapper, with opening eyes. The serene man looked into the pallid face, already showing the ravages of tobacco upon feminine features, and answered quietly:

"There is a standard of dignity and respect that I must preserve in my home. A smoking woman reduces that standard of reverence a home should have. Since smoking is a silly habit, adopted by some women because of being extensively and pertinaciously advertised as 'stylish'—a habit not conducive to her health or essential to her comfort—it is not only no breach of hospitality to forbid it, but it is an impertinence for a woman to suggest it."

The visitor crossed and recrossed her naked legs in embarrassed apology, and blurted out:

"Well, may I smoke in the yard?"

"By no means," he answered. "There are children next door. It would be a bad influence upon them, and sinister, to see a woman smoking. There are passers-by who would wonder, and perhaps suspect us of entertaining questionable characters. No, you must not smoke on my premises. I owe that much protection to my home. I can not consent to cheapen its standard and dignity."

This is a true story, told me by a friend. It inspires me to reiterate my warning to women who may be foolish enough to be tempted to yield to the tremendous propaganda that purposes to graft smoking upon our nation, to the incurable hurt of future generations. Tobacco has a peculiarly hurtful power on the ductless glands of the female. It not only provokes premature fading of charms, but impairs her fertility. A smoking woman can not bear as fine a child as a nonsmoker. If you wish thyroid trouble, learn to smoke.

Independence

The Independence Sanitarium added impressiveness to the Seventy-fifth General Conference of the church by graduating the largest class in its history, from the Nurses' Training School. A large crowd witnessed the commencement program of a class of fifteen young women on Thursday night, April 14. These young women came from widely scattered sections of the United States and Canada. Miss Lillie Andrew, the class president from Canada, won the honor of having the highest academic standing.

In the commencement address Doctor G. Leonard Harrington stressed the need of a "head and heart" combination in the work of a nurse—the tools and technique for effective and efficient work as well as a heart interest in the welfare of people. He related incidents and cases to prove his belief that when we do God's will he is bound and when we make the right adaptations with ourselves, we are free. Briefly he pictured man and the tremendous powers and laws which surround him and by which, if he has the tools and technique, he can lift himself to higher intellectual and emotional realms.

In the choir loft and forming a background for the graduating class sat a great number of the alumnae of the institution, members of the Sanitarium Board of Trustees and medical staff in the persons of President Frederick M. Smith, Judge E. B. Purcell, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, Doctor Charles F. Grabske, Doctor Calvin Atkins, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Superintendent Gertrude Copeland and her "official family," and the undergraduate classes of the institution.

The 1932 Sanitarium class is composed of Editha Eaton, Elizabeth E. Grant, Lillie Andrew, Estella A. Melvin, Eileen C. Johnson, Estella I. Hansen, Agnes M. Tienken, Irwne E. Andes, Velma A. Spangler, Mabel M. Faulkner, Darl A. Dutton, M. Mildred Weddle, Eula Mayse, Majorie E. Grover, and T. Gladys Fitzwater.

Orrin Fry played two violin program selections, accompanied by Robert Miller at the piano, and Arthur Oakman, baritone, sang two solos, Miss Lorena Kueffer accompanying. The organ processional and recessional were by Robert Miller. President Smith awarded the diplomas, and Miss Copeland pinned the long-coveted "R. N." pin on each graduate.

The church has just concluded a wonderful General Conference. Surely its unity of purpose, harmony of action, constructiveness of undertaking, and highly spiritual and devotional quality were the answer to unnumbered prayers offered for the conference by Saints all over the world. The official close came Friday night, but members of the priesthood, visitors, and Independence Saints were blessed with an additional assurance of the success of the work before the church in Sunday's services.

Following the various church school sessions Sunday morning, and at the eleven o'clock hour, a large crowd of Saints gathered at the Auditorium to witness the sacred ordinance of ordination. Bishop L. F. P. Curry, of Dallas, Texas, was ordained the Presiding Bishop of the church, an action authorized by the General Conference, under the hands of the three members of the First Presidency, President Elbert A. Smith offering the prayer of consecration. Then Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was set apart by the same officers as counselor to the Presiding Bishop, and Elder J. Stanley Kelley was consecrated to the office of bishop.

This impressive ceremony was followed by a sermon by Bishop L. F. P. Curry whose humility and sincerity carried his message into the heart of every hearer. Choosing for a scripture lesson John 21:1-6, he presented the spiritual background of the church and its work up to the present time in the form of a divine prelude to which the 1932 General Conference has added a few beautiful notes, and then he delineated on some or the immediate tasks of the church. He paid high tribute to the workers who have preceded him in the Bishopric, and expressed the belief that the church will go forward in its spiritual and temporal undertaking.

The same spirit of peace and harmony which reigned during the conference was present at the general meeting of the priesthood Sunday afternoon in the Stone Church. Several hundreds of the ministry were present to hear the following speakers present their thoughts: President Frederick M. Smith, "Ministerial Standards and Conduct"; Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, "Priesthood Responsibility in Meeting the Financial Problems"; President Elbert A. Smith, "Faith in the Church and Its Message"; Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, "The Spiritual Program of the Church," and Apostle J. A. Gillen, "A Confession and a Pledge."

In the lower auditorium of the church at the same hour a prayer meeting was in session, a large number of the laity attending.

"If we get the surging tide of the love of God and the passion of Jesus Christ and tie them to our problems, we can do all things through Jesus Christ," asserted Apostle John W. Rushton to the Sunday evening crowd in the Auditorium. "The surging tide of God's providence will lift us above the difficulties and trivialities which surround us."

Declaring that Jesus Christ gives men a standard of spiritual values and that it is not his traditions but his principles which carry on, the speaker proved that without Him, men can do nothing, but with Him they can do all things. He described Paul as a man of culture, training, and experience who became a new man in Jesus Christ, a champion of the Savior who planted the transforming grace of the Master among the peoples of the world.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was in charge of the service, assisted by Bishop B. M. McGuire. The Auditorium Orchestra accompanied John F. Sheehy in leading congregational singing, and played several special hymns.

For a period of almost two weeks the people of Independence acted as hosts to more than a thousand delegates, ex officios, and visitors to the conference. Musicians, clubs, leaders, and many others gladly contributed to the comfort and convenience of the sessions.

The Saints were thrilled by the Spirit manifested in the early morning devotional services at the Stone Church. They profited by the earnest sermons delivered by men of the priesthood, and responded to the invitation to take part in all special conference gatherings. On Sunday, April 10, they crowded the Auditorium to hear The Messiah, sung by the conference choir of four hundred and fifty voices and accompanied by a fifty-piece orchestra. Paul Craig directed the performance.

The editors regret that copy briefly telling the story of the conference from the opening until April 13, to be printed in the weekly Herald, was misplaced in the shop until too late for use last week. But the entire story of the 1932 conference is presented in the Daily Herald.

Those who were able to remain for the closing day of the conference (Friday), were wonderfully blessed. Their hearts were touched by the ceremonies of acceptance of a new revelation to the church by the conference, and of ordination of men to higher offices in the priesthood and greater fields of service in the church. At the evening service a memorial ceremony was dedicated to those workers of the church who have passed away in the last two years. There also occurred the superannuation ceremony of four faithful veterans of the church, and the ordination of eight men as members of the Standing High Council of the Church, an action authorized by the conference. Following the reading of the list of appointments, the men appointed and their wives were summoned to the platform where they sang "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," and coming from these workers, the hymn took on deeper meaning and color in the hearts of all who heard it.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Commercial Avenue, South East

Easter Sunday was ushered in with a sunrise prayer service at six-thirty. This was well attended by people of all ages. At 9.45 the members of the Sunday school assembled in the church auditorium for an appropriate program. Included in this were two selections from the cantata, "Bright Easter Morn," by the choir; a saxophone duet, "Angels Roll the Rock Away," from the Saints' Hymnal, by Jane Robson and Wayne Thomas; readings by Sister John Cramer, "Easter Morn," and "The Watchman," by Sister Nettie Bigler. A mixed quartet sang "The Theme That Keeps Me Singing," Sister Anna Watkins being the soloist. A quartet, composed of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cramer, Mrs. Bruce Angus, sang "Yes, the Redeemer Arose," during which Mary Cramer, Madge Thomas and Fay Warner, attired in angel costumes, interpreted the hymn in pantomime. Mrs. Quay Briggs and Miss Grace Robson sang "Jesus Lives" as a closing number. Nettie Bigler and Anna Cramer and Brother Samuel Mansel composed the committee in charge.

District President and Sister James Bishop and Brother Reginald Collins, of Steubenville, Ohio, were visitors in New Philadelphia, March 20. Brother Bishop preached at the morning hour and gave a brief report of the district conference at Barberton. Elder Louis Serig, of Wheeling, West Virginia, was also a visitor that day and occupied the pulpit at the evening service. Pastor Carlisle conducted a preaching service at the G. A. R. Hall in Uhrichsville Sunday afternoon.

The religious drama, "The Most Precious Gift," was presented Sunday morning, February 28. Elder William L. Goudy read an original prologue which introduced the theme of the story. During the presentation a mixed quartet sang "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" The play was excellently cast, and Sisters Cramer and Bigler directed.

902 Raddick Street, Mishawaka, Indiana

Saints of this branch are taking advantage of every opportunity to advance the work in this locality. The field is large, but the members are assured that the Lord is blessing the efforts which are being made.

Since the last news from this branch, three candidates have been led into the waters of baptism, Brothers Clement, Wayne Ellis, and Samuel Bartlett, all worthy young men. They are assets to this group. This brings the number of local baptisms since the first of the year to five, and the workers are just getting started. The branch slogan is "Our branch a missionary branch and every member a missionary."

Sunday, March 20, the group was happy to have here again Elder O. J. Hawn, who preached with old-time vigor. He also officiated in the ordination of Forest E. Myers to the eldership, and William F. Hardy, jr., to the office of priest. Elder Hawn was assisted in the ordinations by Elder Hoxie.

South Bend and Mishawaka Branch now has a well balanced priesthood corps, all the members actively at work.

The church school presented an appropriate program Easter morning. The efforts exerted by the classes of Sisters Tappan, Myers, and Taylor were worthy commendation.

During the last three months sickness and bad weather have been obstacles hard to overcome, but the faithful members feel that help has been given them and that they have gained ground.

Sister Orpha Coonfare is still at Healthwin Sanitarium, but is improving every day. Surely her improvement is due to the prayers of the Saints.

The address of the branch pastor is 1001 Burdette Street, Mishawaka.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

March 6, brought to the Saints of this congregation a spiritual prayer service and splendid sermon by a former pastor, Elder Amos E. Allen.

A son arrived in the home of Brother and Sister John Stowell, March 11.

Blue Springs Saints Joined Buckner and Bates City Branches in an all-day meeting at Atherton March 20. Apostle J. F. Garver was the speaker at both services. The afternoon prayer meeting was one to encourage the members. Atherton women provided an abundance of sandwiches for the noon meal.

On this day Pastor O. W. Sarratt and Apostle J. F. Garver blessed Marian Ruth Stark.

Brother Snively, of Atherton, was the speaker here March 27, using an appropriate Easter theme, "The Resurrection." Special music was by a double quartet. The children of the primary department gave a program under the supervision of Sister O. W. Sarratt who is substituting for Sister Roy Martin. Sister Ed Ogelvie directed the musical numbers. In the evening Pastor O. W. Sarratt discoursed on "Zion, the Pure in Heart."

Blue Springs Saints are united and happy in their work.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

The Saints have been enjoying the Spirit of the Master. At the annual business meeting Elder O. A. Rexroad was chosen president; Elder Walter Culp, first counselor; and Teacher Martin L. Crabtree, second counselor.

The group is organized under the plan of the church school. On Sunday morning the order of the services is prayer meeting at nine thirty, and Sunday school at ten thirty. This arrangement has proved a help, giving peace and quiet to the service of prayer.

Elder F. May, of Dayton, Ohio, has been here for some time. He preaches on Sunday evening, this service being attended by a few nonmembers. On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings he conducts a helpful Bible study. This study consists of drills on Bible information and a dramatization of the story which appeal to students of all ages. Brother May gave these dramatizations at McDermott and Pleasant Valley Branches during the winter.

A birthday supper was given in honor of Brother May who is a capable helper and leader. The party was held at the home of Brother and Sister Harvey Culp, a number of guests being present. After the supper, Brother May presented one of his Bible plays.

Sister Hazel Fox was united in marriage to Samuel Wheeler not long ago. They have the good wishes of this group.

Clitherall, Minnesota

April 4.—Union Branch has had another example of the power accompanying the Book of Mormon when read by an unprejudiced mind.

Sometime in 1930, the pastor of the branch, Lester Whiting, received a call from a man who was selling farm lighting plants. During his visit the conversation turned to religious subjects and the man asked several questions concerning the church. On his second visit, when he came to get his answer (which, by the way, was "No"), he still showed an interest in the church and continued asking questions which Brother Whiting gladly answered. After a rather lengthy call, the man departed and the affair was apparently forgotten.

But a short time ago Brother Whiting received a letter from the man in which he referred to their conversation regarding the church, and said that he had read the Book of Mormon, and that it had impressed him as being divine. He also asked for other literature and for information regarding the location of churches near him.

May we help to hasten the time when these cases will be multiplied manifold.

Clitherall Branch is still in winter quarters, blocked by a six-inch snowfall today.

Cheboygan, Michigan

Spring days bring renewed zest in the gospel work to the Saints in this part of northern Michigan.

The annual branch business meeting was held in January and the following officers were chosen: Pastor, Elder Irving Sheffer; secretary, Dorothy Taylor; solicitor and publicity agent, Alfred Keehler; director of juniors, Walter Keehler; director of seniors, Opal Martin; director of church school and music, Harvey Sheffer. All are striving to teach the gospel to the children of men. The Sunday school has a membership of forty-five.

On a recent Sunday, the district president was in Cheboygan for the entire day. He delivered an excellent sermon on "The True Law of Liberty."

Among the number to hear this speaker were Brother and Sister Walter Emerson and their son from Ann Arbor. Brother Walter was the deacon of this branch before going to Ann Arbor.

Haverhill, Massachusetts

April 2.—Easter has come and gone, but with its departure the Saints of this region are made conscious of the debt we owe the risen Lord. The economic struggle in which we are caught is like the influence of Satan surrounding us with discouragement, endeavoring to inflate the value of material things to the disparagement of spiritual values. Easter with its message of hope wipes the film from our eyes, unstops our ears, and attunes our hearts to the Infinite. Once more we are able to see beyond the present wall of darkness and to feel that possibly our spirits have been passing through a period of inertia. We, like the disciples of old, have seen some of our hopes meet an ignominious end, placed, as it were, in the tomb, but thanks be to God, the germ of faith is ours, and with it nothing is impossible. Faith can remove mountains of discouragement. It can point to the bright spots in our lives. It can make us living examples of joy and happiness.

The desire for service is strong among some of this branch, even though their activities are restricted by lack of numbers. The activities of other branches are eagerly followed, and the longing for participation in similar association is keenly felt here.

Those privileged to enjoy the recent district conference brought back words of encouragement. The assurance that God would care for his people, if they were faithful, even though they were being sorely tried by economic conditions, was comforting.

Attendance at regular services often leaves much to be desired, although the faithful few can always be depended on.

Harvlin Jordan, of this branch, is a Graceland student this year. He with his roommate, Hale Vicory, spent Christmas holidays with his parents. One more enthusiast has been added to Graceland's student body. No other college can now answer the needs of the remainder of the branch's young people.

One young sister, Minerva Hatch, is training for nurse work in a local hospital. It is heartening to see the young making preparation for future service.

The Sunday school is ably handled by Parker Hatch, assisted by Margaret Randall.

Several successful socials have been held in past weeks both in the homes and at the hall.

A recent visitor in the branch and a former member was Sister Alice Steele, of Portland, Maine. We often miss the fellowship of our former members.

West Virginia Saints Are Blessed With Healing

It has been a few years since a letter from Wellsburg Branch, West Virginia, located at Twenty-sixth Street, has been sent to the Herald. As in many other branches when the depression hit this region, it found the spiritual light burning low, but for the past ten months or more the Saints have been coming out of spiritual darkness. Workers who have helped in this revival are Brothers William Richards, district president; O. J. Tary, J. F. Martin, J. E. Bishop, who gave a lecture on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and G. T. Griffiths who preached here twice in March.

In the latter part of February the Saints of Wellsburg had a great testimony of healing. About ten years ago Brother J. F. Martin baptized Brother William Stock and his wife. Some ten months after this brother came into the church, his health began to fall. He developed lung trouble and the doctors ordered him to the mountains for his health. Before going he sent for Brother Willard Allen and requested administration. This Brother Allen did two or three times. Brother Stock requested Brother Allen to ask the Saints to remember him in their prayers, which was done. After being away about eight months through his faith in the Father and God's goodness, he was able to come home, and three or four months later he went back to his work in the factory. His work was not light for in the factory where he is employed, they specialize in bake ovens and milk cans, but to the surprise of the doctors, he gained in health and weight. After being at work for some months this brother was given a dream in which the Lord pointed out to him that if he ever went back into the world, his old trouble would return. Time rolled on until about a year ago, this brother, like many other Saints in times of darkness, drifted away to some extent. Last February, 1932, he took sick with the flu one Saturday and began to have hemorrhages. On Monday after he had suffered with hemorrhages for thirty-six hours, his wife asked that a special prayer service be held in his behalf. Brother Ingram J. McVay was directed by the Lord to go to Wellsburg and see the sick brother. No visitors were being allowed in the sickroom, but Brother McVay explained to the sick man's wife that he must see Brother Stock in order to tell the Saints of his condition. The sufferer was at death's door. When Brother McVay entered the room, Brother Stock opened his eyes, but seemed not to recognize him. While standing there Brother McVay experienced the feeling that if the Lord did not hear and answer the prayers of the Saints for this brother, he would soon pass away. Brother McVay then left the home and notified the Saints of the special prayer meeting to be held.

About twenty members gathered that evening to pray. Brother McVay did not stay as he wanted to get some rest before going to work at midnight. Family worship was held in the McVay home about six o'clock. Between the hours of seven and eight, while the Saints were holding prayer service in Wellsburg, the suffering brother's hemorrhages stopped. On the next day the doctor was puzzled. A day or two afterward the doctor reported that he could find nothing wrong with Brother Stock's lungs. He said, "If I, with the other doctors, had not seen you with the hemorrhages, I would say that you had never had one." He kept coming every day to see how Brother Stock was getting along. In a week he said that he would take him to Wheeling to a hospital to have him examined by experts. He did so but they could find nothing wrong with him. They took an X-ray picture of him and all that showed was the scar from his old trouble ten years before. Just the other day Brother McVay was talking with Brother Stock, and was assured that he would go to work in about two weeks.

Some two weeks after this brother received the blessing related above, the Saints of Wellsburg experienced another case of healing. Brother L. B. Anderson fell ill with the flu which settled in his head, developing sinus trouble. The doctor ordered him to Steubenville, Ohio, to be operated on. The night preceding the operation, Brother McVay called on him. Arriving at the home, he found Brother Willard Allen, who had been called to administer. The brothers had prayer, and Brother Allen administered and said, "Now, brother, if you put your faith in the Lord tonight and tomorrow there may be such a thing that you won't have to be operated on." When Brother Anderson went to the doctor's office the next day, the doctor could find nothing wrong with him. His sinus trouble had left him. All the doctor said was that he was still weak from the flu. On the following Sunday when Brother McVay testified of this healing, Brother Allen said that he felt the Spirit of the Lord when he spoke to the brother of his faith.

Other experiences of healing have been had by the Saints of this region. Last fall Brother McVay went to Wheeling to visit Brother J. F. Martin, his purpose being to get him to hold a series of meetings. Brother Martin was unable at the time to hold services, but promised to preach for the Wellsburg Saints the Sunday night before Christmas. At the spring conference at Bellaire Branch, Brother Martin was spoken to in prophecy and told that in the near future the Lord was going to bless him with better health. The following week Brother McVay wrote to him, inviting him to hold two weeks of meetings in Wellsburg beginning Sunday, March 13, and telling him that there were six candidates to be baptized that Sunday. Brother Martin answered, "Yes." On that day Brother Clyde Zonker conducted the candidates into the kingdom by baptism, and they were confirmed by Brothers J. F. Martin, O. J. Tary, and William Richards. That evening the meetings began, being held every evening with the exception of Monday and Saturday. Over one hundred were present every night. Two weeks afterwards five more candidates were baptized by Brother Martin and confirmed by Brothers Martin, O. J. Tary, and Willard Allen.

At this meeting something took place which we have never before witnessed. Two nonmembers who have been at outs for some time went to each other, under the Spirit of the Lord, asked forgiveness, and besought one of the elders to pray for them.

On the morning of March 27 the gift of prophecy was given to the branch. First the whole body was spoken to, then five members of the priesthood, then the women.

On April 10, two more persons were baptized into the kingdom by Brother Zonker and confirmed by Brother O. J. Tary.

The Saints met and discussed some kind of a study and program on Monday evening, April 11, this to be held one evening a week. A Bible society for the study of the Bible and other church books was organized. First they plan to study church history. They will meet on Thursday evening at seven forty-five. Forty-five were present at the opening meeting, Brother Zonker in charge. A fine program was enjoyed.

The women's department is doing a wonderful work. They presented the play, "No Account David," at a theater here not long ago. These workers are to be commended for their zeal.

Birmingham, England

Springtime is here, a time for awakening, sowing and making preparation. Spring is the season of hope. As I write a thrush is warbling and thrilling with joy. This is a time to look around us for the beautiful and to increase the God-given beauty of the universe by living beautiful lives.

Pastor Peter S. Whalley preached a splendid Easter sermon to this congregation, telling how Jesus triumphed over sin, death, and hell. And as a result of this powerful sermon, the Saints of this branch are praying for light and wisdom and truth to be revealed to the entire church and to all people who are seeking Jesus.

The young people have been organized and are known as the Laurel Club. This group has given a concert which was very successful and another is in state of preparation. They are working loyally, and their aim is to free the branch of debt. The older members are proud of them and their choice to serve God.

In late months there has been much sickness in this community. The group experienced a sad loss in the sudden death of one of its brightest and sweetest girls, Dorothy Swan, seventeen years old. She was a loyal Girl Guide and a friend to all, especially to little children. She is very much missed, but her friends are endeavoring to live the ideals to which Dorothy aspired.

Sister Whalley, wife of the pastor, has been suffering for a period of two months. She spent some time in the hospital, but is now at home again and progressing fairly well.

Sister Edwards, mother of Apostle F. Henry Edwards, too, has been very ill. She is recovering from double pneumonia.

The Saints have received many blessings and are a thankful people.

Sunday, April 3, was set apart for fasting and prayer in behalf of the church and conference.

Lansdowne Branch

East Saint Louis, Illinois

On the evening of Easter Sunday the young people of this branch presented "Love Triumphant," an Easter story. The libretto was read by Sister D. E. Grim. Trio numbers were sung by Brother and Sister Prosper Carl and Sister Wilbur Smith. Sister Harry Deopke sang "The Sparrow Falseth" as a solo.

The church was beautifully decorated in white. Ferns and large baskets of flowers made an effective background for the large white cross that stood in the center of the stage. As the last chorus was sung, all lights were extinguished except the lights of the cross. This beautiful lighting effect left a deep impression on everyone.

The intermediate class of the branch at Archbald, Pennsylvania, held an impressive party at the home of Miss Mildred Treat in honor of the church's one hundred and second birthday. The teacher, Mrs. Fred Augustine, formerly Miss Elizabeth Dippel, selected and read important parts of church history from the first volume. Miss Irene Dippel opened the meeting with prayer, and the class sang "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus." After playing a few games, the guests enjoyed conversation and refreshments of homemade ice cream and cake.

O. J. Tary Retires From Postal Service

Among the most enthusiastic of conference attendants this year was Brother O. J. Tary, of Wheeling, West Virginia. His love for the church has a standing of many long years for he was baptized a member February 25, 1881, at Sugar Creek, West Virginia, and has functioned in a succession of priesthood offices, being now a high priest.

Shortly before conference time, Brother Tary completed his thirty-fourth year of continuous service as a government employee in the Wheeling post office. He retired from active duty and was pensioned by the government under the veterans' retirement act. This event furnished the material for a news story in the Wheeling Register of March 31, with which appears a photograph of Brother Tary. Brother Tary first entered the postal service in June of 1898, and for nine and one half years served as a carrier in the city. In 1908, he was transferred to inside work. At the time of his retirement Brother Tary was the recipient of a gift from the Wheeling office employees as a token of their esteem. He was praised by the postmaster for his devotion to duty, and his departure from the office was regretted by all.

Brother Tary was born March 20, 1863, in Tyler County, West Virginia.

Byrneville, Indiana

Although the financial status of the branch members here is not all that could be desired, because many members are unemployed, the Saints are not discouraged.

Byrneville has a splendid Sunday school, many children coming from the homes of nonmembers.

March 6, at two o'clock in the afternoon, although the weather was cold and disagreeable and snow covered the ground, a crowd gathered at the creek to witness the baptism of Roland Glen Prather by Brother John R. Byrn. He was confirmed by Elder C. N. Maymon, of Henryville, Indiana. The disagreeable day held no terror for the young man as he with his wife and baby drove about three miles in an open car to the morning services, then he returned home and came back for the baptism. Branch members were glad to see him make this covenant for they feel that he will be a useful member. Brother Prather and his wife have been attending services conducted at different times by Elder J. O. Dutton.

The services conducted by Elder Dutton in February were well attended and were rewarded by good interest.

Brother and Sister Keithley, of Crandall, have enjoyed fairly good health during the winter. Although they are not often able to attend services, their faith and confidence in the latter-day work are an inspiration to others.

Sacrament service, April 3, was well attended and a good spirit was present. Every member partook of the emblems. Several from a distance were present. The prayer service on the following Sunday was also well attended and an enjoyable meeting was had.

Twins, a boy and a girl, arrived at the home of Brother and Sister Virgil Maymon, April 6. Their names are Irvin Louis and Irma Louise.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Armour and son, Clarence, presented the Rock Island Branch a fine, upright piano for the junior church and recreation room. The Saints are grateful for this much needed instrument.

District Priesthood Meeting

Southern Ohio priesthood are requested to meet at Dayton, Ohio, May 14 and 15. The plan and purpose of this gathering are to increase the devotional attitude of the priesthood. We want each man to come fasting at least one meal and at 6.30 p. m., May 14, the priesthood will dine together at the expense of the district. At this gathering we shall sing the songs of Zion and listen to some of the brothers make short talks or lectures on spiritual things. There is no excuse for God's servants staying away from this gathering. We shall also break bread in sacrament on Sunday, May 15. We must know how many plan to attend, and want a report not later than Monday, May 9.—A. E. Anderton, district president, 2423 Medary Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

Our Departed Ones

YOUNG.—George H. Young passed from this life February 25, 1932, at Saint John's Hospital, Fargo, North Dakota, after undergoing two serious operations on the stomach. During his sickness he had much pain and suffering to endure, but through administrations by two faithful servants, Elder Harry Ratcliff and Elder Thomas Leitch, he was blessed by God's Spirit and his pain was relieved for a time. He was born at Berlin, North Dakota, May 28, 1894. On June 3, 1908, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by Elder J. E. Wildermuth. He attended Graceland College and completed the commercial course. He was married to Myra B. Washburn and to this union one son was born. He leaves to mourn, his wife and son; his mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. John Young, and three brothers, Charles, Milton, and Raymond, besides a host of friends. Being of a cheerful disposition and having a kind word for all, he was loved by everyone and the entire community feels keenly its loss by his death. A large funeral was held for him at the Presbyterian Church, by Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, Iowa, assisted by Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

TAYLOR.—David Taylor was born in East Garafraxa, Ontario, Canada, January 10, 1855, and passed away at Grand Valley, March 29, 1932. He was baptized by John Shields in 1888, and from that time until his death he remained a faithful, unwavering Saint. He loved the church and rejoiced in the singing of the familiar hymns. Though not feeling well on Easter Sunday, he attended church as usual, remarking to his brother, John H. Taylor, that this would probably be his last time at church. He died suddenly on Tuesday of a heart attack. He farmed in Garafraxa most of his life, but a few years ago retired in Grand Valley. He was a familiar figure in the community and made many friends by his hearty handshake and warm welcome. Among his friends were the ministers of the town. Three were present at his funeral, two of them assisting in the service. The sermon was by A. F. McLean, of Toronto. He is survived by his wife, five sons, and six daughters. Interment was in Grand Valley Cemetery.

EDWARDS.—Evan Edwards was born in Wales, March 6, 1867. He departed this life March 19, 1932. Came to America when nineteen years of age, and was married to Miss Alice Poore in 1890. To them five children were born, one dying in infancy. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for twenty-five years, and at the time of his death held the office of elder. Surviving are his wife and Carl Edwards and Leota Edwards, of the home address; a son, Gilbert Edwards, of Weir, Kansas, and a daughter, Mrs. John Ballanger, of Henrietta, Oklahoma; seven grandchildren; two brothers and three sisters living in Wales. The funeral was in charge of Elder James Watson, of Independence, Missouri, assisted by the Reverend C. E. Ryder of the Nazarene Church. Interment was in West Lawn Cemetery.

BOOTMAN.—James Bootman was born November 19, 1869, at Marcellus, Michigan, and died March 11, 1932. He was married to Olive M. Kellar, and to them three sons and one daughter were given. The mother died July 1, 1915, and the daughter about six years ago. Mr. Bootman married Miss Tillie C. Cortez, October 3, 1917. To this union were given two sons who with their mother are left to mourn. He was baptized in November, 1899, and ordained an elder July 5, 1903, at Pomona, Missouri. Brother Bootman lived an exemplary life and was loved by many who knew him. He received scores of letters from friends while he was ill in the hospital at Topeka, Kansas. His comrades from the railroad yards sent him flowers and a letter of appreciation, and the Saints were grief-stricken because they were bereft of the faith and prayers of a noble man. His quorum of the ministry will also miss him. Elder Ammon White preached the funeral sermon to a large crowd; also a short ritual service was read by the R. & R. T. Trainmen at the grave.

WELLS.—Bertha Ann Babcock was born November 27, 1893, at North Platte, Nebraska, and was baptized into the church by Elder Charles Prettyman in 1905. She departed this life February 22, 1932, at Lyman, Nebraska. Married John Fay in 1909, who died in 1910. She married Alva Wells, October 19, 1911, and to them five children were born. Two of these passed away in infancy. Those remaining are Mrs. Fay Evans, of Scottsbluff, Nebraska; Charles Wells, sixteen years old, of Lyman, and Melva Wells, eight years. She also leaves her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Babcock, of Torrington, Wyoming; three brothers: Lee, James, and John Babcock, Torrington; three sisters: Mrs. Ada Fairchild, of Blackfoot, Idaho; Mrs. Dollie Springsteel, Craige, Colorado, and Mrs. Frances Balkey, of Torrington. The funeral was held from the undertaking parlors at Morrill, Nebraska, by Elder M. M. Bilyue, of Torrington, Wyoming. Interment was in Lyman, Nebraska, Cemetery.

PARSONS.—Viola L. McVay, daughter of James and Sarah McVay, was born July 14, 1878, at Spickard, Missouri. She was baptized and confirmed a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder I. N. White January 8, 1893. Became the wife of James B. Parsons January 11, 1899. Lived in Independence, Missouri, twenty-four years where she died March 19, 1932. She is survived by her husband, one adopted son, Leon McVay Parsons, an adopted daughter, Mrs. Juanetta Parsons Crosswell, of Fayetteville, Arkansas; four sisters: Mrs. Ellen Vanderpool, Mrs. Rosie Sweetman, Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Hattie Proffitt, Trenton, Missouri, and Mrs. Ida Wilson, Winfield, Iowa; one brother, C. W. McVay, Independence. The funeral was held from the Stone Church by Elders U. W. Greene and Ammon White. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

ANTHONY.—Mary Pethoud Anthony was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, in 1854. Moved to Nebraska in 1858, down the Ohio to Saint Louis, up the Missouri to Brownville. Her parents homesteaded a few miles north of Beatrice, making the trip from Brownville by ox team. She grew to womanhood in the Beatrice vicinity, and was one of the earliest school-teachers of the State. She was married to Isaac Anthony, at Beatrice, December 24, 1877. They went to Wilber, where they made their home for many years. In 1914 they moved to Nemaha County, where they have since resided. She leaves her husband, nine children, sixteen grandchildren, two brothers, and one sister. She has lived a faithful, Christian life, uniting with the Christian Church in the early seventies. It was necessary at the time to cut the ice to perform the baptismal service. Later, with her husband, she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Last rites were held at the Armstrong Funeral home Saturday afternoon, March 5. The services were conducted by Elder O. L. D'Arcy. Interment was in Sheridan Cemetery.

FRENCH.—Enos John French passed from this life February 20, 1932, at San Bernardino, California. He was born in Michigan, March 29, 1845. Was baptized in 1880, at Laguna Beach, California, by Joseph Burton. Labored as a missionary in southern California many years with many of the old-time elders; among them were D. S. Mills, Glaud Rodger, Brother Burton, and Brother Badham. Was married to Larina Wooster, September 17, 1872, and to them were born thirteen children, nine of whom survive: Mrs. Dell Kraschel, Mrs. Lois Boren, Mrs. Villa Sparks, Mrs. Rose Nelson, Mrs. Inez Emerick, Mrs. Eunice Wilson, Mrs. Hope Dillard, Idra E. and Cyrus B. French, thirty-two grandchildren, and twenty-two great-grandchildren. He lived a life devoted to the church and its ideals.

The Conference Unified Our Forces

Harmony and Strength the Great Gains of the Recent Gathering

Those who were not able to attend the recent General Conference, many of them the mainstays of their branches, will want to know, "What happened at conference?" And they will not have reference to the record contained in the official minutes. They will have reference to that unwritten record which delegates and visitors carry away in their minds and hearts—a record written in terms of hope, faith, courage, and confidence. Such records, transcending the importance of the resolutions passed, were written in the devotional services in the Stone Church, where daily great numbers were blessed by the Spirit of God, in the confidential exchanges of old friends, in personal testimony, and in kindly helpful advice.

Every general conference has its two aspects: the business and the spiritual. It is not our purpose here to minimize the important business transactions of the conference. We expect to be giving space in the Herald columns for some weeks to come to the more important enactments. But it is the spiritual aspect of conference in which people are most interested.

A SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE

Growing experience in the work of the church teaches us that little good comes from any piece of work unless the good Spirit is there to bless; for without its attendance the imaginations of the people are not lifted, there is no vision, no concerted effort at fulfillment.

Above everything else, the General Conference of 1932 was a spiritual feast. This quality was manifest in the sermons, in the devotional services, in the business sessions, and in the quorum meetings.

DOUBT AND DISCORD CAST OUT

Prior to April 6 there were many fears and apprehensions. It was feared that, due to the depression, few delegates would arrive; that some of them would be disgruntled; and that the church might not rouse itself to the moral pitch necessary to rid itself of its debt and go forward with its tasks.

The opening day of the conference dispelled the first of these fears. It soon appears that all were willing to sacrifice, all were ready to make concessions; all were anxious to drop their "pet" projects and ambitions to unite in the great cause of the church. Somehow, under the blessing of the Spirit of God, the twin devils of doubt and discord were cast out, and the dark clouds of sadness were rolled away.

FAITH AND POWER MANIFEST IN THE VOTING

Never was a body seen better unified as to what it wanted than the voting members at conference. There was little wasted time, and even less futile oratory; remarks were condensed—they meant much and sank deep. On only one question—and that a minor one—did the floods of eloquence break loose; and that was checked by a unanimous call for the previous question. The conference was not inclined to dally, to tinker with legislative thunderbolts, or to play politics. At most times the voting was quick and decisive, and the chairman seldom had to call for a counting of votes.

THE HIGH POINT

The high point of the conference came with the reading of the revelation by President Frederick M. Smith. This brought joy to the people. The Quorum of Twelve was filled by a new appointment (the happy return of J. W. Rushton to the Quorum had already been effected), changes were made in the Presiding Bishopric, and provision made for a complete Quorum; and the people were admonished to unite and go forward. From the time the revelation was given to the people the conference took on a tone of assurance, strength, and happiness.

FORWARD A UNITED CHURCH

In a sense and degree that has not been realized in years, the church is ready from this time to go forward to the completion of its tasks. President Smith's call "To Work!" appears in this issue. Rebuilt in faith, buoyed up by hope, united in a splendid spirit of fraternity, the church goes forward from the great conference of 1932.

To Work! To Work!

The last General Conference closed with the feeling quite prevalent among officers, delegates, and visitors that greater unity in work and understanding will be a distinct result. A factor in developing such feeling is probably the determination of certain objectives or goals towards which our present efforts shall be directed. These objectives will quite certainly challenge greater efforts in behalf of ministry and members alike.

It has been good to mark these goals, and the zeal developed in pointing them out has been great; but to fix these goals is but the first step. The next is to get to work. "To work! To work!" must now be our slogan.

June 12 has been designated Children's Day. This means that we shall work towards having in branches throughout the church activities set under way to gather in the children eligible for baptism, and have ceremonies and functions calculated to make special appeal to the loyalty and religious fervor of adults as well as children, and to surround the ceremonies of the day with such beauty and harmony as will grip the children and observers in an enduring interest in the church and its purposes. In and through the ceremonies should shine a vision of the ultimate goals of the church.

Beyond the above-mentioned day, chronologically considered, lies only a short distance ahead another objective, Sacrifice Week. That is set for June 19 to 26 and for this, preparations must begin now.

In recent times our people have been learning more about what sacrifice means. We have perhaps the past year or so sacrificed to some degree at least. With what result? Who can deny that the splendid feeling developed at and in the conference was not rooted in the sacrifices of the period? And who will say that the still better, deep-seated emotions needed for our future tasks can be engendered other than through the sufferings by which obedience to divine law and mandates shall still be learned to a greater degree? We not only learn obedience by the things we suffer, but through those experiences which search the soul is our love for the cause enriched and expanded.

Children's Day, Sacrifice Week, and then reunion activities. To work! To work! Let us be about the Master's business!

Man's first task was to work in a garden, and it is his best occupation now. Flowers and vegetables do not complain and make trouble. In tending them one is rewarded by both beauty and usefulness, and rids his heart of fear, worry, and all bitter thoughts.

Doctor Charles Keown Claimed by Death

PROMINENT PHYSICIAN SUCCUMBS TO BLOOD POISON

The city of Independence and the church suffer an irreparable loss in the death of Doctor Charles Keown. At the height of his ability, and widely recognized for his extraordinary skill in his special line, his passing is a tragedy to his family and to the community as well.

The name of Doctor Keown has become a legend of mercy in the field of obstetrics, and many a mother and many children owe their lives as well as their release from agony to his skilled care. His ability also extended to other special fields.

The cause of the death was accidental. Doctor Keown had just reached the convalescent stage after an attack of influenza. It is supposed that this had lowered his resistance. While he was lancing the inflamed hand of a patient to drain the pus, his knife slipped, making an incision in his own hand and infecting it. It was not long before he was suffering intense pain. Five blood transfusions were made in an effort to save him. A strong heart carried him through for several days, and on Tuesday it was reported that he was better. Wednesday brought a decline, and he passed away at two o'clock Thursday morning.

Doctor Keown was an elder in the church, and on occasion he was heard in the pulpit, although of recent times his practice has been so heavy as to prevent his occupying the pulpit very often.

The funeral service was held in the Stone Church Sunday at two thirty. Hundreds of people were turned away for lack of room. The sermon was by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, who paid tribute to the deceased as "the poor man's doctor." Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Independence Votes "Dry" in "Literary Digest" Poll

The world is well acquainted with the stir created by the great poll that has been taken by the Literary Digest on the popular question, "Should the Eighteenth Amendment be repealed?"

Among other smaller cities selected for mention Independence, Missouri, is one. There were four hundred twenty-six votes cast for the continuance of prohibition against three hundred fifty-eight against.

The Literary Digest claims that the persons to whom an opportunity to vote has been given, have been chosen impartially with a view to obtaining representative responses. Varied groups of "Drys" have attacked the poll, charging unfairness. These charges are indignantly denied by the editors of the magazine.

U. S. S. "Constitution" in 1875

We have heard and read much in recent months about the United States Battleship Constitution which was repaired and reconditioned, and has been making a tour in the interests of American history and patriotism, under the care and direction of the United States Navy. It can not but be of interest to our readers to read what Joseph Smith, who for over fifty years was editor of the Saints' Herald, said of this historic ship when he visited it in 1875. He, in his memoirs, which we hope will be published soon, says:

"We went to the Navy Yard to see the interesting old battleship, Constitution, which in the War of 1812 won such a significant victory for the United States. She was lying in the Charles River and was used as a training ship.

"What feelings were mine as I recalled our leading battles on the sea and the exploits of John Paul Jones and other renowned naval heroes! It is needless to recount them here. But it seemed very wonderful to me that a vessel like that should have lasted so long, and was still present in tangible form among men, to visualize, as it were, the history of its period and to keep fresh in our memories the stirring episodes through which some of our forebears have passed."

Graphic Arts Bureau Carries On

ITS SERVICE HELPS SUPPLEMENT REDUCED MISSIONARY FORCES

The report of the Graphic Arts Bureau, contained in the Conference Daily, brings out some interesting facts with reference to the present circumstances of the church.

Pictorial and slide material covering the history and doctrine of the church, have always had a strong appeal and draw large audiences. Exhibitions of stereopticon views are very effective in drawing nonmembers to hear of the gospel work. The Bureau rents the slides, "at a loss," as they say, but they continue it because of the good it does.

The Bureau had its maintenance fund discontinued in the retrenchment program, but is now supporting itself with commercial photography and portrait work.

The Bureau has now collected, classified, and filed most of the available pictures of historical interest. Much effort has been made to take pictures of remains of historic spots, sometimes at considerable expense.

Brother C. Ed. Miller, in charge of the Bureau, informs us that efforts are now under way to develop new series of slides of an educational character. These should prove to be of much assistance to missionary endeavors.

Listening to the Voice of Jesus

Perhaps there was never greater need for men to give heed to the teachings of Christ than there is today, for them to know of and obey the divinely given injunction of latter-day revelation, "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM."

The recent conference of the church has confirmed in us the belief that God is directing his people. He has spoken to us in our services of prayer and business. He has blessed us with countless blessings, healing the sick, comforting the sorrowing, answering prayers, and calling men and women to labor in his work. And we? We have an important part to do, the part of listening to, learning of, and following our Master and Savior. If Jesus goes with us, we can go anywhere, we can do any task required.

Jesus wants us to be his friends and followers. He has told us to love God and one another, to be at peace, to have courage, to be busy doing worthwhile things. He has asked us to show our faith and gratitude by serving and sacrificing. His words are helpful, beautiful. They counsel, commend, and command. They help us to grow to be like him. Shall we listen to some of his words spoken to men of old and preserved for us of the present?

To the leper he said, "Be thou clean."

How sweet must have been his words to the centurion concerning his sick servant: "I will come and heal him."

"Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee," he spoke to the one sick of the palsy.

And how Matthew's heart must have leaped with joy when the Savior passing him at the receipt of custom said, "Follow me."

"Come unto me," said Jesus to the people, and he told them stories to teach them the lessons of life. He taught them to be diligent in listening and learning and serving. And this is one of his parables: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock."

To be real, prayer must be natural and spontaneous. The prayer of the Pharisee: "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are," had no value because it was artificial and self-conscious. It sounded like a cracked bell. The prayer of the Publican carries its own credential of genuineness because it was a spontaneous outburst. "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." In his approach to God there was nothing conventional or formal. Perhaps prayer means nothing to us because we try too hard to make it mean something. We identify it with set times and places. We are too self-conscious in our approach to it. There is too much strain in our prayer life, and strain is always a nonconductor. None of us can do justice to ourselves if we work or speak or sing under a strain. Approach prayer in a relaxed and natural mood. Let it be preceded by a period of perfect quiet in both body and mind. "Be still and know that I am God." "Wait on the Lord." Eliminate every element of strain. This is the value of devotional reading before prayer. It relaxes the mind and produces a responsive and receptive attitude. Self-consciousness is always weakness. God-consciousness is power.—Lucius H. Bugbee.

Though we study love, we forget it in practice. Indeed, we are too cowardly to practice it. Let us have a revival of love. A revival of faith is not enough. Let us take the cross, which is the symbol of love, on our backs; for the cross has two meanings: it is both individual and social, a deliverance from sin and a willingness on our part to give our lives for others as Christ did.—Toyohiko Kagawa, in Federal Council Bulletin.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Instructions on Prayer

GIVEN BY JESUS TO HIS DISCIPLES

The instructions that Jesus gave to his disciples concerning the technique of prayer were meant for plain people, not for the proud, the vain, or the ambitious. They may be understood and applied by all men. In recommending simplicity, it is to be noted that Jesus did not compromise dignity and reverence.

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou has shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.—Matthew 6: 5-8.

The most sincere and heartfelt personal prayers should be made in private. Beautiful words and resounding phrases, vainly spoken in public to arouse the admiration of men, do not give men contact with the infinite nor truly represent the individual. The greatest value of prayer is found in the experience of being in the presence of God, not in the words spoken.

After his instructions, Jesus gave an example of what a prayer should be. He did not command them always to pray that prayer. "After this manner therefore pray ye." It was to be an object lesson, not necessarily an established and inflexible ritual. And yet when children are too young to think of words to say, they can learn to repeat it, and when older hearts are too full of grief and pain, they can follow its simple and beautiful phrases and find comfort in them.

THE MOST FAMOUS CHRISTIAN PRAYER

It may not occur to many of the millions who have repeated this prayer to take note of its structure. Though it is short, it is, in its way, complete. We give the well-known King James' version. (Matthew 6: 9-13.)

Salutation:

Our Father which art in heaven,

Reverence:

Hallowed be thy name.

Submission:

Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven.

Petition:

Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil:

Tribute:

For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever.

Close:

Amen.

THE INSPIRED VERSION

The Inspired Version gives a somewhat different shading and, we believe, a superior statement of what should be the Christian attitude toward God in its words:

"And suffer us not to be led into temptation." Other differences occur, as the reader will observe. We can not accept the idea that a benevolent God would purposely cause the downfall of his creatures.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE PRAYER

All the necessary structure of a prayer is there. Other elements are called for and used in different kinds of prayer, but this gives us an authentic example. Jesus said, "After this Manner . . ."

The prayer closely links both temporal and spiritual affairs. It is at once sanely practical and highly idealistic. It touches the full range of the life of man: his welfare, his work, and his finest dreams of salvation.

L. L.

Sister Hannah Barnard, of route 2, Box 44, Kingsley, Michigan, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may recover from lingering pains and a cough that has caused much discomfort.

Sister Ruby C. Faunce, of Nebraska City, who suffered severe injury in falling and breaking her ankle, requests prayers.

Those who habitually speak on every question frequently begin their remarks with something like this: "I had not intended to be heard before this Conference again." And thus is ruined many an excellent intention.

Our "Social Ideals"

By H. W. Savage

The author, a released missionary, turns a yearning gaze toward a practical Zion, but finds the realization of our "social ideals" impeded by great obstacles. Two of the greatest obstacles he sees are greed and selfishness.

We have talked for a hundred years of our "social ideals." We have read the Doctrine and Covenants, all of us. We have read and heard what each other of us has written and said about it. We have generalized grandly. We have said nothing in particular. We have thought it best to convert the whole world to the general idea of our "social ideals," but they have been so general that there was nothing much in particular for the world to take hold of, so the world did not bother with it. We must be more definite, and we must do something about it to prove to the world that we believe it.

Brother Porter is to be congratulated for his bold suggestion to buy wheat and use it to relieve the sufferings of those in dire need at this present time. (Thank you, brother, for the suggestion.) We bought a hundred pounds of wheat at one dollar and seventy-five cents. This is a great saving in the cost of cereals. If there were a hundred of us cooperating in this matter we could buy a small mill and all have cracked wheat at about two cents per pound, or possibly at one and one half cents per pound. Cooperation seems to be properly based upon the actual needs of the group being supplied cooperatively, rather than that one individual should undertake to supply the needs at a profit to himself over and above his needs. That is to produce for use and not for profit.

Henry Ford is alleged to have said that we can not expect a lasting prosperity until we abolish the profit-taking system. He ought to know, since he is said to have cleared over sixty millions of dollars in the profit-taking system last year, while the whole world was gasping for breath in the strangle hold of the captains of industry. (There are four members in my family. Did he take fifty cents of our share of life's goods from each of us? He certainly did; I drove an old Ford last year.)

Long ago the Lord told us that the spirit of speculation and greed for gain was unseemly among Saints, but few people paid any attention to it. Perhaps they thought the prophet introduced his own ideas there. Or perhaps they thought that the Lord had so much wealth in the golden streets of heaven that he did not see the needs of his people on this earth; too far away. Certainly they did not believe the doctrine.

The "sacred rights" of private property have been more sacred than faith in God. So when any one suggested cooperation in any effort, fear blinded many people. The Cooperative Creamery at Lamoni found many very fearful that the co-op would entangle them in some kind of a tricky contract to take their cows away from them or possibly send out phantom calves in the shades of night to suck dry every cow in the country. It took time to prove that it was a good thing to do to bind themselves together in a cooperative effort. It took a hundred years to get that started.

It seems to be a frightful thing for any one to offer a suggestion for cooperative effort. People hold up their hands in holy horror and cry out, "You can't establish Zion that way." Well, can you establish Zion in any way without cooperation? That is, acting in concerted unison to supply the needs of the people in a way that the people shall get the benefits instead of building up huge profits for one or two individuals to the detriment of the whole group?

What do we value most, things, material things to satisfy our greed for gain, or is there anything more sacred than material profits? That is the great question we must all answer before we can be of any assistance in this great proposed work. Too often we have sung a new song of our own in our hearts which goes something like the following:

We thank thee, O God! for the profits
That we've made in these latter days.
We thank thee for sending the Dollar
To lend at an interest that pays.
We thank thee for rents we have gathered
From all of our houses and lands,
We feel it a pleasure to have them
And hold our bank books in our hands.

When dark clouds of trouble hang o'er us
And threaten our peace to destroy,
There's hope in our great stock investments,
For we hope they will soon go up high.
We doubt not the Lord nor his goodness,
But self must be served first and last,
We trust in the profits that rusteth,
And weep when the market is smashed.

We are too ready to regard with suspicion any cooperative effort outside the confines of our own church organization. If they have any religious scruples at all we brand them as hopelessly outside until they come in with us. If they have not any religious dogmas or rituals which are specifically set forth as a part of their system we think they are leaving religion out and are without God; anarchists, or something of the sort. While, as a matter of fact, they may be doing in a very practical way, many of the very things the Lord advised us to do. Are we jealous? Surely we can find no more practical way to get people to listen to our spiritual message than to cooperate with them in every good work.

The spread of cooperation in the British Isles, Denmark, Switzerland, and other places in Europe, has been marvelous. And I wonder if it can be said that cooperation has helped to stabilize credit there. Not one bank in England has closed its doors during this great world depression. Last year over two thousand, three hundred banks closed in the United States.

Cooperation has not met with a welcome call from the capitalist. But it has won its way in Europe. In the United States of America cooperation has had a harder time. Two things have hindered it: first, big capitalists know that cooperation does not bring them huge profits; second, we are all of us Americans too ambitious for self. We each feel that he is too good a man to be tied down to any group who can not run as fast as he could run alone. Each one feels that he is smart enough to gain enough headway in the business world to eventually have his neighbors working for him. We believe in profits for self. But the fact still remains immovable, under the present system that about ninety-six per cent of the wealth of the country is in the hands of four per cent of the people. Facts are stubborn things. Only four per cent of us can hope to be wealthy.

What shall we do? Keep on plunging, each trying to drag his neighbor down and walk on him so as to be able to have what he and twenty-four others produced for our own use while they go without? Remember, these facts are as sure as fate, only one out of twenty-five can be well-to-do. In order to do that he must have a portion of what twenty-four others need in order to get that advantage. He must produce for profit and not for use. Twenty-four others must go short. Is it worth it? It matters not how you get it, just so you do it lawfully. The result remains the same—twenty-four will be short when you have plenty.

Several attempts have been made to escape this terrible situation in America. Groups have tried and failed. Why? Because self was too strong. Men love profits; for they are more attractive than ideals. Self is nearer to me than my neighbor. "Am I my brother's keeper?"

There is a small group at Atherton now trying out this ideal. I wish we could hear more about them in the church papers. We do not hear enough from them. There were six families. Later we heard there were eleven families. Where are the eleven families? How are they getting along? We search the papers in vain to learn about them. All we can get is hearsay. Are they in prosperity or in poverty? Are they winning or losing? Is there any room for and need of the one hundred missionaries released last year, if we should want to come and work with you brethren?

In New Llano, Louisiana, there is a colony who have been there fifteen years. They have done many of the things the Lord told us to do. Yet they are not a religious sect. Neither are they antireligious. People there may believe what they please. They produce for use and not for profit. There are about six hundred of them. Last fall they were worth about a million dollars and had only about twelve thousand dollars debts. They have farms, factories, schools, hospital, etc. They have not come up to our high ideals of Zion the beautiful. Neither have we.

Their organization is not perfect. Neither is ours, for we have none worthy of mention as a result of a hundred of years. What shall we do? Follow the profits of the gods of greed for personal advantage or cooperate? One in twenty-five shall win. Who shall it be? Here is the situation. Take one hundred dollars worth of food, clothing, and shelter and divide it. Four men take ninety-six dollars worth of it under the present system, and ninety-six men take four per cent of it and divide it among themselves. Are we satisfied? One may say "That depends on which group I am in." If you are an idealist you will not be satisfied with that division even if you're among the "lucky" four.

But that depends upon what are your "social ideals." Some men think that the present is the ideal system. Henry Ford says not. Henry Ford and I are in the same boat sometimes. I do not like the present system. But what shall we do about it? I shall not be able to do much about it. But Mr. Ford might do a great deal about it. He might make his whole system of profit taking over into a great cooperative concern. They could begin with a survey of the needs and just wants of their members and set out to provide them. They have many industries. They could branch out in many more. Cars would be produced for us. A thousand other things would be produced for use. The market would not be flooded with a million of undeeded cars or other commodities. The things his men do need would be provided at just enough above cost to cover moderate investment in needy men who would like to come into the company and the company would grow till, like the cooperative societies of Great Britain, they would do one third of all the merchandising in the country. Wall Street could not break them, for their hearts would not be set upon the gods of greed and speculation for profits.

Heed the Voice

(Given through Patriarch John F. Martin, at Independence, Missouri, April 11, 1932.)

Oh, my people, here assembled
In fair Zion's land today,
While the Spirit gently whispers
Heed its voice—turn not away.
I have heard your testimonies,
Witnessed each petition, too,
And the messengers of heaven
Bring a blessing now to you.

These momentous days are filled with great disaster;
There's a cup of woe poured out upon the world;
Satan rules with mighty hand
On the sea and on the land,
And his flag of evil conquest is unfurled.

Oh, my people, heed the warning
I am giving you today;
Buckle on the gospel armor,
You will need it for the fray.
Take my truth as your protection,
Consecrate your hearts with prayer
And I'll give divine direction,
I'll be with you everywhere.

See, the world is filled with greed and idle pleasure.
Love of wickedness abounds on every hand.
Oh, withdraw yourselves therefrom
And be ready when I come
To establish righteousness upon the land.

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Heed the warning voice today;
Young and old and middle-aged,
From the call turn not away.
Can you still withhold your offerings,
And your tithing fail to pay,
And expect a Father's blessing
While you walk your selfish way?

Why the methods of the world to build my kingdom?
They who trust in such must surely trust in vain.
Build with wisdom from above,
Faith and sacrifice and love,
If your heavenly Father's favor you would gain.

Oh, my people, heed the message
I am sending you today.
Every worldly thought and action—
Every evil cast away;
Build anew your family altars,
Read my word from day to day,
Come to me and I will guide you
In the new and living way.

There are many souls who long to hear my gospel

In this land of Zion and beyond the sea.
Will you dedicate your all,
Will you answer to the call,
That my sheep may hear my voice and come to me?

Oh, my people, come up higher,
Heed the Spirit's voice today;
Love the Lord and one another
And I'll answer when you pray.
Consecrate each passing hour
Sacred duties to attend,
And I'll come to you in power
And be with you to the end.

Faith Increased by the Conference

It was my pleasure to attend the late General Conference, and to my mind it was one of the best, if not the best conference it has been my privilege to attend.

The Spirit of God was present in all of the sessions, and unity prevailed in all the quorums, as well as the general assembly.

The president's opening message pointed the way toward a more definite drive in the direction of Zion conditions. The church then has a definite task, which means we each have an individual task.

While the financial depression has decreased the number of our conference appointees, we hope it has not decreased our missionary force, but will give an added impetus to our local ministry, which in the last several years we have seemed to lose sight of.

In visiting the different branches and groups in Far West Stake I have seen a goodly number of the local ministry active in carrying on the work of the church as pastors, and leaders of groups, administering to the sick both day and night, and teaching and exhorting the Saints, as well as bearing the financial burden of their local churches and setting an example of tithing and giving of offerings for the support of the general church. In addition many of these men travel extensively through the stake practically at their own expense. These are some of the sacrifices made by our local missionary force.

Opportunity is knocking at the door of all the local ministry to magnify their calling by active service; likewise the lay member can be a great help to the local ministry by showing appreciation and giving encouragement in every way they can.

Hurrah for the Seventy-fifth General Conference!
All together, let's go!

XIV.—SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCES. NEBRASKA, 1897.

By James Franklin Mintun

I, in association with Brother J. M. Stubbart, held meetings at Desota, where at one time in the history of the Reorganization was located one of the most spiritual branches in the state of Nebraska. Differences occurred and these differences grew into contentions, and this contention resulted in the Saints scattering, so that at the time we went there only one family remained, but their faith was unshaken in the gospel, and their love for the work of God was worthy of note.

On February 6 I went to Clearwater to assist at the district conference of the Central Nebraska District, and at that conference organized a Sunday school association in the district, with Sister Hattie Crosser as secretary, and Sister Belle Wisdom, superintendent. I preached at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., and at the social meeting at 3 p. m. Brother Charles Smith was called of God to the priesthood. This was the younger brother of Brother Hyrum O. Smith. Continued preaching services at Clearwater in a hall and at the Methodist Episcopal Church till the twenty-second. On the twenty-first, I baptized seven adults, some of whom had been led out of the church by false spiritual manifestation, but now were repentant of their mistake. . . .

Reforming a Saloon

I came to Laurel on March 16. Brother D. W. Albertson lived about six miles from Laurel, who was interested in his neighbors hearing the gospel. With his assistance we secured a building that had formerly been used as a saloon, and seated it with lumber, and here I preached till March 28, lodging most of the time at Doctor E. M. Williams, a friend to the Saints. The first two services were attended by about thirty-five men. At the close of the second service, I asked what kind of women was in the town; were they such as would be easily led astray by the preaching that they had heard during the nights I had preached? One man, a Catholic, said in a rough way, "I am going to see that the women of the town of Laurel hear such preaching as I have been hearing, and am going to bring my women folks from now on." From that time there were in attendance more than one hundred, and most of them were women, all of whom gave respectful attention. During the time I was there it was rainy and the streets were muddy. I left Laurel with all her citizens as friends to the church and to me as a representative of the gospel.

On March 30 I came to Omaha, where was being held a public exchange of views between Elder F. A. Smith and an Elder Young of the Utah Mormons. An agreement had previously been entered into by which the Utah Mormons might be permitted to use the church in which to represent their faith, which agreement was that they were to occupy about forty-five minutes and Brother Smith was to follow in reply to the same audience the same night. But this night Elder Young wished the order reversed, and that Brother Smith would occupy first, and he follow. After some conversation it was so agreed, with the understanding that if Elder Young should present anything needing an answer that Brother Smith was to follow him and give answer the same night. This agreement was entered into and the service began, but when Elder Young advocated the claims of Brigham Young as a prophet, and said that Salt Lake City was located like Jerusalem in Palestine, and was the New Jerusalem, representing the lakes in that land of Utah, as well as the river, as they were located in Palestine, a reply was needed, for Brother Smith had spent several years in Utah near these places referred to and knew that a misrepresentation had been made. But when he arose to make the reply Elder Young and other elders of the Utah Church objected saying that he had had his speech. I was in charge. I then explained the agreement entered into previous to the service, and asked the audience to decide whether Brother Smith should speak, and it was almost unanimous that he should speak, even the members of the Utah Church after they had understood the agreement did not vote against Brother Smith occupying. After Brother Smith was through, I asked if they wished to continue as at first agreed to any further, but they did not wish to. . . .

This year I was chosen assistant secretary for the First Seventy. At this conference a revelation was given April 7, which was approved as of the Lord. In it Brother I. N. White was chosen an Apostle from the Council of Presidents of the Seventy, and a rule given how the vacancy should be filled, and how to fill all other vacancies that should occur in the council. . . .

I arrived at home April 20, where I remained till May 15 repairing home property and assisting locally as there was opportunity, and making garden. When I started this year, my record says, "I felt sad to leave loved ones, yet the Spirit gave me witness that my going would be fraught with much good." The conditions were: my wife was in poor health, and the funds for the family were low. It was by the grace of God, and the encouragement of the Spirit that I went when I did, and felt free to go.

Some requests coming from Smithland and Kingsley were first considered. I confirmed two at Smithland, and baptized my only sister now living and another at or near Kingsley. . . .

At Meadow Grove I attended the Sunday school convention August 6 and 7. I was called from here to Inman, where Reverend J. Grant Shick had announced he would make an attack on the church, on August 16. I was present at this lecture, which was a scurrilous attack on some of the members and the ministry that had baptized some there who had formerly been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He said that the ministry had stolen some of his flock, and that they did not have virtuous purposes in so doing, or in seeking female converts. He said the ministry were the worst kind of thieves, and secured the lambs which they had stolen for illegitimate purposes. At the close I requested ten minutes to make a statement, but he refused. Then I requested the privilege of asking a question, and he replied emphatically, No. And then instructed the choir to sing. This caused some very hard feelings towards the minister. I replied the following night at the schoolhouse. The members that had been baptized into the church from the Methodist Episcopal Church were among the purest of their membership, and the most active workers, and that was what hurt him. We were, and are proud of such members to come into the body of Christ.

I held meetings in the tent at Neligh from August 17 till the 22, when the tent was taken to Meadow Grove, and I came to Omaha on my way home. While at home I baptized my second daughter and two others. When my oldest daughter was baptized the second was only seven, and said at that time that she would not be baptized for she was afraid of the water. At this time she requested baptism, and I asked her what had caused her to change her mind, and why she now wanted to be baptized. She replied, "My Sunday school teacher has showed me that God wants me to be baptized, and I want to be baptized because he wants me to."

On September 3 I was at the reunion at Woodbine with my family. I was chosen secretary, and in charge of all administrations. I had for my associate in charge, Brother Frank Criley, and among those chosen to assist me were Brethren F. M. Smith and F. B. Blair. On September 8 I baptized eight. At this reunion the following is reported: There were one hundred forty-six administrations to the sick. Fifty-one were baptized, and eleven children blessed. I was also assistant superintendent of the Sunday school work at this reunion. . . .

On October 8 I presided over the Sunday school convention at Fremont, and attended the conference that followed. From there I came to Shelton, where I met the Lippencotts, the Lacys, the Echternachts, the Lights, and others. While holding meetings, some prejudiced people expressed their opposition to the services by taking the wicks out of some of the lamps, filling some with water, and another night after school tobacco had been put on the stove, and cayenne pepper scattered on the floor, and the organ injured so it could not be used, but we continued our services. From there I came to a neighborhood near Cairo, where I met the Boodrys, the Pottorffs, the Ornsdorfs, the Rushens, and sought to give them encouragement. I went to a place near Aurora, where I met a brother in the flesh that I had not seen since he was about twenty years of age, formerly a member of the church. But he had been away from the church privileges for so many years that he knew but little of what the church believed. I held a few meetings here and gave him private instructions.

A Reconciliation

On November 10 I returned to the neighborhood near Cairo, and ministered the word of reconciliation privately and publicly. There was a serious unrecognition between two of the brethren. At a social service the last night I was in the neighborhood held at Brother Ornsdorf's these parties were all present and during the meeting the spirit of reconciliation rested upon the audience, and upon these two brethren especially, and there publicly they asked and received each other's forgiveness. I had, while lodging with one of the brethren, presented to me the outline of what Scriptures I should use the next morning in my attempt to bring about a reconciliation. After I had presented this instruction I had no better evidence of its effects than before, but I knew that I had done what the Lord bid me to do. This reconciliation that I had labored for was fully accomplished, and it brought a very happy feeling to all present. My soul was filled with gratitude, for God's leading power, and I saw how easy it is for the Lord to make hearts as one when the servants of God seek unselfishly a means of reconciliation and peace. This is the way that Zion will be brought about, when we shall all be of one heart and one mind, all being in agreement with the laws of God. The next day I went via Cairo and Grand Island to Shelton on my way to where the business meeting of the Shelton Branch was to be held at Brother Morris Stearling's. At Shelton, when I arrived by train there, I met Brother Leslie Boodry, who brought me to the place of the meeting. In Shelton and vicinity I preached till December 12. There I met Brother Jacob Hershey then of Shelton.

I then came to Central City, near where lived the Pemberton's. In the city lived a very dear friend of mine who had formerly lived in Magnolia, from the time of my childhood. He had been quite an attendant at the services held at Magnolia, but at once he quit coming. One of the brethren spoke to him inquiring what had happened that he was not at our services any more. He said, "I had to quit or become a member of the church. If at that time I should have become a member of the church it would have been hell for me, and I was much impressed with the fact that if I did not become a member of the church it would be hell for me later, but I thought I would cut off my suffering." His family had become much changed and were very friendly to the members and the church at the time I speak of, and made a home for me while I was there, and through their influence I preached in the Baptist Church for two nights, and was listened to with much interest.

A Demonstration of Spiritual Power

From there I stopped at Columbus, at Fremont, Lake Shore Branch, Tekamah, Desota, and Oklahoma, on my way to the Institute of the Sunday School Association, and Zion's Religio-Literary Society, to be held at Saint Joseph, Missouri, this year, from the twenty-sixth to the twenty-ninth. Here I had charge of "improvements to Religio," on the twenty-seventh, and on the twenty-eighth, I had charge of two sessions of class work. My record says on the twenty-seventh, "God's Spirit was present to assist," and on the twenty-eighth it says, "The Spirit of God blessed." On the twenty-ninth, "Very spiritual sessions." After the benediction had been pronounced, the Spirit of God rested upon Sister J. M. Terry, and observing this I requested the audience to be quiet and listen. She said, "God is well pleased with the Sunday school and the Religio work and what they are doing, and the work that has been done here at this time." This was said in her own plain simple language, but there was a power attending that is rarely experienced. After this I met Brother Robert Winning, who, with tearful eyes and a trembling body under the power of the Spirit, said to me, "Brother Mintun, I have not been in accord with the work represented here at this institute till now. Now I am ready, being really converted to their worth, to work in harmony with these departments." This will give information to many why I, with many others, have been so thoroughly in accord with the Sunday school and Religio work as it then existed, and the results we have seen. On the thirty-first I was at home, and my record says, "God wrought this year mercifully and lovingly, with me and family."

Pneumonia.—2

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

When an individual takes cold, the mucous membrane of the nose and throat is more or less irritated, furnishing the proper soil for the pneumococcus to grow. From there it gets into the tissues and then into the blood, and from the blood is carried into the lungs. Cultures of the pneumococcus are much easier isolated from the blood, than from the sputum. When it finds lodgment in the lungs, we call it pneumonia, but its deleterious influence is not always confined to the lungs, as it may find lodgment in some other part of the body and cause disease. When it attacks other parts of the body, the lungs are not affected at all. It is a frequent cause of heart disease, and where there is pus, it causes at least fifty-five per cent of the pleurisy. Many of the acute and chronic inflammations of the joints, called rheumatism are pneumococcus infections. Some very severe and fatal cases of meningitis are caused by this germ. Its virulency varies in different parts of the body.

Effects of Tobacco and Alcohol

Tobacco and alcohol lower the fighting resistance of the human body against all forms of disease, especially pneumonia. Every practicing physician and laboratory man is fully aware of this danger. A man who is free from these habits has a three-to-one chance of getting well, while the alcoholics do not have a three-to-one chance for life. Those who are intemperate in eating, fat people, and heavy drinkers are particularly susceptible to colds and pneumonia. Anything of this nature that throws the system out of nutritional balance, makes the body unduly subject to the invading pneumococcus. A fat person has stored away, under the skin and around the heart, an excess of food and when alcohol and food are taken together, the alcohol is burned and the food clogs the tissues. Thus, when taken with pneumonia, he is poisoned by toxins of the pneumococcus, with a surplus of food and drink, which is partly changed into compounds ready to make tissues.

Pneumonia is a dangerous disease to fight and when the fighting forces of the sick man are hindered in any way, it hardly gives him a fair chance to carry additional burdens. Many persons with pneumonia die from failure of the heart, especially when it is surrounded in such a manner that the muscular fibers of the heart are obstructed by fat.

Hence, in the fight to sustain life, the heart is unable to carry on the burden and unfortunate is the man who has to lean upon narcotics of any kind, especially tobacco and alcohol, for when attacked by pneumonia, he does not have the same chance of recovery as others. Ossler truly said: "Drunkards have a very slim chance of recovery, when attacked by pneumonia." It is a well-known fact that anything that weakens the resistance of the patient, when attacked by pneumonia, diminishes the opportunity for recovery. Among other things, besides alcohol, that lessen resistance, are measles, typhoid fever, influenza and other infections. Pneumonia often serves as a terminating influence in the consumptive, or in anyone with chronic heart disease, diabetes or other debilitating affections. It is extremely fatal in the aged. The inhalation of germ-laden dust, which may contain the pneumococcus or produce an irritation of the lining membrane of the nose and throat, or sudden changes in temperature, the inhalation of irritating vapors, unbalanced diet, especially those that induce scurvy and rickets, predispose to pneumonia.

It must not be forgotten, however, that pneumonia, like all other communicable diseases, frequently attacks the strong and robust. Fatigue and overexertion, interfering with the inspiratory act, may be the means of introducing the pneumococcus into the trachea or windpipe. Experimenters have produced pneumonia by injecting the pneumonia germ into the trachea, or by the intratracheal introduction of large amounts into dogs. People living in the United States and other countries of similar climate have acquired a certain amount of immunity to the pneumonia germ, for it is a notable fact, that the laborers on the Panama Canal and the miners on the Rhine, were peculiarly susceptible to this disease. Vaccines have been tried as a preventive measure against pneumonia, and since the disease itself leaves little, or no, natural immunity, very little beneficial results have been attained along this line. Much more work will have to be done before a statement can be made concerning the prophylactic value of these measures. Since pneumonia immunity is strictly specific, vaccines can only protect against the pneumonia caused by these groups represented in the vaccines. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has made studies upon many thousands of inmates of the insane asylums of Massachusetts and New York, according to their reports; and they believe there is very little protective value in vaccines. It is interesting to know that the newcomers in these institutions are especially susceptible to pneumonia. There is a serum known as the antipneumococcus serum, which is a specially concentrated antibody solution, and which has been found useful in the treatment, if given early, but of no use as a preventative. Preventive measures for pneumonia are still baffling. Success was attained by General Gorgas, among the workmen of the African mines, also upon the Isthmus of Panama, where, owing to the overcrowded condition which favored contact infection, considerable prevention was obtained by giving the workmen separate houses instead of permitting them to stay in the barracks.

Preventive Precautions

Avoiding overheated rooms, with its resultant dry, warm air, loss of sleep, overwork, worry, poor or insufficient food, lack of exercise, colds, and excesses of all kinds, break down the resistance of the individual and make him peculiarly susceptible to this disease. Oral hygiene, regulations of temperature and ventilation, sleeping with open windows or out of doors, and cold baths are useful prophylactic measures for pneumonia, tuberculosis, colds, and nearly all infectious diseases.

For the Sacrament

POEMS THAT MAY BE READ AS A PART OF THE SERVICE

Pastors frequently desire new ideas and material to incorporate into their introductory remarks before the ceremony of administering the sacrament. The two poems following will add to the dignity and solemnity of the occasion. Apostle F. Henry Edwards commends them to our readers for that purpose.

The Sacrament

"This is my body, which is given for you;
Do this," he said, "and break, rememb'ring me."
O Lamb of God, our Pascal off'ring true,
To us the Bread of Life each moment be.

"This is my blood, for sins' remission shed";
He spake, and passed the cup of blessing round;
So let us drink, and, on life's fullness fed,
With heavenly joy each quickening pulse shall bound.

Some will betray thee—"Master is it I?"
Leaning upon thy love, we ask in fear—
Ourselves mistrusting, earnestly we cry
To Thee, the Strong, for strength, when sin is near.

But round us fall the evening shadows dim;
A saddened awe pervades our darkening sense;
In solemn choir we sing the parting hymn,
And hear the voice, "Arise, let us go hence."

—Charles L. Ford.

This Is My Body

He was the Word that spake it,
He took the bread and brake it;
And what that Word did make it,
I do believe and take it.

—John Donne.

Cotton Stockings and Gold Lace

By C. L. Attebery

All this talk about the depression and what to do after it is over reminds me of a little incident in my past. I was then a clerk in a stationery store, drawing eighteen dollars a week, and paying out nine dollars for board and room and transportation. In those days that was not much money, but in these days I just wish I had that much. I dressed in silk then from the skin out, and thought it was no more than my due. As a rule, I made my own dresses, and on this occasion I had made a little lavender silk dress, and trimmed it with gold lace. One of the other clerks in the store rather disapproved of my extravagance in buying the gold lace, and said so. I was highly indignant over her attitude, feeling that I had as much right to a bit of gold lace—which to me represented the wealth, luxury and beauty I longed for. To be sure, I still think so, but my ideas as to what constitutes wealth, luxury and beauty have somewhat changed.

In those days my main desire was for money. Lots of money, in order that I might adorn myself with fine clothes, and live in ease. I lived, not on what I had made the week before, but on what I expected to make in the future. In these days I still desire money. But I desire it to buy food and clothing and shelter. I desire it to secure myself against the bug-a-boo of homeless poverty. I desire it that I might be on the giving, rather than the receiving end of things. I have learned that it is truly more blessed to give than to receive.

We have been suffering from what I would call a gold lace complex. We desired the world with a fence around it, so we set out to buy it—on the installment plan. A dollar down and a dollar a week for ever. We mortgaged the future, and the future went suddenly bankrupt. So now we are in a period which might well be called a cotton stocking, beans and potatoes period. We are wearing cotton stockings where for years we wore silk, and some of us are wearing none at all. Fortunately, it is still stylish to go stockingless! Also, where our tables were once set with fancy dib-dabs of expensive vitamins and calories, they are now set with very plain, one dish meals of beans and potatoes and the like. Nor do I think that the stomachs of most of us are suffering from the change. On the contrary, my own is improved.

But surely, surely, we will get some benefit out of all this. Believing, as we do, that famine and pestilence, depressions and calamities are brought upon the human family by their own iniquity, we ought to take warning from these times. If the house we built on the sands has been washed away, let us be thankful that we were not altogether destroyed, and build again upon a better foundation. The heart of the world is the home, and we must begin at the heart to heal the body. In a nation of about 125,000,000 souls, there must be about 30,000,000 homes. And if all of those homes were established upon the foundation of frugality, common sense, and self-sacrifice there would be no depression.

Saint Paul admonishes the women that they should adorn themselves with good works, rather than jewels and fine raiment. The symbolical garment of the redeemed is a pure white linen robe. I believe that these passages of scripture should be taken to heart as much as any other. In Isaiah there is a prophetic description of latter-day Israel. In it the daughters of Zion are described as walking and mincing as they go, making a tinkling with their feet. And because of their vanity, their adulterous hearts and rebellious spirits, the Lord, among other things, declared that he would smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion. It isn't a nice picture. But it's there, and I think that we should consider it seriously.

Do we desire wealth? Many of us have reached the point where the assurance of food and shelter is wealth in abundance. Do we desire luxury? What greater luxury could there be than to replace with a new garment one that has been worn much longer than it should be? Do we desire beauty? If so, then we should heed the admonition of Saint Paul, and adorn ourselves with good works, for the beauty of a kindly spirit far exceeds that of silk and satin.

After the depression—for of course it can not last for ever—we ought to remember and apply what we have learned. As for curing the depression now—I don't think that it can be cured with any sudden remedy. We will just have to dig ourselves out. Slowly, slowly, little by little, steady does it. When people try to begin at the top there is only one way to go, and that is down. But if we will be content to begin at the bottom there is always the hope of reaching the top. Be content with the simple things of life. Get out and keep out of debt. Strive to obtain those things which are really worth while, rather than those which flatter our vanity and exalt our pride.

And what are those things? Oh, foot-loose wanderer, oh, anxious tenant, buy a home. Better a bit of earth and a tumble-down shack that is all your own than the finest apartment that money can rent. Better to wear cotton stockings for ten years and buy a home than to wear gold lace for ten years—and at the end of that time have nothing. You may say that taxes are too high, but remember, the renter pays the taxes of the landlord. Depressions come and go; we have had others, and there is no assurance that this is the last one. We ought to prepare ourselves against them. And I, for one, believe that the best possible defense against the panic and despair which comes with hard times is a home of one's own. A home free from debt, situated on a piece of earth large enough to provide at least part of one's food.

And for the women especially I would say this, that a return to the virtues of our grandmothers might be beneficial. I think that most farm women, even in these days, still practice those virtues, but the city women do not. I know from experience that good homemade bread is twice as cheap as baker's bread, and ten times healthier. Homemade clothing may not look quite so ultra stylish as ready-made garments, but they are just as good for the purpose of covering the body as any other, and usually cost less. Home grown, home-canned fruits and vegetables are a great saving in money and are tastier, too. Simple, nourishing meals of one or two dishes are healthier and less expensive than elaborate menus. Careful cooking prevents waste, but if there should be any good food left over don't be ashamed to serve it again at the next meal. I've heard of women who were.

Nor is it necessary that such a program should take all the joy out of life. Simple pleasures, like simple food, are healthier and less expensive; camping, fishing, hiking, swimming, picnicking, all these, and others like them. I know that all of us can not do all of these things any time we want to, but for every season, place and people there is some kind of healthy recreation. Little parties among our friends—minus the unnecessary and often indigestible "refreshments." People, young and old, must have their moments of pleasure. "There is a time to laugh, and a time to refrain from laughter; there is a time to rejoice, and a time not to rejoice." That may not be an accurate quotation, but it's in the Doctrine and Covenants somewhere. It is a good thing to laugh, it keeps one's courage up. Laughter is a divine heritage. It is better to laugh in the face of poverty and rejoice that God has blessed us with even as much as we have, than to weep and moan and lose our faith because we have not everything. A practical faith expresses itself in deeds rather than words, and the faith that will come smiling through this depression and all that are to come, is the faith that can wear cotton stockings with as much grace as ever it wore silk and gold lace.

One thing is clear: if we want peace, we shall not seek it by making war on the war makers. Back in 1917 we tried that. It didn't work.—Hornell Hart, professor in Bryn Mawr College, in the Federal Council Bulletin.

For Such a Time as This

By M. W. Gibson

Among world leaders, there have been two outstanding types of men, those who were ambitious to become masters of destiny and those who were content to be instruments in the hand of God. To the first class belong the Cæsars, the Napoleons, and the Hohenzollerns, who have brought upon the earth, war, desolation and suffering indescribable. To the second class belong Franklin, Edison, Lincoln, and Washington, whose lives have blessed mankind. The great military system which Cæsar instituted eventually destroyed the very empire it was designed to protect, but the ideals for which Washington and Lincoln endured ridicule and contempt have built a nation of free souls and have given them the blessing of free education.

America has never produced a truly great man who stood in his own strength alone. She never will. They have all come from righteous homes, of godly parents, and they have been disciplined with the utmost severity by life itself. From early childhood, they have been fed the bread of life.

It took generations to produce Washington. Four centuries before his birth, his ancestor, John Ball, was scathingly denounced as "the Mad Preacher of Kent," because he dared to publicly advance the theory that "all men are free and equal." Perhaps one of the most beautifully significant influences in Washington's life was the ideal expressed in the motto on his mother's coat of arms, "Caelumque tueri"—read the Latin inscription "And look to Heaven." It breathed through the young descendant of the "Mad Preacher of Kent."

Benjamin Franklin tells us that a passage from the Book of Proverbs made such an impression upon him as a child that he molded his whole life upon it. Said Solomon, "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings. He shall not stand before mean men." Who would have believed that the fifteenth child in a poverty stricken soap-chandler's family would become such an outstanding writer, scientist, and statesman that the kings of the earth would in very truth be proud to do him honor.

As a child, Washington was trained by his mother to commit to memory certain beautiful passages of prose and Scripture. The following verse of Scripture, which he learned early in life, seems to have been a call to his soul.

They are the words of Mordecai to Esther, "Who knoweth but that God hath given thee this reputation and esteem for such a time as this." Destiny, and truly the fact that Washington had earned that reputation, was the reason he was the man for such a time as that.

Our great men have never sought office. They have been men of simple tastes, book loving, home loving, nature loving. Yet never have they shirked responsibility. Washington who called war, "The shame of the nations," took up his cross to lead the army, a peace lover, and therefore safe to trust with a war.

Writing of it to his wife, he said, "But as it seems a sort of destiny that has thrown me upon this service, I shall hope that my efforts are destined to serve some great purpose."

We are in serious straits in this year of the two hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth. Even the most blithe optimists are noticeably silent. It has been borne upon us steadily and surely that we have an appalling condition to face. And it must be faced. It is to be ignored only at our deadly peril.

We are facing a presidential election. Whether a new president, or indeed any one man can turn the tide is very doubtful, but in no degree does this lessen our responsibility toward the ballot. If there is such a man, we much choose him!

Most of us, I believe, have turned our hearts back longingly to the fathers of this land. As never since Lincoln, if not indeed since Washington, do we need them now, men who were prayerful, farseeing and who were not to be purchased. They, too, were instruments in the hand of God.

Who our leader will be, in these dark days ahead, we do not know. But crises seem to call forth great men, and then rest upon their shoulders. The crisis is here. We are awaiting the man. His marks are certain. He will be a man of peace, a man of simple tastes. Powerful men will fear him. Little children will love him. He will accept his responsibility, carry it the last step. He will believe that "all men are free and equal," and he will "look to heaven."

"Who knoweth," Mordecai says to him through the ages, "who knoweth, but that God hath given this reputation and esteem for such a time as this?"

I Wonder

By Melvin Knussmann

I wonder if I could ever be Like Him who was from Galilee,
Like Him who so gentle and kind
Raised the sick and healed the blind,
Like Him who gave His life for me
Upon the cross at Calvary?

Other Reflections on Railroad Rights

By D. H. Schmidt

Of course the railroads did much toward the world's economic progress. When they came no wise person wanted them restricted to prevent their encroachment on stage lines, horse or ox drawn transportation or investments. Cities gave them large bonuses, the government gave them millions in land grants, and other encouragements. Now that we have invented the internal combustion engine, motor vehicles, air craft, and electrical transportation, are coming on to supplant the railways, as railways supplanted stage lines, horse and ox-drawn vehicles. It certainly would be absurd to restrict the new ways to prevent their encroachment on the old. If costs and safety are in favor of railways they will hold their own where necessary. There is yet some movement by horse and oxen where required by necessity. So the railroads for some time will hold much of the long hauling and certain other type of transportation where required, but unless we are nonprogressive they must in time give way to motor vehicle, aircraft and other means of moving men and things. The revenue from motor vehicle licenses, gasoline, and the assessed valuation of them does and can build motor vehicle highways as we may need them. Much better and stronger concrete construction with separate tracks for heavy freighting should be our aim. The railways have been rebuilt and improved a thousand times as necessity required. The first object of highways should be to facilitate freighting; the moving of produce and things. Our economic welfare depends on this more than the moving of people or touring on the highways. Years ago foolish people driving in buggies or other vehicles when they found the roads obstructed by heavy-loaded ox or horse-drawn wagons, swore about it. Wiser people had patience and blessed the transporter of things that in most instances were of more importance to public welfare than was their hurry to get somewhere. It seems that some people interested in railway investments are much distressed about the heavy trucks battering the roads and endangering lives. They ought to be glad for that will keep the people using railways.

The motor vehicle is heavily taxed by licenses, the fuel used in them is heavily taxed, too, and to add to that the assessor taxes them again on their value. The most heavily taxed useful article in America. Taxes derived from railroads are insignificant in comparison. On this basis they should have the preference and advantage over all other means of transportation. By unrestricted use of motor vehicles a million people will find occupation to every thousand employed by the railways. By unrestricted trucking a hundred million people will reap the benefits of cheaper freighting and service. Regulations for safety are in order, but restrictions to prevent encroachment on existing business is something like knocking babies in the head to prevent their sharing the benefits enjoyed by their elders. Why murder infant industries to preserve the old established ones? They may grow up to be of more value than the old ones. We are asked to give the railroads a fair deal; however, some of us are glad that competition and government regulation has in some instances forced them to give us a half-fair deal. The most direct way now from producer to consumer is by motor truck, and a god-send it is. It would be absurd to go back to the slow ox or horse haul of a few miles and sell to some shipper at a railway point, load on the rails, then reload from the rails on a horse wagon, and move to the jobbing house, and from there back on the rails, etc., to get to the consumer. The economic welfare of this country depends on the railways about as much as the future economic welfare of the Africans or Arabs depends on the camel caravans.

Stewardships

By Anna Burhart

The Lord has challenged the world through his church to accept or reject the law of stewardships, the law that can make all men equal, that can relieve the poor man of his poverty; the rich man the burden of his wealth. "Sell that thou hast and give to the poor—come, follow me," has seemed too large an order to many, and has caused them to grip more tightly the wealth they have accrued.

The depression is upon us. What kind of outlook does it bring? To one man it means disaster, to another hope. For God has stretched out his arm against the nations and decreed in stentorian tones that the law of stewardships shall abide.

It is a day when the haughty are brought low; when he that abaseth himself shall become exalted; and all because the decrees of God are eternal.

Measuring the church in material values, it looms a failure; weighed on the spiritual scale, it is a tremendous success. For it has challenged the world to accept or reject the plan of Almighty God, and paved the way for him to bring his judgments to pass.

To those in harmony with divine power, it is a day of hope. To those outside this pale, the long arm of God's forgiving power projects. The challenge to all is to become one in Jesus Christ and accept his salvation.

STUDY OUTLINES

For Class and Home Work

OUR "SOCIAL IDEALS"

By H. W. Savage

1. What obstacles does the author see in the way of the development of Zion. Are they conditions in the world or conditions in the hearts of men? These are distinguished as "mental hazards" and "physical hazards."

2. What physical hazards must be overcome in the establishment of Zion?

3. What does the author propose as the first step toward the realization of our Zion social ideals?

4. Do you consider that the proposal offers sufficient machinery for the building of Zion?

5. What present troubles spur us on in our efforts towards the establishment of Zion?

OFFICERS IN THE CHURCH (See "Official" Column.)

1. Try the following to see how well informed you are about the officers of the church. Name the three members of the First Presidency.

2. Name the members of the Quorum of Twelve. How long has the Quorum been incomplete? What men were added to it at the recent General Conference?

3. Name the members of the Presiding Bishopric. Is the Quorum complete at the present time? See your copy of the Conference Daily if you do not remember.

4. It would be a good thing to have the names of the above officers written on a blackboard, and ask the class to learn them.

COTTON STOCKINGS AND GOLD LACE

By C. L. Attebery

1. The author uses the two items as symbols, "cotton stockings" to represent the necessities of life, and "gold lace" to represent the luxuries.

2. The author tells how many of the things we had regarded as necessities are only luxuries. It is the purchase of the luxuries that keeps people "poor." American families are having to change their standard of living from a "gold lace" basis to a "cotton stockings" basis, to use two representa-

The church school worship service theme, "The Church and I," seemed to catch and hold the interest of the members, young and old. It gave the keynote to all the services of the day. As it was worded by the intermediate pastor, Priest W. Earl Page, it sounded the call of ministerial and missionary responsibility to every Saint, and presented a word picture of the closing meeting of the General Conference. Missionary responsibility at home and abroad was made paramount, and it was with new understanding that the school sang "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go."

"The gospel of Jesus Christ is the gospel of love, joy, happiness, and abundant life," was the opening sentence of Apostle F. Henry Edward's morning sermon, the baccalaureate address for the graduating class of the Independence Sanitarium. Jesus set the example for us in deeds of physical and spiritual healing.

Because we are taught that the spirit and the body compose the soul of man, and that physical fitness must accompany spiritual fitness to produce soul fitness, the speaker chose to emphasize the relationships involved in the ministry of physical and spiritual healing. As forces for the nurses to keep in mind as they practice their calling he suggested: (1) That religion is at its best when it is a spontaneous thing in the soul of man, but that often men are most susceptible to spiritual forces when at the end of their understanding; (2) That prayer is the medium through which real fellowship with God is obtainable; (3) That in their ministry of healing, they must have a cheerful sense of their spiritual responsibility, and (4) That through their experiences must come a richer and higher spiritual courage.

The musical service added much to the morning program. Directed by Paul N. Craig, the Stone Church Choir sang "Gloria in Excelsis," by Farmer, and "Beneath the Shadow of the Great Protection," by Dickinson, Mrs. Alice May Burgess taking the solo of the latter anthem. Robert Miller was at the organ. Favorite hymns were also sung by choir and congregation. Elder John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Bishop J. Stanley Kelley.

In the afternoon occurred the funeral services of one whose death the entire community mourns, Doctor Charles Keown, who passed away early Thursday morning at the Sanitarium. During the hour the body lay in state at the church, hundreds of people passed by the casket, and the church was too small to contain all who wished to attend the funeral. For a number of years Doctor Keown practised his profession in Independence, and all the physicians and dentists of the city were honorary pallbearers. He gave himself in service to this community and was loved by many people. Apostle E. J. Gleazer preached the sermon, assisted by Pastor J. F. Sheehy. The active pallbearers were Doctor J. L. Benson, Doctor Charles Ruff, Doctor Stew-

Of his immediate family there are left his wife, Mrs. Sybil Keown, and two sons, Richard Keown and Kenneth Keown.

As the basis for the evening sermon Apostle E. J. Gleazer chose the words of Jesus to Pilate: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

The congregational singing at this service was led by Pastor John F. Sheehy, who was assisted in the stand by Elder Calvin H. Rich,

The Auditorium Orchestra, under the direction of Orlando Nace, furnished the music for the regular radio program over KMBC Sunday night. In addition to several numbers played by the orchestra, Irvin Moorman sang "Take Time to Be Holy," and there was a cornet quartet by members of the orchestra. There was a violin duet, "Symphony Concert" No. 4, by Gomer Watson and Marvin Turnbull. The sermon was by Bishop A. B. Phillips.

Walnut Park Church

On April 24 the Saints gathered back to Walnut Park for their regular services, still rejoicing over the General Conference which had brought to them much unity and peace. The prayer service at eight o'clock was well attended as was the church school which followed. This was in charge of Albert Chapman who is back after a few months' absence.

The Walnut Park Orchestra, under the direction of Orlando Nace, furnished the music for the eleven o'clock hour. With Mrs. Thelma Countryman at the piano and Drexel Mollison at the organ, they played "The Lost Chord," by Sullivan. Brother Irvin Moorman, accompanied by the orchestra, sang "Take Time to Be Holy." Apostle C. F. Ellis was the speaker and chose for a Scripture reading Exodus 14: 10-18.

At the evening hour the Saints were again privileged to hear one of the Quorum of Twelve, F. Henry Edwards, who spoke on "Forgiveness of Sin." This was preceded by an anthem by the choir, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," directed by Minnie Scott Dobson.

April 5, a little son, Edward LaVern, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Vern E. Thorpe. Mrs. Thorpe is the daughter of Elder George S. Bullard.

Sister Altheta Fordyce Richards died April 2, at her home on East Alton Avenue. She was seventy-eight years old. Sister Richards will be sadly missed by the Saints of Walnut Park. She is survived by her husband, Edmund R. Richards; three daughters, Mrs. Emma Castines, Mrs. Lou Barksdale, and Mrs. Mary Goerke, and two sons, Edward and Fred Scott. She was laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery.

James P. Sappenfield died at his home on South Noland, April 18. He was eighty-six years old. Came to Independence twenty-five years ago from Byrnsville, Indiana. Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Nettie Martin, of Independence, and two sons, Edward C. Sappenfield, of Byrnsville, and Byrd Sappenfield, of Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove.

The marriage of Miss Ruth E. Bean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bean, of Blue Springs Road, and Milton B. Gold, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Gold, of West Waldo Avenue, which took place at eight o'clock, April 16, at the Walnut Park Church, was followed immediately by the marriage of Miss Lois B. Herdst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herdst, and Ernest D. Coddington, son of Mrs. Stella Layland, who were attendants at the first wedding. The wedding of the latter couple came as a surprise. The church was decorated with ferns and the altar was lined with white candles. Preceding the ceremonies the musical program included a vocal solo, "Together," by Miss Delta Nace, Mrs. Thelma Countryman at the piano; a violin solo, "Love's Old Sweet Song," by Marvin Turnbull; a solo, "The Rosary," by Miss Mary Jane Bean; a cello solo, "I Love You Truly," by Milford Nace, and two songs by D. S. McNamara, "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," and "O Promise Me." The ceremonies were said by Elder Benjamin Bean, father of Mrs. Gold. The first bride was given in marriage by her brother, Benjamin Bean, jr. Her maid of honor was Miss Lena Mortimer, and bridesmaids were Lois B. Herdst and Fern Price. Mr. Gold was attended by Floyd Hulse, and the groomsmen were Ernest D. Coddington and Vernon Sackman. The best wishes of Walnut Park Saints go to the happy couples.

Los Angeles, California

Central Branch

Another conference year has passed, and many things we have been expecting from conference to conference have failed to materialize. This must be because we have not lived up to our opportunities and privileges. But our faith in the promises of the Lord is still steadfast, and if we are able to bring our lives in harmony with the gospel, then our faith will realize the fruitage for which we have so long waited.

We carried on while Pastor Eli Bronson was at General Conference, the pulpit being filled by the local priesthood. Doctor A. W. Teel spoke the evening of the first Sunday. W. A. Teagarden preached in the morning, and L. L. Sutherland in the evening, of the second Sunday; R. C. Chambers in the morning, and Lawrence Brockway in the evening of the third Sunday. There were enough local men to have covered several more Sundays, but we expect Brother Bronson back for next Sunday. We anxiously await him. We want to hear all about the conference happenings, business and personal.

The Mizpah Girls have mapped out a pleasing and educational program. A speaker has been arranged for, to address them at their Friday evening sessions for several weeks to come. On these nights all are welcome.

Last Friday, April 15, Brother W. E. Badham, State legislator, spoke on "Sample Ballots" and the "Chain Store Menace." Other speakers will be as follows: April 22, Sister Viola Bogue will speak on, "Book Reviews and Writers." May 6, Judge Charles L. Bogue will use for his subject, "Judge, Jury, and Jury System." The same evening Sister Hazel Klein is reading a book, entitled, "Mother Mexico." On May 13, Sister Stella Brockway will talk on "Journalism and Newspapers."

Then on May 27, Brother Wilbur D. Gillen will give a talk on "Investments or High Finance." We have already heard Brother Badham.

On April 29, the young people are sponsoring a program, or social entertainment, a "Tour Around the World." Twenty-five cents will buy a passport to any of the different countries.

The Mizpahs are an energetic and enthusiastic group of women and we wish them successful accomplishment in their endeavors. Their chief objective now, is to furnish their unit of the Sanitarium, and fill their church pledge, which is sixty dollars.

Finances are still at a low ebb. Many people out of work, and the future does not look any too rosy as yet. Prosperity stays behind his corner, and persistently refuses to come out. Maybe Brother Gillen will tell the Mizpahs how to route him out.

Sister McConley is reported somewhat better. Elaine Bronson is also gaining in health. We hope she may be permitted to return home again soon.

Attendance has been about the average. Not as good as it should be considering our enrolled membership, but enough to keep activities going.

Parsons, Kansas

Easter Banquet Is Sponsored by Young People's Class

The intermediate class of Parsons, Kansas, Branch, taught by Mrs. Fern Miller, gave a successful Easter banquet the evening of March 26, in the basement of the Municipal Building. Most of the foodstuff was donated by different families, and the people were big-hearted in assisting in every way.

A short program was rendered consisting of two piano solos by Elizabeth Anne Wright and Ilene Bruch; a reading by Russel Chase; a short play voluntarily given by the Independence, Kansas, young people, and a talk by Brother Lee Quick. The banquet was dismissed by the singing of "Consecration" and prayer.

About one hundred tickets were sold, and the class cleared a sum of twenty dollars to be used in the purchase of new songbooks for the church and Sunday school.

Bradford, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street.—In his sermon the morning of March 13, Elder F. Tapping linked a retrospective view of the work of the church with the achievements of the future, making special mention of the call to the young to carry on the work of Christ. The Sunday morning service in the Gospel Hall begins at 10.45. Organ music, congregational singing, special music, prayer, and Scripture readings enhance the sermon of the hour.

On March 8 this branch laid to rest at Phillips Park Cemetery a beloved sister, Mary Schofield. She lived a long life, dying in her eighty-first year, a good woman who cheered many along the way. Pastor G. W. Leggott officiated at the funeral.

The memorial service for Sister Schofield Sunday evening, March 13, was conducted by Elder F. Tapping, and the text of Pastor G. W. Leggott's sermon was "Well done thou good and faithful servant." Beautiful organ, choir, and congregational music, and the reading of the ninetyeth Psalm and a synopsis of the life of this sister who was known to the branch as "Aunt Mary," made an effective service. She was a Saint for many years, a woman who overcame great difficulties and was known for her faith and perseverance.

Iowa City, Iowa

Students Hold Services

The Iowa City Latter Day Saint group held its second April meeting at the Oathout Chapel Sunday, the seventeenth. Pastor Walter L. Daykin spoke on "How We May Picture Jesus." Jesus is pictured in literature, in art, and in ritual, he said, but when people are earnestly seeking to "see Jesus" there is no other way so effective as portraying him to them in our lives. The pastor was assisted by Elder L. E. Flowers. Sidney Barrows, chorister, was in charge of the music, and Max White was pianist. About twenty were present.

Sacrament service was held the first Sunday of the month, with the pastor presiding. Elders Norman E. Hield, L. E. Flowers, and Sidney Barrows assisted.

Hammond, Indiana

Members Have Confirming Gospel Experiences

Since the first of the year the Saints of Hammond Branch have had some beautiful experiences. Together with the uplifting services held by the local priesthood, during January, they enjoyed a day of special services when Elders Harry Passman and Philemon Pement were here. Their instruction was timely and inspiring and a particularly interesting feature of the day was a stereopticon lecture on Palestine, given by Brother Passman in the evening. Elder Passman visited this branch again in February delivering helpful messages at the morning service and a second series of slides in the evening.

The last three of a series of outstanding sermons on the principles of the gospel were delivered by Apostle D. T. Williams in January, February and March. They were so full of interest and valuable instruction that the Saints much regret the termination of the series.

The hand of the Lord is not shortened; neither has he forgotten his people. This was evidenced by an unusual incident when the ordinance of baptism was performed on March 20, by the branch pastor, Elder R. W. Smith. A young lady who had been attending our services requested that she be baptized in open water, although some of the severest cold weather of the season was being experienced. On Friday evening, two days prior to the baptism, Brother and Sister Smith drove to the shores of Lake Michigan in search of a suitable place for the baptism. They found thick cakes of ice piled up on the shore and the lake frozen over as far as the eye could see, except for a small open space too far out for the baptism. Upon returning home, Brother Smith prayed about the matter, feeling that if the Lord did not intervene, it would be impossible to perform the baptism in the lake, and the young lady to be baptized was to leave the city in a few days and would not be near a branch. The Lord did intervene, for when Brother and Sister Smith returned to the lake the next evening, to their great joy, they found that the ice pack had been broken and there was a large open space where the water was clear and calm. This could be reached after wading through some small loose ice, and there the ordinance was performed.

Is Encouraged by Conference Experiences

Correspondent Takes Message of Cheer to Home Branch

Savanna, Illinois, April 23.—The writer was a visitor at the recent wonderful General Conference and witnessed many of the manifestations of the Spirit which were experienced in every prayer service—and I attended them all. I had the privilege of hearing prophecy, the speaking in unknown tongues with interpretation given, beautiful poems given through the Spirit, uplifting prayers and testimonies of God's goodness in marvelous healings and of angelic ministrations, visions, and dreams.

I was able to bring back a message of hope and cheer to the members of our branch, many of whom have been discouraged on account of conditions both in the church and the world. I told them that God is the same today as he always has been, for he is doing the same things when the Saints live in harmony with his revealed word, but we can not expect these blessings unless we pay the price, obedience to his commandments.

The promise of Zion's redemption was given through the Spirit. We were told that there would be unity of all churches having the knowledge of the fullness of the gospel, so that Nephi's vision will be fulfilled in which he saw but two churches—the church of the Lamb of God, and the church of the Devil. Many of these thoughts thrill us as we ponder over the marvelous works of God and his great love manifested toward his children.

God did wonderfully bless us. But he also rebuked us for walking after the ways of the world, not rearing our children properly, neglecting the prayer service where his Spirit is most to be felt, indulging in speculation, and being contentious.

The Saints of God need his Spirit continuously. He promises protection to the faithful in the terrible times ahead, worse than the world has ever known. I pray that we shall be humble, obedient, diligent in study and good works, lining ourselves up in order to be partakers of the wonderful blessings in store for those who hear and do the will of God.

Savanna Saints are desirous of reconsecrating themselves to the task before us. The wonderful sermons given at the preaching hour made me feel that the endowment is not far off.

The testimonies of the veteran missionaries were inspiring. All admitted having passed through many trials and sorrows which were far outweighed by the blessings received in service to the cause they professed to love. Their wish is to carry on till the end; many expressed regret that they are not younger in order that they might serve longer.

The youth of the church give promise of becoming powerful factors in carrying on this latter-day work. How glad we all ought to be to think that our loving Father has called each one of us to be His Saints, that we may become joint heirs with his Son. Let us be up and doing, not frittering away our time in worldly pursuits, but unitedly moving forward wearing the whole armor of God.

"Onward and forward" shall be our motto, remembering that "the battle is not won by might or by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

Grateful Mother Tells of Babe's Healing

Toll Gate, West Virginia.—On Tuesday, March 8, of this year, our baby, two and one half years of age and already a victim of whooping cough, became critically ill of pneumonia in its worst form, to which convulsions became an added danger.

Our family physician informed us of the seriousness of the situation (a complication from which very few children recover), and on the following morning, March 9, called a trained nurse to our assistance. Naturally our hearts were breaking, for we felt unless God intervened the case was hopeless.

Having been for some years a student of the Bible, I had often read James 5: 14, 15, and knowing God is the same yesterday, today, and for ever, and that what he has promised he is able to fulfill, I had long purposed in my heart that if any of my family became seriously ill, that promise I would prove.

While we are not members of the Saints' Church, I was reared near a community of Saints and frequently attended their services. Likewise it has been our good fortune to have as some of our dearest neighbors members of that church.

Knowing that healing was one of the doctrinal principles embraced by that church, I informed my husband of my desire to have our baby administered to by the elders. Through Mrs. Florence Williams, a member of the Saints' church, and a very dear neighbor, we called to Clarksburg, the nearest branch, and found immediate response in the persons of Elders Harry Johnson of that place and Charles F. Baker, of Monongah, who arrived at our home about noon Wednesday. Following a time of prayer, at my request, the elders administered twice to the baby.

In less than an hour her temperature dropped a degree, and indications of general improvement became apparent. The doctor returned in the evening and informed us if she continued to improve at that rate we should have no cause for worry. Next morning he came again and was dumbfounded to find the pneumonia practically gone, and informed us we could safely dispense with the services of the nurse.

By noon Thursday the baby sat up in her father's arms and turned the pages of a catalog, laughing, and making grimaces at the other children when they came near.

A couple of days later a bowel obstruction sent her temperature to a hundred and five and three fifths and again she became gravely ill; all attempts to remove the obstruction were fruitless. Sensing the danger we sent a car in great haste for the elders. When the boy we sent arrived in Clarksburg, Elder Johnson was in the midst of the Sunday night service, which he cut short and after taking time to have special prayer by the congregation for our little one, came at once to our home.

Again he administered to the baby, and in less than two hours the bowel obstruction was removed and her temperature dropped to normal.

From that time her recovery was so rapid as to be almost incredible, and today the rosy-cheeked babe playing about my knee could scarcely be taken for the one who such a short time ago seemed about to enter the valley of the shadow.

Fearful of a complication with the other three children who had whooping cough (two of them at the worst stage), I asked Elder Johnson upon the occasion of his last visit to administer to them. He did so and from that time on they scarcely knew they had whooping cough.

First we owe to God a debt of gratitude, that we feel only a lifetime of service can repay, and we are not unmindful of our debt to His servants whose obedience to God's will made possible this healing. May we take this means of thanking these brothers (for such they became to us), also Herbert Alexander and wife who conveyed the elders to our home when they first were called.

May God prosper the work of a people so devoted to his cause.

MRS. E. LEE WALDO.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Spring has at last ventured into the Rockies. With it comes the awakening of plant life, and also of spiritual life in Colorado Springs Branch. The Saints have enjoyed numerous spiritual blessings in the last few weeks for which they are grateful to God.

On March 20, Glaude Smith, of Denver, preached an inspiring sermon at the morning service. The members were disappointed to learn that he could not remain for the evening service.

Easter morning dawned bright and clear. The children gave their program near the close of church school. This program was in charge of Sister E. E. Conway and Sister Neva DeCoster. The Easter morning sermon was preached by J. D. Curtis. In the evening the young people presented, "The Gate Ajar," directed by Brother and Sister Floyd Engstrom.

Sunday, April 10, E. P. Darnell, of Denver, preached at the morning services. On the way down from Denver Saturday night, he and his wife met with a serious accident when their car overturned fourteen miles from Colorado Springs. Brother Darnell was not hurt, but Sister Darnell received a broken shoulder and minor injuries. Brother Ebling was called as soon as she was brought into town, and administered to her. She received a wonderful blessing, and is now doing nicely.

Sister Liggett and Sister Lickney who have been ill for several weeks are very much improved.

On a recent Friday night both the young and old of the branch enjoyed a party at the home of Brother and Sister Engstrom. Enough money was raised to landscape the church grounds. Most of the work is being done by the young people. Several members of the women's department have donated lilacs and other shrubs.

The credit classes continue. Easter Sunday the church school director, Sister Conway, presented Brother J. E. Ebling and Sister R. C. Harrison each with a gold seal certificate, which they had earned in the classes.

Attendance is improving especially in the adult and children divisions of the church. This is encouraging.

Clinton, Iowa

Missionaries' Visits Are Welcome

April 17.—The members of this branch were happy to have Bishop C. J. Hunt here on March 11. It was our regular Book of Mormon Class night, so Brother Hunt spoke on the book. Good interest is shown in this class.

District President E. R. Davis was here one week and his series of sermons was enjoyed by all.

A baptismal service was held the evening of March 2, at the church, two more candidates uniting with the faith, Sister Mary Kroigard and Stanley Gendvillas. The confirmation was had during the sacrament service the following Sunday.

On December 20, a Christmas program was given, in charge of Sister Anna Robinson, Doris Wulf, and Elizabeth Beil.

Lansdown Branch

East Saint Louis, Illinois

On Sunday evening, April 3, a musicale was given at Lansdown Church, almost all taking part being radio entertainers. Sisters Dorothy and Mildred Gode, who sing and play regularly over the radio, sang two numbers with guitar accompaniment. Brother Prosper Carl played a group of three numbers on his musical saw. The feature number of the group was "Cavalleria Rusticana," which Brother Carl played with skill.

The outstanding entertainer of the evening was the blind accordian player, Leland Ballard, who broadcasts from WIL. He played two groups, the first Sousa's marches, the second sacred songs.

This concert was so thoroughly enjoyed that the branch expects to give them often.

Hazel Dell Branch

Near Weston, Iowa

Since Thanksgiving Day the roads in southwestern Iowa have been at the mercy of the weather and all except paved roads have been in terrible shape. The dirt roads would freeze up part of the time and then thaw, only to freeze again with deep ruts, making travel almost impossible.

With such roads it is little wonder that attendance at branch services has been small, only those who lived very close venturing out more than was strictly necessary. But it must be said to the credit of the Saints that whenever the roads were somewhat improved, they came out to the Lord's house.

The branch pastor, J. A. Hansen, is assisted by Brothers James C. Jensen and Percy Andersen. Brother Earl Jensen is leader of the Sunday school and as helpers he has several who have had experience as Sunday school teachers.

This year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the branch. It is the plan to have an all-day meeting the first day of May in memory of the group which half a century ago established the gospel here. The members will be glad to see all old-timers of this branch come out on that day, also anyone who has at any time worshiped in the branch.

Clay Cross, England

Attendance during the last few months has lessened considerably due to adverse conditions and general sickness. Brother Cousins, pastor of the branch, has been unable to carry out his duties for a number of weeks, and Brother S. Holmes, jr., has been doing this work.

The Saints have had several visits from District President J. Holmes and enjoyed his help.

January 10, Brothers W. E. Timms and E. H. Cousins were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood by High Priest J. Holmes and High Priest Charles Cousins.

The Sunday school children enjoyed their usual Christmas treat, and everyone voted this one of the most enjoyable occasions at Clay Cross.

Unlike the branch, the attendance of the church school shows no sign of lessening, and though the work is thrown on a few, they are thoroughly rewarded by the appreciation shown by the pupils. The branch has adopted the church school plan and is carrying it out as circumstances permit.

On February 20, Sister Ada Holmes passed away. She leaves to mourn her mother, Sister Emma Rawlings, three sisters, and a brother.

Last October the Saints enjoyed a series of meetings conducted by Missionary Fred Davies. His efforts encouraged everyone.

The members feel that they have been blessed in their efforts to sustain the local and general finances.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay

Easter Sunday services were well attended. Pastor Frank Enix preached the sermon. In the evening the church school, directed by Sister Roberts, gave a program. The choir presented an Easter cantata, "The Triumph Song," directed by Ethel Godfrey. Solos were sung by Sisters Altha Roberts and Letha Calton, and Brothers Laurence MacDonald and Ethan Godfrey. The auditorium was decorated with flowers, and a white cross occupied the center of the stage with gates standing ajar on either side.

District President G. P. Levitt and Sister Levitt visited with Fresno Saints Saturday and Sunday, April 9 and 10. Saturday evening a priesthood meeting was held. Sunday morning Brother Levitt used the subject, "The Gospel Today." A large crowd enjoyed the sermon. He baptized two children, Ollie May Cain and Velma Partin. The Saints gathered at Roeding Park for a picnic lunch.

The women's department elected officers in March. Sister Enix is president, Sister Nephew is assistant, and Maxine Godfrey is secretary-treasurer. The workers meet in Sister Nephew's home on Tuesday every two weeks. The purpose of this group is to raise money to help with the expenses of the branch. They have bought a gas stove for the church and are planning on a supper every month at the church. At their meetings they study the Old Testament, Sister Roberts acting as teacher.

The supreme need of the hour is a devout, worshipful ministry, aflame with the Spirit of Christ; a preaching that exalts and enforces a redemptive message; a gospel that burns its way into the hearts and consciences of tempted, sinning men; an evangel that brings men to God.—Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield, in The Federal Council Bulletin.

Conference Minutes

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—District conference convened at Idabel, Oklahoma, at 10.30 a. m. Sunday, March 20, in response to the call of District President J. W. Peterson. Thirty-eight people were present. After the formal opening, motion prevailed that Elder Peterson preside over the conference and choose Elder T. B. Sharpe, of Winthrop, to assist. Brother Peterson announced that the district secretary had sent him the minutes of the previous conference with information that he could not be present. Action was taken choosing G. S. Trowbridge to act as secretary pro tem. Minutes of the previous conference were read and approved. The following reports were then read, approved, and ordered spread on the minutes: Report of Elder J. J. Jackson, solicitor of the Oklahoma group; report of Elder J. J. Jackson as treasurer of the district; ministerial report of Elder J. J. Jackson; report of Elder J. W. Peterson as bishop's agent; ministerial report of Elder J. W. Peterson, district president. Verbal report was made by Elder T. B. Sharpe as follows: Presided over Winthrop Branch, also Sunday school and taught class therein. Preached twice each month at Winthrop, once each month at Jones's Schoolhouse and at Hochatown, Oklahoma. Baptized two, confirmed four, and solemnized a few marriages. Elder G. S. Trowbridge, of Nashville, Arkansas, reported preaching twice a month at Grannis; baptized and confirmed one; administered three times. Elder J. W. Peterson reported verbally for the Sunday school department, that there are eight schools although only five branches in the district, the three extras being at Grannis, Jones's School, and Hochatown. The district president, Brother Peterson, at this time presented the financial condition of the district as being very poor, and urged that something be done about it if the Saints expect a missionary to be sent to them. After discussion, a motion prevailed that the chair appoint a committee of three to bring in a recommendation at the afternoon session. Committee: Curtis Morgan, George Schlup, G. S. Trowbridge. Motion was carried to sustain the present district officers. By subsequent motion the district president was given authority to appoint such assistants as he found necessary. By motion Sister Ora Dillins was appointed district superintendent of women. The following delegates were elected to represent the district at General Conference: J. W. Peterson, Mrs. Lillie Peterson, Mrs. Abbie Judkins, Mrs. Grace Johnson, H. E. Winegar, Edward Kelsey, Mrs. Ora Kelsey, and G. S. Trowbridge. It was decided by the conference to have preaching at 1 and 2 p. m. The conference reconvened at 1.30 p. m., thirty-nine being present. After the formal opening the committee on finances brought in the following recommendation: "Recommended that each branch in the district be assessed on the basis of five cents per resident member per month for district expense, remittances to be made on the first of each month to the district treasurer, the manner of raising such assessments to be left to each branch." The recommendation was adopted. Elder T. B. Sharpe preached for twenty minutes on the theme, "I Press Toward the Mark of the High Calling in Christ Jesus." Mr. Westbrooke, county superintendent of schools, addressed the conference for a few minutes on the necessity of having teachers with proper moral training. He said he considered the Bible a necessary adjunct to proper conduct of the schools. Elder J. W. Peterson followed with a sermon on the second coming of Christ. On motion the time and place for holding the next district conference were left to the district president. The conference adjourned at 3 p. m. "The Old, Old Path" was sung, and Elder T. B. Sharpe offered the benediction.

AN AIRPLANE VIEW

An air photographer tells the following story. It is his business to pilot the plane or turn the crank on the movie camera for taking pictures from great heights.

Down in Central America a group of engineers were tearing their way through the tangle of a tropical jungle to lay a pipe line for the conveyance of oil. They were having a bad time of it.

The manager called the air photographer, and sent him aloft to take pictures of the region. When the films were developed a clear white ribbon was seen not far from the course of operations.

"Try it over there. I think it's a dry river bed," said the airman.

They did, and they found that they had missed by only a few hundred yards the best course for the pipe line. Like blind moles they had been wasting their energies cutting through the jungle. The airman acted as eyes for the engineers.

The church periodicals are the eyes of the church. Without them there is not much chance of helping the church forward. The people should be in constant communication with the church officers. This is only possible through the church papers.

Effective work for the church is impossible without the church papers. Officers and members ought to take them.

Nearly sixty-nine years ago, Sister Thomas was inducted into the kingdom of God through the ordinance of baptism, and to this covenant and holy pledge she gave her best. NEWS BRIEFS

Carry Home Spirit of Conference

Everywhere ministry and laymembers have carried home the spirit of the General Conference, and rejoicing at the good news, the people have set to work with new zeal. Many write to headquarters that even though they were not permitted to attend the conference, they shared in its good feeling. More than ever the Saints are behind the program of the church, the officers, and the actions of conference. They are pushing "onward to Zion."

G. G. Lewis and Family on Farewell Visit to Ohio

Apostle G. G. Lewis, Sister Lewis, and their little daughter, Alice June, left last Tuesday afternoon by bus for Hillsboro, Ohio, where they will visit for a few days with Sister Lewis's parents, prior to leaving for Australia for a stay of several years. They plan to sail from San Francisco on June 8, which allows but brief time for them to pay farewell visits and make their preparations. The illness of Sister Lewis's father, Brother I. T. Woods, made this trip imperative.

Loyal Help Benefits Portland

Among the winter workers whose visits have put real hope and courage into the hearts of Portland Saints were President Frederick M. Smith, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin, of the general church helpers, and Elder and Sister Dana S. McDole, of Seattle, Washington. Portland reports some splendid meetings. Elder Daniel B. Sorden is pastor there.

Pray for General Conference

When the Saints of Independence were uniting in their mammoth preconference sacrament service at the Auditorium, April 3, members of the three Honolulu Branches held a joint service in which they partook of the sacrament and prayed for a good conference and the growth of the church. More than a hundred Hawaiian, Japanese, and Chinese Saints met in the Main Honolulu Branch, many of them fasting. Their prayers were supplemented by countless others offered by the faithful all over the world.

Spiritual Uplift From Australasian Conference

A mission conference has launched Australian Saints into a new season of church endeavor, their spiritual vigor increased, their aims high. So immersed were church members in America in preparations for the General Conference, that they almost overlooked the fifteenth annual conference of the Australasian Mission which assembled in the church on Nelson Street, Rozelle, conducting its first business meeting on Good Friday, March 25. Under the leadership of Elder W. J. Haworth, the mission president, a missionary campaign, the effects of which were far-reaching, precluded the conference. Missionaries' efforts have included making significant the Australasian sacrifice months.

Large attendance from all parts of the mission was assured by the choice of time for the gathering, the date coinciding with that of the opening of the Sydney Harbor Bridge.

Webb City Studies "Choir Etiquette"

The Webb City, Missouri, Choir takes its musical mission seriously. In addition to making its weekly contributions to the branch services, it has organized into a class, and is studying "The Beauty and Ministry of the Choir" and "Choir Etiquette."

Rush of Business at Headquarters

The church offices in the Auditorium are the center of many busy scenes during the season of post-conference business. Arranging itineraries, dispatching letters and notices to places to be visited, scheduling special errands to be performed, suggesting helps, loaning books, and exchanging farewells are some of the things which make it impossible for the regular office force to settle down to routine work until the missionaries are on their way to their widely-scattered fields.

Nauvoo Temple Relic Presented to Church

Another stone relic of the Nauvoo Temple, a large base of a pilaster on which rested one of the moon faces of the temple, was recently presented to Nauvoo Saints by T. P. Baxter, of Nauvoo. It will be placed near the graves of the Martyrs.

The Disappearance of Patriarch J. T. Gresty

About the time of the recent General Conference, or just previous to its opening, the Saints of Independence and regions round about were shocked by the news that Brother John T. Gresty had disappeared. At the time of his disappearance he was sojourning in the home of Brother Victor V. Smith, who lives on Benton Boulevard, in Kansas City. He had but recently returned to his room from the Sanitarium, at Independence, where he had been in efforts to recover from a spell of illness and where he was under the care of Doctor Grabske, the Assistant Church Physician.

Evidences indicate that Brother Gresty was despondent and feared to face the future with his powers curtailed. As a musician and director of choruses he had always manifested a splendid zeal and even bodily vigor, and previous to his recent illness seems to have been buoyed up with a belief that his fine physical condition would permit him many years of service, both as patriarch and as musician.

For some time before his disappearance Sister Smith, who had manifested almost a motherly care for the aged brother, had noticed signs of disturbance which indicate that he was much troubled in mind and had a dread of becoming dependent upon others for care. This dread, we fear, was a factor in his disappearance.

The Music Department has in our last conference period suffered two outstanding losses, for the grim reaper took from our midst our general director of choirs, Sister Louise N. Robinson, and now just at the conference time our fine composer and director, Brother Gresty, has disappeared. At the conference time the chair appointed a committee to draft resolutions on the decease of Sister Robinson, which resolutions were presented to and approved by the conference. The President of the conference at the same time asked the same committee to prepare resolutions on the disappearance of Brother Gresty to be presented later. His whereabouts have now remained entirely unknown for more than a month, and this despite the almost ceaseless efforts which have been put forth to find some clue that would lead to his discovery. Under the direction of Brother Robert T. Cooper, what few clues have come to light have been followed up painstakingly, and, while all hope has not yet been given up, we fear that some serious evil has befallen Brother Gresty.

It is therefore fitting and we feel opportune that we shall below present to the readers of the Herald and the church the resolutions which have been formulated concerning the disappearance of our respected brother.

F. M. S.

In the disappearance of our greatly respected brother, Patriarch John T. Gresty, the church has suffered immeasurable sorrow and an irreparable loss.

He was greatly beloved. All who came in contact with him sensed the deep sincerity of his life, the fine appreciation of spiritual beauty which moved him, and the unreserved consecration with which he prosecuted his ministry in the church.

This ministry was of a dual nature, for it included the consecration to the church of a highly developed and professional musical career, and in the discharge of his duties and privileges as a member of the Order of Patriarchs an untiring service throughout the length and breadth of his native land.

Out of the mass of splendid men in the church John T. Gresty stepped alone, unique with his contribution to the cause of the Master whom he so devotedly loved. From his far-away home he came to Zion with his masterpiece—the great Oratorio which marked the achievement of a life's objective, one he was eminently qualified to attain. Simply, but with face alight with the assurance of genius, he presented his gift at a moment vital and propitious in the annals of the church—the Centennial Conference. With untiring energy, unwavering faith, and unquenchable enthusiasm he spent a year in final preparations, traveling throughout the middle and eastern States and portions of Canada to train and enthuse hundreds of musicians and singers in his efforts to bring their work approximately near the standards of proficiency his artistic soul demanded. The oratorio was successfully rendered, and enthusiastically and appreciatively received. This need of praise, together with nation-wide recognition of its merits from musical authorities, constituted his hour of triumph—the only reward he had desired or for which he had labored. For this success, with characteristic humility, he frankly gave God all the glory, declaring that it was only through divine inspiration and sustenance he had been enabled to conceive and create the magnificent offering.

The Course of Time has taken its place among the few truly great works of its kind extant in the world today. It furnishes us with a musical ideal for all time to come, an incentive that will enlist our best efforts as we strive to repeat and to keep this work alive and active as long as the church shall stand. It is so stupendous in scope and quality that doubtless nothing of its like near approaching it in excellence will ever again be attempted or needed.

So long as the charm of The Course of Time shall live in the memories of those who produced it in 1930 or of those thousands who then responded to its thrill and inspiration, and so long as its majestic beauty and crashing harmonies shall adown the years continue to challenge the talents and consecration of singers and orchestras throughout the church, so long shall the name of John T. Gresty be renowned and countless Saints be grateful for the gifts and consecration which found such rich expression in service to the church he loved.

PAUL N. CRAIG,
AUDENTIA ANDERSON,
LEONARD LEA.

Give people something worth while to think about, and present it in a way that they can understand, and they will rise to it like a plant that gets sunlight all day and electric light all night.—George Henry Parrish.

Lack of perseverance is the most common cause of failure to win out against difficulties. The start is important, and the goal may be a worthy one, but neither one will avail without the homely grace of holding on.—Mattie M. Boteler.

Appointments for Department of Religious Education

Through the appointment of F. M. McDowell as director and C. B. Woodstock as associate director, the recent General Conference sustained the Department of Religious Education for the next two years. The present financial situation made it impossible to appoint on full time additional members of the staff. We are happy to report, however, that the following named persons have consented to act as supervisors of the various divisions of the Church School, giving such attention to this work as time and circumstances will permit:

- Adult Division—Elder John Blackmore.
- Young People's Division—Elder E. E. Closson.
- Children's Division—Mrs. Nellie Blackmore.

This arrangement appears to us to be a most fortunate one. The training and experience of these well-known church workers will thus be made available to the church. Their presence as members of the staff assures the rapid progress of the work of Religious Education throughout the church. We request and urge that the Saints support these leaders in their respective positions. Communications sent to the Department of Religious Education, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, will promptly be placed in the hands of the proper official.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Financial News

The income for the first quarter of 1932 has not been sufficient to meet the operating expenses on the reduced budget. The operating expenses run approximately $24,000.00 per month or a total for the three months of $72,000.00. Our income during this period has amounted to $68,934.88 or $3,065.12 less than required.

The total monthly requirements to enable us to meet our budget appropriation including the amount appropriated for debt reduction is $40,000.00 or a total of $120,000.00 for the first quarter. Our income for the three months is therefore insufficient by the sum of $51,065.12 of meeting our total needs.

A comparative statement of income for March covering the years 1931-32 is given below. Included in the March income is $2,246.32 covering the amount reported from the British Isles for the last six months of 1931. For the purpose of comparison this would reduce the March income to $18,382.55 from the $20,628.87 shown below. It is to be noted that our income for March this year is unusually low. This may be partially accounted for by the fact that many of our people were making plans to attend conference while others were withholding contributions pending the outcome of conference. Another factor is that general business conditions show no improvement.

It is to be hoped, however, that the unification of our forces will result in an increased number of contributions during May and succeeding months.

A comparative statement of income for the first quarter of 1931-1932 is as follows:

January	$38,963.46	$29,122.26
February	22,656.35	19,183.75
March	25,432.02	20,628.87

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

"The Family Altar"

We hear much exhortation, in times of religious revival, for people in their homes to "gather 'round the family altar" and offer prayers, as a means of obtaining Divine Grace.

What physical object this "altar" may be, we will probably never know. Certainly there is nothing like a real shrine in any Protestant home. Perhaps it used to be the large kerosene lamp, set in the center of the dining-room table around which we gathered as children to hear Father read from the Bible and offer prayer for all of us. But it was the purpose for which we gathered, and the attitude, that made the place and time sacred.

With the disappearance of all the so-called "holy" relics from modern homes, and the utter lack of any particular sacred place, worship, has tended to disappear as a feature of home life. The last visible object that could be regarded as sacred was the great thick-lidded Bible that had its place on a separate table. And that is an institution that even the rage for "antique" furniture has not restored.

With the absence of the physical symbols, it is increasingly difficult to continue the spirit and practice of worship in the home. The difficulty is greatly increased by the growing number of attractions and recreations that take the members of the family out of the home at all hours of the day and evening. The modern home is thus robbed of its spiritual and cultural center. Is it any wonder that it becomes spiritually and culturally dead?

Building the Worship Service at Home

The first condition of family worship is that all members should be present and participate, if only by giving attention. The service provides the one situation in which the family circle should be unbroken.

The second condition is quietness and reverence. There is too much tumult in most of our efforts to worship.

The third requisite condition is significance. The passages read should have meaning. The prayers uttered should have purpose. Random readings and random prayers kill interest.

The fourth condition is brevity. Long readings, tedious talks, and interminable prayers can make the worship service a punishment, and the younger children will grow to hate it.

Program

In homes where there is a piano a service of church songs makes a really spiritual as well as enjoyable experience. Many homes must omit this feature on account of having no instrument.

In either case, a short talk should be delivered by the father, and it should be short—a five minute limit is a good one.

Then follow with a well-selected Scripture reading. It should be something that all members of the family can understand. Even young children can be benefited by the right passages.

All can participate in the last feature of the service. With all members of the family on their knees, each one takes his or her turn to offer a prayer, no matter how short. The parents must insist, however, that the prayers be sincere and reverent, and not rushed through hastily.

A PRAYER FOR THE HOME

Father in heaven: We thank thee for our home, for the happiness and love that we share in it, and for the blessing of thy Spirit which shelters it. Thou hast helped to make it a place of refuge from the world and its trials, a place of rest and peace, sacred because it is dedicated to Thee, and entrusted to thy care.

By G. L. DELAPP.

Help us to live so that thy Holy Spirit may find a continuous abiding place here. Let us do nothing to desecrate it, nor cause injury to any who claim its shelter. Let each give his strength to help make it what a home ought to be: a place of beauty wherein each can find strength for his tasks, inspiration for his highest goals, rest from his labors, companionship with his friends, and the blessing of the presence of thy Spirit.

Teach us to be unselfish with our home: to share its happiness and its benefits with others, to make it a source of strength and support to the church and the nation. Bless and preserve our home and those who are in it. In Jesus' name. Amen.

STUDY OUTLINES

For Class and Home Work

OUR GREATEST NEED

By S. S. Smith

This article, like many others now coming to the editorial offices, turns our attention toward the fundamentals of church beliefs. It is a stirring plea for an emphasis of the most significant factor of religious experience.

1. What, according to the author, is "Our greatest need"? Read carefully the first and second paragraphs.

2. The author strikes an important issue when he declares that the priesthood must be composed of "regenerated" men. What effect does laxity of conduct have on the priesthood?

3. The author suggests that there are some in the church today who are not interested in the missionary work. What is bound to happen to a church that ceases strong missionary efforts? Are we contented with that fate?

4. What is the "danger from within"? How is it to be overcome?

5. Sum up the author's statement of our spiritual needs, given near the end of his article.

DECISION DAY

By C. B. Woodstock

As we near Decision Day once more we are seriously concerned about the young members of Latter Day Saint homes who should be growing into preparation for participation in the church work.

1. Should the children be urged to be baptized as soon as possible after the eighth birthday? Read Doctrine and Covenants 68:4. What other duties must accompany the duty of baptism? Will the duties be carried out in the homes of your branch?

2. Discuss plans for teaching the children about the church in the time remaining before Children's Day. One lesson appears in this week's Herald, and others will follow.

HEALTH

Two articles of importance on the problems of health and disease are presented this week. One is by the Church Physician, Doctor A. W. Teel, and touches on the handling of cases of pneumonia. The other is from the Tuberculosis Nurse of Jackson County, Missouri.

Pneumonia remains one of the most dangerous of diseases because it is so easily developed, and acts so quickly. Every family should be familiar with the advice given in this and the two preceding articles by Doctor Teel.

Tuberculosis is often fatal because it is so easily transmitted and contracted without either the victim or the source suspecting anything wrong. The only possible protection is frequent medical examination by everybody, and especially by those who appear to be under the normal standard of health.

Important New Publications

Church Objectives is the title of a pamphlet that will be ready for distribution by the time this notice reaches the reader. It includes the documents produced at the recent General Conference relating to the immediate steps and goals in the work of the church. Every branch officer, teacher, and all leading church members should have copies of these pamphlets in order to interpret the action of the conference to the people. It contains the most significant documents presented at the most important and constructive conference in our recent history.

A smaller tract will appear in print by the end of this present week entitled, Priesthood Visiting. It contains helps and suggestions for officers who are visiting the members of the church in the necessary work of raising funds for the general church.

Long planned and expected, the Priesthood Manual will also appear in a short while. This most important and useful work will be a boon and a help to the members of the priesthood in every phase of their work. The manuscript is now receiving its final preparations for the printer. It will be sold at a price that all can afford, and every member of the priesthood should have and will want to have a copy of it for frequent reference.

Our Greatest Need

By S. S. Smith

It may seem superfluous to some again to call attention to the importance of the Spirit of God and its need as the supreme and essential factor in our work; but it is the spiritual dynamic that must permeate all, and especially the missionary force, and touch with a new life all who come under the law of God, if we are to function in a larger and more extended capacity. When our Lord goes before us through the unction of the Holy Spirit, the missionary work, as well as the redemption of Zion, can not fail. Let it be said, we need a great movement toward repentance in our work, a prostration of our souls in humility, a revival of spiritual power which will be a real visitation of the Holy Ghost, and a visitation of angels, for the world is steeped in sin, and the Spirit grieved, that there is so much human and so little of the divine around us, and in us.

Many people are so easily satisfied. The world has a fearful lack of depth and reality, and too often even in the circles of the church, the human element takes the place of the real presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is needed to come in mighty power, and express itself through the heavenly gifts in no unmistakable way, attended by heavenly unction, that brings profound joy and testimony, that heals our sick, rebukes devils, and gives us cloven tongues of fire.

Regenerated and Inspired Men Needed

A conviction prevails with the most of us who have had years of experience in missionary enterprise, that the sacred offices of the holy priesthood are no place for unregenerate men. By unregenerate we mean those who do not know God, and who have never come under the gospel law in sincerity, to the pardoning of their sins, and those who do not understand the sacred mystery of a union with Jesus Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit.

The thought is predominant through all the sacred literature of the church that the Holy Spirit has always spoken through a ministry that have not only known the gospel but preached it as it is recorded in the Scriptures. In other words, those inspired in the past were advocates of the truth, and bore testimony of it; hence it is evident that the feet of those messengers were swift, their souls were aflame, and their tongues were inspired in declaring the truth to the world. It should be needless to say, our Lord requires his witnesses to preach the gospel under the power and unction of the Holy Spirit, which service well rendered is a part of the full salvation offered, and by such evidence is the authority of that messenger made evident, and does become an example to all men of the possibilities of the endowments of grace. It is not merely a proclamation, but a demonstration of the truth propounded in holy life and service. It will be useless to send out missionaries who have but little piety, who divide their time between worldly pleasures and church work, who pray but seldom and never in sincerity, but with a formalism that is devoid of spiritual grace, and reflect a type of religious thinking that is alarmingly worldly. Rather should they be men who fully sense a divine call, who have a burning desire, a heart filled with love of God, and a passion for souls. If such qualities are not in evidence, that individual is lacking in those qualifications of a true missionary.

If our Lord through channels of prophetic power really and truly calls men today, this same source of power will send the means for their maintenance also. Hence it would seem our policy should be to accept any number of young men who give evidence of a true missionary spirit and a genuine prophetic call from God to the work, that our depleted quorums of Seventy may be filled, that our fields of activities be widened, that the Restoration message be heralded to the ends of the earth, and souls saved to the glory of God. It would seem, any other course defeats the very purpose of God in calling men into the missionary ranks today.

Salvation, O Salvation,
The joyful sound proclaim
Till earth's remotest nation
Has heard Messiah's name.

Perhaps Heber's hymn is not sung so lustily as in the early years of the great Restoration movement, and perhaps some, when it is sung slip over with hesitation and with subdued accent the parts relating to a world-wide evangel. They seem to think the proposition of being "saved" is not a distinct work of missionary effort and preaching, but soon the poverty of such judgment will be made apparent.

Personal Qualifications

The call of the Highest, is the deepest and most profound impulse that can move a man, and in no small way will prove the formative principle and silent urge to his development. Such we must know involves and continually maintains the highest personal relationships with the Holy Spirit, which when enjoyed does not stop short of a fellowship with the Infinite himself.

Education plus the Holy Spirit is the proper thing; but education minus the Holy Spirit will prove a delusion and a snare, if that is all we are fortified with in missionary work. We truly need more praying for the Spirit of God, and consecration of life that we may get the heavenly fire in our souls, and the iron in our blood to go forth with the missionary spirit of Elias, or else we shall fail, and shall never accomplish our great soul-winning project. If we do not do it, God will raise up a people who will, for this work must move on to its consummation until "the gospel is preached in every land." "Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion." (Amos 6: 1.)

Danger From Within

Our greatest danger is not in the scoffing of unbelievers, or the persecution that may arise from without through the opposition of sinful men; but from the unregenerate and worldly condition, and the coddling and open sins, and the carnal mind of those within the fold. Let unbelievers scoff, and sinners oppose themselves in vile persecution if they will; but should the church be filled with devoted members, consecrated under the power of God, it will override all obstacles and all evil forces of earth, and all hell itself can not check its victorious advance. It is only when there is "sin" hidden in the camp, "an accursed thing in the midst of thee," does failure, defeat and even disaster come to the people of God. (Joshua 7.)

Our Spiritual Needs

We must engender a deeper spirit of mutual confidence, fellowship and cooperation. We must arouse ourselves to a common purpose to keep the unity of the spirit, in the bonds of love, and when enacted will linger long in memory's archives. God be praised when we see a renewal of a common purpose of consecration to the old and everlasting ideals of our faith, and to our Lord, whose we are, and whom we serve.

The church needs a wider range of vision, a more extended sphere of activity. The time demands a full consecration, a stimulation of our talent forces, an awakening of those whose names are on our roster, who have means, but are withholding the Lord's portion, who consider themselves disciples, but have not come to understand this mission work is the chief business of the church, and they, too, must sacrifice to bring forth our cherished purpose. This church has the authority, and the word of life, for which humanity awaits, but whether we shall give or withhold is one of the vexatious problems we must decide in the near future. It is thus to be hoped—no, we must not think in terms of uncertainty but those of certainty, and say, the church will not halt on the threshold of that which has been given as a world-wide mission and ministry.

As missionaries we must look upon the whole world as our parish, and by such we mean, that in whatever quarter we may be sent, we judge it meet, and our bounden duty, to declare the word, and give forth the terms of salvation and persuade men to accept of Christ. We affirm, in the sublime loveliness of beauty Christ Jesus our Lord is the peer of the world. He still stands not only as the greatest ideal, but the sole hope of immortal life.

We would then say, the fundamental needs of the hour, reinforced by the power of God, a deeper consecration and a larger latitude of work, is the crying need of the church today; and in view of the tremendous issues involved, unceasing prayer should ascend, day and night, from every loyal and consecrated heart, at the family altar of every home, for an endowment of power; and then when it comes in this fuller measure, the problems of stewardship, of our industrial Zion, of our burdensome debts, and missionary work and missionary recruits will then have been promoted, and even solved, for the sanctified righteousness of God's people will yet release the omnipotence of heaven to that degree that every opposing force must give way, and every obstacle rendered impotent.

To Our Great Task

Never will these grand objectives come home to us, so long as we trifle away valuable time, contending over the mistakes of the past, the old question of who is greatest, who holds priority of rights, who is the Lord's chosen, and who shall build the temple of the Lord. The time is ripe, to set the house of God in order and make a forward advance, and the responsibility will be given to all those who will qualify, so let us look to the bigger things, the more weighty matters, which we deem are summed up in the one mighty question of a world's redemption. Such is our task! Are we big enough for it? We hope we are: The victory is sure to come, and Christ and his cause will yet conquer, because there is no other Savior, and no other church bears the stamp of his approval.

How Vast Is Heaven?

How vast is heaven? Lo, it will fit
In any space you give to it;
So broad, it takes in all things true;
So narrow, it can hold but you.

Getting Ready for Decision Day, June 12, 1932

By C. B. Woodstock

Decisions are made at important crises in life. Such a crisis comes when one is confronted with the necessity of choosing to be baptized into the church, or of putting off the event indefinitely. Each year as we approach Children's Day we are desirous that all who have not been baptized should give the matter serious consideration. This desire has crystallized in official setting apart of a day known in all the church as Decision Day.

It is well that we make thoughtful and prayerful preparation for baptism. It is not enough that one be willing to join the church by submitting to the ordinances of baptism. Baptism, to be effective, must be the culmination of a process of education and change that has prepared the individual to enter into covenant relationship with God as a member of his family and kingdom. The church has been told specifically that children in Zion and her stakes shall be taught "to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old." "And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.)

It is evidently intended that one being baptized shall have been thoroughly instructed, at least in the fundamental beliefs and doctrines of the church, that he may understand the meaning and purpose of the covenant he is taking, and enter with full purpose of heart in his part of the ceremony by which he is cleansed and made ready to receive the baptism of the Spirit and to go forth to walk in newness of life. Our ministry are directed to see that all converts, both old and young, are instructed in the principles of the gospel, in the belief of the Saints, in the purpose of baptisms, in the sacred obligations of membership in the church, and the responsibility of a godly walk, before administering the ordinance of baptism. It is becoming a custom for groups of converts who have not had the privilege of a long education in the schools and services of the church to meet in a series of classes or special services of instruction that they may be fully informed and prepared for the step they are to take.

Especially is it desirable that children who are to be baptized on Decision Day shall be prepared for the occasion. It is assumed that many if not all have grown up in homes of the Saints where the gospel is a household theme and where the work of the church is of general concern. But all are not so favored. Much has been done in classes of the church school to give general information, yet either in these classes or in a special pastor's class children who are preparing for baptism should have the opportunity of hearing specifically the things that should be understood, and of making the personal preparation which will entitle them to enter intelligently into membership in the church.

Children's Day

The general church authorities have designated Sunday, June 12, as Children's Day. This is also Decision Day, an annual event when all who are ready, especially the children who have reached the age of eight years and have not previously been baptized, shall make their covenant with the Lord. In this and following issues of the Saints' Herald suggestive helps will be given to make the Children's Day observance one of blessed and fruitful experience. Further suggestions will be given also that the baptismal service may be most beautiful and impressive.

Preparation for Baptism

In previous years materials have been published which should prove helpful to pastors, teachers and leaders who are responsible for the program of evangelism in the local church. Church Membership Lesson Helps

The following helps may be used in four weekly sessions in which the pastor or some one whom he may appoint will very earnestly and sympathetically discuss with the candidates the purposes and meanings which center in membership in the church. So far as possible those to be baptized should be led to personally experience faith in God and Christ and to understand the nature of their act of obedience in baptism. The ordinance itself should follow a genuine desire unto repentance and a conscious choosing of the way of life and truth.

Lesson One: The Church

The church is made up of the covenant people who love God and desire to walk in his ways. It is organized on earth as God has commanded, and we join the church because we wish to obey the will of God, because we wish to have his spirit with us in our lives, because we wish to live and work with others who know and love his way, and because we wish eternal life.

Christ, the Son of God, was with the Father when the worlds were formed and when we were created and given place in this world. From the beginning it was planned that man should learn to love God and to do good. Christ gave himself that he might come to the world and live in the flesh to show us how God would have us to live. He suffered death and was resurrected that he might save all mankind from sin and that all might have eternal life.

The gospel plan is God's plan for us. This plan has been restored in latter days and the gospel is preached in its truth and beauty by a ministry who are divinely called and ordained to officiate in the name of the Christ. When we have faith in God and Christ and when we truly repent of all our wrong and seek forgiveness in baptism, God has promised to wash away our sin that we may be clean and holy in his sight. We covenant with God that we will always try to serve him and keep his commands. God in turn makes covenant with us that he will give us of his Spirit that we may know right from wrong and that we may have strength to choose the right. This covenant is renewed each time we partake of the sacrament.

The church is God's appointed way through which the gospel shall be preached in all the world, and through which he delights to express his will and the power of his Spirit. It is only through faith in Christ as the Son of God and baptism in his name, followed by a life of Christlike service, that we may have eternal life. It is through membership in the church that we may join with others to work out the Lord's will in the world.

Combating Pneumonia.—3

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Pneumonia seems to have a special liking for the wealthy, for among that class is found the idle, the obese, and the plethoric men and woman. The main thing in their favor: they have better hygienic homes than the less fortunate, who live in unsanitary and far from hygienic surroundings.

Pneumonia is a preventable and also contagious disease. Pneumonia is no respecter of age. It attacks the infant in its mother's arms as well as the octogenarian. In childhood, and old age the mortality of this disease is the highest. It is well, in the earliest spring and winter months, to avoid catching cold, as much as possible. It is exceptionally advisable during these seasons of the year, to avoid those who promiscuously cough and sneeze in the presence of others, for while they throw off the germ that causes the cold, they may also throw off the germs that cause pneumonia, and such danger as this should be strictly avoided. It is a disease that one may catch from himself, as these germs are nearly always present and are found lurking in the nose, mouth, throat and teeth, rendering it necessary to keep the mouth and throat clean by hygienic and sanitary methods. Anyone that is affected by frequent colds, indigestion, Bright's disease, is predisposed to pneumonia. Bodily resistance means everything as a preventative and for recovery, if one is attacked. For that reason, it is not wise to overeat and allow oneself to become obstinately constipated. Avoid the loss of sleep, worry, or anything that irritates the nervous system. Stimulants of any kind are not infrequently very serious, as the heart is already overworked in a case of pneumonia. This is especially true in the obese. In order to avoid a fatal termination, the physician is careful to watch the heart as this is where the greatest strain is placed, and must be looked after. One who is taking pneumonia usually has a chill, a sharp pain in the side followed by rapid and high temperature, difficult and rapid breathing, and expectorates a blood-stained sputum. When such symptoms are manifest, it is an unmistakable case of pneumonia.

Treatment of pneumonia is purely symptomatic. The patient should be in the open air or in a well-ventilated room. A cold room is not objectionable, even if the nurses and attendants have to wear wraps. Fresh air is one of the best-known specifics, the patient, under these conditions, has the best chance in his fight. The open-air treatment for consumption is equally efficient in the treatment of pneumonia. While it is not all that should be done for the patient, it is a fundamental principle of the proper treatment.

The human body is surcharged with intense poisonings by bacteria. At the same time there is a violent fighting-back by the natural resisting forces of the body. The physician's work is to guide the patient through the battle and free him of any load which incumbers him in the fight. The old treatment of pneumonia, such as whiskey and bleeding, has been discarded long ago. The use of medicines have their place. This includes such medicines as Digitalis, to support the heart, and other medicines which have a sustaining influence, but which in no way are specifics. The success of the treatment depends upon the nursing and cooperation with the physician. It is important that the patient not be allowed to stir unnecessarily. Any sudden movement may cause dilation of the heart. It is the duty of the physician to instruct the patient's family about how to prevent the spread of the disease. All the sputum from the patient should be received in the sputum cup, containing some good antiseptic solution, such as a five per cent solution of crude carbolic acid. All material upon which the patient coughs or sneezes should be sterilized or burned. Dishes, towels, bed coverings, and clothes of attendants should be thoroughly sterilized, of which boiling is the most effectual means, but a formaldehyde vapor or a five per cent solution of carbolic acid is quite efficient. It is wise to keep the patient's dishes and trays separate from the rest of the family's until the disease is gone and there can be a general disinfection.

"Indeed there is ground for believing that the great ages have often been the unstable ages. Such was the age of Pericles; such was the twelfth century; such was the Renaissance. It is not security that chiefly develops the human spirit, but danger. Not in hours of placidity do men build a Chartres Cathedral, or paint the frescoes in the Sistine Chapel, or write a Constitution in Independence Hall. Unrest and instability can also make their contributions to the cultural life of men. Insecurity is not without value as an antidote to smugness and stagnation. It is the uncharted sea that challenges the adventurous spirit."—Raymond T. Fossdick, New York Times Magazine.

XV.—LITTLE SIOUX DISTRICT, 1898

By James Franklin Mintun

I spent my New Year's Day writing on material relative to the mission or Sunday school work. The next day was busy locally; assisting with the sacrament, teaching a Bible class, reviewing the Sunday school, taking the sacrament to three aged and infirm, was exercised with the gift of prophecy, and preached at night from Luke 19: 10; and Matthew 1: 21, on the subject of Jesus Christ the Savior of all with special emphasis on the saving of the lost. This was a day of enjoyment because it was a day filled with active service in which I enjoyed the approval of my heavenly Father. This is my joy today, but do not have the opportunities now as then; yet the Spirit still admonishes me to "occupy till your work is finished, and I will give you to know when that is." . . .

On January 10 my second son was born. My joy was in the fact that both wife and babe were well as could be expected, and continued to be favored. . . .

The week of January 18 to 23 was occupied in preaching at nights, and caring for wife and the home for the children. I continued this work till the twenty-eighth when I attended the conventions and conference of the Northeastern Nebraska District held at Omaha. Here I was reelected Sunday School Superintendent, and a delegate to the general convention. I note by my record that the evening was occupied by a "program very inappropriate, bordering on to the ridiculous." This was speaking relative to where it was given. At the conference I was chosen the chairman of the delegates to the general conference. At the conference Brother James Caffall gave one of his strong logical sermons. I taught the Bible class and reviewed the Sunday school on Sunday, spoke to the priesthood at 4 p. m., and preached at 7.30 p. m. At this conference I ordained Brother Ira C. Lewis. William T. Owens was appointed a district missionary. I returned home the thirty-first to continue to care for the wife and the home, which it was necessary to do till February 14, when my record says, "Had a sad talk with my wife about the allowance for the coming year, and its expenditure, and her willingness to sacrifice for the work of God." We now had another in the family to care for, the wife's health was not good, and it meant a great sacrifice for her to attempt to meet the necessary expenditures with what had been allowed, but she was willing to try, and did it better than I could.

On February 8 I received a challenge from Mr.

H. A. Jenkins, on the Sabbath question and the "unconsciousness" of the dead. Was a member of "The Church of God," with headquarters, at that time, at Stanberry, Missouri. They were a branch-off from the Seventh-day Adventist Church, holding the same views on the Sabbath and the "unconsciousness" of the dead with the Adventists, but did not accept the testimonies of Mrs. Ellen G. White. I accepted the two propositions sent and sent him one in which I affirmed the truthfulness of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A Debate Trick Exposed

On March 30 I started to the general conference at Independence, Missouri, but previous to starting arranged for tents to be used at the Shelton Reunion. . . . During this conference my mission was changed to the Little Sioux District. I returned home on the nineteenth of April to find my wife in very poor health. While at home I baptized two and attended to other local labor till May 9 when I went to Mondamin to assist at a debate held there between Elder T. W. Williams and Davis H. Bays, who at this time professed to be a representative of the "Christian Church." At this debate I was associated with Apostle J. R. Lambert and Elder J. W. Wight, the latter acting as moderator for Brother Williams. During the debate one incident occurred worthy of mention, which I believe will be of interest to some. There had been an agreement entered into by correspondence between the disputants, in regard to some point at issue relating to the debate, but Mr. Bays did not see fit to heed the agreement when in the debate, so a point of order was called. The letter in which Bays had agreed to the question at issue was in Brother Williams' trunk, about two blocks away from the place of the debate, among many other letters that had been written previous to the debate between them. It was decided that I should go to the trunk and find and bring the letter in which Bays had signed the agreement referred to. While I was gone Brethren Williams and Wight argued the point of order to occupy the time till I could return, and the letter was produced. I found several letters written by Bays to Williams, and brought them to the place of the debate, and the brethren continued to argue the point of order till I could look through the letters and find the one necessary. I found it and the agreement was there. I gave it to Brother Williams who was at the time still arguing the point of order, and when he received the letter he read the agreement signed by Bays, and then said, "Mr. Chairman, see the duplicity of the man." The chairman ruled that Bays was out of order, and the debate went on, but Bays was a humiliated man.

I was at Moorhead and attended the business meeting there on June 1, then was at Magnolia and attended the business meeting there on June 4. I was trying to get in touch with the condition of the work in the branches and district since I labored in that mission before. The district convention and conference were at Magnolia, June 10 to 12. I assisted in presiding over the Sunday school convention, and was chosen district superintendent.

A Scoffer Put to Flight

I put up the tent at Logan, where I began preaching, soon after the conference. On June 18 Brother G. H. Hilliard was preaching at the tent in the evening and remained to preach on Sunday at 11 a. m. While he was preaching a man well known to me, but unknown to Brother Hilliard was passing the door of the tent, and stopped, and stood leaning on one of the poles by the side of the door. He was a man very prejudiced, and at the time had a sneering grin on his face. Brother Hilliard abruptly stopped, and looking at the man, rebuked him very sharply. The man left going west, and was not seen any more at any of the services. I was assisted here by Brother A. M. Fyrando of Magnolia, and Robert Chambers. I baptized one on July 3, when the tent was taken down. During the time of these tent meetings I went to Woodbine, on June 20, and assisted in arranging a program for institute work at the next district convention, and made partial arrangements for the reunion Sunday school work.

On July 8 the tent was put up at Sandy Point, away from any branch, where lived one family, who were anxious that their neighbors should hear the gospel. Here I was assisted by Elder Hubert Case and Robert Chambers. On July 17 I baptized one, and on the twenty-fourth I baptized another, when the tent was taken to Blencoe. Here lived one member who was the wife of E. L. Hogue who was afterwards elected to the State Legislature of Iowa. He was very kind and his house was a home for us. Here I was assisted by the same two as previously. Two were baptized on August 8, and the tent taken to River Sioux, where I was assisted by the same two brethren. Here we continued till August 18. One was baptized on August 14. I then came to Moorhead where I held a series of preaching services till August 22. Five were baptized on the twenty-first. . . .

An Unworthy Opponent

The arrangements for the debate with Mr. H. A. Jenkins had been completed, and on October 8 I came to Brother J. D. Proctor's, about nine miles from Elwood, Nebraska, where the debate was to be held. I went to Elwood on the tenth to make definite arrangements for the debate, and to begin, but for reasons that a political rally was to be held that night we postponed the debate till the following day. Mr. Jenkins had agreed by correspondence to have recommendations and to have the place arranged for. But he had neither, and when I found him, he was at one of his friends a short distance from Elwood, and when he came from the house, he was in a very uncouth condition, not even looking much like a gentleman. But he promised to get the recommendations and consented that we should arrange for the place of the debate. The courthouse was secured and the sheriff of the county was chosen chairman. On Tuesday evening the eleventh, the debate began with about fifty present at the beginning, but when he began his last session only about twenty-five remained. He did not seem to have the respect or confidence of the people there. He had not received the recommendations promised but I agreed to remain another night, but that if he did not get them by that time I would not feel under further obligations to remain. The second night about the same conditions prevailed as on the previous night. When he got up for his last session only about twenty remained. The chairman and moderators concluded that to continue the debate was not profitable nor wise, from lack of interest, and because Mr. Jenkins did not secure a recommendation so that he only represented himself, and he was a poor representative even of himself. The next day I met him at a place where we had been invited, and he then confessed to me that he did not know whether he had been baptized by a Seventh-day Adventist or a representative of the "Church of God."

On the eleventh of November I was at Mondamin to assist with the funeral of Elder Henry Garner. The Garners had been members of the church in the days previous to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1844. He was one that remained true to his covenant till death. While at Missouri Valley preaching, I was requested to assist in settling some difficulties there, which my record says were settled.

On November 20 the church building at Mondamin was dedicated, and I offered the dedicatory prayer. I began a series of preaching services at the church just dedicated, and continued till December 11. While I was there I was in correspondence with the missionary in charge, Apostle J. R. Lambert, concerning the organization of a branch at Mondamin, which was desired by the Saints there.

During this time I was assisting to administer the estate of Brother L. B. McKinney, who was before entering the church a Christian-Adventist, I believe, but a very consistent Latter Day Saint during the short time he was a member of the church, which was not long before he died.

During this holiday there was to be an Institute of the Sunday school and Zion's Religio-Literary Society workers of the church at Independence, Missouri, of which I was chosen as one of the instructors. I was preparing for this work from December 12, while I cared for my wife who was in very poor health, and labored locally. On December 24 I left home for the Institute, where I arrived on the twenty-fifth. That day I taught a Sunday school class and preached at 11 a. m., and the work of the institute proper began the next morning. I was chosen secretary and one of the instructors formally, and met with the committee that was appointed at the previous convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society to provide a working program for that society, as previously mentioned. On the thirtieth I was requested to assist with the local Zion's Religio-Literary Society work, and spoke upon the subject of the importance of the Religio work, and the benefit, if properly conducted, it would be to the church, and especially to the young of the church.

The Menace of Tuberculosis

By Virginia P. Westring, R. N., Tuberculosis Nurse

The fight begun by Robert Koch in his laboratory must be carried on today in every home for the safety of men, women, and children.

It is just fifty years ago since Robert Koch, a German country doctor announced to the world that he had found the cause of tuberculosis, which he named the tubercle bacillus.

Many men had seen myriads of tiny living forms (microbes) through microscopes long before Koch looked into one. The trouble was there were too many microbes everywhere. Some men, it was shown later, had even seen the same rod-like mite which Koch described, but he was the first to prove the point that it was the cause of tuberculosis. Nobody before him, had solved the problem of how to separate one germ from dozens of others. Without doing this, without transferring the suspected microbe to healthy animals and causing the disease, then scientific knowledge of the cause of tuberculosis remained largely conjecture. But as Koch himself said when he made public his discovery: "Henceforth in our warfare against this scourge of our race, we have to reckon not with a nameless something, but with a definite inmate of the body. Before all things, we must shut off the sources whence the infective material comes, so far as it lies in the power of man to do this."

Strange it is, but true, that today, fifty years after Koch made his astounding discovery, the most effective work against tuberculosis is that designed to shut off the sources whence the infective material comes. It is not enough to build sanatoriums to care for those ill with the disease, for before people become ill enough to know it, they are spreading the bacillus which Koch was the first to find. It is not enough to build positive health for it has been found that repeated massive doses of the germs can overcome strong resistance especially when absorbed by children in close contact with an active case of tuberculosis. Tremendous results have followed Koch's discovery, yet the astounding fact is that tuberculosis still takes more lives between ages of fifteen and forty-five than any other ailment. Much remains to be done. Is it not "within the power of man" to banish this disease entirely? Typhoid fever and smallpox are under control—why not tuberculosis? The answer is that typhoid fever requires merely the application of certain sanitary practices to stop its ravages in a community; and smallpox succumbs to universal vaccination, which requires little effort on the part of the individual. But no easy quick, simple preventive of tuberculosis has yet been devised.

The campaign now being waged against tuberculosis requires the cooperation of many people; it requires assent to measures of prevention to be applied to healthy people as well as sick ones. We have known for fifty years that one case of tuberculosis comes from another case. For each known case there is or was another unknown case near-by.

Tuberculosis is a family taint only if we do nothing to stop it passing from one member of the family to another.

Knowledge must be imparted to the public by physicians, nurses and public health workers, tactfully and with discretion. This takes time and money, but it is worth it. In no other way can people be persuaded that if a case of tuberculosis is in the family, every member should have a thorough examination to determine whether there is another case in the same household. It is too bad that we have to get a man's consent before we can save him from tuberculosis. It is not generally known that typhoid has been eliminated from a community by act of City Council taken years before, when it took steps to safeguard the water supply for example. But people have to do something about tuberculosis to bring it under control—each one for himself—not a few people, but many. It is a community effort, in which everybody has a part. A victim of this disease may be making other victims in the same family. Inch by inch the unseen monster of destruction approaches and nothing but knowledge can point him out. Nothing but knowledge can disarm him. Nothing but knowledge can persuade people to consent to the measures which "shut off the sources whence the infective material comes." Until people know this and heed it, not as a fact applicable to others, but as a fact applicable to themselves, can we hope to see the end of this preventable—but not yet prevented—disease.

(The Jackson County Tuberculosis Association is cooperating with all other tuberculosis associations in an intensive campaign now to trace out the "other case" from which a known case contracted tuberculosis, and this work must continue until our county is as free from this disease as human ingenuity can make it so.)

Hazel Dell Branch

FIFTY YEARS OF SERVICE—1882 TO APRIL 30, 1932

By Poul S. Nielsen

In the time of the ages fifty years are nothing, but in the time of a man it takes in the best part of his life. If we take it in the life of a rural church it ought to be an indication of filling a need that a church is still "going strong" after all those who helped start it have gone to their Maker, after many of the second generation have left, and the descendants of the founders are still coming if not to the same building, at least to the one that is taking its place, long after the first church building has served its time.

April 30, 1882, seventeen of the early settlers of Pottawattamie County met in the home of Christen Petersen in Weston, which at that time was a thriving little town about ten miles from Council Bluffs. All the persons present were Latter Day Saints and all had come from Denmark.

This meeting was presided over by Elder Hans Hansen, a district officer. It was the desire of those assembled to organize a branch at this place as they felt they could better serve the Lord if they were united in a Scandinavian branch surrounded as they were by other religious bodies like the Seventh-day Adventists and several bodies of the Lutheran faith.

It was decided to call this newborn branch the Weston Scandinavian Branch or as it appears on the old records in the Danish language: Weston Skandinavisk Green. It is not to be wondered at that they wanted it to be named in the Danish language as a good many of them had but recently come across the Atlantic and could not speak or read any other language but their native tongue, and some of them never learned to speak the language of their adopted country.

Most of this little band of seventeen had been baptized by Elder Peter N. Brix who was a missionary to Denmark and baptized some of them there. This missionary of the early Reorganization died at his post in that country and is buried in Aalborg, Denmark.

Hans Petersen was unanimously chosen to be the first president of the new branch and was ordained a priest by Elders Hans Hansen and H. N. Hansen. The latter was living in the community but as he was the branch president of the Crescent City Branch he helped to get this branch started, little dreaming of the work he should later do there.

Brother Peter Andersen was ordained a teacher at this meeting. This brother died but last winter at Holden, Missouri, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years. The first clerk, or as it is called in the old record, Skriver, was Jens J. Christensen. All the proceedings of the branch were written in the Danish language for several years.

About three months later John F. Drebes was ordained an elder, the first to be set apart for this office in this branch.

The early meetings were held in the home of the brother where the first meeting was held, but it does not appear that the first clerk served, for some time after his election the name of John F. Drebes is on the old record.

The first treasurer was Hemming Hansen, the father of H. N. Hansen, and his first report shows that he had $5.40 on hand which, in consideration of those early times, was quite a sum. At one business meeting it was decided to keep Brother Drebes as president until he got tired of the job. These are the very words of the record. J. F. Drebes was later excommunicated, but he was the clerk until 1891.

Building the First Church

By and by the Saints got tired of meeting in private homes or schoolhouses and a committee was appointed to see about raising the money for building a church or as it is called in the Danish record, Kapel. Brother Hemming Hansen, who by the way was the first deacon, offered to give a half acre of ground to build on close to the old Tucker schoolhouse where many previous meetings had been held. But the first building was not built there on this plot after all, as the Saints preferred to have the church north of the road and there a plot was given by H. N. Hansen. This building cost close to seven hundred dollars and when it was finished the name of the branch was changed to Hazel Dell, and by this name it has been known in the community ever since it was dedicated. This was in the year 1884 and as the money did not come in so very abundantly it was found necessary to borrow about three hundred dollars which was lent by Hemming Hansen. The three first trustees were: H. N. Hansen, Hans Petersen and Christian Larsen. For some reason or other about this time J. F. Drebes resigned as president and H. N. Hansen was elected in his stead. By this time he had his name transferred from Crescent to this branch.

Changing to the English Language

From that time most of the business meetings were held in the English language. At least the proceedings are written in it. All meetings had up until that time been conducted in the Danish language but it was decided to have two meetings a month in English, without a doubt because several had started to attend the meetings who did not understand Danish. The record says that Sunday school was held at ten thirty in the morning and preaching at two o'clock in the afternoon. Rather a peculiar arrangement, but perhaps the Sunday school was mostly for the children. It was also decided not to have any temporal business meetings on Sunday.

One duty that those early officers performed was the visiting of their fellow Saints. The records are full of such references, some of them rather outspoken, about conditions as they found them. But they surely tried to do what they thought was right in the sight of God.

In one place we read that they wanted to know if the Saints thought that young Joseph was the rightful leader and most of them thought so.

As told before, there were seventeen members when the branch was organized, but little by little the membership increased and we find thirty in 1886 and seventy on the record in 1894; but they had their ups and downs. It is related, for instance, that a certain brother was expelled because he would not give up playing the fiddle at dances although the teachers told him that it was against the rules of the church. Yes, they even promised to help him to get work if he would quit and move up nearer them. But he refused and was excommunicated.

Prayer meetings were held midweek but it was not altogether smooth sailing, for the language trouble was not settled for good, and we find some more reports in Danish in the early nineties, and it was also decided to have a sacrament meeting in English every second month. The young people also had their say in those early days, for they had their own prayer meeting on Friday evening.

At one time the Sunday school was held after the afternoon preaching service. In 1895 they finally changed to have both their meetings in the forenoon with Sunday school first.

About 1898 the deed to the church was sent to the Bishop, showing that they also believed in conforming with the business principles of the general church.

The term of office for those early officers of the branch was three months at first, but was later changed to five, and then it seems that no certain rule was obeyed in regard to the time of holding office.

The language trouble, if we may use this expression, was finally decided in favor of English in 1903, but it was hard to keep the Danish language down and again it was decided to give the presiding officer the right to rule what language should be used in any particular service. Without a doubt this was done in case there should be mostly old country Danes in a certain meeting so that they could have Danish service.

It is recorded that as late as 1905 Danish services were held in the afternoons, but from then on they were all in English. So we may well conclude that about this time, that trouble was settled for good.

In those good old days, as the saying is, everybody drove teams and it must have grieved many an old farmer to see his horses stand outside on a cold winter day and shiver in perhaps zero weather, as he sat inside warm and comfortable while meetings were going on and so without doubt some of them got to talking among themselves that it would be a good thing to have a barn or shelter for the poor beasts. If we can judge by the old business records this caused quite a stir, but after much wrangling it was decided to build a barn or shed for "old Dobbin."

Zion's Religio Society for young people that was started in 1900 was discontinued in 1924. Since 1922 all officers for both branch and Sunday school, as well as for the Women's Department, have been elected at one business meeting. And if we can take the old record as a criterion, number 158 was the favorite opening hymn of nearly all business meetings. It is known by all Latter Day Saints: "Redeemer of Israel, Our Only Delight." Many a time it was the privilege of officers from Hazel Dell to help other branches for one reason or another and many from here have gone forth to other branches, there to fill responsible positions. Some have gone to foreign countries to proclaim the gospel message. When the condition in one of our neighbor branches, Boomer, for one reason or another (many members moving away amongst others), got so it was deemed unwise to continue it as a branch any longer, Hazel Dell voted to unite with it and in this way to help the work along in this place of the vineyard.

Boomer Branch

Here it might be well to say a few words about the old Boomer Branch that was located a few miles north of the Hazel Dell Branch in Boomer Township. It was organized as a branch by Brother Charles Derry in 1893 who was at that time the district president, and Brother D. Parish was the first president of the branch. A Sunday school was started the same year by A. E. Dempsey. Another Sunday school was begun by Sister Peter Rasmussen in a schoolhouse in the east part of same township. The name of this last named Sunday school was Grand View. Those two Sunday schools were united as one in the year 1898 and then known as Grand View Sunday School. Those early meetings were held in schoolhouses and some of the winters when roads got too bad the meetings were discontinued from December to May. It is mentioned that the Sunday school as a whole would visit Oakdale Sunday School, another early-day Sunday school of our community.

Their hour of meeting ran all the way from eleven o'clock in the morning to twelve, one, and three o'clock in the afternoon.

About the year 1902 a church was built and it was dedicated by Elder F. M. Cooper.

The first superintendent of the Sunday school was Elder D. Parish, and it was at first governed by three trustees.

This branch was finally absorbed into the Hazel Dell Branch and most of its members went to this branch, and not that alone, but it was also decided a little later on, to use the old Boomer building if we could get the permission of general officers, to do so as our building in Hazel Dell was getting rather old and small. The permission to use both buildings, as we saw fit, was cheerfully given and after some discussion it was decided to move the Boomer building to a better place on one of our main traveled highways and it must be said to the credit of the members of our day, that they went to work with a will and were liberal with their money and also labor; so by now we have a church building with a fine basement under it and on a good-sized plot donated by Brother J. A. Hansen. Now it is located on a hill and can be seen far and wide over the country, a monument not so much to those who put it there, but more as a monument to those early pioneer Saints that had the courage to start this work in our community fifty years ago. This last building was dedicated by Apostle J. F. Garver, November 3, 1929.

Surviving Pioneers

There are no charter members with us today, but Sister Ellen Christensen, the widow of the first branch teacher, and Sister Carrie Scott, both of Council Bluffs, together with Jens Hendricksen, of Independence, Missouri, are still living. Sister Agnes Hansen who, with her husband H. N. Hansen, joined the branch a couple of years after its organization, is still with us as is also a daughter of the man in whose house the branch was started, Sister Peter Olson, a daughter of Christen Petersen. The brother who dedicated the first Hazel Dell Church is gone to his reward, but he will be remembered by many of the older Saints: Elder J. F. McDowell.

Workers Who Have Helped

Elders and general church officers who have been here and helped the work along number amongst other men like W. W. Blair, W. A. Smith, E. C. Brand, W. H. Kelley, M. M. Turpin, Joseph Arber, D. R. Chambers, E. Y. Hunker, and J. F. Garver.

Apostle Peter Andersen was baptized in this branch and came in contact with the work here as also did P. T. Andersen who has made six missionary trips to his native Denmark to spread the gospel story. Another old country Dane who went out from here as a missionary was Adolph E. Madsen.

A name that almost stands as a synonym for Hazel Dell is that of Hansen. Three generations have served or are still serving here in the Master's cause.

The grandfather, Hemming Hansen, was the one who loaned the money to build the first church, and he also served as deacon and janitor. Then the father, H. N. Hansen, who labored unceasingly in the Lord's work, both here in his home branch and as a missionary in Utah and the Southern States, and last but perhaps most important as a missionary to Denmark whence he went four times, accompanied by his wife two times. He was also on the committee to get a Danish periodical started for the benefit of the Saints in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. The result of this committee's work was Sandhedens Banner, or as it is now called, Sandhetens Banner. It was started in the year 1884 with the before-named Peter Anderson as editor. It is still published.

H. N. Hansen was the first missionary of the Reorganization who went to Denmark.

And now the son, J. A. Hansen, is at present our branch president. He has been in the work for years, first as a teacher, later as an elder, and now as a high priest. His mother, Agnes Hansen, who lives with him has always been a help and strength to both her husband and her son as well as others with whom she has come in contact.

Many a time in days gone by did God speak to his people here in tongues through some of the Saints. Sometimes He permitted those hidden mysteries to be revealed unto us. At other times He would permit prophecies to be given to us by good old Brother Hans Petersen and Sister Carrie Scott. And as far

Central Church

May Day dawned, a beautiful Sabbath, and Mother Nature blossomed in all her beauty, in large bushes of spirea, varieties of the iris and tulips in gay hues, and grass and trees just breaking into leafage.

On entering the church Central people were greeted with the cheery smile of one who has been absent from their midst for the past five or six months, a man who has endeared himself to the hearts of the Saints, Pastor C. E. Wight. It was a happy reunion, and the members are thankful that he has returned.

The spiritual awakening that pervaded the General Conference was shared by the people of Central Church, and the sacrament service in charge of Elder C. E. Wight, assisted by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, contained a marked degree of the Spirit. After the serving of the emblems, a number of short and inspiring testimonies were given, the as healing is concerned, many can testify to his wonderful power.

One old brother who has been with the branch for almost its entire existence is Brother Carl C. Larsen, affectionately known as Charley, who in his office as a teacher and later as a priest, has always been willing to give his testimony of the truth.

So far as support of general church is concerned it can not be denied that old Hazel Dell, as it is known in the community amongst the Saints, has been trying to do her share with men, service and financial support.

Several from here have gone to Graceland College and more will undoubtedly follow in years to come.

We have spoken mostly about the brethren of the branch, but we must not forget that the sisters have borne their part of the work. Many have served as teachers in Sunday school, and some of them have always been organists and then we must remember the Ladies' Department which has helped both the local branch, as well as other places, with their money raised by bazaars and otherwise.

When we of the branch as it stands today look back over the last fifty years we can not help but be conscious of the many disadvantages which our ancestry labored under in building so well and carefully, and we stand today amazed in the thought that from a little gathering fifty years ago has gone the influence that has helped to mold the lives of many men and women; and then we can not help but exclaim like the Psalmist of old: "Thy mercies endured for ever," and as He has in days gone by held his protecting and guiding hand over old Hazel Dell, He will in future days guide it onward and upward.

theme being the desire to consecrate anew and sacrifice more than ever to assist in the work of God.

Preceding the evening service, the choir rendered its monthly concert under the direction of George Anway. The program consisted of two anthems, "I Will Magnify Thee," and "Unfold Ye Portals," and a vocal duet by Luella Wight and George Anway.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the speaker of the hour using for his text, "Not by might nor by power, but my spirit saith the Lord." He warned the Saints that the time is here when they must be one hundred per cent Latter Day Saints and gave advice and counsel to move forward as never before. Within the heart of every one burned a determination to be of service and to assist in God's work here on earth. At the close of the service, the choir fittingly expressed the wishes of the people, that God be with him till we meet again. In three weeks Brother Gleazer and George Lewis will depart for their Australasian Mission.

Recent speakers have included Apostles John W. Rushton who spoke to a splendid audience, the main auditorium being filled to capacity, and Apostle J. A. Gillen. Conference visitors included Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt, Elder George H. Wixom, Sister Audentia Anderson, and others.

The mothers' and daughters' banquet will be held at the church on Monday, May 9. A lovely program is being prepared by the program committee of the Women's Club, and a good crowd is expected. Proceeds from this banquet will go towards the paying of a few more stones in Central Church.

The priesthood of the stake met at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, in charge of Associate Stake President C. George Mesley and Stake Bishop C. A. Skinner, to discuss standards for the ministry which are listed as follows: Filing of inventories and paying of tithing; reasonable attendance at all meetings; preparation to honor calling by study, and loyalty to the work of the church. The first mentioned standard occupied the time of session, and it was decided that while it is desirable that every member of the priesthood observe it to the letter, it can not at present be made a test of membership. All seemed in accord with the policy of the church. Another session will be held May 22 to consider the other standards.

Stake conference will be held on Sunday, May 15, with a business meeting on the sixteenth, at 7:45 p. m., at Central Church.

There seems to be a determined attitude on the part of the membership of the stake to help push the work of the church along, in a great measure, on account of the successful General Conference just closed. It is hoped this attitude will gain impetus as it goes.

Argentine Church

On Sunday, April 24, the speaker, morning and evening, was Elder John W. A. Bailey. At eleven o'clock the theme was woven around the familiar Scripture, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples," and the seven forty-five service was a stereopticon lecture on the symbols of Christ. The evening's service was most interesting and impressive. Brother Bailey is a scholar of no mean ability, and portrays his subject in a vivid fashion.

On May 1 the sacrament was seasoned with an impressive portion of the Spirit of the Master, and at night Elder L. W. Hays broke the bread of life to an attentive audience, his lesson being found in Philippians 3: 13, 14.

Sister Florence Foster has experienced a severe season at the Sanitarium, undergoing a difficult operation, but is thought to be on the road to recovery. The infant of Sister

Eva Bartel Suddeth is confined to the Bell Memorial Hospital, by a stubborn case of pneumonia, but is getting along nicely now.

Fourth Church

The Saints came together fasting and praying for the welfare of the church and the General Conference April 3. Sacrament was shared in the evening by a goodly number. There were no services in this branch April 10, because of the sessions of the conference in Independence.

Elder George W. Wixom strengthened the faith of local members by his many testimonies to the power of God in his administrations to the sick.

The local associate pastor, Julian Gough, occupied the pulpit the morning of April 24, and that evening Bishop C. A. Skinner talked on "Stewardship."

The Wednesday evening prayer services are well attended and a good spirit is present.

The Progressive Club, the women's organization, is meeting every Thursday for class work, and continues the study of the Doctrine and Covenants, under the instruction of Elder J. E. Vanderwood. Their plans, however, will be somewhat changed as Brother Vanderwood is leaving this week for his mission field in Wisconsin.

Sister Tyra Leuking is suffering from a dislocated shoulder which will confine her to her home for some time.

Excellent meetings were the experience of local Saints during the month of March, beginning with a helpful communion service. At the 6.30 hour of March 6, some young people from the Christian Church, at Thirty-sixth and Michigan Streets, gave the Saints a good program. Elder H. A. Koehler was the evening speaker. March 20, Elder J. E. Vanderwood continued his Doctrine and Covenants teaching at the young people's meeting, and Apostle J. F. Curtis spoke at the closing hour of the day.

The week of March 21 to 26 was observed with fasting and prayer in preparation for the approaching conference.

On Easter morning an appropriate program in commemoration of the risen Savior was given by the children, and Apostle J. A. Gillen followed with a sermon on the resurrection. That evening Brother W. Curtis read Psalm 19 and took for his text, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

Ravenna, Ontario, Canada

Ravenna is a small branch of the church in Owen Sound District. Though few in number its members are loyal to, and deeply interested in the church. They testify that they shared in the divine Spirit of the conference while it was in session at Independence. A feeling of real fellowship marks their undertakings. Priest A. Brown is their branch president.

Preceding the opening of the General Conference, some of the members were made to feel that happenings of unusual moment were to take place, that there would be a revelation from the Father in heaven, directing his church. Eager for conference news, at least one sister subscribed to the Conference Daily Herald. The depression is keenly felt in Owen Sound region and fifty cent pieces are not numerous, but the sister subscribed for the paper and received the news for which she longed.

And now reassured that God is still mindful of his people though they sometimes wander from his teachings, these Saints wish to reconsecrate their efforts to his work. They are heeding the counsel of Apostle E. J. Gleazer's conference sermon, to come out of the world. They think if the Saints as a whole respond to the needs of the church, it will soon arrive at a sound spiritual and financial footing. They are not discouraged, but each day find the gospel growing dearer to them as they tell its story to their neighbors.

Mallard, Iowa

Attendance at Services Increases

It was with great pleasure that the Saints of Mallard heard of the spirit of the General Conference. Not many local people could attend, but the prayers of the Saints were for the conference to the end that it would contribute largely to the progress of the church.

District President Gerald Gunsolley was here three evenings, giving the Saints a greater hope and determination to go forward. It is the desire of every member to do his share in establishing the latter-day gospel in the hearts of men.

Since weather and road conditions are improving with the spring, those who have been unable to attend services for a number of months, are coming out. There are more, however, for the priesthood to reach and see that they are started back to services. Some come a considerable distance to the meetings. Brother E. L. Edwards and family regularly attend now. It is a help to the branch to have its forces strengthened by the aid of a family like this.

Mallard Branch enjoyed a good Easter program given mostly by the young people.

The slogan here is: "Let us go forward to Zion."

Kirtland, Ohio

Active in Church and Community

This branch was fortunate in having the help of two patriarchs on Sunday, March 20. In the morning Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith delivered a fine address. That evening Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley was the speaker.

An educational program was given by the Home Beautiful Circle and the Daughters of Zion at the church auditorium one Thursday afternoon in March. Attractive features were the reading of a story by Harmony Schupp, the health lesson conducted by Sister Luchretta Schneithorst, and a variety of musical numbers. The Daughters of Zion are studying the Doctrine and Covenants with Sister Alberta Biggs as teacher.

The cradle roll has grown by the addition of two names. Brother and Sister Howard Martin are the parents of a son born March 4, and his name is Dwane Davies Martin. A son also arrived in the home of Mr. and Sister William Bertleff.

Kirtland has an alert Book of Mormon Class which meets twice each week with Brother L. Davidson as teacher. Progress is being made in the study of this divine record, many who had casually read the book now being deeply interested in its teachings. The pupils find that the Book of Mormon teaches all truth, that it is written in simple language, that it is indeed a wonderful, historical record.

Flowers filled the Temple with their fragrance and beauty on Easter morning. Following the church school session Elder E. A. Webbe talked on the Resurrection, comparing it to the miracle of the butterfly. He had magnified replicas of the caterpillar, the cocoon, and the butterfly to illustrate his words. The Easter sermon was by Elder J. B. Biggs, and the adult choir rendered appropriate music. In the evening Elder Thomas Thomas delivered a dynamic sermon.

Local musicians have made a splendid contribution to the services at the Temple. Among those helping in choir and solo work and deserving special mention are Sisters Josephine Ebeling, Helen Williams, Katherine Moore, Mary Alice Hall, Pauline Jones, Anna Mae Davis, Marjorie Stiffler, Adeleine Clough, and Irene Flock, and Brother William Householder.

Sister Luella Thomas was married to Brother Frank L. Ray, of Cleveland, April 16. They will make their home on the west side of Cleveland. The bridegroom is an electrical engineer.

Many Kirtland friends were caused to sorrow by the death of little Dorothy Ann Neville, daughter of Elder and Sister George Neville. The funeral service occurred April 19, Elders Albert Wouter and Eben Curry in charge. "Of Such Is the Kingdom of Heaven," was the theme of the sermon. Since the day she suffered a fall Dorothy's small life had been filled with doctors, nurses, and hospitals. She leaves her parents and three brothers as well as a community of friends.

Elder J. L. Cooper attended General Conference. He also visited relatives in Chicago and DeKalb, Illinois, and in Independence, Missouri.

Sister Ruth Davies is receiving the congratulations of her many friends in Kirtland. She received the second prize for her oration, "The Revolt of Youth," at the County Oratorical Contest, held a short time ago in Perry, and was awarded a bronze medal.

Independence

Stone Church

It was in reverential mood that a very large congregation of Saints filled the Stone Church Sunday morning, to participate in the first communion service following the General Conference. The gratitude in many hearts found expression in congregational songs during the hour.

In charge of President Frederick M. Smith the service opened with dignity and solemnity. Seated in the stand and assisting the President in the service were Elders F. M. McDowell, John F. Sheehy, and H. G. Barto, and Bishops G. Leslie DeLapp, J. Stanley Kelley, R. T. Cooper, and G. W. Eastwood. Behind them in the choir loft sat the ranks of the local priesthood.

In a stirring sacrament talk President F. M. McDowell reminded the people of "enduring" things—the love of God, his glorious gospel, and the life of his Son. "The work of the church goes on," he declared. "Its cause is eternal; its principles are eternal; its work is eternal." For a Scripture lesson he read Psalms 111 and 104: 27-31.

Preceding the sharing of the emblems more than twelve hundred Saints knelt in prayer. The oblation talk was by Bishop DeLapp. A period of meditation and special prayer by High Priest H. G. Barto brought the hour to a close.

Apostle J. F. Curtis preached a vigorous sermon to the Stone Church congregation in the evening, emphasizing the benefits of the way of life and our conformity to it, and speaking hope and determination to his hearers.

The Stone Church Choir made its regular evening appearance for the first Sunday of the month, singing two anthems under the direction of Paul N. Craig, Robert Miller at the organ. Mr. Gomer Cool, violinist, also assisted in the evening's music. From ten to eleven o'clock these musicians rendered the KMBC Sunday night studio program.

Elder D. O. Cato presided over the eight o'clock service, assisted by Elder T. J. Butler.

Walnut Park Church

Walnut Park was again fortunate in having for its speaker on the evening of May 1, Apostle J. A. Gillen. His text was read from Psalms 50 and 51. "New life has come to this church, and God is waiting to bless his people," said Brother Gillen to the large audience which had come to hear him. The anthem by the choir, "The Woods and Every Sweet Smelling Tree," soprano solo taken by Marian Campbell, was a fitting introduction for Brother Gillen's sermon.

The sacrament service at eleven o'clock was one of peace and unity. It was in charge of Elders C. V. Hopkins, Howard Andersen, and Carroll Olson.

The group prayer meetings of district three are well attended, especially since the wonderful prayer services enjoyed during conference. Many are coming back to these services, realizing that this is the place where spiritual strength is obtained.

The Saints are happy to have with them once more Elder

R. D. Weaver who has been in the hospital for several weeks, but is now much improved.

Enoch Hill Church

The church school program of April 24, was in charge of the Dorcas Class. This group of women has undertaken to bring cheer and encouragement to isolated members through correspondence, and in their program they read answers to some of their letters. Letters read were from Florida, Nebraska, and California. At the beginning of their program they sang "The Lord Can Depend on Me," and in closing, "Win Them One by One."

At the morning preaching hour Richard Bullard and Charles Warren sang "Give Me Thy Heart," after which Patriarch Ammon White talked to the Saints on making the best use of their time. "If we do not make use of the light we have, we shall lose it," he reminded them.

"Growing Toward God" was the theme of the church school May 1. This was effectively carried out by the young ladies' classes. The program was as follows: Hymn, "Look for the Beautiful"; Scripture readings by the girls; "In the Garden of Our God," sung by a girls' quartet; a story, "The Great Stone Face," by Dorothy Winegar, and a song by the girls in chorus, "Be Pure in Heart."

This Sunday marked the end of the contest which has been running since February 1. The winning classes were: first, the young people taught by Pastor Herbert Barto; second, the young married people taught by Mrs. Agnes Hartman, and third, the senior boys taught by Eugene McKean.

Every seat was filled at the sacrament service, and a profitable hour was spent.

At the evening service, May 1, Elder Hubert Case was the speaker, and his text was "Blessed are they that do his commandments." He admonished the Saints to live up to the law, advising them to be boosters rather than knockers.

The program committee is working assiduously on Mother's Day plans. Miss Elinor Smith will be present with her help to add to the attractiveness of the service.

Webb City, Missouri

Second and Oronogo Streets

Elder Amos T. Higdon, district president, made this branch a visit not long ago, preaching two excellent sermons on Sunday and ministering in other profitable ways.

Since the season of springtime has arrived, the Saints in this vicinity seem to have taken new courage. Each one is eager to do his bit to advance the Lord's work. Every department of the church is functioning to full capacity. Branch officials are alert to their duties and grasp every opportunity to advance the cause of Zion. The women are trying to raise funds to make some much-needed repairs on the church building.

Music in this branch during the winter months has been very helpful. The church choir took up the study of "The Beauty and Ministry of the Choir," or "Choir Etiquette." Through the topics discussed the singers have learned many things to help them more acceptably render their service. They know that it is the message from the heart of the singer which touches the heart of the hearer; thus is a song a prayer to God. These studies were discontinued until a later date in order that time and study might be given the Easter music which was as follows:

On Easter morning the pastor's theme was "The Power of the Cross." This was effectively carried out with the old rugged cross standing at the back of the stage before a background of ferns and flowers. The choir sang "The Old, Rugged Cross," and the anthem, "Cross, Crown and Throne." A duet, "Alone," a musical picture of the Savior alone in his sorrow and suffering, was sung by Ruth Hobart and

Hazel Spencer. The congregation sang "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross." After the invocation a solo, "O Silent Voice," was sung by Harold Holton. The sermon was preached by Branch President I. O. Waldron. And the service closed with the singing of "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

On that day a vesper service by the choir appealed to the spirit of worship of the entire branch. Beautiful music, prayer, Scripture reading, and instrumental selections made the service appropriately commemorative of Easter, portraying the death and resurrection of the Savior. As a setting for the service a life-sized picture of Christ on the cross stood in the background surrounded with ferns and flowers, and as the program proceeded, the scene was changed to that of the resurrection, Christ walking in the garden. These pictures were drawn by Brother Daniel Holmes.

To produce a beautiful service requires work, but work brings its own merits, and truly, God's people are not left along in their efforts—many times they feel the touch of the divine.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Historic Center Alive in Gospel

Another stone relic of the temple has been presented to our people by T. P. Baxter and is to be placed in the cemetery lot near the graves of the Martyrs. The three Baxter brothers, who are descendants of the Icarians and large fruit growers of this community, each came into possession of one of the large stone bases of a pilaster on which rested one of the moon faces of the Nauvoo temple. E. J. Baxter presented his stone to our people a few years ago and it was placed in the cemetery where it has been viewed with interest by thousands of visitors. The third stone, owned by C. J. Baxter, reposes in the yard of the Oriental Hotel.

March 17 was the ninetieth anniversary of the National Woman's Relief Society, which was organized in Nauvoo by Joseph Smith, the prophet. Eighteen women were present and Emma Smith was chosen to be the first president. This society is said to have been America's first Woman's Relief Society, and has grown to a membership of sixty-three thousand. It is both national and international in its scope. Today it is a member of the National Conference of Special Work and the National Council of Women. The aims of the society were to manifest benevolence irrespective of creed or nationality, to care for the poor, the sick and unfortunate, to minister where death reigns, to assist in correcting the morals and strengthening the virtues of community life, to foster a love for religion, education, culture and refinement, and in the ninety years of its existence, the organization has manifested the spirit of its original purposes.

Apostle Hanson made a tour of this district a short time ago and spent a day in Nauvoo. Brother Page notified the principal of the high school, and an invitation was given Brother Hanson to talk to the students on the noted places he had visited. This was enjoyed so much that a number of them came to the church in the evening to hear Brother Hanson's talk on "Lessons From Palestine."

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, James E. Bishop, and Reginald Collins spent a few days in Nauvoo en route to General Conference. Brother Griffiths was the speaker on Sunday morning and, under the influence of the Spirit, delivered a message to the Saints. Brother Bishop was the speaker in the evening.

Several carloads of Saints returning home from the conference, stopped overnight in Nauvoo. Among these were David Williams, former district president and his wife returning to their mission in Canada, and with them were two brothers from Ontario, Joel Shaw of Brigden, and William T. Ruddich, of Courtright. The others were Sister Isaac Andrew and Brother and Sister William Andrew, of Essex; Mrs. Marie Connor, of Windsor; Bishop John C. Demt and wife of London; Brother Winegarden and wife, and Joseph Kochis and wife, of Lorain, Ohio; B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, and Brother and Sister Bennet, Mrs. Mary Tubbs, and Buel Shelley, of Free Soil, Michigan.

Brother and Sister Page are again busy with visitors to the historic buildings. They report thirty visitors last Sunday. The principal of the high school brought the students to the Mansion House one day recently, that they might hear from Brother Page the correct information concerning this noted place.

This branch has purchased fifty of the new songbooks, and an installation service was held one evening with special songs from this collection and a talk by Brother Page on the hymnbooks used by our church. He had copies of the first book used by the Reorganization, Latter Day Saint Hymns, published in 1864 in Cincinnati, Ohio; the Saints' Harp, published in Plano in 1870, and the Winnowed Songs, used by the Sunday school until the publication of Zion's Praises.

The Nauvoo Branch Choir united with that of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches in giving an Easter Cantata, under the direction of Miss Mary Faith Karr, supervisor of music of the public school. This was presented in the Methodist Church to a large and appreciative audience.

Brother and Sister W. D. Marshall have gone to Muscatine, Iowa, for a couple of week's treatment at the Baker Institute.

Sister J. W. Layton was the only local member privileged to attend the General Conference. She gave a resumé of the conference last Sunday evening, but found words inadequate to convey to us the power that was present at all the services.

Thayer, Missouri

Carrying Forward Church Program

April 23.—Each member in Thayer is doing his part to carry forward the great latter-day work. It was cause for regret that most of this group were unable to attend General Conference, nevertheless all felt the spirit which ruled there, and with it they are sure they can carry their work towards the goal of the church.

One thing which makes the members happy is that before many days, every Saint in the branch will be a tithe payer. That is the present hope. As a result of a recent visit from Brother W. E. Haden, the local members are eager to do their very best to put everything to work and to let their light shine so that all shall be on the peak of happiness. Brother Haden is a welcome visitor; he seems to lift up the members. On his last visit he and Brother Davis talked to a young couple who, Thayer members think, will soon come into the church.

The general church program has gone forward here in a most satisfactory way. Sister Hancock who is superintendent of the women's club, has done much. For some time the members of the Sunday school classes were asked to work and save, each putting in a dollar for something the purpose of which he did not know. Each one sacrificed and lately learned what he was working for—a communion set. It is delightful to see how happy they are with this new piece of equipment. Sister Miller was in charge of the enterprise.

At a recent business meeting the branch voted to buy some new hymnbooks. Of these they are proud. A playground is being prepared for the children. In fact, the members are trying in every way to better the branch.

Something has been said about a conference in Thayer sometime in late June or July, and the members are happy for that privilege. They will do their part to make the gathering successful, and look forward to a large assembly of Saints.

Portland, Oregon

The Saints were blessed and strengthened in the early winter when Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin, and later, Apostle F. Henry Edwards held special meetings here and in Vancouver, Washington. In January the Saints here were encouraged by a visit from President F. M. Smith. The people were very happy to have their leader here, even though the time was short.

In February an institute was conducted which was considered by all who attended the best Portland has ever experienced. Brother and Sister Baldwin, Apostle Edwards, and Sister Dana McDole, of Seattle, taught classes.

At Christmas the members witnessed two of the loveliest and most inspiring pageants Portland Branch has ever had. The adult group gave "The Star Came," outlined in the December, 1931, McCall's. The settings, costumes, music, and the spirit in which it was acted and spoken, were an inspiration to all—it was more than entertainment. In the third procession, Brother Dan Sorden gave the reading, "The Other Wise Man," which fitted beautifully into the story. The whole pageant was a great splash of color and was wonderfully well done. Yet we are told by the directors that it was perhaps one of the simplest and most easily performed things the branch has had in some time. Workers recommend it to small and large branches alike.

The children pantomimed "When the Chimes Rang" for their Christmas program on Wednesday night. The rostrum was arranged to represent the front of an old vine-covered cathedral, with leaded windows through which filtered a dim light. Through the open door the altar on which burned two candles could be seen. Back of this was a lovely picture of the Sistine Madonna. The children in costume acted out the story as it was read by Sister Gladys Sorden. They did their parts splendidly and sincerely and after the pageant, all of them marched up past the altar to leave their sacrifice offerings, offerings which had meant doing without candy, gum, funny papers, and their annual church school Christmas treat of candy and nuts which they voted to forego. It was regretted that children's leaders from all over the city could not have seen this lovely pageant and its setting: Sister Gladys Sorden, Leslie Hunt, Willis Witherbee and Sister Rose Clark were responsible for the lovely setting.

The second Sunday in March, Portland was visited by Brother and Sister Dana McDole, of Seattle. Brother McDole spoke morning and evening, and his sermons were greatly enjoyed by the Saints here. Brother and Sister Sorden spent the preceding Sunday in Seattle, Brother Sorden speaking in the evening, and both attended a workers' conference held by Sister McDole for church school leaders. Brother Sorden spoke at the conference on "Church Worship."

Portland Branch was made to rejoice recently when Earl Bryson united with the church at a service on Wednesday evening. The font was beautifully decorated. The choir sang, "The Gospel Is the Power of God," and a wonderful spirit was prevalent throughout the service. Brother Bryson has been a faithful member of the choir for almost two years, and the Saints were happy to have him unite with the church through the ordinance of baptism. Mrs. Whiting of Longview, Washington, was baptized during the March institute.

Easter was observed with a spiritual sermon from Pastor Dan Sorden in the morning and a worship program made up mostly of music by the choir in the evening. Soloists were Fay Buchanan, Rosetta Simpson, and Freda Young, sopranos; Lloyd Appleman, baritone, and Ardath Young, contralto.

Elder and Sister Sorden and their daughter, Marilyn, and the religious education director, Albert Livingston, attended the General Conference.

Honolulu Saints Go Forward

United in Prayer Service April 6

The three branches of Honolulu held joint sacrament service at the main branch at 1680 Mott Smith Drive, April 3. Over one hundred were present and the good Spirit was there. Joint meetings of this kind are held the first Sunday of each quarter.

After serving the bread and wine, Brother Waller addressed the congregation in the opening of the service. The Saints felt inspired by those words, and the testimonies which followed caused them to feel that the work here is going forward.

On the following Wednesday, at 7.30 p. m., the Saints had midweek prayer meeting, and it being April 6, were reminded of the birth of this great latter-day work. This service ran over the usual time by thirty minutes, the prayers and testimonies being centered on the birth of the church and this conference—the General Conference of 1932.

On Easter Sunday each Sunday school put on an Easter program. At 7.30 p. m., the choir at the main branch rendered its cantata. The choir had not practiced very much and several expressed the idea, before they recited, that they felt as if they were going to make a failure, but this was another time when we felt the good spirit was present, and each singer did well.

At the main branch on Easter Sunday the church decorations were something to be proud of and for them credit goes to the women. Decorations are to be seen every Sunday in the year. The sisters in Honolulu show a splendid spirit in work of this kind. They bring to the church the most beautiful flowers and many other things to match. They also carry their end of the financial problem. At the last business meeting they reported a gain of sixty dollars from the sale of Lalās (Hawaiian food) for the past two months, and only a few of them were at work. This is just one instance—they are always donating.

The young people meet each Friday night on the playground lot and volley ball is the main event. When school vacation comes they hope to meet at the beach for a good swim.

Brother Waller visited the larger island, Hawaii, last week and tells the Saints here that he met with the members in Hilo and preached to them one evening. Also he reports good interest there and says Brother R. L. Macrae is improving from the flu attack which lately seized him.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

A wonderful spirit reigned at the April 3, sacrament service, and every member was greatly encouraged. The heavenly Father spoke to his people through two of his faithful servants, and the Saints rejoiced in the gospel and thanked him for a Prophet to lead them.

Twenty-five were present at the meeting of the women's department April 14. A paper showing that the same gospel preached by Adam was preached in the time of Enoch, Noah, and Moses, was read by Vassie Sheets, and Elizabeth Wemlinger read a splendid paper on "Sacrifice."

The priesthood met on the first Tuesday of the month in their regular service, discussing branch and church subjects.

Sermons this month have been inspiring and helpful. As a result of them the Saints more fully understand the purpose of the church. Among the speakers of the month were A. E. Anderton, H. E. French, G. H. Kirkendall, J. E. Matthews, O. J. Tary, Chester Carey, and John R. Grice.

Visitors returning from General Conference were Brother and Sister T. G. Whipple, of Connecticut, and Brother O. J. Tary, of Wheeling, West Virginia.

Communication from Bishop's Agent

To Church Solicitors, Saints, and Friends, of the Central Nebraska District, Greeting:

The General Conference is over. In many respects it was one of the greatest conferences held by the Reorganization. Preceded by three days of fasting and prayer, its beginning was auspicious, and its ending glorious. It was history-making, and epochal in character. In a fine spirit of fraternal love and fellowship, adjustments were made, differences were eliminated, reconciliations were effected, which place the entire work of the church on a genuinely permanent basis. Reinstatements were made, the personnel of the Presiding Bishopric was changed, the Quorum of Twelve was filled, and men were called to various offices, and ordained, in accordance with the revelation coming to the church through President Frederick M. Smith. All of this brought great rejoicing. The earnest desire to cooperate in consecrated effort, and a firm determination to carry effectively forward the work of the church was evidenced in speech and action throughout the sessions. Spiritually and organically the church is in better position than ever before to carry forward the work successfully. The new financial program adopted contemplates the paying of the church debt, which will be accomplished in due time.

So far, no provision has been made by the general authorities for missionary work in our district. Some action may follow later on. In the meantime, it is expedient that the local ministry earnestly and prayerfully endeavor to uphold the gospel banner, teaching by precept and example the message of life as opportunity is offered, and wisdom directs.

So far this year, Central Nebraska District is behind on the average monthly quota, in making up its total quota of $1,200 for the year 1932. It will require renewed and diligent effort throughout the remainder of this year to make our quota. The church solicitors are earnestly urged to visit each month every member, and friend—including scattered members, who are within their respective territories, cooperating with the branch, and group presidents, also church school directors, thus affording all the privilege of contributing to the needs of the church, and supporting its financial program, also performing our duty in helping to build up the Lord's work. Yes, the financial situation over the country is acute, but there are indications which indicate improvement, and we confidently look forward to better times. So with keen appreciation of its importance, and with faith unflinching, let us move forward in accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. United in a common cause, all working together in the spirit of unity, peace, and love, the necessary money will be forthcoming, the church debt will be paid, the Saints be prospered and blessed of the Lord in a marked degree. "Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse,

Apostle E. J. Gleazer to Australia

It takes faith to go on a mission more than ten thousand miles from home in these hard times, but Apostle E. J. Gleazer looks forward with pleasure to his work in the Australasian Mission. He will sail for Australia from San Francisco on the S. S. Maunganui, June 8, with Apostle G. G. Lewis.

Since this is not a pleasure trip, but one made on church business, the missionaries plan to make every minute count. They will stop one month in the Society Islands and three weeks in New Zealand, these places being a part of their mission. They have an extensive field, Australia alone being larger than the mainland of the United States.

Brother and Sister Gleazer have been helped by inspiration to make their adjustments to this new piece of work for the church. As he will be gone for a period of only two years, he is leaving his family in Independence.

Vinalhaven Women Help Church

The branch at Vinalhaven, Maine, is enjoying the benefits of divine help in temporal matters and the support of its loyal women. Its church building now boasts a piano and new seats. For some time the church had needed new pews, and its women had been saving towards the purchase of them, having estimated the cost to be about three hundred dollars. They had saved a sum of one hundred and eighty-nine dollars for this purpose when, a few months ago, the general church appealed for help in paying its debts and meeting its budget. Quickly, generously, the women answered that call—they sent one hundred dollars to headquarters. And when they turned to their treasury, their dream of new equipment for the local church seemed to be indefinitely postponed.

But a heavenly Helper opened up the way. A local denomination, because of the fewness of its members, closed its church doors and made a surprising sales offer to the Saints of not only seats but piano also, all as good as new. In this offer Vinalhaven women saw more than a bargain; it was almost a gift. They accepted, and made the entire purchase for seventy-five dollars.

Summer Program for Western Oklahoma

May Day opened the program of summer activities for Western Oklahoma District with rally services at Davidson. Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, district president, expects with the help of his counselors, Elders E. E. Crownover and B. A. Howard, to hold similar meetings during the summer months in various localities. All branches and groups desiring services are notifying him of their needs. In these rally day gatherings the help of all the district priesthood will be required. Brother Howard, who is also superintendent of Religious Education for the district, plans to conduct class work as opportunity affords.

Standing High Council Receives New Members

The Standing High Council met on Monday evening, May 2, at the Auditorium, for the first time since General Conference, which filled vacancies in the body with a number of new appointments. Because of the number of new men present it was thought well to give some instruction and information. With the meeting in charge of President Frederick M. Smith, and President F. M. McDowell present, R. T. Cooper was invited to read a paper on the history and functions of the body. The new members also received their initiation in the transaction of business during the first session.

Good Work of Evangelist J. H. N. Jones

Among the many church workers who have contributed to the good spiritual tone and actual achievements of the Australasian Mission is Evangelist J. H. N. Jones. In the past several months he has extended his patriarchal labors over three states, New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, being well received at all places. His report to the late mission conference lists a tremendous amount of activities, an important item being the delivery of one hundred and forty-two blessings. Though his work is strenuous, he finds it congenial and testifies that he has been sustained with strength for his tasks far exceeding his expectations. He wishes to continue his services so long as health shall permit.

Enter and Reap

"The field is ripe unto the harvest. Enter and reap."

This figure of speech is used much by our writers and speakers in telling of the prospects in certain fields, and in trying to stimulate an aroused activity in greater endeavor. Recently in reading the manuscript memoirs of Joseph Smith we came across the following beautiful language expressing this figure of speech in a new way. I commend it to the careful reading of our ministry, in the hope that it may encourage them to persist in the good work of sounding the gospel trumpet, and inviting all to come to Christ, and perhaps emboldening them to enter the new places where sheaves are still to be garnered. He writes:

"Old and beaten paths are easily trodden, but whoso would gather the loveliest flowers, the largest and sweetest fruits, will not find them in the dusty road or usual path; he must get out into the broad meadow and the deep forest. Before us, brethren, lies the plain with ripening grain ready for the sickle. A timid or fearful worker will stand aimlessly near the edge, content to bind a stray sheaf or two, rest in the shade, or wander futilely in the wake of some more active laborer. The bolder reaper, with heart alive to the necessity of working while yet the sun is in full noontide, ere the night shall approach, toils eagerly where the sheaves lie thickest, where the heat fiercely burns, and where other and often adverse workers strongly contend for the prizes of the harvest.

"Oblivious to the assaults of the enemy, though open to fatigue, hunger, and thirst, such a minister persists in reaping steadily, intent only upon his labors and to perform them acceptably to the God he serves. What a crown shall be his, and what a joy!"

The 1932 Reunion Schedule

Elsewhere in this issue of the Herald the reader will find a tentative schedule of reunions for 1932. District officers and others interested in reunion activities should examine this list carefully reporting any errors or omissions to the office of the First Presidency.

The continuation of the depression throughout the United States and Canada undoubtedly accounts for the calling off of a number of the reunions. Others have been combined in harmony with the policy of recent years. Some of the committees are as yet uncertain as to the wisdom of attempting a reunion this year. All in all, the list contains only about half of the usual number. In this connection, however, it should be said that in many places series of institutes, conventions, and two-day meetings have been arranged in lieu of the reunion. In such cases the general officers pledge their support and urge the cooperation of the Saints to the end that such gatherings as well as the reunions shall be made the occasion for a definite growth on the part of all participating.

The Divine benediction of the late General Conference, the unity of the ministry, our well-defined objectives, and the gigantic task confronting the church, all would seem to justify a plea that public gatherings involving the time and financial support of our people be made to count in every way possible towards the achievement of our goals. Considering the conditions prevailing both in the world and in the church, the present is hardly a time for carelessly planned and indifferently administered activities and programs. Is not the conservation of time and energy as vital to the success of our present church endeavor as the conservation of our finances?

F. M. McD.

Encouragement and Warning

The report of the Presiding Bishopric under the title, "Financial News," contains reason for hope, yet it warns us of the danger that confronts us.

At this time of the year, when the resources of the people are probably at their lowest ebb, and the power of giving is accordingly greatly curtailed, it is encouraging to note that we have come so near paying the operating expenses of the church. It is a warning to us that we must do more than we have done if we are to bring the church safely through to a solution of its problems.

We can rejoice that the recent conference has built the morale of the people to a condition of faith and unity not hitherto approached in a number of years. Those who have withheld their support for one reason and another now turn to the church whole-heartedly and lend their aid.

It will be noted by those who read the statement by the Bishopric that even if we had met expenses, there would have been nothing to apply for debt reduction. The expenses must be paid before any money can go to the debts. So long as we continue merely to pay expenses that long we will make no progress, and must continue to carry the heavy load of interest. Only by increasing the income of the church to a point where there is some surplus over the operating expenses can we ever hope to rid ourselves of the burden. There is no other means of escape.

Having proved that we can carry the load, there is only one thing for us to do; and that is to go forward, gaining strength as we accustom ourselves to our task.

Let us pray for faith and strength that we may not falter in the performance of our duty. L. L.

Blue Pencil Notes

"It must be," remarked Deacon Goodentart, "that the man who said that blood is thicker than water, never saw the Missouri River in the Springtime."

Radio is a strange hodgpodge. We listen to a soul-stirring religious program, closing with the song, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Immediately it is announced that "Beatrice Highflyer" will tell all beauty fans how to get rid of blackheads, enlarged pores, rough elbows, and how to make their eyes look larger, more luminous and enticing than they naturally are. A patriotic appeal from President Hoover is sandwiched in between two cigaret programs. And so on and on far into the night.

An Independence couple seem to have solved one problem. Each year on the wife's birthday the husband gives her a five dollar gold piece; then when his birthday comes round she gives him a five dollar gold piece. Their friends say that one gold piece has served them for years. The catch seems to be to get the gold piece to start the system with.

The recent general conference was one of the most important that we have ever held; and it was one of the best that we have had in many years. The prayers and preparation of the Saints contributed to the success of the conference; and one splendid contribution was the sustained effort of the men of the ministry to get together and work together as men of God ought to do. The reward came at the end of conference in the revelation of the Divine will and the happiness and good fellowship that descended upon the conference. Many of the ministry remained in Independence for the Sunday following the adjournment and enjoyed a "good old time" priesthood meeting in the Stone Church in the afternoon. At the close they gathered in groups in front of the church, conversing, shaking hands, expressing their happiness. "This is like old times," was the oft heard remark. All seemed happy and eager to get to work. Joy in service makes hard tasks pleasant.

In the days of my early ministry I had a most deep-seated faith in the power of brotherly kindness, patience, charity, to enable men to work together in peace. My first official pastorate confirmed me in that belief. I was sent to a branch that had long been torn asunder by strife. When President F. M. Smith notified me of the appointment he said: "You will find a condition to test your long headedness—if you have any." He seemed none too sure that I had any—and I was even less certain in my own mind. So for four years it was my job to mix oil and water into a state of emulsion, as it were. I had constantly to preach from pulpit and in the home, and by example, the beauty and power of brotherly love and good fellowship in our work. In the end I saw the branch united. They became one in purpose and in work. So I was confirmed in my belief that "the gospel will work." It is practical. I can not see why there should be any two men in the church that can not work together, or any group of men and women that can not work together. When there is a failure to work together some one has failed to learn and apply the first principles of the religion of Jesus Christ, the simple A. B. C. lessons of brotherhood. Of more recent years, like many others, I became drawn into church controversies, the discussion of which estranged brethren. I have returned to the convictions of my early ministry. I was happy in the peace and good will that marked the closing sessions of the conference. Our only hope lies in maintaining that spirit. Under that spirit we can solve our problems and overcome our obstacles. Without it we are divided and hopeless. Let us remember the admonition of our Master, that if we would bring a gift to his altar, but recall that our brother has aught against us, we shall first go and make peace with our brother, and then come and offer our gift.

The years pile up relentlessly
And crush us down, unless, stair-wise,
We put them under foot and climb
With courage yearly toward the skies.

But the soft years in folly spent,
The wasted years that pass so fleet,
The idle years of luxury,
They have no substance to our feet.

The long hard years are granite rocks
Beneath our steps,—or oaken beams;
The years in love and service spent
Are golden stairs of prophets' dreams.

Thus one may climb, if he so wills,
And has the heart and soul to climb;
And higher stand as years shall lift
Their rugged road to the sublime.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Tentative Reunion Schedule for 1932

We are printing herewith a tentative schedule of reunions for the summer of 1932. The list is especially short this year on account of the somewhat disturbing financial conditions prevailing throughout the United States and Canada.

It will be noted that in some instances the place at which the proposed reunion is to be held is not stated. In other instances the date is not given. These omissions occur because our office has not yet been furnished the necessary information. District presidents and chairmen of reunion committees should see that these items are reported to the office of the first Presidency at once.

The reunion calendar, when perfected, will be reprinted from week to week for the convenience of our readers.

To do anything worth doing in this world one must have something in his head, and the more one has in his head the less likely he is to try to do something that requires only unusual powers of his heels, his arms, or his heart.—George Henry Parrish.

Our Defense of Prayer

It is one of the strong features of our faith that we believe in prayer. We believe in a God who hears and answers prayers, insofar as it is within his divine wisdom to do so.

We have no apologies to offer for our belief in prayer. Our respect for it and our belief in it have grown out of long experience. We have seen the sick healed, the discouraged rebuilt in hope, and the lives of men and women lifted to higher planes of righteousness and happiness by the power that it calls into activity. The testimonies that we have heard and the testimonies that we bear are stronger than all the arguments that may be made on the subject.

The principal defense of prayer is the great body of testimony that has grown out of the life experiences of so many people. Both sociology and psychology present their views of it, but neither of the standard views which these fields of learning present offers any adequate or satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon. There is something in prayer which goes beyond human power, and therefore eludes human explanation. If it were not so, prayer would be a useless occupation of time and a wasted consumption of energy.

Much of the religious life of this people has its basis in prayer. It is our conviction that the subject should be given fuller treatment than it has received heretofore, for the subject demands it.

With this object before us, we have carried out the plan of establishing this department under the title, "The Circle of Prayer." We look forward to the uniting of all of the people of the church in a closer circle of fellowship through the interest in prayer.

Eventually everything must be justified by its practical effect. This philosophy of pragmatism colors the whole attitude of the present generation. If the test of practical effect is to be accepted as a measure of value, there is no stronger nor more commendable feature of our faith than prayer. It is the simplest fundamental and the first step of conversion. It continues through one's religious life, and one never outgrows it without losing the strong and familiar sense of his spiritual values.

Sister Abner Tucker, of Deer Creek, Minnesota, desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. A sufferer from arthritis for more than twenty years, she is now completely helpless and her suffering and

THE SPIRITUAL MINISTRY OF HEALING

By F. H. Edwards

1. Where does the author say human suffering and misery are most abundant, in Christian or non-Christian lands? What significance does this have for Christianity? Should it make skeptical people who live in normally Christian lands grateful?

2. What does the author have to say about the relation of physical and spiritual healing? Does bodily pain tend to produce spiritual distress? Can mental trouble derange the bodily functions? What is the "soul of man"?

AUTOBIOGRAPHY

By J. F. Mintun

sleeplessness are more than she can bear. She asks only to receive relief and comfort and more strength, if it is God's will.

Martha Turnbow, of Palmersville, Tennessee, writes that she has received help from the prayers of the Saints. However, she is still suffering severely from rheumatism and heart trouble, as well as some other afflictions, and asks that she be remembered in prayer again, that if she may not be healed she may obtain relief from her suffering.

H. F. Rutherford, of Carson, Iowa, desires the prayers of the Saints that he may be healed of a serious affliction, if it be the Lord's will.

It is claimed by some that a man is best judged by his conduct in the smaller affairs of life rather than by what he does in the bigger or more important accomplishments, and there may be some truth in that; yet the real characteristics are quite likely to crop out in either case, though we may be more ready to read the signs of conduct in the more common things.

It is often said that a man at play reveals his true self more clearly than when behind the "reserves" and "fronts" of business life; yet a study of both will doubtless reveal the same roots of social reaction.

One may in business appear to be kind, for business reasons, where material returns are apt to follow the display of kindness, yet the truly kind man displays his wares of kindness where it brings no material rewards. If he is kind in small matters, he is quite certain to be kind when the test of weightier things is applied.

After all it is quite true that a man may be judged by his reactions to the smaller things in life. In his home and every day life, on the field of recreation a man reveals himself, and his friends learn to know him.

How are you known to your friends and intimate acquaintances?

F. M. S.

We have come to the end of a calamitous year. A paralysis which we do not seem to be able to diagnose has overtaken our machine civilization. In a world that is bursting with goods and that has limitless capacity to produce them, distress and want on a wide scale have appeared like ghosts at the feast. We are hungry in the midst of plenty. We are unemployed in the face of an unparalleled need of commodities. We starve for the very goods our factories are clamoring to produce.

The year 1931 has seen this creeping paralysis fasten itself with a surer hold on the industry of the world. Fifteen nations, involving more than a quarter of the population of the globe, have been forced off the gold standard. Ten countries have defaulted on their external obligations. Revolution and social disorder have affected nearly half the people in the world. The anxiety that marked the passing of 1930 has deepened. Today the future seems far more uncertain than it did twelve months ago.—Raymond T. Fosdick, in the New York Times Magazine.

Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?—Words of Jesus.

The Spiritual Ministry of Healing

By F. H. Edwards

The gospel of Jesus Christ is a gospel of love and of joy and of radiant life. This is never more apparent than when we come into close contact with the appalling suffering and ignorance which prevails throughout the non-Christian world. Non-Christian lands are lands of pain. They know all the diseases common to our own land, plus a great number of others which have been banished from our midst; and these are intensified by the presence of ignorance and filth and superstition.

It is no accident that Christian lands are lands of comparative enlightenment and peace and power. Jesus himself set the example of ministering to the sick. He cited among the proofs of his Messiahship the fact that the blind received their sight, the lame walked, the lepers were cleansed and the deaf heard. Twenty-four of his thirty-six miracles were miracles of physical healing. We are not therefore doing violence to the spirit of the Master or of Christianity when we apply to the nurses who are now being graduated the words which were first applied to Peter and John: "They recognized them as companions of Jesus."

Physical and Spiritual Healing Are Allied

One of the marks of our slow but steady progress is that we are now getting beyond the point where there is latent antagonism between the minister of religion and the minister of health. We remember that Carlyle was a pessimist who suffered from ill health and that Browning was an optimist of noteworthy physical fitness. If these two stood by themselves it would be completely unscientific to deduce any conclusion from these isolated facts. But they are types. We know from experience that ill health tends to breed pessimism and despair and that vigorous health tends to give rise to joy and faith and hope. We know that many persons are unhappy, disorganized, out of harmony and losing their grip on themselves because of physical disease. The advice needed by some persons who wait on us ministers is advice to see a dentist, and while it might once have been sacrilege to say this yet we now realize that this is frequently true. Latter Day Saints, particularly, know that "the spirit and the body is the soul of man" and that a fit body is part of a fully living soul.

While the minister of religion is recognizing more and more fully that he needs as a partner the minister of physical health, the reverse is also true. Doctors are becoming more and more aware of the dire physical resultants of such spiritual disorders as anger, fear, malice, jealousy, envy, etc. These spiritual sins and diseases can poison life as surely as spoiled foods can and do. Unworthy passions, lack of self-control, habitual suspicion, irritability, and tempestuous anger not only make persons unlovely and unpopular, but also create definite poisons in the physical system.

In view of these things it is evident that the ministry of health and the ministry of righteousness are not separate and distinct functions. On the contrary, they are so closely allied as to be essentially one. While some of us may emphasize one aspect of the service of God and others may emphasize another aspect of this same service, it should be that one and self-same Spirit which works through us all to the one great purpose of building up men and women who shall be fit citizens of the kingdom of God.

Morning Knowledge

The history of religion seems to indicate that men are most easily religious when they are at the limit of their reach. When the fates have seemed too strong, men have prayed. When joys and sorrows have seemed too much, they have worshiped. When intellectual problems have seemed overwhelming, and men have not been able to make sense of things without faith in God they have found refuge in the adventure of belief. Yet religion includes much more than doings and emotions and ideas to which we are compelled at the end of our reach. At its best it means a ready and affectionate opening of our whole nature to the friendly Divinity who is behind all things and in all things and through all things.

Medieval thinkers recognized the importance of this religious sensitiveness. They said that scientific knowledge is indispensable, but they called it "cognitio vespertina" which means "evening knowledge." Such scientific knowledge is cold and gray and shadowy. Between the points of light which show here and there are great gaps of darkness, where knowledge gives way to speculation and sometimes to despair. The same medieval thinkers called religious knowledge "cognitio matutina." This means "morning knowledge," the knowledge which grips us when we wake in the morning and see life in the growing light of a new day.

I wish for the nurses who are graduating at this time the kind of assurance of God and of goodness which envelops us when we wake in the morning fresh and strong and happy and grateful. I wish for them the Easter knowledge, the assurance of God and of his divine purpose which seems natural and certain on a radiant Easter morning. I wish for them spring knowledge, the knowledge of God which is borne in on our souls when we see all nature bursting into life and all life full of promise and joy. I wish for them the knowledge that grows naturally with beauty and life and sweetness and freshness. I feel that this was what Browning had in his mind and heart when he wrote:

The year's at the spring;
The day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hillside's dew pearled;
The lark's on the wing;
The snail's on the thorn;
God's in his Heaven—
All's right with the world.

I wish for our friends the knowledge of the whole day; evening knowledge which comes with training: deftness, surety, accuracy, patience, understanding. I wish also for cheer, kindness, courage, hope. And I wish behind all and shining through each and every day the clear "morning" assurance of God and of the immortality and eternal life which he is building in those who love him.

Inclusive Prayer Life

Such morning knowledge does not come unbidden. It is the fruitage of an exalted way of life. The wicked man never knows its meaning. Its most valued ally is a rich and inclusive prayer life.

In the second place, then, I wish for you an inclusive prayer life. The nurses who are now graduating will expect to be shut in with the shut-ins, and must not permit their lives to become narrow or circumscribed or petty.

Paul, the greatest statesman of Christian history, ministered in many small places and among many people of small caliber. Yet he never lost the universal touch. He dreamed of preaching in the Imperial City, and that vision of proclaiming the word of God in Rome itself kept his mind and heart open to the universal message of the gospel of Christ.

Jesus himself kept the world in his heart. His conversation with single individuals is hall-marked with the stamp of an universal interest which leaps over the barriers of time and space. Jesus loved men, all men, everywhere. He shared his Father's interest in them. Because of this his words come to every one of us, even at this distant date, with a wealth of meaning and power with which no other words have ever been enriched.

Doctor Jowett tells us that on one occasion he called on a cobbler who lived in an English seaside town. The man worked alone in a tiny room, and Doctor Jowett asked whether he was ever oppressed by the seeming imprisonment of this small chamber. "No," answered the cobbler, "if I begin to feel that way, I just open this door which shows the boundless ocean." The biggest door out of imprisoned lives into the boundless glories of universal love is through an inclusive and generous prayer life.

One of our young ministers wrote recently: "Last summer I visited Old Orchard and fell in love with the sea. I have never crossed the Atlantic, nor taken a trip on the Pacific. I have never sailed in tropical waters. But I know the sea. I stood at Old Orchard and met it." So also can we know God. We can meet him at the point where his boundless purpose touches and enriches our small lives.

A Cheerful Sense of Spiritual Responsibility

These, our graduating friends, will be in close touch with people at a time when it is particularly easy to lose heart and hope. Only the exceptional person can be optimistic during ill health. Invalids are likely to take a gloomy view of themselves and of things in general. A major task of those who minister among these sick persons is to hold them up to a sense of their greatest possibilities. Ill health must not generate despair. Even pain and sorrow must bring men nearer to God.

The Cleveland clinical disaster was a great evil; but God was in it. Divinity was not in that disaster in the sense that God brought it to pass in order to punish men for their evil deeds. But God was in the hearts of the self-sacrificing doctors and nurses. One doctor worked all day and when he reached home at night he, too, felt the effects of the gas, and he, too, knew that he must die. His last hours were spent in giving directions regarding the care of the patients whom he had served during the day, and to the protests of his wife he answered, "My dear, these people must be cared for."

God is in war. Not that he brings this greatest international crime onto the earth, setting men at each other's throats until the prayers of the saints are drowned in the cries of men in agony; but in the courage and sacrifice and devotion of the heroes of all nations.

God was in the crucifixion. Not in the anger and hate and blindness which killed the Lord Jesus, but in the Divinity which made the cross a throne. He was present in the devotion and forgiveness of His Son.

So all of us, as workers together with God, are responsible for helping people to find good—and not evil—in their pain. And this is true, even though we are only able to do this effectively as we find God through our own sorrow. A minister and an unbeliever were close personal friends. The wife of the unbeliever died, and the minister did his utmost to comfort him, but the unbeliever only said, "You do not understand. No such thing as faith can help me now. All I want is my wife. If I can not have her back, nothing can help." For a time the minister had a sense of frustration. Then, six months later, his brilliant and charming wife was killed instantaneously in an automobile accident. Standing by the side of her bier, the minister then said to his unbelieving friend, "My friend, six months ago you told me that I did not understand, and that I could not comfort you in your bereavement. It was true. I did not understand. But today understanding is borne out of my own agony. Yet I tell you, with my own heart torn and bleeding, that I am finding grace and healing in my knowledge that my Master understands and suffers with me."

I do not wish sorrow for these young people. It will come, without any plea of mine. Indeed, the best of them are likely to suffer most deeply, for love means infinite capacity for suffering as well as infinite capacity for rejoicing. But I do hope for them, and for all of us, an enhanced sense of spiritual responsibility, so that even our pain shall give us greater power to help our fellows live for the highest.

Spiritual Courage

Finally, these our young friends will need spiritual courage. They will need physical courage, too, but I am at this time more concerned with its spiritual parallel.

Despondency comes to all of us. It attacks every one who seeks to lose himself in a great Cause. So all persons who take life seriously, as a noble adventure, need a special endowment of the courage which can endure.

William Lloyd Garrison was a great opponent of slavery. He was once captured by a mob who dragged him through the streets of Boston with a rope around his neck as a lesson to him and to others that he must abandon his insistence on the abolition of slavery. The morning after that event was the morning of despair for Garrison. Yet that outrage won him his most remarkable convert, Wendell Phillips. His sacrifice was productive because he had the courage to keep on. When we, like Elijah, are inclined to cry out, "I, even I only, am left," we must remember that there are invisible forces fighting with us if we only have the faith and courage to join our strength with them.

I have myself received great help from an inscription found on the grave of a Greek sailor:

A ship-wrecked mariner bids you set sail,
For many a barque, when I was lost,
Weathered the gale.

Conclusion

I wish, then, for these young graduates, and for all of us: Morning knowledge—inclusive prayer—a cheerful acceptance of spiritual responsibility—courage that shall endure. As Harry Emerson Fosdick has pointed out, men are like flagstaffs. It does not matter how tall they are. It does not matter much where they are located. But it does matter infinitely what colors they fly. Our friends will not succeed if they minister merely to the physical well-being of their patients. They will succeed if this physical ministry becomes part of an even wider service. They will succeed if they fly the colors of King Emmanuel.

In Saint Paul's Cathedral in London is the empty tomb of General Charles Gordon, "Chinese Gordon." His body was never recovered, but this only gives added significance to the inscription which this tomb carries:

He gave his strength to the weak; he gave his sympathy to the suffering; he gave his substance to the poor; for he had given his heart to his God.

Wanted—Letters From "Brother Joseph"

PERSONAL LETTERS FROM LATE PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH REQUESTED BY HIS DAUGHTER, AUDENTIA SMITH ANDERSON

The recent request for Saints to send in their memories of and anecdotes about the late President Joseph Smith is meeting with such a gratifying response that I am embolden to ask another favor.

I believe that many hundreds of Saints have preserved personal letters from the late beloved leader. Will you not share these with us? Personal letters often reveal character more truly than do public utterances. Through a compilation of these letters and of his many editorials, the younger, and newer, members of the church may catch a glimpse of the character of the "man from Nauvoo" who stood in the breach at a critical time and led the church to the solidarity and integrity which it has enjoyed for seventy years.

The generation in which he moved is rapidly vanishing. Children and grandchildren are finding old letters in box, trunk, or attic. Will you not forward to me all you have from "Brother Joseph"? Should you still desire to keep them and so request, they will be returned to you. Or you may send a verbatim copy, being careful to preserve date, signature, place from whence written, and all individual characteristics of the letter.

Your cooperation in this project of compilation will be deeply appreciated.

Please send to: Audentia Smith Anderson, 837 South Fifteenth Street, Lincoln, Nebraska.

Questions and Answers

Serious questions of general interest will be answered by President Smith so far as his time and opportunities may permit.

By F. M. S.

Q. What do you think is the fundamental cause of our present world-wide distress?

A. The world, in my opinion, has gotten too far away from God and has worshiped too long at the shrine of selfishness. This is particularly true in the United States where law is too little revered and authority is too largely disrespected. Our safety now, as in the past, lies in obedience to law. This is true morally, socially, and politically. When people habituate themselves to obey only the laws which suit them politically and defy police regulations, municipal and state statutes and federal law when they happen to conflict with their personal convenience, then a logical reaction from that will be to sooner or later break even with moral restraints. This breaking of moral restraints can not but react in loss of confidence, one in the other. And confidence is the basis of industrial activity and interchange of commodities. So disregard of law, disrespect for authority, lack of confidence, all contribute to the developing of our present unfortunate world conditions.

Q. What do you think about the question of arms and armament?

A. Like all men of this church I am for peace, but until nations have progressed much farther than they are at present along the road to the realization of the principles of Christ's religion, armament and arms will probably be considered necessary. However, I am strongly in favor of any move looking toward the settlement of international differences by arbitration and courts rather than by appeal to arms.

Q. What is the fundamental cause of the increase in crime and juvenile delinquency?

A. Increase in crime is due, I firmly believe, to a growing disregard for authority and disobedience to law with a concomitant break in morals and revolt against religion. Any society which expects to be permanent must have a sense of morality which is developed on a basis of conscious attitude toward God, as a basis for social relationship. This of course means a religious foundation. And when this foundation is disturbed by the factors mentioned, delinquency is sure to result, for people will be inclined to follow their own desires and exercise "personal liberty" irrespective of any socially bad effects.

As to the juvenile delinquency, what can we expect of juveniles when examples in disobedience and disrespect are so continually set by their elders?

Q. Do you advocate the building of Zion and the gathering as a step in the solution of our problems, and why?

A. Yes, because Zion is built fundamentally on the Christian principle of love of God and love of neighbor. Our responsibilities to God are discharged only by recognition of fraternity, and when fraternity is placed to the fore in our national and international relations, then will our social and industrial problems be solved, because our business, too, will be on a fraternal basis rather than on a purely selfish one. The consecration of surplus for the good of others is a fundamental principle of Zion and this devoting of individual surplus toward the creation of group surplus becomes an economic balance wheel which will regulate the entire industrial machinery of the community.

Q. How many years have you been talking of Zion?

A. As many years as I have been preaching, and I was ordained in 1897.

Q. Have you and do you advocate stewardships as a stone in the building of Zion?

A. Yes. The doctrine of stewardships is foundational to our whole Zion development plan and the inculcation of this doctrine is of prime importance as a preparation for Zion.

Q. What are the requirements for stewardship?

A. The first requirement for stewardship is the right attitude. In order to become a steward one must be willing to say, with God as his witness, that he is willing to contribute his time, talents, and his property for the advancement of the work of God and his church, without reservation.

Of course, this connotes moral responsibility and integrity, probity of conduct and citizenship, a religious determination to do the will of God, and a spiritual refinement that is looking and tending constantly upward.

There are, of course, financial and temporal requirements; but the first is the prime requisite. The greater the extent to which one can furnish the means for his own establishment on the foundation of stewardships, the better; but for stewardships to be placed in effective operation, the qualifications and possible development of each individual must be considered.

Q. What is and has been your attitude toward education?

A. Education is the process of drawing out or developing our mental powers and exercising them. This should be carried to the fullest extent possible, and my ideal for education in the church has always been and is now the equivalent of a standard college education for each child capable of taking it; and our social order must be so arranged that education is carried in each case to the highest possible extent, and that for the benefit of the people and Zion as the prime purpose thereof; the benefit of the individual is closely correlated.

But in using this definition of education it must not become confounded with schooling alone.

Q. Did you warn the people in years past of an impending crisis in world affairs?

A. I have repeatedly called the attention of the people to the warnings which God himself has given in the past and have urged preparation against the coming of these crises; I still think that before us are greater difficulties and greater crises to be passed, therefore, the greater is the necessity for our social, religious and moral solidarity.

Q. In what way does education affect the solution of our social problems?

A. Education properly conducted will involve the determination of one's capabilities and the discovery of where he can best serve. When each individual is making his contribution to the social welfare along and in the line for which he is best qualified by nature and education, then we will not have so many misfits. Furthermore, where the motivation and dynamic of industrial endeavor is in response to the appeal to selfishness held out by the reward of profit, we are naturally bound to develop a form of society in which hardships will be endured and depression experienced when profits cease to flow. When industrial and social endeavor will be on the basis of the greatest contribution to social welfare, then these periods of depression consequent on failure of profits to accrue to business will disappear.

This answer of course is to be understood only in connection with the application of the doctrine of stewardships and consecration of surplus.

Q. Have you advocated or do you advocate a program of spiritual development for the youth of the church?

A. Yes. In all my talks on education I have held out the necessity for the triune development of each individual, mentally, spiritually, physically. The complete development of each individual to the topmost point possible in each individual case will determine his cultural achievement, for this triune development of body, mind and spirit constitutes culture, and culture is the glory of God.

Q. Have you advocated and do you advocate the storehouse as per Doctrine and Covenants as a financial reserve and source of supplying the needs of the poor?

A. Yes, for the doctrine of stewardship requires or contemplates or connotes the consecration of surplus. This necessitates a storehouse, or, as it is put in the question, financial or economic reserve. And furthermore, it connotes an easy flowing of these reserves from one group to another as made necessary by contingencies.

If the storehouse had been equipped and were functioning now, much of our distress could locally be eased, for many people could now be paying tithes in kind who have not the cash for paying either tithing or surplus, and these payments in kind could in turn be passed on to those in need without the medium of cash which at present is so restricted.

This contains a suggestion for speeding up the Zionie plan against the coming of the next period of depression.

Q. What is your solution for the problem of unemployment?

A. Stewardships and the application of the Zionie law. This question and its answer revolves about the doctrine of stewardship as has been outlined in these columns many times. When jobs are found on the basis of contribution to welfare and in consonance with social needs, then employment need not necessarily cease when profits cease to flow as is the case with our present industrial order. The flow of surplus from one group to another will permit work to proceed, especially so long as the results of work are contributing to the social welfare. Perhaps the present method of the distribution of food products and the necessities of life, also on the basis of profit, is responsible for much of our suffering during this period of unemployment.

If a more facile and equitable distribution of the natural blessings were effective, then people could be found and would be found occupying in the things they loved and in the things where they could best serve.

In replying to this question it is well to emphasize that the problem of Zion is to eliminate poverty; and hence when the Zionie conditions prevail we will not be so much concerned about supplying the needs of the poor, for we will have given the poor a chance to supply their own needs, which, of course, is the very best way of meeting the problem of poverty and dependency.

Pleurisy

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

The pleura is a delicate, serous membrane which lines the chest wall and is reflected over the surface of the lung, forming a completely closed sac. It is closely adherent to the walls of the chest cavity and the lung, and is so delicate that the anatomist can not outline it well without the aid of the microscope. The space between the two walls (the cavity of the pleura) contains a small quantity of serous fluid, the purpose of which is to prevent friction. It has been sometimes, called the "ball bearing" of the lung. It not only acts in the capacity of a ball bearing in the lung, but serves as a protection against the invasion of disease germs. Within this delicate membrane are located a number of blood vessels and lymph vessels, and nerves. The nerves may well be compared to the cable, telegraph, and telephone lines. The insulated cables are ordinary nerves; while the sympathetic nerves are the un-insulated cables. These nerves are trained to perform certain functions. Those, perhaps, on the palms of the hands, and tips of the fingers differ from those on the back of the hand, for if two pin points are touched to the tips of the finger they register two points, but if two pin points are touched to the back of the hand, even though they are a half inch apart, they may register only one point.

It is a well-known fact that the nerves of the skin are the best trained nerves of the body. The nerves of the pleura are so poorly trained that it makes it very difficult, sometimes, to locate the trouble. When it affects that part of the pleura in contact with the diaphragm, the gall bladder, appendix, the stomach, or the kidney may be simulated. On this account, a pain in the region of the ribs is frequently attributed, by the patient, as pleurisy; whereas it may be no more than muscular rheumatism or neuralgia of the nerves, between the ribs. In mild cases of uncertain pains in the region of the chest, the ordinary person will apply a porous plaster, which probably has as good effect as any. Pains of pleurisy are hard to distinguish from neuralgic pains and muscular rheumatism, as in some cases of pleurisy there is no cough or fever. While the porous plaster is not likely to be of any special benefit, it may do some good in putting the mind at ease, and that helps the cure.

Getting Ready for Decision Day, June 12, 1932

By C. B. Woodstock

The introductory article and the first lesson of this series were presented in the Herald for last week, May 4, 1932. These lessons should be preserved and used to help prepare the young candidates for their step in becoming members of the church.

LESSON TWO

Becoming a Member of the Church

God calls us to be his children. He is the father, creator and friend of us all. He loves us with an infinite love, and desires above all else that we may love him and serve him, that in all our lives we may have his blessing.

God so loved us that he sent his Son, who was Jesus, the Christ, to live and die for us. Jesus is our elder brother, our savior and our dearest friend. Jesus gave his life for us, he taught us the beautiful gospel of love, and now he gives us of his Spirit, the Comforter, to abide with us always. It is by this Spirit that we are drawn to God, that in our hearts we wish to obey him. It is by its help that we are able to overcome temptation and have courage to do the right. It is because Jesus lived and died for us and now gives us his Spirit, that we may have remission of our sins in baptism and that we may enter into eternal life.

But we must learn to have faith in God and Christ as we see evidences of their love and power all about us. Even if we can not always explain all that comes in life, because we are human, we may be sure that in his infinite justice, wisdom and love God knows our need; he loves us and will care for us in ways that are best. Of course God doesn't do for us what we can and should do for ourselves.

Then we must seek to understand God's will. We must study his word and listen to the preaching of his gospel. We must learn his way if we would walk in it and have his Spirit to be with us. We must realize how little we can do of ourselves, and how much we are dependant upon God and his mercy and blessings for all we have in life. So we learn to appreciate God's blessings, and to look to him for help in time of our need.

God by his Spirit enables us to see all our mistakes and the wrongs we have done. He helps us to feel sorrow for every unkind word we have said, for our selfish ways, and for all that has been displeasing to him. This godly sorrow leads us to make the wrongs right so far as we can and to desire very earnestly to overcome the evil, especially the habits which would bind us to ways of evil and keep us from the liberty and joy we should find in the Master's service. On condition that we do repent God promises to forgive our wrong when we are baptized and then to give us his Spirit when we are confirmed. The Holy Spirit, or Comforter, may come to us only in the measure we are ready to receive, but it is our privilege to have its guiding, helpful and comforting influence with us always, if we keep our lives clean, if we are prayerful and earnest in our work, and try to understand and do the Lord's will.

Even when we make mistakes or do wrong God is willing to forgive us if we truly repent and forsake the wrong and do our best to overcome. This is one of the purposes of the sacrament. When we take the bread and wine worthily, we may renew our covenant with God and he has promised to forgive our sins.

As members of the church we are expected at all times to remember the promises we have made to God. We must try earnestly to serve him and to keep his commandments. Then we may have his Spirit to be with us everyday and everywhere. It will help us to grow more and more like the Christ, and to render a service among our fellow men which will bring blessing to them and reflect honor upon God and his church.

LESSON THREE

The Covenant of Baptism

Washing is a process of cleansing. When our clothes are soiled and dirty mother washes them and they are fresh and clean for our use again. Often in our work and play our hands become dirty, but we wash them and they are clean once more. We could not remain well and strong if we did not keep our bodies and our clothing clean.

God wants us to be happy and well and strong in every way: in our bodies, in our minds, and in our hearts. We have to keep physically clean or we become sick; we contract infections or diseases which cause pain and distress. We must also think clean thoughts and keep the desires of our hearts pure if we would have our minds strong and our hearts responsive to the will of God.

In the world about us there are many sinful people as well as many who love the Lord. Those who love evil will try to persuade us to go with them and to share their sinful ways, but sin will always bring disappointment and sadness and may bring death. Sometimes the ways of evil may even seem pleasant to us and we may be tempted to do wrong. But God desires that we should be clean and strong in every way and he has not left us to wander blindly nor alone. He has given us his word in the Scriptures and he has sent his Spirit into the world to touch our minds and our hearts that we may turn from evil and seek to do good. There are many good people in the world who will help us if we show that we want to do right. And God has especially called his ministry in this latter day, and given them authority to preach the gospel of Christ and to minister among the people for him. The people of the church are trying to do right and we may join with them in living and teaching the gospel and in helping to make our world better.

Jesus as a young man wished to do his Father's will. John was baptizing in the river Jordan, and Jesus came to him to be baptized. The Bible tells us that Jesus and John went down into the river and Jesus was baptized in the river by John, a servant of God. This was a beautiful example. Afterward Jesus told his disciples to go and preach the gospel to every creature, that he who believed and was baptized should be saved. Jesus and his disciples taught the people that they must be baptized to wash away their sins, and that they might have the gift of the Holy Ghost.

In Jesus' day and in our day the plan is the same. If we would do God's will we must be baptized by one having authority from God, and we must be ready for baptism and worthy to receive the special gift of God's spirit. Then we are ready to make a life-long covenant with our heavenly Father that we will love and serve him always, and try to do his will. Then God is ready to covenant with us that he will remember us in tenderness and love in all our walks of life, and give us of his Spirit as an abiding Comforter, and that when death shall come we may pass on to a reward with the righteous of all the earth.

This is the covenant of baptism and confirmation. By this covenant we become members of the church and members of the family and kingdom of God. We receive the gift of the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands by the elders to whom God has given this power. The Comforter will remain with us as long as we do not grieve it away by our neglect or by our transgression.

The covenant is renewed each time we partake of the sacrament. In the prayer of blessing asked upon the bread and the wine, the minister asks God to bless and sanctify the bread and wine to the soul's good of all who partake, that they may witness unto God that they do always remember him, that they may keep the commandments which he has given them, that they may always have his Spirit to be with them.

God promises if we come to the sacrament worthily, and really repent of our wrong, and freely forgive any who may have done wrong to us, that he will forgive us our transgressions and give us a further baptism of his Spirit. It is in this way that we renew our covenant and may draw very near to our heavenly Father at the sacrament service.

So we covenant with God and before men that all may know we have chosen to follow Christ in the ways of righteousness. In our baptism we have promised God that we will try in every way to assist in his work. He gives us of his Spirit that we may carry his message and his blessing to the world. In becoming members of the church we join with others in carrying forward the work which Christ is expecting the church to do in the world. We are called to a life of growth and service that God may give blessing to those about us through our efforts.

LESSON FOUR

Growing Like Christ

A member of the church must grow. Baptism is not only a washing away of our sins, but it is a planting of our lives that they may grow and bear fruit for the Master. When we are buried in the water we are planted in Christ. We wish to bury, to wash away, all that was wrong in our lives, all that was sinful in our natures, that we may rise to walk in newness of life. This means that we have truly repented of all our wrong deeds, that we have tried to make the wrongs right, that we have put away all our evil habits and have firmly resolved with God's help to overcome them. We wish to be washed clean of all that is impure and to bury all desire for evil, that we may come forth from baptism ready to live a new life of love and service in God's world.

In our confirmation we may receive the assurance that our coming to God in baptism has been accepted of him, that our sins have been forgiven. We are entitled to receive of the Holy Spirit to confirm our faith, to enlighten our mind, to strengthen our body, and to bring blessings of peace and comfort to our lives. This gift of the Holy Spirit may not come to us all at once, but it is given as we need and as we have made our lives worthy to receive.

Sometimes an individual is baptized into the church and fails to realize that membership in the church means responsibility. It is pretty easy to be baptized and confirmed, and then to sit down, or to go on one's way, and to let it make little or no difference in one's manner of living. But in such a case baptism has not been very effective. The individual has not opened his heart and invited the Spirit of God to dwell with him. He has not studied the word of God that he might know more and more of God's will, nor has he tried to grow in his ability to serve in God's kingdom. Such a one can not expect to receive in great measure of the light and joy and strength promised to those who obey.

Indeed, the promises of Jesus was to "those who continue" in his word; who should be his disciples and receive of his Spirit. It is not enough that we join the church and attend the services, we must share in the very nature and life of the church. We must grow into the likeness of Christ, our Master. The chief purposes of the church in our day are to preach the gospel in all the world and to build Zion. In doing these two things we shall accomplish our part of the Lord's plan in restoring the gospel in latter days. At the same time we shall be making our lives most acceptable to God, we shall be growing in our knowledge of the truth and in our ability to serve our fellow men.

In order that the gospel may be preached we each must be living its principles every day and we must be doing all we can to tell the story to our neighbors and friends. We also must be helping with our tithes and offerings according to the law that there may be means in the church to send out the missionaries and to care for their families while the gospel is being preached.

That Zion may be builded as a beautiful demonstration of the truth and love of God carried out by a people who are pure in heart, we all may labor earnestly and prayerfully that our lives and our homes and our business may perfectly reflect the will of our Master. We must learn to consecrate of our time, our effort and our means that the plan of God and his purposes may be reflected in our community life.

God has promised that he will give his spirit and his blessing to his children wherever they may be, if they are earnestly trying to live according to his commandments. But special blessing has been promised to those who make themselves ready to dwell together in righteousness in Zion. We must learn to be humble, faithful, obedient and true. We must love God and our fellow men. We must be unselfish and willing to consecrate of the best we have for the Lord's work. We must live near to our heavenly Father if we would be worthy to dwell together, and with the Spirit of God in Zion.

Through a righteous people God has planned to make known to the world the beauty of his truth and the power of his Spirit. Out of Zion the glory of God shall shine and all the world shall have the privilege of forsaking evil, of obeying the truth and of being saved in the kingdom of God.

We are called to be Latter Day Saints in word and in deed. Even boys and girls have their part in the great work of the church. To all God has given the power to become his sons and daughters, to receive of his Spirit, to grow in the likeness of Christ, and finally, to inherit eternal life in the kingdom of Heaven.

Inventories Increasing in Kansas City Stake

The following letter from Bishop C. A. Skinner tells an interesting story of the results of an effort to increase the number of inventories and contributors to the support of the general church. It is a story of spiritual as well as financial progress.

President Frederick M. Smith,
Dear Brother:

On my desk is your letter written to me just three years ago today in which you outlined briefly the work you wished me to do in Kansas City Stake. The suggestion that impressed me most was that you "desired that this stake should have 100 per cent inventories; every person doing his duty financially, and willing to recognize financial obligations as a part of spiritual duty."

My especial attention has been given to carrying out this phase of my work. The following figures will give you an idea of the progress made during the past three years as compared with the three years previous to 1929.

Contributions to general fund for 1926, 1927, 1928	$45,718.00
Average per year	15,239.00
Contributions to general fund for 1929, 1930, 1931	$52,815.00
Average per year	17,605.00
Average yearly increase for three years	2,365.00
Number of inventories filed 1926 to 1928	291
Number of inventories filed 1929 to 1931	466

The local receipts for the same period show a decline of approximately $7,840 per year. This, in my opinion, is not cause for alarm when we take into consideration the contributing factors, of which the following are some.

Beginning about 1920 and running over a period of five or six years there was maintained in the stake a very extensive building program and approximately $102,400 was invested in church buildings. This naturally drew unusually heavy local contributions during this period which condition was also reflected in the years of 1927 and 1928.

Not only is it natural that the enthusiasm for raising money for building projects would subside after seven churches had been built or purchased, but it would be impossible for a group to keep up such a pace over a long period of years.

The fact that the personnel in many of the congregations has changed as much as 50 per cent during the past ten years, and the new members in many instances do not sense the responsibility of the obligation has some effect on the income.

The economic depression during the past two and one half years has very materially affected in income of many or all of our wage earners. Many have had no employment for months while others have had their income reduced 50 per cent and 75 per cent. As a result some who have been loyal contributors in the past are now asking for aid.

We do not feel discouraged with the outlook for the future, but we will not be satisfied till we more nearly reach the goal as suggested in your letter.

Aside from my special work I have done what I could in conjunction with the Stake Presidency and missionaries to build up the spiritual tone of the Saints.

Ever working and praying for the progress of the Lord's work, I am,

Very sincerely,

C. A. SKINNER, stake bishop.

Autobiography

XVI.—UNUSUAL EXPERIENCES—LITTLE SIOUX DISTRICT IN 1899

By James Franklin Mintun

On January 1, 1899, I was in Persia, coming from the institute that was held in Independence the last days of 1898. I began preaching January 1, and continued till January 6, when information came that my sister, Maria, was dying at Magnolia. I started at once, but she had died before I arrived. I remained for the funeral, but returned to continue meetings that evening, arriving just in time for service, being delayed because the train I was on, coming from Council Bluffs to Persia, ran into a bunch of fat cattle and killed thirty-five of them. No one was injured that was on the train, but the engine was damaged so that we had to go the rest of the way very slowly. The audience was assembled and waiting when I arrived. I continued preaching each night and Sundays till January 20, when I was called home on the account of serious illness of my wife. The death of my sister left a family of six, the two youngest being four years, and six days. The four boys were older. To arrange a home for the girls took much thought and time. The babe was finally adopted by Brother George Ballantyne and wife, Nellie, of Moorhead, and the older one was given a home with Sister Lou Mann, and husband, Perry. I remained till my wife had improved in health when I went to Missouri Valley where I began preaching on February 2, in Newton's Hall. I continued till the seventh, when, because of the extreme cold, the hall could not be kept comfortable. It was decided that meetings should close till it became warmer. The thermometer ranged from ten to twenty degrees below nearly all day. By the thirteenth it had turned warmer and I was sent for to come to Moorhead, where I preached at the church on the fifteenth and after the service I was requested to perform a marriage ceremony at the church by which Brother E. C. Out-house and Sister Mary Turman became husband and wife. I continued here preaching nights and Sundays, and assisting with the Sunday schools, social meetings and funeral services, till March 11, when I returned home because of my wife being in very poor health and the children having the whooping cough.

On the next Sunday, March 12, I assisted Elder A. M. Fyrando, the district president, to organize a branch at Mondamin with James Gunsolley its president, whom I ordained a priest at that time.

A Bereavement Tempered by a Spirit of Mercy

On March 13 I came to Woodbine, and continued here in services till the twenty-third, when I was called home on account of the serious illness of my youngest son, who was teething and having the whooping cough, which resulted in spasms. He was much better after administration. On the next day the convention of the Sunday school association was held in Mondamin, and I felt it necessary to be present, and being assistant missionary in charge of the district, I was under obligation to be present the next day at the conference, on the account of some business in which I was personally concerned for the work's sake, expecting to return home as soon as the business was taken care of. In the morning one of the brethren came through Magnolia on his way to conference and, knowing that I was called home on account of sickness, he stopped and was informed that the babe was so much better that I need not try to return home till on Sunday when some of the brethren would be returning. When I arrived home on Sunday afternoon the babe had taken worse, and when I had administered to him three times with some of the brethren he was relieved apparently every time. On Monday morning he was still sick, so I called for Brother Fyrando and Charles Derry, and we administered to him, and he apparently received full relief. He lay in his crib and would cough and rise as the result of the whooping cough. At one time he pointed to the bottle of consecrated oil, and when I asked him if he wanted some, he nodded his head, and I gave him some in a spoon, which he swallowed without any inconvenience. In just a short time and without any suffering he had passed from mortality, all unexpected by all who were in the room, and there were several there. At his death there came into the room a halo of heavenly peace, which removed all grief for the moment, and gave great comfort. I could think of nothing to say except, "Lord, if this is death, it is sweet to endure with this spirit present." Wife and I could not, so long as that spirit continued present, think of grief as we had felt it at deaths before.

Consolation From a Friendly Doctor

Before I was sent for my wife had sent for our family physician, Doctor C. E. Cutler, for the child was having spasms, and she felt that was the proper thing to do, as it was. He had left medicine which she had been giving him before I arrived at home. After we had administered to him he was so much better apparently, almost immediately, that when the time came to give him the medicine, my wife asked me whether to give it or not. I told her that I did not believe I would, but that if she thought it best to give it. She did not feel that he needed it then and it was not given to him, but I did not know where the medicine was. Nothing more was thought about the medicine till after the child had died so suddenly. Then the report came to us that I had thrown the medicine out of the window, and this report came to the doctor, a long-time friend of mine. Immediately after the funeral I went to see the doctor, and gave explanation, for I knew he would believe what I would tell him. He said he had heard the report, but could hardly believe it. I said that he certainly could not think that I had so changed as to act so ungentlemanly. I then told him our belief, and that I honestly believed the Bible and its teachings, and had tried to represent it to an unbelieving world, that I could not teach what the Bible taught and not practice it, for that would be inconsistent. I then quoted to him what James has said in chapter 5, verses 14 and 15. He said he had heard that the elders when their families were sick would do that way, but when they were sick they would send for a doctor. I said that some of the elders might do that, but that I did not feel that such action on my part would be consistent, so I did not do it. But, he says, does not the Scriptures say somewhere that "if they have not faith they should be nourished with herbs and mild foods, etc."? I said that is not in the Bible. "Well," he said, "I thought it was." I said, "In your doctoring among the Latter Day Saints, you have heard them quote that saying, but it is to be found in what they believe to be revelations from God, and is in the book of Doctrine and Covenants." "Well," he said, "I never administer medicine, except I have a prayer for it." He was a very devoted member of the Congregationalists, and a praying man. Then he said, "Well, Frank, I think more of your faith since our talk than I ever did before." We had been associated from our boyhood days, so we spoke to each other more familiarly than we might have otherwise. He had always been a friend.

Restoring Order Among Disturbed Members

I could not get the consent of my mind to leave my wife very soon after this death, for she was in very poor health nearly all the time. So I visited and preached in near-by schoolhouses and in Magnolia, with an occasional sermon at Bigler's Grove and Woodbine till June 16.

During this time, the month of April and the early part of May, reports came from Bigler's Grove that false spirits had affected some of the Saints there. This report came to the district president, and he arranged with the president of the Woodbine Branch and the president of the Logan Branch to meet to correct this disturbing spirit. The Saints at this time were either members of the Logan or the Woodbine Branches or had been, so that both branches were deeply concerned. Brother Charles Derry was ministering in the district so he was requested to meet with the other brethren at Brother Allen Hunt's home where he had notified the affected ones to meet. The district president insisted that I should go with him, and I did, and met with the brethren in an upper room. There were three or four of the brethren who had been disturbed by these false spirits, and they met with us. The meeting was opened by prayer, and a word of explanation. Soon one of those who had been affected rose and began to express himself in the way of prophecy, with a commendatory voice, and under a power that shook the room where we were seated. The spirit controlled him. While this brother was moved by a professedly prophetic spirit, I was directed to write our decision, and while he continued, I passed it from one to the other and they read and signed it, and by the time he became quiet the decision was ready to read. The decision was then read, and all the brethren who had been affected accepted the decision except the one who had occupied while the decision was being written. He did not for about a year or more accept the decision, but in time he, too, was subject to it. One brother present left the room while this brother of whom I have spoken, was talking. He told me afterwards that if he had not he would have been compelled to speak in tongues, showing that the spirit was a compelling one, and not one that was subject to the prophets.

On September 24 my son Guy was baptized by Hubert Case, and I assisted to confirm him. On Tuesday, September 26, I baptized one at Magnolia. On the thirtieth I was at Decatur, and preached near there by special request, and on October 2, I came to Sloan and cheered the Saints, and then came to Sioux City and hunted up the Saints there to urge them to greater faithfulness. I returned to Sloan and began meetings there October 6 at the Christian Church. While here I baptized Sister Catherine Winegar, and Mary Driggs. The latter sister had been raised a Catholic, but her husband was a child of old-time Latter Day Saints. He had very earnestly represented the superiority of the faith of the Latter Day Saints to the faith of the Catholics, and she thought somewhat favorable to our faith when we went there, so much so as to be willing to investigate. She says that in answer to prayer she was shown Brother Hubert Case and me with the tent in a dream before we came to Sloan. She came to hear what we had to present, and by so doing was convinced that the Restoration was true, and so was baptized. A strange thing happened, however, in this, that as soon as she was satisfied and wished to be baptized, an opposite spirit ruled her husband. . . . He would not go to see her baptized. He was kind enough to hire a livery rig to take her to and from the baptismal service. Sister Mary Driggs was a noble sister, and endured much not known to but very few. . . .

On December 25 and 26 my record says I was at home and took an inventory of my property to ascertain whether I had any more tithing to pay.

Self-indulgence does not command respect, yet it possesses strong attractions and is undeniably the easiest path to pursue, whereas consistently to shape one's life in conformity with the requirements of moral idealism implies never-ceasing effort, strenuous endeavor and numerous sacrifices. Which of these courses man will decide upon, depends on the evaluation which he puts on life. Only a noble concept of life can give him the inspiration necessary to maintain himself on the elevated plane of genuine human morality. In order to lead a really human life, man must have a philosophy which invests life with supreme dignity and attaches to it a value that makes sacrifice and effort for its sake reasonable and worth while.—Charles Bruehl.

Far West Stake

Activities in Far West Stake seem to have taken on a new meaning following the recent General Conference. With objectives and ideals more definitely set out, many people have a greater desire to help even to the point of sacrifice.

In an attempt to bring a portion of the true spirit of the conference to the people of Far West Stake, a series of institutes is being conducted at key-points throughout the stake. Using as a study outline a pamphlet entitled "Trail Blazers" which contains the most important resolutions of the conference, Stake President Ward A. Hougas is conducting several class periods in the discussion and explanation of the action taken by the conference.

The institute was held at First Saint Joseph Church on Monday and Tuesday, May 2 and 3, a great deal of interest being shown. Stewartville and Maple Grove Branches joined in a union service on Sunday, May 8, at which time Brother Hougas conducted four class periods to capacity crowds. A similar service will be held at Guilford May 15, and at Kingston May 29. Nearby branches will gather at each of the places for this discussion of vital questions.

On account of road conditions many of the outlying branches have not been able to hold regular services. With spring in the air and the roads in better condition the prospects are for more traveling. Bishop Milo Burnett and Mrs. Burnett visited the Saints at Bedison Sunday April 24. Bishop Burnett delivered an outstanding sermon which was much appreciated by all. The Saints at Oakdale enjoyed a visit from Elder Ward A. Hougas the morning of the same Sunday.

Coming Events

Among the coming events of interest for the summer are the reunion and the young people's convention. Reunion dates have been tentatively set as August 18 to 28, and all should begin planning to attend. Indications are that this year will bring an even better Reunion than the successful one of last year.

The best news for the young people comes in the announcement of another Young People's Convention this year. The date has been set as Saturday night and Sunday, June 25 and 26. The place, Cameron, Missouri. President F. M. McDowell is expected to be present at the convention and a program similar to that of last year will be carried out. There will be much of vital interest to every young person of Far West Stake and they are already looking forward to an outstanding gathering. Various branches are planning to give every young person an opportunity to attend this meeting.

Cameron Branch

Cameron Branch welcomes Brother R. M. Russell and family from Omaha, into its midst. The Russell family expects to make Cameron their future home.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here Tuesday evening, April 19, and delivered a lecture from scenes on his trip through Palestine. A rainy evening prevented many from attending, but those who had the opportunity were more than pleased with the clear beauty of the pictures and the fine educational lecture.

The young people creditably presented the playlet, "The Only Day I Have," Sunday evening, April 24. This play was spoken of by many as ranking among the best that this young group has given. The sermon that followed by Stake President Ward A. Hougas, together with the play, pictured a splendid lesson.

Much interest was manifest at the regular monthly teachers' and officers' meeting that was held Monday evening, April 25.

Fortescue Branch

The monthly social and supper was held Thursday evening at the church April 28. The crowd was small due to rain, but an enjoyable evening was enjoyed by those who were able to come.

Bishop Milo Burnett and wife, of Saint Joseph, were present Sunday, April 3, attending the sacrament services, and Brother Burnett gave a very instructive talk. Elder I. M. Ross, of Mound City, made two visits to this community to administer to the sick.

The women's department met at the church Wednesday, April 27, for an all-day quilting and social meeting. Lunch was served at noon for the members and their husbands, the collection being given to the branch.

The young people planned an all-day picnic and drive to the hills for Sunday, April 24, but the frequent rains and the condition of the roads made this inadvisable so they met on the shores of Big Lake.

Mrs. Albert McKown, president of the women's department and wife of the pastor, is still in poor health. She is confined to her bed. The prayers of the members are for her speedy and sure recovery.

First Saint Joseph Church

The weeks seem to be filled with many activities for the people of First Church. The adult division held its regular monthly meeting at the church Friday, April 29. The ladies served a supper and a short program was carried on during the meal, the theme being "Home." The women of the adult division are meeting on Thursday of each week for class work, sewing, and social activity. At present a course on "Nursing" is being conducted.

The O. T. Z.'s had a social evening at the church Tuesday, April 26. Plans for the summer's activities were discussed including trips, picnics, dramatic work and devotional services. Enthusiasm is growing and we look forward to an active and enjoyable summer.

A consecrated group of O. T. Z.'s gathered at the church at an early hour Sunday, May 1, for a devotional service. The meeting was filled with expressions of love and loyalty and a fine spirit encouraged all who attended and was carried over into a splendid sacrament service at a later hour.

A new feature of the summer's activities is the Sunday evening vesper service at six o'clock. The first of these services was held on May 1, the girls' chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Charles E. Haden, setting a high standard for the other groups to follow through the summer. The girls gave a very effective prelude of sacred music which was followed by a sermonet by Elder Ward A. Hougas.

The senior choir, under the direction of E. J. Ehlers, continued the good work of the previous Sunday and offered a beautiful prelude of music in honor of "Mother" on May 8, after which Pastor Ward A. Hougas gave a sermonet using as his subject, "At the Foot of the Cross—A Mother."

Each Sunday evening during the summer a musical or dramatic prelude will be given followed by a sermonet. The indications from the first two Sundays are that this earlier service will prove quite popular as well as beneficial.

Mother's Day was observed at the church school period by having the worship period carried on entirely by the mothers. They took charge in a very efficient manner. Bishop Milo Burnett delivered the Mother's Day sermon in the morning and special music was given throughout the day.

Iowa City, Iowa

"The Place of the Bible in My Philosophy of Life," was the subject of the talk by Elder Voas Meredith at the meeting of the Iowa City Latter Day Saint group Sunday, April 24. Pastor Walter L. Daykin was in charge. Sidney Barrows directed the music and played a violin solo. Vesta Stevenson played piano accompaniment.

Brother Meredith spoke especially of the part the Bible played in three phases of his personal philosophy: how to think about God, how to worship truly, and how to serve the church. From the experience of the men and women of the Bible each person may draw much to help him in working out his own philosophy and to guide him in his efforts to serve.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

The Lincoln Saints observed the fasting and prayer called for the General Conference. A spirit of devotion and service prevailed at the April sacrament service. Sister Anderson and daughter, Rogene, left Lincoln Sunday afternoon, April 3 to be present at the opening of General Conference. They were accompanied to Independence by Sister Rutledge. Those attending conference over the week-end, April 9 and 10, were Brother B. M. Anderson, Brother and Sister E. J. Lennox, Brother and Sister George Weller, Brother and Sister Francis Schrunk, Sister Hunt and Dorothea.

A new daughter, Dorothy Dillon, arrived at the home of Duane Anderson on March 12.

The ladies held a Saint Patrick's social at the church the evening of March 17. Sister Esther Schrunk, Sister Hunt, and Sister Ethel Umphres were members of the committee in charge of this party. After a short play and program in the upper auditorium, games were played in the basement and light refreshments were served. Miss Rogene Anderson entertained the young people at the church with a Saint Patrick's social the evening of March 22. The card of admittance was a potato. These were baked and served with the supper at the close of the evening.

The children's department of the church school presented a program on Easter morning at the close of the study hour. At the eleven o'clock hour an Easter cantata, "Death Unto Life," was presented under the direction of Sister Audentia Anderson. Those taking the solo parts were Duane Anderson, bass, Brother Hufferd, tenor, Dorothy Jensen, soprano, and Margaret Jones, contralto. Carrie Hale was the accompanist. A large and appreciative audience enjoyed this musical hour. At the evening Easter services Sister Hufferd sang a beautiful solo and Brother Poague sang "The Old Rugged Cross" at the close of his Easter sermon.

Members of the women's department surprised Sister Anderson on Wednesday, March 30, with a birthday dinner at the church. Her birthday had been the week before, but it was thought best to have the dinner the next Wednesday after spring vacation so more might attend. Sister Poague baked the birthday cake, and the surprise was complete. Brother Anderson and Rogene were also guests at this dinner.

Sister Rutledge, of Neligh, Nebraska, visited her sister, Mrs. Randall, of Lincoln, and worshiped here on several occasions in March. Brother and Sister Pfanmiller made a trip to Independence in March. Brother Pfanmiller contracted a severe cold which has prevented his attending church services for several Sundays.

At the quarterly business meeting of the women's department, April 6, a name was chosen for the group. They will be known hereafter as the "Loyal Workers." Mrs. C. A. Hall was chosen leader of the younger women who are planning to give a bazaar next fall. The amount received from the "Thankful Boxes" was $2.40. Only four boxes were presented at this meeting, however, so the workers expect a larger amount at next meeting.

Because of General Conference the church services in early April were not so well attended, but look forward to a greater attendance in the near future.

Sister Clara Gabriel, of Omaha, is at Doctor Bailey's Sanitarium in Lincoln, where she underwent a very serious operation. She has received wonderful blessings through administration, and the Saints trust that she will soon be well on the road to recovery. She is a sister of Brother Henry Bailey, of Lincoln.

Free Soil, Michigan

General Conference of Historical Significance

The members of this branch think that in the passing of the 1932 General Conference, one of the most important events in church history has drawn to a close. It was a peaceful, educational, and inspirational conference, and people returned to their homes with a great desire to be faithful to the church. Those privileged to attend its sessions from Free Soil were Elder and Sister J. E. Bennett, Elder Buell Shelley, and Sister Mary Tubbs. These travelers went by auto and were accompanied by Elder Byron H. Doty, of Traverse City. While at conference they renewed acquaintance with friends and relatives at Grandview. On their return trip they stopped at Nauvoo and Carthage, Illinois, where they saw places and buildings connected with church history. They say that sight of these things caused their hearts to swell with gratitude to and reverence for our courageous pioneer forefathers.

Elder B. H. Doty preached a splendid sermon at Free Soil, April 3. In March Apostle D. T. Williams closed a series of lectures which he started last October. The last one, "Judgment Eternal," was given to a full house.

The funeral services of Brother J. W. Bennett were held February 2, Elder Allen Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan, officiating. In the passing of this brother the Saints lost a valiant and faithful worker.

In January Brother and Sister Holmes were caused to mourn the death of their infant son. Services were held at the home, Elder J. E. Bennett officiating.

The fourteen-months-old daughter of Brother and Sister Cecil Miller is critically ill at present; there is much concern for her welfare.

Brother and Sister Everett Martin are rejoicing over the birth of a sturdy son.

An Easter program was given Sunday, March 27, under the direction of Sister Helen Bennett. And a "Better Homes" program was enjoyed April 24.

Free Soil Saints are looking ahead to the district conference to convene in June.

Fanning, Kansas

May 1 found an attendance of eighty-two at the Sunday school and about one hundred present at the following sacrament service which was in charge of Elders Samuel Twombly and William Twombly. The Saints feel encouraged to hope that with the coming of better weather, attendance will increase. Samuel Twombly was the speaker at the evening church hour. His sermon on the Golden Rule as taught by the Greeks, Buddhists, Mohammedans, Egyptians, Christians and others was based on the text, "Jesus Christ was the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world." Thus he vindicated the statement of the Savior by evidence of the Golden Rule as found in the various nations. In agreement with this thought Brother Twombly quoted from Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, "Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith."

"The Jolly Gang," of the young people's class presented a two-act comedy, "Mr. Bob," in the Sparks High School auditorium on Friday night, April 15. Those taking part and their director, Sister Marie Sheppard had worked hard to make the play a success. The cast consisted of Robert Jackson, Daniel Hopkins, Lonnie Johns, Elsie Long, Gladys Mortimore, Katharine Abbott, and Georgia Jeschke. Marvin Jeschke sang between acts and Mildred Mortimore acted as prompter. On the following Thursday evening the young people's class, with their teacher, Brother Virgil Sheppard, enjoyed a wiener roast. About twenty-five young people were present at the regular class meeting, held at the George Hopkins home April 27.

Sister Mabel Mortimore is organizing a junior choir for the children up to the age of fourteen. Those interested are meeting at the church each Friday afternoon at two o'clock for practice.

Brother William Blunt, who, for years has been a sufferer with Bright's disease, passed away on Thursday, April 14. His funeral was from the Karr Funeral Home, Elder James A. Thomas preaching the sermon. Brother Blunt had lived in and around Fanning for more than forty years.

Lately there has been much sickness among the Saints. Brothers Samuel Twombly, James A. Thomas, and Sisters Margaret Marsh, and Sylvia Chesnut are among those who have recently been ill.

Shidler, Oklahoma

Four Were Baptized During Winter

Shidler Saints who were privileged to attend the conference at Independence, returned greatly encouraged as a result of what they had seen and heard.

The Sunday school is in need of more efficient teachers, and a class has begun the study of the Handbook of Religious Education.

During the fall and winter four persons were baptized in this branch by E. E. Workmon, branch president, Woodrow and Beulah Bump, children of Mr. and Sister Charles Bump, and Mary Maud Wells. At a later date a Mrs. Wyant was inducted into the church. She no doubt will bring her family in.

Early in March the Saints were made glad by a visit from Brothers J. E. Lancaster and A. A. Bailey. The former preached at a Sunday morning service, and the latter gave an encouraging talk following the sermon.

Just prior to conference Brother and Sister Orby Mundy and Sister Rhoda Stephens, of Pawhuska, met with the women's department. They were also present at some Sunday services. On the return trip they visited here again. Brother Mundy responded to the invitation to tell of the things at conference which brought him help and inspiration. Sister Mundy played the piano at all services they attended.

Brother Woslum's family has gone to live near Skiatook. They are charter members of this branch, and their departure depletes the Sunday school ranks.

The branch now functions with all officers active. Brother Frank Fender is deacon. The group has adopted the envelope system of collections, which seems a very satisfactory plan. Brother George Swain is teacher, and Robert Montague and Paul Storm are priests. E. E. Workmon is the church school leader.

Brother Paul Storm presides over the Wednesday evening prayer services since Brother S. W. Simmons is gone from Shidler. Brother Workmon lives so far away that he can not conveniently be here oftener than on Sundays. Brother Paul, a quiet and unassuming man, is to be commended for the performance of his duties. Even those not of the faith speak of his life as an example of Christian service.

Before many weeks Shidler Branch hopes to have more baptisms on record. The Saints are praying for the church, and especially for the men of the ministry and their families who, because of financial depression have been caused to give up the work they love so well, the preaching of the gospel.

Independence

Elder D. S. McNamara has been appointed to succeed Apostle George G. Lewis as director of Religious Education for the City of Zion. Last week he was released from his work as pastor of Englewood Church in order that he might assume his new responsibilities.

Mrs. C. C. Koehler has been appointed to succeed Mrs. George G. Lewis as leader of women for the City of Zion. Associated with her is a committee of five, consisting of Mrs. Mary Wilkinson, Mrs. D. S. McNamara, Mrs. T. A. Beck, Mrs. T. J. Watkins, and Mrs. F. R. Schafer.

Independence will give a farewell reception in honor of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Apostle and Sister G. G. Lewis, and Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra the evening of May 24, at the Auditorium. The young people's council and the women's department are sponsoring the event.

The scout troops sponsored by the church in Independence, both boys and girls, are taking advantage of the fine spring weather to do real and definite scouting. The four boys troops took part in the annual Boy Scout round-up, held for the Covered Wagon Area and neighboring regions at Convention Hall, Kansas City, April 29 and 30. And last Saturday representatives from four troops of Girl Scouts received one hundred and twenty-one merit badges for scouting done during the winter months. Now that summer is almost here, the scouts are hunting up hike and camp equipment. They and their officers expect to become better acquainted with Mother Nature during the next three months.

The church now sponsors four troops of Boy Scouts: 223 and 226, Stone Church; 222, Spring Branch; 227, Walnut Park-Enoch Hill, and a fifth is in process of organization at Liberty Street. In the past year it has also fostered the organization of five troops of girls: 33, 37, and 46, Stone Church; 10, Walnut Park, and 14, Liberty Street. A corps of efficient and consecrated officers has been chosen from the church membership by the pastors, to lead these boys and girls.

"This is a time of emergency and the women must help the church supply the needs of its people during the coming year," stated Mrs. C. C. Koehler, the new leader of women, to a general meeting of the department, Monday afternoon at the Stone Church. Preparations for sacrifice week in June and meeting the demands of next winter through the commodity shop, summer work, and the Harvest Home Festival were big divisions of her talk. She promised work for every church woman in Independence against the emergencies of coming months.

Though there were not nearly as many women present at this meeting as there should have been, officers from various districts and groups were there ready to take information to their workers and recruit help as fast as possible. They nodded approval when their leader defined the work of the women's department as threefold—to study the laws of God, to work, helping others to help themselves, and to pray for guidance and strength.

A definite organization of the women is now effected through the church district and group system, and the women are to have no vacation this summer, according to their leader. In the coming weeks every woman will be given opportunity to serve. Emphasis is being placed on the statement in latter-day revelation: "The idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways." The women are now giving special attention to the work of the commodity shop which they prefer to call the Storehouse.

Stone Church

The words of Jesus, "Behold, thy mother," composed the text of the church school worship service and effectively inroduced the theme of Mother's Day. The intermediate pastor, Priest W. Earl Page, read the Scripture story recorded in the gospel of Saint John, in which we are told that as Jesus hung on the cross, Mary, his mother, stood at the foot, and our Lord in his infinite thoughtfulness committed her to the care of his beloved disciple. To this disciple he addressed the significant words, "Behold, thy mother." A beautiful contralto solo by Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, Kipling's "Mother," and a plea by the pastor for the congregation to remember that now is the time to show appreciation to Mother made this opening service impressive.

The eleven o'clock service carried on the theme, the Mother's Day sermon being preached by Pastor John F. Sheehy. As a scriptural background for his sermon the speaker chose to read the words of Paul to the young man, Timothy, emphasizing the faith of his mother Eunice and his grandmother Lois. His description of the unknown mother who year after year faithfully helps, comforts, inspires, and trusts her sons and daughters, touched the hearts of the congregation and impressed them with the glory and responsibility of real motherhood.

"That Wonderful Mother of Mine" was sung by the Wahdemna Male Quartet composed of Roderick May, Duane Swalley, Robert Crawford, and Edward Cronenbold, and the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang two anthems, "Peace I Leave With Thee," and "My Jesus I Love Thee." Elder W. Wallace Smith was in charge of the service assisted by Elder H. G. Barto.

"Our Mothers" was the subject of an interesting illustrated lecture given by C. Ed. Miller at the Stone Church Sunday evening.

New officers for the White Masque Players, elected at the regular meeting Monday night, are: President, Mrs. J. A. Gardner; vice president, Mr. Frank Jennings; treasurer, Mr. Ronald Carmichael; secretary, Mrs. J. Glenn Fairbanks; literary critic, Mrs. Leonard Lea, and membership chairman, Mrs. Jay Weeks. An attractive program of lectures and dramatic work continued the month to month study of the club. A biography of Ellen Terry was given by Mrs. Opal Goode Doty; a preview, "The plays of the Month," by Ronald Carmichael; a lecture, "Clyde Fitch, American Playwright," by Leonard Lea, and a short colonial play, "The Birthday Ball," by Marjorie Woods, was given by probationary members under the direction of Mrs. JoZelma Taylor. The meeting was held in the dining hall.

Walnut Park Church

The sacred name of Mother was revered throughout the services at Walnut Park on May 8. The church was decorated in simplicity with spirea and ferns and the word "Mother" was suspended across the platform.

Many wonderful testimonies concerning the mothers of the past as well as the present were borne at the early morning prayer meeting. It was presided over by Elder R. D. Weaver and Elder W. W. Scott. The opening prayer was by Elder S. W. Lanpher.

There were four hundred and seven in attendance at the church school. A lovely solo, "Dear Little Mother," by Ruth Dale, was sung by Delta Nace, accompanied by Orlando Nace on the violin and Milford Nace on the cello.

Preceding the sermon at eleven o'clock Helen Moorman, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Erwin Moorman at the piano, sang "The Songs My Mother Used to Sing." An impressive ceremony then occurred when little red bows of ribbons, made by the Girl Scouts, were distributed to every mother present by the Boy Scouts under the supervision of their scoutmaster, Brother Ammon Badder. A quartet consisting of Erwin Moorman, Ralph Blackburn, Kenneth Morford, and Fred Horn, sang "Wonderful Mother of Mine," assisted by Drexel Mollison.

President F. M. McDowell delivered the morning address, describing the scene at Bethany when Jesus knew that his hour had come and he must part with his mother. Mary, displaying a true mother's love, went with him to Jerusalem, and as our Savior hung on the cross, we are told, at the foot of the cross stood his mother. At the close of this service Brother McDowell requested the congregation to sing "I Would Be True."

At seven thirty Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley was the speaker and his words of counsel were deeply regarded by all. The anthem, "Savior, Now the Day Is Ending," directed by Erwin Moorman, was given by the choir.

A day filled with rich blessing from on high caused the Saints of Walnut Park to rejoice.

A little daughter, Janet Dolores, was born to Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Garcia May 3. Mrs. Garcia was formerly Sister Alice Garrett and her home now is at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Enoch Hill Church

The church school class period was shortened Sunday morning to give time for the Mother's Day program which had been arranged by Mrs. Ruth Hayes. "What Mother Means to Me" was discussed by Lawrence Martin of the young people's department and Mrs. Robert Whitsett from the adult division. Mother's Day sentiments were also expressed by a member of the primary department, Clarice Stevens. "That Wonderful Mother of Mine" was sung by a girls' quartet. Mrs. Alfred Waters and Miss Marjory Thomas sang "Mother Machree," and the boys of Mr. E. H. McKean's class concluded the program with a Mother's Day yell.

The eleven o'clock hour was given over to a Mother's Day service by the choir, under the direction of Mrs. Charles S. Warren, and a beautiful program was presented in pantomime and song. Miss Elinor Smith with her harp added greatly to the effectiveness of the program.

Elder Swen Swenson was the evening speaker.

Yuma, Colorado

May 2.—The Yuma vicinity was blessed with rain the past week after a drouth which has held since last July. The crops are seriously damaged, but everyone is filled with new hope since the rain.

The Sunday school was saddened by the death of the secretary, Albert Heyer, April 24. The funeral was held at the J. L. Lutz home where he had lived for several years. Brother Ralph Vincent conducted the services, and the beautiful singing by Sister Willis and Brother Truman, of Wray, was especially appreciated.

Brother C. F. Klusman has been suffering with a severe attack of flu which has confined him to his bed the past three weeks.

Several of the members enjoyed a birthday surprise on Brother Fred Korf April 24.

Two young brothers, Ramon Lutz and Harold Klusman, were members of the Yuma High School Glee Club which took part in the State Music Contest at Denver last week.

An all-day meeting is planned for May 15. Brother Vincent, and others from Otis, are expected to be present. The local members hope also to welcome visitors from Wray Branch.

Under the leadership of Sister Walter Lutz the department of women meets regularly.

Choir Remembers Aged Saint's Birthday

Wednesday, April 27, Sister H. B. Jordan, of Des Moines, Iowa, was eighty-seven years old. While calling on her son, a member of the Des Moines Choir, four other choir members learned that she was eager for a visit from the Saints. And so on the evening of her birthday fifteen singers went to the home of this sweet old sister to give her a wish and a big birthday cake. Favorite hymns were sung including some chosen by Sister Jordan. One hymn chosen by the sister is her testimony, "How Gentle God's Command." The choir singers think they themselves derived more happiness from this visit than did Sister Jordan—because there were more of them. Sister Jordan lives at 1110½ East Ninth Street.

Waterloo, Iowa

Since the last report of this group to the Herald a young sister, Miss Georgia Wood, was married to Mr. Frank Gepfert.

Not long ago the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Renslow was blessed. He was given the name Leonard Fay.

The Saints regretted to learn of the accidental death of Mrs. Masters, of Chicago. She was familiarly known here as "Grandma" Masters. For a number of years she was a resident of Waterloo.

Billie Michaelson, who was very sick with inflammatory rheumatism, has recovered his usual health.

The Edgar Guest program, sponsored by the women's department, which was to have been presented April 26, was indefinitely postponed awaiting the abatement of the prevailing "flu" epidemic.

Plano, Illinois

Ministers Take Home Spirit of Conference

April 24.—Pastor J. M. Blakely returned from General Conference with new courage and energy. He enjoyed the trip, and as a result of it, the Saints are about their tasks with greater hope and energy.

Lester O. Wildermuth is preparing to leave for his mission field in Montana to which he has been appointed. The fine spirit these brothers brought home with them is encouraging to the members.

Brother John Cooper and wife, of Willoughby, Ohio, and their daughter, Sister Irene Stebbins, of Chicago, stopped on their way home from conference to see Sister Cooper's mother, Sister F. M. Cooper.

The Sunday Pastor Blakely was gone, several of the local members met with Sandwich Saints in two services and a roundtable discussion led by Sister Clara Easterbrook. They enjoyed a picnic dinner.

The Easter program was beautiful and a full house enjoyed it. Saints were present from Aurora and Sandwich.

Each Sunday evening the Book of Mormon Class meets for study, using the quarterlies prepared by Brother Carpenter.

Among those who have been ill are Sister Clara Southwick who was sick for about a week, and Sister Creta Sanderson who was dangerously ill for several weeks. The former is again at church services, and the latter is slowly recovering.

Brother and Sister William Huen and son, Burdette, have located here and are going into business.

One Sunday evening Mrs. Emma Hines who has traveled in Europe, gave a lecture in the Saints' church on Oberammergau. Music and other talks were enjoyed. The fourth Sunday evening in each month, the service is prepared by the young people and the adult division.

Sister Clara Easterbrook, of DeKalb, the new supervisor of Religious Education, in company with Sister Grace Johnson, the district secretary, lately visited this church school.

A two-day meeting and basket dinner will be held here May 28 and 29. Since this district will have no reunion this summer, it is hoped the members can participate in the week-end meetings which will be held throughout the territory.

Kansas City Stake

Amourdale Church

The morning speaker on Mother's Day was Elder Arthur Oakman, former stake missionary, who preached an appropriate sermon to an attentive congregation.

In the evening Elder R. S. Salyards discoursed on three words selected from the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of Acts, "This perfect soundness," calling attention to the fact that the Edenic condition was one of perfect soundness, but when ungodly influences were introduced, unsoundness, sickness, dissoluteness, insanity, and other impotences entered. Faith such as that had by the lame man, said Brother Salyards, is necessary in us to effect "this perfect soundness."

Oshoto, Wyoming

Brother Horace Hartshorn has been keeping the Saints of this community spiritually alive this winter, riding horseback fourteen miles through snow too deep to be passable in any other way. But now that the roads are in condition for travel, this branch expects increased attendance at services.

Sunday, April 17, was young people's day. The Sunday school was in charge of Brother Veryl Stubbart. Rosa Redding played a selection on her Hawaiian guitar, Nadene Redding at the organ. The efforts of the young people were much appreciated. These services give them opportunity to make preparation for future service. A good crowd attended.

Brother Hartshorn gave a splendid sermon on "Prayer" following the Sunday school. He reminded the congregation that God is the Great Psychologist, and that his people keep in touch with him and his work and their share in it through prayer.

"The Effect of Our Everyday Life on Others" was the topic of Brother Fayette Cole's sermon April 10.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Effective Sacrament Service Adds to Rally Day

May 4.—Sunday, May 1, was rally day for this branch. The church was beautifully decorated for the sacrament service which convened at ten o'clock instead of the usual church school. The spring flowers seemed especially beautiful this morning, baskets and vases being placed against a background of pure white. At the back of the platform hung an enlarged picture of "The Last Supper." Following a period of meditation during which the piano played softly, the Saints sang the hymn, "With Thankful Hearts," and Elder Howard Harpham offered the invocation. Then the congregation sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and Elder Renfroe read the Scripture story of the birth of Christ; hidden singers sang a duet, "Silent Night." A Scripture reading on the life of Christ was followed by an anthem by the choir, "Come Unto Me." Then the pastor gave a short talk on "Oblation and its Purpose," and the oblation was taken up by the deacons. A third Scripture reading on "The Last Supper" was completed with the hymn, "Here at Thy Table Lord," by the choir; Elder E. B. Stafford talked on "The Sacrament and its Significance." While nearly one hundred Saints partook of the emblems the choir sang "'Twas on That Dark and Solemn Night."

Following this uplifting service as the choir sang "This Child We Dedicate to Thee," Sister Ida Feely presented her infant son, Clarence Carrow, whose blessing was pronounced by Elder B. F. Renfroe. The scene was made complete and the hour of worship brought to a close with the inspiring, musical reading, "Home," by Sister L. A. Carrow.

Elder Howard Harpham, of Seiling, occupied the pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour, bringing an interesting message, "Beauty in the Gospel."

At noon all enjoyed a basket dinner served on the church grounds. And at two o'clock they assembled for prayer and testimony meeting. That evening Elder Harpham again held the interest of a fine crowd of Saints and nonmembers.

Local members were happy to have the association of many visiting Saints from over the district and other points. Saints were present from Canton, Healdton, and Seiling, Oklahoma, and Lubbock, Texas.

Many were disappointed that Apostle Roy S. Budd could not be present on that day as had been announced. It is hoped he will be able soon to make Davidson a visit.

Sister Bertha Renfroe entertained a number of the women members and personal friends with a backward party at her home March 15. The guests came dressed as little girls and spent the evening playing backward games and stunts.

Delicious refreshments in which Saint Patrick's Day color scheme was evident, were served "backwards."

Following prayer meeting the night of March 16, the pastor, Z. Z. Renfroe, received a birthday surprise in the form of a "pounding," given by the members at his home. Brother Ray Carrow presented the "pounds" in a clever manner, and Brother Renfroe responded with thanks.

Easter morning dawned bright and clear. The junior department, under the supervision of Sister Alice Skinner, gave its program near the close of the church school. Then came an inspiring sermon by Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, his theme being "Resurrection and Life." The words of Mary Magdalene, "I have seen the Lord," composed his text. Sister Opal Simmons sang "Resurrection." In the evening the young people presented the pageant, "Mother's Easter Faith," directed by Edythe Skinner.

Davidson Saints are working on plans for Mother's Day, Children's Day, and Sacrifice Week.

Vinalhaven, Maine

May 1.—Although the business depression is yet with the Saints of this region and there is not much work, they have every reason to be thankful for their blessings.

Not long ago an unusual opportunity was afforded them, providing much needed equipment for the local church. Due to fewness in numbers the Christian Science Church in the town closed its doors, and made its first offer for sale of seats and piano to the Saints. For some time the women's group had been saving toward the purchase of new seats for the local church building, the cost of which they had estimated would be about three hundred dollars. They had saved a sum of about one hundred and eighty-nine dollars. And right then came the appeal from the general church for money and sacrifice. The sisters answered that call, freely and willingly giving one hundred dollars. When negotiations were concluded with the Christian Science friends, the women had purchased seats almost as good as new, and a piano for the sum of seventy-five dollars.

Young people's meeting is held each Thursday evening and interest is excellent. Some weeks this service is attended by forty young boys and girls. Many of these young people, not members of the church, are learning to take part in the prayer and testimony meetings.

The department of recreation and expression each Friday night is doing well. Pastor Archie Beggs occupies the pulpit on Sunday evening at seven o'clock. Church school session each Sunday lasts from ten to twelve o'clock. And the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting rounds out the week's services. The Saints are endeavoring to go forward in the gospel work, and pray the blessings of the heavenly Father on their brothers and sisters everywhere.

Columbus, Ohio

First Branch, Tompkins and Medary Avenues

In the month of February Elder John R. Grice baptized five people in this branch, Edna Ebersbach, Art King, Ruth Marks, Grace Parry, and Thelma Willis. They were gladly welcomed by the Saints. Brother Grice held a two-week series of services using outlines for his work which proved very beneficial and interesting. His subject was "Life, Its Meaning and Importance."

First Branch entertained the recent Southern Ohio district conference.

The Sunday school and department of recreation and expression are functioning well in this local.

Columbus Saints were happy when they read and heard the fine reports from General Conference. They hope to be able to do their part in supporting the general church program.

The Loyal Club of this branch was organized several years ago with six or seven members. It originally was the women's department, but, under the new outline of work headquarters, is now a branch work unit. Its aim is to make money and boost the financial status of the church. The present membership is composed of thirty-five active members. Social features have been introduced into the club by means of a "mystery girl" project. Each member has a mystery girl who receives many gifts during the year and much inspiration and encouragement for good work. Under the capable leadership of the president, Sister Emma Hooey, the social side of the club has developed until there is splendid feeling existing among the members.

This organization seems to prosper in any undertaking. Its program for the entire year is outlined by various committees and given to each member in book form. It gives church dinners and bake sales about ten months in the year. Rummage sales are held twice a year. Spring and fall conferences are usually held here, and the Loyal Club serves meals to the visitors. The membership is tireless, every woman doing her share.

The women's department of the branch meets jointly with the Loyal Club the first Tuesday of each month. Sister John R. Grice is the superintendent. The work of this group is of an educational nature, each member being asked at intervals to contribute a paper or short talk which will suggest spiritual ideas to keep up the enthusiasm and unity of the members. A program planned for a year ahead saves much time at the meetings. The women are thoughtful of the sick and needy.

London, Ontario

Church School Membership Increases

Through the influence of church and school six new members have been added to the branch roll, Elders F. Gray, J. Winegarden, and Priest A. Hadgson officiating.

The sacrament service for the past month was well attended and the Spirit of the Master was enjoyed. The church school follows this service, and an increase in membership is noticeable, due to the activity of some of the organized classes.

The Young Men's Bible Class put on a minstrel program the other evening to a packed house, the members taking their parts with credit. Stanley Moore was show director; Fred Hedington, musical director, and Raymond Neal had charge of the orchestra. Brother D. Campbell, teacher of the class, is working hard to develop the membership for future service in the church. The evening's program was a side issue to promote sociability and good feeling among its members.

Bishop Dent, Sister Dent, Elder Winegarden and Sister Winegarden are home from attending General Conference. They report a wonderful gathering, and look for a higher plane of living among the church membership. This branch has been honored in the call of three of the elders to the office of high priest, Elder J. E. MacGregor, pastor, Elder J. E. Winegarden, district president, and Elder Frank Gray, church school director.

An epidemic of flu spread over the city the past few months and several of the branch members were ill. However no serious cases were reported. An aged member, Sister Roberts, suffered a stroke a week ago and is in a serious condition.

Sister Ethel Richardson is again in attendance at services after a serious illness during the past month. Several members of the family of Brother and Sister Banes, near Saint Marys, have been quite ill. The elders were called to administer. The sufferers still need the prayers of the Saints.

Pastoral

To the priesthood of Western Oklahoma, Greetings: It is our privilege, as a group of chosen men, to interpret God to his people. It is a privilege which imposes great responsibility. Not only must our intellects be developed to such extent that we are able to teach of God by word, but our characters as well must be enriched to such a degree that we shall eventually be capable of preaching more effectively by example than by word. Remember, Zion will be builded not by preaching the word, but by living and preaching the word. We of the priesthood bear the triple responsibility of living according to the gospel, leading God's people into such life, and laboring to warn our neighbor. Notice, men of the priesthood, that your calling demands leadership, leadership which can and must be comparable to the leadership of Christ. I would ask this question of each member of the priesthood in our district, and desire him to answer it from his estimate of himself at the present moment: Do you think that your life is close enough to God that the most innocent child you know would do well to lead his life in your footsteps? Let it not surprise you to think that there are perhaps more than a few children who look upon you as one in whom are met all the rich graces of God, and who regard you as being well worth their efforts to emulate. Do you merit that high regard from the innocent? To consider another phase of the question, Does God approve you as a moulder of souls? And to go further: Do you now merit the trust he placed in you when he gave authority into your care? Remember, again, that there are innocent ones both in and out of the church, young and old. Consider the qualities you must possess in order to deserve the high regard of God and man in every action you undertake. I need not rehearse them for you. I doubt that any worthwhile cause will ever be successfully terminated which is supported by passive adherents. Then certainly nothing can be accomplished in a constructive cause under passive leadership. God demands that we keep his commandments and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion. To the work then, men of God! Fulfill in every sense the measure of your responsibility. Prepare yourselves by prayer, meditation, and study of God's word, and consider carefully the new responsibilities which confront you from day to day. It is God whom you represent. Represent him in a Godlike manner.—Ernest E. Crownover, in charge of priesthood, counselor to district president of Western Oklahoma, Hydro, Oklahoma.

"Under This Spirit"

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PRIESTHOOD AND THE CHURCH IN GENERAL

If we can go out under this Spirit, I feel to promise under the impulsion of the Spirit, that our work will go forward as it never has in the past, that much will be accomplished in healing up the wounds from which we have suffered in the past few years, and that the retarded progress of the work will gather new impetus, and there will come into our midst those who are converted so thoroughly that they, too, will be caught up by the vision of Zion and will recognize her beckoning to us.—From President F. M. Smith's "charge" to the conference appointees at the close of the conference of 1932.

Without doubt the recent General Conference was one of the most important and best that we have ever held. A very small attendance was anticipated, due to economic conditions. Some even thought that the Stone Church might accommodate the conference. To our surprise about three thousand souls were present at the opening business session; and that attendance held up at practically all of the subsequent business meetings—enough to comfortably fill the Stone Church three times. The Sunday services registered from five to seven thousand. This is important as revealing the deep and lively interest felt by the Saints.

The quorums in their preconference sessions spent little time arguing over points of major differences. They took up problems confronting the church, one by one, and endeavored to find points of general agreement. In most instances conclusions were unanimous, and later received the unanimous approval of the conference. The Lord also voiced his approval of that procedure. "Under this Spirit" the conference also approached its tasks.

True there were alarming "cross currents," as one said later; but "the Lord gathered them all up at the close and directed them into one channel." In the end the thing that the Saints had hoped, and fasted, and prayed for happened. The Lord spoke to us, giving needed instructions, warming our hearts and cheering our souls with the assured evidences of his revelation. The confirming testimony of his Spirit was so convincing that the leading quorums all unanimously approved of the revelation; and the delegates and visitors arose en masse to register their acceptance. Unity and peace such as we have not known for many years came among the priesthood, first (as was fitting) and then to the conference as a whole.

It was under such spirit that President F. M. Smith gave his charge to the missionary force on the last evening of the conference: "If we can go out under this Spirit, I feel to promise under the impulsion of the Spirit, that our work will go forward." As the ministry gathered in groups afterwards, shaking hands, expressing their happiness, many of them declared: "Under this spirit we can go out and work harder than ever before." The tasks confronting them were not diminished; but with reinforced strength "under this spirit" they were prepared to attack those tasks with vigor, finding the old time "joy in service."

"Under this spirit" now we send forth this our appeal to the Saints in all the world to rally, even at the expense of great sacrifice, to the support of the ministry and the church in general. One year ago we were confronted by almost desperate conditions. Uncertainty and fear sought to invade our ranks. Divisions threatened. Some feared and perhaps some hoped that our cause was ruined. At that time we sent forth an appeal indicating the things that must be done to avert the immediate dangers and meet pressing obligations. Our appeal was headed, "It can be done." The church responded nobly. The situation was met. The response financially was generous, considering conditions; the preparation spiritually met the favor and blessing of heaven.

This year the tasks are not lessened, but under a much greater spirit of unity and trust, with faith, hope, and charity revived, we are in better condition to perform our tasks. Regardless of economic con-

JOSEPH SMITH

December 23, 1805—June 27, 1844

“Zion must increase in beauty, and in holiness; her borders must be enlarged; her stakes must be strengthened.” “There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.” (Doctrine and Covenants 82: 4; 98: 10.)

A Month of Prayer

The recent General Conference affirmed by unanimous vote that one of the major tasks of the church is to promote individual and family devotion. To this every Latter Day Saint will agree. A life lacking the enrichment of prayer is a life barren of spiritual power; a people who are but rarely found on their knees can not accomplish the tasks of Zion.

The prayers of the Saints are similar in many respects. Such great endeavors as our missionary task and the building of Zion are very close to our hearts, and prayers for power in these great endeavors arise from our family altars in every land. Nevertheless there is strength in emphasizing our unity in prayer, and the Presidency therefore expects to call attention from time to time to the great needs of the church and the world, that we may unite in petitioning the throne of grace for light and power in meeting these problems.

At the present time, as every one knows, the church is greatly handicapped in its spiritual ministry for lack of financial means. We have reduced our budget to the minimum, and it is imperatively necessary that this budget shall be raised. To do this our people must find employment. If our heavenly Father does not again come to our aid, to help us over the hill which we are now so painfully climbing, we have bitter months ahead. He has helped already, and undoubtedly he will continue to help if we unite our spiritual forces to invoke his aid and so live as to deserve what he may give.

The First Presidency, therefore, hereby request the Saints throughout the church to set apart the month of June for special prayer that the church may speedily find herself liberated for the great task of building Zion. May the Saints everywhere move into the task of raising the church budget as a spiritual exercise, an immediate and important work of partnership with God. May the church and the world be blessed to learn the spiritual lessons of the depression. May it be the good pleasure of the Father to strengthen and sustain those men and institutions who are seeking to provide honorable employment for those in need. May our heavenly Father help his people to have the means of livelihood, as well as the means for budget raising required by this present time.

In essence our task is spiritual, and we have a right to invoke spiritual aid in its accomplishment.

We invite you to join us in prayer.

"Under This Spirit"

ditions in the world, despite threatening conditions at home and the menace of revolution and upheaval abroad, two of the apostles are sailing for Australia, and another is expected to proceed to Europe. The church can do no less than justify their faith in its ability and will to carry forward in sustained effort. The missionaries who labor in home fields in a certain security (though perhaps in some want) can do no less than these apostles. "Under this spirit" we appeal to them to labor zealously and unremittingly, according to the limits of their strength and the range of their opportunities. "Under this spirit" we expect the local priesthood and branches to prosecute missionary work in their respective localities, in a way to make up for our depleted missionary forces. "Under this spirit" we expect local pastors and visiting officers of every rank and grade, to move out and work among the Saints as shepherds of the flock. Let them go out as men of God in strength and faith, to revive the church, to bind up wounds, to strengthen faint hearts. Let them go, as we have before admonished them, "with cheer and hope into broken and darkened homes and lives." "Under this spirit" they shall find joy and blessing.

Let us sedulously guard against a return of division and disputation. There is no good reason why brethren should not work together in peace. Observation of the simplest A B C lessons in the religion of Christ will enable them so to do. "Under this spirit" let there be found no jealously, mean-spirited suspicions, or ill-tempered wranglings among us. Let these two years be spent in harmonious working together, even at the cost of self-discipline of the most rigorous sort, that we may meet again at the next conference "under this spirit" with our tasks well done.

The Presiding Bishopric will at once set forth the needs of the church financially and outline plans under which the Saints through sacrifice may come to the aid of the church at this time. The need is very great indeed. The present condition of depression and unemployment makes it difficult for some to respond as they would wish to do. But we pray that the still small voice that of old bore witness to the divinity of the "marvelous work and a wonder" and prompted the children of God to put that work first in their lives, may today speak to the hearts of all true Latter Day Saints. May each one respond according to his or her ability, and generously so "under this spirit."

NEWS BRIEFS

Joseph Smith Centennial Celebration

November 6 of this year will mark the centennial anniversary of the birth of the late President Joseph Smith. A program celebrating the event has already been given tentative form by a committee appointed for the purpose. Definite plans will soon be announced and local churches can make preparations for what promises to be a most interesting series of services.

Extent of Our Church Organization in Australia

The work of the church in Australia is definitely organized in four districts with indications of its starting up in other places, according to the report of Mission President W. J. Haworth to the last mission conference. Victoria District has eight branches; Southern New South Wales District, seven branches and three groups; Northern New South Wales, seven branches; Southern Queensland, one branch fully functioning and two others operating through the church school.

Brother Haworth, during the last fifteen months, has not been able to visit every branch in the mission, but has labored in every organized district and in Tasmania in which State there is not yet a branch and in South Australia, where there is not yet a district. He reports progress in the mission due to the cooperation of local workers.

Australian Saints are rejoicing over news of the General Conference. They are preparing to welcome and work with Apostles E. J. Gleazer and G. G. Lewis.

The Baldwins Visit Eastern Home

Before going to their new mission field, Saint Louis District, Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin, lately of the Northwestern Mission, are spending a short time in their Pennsylvania home, visiting the Saints at Sharon. They report a joyful reception of their General Conference news, and are looking forward to work in their new field.

Brother and Sister Baldwin did much for the church in the Northwest, and it was with reluctance that they bade good-bye to the Saints there before coming to General Conference. Brother Baldwin closed his work at Seattle with a two-week series of meetings in which he baptized three young men and interested others. They chose to come the "long" way to Independence, stopping to preach to Saints in San Francisco, Salt Lake City, and Denver.

Society Islands Conference Is Gala Event

To the thirteen hundred Saints in the Society Islands and to all the Island of Tahiti, the mission conference is a gala event. Tarona (our mission headquarters), Papeete, Tahiti, is the place where the Saints meet in the specially erected conference building.

The conference which convened April 6, 1932, was no exception to the rule. Excitement was high. Large crowds of native Saints and foreigners attended, several thousand being present each night. The Saints excel in music; they love to sing and play their instruments. Preaching was by Elders R. J. Farthing, J. H. Yager, and native elders.

Graceland College Commencement, May 21-27

Friends and alumni of Graceland College will be "hitting the trail" for Lamoni for the commencement activities from May 21 to 27. These events are the most brilliant and memorable of the school year, and student life is at its happy best.

The program follows: Final Athenian—Saturday, May 21; baccalaureate address by Doctor Walter L. Daykin—Sunday, May 22; College Players and A Cappella Chorus—Tuesday, May 24; Campus Fete—Wednesday, May 25; Lamda Delta Sigma banquet, and "The Messiah"—Thursday, May 26; Honors chapel, class day exercises, and the commencement address by Doctor Floyd M. McDowell—Friday, May 27.

Birch Whiting Busy in Clinton District

Elder Birch Whiting, president of Clinton District, declares that he will not ask any member of his district to do a piece of work which he himself is not willing to do. Since General Conference he has helped the branch at Rich Hill, Missouri. "I have spent seven days behind a pair of mules," he writes, "working on the new church location, where the Saints hope to move their church building. And I am finding that those mules can stand almost as much as I can." There is no church labor problem at Rich Hill. Though poor in material things, the Saints are rich in the spirit of hard work, and during slack times, when several are out of work, many improvements are made on the church property.

Brother Whiting finds new life and courage among his people. He spends much time visiting the many little branches of the district as well as isolated members.

STUDY OUTLINES

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

The Teaching of Prayer

"Lord, teach us to pray," was the appeal made by one of the disciples to Jesus. He expressed a common need. He must have felt keenly the lack of a means of devotion to bring him spiritual light and power. In a very large sense his need is our need. We need to be taught, not only to pray, but how to pray.

Prayer is a spiritual experience, or it is only an empty form. The form can be taught, but the form is useless without the presence of that Spirit which gives validity to prayer. Unfortunately, there are numbers of people who are not conscious of their need for prayer. They need to be made conscious of what is lacking in their lives.

Prayer can not be taught with words alone. It is something that must grow up in the human heart which seeks expression first in a thought and then in words. But there are many in the church who have felt the need of prayer, as the disciple did, and who grope for words and means of expression. Such people, who already have their hearts set on prayer, can be taught something about it. They grope for words, they approach the Invisible Altar hesitantly but sincerely, sometimes awkwardly. At times their weakness is such that they must ask others to pray for them.

There is always this danger in the teaching of prayer: that the attention will be turned from the substance of the prayer to the form of it. When that happens, all the real value of the prayer is sacrificed and lost. One may as well recite poetry as to repeat a formal prayer that does not arouse a person to the spontaneous expression of the feelings of his own heart.

Yet something about the proper content of prayer can be taught. Persons need to be instructed in all other phases of life, but they will rush into the presence of Divinity with no preparation at all. If one were going to see the Governor or the President of the country, he would weigh and consider his words. How does one dare to approach the Almighty with any less consideration? Surely he should learn to weigh and consider his thoughts.

We do not wish to memorize written prayers. No others can wholly release our minds from troubled thoughts nor voice our needs. These are things which we must do for ourselves. Yet we can learn how from what those others have to say.

In the following articles in this series we shall try to learn more about prayer, while seeking to pre-

For Class and Home Work

WORKING TOWARD OUR OBJECTIVES

By Leonard Lea

1. This article is the introductory number of an extensive series of articles by various authors who will attempt to interpret the significance of the main contributions of the recent General Conference to the work and program of the church.

2. What is the three-fold mission of the church?

3. What two main difficulties stand in the way of making the contributions of the recent conference effective?

4. Compare the value of the spiritual program of the church with that of the social program. Are these two aspects of the church work separable? Which should be given greater emphasis at the present time? Which comes first in our program of teaching?

5. We hope that the class will watch these articles as they appear from week to week. Perhaps some members can give the editors the benefit of the class reactions in some written reports about the work.

REFLECTIONS ON THE DEPRESSION

By James E. Bishop

1. What two "ultimate causes" does the author name as the origin of the depression? After reading the article, do you agree?

2. In his last two paragraphs the author sketches the ideal society. How does it check with your ideas of such a society?

"UNDER THIS SPIRIT"

The First Presidency, by Elbert A. Smith

1. In this article of admonition and appeal, President Elbert A. Smith, writing for the First Presidency, sums up the sum-total impression and effect of the recent General Conference.

The spirit of the conference is becoming the spirit of the church. Reports from branches and districts indicate that the unity and faith of the conference is spreading in increasing measure to the people everywhere.

serve the benefits of spontaneous petition. We shall be glad to hear from any who have something to say or a testimony to offer concerning prayer.

Our Task

I.—Working Toward the Objectives

By Leonard Lea

It will take some time for the people of the church to realize the extent and importance of the work accomplished by the recent General Conference. The thought and preparation of many months went into the few days of business. And it will take other months to put into effect the legislation that was enacted. This is because some time will be required to bring the plans to the people and to secure their cooperation in helping with the forward steps that the church is taking.

As the days passed and one important piece of business followed another, the editors realized that material for many issues of the Herald was contained in them, and that much space would have to be devoted to them. Admirable and complete as were the reports contained in the Conference Daily, those reports could not avoid throwing the most important measures into juxtaposition with quantities of routine matter. The editors were faced with a problem of selection.

As a first step, the most significant documents forthcoming from the conference were gathered into a pamphlet entitled Church Objectives, which has been given wide circulation, and which we urgently commend to the attention and study of every officer, teacher, and active member. It has been realized that additional efforts were necessary to assure that the great benefits of the conference should not be lost to the people.

The second step was to decide on a series of expository articles in the Herald which should endeavor to point out the important features of our objectives and of the program necessary for attaining them. A tentative list of writers was selected, and requests have been sent to them for contributions along the particular lines in which they were best qualified to write. We have had generous promises of help, and a few articles are in the hands of the editors. Others, we hope, will be on the way soon.

Working on the Plans

All are agreed that it would be a tragedy if this General Conference were allowed to pass as but one of the seventy-five that the church has had, the people going home remembering only the spiritual uplift and the good times they enjoyed, and the new legislation allowed to gather dust on the books.

No legislation can be of any use until it is put into effect. A resolution is finally validated only by action. Principles taught but not practiced are of weak influence.

Somehow, our goals and objectives, our working methods and our practical plans, must be brought to the people. They must be made cognizant of the needs of the church, and of the ways that those needs are to be met. Somehow they must be won to an active support of the cause to which we have pledged our faith, if the church is to accomplish its mission, which is to teach the gospel, to convert and regenerate men, and to redeem Zion.

Only by reaching the people can these purposes be accomplished. In the articles which are to appear in the following issues of the Herald we hope to make clear the new objectives of the church, to outline the working methods of the program by which they are to be attained, and to persuade each individual member to give as he can of labor and of means toward the accomplishment of the great tasks and the meeting of the grave responsibilities ahead of us.

A Spiritual Program

It is true that ours is a spiritual program. We are not primarily a business concern. But an economic necessity stands in our way, and the spiritual program can not expand to its normal proportions again until this obstacle is removed.

It is for the sake of this spiritual program that our people in the past have been willing to make sacrifices. That program is the one thing of supreme importance to the church. It is of supreme importance to the people, if one may believe the thousands of earnest testimonies that are heard so frequently in the meetings of the church. Toward the accomplishment of that program we work, and we hope that the time may speedily come when we can devote our undivided energies to it.

Unity in Our Objectives

A plea for unity is bodiless unless we have something on which to unite. A static unity can be achieved on nothing at all, but that is not the kind of unity that is wanted. Some people can unite on what they do not believe and on what they do not want to do. But such unity offers no program and will never accomplish anything.

A dynamic unity must be conceived in objectives to be reached and working principles to follow. Now we have those objectives, approved by the officials of the church and endorsed by the General Conference assembled.

These objectives have been reviewed and accepted, passed and endorsed by the church in every possible way. Nothing is lacking to recommend them to the earnest attention and the serious regard of every member of the church. They are so deeply grounded in the fundamental laws of the church that we feel that they are in accord, too, with the divine will.

A Need for Faith and Loyalty

In the troublous years that have passed, some have been discouraged, some have allowed themselves to cease making their contributions according to the provisions of the law for the support of the church, and many have made excuses of one kind and another for themselves to justify in their own minds a course of conduct not calculated to benefit nor support the work of the church.

Faith, loyalty, and work are needed by the church today. Criticism can do little to benefit us at the present time. There is something about a spirit of chronic criticism which is never satisfied. If one condition is met, it immediately creates another. Insatiable in its demands, it would stop short of nothing but destruction.

If the church is to be saved now for its work, if that work is to go forward to its accomplishment, something must be done, and all hands will be needed to do it.

Faith and loyalty on the part of all will be required if the church is to be carried successfully through this present crisis. Let no man have on his hands the responsibility of standing idly by at a time when the church is in so great need.

The Next Move Is Up to the People

The next move is up to the people of the church. The officers have done and are doing all that they can. Courageously, persistently, and sacrificially, the program of retrenchment has been carried out. Everything possible has been done to put us in a stronger position to fulfill our greatest obligations. It is now time for the people to give their help.

All possible adjustments of policy and practice have been made in the interest of economy and the welfare of the work. It seems that the reasonable demands of those who have felt disturbed have been met. Certainly a great effort has been made to effect the best possible changes, and the work of the church is ready to go forward on what we believe to be a better and more efficient basis than ever before.

Our pathway to a victorious future is at present blocked by a debt. There is no possibility of going around it—nothing can be done except to pay. It is the rock which must be moved by the legitimate means of debt reduction, or else we shall be wrecked upon it. Only the regular contributions of tithing and offerings can help us to move it.

The next move is up to the people—they must act.

"The Redemption of Zion"

The hopes and dreams of a hundred years of our church history are weighed in the balance at the present time. At the one end of the scale lie our present obligations and difficulties. At the other, our faith and loyalty, our desires for the building of the Kingdom of God and for the redemption of Zion. Which weighs the heaviest?

We have long sought for plans and specific directions as to our future course. Now, in the statement of objectives that we are about to consider, the church has furnished for us such material as we have long needed. The plan is here. What we need is to begin action.

In the articles which are to follow various aspects of the tasks and goals that are before us will be considered. One will appear in a prominent position in each issue of the Herald for some weeks to come. We hope that our readers will find them of interest and will seek to spread a knowledge of them among all the members of the church.

Because of the time of year, and the necessity of presenting our educational aims first, we are submitting two articles on education in the immediately succeeding issues. At another time of year the order would have been different.

We shall be glad to receive comments from our readers on these articles. It is possible, we hope, that some of these letters can be printed.

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—Words of Jesus.

Peace

At the head of the cyclone tearing the sky
And flinging the clouds and the towers by,
Is a place of central calm;
So here in the roar of mortal things,
I have a place where my spirit sings,
In the hollow of God's palm.

Reflections on the Depression

By James E. Bishop

The antecedent and secondary causes of the depression are pretty well known and widely published, but the ultimate and final causes are not as well appreciated or nearly as fully advertised, except in an incidental and apologetic manner.

There are two ultimate and final causes of this depression:

1. The Decay of Primitive Christianity.
2. The flourishing of religions that are Christian in name and pagan in content.

Primitive Christianity asserted that complete love of God, and love of neighbor were basic and vital. Nothing short of that is Christian.

No one who loves God can be thrilled at the launching of a battleship, the spectacle of militarism, the sway of group prejudices, national imperialism or the flourishing of the capitalistic system. Such things are contradictory of the love of God, which means the love of the supreme good, righteousness and beauty.

No one who respects the brotherhood of man can be engaged in systems that endorse outward piety and connection with a financial system that robs widows and orphans. How could one believing in the brotherhood of man endorse a system that collects money of poor people to give them a respectable burial and then invest that money in concerns that "oppress the hireling in his wage"? The Brotherhood of man demands that in "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye also unto them." Primitive Christianity had "all things common." "They continued steadfast in the apostles' doctrine." They "sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." "Distribution was made unto every man according as he had need." That lesson of distribution present civilization needs to learn badly. If it isn't learned in peace it will be learned in calamity, and then, mayhap, it will be too late for this generation.

Present civilization has boasted about mass production. There are masses of automobiles, masses of cloth, masses of foodstuff, masses of graduates and strange but true there are masses of poor people in need of sufficient food and shelter.

This civilization has boasted of labor-saving devices. There never was a greater fallacy uttered or written. Labor is not saved. Men work just the same but there are fewer of them at a given job. The cost of merchandising is lowered but no labor is saved. Labor has been thrown out of employment. And the world does not know any plan to avert this awful un-Christian spectacle of men willing to work and unable to find it. Such a civilization is un-Christian and must be dominated by the universal sway of religions that are Christian nominally, but pagan in spirit and purpose.

The world must be called back to "primitive" Christianity. Men must be brought to believe that back of them there is a great revelation of God and that before them there is the judgment.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and your silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days." (According to Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., many rich Americans have heavy investments in other countries and have their yachts ready in case of revolution. See "How Society is Meeting the Depression," Liberty, January 2, 1932) "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of the saboath." (James 5:1-4.) The Lord also condemns the poor that will not work, that are greedy and lustful.

That primitive Christianity would decay is a matter predicted by Christ and the apostles. All one needs to do is to read and study the form of organization of the early Christian church, its doctrine, the effects of the Spirit of God among those early Christians, their attempts at equality, etc., and then after 200 A. D. try to find in history an account of such an organization. It can not be found.

In its place has developed paganism. "What we are usually pleased to call religion nowadays is, for the most part, Hellenised Judaism, and, not unfre-quently, the Hellenic element carries with it a mighty remnant of old world paganism and a great infusion of the worst and weakest products of Greek scientific speculation; while fragments of Persian and Babylonian or rather Accadian mythology burden the Judaistic contribution to the common stock." So wrote the clear-sighted Thomas Henry Huxley. Since his day there has been no improvement of a vital character. Leaders among the churches are as much at sea as ever and if the nations went to war tomorrow they would be as helpless as the ill-fated Ford peace ship.

The only way out is universal repentance. It is an acceptance of the gospel that was preached by Christ and the apostles.

That gospel has been restored. It swept over some of the nations prior to 1844. It will do so again. Those who accept it will help to establish Zion. In this social condition there will be no rich and no poor. Labor will be universal and men will work at that job for which they are fitted. There will be universal investment in a surplus. This surplus will care for such things that are partially and crudely cared for by charities today. There will be no need of insurance, as we know it today, for that will be involved in the surplus. There will be no unemployed for there will be a united order of Enoch which will have a long time plan for production and distribution. Industry will be universalized.

Industry will be administered by those who will see "eye to eye." Men do that very thing in science. Just as surely some men will learn to do it in religion. That will be done in Zion. "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

"Herald" Study Classes

By C. B. Woodstock

We welcome the introduction of "Study Outlines" for class and home work, which are appearing in each number of the Saints' Herald. There is no reason why these study helps may not find general use in adult classes in many branches and isolated groups of the church. Each week one or more constructive, informational and altogether helpful articles are analyzed and pertinent suggestions given for discussion and application. The outlines are especially helpful to teachers and will assist every serious-minded student.

Already many "Herald study classes" have been reported using the outlines, some on Sunday morning, others on Sunday evening, and still others during the week. Herald copies are passed about and new subscriptions are taken that the study material may be available to all.

These outlines do not follow one continuous line of study such as is offered in a quarterly course, and so do not usually take the place of the regular quarterlies for Sunday morning use. But they do offer an exceptionally fine opportunity to keep in touch with the best that is written on current problems before the church. Their use extends the excellent service rendered by the Saints' Herald and makes a distinct addition to the study resources of the church.

Certificates in Religious Education

By C. B. W.

As a part of the training program of the church there are issued in January and July of each year to those who have attained certain totals of credits, three grades of certificates. Credits are won by active participation in personal study and class work. Many hundreds are engaged in correspondence courses sent out from the office of the department, scores of institutes and local accredited classes are held in all parts of the church, credits are earned by attendance at Interdenominational Training Schools, certain college credits are allowed in subjects helpful to teachers and leaders in the church school, and some credit is allowed to applicants past 40 years of age who do not submit college credits and who give evidence of having done exceptional work as teachers and leaders.

The equivalent of 150 class hours is required for the Second Grade Certificate, 300 class hours for the First Grade Certificate; and 500 class hours for the Gold Seal Certificate. Fully 2,000 individuals have credits accumulating in our files. To date 100 Second Grade, 59 First Grade and 89 Gold Seal certificates have been awarded.

This begins to mean something in the training effort which is going into the improvement of the teaching work of the church. If we may surely heed the admonition of the Lord and seek wisdom and training "by study and also by faith" we may expect the Lord's blessing upon the effort.

Those who received certificates in the past year are as follows:

John T. Curry, Ohio, Second Grade.
Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley, Ohio, Gold Seal.
Mrs. Fern Weedmark, Kansas, Gold Seal.
Mrs. Ella Manross, Ohio, Second Grade.
Harry A. Robinson, Oklahoma, First Grade.
H. W. Dawson, California, First Grade.
Mrs. F. L. Walters, Missouri, Gold Seal.
Mrs. Ruth Brain, Ohio, Second Grade.

Joseph E. Ebeling, Colorado, First Grade.
Mrs. R. C. Harrison, Colorado, First Grade.
Virginia A. Webbe, Ohio, First Grade.
B. S. Lambkin, Illinois, First Grade.

"Re-living" Priestly Blessings

By Dwight D. W. Davis

"Thou shalt lay aside the things of this world, and seek for the things of a better," were the words of the Lord to Emma Smith in 1830. How applicable they are to the priesthood of today, is to be found in the degree of lethargy from which many of us are just awakening.

The Apostle Paul said "That there should be no schism in the body," (1 Corinthians 12: 25) for "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8); and "Let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 21). "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.)

In these passages we find a call to priestly responsibility, and with the call, a charge for spiritual development and consecrated service to be rendered in the spirit of self-sacrificing love. Spiritual schism has existed in the body, and still exists, because of failure, on the part of many in the priesthood, to live in harmony with the will of God for them.

The warning is that "unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation." Those who hold the priesthood are there because of certain inherent characteristics which qualify them for the Master's work. Only the worthy, who are manifested by the voice of the Spirit, are to be chosen and sanctified. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 10.) Those who are worthy must have "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God." (4: 1.) He who is not humble and temperate in all things intrusted to his care, likewise never shall be acclaimed worthy. (12: 4.) To the priesthood, much has been given; much will be required.

At this time, to how many would the command, "lay aside the things of this world, and seek for the things of a better," apply? "Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold, he that hath eternal life is rich."

Before God this day, how many of us can say: "I have lived for this spiritual wisdom"? Have you vitiated the priestly heritage, with all of its resultant blessings, that has been bestowed upon you?

But what are some of these blessings and promises that have been given those who hold priestly authority?

Those who are of the Melchisedec priesthood have "the power and authority . . . to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 9.)

"The power and authority of the . . . Aaronic priesthood is, to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 10.)

Great as these blessings are, others still have been promised. Whoever is faithful unto the obtaining of these two priesthoods, and the magnifying of their calling, become the sons of Moses and of Aaron. They are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies and become the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom and the very elect of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6.)

Any one in the priesthood having authority to preach the gospel of the kingdom, and does so, not failing to continue faithful in all things, "shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb or joint; and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 13.)

It is a promise given the ordained of God that inasmuch as they strip themselves from jealousies and fears, and become humble, the veil of heaven shall be rent and they shall see the Lord and know that he is. (Doctrine and Covenants 67: 3.)

The call of God today is for a priesthood consecrated to the cause of Zion; a priesthood, the membership of which shall prosecute with fervor the gospel of Jesus Christ; a priesthood that shall teach with patience to the church membership the objectives set forth by the quorums at the late conference; a priesthood that shall with faith labor in the vineyard, feeding not alone the sheep but caring for the lambs of God.

To the task, oh Priesthood! Let us cease to "delive" the rich spiritual heritage that is ours. Let us live for the promise made those who are faithful and who continue in humility before God—even the endowment from on high.

XVII.—PREACHING AND MOVING IN THE YEAR 1900

By James Franklin Mintun

The first week of the year 1900 I preached seven times at Woodbine, conducted funeral service of Cora B. Deman, near Little Sioux and of Henry Anthony Myers, near Calhoun, the son of Sister Margaret Myers, of Missouri Valley, who was suddenly killed. I continued at Woodbine the following week, then came to Persia with Elder James Donaldson. Here I continued preaching till February 12. We also held afternoon prayer meetings at two o'clock most of the time while there.

On February 14 I came to Sloan and preached in the Opera House till February 25, leaving an interest. I came home February 26, where the convention and conference was held, beginning March 2. Presided over sessions of the convention and organized a district Zion's Religio Literary Society of the Little Sioux District. Brother Alexander H. Smith was present at this conference, and the day following the conference he gave my wife's patriarchal blessing, which was a great comfort to her. When she would become depressed in spirit because of physical illness and loneliness, she would turn to her patriarchal blessing and by reading it her spirit was cheered and comforted. Brother Smith's ministrations brought great edification to many at this conference. On March 10 my wife took sick with inflammatory rheumatism, so that I was compelled to withdraw my appointments for a time. . . . Finally it affected her in every joint, so that she had to be moved by sheets. Then she was anointed all over her body, and after she had offered a most beautiful prayer, such as I had seldom heard, and she was administered to, she began to gradually recover.

While I was caring for her day and night, an elder of the Utah Mormons by the name of Otter-son, requested the use of the church to hold some preaching services. The branch president agreed to let him occupy providing one of our elders had the privilege to reply to him on the same night. This was agreed to and I was requested to make the replies. So affected as I was with the loss of sleep, I felt my inability to give proper answer, but God gave me grace and strength. I know that he does temper the wind to the shorn lamb in a literal way. I replied to Elder Otterson the fifteenth and nineteenth, and to Elder Hanson, who was in charge of that mission for the Utah church, on the seventeenth. The last night Elder Otterson advocated polygamy, blood atonement, Adam-God theory, tithing of one tenth of gross earnings, and said that he would not have done so except by my defense I compelled him to. I replied that I would dislike to be sent out to represent a church when I would not be moved to advocate some of the principal doctrines of that church without being compelled to, and sympathized with Elder Otterson for having to do so. I learned that he was the child of a polygamous marriage. After the third night he was asked if he desired to continue the use of the church under the same agreement, and he refused to continue, for he said that I had treated him too roughly, just because I had forced him to advocate what they believed. Many of the citizens of the town attended the meetings, and after he advocated their belief in the things mentioned, I made my reply. I appealed to some who had said that the Saints of the Reorganized Church believed in the same principles as did the Utah people, to take notice that we differed from them more than most any other church, and from that time on we did not hear so much of their kind of talk.

Time was nearing when I must make some preparation to attend the conference for I was at that time secretary of the First Seventy, and our quorum meetings began April 1. Here I must give credit to the help of two of the sisters who promised to look after my wife while I was absent, Sister J. F. McDowell, and Sister Sara Hite. My wife was improving but nearly helpless at the time of my going, but rapidly improved, considering that she had been sick so long with that disease. These sisters, with the assistance which they secured, rendered to the church a greater help than they then or may every know they did. When I think of it I can only think of it with a heart filled with gratitude to them. I arrived home the second of April, and found my wife much better, but not well. She was so that it was thought it safe for me to start on missionary work May 9, when I began preaching at Little Sioux, where I continued till May 15, when I baptized six. I again returned to Little Sioux the eighteenth, and on the twentieth I baptized six more, then preached in the country near Little Sioux and on the twenty-third I baptized four more near where Brother Don B. Coffman then lived. These all became members of the Little Sioux Branch. . . .

For some time I had been seeking under the guidance of the Lord a location where I could move to give my children a further education, and I was in Woodbine the first part of November, and the Spirit directed me to buy a lot that had been in corn the previous year, as the place to locate, and to bring my family to Woodbine for a further education. In November I bought the lot and secured a contract with a carpenter to build, giving him a plan of the house. I had sold my property in Magnolia, for I was compelled to move to secure the education the children needed, as we had no means of sending them away from home to a higher school. The house was to be completed by the first of March, but instead of moving then we concluded to remain during the school year at Magnolia, and made arrangements with the purchaser to rent till in the fall and move just before the fall term of school began in Woodbine. I rented the house in Woodbine to one of the brethren till the time we should move.

Volunteers Built First L. D. S. Church in Independence

By Alice McBride

Perhaps few of the hundreds of persons who have attended General Conference in the capacious Auditorium have given a passing thought to the hard working little band who more than half a century ago erected the first L. D. S. church building in Independence, Missouri, and later battled the way to social recognition as a church. In that half century there have been many changes in the little city, but in none has there been so great a change as in the things pertaining to the church.

At that long-ago time there were not more than twelve families residing in or near Independence and their place of meeting for preaching and Sunday school was in the hall over the Chrisman-Sawyer bank building. Later the meetings were held in the circuit court room of the Jackson County courthouse.

Though few in number and decidedly poor in worldly possessions they were full of the pluck that is typical of the pioneer in any undertaking, and because of their pluck they decided to give up their rented or borrowed quarters and build themselves a church.

A small lot, one block east of the railroad track on East Lexington Street, was purchased. After paying for that they were practically without funds. However, among their members were two or three who understood the manufacturing of brick in a primitive form, so a brick church was decided upon.

Soon the actual work began, and by using the top soil of the recently acquired lot they molded and burned a sufficient quantity of bricks to erect a building forty by sixty feet in size.

Every man in the little branch who was able to work gave all his spare time. Each worked willingly and gladly at anything that was required. The bricks were molded from wet mud and were laid out in orderly rows upon the ground to dry before being put into the kiln to be burned and hardened. Often when a sudden shower came on in the night, those living near the "brick yard," rolled out of their beds and only half dressed, rushed over and worked hurriedly to transport the precious bricks to sheltered safety. Many a hearty laugh pealed out when some brother or sister, rushing madly along in the dark with a long wooden, brick-filled tray, collided with another, similarly laden. The only thing to do was get down on the ground and pick up the scattered bricks.

All the long summer and fall the work continued, and finally the walls were up and a roof covered the structure, but long before the windows and doors were in place the faithful band had moved in and were holding services in their own building. The walls were innocent of plaster and the seats were crude and obviously homemade, but to the little handful of Saints who had worked so hard, everything was exactly as it should be and they were too happy in the knowledge of actual ownership to desire anything better.

Very little money had been spent; even the lime for the mortar in which the bricks were laid was made in a kiln quite near the church lot.

This dear old structure seemed a lodestone which drew other Saints to Independence for within five or six years the old brick church was crowded to capacity.

Then came the Stone Church. Later it overflowed and the South Side Church was built; a few years after that the Walnut Park and Enoch Hill Churches, and still later the Liberty Street Church was bought. Outside the city limits are several other churches. All these seem merely stepping stones to the big Auditorium.

There still are several persons living in Independence who, more than half a century ago, belonged to the loyal little band who built the old brick church.

Your Task.

You may travel, no matter how fast or how far;
You can not escape it, wherever you are.
Some duty awaits you, some good you should do—
There is something the world is expecting of you.

Calls for the Preaching of Our Gospel Principles

By Charles Hannah

At the last ministerial conference in Toronto, where representatives from most of the Protestant churches were assembled, one of the chief speakers stated: "Doctrine is the cause of our religious world being so widely divided," the thought conveyed being, "We want to get away from doctrine." Are we imitating the ways of a people who say: "Away with doctrine!"

Any Latter Day Saint, if he will but think a little, will realize that doctrine is one of the main principles upon which our church is founded. When our early missionaries went out to preach, their every sermon was doctrinal, which oftentimes caused some to leave the service angry. But it was the doctrine which started them to investigate and finally led them to obey. Today, the moderns would call them old-fashioned preachers and, alas, some of our own church people are not anxious to hear doctrine but would relegate it to the background and have our elders discourse on the interesting current events of the day.

At almost any time we can tune in on a scientific lecture or attend one of the popular churches where the minister is paid to speak to his congregation smooth things which will not ruffle their feelings, but, allow them to continue on their pleasure-seeking paths. But, is that the attitude which we, as Saints, know brought us to obey the gospel and taught us to pay our tithing?

How often in late years, has the writer been greatly disappointed to attend a meeting at which there was a goodly number of outsiders present, providing a splendid opportunity for the speaker to give a real old-time gospel sermon; but instead he has heard a discourse consisting of nice sayings to which no one could take exception or, at which no one could be offended. It would take a great amount of preaching to cause people to realize that we have the only way to eternal life. True, it does not require as much time nor effort to prepare a sermon composed of agreeable quotations as it does to consult the three standard books of the church and produce evidence that we possess the pearl of great price. Are our people anxious that our elders do not make too great a distinction between our church and others? Are we becoming like the people of long ago who said: "Prophesy unto us smooth things"? We, I fear, wish to be modern as are others.

Years ago, our elders delighted in putting on a course of lectures on such subjects as: "Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God?" "What Is the Book of Mormon?" etc. Are we trying to avoid criticism and be like other preachers lest we offend some one? Are we not following the way of least resistance? I well remember when the late R. C. Evans lectured in a Toronto theater on the Book of Mormon there was not seating capacity for the crowds. People were curious to hear and the Saints were upholding the preacher by their prayers and united efforts. I cite this to show what can be done if real exertion and prayer are put forth; for, if we can convince people of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon it is comparatively easy to convert them to the truthfulness of the gospel. We seem to be afraid to let them know just what we do believe. I think I heard some one say that outsiders will not attend our meetings if we make too pronounced a difference, but would it not be better to be like Noah and convert only a few, but have those few truly obedient.

Again, is the church deriving all the benefits it should from the efforts put forth? The missionary should be one of the busiest men in the world. At one time all that was necessary to draw a crowd was to announce that Elder — would preach on a certain subject, but those days are past. Are we in the days spoken of by the servant of old when it will be necessary to compel them to come in? Would not a house to house canvass, extending a personal invitation to attend the services at which certain subjects will be treated upon and the giving of selected tracts of good appearance, convey the interest of the missionary in the soul's salvation of those whom he visits. I am not in favor of the promiscuous distribution of literature, but, rather, in the personal visit of one who is capable of answering questions regarding our church work and the prayerful interest of one who is concerned about their future.

I fear, too often, the Saints assume a passive attitude regarding the missionary's efforts rather than everybody in the branch making them a concentrated campaign to win men to Christ. The elder, in his house to house visits, gets exercise, and fresh air and by his enthusiastic interest arouses the spirit of cooperation in the local offices and members of the branch. If a missionary were working for a business firm he would be always on the alert to sell his merchandise and is it not as essential to put across the gospel facts, thereby, winning success for the church and souls to Christ. The lowly Nazarene did not hesitate to do the most humble task, even to the washing of his disciples' feet, and are we not his followers to whom He said: "Follow me"?

If we are in love with the purpose of the gospel—to save our fellow man—will we follow the paths of easy passivity and the way of least resistance? Or, by prayerful study and concentrated effort, at all times, seek to proclaim this glorious gospel and win for ourselves and others the blessings and sanction of God than which there are no greater to be obtained?

Conference of the Society Islands Mission

Papeete, Tahiti.—The annual April conference of the Society Islands Mission convened at Tarono (mission headquarters), Papeete, Tahiti, from April 6 to 10, inclusive. The twenty-two branches composing the mission were represented by delegates chosen by the first district conferences. The attendance of delegates from the outlying coral islands was not so large as in previous years but the order of those who attended was not in the least lessened.

While the delegates were gathered, preconference services were conducted in the Tarono church building under the direction of R. J. Farthing, branch president. On the evening of the fifth, however, all services were turned over to the mission presidency, and thereafter the Saints met in the spacious conference building erected for the purpose in 1929. The building consists of a wooden framework with a corrugated metal iron covering. It is a delightful place to sit during the cool of the evening, and when filled inside, it is yet possible for several thousand people to sit or stand outside and see and listen.

The morning of April 6 is always tense with excitement, for mission conference is to the natives what General Conference is to the general membership of the church. The early morning prayer service starts the day and then when the clock, correctly or incorrectly, strikes the hour, ten, the gavel falls, the hymn is announced, and conference is in progress.

The following is the order of services for the mission conference just past: 8.30 a. m., prayer and testimony meeting; 10 a. m., business session; 3 p. m. department and priesthood meetings; 7 p. m. preaching. This is followed by singing, playing of guitars, mandolins, and violins, lantern slide views, etc., until half past nine. On the last night of conference, the natives indulge in the great joy of singing and playing until midnight when, with reluctance, they adjourn the conference to meet again at the time and place arranged for by the mission presidency.

The conference business this year was mostly routine and if they majored in any one thing it was in the very encouraging reports given by the three native missionaries and by representatives of the various branches. The mission is afire with the missionary spirit and officers look for another big year in baptism gains.

Two special features of the mission conferences are the Sunday school and the Religio lessons review in which the branches or districts, according to the number of delegates in attendance, contest for the laurels in answering questions selected by the committee and in the giving of offering.

On Friday night, the eighth, the regular order of evening programs was changed and a fine program of solos, duets, trios, and choruses was given. A number of the smaller girls did a pretty flower drill taught them by Sister J. H. Yager. Sister Ballard's vocal numbers were much appreciated both by the natives in attendance and the foreigners who came to listen in the evening. About three thousand were in attendance on this particular evening and many favorable comments were heard.

The mission conference is an event in Tahiti now looked forward to by many people who take advantage of the opportunity to sit in the cool evening air and listen to the music and singing by the young and old of this church. One Australian visitor said that he was in the downtown section of the town, and seeing so many people traveling north along the street thought that he would find out where they were going. He was surprised to end his journey at the evening gathering of the Saints' conference. Comments are often heard that the Tuamotuans have in the past been considered as rather ignorant, but now they see that these people are leading the people of the main island, Tahiti, in music and song.

The very best of order is kept by the force of native deacons and no smoking is permitted; intoxicated men are quickly shown where the public road is and ordered to stay there.

No vote of confidence in the church and its officials and the church's program is necessary here for the natives are loyal and never think of being otherwise. The church and its program are all to them in belief, if not always in practice, and the leaders are big men to them and are their leaders in reality. The thirteen hundred members of this mission are behind the church and its program.

Moorhead, Iowa

Five Moorhead members were privileged to attend General Conference. Its sessions caused them to sense anew their responsibility, and they brought many interesting ideas home, each giving a talk on what most interested him while in Independence. Three took up the hour on Sunday morning and the other two occupied the evening hour. These reports were much appreciated. This quintet is composed of Brother T. O. Strand, Sister McElwain, Sister Jessie Boswell, Brother Chester Davis, and Sister Floris Davis.

Sister Jessie Boswell is to be complimented on the efforts she has given to the work of the choir. She does her best to help make the services all that good singing can do for them.

There have recently been two marriages in this branch. Brother Gordon Mann was married to Miss Bertha Masterson in the month of January. And Brother Dale Wilson and Sister Mildred Crews have established a home of their own. The Saints wish them a happy wedded life.

Midweek prayer services have been resumed, but at present attendance is small.

Speakers during the past month were T. O. Strand, Mark Jensen, Chester Davis, and J. J. Boswell.

Madison, Wisconsin

The work of the church is going forward here. Another has been added to the congregation through baptism, Winnifred Ray, a young woman who formerly was a member of the Church of God denomination. She was baptized April 3, by Brother Lee Root, and confirmed by Elders H. W. Woodstock and Leonard Houghton. Sister Ray became the bride of Brother Lee Root April 20, Brother Simpson, of Rockford, officiating.

April 28, the priesthood from Beloit, Janesville, and Madison met with the priesthood at Evansville, and Brother Houghton talked to them concerning the spiritual things of the conference. He strongly emphasized how the conference unified the forces of the church.

Sacrament services of this congregation are well attended, and are gaining spiritually. The theme for the branch is "Lord, Plant My Feet on Higher Ground." This song is sung at least once every week as a reminder and prayer.

April 25, Apostle D. T. Williams made his last visit to Madison and preached in the evening. Some came from Evansville to worship here. "A New Day Breaks for the Kingdom of God" was his subject.

The women of the branch are studying "Christ and His Message" by Christiana Salyards. The four volumes of Church History, Book of Mormon, and Ancestry and Posterity of Joseph Smith and Emma Hale have been purchased by the women for the city library.

An apron and necktie supper was given in the lower auditorium of the church, proceeds being turned over to the deacon.

Those who went to General Conference, came back with the report that it had been a great educational help to them. They told of the wonderful Spirit manifested.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood, the new missionary, arrived here a few nights ago. The Saints gladly welcomed him, and he preached both morning and evening on Mother's Day. He is spending a few days in the branch getting acquainted before he goes to visit other points.

"For He Had Great Possessions," a play, was given by the young people April 3. The theme was woven around the rich young man who came to Jesus to ask what he should do to win eternal life.

Topics for prayer services for April were "Our Commission from God," "Spiritual Building," "Need of Constant Contact with God," "What Am I Worth to God."

Onaway, Michigan

Seventeen Were Lately Baptized

This branch expects to hold a two-day meeting in the near future, and many of the Saints are looking forward to the time when they shall enjoy the visit of a patriarch. Some wish to obtain their blessings.

A pleasing program on the evening of Mother's Day honored the mothers of all.

Onaway Branch has regular Sunday services, prayer meeting on Wednesday evening, and young people's meeting on Friday evening. The branch president, Ernest N. Burt has been teaching the congregation the books of the Bible at the young people's meetings. Following the Bible study, recitations, music and games are enjoyed.

The Saints are showing their faith by their works. They are doing all they can to assist in the wonderful latter-day movement.

In February, Elder and Sister J. J. Ledsworth, of Port Huron, held a series of meetings here, and in March Elder Ernest Burt conducted two weeks of meetings. As a result of these efforts seventeen were baptized, six children were blessed, and one adult restored to the gospel.

The Saints of this congregation greatly appreciated the winter work of Elder and Sister Ledsworth. They are devoting their time to the service of the Master, going without purse or scrip, to take the glad tidings of the gospel to the honest in heart.

Bemidji, Minnesota

May 5.—Saints of Bemidji are laboring in the Master's cause. Of late services have been quite spiritual and strengthening to the members.

Brother R. Galbraith, of Independence, Missouri, has been here most of the time since last fall, and has preached some very interesting sermons concerning Zion and the beauty of the place.

May 1 the branch had a fine time. Brother and Sister Bosshardt and family from Grand Rapids, Minnesota, and Elder Samuel Case and wife, of Warba, worshiped here, and the Good Spirit was present to bless the congregation.

A remarkable service was experienced April 17, a message coming through one of God's servants, indicating His acceptance of the local group as his people and helpers.

Pastor Day has been busy with branch work and visiting other places in the State as one of the counselors to the district president. He was called to Emo, Ontario, Canada, to administer to Sister Chris McBride, and she was soon benefited.

The Saints of this community desire to continue in the gospel work, for the harvest is very great and the laborers are few.

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's "Beacon Light"

The forty-first anniversary of the Detroit Branch, formerly the Evergreen Branch, which was celebrated April 1, 2 and 3 at First Church, Detroit, was a marked success. The activities began on Friday evening, when Lura Forbes Tompkins gave a program of dramatic impersonations and smiles. The receipts from this presentation went to the W. H. Forbes Memorial Fund.

On Saturday afternoon at half past one there was featured a mass meeting of the children from all the different congregations, in the lower auditorium of First Church. Mrs. Henrietta Forbes and Miss Lucy Volz were in charge. In the upper auditorium at two o'clock was held an adult meeting in which all participated in the singing of old-time songs and listening to stories and anecdotes. Elder David E. Dowker was in charge, assisted by V. D. Schaar.

The Saturday evening program was of a musical nature, consisting of organ, piano, vocal and saxophone numbers. Mrs. Nettie Gault gave the history of the branch musical advancement for the past forty-one years. A special feature of the evening was a committee meeting on a Wednesday evening at half past seven, in 1892, sponsored by the Young People's League. Those who took part were Phyllis Schaar, Edmere Mousseau, Thais Booth, and Virginia Thomas.

All the congregations of the branch held Sunday morning services in their respective places of worship.

At two in the afternoon Elder A. C. Barmore, of Port Huron, spoke on the theme, "Christ Our Passover." His discourse was very impressive. At this service Mrs. Nettie Gault gave a historical review of the past forty-one years in Detroit Branch.

The six o'clock service was in charge of the Young People's League, with Robert H. Coates as the speaker.

In the evening Thomas L. Clarke, of Flint, preached on "Millions Now Dying Have Never Lived."

First Church

Elder J. Charles Mottashed began a series of sermons at First Church May 8. The subjects on which he spoke were "Gifts, Why Have Them?" "The Gift of Revelation and Prophecy," "The Gift of Tongues," "The Gift of Healing," and "The Gifts of Wisdom and Discernment."

An unusually beautiful and inspirational devotional period marked the April communion service. Many fervent prayers were offered in behalf of the General Conference. The spirit of this hour continued throughout the month and was felt again in the May sacrament service.

The young people's league which meets at six o'clock on Sunday evening is taking up dramatic work, and plans soon to give a play.

A number of Saints have been ill. They have been remembered in the prayers of the congregation, and many are now well on the road to health and strength.

The church tennis court is being prepared for the opening of the summer season, and the young people have been invited to participate in this wholesome recreation.

East Side Church

April 15 was the last day on which the department of recreation and expression met as a body. The work of entertainment in the branch is being carried on by Anna May Pappas through the Sunday school classes, in accordance with the new church program.

Two prayer services are held weekly, the regular Wednesday evening prayer hour and the Sunday morning meeting at nine o'clock. The young people are especially invited to the latter meeting.

The Varsity Club has organized volley ball and baseball teams.

Lamoni Stake

Stake Quorums Now Full

Sunday afternoon, May 8, a special business session of the stake was held in the Coliseum at Lamoni. The business, as previously announced, had to do with the filling of the stake presidency and bishopric. The stake president, D. Blair Jensen, nominated Thomas S. Williams as a second counselor. It will be remembered that for several months Elder Williams served in the stake presidency, prior to his release from general church appointment early in 1931. Since that time he has located in business in Lamoni. His acquaintance with the stake and his former pastoral experience fit him for work in the stake presidency. Bishop G. L. DeLapp remains as bishop of the stake. His removal to Independence last year as member of the Presiding Bishopric has necessitated certain adjustments, but his many contacts with Lamoni and the deletion of corps of general workers seemed to make it advisable for him to continue. To carry on the work, he nominated as counselors N. Ray Carmichael, business manager of Graceland College, and George W. Blair, business manager of the Lamoni Development Association (the board of stewards managing most of the church property in the stake). After the formal discussion and voting, President F. M. Smith, Apostle J. F. Garver and Bishop G. L. DeLapp spoke concerning the outlook of the church as reflected from the General Conference.

The ceremony of ordination took place in the evening. The first part of the service was an investiture ceremony of the Lamoni Girl Scouts. While the congregation sang "Consecration," the men to be blessed took their places on the platform. First was the ordination of N. Ray Carmichael to the office of bishop. Action recommending this ordination had been taken by the Standing High Council since General Conference. President Frederick M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver officiated. The men approved to act as counselors were then blessed for the work. In a frank and fervent manner, President Smith then spoke to the congregation about ordination to the ministry. He remarked that in this case there was scarcely any need to give a charge to the men being ordained for they sensed their work, but that the membership needed a few reminders, one being that the minister was limited by the capacities and attitudes of his congregation. He pled for positive consecration and support in the year ahead. This makes the first time for several years that the stake quorums have been filled. This should be a hopeful indication for the future.

Hazel Dell Branch Observes Fiftieth Anniversary

Weston, Iowa.—On April 17 it was the good fortune of this congregation to have the pastor who had been to General Conference tell of some of the things he had experienced while with his fellow Saints from other parts of the world.

* On the following Sunday Brother Hans Anderson spoke on the theme of the Saints rededicating their lives to the service of the church.

The first of May was a beautiful day as Hazel Dell Branch had hoped it would be, for it marked the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of this branch. The Sunday school class period was followed by the reading of a short historical sketch of the branch. Then came the communion service, the church being filled to capacity. Neighbor Saints of other branches came to worship with the local congregation, and the principal thought of those who took part in the services was the faith of our fathers. On the wall hung pictures of pioneer Saints.

At noon a basket dinner was served in the basement, and many old acquaintances were renewed. Saints who had not met for years discussed "old times" with enthusiasm.

At two thirty the orchestra played several numbers, a male quartet gave several selections, and Pearl Darrington sang a solo. Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered the sermon, illustrating his lesson with experiences and anecdotes drawn from his wide travels.

The evening service was in charge of James C. Jensen and the sermon was by P. T. Anderson who recently returned from his mission to Scandinavia. He told how he first learned of the gospel here in Hazel Dell Branch, and related experiences incident to his work as a missionary in foreign countries.

Dow City, Iowa

Active in Church and Community

The Easter service was a pleasing exhibition of branch talent and cooperation. There were instrumental numbers, readings, music by the choir, and the contributions of the beginners and juniors are not to be overlooked. The Easter sermon was by Elder E. Y. Hunker.

Since Easter the following themes have been used for morning worship: "The Resurrected Christ," "Service," "Devotion to a Cause," "Our Mission," "Love of Christ," and "Mother's Day." The congregation has listened to these speakers: M. O. Myers, Guy Johnson, and Warren Oliver, of Deloit; George Hansen, of Dunlap; E. A. Rosenberger and Frank Fry, of Woodbine.

No branch service was held the evening of April 3 in order that the Saints might attend a Silver Medal Contest sponsored by the W. C. T. U. in the Methodist Church. Junior Riggsby, of the Saints' church school, was one of the contestants, and two little girls of this branch sang a duet selection.

Elder E. Y. Hunker closed a ten-day series of meetings March 27. As a result many Saints were encouraged and given a new desire to help. His fireside talks were appreciated by a great number.

The young people have been faithful in their work of arranging the evening worship service.

The women of the branch will serve the alumni banquet May 20. They have been selling crepe paper owls and butterflies, the work of many hands.

Brother Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs, will deliver the baccalaureate address here May 15 in the Methodist church.

Brother E. B. Justice attended General Conference and brought home an interesting account of it.

Elder Gerald Gunsolley, of Logan, district president, drops in occasionally for a friendly call, leaving words of encouragement.

Several new faces have been seen recently in the congregation, and with the help of the Father in heaven, the workers hope to make the services sufficiently interesting that this attendance will not only continue but increase.

Fanning, Kansas

Mother's Day was a beautiful day. Spring flowers and new grass and tree leaves springing into life, were enhanced by the sunshine from the almost cloudless sky. James A. Thomas delivered the Mother's Day address at the eleven o'clock hour. Using as his text Matthew 12:50 wherein Jesus said, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother," Brother Thomas gave a broader interpretation to motherhood than is usually given. He extended its application to cover the field of woman's service to humanity, pointing out that some who are not physical mothers oftentimes contribute as great things in the way of service to humanity as some who are actual mothers. The music was in keeping with the day, a trio number sung by Mildred and Gladys Mortimore and Mary Helen Thomas and a solo sung by Sister Edna Williams. The closing song in praise of mother was sung by the congregation.

The evening services were dispensed with in order that those who so wished might attend the baccalaureate services at Sparks High School.

Fanning Branch has ten young people who are graduating from high school this spring, Jack Long and Floyd Chesnut from Sparks; eight others, Owen Davies, Phillip Tilden, Emil Jeschke, Katharine Abbott, Vergie Marsh, Beulah Marsh, Nellie Wiley, and Laveta Thomas, are members of the senior class at Troy.

Volley ball has been resumed with the coming of the warm weather. Tuesday and Friday nights find many taking part in the game on the court in the churchyard.

Elder Samuel Twombly conducted the funeral services of Mrs. George Blanton of Sparks Friday afternoon, May 6.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue, South

The General Conference filled with the peaceful Spirit of God, the assurance that this church is sounder than two years ago, the dawning of a new day for the church, a renewed faith in the leading quorums of the church, made happy the Saints of North Dakota. Those who were privileged to attend the conference returned home with a desire to encourage all who had not been present at the sessions.

District President Warren McElwaine, of Lansford, North Dakota; Elder Lester Anderson, of Dunn Center, and Deacon Courtney Rotzien and Mrs. J. F. Rotzien, of Fargo, attended the conference.

Elders McElwaine and Lester Anderson spent Sunday at Fargo en route home from the conference, and gave the Saints helpful messages concerning the revelation to the conference and other happenings.

The women of Fargo are busy making quilts and other articles for the Sanitarium. They are also studying the Doctrine and Covenants in class work.

The children's division of the church school gave a splendid Easter program in the junior room on Easter Sunday.

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe and wife are spending several weeks with relatives in Kansas. During the pastor's absence the two young men of the priesthood, Jerome Stowell, and Courtney Rotzien, have charge of local work. Brother Jerome has been stricken with blindness the last two weeks, but through administration, the prayers of the Saints, and osteopathic treatments, his sight has been restored. The Saints are rejoicing in the goodness of God. Brother Courtney has given two interesting talks on the conference and what it meant to him. He also talked on Mother's Day.

"The Love of Mother" was the theme of the church school May 8. Mrs. J. E. Heneman sang as a solo, "The Old-Fashioned Mother."

Brother George Young, of La Moure, North Dakota, died recently at the Saint Luke's Hospital in Fargo. Funeral services were held at La Moure, Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, Iowa, officiating. He was assisted by Elder Ray Whiting, of Council Bluffs.

With the assurance of President F. M. Smith that the "promises of Zion standeth sure," and with the glittering towers of Zion beckoning us on, the Saints are renewing their faith and working diligently for the cause of Christ.

The young people of Joplin, Missouri, Branch are happy over the success of their carnival held April 21, by means of which they raised sixty dollars to purchase songbooks for the branch. The young people are of the opinion that "queen" races made a group of persons save their pennies.

Independence

This week William Chrisman High School, of Independence, graduates two hundred and six boys and girls of its senior class. The commencement exercises will be held tomorrow night, May 19, at the Independence Memorial Hall, David M. Procter, of Kansas City, giving the address. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered to the graduates and their many friends last Sunday afternoon at three o'clock at Memorial Hall by Doctor George H. Mack, president of Missouri Valley College at Marshall, Missouri.

The class of 1932 boasts nineteen more graduates than the class of 1931. Of its number seventy-three are Latter Day Saint boys and girls. They are: Paul Allen, Frances Anderson, Roy Andes, Evelyn Bailey, Joe Beem, Margaret Ellen Bell, Emery Bowers, Charles Bridges, Fay Brown, Amelia Cairns, Gideon Caldwell, Fred Chapman, Norene Clutter, Frances Crabtree, Freida Crandell, Essie Belle Crick, Maxine Crick, Melva Criley, Catherine Crockett, Alice Currie, Flora Curtis, Juanita Curtis, Hazel Davis, Charles Edwards, Margaret Etzenhouser, Alegra Farrow, Irwin Fender, Howard Fumal, Gladys Givens, Marguerite Givens, Frank Good, Vernon Greene, Ruth Haberlein, Dorothy Hall, Walter Hodges, Rose Ina Horning, Agnes Jepson, Hiram Jones, Ethel Kelley, Verna Kelsey, Edna Ketchum, Eunice Kinsfather, Viola Leigh, Anna Lee Major, Lawrence Martin, L. M. Friday, May 20, is the closing day of this year's school term.

Stone Church

A large congregation listened to the Sunday morning sermon by President F. M. McDowell in which he adjured the people with the words of the Lord as recorded in Haggai 1: 5: "Consider your ways." He chose to make the basis of his fine, earnest discourse the principles set forth in the pamphlet entitled "Church Objectives." These principles were adopted by the Church Conference of 1932 as the objectives of the church. The attention accorded the speaker indicated the deep interest of the Saints. Brother McDowell's sermon will be printed in the Herald.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang two beautiful hymns from the new Saints' Hymnal and the anthem, "Beneath the Shadow of the Great Protection." Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder W. A. McDowell.

In the evening the music was furnished by the Æolean Chorus, led by Mrs. Jeanette Craig, Miss Mary Okerlind accompanist. They sang "Softly Now the Light of Day," "The Voice in the Wilderness," and "What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

Patriarch Albert Carmichael's sermon fitted well into the theme of the morning. This is the first time he has addressed this congregation since his ordination to the evangelical office, and his exhortation to faith, goodness, and integrity called an attentive response from the congregation.

The activities of organized classes of the school are many. This year the Y. K. T. Class has greatly increased the attendance at its Sunday morning lectures. The Y. P. R. Class has revived, and conducts its sessions on Sunday evening at a quarter past six, Elder Harvey Minton teaching the Doctrine and Covenants. Several classes of the young people's division are busy making summer plans.

Among those whom the Saints in Independence, especially those at the Stone Church, will miss are Brother Godfrey Murer who died May 9; Brother William Albert Stoll who passed away May 11, and Sister Sarah Goodwin Faler whose death occurred May 12.

Brother Murer was seventy-two years of age. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Matilda Murer; four daughters, Mrs. J. R. Davenport and Miss Olivetta Murer, of Holly Hill, Florida; Mrs. Georgia Sevedge, Kansas City, and Mrs. Augusta Holloway, Independence, and three sons, O. J. Murer, Charleston, West Virginia, J. F. Murer, San Antonio, Texas, and G. C. Murer, Fulton, Missouri. Brother Murer had lived in Jackson County twenty-nine years. The funeral was conducted in Independence the afternoon of May 12.

Brother Stoll was born January 28, 1870, and united with the church in early manhood. He held the office of elder and was an active worker in Group 20 in Independence; was president of the Andover, Iowa, Branch prior to his coming to Independence in the spring of 1931. He leaves to mourn his wife, Mrs. Anna Stoll, of Independence; three sons and three daughters: Edward William Stoll, Lamoni, Iowa; Nettie May, of the home; Mrs. Estella Gertrude Ruegsegger, Wellman, Iowa; Mrs. Bertha Olive Bierlein, Elmer Emil Stoll, and Howard Dale Stoll, of Lamoni, besides three grandchildren, five step-children, six brothers and sisters, and many friends. Two funeral services were held, one in Independence on May 12, the other at Lamoni, May 13.

Sister Sarah Goodwin Faler's death was preceded by a long illness at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alex McIntosh. She was eighty-six years of age. Besides Mrs. McIntosh three other daughters survive, Mrs. F. G. Stiles, Kansas City; Mrs. W. H. Sexton, Independence, and Mrs. R. W. Page, La Crosse, Wisconsin; five sons, George W. Newton, Pueblo, Colorado; O. C. Faler and W. D. Faler, Kansas City; P. F. Faler, Eddyville, Nebraska, and Ira N. Faler, Enid, Oklahoma, and three step-children. She was baptized a member of the church September 21, 1890. The funeral was held from the Carson Funeral Home, Sunday afternoon, May 15, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Liberty Street Church

The young people have organized a study class which meets every Tuesday evening to study the Doctrine and Covenants. Sister Carr, who has lived in California and also in Jerusalem, is the teacher. From twelve to fifteen young people are taking advantage of this unusual opportunity. In addition to the regular class work, a worth-while project is being undertaken. Each member is assigned a letter of the alphabet, and the goal is to make a complete concordance of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Mother in her high and holy calling, was held in remembrance on Mother's Day at the church school hour and the eleven o'clock preaching service. Sister J. R. Lentell gave two short readings during the devotional period of the church school. Sister Joseph Elliott gave a reading at the eleven o'clock service, and a trio selection, "Mother Ma-chree," was played by Evalyn White, violinist, Fred Friend, cellist, and Harold Buseth, pianist. Joseph Frick sang a solo.

Brother and Sister Joseph Elliott who celebrated their golden wedding April 6, and who have attached themselves to the hearts of Liberty Street Saints during the last few years, find it necessary, on account of advanced age, to move back to Minnesota in order to be near their children. Local members are sorry to lose their presence and help but bid them Godspeed as they go north.

Attendance at the church school last Sunday was 234, four less than the week before. The school officers are arranging for the Children's Day celebration in June.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards in his Sunday morning sermon spoke of the unifying events and efforts of the recent conference, declaring that these things are preparing us for greater calling and service. "Each worker," he asserted, "must match his call with character and his character with preparation."

Bishop R. T. Cooper gave a splendid discourse on the organization of the Standing High Council, the Traveling High Council, the Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum of Seventy, and their methods of procedure.

Liberty Street congregation keenly feels the loss of Sister Lyda Thomason who recently moved to Lamoni, to live with her father. Miss Lyda for the last several years has been the church pianist, has directed a girls' chorus and taught a class in Sunday school. She has given freely of her service and talent for the upbuilding of the work.

Walnut Park Church

Attendance at the church school, May 14, was encouraging to those who have it in charge. At the close Elder J. N. Mann gave a talk to the school which was very instructive.

The Galilean Class has chosen for its teacher for the year Brother Imal Burke.

At the eleven o'clock service the choir loft was occupied by the junior choir, directed by Delta Nace. They sang a selection from the cantata, "The Song of Triumph," by Norman, with Drexel Mollison at the piano. Elder Howard Andersen was the speaker and his subject was "Church Objectives." He brought out many wonderful thoughts, and stressed the fact that when the people learn obedience, Zion will be redeemed.

A large number gathered at the 5.45 study period. Elder C. Ed. Miller is lecturing to a class in the basement of the church on the Book of Mormon. This is very interesting, especially concerning the recent discoveries in South America and Mexico. The program was given by the Girl Scouts of Troop 10, under the direction of their captain, Mrs. Fritz Oeser, and lieutenant, Mrs. Carroll L. Olson. Some of their activities including songs and first aid treatments were demonstrated to the audience.

At the following service the Saints listened to a duet, "Melody in D" by Williams, played on the violin by Orlando Nace and the cello by Milford Nace, accompanied by Sister Thelma Countryman. Elder C. A. Kress delivered the evening sermon which was most encouraging.

Group 27 North has organized a Doctrine and Covenants class which meets each Tuesday evening at the home of Brother and Sister O. J. Campbell, and has as its teacher Elder R. D. Weaver. An hour is devoted to study of the book and one half hour to an experience meeting.

Buffalo, New York

This was one of the first branches to adopt the group system of teaching Religious Education, and the success of this system with its church school has been very pronounced. Especially has this been so with regard to the young people. Under the leadership of their group supervisor, Sister Florence Kennedy, their activities have been varied and very interesting.

On the tenth anniversary of the dedication of Buffalo Branch the young people produced a pageant and series of tableaux depicting "Youth Through the Ages." This received very favorable comment. So encouraged were the workers that they set to work on a dramatization which was presented on Mother's Day.

In addition to regular church activities this group meets every two weeks on Saturday evening for social purposes. On one occasion twenty-eight were present. For a branch the size of Buffalo such an attendance indicates good interest.

It is well to note that since the inception of the group method of education, results have far surpassed expectations. Now it is not unusual to see members of the young people's group active in the church school and willing to assist in every way possible.

Many nonmembers attend these meetings, and on several occasions social meetings have been held in the homes of these people.

The young people are consecrated to the task that lies before them, and under the capable leadership they are fortunate enough to have, there is no fear but that they will help the church triumph. As the time approaches when the older workers must lay down their armor, youth will step forward, prepared to help in the Master's cause.

The youth of Buffalo Branch are singing:

"Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion, the beautiful, beckons us on."

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The semiannual conference of the stake held its devotional services Sunday. The weather was ideal until towards evening when there came a refreshing rain which probably kept some away from the evening services.

The church school session was well attended, the departments being presided over by an efficient corps of officers and teachers.

At eleven o'clock Stake President C. E. Wight used as the foundation of his sermon 1 Corinthians 2, his subject being "Divine Leadership." He explained how Christ lived the gospel he introduced in contrast to Socrates and others who were unable to live the moral code they taught. As followers he advised that we should look to the quality of our service rather than the quantity.

A stewardship oratorical contest for the young people of the stake was held at Central Church at two o'clock Sunday afternoon. This event, which was sponsored by the O. B. K. organization, attracted wide interest. C. G. Mesley, the associate stake president, was in charge. In the first division (open to contestants up to seventeen years of age) Hugh Bland whose subject was "Stewardship—A Necessity of Today," and Max Constance, "The Spirit of Stewardships," ranked first with equal honors. In the second division (for contestants above seventeen) Berwyn O. Lungwitz, "The Problem of the Ages," and Eddie Baker, "Stewardship—a Necessity Today," both of Quindaro Church, took first place, and Doris Oakman with the topic, "Zion Shall Be Built on Stewardship" took second place. The talks of these young people seemed to present the key to the solution of Zion's problems. The contestants are to be commended for their work.

In preparation for the contest a temporary library was opened to the young people at Central Church and this showed in the quality of the orations. There were also lectures and studies on orations to help the contestants. Preliminary tryouts were held in several of the local churches.

The afternoon prayer service was delayed in opening, but the time was well occupied in testimony, prayer, and song.

The evening preaching service was preceded by several vocal and instrumental numbers. The opening prayer was by the new stake missionary, Elder J. Charles May, and the sermon was by Apostle John Garver who recounted the experience of the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage. His text was, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forth," and he declared that of all the forces which opposed this people the most formidable was their own inadequacy or fear of themselves. He compared their predicament to the one through which our church has been passing. We have been painfully close to the edge of the precipice, have been concerned over material possessions, but now our attitude has changed—we are thinking of human souls rather than property and possessions. By the power of God must Zion be redeemed.

The work of the choir, under the direction of Brother George Anway, in the rendition of several anthems and hymns, was very pleasing. Others assisting with vocal and instrumental numbers added to the day's devotions.

Stake President C. E. Wight, who for a time resided out of the stake on account of business, is back again. His welcome home was most cordial.

The stake business meeting was held Monday night.

Gladstone Church

Sunday, May 1, Elder George Mesley, of the stake presidency, attended the sacrament service of this congregation. In the evening Elder Levi Gamet of Grandview Church, Kansas City, Kansas, was the speaker.

The name of mother was revered at the eleven o'clock hour May 8. The Mother's Day program included vocal solos by Dorothy Price; a talk, "The Origin and History of Mother's Day," by Elder L. C. Connelly, and an appropriate sermon by Elder E. F. Hoisington, of Independence.

Sister Hattie Crosby who has been ill for two months is again able to be present at services.

Pastor C. A. Selbe has gone to the Missouri Pacific Hospital at Saint Louis for treatment. He has always been a valiant and faithful worker, and the Saints everywhere are invited to remember him in prayer.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

The Saints of this congregation enjoyed a most spiritual sacramental service the first Sunday of May.

Recent speakers have been very helpful. "Truth Exemplified" the theme of Brother R. J. Stark, held the attention of the entire congregation. A talk, "Early Missionary Experiences," by Elder E. F. Robertson, edified the Saints. Brother Gerald G. Phillips, a local young priesthood member, presented an instructive talk on charity and the Spirit of God as a sixth sense. A recent discourse by Pastor O. W. Sarratt on "The Perfect Law," was well received. And Elder J. T. Smith, pastor at Lees Summit, inspired the congregation one evening with a sermon.

The marriage of Miss Audrey Spease and Mr. Edgar Pierce occurred April 28, at Independence, Elder Harold W. Hattey officiating. The good wishes of the Saints go with this couple.

Spokane, Washington

Spirit of Late Conference Reigns

The activities of Spokane Branch have forged ahead. Everyone is working cooperatively. The young people are also willing workers. Two young men of the priesthood, Glenn Fordham and Clarence Porter, have taken charge of the young people's worship hour, held two Sundays a month under the leadership of their supervisor Sister Goldie Sage. This is well attended and spiritually beneficial. It is hoped that the interest now shown will continue.

The young men of this branch entered the Inter-church Baseball League with promising material; the manager Brother D. A. Coleman and moral officer, Brother Henry Kinney. The season opened with a Saint Patrick's dinner, proceeds to buy needed equipment for the baseball team.

Easter services were impressive. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The children's division and junior choir occupied the morning hour under the leadership of Sisters Fay Wolters and Orpha Coleman. The senior choir gave a vesper service under the direction of Sister Muriel Whiting, accompanied at the organ by Gladys Ludwick, at the piano, Sister Grace Nichols.

Officers have been planning the activities of the church school according to the plans outlined in Vision. They have been much help. Attendance at the church school is proving that the new church school program is a step forward. Spokane has a corps of consecrated workers in this division.

The Saints were pleased that Brother Sandidge's transportation was so arranged that he could make Spokane another visit before leaving for his new mission. He delivered an interesting talk on the General Conference.

Elder A. C. Martin paid his farewell visit to Spokane on his return from conference. The Saints of this city were sorry to learn that Brother Martin is not returning. They had learned to admire and respect him for his high ideals and integrity in the work. He brought with him on his last visit the spirit of the conference he had so recently attended.

Spokane Branch welcomes Brother George Thorburn and Apostle J. A. Gillen to this district.

Lakewood, Ohio

On May 8, an impressive Mother's Day program followed the church school hour. Brother J. E. Andes gave an appropriate talk.

Brother and Sister E. G. Hammond met with this congregation in the May 1, sacrament service. Local members are always happy to see this pair of workers. Brother Hammond's counsel and words of encouragement are very helpful.

The branch is holding regular services: Church school and preaching on Sunday, midweek prayer meeting, and class work each Friday evening. The Saints observed periods of prayer and fasting in behalf of the church and the General Conference on Sunday mornings prior to the conference. Several received the Daily Conference Herald which kept them very well informed of daily activities at Independence.

A number from Lakewood attended the Kirtland district conference at Barberton, Ohio, March 5 and 6.

Speakers who of late have occupied the Sunday morning hour, were Clifford Minkler, of Lorain, Ohio; Elder T. Thomas, of Kirtland; J. E. Andes, East Side Branch; Pastor F. T. Haynes, and the assistant pastor, Harvey Spiller.

Under the supervision of Sister F. T. Haynes an Easter program was given, taking the place of the church school hour. Readings, vocal duets, a pantomime, "The Ten Virgins," and songs by the school composed the program, then came an impressive sermon by the pastor.

The young people organized a Book of Mormon Class March 18, and an invitation was extended to the older people to attend these classes. The group is studying under Section Four as outlined in the correspondence courses. Some members are enrolling for credit work, aiming toward a certificate in Religious Education. Sister Blanche Johnson is secretary and treasurer, and Sister Ruth Brain, teacher. This class has agreed to furnish social activities for each month.

April 29, a box social and program were had in the basement of the church. Everyone had a good time and is looking forward to other activities of this nature.

Flowers are not trifles, as we might know from the care God has taken of them everywhere. Not one unfinished, not one bearing the marks of a brush or pencil. Fringing the eternal borders of mountain ranges, gracing the pulseless beat of the gray old granite, everywhere they are harmonizing. Murderers do not ordinarily wear roses in their button-holes. Villians seldom train vines over their cottage doors.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.—

Tentative Reunion Schedule for 1932

We are printing herewith a tentative schedule of reunions for the summer of 1932. The list is especially short this year on account of the somewhat disturbing financial conditions prevailing throughout the United States and Canada.

It will be noted that in some instances the place at which the proposed reunion is to be held is not stated. In other instances the date is not given. These omissions occur because our office has not yet been furnished the necessary information. District presidents and chairmen of reunion committees should see that these items are reported to the office of the first Presidency at once.

The reunion calendar, when perfected, will be reprinted from week to week for the convenience of our readers.

Always, the present hour of life is one that is of great importance. In it, only, does one truly live. It holds the key to very much of one's welfare—both present and future. Out of each golden minute as it passes one builds the structure of life and molds it into a thing of beauty or otherwise. To make the present hour surrender up every bit of happiness and profit that it may hold, is the one best way of making life yield its richest blessings.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

Pastoral

To the ministers and members of the church in Great Britain and Continental Europe, including Scandinavia, Germany, Holland and Poland: The General Conference of 1932, has seen fit to appoint me in charge of the church interests and activities for the present period. I look forward with great pleasure to renewing the friendships of past years and making the acquaintance of new friends in the places to which I am altogether a stranger. If all is well, I expect to have my plans arranged to be in England for the mission reunion which will be about August 4, I understand. It is my wish that the policy and program which have been inaugurated by my predecessors, especially Brother Paul M. Hanson, shall be continued and I hope that the brethren will work according to these plans at least until I am on the ground. Personally, I feel that it is always the wisest course to let our work be evolutionary, and consequently we shall try to build up the work upon the policies which already are established. To this end we invite the good will and cooperation of the brethren who are concerned. In Great Britain we welcome to our endeavors Elders W. H. Greenwood, of Manchester, England; Peter S. Whalley, of Birmingham and Fred Davies, of Wigan; in Scandinavia, Elder V. D. Ruch; in Germany, Elder C. F. Greene and Elder John Smolney; in Poland, Elder J. Stebel, and commend these brethren to the confidence and good will of the Saints. We are very happy that the late conference seemed to be characterized by a spirit of fellowship and unity, constituting a happy augury for the future. In these days of stress and strain, both in the world as well as the church, it behooves each one to lift up the standard and ideals of our Christian profession, cultivating compassion and truth; seeking to walk humbly with God. The tasks which confront us are great but with the improved morale they are by no means impossible. Let us bring to the work which is before us, namely the saving of souls, the realization of the kingdom of God, the development of spiritual values, fidelity and consecration. All correspondence may be addressed to the mission secretary, Nephi Dewsnup, 4 Howden Road, Blackley (near Manchester), England, or in America to me in care of the Quorum of Twelve Office, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.—John W. Rushton.

District Convention and Conference

The annual young people's convention and midsummer district conference of Rock Island District, will be held at Rock Island Church, corner Eighteenth Avenue, and Tenth Street, June 10 to 12. It is expected that Elder Gene Closson will be present at this convention, to look after the interests of the young people. We also expect Apostle J. F. Garver, and missionary L. G. Holloway to be in attendance. We would like to meet as many of the Saints as possible at this gathering. Especially do we urge the young people to attend. The Business of "Going On"

At this moment the church occupies a position that it has not held for some years, in that it is presenting a united front to the world. The General Conference, just closed, brought us this blessing of unity in a manner to bring courage and joy to minister and member alike. To this President Elbert A. Smith referred in his message last week. From unity in the financial policy we have moved to unity in our spiritual program. And such unity, most of us fully believe, is the essential basis for church progress.

In the economic world there are some few slight signs of betterment which well may add to our encouragement. For example, bankers are now expressing a guarded willingness to make loans as they did before the depression became so acute. Some businesses show very moderate increases in the volume of their sales. Shelves of manufactured goods are at such a low ebb as to quantities that some activity in replenishment is possible. Revival, even if not yet fully at hand, will possibly be quite slow, but, not to dwell upon the discouraging features so long with us, any improvement however temporary and small finds us very grateful.

The unity in which we face the situation gives a new light to our task, for the needs of the church go on. Our boys and girls and men and women require the materials of spiritual life that each may grow, and those dependent upon the church for their livelihood require the materials for their physical well-being. At the same time, those obligations to which repeated reference has been made during the past year demand attention and payment. So then, for us, the task is to raise the funds required by our greatly reduced budget in order that the burden of the church in every direction shall be carried forward.

This business of "going on" is possible of accomplishment only as we continue in that spirit of unity in which the work of the conference biennium is begun, and as we keep our eyes on the goals which have been patiently worked out, and which in principle have long been before us. We need have no false notions of security, however, as we go forward, for the enemies of light will seek, perhaps more sedulously than before, to thwart our progress. What shall our answer be?

As the ministry of the church are informing you in their pulpit utterances, there is grave need for the financial support of the people of the church. We ask your help in the firm faith that everyone who can will do his utmost as heretofore to help the church onward, and preserve our united front.

Next week Bishop DeLapp will submit some figures to show just what has been our record, and the needs to meet our financial goals by the end of June.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By L. F. P. CURRY.

Notice of Refunding $25 and $50 General Church Bonds, Due July 2, 1932.

The recent General Conference authorized the refunding of the so-called "baby" bonds, which were of $25.00 and $50.00 denominations, maturing July 2, 1932. These bonds were a part of the original issue of $350,000.00 authorized by Conference April 12, 1926.

The refunding issue matures July 2, 1942, bears interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, payable annually, and is of $25.00 and $50.00 denominations as heretofore.

The severely reduced income of the church in this time of depression, the burden of debt of a pressing character which has continued to absorb our income, have prevented making arrangements last year or this to pay these "baby" bonds at their maturity. Therefore, all holders of the previous issue are asked to send their bonds through their local bank to the Fidelity National Bank and Trust Company, Kansas City, Missouri, for exchange, or if they choose to do so, by registered mail to the Presiding Bishopric, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, who will issue the new bonds and register same in the name of the owner.

Presiding Bishop from 1891 to 1916

It is proper, then for us to ask that all make this appeal a personal matter and with approved minds and consciences upon the scriptural order of work in our Father's house, answer . . . the questions, Have I done my whole duty under the law? Can not I further aid in the moving forward of this great work? . . .

With a firm and united effort to sustain the work we are certain of decided success for the cause of Zion and the approving favor of the Master. To this end may the Lord . . . strengthen his children with consolation and hope in his promises.—From "Tithes and Offerings," Saints' Herald, June 19, 1895, page 392.

NEWS BRIEFS

Editor a Quarter of a Century

Twenty-five years ago this month Sister Estella Wight became a member of the church editorial staff. She began work in the Herald Publishing House at Lamoni, as assistant to Marietta Walker, editor of Zion's Hope, the sole Sunday school paper of the church at that time. She is the originator of Stepping Stones, and has been its lone editor for nineteen years, its first number being printed in July, 1913. Since that date, too, she has been managing editor of the Hope.

Miss Wight is the staunch friend of the growing boys and girls of the church. Though a prodigious amount of editorial and office routine have kept her close to her desk all these years, she has found time to assist in the work of the Sunday school and to meet with "her girls" both at Lamoni and Independence. She is the author of two books which are eagerly read by the young people of the church, In the Shelter of the Little Brown Cottage, and The Vineyard Story.

John W. Rushton Soon to Be in England

If all goes well Apostle John W. Rushton will sail for England on the Minnewaska, an International Mercantile steamer, July 22. He hopes to attend the reunion of the British Isles Mission early in August. Only a few days ago Brother Rushton was in Independence perfecting plans for his trip abroad. He was appointed to take charge of the European Mission by the late General Conference.

New Zealand Branches Go Forward

Two weekly sessions of the church school are held in Auckland Branch, New Zealand, one on Sunday morning, the other on Tuesday evening, Elder Hermann Peisker, the pastor, reports. Other regular activities are: weekly recreation programs, biweekly young people's club, prayer meetings, tri-weekly women's circle, and weekly teacher training classes, all operating at a high standard of efficiency.

Branch work at Kerepeehi, New Zealand, is also making progress, every division being fully active. It is cared for by Elder C. A. Loving and Priest W. Herkt.

Circumstances have not permitted Brother Peisker, who is also missionary to New Zealand, to visit Saints living at Dunedin, Christchurch, and Wellington.

New Zealand is an active part of the widely-scattered Australasian Mission.

Veteran Saints to Observe Golden Wedding

Brother and Sister F. H. Edwards, of Birmingham, England, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary, May 27, also the golden anniversary of their membership in the church. They are the parents of Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Sister Blanche Mesley, and have two other daughters in England, Nellie and Gertrude. They are known to their many friends in England and America as faithful and zealous Saints and neighbors. Birmingham Branch and the entire church congratulate Brother and Sister Edwards for their long and devoted life together and the excellency of their sainthood.

Elder A. M. Baker in Ten-night Debate

A few days ago Elder A. M. Baker engaged in a ten-night debate with the Reverend J. D. Taut of the Church of Christ at De Queen, Arkansas. People came a distance of sixty miles to hear the church propositions discussed, and Brother Baker plans to return to hold open air meetings a little later in the season. In the meantime he is busy in other parts of Arkansas and in eastern Oklahoma where he has been requested to "lend a hand" by Apostle R. S. Budd. Last week he was preaching in the "Indian" church at Hochatown, Oklahoma.

Farewell Reception for Missionaries Going Abroad

Independence Saints gathered at the Auditorium last night to say good-bye and godspeed to Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Apostle and Sister G. G. Lewis, and little daughter, Alice June, and Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra. Sponsored by the young people's council and the women's department, the farewell event was marked by the spirit of sincere friendship and helpfulness. A purse, the gift of the Saints of Independence, was presented to the missionaries and divided between them.

On Sunday, Brothers Lewis and Gleazer preached farewell sermons to the Stone Church congregation, and Brother Veenstra to the congregation of Second Church. All of these workers have been a great help to the Saints of Independence.

Elder and Sister Veenstra will be the first to sail. The steamer Valendan will carry them to Holland, where they have served the church faithfully and well. They leave America May 28. This will be Brother Veenstra's fifth mission to that country.

Your Reunion Classes

In harmony with the enactments of the late General Conference and consistent with what we believe to be the vital needs of the church today, materials have been prepared for four courses of study for the coming reunions. These courses, together with the source materials available in each case, are as follows:

1. The Objectives of the Church.
Textbook: The Objectives of the Church, price five cents. For study outlines, see Vision for May, 1932. Extra copies of Vision for May or June, fifteen cents each.
2. The Church School.
Textbook: The Church School Handbook, price thirty-five cents. For study outlines see Vision for May, 1932.
3. The Message of the Book of Mormon.
Textbook: The current Book of Mormon Quarterly. Outline for the course, see Vision for June, 1932.
4. The Background of Church History.
Textbook: The Background of Church History, price ten cents. Outline for study, see Vision for June, 1932.

All of these materials can be secured through the Herald Publishing House at the prices indicated. We suggest that those responsible for the organization and conduct of class work at reunions perfect their plans at once and see that necessary supplies are ordered. It is needless for us to emphasize that class work should be systematically carried out. At this critical time in our church history nothing is more important than that the membership of the church be found informed as to the message and program of the church, and active, intelligent, and efficient in the carrying forward of its work. Much time and attention has been given to the preparation of these study materials. They are available at a minimum cost. Do not fail to make use of this splendid opportunity.

The above courses may be carried for regular credit toward certification when the classes are so planned and conducted. Reunion committees should arrange beforehand to fulfill credit conditions as a part of their district program of leadership training. Write to the Department of Religious Education to secure credit for those attending institute classes.

The Herald will present from week to week the schedule of reunions as accurate in detail as is possible. We urge district presidents and chairmen of reunion committees to aid us in keeping this list up to date.

OUR TASK. II.—EDUCATION AND THE CHURCH PROGRAM

By F. M. McDowell

1. Every little while some one rises to speak against education as if it were not a part of the church program, but as if it had been brought in as a kind of heresy. No greater mistake could be made. The real heresy is this championing of ignorance and complacency with things as they are. Those who say that the church should not work for education are in the wrong, as is demonstrated by the documents quoted from in this article, and by the numerous documents which lack of space prevented the author from quoting.

2. Name and discuss the several points in the program of religious education. How far can these be applied in your branch?

3. What church leaders of the past spoke for education? Choose some of their striking statements for quotation.

4. Select some of the most important statements from Doctrine and Covenants on the subject.

5. Name some of the important facts from the history of education in the church.

6. It is the habit of those who speak against education to propose spiritual preparation as a substitute for most other kinds of training. Indeed, the spiritual preparation is indispensable. But its methods are capable only of personal application; and it is sometimes abused by being made the excuse for idleness and indolence on the part of some members.

7. The program of religious education provides for a fair balance of spiritual preparation and educational training.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY

By A. M. Chase

1. This article is the first of a series that will be of interest to those who wish to know the reasons why the "restoration" was necessary and inevitable.

2. Give particular attention to the quotations from the great religious leader, John Wesley. Did he see his own organization as the perfect church of Christ, or did he look for something yet to come?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

By Louise Attebery

1. What does the author mean by an "act of faith"?

2. Is this "act of faith" possible for the whole church? How are we to go about it?

EFFICACY OF PRAYER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

This article brings many texts on the subject of prayer which, if followed and studied, will give the reader new insight. From one who has devoted so many years to church work, it is especially significant.

Estella Wight—an Editor for Twenty-five Years

Estella Wight, Editor of Stepping Stones and Co-editor of Zion's Hope, is receiving congratulations this month upon the completion of twenty-five years of service with the editorial force of the church publications. Both editors and officers of the Herald Publishing House, as well as the general church officials, join in wishing Sister Wight the fullest happiness in the occasion.

Sister Wight received some of her earliest inspiration and training in the editorial profession while assisting the late Marietta Walker with Zion's Hope, and helping President Elbert A. Smith in a secretarial capacity. The Hope, in those days before the advent of Stepping Stones, was edited to appeal to older children as well as the very young. A need was felt for two papers, and Sister Wight was pretty largely responsible for conceiving the plan for Stepping Stones, setting its editorial standards and ideals, and getting it under way. It made its first appearance in 1913. Since that time, under her able direction, and with the aid of the loyal helpers whose services she has been able to retain, she has kept going the two weekly papers which have been of great use to the Sunday school.

Sister Wight, the eighth and last child born to Lehi and Eliza Wight, is a granddaughter of Lyman Wight, well known for the colony he led to Texas. She is also a niece of the late Patriarch J. W. Wight.

The present editors at the Herald Office, her juniors in length of service, hope that Sister Wight may be with them many more years in her present capacities, for they feel that her contributions are indispensable.

Three things are never more valued than when we lose them: money, friends, and faith. Let us so live as neither to lose nor be lost for them.

Our Task

II.—Education and the Church Program

By F. M. McDowell

The General Conference of 1932 is now a matter of history, but the work of carrying out its enactments is just beginning. Copies of its resolutions have been filed away with the conference minutes. The real significance of its spirit and the Divine intelligence evidenced in its forward-looking provisions are being increasingly appreciated throughout the church. To have assembled in fasting and prayer, to have faced frankly and with courage a real crisis in both the world and the church, and to have witnessed the unfoldment of a program and plan of action upon which men of strong convictions could agree, marks an epoch in our church history. To have had the results of this process approved by God himself means nothing less than that this church has entered upon a new era.

The scope and significance of these resolutions will be discussed by a score of writers in these columns. It is the purpose of this article to consider one aspect only of this total program, namely, the place of education in the work of the church.

It was the writer's privilege and responsibility to share with the other members of the Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric in the work of formulating statements of the various objectives of the church for presentation to General Conference. To him came the opportunity likewise of assisting in the work of organizing and editing the various resolutions of the conference which dealt with these objectives, and also in the preparation for publication of an outline which it is hoped will serve as a guide for individuals and classes in their endeavor to make a systematic study of the entire program of the church. Every hour spent in this effort has but served to add to his conviction that the work of the church is in its very essence a stupendous program of education. Consider the emphasis placed upon the following in the resolutions of the late conference:

The teaching of a distinctive message.

The development of a high standard of Sainthood.

The proclaiming of a definite missionary message to the world with classes for nonmembers.

The fearless and unequivocal teaching of the temporal law.

The building of a society of people inspired with a like faith, hope, and spiritual type of life.

A definite program of religious education which includes:

a. The guiding of growing persons in the attaining of certain knowledges, habits, ideals and appreciations as to make them intelligent, active, and efficient church members.

b. A definite recognition that the message of the church is the heritage of all, and its presentation must be adapted to all—children as well as adults.

c. "A training program which shall make possible the discovery, enlistment, and training of teachers and leaders, including men of the priesthood, that the teaching work of our branches shall be done with increasing efficiency."

A definite recognition of Graceland College as closely related with the welfare of the church and the definite provision that the securing of students for Graceland be included as one of the immediate objectives of the church.

The establishment of such ministerial standards for our priesthood and the fixing of such ministerial responsibilities as can only be attained and met through a spiritualized educational process of the highest sort.

The last paragraph of the revelation received by the church on April 14, 1932, contains an indorsement of these objectives in the following words:

The movements toward better understanding of ministerial responsibilities, duties, and goals, and towards unity of endeavor in teaching, preaching, evangelizing, and the perfecting of the Saints, are pleasing to the Lord.

This definite recognition of the place of teaching in the entire church procedure; this use of the terms "development," "growth," "building," as applied to the attainment of Sainly qualities; this approval of a systematic program of religious education and emphasis upon the training of priesthood and leaders, and, finally, the specific acknowledgment of the place of Graceland in the realization of our major objectives should clear the way for a unity of understanding and procedure along these lines that has never before been realized or possible.

Even in recent years there have been those who have questioned the place of education in the church. Some have considered Graceland a mistake, the specific training of priesthood unnecessary, the program of religious education at least as over-emphasized. Now that the General Conference has expressed itself by unanimous action, and Divine approval has been received, there is but one course before us. If there are those who consider these provisions as a departure from the faith, we would kindly suggest a careful reading of the following:

Education—The Viewpoint of Church Leaders

From the origin of the church to the present time its leaders have repeatedly and consistently championed the cause of education and upheld its place in the program of the Restoration. Space will permit only a few of the many quotations which might be offered in support of this statement:

We are impressed to believe that the church should take into serious consideration the subject of education, and that definite action should ere long be had with reference to it.—Joseph Smith in True Latter Day Saints' Herald, May 15, 1860.

Having waited in vain for some one to take up the subject left by us in an unfinished state, we wish to bring the subject once more before the Saints. It is believed by some that we are not to take steps towards education, because God can qualify his ministry for their labors, and if he fails to do it, then they are excused, and nothing is required of them. We consider this objection as fallacious, and only another excuse for indolence in the ministry.

To the pure-minded then—the pure in heart—there lies no danger in education, and only those who have fear of the ground on which they stand should refuse their assent to an educational movement.—Joseph Smith, in Saints' Herald, March 1, 1871.

The establishment of schools we are most decidedly in favor of . . . If a people would be free, they must be intelligent, and intelligence other than the light of the Spirit must be cultivated, and cultivation must be had in the schools; and these schools to be effective for the people, must be of and by the people.—Joseph Smith, in Saints' Herald, Volume 19, page 19—taken from Herald of October 14, 1925.

The Saints need education; they need and must have good schools; not only those in which to learn the elements, or first principles, but those in which they can search the height and depth, the length and breadth, of all that is good and useful. Those that engage in so good a work, will build to themselves a name better than that of princes, a monument more enduring than that of marble. The Lord is pleased that "little children" should receive instruction through schools.—W. W. Blair, in True Saints' Herald, October 15, 1867.

The religious community which has taken this matter in hand (Graceland College), and proceeded thus far with the work, believes that the cause of humanity is the cause of truth and right; and that the cause of truth and right is the cause of God. They believe that all good is of God, and that it should be diligently sought, learned, and received; that true education is a precious boon which all should prize; that, so far as they are concerned, they have been divinely instructed to "seek learning even by study, and also by faith"; to learn words of wisdom out of the "best books." . . . It is eminently fitting, too, that the people who are committed by such expressions and sentiments as these, and who believe that they are obligated to do all within their power to benefit humanity, should be the first to offer to their sons and daughters, as well as the sons and daughters of all others who may wish to avail themselves of like privileges, suitable and safe opportunities of entering into and exploring the vast and rich fields of literature and science. How could they do their whole duty and do less than this?—Joseph Lambert, Saints' Herald, January 13, 1897.

The worst, most vigorous, and dangerous enemies that civilization, political and Christian, have had to contend against, have been ignorance and superstition. There has been no nation of people, and no period of time, since man began the change from the ways of barbarism to the ways of civilization, when it has not been necessary to urge the contest against these untiring, mischievous and dangerous elements. One of the most effective measures employed by man in the civilized condition to secure the permanency of the compact and to insure the greatest benefits to be derived from it, has been the education of the people. . . . Early in the rise and progress of the people so largely represented here today, the need for educational institutions was seen and acknowledged. Efforts were made to supply the need, and within four years from the day when a little handful of men were organized into a band of believers called the church, a school was established. Men recognized that they were unlearned; but they were not proud of their ignorance, neither were they ashamed to use an opportunity to remedy their deficiency. They believed God had called them, and would hold them accountable for the use they made of both time and talent, so men long past school age set about their studies, and soon placed themselves along side of the scholars of their time.—Joseph Smith, Saints, Herald, January 13, 1897.

For long your leader has been calling for education. Calling for it with a vigor and a zeal that was backed by an intuitive knowledge—I can go farther and say an inspired knowledge.—President Frederick M. Smith, Saints' Herald, June 30, 1920.

I hold that the work of the church is primarily educational. I might even go further and say that I hold that the entire work of the church is educational. . . . The goal of all educational processes should be such triune development of man, spiritual, physical, and mental, as will result in the fullest expression of life, and that of course reminds us of the passage of Scripture, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." To accomplish this demands not alone the command of all factors in the educational processes, but the control of the environmental factors during the unfolding of the individual. This that the acme of the intellectual, spiritual, and physical development might be reached. . . . In order to succeed as a church—and I make this expression after due consideration and hope you will give it some thought—in order for this church to succeed—and we have been some ninety years in making the attempt—our children must have the fullest education that is possible for us to give them or urge them to acquire, with the goal of the church always in view.—President Frederick M. Smith, Saints' Herald, December 6, 1921.

Education—The Word of God

As early as June, 1831, the will of the Lord was expressed to William W. Phelps as follows:

Again, you shall be ordained to assist my servant Oliver Cowdery to do the work of printing, and of selecting, and writing books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me. And again, verily I say unto you, For this cause you shall take your journey with my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, that you may be planted in the land of your inheritance, to do this work.—Doctrine and Covenants 55:2.

Less than two years after the organization of the church a revelation was received through Joseph Smith, from which we quote:

Also, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth. And I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you. . . .

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves, prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, 36.

Education in Practice

There is every evidence that the leaders of the early church took seriously the instructions of God in regard to education. They appreciated, also, the import of the Restoration movement, their responsibilities as ordained men, and the magnitude of the educational task which they were assuming.

We quote from Church History, volume 1, page 625, as follows:

In 1836 a class of forty elders was formed at Kirtland with Joseph Smith at the head. Their purpose was to study the Hebrew language. They secured the services of Professor Seixas, of Hudson Seminary, for a term of seven weeks, paying him three hundred and twenty dollars.

Something of both the intensity and extensity of this educational work as conducted at Kirtland may be gleaned from the following statement of Joseph Smith as recorded in the History of the Church, volume 2, page 98:

On Monday evenings the Quorum of High Priests meet in the west room of the attic story, where they transact the business of their particular quorum. On Tuesday evenings the Seventies occupy the same room. On Wednesday evenings the rooms are occupied by the Quorum of Elders. And on Thursday afternoon a prayer meeting is held in the lower part of the house, free for all, though generally conducted by Patriarch Joseph Smith, sr. The Twelve, the High Council, and other quorums, generally meet each week to transact business, and during the week the "Kirtland High School" is taught in the attic story, by H. M. Hawes, Esq., professor of the Greek and Latin languages. The school numbers from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and forty students, divided into three departments; the classics, where the languages only are taught; the English department, where mathematics, common arithmetic, geography, English grammar, writing, and reading are taught; and the juvenile department, the last two having each an assistant instructor. The school commenced in November, and on the first Wednesday in January the several classes passed a public examination in presence of the trustees of the school, parents and guardians, and their progress in study was found of the highest order. . . .

The early Saints ranked the schoolhouse with the home and the church as vital to the success of the cause for which they were willing to give their all.

The Saint Louis Historical Society in its History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties records the following:

In the fall of 1836 a large and comfortable schoolhouse was built. . . . The Mormons very early gave attention to educational matters. There were many teachers among them and schoolhouses were among their first buildings.

Of significance also is the following statement contained in the record of the Missouri Valley Historical Society:

The date, location, and name of the first school established within the present limits of Kansas City are matters of historical record. This school was founded by the Mormon prophet (?) Joseph Smith in 1832, in what is now Troost Park, by the big spring whose waters today form Troost Park Lake, a site twelve and a half miles west of Independence. . . . It was named the Colesville School.

Nauvoo University, the first university west of Albany, New York, was established at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1840.

This interest in education and appreciation of its value to life and to the church has characterized the work of the church in more recent years. Space permits but a few illustrations of this fact.

1. The continued encouragement of education by President Joseph Smith, and by his contemporaries and successors among the leadership of the church.

2. The establishment and development of Grace-land College. Here we are indebted to the foresight and courage of such persons as Joseph Smith, Marietta Walker, E. L. Kelley, and J. A. Gunsolley, and, in more recent years, President President M. Smith and President G. N. Briggs.

3. The constantly increasing attendance of our young people in colleges and universities throughout the country and the tribute which these students pay to the ideals of the church as the prime motivating influence towards the high academic standards which they have established and maintained throughout the years.

4. The increasing popularity, especially during the last decade, of educational institutes and conventions, of systematic class work at reunions and conferences, of correspondence and credit courses leading to teachers' certificates.

5. The perpetuation all through the years of such educational agencies as the Sunday school, Religio, and Department of Women, culminating in the establishment by the church of a Department of Religious Education in 1930.

6. The gradual establishment of a higher personal and cultural standard for men of the ministry as well as local priesthood, the increasing demand and opportunities for materials and study, the increasing number of the men enrolled in classes, night schools, correspondence courses, part-time courses in colleges and universities.

7. The series of resolutions at the last General Conference above referred to.

Stating it all briefly, the priesthood and membership of the church seem now convinced that we shall never establish a Godly government without Godly men and women and that we shall never have Godly men and women until we grow them. The task of developing within the lives of individuals these divine qualities is the work of education, highly specialized education to be sure, but nevertheless education. These educational processes must include rather than exclude God, for when we with our human agencies have done our best, it will not be enough. We shall need the support and transforming influence of God and his Holy Spirit. Even then the actual development of an adequate concept of and personal relationship with God, the recognition of his place in our lives, and the willingness to follow his leadership is itself the product of continued and sustained religious nurture.

To understand and foster the work of education within the church today is therefore consistent with our best human experience and in harmony with the word of God and the practices of this church. Furthermore, the goals of the church, both immediate and ultimate, are such as require educational activities of the highest type. The Master of men, faced with the greatest of all commissions, chose to teach. May we not therefore hope to achieve our objectives through a sustained and systematic program of teaching? Teaching the fullness of the gospel, or, better, teaching persons to live by and in accordance with the fullness of the gospel. Teaching on the part of those qualified to teach. Learning on the part of all. Teaching and learning—is this not education? Through such processes the work of the church goes on.

(This is the second of a series of articles on the work and the program of the church growing out of the recent General Conference. Other articles will appear regularly in succeeding issues.)

The Prohibition situation in America seems to me, as a whole, to be good. The newspapers seem all to be "wet," but there are always two opinions in a country—the newspaper opinion and the deeper, more thoughtful Christian opinion. But it is with deep regret that I notice that the churches have been neglecting their ethical education along Prohibition lines.—Toyohiko Kagawa, in "Federal Council Bulletin."

Fulfillment of Prophecy

I.—TAKING OUR BEARINGS

By A. M. Chase

We thank Thee, O God, for a prophet.—Old Hymn.
My word shall not pass away, but all shall be fulfilled.—Matthew 24: 36.

Every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.—Acts 3: 23.

And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.—Ezekiel 33: 33.

Two days after his triumphal entry into Jerusalem—two days after he had been acclaimed as the Son of David—the Master predicted the desolation of the holy temple, making this prediction the more impressive by his exhibition of sorrow when he wept over the condition of Jerusalem and the judgments that awaited that city and people. It was but natural that some of his disciples should call his attention to the magnificence of that building and the prodigality with which it had been endowed with "goodly stones and gifts." The Master was not greatly impressed with this display, but astounded his hearers with the declaration, "These things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another which shall not be thrown down." Astonished at this prediction, his disciples asked, "Master, when shall these things be? And what sign wilt thou show, when these things shall come to pass?"

In his answer to these queries, the Master (that prophet which Moses had promised, and to whom, later, Peter bore witness) gave them an outline of history that will stand as a lesson text for students of the prophetic word, until their fulfillment is accomplished and "the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all his holy angels with him"; and while much of this history has been fulfilled, it is well to trace its course from the beginning, that we may more fully realize the certainty of the completion of this world program.

The first item of this prophetic history, according to Luke is: "They shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you; delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons; being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake." (Luke 21: 11.) We need not comment upon this prediction, as every reader of the Bible will be aware that it was literally fulfilled by the persecution of the early Christians by the Jews, for they were "hated of all the world for my name's sake."

Close upon this alarming (and comforting) prediction, comes the prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem with its attendant woes to the Jews and their captivity "into all nations." Nor does the Master fail to give the limit of this period of bondage and suffering: "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

This prophecy began to be fulfilled when Titus besieged and razed Jerusalem, and the fulfillment was so marked that it needs no reference to history in this article to call attention to its accomplishment; but it may be profitable to trace the history to the period when "the times of the Gentiles" began to be fulfilled, for when this time comes we may look for deliverance for this people.

Paul, also, prophesied concerning this people: "Blindness in part is happened unto Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."

It is written, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established"; so right here we introduced another prophet of this first century of the Christian history, even "John, the Beloved," who from Patmos wrote to the seven churches of Asia. The twelfth chapter of this book begins:

And there appeared a great sign in heaven, in the likeness of things on the earth; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. And the woman being with child, cried travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up to God and his throne. . . . And the woman fled into the wilderness where she had a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand and two hundred and threescore years. . . .

And the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child, nor the woman which was the church of God, who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ.

In the above we have a graphic description of

First, the Jewish church, "Which was the church of God," (See Acts 7: 38, "This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness," etc.), and the bringing into being of "The kingdom of God and his Christ," or, as Paul puts it, "The kingdom of God's dear Son." Surely it was for this purpose, (The bringing into being this kingdom of God,) that Jehovah chose Abraham and the Abrahamic people, and he indicates this purpose when he speaks to and of them as his wife, and he their husband. (See Isaiah 54: 5 and Jeremiah 3: 14.)

Second, the taking from the earth of this "Kingdom of God and his Christ," or the time that Jesus prophesied of when he declared that "The day will come when whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service," or again, "From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force," and of which Paul prophesied that "There shall be a falling away," before "the day of Christ is at hand." (See 2 Thessalonians 2: 1-3.) And from that part of the world for a period of twelve hundred and sixty years—the time that would elapse until "the fullness of the Gentiles" should come in. Let us see if we may find witness of these events in the history of the world as we read it today.

Of the "falling away" of the church of Christ, there are so many witnesses that we introduce only two. From the Church of England Homily we quote: "Laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, men, women, and children, of all ages, sexes, and degrees, of whole Christendom, have been at once buried in the most abominable idolatry, (a most dreadful thing to think,) and that for the space of eight hundred years or more."

John Wesley also wrote:

We have been apt to imagine that the primitive church was all excellence, and such it was without doubt, upon the day of Pentecost; but how soon did the fine gold become dim, how soon was the wine mixed with water, how little time before the Christians were scarcely to be distinguished from the heathens. . . . Has the case altered since the Reformation? How little are any of these reformed Christians better than the Heathens? Have they more (I will not say communion with God although there is no Christianity without it), but have they more justice, mercy, and truth, than the inhabitants of China and Hindustan? I doubt whether you ever saw a Christian in your life; I believe you never did. And perhaps you never will; for you will never find them in the great and gay world: though they are called Christians, they are as far from it as hell is from heaven. And it was with a realization of this loss, this taking the gospel from the earth and leaving it powerless to work, for the night did come in which no man could work, that A. Campbell wrote, "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things: and this alone by the blessing of the Divine Spirit, is all that we do want, or can expect, to reform and save the world." . . . But the preparation of a people for the coming of the Lord must be the result of the restoration of the ancient gospel and order of things.

And it was because of a conviction that the time was imminent when God would manifest his power to mankind that John Wesley declared: "The times which we have reason to believe are at hand, (if they are not already begun,) are what many pious men have termed, the 'time of the latter day glory': meaning the time when God would gloriously display his power and love, in the fulfillment of his gracious promise that the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea."

Nearly all students of Bible prophecy will agree that in the promises to Israel of old, two events always synchronize:

First, A new revelation of the love of God to the world, (See Jeremiah 31: 31-34, and Hebrews 8: 8-10), and,

Second, A restoration of Israel to her loved inheritance—Palestine and Jerusalem. (See Jeremiah 31: 35-40, also Ezekiel 34, and Psalm 85.)

As these two events were to synchronize they could not take place until the close of the "thousand and two-hundred and threescore years." To find the beginning of this period of oppression, one must trace the history of the "woman which was the church of God," rather than the body politic. Of this phase of Israel's history, the Encyclopedia Britannica, (Edition 1906), has this to say:

Inasmuch as the power of the rabbins did not depend upon the political or hierarchial forms of the old commonwealth, it survived the fall of the latter. Out of what had hitherto been a purely moral influence something of an official position now grew. They formed themselves into a college which regarded itself as a continuation of the old synedrium, and which carried forward its name. At first its seat was at Jannia, but it soon removed to Galilee, and remained longest at Tiberias. The presidency was hereditary in the family of Hillel, with the last descendant of whom the court itself came to an end. The respect in which the synedrial president was held rapidly increased; like the Christians under Mohammedan rule, he was recognized by the imperial government as the municipal head of the Jews of Palestine, and bore the secular title of the old high priests (Nasi, ethnarch, patriarch). Under him the Palestinian Jews continued to form a kind of state within a state until the fifth century. From the nonpalestine Jews he received offerings of money. . . . In the fifth century Palestine ceased to be the center of Judaism. Several circumstances conspired to bring this about. . . . Above all, the family of the patriarchs, which had come to form a veritable dynasty, became extinct. But this did not make an end of what may be called the Jewish Church State: Henceforth it had its home in Babylonia.

No, it could not put an end of the Jewish Church-state, "Which was the church of God," for the "gifts and callings of God are without repentance," and the promises made to them by the prophets of old, as well as the later prophets of the Christian dispensation must be fulfilled, and while "The serpent casteth out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, . . . the earth helpeth the woman."

It is interesting to note in reading the history of the Jews during this period, (from the sixth to the nineteenth century, or, to be more specific, from 570 A. D. to 1830,) how this people were enabled to find sanctuary from destruction, first with Babylonia, then later, in the Germanic states, and still later with the Moslem rulers, etc. Though edicts of expulsion and extermination were issued against them, and hundreds of thousands were deported or massacred, yet the woman was nourished—in fact the very rigor of these persecutions served to emphasize and compel their separateness as a nation of whom Jehovah had sworn that their existence as a nation should continue as long as His ordinances which had established the sun to "give light by day and, . . . the moon and the stars to give light by night" should endure. (See Jeremiah 31: 35, 36.)

It is written, "At evening time it shall be light," and as we draw near to the close of these "times of the Gentiles," light appears to come to this harassed people, and gradually the restrictive edicts and laws were repealed or ignored, and in 1851 we find a Jew, Alderman Salomans, seated in the House of Commons in England. Previous to this Baron Lionel de Rothschild had been elected five times to a seat in this body, before being permitted to vote, and eleven years a member without taking the oath.

We are taking these items from the British Encyclopedia, and have selected England and the Jews therein as typical of their world experience.

'Til 1828 only twelve Jewish brokers were permitted to carry on business in the city of London, and the patent was purchased for large sums when vacancies occurred. . . . The first Jewish Sheriff of London, Sir D. Salmons, was unable to take the oath till a special act was passed by Lord Campbell in 1835 and, although he was followed two years later by another Jewish Sheriff, Sir Moses Montefiore, it was not until ten years after his election as alderman that Lord Lyndhurst's act, (1845) enabled him to perform the duties of that office. (Page 695.)

We need not go into later history to trace the further removal of these restrictions from the Jews. In the Book of Mormon it is written, "After the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, . . . the Jews which are scattered . . . shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; [Land of Palestine.—A. M. C.] . . . The Lord God shall commence his work among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth." (2 Nephi 12: 80, 85-87.)

If with the ushering in of the nineteenth century we are coming to the time spoken of as "the fullness of the Gentiles," we should begin to look for not only the work of the emancipation of the Jews from political bondage, but also for the ushering in of a new "Gospel dispensation." Either event without the other would leave the fulfillment of this prophecy incomplete. To this the prophets of old agree.

The eighty-fifth Psalm closes with, "Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps," while Isaiah tells us that one result of "A marvelous work and a wonder" that the Lord would proceed to do would be that "The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel," and, "They that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine." (Isaiah 29: 19, and 24.)

Clearly these prophetic declarations presage the fulfillment of the Master's prediction, "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked." (Matthew 24: 32.) And John the Beloved, writes, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, 'Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the

Calls for an Act of Faith as a Step Toward the Redemption of Zion

Editors the Saints' Herald:

Is it permissible for a mere woman to make a suggestion for the general church? I have an idea, and I want to pass it along.

Does it not seem reasonable to you to suppose that a law of God which will work for one person would also work for the church?

To tell my idea I must first tell a personal experience which I believe might become the experience of the general church.

I have been afflicted, until recently, in a way which caused me both mental and physical distress, and my faith in God was tempted to waver. I prayed, I took medicine, I was administered to. Nothing but the medicine had any effect, and it could not wholly cure me. Also, I became too poor to buy any more. One night in despair I lay meditating in my bed.

There came to my mind the promise: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, believing, if it be right, you shall receive." Of course, it was right to pray to be well. There was nothing wrong in my prayer. Therefore, there was something wrong in my believing, else I had been healed long ago. So, keeping this in mind, I gathered myself together, and determined to believe. I committed what the Orient calls an "act of faith." With all the power that I had I believed that the promise was true, that God would, could, and had answered my prayer. And in that very moment I was healed. But I had to hold fast. I had to keep on believing, else my affliction would have returned. I know this, because God in his mercy healed me once before, and sea, and the fountains of waters.'" (Revelation 14: 6, 7.)

Having briefly traced the history of the Jews, "The woman, which was the church of God," to her emergence from the wilderness, we will leave the history of the "Man Child," "The seed of the Woman," for another chapter, only paraphrasing one of our opening texts: "And when this has come to pass, (lo it has come) then may they know that a prophet has been among them."

(All Bible quotations in this article are from the Inspired Translation, and all quotations from the Book of Mormon are from the Authorized Edition of that book.)

because I didn't really believe it the affliction did return.

Now this is the idea: that the church should gather herself together and commit an act of faith, that she be no more afflicted but be cured and relieved of her ills. I think this could be done in this way: let a day and an hour be set, making allowance for the difference in time. It should be on a Sunday, because more people are free on that day. Let every member of every church and branch that has the interest of the church at heart gather in to their places of worship. Then let every one pray. Pray that the will of the Father may be speedily done. Pray that He will pour out his Spirit upon us to the confounding of our enemy, Satan.

That is all, but I do most sincerely believe that it is enough. That is, providing we believe that He can and will, and keep on believing it. For verily I believe that if we would let Him, He would pour out his Spirit upon us to the limit of our capacity.

Being filled with his Spirit, our financial ills would be healed almost as quickly as was my bodily ill. Those who have the Spirit do not need to be urged to live the financial law. Our debts would be paid, Zion would be established, so quickly as to leave the world gasping.

The hope of the Saints is in Zion. There is no hope in the world. The world will not get better, save perhaps temporarily. It will get worse. God said it would. It behooves us to prepare for ourselves a place of refuge. If Zion would have been established one hundred years ago, had the people been willing, no doubt it could be established now—if the people were willing.

But the "branches" can not live without the "tree," and the "tree" without "branches" is barren. Let the branches and the church all work together for good. We are all suffering from the depression—but I have faith to believe that God would prosper us beyond measure if we all really believed.

Many say they believe without actually knowing what they are talking about. But if those who really do believe would get together and work at it, we could accomplish miracles.

I want to see Zion established. At the present time we have not enough money to live on properly. There are many like me and my companion. Not only in the world, but in the church. We need Zion. Others, more secure in their material comforts, may not think so much about it, save in the abstract. But we need it. The others need it just as bad, if they only knew it.

No financial program in the world will save us if we have not faith. If we have faith and are filled with His Spirit, we won't need any man-made financial program. We won't need any special sacrifice weeks or months. Those who love God pay tithes and offerings for the joy of it. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. I don't imagine that He loves a people who have to be constantly begged and coaxed for money. The church has been chastened. Let her have faith to be healed.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. LOUISE ATTEBERY.

EDITORIAL NOTE:

We appreciate the excellent spirit of this letter, and the suggestion it contains. The suggestion is worth passing on to our readers to see what they think of it, and to learn what the response would be. If others are interested in the "act of faith" we should be glad to hear from them.

The writer's words are impressive: "The hope of the Saints is in Zion," and she repeats, "I want to see Zion established. . . . We need Zion." And then she touches the conduct of the people: "Those who love God pay tithes and offerings for the joy of it. . . . I don't imagine that He loves a people who have to be constantly begged and coaxed for money." In another place she says, "If we have faith and are filled with his Spirit, we won't need any man-made financial program." That is precisely the point. We do need the financial program. "If" is the biggest mountain of a word in the language. And until faith and the presence of the Holy Spirit are ours in abundance, that if stands in the way, and our bishops have to go ahead as best they can with the kind of people who are in the church. Action is needed or we perish. We can not accomplish our work by waiting for the people to do something by themselves.

Our machines, which distinguish this era from all others that preceded it, have fastened themselves on every detail of our lives. They have called into being hundreds of millions of people who otherwise would not have been born. For these hundreds of millions they are the sole means of existence. Stop the machines and half the people in the world would perish in a month.

Consequently our civilization is predominantly a civilization of things. It is a civilization of electric refrigerators, automobiles, vacuum cleaners and thousands of other contrivances without which no man is happy and no home is complete. . . . We live in a kind of mental five-and-ten-cent store, our minds cluttered with gear. We are absorbed in the bewildering complexity of possessions which modern industry has produced as an answer to the simple question: "What shall we eat, what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?"—Raymond T. Fosdick, in the New York Times Magazine.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Efficacy of Prayer

By Gomer T. Griffiths

For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers.—1 Peter 3: 12.

Ask and it shall be given you; seek and you shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you.—Matthew 7: 7.

Prayer signifies an appeal, or intercession, whereby we refer our own cause and that of others unto God.

All who are acquainted with the contents of the scriptures are acquainted with the many miracles that were performed by the great and mighty power of God through the medium of prayer.

Prayer is the divine channel by means of which we get in communion with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ; it was through prayer that our loving Savior so successfully combated with his great enemy the Devil; and it is the only weapon that the followers of Christ can employ to overcome his satanic majesty and their own human weaknesses. Therefore our great Leader and Commander spent much of his time fasting and praying, day and night, in secret and in public. It is written that on one occasion he prayed all night. He commanded that men should pray always. He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men should always pray and faint not. (Luke 18: 1.) Christ knew that he could not accomplish the task which had been assigned to him by his Father in the interest of Adam's posterity unless he kept in close communion with the Father who sent him.

The Apostle Paul, who had wonderful experiences in the Christian warfare, likewise directed the Saints in his day that men should pray everywhere and without ceasing. (1 Timothy 2: 8; 1 Thessalonians 5: 17.) Also the first Nephi instructed his people to pray always. (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 15: 12.)

"Therefore, I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11: 24.) Again it is written, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." (John 14: 13.)

I herewith desire to call the attention of the reader to the fact that every promise that God has ever made to the sons and daughters of men in any age of the world are conditional, which fact I shall try and prove by the word of the Lord.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." (John 15: 7.) Thus the promise can not be realized unless we abide in Christ and his words abide in us. Again, the Lord speaking to his people in these last days says, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when you do not what I say, ye have no promise." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3.)

In John 14: 21, we have these words: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself to him."

And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us.—1 John 5: 14.

Jesus said, "And he that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please Him." (John 8: 29.)

Here was an example of obedience on the part of Christ and all who will follow his example and always do the things that please God will never be left alone. The Apostle John is in accord with Christ: "And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." (1 John 3: 22.)

Now, dear Saints, if we will please our God and be made recipients of his blessings, we will please him by observing our prayers in the season thereof. (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.) And again, "I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret, in public as well as in private." (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4.)

Let us also keep in mind the commandment given to the parents in our day that they teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord. "And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy." (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.)

I would call attention to and emphasize some of the provisions that, if we are guilty of violating them, we can not expect God to answer our prayers.

First, the Apostle James wrote that some did not have their prayers answered in his day because they asked amiss. "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." (James 4: 3.)

Second, the individual who will not forgive his brother or sister can not expect God to hear his prayers. "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matthew 6: 15.)

Third, "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matthew 23: 24.)

Fourth, those who will not pay their tithes and offerings can not expect God to answer their prayers as our heavenly Father has no respect for robbers. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." (Malachi 3: 8.)

Fifth, "But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." (1 John 2: 11.)

Sixth, "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard." (Proverbs 21: 13.)

Seventh, "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me." (Psalm 66: 18.)

Eighth, "But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." (Isaiah 59: 2.)

There are those who find fault with the church contending that God did not keep his promises and answer their prayers; therefore they say that God was slack concerning his promises. There were those in the days of the Apostle Peter who made the same complaint and to such Peter answered: "The Lord is not slack concerning his promises as some men count slackness." (2 Peter 3: 9.)

It has been said concerning the radio that though it be the best to be had on the market, unless we tune in we can not get out of it that which we seek; this is also true when we seek help from God. This can be done through right living, through fasting and prayer. Through the means of the two latter mediums at least the Saints were able to get in touch with God during the last General Conference and our heavenly Father was pleased to answer our prayers, for it was one of the most peaceful and spiritual conferences we have experienced for many years and should inspire all of us to be more prayerful and active in keeping the commandments of God.

I am satisfied that if we will follow the example set us by Daniel who kneeled three times a day and gave thanks before his God (Daniel 6: 10) and keep in remembrance the words of Jesus, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," the grand work of the Lord will flourish and Zion will shine forth and blossom as the rose.

"Call unto me and I will answer thee and show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." (Jeremiah 33: 3.)

Pleurisy or Pleuritis—"Stitch in the Side"

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Exposure to cold, injuries of the chest walls, excessive muscular exertion, sometimes may bring on an attack of this disease. In a few instances, tuberculosis may cause an attack. There are certain diseases that are contributing factors to the disease, such as rheumatism, pneumonia, heart disease, Bright's disease, cancer, alcoholism, or tobaccoism. The chronic form frequently follows a repeated attack or is the result of the diseases mentioned above. The acute variety usually begins with a chill, a sharp pain, rapid and shallow breathing. There is a slight tenderness, on pressure, accompanied by a moderate fever and a pulse ranging from 90 to 120. The pain diminishes after the formation of the fluid in the pleural cavity, but there is an increasing shortness of breath. The distressing cough is aggravated, the heart action greatly impaired, the patient assuming an anxious and wearied expression. In the beginning the patient lies on the sound side, which prevents pressure on the inflamed pleura, but when the fluid forms in the pleural cavity, in order to allow free expansion of the healthy lung, he prefers to lie on the affected side. If the fluid is absorbed, the symptoms gradually improve and, in some cases, convalescence is very rapid.

Another variety, being partially acute and partially chronic, begins after exposure to cold, and fatigue. This class of cases complain of shortness of breath and a sense of tiredness, with a dry, hacking cough, followed by fever in the evening, and night sweats. The severe pain is absent, as in the case of acute pleurisy. The cases that become chronic have a prolonged course with more or less prostration and night sweats, shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart, and irregular chills. As soon as one is attacked by this terrible disease, he should immediately be placed at rest in bed and the diet should be of the easy digestive variety, and should consist of semisolid or liquid substances. In all cases, a physician should be consulted. There are many remedies, such as strapping by means of broad straps of adhesive plaster which has proved of benefit in all such cases. The pressure from the strapping helps in the absorption of the effusion. It is the duty of the physician to look after the heart, kidneys, and to relieve pain as much as possible. Many cases require surgical interference, such as the resection of a rib, drainage, etc.

Junior Stewardship

By C. B. Woodstock

As a part of the educational work of the church it is very essential that we come to know the financial law as it has been given to us, and to grow into an appreciation of the blessings which come to us individually and as a group because we obey the law. Especially is it desirable that these understandings and appreciations shall begin to take form and find happy expression in the lives of growing boys and girls.

Junior Stewardship is a plan to help boys and girls to have these experiences under the sympathetic advice and direction of the Bishop's solicitor or another chosen in the branch to sponsor the movement. The keeping of a daily financial record with monthly summaries and statement of tithing account makes an occasion for a careful explanation of the meaning and purpose of records, inventory, tithing report, necessary living expense, tithable use of money, the tithe, offerings, savings, and investment; the whole experience gives many practical lessons in accounting, in wise expenditure, in thrift and saving, and an actual beginning in stewardship responsibility in the church.

The Record Books are well arranged for the use of boys and girls, seven pages being given to directions and definitions, with a double page ruled and spaced for the account of each month. The books are sold by the Presiding Bishopric for individual use at fifteen cents each, but where used in a group project under the direction of a sponsor they may be had at five cents each. Many hundreds are in constant use. For 1932 books have been sent to branches in eighteen states and to Ontario, Canada.

Junior Stewardship Awards

On the recommendation of the sponsor and branch solicitor, a Certificate of Commendation signed by the Presiding Bishop of the church have been sent to all junior stewards who have faithfully kept their records and complied with the law during the year 1931. These certificates have been sent to the following to whom the church looks as coming workers in God's kingdom.

Autobiography

XVII.—EVENTS OF 1901-1902

By James Franklin Mintun

During the early part of 1901 the author continued in the missionary work in western Iowa. At the General Conference in April at Independence, Missouri, he was appointed to labor in the Fremont District in southwestern Iowa. This year he moved his family to a new home in Woodbine, Iowa, where his children could have the advantages of better educational facilities.

During 1902 the author continued in the same field. He relates an interesting experience of how the distressed members of the priesthood in one place were brought to a condition of harmony and spiritual peace.

On May 14 I came to Boone, Iowa, where by previous arrangements I met Brother H. A. McCoy, the district president of the Des Moines District, to assist to bring about a better feeling among the priesthood of the Boonesboro Branch. This was brought about in a very simple, yet marvelous way. The priesthood had all been notified that we would meet with them on this night for business purposes, and I was led to suggest to the district president how we had best proceed. To this he agreed. He called the brethren to order by singing and prayer, and then turned the meeting over to me, who was a stranger to all or nearly all present. I said to them that I had concluded that they as well as we desired to bring about the greatest degree of good, and to do this we each and all needed God to be with us; so I suggested that we have a season of prayer when all would be expected to seek the Lord for his presence and direction to each one as to his duty in the present necessity to bring about the most good. All consented to this and entered into one of the most fervent prayer meetings that it has been my fortune to be engaged in. The Spirit in power rested upon the brethren assembled, and from their prayers it was evident that all desired that good might result, and that each was willing to do his part if he could only know what his part was. Each seemed to be burdened with his own mistakes, and what God desired of him, by way of confession and sacrifice of his own personal feelings to assist to bring about a complete reconciliation. In this way they all overlooked the wrongs of others, which they thought they had seen and had seen in them, and peace came like a fountain of power. Brethren voluntarily forgave each other their wrongs and even debts which they had previously demanded should be paid, and God gave a great reward. All separated with a desire to know what they could do to assist in the work at that place, and even one was willing to go to the foreign land to minister, which he was afterwards permitted to do.

On May 27 I "wrote my first letter as foreign correspondent to the South Sea Islands. How weak I felt in writing to a people, of whom I knew so little and trying to give them instruction and encouragement, by correspondence." I felt blessed in the discharge of my duty, but do not know the good it may have done.

The author's time was well filled by the routine of events until June 24, when he recorded that—

I began meetings in the park at Dallas Center. The Presbyterian minister, the Reverend Gurley, advised his members to not attend our services. When it rained the Christian people let us use their church building. Brother Wardell Christy and family lived here, and were a great help in every way. When I preached in the park, the Reverend Gurley lived just at one side of it, and could not well avoid hearing the preaching, even when he went on the opposite side of his house. On July 7 I met Brother H. A. McCoy and took the tent to Fraser where I preached the three introductory sermons, then returned to Dallas Center, where there was some interest as well as some opposition. I continued to preach in the park. On the twentieth I baptized one. Reverend Gurley had an article printed in The New Times, of a very scurrilous character, against the Saints and their ministers, but when I presented propositions for him to affirm what he had printed he refused, and ordered me out of his house. I then wrote an article and had it printed in circular form and circulated it throughout the city of Dallas Center. While here I organized a Sunday school, with Brother Wardell Christy as superintendent, and had religio sessions and arranged for social services with Brother Christy in charge. I then had articles printed in defense of our faith and our ministers in both the Dallas Center papers, then labored for a time in Des Moines.

While laboring in Des Moines I received an article printed in the Baptist New Era, in which Davis H. Bays attacked the Book of Mormon, calling it an "old fraud," although he had represented the truthfulness of the book for twenty-seven years as a minister of the church.

During my labors at this time I made a special visit to every one who held the priesthood living in

Des Moines, to ascertain what assistance they would render in the missionary work I should more actively enter into in the future.

I had written to Davis H. Bays and he was willing to stand by his statement and in debate would prove that "the Book of Mormon was an old fraud." I sent him propositions covering the church propositions and the Book of Mormon questions, which had been presented to me by Brother W. C. Nirk, district president.

The author relates an interesting account of how one member, who had been active in the priesthood, began to doubt, and was brought back to his faith.

When I visited him he said that he was doubting and would like that the Lord would show him some marvelous things to remove these doubts. I asked what he wished the Lord to show him. He answered, "I would desire to see some one raised to health immediately who is at the point of death." I asked him, "Do you want to get sick, or be the one that is sick through which this might be shown?" He answered, "No." Then I asked, "Do you want any one else to get sick?" He answered, "No." Then I said, "How do you expect the Lord to show you what you have desired? Some one will have to be very sick, if nigh unto death, and have some suffering to endure." I had known of his labors at Magnolia when he and I both lived there, both in the preaching of the word, and in administering to some sick, who had been blessed. I called his attention to this fact, and asked him, "Did you not have witness that when you preached, and administered to the sick, that God was with you, and blessed?" He said, "I thought I did." "Now, if you should see one, who apparently was near death, raised to life immediately, how would you know by what power it was done?" He said, and said very truly, "By the Spirit that I felt present." I asked, "Did you not have that Spirit when you in the past preached and administered to the sick, and they got immediately better or well?" He answered, "Yes." "Then," I said, "you have already had the evidence that you have said you desired." I then asked, "What other evidence do you want God to show you?" He said, "To see an angel." I said, "Angels do not visit except to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation, when there is no human power to minister to them." "Do you want to be placed in such trying conditions as to make it necessary for God to send an angel for your relief?" He answered, "No." "Then, my brother, should a personal being appear, claiming to be an angel from God, how would you know it was from God, as it claimed, seeing that 'Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.'

By what means could you be satisfied that it was from God?" Then he answered, "By the spirit associated with the presence of this personality." "Then," I said, "you have already said that you have had such evidence when you have been preaching and administering, why not be satisfied?" "Well," he said, "I never had thought of it in that way before." He seemed to feel better satisfied after our conversation. This may help others who are doubting, which I trust the relating of this event will do.

I went to Collins, where Davis H. Bays was pastor of the Christian Church, and later at Rhodes. . . . There I became associated with Brother W. C. Nirk who accompanied me to Collins on my visit to see Bays, and to make final arrangements for the debate, for which he had signed propositions. We met him going to the train in answer, as he said, to a telephone call. On December 10, I again went to Collins, this time with Brother W. C. Earhart, and called on Mr. Bays. We entered into agreements, which were entered into after some time. We agreed to begin the debate January 5. I found Mr. Bays kindly disposed when he had his own way, but somewhat insulting and dominant when his ways were not agreed to. The first half of the debate to begin at Clyde, a small place near to the Clear Creek Branch, where there was a small organization of the Saints holding meetings in a schoolhouse; the latter half to be held in the Christian Church where Bays was pastor previous to the debate. He made one request of me, which I agreed to under conditions. He requested me not to use the testimonies that he had given when a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and appearing in the Saints' Herald at that time. I told him I would not use them except he posed as a witness of what he knew about the Saints and their church in the debate. To this condition he agreed tacitly.

Have any of you ever thought why we all wear these stiff, armor-plated shirt fronts? I have been told that the origin of them was this: About one hundred years ago men wore soft, pleated shirts in the evening, and then, when mangles were invented, it was found that the shirts were returned from the laundry with the buttons ground and broken into fragments. So studs were invented. But studs won't stay "put" in a soft shirt, so our ancestors decided to have their shirts starched, and that, I believe, is the evolution of the "boiled" shirt, which has caused us, and, in fact, the whole human race, such untold misery.—The Prince of Wales.

Graceland News

A Cappella Sings in Des Moines

The Graceland A Cappella Chorus sang for the Des Moines Federated Women's Club at the Hoyt Sherman Place May 26. Delegates from one hundred different clubs were present, filling the auditorium to capacity. Among them were many musically talented women who enjoyed the concert, and helped form a very appreciative audience. Mrs. Susan Bender Eddy, president of the Des Moines Federation and an early voice instructor of our director, Miss Carlile, expressed her appreciation for the opportunity of hearing Graceland's chorus. As a result of the afternoon's program, the A Cappellas were extended invitations to sing in Des Moines for several events next season.

Most of the A Cappella members returned to Lamoni immediately following the concert, but the Graceland Male Quartet and Colin Ferritt, soloist, remained to sing at the Latter Day Saint church in the evening. The boys were welcomed by a large and enthusiastic audience. Graceland's male quartet is unique this year, in that it represents a wide section of Graceland's cosmopolitan student body. George Potts, first tenor, comes from Brooklyn, New York; Wilbur Chandler, second tenor, from Birmingham, Alabama; Leslie Kohlman, first bass, from Houston, Texas; and Colin Ferrett, lusty basso, hails from Sydney, Australia.

LOIS PRALL.

Speech Class Dinner

Several months ago, the class in advanced speech decided that "after dinner speeches" could not be enjoyed unless the setting was appropriately realistic. The outcome was a pleasant dinner party last Monday evening, at the home of Miss Florence Thompson, head of the speech department, who acted as hostess to an appreciative class of young men. After disposing of a tasty dinner, the men gave their attention to the delivery of speeches on the theme, "The College Career—Does it Pay?" The subject was dealt with from all possible angles. The cultural, financial, social, matrimonial and other aspects were discussed by the men, and then the toastmaster introduced Miss Thompson as the last speaker of the evening. When the time for departure arrived, the general discussion was that the best session of the class had been held, and several emphatically stated that all college courses should end in a similar manner.

WALTER JOHNSON.

Commencement Program Arranged

The commencement calendar of 1932, is as crowded as in previous years, with Doctor Walter Daykin scheduled for the baccalaureate address Sunday, May 22, and Doctor F. M. McDowell for commencement speaker, Friday, May 27.

Doctor Daykin is a Graceland graduate who attended the University of Illinois, later instructed in the University of Kansas and is now in the sociology department of the University of Iowa. Doctor McDowell, also a Graceland graduate, had the religious education chair here. He is now a member of the presidency of the church.

A slight variation in the commencement week program which is not definitely a part of that program, but which will be of interest to students, is an address to be given Sunday by Doctor Sudhindra Bose on "Gandhi, the Prince of Peace." Doctor Bose is an East Indian now on the University of Iowa faculty, who understands the Indian situation.

A campus fete will take the place of the commencement banquet again this year. "The Messiah" will be given by the Oratorio Society Thursday evening, and other commencement events will be much the same as in previous years.

GRACELAND TOWER.

Graceland Fellowship Service

The blazing campfire, starlit sky, and sheltering trees were ideal surroundings for the annual south woods prayer meeting held Wednesday, May 11.

Students met at the Ad Building at 7.15, went to the woods in a body, and formed a semi-circle about the wigwam-like fire.

Such well-known songs as the "Alma Mater Hymn," "A Perfect Day," "I Need Thee Every Hour," and "The Old, Old Path" were sung, creating a rich harmony of feeling. The prayer was offered by Noble Kelley.

In presenting the theme, "Graceland's Intangibles," Mr. Cheville illustrated his thought by asking the group what would be the result of subjecting a mighty tree of the forest to a fiery crucible. Nothing but a few ashes and minerals would remain, the other elements making up the living tree would have returned to the atmosphere. When one looks at a tree standing in a forest he can not see the leaves absorb the sunshine and elements from the air; it seems to be an intangible process, but one can see the result in growth. On the other hand, there are atmospheres not conducive to growth and development, which leave the trees stunted and dwarfed. Analogous features of Graceland life were developed.

Eagerly, yet with sobered thoughts, the members of the group responded to the suggested theme. Those who plan to return next fall looked forward to next year's experiences with hope and resolve to do and gain even more than they have this year, while those who are unable to come back reminisced about the intangible influences exerted by the Graceland life and expressed a desire to carry that influence with them.

The thought that this was the last south woods prayer meeting that they would ever attend as students, was a sad one to many, but the memory of this one will linger long.

While the fire died down to glowing coals and the stars shone even more brightly, the students sang, "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art," were dismissed by Mr. Cheville, and walked quietly and thoughtfully back to the hill.

Campus News in Brief

Eugene E. Closson was elected president of the Lambda Delta Sigma for the year '32 and '33 at the meeting of the society held Tuesday, May 10, in Briggs Hall. Other officers for the year will be vice president, Miss Charlotte Condit; secretary-treasurer, Aarona Booker, and historian, Mrs. T. S. Williams. Since the position of marshal is a hereditary office it will still be filled by R. A. Cheville.

On Monday, May 9, President Frederick M. Smith, gave one of his characteristically inspiring lectures in the chapel. His subject was, "The Values of a College Education." President Smith's talk was hopeful and optimistic. It made college seem more worth while.

Walter Johnson, student president; Robert Thistlethwaite, Tower editor, and Lynn Smith, Acacia editor, are the results of a quiet election of next year's student officers held in the chapel Friday, May 6. Edgar Salts will manage the Tower, and Monroe Carter will manage the Acacia.

Miss Eva Miffin and Mr. Archibald Kendricks, both of Ontario, Canada, were married at the O. A. Gamet residence at 4 p. m., Friday, May 13. The ceremony was performed by E. E. Closson, and the attendants were Loleta Johnson and Velmer Fish.

Conference Through a Student's Eyes

The conference was an event long anticipated. For several months Graceland students had been looking forward to it. At last the time came for its opening. Was it with a feeling of apprehension that the delegates first entered the doors of the Auditorium? I think not. It was with a spirit of hopefulness, a firm desire for something of real value to come from the sessions.

As I entered the main lobby of the building it seemed as though a new atmosphere enthralled me. The crowds of 1930 were conspicuously absent. The big display of 1930 was not present. But one could sense the earnestness, the love, and unity which bound together those who gathered for this conference. They had come, not for enjoyment, but to do some real worth-while thinking and acting. They came pledging the support of those at home to the policies of the church.

The business sessions were marked by few drastic clashes of opinion, but what discussion did take place was in an effort to force light to the very depths of the questions discussed. Hands were not raised in favor of certain pieces of legislation simply as a formal gesture. They were raised because their owners firmly believed that the legislation was for the benefit of the church as a whole.

There was one thing during these sessions which could not help but impress me. That was the very way in which President Smith presided over the affairs of the sessions. A cool and collected head in a leader is something that will always impress a student. President Smith portrayed wonderful qualities of leadership. One thing which many remarked about was the way in which he could recall the names of those who rose to speak. Seldom was it necessary for him to ask the name of any speaker. At all times he was fearless in proclaiming the rules which govern business action and ever kept the delegates from overstepping the bonds.

The class sessions held each morning demonstrated that a desire for knowledge still is in the hearts of Latter Day Saints. Scores of people took advantage of the opportunities offered for study and many lively discussions took place. The young people were active in their conferences and built up a spirit of fellowship which should pervade the church. Good feeling and a feeling of unity was found everywhere. Groups here and there were eagerly seeking ways to help each other and were engaging in friendly conversation.

A fitting climax to the conference was the revelation given through the Prophet, and the ordinations and other ceremonies of the final day. It was the writer's first experience in hearing a revelation given to the church, and it will be an occasion long to be remembered. One could feel the divine Spirit which was present. Our heavenly Father was remembering his people in the days when they needed him. However, the most touching ceremony of the conference was that held on the last evening when four men who had long served the church were publicly decorated for their work. They had kept the faith and had fought a good fight and their church honored them. It was a beautiful rite.

The conference is now in the past. Its full significance is just being realized and its effects will travel through the church and help push the movement forward. I shall never forget it.

JAMES B. MOSES.

On Sunday, May 15, Elder C. A. Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, held cottage meetings at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Burgess, near Deer Grove, Illinois, forenoon, afternoon, and evening. He discoursed on "A Church With Divine Authority" and "God's Immutable Law," and exhorted his hearers to look with faith into the future. At noon a picnic dinner was served to about fifty people. This service is held the third Sunday of each month.

Independence

In the past week church school officers and teachers have turned their attention to the recreational needs of the boys of Independence from twelve to sixteen years of age, and as a result an athletic league for boys has been organized to include year-round activities. Representative workers from the different congregations met last Thursday evening in the Y. K. T. room at the Stone Church and organized the league, adopted a constitution and by-laws, discussed summer plans, and elected the following officers: President of the league, Howard Cook, Stone Church; manager, E. H. McKean, Enoch Hill, and secretary-treasurer, Cecil Walker, Liberty Street.

The first project of the league is a four-team baseball league which goes into action next Saturday morning at 9 and 11 o'clock on the Campus diamond. A mass meeting of boys and men, Monday night at the Campus, spread enthusiasm and completed plans for the summer baseball program. This group is sponsoring an ice cream and cake social at the Campus Friday evening, May 27, for the purpose of raising funds to purchase equipment for the league. Everyone who likes boys and baseball is invited to come to the social and give the ice cream and cake stand generous patronage.

Stone Church

Sunday morning and evening the Saints listened to admonitions and counsel from the lips of two men who will shortly leave American shores and go to labor in a foreign mission, Apostle George G. Lewis and Edmund J. Gleazer. Brother Lewis preached the morning sermon, and Brother Gleazer in the evening, and so closely related were their thoughts, that their sermons combined to form a charge for the church in Independence, especially the Stone Church. Large crowds of Saints heard both discourses.

"Without vision the people perish; without vision the church will perish," were the opening words of Apostle Lewis who chose for a Scripture reading the story of Zacchæus, recorded in Luke 19: 1-10. We, too, if we would catch the vision of Christ and his work and our place with him, must, like Zacchæus, climb above the crowd—we must seek our spiritual tree or mountain heights; this was the application Brother Lewis made. Among others who climbed far above the crowd to see the vision were Moses who saw the Promised Land; Paul whose entire life was changed by his vision of light, and Joseph Smith whose vision made him instrumental in bringing about the Book of Mormon and the church of latter days. It was the vision of this restored church of God to which the speaker gave emphasis; it must be true to its heavenly vision if it is to succeed in its God-given work. We who are members of the church must, like Zacchæus, climb to catch the vision.

The morning music consisted of a program by the Stone Church Choir, two anthems, "Incline Thine Ear," by Himmel, Mrs. Alice M. Burgess singing the contralto solo, and, "Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem," by Knox, the tenor solo sung by J. Glenn Fairbanks. For a number of months the choir, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, has been singing new hymns from the new Saints' Hymnal to the congregation, and on Sunday morning it added another hymn to its musical repertoire.

President F. M. McDowell was in charge of the service, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer assisted in the stand.

"The way to perfection is to be engaged in the work of God, bringing men to a knowledge of the light and truth of the gospel," was one of the statements of Apostle Gleazer's powerful evening sermon. His text was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." For the basis of his discourse he read Doctrine and Covenants 105: 9-13, which he analyzed and applied to the condition of the church today and especially to the church in Independence. His parting message to this congregation was frank and moving. He promised the Saints success in their efforts if they work with God, and pledged his best efforts to the church as he and Brother Lewis sail next month to begin work in the Australasian Mission.

The Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, sang three excellent numbers, and Brother J. Glenn Fairbanks led the congregational singing. Apostle G. G. Lewis presided over the hour, assisted by President Elbert A. Smith.

The lives of the five foreign-going missionaries in Independence, have recently been crowded with farewell events. Last night the young people's council of Independence and the women's department sponsored a mammoth farewell reception, at the Auditorium, for Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Apostle and Sister G. G. Lewis, and Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra. A purse of money, contributed by the various groups, was divided among the honor guests.

There have also been smaller farewells for the missionaries. For the past two years Brother and Sister Lewis have made Independence their home, and have found many friends. Their fellow workers, former Graceland schoolmates, and newer friends have entertained and showered them with gifts. On May 13, the women supervisors of Independence had a party for Sister Lewis at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. S. McNamara. Eighteen were present and spent the evening sewing for Sister Lewis and Little Alice June.

Group 21, chiefly composed of the close friends and neighbors, of Apostle E. J. Gleazer met at the home of Amos T. Higdon on a recent evening as a farewell gesture to Brother Gleazer. There were talks by Brother Gleazer, President E. A. Smith and Elder O. W. Okerlind. Brother and Sister Okerlind sang a Swedish duet. About one hundred and twenty-five were served refreshments.

A pretty wedding took place at the Stone Church at seven o'clock Wednesday evening, May 18, when Miss Dolly Linkhart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ora Linkhart, of Independence, and Frederick Earl Budd, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Budd, also of Independence, were united in matrimony, Apostle R. S. Budd, brother of the bridegroom, officiating. Preceding the ceremony, Mrs. Thelma Krahl sang, "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," and George Anway sang, "I Love You Truly," accompanied at the organ by Mrs. Louise Lewis, who also played the wedding march. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was attended by her sister, Miss Daisy Linkhart. J. Pleas Budd, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, acted as best man for his brother. Ushers were Calvin Budd, Paul Carpenter, John Linkhart and Ammon Budd. Immediately after the ceremony a reception was given at the home of the bridegroom's parents, then the bridal pair left for a short wedding trip to Tulsa, Oklahoma. They will soon be at home at 1725 West Short Street. For the past four years the bride has been an employee of the Herald Publishing House, and the bridegroom is employed by the W. L. Horn service stations.

The highest honors in scholarship in the 1932 graduating class of William Chrisman High School, this year, were awarded to Olena Plain, a girl of the Stone Church congregation. Of her work the Independence Examiner for May 20, says: "Of the thirty-five letters standing to her credit, the great majority were E's; a few were S's, and none were below S. E means excellent and is the highest grade given; S means superior, ranking next below E. Miss Plain also has been active in the Forum, and in the Washington Pageant, as well as being on the national honor roll. She was awarded the scholarship medal given annually by the board of education for the highest standing in scholarship." Olena is almost eighteen years of age. The church in Independence is proud of her record and of the records of others of its young people who have this year taken places of honor in school.

weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club, talking on Australia. Brother Blackmore, a native of that country, is a history instructor in William Chrisman High School.

Sunday afternoon occurred the funeral of Sister Elizabeth Andes, from the Stone Church. Sister Andes was eighty-one years of age and the wife of Samuel C. Andes. She died, May 20, at the home of a son, J. S. Andes, at Broad Acres, having suffered from a paralytic stroke since March 30, the day after she and Mr. Andes had celebrated their sixty-fourth wedding anniversary. She was born near Mount Sidney, Virginia, and married Mr. Andes there in 1868. They came to Missouri, in 1876. She was baptized a member of the church October 17, 1874. Surviving are her husband, three sons, two daughters, two sisters, fifty-nine grandchildren, one hundred and thirty-five great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Her funeral was in charge of Elder Ammon White. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Second Church

Sunday, May 22, was made especially enjoyable to the members of the Second Church by an interesting and earnest sermon by Brother Frank Veenstra, who with Sister Veenstra is to leave soon for his mission in Holland.

From the rostrum Brother and Sister Veenstra demonstrated their method of holding a crowd at a street service by singing. Both have excellent and far-reaching, singing voices.

The sermon Sunday evening was by Elder J. W. Peterson.

Practice for Children's Day, which is set in this branch for June 5, is well under way. Those in charge are Agnes Edmunds, Grace Nave, Katherine Inman, Erma West, and Sister Sarratt. All of the program, with the exception of songs, is to be original.

A meeting of the women's group will be held at the home of Sister Mintun Thursday, at which time a class will be organized for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants. The usual work will be continued.

The young people's activities, under the leadership of Brother Roy Settles, seem to be taking on new impetus. The first of the summer games will start next week, and it is hoped that equipment for volley ball, baseball and tennis will be in readiness. A wiener roast is planned for Friday evening.

The prayer meetings for young people are held every Wednesday evening at different homes and are well attended. Interest is excellent.

Walnut Park Church

There were one hundred and sixteen at the early morning prayer service at Walnut Park, May 22. This was quite an increase over previous meetings, and those who attended were richly blessed. Nearly all remained for the church school. At the close of the second service a violin solo, "Cavatina," by J. Rass, was played by Eloise Higgins, who is a member of the Walnut Park Orchestra, accompanied by Delta Nace.

At the preaching service the choir, directed by Erwin Moorman sang, "The King of Love My Shepherd is," the alto solo being taken by Carletta Norman, the bass solo by Fred Horn. The preaching hour was occupied by Elder Frank McDonald.

In the evening Elder W. R. Kapnick delivered the sermon. Elder Kapnick is one of Walnut Park's young men, and the Saints are proud of his ability along spiritual lines. Much praise was given the choir by him who has a deep appreciation of music, as they sang, "As Pants the Hurt," the soprano obbligato being taken by Marian Campbell.

A little son, Richard Blair, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Mitchell, May 20, at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Mitchell was formerly Miss Hazel Sanders.

Englewood Church

General Conference left the Saints of this branch with courage strengthened and zeal sharpened. Since that time they have not been sleeping, but have been going forward with increasing activity, ingenuity, and cooperation.

May Day brought to the branch a beautiful sacrament service with twelve of the priesthood surrounding the table. That evening Apostle J. A. Gillen was the speaker.

The Mother's Day service was a bit unusual and left only one regret—the congregation did not get to hear Patriarch J. A. Gwille speak, as he had been asked to do. The church was beautifully decorated, and the program was all that could have been expected—yes, more than was expected, for it claimed the time which had been assigned to Brother Gunsolley's talk. For this the workers were sorry and apologized to the brother.

It had been announced that the Mother's Day program would be a demonstration to the mothers what their children were learning in the church school departments. The complete program had never been rehearsed, and took longer than was expected. Nevertheless, it was a pleasure to have him and Sister Gunsolley present. There would have been time for a short sermon from this speaker, but he graciously yielded to Mrs. JoZelma Taylor who read "Laddie," a charming Mother's Day selection.

Each department of the school gave a short program preceded by a talk by the superintendent. Perhaps the most unique program contribution was that of the primaries. Children displayed pictures of the mothers of the three Prophets of the church—Lucy Mack Smith, Emma Hale Smith, and Bertha Madison Smith. Special poems on the lives of these women, written by Miss Estella Wight, were read by the children. Also a little poem honoring the mother of each local branch officer had been written by a local mother, and the pictures of these mothers, too, were displayed by the children and placed in the place marked "Our Honored Guests." This was a surprise to most of the congregation. As a complete surprise to Sister Fred Koehler, who was in charge of the program, her mother's picture was displayed with a poem. Her two brothers, Charles and Fred Cleveland, who with Sister Koehler are the remaining three of a family of eleven, were present to share the surprise.

The junior department gave short dramatizations, one a Book of Mormon scene written by a local member.

At night the Auditorium Band favored them with a full evening's concert.

May 15, the morning sermon was by Elder Frank McDonald who told very plainly what it takes to make a true Latter Day Saint. The choir sang "More Love to Thee." Elder T. A. Beck was the evening speaker, and Marvin Turnbull played a violin solo, accompanied by Harold Buseth.

On the evening of May 11, the wife of Brother Donald Caldwell was baptized by Brother Perry Hiles. She was confirmed at the prayer service.

This congregation lately sustained a loss when its pastor, D. S. McNamara, was called to occupy as director of Religious Education in Independence in the place of Apostle G. G. Lewis, and Sister McNamara, who has served as leader of local women, was asked to be one of a committee to have supervision of the women's work in Independence. These new responsibilities made it impossible for them to continue local work, and Englewood will miss them. Their help in this congregation has been gratefully received. Brother Perry Hiles who has served as Brother McNamara's assistant, is taking up his work, and Sister Ben Bassett, who, although comparatively new in this branch, has made her presence felt, will occupy in Sister McNamara's place. She will be assisted by Sister Gladys Rudd and others of the women.

East Independence Church

The past few weeks have brought the Saints of this congregation many pleasures. Mother's Day was commemorated by a display of pictures of the Madonna, the mothers of the local pastor and church school superintendent, and the mothers of the three Prophets of the Restoration. These with songs of mother and a sermon by Pastor Frank Minton on, "The Attitude of Children Toward their Mothers," and a talk by Cornelius Edgerton, church school director, on mothers' responsibilities to their children, made a pleasing and sacred service. The mothers were seated in the place of honor, the center section of the church.

Local members are proud to claim two of the young men who this year graduated in the large William Chrisman High School class, Robert and Richard Smith, sons of Brother and Sister Richard Smith.

A few of the women of this group meet each Thursday at the church for study and work on quilts, etc. This they do to keep up their part of the local work by performing the tasks allotted to them.

A community chorus in this neighborhood, directed by a woman who is doing choral work in Kansas City, Mrs. Ray Ward, is organized to make public appearance, and has received many compliments for past performances. A number of local Saints are singing with this group.

Splendid speakers have come to East Independence in the past few weeks, men fired with the spirit of the late conference, Elders Clair Austin, R. L. Fulk, Hubert Case, J. E. Vanderwood, C. Ed. Miller, H. V. Minton, and Bishop R. T. Cooper. Admonition, hope, praise, and reassurance linger in the minds of this congregation as a result of their inspired messages.

East Independence Saints were saddened by the death of Sister Susan J. Fickett, May 21. She was seventy-four years old, and was a woman whose character was above reproach. She was an invalid for some time and suffered much. Of her it has been said that there had never been one word spoken against her because of the saintly life she lived.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The regular monthly meeting of the ministry was held at 3 p. m., Sunday, Stake President C. E. Wight in charge. Addresses were by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Bishop C. A. Skinner, and Elder C. E. Wight.

A drive, calculated to stimulate greater activity in spiritual and financial fields of the work, will commence simultaneously in each congregation of the Stake, continuing until June 26. Brother Wight is confident that this will be the starting point for a more intelligent and consecrated effort on the part of the priesthood in their continuous visitation of a somewhat neglected membership. Brother Skinner remarked that Kansas City Saints had never made a failure in such an effort as this in the past. And Brother Edwards stated that the members ought to pray, bear testimony frequently, study the standard books of the church, and pay tithing. Brother Wight stressed the fact that contacts should be impressive of the spirit of the church's message. Reports from each pastor will be made weekly.

Argentine Church

Elder Levi Gamet was the speaker Sunday morning. His sermon was in the interests of the Bishopric, and had for its foundation Psalm 50. As essentials to sainthood he named Zion, the coming of the Lord, sacrifices, and contrite hearts. He urged the good to be derived from paying tithing.

North Kansas City Church

This congregation is forced to give up its meeting place on account of finances, and the Saints have been asked to worship with the Northeast Kansas City, Missouri, Church, located at the foot of Lydia Avenue Viaduct. Midweek cottage meetings will convene in the old neighborhood. The pastor, Elder Ross Higdon, will have charge of Malvern Hill Church commencing July 1.

Atherton

Bishop C. J. Hunt was with this congregation sacrament Sunday, and after the emblems were passed, he occupied the remainder of the time, telling of an encounter with a Jewish rabbi. This was interesting in the light of the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the Jews and latter-day Israel.

That evening the Saints listened to Elder Amos E. Allen who was at his best. Brother Allen was the pastor at Atherton for 10 years, being relieved a few months before General Conference because of his heavy responsibility as auditor of the church.

A short program was given before the church school in honor of the mothers, May 8. Brothers F. A. Cool and Myron L. Holman occupied, respectively, in the morning and evening, each speaking in honor of mother. This was a rather hard task for Brother Holman who received word only a few weeks ago of the death of his mother who lived in Dixfield, Maine.

On a recent Sunday Elder Leonard W. Koehler occupied in the morning and his father, Bishop J. A. Koehler, spoke in the evening.

May 4, Elders W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy, members of the stake presidency, met with the Saints at Atherton in their annual election of officers. Brother George W. Beebe was chosen to continue as pastor. F. A. Cool was elected church school director, and Brother Welkonson was chosen secretary, the remaining officers to be selected at a future date.

Marshall

W. S. Macrae, president of Holden Stake, was present at the annual business meeting May 13. The last year's officers were retained, and action taken to fully adopt the church school plan. Officers are: Pastor, Ralph M. Ridge; secretary, Dixie Spohrer; treasurer and solicitor, George A. Thayer; superintendent of music, Frankie Thayer; superintendent of church school, Walter E. Smith; superintendent of adult department, Will S. Ridge; superintendent of young people, Frankie Thayer; superintendent of children's division, Sister Walter E. Smith; publicity agent, Sister George A. Thayer.

Sister Myrtle Carr, of Holden, was present to forward the junior choir movement. There is no better way to enlist soldiers for the cause than to train them in singing.

The church auditor, Elder Amos E. Allen, preached two excellent and helpful sermons May 15. He was on his way to Lamoni.

Elder J. Charles May was here Mother's Day and gave a touching talk Sunday morning and a good sermon at night. Brother May and H. G. Thayer sang a duet, "O Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" accompanied by Brother May on his guitar, and Sister Dixie Spohrer gave a reading, "What Makes a Home?" accompanied at the piano by Frankie Thayer.

The scientists of today want watching by men-in-the-street, of whom I am one, because it is our life with which they are experimenting in quiet laboratories which we are not allowed to enter. We are the patients upon whom they are operating, though we are mostly unaware of their operations, and of plans for our future way of life. . . . The results of their experiments are going to make a lot of difference to the habits and home life of the ordinary mass of men and women who know nothing or very little of what these quiet gentlemen have in store for them.—Philip Gibbs.

Reunion and Conference

Owen Sound District will meet at Port Elgin, Ontario, on the last Sunday of June (the 26th) till the first Sunday in July (the 3d) for its annual reunion and conference. The conference will be held Saturday and Sunday, July 2 and 3. We are expecting Apostle D. T. Williams, also Elder George Njeim, district missionary, and are quite confident that the Saints and friends who have met and heard these brothers, will have an excellent reason for attending the reunion and conference this year. The Warton young people will present a play Saturday evening, July 2, entitled "Yimmy Yonson's Yob." Should any Saints contemplate attending the reunion for the week, you will do well to write District President H. A. Dayton, Rural Route 1, Hornings Mills, Ontario. He will be able to give you all information regarding tents, cots, etc. Let's all go and have a real, old-time, Latter Day Saint "githerin'."—*R. J. Thoughts for the Season

The Month of Prayer

Do you need to be reminded that June is the month set aside for prayer? The official announcement of this fact has already appeared in the Herald. Special prayer services at the churches, devotionals around the "family altar," and individual private prayer, should be observed by all church members. Prayers should be made for the welfare of the church, for Divine guidance for the leaders, and help for the people that they may marshal the means to relieve the church in the present crisis.

A Daily Program for the Home

Some special schedule of activities should be arranged for each home for the Month of Prayer. Unless this is done, the month may slip by, and members will make no change in their daily routine. We suggest something like the following program:

At the morning meal: grace (by the father) including a prayer of gratitude for blessings enjoyed, for guidance through the day's activities, and for the welfare of the church.

At the noon meal: prayer by the mother, and possibly by some of the children.

At the evening meal; preferably afterward: reading of a passage of scripture, a short talk to the family by the father, the taking of the daily sacrifice to be put aside for the church, and a prayer for the family, for the local congregation, and for the general church.

Getting the Children Ready

Children's Day comes this year on June 12, which is also Decision Day. At this time, those who have arrived at the age of eight during the past year often make their decisions to join the church. It is our great object to have them "in the fold" but that is not all that must be done for them. They should be taught something of the doctrines and ideals of the church, of the gospel, and a simple foundation of the church history. This training can not, of course, be complete, but it should be well under way as the children are preparing themselves for baptism. Study suggestions have already appeared in the Herald to help in this work.

The Summer Slump

In the summer time the normal speed of life is retarded. Children go on their vacations and books gather cobwebs. Salesmen spend more time at the soda fountains than in pursuit of customers. The rising temperatures deplete energy and check ambition. Even the church members neglect their church services.

This summer is no time for us to take a rest. We must postpone the "summer slump" until next summer. Activities must go on, if possible, with greater intensity than before. The needs of the church, both local and general, are so great that everybody must keep working at full capacity. In the words of the old song:

There can be no furlough granted
In the army of the Lord.

Sacrifice Week—June 19 to 26

All this culminates in the fact that we are to remember to prepare and save for the special sacrifice week of June 19 to 26. It is many months since the Bishopric has come to the people with a special appeal. The last sacrifice period was in December, 1931. Since that time the Bishopric has worked on our financial program, and the recent General Conference has given closer definition to our church goals and objectives, and increased the faith and devotion of the people through the splendid work that was accomplished.

We have met our obligations so far. We have proved our strength equal to the tasks and burdens that are ours. In the words used by one of the Bishopric: "Now for the long, steady pull!" Let us renew our energy, and go forward with the good work. In the end victory awaits us if we are faithful to our trust.

In spite of the weariness, exhaustion, and pressure of crowded days, Jesus felt for him, at least, more necessary than rest or sleep or food was the opportunity for uninterrupted prayer. He recognized thereby a value which we, in the hurry and confusion of our busy lives, are very likely to overlook.—Lucius H. Bugbee.

President Joseph Smith Tells of a Baptismal Experience

Recently it was my task as well as pleasure, in company with my sister, Mrs. B. M. Anderson, and brother, Bishop I. A. Smith, to read for revisional or editorial purposes, the manuscript of the Memoirs of Joseph Smith, our late president. It is quite generally known that in the last few years of his life President Smith gave much time and attention to writing his memories of incidents and events in his very active and long experiences as a church man and general officer.

Of course to us, his children, these memoirs could not but be interesting; yet we feel that to the entire membership of the church this manuscript will be of interest and profit. He was a keen observer, and the infinite patience and spirit of toleration developed by his Christian life make the recorded impressions brought from a clean and accurate memory highly interesting and spiritually stimulating to all who are alive to the import and bearing of the great latter-day work.

It is our hope that this manuscript will soon issue to the church in a book. It should.

From the manuscript Sister Anderson has extracted and handed to me several paragraphs, some of which have already appeared in print, which reflect the human interest factors in which the document abounds. It has been my thought that a few of these will be relished by our readers.

In telling of the experiences met on one of his visits to Jonesport, President Smith, in describing a baptismal service, says, after telling of having baptized a group of young men and women:

When I had finished baptizing the group, I asked, as was sometimes our custom, if there were others who wished the administration of the ceremony. Thereupon Captain Hall presented himself, saying he was convinced of the truth of the message our people had brought to him, and desired to become identified with us.

As I led Captain Hall to the shore after his immersion, I was impressed that there was at least one other who was ready to obey. Pausing before leaving the water, I again inquired, "Is this all? Is there not another?"

Whereupon a woman, wife of Captain Crowley, looked up into her husband's face, as they stood together on the bank. I saw him nod in answer to her low query, and then, taking off her bonnet and shawl and handing him her watch, she came to the water's edge, just as she was, all clothed in the beautiful silk dress of her Sunday's garb.

No more solemn hush ever fell upon a company engaged in such ministry than fell upon that little assembly. The memory of it now, after all these years which have intervened, causes my heart to swell and tears to dim my eyes! Leading her by the hand I walked with her into the water and baptized her. As I raised her from the waves, I had a marvelous spiritual experience. There came, with an all-enveloping effulgence, a definite and answering witness from the skies, assuring me that what had that day been done was accepted of God!

Some years later Captain Crowley also accepted the gospel. . . . There was in the experiences of this couple a number of wonderful manifestations of divine providence intervening for their safety, an account of which was printed in the Herald many years ago. They have both passed to their reward, his death preceding that of his wife, I think, some two or three years.

Not only will the Jonesport Saints be interested in reading of this former day baptismal experience, but all our people can not but rejoice anew with the man who so long served them as chief executive.

Let harmony have its perfect work. Let joy, and peace, and consolation attend us. If in our struggles and weakness we falter and fall, let us struggle to our feet and go on, assured that the powers of heaven are enlisted in our behalf, if we strive to do right; wisdom, and light, and intelligence, and the higher and better conceptions of truth will be ours as we make the struggle. And as we increase our diligence and our zeal in striving to serve God we shall surmount the obstacles that stand before us, sometime. I know not when, whether it shall be in my time or not, but I would like to see it. But if it be not in my time, sometime the banner of King Immanuel will be carried by faithful hands on heights where now we dare not tread, and the work will go on. The work of truth planted in the earth will never be lost until victory shall be won, and every struggling soul that desires right and works for the right is saved.—March 1, 1905.

Intensive Itinerary for Apostle Paul M. Hanson

Apostle Paul M. Hanson left Kansas City, last Friday night, beginning an intensive itinerary through his new field, the Atlantic States Mission. He went East by way of Chicago, then to Buffalo, New York, where he will attend a conference this week-end. From there he plans to make his way down to Philadelphia, then up to Brooklyn and later to Boston, stopping at intermediate points. He hopes to be present at a young people's convention at Jonesport, Maine, June 18 and 19, and a conference at Stonington, June 25 and 26.

Eleven States comprise Brother Hanson's mission field, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, New York, and Pennsylvania.

Sister Hanson, too, is soon to leave Independence. She will visit her aged mother at the old home at Thurman, Iowa. Perhaps later in the summer she will go East to join her missionary husband.

First Presidency Attend Graceland's Commencement

Presidents Elbert A. Smith and Floyd M. McDowell and their families attended the commencement exercises at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, last week. Brother and Sister Smith went early in the week to share in the closing school events with their son, Lynn, who was in the graduating class. Brother McDowell delivered the commencement address the evening of May 27.

English Conferences Have Same Date

The Easter season in England brought two annual conferences into session. The conference at Midland District convened at Leicester, March 26, and that of Northern District at Manchester, on the same day. The district presidents, Elders Joseph Holmes and W. H. Chandler, respectively, were in charge.

Both conferences enjoyed harmonious action in electing officers and transacting other business. Their services were markedly helpful, the sermons sincerely presented, the program numbers good. The Spirit of the Master was felt especially in worship periods. As a result of these gatherings and of reports from the General Conference, British members have new hope and courage. They are preparing to welcome Apostle John W. Rushton.

Los Angeles "Marthas" Resourceful

Central Church, Los Angeles, at 3851 South Grand Avenue, is only a few blocks away from the grounds where this summer will be held the International Olympic Games, viewed by thousands of people.

The "Marthas," a women's organization of Central Church, are arranging to have a booth at the church where food and drinks will be sold during the games. Their plans were approved by the branch at a special business meeting, May 11. Materials and labor are being donated, and the "Marthas" expect to have a thriving trade.

Eightieth Birthday for Veteran of the West

A few weeks ago Elder George S. Lincoln, of Healdsburg, California, celebrated his eightieth birthday, and he and Sister Lincoln also observed their golden wedding anniversary. They are a happy pair, deeply devoted to the church. Brother Lincoln was born in Middlesex, Massachusetts, in 1852. He was baptized February 16, 1873, at San Francisco, California.

He has long been a figure in church accomplishment in the West, being especially interested in ministerial and literary fields. As far back as 1876, he acted as one of the secretaries of a conference of the Pacific Slope Mission at Oakland, a conference over which Joseph Smith, President of the church, and D. S. Mills, president of the mission, presided.

railroad train in Colorado in company with Brother Frank Russell. The news butcher, a perky young fellow, came through the car and Brother Russell purchased a newspaper, giving the boy five pennies. The boy looked at the coppers with vast scorn and turned and threw them out of the open car window. Perhaps today if he knew about where those pennies fell he would be combing the right-of-way to find them.

The passionate greed to get more and ever more money (by speculation, exploitation, or in any way) combined with the fevered desire to spend all that was made some months before it was well in hand, helped put the country where it is now. Whatever economic reforms may be instituted, they will depend for their success to a large degree upon a return to old-fashioned honesty coupled with old-fashioned thrift and frugality in living; and these in turn will appeal only to people who have in sight other and higher goals than passing pleasures and the big "thrill" of the moment.

OFFICIAL

Financial News

The month of April shows a further falling off in general church income. This may be due in part to the General Conference as the Conference month receipts usually have been lean as compared to other months.

The following figures will give one an idea of the seriousness of our present situation:

Operating Budget Requirements—
four months	$ 96,000.00
Debt Reduction Requirements—
four months	64,000.00
		$160,000.00
Total Receipts—four months:
January	$29,122.26
February	19,183.75
March	20,628.87
April	14,968.55	83,903.43
Total Budget Deficit	$ 76,096.57

It is to be noted that the receipts of $83,903.43 lack $12,096.57 of meeting our operating needs which amounts to $96,000.00 as shown above. This means that it is impossible to meet current obligations from current income.

It is also important that we call attention to the fact that certain principal obligations must be met which necessitates the use of a portion of current income. This can not be continued indefinitely and relief must come as a result of the present efforts being put forth. We therefore urge every member of the priesthood to work most diligently during the month of June to make our sacrifice period a success. We urge every member of the church, young and old, to respond to the call. We urge all to keep in mind that every dollar contributed at this time does a twofold duty: first, that of meeting our operating expenses, and second, that of paying our debts. If the total budget is raised forty cents out of every dollar will go toward debt reduction.

The comparative statement of income by districts will appear in next week's Herald. Additional figures are being sent to Bishops and Agents and District Presidents giving the standing of each district.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Apostles Gleazer and Lewis

It had been expected that Apostles Gleazer and Lewis would sail for their mission in Australia in the fore part of June. Unavoidable delay in securing visas, and the continued shortage of finances, however, have combined to make it wise to postpone their departure. For the present Elder Gleazer will assist in the work of the territory near to Zion and Elder Lewis will labor in the West. They will proceed to Australia as soon as Elder Gleazer's visa is secured and funds permit.

Our Task

III—Graceland and the Church Program

By G. N. Briggs

President of Graceland College

The leading quorums of the church met in council many weeks before the last General Conference and as a result of their deliberations presented one of the most significant contributions in the history of the church in the formulation of definite immediate objectives.

This program of objectives touched upon many phases of the church activities, among them being the provision for the youth of the church continuing their higher education in our own church college "because the interests of the church are conserved" thereby. That these objectives and goals set by the conference were "pleasing to the Lord" is evidenced by the message received through his prophet.

"Graceland's Immediate Objective"

"Whereas, the welfare of Graceland College is closely coordinated with the welfare of the church, and

"Whereas, the present physical plant and educational set-up of Graceland College is designed to function most efficiently with a student body of three hundred fifty to five hundred students, and

"Whereas, the interests of the church are conserved by the youth of the church continuing their higher education in our own church college, therefore

"In harmony with the report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College

"Be it resolved that one of the objectives of the church, governing and directing the efforts of its representatives and constituency is

"200 FRESHMEN AT GRACELAND COLLEGE
IN 1932."

The significance of this factor in the church program is vital. In presenting our need for "Two Hundred Freshmen" at Graceland, we have tried to vision our college as an instrument of the church and to put our finger upon the one tangible and outstanding need which, if met, would increase to the greatest extent the efficiency of the college in functioning as an instrument of the church.

A conviction dominating the philosophy and coloring the judgments of the faculty of Graceland is the fact that our church is the one outstanding organization for meeting and ministering to the fundamental needs of mankind. This organization is standing in an hour of need and in that hour, is asking as other organizations and as individual persons must ask, "What must be done?" Obviously, a first step is for all persons and departments to approach this question in the spirit that "All things must be for the good of the church." The college desires to align itself with the other departments of the church and the hosts of loyal and devoted members of the church in approaching our problems in this spirit. We hope, too, that the leaders of the church may be able to use this department and the possibilities it presents as an instrument of ever-increasing importance and benefit in realizing the fundamental purposes of the church.

"Graceland's Place in the Church Program"

The major problem of any group or department within the church is the perpetuation of the life processes of the church by laying a foundation for the loyalty of the membership and the training of leaders and representatives. Unless Graceland has some place in the general program of the church there is no justification for its existence among the thousand colleges in this country. That there is such a place for a church college has been the conviction of our leaders since 1830.

This place was definitely set forth at the end of the first hundred years of the history of the church and declared at the Centennial Conference:

First, To train and inspire young men and women for service to the church that fosters it.

Second, To provide a laboratory of research in the problems vital to the church.

Third, To exemplify a community of young people developing normally and harmoniously under Christian influences.

Graceland is located in one of the very best communities to be found, surrounded by influences which, if taken advantage of, can not do otherwise than bring out the very best there is in our young people. The students come in daily contact with a faculty devoted to the best ideals of the church program. With the continued support of the church, the membership, the young people, and the community, Graceland is better able each succeeding year to have her ever-enlarged share in the forward progress of the church and nation.

With this in mind the last General Conference presented as one of the attainable objectives to be accepted by the church, governing and directing the efforts of its representation and constituency.

"TWO HUNDRED FRESHMEN AT GRACELAND COLLEGE IN 1932."

A distinguished international leader recently declared "This is one of the most bewildering hours in the history of the world." Clear thinking and sound acting by individual men and women, by the leaders under divine guidance will alone enable the world to surmount its difficulties and solve its problems.

"Graceland Is Equipped for Immediate Service"

The College Board in its report to the General Conference pointed out that throughout the country "many students are taking advantage of this period of unemployment to attend college in preparation for the time of industrial, educational and religious expansion certain to come very shortly."

Unless our own youth vision this future and together with their parents, relatives, and friends make the sacrifice now necessary to enable them to make their required preparation they will be found in the rear guard of industrial and religious America.

The church has, through years of effort and foresight, builded up at the college a faculty, educational program, physical plant, including buildings, library, and laboratory designed to render an optimum of service to a larger student body than now enrolled.

Our accredited standing in the educational world is of the highest, the courses offered being those most calculated to equip our graduates to take their place in the academic and professional environment where they may be found and at the same time function to the highest degree in the Zionie program of the church towards which God has again by revelation directed us.

Graceland College is equipped as never before from the standpoint of accredited standing in the educational world, the preparation of faculty, increase in library, laboratory equipment, and buildings to provide educational facilities for an additional hundred students.

The added expense of caring for a hundred more students next year would be nominal while the increase in income to the college and the church would very largely reduce the amount to be annually appropriated by the church.

"Cost of Attending College"

From the financial standpoint alone every Latter Day Saint youth attending college should be encouraged to do so in his own church college.

At times parents and friends looking over the Graceland catalog find the tuition rates a little higher than those in some state universities about which they know. Tuition, however, is a very minor part of the total cost of a college education. Student activities at Graceland are so organized that the fullest possible development may be had with the minimum of cost. This is not always true at other institutions. The incidental expenditures on the part of students at many colleges and universities due to the standards of dress, social and other extra-curricular activities run very high.

The fixed charges for a year at Graceland are approximately $465. These charges include tuition, incidental fees, room, board and books. The amount spent in addition to the fixed charges depends upon the needs, standards, and habits of the individual student. In view of the present economic situation, the faculty and student body are working together to reduce costs to a minimum without in any way jeopardizing the efficiency of the college work.

The total expenses of the average nonresident student at Graceland are about $600 per year. A few spend more than this amount, and many spend less. The latest available data from other institutions were compiled in 1930 from cost figures supplied by the colleges and universities themselves for the institutions of the entire country. The figures from a few typical states are herewith presented as showing the comparative costs.

State	No. of Colleges	Average cost per student
Iowa	12	$ 857
Illinois	18	1,003
Missouri	6	883
Kansas	10	795
Wisconsin	7	1,033
Ohio	20	948
Massachusetts	16	1,338
California	9	1,144
	98	$1,010
GRACELAND AVERAGE		600

The figures for years since 1930 when published will probably show slightly lower average costs per student, but the standards of dress, social and extra-curricular activities in most of the colleges of the country are such that rather large expenditures are required if students are to participate in those features which are recognized as part of a well-rounded development. At Graceland, because of the well-developed program of social, forensic, athletic and religious activities under the supervision of the faculty, students receive that opportunity which so many take advantage of to the extent that they receive the essential development with the minimum of outlay.

"Divine Recognition Inspires Us to Go On"

The General Conference by legislative enactment "governing and directing the efforts of its representatives and constituency" has selected Graceland College as one of the factors in this program of the church, which, if entered upon as God has directed, will culminate in the accomplishment of the purpose for which the church has been reestablished here on earth in these latter days. To that accomplishment Graceland is unreservedly committed and as evidenced in the spirit and tone of her life, conveyed by the leaders of the church, radiated by the faculty and officers, inspired by her traditions and exemplified in those who live in her halls will go on with the church to that "perfection of the Saints" as the goal set for us by our Lord and Savior.

This evidence of approval can not help but be a source of great satisfaction to the Saints everywhere, and if the "unity of endeavor in teaching, preaching, and evangelizing" characterized with the "peace of fraternity and unity of those caught up in the spirit of Zion's redemption" permeates the ministry and the membership such progress as the church has never before known will be the result in these opening years of the new century.

To the accomplishment of that task Graceland joins as part of the church.

The Missionary Task of the Branch

By Henry L. Livingstone

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

In light of this revelation, we must all agree that missionary work is the primary task of the church. It must include not only the time and talents of the ministry, but also must enlist the service of every member of the church, for "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them." Since the accomplishment of God's work has been "intrusted to all," then, every phase of our church and secular endeavors should be tinged with the missionary purpose and objective. This purpose and objective, in brief, is to carry the message of Jesus in its fullness to a dying world, but it does not end there, for the task will not be complete until we have been successful in bringing ourselves and our brethren completely into Jesus' way of life both in understanding and in practice of all its principles. What a task! Its achievement will depend largely upon our common understanding of the principles of the gospel and also upon our willingness to labor together, both "him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work." To the end that this unity of understanding might be had, General Conference adopted several resolutions in which were restated the objectives of the Restoration. These objectives should be studied by every member of the church. Have you obtained your copy? If not, by all means do so, and study them at once.

The preaching of the gospel "to every creature" seems a stupendous task when we contemplate the bigness of the field, which is ripe and ready to harvest, and the laborers are so few. The Lord has promised, however, that if we unite our efforts we shall be caused to marvel at the exhibition of divine power making possible the accomplishment of our task. Therefore, every effort must count for good. Lost motions must be eliminated and our work done thoroughly and directly toward our objectives, that the mandate, "prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may" will be carried out.

Branches Must Share in the Work

That branches must share definitely in the task of preaching the gospel is obvious. We only have to point out the fact that, despite the reduction in missionary force so far as full time men are concerned, none of the responsibility of preaching the gospel has been lifted from the church. Jesus is still saying to his church, "Preach the gospel to every creature," which should challenge the loyalty and devotion of every member. A survey of one district shows a population of nearly twenty millions of people and only one full-time appointee. What does this mean? It means that the branches must be mustered into active missionary work. The local ministry, particularly, must be made to share the burden of responsibility felt by Jesus when he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" The idea that the local men have the responsibility of caring for the Saints and that it is the business of the missionary to convert folk is only partially true. The man with the Spirit of Jesus can not be concerned only about himself and his own little group, but in addition his heart will yearn for the deliverance of those about him who walk in darkness. The selfish and self-centered life is always productive of attitudes and acts that are unchristian. Likewise a branch with only self-interest will produce contention, strife, and jealousies within its own ranks. Not only this, but a branch organized is doomed to an ignominious end unless it perpetuates its life by losing itself in giving its best for the ingathering of new members. One time we visited a branch which was struggling for existence and the reason for its condition was plain; it was not growing and did nothing to correct the situation. Nothing better could possibly happen to that branch or any other branch of similar status, than to inaugurate a consistent and persistent missionary program, enlisting the help of every member possible to carry it into effect. As it lost itself in trying to save others, it would soon learn with great joy that its whole organization was pulsating with new spiritual life. The paradox of Jesus should be seriously considered, "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." (Luke 9: 24.) The welfare, growth, and spirituality of any branch is always commensurate with its actual spending of itself in service to others for Christ's sake. There is no alternative the branch must share in the missionary responsibility of the church.

Training the Local Ministry

The Lord in 1832 told the church to prepare for its work of warning the world. "I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) In the twenty-third paragraph of this same revelation he told them, "tarry ye, and labor diligently, that ye may be perfected in your ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time." If it was important that the men should meet together then to learn and qualify for their work, it is just as important, if not more so, that we observe this commandment today. There can be no question about the fact that preparation must be made if we are to accomplish the realization of successful missionary work. Lack of preparation here is very costly, for to be effective in our work we must know our task and how to perform it. While stressing the importance of preparation for ministerial labor, let it here be said that all our efforts to qualify will not be enough. Jesus told his disciples after teaching them for three years, to tarry at Jerusalem for the endowment of heavenly power. Indeed no one, no matter how well developed intellectually, is qualified to do God's work without his Spirit. Nevertheless the order of things seems to be first the preparation and then the endowment.

The branch president is responsible for directing the activities of the local ministry and it is within his power to help make their work both pleasant and effective. The reason for the inactivity of many members of the priesthood may be because we have ordained men and assumed that they could somehow feel their way along, qualify themselves and do the work of their office without instructions or encouragement. The Lord did not send out his disciples that way and there is no reason why we should do so today. The man ordained may have the greatest desire to fulfill his office and yet because of inexperience may fail to do what is required of him and become discouraged and inactive. Instructions and a common understanding of the doctrines and principles of the church are especially essential today for successful missionary work. We all can see the inconsistency of trying to teach others something that we ourselves have not been converted to, and do not understand. To preclude such a condition the Lord gave instructions by way of commandment that we "teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom."

Another important thing in the training of the local ministry is that honor and respect for his priesthood be shown regardless of the office held. One time I asked a brother if he was a member of the ministry and his reply was, "No, I am only a deacon." There seems to be a prevalent disregard for the function and authority of the priesthood and particularly is this true of the Aaronic order. Perhaps the reason for this is because ministers themselves have failed to show respect for their office and magnify their calling. Whatever is the cause it must be corrected. "Only a deacon," and think of the tremendous responsibility attached to that office. He is to care for the comfort of the Saints and he is to warn, expound, exhort and teach and invite all to come to Christ. We must all learn that every office in God's kingdom is important. As Paul reasoned, the head should not say to the feet that it had no need of them nor should the feet say to the head that they had no need of it. All are of equal worth to the Lord, therefore let every man seek to magnify his calling to God's glory through Jesus our Lord.

Methods of Missionary Work

When Jesus visited the people of Nephi he invited all of them to come unto him and told them that none were commanded to leave, but all should remain to "see" and "feel." On that occasion he gave a commandment to his disciples, "even so shall ye do unto the world; and whosoever breaketh this commandment suffereth himself to be lead into temptation." (Nephi 8: 57.) Dedicating our buildings to God today of necessity includes an invitation to all men to come and worship with us, if the will of God is to be recognized. Hence the church building of the branch becomes the center for the missionary work of the church in its jurisdiction. The building should be made as attractive as possible and should be comfortable by having the proper lighting, heating, and ventilation. By all means it should be clean and tidy that the Saints will not be ashamed to invite their friends for fear that they will be offended at its appearance. The door being open for the service and the Saints there on time are very important factors in missionary work.

The normal and healthy family are seldom late for a meal but usually are asking when it will be ready, their mouths watering with anticipation. Likewise is it true of the spiritually healthy Saint. He will be at the service on time in the attitude of expectancy and of greatest anticipation. He has come to commune with God. On such an occasion no one should be so presumptuous as to think that men are interested in his pet hobby—they are there to hear the gospel; so preach it. The prayer service, too, is missionary in its character, and all that is done there should be for the good of all. The telling of morbid experiences or introducing things foreign to the occasion are out of order. This meeting offers the Saints opportunity to bear testimony of the truth and to tell of God's blessings to them, that others might be edified and come to know God better. The "seeking" nonmember is always anxious to hear folk tell of God's dealings with them, so let your testimony be a real witness for Jesus and his message.

The church school offers great missionary possibilities. One school made a survey and discovered over one hundred nonmembers were enrolled in the school. What a splendid opportunity for missionary work! Here the teacher in personal contact with the pupil can give his or her best to convert that individual to the church. If the teachers and pupils of the school invite their friends of the community to attend their classes, no one can estimate what the harvest will be. I have in mind one girl who was brought to the class by her friend and that contact resulted in the conversion of three splendid people. Branches should give the church school the proper consideration as an important part of their work and arrange for the most efficient leaders and teachers available to be placed in charge of that work. Benefits likely to accrue to the branch from such a move can not be measured. In some places the church school is the largest feeder for church membership the branches have, and its missionary possibilities should be given consideration by the branches everywhere.

The suggestion from the general church some time ago to "complete the family circle" should be continued. The officer in charge of visiting should instruct his men always to ascertain the names of the nonmembers in homes of the Saints and encourage these men to make definite attempts to convert these folk in their visiting to those homes. We know of priests in one branch who have been successful recently in converting some people in this way and have expressed their experience as being one of greatest satisfaction. This has resulted in more interest in their visiting and an increased activity in both priesthood visits and missionary work. This type of evangelism always results in good to the officers, the family and the branch.

Another method of branch missionary work is the use of cottage meetings. It seems that the most successful way to conduct these services is to have some Saint open his home and personally invite in his neighbors. The officers in charge should also tract the community and extend invitations to as many as possible to attend. Excellent results are always realized through these meetings. In addition to the possibility of converting the listener, these services are very beneficial to the Saint in whose home the meetings are held and also to the ministry conducting them. If men are available for appointments several of these meetings can be held during the week.

Other methods may also be used, but the chief thing to be borne in mind, regardless of the method used, is that every part of the church work must share in the great missionary task before it. Let the branch take its place and qualify to do its part that the mandate "preach the gospel to every creature" might be fulfilled to the salvation of man and the glory of God.

Fulfilment of Prophecy

II—THE MAN CHILD

By A. M. Chase

The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.—Revelation 12: 17.

Having traced the history of the "Woman which was the church of God" (the Jewish church and people) down to the time of the "Restoration of the ancient gospel and order of things," let us take just a glimpse of this "War with the remnant of her seed."

Let us not confound this "remnant" with the person of the woman, for the seed of this woman was, (and is) "The kingdom of God and his Christ," or, in other words, "The Man Child"; and while this church (for it must be manifest that if the mother was a church, her child also be a church, for like always begets like) "was caught up to God and His throne," still, in every age it has been as Isaiah saw when he declared, "Except the Lord of Hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah." (Isaiah 1:9,) but, as Joel prophesied, even so it came to pass: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." (Joel 2: 32.) Even so, there has always been left a remnant who have not bowed the knee to Baal, and who have been recognized by the Master as his Saints; and these, strengthened through the "testimony of Jesus," "have loved not their own lives, but kept the testimony even unto death." (Revelation 12: 11.)

To get a glimpse of the extent and severity of this "war with the remnant of her seed," has only to read the history of the persecutions of the Christians under Nero, and the persecutions which culminated in the death of Polycarp: from this point pass by a few pages of history and come down to the twelfth century, to the history of the "scarlet woman," who through her Inquisition and wars against those whom she held as heretic became "drunken" "with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." (Revelation 17: 4-6.)

Though some form of this monstrosity (the Inquisition) antedates by several centuries the time of Pope Innocent III, yet it was his work that established it as a real weapon of war for the "Great Red Dragon." This arm of the Roman Catholic church reached out into all, or nearly all of the kingdoms of Europe, and while the Encyclopedia Britannica says that its hold on France was very small, even there we read of the massacre of Saint Bartholomew where not less than thirty thousand martyrs perished as heretics for "the testimony of Jesus."

In very deed was the prediction of Jesus fulfilled, "And again because iniquity shall abound, the love of men shall wax cold"; but with the prediction of these dire conditions comes the comforting promise, "But he that shall not be overcome, the same shall be saved." (Matthew 24: 31.) And with the Prophet of the Isle of Patmos we feel like exclaiming, "Therefore, rejoice O heavens, and ye that dwell in them."

The Mission of the Man Child

Let us not forget that the mission of this "Seed of the woman" was, (and is) "To rule all nations with a rod of iron," in harmony with Isaiah's prediction, "He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked," for "With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." (Isaiah 11: 4. Read the whole chapter.) And this "rod of iron" will lead to the tree of life. (See Book of Mormon, 1st Nephi 2:62-

69). Also, let us recall that of the ruler of this "Kingdom of God and his Christ," Paul has written, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named," (Ephesians 3: 14, 15,) and, while it is written of the beast which John saw "rise out of the sea," "It was given unto him to make war with the Saints, and to overcome them," still the gates of hell shall not prevail against this church for it is founded upon the "rock," and though it may be wasted and worn out by these persecutions, yet the promise is, "And again, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked."

In our article we have traced the history of the "woman," the Jewish church which "Was the Church of God," until we have seen her emerging from the wilderness and coming to the time when Isaiah's prophetic promise begins to be fulfilled: "Therefore, thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale. But when he seeth his children, the work of my hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy one of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel. They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine." (Isaiah 29: 22-24.)

Since we have come to the place in history where, "The time of the Gentiles be fulfilled," shall we not look for the other phase of God's "Marvelous work and a wonder" when "The wisdom of the wise and learned shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid"?

As David predicted, "Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him and shall set us in the way of his steps." (Psalm 85: 11-13. Italics mine.) Surely this "Way of his steps" is the same way that Isaiah designates in this language, "And a highway shall be there; for a way shall be cast up, and it shall be called the way of holiness." And this "way of holiness" can only be the Gospel way wherein "Is the righteousness of God revealed," and this must "go before us and set us in the way of His steps," (as many as will receive the message,) before the deliverance of Jerusalem from under the foot of the Gentiles.

In 1830 the religious world was somewhat startled by the launching of a church claiming the authority of a direct revelation from God. The leader of this church also gave the world a book claiming to be the "sealed book" spoken of in Isaiah 29. Yes, this leader was Joseph Smith, and this book the Book of Mormon; and this book, bringing to the world what purports to be the record of the peoples of the western hemisphere and God's dealings with them, certainly fills a place in our sacred literature that no other book has yet done, nor can do at this late date.

Thus far we have referred to the Inspired Translation of the Bible, and this version puts the matter beyond the possibility of controversy; but both the King James and the Douay versions are so definite that it seems that this can not be gainsaid or explained away. Read Isaiah 29, noting particularly verses 19 to 24. Note that, in a day when men are spiritually drunken, when because of iniquity the prophets and seers were covered and "The vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I can not for it is sealed. And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, . . . and he sayeth I am not learned."

The result of this is to be that the Lord "will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid." And, as though some one had asked just here, "When shall these things be?" Isaiah sets the time for its fulfillment; "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind see out of obscurity, and out of darkness." (Italics mine.) And the prophet goes on to say that the result of this spiritual awakening of the sight and hearing will be in joy in the Lord to the meek and poor among men.

Surely all this is the work of the gospel, and as at the opening of every gospel dispensation, this "Dispensation of the fulness of times" began in a marvelous way, bringing us the scripture of the western hemisphere, which so markedly establishes the truths of the Bible, even directly contradicting the "wisdom of the wise, . . . and the understanding of the prudent." But this must be left for another chapter.

(All Bible quotations are from the Inspired Translation, and all quotations from the Book of Mormon are from the Authorized Edition of that book.)

Tuberculosis

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Tuberculosis is an infectious disease caused by the invasion of the tubercular bacillus and is one of the worst scourges of mankind, and is primarily a "house disease." Where indoor living is prevalent, tuberculosis is prevalent. The maximum number of the plague is found in the tenement quarters of our large cities. Since the Indian and the Negro adapted the white man's houses and clothes, he is an easy prey to this disease. The Anglo-Saxons endure it much better because of their acquired immunity. This malady is the most frequent and widespread of all the major infections. Like all respiratory diseases, it prevails more especially in temperate, cold, and variable climates, but may also be found in warm latitudes and in the tropics. In this country nine per cent of all deaths are the result of this infection. In Germany, the percentage is somewhat higher, being about twelve per cent. Unfortunately, its mortality is at the highest during the most useful part of life, which is between the ages of fifteen and sixty. It is estimated that of the 110,000,000 now living in the United States, 9,000,000 are doomed to die unless the disease is checked.

It certainly is encouraging that this scourge is being combatted much more successfully than in former years. It was a boon to mankind when the nature of the infection became known. Since then, the decline has been gradual with the exception of the interruption caused by the World War, especially in Europe, on account of the improper food. While it is no respecter of persons, in one sense of the word, it is much more prevalent among the poor than the well-to-do. On account of this, it has been a sociological problem. Poverty, with its resultant hardships, overcrowding, overwork and poor food, breaks down the resistance and those who are thus weakened, fall an easy prey, while on the other hand, those who have means at hand to increase their resistance by having good food, change of scene and air, rest, diversion of mind and choice of occupation, are better able to combat this disease. Science is kind in many respects and "social justice" is a part of the program of preventive medicine. Therefore, it is essential that the hours of work should be shortened, either an increase in wage, or a decrease in the cost of living, industrializing of hygiene, improvement in food and diet, the establishing of wholesome recreation, playgrounds and parks, which help to increase the resistance of the body.

OUR TASK III.—GRACELAND AND THE CHURCH PROGRAM

By G. N. Briggs

1. What is "Graceland's Immediate Objective"? Can we help Graceland to attain it? How?
2. What do you regard as the greatest contribution that Graceland makes to the church? What other contributions?
3. Define "Graceland's place in the church program."
4. Graceland represents a large investment, both in life and in finances. To yield the maximum return from this investment, the college should be used to capacity. Our greatest loss would be in failing to use it. This would involve loss to individuals as well as to the church. What should we be doing now to protect and realize on our investment?

5. Graceland represents the meeting place of two highly important programs: (1) an educational program, and (2) a spiritual program. These are both necessary, and interdependent. Where else can our young people go to find such a situation for their training for life?

THE MISSIONARY TASK OF THE BRANCH

By Henry L. Livingstone

1. Are the missionaries under appointment the only ones that are obligated by the gospel covenant to do missionary work?
2. To what extent are all church members duty bound to take a part in our missionary work?
3. Has the church provided any systematic training for the local priesthood for its tasks? The Reorganization? The early church? Should such training be provided, or should this matter be left to individual effort? Can effective missionary work be done by local men without training?
4. What methods of local missionary work does the author suggest?
5. What is the first requirement in a person who is to do such work? (A desire to win souls to Christ.)

XVIII.—MISSION WORK IN THE DES MOINES DISTRICT, 1903

By James Franklin Mintun

At the beginning of the year 1903, I was in the vicinity of the Clear Creek Branch near where the debate with Davis H. Bays was to begin on January 5, making final preparations for the debate and preaching at nights.

Arrangements had been made by the Saints that I was to lodge with a Mr. Ward, who lived in Clyde. The debate began at a time appointed with Brethren H. A. McCoy and M. M. Turpen with me to assist. The debate continued each evening except the 9th, when a very severe storm prevented the people assembling. Brother F. A. Smith was with me at the debate part of the time, and near the close Brother J. W. Peterson came for a few nights. He was baptized by Davis H. Bays, and he said he came to see how it was possible for him to contradict what he had formerly advocated. The last six sessions of the debate were held at Collins, the place where Bays had been pastor.

When arranging for the debate I urged that we hold four sessions on each of the four propositions, but Bays insisted that he could tell all he wanted to in three nights, and he thought any one who held a debate should be able to. I finally consented to the three nights on each proposition. During the first part of the debate he said to me, "If I ever hold another debate with you I want more time than three nights." Then I reminded him what he had said previous to the debate about three nights being sufficient for a man who was able to debate saying all he wanted to. At one time in the first part of the debate he was confused, and could not find a revelation in the book of Doctrine and Covenants that he wanted to find, and asked me where it was. I turned to it, and gave it to him to read. I have already referred to the fact that he wished me to agree to not mention the testimonies that he had given and were printed in the Saints' Herald when he was representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and it will be remembered upon what conditions I agreed to this. He could not withhold from boasting about his great knowledge of what "Mormonism," as he called the faith of the Saints, was; because of the time that he had been associated with the Wight faction, and the Strang faction, then being twenty-seven years with the Reorganization. It was then I found use for his testimonies as printed in the Saints' Herald, and I read them. Then I asked when he would be the best prepared to give intelligent evidence of what he knew about the faith of the Latter Day Saints, in the prime of his manhood, with all his intellectual powers alert, or now in his dotage. Was he telling the truth then? Is a contradiction of what he then said true? Some of the members of the Christian Church thus concluded, "If it took him twenty-seven years to find that the Saints were wrong, and his testimonies of their faith untrue, what can we expect will be the conclusion he will arrive at in that many years?" "We can't trust him." And they did not for he was no longer a pastor of that church after the debate.

During the debate on the propositions on the Book of Mormon question, he brought in the old Brighamite argument that there was a "loop hole," for the introduction of polygamy in the Book of Mormon, and quoted, "If I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." (Jacob 2: 39.) I called the attention of the people to the fact that the Lord had just commanded the people, in a paragraph just preceding the one he quoted from, paragraph 36, which reads, "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women." Bays' wife was quite pleased with the charge that her husband made against the Book of Mormon, but when I referred to what it taught by command, she changed, and I took notice of it, and called her attention to the fact, that her husband had defended the Book of Mormon for twenty-seven years, and never found any "loop hole" that would justify him in getting a second wife, and I assured her that she would have been safe all these years to have been his wife, but now she was safe, that while if he said he found a "loop hole" in the Book of Mormon, she was safe because he did not believe what it taught, according to his interpretation. While a member of the church he had lost his first wife near Persia, and had secured this wife by advertising, but I did not refer to that, but I think she thought of it.

Bays had been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and had entered into first the Baptist Church (then the Christian Church) without any further baptism. I called his attention before the assembly to the fact that then he was not a baptized believer, because the baptism with which he became a member of the Christian Church was made void, when he was severed from the church into which he had been baptized, by the vote of the general conference, Brother Charles Derry being one that voted to make the baptism void, with the same authority with which he baptized him by which he became a member of the church. That according to the decision of Alexander Campbell as found in the Christian System, of one who is severed from the church, or excluded "from among them, that he may be as a heathen man and a publican, one entitled to civil, and not to Christian respect." Again A. Campbell says, that "No person is altogether disciplined to Christ unless he is immersed." Then, I said, since his immersion was made void, he was no more a disciple, or "Christian," but one of whom A. Campbell said in The Christian System, "Disciples of Christ are the only persons in a pardoned state" and then said, "All others are in an unpardoned, unjustified, unsanctified, unreconciled, unadopted and lost state." So according to this decision of A. Campbell that was the condition of Mr. Bays. This had telling effect, and he never attempted to reply to it.

When Bays charged with unchristian conduct the Saints in Missouri because they took worldly weapons to defend themselves, their families and their property against the mob, I called his attention to the fact that he was a poor judge in this matter. I had gone to the clerk of the supreme court and had the evidence in the case of Davis H. Bays vs. John Hunt, and to this I referred and called the attention of the audience to the history of the case. At an election when many were somewhat excited, Brother John Hunt said, "All Republicans will lie." Brother Bays stepped up to him and said, "I am a Republican. Will I lie." "Yes," said Brother Hunt, "you will lie, too." Bays sued this brother for $10,000 for slander. This was the worldly weapon that Bays used against his brother in the church. The case was finally appealed to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa, and I have the papers containing the evidence and the decision of the court. The decision was that Bays would not only lie, but that it had been proved that he would steal. I told him that he had better clean up his own character in that of using worldly weapons before he judged others. He had sought to take the property of a brother just because he had been called a liar, but the Saints were defending not only their property, but their families and their own lives from a mob that had sworn to destroy them.

During the debate we had taken turns in presiding, and the last night was my turn to preside. After all preliminaries pertaining to the debate was over, I had announced the hymn to be sung, Mr. Bays asked the chairman if he might say another word, for he said, "I believe it is due from me to Brother Mintun." The chairman said, "Yes, if Brother Mintun does not object." I said, "Brother Bays, the debate is over, and you can feel free to say what you wish." He arose and said, "I have held twenty-seven debates, and I have never met any man before in debate who has answered my arguments more conclusively or in a fairer manner, than has Brother Mintun; I have never debated with any one who has treated me in a more gentlemanly manner during the debate than has Brother Mintun." I could think of nothing to do more appropriate, since I had announced the hymn to sing, than to say, "Let us sing." And the audience did sing. Some of the members of the Christian church said, "If Mr. Bays would treat a man whom he considers had treated him as a gentleman, in the manner that he has treated Mr. Mintun, how would he have treated a man whom he thought was not a gentleman?"

My record says, "God was with me during the debate, and although Bays was at times abusive, yet I never felt like retaliating. The approval of God's Spirit was with me during every session, and good impressions were left with the people." That is what a debate is for, to defend the truth, and to do it in a Christlike manner.

From the debate I came to the Chelsea Branch on the 26th of January, and had charge of a priesthood meeting, giving instruction for the purpose of bringing about a reconciliation between some of the priesthood, of troubles of a serious nature, which had very seriously effected the life of the branch. While some conditions were changed for the better, yet it seemed impossible to bring about a condition that the saints could enjoy themselves in an organized capacity further. So the members of the branch scattered, and brought about the disorganization of the branch.

From here Brother H. A. McCoy and I went to Washington County, near Westchester where a Reverend Romig had lectured against us as a church and against our faith, and I replied to him for the good of the work, and the few Saints who lived there. Brother McCoy baptized six as the result of our efforts there which consisted of my reply referred to and eight sermons preached in the vicinity.

I was at Pilot Mound near where lived a few Saints, and some who were very friendly to the faith, from June 22 to 28, when I was requested to come to Dallas Center to baptize a woman. I was assisted at Pilot Mound by Brother Thomas Jones. When I got to Perry Sister Lucy Doss got on the train and informed me that the sister was in Perry on the account of threats of a mob by some of her relatives if I came there to baptize her. We got off at Woodward, the next station, and I returned to Perry, and postponed the baptism, the relatives threatening the sister and the Saints if she was then baptized. She was afterwards baptized at Des Moines.

On July 11 I came to Dallas Center and preached in Wauke, in Spencer Smith's Hall. Brethren Christy and Reiste with their wives assisted me. This was a new opening. I was kindly cared for by Mr. James B. Price, for which he will be rewarded, and Spencer Smith, who furnished the hall. May God reward both. I was informed while here of the minister arranging for a union service of all the churches in Dallas Center to "oppose Mormonism." I prepared a note to be sent to all the ministers of that place, united in this opposition, and invited them to meet me, and give me a privilege to defend what I believed. Both the editors received these notices and published them, but the ministers refused to even talk with me privately. The minister of the Dunkard Church, of which church Brother and Sister Reiste had been members, was much incensed, and chosen as speaker at this union service, to be held at the Methodist Episcopal Church. I continued each night at Wauke in the hall, and the owner of the hall offered me the use of it free whenever I should return to preach, and urged that I should return.

While I was threatened with injury if I preached in Dallas Center, yet we arranged seats on the lawn at Brother Wardell Christy, and I preached. I was not seriously molested.

On August 13, I was in attendance at the reunion which began that day, and continued till the twenty-third, acting as one of the presidents of the reunion, attending fifty-four services, preached eight times, baptized one, and administered to ten sick. During the reunion some of the young

Central Church

May 13.—Several happenings have recently affected the trend of activity in this branch, the most outstanding being the announcement by Pastor Eli Bronson that he had decided to take up secular labor for a time at least. This was regretted by many because it meant to Central Church the loss of a pastor and the curtailment of Brother Bronson's gospel work. With his announcement that he was leaving the branch, Brother Bronson told the Saints that Elder Daniel B. Sorden had been selected to fill the vacancy.

A special business meeting, called on the evening of May 11, was in charge of Apostle Myron A. McConley and Brother Ray Knowlton. The business at hand immediately followed the opening song and prayer. First, the resignation of Elder Eli Bronson as pastor and head of Religious Education, was taken up. It was accepted after a number had spoken of Brother Bronson's efficient service. Next, Sister Ethel Bronson handed in her resignation as assistant supervisor of the young people's department, and this was handled in the same manner. Brother McConley then talked concerning the selection of a new pastor and told of his acquaintance and association with Brother Daniel B. Sorden. After proper motion and second, the selection of Brother Sorden as pastor was approved. He will at once take up his pastoral duties, his initial sermon being preached the morning of May 15, on the subject, "Above the Average." Brother and Sister Sorden are welcome in Central Branch.

The "Marthas," the women's organization, have been planning and working to have a booth at the church, where they can sell food and drinks during the Olympic Games. This matter was brought up at the business meeting, and after the aims of these women were made known, all heartily favored the project. Several donated materials and labor. The "Marthas" anticipate good business owing to the fact that the church is only a few blocks from the Olympic grounds.

The Idola Class sponsored a combined reception and farewell party at the church the evening of May 13, for Elder Sorden and family, newly arrived, and Brother Bronson and family who are leaving May 16. W. E. Badham was master of ceremonies, and a lengthy program was beautifully carried out. There were present an array of celebrities—Apostle Myron A. McConley; Apostle John W. Rushton; Eli Bronson, secretary of the seventies; Daniel B. Sorden, high priest; Doctor A. W. Teel, church physician, and Judge Charles W. Bogue, representing the City of Los Angeles. All these made short, entertaining talks. One out-of-the-ordinary feature was a talk by Doctor Mather which, some people went to a restaurant and secured some ice cream, which resulted in their being poisoned, and during the night following two were not expected to live as a result. But by continued fervent prayers and administration of the ordinance of the laying on of hands for the sick with anointing with oil, they recovered, and are still living, so far as I now know.

After the reunion I continued to hold a few meetings in Rhodes in the Methodist Protestant church. On the last day of the meetings, Brother Sidney Pitt, of Persia, was on his way to Chicago with cattle, and took violently sick on the train, and was put off for help at Rhodes. We administered to him five times before he was fully relieved, being so much relieved that he attended the service at the church that evening, and continued to improve.

said, was the first he had ever given in public. There was also a talk by Brother Wilbur Gillen. And an offering was taken up to defray some of the expenses of the departing pastor. Brother Bronson and family are going to Sacramento where he is going into the insurance business.

After all the songs were sung and speeches said, the guests adjourned to the Sunday school to partake of the refreshments and get acquainted with Brother Sorden, wife, and daughter.

Brother Bronson will preach his farewell sermon the evening of May 15. By the time this letter appears in print, he will probably be located in his new home.

Two years before another General Conference of the church! The members of this branch are praying for an uplift in the affairs of the world, and more especially for a spiritual regeneration in the church; that through the power of Him who is on High, accompanied by a whole-hearted service to those He has chosen, Zion shall be established. To bring about economic changes will require some bold and adventurous moves. Courage and stamina are requisites which must be in evidence, and above all, a people spiritually minded and with confidence in God and one another.

Denver, Colorado

While Pastor Glaude Smith was in attendance at General Conference, the Saints were addressed by Elders E. J. Williams, C. L. Bruno, and J. Arthur Davis. Upon his return to Denver, April 17, he told the good news of the conference. Denver members are happy to have Brother and Sister Smith here for the next two years, and feel sure they will be able to go on with the good work they have been doing since they came to Denver.

On Sunday, April 3, Sister Lefa Lutz was married to Brother Farr Kemp at the home of her parents in Yuma, Colorado, Elder D. A. Kemp, father of the bridegroom, officiating. They are now living in Denver.

Elder H. I. Velt and wife spent a few days in Denver on their way back to Seattle from General Conference. Their visit was much enjoyed by the Saints here. Brother Velt spoke at the morning service April 24, and Sister Velt sang a beautiful solo, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Brother Glaude Smith was the speaker in the evening, his subject being "The Glorious Gospel."

A large crowd was present at the sacrament service May 1, and an interesting meeting was had. Brother Smith made the opening address, taking as his subject, "The All-sufficient Christ." In the afternoon he left for Colorado Springs and other points south, in the interest of the work, and returned to Denver the following Saturday. Elder G. F. Walling was the speaker in the evening.

The Book of Mormon class, with Brother G. A. Smith as teacher, and the dramatic class under Brother E. P. Darnell, meet every Sunday at 6.30 p. m. Interest is good and progress is being made in both classes.

Mother's Day was observed with appropriate programs in the church school and in the eleven o'clock meeting. Raymond Robertson gave a reading and short talks were made by Howard Sheehy, Glen Holmes, E. J. Williams, and C. L. Bruno. Sister Alice Milligan sang "O Mother Mine," and a quartet composed of Glaude Smith, Mrs. Glaude Smith, Mildred Sheehy and Fred Kemp, sang "Mother of Mine."

In the evening the play, "A Pilgrim Mother," was presented, being preceded by a solo, a short sermon by the pastor, and a number by the male quartet. This play was given by Denver Branch young people in the State Religious Drama Tournament held in Denver, and won second place in the group of which it was a part. The Saints are making a creditable showing in these tournaments and creating a favorable impression. The play was directed by E. P. Darnell, and the following members were in the cast: Mrs. Bertha Black, Edgar Jones, Ammon Wildermuth, Goldie Bell, Glen Holmes, George Darnell, Glen Bruno, and Charlotte Darnell.

The young people's group held a get together luncheon at the church Sunday, May 15, immediately following the morning service. These meetings are well attended, and the programs are of a helpful nature. The young people also hold very good prayer services at eight o'clock one Sunday morning each month.

Brother Smith was the speaker both morning and evening, his subjects being "Worship In Spirit and In Truth," and "Our Objectives Localized."

The members have been much encouraged by the harmonious and constructive conference just held, and rejoice in the spirit of brotherly love and humility manifested. Pastor Smith and Brother E. J. Williams have warned them, however, that they must not be so pleased and feel so secure that they shall forget that there is work for them to do, but that God's people should now labor with renewed vigor and zeal and, with hearts courageous, set about the task of building His kingdom, as they have been told so many times to do.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

May 20.—This branch is making spiritual progress. At all regular services attendance is fair. The Wednesday night prayer service is well attended and many take part.

April 10, the congregation was fortunate in having as a visitor Mr. Schmidt, head of the vocal department of the University of Oklahoma. He sang "The Crucifixion," accompanied at the piano by Mr. Salter, head of the piano department of the university.

Saints of Oklahoma City enjoyed the short stay of Elder and Sister C. E. Wight. Brother Wight was here on business for several months during the winter. They have now returned to Kansas City, and the members of this congregation miss them.

Brother J. M. McCarter, superintendent of the Department of Religious Education, is suffering from a nervous breakdown. The branch prays for his speedy recovery.

The women's department is doing a fine work in spiritual and temporal lines. These workers have a food sale at the courthouse each month, have an all-day meeting each week which is taken up in quilting and study. The study hour is in charge of Elder F. Ed. Dillon.

The priesthood of the branch have been making greater effort to visit the members and to discharge their other duties. The spirit which went out from the late conference of the church is bearing fruit in this branch, and the members pray that it will continue. Priesthood, officers, and members of this branch are cooperating in the performance of a good work.

Moline, Illinois

May 19.—Interest here is good and the work is progressing although practically all of the Saints are working under great difficulties due to lack of employment.

The Saints of this congregation who attended General Conference tried to bring the spirit of that gathering home, that others might profit from the wonderful experiences had there.

Bishop C. J. Hunt stopped here one night last week on his way to Wisconsin, and gave a real Latter Day Saint talk. This group also enjoyed a visit from him in March.

The Tri-City Saints considered it a great privilege to have President Floyd M. McDowell here two days in February. Some wonderful services were had at that time. The more the Saints see of their leaders, the greater grow their love and respect for them.

District President E. R. Davis, Missionary L. G. Holloway, Elder F. C. Bevan, and local men have helped in Moline during the past months.

Branch officers are the same this year as last. Besides the Sunday school there are a Book of Mormon class and a young people's church history class on Sunday evening. And the Wednesday night prayer services are not forgotten.

The women continue with their studies, and have done some quilting.

The Saints are striving to live in a way acceptable to the Lord, and hope they may be given greater wisdom and more of his directing Spirit.

San Bernardino, California

During the month of April, the church school had an average attendance of one hundred and four. "Prayer" was the theme of the worship periods and also of Elder Teagarden morning and evening on Sunday, April 17.

"Faith" was the theme of Brother Jesse Johnson, of Long Beach, the morning of April 24. This was Brother Johnson's first visit to San Bernardino for some time, and everyone enjoyed his help.

This spring Brother Teagarden has greatly helped the branch with sermons and in the sacrament and prayer services. Among others who have contributed to the forward step of the branch have been Doctor A. W. Teel, of Los Angeles, who talked April 10 on "The Word of Wisdom"; Brother Givens, of Ontario, and Brother John Scannel whose subject was "Repentance."

The women's department meets all day each Thursday. They clean the church in the morning, saving the branch the expense of hiring a janitor. After having lunch, they hold study classes in the afternoon. They are also working with the bishop of the branch in an endeavor to create a branch storehouse.

Class work in the young people's department sessions at half past six Sunday evening is holding the interest of a number of new students. The junior choir also meets at this hour under the direction of Sister Anna Bronson.

The dramatic class is progressing. With the assistance of the orchestra this group has furnished the programs for the dinners given each month by the women.

Easter was appropriately observed in the worship period of the church school, the dramatic class presenting the pageant, "His Cross to Bear," under the direction of Leola Nice. At eleven o'clock the Easter sermon was by Brother Teagarden, and the senior choir sang. The junior choir gave an Easter cantata at half past six in the evening.

Golden Wedding Anniversary for English Couple

Birmingham, England.—There will be rejoicing in the hearts of many people in England and America on May 27. Special happiness will be the portion of Brother and Sister F. H. Edwards, mother and father of Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Sister Blanche Mesley, for fifty years ago they were married in the quaint old church of Saint Paul's, Birmingham. They will also celebrate their golden wedding as members of the church, having served faithfully and with much sacrifice since the early days of their marriage.

Brother and Sister Edwards have one son, Frank, and three daughters, Blanche, Nellie, and Gertrude, all active members of the church. They have been the means of bringing many to the gospel, and are loved by everyone, being known to neighbors and shop keepers alike as "Darby and Joan," a title which they richly deserve, for they are real "pals." Their happiness and delight are in this church, and they are known far and wide for sweetness of disposition and knowledge of the law of this church.

Sister Edwards has been very ill with double pneumonia but is slowly recovering. Brother Edwards was her constant companion and help during the weary weeks of her sickness.

Their names will go down in history as stalwart pioneers of the gospel, ever ready to help in time of stress and ever faithful to their church.

All-day Meeting for Lamoni Stake

Sunday morning, May 15, an all-day meeting was conducted at Chariton under the direction of the Lamoni Stake Presidency. At the regular church school hour the adults assembled in mass and listened to a discussion of Religious Education problems led by Mrs. Martin Hynden, stake superintendent of that department, and Elder R. A. Cheville of the stake presidency.

At the eleven o'clock hour Stake President Blair Jensen was the speaker. His was a message of encouragement to the Saints. At noon the members assembled in the basement where the sisters of Chariton Branch prepared a fine dinner.

At two o'clock Elder Parley Batten, president of Chariton Branch officiated in the baptism of two sisters of Lucas Branch, Mrs. Wanetta Cooper and Mrs. Effie Gobon. At two-thirty these sisters were confirmed under the hands of Elders R. A. Cheville and T. S. Williams. This was followed by a discussion of church objectives lead by the three members of the stake presidency. Stake President Blair Jensen led in a discussion of the general church budget, following which opportunity was given for questions and general discussion. T. S. Williams followed with a short talk on ministerial standards and procedure. Roy A. Cheville was next in outlining the relation of the stakes of Zion to Zion itself. The little booklet, Church Objectives, was used as an outline from which the discussion had its beginning.

Because of the high school exercises held in Chariton and the fact that the Saints of the branch wished to attend, no service was held that night. Elder Jensen returned to Lamoni for a part in the high school services there and Elders Cheville and Williams went to Hiteman where Brother Cheville delivered the baccalaureate address.

Conference for Midland England District

The annual conference of Midland District convened at Leicester, March 26. At 6.30 p. m. the Leicester Religians gave a short play. Then came the business session which included the election of the following officers: District president, Elder Joseph Holmes, counselors, Elder W. Bailey and Elder J. F. Schofield; secretary, Sister F. E. Norton; treasurer, G. W. Rallings; auditors, E. Wragg, and A. Shaw; director of Religious Education, Elder W. Bailey.

At the Sunday morning preaching service Elder E. R. Chappell of Leicester, was the first speaker, taking the place of Elder S. Holmes, of Clay Cross, who was unable to be present because of illness. His subject was the question, "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?" and he read from 1 Corinthians 15. Sister Ida Norton, of Leicester, sang "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

The second speaker was Elder W. B. Arrowsmith, of Birmingham, whose subject was "He Is Risen."

The junior church convened at 2.30 p. m. A number of recitations and solos were rendered, and the speaker for the afternoon was Elder E. R. Chappell. A solo, "Take My Life, and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," was sung at the close of the service.

Many hymns and testimonies characterized the quarter past three fellowship service. All felt that the Spirit of the Master was present.

A short song service preceded the opening of the evening preaching hour. During the latter service a duet was rendered by Sisters Ethel and Nellie Schofield, and a chorus number was sung by Leicester Saints. The district president was the evening speaker and his theme was "The Significance of the Resurrection." He read from Romans 6. This was followed by a duet by Sisters Kitty Standley and E. R. Chappell, of Leicester.

Though the weather did not favor this conference, the Saints were strengthened by the meetings, and went home resolving to do more for the Master.

Dahinda, Illinois

A bright spot in the memory of the branch is the recent visit of District President E. R. Davis, and the new missionary, Elder L. G. Holloway. Acquaintance with him proved that Brother Holloway is an enthusiastic speaker and a spiritual and consecrated worker wholly in line with the program of the church.

Local Saints have imbibed the spirit of the General Conference from those privileged to attend. The Saints in Dahinda are few but eager to do their little part.

The calls of Elder E. R. Davis are always much appreciated, and the prayers of the Saints go with him in his arduous work which he so dearly loves, that his physical strength may continue. It is the hope of local members that Brother Holloway will find time to visit them frequently. Some think that a series of meetings at Dahinda some time this summer would create considerable interest in the gospel message.

The usual attendance at services is back to normal, several being back after seasons of illness. Through adverse times the faithful have endeavored to carry on, and God has been with them. They are happy in the little they may do.

The Saints realize what it means to guide and direct the minds of the youth in the proper channels. They feel their need for the Spirit of the Master and remembering the affairs of his kingdom, pray earnestly for the officers of his church. They believe this is the time of great spiritual awakening and know that if the people of God are spiritually inclined, all else will be taken care of. Dahinda members are ready and willing to sacrifice, and know that the crisis in the church must be met with one united effort.

Sister, Audrey West who works away from home, spent a week here recently, and her smiling face brought cheer to many. She is always found in her place in church when opportunity affords and tells others the gospel story.

Peoria, Illinois

The Saints of Peoria live a long distance apart and many of them are very poor. Until recently they held a study class during the week, using the Book of Mormon as a textbook. But now during the "depression" most of the members found it difficult to pay carefare and come out during the week. Then the only elder, Brother J. G. Cole, has had to spend most of his time in Galesburg at the home of his daughter, since the death of her husband last year, so the members of the church have been able to hold only regular sacrament meetings. Sister Flora B. Norris has opened her home to the Saints, and the sacrament service is conducted there the first Sunday morning of every month at ten o'clock. These are usually well attended.

Peoria Branch, in years past, has been like a net cast into the sea, gathering of all classes of people, God has blessed his people many times. People have come to Peoria, fellowshipped for a time, and gone on to other places, leaving only a small number to carry on the church work here, but who can judge what the influence of these lives has been? One man learned to read after he joined the church, and now in his declining years this is his one source of pleasure.

So the work of the Master goes on. Brave men and true, worthy to be called ministers of the gospel of Christ, have sojourned in Peoria for a season. They have tarried a while in the homes of God's children and have gone on their way again leaving his blessing behind them.

Peoria members ask your prayers, that in these trying times of men and of nations, the light of their lives as Christians, may not grow dim, but brighter until the dawning of the perfect day.

Akron, Ohio

Saints of this branch were pleased to have a visit from Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley prior to their going to General Conference.

May 8 Elder and Sister James E. Bishop were here, Brother Bishop giving the Mother's Day sermon, also a report of the conference.

Akron Saints have new zeal to press on in the work since hearing of the conference. They are looking toward the redemption of Zion when all work together according to the commandment and will of God.

Four baptisms have lately marked the activities of this group. Brother E. M. Knight baptized two Sunday, May 1; Brother John McCoy baptized one the same day, and May 8, Brother Knight baptized the fourth. Others have expressed a desire to unite with the church on Children's Day.

Sacrament service May 1, had a large attendance, and a good spirit prevailed through the entire service. The Saints were spoken to through one of the members, and enjoyed a spiritual uplift.

The Wednesday evening prayer services have small attendance, but those who are absent are missing experiences of divine help and encouragement.

Under the leadership of J. C. Kriebel, the church school is moving along nicely with increasing attendance. Sister Mildred Roberts Etling, who is in charge of the nursery class, is giving the little folks some excellent training.

The Doctrine and Covenants class which meets on Sunday evenings with Brother E. M. Knight as teacher, is generating greater interest, also the Book of Mormon class taught by Brother Manchester. A few nonmembers are attending these sessions.

Annual Conference for Northern England

Mission Bishopric Takes Prominent Place

Unity, dignity, and consideration marked the annual conference of Northern District, held in the James Street Church, Bradford Branch, Manchester, England, March 26 and 27.

The business session was in charge of the district presidency, Elder W. H. Chandler in the chair. Following the organization of the meeting, the president appealed for the whole-hearted and loyal support of the Saints for the program of the church, and read the cablegram received by Bishop A. T. Trapp asking for united prayers and calling for a period of special fasting. Then came the reports of district officers and branches, and a report from the Bishop of the British Isles Mission, A. T. Trapp. The last named gave a summary of the tithing and offerings paid by this district, the total from all sources being £169. 2. 6. The election of officers resulted as follows: District president, W. H. Chandler, sustained; the president chose as counselors G. W. Leggott and Nephi Dewsnup who were indorsed by the body. District secretary, Harold Barrington, reelected; financial secretary, Harold Dewsnup, reelected; musical director, James Schofield, sustained; director of Religious Education, Nephi Dewsnup, sustained; historian, Nephi Dewsnup, sustained; district stenographer, Sister Olive Heywood, reelected. Elder John Green was released as counselor to the president because distance prevents his doing much for the district. The conference then sustained all general and local officers of the church.

The conference accepted the offer of Stockport Saints, through Brother Black, to give a concert, the proceeds to go to the district treasury.

Sunday's services opened with preaching at 10:30 a. m. by High Priest A. T. Trapp, bishop of the British Isles Mission. This was a day when services had been given over to the bishop and his counselors. At the conclusion of this service the oblation was taken, then began a splendid sacrament and testimony meeting.

"The Redemption of Zion" was the afternoon theme of Brother Aldridge, pastor of Bradford Branch, and counselor to the bishop who addressed the conference at the two thirty meeting. Others taking part in this service were Elder John Green, Elder Fred Davies, Elder W. H. Chandler. Colin Spargo, of Wigan, sang "Give Me Thy Heart," and Sister Annie Waugh sang "Oh, to Be More Like Jesus."

In the evening Brother Trapp, the speaker, expressed appreciation for the kind way in which the district presidency had entertained them as representing the bishopric, allowing them to occupy so much of the conference time. He then continued along the same thought used by Brother Aldridge. The evening's soloist was Brother Colin Spargo who sang, "If We Could Only Understand," and "Jesus Is Calling." Then the district president voiced the appreciation of the presidency to the bishop and his representative and to all other workers who had contributed to the success of the conference. He said, "I feel that we have been making history."

Coldwater, Michigan

Center of Many Church Activities

Facing the handicaps of the depression, this branch endeavors to go onward with courage to the accomplishments of its tasks of serving, sharing, and pointing to higher ground. Bereft of dividends and profits, many of the world's people are discovering the sustaining power of a religious faith, the abiding values of righteous heroism, honor, charity, and trustworthiness.

The departments make splendid strides to sustain the standards of real spiritual value.

The school of expression keeps its lesson text, "Ancient American Religion," prominently in the church card to the public. From four to six adults have lined up in class work. They are nonmembers who are investigating. Brother S. W. L. Scott lectures each Sunday evening to this adult class, using the records of Joseph and Judah, church history, and archaeology.

Mother's Day was appropriately observed by the church school, in charge of its director. The theme, "The Mothers of the World," was stressed from the pulpit by Elders Scott and Hawn. The evening theme in the school of expression was, "The Mothers of Ancient America Contrasted With Those of Modern America."

Elder Scott was in Battle Creek, May 7, at the home of Brother and Sister R. H. Evans. He officiated in the ceremony which united Brother J. J. Nesbitt and Sister Anna Maye Hartly as husband and wife in the presence of a few select guests. The bridal pair are residents of Detroit. They will live at 8245 Mack Avenue.

During the past quarter Saints and friends who live at a distance have worshiped with Coldwater Branch. They have come from South Boardman, Jackson, Toledo, Sylvania, Lansing, Clear Lake, South Scott, Battle Creek, Litchfield, Horton, and from as far east as Toronto, Canada.

Local services have been uplifting and of great variety. The programs have been adapted to suggestions printed in the church papers and sent direct to Coldwater from headquarters.

The pastor was at Lansing, April 10, and reports a fine welcome, a good school, and freedom of spirit in his occupation of the pulpit. Earlier in the season he was at Battle Creek helping in an interesting service. Coldwater enjoyed a Sunday with Brother David Young, pastor of Battle Creek, occupying the sacred desk.

May 15 was another crowning day in the experience of this group. As the occasion was worthy the local editor's notice, here follows the account written by Editor Lovelace of the Branch County News:

"At the Coldwater Saints' church last Sunday a service of more than local interest was enjoyed in the program of the 'Exchange of pulpits' with pastors of this denomination during the winter and spring. This occasion was the 'Old People's Inning,' and was highly appreciated by a splendid representative gathering from Lansing, Toledo, Sylvania, Clear Lake, South Scott, Litchfield, and nearby points with the local membership. The Reverend S. W. L. Scott, the local pastor, presided. The Capitol pastors, Reverends Dexter and Russell, occupied the pulpit during the day, discoursing on 'the power and fruitage of faith,' and 'Finding God.' The sumptuous repast at the noon hour in charge of Mrs. H. J. Corless, and four little maids from school, as caterers, was complimented on all hands, as also the fine grace of accomplishment. Ministers present and assisting were the Reverends G. D. Cassell, South Scott; R. J. Clark, Toledo; G. W. Yeager, Sylvania; Dexter and Russell, Lansing, and Scott of Coldwater.

"So the effort of this local church, with fine spirit to equal life's inequalities and love for fellow man was shown by heart and hand, in reverent humility, enlarging the compass of the soul. This church believes in getting nearer to God in times of depression instead of running away from his religion."

May 22, the subject, "Prayer," was taken up by all departments. The church school opened class work with class prayer, teachers conducting. This was followed by the pulpit and choral departments in prayer and praise after which the audience gathered about the font where Brother Scott baptized three persons, the daughters of Sister Howe, into the kingdom of God. He was assisted by Elder O. J. Hawn. These young women are members of the Shippy family which has figured in the church in the past.

Preparations are under way for the sacrifice period in June.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

On the first Sunday of May the Saints enjoyed a fine sacrament service. That evening at the regular monthly meeting of the O. B. K.'s, the young people heard a splendid talk by President F. M. McDowell who was also the evening speaker.

Sunday morning, May 8, the sermon was by Elder J. R. Lentell. On that day, too, the choir sang a group of Negro spirituals; Max Constance, who won first place in the junior division of the stake oratorical contest, gave his oration; Sister J. R. Lentell told a Mother's Day story.

After the morning devotional the following Sunday, the Saints of this church were dismissed to spend the remainder of the day at Central Church in stake conference.

Bishop J. Stanley Kelley and wife attended the morning service. Brother Kelley was the speaker on the theme, "Church Objectives." In the evening High Priest R. L. Bishop preached. His sermons are always enjoyed by this congregation.

Pastor W. F. Bolinger was the morning and evening speaker May 29. His theme was "Love," the topic for the month. In the evening Brother Ross Moore rendered an organ number. Mrs. Hazel Moler and Miss Ina Hattey sang two special numbers.

Brother Leonard Dunlap had charge of the morning worship service during the month, and the Saints enjoyed his way of conducting this meeting. It is hoped that others of the young people's group, as well as those of the adult group, will take their turn at conducting this service.

The young people took an overnight hike on Decoration Day, closing a month of happy activities.

Independence

Summer events are demanding the attention of the Young People's Council of Independence. Plans for three historical trips and for Sunday night program helps, to be given small branches on the outskirts of Zion during the Campus season, are taking form. This council is composed of the young people's leader from each church (the assistant church school superintendent) and two young people appointed by the pastor. It meets once each month, sometimes oftener, and its purpose is to sponsor events and contacts beyond the regular Sunday morning church school session. Roy E. Settles, of Second Church, is president of the council, and Ruth Bryant, of Walnut Park, is secretary. The council is interested in a great variety of activities, social, dramatic, religious, athletic, and musical.

Because of cooler weather the boys' baseball league of the churches in Independence found it necessary to postpone its official opening. Its first game will be played on the Campus diamond next Saturday morning, June 4. The ice cream social, which also had to be postponed, will be held tomorrow night on the Campus, and there will be a pleasing program by radio entertainers. The league teams got in some good practice at the Campus last Saturday morning.

The Independence people who attended commencement exercises at Graceland College and other institutions have returned home. Among the young people, too, are to be seen the faces of boys and girls home from college.

Though the day was rainy, many people were able to carry out memorial plans on Monday. The cemeteries were visited by hundreds, and graves of relatives and friends were made beautiful with flowers. It was a busy day for the Boy Scouts who to the number of three hundred and seventy-five assembled on the Campus for their annual camporee. Overnight twenty-six troops from nine counties of this area, established themselves in a tented city in the Campus pasture. On Monday morning they participated with the Spanish American War Veterans, the American Legion, the G. A. R., the Girl Scouts and other organizations in a parade and patriotic, grave-side ceremony at Woodlawn Cemetery.

Stone Church

A spirit of deep devotion pervaded the young people's prayer meeting at the Stone Church last Wednesday night, and a number pledged themselves to more earnest preparation for service and more immediate application of the preparation they now have.

The event which generated much of the spirit of reverence and dedication was the ordination of Brother Howard Cook to the office of Aaronic priest by President Floyd M. McDowell and Elder C. B. Woodstock. Brother McDowell made this young man's acceptance of new responsibility the central thought of his stirring talk on, "What Investments Are You Making?" For four years Brother Cook has superintended the intermediate boys of the Stone Church School. He is personally known to most of the youthful congregation who witnessed his ordination.

The singing of such hymns as "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" "Just as I Am Thine Own to Be," "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," and "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord," the offering of silent prayers, and the voicing of straight-from-the-heart desires and needs, made the meeting unusual in feeling and participation. Elder T. A. Beck was in charge.

The testimonies of the Saints of Group 20, last Wednesday night, breathed friendship for Apostle and Sister G. G. Lewis. This was a farewell service held at the Lewis home and in charge of Elder W. B. Paul. A short program followed the regular prayer hour in which Sister C. C. Koehler, leader of women in Independence, presented Sister Lewis a friendship quilt made by the women of the group. The spirit of consecration and cooperation prevailed.

In his Memorial Day address to the Stone Church congregation Sunday morning Evangelist U. W. Greene spoke of the World War as the most horrible conflict history has recorded. Have we any idea of the price of that war? The toll of life would equal in number an army of men passing continuously before us twenty abreast for a period of three months! He recounted incidents of war-time heroism, but declared that it is a greater thing for a citizen to be a hero of peace. Delineating the ways in which almost every family has been called to sacrifice for the sake of war, he asked all war veterans and war mothers to stand, and sought from the congregation a pledge of service to the living and loyalty to the cause of peace.

"Love Divine" was the hymn with which the congregation opened the service, and there was a contralto solo by Velma Brocaw Nunn; invocation by Elder H. O. Smith. The hymn, "O Love Divine That Stoops to Share," was sung by the Stone Church Choir directed by Paul N. Craig, and the anthem, "Hallelujah" from "Mount of Olives." Elder H. G. Barto was in charge of the service.

Music lovers who heard the Wahdemna Choral Club's closing concert of the season Sunday night, were privileged to listen to such old favorites as "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," by Noble, "Hospodi Pomilui," by Lvovsky, "Listen to the Lambs," by Dett, and "Beautiful Savior," by Christiansen, as well as an excellent program of new numbers. The work of the choral club soloists and male quartet was greatly appreciated. "The Twelve Young Gideons" was read by Mrs. Leonard J. Lea, guest reader, and Robert Miller, guest organist, played the "Grand March" from "Aida," by Verdi, and "The Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger," by Wagner. Paul N. Craig directed.

New officers of the club are: Business manager, Morris Roedel; assistant business manager, Miss Dorothy Mabbott, in charge of social activities of the club; secretary, Miss Olive Curtis; treasurer, Frank White; properties, Orville Martin; transportation, Verl Jamison; robes, Miss Pauline Crawford; librarian, Palmer Phillips; publicity, Gomer Cool, and historian, Helen Layton.

When Miss May Snead, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Howard Snead, of Independence, became the bride of Mr. E. Bruce Ashcraft, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, the pretty, English ceremony pleased the many friends of the bridal pair. Elder George Mesley, of Kansas City, officiated. The bride who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by her sister, Miss Kathleen Snead, as maid of honor, and her cousin, Miss Alice Hacker, as bridesmaid. Mr. S. Brguin, of Pittsburgh, was best man, and Mr. Howard Snead, brother of the bride, was groomsmen. Little Gordon Mesley carried the ring, and Treva Jean McGinley was flower girl. Ushers were Howard Cook, Ray Wrigley, J. Adelbert Withee, and Roy McNeil. Preceding the ceremony Evan Fry played a medley of organ numbers, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "Love's Old, Sweet Song," and the Alma Mater Hymn of the University of Kansas. Blaine Bender sang "Just Because" and "The Bedouin Love Song," accompanied at the piano by Ewart Ragan. Mrs. Emma Snead Braby played on the violin "To a Wild Rose," by MacDowell, and "Andantino," by LeMare. During the ceremony Mr. Fry at the organ and Mrs. Braby, violinist, played "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," and Mr. Fry played the wedding marches. Mr. and Mrs. Ashcraft will make Pittsburgh their home. For two years the bride has taught in the public schools of Independence, and her many friends here will miss her. She is an active church worker and was captain of Girl Scout Troop 33.

Among those whom death has lately called away was Brother John A. Lund, who died early May 30, at his home in Independence. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Hilma Lund, three daughters, three sons, one brother, one sister, and twelve grandchildren. The deceased was born in Oland, Sweden, in 1866. The funeral was held from the home yesterday.

Early last week relatives and friends of Stanley Mills, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mills, of this city, learned of his marriage, May 21, to Miss Marie Bowen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Bowen, of Lynwood, California, and formerly of Independence. About June 1, Mr. and Mrs. Mills will return to Independence, the bridegroom having just completed four years' enlistment in the Navy. The wedding took place at the Saints' church at Long Beach.

Miss Marta and Alfrieda Drigalla, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Drigalla, of Blue Springs Road, arrived the evening of May 24, from Poland, to join their parents and brothers and sisters, whom they have not seen for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Drigalla arrived in Independence with their seven younger children in time to attend the Centennial Conference, and now they and their nine sons and daughters are reunited.

Independence friends were saddened May 23, when Kenneth Trowbridge, of this city, received word of the drowning of his sixteen-year-old brother, Donald. The boy's death resulted from his becoming cramped while swimming in the river at Nashville, Arkansas. He is a son of Brother and Sister G. S. Trowbridge, of Nashville, who lived in Independence until two years ago. He is survived by his parents, two sisters, and brother. The funeral was held May 25, from the Saints' church in Saint Louis.

Enoch Hill Church

Speakers who have occupied the Enoch Hill pulpit in the last three weeks have been Elders Swen Swenson, Frank McDonald, John F. Sheehy, T. A. Beck, and H. L. Barto.

Pastor Barto, in his talk to the Saints Sunday morning, tactfully pointed out the weaknesses of the congregation and at the same time commended them for their progress along other lines. He especially called attention to Luke 12: 32: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "God is willing and ready to bless his people," asserted Brother Barto, "but we must come up to a higher plane. We must subject ourselves to his laws and then he will abundantly bless us."

A number of young people from this congregation gave a short program before the preaching hour at the Buckner church last Sunday evening. Those participating in the program were Mesdames Rilla Johnson, Ruth Hayes, May Worth, Misses Ruby Johnson, Louise McDonald, and Nellie Mae Kramer. Lawrence Martin, of Enoch Hill, was the evening speaker.

Recreational activities are again under way for the summer months. Every Friday evening from seven until ten o'clock the Saints, young and old, meet on the church lawn for an evening of volley ball and other games.

GEORGE F. KETTNER.

Sperry, Oklahoma

The last two months have been busy for this branch, the amount of work done showing the number of active Saints in Sperry. The young people are to be commended for the earnestness with which they are taking up their responsibilities.

A recent event was a contest conducted by the young people's class. The class was divided in half, and each group went campaigning for new members. As a result the class had a record attendance of eighty-one, and is holding most of the new members since the contest closed. The young people are fortunate in having for their teacher W. P. Rumsey, pastor. He is training many who will be active in future church work.

The women's department is very helpful. The branch is largely financed through these workers who are always willing to do something to earn a few dollars. May 12, Tulsa Branch was invited to spend the day here, and about fourteen women came from that city. Dinner was served at noon and an interesting program was given at two o'clock. Brother and Sister Mundy came from Pawhuska and brought some visitors with them. The women meet each Thursday and spend their time at some work, lunch together, and have a study hour in the afternoon. These meetings are attended by most of the church women and several who are not members but enjoy working with the department.

The young people were in charge of the beautiful program on Mother's Day. There were vocal and instrumental numbers, readings, and a three-act play. The program was given at eight o'clock in the evening and a large crowd attended. Many were turned away because there was not room.

A dramatized sermon was given by the young people in the month of April. This kind of sermon is interesting, bringing variety of program and instruction to all.

Missionary Efforts in Arkansas and Eastern Oklahoma

Hochatown, Oklahoma, May 16.—I left home for my mission field April 28, my first stop being Winthrop, Arkansas. Elder T. B. Sharp is the respected and beloved presiding officer of a splendid group of Saints living there. He also does considerable preaching at other points. At Winthrop, I delivered two sermons and a stereopticon lecture on the Book of Mormon. For this lecture the school board permitted us the use of the high school auditorium. It was full.

My next stop was at De Queen, Arkansas, where I engaged the Reverend J. D. Taut in a ten-night debate. He represented the Church of Christ (Campbellite). Church propositions were discussed. Elder J. W. Peterson was challenged by Mr. Taut while preaching at De Queen last winter. Brother T. B. Sharp acted as chairman for both of us, and we had fair crowds for so busy a time. People came fifty and sixty miles from Dierks and Winthrop, Arkansas, and Antlers, and Hochatown, Oklahoma, to hear the debate. The only "grip" that Taut knew and used was Clark Braden. Brother and Sister Hale W. Smith came down from Grannis, two nights, and he heard some of the things Mr. Taut said about his grandfather, Joseph Smith.

Mr. Taut finally took the proposition that the sanctuary had to be cleansed (Daniel 8) and that Alexander Campbell was the instrument to do the work. This proposition strengthened my argument. My opponent had already admitted that Campbell's baptism by the Reverend M. Luce of the Baptist Church was unscriptural. He had not intended to make this admission, but I read it from one of his letters written to the "Firm Foundation." Then I magnified the point—how could Mr. Campbell, without a divine call, no angel, or Holy Ghost, cleanse the sanctuary?

I feel well satisfied with this effort to establish the truth, and am going back to De Queen when the nights grow a little warmer, to hold meetings in the yard and show my pictures. We have about two families of Saints living there, and were kindly provided for by Brother and Sister George Eastin, also Brother Bailey. The latter does not belong to the church, neither does Sister Eastin, but I believe that in time they will be numbered with us.

A letter from Brother Budd asked me to look after some of the eastern Oklahoma territory, and by invitation of Hochatown folk, I came from the debate to be with them. Am preaching every night in the Indian Church. We expect Brother Sharp over tonight, for tomorrow is to be a big day, "all day singing with preaching and dinner on the ground." May the Lord bless his work everywhere.

A. M. BAKER.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

In the recent past some of the active members of this branch have moved to other places. Among those who are especially missed are the local organist, Sister Mary Brown, who is now living at Elmira, New York; the Sunday school superintendent, Brother H. A. Cunningham and wife, now at the home of Brother Griffiths, in Ohio, and Sister May Dwyer in Nanticoke, Pennsylvania. But the Saints feel that God has been good in providing an organist to take the place of Sister Brown. This new worker is not a member of the latter-day faith, but is willing to help when she is able. Her services are much appreciated.

William Hyde has taken charge of the Sunday school assisted by Harold Fritz, one who has been very faithful in teaching some beautiful Bible stories to the school each Sunday.

Elder H. A. Cunningham is missed by Pastor W. H. Lewis, but he has a fine group of young men to assist him.

Bloomsburg is a beautiful town but has not many industries. Some of the Saints have had little or no employment, but none have suffered for the necessary things of life. They thank God for his watchcare, and trust that work will soon be found for willing hands not only here but everywhere.

Faithful Brother G. W. Robley has been appointed to Kirtland District. It is with regret that the Saints part with him, for he will be missed throughout the entire district by those who have learned to love him for his labors and his desires to build up the kingdom, bringing God's people to a higher spiritual plane. This branch has much for which to thank Brother Robley. Through him it has been built up in numbers and spirituality. He has labored not only in spiritual service but in a physical sphere to beautify the house of God inside and out. Souls have rejoiced and light has come to many, and people not of this faith have learned to love him. His life has been like a modest flower hidden under the plants and grasses, its sweet perfume filling the air. This kind of people, in their quiet way, build up the kingdom of God. The Saints of Bloomsburg pray God's blessing on him in his new field of labor.

Some of the members have rejoiced in receiving their patriarchal blessings. Surely they will be able to find their work in the church, and when the perplexities of life bear heavily upon them, strength will be given them through this divine ordinance of God's church.

Members here are thankful for the spirit which prevailed at the General Conference.

Desires Prayers

Sister C. B. Young, of Goodland, Kansas, has suffered a long period of affliction from nervous troubles, with very little relief. She desires the prayers of church members, and desires relief, but expresses her willingness to submit to the Divine will in all things.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Delta, Colorado

From all indications there is a decided awakening among the Saints in this vicinity. Since March 1 there has been a much better attendance and a keener interest in all church activities.

An all-day service was held Easter Sunday with a number present from neighboring towns. All services were of an instructive nature and boasted good attendance. Lunch was served at noon.

The young people proved their ability to conduct a service when they were given charge of the entire church school program on Mother's Day. Many well chosen words of praise and tribute were directed to the mothers in talks, stories, and songs. Surely all mothers felt inspired to try even harder to be truly worthy the good things said and done in their honor that day.

The Saints, old and young, are working out plans for a money earning project to help with this local's share of general church debt liquidation. They trust that they may be successful in their endeavor to assist in this great cause. More will later be written about this.

The women of the branch have decided recently to meet in groups to make it more convenient for some to attend. One group meets in or near Delta while the other meets at Olathe or near there. Different topics are given out for discussion. A general theme is carried out which so far is proving successful, helpful, and a pleasure to those in attendance. "Faith as an Anchor" is the next theme, and each woman is asked to relate some spiritual instance as a result of exercised faith either from her own life or from the life of another.

The Saints were pleased recently at another visit from the bishop's agent, Brother M. L. Schmid, of Grand Junction.

Delta Saints were sad to learn that this district's missionaries, Elder and Sister N. L. Booker, are soon to leave and take up work elsewhere. Perhaps local Saints will need to rally from a feeling of helplessness, for the Bookers have been great helps and mainstays. Their friendship and helpfulness challenge Delta members to make their contributions as willingly and happily as they have done. May the Father bless and sustain them in whatever way they may be called to serve.

Ludington, Michigan

106 South Rath Avenue

For some time the young people of Ludington have been organized as a group, having as their slogan, "Zion—our goal," suggested by J. L. Randall, their president. It has been suggested that no name be chosen at present, the choice being left to the general church council of young people's presidents. Local workers anxiously await the chosen name and definite working material.

The Saints were pleased to read of the reappointment of Apostle D. T. Williams to this district. Since last October he has come to Ludington each month with the gospel message, presenting it as "one having authority." Everyone who heard him speak and had the privilege of his presence in their home, was given greater courage in the work.

In looking over the missionary appointments, the Saints note that Elder C. E. Harpe comes also to this district. Certainly he will find welcome in this branch.

The young people enjoyed a spiritual prayer service the morning of the last Sunday of April, Elder J. L. Randall in charge, assisted by Priest Glenn H. Foster.

Reading the Conference Daily and hearing the reports of District President Buell Shelley and Elder John Bennett, of Free Soil, cause us to think that the past conference was an outstanding event in the history of the church. With God as the Father and leader and with such stanch and faithful men as the Prophet, his counselors, the Twelve, the Presiding Bishopric, and other officers, the church should move forward in the great cause of Zion.

May 5, the work and study group of the adult division met at the home of Sister Kleber Hill to formulate plans to help meet branch expenses. That same evening the young people met at the hall to talk over the plans of the Z. O. G's.

A short Mother's Day program was carried out by the children's division during the church school hour. Elder J. L. Randall, church school director, spoke feelingly on the topic, "Mothers."

The district presidency composed of Elders Buell Shelley, John Randall, and J. C. Doty, motored to Bendon early Sunday morning to discuss business of the district.

The district conference will be held at Bendon, June 18 and 19.

Exeter, England

The branch was organized here about the year, 1885, by Elder William Newton in a village known as Broadclyst, about five miles from here. It is understood that Elder Edward Lucker was the first president. Several of this group have passed on to their reward while many have gone to the United States, seeking better opportunities for the earthly life and more noble conditions under which to live the gospel law.

The membership in Exeter now numbers thirty-two. Some are disinterested, but others are endeavoring to live near the standard of the gospel and working toward its ideals. The Saints cling to the gospel because they believe in the promises of the Master given to the church through the spirit of divine inspiration, also that given direct to local Saints by Elders Richard Baldwin, John A. Judd, Thomas Jones, Harry Price, and Richard Bullard, that "Here God will raise up a people who will serve him in righteousness and peace." The Saints of Exeter love the Lord because they know his promises will be vindicated, therefore, they desire to live in harmony with his will and to assist in bringing about such conditions of righteousness as will make life joyous and blessed.

There is rejoicing at the manifestations of the blessings of God. Some have received particular blessings as a result of prayer and faith.

Sister Lucy Nicholls, the eldest local member, has been a sufferer for long years, but God's mercy and grace have been freely extended to her. Patience has possessed her soul.

The local priesthood are upheld by the prayers of the Saints. Elder Stephen S. Ireland, Priest Thomas M. Nicholls and Deacon Alfred Whiddeu endeavor to discharge their duties to the church in the spirit of love and faithfulness.

The hearts of the Saints go out to God in gratitude for the Restoration of the gospel and to the men of the ministry who have visited Exeter and ministered to the spiritual needs of the members. To them the people of this branch convey kind regards, adding to the aforementioned the names of Elders Abel Hall, William H. Greenwood, Daniel Sorden, Bishop Charles Fry, and Sister Richard Baldwin.

Exeter Branch is glad that a good time was enjoyed at the late General Conference, which has given the church assurance that God cares for his people. English Saints are more than pleased at the appointment of Apostle John W. Rushton to the British Isles and European Mission.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Southern Wisconsin, Greeting: Having been chosen by the Quorum of the Twelve as the one to represent the church, and serve the people of Southern Wisconsin District, I am using this means of reaching all who are readers of the Herald, and I trust that we may be able to secure your hearty cooperation in the work of the church which comes to us at this time with renewed assurance by reason of the excellent achievements of the late General Conference. Surely, under the spirit of unity that characterized the work of the conference, the church should move forward this year with a steady and even stride. I desire to be of assistance to the Saints here in building up the work of the church, and of reaching out and winning those who are desirous of having part in so noble a work as we have been entrusted with in these last days. My field address will be Evansville, Wisconsin, in care of C. C. Hoague, and my home address is 1302 West Maple, Independence, Missouri. Those desiring to get in touch with me can reach me through either address, and I will do my best to render the assistance that I am, or may be, able to give. I am sure that as we shall move out in the spirit of unity, with the goal of Christ before us, correlating our labors with the program that was so ably outlined for us at the late General Conference, we shall be able to meet with a great measure of success in our work this year. To this end I solicit your cooperation and pledge you mine. May God in his infinite wisdom give us vision and willingness to perform is my prayer.—J. E. Vanderwood.

Our Departed Ones

FICKETT.—Susan J. Weese was born September 10, 1857, at Gentryville, Missouri. On October 30, 1872, she was united in marriage to Thomas A. Mauzey. To this union nine children were born, four sons and five daughters. Six children together with her husband were called away years ago by the grim reaper. On April 29, 1883, she became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder William Lewis, at Stewartsville, Missouri. December 6, 1926, she was married to Eli Fickett who with her three children: Joseph M. Mauzey, of East Independence; Anna M. Reemer, of Kansas City, and Lida J. Duffy, of Kansas City, fourteen grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren, and many friends survive her. Her faith in the gospel continued until the summons to the land beyond came. The funeral was from her home in East Independence, the sermon by Joseph Luff. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

"What has become of the nick of time?" asked Deacon Goodentart, "all we have left is the psychological moment."

Little Leona Hartshorn, formerly of Cameron, Missouri, announced: "I want to ride on the horse. I want to ride on the horse with my face toward the end where the head isn't." Older people sometimes prefer to travel that way.

It is a splendid thing to be able to play the first violin and play it well. It is also a splendid thing to be willing to play "second fiddle" and play it well, when it is necessary to do so in the interest of the work. The inordinate ambition to play first fiddle or else break up the orchestra has ruined many an individual and wrecked many a branch of the church.

Two foot ball players engaged in a quarrel between themselves during a game when they should have been resisting the opposing team. But they were young boys who had not yet learned discipline. Two builders fought at the foot of their ladder when they should have been building the wall. But they had never made a profession of religion or learned the ways of peace. Two soldiers in battle fought each other and left the enemy free to slaughter their comrades. But they were violent men who had been taught to fight. Two Latter Day Saints who professed to follow Christ, the Apostle of Peace, love, patience, kindness, charity, engaged in a bitter quarrel between themselves and neglected, even ruined the work that had been given them to do. And that thing is something incomprehensible, a thing that I can never understand.

In this year of sacrifice it will help a lot if we decide to forego for all time the very costly luxury of personal and official quarrels.

Jews Turning to Christ

It may come as a surprise to many Christian people to know that some two hundred thousand Jewish people have turned to the Christian religion since the World War. This information is gathered from an article by W. Pascoe Goard in the National Message for May 7, 1932. These people are affiliated in the International Hebrew Christian Alliance. The author states that many of the conversions came as a result of contacts between these people and their Christian comrades in their associations on the battle fields, and as a result of a better understanding and sympathy between the groups.

Though the number of Jews affected is only a small percentage of the total number in the world, two hundred thousand is an impressive figure, and may be taken as an indication of what may later happen on a larger scale. Through centuries the Jews maintained their racial and religious integrity against the bitterest of persecution. Now they yield to brotherly love, and with a growing spirit of liberalism, the message of Jesus has a chance to appeal to them, and more of them begin to see in Him the Greatest of all the prophets. Some take this for a sign as spoken of by Jesus (Mark 13: 28, 29) that the fulfillment of yet further prophecy is near.

This is one further proof of the universality of Jesus that, after two thousand years, during which his memory was preserved and his gospel taught by strangers, those same strangers should bring Him to his own people, whom he loved and for whom he specially died.

To the Mountain Top

We are told that "Jesus is the same, yesterday, today and for ever." This being true, we have reason to believe he is ready and willing to lead us into higher planes; more wholesome altitudes where our vision of Christ might be enlarged; our faith in the cause of Zion increased. He, no doubt, desires to lead us away from the miasma of doubt and fear, from sin and its related evils such as greed, lust, and unholy ambitions, which result in suffering, sorrow and distress. Jesus desires to lift us far above all earthly things into the rightful heritage of the Saints. For this very purpose, the Son of God was manifest: lo, destroy the works of sin and to bring about Zion. This was the responsibility placed upon Christ.

If the Saints of God are to collaborate with him, as provided in the law, this then is the great objective of the church. Christ has issued a program by which this is to be brought about. No other plan can be successfully substituted. Any attempt to do otherwise is but to invite failure. The whole matter can be crystalized in the following:

"Keep my law; change not the ordinances and sacraments; Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thy self. Do this and thou shalt live."

The antithesis would follow: failing to do this death ensues and any course other than the one offered by Jesus Christ would be idolatry. The above can be gathered up in the objectives of the church which are of a dual character, and to which the church is committed: To evangelize the world through the preaching of the gospel of Christ and to bring about Zion. To this task the church must set its face and organize its forces. To the extent we face in this the work of Jesus Christ has failed as far as we are concerned. What then shall I say in representing the leading missionary quorum of the church? In answer: first, "to the law and to the testimony"; keep the commandments; have faith in God, Christ, and the cause we have espoused; if possible secure the mind of Christ; avail ourselves of the promised equipment; reconsecrate ourselves to our great task; make the necessary sacrifice so that the cause of Christ shall be lifted to the extent that the honest in heart will see our good works in consequence of which God shall be glorified.

My friends, my heart is sorely troubled these days because of the threat leveled against the wonderful missionary work in which we are engaged together. I know how splendidly the Saints have responded to the call of God and the church and of the sacrifice which has already been made by some who have had little to help with. Yet our need continues and the work of this glorious church must not fail.

The Bishop informs me that the receipts of the first four months fall $12,000 below our necessary operating expense, and $76,000 below our budget requirements for the same period. This can mean only one of two things. Either we must make this deficit up or still further retrenchment will have to be made, for we have given our pledge to the Saints that we will balance our budget.

Knowing something of the cost to the faithful Saints who have been supporting us through these difficult months, but knowing also the dread of further reduction in our missionary work I am therefore adding my personal appeal to my official request as president of the presiding missionary quorum of the church, that the Saints everywhere respond with their means in this hour of need. If there are some who have not yet heeded this call, I would especially appeal to them to loosen our hands that this wonderful work shall go forward and the sacrifices which are now being made so cheerfully by our missionary families shall not be made in vain.

This is not just another appeal for funds. It is an appeal that the Saints shall share our burden and our joy.

In order that the church shall come to its rightful estate, new spiritual depths must be sounded; forces latent and untried should be mobilized; Godly leadership made manifest in every quorum as well as every department, that the whole body shall be full of light and power. A church so in harmony with the program of life that its way indeed be a "building fitly framed together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord, a habitation of God through his Spirit," a Zion out of which "the perfection of beauty, God will shine."

(Signed) J. A. GILLEN,
President of the Quorum of Twelve.

Suggested Programs for Sacrifice Week Services

We present herewith some suggestions which may save the time of some of our busy pastors who are anxious to give careful thought to the preparation of our Sacrifice Week services. The outlines are merely suggestive, and should be so regarded. No branch president is under any obligation to follow either of them in detail, but may substitute for them either as a whole or in part, so as to better suit local spiritual needs. The services should not in any sense be mere "pep meetings" but instead should provide rich worship experiences for the Saints, remembering that although the Jews of ancient Palestine were very poor in this world's goods Pentecost produced such liberality that no one had need.

"The Bells in the Tower"

(Adapted from "Why the Chimes Rang.")

This may be read as a worship story for the sacrifice service on June 26, or may be used by a reader while the center of action of the tale is pantomimed by a group of Juniors or adult players.

There was once, in a far-away country where few people have ever traveled, a wonderful church. It stood on a high hill in the midst of a great city; and every Sunday, as well as on sacred days like Christmas, thousands of people climbed the hill to its great archways.

When you came to the building itself, you found a grand entrance leading to the main room of the church. This room was so long that one standing at the doorway could scarcely see to the other end, where the choir stood by the marble altar. In the farthest corner was the organ. Altogether, no such church as this was ever seen before, especially when it was lighted up for some festival, and crowded with people, young and old.

But the strangest thing about the whole building was the wonderful chime of bells. At one corner of the church was a big gray tower, with ivy growing over it as far up as one could see. I say as far as one could see because the tower rose so far into the sky that it was only in very fair weather that any one claimed to be able to see the top. Even then one could not be certain that it was in sight, and, as the men who built the church had been dead for hundreds of years, every one had forgotten how high the tower was supposed to be.

Now all the people knew that at the top of the tower was a chime of bells. They had hung there ever since the church had been built, and were the most beautiful bells in the world. Some thought it was because a great musician had cast them and arranged them in their place; others said it was because they were up high where the air was clearest and purest. Everyone who had ever heard the chimes said

Bearing the Cross

A READING FOR THE PROGRAM OF SUNDAY, JUNE 19

This reading was produced by Mrs. Della B. Haberlein, of Independence, in collaboration with others. It should be read, preferably from memory, by an able reader, as a part of the program given elsewhere in this issue. Dignity and beauty in the arrangement of the program will greatly enhance its effect.

"And he, bearing his cross, went forth into a place . . . which is called . . . Golgotha: where they crucified him . . ."

A simple account of so powerful a drama; yet what more pregnant words could John have spoken, "And he, bearing his cross, went forth?" No detail is needed. The picture is vivid, unforgettable.

All down the ages people have followed him, each staggering under the weight of his cross; but they have "gone forth." Weak, at times, and faltering perhaps, but step by step they have followed. Through the darkest storms that may have overtaken them; through cold, white fog which has closed down over them, one step has always been visible. That step taken, the step ahead has come into view, dimly at times, but definite enough to make a foothold possible.

In the century behind us the church has been undergoing an intensive training in cross bearing, for every decade has made its own burdensome demands. Many of these crosses have been fashioned by others, and have been laid upon us with jeers of scorn or with the carelessness of unconcern. Looking back we recognize a few of them—ridicule, hate, even death at the hands of enemies without the camp. But the heavier ones, even more back-breaking, more heart-breaking, have been shaped by our own willful hands without our realizing that we must bear them ourselves. Thus the Lord has been constrained to remind us:

"Your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written." And again:

"Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."

Today we struggle under a burden of debt. This is our cross, an ugly, rough and heavy burden; uglier, rougher and heavier because we have helped to shape it by our heedless disregard of the counsel of our Master. It is not a cross laid on us by God. It is important that we remember that. We, ourselves, stooped to it and insinuated our shoulders beneath its weight; forgetful that God in his wisdom, had counseled us otherwise.

Today, bearing our cross we must "go forth." The way is easier than it might have been because Jesus, innocent of all blame, went forth before us. And there is no other way.

We have borne other crosses. We must bear this. Prejudices have been overcome; false accusations have been lived down and inner struggle has been righted. After one year of trial such as this the Lord commended our fathers in the following words:

"The Lord is well pleased with the advancement which has been made in approaching unity during the conference year; and though there may have been differences of opinion, these differences have been held in unity of purpose and desire for the good of my people, and will result in helping to bring to pass a unity of understanding. So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory."

This present cross has been shaped by all of us. It has been constructed from our financial unwisdom and disobedience and blindness, and also from the more definitely spiritual materials, such as envy, suspicion, distrust, and want of the discipleship and fellowship which becometh Saints. It is ours—not mine, not yours—but ours. Shall we not bear it patiently, manfully?

Our present burden is the need of the church in a definite and material way. We must meet financial obligations totaling approximately $60,000 by July 1, and must then continue to raise our budget. Sacrifice week is our time of cross-bearing, but it is also our day of opportunity. Without complaint—ungrudgingly—men and women knowing our own failings as well as those of our brothers, but knowing also the benediction of the approving smile of divinity, we shall go forward—bearing the cross.

NEWS BRIEFS

Apostle J. F. Curtis to Canada

Independence misses the jovial smile and active church participation of Apostle J. F. Curtis who left Friday, May 27, for regions North. Last week-end he spent with the Minneapolis Branch. Brother Curtis's newly-assigned field, the North Central States Mission, also includes a wide swath of Canada—Manitoba, Alberta, and Saskatchewan.

Shortly after General Conference Brother Curtis underwent an operation on his foot at the Sanitarium, and for some days he walked with the aid of a cane. His general health is somewhat improved.

West Virginia Starts Month With Day of Prayer

Responding to the call of the church, Wellsburg Branch opened the month of June with a day of fasting and prayer. A baptismal service added spiritual depth and meaning to the program. Brother Ingram J. McVay is pastor of this branch.

Idaho Branches Resume Regular Services

Spring called Idaho Saints out to regular services in the various branches. During the winter distance, illness, and cold weather broke into the regularity of church services. In March and April spring rains and mumps kept attendance low, however Easter marked the turning point. And now the members find much joy in meeting together to worship and listen to the word of God.

By this time Elder John L. Sandidge, appointed to Idaho District by the General Conference, has no doubt arrived and assumed his missionary duties. He takes the place of Elder O. W. Okerlind who, in turn, is assigned to the southern Saskatchewan field.

Missionary Work Appeals to Indiana Saints

Members of the South Bend and Mishawaka Branch are gravely impressed with their missionary responsibilities now that the general church missionary force is smaller than ever before. They are hastening to do their best at filling the places of absent general workers. The pastor, Elder Forest E. Myers, preaches every Thursday evening at Elkhart, Indiana. The women are prompt to work and sacrifice. The Aaronic priesthood have ample opportunity in this branch to develop in their calling, doing much of the preaching.

It was with joy that these workers welcomed Apostle D. T. Williams' return to that territory the latter part of April.

William Patterson Bids Connecticut Mission Farewell

On May Day members of the New Haven, Connecticut, Mission assembled on the beach of the harbor and witnessed the baptism of three candidates by Elder William Patterson. This was followed by the confirmation and sacrament service at the church, basket lunch, and a talk in the afternoon. That night Brother Patterson preached his farewell sermon to the mission with which he had been closely associated for two months. It was a memorable day dominated by the spirit of harmony.

Brother Patterson was appointed by the recent General Conference to labor in the Eastern Michigan District.

New Haven Mission is a progressive, working unit of the church. The priesthood and all other members are active, and they work well together. Attendance is good. Brother Harold F. Garfield is the pastor.

Helpful Month for English Saints

May was a profitable month for Saints of Birmingham, England. On the first day Pastor Peter S. Whalley baptized four young people, and two weeks later two others were inducted into the church. A deeply spiritual sacrament service, the good news of conference, and a great variety of activities helped these Saints to interpret the gospel in terms of living and loving and doing.

Independence Begins Month of Prayer

It is with special thought of prayer and sacrifice that the church in Independence begins the month of June. Special prayer meetings of the priesthood, the groups, and the young people are opening events. Children's Day will bring a full quota of baptisms, confirmations, and blessings. After that, all Saints approach Sacrifice Week with thought of the church's needs.

Apostle G. G. Lewis Will Labor in West

A party of Independence friends accompanied Apostle G. G. Lewis to the Union Station in Kansas City, Wednesday night, June 1, to say good-bye and wish him bon voyage. He took a midnight train bound for Los Angeles, California. California will be his field of labor until his sailing date which has been postponed until the early part of August.

Brother Lewis does not plan to return to Independence before he sails for his Australasian Mission. Sister Lewis and little Alice June will join him in California in July, also his fellow missionary, Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

Our Task

IV.—A Worthy Ministry

By Ward A. Hougas

Ministers—thousands of them—have come and gone, or still are, since the church was organized a century ago. What effect have they had upon the world? Has the world been changed because of their having been here?

If one attempts to answer these questions there immediately arises one outstanding fact. Worthy ministers have had an effect upon the world. The world has been changed because of their having lived.

Another undisputable fact presents itself also. Many men, designated as ministers or members of the priesthood, have been ordained who apparently have had little or no effect upon the world or on any small portion of it. Further consideration of the reason for this difference indicates that the difference lies in the members of that ministry.

"Tarry ye, and labor diligently, that you may be perfected in your ministry," declared the Lord in 1832. A worthy ministry was one of the dreams of Deity at that time—and still is.

The Desire to Serve

A worthy ministry can be composed only of worthy ministers who by virtue of their worthiness labor together at the task of the kingdom. A discussion of the subject must of necessity consider the various qualifications of worthy ministers.

"Called of God as was Aaron" marks only the beginning of a worthy ministry. There must be that deep-seated personal conviction of having been called. This conviction will find expression in a real desire to serve. Many men in the priesthood today apparently lack any desire to labor. At least that desire is not strong enough to force them into action. Without this desire, ability, training, divine call and everything else loses its value. A recent monthly priesthood report from one Stake revealed the astonishing fact that out of one hundred and fifty members of the priesthood only a little over eighty were at all active in their calling. Many of these were far from laboring to the full extent of their capacity. Yet they were "called of God as was Aaron." Their desire, if they ever had one, is dead. Whose fault is it? We don't know, nevertheless they are inactive, therefore unworthy.

Personal Appearance

Personal appearance may not be listed among the proverbial keys to heaven but it remains a very important factor in the success of a man's ministry. It is neither needful nor desirable that a minister be a conspicuous dresser. The matter of personal appearance, however, is often quite indicative of the attitude of the minister to his entire responsibility. The minister who will go without his necktie or wear his work clothing when presiding in the pulpit is quite apt to be found conducting his sacrament service without that careful preparation so necessary for such a sacred ordinance. That same minister is apt to attempt to preach a sermon which is but partially dressed also.

It is not a matter of the cost of the clothing; it is more a matter of the cost of slovenly dressing and unshaven faces in terms of self-respect in the minister himself. The discouraging effect on the congregation is secondary.

Find a branch presided over by men who feel that "it makes no difference, they all know each other," and you almost always will find a branch which has become careless in the handling of the ordinances, and other things. This invariably places the entire church in the wrong light in that particular community.

No minister can function worthily without a sense of self-respect and a consciousness that he does possess at least enough power and ability to take his place in the world of men and maintain it.

Self-respect, personal power, individuality and such attributes are closely related to personal appearance and generally can be quite accurately measured thereby.

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," certainly has a broader meaning than that found in the Saturday night activities and the daily toilet.

Ability and Training

The question of ability can not be ignored. God never made a peach out of a pumpkin. Natural ability must govern and determine to quite an extent the particular manner in which a worthy minister is to function. Some men can't preach. It makes no difference if section seventeen of the Doctrine and Covenants does recite that it is his duty to "preach, teach, expound, exhort." He may be qualified to become an outstanding teacher and yet prove very mediocre as a pulpiter. If he is a worthy minister he will attempt to determine in which line his natural abilities lie and then set himself to the task of making his major development in that line. Many good preachers are very poor executives and vice versa. Fortunate indeed is the man who is good at both.

A mere desire combined with some ability does not complete a worthy minister. He must be trained. Now, say some, here comes a demand for a college training before ordination. You are wrong; yet it is a demand for training. History tells us of one great man who trained himself in the art of public speaking by filling his mouth full of pebbles in order to overcome a habit he had formed. Another, or maybe it was the same lad, hung a sword point down over his shoulder so as to make himself quit shrugging his shoulders as he spoke.

It may be necessary for some men to set mouse traps in their pockets so that they will keep their hands out and provide against other such habits. Whatever is needed the worthy minister sets himself to the task of training his life in that regard.

Academic training perhaps brings such development in its most concentrated form yet is not a cure-all for all weaknesses on the part of growing ministers. The matter of reading material, social growth, personal appearance and many other things each have a part in the great training process.

Spiritual Background

There must be found in the life of each worthy minister a spiritual background. By that we mean that there must have come into his life the operation of those spiritual influences which mellow his ways of thinking and doing. Maybe his being "called of God as was Aaron" was the beginning of this spiritual background although in most instances it dates back much further. In many lives this background had its beginning in early childhood. One of the promises of Christ was that if we would but do his will we should "know."

This spiritual background is something which is added to daily by those who are worthy ministers. With it all things are made possible, a man's ministry becomes a joy and his labors produce a sense of satisfaction. Without it, priesthood labor may prove to be a hard task, consuming time that might be enjoyed elsewhere.

"He made a wonderful start but—" But what? He stopped shortly after he started. Of the several hundred men who are ordained to the priesthood each year how many continue to grow with their responsibilities? A lot of good men die spiritually and mentally waiting for the Lord to develop them. Spiritual rains and aids to mental development are supplied in as satisfying quantities as are the ordinary rains and sunshine, but it's up to the minister to do the growing.

The Means of Growth

The worthy minister reads, studies, observes, listens, thinks and does everything else that he can to develop himself. Many men of the priesthood today are reading practically nothing that has any value. Many do not even read the church literature to say nothing of other good books and periodicals. Such men do not grow. Growth is impossible without new ideas and new thoughts. The preaching efforts of such men get stale. One knows what the sermon will be before they start. Their executive methods become antiquated and fail in their purpose. Their leadership becomes inadequate and their influence fades away. Why? Because they are not willing to pay the price of growing with their job.

The best pastor in the church today will fail next year unless he grows in proportion to his task. The worthy minister today keeps abreast of the times mentally and physically.

He had just as well revert to his shiny celluloid collar and abandon his necktie and hope for success today as to hope for success and be unwilling to keep his mind tuned up to the challenges of the age of which he is a part.

Total of Personal Powers

Even with all of these attributes the modern minister may prove to be of little or no value to the church unless he is willing to cooperate with the other members of the ministry. Individualists can live for a day but it requires cooperators of the highest type to redeem Zion.

God's power can not be increased but man's portion may. The power of the worthy ministry depends in the main on the quality of their worthiness. The authority of the priesthood finds expression in the Divine call. It finds its equivalent in the authority of life as expressed in a minister's worthiness.

With that divine call must go a desire, ability, training, spiritual background, a willingness to pay the price of growth, a willingness to cooperate and above all a deep-seated conviction that the task to which he has been called is truly worth while.

With the definite objectives set out by the recent General Conference standing out in bold relief—with the wave of faith, confidence and good will which has been manifested in the assemblies still very much in evidence—the challenge to the ministry of the church is to become a worthy ministry "called of God as was Aaron" and qualified in life as have been the major figures in Christian leadership in all ages.

Zion

By J. H. Yager

The term "Zion" had its origin in Old Testament times. The Bible, however, is practically silent on the question of Zion. It is therefore supposed by many Bible students that the term "Zion" was at first only a name of one of the hills within the city, Jerusalem, but that later because, as it is supposed, the hill, Zion, became the resting place of the "Ark of the Covenant," it was known as the "Sacred Hill." In course of time the term "Zion," with its sacred meaning, was applied to the whole city. Each reader is at liberty to form his own opinion of that theory. We do read, however, in the "Prophecy of Enoch," (Doctrine and Covenants 36:2) that about the year 3300 B. C., Enoch, a prophet of God, developed a righteous group of people in a certain city that he called Zion. The same revelation, however, states that that city was taken up into heaven. That may account for the fact that for many years Zion was only one of the hills within Jerusalem. This much we do know for a truth: Jerusalem was, to the Jews, in Bible times, "Zion," and it is still Zion to them.

Zion of the Jews

The Zion of the Jews, so far as we have any record, included only the territory within the walls of the city, Jerusalem, and even to this day, notwithstanding the Jews have been scattered to every part of Europe and Asia and even to every country in the world, their Zion remains as of old—within the city Jerusalem.

The Jew's Zion was both a place and a condition, but even after it had lost its identity as a condition it continued to be their "Zion," the City of God. Jerusalem's having so long continued a Zion to the Jews proves it as a place. We can easily suppose that the place is the first consideration even if it is argued that the condition is the prime object; for, even though holiness has at different times lapsed in Jerusalem, the place has ever remained the same. Jerusalem has been for many generations the "Holy City" and the Jews have never ceased to dream of a gathering to their Zion.

Zion of the Restoration

From almost the very beginning of the restoration of the gospel, in 1830, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, a place was designated, by revelation, in the very heart of North America, to be a Zion for God's covenant people of latter days. The place was not only designated (See Doctrine and Covenants 57:1) but specific command was also given to assemble in Zion and to build up a Holy City. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83:1.)

We have been repeatedly told through revelation that Zion is the pure in heart and I admit that to be the truth and that it ought to apply to all of God's people in all the world; yet it can not be said consistently with the revelations, that Zion, as a place, includes the whole world, or even all of the United States, nor yet all of the State of Missouri. In this connection we will consider several of the revelations that point out the exact place for the building up of Zion, the New Jerusalem.

Kirtland a Temporary Gathering Place

Kirtland, Ohio, was first appointed for a temporary gathering place for the Saints while they waited for God to speak making known the place to establish Zion. We read in the Doctrines and Covenants 51:4, in the year 1831: "And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws; and I consecrate unto them this land for a little season, until I, the Lord shall provide for them otherwise, and command them to go hence; and the hour and the day is not given unto them; wherefore let them act upon this land as for years, and this shall turn unto them for their good."

God to Select Place for Zion

February 9, 1831, God, through revelation, said: "Thou shalt ask, and it shall be revealed unto you in my own due time, where the New Jerusalem shall be built." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:17.) As early as September 30, 1830, however, the Lord had revealed that the city would be built on the border of the Lamanites' (Indians') lands. (Then about the western boundary of the State of Missouri.) "And now, behold, I say unto you, that it is not revealed, and no man knoweth where the City shall be built, but it shall be given hereafter. Behold, I say unto you that it shall be on the borders by the Lamanites." (Doctrine and Covenants 27:3.)

God Reveals the Location of Zion

July 19, 1831, the Lord revealed the exact spot for the City and called it "Zion." "Hearken, O ye elders of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the Saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the courthouse; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the Saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance." (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.) Again the Lord spoke September 22, 23, 1832, giving almost the same description of the place for Zion as was given in the year 1831. "A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant Joseph Smith, jr., and six elders, as they united their hearts and lifted their voices on high; yea, the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouth of his prophets, and for the gathering of his Saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city, New Jerusalem; which city shall be built, beginning at the temple lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, jr., and others, with whom the Lord was well pleased." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1.)

Sidney Rigdon Consecrates Land

The Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 58: 13, ordered that Sidney Rigdon consecrate and dedicate the land of Zion: "And let my servant, Sidney Rigdon, consecrate and dedicate this land [Missouri, see Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1] and the spot for the temple [west of the courthouse, see Doctrine and Covenants 81: 1] unto the Lord."

Gathering and Dispersion

A consistent gathering began almost immediately (1831), lands were bought, and the city, New Jerusalem, was started as had been commanded, at the Temple Lot. As the gathering progressed the neighbors, who were not members of the church, for various reasons that we will not take the time to discuss here, became dissatisfied and started a persecution of the Saints that finally ended with driving the Saints from the city and later, from the State of Missouri, and yet the Saints held to their belief that Independence was Zion, the New Jerusalem, and that the city would yet be built.

Zion Not Moved Out of Her Place

"Zion will not be moved out of her place," were the words of assurance and comfort that came to the Saints about the time that they were being driven from Independence. In August, 1833, the above plain statement concerning the permanence of Zion as a place was given by revelation, (Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5), "And now, behold, if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, Surely Zion is the City of our God; and surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, . . ." Again in December, 1833, when conditions were very dark for the Saints, another revelation even more conclusive than the first was received by the church. Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4 says:

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, . . . to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.

A strong confirmation of the above two promises was given in another revelation, Doctrine and Covenants 100: 3: "But verily I say unto you, I have decreed that your brethren, which have been scattered, shall return to the land of their inheritances and build up the waste places of Zion."

Conclusion

The revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants are very specific in locating Zion at Independence, Missouri, and in declaring her permanence. In conclusion, I therefore offer the following very important observations:

1. The Zion of the Jews, notwithstanding the city was completely destroyed and the Jews scattered into all the world, has ever remained within the city, Jerusalem.

2. The new Zion of the Restoration is not all of North America, neither all of the United States, for, when the Saints were residing at Kirtland, Ohio, they were told that their abode there would be a temporary one until the Lord would command them to go hence. (See Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4.) Kirtland is about six hundred miles from Independence, Missouri, the place that was later designated as Zion.

3. The city of Zion is Independence, Missouri, for, after the Saints were driven from Jackson County into Clay County, the Lord said that they and their children would yet return to Zion to build up its waste places. Even Clay County adjoining Jackson County, another part of the State of Missouri, is not called Zion in the revelation. The State of Missouri is, however, referred to as a "Land of Promise" (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1) and provisions were made in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4 for enlarging the borders of Zion when all of the available space within the city had been occupied. That new territory, however, is to be known as stakes to

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

It is of the highest importance that members of the church should be united in a great bond of sympathy with each other in a circle held together by prayer; and that this spirit of prayer should not be for themselves alone, but for all Christian peoples, and ultimately for the whole world.

Prayer is the contemplation of the facts of life from the highest point of view. It is the soliloquy of a beholding and jubilant soul.—Emerson.

Grace at Mealtime

Not long ago a young woman, recently married, wrote that she and her husband were planning to start their home life in the right way, with the proper religious activities as a part of their daily experience. Nothing could be finer than this, and no plan could be more auspicious of a happy, successful, and beautiful home. Certainly it is encouraging to know that young people are making plans these days for such a quality of home life.

She wrote that her husband had requested her to take her regular turn in asking the blessing for the meals, that she felt that she did not know enough about it, and was very timid about trying. She asked for suggestions, and for some examples of prayers to be offered. Special conditions existed for her needing this help.

The prayer of grace should not be long. If some special circumstances require it, an exception can be made. But grace should not be habitually long, strengthen Zion and therefore, would be bordering on Zion or one of her Stakes.

4. The pure in heart and their children will return and build up the waste places of Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.) Following the dispersion of the Saints from Zion and the murder of their leader, Joseph Smith, many aspiring men attempted leadership; each taking with him a part of the membership. These aspiring leaders, however, either soon failed as leaders or plunged their followers into gross evils; nevertheless, "they that remain and are pure in heart will return to build up the waste places of Zion." Many of the Saints who rejected those aspiring and wicked leaders banded together to better teach the truth and retain their purity of heart and about 1851 or 1852 their work began to crystallize into what later became a reorganization of the broken and scattered forces of the church, and under the leadership of Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, they returned to build up the "waste places of Zion."

particularly if it tends to be the same prayer each time. I knew a man who prided himself on the fact that he did not believe in written or memorized prayer. And yet he always said exactly the same long and tedious prayer at mealtime. Worse still, it was filled with outworn platitudinous phrases, uttered in an arid singsong voice that carried no feeling of real conviction or spiritual power. If he had to have a ritual prayer, which was exactly what his was, he would have done better to make it a short and beautiful one.

Prayer that is the spontaneous expression of reverence and gratitude is prayer at its best. But one finds it difficult to lift his heart into his mouth three times a day over so prosaic an item as food. At the very best, the prayer of grace is in danger of becoming perfunctory, but one should avoid the perfunctory prayer. Better no prayer at all than the rapidly mumbled and meaningless jargon that so many times passes for prayer at the table.

Each prayer of grace should have some form of content: thanks for divine favor and for the food; and a petition for blessing. Modesty and humility should characterize this as it should all kinds of prayer.

Following are the examples:

Father in Heaven: We thank thee for our home, and for all the physical comforts thou hast so liberally given us. We thank thee for the happiness we share, and for thine abounding love. We thank thee that we may gather once more around this table, spread with the food which is to sustain our lives. Bless it to our use and give us strength for the performance of our tasks whatever they may be. Teach us with thy holy spirit, protect us with thy power, beautify our lives with thy grace, give us kindly and unselfish hearts, and surround us with thy love. We ask these blessings in Jesus' name. Amen.

Father in Heaven: We thank thee for this food, and pray that thou wilt bless it to our use, that our bodies may be given strength. Give us health and wisdom, preserve us against evil and disaster, guide us in the ways of righteousness and peace, teach us to help in the building of thy kingdom. In Jesus' name we ask these blessings. Amen.

These should serve only as examples, not as prayers to be memorized. L. L.

To argue that we can believe what we please and join any church we choose and obtain salvation, not only discounts the "word of God," but introduces successful competition in regard to the salvation of mankind, which work the Bible most emphatically teaches is exclusively the mission and work of Jesus Christ our Lord.—John W. Rushton, in "The Apostasy and the Restoration."

What is lost that God confers only he can restore.—Paul M. Hanson, in "The Apostolic Office."

A Big Man of a Small City

By D. T. Williams

WILLIS SCHROCK

"When one member is honored all members rejoice with it." Such was the philosophy of Paul. So, too, we are certain that the church will be glad to read the splendid tribute paid to one of our faithful members by those who look upon his work with a deep feeling of appreciation.

Elder Willis Schrock has been the pastor of the Beaverton, Michigan, Branch for a number of years. He is recognized in his home town as a man of sterling integrity whose word is as good as his bond. He has a following and a friendship among the young people of Beaverton which finds its foundations in his fine spirit of congeniality.

We present the following splendid statement from The Future Farmer, a paper published in the interest of the Beaverton Agricultural School. We congratulate the editors on their ability to summarize so briefly and yet so far-reachingly the life of a man whom we hold as a close friend and coworker.

Every school has a janitor, but not every school has a Willis Schrock. "What do you teach?" said a visitor of the Beaverton Rural Agricultural school, to a jolly faced, white haired man about fifty years old. "Oh!" laughed the man, as he continued his task of carrying two buckets of water, to the third floor. "I am just the janitor." A look of astonishment came over the face of the visitor as he journeyed on to the superintendent's office and inquired as to the truthfulness of the story. The story was in part confirmed by the superintendent. The visitor was informed that Willis was a janitor, but not just a janitor.

Turning back the pages of history we learn that Mr. Schrock has been in or near Beaverton for 21 years. He moved here from Ohio where he had lived for 27 years.

Due to the fact of his musical genius, he organized an orchestra six years ago. At the present date its membership has climbed to eighteen. The famous "Beaverton Band" that is known all over Michigan, can look back a very few years and trace the greater part of the success of its younger years to Willis. Seldom has this band ever assembled when Willis hasn't filled his place with the big horn.

Willis not only holds his place with musical instruments, but he makes several appearances each year as a singer. He has his "Boom Boom" song that brings delight to the smallest child, and his religious selections that console those that are mourning the deaths of the community.

Sunday morning Willis doffs his overalls and fills his place as a pastor in the largest church in the city.

Willis has also reared a family. Miss Grace Schrock, who is graduating with honors from Hurley Hospital in Flint, this May; Kenneth Schrock, who is a student of the graduation class here this year, and Irene Schrock, who is completing her freshman year in the Beaverton Rural Agricultural School.

Having a job that starts at five o'clock in the morning and usually ends after six o'clock in the evening, has its disadvantages, says Willis, but being with the children and having the cooperation of the teachers adds something to the work that can't be valued.

Fulfilment of Prophecy

By A. M. Chase

PART THREE

I will not take time or space just here to do what so often and ably has been done by others of our writers, except to say briefly that almost every fact of history as given in the Book of Mormon has been verified and supplemented by the study of the traditions and customs of the native races of America. Just a few examples of this:

a. The Book of Mormon tells us that the earliest inhabitants of America came from the Tower of Babel, or, more properly speaking, from Babel, when the Lord confused the language there and, as Genesis 11 tells us, "From thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth." In confirmation of this fact of history Bancroft tells us: "It is found in the history of the Toltecs . . . that man and all the earth were destroyed by great showers and by lightnings from heaven, so that nothing remained, and the most lofty mountains were covered up and submerged to the depth of a caxtolmoletlli, or fifteen cubits; and here they add other fables of how men came to multiply again from the few who escaped destruction in toptlipetlacali, which word very nearly signifies a closed chest; and how, after multiplying, the men built a zacuali of great height, and by this is meant a very high tower, in which to take refuge when the world should be a second time destroyed. After this their tongue became confused, and, not understanding each other, they went to different parts of the world." (Quoted from The Book of Mormon Verified, by A. B. Phillips, pages 3, 4.)

b. The Book of Mormon tells us that the earliest inhabitants of America had practically all the domestic animals known to us today.

When a lad in school, my geography stated that the horse was unknown to America until brought here by the Spaniards. On this point A. B. Phillips, in The Book of Mormon Verified, quotes from The History of America, by William Robertson, Historiographer to His Majesty for Scotland, published in 1790, page 31, as follows: "The camel, the dromedary, the horse, the cow were as much unknown in America as the elephant and the lion." In contrast with this, and in harmony with the Book of Mormon he cites Dana's Manual of Geology, published in 1880, page 571, as follows: "Viewing the globe as a whole, in this Quaternary era, we observe: 1. The gigantic size as well as the large numbers of the species, the elephants, lions, bears, and hyenas of the Orient far larger than the modern kinds, so also the horse, elephant, mastodon, beavers and lions of America." (Book of Mormon Verified, page 7.) And in harmony with the statement of the Book of Mormon that the elephants, with other large animals were useful to man, (Book of Mormon, Authorized Edition, page 737,) A. B. Phillips quotes from Larkin's Ancient Man in America, published in 1880, page 19, as follows: "My theory that the prehistoric races used to some extent the great American elephant, or mastodon, I believe is new, and no doubt will be considered visionary by many readers, and more especially by the prominent archaeologists. Finding the form of an elephant engraved upon a copper relic some six inches long and four inches wide, in a mound on the Red Horse Creek, in the year 1854, and represented in harness with a sort of breast collar with tugs reaching past the hips, first led me to adopt the theory." (Book of Mormon Verified, quoted from American Archaeology, page 75.)

The Book of Mormon tells us that the second great era of civilization and re-peopling of America came from a colony that came out from Jerusalem about 600 B. C., bringing a knowledge of the skill and learning of, not only Israel, but of Egypt. I will not cite or quote in evidence of this "fact," but will say that the ruins of Central and South America bear eloquent evidence of Egyptian influence in the architecture, while the early Spaniards who conquered and wrought havoc in Mexico and Peru were astonished to find the aborigines not only with a civilization surpassing that which they came to implant, but with the whole story of the Bible, lacking only the names of God and Christ. They found them practicing almost every Jewish rite, and worshiping the cross, and, more significant than this, looking forward to a Messiah to come, who would be a bearded white man; and telling in their legends of a former visit of this divine personage, who taught them the art of living together in peace, and who went away without dying, with the promise that he would come again.

But I pass on to what is to me a still more striking fulfillment of the prophetic word as found in Isaiah and the Book of Mormon, and pointing us to the time of the fulfillment of the Master's statements as found in Matthew 24. In the declaration of the Master as recorded in Luke 21: 24, "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled," is a tacit promise that when "the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled," then shall Jerusalem again be reinstated in the national home of that people. Nor is this all—the Inspired Translation reads in Matthew 24: 33, "And again shall the abomination of desolation spoken by Daniel be fulfilled," thus forecasting, not only the regathering of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their loved city, but of another time of war and stress with concomitant sufferings, out of which will come a Zion where, "every one that is written among the living" shall be called holy, "When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning." (See Isaiah 4th chapter.)

Nor is this all of the Old Testament writers who promise ultimate peace and rest unto the Jews—rest in their own land and under the favor and care of "The Holy one of Jacob, the God of Israel." Let us martial these witnesses, for, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established."

Jeremiah, in chapter 33, bears joyful tidings of hope. Read the entire chapter. I will quote only a small portion of it here: "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel to the houses of this city, and to the houses of the king of Judah . . . Behold I will close their wounds and give them health, and I will cure them: and I will reveal unto them the prayer of peace and truth. And I will bring back the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Jerusalem: and I will build them as from the beginning, and I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me, and despised me." (Verses 4, 6-8, Douay version.) And Jeremiah closes with the assurance that this covenant or promise is as sure as the Lord's covenant with day and night.

And yet the wise and prudent men of the Christian world—those men who claim the sole right to interpret the Scriptures—gravely tell us that "This promise relates to the Christian priesthood," etc. (See footnote on chapter 33, Douay version, published and copyrighted, 1914, by John Murphey.)

But let us try again: Ezekiel, 36 and 37, bears wonderful tidings for Israel, and not only for Israel as a nation, but for Judah as well. I will quote but little from this message of hope, but trust that my readers will read the two chapters.

I will take you from among the Gentiles, and will gather you together out of all the countries, and will bring you into your own land, and I will pour upon you clean water, and you shall be cleansed from all your filthiness, and I will cleanse you from all your idols. And I will give you a new heart, and put a new spirit within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh and I will put my spirit in the midst of you: and I will cause you to walk in my commandments, and to keep my judgments, and do them. And you shall dwell in the land which I gave unto your fathers, and you shall be my people, and I will be your God. (Chapter 36: 24-28.)

And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold I will take the children of Israel from the midst of the nations whither they are gone; and I will gather them on every side, and will bring them into their own land. And I will make them one nation in the land on the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be king over them all: and they shall no more be two nations, neither shall they be divided any more into two kingdoms. Etc., etc. . . . (37: 21, 22.)

Now please read the footnote under chapter 36: "This whole promise principally relates to the church of Christ, and God's perpetual protection of her: for as to the carnal Jews, they have been removed out of their land these sixteen hundred years."

And now, just one more witness: Amos (9: 8-14) also comes bringing a message of hope, declaring:

I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, as corn is sifted in a sieve: and there shall not a little stone fall to the ground. All the sinners of my people shall fall by the sword, who say: The evils shall not approach, and shall not come upon us.

In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David, that is fallen: and I will close up the breaches of the walls thereof, and repair what was fallen: and I will rebuild it as in the days of old. . . .

Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed: and the mountains shall drop sweetness, and every hill shall be tilled, and I will bring back the captivity of my people Israel: and they shall build the abandoned cities, and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine of them: and shall make gardens, and eat the fruits of them. And I will plant them upon their own land: and I will no more pluck them out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.

And by this, we are gravely told by these wise men of the great Catholic church, "Is meant the great abundance of spiritual blessings, which, as it were, by a constant succession, shall enrich the church of Christ."

Is it any wonder, when this church nullifies and denies almost every promise made to the people of Israel by the prophets of old, that they were compelled to resort to the horrors of the inquisition to convert, even nominally, any of the Jews to an acceptance of the Christ they preached? And when we recall the fact that the Protestant churches also held the same belief at the beginning of the nineteenth century, surely there was great need for this Book of Mormon—these Scriptures of the western hemisphere, with its reaffirming of, and confirming the truth of every promise made to both Jew and Gentile? In the preface to this "Stick of Joseph," this is one of the avowed objects of this work: "To show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done to their fathers: and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever: and also to the convincing of Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

In the face of this attitude of not only the great Catholic, but the Protestant churches as well, it surely required a depth of conviction, or an assurance from the Holy Spirit to move the writer of the Book of Mormon, (if this writer was one who lived and wrote in the nineteenth century), to declare that when this book was given to the Gentiles, "It shall come to pass that my people which are of the house of Israel, shall be gathered home unto the lands of their possessions; and my word shall be gathered in one. . . . And, . . . the Lord God shall commence his work, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth."

If the promises to Israel include an awakening to, and an acceptance of the truths of the gospel of Christ, then surely there was (and is) need for the message of the Book of Mormon, that the truth of the Bible may be established both for Jew and Gentile, and that the plain and precious things which have been taken away therefrom by these teachings of these "Wise and Prudent" teachers of the Scriptures—taken away much more effectually by their tradition and interpretation of the Scriptures than could be by omitting the prophet's message entire—may be made known to both Jew and Gentile.

Nor was it only in the denial of the truth of these promises of the regathering and rehabilitation of the Jews that the Scriptures were made of none effect, but in the teaching that the gospel of today was not "accompanied by the ancient order of things," that made the necessity for this "marvelous work and a wonder" to come forth, just a little while before "Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest."

Tuberculosis.—2

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

There is some difference between human, bovine and avian tuberculosis and there is a striking similarity in the tubercle bacilli. Man's type of tubercle bacilli is much more virulent than that of cattle, rabbits, monkeys and other animals. It is a strange fact that the bovine type is very dangerous to all animals, except man, and while it is pathogenic for man, it is much less dangerous than the human type. When the tubercle bacilli are injected into one of the lower animals, only local lesion is produced. If the bovine tubercle bacilli are injected into an adult rabbit, general tuberculosis is the result, in about six weeks. But if the human form are injected into the full-grown rabbit, there is only a slight localized tuberculosis.

The difference between the bovine and the human bacillus may depend entirely upon the relative virulence of the strength as there has been found no specific differences between the tubercular germ of the human or that of the bovine variety. The avian tuberculosis is found in pheasants, pigeons, and more frequently, in chickens. Strange as it may appear, geese and ducks are considered immune. Chickens and pigeons are easily infected by the food, and it is probable that this variety of tuberculosis is in this way generally transmitted.

Tuberculosis is found in cold-blooded animals but is not pathogenic in warm-blooded animals. Fried- man's vaccine was exploited as a cure for tuberculosis. The fake vaccine was obtained from the turtle. Bovine tuberculosis, being transferred to man, has been greatly exaggerated, but nevertheless, it is a fact that man may contract tuberculosis from bovine sources, but it is rarely fatal after the fifth year, and causes only about five tenths per cent of all the deaths. Bovine tuberculosis, in man, usually attacks the bone, or lymph glands and is usually transmitted through the tonsils or small intestines. The meningitis and abdominal forms are particularly fatal. Children seem to be more susceptible to this form and it has been estimated that from one fourth to one third of all cases under five years of age are of the bovine type. Meat is not so dangerous, if well cooked. Therefore, research workers have concluded that nearly all cases of tuberculosis are of the ingested variety obtained from milk or fresh milk products. Their entrance into the system is facilitated by diseases of the teeth, tonsils, and the mucous membranes of the digestive tract, etc.

Autopsies have revealed that butchers, as the result of wounds obtained while butchering meat; are more or less susceptible to the bovine bacillus. The principal source of tuberculosis is man himself. Any open tuberculosis lesion whatever may be transferred to man but, the principal method of transmission is from the sputum. In many cases, the sputum is swallowed and the germs pass into the feces or may come from the genito-urinary tract, or the skin. In the majority of cases, the lungs are the source of the greatest danger. It is still undetermined whether or not the inhalation or ingestion is the means of transmission, but it is conceded by every one who has made these investigations that the tonsils and the upper respiratory passages are the chief sources of entrance and transmission. These germs may be carried in the air, yet it is well known that the organisms soon die when exposed to the sun and the air, but it is quite different with house dust, for tubercular sputum will keep the bacilli alive a long time in dark and moist places. Many experiments have been conducted to determine whether or not dusty atmosphere is a carrier of this disease, but anyone who has made a study of the subject must conclude that the danger from this source is small because of the tenacious, gummy, and glue-like consistency of the sputum, which is pulverized with great difficulty.

Cornet found the live germs of tuberculosis in the dust in rooms where these classes of patients were careless with their sputum. By sweeping a carpet with a stiff broom and exposing guinea pigs to the dust, he was able to produce tuberculosis in forty-seven out of forty-eight of the animals. Tuberculosis has been found to be disseminating in the atmosphere due to soiled linen, handkerchiefs, and the like; and from this source, fresh virulent material is carried on the hands to the mouth. Babies, before learning to walk, and children at play are especially exposed to dusty carpets infected with tubercular germs, the result may not show any evidence in the child until nearly adulthood. It remained for Flugge to call special attention to the danger from coughing, sneezing, or speaking, or any violent expiratory efforts. His experiments showed that the air became impregnated by the fluids of the mouth and nose being sprayed into the air in the form of a fine mist, also that other serious disease germs may be transmitted in this manner. Those, who are most likely to get the infection, are people who are associated in poorly ventilated rooms, especially if the patient is ignorant and careless about his coughing and sneezing. I have known one whole family to be stricken in this manner. I recall a family of six who died from tubercular infection of the lungs, except one, and his infection attacked the large toe of his left foot and amputation of the leg, above the knee, was necessary; then, two or three years later the infection started under the thumb of one of his hands and it became necessary to amputate the arm near the shoulder. The next attack, two or three years later was intestinal, which proved fatal.

According to the latest investigations, the mouth, nose, diseased teeth and tonsils is one of the greatest sources of infection and transmission. In fact, much more so than we are inclined, sometimes, to believe.

Autobiography

XIX.—DES MOINES DISTRICT IN 1904

By James Franklin Mintun

During this year the author was assistant missionary in charge of the Des Moines District. He chronicles many events of his ministry such as occur in the routine of work in the mission field, expounding the gospel, laboring with individuals, and defending the church.

On the twenty-eighth of March I attended the funeral service of my father, Jacob Mintun, who had died previous to my being privileged to visit him in his last sickness. He died on March 23 at the age of seventy-five years, nine months and twenty-five days, without having obeyed the gospel, although he had heard it since 1852. He confessed many times that he believed the doctrines of the church, and showed nothing but favor towards the church since 1862 when my mother became a member. This made the event of his death very sad to me. He said that there were some things that he could not overcome, but expected to become a member before his death. He was at heart a social and hospitable man, made a home for the ministry and assisted them financially what he could, and helped to provide places for them to preach. He not only attended the services, but so far as he could provided a way for his family to attend, and encouraged them to go with him.

I started for the General Conference at Kirtland, Ohio, March 31, finding a country of mud, and it continued to be very muddy till at the close of conference, so much so that I walked to Willoughby, the first station on the railroad, when I started for my home. I was assigned a lodging place at Sister Russel's and to take meals at the hotel. . . .

As city missionary of Des Moines, to which I had been appointed at the last conference, I chose to make my home with some of the families of the Saints. It had been decided and proposed to me that the Saints rent a room down in the city, and pay for my meals at a restaurant, but to this I could not consent. I began to make my home with the family of Brother Thomas P. Cook on May 30. I occupied one of their rooms, and took meals with the family. At that time Brother Cook had two little girls, and at times they would come to my room and visit with me, and this assisted to keep me from loneliness and homesickness. They are remembered for their pleasant, cheerful disposition, and what they brought to me by their presence. . . .

It was at Des Moines that I became acquainted with Brother J. R. Epperson and family. Since that time we have labored much together, both there and in Council Bluffs, to which place we both moved later.

In Des Moines I began to distribute the literature of the church, using the tract boxes in the depots, both of the street cars and the railway cars, and in that way many hundreds of our literature fell into the hands of many.

I was acquainted with Mr. J. H. Mather, then general auditor of the C. & R. I. Railroad, who had married a sister in the church, Sister Minnie Bullard of Persia, who was one of God's noble men, an honorable man of the earth, in the fullest sense of the term, who rendered me much social and material assistance in carrying out my work in the church. Another man who was a great assistance to me was Mr. B. N. Waller, who also married a sister in the church, Sister Kate Halliday, formerly from Lelands Grove, near Persia. I can say that I never requested from these men any assistance in any direction but what they responded, except becoming members of the church, neither of which did.

During the month of June, I received a letter from Brother Eli Hayer relative to the work of one N. A. Baker, who once was in the Des Moines District, and did work as an elder, but had been silenced for unministerial conduct. He was now doing religious work in South Dakota in the name of the church, and misrepresenting the faith of the church, seeking to build up a religious work to himself. It was necessary for me to find the old records, from which I copied, and also secured the court records and a copy of the procedure in a divorce between himself and wife, and sent them to Brother Hayer at Fergus Falls, Minnesota. This caused Mr. N. A. Baker to move his whereabouts, and the work he had done was lost, leaving the people disappointed and disgusted with religion. . . .

The question of uniting the Sunday school and Religious work under one head was being considered, and I was requested by T. A. Hougas to give my ideas in the matter. I wrote him my views and reasons for favoring a union of the two organizations.

An effort was begun to organize a reunion association, for the Des Moines District, and I wrote out a petition for names of members out of which to form such association, each member to pay a small sum for membership yearly, and in this way provide for the expenses, and not wait to raise the expenses after meeting at the reunion while in session.

In my work as city missionary I counseled frequently with the branch president and with the branch officials, and by this means a perfect agreement in our work was maintained.

On the tenth of July I returned to Des Moines and was called at once to Frazer to administer to a babe that had been sick with lung fever for forty days and was very low. I administered and there came to me evidence that the babe would live, and it did. On my return to Des Moines I called on several of the Saints of Boone, and gave them a word of cheer.

At this time Brother Wardell Christy was laboring at or near Marshalltown, and he sent me a challenge which he had received from Mr. W. G. Roberts, of the Nonprogressive Christian Church, and on July 25 I received a letter from Mr. Roberts, about the debate, he deciding it was to be held in Marshalltown.

The time for the debate to be held at Marshalltown, Iowa, with W. G. Roberts was fixed for August 20, and I was busy gathering evidence to defend the church in an effectual way.

I began the debate with W. G. Roberts, August 23, with Brother Wardell Christy as my moderator. On the first night of the debate my record says, "Mr. Roberts showed himself an unreliable man." Debate continued each night till September 1. The last day of the debate Brother Christy and I stopped on the way to the hall at Brother Ole Olson's, where we had prayer. While Mrs. Olson was not a member at that time, yet she was interested in the debate. She told us that she saw in a dream that Mr. Roberts would not finish the debate, but did not see the reason for it. We then had prayer that God would direct to his honor and glory. When we went to the hall it seemed apparent that the debate would be as on previous nights, fully occupied. I occupied my second speech, and Mr. Roberts arose and arranged his books to continue the debate. A flash of lightning, and heavy thunder occurred, and the lights went out in the hall. Mr. Roberts gathered his books and put them in his satchel, and when he had them packed the light came on, but the people had nearly all gone, and Mr. Roberts went at once to the depot and left the town. During all this time the lights were on in the upper rooms, coming from the same outside pole. By inquiry by Brother Christy the next morning the light company said there had been no call for them to fix any wires at the hall, and were surprised when we told them of our experience. After returning to my lodging place I saw the following vision: "I was sowing or scattering seeds of 'leaves of truth.' As the leaves would fall a large sow with stiff dirty white hair would devour them. The sow soon developed into a man resembling Mr. Roberts, who had on his face a demoniacal look, which gradually grew worse till the vision passed away." My record says, "This represents the spirit and character of the man Roberts, during the debate." Brother Christy and I continued preaching in the Adventist Church, when Brother Christy baptized, among others, Brother Ole Olson, whom I confirmed. Blessed one child. During the debate Mr. Roberts said that the Campbells were not the originators of the Disciple movement. Brother Christy and I took dinner with the local pastor of the Christian Church who was Mr. Roberts' moderator. There was in the sitting room where we were a picture of the leading men of the disciple movement among the first were Thomas and Alexander Campbell. I called the attention of the people to this and to what Roberts had said during the debate. The lady said, "This is not the only lie that he told during the debate." That was how his own people felt about him.

After returning to the city I sent the Ensign to the city library at Marshalltown, by request. On September 7, I made application for the privilege of preaching on the streets, beginning to preach on the ninth, and continued till the nineteenth. Had a visit from Brother McConley, of Sterling, Colorado, on the eleventh, who gave a word of cheer. On the twentieth I came to Dow City to attend the reunion, to which my family came later, enjoying the association of the Saints. I returned home with the family at the close of the reunion. At this reunion without any fault of the committee my family were overcharged for a place to lodge during the time we were there. This was the only experience of this kind that we had ever known.

I was in conversation with a few Catholics, and this made it necessary for me to make a careful analysis of "The Faith of Our Fathers," by Cardinal Gibbons, which task I completed on September 17. On June 18, at a social service, I was led of the Spirit to speak words of encouragement to Sister C. R. Johnson, and words of encouragement and admonition to the branch.

I received another challenge from W. G. Roberts for a debate, and I wrote to him revised propositions, and rules to govern a debate to be held at Runnells, and sent a copy of the propositions and rules to the president of the Runnells branch for approval by the branch. All was satisfactory with the branch and Mr. Roberts sent the proper endorsements, so that the debate began December 12, with Mr. Williams as chairman, and Brother S. K. Sorensen as moderator. Mr. Roberts objected to the use of instrumental music, so we compromised by agreeing to have no instrumental music while he was affirming, during which time he might preside, and when I was presiding, and affirming I would have instrumental music. During the first proposition, which was, "The Bible, consisting of the sixty-six books found in the King James Translation, and the Revised Version is the perfect revelation of God's will to man, essential to his salvation." The organ was silent, but when I affirmed the proposition, "The Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and worthy the belief of all Bible believers," the chairman played the violin, and had the organ accompaniment, and everybody sang, and good cheer existed. On the first proposition Mr. Roberts "failed completely to sustain his proposition."

On the second proposition this is the record made at the time, Robert's "negative, was slanderous; telling false stories about Joseph Smith and the witnesses; trying to make it appear that there were slight discrepancies between the statements that some one, once members of the church, had written of the history of events, and between the Book of Mormon and the other standard books of the church; and sophistry in which he tried to appeal to the prejudices of the people."

During the debate he introduced a statement that he had heard about a boy who was under treatment by one of the local physicians, and pronounced incurable, and said that if we would bring that boy to the debate, healed of his affliction, he would believe. On the next night or possibly the second night from the time he made that statement, Brother John Parks, brought the boy to the platform and said, "There is the boy that you referred to, and you may examine him. He is now well of the affliction which the physicians said was incurable." Mr. Roberts tried to say something to excuse himself, and the brother was emphasizing the fact that he said he would believe if the boy was brought to the debate well, and wanting to know what he was going to do about it. He continued to find something to excuse himself. Noticing his discomfort I said, "Mr. Roberts meant that he would believe the boy was healed is not that what you meant to say?" "Yes," says Mr. Roberts, "that's what I meant."

The author closes his account of this busy year with the statement that he returned home the day after Christmas and was taken sick for the remaining days of the old year.

The Genius of Goethe

A spirit like Goethe's lays upon us three obligations. We have to wrestle with conditions so as to secure that men who are imprisoned in work and are being worn out by it may nevertheless preserve the possibility of a spiritual existence. We have to wrestle with men so that in spite of being continually drawn aside to the external things which are provided so abundantly for our age, they may find the road to inwardness and keep in it. We have to wrestle with ourselves and with all and everything around us, so that in a time of confused ideals which ignore all the claims of humanity we may remain faithful to the great humane ideals of the eighteenth century, translating them into the thought of our own age, and attempting to realize them today. That is what we have to do, each of us in his life, each of us in his profession, in the spirit of the great Frankfort child whose birthday we are celebrating today in his birthplace. I myself think that this Frankfort child does not move further away from us with the course of time, but comes nearer to us. The further we travel forward the more certainly we recognize Goethe to be the man who, as our own duty is, amid the deep and widely varied experience of his age cared for his age and labored for it; the man who would become a man who understood his age and grew to be a part of it. He did this with the abounding talents which were laid in his cradle here by destiny. We have to

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Independence

It is with serious thought and preparation that Independence goes into the month of prayer and sacrifice. In every church the sacrament hour Sunday morning, was marked by increased solemnity and devotion. Though many of them are themselves hard pressed, the Saints are thinking in terms of giving and helping the church.

The priesthood will meet for special prayer service Friday night at the Stone Church, seeking the guidance of the Holy Spirit in coping with the present problems of the church.

Tonight the young people of Zion will assemble in the Stone Church for a special sacrifice week prayer service. All young people have been invited and urged to come.

These are busy days for the people in Independence. On Monday night alone there were meetings of the following organizations—the Standing High Council of the general church, the young people's council of Independence, the regular monthly pastors' meeting, and scout troops both boys and girls.

The young people's council of Independence at its Monday night meeting at the Auditorium, made plans for the holding of an early morning young people's prayer service the opening Sunday of Sacrifice Week, June 19. All young people of Independence are invited to meet at the Campus at seven o'clock on that morning and together make their spiritual preparation for the week to follow. The summer series of young people's trips, historical and Sunday night, will commence July 10. Definite arrangements will be announced.

Ten Independence young people received diplomas at the Graceland College commencement exercises. Those who graduated from the college of liberal arts are Doris Blake, Clifford Jesse Long, Almer Sheehy, Alma J. Smith, Elizabeth Smith, Lynn E. Smith, and Kathleen Snead. Mary A. Beebe, of Atherton, and Lois May Hatch graduated from the teacher training department of the school, and Wayne G. Tucker from the engineers' school.

Among the honors which Independence students received were Delpha Hawley and Anita May, first year students at the college who were made associate members of the Lambda Delta Sigma Society, the college honor society, and Elizabeth Smith and Kathleen Snead, regular members. Lois Hatch won forensic honors. Miss Hawley also won a letter for participation in college sports.

The Campus is now open for the summer. The first moving picture of the season was shown the evening of May 28, and there were games and pictures on the Campus on Memorial Day. Sound pictures have this year been made possible by the committee, and the crowds which patronize the pictures each Saturday and Tuesday evening are large.

Summer school for children from five to fifteen years of age opened yesterday, and sessions will be conducted every Tuesday and Friday for a period of four weeks.

Next Sunday is Children's Day, and it will be observed with special services of baptism and blessing, also programs given by the various departments of the church school.

Stone Church

Though June ushered in a season of warm weather for Independence and surrounding regions, the sacrament congregation at the Stone Church Sunday morning was not lessened. It was very large.

"Mind the Light," the words of a lighthouse keeper to his wife, composed the theme thought of Apostle F. Henry Edwards' opening remarks. This he applied to the present need of the church as it goes into a month of prayer and sacrifice. It is the task of the church to keep the light of Christ shining in the world of men; in time of danger and peril it is more important than ever to keep the light burning.

In the stand and assisting Brother Edwards were Bishops G. L. DeLapp, J. S. Kelley, and R. T. Cooper, and Elders J. F. Sheehy, C. Ed. Miller, and D. O. Cato. Paul N. Craig led the congregational singing. The organ music at the opening of the service was by Opal Goode Doty. The oblation talk was by Bishop DeLapp.

After the sharing of the emblems of the Last Supper and following a period of meditation and silent prayer, Elder C. Ed. Miller voiced a special prayer for Zion and the church.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp addressed a general meeting of the priesthood, Sunday afternoon at two thirty at the Campus. His talk was followed by meetings of the quorums.

Three great needs on the part of every member of the church were stressed by Pastor John F. Sheehy in his earnest talk Sunday evening: (1) The need of a deep and abiding faith generated by moving, spiritual experiences; (2) The need to continue and increase good works; (3) The need of love for one another, a love akin to that of the Christ.

A concert was presented by the Stone Church Choir, under the direction of Paul N. Craig. Soloists of the evening were Mrs. Nina G. Smith, soprano; Velma Brocaw Nunn, contralto, Elbert Dempsey, tenor, and Albert Brackenbury, bass. Robert Miller was organist, and George Miller pianist. Miss Elizabeth Smith, just home from Graceland College, contributed a pleasing harp number. The choir sang, "Hallelujah," from the "Mount of Olives," by Beethoven, "Festival Te Deum," by Buck, and "Fear Not, O Israel," by Spicker.

Elder William E. Shakespeare presided over the service.

Sister A. L. Yingling, of Independence, was elected president of the Service Star Legion at the State convention held June 3, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. She is the former president of the local Service Star Legion and now first vice president. She was unable to attend the convention, because of convalescing from a recent illness. The Saints rejoice at the honor given her in this office.

Nineteen attendance stars, gold and silver, were awarded to Girl Scouts in the three Stone Church troops, 33, 37, and 46, at a special birthday celebration last Friday night. Scouting in the Stone Church is just a year old, and as special guests to help them celebrate the occasion the girls had Miss Margaret Fifield, chief Girl Scout executive of Kansas City, and Doctor Julia Kirkwood, in charge of the scouts in the North East Kansas City District. The girls of the Stone Church presented Miss Leta B. Moriarty, captain of Troop 37, a thanks badge in appreciation of her work in establishing scouting in Independence. The guest troop of the evening was Troop 10 of Walnut Park Church.

Liberty Street Church

These are busy times for Liberty Street Saints, especially the members of the young people's division. Most of the young men and women participate in branch activities, singing in the choir, playing in the orchestra, or teaching in the church school; some of them do all three.

Last Saturday afternoon forty-two young people visited the Coca-Cola plant in Kansas City, learning how the drink do it as men who have received only one small pound, but who in our trading with that pound wish to be found faithful. So may it be!—Albert Schweitzer, in The Hibbert Journal.

is made and listening to a talk on the differences between cocoa, Coffee, tea, and Coca-Cola.

The group officers are undertaking the project of holding missionary meetings in the various homes of this district. Last Thursday night the first of these meetings was held in Group 26, at the home of Brother Samuel Wilson. The speaker was Elder E. T. Atwell.

Under the leadership of Pastor J. R. Lentell, every department seems to be making progress. The priesthood are more active than they have been for some time.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was the speaker Sunday evening. A string quartet composed of Evalyn White, violin; Ruth Tignor, violin; Fred Friend, cello, and Mrs. Willis, piano, furnished special music for the service.

Special preparations are under way for Children's Day. The children are happy to have part in the church school program.

The intermediate boys have organized their forces and entered a team in the Boys' Baseball League of Independence which plays every Saturday morning at the Campus. Wayne Zion is captain of the team. The boys' interests are cropping out in another direction. For some time they have been meeting regularly, trying to qualify as a troop of Boy Scouts. The troop hopes to secure its charter in a few weeks. Stafford Holsworth is the leader of this group.

Girl Scout Troop 14, of this congregation, has a lieutenant, Miss Iris Tordoff, formerly a member of this congregation. She will assist Mrs. Elbert Mock, captain of the troop, in a definite scouting program.

Walnut Park Church

On May 29, Walnut Park held a Memorial Day service with Elder John F. Sheehy as speaker. The junior and senior choirs were combined under the direction of Orlando Nace, Drexel Mollison at the piano. They sang, "Lest We Forget," from the new Saints' Hymnal.

The eight o'clock prayer service is increasing in number each Sunday.

At the church school a solo, "My Redeemer and My Lord," by Buck was sung by Richard Day, accompanied on the piano by Delta Nace.

That evening the pulpit was occupied by Elder H. E. Winegar.

The Saints enjoyed a joint prayer meeting at the church the evening of June 1. At the close of this service, by unanimous vote, they chose Elder Frank McDonald as the new pastor of Walnut Park. The Saints are very happy to have his help and association, and hope to accomplish much under his leadership.

Sacrament service June 5, was largely attended and presided over by Pastor Frank McDonald, Assistant Pastor Carroll L. Olson, and Elder R. Barnhardt. The little daughter of Brother and Sister Harry Suddarth, Virginia Elaine, was blessed by Elders Benjamin Bean and H. O. Smith. At the close of the service the article, "Under this Spirit," by President Elbert A. Smith, printed in the Herald of May 18, was read by the pastor, and the Saints were urged to heed the warning given therein. Walnut Park Saints are anxious to sacrifice with all, that the work of the church may go on to ultimate triumph.

The young people's study class at six o'clock held its last session Sunday evening. These classes have been very helpful and will be looked forward to again when the services at the Campus close this fall. The program was presented by the little pupils of Sister D. S. McNamara from Englewood Church. They gave readings and songs.

The evening service was made especially enjoyable to the membership by a sermon from Elder R. D. Weaver. The choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, sang, "O Love Divine," by Thorpe.

Englewood Church

Memorial Day was appropriately observed in this branch May 29. Large pictures of Joseph the Martyr and of the late Joseph Smith were among the patriotic decorations and a beautiful painting of Christ hung on the wall at the back of the rostrum. Sister Emma Kennedy, granddaughter of Joseph the Martyr, gave a brief sketch of his life also of the life and labors of the late Joseph Smith. The service was most impressive. Maxine Moore played a piano solo.

At eleven o'clock the Cantanina Chorus directed by Mrs. Bertha Burgess, gave a splendid vocal program. Elder D. S. McNamara, former pastor of this branch, was the speaker, his thoughts fitting themselves into the Decoration Day theme. Brother McNamara saw service in France in the World War, also his brother. The latter fell on the battlefield, and as the Saints listened to Brother McNamara's words, they yearned for the time when "war shall be no more."

Another musical treat was given in the evening. This time the performers were a choir of eighteen young people from Chelsea Park Church, Kansas City. Their vocal and instrumental program lasted half an hour and was an inspiration. This choir is directed by Miss Jessie Bell Taylor.

Elder Ray Howery spoke briefly on "Music." This was his first sermon, and the Saints hope to hear him often. It is encouraging to see the younger men of the ministry actively helping. Englewood's entire official corps is of comparatively young men who are consecrated to the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Reich and their daughter, Helen, were recently added to the membership by baptism. For several years Helen has been attending the church school. Sister Reich has been an invalid and of late has been very close to death's door, but through the fasting and prayers of the Saints, at her request, she was restored sufficiently to enter the waters of baptism. This family partook of the sacrament emblems Sunday morning with the congregation. The Saints are praying for the complete recovery of Sister Reich.

A calm and helpful Spirit prevailed at that hour as eleven local members of the priesthood and one visiting member presided. Elder S. S. Smith, Holden Stake missionary, was in charge and gave the presacramental talk. The infant son of Robert and Suzanne Lanham Cox was blessed and given the name of Gerald Bruce under the hands of Elders Earl Moore and John Ely.

Elder Thomas Newton was the evening speaker. The choir aided with a musical program.

The children are rehearsing for a special Children's Day program to be given next Sunday evening at seven thirty. At eleven o'clock in the morning a baptismal and confirmation service will be held. Pastor Perry Hiles is instructing a group of children preparatory to this service. The children are showing great interest in this special training, and some who were baptized last year are again taking the instruction.

West Haven, Connecticut

New Haven Mission, 945 First Avenue

Saints of this mission are pressing forward. God has showered many blessings upon them. Harold F. Garfield is their pastor. For two months they enjoyed the association of Elder William Patterson, and have greatly missed him since he left for his new field of labor.

During the winter the priesthood carried out a fine program. The local has a junior church for the children and some member of the priesthood visits this division nearly every Sunday to help carry out the program. Even the little tots of six and seven years testify in the short prayer service.

The last week in April concluded the Tuesday recreation at the hall where the Saints have played volley and basket ball and had lunch. In place of this, they now meet at the home of Brother Calvin Sears for choir practice. On Wednesday evening prayer service is held, and on Thursday evening the women meet to sew and pray. At the suggestion of the women's leader, ten o'clock each morning has been designated as the time for prayer for the sick, the unemployed, and the church and its leaders. The spirit of unity has been the greatest blessing of these workers. Under its influence they have had many happy experiences.

On May 1, the members went to the beach, a short distance from the home of Brother and Sister Crowell, where three candidates were baptized into the church by Elder William Patterson. Then all assembled at the church for the confirmation service and to partake of the sacrament with some of the Saints from Norwalk, Connecticut. The spirit of harmony and peace reigned during the entire day. Basket lunch was eaten in the basement, and at three o'clock in the afternoon Brother Patterson gave a short talk. In the evening he preached his farewell sermon.

Attendance is good. All the priesthood are active as are nearly all the members. The Saints of this mission work well together, also pray and play. They are trying to do the will of God, that he may be pleased with his children.

With Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

Soon Elder John L. Sandidge will take up the work of district missionary laid down by Elder O. W. Okerlind prior to the General Conference in April. Information has been received by Idaho Saints that Brother Sandidge is on the way to his new field. Brother Okerlind was assigned Southern Saskatchewan as his new field of labor.

American Falls Branch

Because of scattered membership and bad weather, Sunday services have been the only regular meetings for some time. On Easter Sunday a larger number than usual gathered for an appropriate program and dinner.

Brother and Sister Baker and family from this branch were able to attend the conference. They reported a wonderful time. More of the members had hoped to go, but conditions prevented.

Filer Branch

In response to the call of the branch president a number of the branch members gathered at the home of Brother James Winegar for services Sunday, April 17. This was the first time they had gathered together since last fall. It was good to meet again. The opening service was one of song, prayer, and preaching, the sermon by Brother Pearson being on the theme, "Humility and Whole-hearted Service in the Preparation of Younger Workers." Then came a business meeting in which some financial matters pending for a period of time, were decided. At this meeting it was decided that the branch should hold services the first Sunday of each month at 10 a. m., at the home of James Winegar.

During the day two children were blessed by Elders H. P. Hansen and Benjamin Pearson.

Brother and Sister Dey are the parents of a fine boy.

Hagerman Branch

In the month of March nearly every family in the branch was visited by the mumps epidemic.

The senior Sunday school class held its quarterly party at the home of its teacher, Silas Condit, the date being a little late because of the prevalence of illness. Eighteen were present.

Sister Velma Abercrombie who taught at Montello last winter, has gone to Albion to attend summer school.

Sister Isetta Condit is recuperating from her recent operation at the home of her parents. She is able to be up part of the time.

Brother Silas Condit was agreeably surprised several weeks ago to learn that he had won the first prize of fifty dollars, given by the National Laundries of Twin Falls, Buhl, Rupert, Gooding, Jerome, and Burley. The contest sought the best story on "The Hidden Cost of Home Washing."

The young people of the Sunday school enjoyed a hike and picnic a short time ago. Twenty-two composed the crowd. This event was sponsored by the recreation and expression class.

Rupert Branch

Sister Connel received word several weeks ago that her mother, Mrs. Theodore Mittendorf, passed away February 22, at Anthony, Kansas.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Sister Clark recently.

Out-of-town visitors have in the past few weeks attended Rupert Branch services. Their presence is helpful.

Easter Sunday was observed by the children who, with their leader, Sister Hanford Plowman, went to Jackson Island for a picnic. The young people and adults had a basket dinner at the home of Brother and Sister John Culley.

Boise Branch

This group has been visited by the death angel. Early the morning of April 18 Sister Lula Mae Jackson passed away at her home. She was born at Woodbine, Iowa, March 23, 1878, and for the past thirty-two years had made Boise her home. Surviving are her husband, T. B. Jackson; two sons, George Ellison, and Harry Ellison; two foster children, Rolland Jarrett and Mrs. Muriel Peters, and one sister, Mrs. Bessie Hull. The funeral was held April 19 at Boise, in charge of Elders John B. Cato and George B. Anderson. Interment was in Morris Hill Cemetery. Sister Jackson joined the church when a child, and was actively engaged in the various departments of the church till her recent illness. She will be greatly missed, having been a member of this branch since its organization.

April lived up to its name this year, there being one April shower after another. If the rain keeps up there will be no lack of water for irrigation purposes.

Brother Cato and Wilson have gone to the hills on a gold hunting expedition. Brother Cato was in the hills last year, but due to a quick freeze was not able to clean up and has returned for that purpose.

This branch has two high school graduates this year, Margaret Bullock and Lois Dellenbaugh.

The young people's class of the department of recreation and expression, directed by Sister Mamerow, are preparing a play, "Mischievous Mattie."

Fulton, Iowa

Saints of Fulton were delighted to have Elders E. R. Davis and L. G. Holloway with them, May 15. The former taught the senior class in Sunday school, the latter taught the young married people's class. Everyone was interested in the messages this pair of missionaries brought. Brother Holloway was the eleven o'clock speaker. The congregation then enjoyed a picnic dinner, and Elder Davis was the afternoon speaker.

A wiener roast was enjoyed by the Saints and friends a few weeks ago. The evening was spent playing games. Two large bonfires were built and at a late hour everyone roasted wieners.

Two of this congregation, Gladys Martens and Mereta Campbell, drove to Independence to attend the General Conference. Upon their return they were called upon to talk to the Saints about the conference, and everyone was interested in hearing what the girls had to say. It is hoped that in 1934 more of the members will be able to be present.

Several from here are planning to attend the conference in Moline, Illinois, in June.

Sister Almira Heide is very ill at her home. She is being cared for by her children.

Many of the farmer members of this branch are planting corn, and some have completed planting for this season.

South Bend and Mishawaka Branch

Mishawaka, Indiana

Elder Forest E. Myers is preaching every Thursday evening at Elkhart, where, through the efforts of the faithful little group of Saints, a goodly number of nonmembers have been attending to hear the preaching of the gospel. A good interest is being shown, and officers hope to have more and better news to write of this effort at a later date.

The women's division has pushed over the goal line again with another successful sacrifice drive which culminated in a good old-fashioned party at the home of Brother and Sister Ellis on Friday evening, April 29. More than fifty were present. Games, contests, and a supper such as only can be found at a Saints' gathering, were enjoyed. When the contents of the sacrifice envelopes were counted, thirty-eight dollars had been raised through the efforts of the devoted sisters.

Every Saint in this branch is glad to hear that Apostle D. T. Williams is returning to this territory. He was made very welcome, April 26, when he preached in this church on "The Growth of the Church," a message which brought hope and cheer very much needed in these trying times.

It was with real sorrow that Saints here bade farewell to Brother and Sister Charles Ferry who are now living at Thayer, Missouri. They were two of perhaps six or eight members who worked to establish this branch. God has rewarded their faithfulness.

Brother Robert Walters, of Elkhart, preached here Sunday morning, May 15, and the members hope to have the opportunity of hearing from him again.

The Aaronic priesthood are being given full opportunity to develop in their calling, especially in preaching. Surely it is the duty of every branch to develop its local priesthood and this duty is even more binding at the present time when the responsibility of missionary work, to a great extent, lies with the local officers.

Those who have of late occupied are Elders Myers, Coonfare, and Hoxie; Priests Walters, Ferry, and W. F. Hardy; Deacons Taylor and William Hardy. Attendance at all meetings is good, especially at the evening preaching service where the average is well over fifty.

Thayer, Missouri

The work of the church is going forward here with greater strength and purposefulness than before. The Saints are eager to climb to greater heights in the latter-day endeavor. They are preparing with more pride to do the Lord's work.

The choir is studying and learning new songs. With the assistance of Sister Ward, it will not take long to make a splendid group of singers out of this organization.

The women are doing well in their special endeavors. The last, a strawberry and ice cream social, made for the church a little over ten dollars.

Of the Saints in Thayer the branch solicitor says, "They are every one workers and have supreme faith in the Master. And I feel certain that the real fellowship felt by each member is the reason they are so successful in almost anything they undertake."

The branch is hopeful that it will be blessed with the conference mentioned in the last Thayer news letter. Every member is looking forward to it.

Since General Conference the members seem to be impelled by a greater desire to help bring the gospel to a higher peak of accomplishment. New faith is found in those who care for the gospel. Conditions are poor, but everyone is trying to obey the law of tithing which is one of the important requirements of this work. There is yet time and officers are sure every member of the branch will feel the urge to fulfill the law. Thayer is doing everything to put the gospel before the world. Its latest venture was to secure a motion picture machine, and from time to time suitable pictures are shown at the church.

Thayer Saints derive joy in hearing of the activities of other branches. They are happy, too, to have a church building of their own, and look forward to the day when every seat will be filled.

Brother and Sister Ferry are here now from South Bend, Indiana. Local Saints hope they will make this their permanent home.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, Rockwood Court and Cherry Streets

Members of First Branch were favored with a sermon by J. A. Robinson, of Second Branch, the evening of May 22. He stressed the importance of work, showing that to have a live branch, everyone must be put to work. His theme was taken from the hymn in the Hymnal, "O Reaper of Life's Harvest!" This hymn had been sung by the choir and the anthem, "Great Is the Lord"; Sister Mary Hall sang a beautiful solo at the close of the service.

Brother Glaud Kuykendall was the speaker that morning, his text being taken from Psalm 46. He emphasized the importance of having God's Spirit.

Other speakers of the month were W. H. Mannering and R. W. Jett.

God has blessed this branch with encouraging helps that the individual members might be tided over the dark scenes through which they have been compelled to pass. In the month of April three of this congregation were claimed by death, Sister Julia V. Neal, a pioneer member of southwestern Texas, who helped to keep the gospel campfire burning for many years first at Oakwood, where the work was first established and later at San Antonio. Sister Neal was indeed a mother in Israel, a mother not only to her own family but to others who had no mother. Her deeds of kindness will long be remembered. The last three years of her life were spent in pain. She fell, breaking her hip and never fully recovered. During those years she was a shut-in, but through her afflictions she remained a faithful Saint and her desire was to live to see all of her children obey the gospel. But she was not permitted to receive that blessing. She passed from this life April 14, at the age of eighty-three years, leaving behind seven children, nine grandchildren, several great-grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends.

The day of Sister Neal's burial, Sister Ettie Allbright passed away.

Sister Ettie was a granddaughter of Lyman Wight. She had been a widow for a number of years, having five children to rear and support. One of these preceded her in death. Notwithstanding the burdens she had in caring for her family, she was a faithful attendant at religious worship.

After having suffered many months Sister Vida McRay was also called away. She was the daughter of O. D. Johnson. Left her husband and five children besides many other relatives and friends.

May 22 the infant son of Brother and Sister Benjamin Desmuke was laid to rest in Oakwood Cemetery. The funeral service was in charge of Elder W. H. Mannering.

Besides those who have been taken away by death, the branch has lost some other members by removal to other parts. Brother and Sister Ed. Yearington, who have been here for the past three years, have moved to Oklahoma City. They were a great asset to this branch. He directed the choir on several occasions, having charge of the Easter cantata; was a teacher of a class of young people in the church school and found time occasionally to preach to the Saints. Sister Yearington was supervisor of the children's department and also sang in the choir. They will be missed.

Brother and Sister H. E. Waite are expecting to leave San Antonio soon. Sister Waite has had charge of Religious Education and Brother Waite had charge of the financial part of the work. Brother and Sister R. E. Miller also expect to leave soon for Dallas, Texas. Those who are to remain regret the loss of these efficient workers and realize that they must redouble their own efforts in order that the Master's work will not suffer.

Notwithstanding these losses and trials, the Lord is wonderfully blessing his people with the presence of his Spirit. At the last sacrament service his Spirit was felt to a marked degree. It was remarked that the same Spirit was felt at the late General Conference.

Midweek prayer services are growing in attendance. From the small numbers of three to six, it has increased to as many as twenty and sometimes more. Much of the success of this service, the Saints feel, is due to Brother Robert Jett, who has arranged his truck with comfortable seats and is able to furnish transportation to as many as eight. He and his wife deserve much credit for their faithful attendance at the prayer services. Their faithfulness is being rewarded by growth.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

A pretty little wedding was solemnized on Sunday afternoon, May 29, at four o'clock at Central Church, when in the presence of relatives and friends, Patriarch Ammon White united in marriage, Miss Wilma Smith, daughter of Brother and Sister V. V. Smith, and Mr. Mitchell Carter of Lamoni, Iowa. Preceding the reading of the service, Miss Velma Lewis played a program of organ music and Mr. Colin Ferret sang "The Crown" by Kenneth Rae. Miss Lewis accompanied Mr. Ferret at the organ. Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride.

June 3, Central people, under the auspices of the Women's Club, enjoyed the evening in the form of a birthday dinner, a large number of its membership being present to celebrate their birthdays with their brothers and sisters. A table representing each month of the year provided for twelve guests, the decorations thereon being symbolic of the month it represented. They presented a gorgeous sight. Preceding the dinner, Sister Mildred Connelly furnished music for the grand march which gave every one an opportunity to view the tables. At the conclusion of the march, twelve young girls appeared on the rostrum each carrying a lighted candle. They sang birthday greetings.

At each table a host and hostess were in charge of the stunt which the members of their table were to perform as a part of the entertainment of the evening. September carried off high honor when the pupils of Red Oak School gave an effective demonstration of good class work in arithmetic, geography, and history. May and June also vied for honors with the lovely Maypole "walk" and the dashing bride and groom (Brother and Sister Adelbert Withee) and of course, April, came along and played a joke on the crowd. December portrayed a touching scene when the lights were turned low and the members of the group sang that hymn which quickly brings to mind the memory of the first Christmas night when Christ the Savior was born, "Holy Night." July and February, of course, portrayed historical facts pertaining to the freedom of this nation.

Sunday was a typical June day and was also the first day of the season to be a little uncomfortable with sultry weather. A good attendance was had at the sacrament service. Following the serving of the emblems, a season of prayer was had in behalf of the church and its people, that they may be strong in these days of trial and depression, also for the sick and the injured. Brother Adam Young met with an accident while at his work and is suffering a broken thigh, and Sister Pritchette met with an accident while on her way home from the dinner Friday evening, being knocked down by a street car. She sustained a broken hip. Both of these members are elderly people and need the prayers of the Saints.

Sunday evening, the pastor began a series of lectures which he will continue throughout the summer. A very good attendance was present.

Graceland News

President McDowell Is Commencement Speaker

President F. M. McDowell, of Independence, chose as the subject of his address to the graduating class of Graceland College, "Thunder or Dawn." The discourse was an interesting analysis of the present world conditions and necessary requisites for a possible solution of them. It was given the evening of May 27, in Zimmerman Hall.

He suggested the possibility of another dark age, unless men assume a different type of leadership from that which we have today, and declared that the way out of present difficulties is not in materialism, in unguarded idealism, or in the disillusionment of the present age, but in the intelligent endeavor to develop keen thinking minds, to assist the leaders of today in working out a new social order to replace the old one, which must necessarily decay because it is built on wrong foundations.

Guideposts set up for the Graceland graduates included a creative faith. Allow yourselves to be captivated by the lure of undiscovered possibilities, the speaker said. Encourage self-controlled human relationships and divine relationships. The way is forward. Our greatest sin is in failing to move forward to the best that we know. Be open minded, not empty minded. Keep within the law. Unite the thinking mind with other creative minds and divine inspiration.

This idealism is what keeps the doors of Graceland open, Dr. McDowell said; it is what keeps members of the faculty on their jobs. There is only one reason for the existence of the church college, to train the minds and souls of its students according to the precepts of the Master of men.

The Lamoni-Graceland Orchestra under the direction of J. H. Anthony and the A Cappella Chorus directed by Miss Mabel Carlile, furnished music for the occasion. President Briggs was in charge, Apostle J. F. Garver offered the invocation, and President Elbert A. Smith the benediction.

The presentation of the graduates by heads of departments and the conferring of diplomas by the president followed the address, after which all joined in singing "Graceland Forever."

There were fifty-six graduates this year.

—The LAMONI CHRONICLE.

"Messiah" Performance Outstanding

The high spot of achievement for the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society was reached on Thursday night, May 26, when Handel's "Messiah" was performed for a packed house at the Lamoni Coliseum.

The weather was ideal, and music lovers came in large numbers from most of the surrounding towns including Leon, Mount Ayr, Bethany, Eagleville, Blythedale, Davis City, Garden Grove, and Chariton.

The chorus of one hundred and twenty-five voices presented an inspiring picture as they grouped themselves on the flower-decked stage, the ladies in white, the men in dark suits and black ties. Suitable applause greeted the chorus, the soloists and the director as they mounted the stage.

A reverent hush fell upon the audience during the piano overture and this spirit prevailed throughout the entire performance, interrupted only by enthusiastic bursts of applause after each outstanding solo or chorus.

The first chorus, "And the Glory of the Lord," served as an introduction for the rest of the choruses which were exceedingly well done as to attacks, releases, phrasing, shading, and all the other mechanics of musical perfection. Best of all, the singers caught the spirit of the composer and rose with him to heights of praise and descended also to depths of dejection at other points. The work of the soloists was of an equally high standard. George Anway, of Independence, showed an easy familiarity with his role, having sung these solos for many years. His smooth tenor voice is a pleasing medium for the comforting themes presented, and his delight in "The Messiah" was shown also in the enthusiastic way he joined the chorus numbers.

Mrs. Hunt, soprano soloist, gave her best and that is saying much. Her voice, though mature, is fresh and youthful. Mrs. Hunt has an easy stage presence and dignified appearance which combined well with her pleasing voice and made Gracelanders and Lamoni citizens proud of the college voice teacher.

The contralto, Pearl Kinnamon, of Saint Joseph, was new to Lamoni audience, but came as a pleasurable surprise to all. Her tones possess a haunting sweetness that won instant and sustained admiration and as the singer went on to portray the sufferings and the sorrows of the Master, all present felt the yearnings and desires to make his sacrifice worth while in their lives.

Colin Ferrett's bass is well liked wherever heard and is at its best in oratorio performance. His clear diction and even quality combined with his deep resonant tones, give his interpretation strength and force.

Miss Rae Lysinger played the piano accompaniments with her usual poise and sureness. Although the work of an accompanist is usually considered incidental to the performance, it is really basic to the long period of drill and to the performance.

For the directing and long training incident to this performance highest praise goes to Miss Mabel Carlile whose genius and musical ideal seem ever to beckon and challenge the best musical talent in both the college students and townspeople for this superb production.

that they were the sweetest in the world. Some described them as sounding like angels far up in the sky.

But the fact was that no one had heard them for years and years. There was an old man living not far from the church, who said that his mother had heard them when she was a little girl.

The needs of this church were great for it had been founded by the Master to do a noble and marvelous work to help the struggling world. On occasions when these needs became known all the people would bring their tithes and gifts to lay them on the altar for the work of the church. When the greatest and best offering was laid on the altar one could hear the music of the heavenly chimes far up in the azure sky. Some said that the wind rang them, and others that the angels set them swinging. But for many long years they had never been heard.

It was said that the people had been growing less and less mindful of the instructions that had been given to them of old and that their choicest gifts and first fruits had been given to things of lesser worth. On special days the altar was laden with gifts from those who gave a little from their plenteous store and with gifts given grudgingly or with a complaining spirit. While the service was splendid the spirit of deep devotion and sacrifice was not present and the wonderful bells rung not out.

Now a number of miles from the city, lived a boy named Pedro, and his little brother. They knew very little about the heavenly chimes, but they had heard of the special services in the church, and had a secret plan to go to see the beautiful celebration.

"Nobody can guess, Little Brother," Pedro would say, "all the fine things there are to see and hear; and I have even heard it said that the Christ child sometimes comes down to bless the service. What if we could see him?"

(Enter two boys in rustic costume who pantomime the action of the story.)

On the day they planned to go the wind blew bitterly cold and a deep snow lay on the ground. But Pedro and Little Brother were able to slip quietly away early in the afternoon; and although the walking was hard, before night-fall they had trudged so far, hand in hand, that they saw the lights of the big city just ahead of them. They were about to enter one of the great gates in the wall that surrounded it, when they saw something dark in the snow near their path, and stepped aside to look at it.

It was a poor woman who had fallen just outside the city, too sick and tired to get in where she might have found shelter. The soft snow made of a drift a sort of pillow for her, and she would soon be so sound asleep, in the wintry air, that no one could ever waken her again. All this Pedro saw in a moment, and he knelt down beside her and tried to rouse her, and when he had looked at her silently a moment he stood up again and said:

"It's no use, Little Brother. You will have to go on alone."

"Alone?" cried little Brother. "And you not see the great festival?"

"No," said Pedro, and he could not keep back a bit of a choking sound in his throat. "See this poor woman. Her face looks like the Madonna in the chapel window, and she will freeze to death if nobody cares for her. Every one has gone to the church now, but when you come back you can bring some one to help her. I will rub her to keep her from freezing, and perhaps get her to eat the bun that is left in my pocket."

"But I can not bear to leave you, and go on alone," said Little Brother.

"Both of us need not miss the service," said Pedro, "and it had better be I than you. You can easily find your way to the church; and you must see and hear everything twice, Little Brother—once for you and once for me. I am sure the Christ child must know how I should love to come with you and worship him; and oh, if you get a chance, Little Brother, to slip up to the altar without getting in any one's way, take this little silver piece of mine, and lay it down with my offering, when no one is looking. Do not forget where you have left me."

In this way he hurried Little Brother off to the city, and winked hard to keep back the tears. It was pretty hard to loose the music and splendor of the lovely celebration that he had been planning for so long, and spend the time instead in that lonely place in the snow. (Here the tapers in the church may be lit by an attendant and the windows glow with the lights prepared.) (Soft organ music and a hidden choir singing praises would add to the effectiveness of this part of the service. Special numbers or suitable hymns may be used if desired. All numbers used should come from within the cathedral.)

The great church was a wonderful place that night. Every one said that it had never looked so bright and beautiful before. The organ played and the thousands of people sang.

At the close of the service came the procession with offerings to be laid on the altar. (The procession of givers can represent men and women from all walks of life. They may be suitably costumed and should enter through the aisles of the church moving slowly towards the altar to the soft strains of organ music. Read the story slowly and name each the station and work of the gift bearers.)

Rich men and great men marched proudly up to lay down their gifts to the church. Some brought wonderful jewels, some baskets of gold so heavy that they could scarcely carry them down the aisle. A great writer laid down a book that he had been making for years and years. And last of all walked the king of the country, hoping with all the rest to win for himself the chime of the heavenly bells. There went a great murmur through the church, as the people saw the king take from his head the royal crown, all set with precious stones, and lay it gleaming on the altar, as his offering to the holy child. "Surely," everyone said, "we shall hear the bells now, for nothing like this has ever happened before."

But still only the cold old wind was heard in the tower, and the people shook their heads; and some of them said, as they had before, that they never really believed the story of the chimes, and doubted if they ever rang at all.

The procession was over, and the choir began the closing hymn. (Choir begins a hymn here and cease when organ chimes or a triangle is played.) Suddenly the organist stopped playing as though he had been shot, and every one looked at the old minister, who was standing by the altar, holding up his hands for silence. Not a sound could be heard from anyone in the church, but as all the people strained their ears to listen, there came softly, but distinctly, the sound of the chimes in the tower. So far away, and yet so clear the music seemed—so much sweeter were the notes than anything that had been heard before, that the people in the church sat for a moment as still to let the music flood over their hearts. Then they all stood up together and stared straight at the altar, to see what great gift had awakened the long-silent bells.

All that the nearest of them could see was the childish figure of Little Brother, who had crept softly down the aisle when no one was looking, to lay Pedro's little piece of silver on the altar.

Setting for the Story:

Cathedral front—built across the front edge of the platform. Wooden frame covered with grey or brown heavy paper marked with black crayon to imitate stone.

Large, wide, arched door in center. Over the door cheesecloth may be hung to give the appearance of distance within and to subdue interior lights.

Windows—one window on each side of the door. Windows can be made from oiled paper ruled with diamond panes. Colored lights are hung behind to give the effect of stained glass. Gelatin sheets may also be used for the windows.

Trail ivy creeper over the front of the cathedral to give beauty.

For the cathedral interior (platform) place the altar in the center. (Your pulpit or a table covered to the floor with white linen will meet the need.) Two lighted tapers on the altar give a realistic effect.

No additional furnishings are necessary.

The action of the boys finding the old woman may take place to one side or in front of the cathedral before windows and tapers are lit.

If this set is not feasible the front may be left open and the platform arranged for a cathedral interior with altar candelabra and altar cushions for kneeling pilgrims.

If the story is used as a worship story the reader may appear, but if the action is dramatized the reader should be seated where he may be clearly heard but not seen.

Service Offering:

At the close of the story or dramatization the pastor should come to the door of the cathedral and in the spirit of the story invite all the congregation to come to the altar with their sacrifice offerings. He may comment briefly on the spirit of true sacrifice and relate some of the notable church examples of such giving. (Glaud Roger, Society Island Mission, the glass dishes for the Kirtland Temple, etc.) This talk should not exceed four minutes. The coming to the altar should be orderly, directed by the ushers, row by row, and be accompanied by organ music. The service should then close with a hymn ("O Jesus the Giver," is appropriate), and a prayer of blessing and dedication.

Men must know that in this theater of man's it remaineth only to God and angels to be lookers-on.—Bacon.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Wisconsin, Greetings: Having a sincere desire to reach the most people and do the most possible good, we are using this means of getting in touch with and soliciting the cooperation of the Saints in the State of Wisconsin. If those of you who have a desire for missionary work in your locality, or know of those who would like an effort made to reach the people in their respective locality, will write one or both of us regarding it, we shall greatly appreciate hearing from you. Also, if you will tell us of any members or friends who may be isolated or in need of the help we may be able to give, we shall be glad to give them the assistance we are, or may be able to render. Without question there are members and friends who are unknown to us, and if you who are acquainted with them will be kind enough to write us a line and give us the address of such people, we shall appreciate your assistance. We hope to be able to carry with us the spirit of the late General Conference and in this way bring comfort, peace, joy, and good will to all with whom we are permitted to associate. Our work is onward and with a united effort we shall move forward this year in a manner that will claim the admiration of every lover of truth and virtue. To do this successfully we need your hearty cooperation. We are depending on you. May we have the satisfaction of receiving the fullness of our expectations?—Leonard Houghton, 316 North Few Street, Madison, Wisconsin; J. E. Vanderwood, Evansville, Wisconsin.

Memorial Services at Nauvoo

A memorial service will be held at Nauvoo at the graves of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, June 26. There will be services at 11 a. m. and 2.30 p. m. A picnic dinner will be served at noon in the grove. Saints are invited to attend.—J. C. Page.

Conference Notices

Southern Saskatchewan district conference will be held at Weyburn Plains, July 14 to 17. Apostle J. F. Curtis and Missionary O. W. Okerlind will be present. Our Departed Ones

FERGUSON.—Thomas Ferguson was born August 11, 1858, at Kincardine, Ontario, Canada. He was united in marriage to Caroline Griffith in 1889, at Walkerton, Ontario. To this union were born nine children, all of whom survive except one which died in infancy. His wife preceded him in death, having passed from this life on February 25, 1909. In the year 1903, he, with his family, moved to Missouri, where he lived for ten years. He then moved to Kansas, and later, in the year 1918, moved to Fort Collins, Colorado, for his health, at which place he has since made his home. He passed away March 7, 1932, at Fort Collins. As a member of the church and also as one of the priesthood, he was ever faithful in his devotion to the work of the church.

A Last Word

This issue of the Herald will reach our readers almost at the last minute before the beginning of Sacrifice Week. Subject to the limitations of depleted man power and a minimum budget the presiding officers of the church have done all within their power to make suitable preparation for this church-wide effort. The result now for the most part rests with the rank and file among the priesthood and membership of the church.

Before we go into action, we feel that we must send this last word to our people. Our responsibility to God and His church will not excuse us for giving less than our greatest effort at this present time.

Let there be no misunderstanding. The situation confronting the church continues to be serious. A minimum budget has been adopted. Every member and officer of the church is committed to a pledge to keep within that budget. The income for the first four months of 1932 was $12,000 less than that required to meet the running expenses of the church, to say nothing about debt reduction. This can not continue. Either the income must increase during the next few months or further retrenchment will be required, but further retrenchment means release of more men and the closing down of offices that are apparently absolutely necessary. It is not at all unlikely that this will mean further reduction of income.

Let us face the situation frankly. It is no time to become panicky. Chronic pessimism will be now, as ever, of no avail. On the other hand, that form of optimism which contents itself with rosy-hued prophecies of ultimate victory and forthwith does nothing to bring that victory will be equally futile.

It is a time for clear thinking. If our burden is great, so also is our mission. If this hour has brought to the church her greatest task, does it not also bring her greatest opportunity? Was the need of the gospel message ever more apparent? Was the call of suffering humanity ever more real or just? When was the challenge to walk the way of the cross ever more insistent or justified?

Nor are the promises of God lacking. Hitherto he hath been with us. His resources are assured to those who undertake his work. He speaks today through the mouth of an ancient prophet, "Obey my voice and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people." May we not have such assurance as was expressed by a beloved apostle of the last generation, "If in our struggles and weakness we falter and fall, let us struggle to our feet and go on, assured that the powers of heaven are enlisted in our behalf—As we increase our diligence and our zeal in striving to serve God, we shall surmount the obstacles that stand before us—Sometime the banner of King Immanuel will be carried by faithful hands on heights where now we dare not tread and the work will go on. The work of truth planted in the earth will never be lost until victory shall be won."

To our task, then, modern Israel. The special sacrifice effort of June, 1931, brought to the church a total of $67,140.42. What will the greater need and the almost unprecedented spiritual unity of June, 1932, bring? Let no one who holds himself a worthy member turn away from this call. Certainly each one can at least pray. We can each of us make some little sacrifice. We can for the Master's sake sacrifice till it hurts, only to find that sacrifice for the Master turns every such "hurt" into a blessing.

Let the priesthood lead the way. Let them visit every home. Let every member, young and old alike, share in lifting our mutual burdens. It is now that the church needs your help.

Is this not our day to carry forward the work of God? Remember the way of the Lord is forward. The work of the church must go on.

JOSEPH SMITH

President of the Church 1860—1914

The Ideals of Joseph Smith for the Church of the Present Day

"OUR PRESENT DUTY"

Our duty is very plain. It is not to sit idly down in the hope that righteousness will spring from the soil to our salvation, nor to the encouragement of a morbid sentimentality under the guise of ascetic religion; nor to a wild and careless enthusiasm that will continue to overlook the practical parts of our faith. No; neither of these lines of policy will do, and hence neither is our duty. We must look all the difficulties surrounding us, and the conditions of our lives, directly in the face, take them all into the account, and with a steadfast purpose fixed upon the object or objects to be obtained, pursue individually and collectively that line of conduct which will best secure those objects.

We must therefore buy lands, and improve them; plant orchards and vineyards, and eat the fruit of them; build houses and inhabit them; make homes and enjoy them; build cities, villages, and hamlets, and people them; build workshops, manufactories, mills, tanneries, foundries, and all other accessories to useful labor, and run them; establish schools, colleges, business houses, and make use of them; erect meeting houses, places of worship—temples—and worship in them.

In doing all this the true and abiding principles of justice and honesty, fair and honorable dealing only will avail us. Duplicity, deceit, and double dealing must ultimately stand face to face with justice, the eternal justice of God. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

We must be true men, true in all the walks of life, making better citizens, better sons, better husbands, better fathers, better daughters, better wives, better mothers, better men, better women, better Saints.

We must build our houses solidly, to stand for more than a day; we must build our fences, to secure good neighbors; we must strive for the best roads, best bridges, best wells and springs, best towns, best everything of public utility and benefit; doing all our work with a view to its stability.

Our spiritual labor must be of like permanent character. We must preach the principles of life and enforce them by our example. We must carry the news to the ends of the earth, and we must be glad in it ourselves. We must be faithful, sober, upright, and intelligent, and so shall we gain the desired end—happiness here, eternal life hereafter.—Joseph Smith, in the Saints' Herald, in volume 19, pages 85, 86, for February 1, 1872.

The Priesthood Manual Ready

The Priesthood Manual, after months of preparation, work, and revision, is now ready, having recently come from the Herald presses. Members of the Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and a number of others have contributed the various sections of the book, and those who purchase it may do so with the knowledge that it has been produced by men of long experience and high standing in the church. It is therefore recommended for all members of the priesthood, young and old.

The book deals with the work of the priesthood: church organization, pastoral work, administration of the ordinances, priesthood duties and church services, court procedure, etc. We can not list here all of the important subjects covered.

The book may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House for the price of forty-five cents. It is recommended for study by groups or classes of the priesthood, and for reunion work. There is enough material in it for one or two quarters of intensive study.

A Letter of Thanks

(We present the following letter from Brother and Sister Yager, missionaries in the South Sea Islands. We hope the letter will also cause our readers to remember those who labor far from home.—EDITORS.)

Dear Brethren of the Joint Quorums of Seventy:

Your letter expressing your remembrance of us in our distant mission together with your well wishes for our success came as a pleasant surprise. We were pleased to know that our brethren while enjoying each other's association in quorum session and engaged in the heavy duties of conference work found time and had the desire to write to us.

Each member of the quorums will kindly accept this letter as a personal recognition of your well wishes.

May we unitedly move the good cause we love forward.

THE YAGERS,

By J. H. YAGER.

The Church can not and will not unite except for the purpose of a Cause which is immensely more important than the Church itself: The salvation of humanity.—Elie Gounelle, editor of "Le Christianisme Social."

NEWS BRIEFS

President Smith Goes East

President Frederick M. Smith left Independence, June 9, beginning an itinerary in the East which before the end of the month will find him in the State of Maine. Accompanied by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, he went to Kirtland, Ohio, to spend June 11 and 12, then on to Philadelphia. The two will join Bishop E. L. Traver in Boston in time to attend the young people's convention at Indian River, Maine, June 18 and 19. After that Bishop DeLapp will return to Independence, and President Smith and Bishop Traver will attend the conference at Stonington, Maine, June 25 and 26, and the ministerial conference at Onset, Massachusetts, July 2 and 3.

The weeks since General Conference have been busy for President Smith, and have included trips through the Central, Western, and Northwestern States, but his eastern journey will be more extended.

Stewardship Garden for Topeka Juniors

The juniors of Topeka, Kansas, Branch, are immersed in a stewardship project for the summer. They have turned farmers and have a flourishing garden five miles out of Topeka at the home of a member of the congregation. The boys and girls have planted onions, carrots, beets, and popcorn, and are planning to put in more. They have great fun making trips into the country to work in their garden. Their leader is Sister Fern Weedmark.

"Church Objectives" Presented

"Church Objectives" were discussed together with the necessity of teaching them in Religious Education, at a special one-day meeting of the Northeastern Kansas District, held at Scranton, May 29. Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of Religious Education, was present to help district officers launch a series of one-day services in the district.

This summer the general and local ministry are going among the people with the earnest intent of presenting the objectives of the church, adopted by the recent conference. Scores of sermons are being preached on these objectives; a pamphlet which presents them, has been printed by the church and issued to pastors and other ministers. The support of the members is being enlisted in carrying out the objectives. Special district meetings, reunions, local study classes, and prayer and preaching services are being devoted to the presentation of these matters.

Standing High Council Deliberates

For three successive nights last week, the Standing High Council of the church held prolonged sessions in the office of the First Presidency at the Auditorium. Harmony and unanimity marked the deliberations, and the eight new members of the council, chosen and ordained at the last General Conference, found the sessions most engrossing, and entered into the business with sincerity and earnestness. The council is now composed of the following: C. Ed. Miller, D. O. Cato, R. T. Cooper, I. A. Smith, Howard Andersen, H. G. Barto, C. L. Olson, Leonard Lea, A. K. Dillee, A. B. Phillips, Amos E. Allen, and J. S. Kelley. It will meet again July 2.

Newman Wilson, "Busiest Man in Town"

Shortly after his release as a conference appointee, Elder Newman Wilson, of Jonesport, Maine, was elected the town's first officer, first selectman. He is known as the "busiest man in town," and yet finds time to do more for the church than ever before, so the Saints think. He holds special meetings at neighboring towns, encourages the young people's prayer meeting movement, teaches the Doctrine and Covenants, and participates in other church activities besides giving invaluable aid in the regular meetings of Jonesport Branch.

Council Bluffs Saints Blessed With Helpers

Council Bluffs, Iowa, has recently profited from the visits of a number of church workers, Apostles Paul M. Hanson and John F. Garver, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Elder Blair Jensen.

Far West Stake Gets Acquainted With 1932 Conference

With the hope of bringing a portion of the fine spirit of the recent General Conference into the lives of Saints in Far West Stake, Elder Ward A. Hougas, stake president, has conducted classes at several key-points in the stake. Using as an outline a pamphlet entitled "Trail Blazers," prepared for this purpose, he launched into a discussion of the major resolutions passed by the conference which made definite our goals and objectives.

Saint Joseph had the first institute the evenings of May 2 and 3, and the following Sunday Stewartsville and Maple Grove Branches joined forces for the day. May 15, found all of the northern branches well represented at Guilford. Kingston was host to the neighboring branches May 29. Good crowds attended all these meetings and a splendid spirit was enjoyed.

OFFICIAL

Young People's Council Appointed

Elsewhere in this issue of the Herald, the reader will find a reprint of "A Working Agreement" which was first published in the Daily Herald, April 14, 1932, and which represents the concensus of opinion growing out of informal discussions held by the young people and their leaders during the late General Conference.

Since we believe that the proposed "plan of action" on the part of the young people is wholly consistent with the general church program as outlined by the conference and will serve to make possible a vital and close relationship between the young people and the church, we are happy to endorse this movement.

The last paragraph of the agreement asks the Presidency to appoint a council of five "to work with the director of young people in carrying out the general church program as it affects the young people." After careful consideration we have appointed eleven young men and women to act in this supervisory council to Brother E. E. Closson, the Director of the Young People's Division of the church. The individuals named represent various sections of the United States and also Canada, England, and Australia. They will be expected to cooperate with the general director in an advisory way, serving as his representative, each in his own particular area.

We are happy to present the following list of young people who have been asked to serve on this advisory council and to urge for them the loyal cooperation of church officials and members.

Lawrence Brockway, 929 E. California Street, Pasadena, California.

Grenville Swenson, 2422 Maple Street, Everett, Washington.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

A Working Agreement

The Young People and Their Leaders Share Their Problems and Agree Upon a Plan of Action

During the busy days of the conference daily group conferences have been held in the interest of the young people and their leaders. We are happy to present the following as a "working agreement" and "plan of action" which comes as a result of these conferences.

This program has the hearty approval of the First Presidency. It does not contemplate setting up of new machinery, but rather considers the program of the church, on the one hand, and the organization of the Young People's Division of the church school, on the other, as adequate for the devotion and enthusiasm of our young people.

Both the young people and their leaders, however, do feel the need of pooling their experiences, sharing their materials, and working out together their common problems. It would seem to us therefore to be appropriate that they should "strike hands" at times in their respective districts and even throughout the church.

Contact with the young people and their leaders convinces us that they not only need just now a most vital sort of relationship with the church and its program, but that they sincerely desire such. To this end and for these purposes we heartily indorse this agreement and plan of procedure and rejoice as we anticipate this sharing in our common tasks and this opportunity to profit as a church from the devotion and enthusiasm of youth.

The committee appointed to draft a definite plan of action for young people consisted of George Mesley, Eunice Smith Livingston, James B. Moses, Elizabeth Johnson, and James Eftter. From this committee came the following suggestions which were adopted by the group of young people and their leaders who attended the Young People's round table discussions at General Conference.

I. In harmony with the plan proposed by the First Presidency, we favor the formation of a general Council of Presidents of Young People's Groups.

a. This Council to be made up of all duly elected presidents of all groups and classes of young people under the jurisdiction of the Church School. Presidents of such groups as organized classes, dramatic and music clubs, social and recreational organizations working under the general supervision of the branch or district will be considered eligible, and shall automatically become members of this Council of Presidents upon sending their names and addresses to the general office of Religious Education.

b. The purpose of this council shall be:

1. To promote a closer fellowship between the young people of the church.

2. To collect, organize, and distribute program materials, study outlines, and practical ideas for advancing the young people's work in locals and districts. These to be printed in the Herald or Vision, or be mimeographed and sent out as funds to cover cost of same is made available.

3. To meet and hold regular sessions, round table discussions, and fellowship gatherings at General Conference time.

4. To respond to the call of the general church in advancing its ideals and purposes.

5. To emphasize the fact that all young people's classes and local organizations are, and should be a part of the work of the church and are definitely under the Young People's Division of the Church School.

II. We suggest that no general name be adopted for local

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Request for Prayers

Charles F. Mottet has been a member of the church for a number of years, and has brought his family into the church. Now he is afflicted with tuberculosis, and has been in the hospital for about two months. Ira O. Waldron, pastor at Webb City, Missouri, requests the members of the church to pray for this worthy and suffering brother.

Emmie Foy Andrews, of Brewton, Alabama, thirteen years of age, and but recently baptized, asks prayers for herself and for her mother. She suffers with stomach trouble, and her mother has rheumatism. They are isolated and can not attend church services. They have faith that they may be helped by prayer.

A New Song

Those who attended the fine prayer meetings and devotional services in the Stone Church during the recent General Conference will remember the song which was given through Patriarch John F. Martin. Many inquiries for the words of the song came to the editors. Some time later those words were published in the columns of the Herald.

Brother C. F. Kueffer and Sister Lorena Kueffer met with Brother Martin, and together they worked out the melody and harmonized it for regular musical instrumentation. The music is now said to be very beautiful.

In order that those who desire copies of both words and music, may obtain them, Brother Kueffer has gone to some expense to arrange for copies to be made, and sold at cost to those who wish them. Copies may be obtained at twenty cents each for single copies, or at fifteen cents each in lots of one dozen or more. Address C. F. Kueffer, 2119 West Twentieth Street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

groups until this matter has been given more careful consideration, leaving the choice of a name of the Council of Presidents.

III. The present ideals and standards of the Tenth Legion should be recommended to all young people of the church who desire to qualify for membership.

IV. We recognize the value of young people's institutes, camps, and conventions, both general and regional, and urge that such gatherings be provided this year (1932) as the general officers, in conjunction with local and district workers, deem advisable.

V. We suggest that a council of five be appointed by the First Presidency to work with the director of young people in carrying out the general church program as it affects young people.

STUDY OUTLINES

For Class and Home Work

A LAST WORD

By the First Presidency

We list this editorial for discussion because we believe that every member of the church should have an opportunity to read it, and if possible, to discuss it. After reading and discussing it, we recommend that the class talk about the outline below, which was selected from a folder entitled "Ideals of Membership."

WHY YOU SHOULD SUPPORT THE CHURCH NOW

1. Because it is God's church. It is His business.
2. Because it is the church of each member.
3. Because the church is committed to a definite spiritual program unanimously approved at the 1932 General Conference.
4. Because your support will sustain the appointed ministry.
5. Because your support will sustain the missionaries' families and pay the back allowances.
6. Because your support will pay the church debt and eliminate interest payments.
7. Because every dollar paid into the church is spent for a definite purpose.
8. Because church support is the moral obligation of each member.
9. Because God requires it. It is a part of the plan of salvation.
10. Because it will assist your spiritual growth.

WHAT SHALL WE PREACH?

By Elbert A. Smith

1. The question, What message shall we carry to the world? is a serious one. What things in the gospel are of major importance? What shall be stressed? What teachings, if any, can be passed as of minor importance? Some men specialize in the Book of Mormon, some in the "hoofs and horns" of biblical prophecy, some in our social plans, and others in the educational aspects of the work. This difference is reflected in the different kinds of members that are brought into the work by the various members of the missionary and pastoral forces.

2. What are the "Major Teaching Objectives" which the author quotes?

3. See the latter part of the article where the author quotes the "affirmative spiritual ministry." Do these ideals apply to every family in the church? Discuss the items separately.

4. What does the author say would have prevented the economic chaos that has followed the World War? Are we prepared to take advantage of that means of salvation now? Will we be prepared in the future?

Our Task

What Shall We Preach?

By Elbert A. Smith

When I was a boy on the farm the people in the community where I lived had this saying: "One rabbit track is just like another rabbit track, and one Latter Day Saint preacher preaches just like all other Latter Day Saint preachers." This homely saying appealed to me because I was a boy and had seen many rabbit tracks and they all looked alike. Of late years it must be admitted that our ministers have not all made the same kind of a track. Probably it is not desirable that there should be a mechanical uniformity. Men are different in their mental as well as their physical makeup. Some men have small feet, some have large feet, others have still larger feet. Some toe in and some toe out; and there is as great a difference in mental and spiritual qualities as there is in physical. Still it remains true that when a Latter Day Saint minister goes through a neighborhood with his message, his fundamental teachings should agree with the fundamental teachings of his brethren and there should be no question that the track that he leaves is that of a Latter Day Saint minister and not that of a Methodist, Unitarian, or Atheist.

In past years the Joint Council in its preconference meetings has often devoted days, sometimes weeks, to the discussion of a few points of difference upon which there was little chance of reaching an agreement. This year they devoted their attention to arriving at points of agreement on major questions before the church, and on most of the problems attacked there was reached a unanimity of opinion, amounting usually to a unanimous decision. The question of teaching was taken up under the head, "Major Teaching Objectives of the Church." A statement was evolved eventually upon which there was a unanimous vote, and it was unanimously adopted by the General Conference April 9, 1932. In no sense was this an attempt to make a creed or revise a creed or alter in any way previous statements of faith. It was an attempt to reach a common understanding concerning fundamentals to which the church has long ago subscribed itself. Being myself a fundamentalist so far as Latter Day Saint doctrines are concerned, I was greatly pleased with this statement to which unanimous agreement was given. Concerning the things to be taught now to the people of the world, I quote the following opening paragraphs:

1. The message of the Restoration with its distinctive features including such principles of belief as outlined in the "Official Statement of Belief and Epitome of Faith and Doctrines" and "Belief and Practice" with especial emphasis upon such features as continued revelation, divinely authorized priesthood, the Book of Mormon, and the divine mission of the church.

a. In the teaching of this distinctive message not only the application of, but the authority for, the same should be sought in "life." The message of the restored gospel must not only be expressed in individual and social living but find its essential truth in the nature of life itself. The gospel way is the way of life.

b. This distinctive message should be recognized as a direct challenge to the paganism in the present social order. We should therefore fearlessly proclaim the ethics of Christ, set up his standards of value and conduct—the sinfulness of sin and the godlessness of many institutions and practices.

2. In our teaching, the major objectives of the church should always be brought into clear perspective: the evangelizing of the world and the establishment of Zion.

3. The heart of this gospel message is in true human and divine relationships, and is found in the doctrine of Stewardships.

4. The "law of temporalities" should be stressed, kindly and firmly, without equivocation or apology and as impartial in application.

It is to be observed that emphasis is to be placed upon the fundamental doctrines of the church as set forth long ago in the Epitome of Faith and Doctrine, with special emphasis upon continued revelation, divinely appointed priesthood, the Book of Mormon, and the divine mission of the church. All of which has its starting point in the fundamental principles of the gospel, which the world needs to hear and heed at this time perhaps more than ever before in the history of humanity. It is to be noted, too, that this teaching is to have its application in life. It is not to be merely a theological or forensic defense, but it is something to be worked out in actual living among men and women; and it finds its authority not only in the word of God but in the needs and aspirations and ideals of life itself. The gospel is "the way of life." We sometimes find our authority for doctrinal teachings in the statement, "It is written"; but long before the injunction was written in the Scripture, it was written in the needs of human nature. It was written in life itself.

While I have said that these teachings are primarily designed to reach the world, it is to be remembered that in many of our branches, especially in our larger branches, we have coming on wave after wave of young people, generation after generation, who have never heard these things preached from the pulpit as their fathers did who lived in isolated fields and were visited by the missionaries with the word of life. So there is great necessity that these truths should be preached even in the branches, no matter how large or old or well established they may be. And this may well be done especially in those branches that habitually maintain a missionary program and devote their Sunday night services to missionary sermons.

The particular important truths to be presented to the Saints, those who long ago comprehended and obeyed the principles of the gospel, and need now to go forward in harmony with Paul's injunction, were set forth by the Council in the following terms:

We suggest an affirmative spiritual ministry to the Saints, including the urging of:

- a. Individual and family devotion.
- b. The study of the Word of God, especially as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.
- c. Intelligent and regular reading of the church periodicals.
- d. Regular attendance at church services.
- e. Intelligent, alert, and efficient participation in the work of the church.
- f. Financial support of the church through whole-hearted compliance with the financial law.
- g. Godly walk and conversation.

The distinctive message of the church is for all. Wisdom should be exercised in the presentation of these principles so that such will be adapted to the age, capacity, and needs of the particular group to which the "teacher" is endeavoring to minister, the varying needs and capacities of such groups as nonmembers, adults, parents, young people, children, to be clearly recognized in our teaching procedure.

The teachings of Christ are vital. The first commandment coming to this church was, "Hear ye him." The statement is made in his own words, "My words, they are light and they are life." John said of him, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

To Timothy it was said, "Take heed unto the doctrine. Continue therein, for by so doing thou shalt not only save thyself but them that hear thee." What the world needs today is the preaching of the gospel of Christ. The cost of rejecting his message in the past has been enormous. His message is distinctly one of the rebirth and regeneration of individuals and of the peace that consequently follows to regenerated men and women. Bruce Barton tells us in the American Magazine for May that the cost of the World War to all nations combined was equivalent to $20,000 per hour for every hour since Christ came into the world with his message of peace and good will. This enormous cost with its attendant suffering might have been avoided had the gospel of Christ been accepted long ago. The cost of crime can not be calculated in dollars and cents. The cost of our economic disorder and breakdown is beyond computation, but it has reached the point where a prominent Catholic and a prominent Protestant united in saying that it soon will be a choice between Christ and Marx. Humanity to be saved must adjust itself to a practical application of the religion of Jesus Christ. Christian stewardship as provided for in the revelation of God would have saved disaster, but the very beginning of our teaching leading up to the presentation and application of the doctrine of stewardship is found in the message of repentance and baptism and regeneration as set forth in what we commonly call the "first principles of the gospel." The world needs a clear-cut, distinct message of gospel truth, such a declaration as our early elders were united in as they went out to the world.

Joseph Smith as he paced the floor in Carthage Jail, conscious that his hours were numbered, said to his comrades, "I wish that I could preach to the Saints just once more." If a man had only one more sermon to preach what would be his message? Without doubt he would avoid matters of secondary importance, more or less extraneous to the fundamental beliefs of the church, and he would drive straight home in the most direct and powerful presentation of the fundamental principles of life and truth within his capability to deliver. Let us go out and preach as though we had but one more sermon to preach, for this is a time of crisis in the church such as we never before experienced. It is a time of crisis in the world such as history has never before recorded. "Rise up, oh men of God," and preach the word of the Lord boldly and clearly.

"Jealousy Is as Cruel as the Grave"

APOCRYPHA, CANTICLES 8:6

By Gomer T. Griffiths

The Lord informs us in Doctrine and Covenants 88:1 as follows: "Verily," thus saith the Lord unto you concerning the Apocrypha, "There are many things contained therein that are true and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true which are interpolations by the hands of men." However, the writer knows from practical experience in this world, of about fifty-six years in the ministry and his associations with mankind that jealousy, as stated in the Apocrypha, is as "cruel as the grave." It has produced more misery, distress and suffering than any other thing in this world. It has caused and brought about the downfall of nations and kingdoms; it has broken up thousands upon thousands of homes. Also, it has caused the disruption of many branches and districts of the church; destroyed choirs and orchestras, and has in many instances led to physical and spiritual murders.

In 1831, soon after this church was organized, the Lord commanded that those who were "ordained into this ministry should strip themselves of jealousy and fears, and humble themselves before him." He knew that if they would harbor the spirit of jealousy, they would not be able to accomplish the work assigned them, acceptably to him.

This green-eyed monster led Cain to murder his brother, Abel, because God was more pleased with the offering that Abel brought to the Lord than he was with Cain's.

Jealousy actuated the brothers of Joseph to seek his death because God had given him dreams which indicated and portrayed his future usefulness. They, concluding that because of the father's love displayed toward Joseph, in that he gave him a coat of many colors, and Joseph himself, innocently telling them of the many dreams that he had, which signified the great things that Joseph would be instrumental in bringing to pass in the interests of his fellow men, to the honor and glory of God, which he, himself, could not interpret, at that time; but it seems from the history given of this incident that his brothers interpreted it correctly. They foresaw that some day he would be greater than they, and hence jealously caused them to put him in the pit to die a horrible death and also prompted them to tell their father malicious falsehoods regarding his absence and to cover up their wickedness. It was the spirit of jealousy that constrained them to commit the horrible act of placing their young brother in the pit to starve to death. However, his God came to his rescue; but they were murderers in their hearts. Such unholy conduct on their part, was as cruel as the grave.

Jealousy manifests itself again in the heart of King Saul, who sought to take the life of David because the people sang, "Saul has killed his thousands, but David has killed his tens of thousands," and for the reason that he could see that the people were more favorably impressed with David; also, that he would peradventure take his place upon the throne as King of Israel.

The brothers of Nephi did all within their power to destroy Nephi because the Lord had selected him as their leader. Those who are acquainted with this history, know that Nephi had to suffer great agony in consequence of their jealousy.

The brother of the Prodigal Son became jealous because his father had proclaimed a feast in celebration of the return of the lost brother. The idea seemed preposterous to the brother who had been so faithful and had remained at home with his father, that he should condescend to kill the fatted calf in honor of his return. To make matters worse, his father placed the ring on his finger, which was the mark of his sonship, and placed the robe upon him in view of what the Prodigal Son had done. But, the father, in the spirit of kindness, which actuates men of God to return good for evil, replied, "All I have is yours," because of the fact that he had been a dutiful son. But that spirit of greed and selfishness is the trouble of the people of this dispensation and has been since the days of Adam. If it had not been for this contemptible spirit actuating the people in and out of this church, Zion would have been redeemed long ere this.

Herod had all male children under two years of age murdered because of his jealousy of Jesus Christ. I repeat again, "Jealousy is as cruel as the grave." It has separated fathers and mothers, and robbed innocent, helpless children from the love and protection of their parents and has thrown them out on the cold sinful world to battle for themselves. It has destroyed nations and has caused the shedding of blood of millions upon millions of people in times of war.

It has also caused the ruin and downfall of many, many young men and women in this church, to my knowledge. I have known very many young men who demonstrated that they had talents and abilities that surpassed many of the older brethren who forgot the command that was given to the ministry, "strip yourselves of jealousies." Some of these young men were natural-born orators—a gift from God. If they talked at all they would display eloquence, and some of the brethren who were not so blessed, became jealous and suffered themselves to throw obstacles in the way of said young men which discouraged them and impeded their progress. In process of time, said young men gave way to discouragement and that was the end of their usefulness. If this beautiful, valuable talent had been appreciated and those possessing it had received the proper encouragement, they would have been a power in the hands of God in accomplishing a great work in the interests of the church and the salvation of their fellow men. I have known young men who had the talent referred to above, to be praised by some of the membership, who would remark at the close of the sermon delivered by the said brother, that they had never heard such a wonderful sermon before, and some brother standing nearby who heard this remark, became jealous, forthwith, because he had preached in the same pulpit many times and no one had ever patted him on the back and praised his sermon in that way. Consequently, thereafter, he used his influence to the detriment of the young man by speaking disparagingly of his efforts to others and to discredit the young man in the estimation of others. The final result was that the young man gave way to despondency and relaxed his efforts in the church and quit the ministry.

In the opinion of the writer the individual who conducts himself as the person thus referred to, is guilty of committing a spiritual murder—the worse kind of murder. I have gone into a branch and to my happy surprise, found that they had a fine choir of good singers and all the Saints appreciated those who were thus using their talents according to the commands of God. Within a few months or a year, when I returned to that same branch, to my dismay and surprise, no choir. When I asked the pastor why it was that they had no choir, his answer was, "Jealousy destroyed it." Many of the orchestras have suffered the same fate.

How true is the saying, "Jealousy is as cruel as the grave." The downfall of Satan and one third of the angels was caused through the jealousy of his Satanic majesty. He, desiring to be exalted on the throne and to be like God, himself: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning; how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the North: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High." (Isaiah 14: 12-14.)

We should keep in remembrance the fact that the spirit of jealousy which comes from the evil one, and the spirit of love, which emanates from God, can not dwell in the heart at the same time; one must give way to the other. But, all who are interested in obtaining eternal life and the privilege to dwell with Christ during the millenium, should live in accordance with his holy will, so that they can retain that spirit which will produce the following fruits in our lives: (Galatians 5: 22, 23) "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." The spirit that produces jealousy is that same spirit that produces the following fruits which are manifested in the flesh: (Galatians 5: 19-21) "The works of the flesh are manifested, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, [jealousy], murders, drunkenness, revilings, and such like: Of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in the time passed, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

In conclusion, I think I have demonstrated the fact as found in the text proper, namely, that "jealousy is as cruel as the grave."

Ingestion Infection of Tuberculosis

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

We now recognize that most of the tuberculosis in children comes through the alimentary tract. Little by little this information has finally been proved. One investigator has traced the infection from the various parts of the body to the lungs, through the intestinal tract. It is conceded that intestinal tuberculosis is more frequent in the British Isles than in other places, on account of the popularity of drinking raw milk. When the infection is transferred from the intestinal route to the other parts of the body, the tubercular germ pierces the mucous membrane of the digestive tract, leaving unmistakable signs of its passage in its wake. Franklin found that by vigorously rubbing tubercle germs on the skin of guinea-pigs, he could cause tuberculosis of the internal organs. Unmistakable evidence is at hand to prove that tuberculosis may rise by ingestion or inhalation and that most cases enter the body through the nose, mouth, throat and passages. There are other miscellaneous methods of transference of this disease, such as human excreta, that may be found in drinking water by various putriferactive processes, or infected eating utensils. Eating utensils may become infected by the common house-fly and other insects, or by tubercular patients handling such articles.

The Pirquet skin tubercular test has revealed that most infants become infected by the end of the first year of life. The pulmonary variety is not so frequent in childhood, the glandular variety, being much more common. The child who has had a pronounced clean bill-of-fare at birth, but unfortunately, come in contact with the sputum on the floor, and drinks cow's milk containing tubercle bacilli, is very unlikely to escape this infection. An inspection should be made of the things, such as toys, etc., that are handled promiscuously by children. The danger of personal contact between the children and the adults should not be overlooked since it has been so frequently demonstrated that infected children do not present evidences of tuberculosis until later in life. For this reason, it is to be classed, almost exclusively, as a childhood disease. The tubercle germ is frequently found in the eyes of children, and many cases of minor eye infection furnish suitable place for an underlying infection of tuberculosis. Children of this class are frequently found with glandular infections. All physicians should be on the lookout, in all cases, for obscure local eye involvement, especially those of the so-called "scrofulous type." It is a strange fact that husband and wife do not more frequently inoculate each other with this germ, but as above stated, it being a childhood disease, it is quite likely that immunity has been acquired through prior infections.

A child with a tubercular mother, is likely to contract the disease from the mother, and it is conceded by some that women with active tuberculosis should not become pregnant, and if such should happen, the pregnancy should be interrupted. No tubercular mother should nurse her baby and should by no means be spared all information about the various methods of transmission.

Fulfillment of Prophecy

PART IV.

By A. M. Chase

If the world ever receives the "old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things," that gospel must be accompanied by present revelation—in other words it must "put the gospel in the present tense," to quote President E. A. Smith. The one thing which stands out above every other distinguishing mark, which sets the people apart from the churches of the world in every age, is the fact that they have always been, and must always be, in touch with God; and this touch always results in the thing which Peter referred to when he declared, "No prophecy of the Scripture is given of any private will of man. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1: 20, 21.) And when such utterances are written it is Scripture; and Paul's declaration is still true: "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Timothy 3: 16, 17.) But the world at large—the so-called Christian world—is united in the conviction that revelation is a dangerous thing, and that it was entirely done away, along with most of the spiritual gifts, soon after the day of Pentecost. Even our Holiness church, than whom we have no more enthusiastic claimants to being in possession of the Holy Ghost, agree with the rest of our coreligionists in this. In the paper, Holiness, September 15, 1916, edited by J. F. Watkins and J. A. King, in an editorial reviewing an article advocating the editing of, or the forming of a new Bible, this occurs: "We safeguard our secular institutions against sudden or spasmodic changes, for experience has proved that people can not be trusted to legislate for themselves without some restraining and limiting influence in the form of fundamental law, and the same thing applies to religion." The editor well says, "People can not be trusted absolutely to legislate for themselves without some restraining and limiting influence, and this is just that God has delegated only to himself the dictation of the Bible and men were inspired by the Holy Spirit, and when enough was written the word of inspiration ceased."

It seems to your writer that this attitude of our coreligionists limits God and the gospel to the past tense indeed, and with the writer of the Book of Mormon we feel like saying, "Because that I have spoken one word, ye need not suppose that I can not speak another." "Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another?" (2 Nephi 12: 63, 59.)

Yes, when this "marvelous work and a wonder" began to be proclaimed, the outstanding feature of the message was that the promise of the Holy Ghost was just as sure to those who would "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" as it was to those to whom Peter made the proposition on the day of Pentecost. This promise still holds good, and the fulfillment of it today still brings unto those who obey, "The testimony of Jesus (which), is the Spirit of prophecy," bringing every gift—yes bringing back to earth "the old gospel and sustained by the ancient order of things," that their feet may be placed on that rock which Jesus promised should be the sure foundation of his church. (See Matthew 16: 18, 19.) But, like those unto whom John wrote, we do not believe "every spirit, but try the spirits," and "we do have a restraining and limiting influence," in the Scriptures already given, for God speaks to one nation, and to one people like unto another, or in other words, God always speaks like himself, for his word is truth.

And all this marvelous work began less than a quarter of a century before the seasonable rains were restored to Palestine after centuries of absence, and within the first half of the century that saw gradual lifting of those restrictions from Jacob that had made him ashamed, and his face to wax pale.

Surely since all this has occurred in harmony with the promise of the Lord as recorded in Isaiah 29, it seems to me that the world should "know that there has been a prophet among them."

But there is still prophetic history to be fulfilled. Let us trace some of it that we may not be taken unawares, but be ready when he comes.

I have referred to some of the promises of the regathering of the Jews; but in common with the other nations of the world, they must be cleansed from their wickedness before Christ comes to dwell among them. Zachariah declares, "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein," (chapter 2:4) and this was also declared by the early ministers of this church, to be a fact to be soon accomplished. We are tempted to ask a question that Paul propounded to the Roman saints, "What if some have not believed, shall their unbelief make the truth of God of none effect?" Surely not, and Jerusalem is now being inhabited as towns without walls for the first time in the known history of the world. Zechariah also declares, "I will gather my people from the east country, and from the west country; and I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness": (8:7, 8.) but before this can be fulfilled this people must pass through the fires of purification, for, "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteous." (Malachi 3:2, 3.)

Yes, while Judah will become so prominent and self-sufficient among the nations, ("be established in the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills," Isaiah 2:2), and the time will come when "the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength, in the Lord of hosts their God," (Zechariah 12:5) yet disaster shall overtake them, "for I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city." (14:2.)

Yes, "Again shall the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet be fulfilled," but, "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." (verse 3.) And as Isaiah declares, "The day of the Lord of Hosts soon cometh upon all nations; . . . yea, upon the proud and lofty, and upon every one who is lifted up, and he shall be brought low." (Isaiah 2:12.) And unto Jerusalem he says, "Thy men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty in the war. And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she shall be desolate, and shall sit upon the ground." (Isaiah 3:25, 26.)

Zephaniah agrees with this prediction when he says, "I will take away out of the midst of thee them that rejoice in thy pride, and thou shalt no more be haughty because of my holy mountain." (Zephaniah 3:11.) And all three of these prophets agree upon the culmination: Zephaniah says, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth; for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid, etc." (Verses 12, 13.)

Isaiah predicts, "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth, excellent and comely to them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, they that are left in Zion, and they that remain in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem; when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof, by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning." (Chapter 4:1-3.)

While Zechariah declares, "I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried; they shall call on my name and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." (13:9.) "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." (14:9.)

Yes, as the Master declared, there shall be "Tribulation in those days," so much so that, "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." (Both the gospel, as taught by that body who are "the kingdom of God and his Christ," and the light given under the teaching of those who still keep the Mosaic law, even those who are those denominated as the "woman which was the church of God," who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ," and who had "fled into the wilderness," where she had a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand and two hundred and three score years." She has now emerged and again been placed in her own land, and there she has kept the ceremonies of the Mosaic law, but now, her light fails, and she being desolate shall sit upon the ground.)

In this time of desolation Israel's "stars shall fall from heaven," her mighty among men shall be brought low: but she shall not be alone in this desolation, for, "the powers of heaven shall be shaken"—even those to whom has been recommended the everlasting gospel, unto whom the Master has said, "I give unto you the keys of the kingdom," and, as Paul has said, these things are done that the things that may be shaken may be removed, that the things that may not be shaken may remain, for none shall escape this trial by fire, when "the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble." But this writer also reassures the faithful when he says, "But unto you that fear my name shall the Son of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves in the stall." (Malachi 4: 1, 2.)

So, let us take courage in the Master's promise, as we see this history being enacted before us. He declares, "And whoso treasures up my words, shall not be deceived." Let us not be among those whose love waxes cold because iniquity abounds, but let us "watch, . . . and be also ready," and "be as men that wait for our Lord to come," that we may not be counted as foolish virgins, who were unprepared for the very thing that they had gone out to participate in, the Marriage supper of the Lamb. Let us not only pray, but work, that "thy kingdom may come, and thy will be done on earth even as in heaven."

Autobiography

XX.—MISSION WORK IN DES MOINES—1905

By James Franklin Mintun

(It is often said that the busiest lives are the least eventful. When the work is going forward at its best rate there is nothing but routine to record. In the life of a missionary a year may go by when the whole succession of events is composed largely of preaching services, baptisms, administrations, discussions and visits. Some of these "uneventful" years are the most profitable. Such a year was 1905 for the author. We offer these selected notes of the less usual circumstances of the year's experiences.)

This year of 1905 came in on Sunday, and I spent the day in worship, attending Sunday school and religio sessions, enjoying an edifying sermon at 11 a. m., by Elder Charles Derry, and preached at seven thirty. The week was spent in arranging home affairs and work for the City Mission. On the ninth my daughter, Alice, was very sick. I administered to her three times. I encountered a sinister power operative to prevent her relief and strove all night against it, and God gave relief.

I returned to my mission the next day, and while changing trains at Boone I visited Brother John Hall and found him very sick, and sought the Lord for him. A vicious attack was made against the Book of Mormon at Hastie, by Amos Miller on the sixteenth and seventeenth, including in his attack the book of Doctrine and Covenants. The following three nights I made a conclusive reply. After spending Sunday in the city, I began a series of preaching services at Hastie continuing till the twenty-ninth, the days being spent by answering questions of those who called on me concerning the church and the faith.

On February 2, I was at Dow City and preached the funeral sermon of Sister A. F. Rudd, and learned that my wife was very sick, so that after the sermon the next day I returned home to care for her. While there my son took sick. I remained to care for them till the fourteenth, and started for my mission the next day.

On the twentieth of March I was called to Woodbine to administer to the daughter of Brother L. W. Kibler, who was seriously afflicted, asking me to come fasting, which I did. The Lord saw fit to give her only partial relief; but we were thankful for the blessing received. I found my wife very sick, intensely suffering from inflammatory rheumatism. I nursed her from the twentieth till the twenty-sixth, administering to her five times. On the following day after consultation with my wife, who was improving, we decided that I should return to my mission. My record says, "By her (wife's) consent I concluded to return to the mission, going in faith that if I would be faithful to the Master's requests, that he would be true to his promise to me, and would give complete relief to my wife."

I returned home on June 15 to be present at the graduating exercises of my daughter, Ruth, when I was called upon to give talks at the school at 9 a. m. and 8.30 p. m. At the latter time my daughter received her diploma. Remained at home for several days to look after financial affairs, and while there I assisted with the Sunday services, teaching Sunday school and religio classes, and preaching twice.

On August 8, the Lambert sisters gave a recitation in the city, which I attended. It was very entertaining. These sisters were the daughters of Brother Daniel F. Lambert, of Lamoni.

I was a member of the Iowa State Anti-Saloon League at this time, and there was an active campaign being carried on in the city to rid itself of a brewery, and I spent many days with a petition and gave several lectures to assist in the success of this campaign. These efforts, which I thought were so feeble in comparison to what they should have been that I felt discouraged at times, but those in charge of the Temperance Movement gave their hearty approval to what I was doing. Brethren A. A. Reams and H. B. Watson assisted me in copying the names on the petition against the saloons.

On the fifteenth of August I was shut out of the building on the south side [Des Moines] where I had been holding services, and where I had started a Sunday school, by a Reverend McFarlan and Mrs. Scott M. Ladd, both of whom were very abusive to Sister Howard who had charge of the building, because of her belief and their prejudices. Afterwards these same parties were shut out of the same building because of the manner they conducted their services to the disturbance of the neighbors with their noise, and the police took charge and closed their meetings.

Some time later I was placed in charge of part of the city in the circulation of a petition against the saloons, and gave a talk at a mass meeting of the temperance workers at the Y. M. C. A. building.

On September seventeenth, while at a social service at the church, "I enjoyed the Spirit of prophecy, and through it Brother H. H. Gold was called to the office of Priest in the church; Saints were instructed and God's mercy extended."

When I first entered upon my missionary work in the city of Des Moines, they had a very small building, and with the brethren we had exchanged it for a building on Fourteenth Street. I with others were authorized to prepare for the dedication of this building, which had been repaired and re-decorated to some extent. I sought the presence at the dedicatory services of Bishop E. L. Kelley, and President Joseph Smith. By request I wrote articles for the Dailies relating to the dedication and our faith, which were published. The dedication occurred on November 12, Bishop Kelley preaching the sermon and I offering the dedicatory prayer. Praise services were held at 2.30 p. m., and the Bishop preached at night.

I held preaching services at Hastie from September 19 to 28, with some interest by a few. While holding these services I preached at the services at the Chapel in the city in the forenoon and attended the branch staff meeting in the afternoon of Sundays. On October 9 I returned home on the account of the illness of my wife, and while there prepared temporal affairs for the winter.

I made a visit to a Mr. Rosser Davis and wife on December 11, and found them devoted to the gospel, but they could not be reconciled to the teachings of the Utah elders in regard to the marriage question as taught by Brigham Young, although they were members of the Utah church. They made several inquiries to more fully understand the views of the church, and the differences between us and the Utah Mormons. They were pleased with our position. I occupied every day during the remaining days of this year reconciling troubled souls, administering to the sick, several of whom were marvelously blessed, preaching and calling on those who wished to better understand the way of life, presiding over services and church rehearsals, teaching Sunday school and Religio classes, and instructing some who had been severed from the church how they might legally return and be re-baptized, besides writing several articles for the daily papers, and actively assisting in the temperance movement in the city of Des Moines.

I spent Christmas Day by taking dinner with a young brother and sister, and enjoyed their associations, then called upon Brother William David Hall and family, whom I dearly loved. The father and mother have since gone to their reward, and by their request I assisted to lay their bodies to rest in the cemetery at Shenandoah. Even though I enjoyed my associations, yet my record says, "Felt lonely. Others were enjoying associations of loved ones, and I, apparently, not a necessity to their enjoyment."

Council Bluffs, Iowa

The work in Council Bluffs is moving steadily onward. As a whole the meetings are well attended. The Wednesday evening prayer meetings are showing an increase in attendance. The Young People have had several interesting gatherings in conjunction with the Omaha young people.

The Council Bluffs young people's division of the church school holds regular early morning prayer services the third Sunday of each month.

On March 18, the Music and Drama Wheel number five, Mrs. W. T. Spanswick, leader, gave the last of a series of secular concerts in the church at Council Bluffs and the following Monday evening at Omaha. Those in attendance and especially many nonmembers were lavish in their praise of the fine work done.

The choir is progressing. On May 9 they had a steak fry in Fairmount Park, but it turned out to be more nearly a banquet, judging from the amount of food brought by the women. This was given in honor of Miss Edith Burton, who left recently on an extended vacation trip to California.

The adult division have regular potluck dinners the first Friday evening of each month, at which time everyone brings food and all eat together. An interesting program is provided at each session. The last dinner was replaced by an unusual event; Apostle Paul Hanson was invited to give his illustrated lectures here.

Last Sunday evening Patriarch F. A. Smith favored the congregation with one of his instructive sermons. It seemed good to hear and see Brother Smith again, especially to those who had known him during his many years of service in Omaha. Several of the old-timers, although they had heard him in Omaha in the morning, came over to Council Bluffs to hear him again in the evening.

The Wednesday dinners and suppers which have been a feature during the past several months, have been discontinued for the summer.

Those who had the privilege of attending General Conference came home enthusiastic over the wonderful spirit manifested.

Sunday, May 29, Brother Blair Jensen was here in the morning, and Apostle J. F. Garver in the evening. Both sermons were well received. The subject of Brother Garver's sermon was the words of God to Moses, instructing him to "Say unto my people: Go forward."

Sunday morning Sister Garner and W. T. Spanswick sang a duet, "Blessed Savior, Thee I Love," and in the evening Sister Ada Darrington Hall sang, "O Troubled Heart, Be Still."

Aurora, Illinois

66 South Elmwood Drive

A baby boy was born to Sister Iole Clark Parcell, May 8. He was given the name, Ellsworth Leroy.

The young people's class is studying the quarterly, Studies in the Restoration Movement. These lessons are well prepared and have been most enlightening. R. E. Davey has proved an able teacher for this course.

The worship period for Sunday, May 8, was occupied by a short program for Mother's Day. Sister J. E. Wildermuth and daughter, Doris, sang a group of songs entitled, "Old Songs My Mother Taught Me." The junior girls distributed spring blossoms to all mothers present while the pianist played soft music.

Aurora Saints listened with glad hearts to Brother Roscoe

Davey's account of the peaceful conference just held. It is the desire of the group here that they may work with untiring patience, doing the Master's will and bringing about Zion conditions.

Iowa City, Iowa

Elder E. R. Davis, district president, and Elder L. G. Holloway, district missionary, met with the Iowa City group Sunday, May 29, at the home of Brother and Sister T. Hilliard Cox.

Brother Holloway talked on "The Spirit of the 1932 General Conference." Brother Davis spoke briefly in the interests of his work as district president.

A quartet consisting of Sister H. Voas Meredith, soprano; Sister T. Hilliard Cox, alto; L. E. Flowers, tenor, and Don Barrows, bass, sang "Take Time to Be Holy." Vesta Stevenson played piano accompaniment.

Pastor Walter L. Daykin and wife and little son, Bobby, are spending the summer months at Taylorville, Illinois. Although complete organization has not yet been effected, the group is planning to continue its meetings, both social and devotional, throughout the summer.

The following students from the Latter Day Saints group are being graduated at the commencement exercises June 6, with the degrees designated: B. A., Don Barrows, Hazel Jones, Theresa Stemm, Vesta Stevenson, and Max White; B. S., Norman E. Hield; M. A., T. Hilliard Cox and L. E. Flowers, and M. D., Altabelle Willard.

Woman Injured at Conference Writes Thanks to Saints

Independence, Missouri.—I attended the late General Conference, and gathered much valuable information from a variety of associations. From this I received much benefit. But the day before I intended to return to my home at Gary, Indiana, I was on my way to attend the nurses' commencement exercises at the Stone Church, and while crossing one of the main highways to reach the Stone Church, I was struck by an automobile. In the accident I suffered two broken limbs and was rendered unconscious. I was taken to the Independence Sanitarium for treatment.

This accident occurred April 14. I am now released from the Sanitarium and am improving. My treatment there was excellent. I was attended by a physician and skillful nurses and visiting friends. The elders administered to me, and several times I was greatly blessed through their services.

My husband, being informed of my misfortune, speedily came to me from our home town. He has done all he could to bring me relief and peace. Many with whom I am acquainted have written me from different places, manifesting deep interest in my welfare and praying God for my relief. These things have cheered me and I shall always remember their loving interest.

My companion has benefited in a religious way from this trying experience. He has been afforded opportunity to attend church services at the Stone Church, hearing excellent sermons and earnest testimonies, and becoming acquainted with many who have helped to cheer him through this our trial. We have been blessed as well as tried, and extend our whole-hearted thankfulness for the interest shown us.

Personally, I very greatly enjoyed the General Conference, and found myself spiritually enlightened through what occurred. It was a joy to experience its wonderful associations. So notwithstanding the testing experiences through which I have recently passed, I feel that I have gained more than I have lost. The following verse represents my feelings:

Misfortune came with much distress,
 And yet with all I can express
 Feelings of love for those who came
 And helped to take away my pain.
 The flowers brought, the words they said,
 Inspired my soul while on my bed.
 Sweet thoughts will travel through my mind
 About such friends who were so kind.

ELIZABETH WERNER.

Lucasville, Ohio

Pleasant Valley Branch

This is a small country branch, but the members are alive in the gospel and enjoying the Spirit of the heavenly Father.

Elder F. May, of Dayton, Ohio, was here some months ago, giving some educational Bible plays. His help was appreciated.

The prayer services on Wednesday evening are not so well attended, but they are of spiritual nature. Bible plays and reading occur each Saturday evening. On Sunday morning at nine thirty prayer and social meeting is held followed by Sunday school. In the evening there is preaching usually by the local priesthood.

Several times since its organization this branch has been crippled by the loss of some workers, but there are still plenty left to carry on the gospel work. It is nearly twenty-nine years ago that Elder T. C. Beaty brought the gospel to this neighborhood. His stay aroused great interest. There being no church near, he obtained the schoolhouse in which to hold meeting for several weeks. He baptized a few. While here he lived in the home of Uncle Levi Crabtree. In a short time Elder Etzenhouser arrived, and reaped the harvest of souls from Brother Beaty's planting. Still other workers came to do their part, and finally the branch was organized with the following priesthood members: Elder, Samuel Henry; teacher, Rufus Culp, and deacon, James Crabtree. It was not long until D. Allen was called to be a priest. Since there were a number of members, they felt a church home to be a necessity and went to work. In a few months they were in their own building, a portion of the land on which it stood being given by Squire Edward Crabtree.

During the years which followed the branch had its vicissitudes. Brother Mitchell was called to function as a priest and D. E. Altman as teacher. Elder Henry went to Wellsburg, West Virginia, to secure employment. Teacher Culp suddenly dropped dead, and the members felt a great loss. But Clarence Curnt was called to act as priest and a short time later as elder, and the latter day work made fine progress for a time.

Brother Curnt lived at McDermott, eight miles away, and saw the need of the work there. They began with cottage prayer meetings and baptized a number. Later a branch was organized. Then Brother Mitchell, Pleasant Valley Branch's priest, died, and the work was left to the members with only a teacher and a deacon in charge. But the heavenly Father was mindful of his children's needs. Luther Crabtree was called to act as teacher and Ervin Piles as priest, and shortly as elder; Walter Culp and Mark Crabtree and Donald Bealor to be priests. James Altman was called to act as deacon, but moved North for employment.

The branch felt itself blessed with workers. E. E. Williams was called to be a priest, then elder, and Norman Pollock, teacher. Elder Culp, Priest Bealor, and Teacher Crabtree moved to Portsmouth, Ohio, sixteen miles away, to seek employment, and attend services at the old home branch as opportunity offers. They found that the gospel work was needed in Portsmouth and so they began to pray, to make the acquaintance of other members moving near, and to apply themselves to the local problem. They purchased a small tent.* In 1930 they organized a mission called the Portsmouth West Side Mission. Soon William Altman was called to act as deacon, then as priest. At present the workers are Elder E. E. Williams, Teacher Norman Pollock, Priest William Altman, Deacon James Crabtree. God has answered the prayers of his Saints, and others have been told to prepare for a definite part in his work.

Cleveland, Ohio

East Side Branch

On sacrament Sunday, May 1, several Cleveland members were spoken to through the Spirit by one of God's servants. The branch feels greatly strengthened as a result of this manifestation, and is going forward.

The Religio Society has been receiving fair attendance. Doctor Andes has contributed to the interest of this group through his health lectures and fine work as instructor of the young married people's class which is studying the Doctrine and Covenants.

On the evening of April 1, the women's department, directed by Sister Elizabeth Campbell, had a stunt night which was enjoyed by members and their friends.

Sister Shirley Talbot had charge of the Easter program and has been commended for the splendid manner in which the entertainment was conducted. Also, a fine Mother's Day program was planned and executed by a committee of young people of the branch.

Brothers Strickland and Hammond and Brother Clark, of the Ringling Brothers Circus, have visited East Side Branch during the last month and have given instructive sermons. Also the congregation is enjoying the presence of Patriarch George W. Robley who is expected to be in Cleveland several weeks.

British Conference Is Outstanding

London, England.—The Southern District conference was held at Enfield, Middlesex, on May 14 and 15, and no doubt will be officially reported.

I have been a member of the church over thirty-three years and can say that I have never attended a better conference in all my life in the church. The business meeting on Saturday evening was carried through in a fine manner, a beautiful influence being present.

Sunday services commenced with a prayer service at ten fifteen followed by the holy communion, then preaching at eleven o'clock. All through these services the Spirit of God was present, and was a great blessing to all. The priesthood meeting at two thirty was one long to be remembered; a paper from the pastor was read and freely discussed, with the desire that all may come to a better understanding of their duties. At the same hour the Sunday school was held, and an address was given by Elder John Schofield, from Midland District.

The evening services were much enjoyed, especially ordination ceremony which was held at the close of the preaching service, when two fine young men were set apart to the office of priest: one from Wales, Maddock Morgan, and one from Enfield, William Sykes. Both of these young men, if faithful, will be a power for good in their respective branches.

The Spirit of God was present in great power throughout the whole day.

JOHN W. WORTH.

Far West Stake News

Guilford and Kingston Institutes

Stake President Ward A. Hougas conducted an institute for the purpose of discussing the 1932 conference at Guilford, May 15, and at Kingston May 29. All of the branches in the northern portion of the stake were represented at Guilford, and a fine day was spent together. The Kingston institute was an equal success with several branches participating.

Apostle Gleazer in Stake

Apostle E. J. Gleazer's two-week visit came as a pleasant surprise. He is making good use of the time, preaching every night in the different branches. The schedule provides that he visit most of the branches throughout the entire stake during his brief stay. Elder Ward A. Hougas is accompanying him on these trips.

Reports from his first week's work are very encouraging. Outstanding crowds have gathered to hear him at each place, and he apparently is at his best.

Young People's Convention

Plans are nearing completion for the annual young people's convention at Cameron, June 25 and 26. This will be the most important gathering of the young people of the year as President F. M. McDowell will be there, and an organization for the stake will be effected on Saturday night.

Oakdale Branch

The Saints at Oakdale enjoyed a pleasant day May 15. Brother R. M. Russell and wife and Brother S. H. Simmons and wife, all of Cameron, were visitors. Brother Russell preached at the eleven o'clock hour, Brother Simmons assisting him. Immediately after this service, baptism was performed in the small stream just west of the church by Brother C. W. Miller. After the baptism, all enjoyed a basket dinner at the church. Confirmation services were held at two o'clock.

May 22, brought another good day and fine services. Brother and Sister J. L. Bear, from Saint Joseph, accompanied by Sister Mary Packard of Long Beach, California, were visitors. Sister Packard and Sister Bear gave short talks at the close of the church school. Brother Bear occupied the eleven o'clock hour.

Mrs. Packard has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bear with whom she has visited several churches in the stake. Besides her visit to Oakdale on the twenty-second, she has also visited Second Saint Joseph and Fourth Church where Brother Bear is pastor.

First Saint Joseph Church

The first dramatic prelude in the summer series of vesper services was presented May 15, by the O. T. Z.'s. Although rain prevented many from attending, a fair-sized congregation witnessed this initial performance by the young people. The play, "And He Came to His Father," was a very effective story of the Prodigal Son, after which Elder H. C. Timm, associate pastor, gave a sermonet, "Homeward Bound."

May 22, offered another musical prelude with the choir and a double quartet presenting some splendid numbers. Pastor Ward A. Hougas gave a sermonet following the prelude.

A splendid spirit prevailed at the sacrament service, June 5. The music and Scripture reading led to the appeal of Apostle E. J. Gleazer in his theme talk not "to walk as other Gentiles walk," but to walk as God would have his people walk.

At the vesper hour the Ul-Lik-Us Players presented a religious drama, "Pilgrims of the Way," which was well received by a very large audience. Apostle Gleazer used the theme of the drama in his sermonet and added his challenge to the stirring appeal of the players in this beautiful little play.

Second Saint Joseph Church

Second Church presented a pageant, "The New Testament Church," written by the pastor, O. Salisbury, May 8. President Elbert A. Smith, of Independence, was the speaker the morning and afternoon of May 15. Apostle E. J. Gleazer delivered a fine sermon to a good crowd the evening of June 5.

Holden Stake

Holden

Instead of waiting until their funerals to eulogize and bestow flowers upon them, the branch did honor to fourteen pioneer sisters of Holden congregation. They were invited to seats on the rostrum on Mother's Day, and the appreciation of their coworkers was expressed by F. A. McWethy, and a blossoming potted plant was given to each. The program was unique and uplifting.

At the eleven o'clock service, May 29, a memorial service was held in which the names of deceased members of the Holden Home and Branch were read, and a tribute of respect paid them by Brother McWethy.

Preparation for Children's Day was under way for some days. The children old enough for baptism were instructed in a special class by Freelin Hampton.

At the church school hour Sunday, June 12, the rostrum and font were decorated with ferns and flowers. A circle on the wall back of the font contained the words "Entering the Fold of God," and an attractive fringing of paper gave a pretty setting to the words.

The following arrangement was preliminary to the baptismal service: Twelve girls marched from the primary room singing "Onward Christian Soldiers." Six in each center aisle, they approached the altar meeting in front. The leader of one group bore a cross and placed it before the font; the other leader placed a crown upon the cross. The pastors, church school director, children's supervisor and candidates followed to reserved seats, while the congregation sang "Onward Christian Soldiers." Brother F. H. Edwards made an appropriate talk on the significance of baptism. Nine were baptized, Brother G. F. Baker and W. H. Eliason officiating. Brother Edward's short sermon following the confirmation was full of hope and stimulation. The young son of Brother and Sister Fred A. Macrae was blessed by Brethren Edwards and Eliason. Sister Edwards and son accompanied Brother Edwards and visited at the home of Brother and Sister C. A. Silsby. A Children's Day playlet of three acts was presented at the evening hour, directed by Sister W. H. Eliason.

Brother F. L. Sawley, of Holden Home, is spending two weeks with the Post Oak Saints, where he opened a mission nearly thirty years ago. Brother C. J. Spurlock, another member of the Home, also is making a contribution, having completed the visiting of twenty families of Saints, besides distributing dozens of copies of literature.

Sister Martha Burr, the Home nurse, visited friends in Cameron, her former home, last week and was accompanied back to Holden by Brother and Sister Sam Simmons, and daughter.

Pastor W. S. Macrae will begin a missionary campaign this week in small towns near Holden, assisted by a group of young people and members of the local priesthood. Sisters Opal Moody and Myrtle Carr will have charge of the music as director and organist respectively. Brothers with cars have volunteered to furnish transportation. These services will be conducted on the street and will include seven towns, only two of which are more than ten miles from Holden.

Three meetings of the branch priesthood have been held in preparation for the campaign of visiting. The priesthood are taking their responsibility seriously, and already reports indicate gratifying results.

Grandview

J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker the second Sunday in May, and gave us one of his splendid sermons on the Book of Mormon. It was much enjoyed.

May 22 was the annual election of officers. The stake presidency were present and assisted in the service. They also remained for the evening service at which Brother McWethy was to have been the speaker; but Brother Ward L. Christy and wife arrived just before time for service, and he was asked to occupy. Brother Christy's sermon was well received. The following were chosen: Pastor Charles W. Martin; director church school, L. L. Bogue; assistant, C. Anderson; supervisor of music, Gertrude Bogue; adult supervisor, David Speas; young people's supervisor, Mrs. Anna Bogue; children's supervisor, Mrs. Charles Martin.

June 5 was ushered in with sunshine and roses, both of which are abundant in Grandview. This day found the newly elected officers on duty. Brother Amos E. Allen and daughter, Jewel, worshiped here, taking part in the church school, the sacramental service, and giving a splendid sermon in the evening.

Kansas City Stake

Northeast Mission

The Northeast Mission had an all-day meeting on Sunday, June 5. They were joined in the services by the Saints from North Kansas City who are planning to make their church home with this group. For the past three years this latter mission has been meeting at the Community Hall in North Kansas City. Brother Ross Higdon has been their devoted pastor and while the work did not grow numerically, it certainly developed in spirituality and good fellowship.

The financial red ink and the need of Brother Higdon's services elsewhere brought about the closing of this mission for the present.

In a splendid spirit of cooperation the Saints there voted to join their forces with another mission.

The combined church enjoyed a lovely sacrament service at eleven o'clock and had a basket dinner at Observation Point at noon. Bishop Skinner spent the day with the group, and preached to a good audience in the evening.

For a number of years this group has been meeting in a hall on Guinotte at the foot of the Chestnut Street viaduct. The landlady has agreed to entirely renovate this structure, build on a large room at the rear, shingle the exterior and paint the interior. When these improvements are complete the Saints will have a neat and adequate church home for service and worship.

Brother Henry Davis, one of the church's devoted young men, carries the real pastoral spirit into his leadership of this group.

Malvern Hill Church

The Saints at Malvern Hill have been passing through many trials during the past few months. They have lost by death three of their stalwart workers, Brother Sherman, Brother Bootman, and Sister Schimmel; and Brother Ray Lloyd and Brother Welton Wood have both found it necessary to discontinue their pastoral supervision. However, the good spirit and the courage of those who remain are undaunted, and they express an unbounded faith in the future possibilities of the work in this church.

For a number of years the stake has sponsored a week-day church school at Malvern Hill where, under the capable direction of Sister Florine Hands-Graham and her staff of devoted Latter Day Saint teachers, over two hundred non-member children have received religious instruction during school hours. Many of these children have spent six years in such instruction, and the good will of the entire neighborhood is behind the church's effort to help.

Elder Ross Higdon has been selected as the new pastor for the church. He and his family met with the Saints there for the first time last Sunday. In the evening the church was closed to allow the Saints to join with two other community churches in an Allied Forces for Prohibition meeting.

Independence

The young people of Independence will begin Sacrifice Week with an early morning prayer meeting at the Campus June 19. The service will begin promptly at seven o'clock, and all young people are invited to be present. If the weather is not favorable, the meeting will be held in the basement of the Stone Church. On Sunday night, June 26, the young people of the church in Independence will be guests of the Campus congregation. They will be invited by the pastor in charge to sit together in a reserved section of seats.

Next Sunday evening the first of the Campus Sunday night services will be held. Apostle Edwards is scheduled to be the speaker for the summer months.

Eleven Independence students graduated June 6, from the University of Kansas at Lawrence, Kansas. Of this number the following are members of the church: Delmar T. Goode, A. B.; Richard L. Harrington, B. S.; Frank L. Holmes, B. S.; Rilla Margaret Leeka, B. S.; Margaret H. Sturges, A. B.; S. A. Thiel, B. S., and Ethel Watson, B. S.

Stone Church

It was appropriate that Children's Day should open with an early morning baptismal service in the basement of the church. Thirty boys and girls were brought to be baptized by parents who are heeding the instruction of latter-day revelation to teach their children so that when they become eight years old, they will request baptism. In the ordinance officiated various members of the congregation's priesthood.

The following were baptized: Ellen La Vaughn Tonahill, Lester Hall Thompson, Donald Lynn Surles, Malvin Cecil Stone, Beulah May Shull, Charlotte Lorane Penrose, Ralph Emerson Stone, Virginia Lou Bailey, Richard Egbert Bullard, Robert Burns Meyer, Roberta June Sackman, Doris Nadine Sackman, Dorothy Lee Gould, Dorothy Willmott Savage, Mildred Nadine Savage, Wanda Marie Savage, Betty May Williams, Rhea Ruth Cannon, Sarah Anne Burch, Donna Belle Rawlings, Vance Burnett, Homer Gillen Tordoff, Priscilla Fern Lewis, Robert Maurice Pawley, Maxine Elenora Abter, Elizabeth Anne Brock, Orin Jefferson Dunfee, jr., Ardetia Beatrice Scott, William Eugene Monsees, and Gladys Ruth Leigh.

Morning and evening services were in charge of the church school, and programs were presented by the children and junior young people. Regular lesson sessions were conducted from nine thirty to eleven o'clock in the morning, then a large crowd listened appreciatively to a program of chorus numbers, recitations, duets, and solos by the children of the beginner, primary and junior departments. Elder S. A. Thiel, church school superintendent, was in charge, assisted by the superintendents of the three departments: Beginner, Mrs. C. R. Smith; primary, Miss Ruby Williamson, and junior, Mrs. Ray Moler, and their respective musical directors and pianists.

An impressive, ceremonial service took place at two thirty in the afternoon when those baptized in the morning were confirmed members of the church, and six infants were blessed by the elders. Elder H. G. Barto was in charge, assisted by Elder S. A. Thiel. The following babies were brought to the altar for blessing by their parents: Jerry Lee Rawlings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Levi W. Rawlings; George Whiting Lund, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Lund; Carl Merrel Dooley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Dooley; Jacque Wiley Vincent and Joy Lee Vincent, son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Vincent, and Jimmie Duane Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Miller.

In the evening the intermediate department presented the theme, "The Men and Women of Tomorrow," with fitting scripture reading, instrumental numbers, readings, and hymns. The boys' choir, directed by J. Glenn Fairbanks, made its initial appearance at the Stone Church, singing, "Lead Me, O Lord," and "Fairest Lord Jesus." A chorus of girls from three classes sat in the rear of the gallery and at intervals sang a cappella favorite hymns. The sermon was by the intermediate pastor, Priest W. Earl Page, assisted by Priests Howard Cook and Raymond Wrigley, assisted superintendent and teacher, respectively, in the department.

A profusion of June flowers and asparagus fern beautified the rostrum for the services of the day. The baskets of blossoms were brought and arranged by the Girl Scouts of Troop 37.

One hundred and fifty attended the special sacrifice week prayer meeting of the young people in Independence, last Wednesday night at the Stone Church, the congregation being representative of the nine branches in the city. Apostle F. Henry Edwards in a short talk challenged the young people to pray unceasingly for the church, Zion, and their own task. Priest Roy Davey was asked to give a prayer in behalf of the young people. A feeling of sincerity and a strong desire to be active in the work of the church was accentuated by the bearing of earnest testimonies and the singing of hymns on consecration. Elder T. A. Beck was in charge.

Approximately two hundred attended the priesthood prayer meeting at the Stone Church last Friday night, Pastor John F. Sheehy in charge.

Second Church

Children's Day proved most satisfactory for Second Church. Nineteen were baptized: thirteen by Brother A. K. Dillee, five by Brother John Miller, and one by Brother Adkins. The baptismal font was artistically decorated and much credit is due Sister G. W. Bush for the beautiful arrangement.

A most enjoyable program was given at eleven o'clock. The production showed faithful training, and special praise goes to those who gave their time and efforts in that direction. Agnes Edmunds, Katherine Inman, and Erma West had charge of the little play, with Sister Sarratt supplying the music and Lillie Hansen in charge of the lovely little costumes.

The service was in charge of Leonard McCormick, with Geraldine Fields as chorister. Orson Murdock made the opening prayer and Richard Dillee gave the benediction.

At the evening service Brother C. B. Woodstock preached an excellent sermon.

The women's department of Second Church will hold meetings all summer. Sister Sherwin, who has been the leader for some time, is moving to apartments at 312 North Liberty Street, but will continue her work in this district until further notice.

Brother and Sister Roland Fulks are visiting Sister Fulk's parents, Brother and Sister J. T. Curtis. Sister Fulks will enter the Sanitarium for treatment. Brother Curtis, who has been ailing for some time is improving.

Brother Roy Settles, in charge of the young people's activities, reports splendid interest. At present a volley ball team is being organized.

A short time ago an enjoyable evening was spent at Deer Lake. The young people were chaperoned by Brother and Sister A. K. Dillee, Brother and Sister Roy Settles, Brother and Sister William Inman, and Brother and Sister Sam Inman. It would be difficult to decide whether the evening was more enjoyed by the chaperones or by their charges.

A general get together meeting for the young is to be held July 5. Sunday, June 12, was the closing day for the regular six o'clock evening service.

Enoch Hill Church

Children's Day added eight new members to the Enoch Hill congregation, two of whom were adults. The baptismal service occurred at eight o'clock at Second Church, the following being baptized: Uih Smith, George Griffiths, Cora Mae Jenkins, Clarice Stevens, Billy Inman, Eugene Inman, Robert Murdock, and Jacqueline Warren.

The confirmation ceremony took place at eleven o'clock. Elders officiating were H. L. Barto, H. E. Winegar, F. J. Lewis, J. W. Brewer, C. E. Beal, and F. G. Christie. Following this ordinance came a Children's Day program of songs, drills, and short plays.

Frank Hunter, chorister at Mount Washington Church, Kansas City Stake, was present at the evening service and sang pleasing solos. Then Elder F. J. Lewis preached an excellent sermon, reading his scripture lesson from Philipians 2: 5: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

Saints in this district were saddened by the death of a faithful member, Sister Effie Jane Cox, wife of Brother William H. Cox, who passed away at the Sanitarium the morning of June 7. For many years she was a member of the church, very active and helpful in the work of the women and in the community. Besides her family she leaves many friends. There survive her, her husband, four sons: Glenn Cox, Don Cox, Buel Cox, and Edgar Cox, all of Independence; three daughters, Mrs. Rilla Lillian Johnson, Mrs. Vera Riddle, and Gladys Cox, all of Independence; two sisters, Mrs. Minnie Werner, of Independence, and Mrs. Flora Rudicil, Middletown, Ohio, and two brothers. Walter Chappelow, Independence, and Ed. Chappelow, Buckner, Missouri. The funeral was held from the church last Thursday afternoon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Cox was fifty-seven years old.

Topeka, Kansas

1116 Clay Street

Since General Conference, Topeka Saints realize with others of the church that the task of the latter day church is not lessened. With a greater spirit of unity, trust, faith, hope, and charity, they find themselves in better condition to do their part in performing this great task.

April 24 was O. E. Weedmark's birthday. Ten young people from Chelsea Park, Kansas City, surprised him in honor of the event. Pictures were taken, refreshments were served, and a tour of the city was made by members of the party. At seven thirty in the evening they gave a musical program at the young people's meeting at the church, and dedicated it to Brother Weedmark.

The juniors have become farmers for the season. Under the leadership of Sister Fern Weedmark, they have chosen a garden as a stewardship project. The location of the garden is five miles out in the country at the home of Sister Anna Alfrey, and the boys and girls have great fun making trips out to work in their garden. They have planted onions, carrots, beets, and popcorn, and are planning to put in more. This group continues to work on contest notebooks.

District President Dave Little and family made an official visit at the close of conference in the interest of the work at this local. Brother G. G. Cadwell is again in charge, having been transferred to a run to this point on the Missouri Pacific Railroad. He is working toward a unity of effort in harmony with recent measures taken by the general church.

The midweek study class under the direction of Sister F. O. Kelley is studying the Herald outlines for credit.

This congregation has recently had some helpful worship programs. One interesting theme was "Above and Beyond," and "The Last Supper," was appropriate at the regular May sacrament.

Early in the spring Sister Mary Crooker was appointed police matron for the city of Topeka. Her address is 210 West Fifth Street, and she will appreciate hearing from her friends.

Mother's Day was appropriately remembered at the morning and evening services. Clifford Alfrey gave a carnation to each mother present at the morning service.

Those who have occupied the stand are F. O. Kelley, B. F. Deller, G. G. Cadwell, and O. E. Weedmark. F. O. Kelley and O. E. Weedmark are in charge of the church school.

The evening adult class under Sister Helen Hays will soon complete Jesus and His Message, by Christiana Salyards.

Jonesport, Maine

Would you like to hear from the little radio town of Jonesport? Then listen in.

The Saints feel very much encouraged with the progress made during these "perilous" times. The officers of this branch have "stood by" in a fine way. Elder Newman Wilson has carried on in a most valiant manner. After his release from active service in the ministry, he was elected the town's first officer, first selectman. He is known as the busiest man in town, yet the Saints think he has done more in the church work than ever before. Special series of meetings have been held at Beals, South Addison, Kennebec, and Indian River, cottage meetings, young people's prayer services, classes for the study of Doctrine and Covenants, Zion Builders' meetings, and many other activities, besides his regular meetings in this branch.

Elder W. E. Rogers, president of Jonesport Branch, was seventy-five years of age the other day. A surprise party was given him and his associate, Elder Arthur Rogers, who also is advanced in age.

The weather has been very unfavorable. A number of times on Wednesday night not many of the older ones could get out. At one such prayer meeting the young people fairly ran away with the service. The officers rejoice at the life and vitality of the young people, and feel that their worries are nearly all over when the young men and women begin to help.

The Saints regret to have to report any but pleasant things to the church paper, but there have been a few deaths here to sadden the hearts of all. Brother Leon Crowley, a fine, young, active Saint, has been called home, as was Brother Ernest Beal, another very good man. Sister Rebecca Alley, a dear old Saint, has also gone to rest.

The efforts put forth by the ministry and members in Jonesport have brought in five baptisms, and all rejoice in the work. The Saints ask the church to pray for them; they need the prayers of all, especially the young people who have much work ahead of them. They expect to hold a young people's convention next month.

Lost Boy Returns Home

June 5.—Brother and Sister George F. Kettner, 916 Hobson Avenue, Hot Springs, Arkansas, are happy to announce the safe return of their son, Leroy Kettner who was persuaded by a schoolmate to leave home May 26, and they thank the heavenly Father and the Saints for helping to bring about his return through prayer.

Of the Saints in Hot Springs Brother Kettner writes in his letter: "We are all very enthusiastic in the work of the church. Are looking forward to the district conference to convene here in July, and hoping the Lord will bless us with a complete set of faithful workers in the priesthood, that the true spirit of the work may be established in every home. We have good material if preparation is made, and to this end we earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints. Home work is very much needed here and can not be had without the aid of a faithful, working priesthood."

"If any Saints are taking their vacation in July, we shall be pleased to have them come to Hot Springs and spend conference week with us, beginning July 14, and lasting three days."

Missionary Pair Have Returned to Salt Lake City

Salt Lake City, Utah, 336 South Fourth East, May 30.—We are back in our field, assigned us by the powers that be. We had a rather wonderful experience in our efforts to tell the Gospel story at Wichita, Kansas; Alva and Freedom, Oklahoma, and La Junta, Colorado. The spirit we felt among the Saints at these places certainly augurs well for the work there, and if it is the same throughout the church, we shall move forward to better conditions as the year passes. Our only regret at leaving the Saints in these places was that we could not stay longer with them. This was particularly true at Alva and Freedom, Oklahoma.

We left La Junta, Colorado, Monday, May 23, and reached this point Wednesday evening in time for the weekly prayer service. We found that we were just in time to officiate at the funeral of J. C. Jensen.

Weather here is fine since our return, and we were greeted with fairly good audiences at our services yesterday, though we hope soon to see them increase.

We are planning a special missionary effort in Salt Lake City for June and as much longer as we can find profit in the enterprise. Of course the day of street services is past in these centers, as the auto traffic makes this practically impossible, but there are parks and private homes which are available.

Sister Chase and I were somewhat fatigued from the strenuous three-day trip from La Junta, but are "on the job" once more and hopeful for the days to come, and not the least of the causes for this hope is our participation in, and experiences at the late General Conference.

A. M. CHASE.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

This congregation is experiencing a generous outpouring of the Spirit, which has encouraged the individual members to greater service. The Saints hope to work as a unit in helping the church to realize its objectives. The May sacrament service was marked by rejoicing, many being encouraged through the messages given.

The women's department gave a dinner May 5, in the social rooms of the church. Such dinners bring to the Saints pleasant social evenings, the men of the branch being guests. On this occasion Sister Hazel Gribben was toastmistress, and the speakers were Vassie Sheets, John R. Grice, J. E. Matthews, Harry Hoffman, and R. E. Madden. Solos were sung by John R. Grice, Lucinda Madden, and Hazel Gribben.

On Mother's Day the Sunday school presented a short program. Each mother present was given a rose.

Twenty-six members and one visitor were present at the regular monthly meeting of the women's department May 12. Sister Stratton read a good paper on "The Officers of the Church in the Time of Moses." A splendid paper on "Ideals" was ready by Barbara Brassine.

The Tri Sigma Chapter of Temple Builders gave a Mother's Day banquet May 13, in honor of their mothers. The entertainment was provided by the girls. Talks were given by Sister Nieman, leader of women, and Sister Swanson, supervisor of the girls' department. Each mother was presented a rose.

There are twenty-five members in the Blue Bird group of this branch. They recently took a hike into the country to gather wild flowers. Now they are making scrapbooks to give to the Children's Hospital. Ethel Kirkendall is leader, and Barbara Brassine her assistant.

The Orioles, with Lepha McMillin as monitor, are very active. They have studied manicuring and learned to make several useful garments in their sewing classes. They recently had a fine evening of recreation in the form of a roller skating party.

During the month instructive sermons have been given by the following speakers, G. H. Kirkendall, John R. Grice, J. E. Matthews, R. E. Madden, C. W. Clark, pastor of First Branch, H. E. French, and Doctor W. B. Reeves.

A Day With Saints at Walthill, Nebraska

Plattsmouth, Nebraska.—Sunday, May 22, was a busy day at Walthill. Making the long drive from our home, we arrived in time for the morning sessions. We were repaid for our trouble as we entered the church and looked into the faces of the Saints. Sister Etta Brownrigg had just arrived from Independence and was sitting in her usual place. I had only to shut my eyes an instant and Sister Flo and others missing, were there also. Sister Lena, whose sweet voice brings comfort and pleasure to the Saints, sang for us, and Mary was at the piano.

That day I baptized seven people, six of them adults. As I went down into the font, thoughts rushed through my mind, how I had constructed the font with my own hands, piece by piece, with the help of Brother Graves and how the good sisters had prepared food and refreshments for us. Among these helpers were Sister Lampson who recently passed to her reward. Then I thought of the many who had been through the waters in the little font, and how good Brother Lane, that grand old man of Iowa, came to help confirm and preach. Also Elders Reilly, Oehring and Lampson were there.

This visit to Walthill seemed all too short as we returned home, arriving shortly after dark.

First of Special One-day Meetings in Northeastern Kansas

The one-day meeting, May 29, at Scranton, Kansas, was a success in spite of unfavorable weather conditions and the absence of Apostle Roy S. Budd, who was to have been the speaker on this occasion. About forty attended.

Topeka Saints dismissed services for the day in order that the membership might attend. Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of Religious Education, was present and spoke at the eleven o'clock hour, using the theme, "Our Great Need." Preceding this service, he directed the adult class in the best method of teaching, using as an example Benjamin in the Book of Mormon.

In the afternoon "Church Objectives" were discussed and the necessity of teaching them in Religious Education in order to develop the character of the members and perfect the citizenship of the world.

Bishop's Agent O. E. Weedmark gave a synopsis of the financial status of the church, and solicited cooperation looking toward the next Harvest Home Festival at Independence.

The music was in charge of Sister B. F. Deller. Brother C. F. Wolfe, of Kansas City, a one-time resident of Scranton, was present and directed the singing.

Special numbers, "The Holy City," by Fern Little, "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer," by Sister C. J. Sheets, Anna Alfrey, and C. J. Wolfe with Sister Deller, pianist, added to the services.

A basket dinner was eaten picnic style in the church because of the rain.

This was the first of a series of meetings planned by the district presidency to be held at different times in the district. The purpose is to acquaint the Saints with the church objectives and to enlist their support in helping to reach this goal. The Saints of different localities are requested to watch the Herald for announcements of these meetings.

Birmingham, England

On the first Sunday of May, Pastor Peter S. Whalley led four young people into the waters of baptism. And again on May 15 two young women were baptized. Six precious souls have dedicated themselves to Christ's service. The hearts of the Saints were gladdened as they witnessed the sacred ordinance.

The sacrament service following the baptism was one of great power. The members were eager to testify of the loving power of God in their lives. Not a moment was lost, and at the conclusion everyone experienced the spirit of peace and rejoicing. They pray that Christ's gospel, this marvelous work and a wonder, may very soon be taken to all the world for a witness.

English Saints felt a deep measure of confidence as they read General Conference news. They experienced the urge to do their part in the latter-day work. A portion of the Spirit manifested at that time fell on the Saints in Birmingham as they prayed God's blessing in a special endowment of divine guidance. God is not far off. He still hears the cry of his people. These members desire to be charged with the Holy Spirit of love which binds the hearts of men and consecrates them to service. They look forward to meeting Apostle John W. Rushton. He will receive a true welcome from many old friends. May God bless his mission and give him bon voyage.

The young people, who call themselves the Laurel Club, raised five pounds by means of a jumble sale. They are enthusiastic workers.

Bishop T. Trapp visited Birmingham May 15, and preached on "Loyalty."

Altogether these Saints have had a month of rejoicing, and thank the Father for his unspeakable gift of love and light and truth.

Pastoral

To the membership of Nauvoo District, and all others interested: This will inform you that the reunion committee met May 12, and decided that owing to the prevailing conditions, it would be wise not to hold a reunion this year. However, the same plan that was used last year will obtain and there will be two, two-day meetings held. The first one will be August 6 and 7. The next August 13 and 14. Also during the week between, there will be services held each evening, at the church or on the lawn in Nauvoo. At this time if there are those who are having their vacations, we suggest that Nauvoo would be an ideal place to spend the time. There are rooms to be had for a nominal cost at the Nauvoo House as well as others in private homes. Also it is an ideal place for camping. Information with reference to rooms, etc., can be had by writing or seeing J. C. Page, caretaker of the church property, Nauvoo, Illinois. We suggest that all coming make arrangements to look after their individual needs, so none will be expecting to be cared for, as no provision has been made for the same. On the two Sundays mentioned, all-day services will be held, and we suggest that all come prepared to participate in a basket dinner. This to apply to the Nauvoo folks as well as those from a distance. Arrangements are being made for speakers for these dates and we are hoping for a successful gathering.—F. T. Mussell, district president.

Smith wishes to meet every man who holds the priesthood at a general priesthood meeting Saturday, July 2, at 7.30 p. m. Apostle Paul M. Hanson will also be present. This meeting is exclusively for the priesthood. This will be one of the big meetings of the year and of vital import not only to the church as a whole, but to the personnel of the priesthood. Cancel your services, if necessary, and come to Onset.—F. S. Dobbins, district secretary, 48 Fellsway, West, Winter Hill, Massachusetts.

Our Departed Ones

SERGEANT.—William Franklin Sergeant was born at Batavia, New York, July 8, 1879. He died May 31, 1932, at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, after several months of severe suffering. He married Mrs. Effie E. Herman, of Papillion, Nebraska, September 28, 1916. Besides his wife he leaves a stepdaughter, Chloie Sergeant, to feel keenly the loss of a loved one. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints January 18, 1929, at Council Bluffs, by Elder J. F. Mintun who preached his funeral sermon June 3, 1932, being assisted in the services by Elder G. J. Harding.

COLLINS.—Charles Edward Collins died May 9, 1932, at his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, being fifty years, five months, and nine days old. He was born at Maryville, Missouri. Was married to Miss Orbie M. Carle, January 5, 1904. He was baptized November 27, 1921, and later was ordained a deacon. Was a student of the sacred word. The funeral services occurred May 11, at the Saints' chapel in Council Bluffs, Iowa, the sermon being by Elder J. F. Mintun.

JENSEN.—J. C. Jensen was born in Richfield, Utah, July 6, 1872; moved to Pleasant Grove and there married Annie Nelson, of Provo, in December, 1896. Five children were born to this union, all of whom, with the wife survive him. He leaves, also, four sisters: Annie Adams, Pleasant Grove, Utah; Stina Conyers, Salt Lake City, Utah; Lenora Cunningham, Pocatella, Idaho, and Minerva Jacobson, of Burley, Idaho. He has lived in Salt Lake City, Utah, for the last twelve years, where he has been engaged in painting and decorating. Prior to this he lived in Midvale, Utah, and was employed by the Alta Railroad. While thus employed he was seriously injured, and never fully regained his health. A month ago he was operated upon for goiter and came through the operation successfully, but other complications set in and he passed away May 25, 1932. The burial was from the Intermountain Mortuary, May 27, Elder A. M. Chase preaching the funeral sermon.

SINCLAIR.—Susan E. Gilbert was born November 13, 1881, at Fall River, Massachusetts. She was the daughter of Doctor John and Sister Elizabeth Gilbert. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the age of thirteen by Elder John Smith at Fall River. She was married to Doctor W. A. Sinclair June 11, 1907, in her home city, and with her husband established a home in Somerville, where she lived during her married life. From her girlhood she was a consistent and active member of the church of her choice, proving an efficient teacher, especially among the children and young people. Affliction of a serious character, known as Hanot's Cirrhosis, fastened upon her, from which she was a great sufferer for a number of years. Seeking relief, she went to the operating table three times in 1928; but neither medicine nor surgery brought permanent relief, and for the last four months she was practically confined to her bed. Through prayer and faith she was strengthened and relieved at times, and was enabled to endure patiently her suffering and await the end which she knew was approaching. Her release came May 18, 1932. Sister Sinclair leaves to mourn her early departure her husband, Doctor W. A. Sinclair; three sons, Oliver G., twenty-three; Wallace E., nineteen; and Charles F., thirteen; her father and mother, and brother Milton; other relatives, and a host of friends. A devoted wife, a loving mother, an efficient and consecrated worker in the church, a good neighbor, a real Saint has gone home. The funeral was held at the Saints' Church in Somerville, Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley delivering the sermon and Bishop M. C. Fisher offering the prayer. Interment was in the cemetery at Sandwich.

HOMER.—Sarah Catherine Lane was born in Nauvoo, Illinois, June 23, 1844. She was baptized into the church when sixteen years old. Married Benjamin T. Homer in 1868, and was the mother of seven children. Five survive her. She was a member of the church seventy-one years. Departed this life March 12, 1932, and the funeral sermon was preached by Lee Quick at the Hudson Schoolhouse. Interment was in the cemetery at Edna, Kansas. She was a loyal Saint, paid her tithing and was faithful to the end.

SNETHEN.—Leo Everett Snethen was born at Pleasanton, Iowa, December 11, 1889. July 7, 1919, he married Miss Mildred Prather at Mount Ayer, Iowa. She with six children survives him: Charles, Shirley, Harold, Gerald, Beverly, and Betty. He is also survived by a son, George, by a former marriage; his mother, Mrs. Isabelle Snethen, of Lamoni, Iowa; two brothers, Charles and Ivan, Gowrie, Iowa; two sisters, Mrs. Ethel Truman, Gowrie, and Mrs. Lulu Pyle, Carroll, Iowa. Death came to him quite unexpectedly, May 24, 1932, at Des Moines, Iowa. The funeral services were held from the Carl E. White Funeral Home in Des Moines, May 26, by Elder F. T. Mussell.

HEIDE.—Almira Elizabeth Campbell was born near Fulton, Iowa, February 25, 1857. Departed this life May 29, 1932, near the place where she was born, having spent her entire life in that community. She was united in marriage to John Heide August 17, 1876, and to them were born the following children: A. W. and Elwin, of Maquoketa, Iowa; Arthur J., Blythedale, Missouri; E. L. and Clarence, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Lydia Campbell and Mrs. Nettie Edwards, of Fulton, Iowa. She was preceded in death by one daughter, Mrs. Blanche Stoll who passed away December 5, 1918. Those remaining mourn the loss of a faithful companion, mother, and follower of the Lord. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in October, 1887, by J. S. Roth, and was faithful to her covenant with Christ. She had been failing in health for some time, but a paralytic stroke hastened her demise. She was highly respected by all who knew her, this being evidenced by a large attendance at her funeral, not more than half the crowd could enter the church. The funeral was in charge of Elder E. R. Davis, and the sermon was by L. G. Holloway. Interment was in Sutton Cemetery.

WESTCOTT.—Ethel Westcott, wife of Calvin Westcott, of Union Township, Pennsylvania, passed away at the New Castle Hospital, May 23, 1932, following a short illness. He joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints January 15, 1900, and lived in Independence twenty-four years. Died at his home in Independence the morning of May 30, 1932. McConnaughy preaching the sermon. Interment was in Bald Knob Cemetery, Meigs County, Ohio.

COTTRILL.—Joanna Cottrill was born February 11, 1859. Died May 5, 1932. She was united in marriage to William H. Cottrill May 24, 1883, and to them nine children were born. The funeral was held from the Methodist Church at Cabin Run, West Virginia, the sermon being delivered by J. C. McConnaughy, and interment was in Cabin Run Cemetery.

WHITFORD.—Sarah Jane Whitford, eighty-three years old, and one of Port Huron, Michigan's oldest residents, died May 12, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Foster, after a long illness. She had lived there eighty years. Was born in New York State in 1848, and moved with her parents to Lakeport when a little child. She was married May 8, 1867, to Lyman D. Whitford, a Civil War veteran who died in 1929. Was one of the first members of the Saints' church there and an active church worker. Her son, Charles Whitford, was the first pastor of the church at Port Huron. The funeral services were held from the Saints' church May 15, Elder A. C. Barmore, pastor, officiating. SHRINER.—Henry Charles Shriner was born July 15, 1857, at Hamburg, Iowa. Passed from this life at his home in Blue Rapids, Kansas, May 25, 1932, after an illness of ten months. He married Minnie Case, of Blue Rapids, Kansas, September 27, 1884, and to them ten children were born. Four preceded him in death. He learned the blacksmith trade when a young man and followed this until he was injured four years ago. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints May 18, 1884, at Blue Rapids, Kansas, by G. W. Shute. Ordained a priest August 30, 1893, which position he held until death. He was superintendent of the church school and held a tender spot in his heart for all, especially the little ones who will miss his handshake, his pleasant smile, and the offerings so often slipped into their hands. Letters to the Editor

On Sister Attebery's Letter

Sister Attebery's letter in the Herald of May 25, was beautiful. I can not help but think how much good would come if we had the prayer meeting she suggests. The Saints need their faith strengthened in these perilous times. Could we not also choose the same hymn for the opening number? "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet" suggests itself to me at this time. Think of the thrill of it if the Saints all joined in one grand chorus as we shall some day do in Zion.

FRIEDA E. BUDWORTH.

SEBASTOPOL, CALIFORNIA.

The One Thing Needed

I have just read Sister Attebery's letter, with the editorial note. And I feel very deeply impressed with the significance, and the possibilities of the things which are set forth; and hope that I may be permitted to add my word.

If I grasp the Sister's thought correctly: The thing which is intended, is not that we should do away with our financial program, but that it would not be required by those who were found to have faith. I do not need the prohibition law, nor the law against theft or murder. But I would not for the world seek to have them done away. The financial law, like all other law, is for the direction, control, and admonition of those who are found to be below the level of the law.

Pentecost was not an accident. God never has, and he never will pour out his blessings except in accord with his divinely appointed plan, and he has said, "If ye are not one, ye are not mine."

I firmly believe that if we as a church will come before God upon our knees, desiring to know his will, and with a firm determination that we will do his will, to the full extent that it is revealed to us; that we may see the glory of God resting upon Zion, and our fondest dreams of spiritual blessings more than realized, in the space of so short a time that we shall wonder at our slothfulness in times past.

June has been set apart as a month of prayer. Shall we not be of one accord, and in spirit in one place, before the Throne of God in Zion.

We have prayed for many years, "Thy kingdom come," let us now ask, What may I do that I may help to answer that prayer.

Sincerely,

E. J. HAYDEN.

The Financial Situation to Date

As the HERALD goes to press this week the church-wide sacrifice effort is in full swing. In order that the Saints might have the last-minute information we add the following to supplement the reports of the Presiding Bishop's office as furnished in the HERALDS of June 1 and June 15.

The following figures will leave no one in doubt as to the truth of an editorial statement furnished in last week's HERALD: "The situation continues to be serious."

Operating budget requirements for 5 months	$120,000.00
Debt reduction requirement 5 months	80,000.00
Total	$200,000.00
Total receipts 5 months:
January	$29,122.26
February	19,183.75
March	20,628.87
April	14,968.55
May (from 73 districts)	14,000.00
Total Budget Deficit	$103,196.57

It will be noted that the total receipts for the five months of $97,903.43 lacks $22,096.57 of meeting our operating needs for the five months which amounts to $120,000.00. It therefore continues to be impossible to meet current obligations from current income.

This issue of the HERALD will reach the majority of our readers before the closing Sunday of Sacrifice Week. We therefore urge as earnestly and yet as kindly as we know how that both priesthood and membership make a special effort to the end that the returns for the month of June will cover the operating deficit and more. To do this, at least $55,000 would be required. (The income for June, 1931, was $69,000.)

Remember this is our day to carry forward the work of the church. It is not required of us that we be martyred for the Cause. It is not required that we shall be driven from our homes. Our task now is one of meeting the grievous financial burdens of the church. If we should give our all it would be no more than others have given for the Cause of Christ. Shall history record that we met the challenge of the hour? We sincerely believe that it will be so.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

"Fillers"

Some people are just finding out that the church did not cause the depression. They now feel better toward the church.

An old Dutch farmer bought a cyclopedia from an agent who told him that it contained all useful knowledge. The farmer wanted to educate his family, and put the set of books in the living room where they could read them. Weeks passed, and his children looked at the pictures, but did no reading.

"There you are now," he told them. "If you remain ignorant, I can't help it."

In good times the people of the church "looked at the pictures" of Zion, and went about their private business. Now they need Zion, but find that it can't be built in time for the present emergency.

But the future is still before us. We may learn our lesson in time to do something to protect ourselves against the next depression. And who is there to doubt that there will be another one?

My front lawn grows in a fine soil that is still soft and moist from the rains of last week, and the grass is flourishing. My back yard is of clay, already baked hard by a few days of sunshine, and the grass is withering.

It occurs to me that not so much depends on what blessings God sends us, as it does upon what kind of people we are. Some of us derive great good from little blessings, and others retain little good from great blessings.

Some of the young people who were graduated from high school this spring are in the city hunting jobs. Some others are at the corner drug store, displaying their natty "sport" clothes. Come, does

OFFICIAL

To Pastors and Church School Directors

In keeping with the progress made at the recent General Conference in seeing clearly the immediate objectives of the church and defining them in terms of our immediate teaching tasks, we come now to urge in every branch of the church that the following specific things be done:

1. Organize the effort of your church school about the two major objectives of the church; it must definitely assist in your local missionary program in its class work and its activities, and special emphasis must be given to teaching and observance of the financial law, that our spiritual natures may be developed and that the work of the church may go forward.

2. The new church school year begins October 2. It is none too early to begin to plan for the most effective class work possible. New study courses are to be available and will be advertised. Select courses and teachers with great care. We must teach effectively what our people most need. Use the quarterlies and other study materials and insist upon home study in preparation of the lessons.

3. Organize your young people for active participation in your local church work. We need them and they need the experience of challenging assignments under encouraging and sympathetic leadership. Provide for stimulating class work, let them assist in solving the problems and in carrying the burdens of the church, and cooperate with them in providing an adequate social and recreational program.

To further the work of young people we suggest:

A. Please send us at once the name of the president of your young people's Council, who automatically becomes a member of our general church council of young people. Note "A Working Agreement," it take a genius to predict where they will be in ten years.

The land was suffering from the drouth. The plants in three neighboring gardens were wilting under the pitiless sun. One man prayed for rain. Another man carried water. The third man did both.

In the present crisis, it is revealed that these three men are also typical church members.

and plans for the young people in the Saints' Herald for June 15. Encourage local and district plans for an active young people's program.

B. Include Graceland College in the plans and program of your branch. The action of the last General Conference makes it your duty to search out prospective Graceland students and to give every assistance possible to young members of your branch to enter Graceland this fall. Do what you can to encourage them, and send a list of names and addresses to President G. N. Briggs, Lamoni, Iowa, that he may send them catalogs and give them personal help.

The new provision for the first year of a nurse's training course at Graceland opens a splendid field for our girls.

C. Train your young people for local leadership. A ten-day training camp for young people is being planned at Nauvoo, Illinois, August 15 to 26. This is an exceptional opportunity for a training in leadership at low expense under the direction of our church. Send a list of those who should be interested to E. E. Closson, Camp Director, Lamoni, Iowa, for descriptive literature and an enrollment blank.

4. Plan some definite training for all your teachers and leaders. The blind can not lead the blind, the unskilled can not teach skill. We need training in study, in faith, and in active service. As never before must our teaching carry and embody the spirit of the Restoration, which is the spirit of love, sacrifice and intelligent devotion to the task before us. Our teachers and leaders, including the men of the priesthood, must themselves master the science and the art of spiritual living and leadership. They must lead the way to spiritual as well as intellectual attainment. There must come a deeper, soul-stirring conversion of our entire membership before we are free from the lure of trifling diversion and the fetters which bind us to selfish gratification. For this conversion and soul growth the redemption of Zion and the promised endowment waits.

Let every branch have a training program. It may not be pretentious, but there should be definite, continuous effort to perfect our work. Organize credit courses, by correspondence or under local direction; short courses planned to cover specific fields and to be followed by more advanced courses.

Plan local and district institutes. Take full advantage of attendance at classes held at your reunion. Write the general department of religious education for suggestions and help in perfecting your training program.

Together we must move forward in the teaching work of the church.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

NEWS BRIEFS

This Is Sacrifice Week

After much prayerful and careful preparation the church in America launched into Sacrifice Week, June 19, thousands of members pledging to do all they can to relieve the critical financial situation of this organization. Special prayer services everywhere marked the opening of this period, and the priesthood, women, and young people are now adding to their offerings.

In many places special ceremonies will mark the collecting of these offerings, and the spirit which will prevail at these ceremonies will be the true spirit of sacrifice. Great numbers of Saints will place on the altar money which they really need for a livelihood—their sacrifice offerings. Realizing that the responsibility of relieving the church in its present crisis, lies in their own hands, the Saints are consecrating themselves and their property to the great cause of latter days. Under this spirit, the church will press on towards its goals.

Children's Day Baptisms for Independence

On Children's Day the church in Independence received one hundred and four new members in eight of the nine congregations. Most of the candidates were children, many of whom had just reached the age of eight years. Baptismal services were the order of the day in the churches, and some beautiful ceremonies were witnessed. This large number of baptisms was distributed in the eight congregations as follows: Stone Church, thirty; Second Church, nineteen; Walnut Park, twenty; Liberty Street, twelve; Enoch Hill, eight; Englewood, eleven; Spring Branch, two, and East Independence, two.

Albert Carmichael Busy in New Office

Saints of Holden Stake are profiting from the missionary efforts of Patriarch Albert Carmichael. He is in their midst talking, preaching, explaining the things nearest his heart—Zion, stewardships, sacrifice, and consecration. For two weeks he held meetings in the little brick church at Atherton, Missouri, ten miles from Independence. His series ended June 4. And last Sunday, he began Sacrifice Week for Saints at Holden with meetings, and is continuing during the week.

Into the work of patriarch, to which office he was ordained at the late General Conference, Brother Carmichael brings the experience of thirty years as a bishop in the church, a great devotion to the church and its goals, and a loyal desire to do his share in bringing about the redemption of Zion.

Former Pastors Helpful in Omaha

In recent weeks Omaha, Nebraska, Branch has profited much from the services of some of its former pastors. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, a pastor there some thirty years ago, visited the city the latter part of May, and the theme of his sermon was a question, "What Does Your Church Mean to You?" More recent pastors who have contributed sermons and helps are Elders John L. Cooper, Blair Jensen, and Melvin Russell. These have supplemented the efforts of the present local priesthood. Elder Ray Whiting is the present pastor.

In addition, Omaha has had special meetings in which President Frederick M. Smith, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and Apostle John F. Garver have been speakers.

Young People Make Historic Pilgrimage

The young people of Cameron, Stewartsville, and Kingston joined the First Saint Joseph O. T. Z.'s in a pilgrimage to old Far West, Missouri, May 22. There they met with the Saints of the branch for worship. This was a stake-wide young people's movement.

The little church was packed, mostly with young people, as Stake President Ward A. Hougas recounted the history of the early Saints at that place and vividly pictured their sufferings and sacrifices. He gave a stirring challenge to the young men and women of today to make the "spirit of '36" the "spirit of '32."

A feeling of reverence swept over the group when, after a basket dinner in the shade of the grove, they gathered at the cornerstone of the temple that was to have been builded at Far West.

Apostle Roy S. Budd in His Field

After a brief illness at his home in Independence, following General Conference, Apostle Budd is actively at work in his field, the South Central States Mission which includes Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas. The last few weeks have found him in Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri.

During the latter part of May, Apostle Budd, in company with J. E. Lancaster, of Tulsa, and District President Ed. Dillon, of Oklahoma City, visited a number of branches in Oklahoma, where they were welcomed with eagerness and enthusiasm. Then the district conference at Norfolk, Nebraska, called Brother Budd farther north. Last Wednesday he left Independence for a tour through branches in southern and western Kansas.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5: 14, 15.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

—Tennyson.

Pray for Others

It is our first thought, when sickness and trouble come upon us, to ask others to pray for us. When others who are in need ask it of us, do we pray for them?

We never know when it is to be our turn to suffer, when health may forsake us or departing fortune leave us in sorrow and want. Then and then only do we begin to realize what it means to have friends, and to be able to call on the members of the church for help, both material and spiritual. How hard it is for some who have been careless and indifferent to the appeals of others to ask for help from those that they have not helped!

There is no life but that some time it knows a great need, when strength and health fail it, and it must depend on others in order to survive. Let us be so considerate of others, in our time of health and strength, so willing to respond to their needs, that when our time comes, and misfortune brings us low, we shall have a strong spiritual reserve, and hosts of grateful friends to intercede for us.

The best prayers are unselfish. They embrace the whole world. All men are included in the limitless circle of their charity and love. Though the people who utter them may be intensely conscious of their own wants—though they may suffer acutely—they know that personal need is only a small part of the greater need of suffering humanity. Children are taught to pray for themselves, for their families, and for their homes. As they grow older, if the gospel of Christ means anything to them, they learn to include the many others that they may never see, until their interest and concern reaches all men. When we have learned to love others, the Divine Love comes to us. When we learn to pray for others, the Divine Benediction becomes ours. We have learned the meaning of the Cross when through sacrifice we can push others before ourselves into the presence of God.

Ask for Prayers

Sister Inez Slover, a school-teacher of Drumwright, Oklahoma, was severely injured in an automobile accident on March 13, 1932. Her spine was badly injured, which left her lower limbs and extremities in a paralyzed condition. She asks the prayers of the members of the church that her health may be restored and that she may be able to walk again.

Mrs. Nora Winders, of Wheatland, Missouri, is deaf, and finds this deprivation of her hearing a great trial since it prevents her from hearing the church services. She says, "I feel sure that when I approach my heavenly Father in the right way I will receive the blessing I want so much. I am fasting and praying, and would like the Saints to offer prayers for me the first Sunday in July and also the following Wednesday evening at prayer meeting." Her letter expresses her strong faith in God and her interest in the work of the church.

Quarterlies Late

Owing to conditions over which we have no control—namely, the delay in copy reaching us for some of the grades—the quarterlies will be late in the mails for the next quarter. We hope, however, to be able to mail all of them with the exception of the Intermediate grade the last of the week or the first of next. That one will follow as soon as ready.

Australia Loses Oldest Church Member

In his report to the conference of Southern New South Wales District, held at Hamilton, April 23 to 25, District President A. J. Corbett mentioned with regret the death of Sister Ann Williams, of Hamilton, a member of the church for more than half a century, and said to be the oldest member of the church in Australia.

Sister Williams was born in Aberdare, Wales, May 8, 1853, and was baptized into the church at Waratah, New South Wales, January 10, 1876, by Elder Glaud Rodger, early missionary to that continent.

Our Task

Sacrifice and Social Progress

(A radio talk by J. A. Koehler.)

It was only a few years ago that the men of America were asked to sacrifice their lives, if necessary, in order to "save Democracy." Of the millions upon millions of men who answered the call of their respective countries, ready to make the supreme sacrifice, if necessary, only a few could give any rational explanation of how the saving of their social institutions was to result in good to humanity. This blind sacrificing we call "Patriotism."

But that is the experience of the race. Men feel the need and the value of social institutions even when they can not understand them. And this feeling of the value and sacredness of social institutions runs so strong and is so general, that thousands upon thousands have actually experienced happiness in making the supreme sacrifice in order to save or to establish them.

In times of national distress men have always been ready to sacrifice for social ends. When the welfare of the colonies of America was threatened by the presence of a foreign foe, the friends of religious and political freedom rose up and offered their lives in sacrifice for their social institutions.

When the guns of Fort Sumter roared out their threats against "The Union," the friends of that cause offered their lives in sacrifice to save their social institutions.

It is the way of good men to sacrifice for social institutions. And where is the scorner who dares to mock the humblest and most ignorant man who offers himself a sacrifice for his country? It is Patriotism. And who dares to scoff at Patriotism?

Does it not seem strange to you that the same individual who highly praises personal sacrifices in political life, calling it "patriotism," should scoff at sacrifice in religious life and call it "fanaticism"? That is hard to understand. But it is much harder to understand how men of the church, who have felt in their own souls the heat of the fire of devotion to religious ideals and institutions, can scoff at men of another church who, in the same spirit, under the same impulses, offer themselves a sacrifice for their religious institutions.

Some have asked, How can they do it? What they should have asked is, How can they keep from doing it? They can't. Good men, who appreciate and love their religious institutions, can not help doing something to save them. It is contrary to the nature of things for the good men of any church to stand idly by and see their religious institutions threatened without themselves being moved by an almost irresistible force to sacrifice in order to save them.

The history of the advancement of civilization is at once the history of the development of social institutions. What kind of a world would this world be? and what would your fate and my fate be if the peoples who lived before us had not been willing to sacrifice for social institutions? And if we are to be as worthy men as our fathers have been, then we, too, must willingly pay the price that needs to be paid to pass on to our children better social institutions than we received from the past. Otherwise there can be no social progress.

This is a time of economic confusion, of industrial depression, and of financial distress for peoples generally. Some of our most highly prized social institutions are threatened by the mess into which both our personal and our social unrighteousness has gotten the world. The life of our own church is threatened. Already, the powers of some of its vital organs have been impaired; its sustaining functions have been obstructed and weakened; we have had to give up some of the ground, even, that we had gained; and already we are feeling very keenly the need of the Bread of Life which only the church, with its social institutions, is able to give.

What is to be expected of the men of the church in such a time of need? If to "save Democracy" we men of the church would risk the horrors of military combat, what must we be willing to risk in order to save "The Kingdom"? Is it possible that a man who reveres the name of Jesus could be slow to sacrifice money to save The Body of Christ—the church—from amasculation or from atrophy or from dishonor? particularly the man who would spill his blood to "save Democracy"?

We men of the church have but one medium through which to realize The Kingdom, and that medium is our own church with its social institutions. If it is a fact, as we men of the church have testified both in the presence of God and man, over and over again, that "neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, neither things present, nor things to come. . . shall be able to separate us from the Love of God," then it is also a fact that we must spend ourselves in some way to sustain our church and fit it for its task. That is the way of love. There is no love of God which does not work that way.

Redemption is sacrificial. If men individually are to be saved, and if this world is to be saved, then there must be Good Men who are willing to pay the price of redemption. Redemption has always been sacrificial. In 1776 the price of our redemption was the sacrifices of Washingtons and Morris and Harvey Burches. Without these sacrifices the Colonies could never have been saved. That was the price, which, under the circumstances, had to be paid. And because men loved the cause of freedom, the price was paid, and the people were saved.

In 1864, the price of redemption from chattel slavery was the sacrifices of the "Abraham Lincolns" of that day. It was because the good men of America were willing to pay the price that the day came when the oppressed heard the good news of the Emancipation Proclamation.

And so, through the personal gifts of Luthers and Calvins and Smiths, of Pastors and Kochs and Jenners, of Washingtons and Lincolns and Wilsons, civilization has been advanced. Through the sacrifices of such godly men mankind, thus far, has been redeemed.

Not only have the personal gifts of men saved us from the disease and poverty that issue from maladjustment to the natural world, but we have been saved through personal sacrifice from many of the heartaches and hatreds that issue from maladjustment to the ethical world.

Don't forget, friends, that the sum total of human good has been made possible in the measure of the willingness of men to spend themselves for others.

And now, in the year of our Lord 1932, the stern fact that redemption is by sacrifice—that salvation from the despair of unbelief, and from the sorrow of sin, and from the collapse of civilization must be purchased at the price of sacrifice—forces itself upon our attention like the roar of a tornado, and the world is literally begging its good men to save it "from this untoward generation." If ever there was a day, this is a day of sacrifice.

This is a day of sacrifice notwithstanding all that has been done to save humanity, whether in the field of medicine or politics or religion. And this demand for sacrifice today is found in the fact that civilization has become wonderfully complex and the development of its various phases unbalanced.

The progress we have made in the natural sciences demands of us more progress than we have yet made in the social sciences. It is imperative that we make better ethical adjustments to save ourselves from both economic, social, and spiritual disaster.

Of whom, now, are these sacrifices expected? To whom must we look for adventure in "righteousness"? Who but the men of the church? "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." It is written in the very nature of the moral constitution that there is a duty to sacrifice resting upon the peoples of the church who, almost alone, are in a position to make a sacrifice that will count for the redemption of the race.

What has been committed to the peoples of the church? The oracles of God. The Way of Life. The Gospel of salvation. And not only that, but the grace that is necessary to make the sacrifices of the peoples of the church count for the redemption of the race.

"Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are the salt of the earth." And with these gifts in our possession, what do God and society and conscience demand of us in the way of sacrifice?

The answer to that question is to be found in the attitudes of the men whose personal gifts have helped to save us—an answer which is verified in the parables of "The Lost Sheep," "The Good Samaritan," and "The Sheep and the Goats." Even though ninety and nine are safe in the fold, and but one has gone astray, it is the duty of the shepherd to sacrifice the comforts of his bed, to forego his night's rest, and take whatever personal risks may be involved in order that the lost may be restored.

And this willingness to sacrifice is the mark of a Christian man. And when all nations shall be gathered before the Judge of all the earth, these shall be declared "The Worthy Men of earth"—those who were moved upon by the deeds of men to give their lives a sacrifice. But the salt of the earth "which has lost its savor," which has not spent itself in sacrificial saving service, shall be cast out as "good for nothing but to be trodden under the feet of men."

I want to present now just a few verses from the third chapter of Ezekiel, which bear upon the question of the duty to pay the personal costs necessary to achieve social ends. This is the language:

"Son of man [whoever you are], I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul. Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die; because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul."

This is but a statement of what our own consciences demand of us as the price of our own self-respect. Now the world is in a mess. It is an ethical mess; a political mess; an economic mess; a social mess. And the good men of the church are expected to do for the world what Christian peoples themselves can hope to do only through the Christian church, with its social institutions. We are expected not only to sustain, but to advance the social institutions of the church even at the cost of personal sacrifice.

The fate of the church, with its world-saving program, is at stake in the behavior of the men of the church. There never was a time when society needed saviors more than today. If the church fails the world, all is lost; for the need of the world, I repeat, is not a better economic technique; it is not business stimulation; it is not more progress in the utility arts. The need of the nations is a better ethical world—the need of the world is a "Government of God."

The salvation of society awaits the social reconstruction which must be achieved by men who have experienced individual regeneration. The need of the world is the church. The Saving Church. A church which has within itself the power to realize the Kingdom.

And today, it is being put up to us men of the Latter Day Saint Church to say whether or not we are willing to make the sacrifices necessary to give to society such social institutions.

The fate of the church hangs in the balance. The church may die. But if it does die, it will be because we, first, have died; for we are the church. All the church can possibly be is what we make it. And we have made it what it is. Our own personal fates hang in the balance. This is a day of Sacrifice. And there is only one way to make good in the sight of God, in the eyes of the world, and in the light of our own consciences, and that is to make willingly the sacrifices necessary to save the church and to establish its institutions.

I have found life not too meager but too rich in opportunity. It needs eternity to justify itself.—

By This Shall All Men Know

A TESTIMONY

By Harold I. Velt

There is one quality about the work in which we are engaged that makes it outstanding above every other organization upon the face of the earth. That is, there is developed among faithful workers a mutual appreciation and a love which stir the emotions to heights of inexpressible praise and thanksgiving to God for such happy fellowship. Indeed, it is a foretaste of heaven. It was this attribute which caused the Apostle John to write, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

Truly did President Elbert A. Smith write in his article in Zion's Ensign for May 19, "There arises this further consideration: man himself is emotional; he has three attributes, will, intellect, and emotion. In the normal man these are well balanced and equally developed. The religion that will help the normal man should be both intellectual and emotional and should stimulate and develop the will. God is not perceived by the intellect alone. The soul that is not stirred never senses God."

It was in August, 1914, that I attended a church conference for the first time. It was in Brisbane, Australia. Under the spirit of that conference there was manifested among the members a love which caused a willingness to sacrifice self for the good of others and the building up of God's kingdom on earth. What an experience that was! With new light and meaning the words impressed themselves upon our minds. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another." (John 13: 35.) With great zeal we went forth in missionary endeavor assuring the people that we had found the divinely appointed system by which human relationships could be made like heaven.

A clergyman confided to my parents that their son would lose his enthusiasm after a little more experience; that they all did, etc. Certainly my views have been modified about many things, but I am happy to say that with the broadening of experience has come a still greater appreciation of and love for this latter-day work. The very Spirit which accompanies it enables us to see in one another gems of good that otherwise might easily be obscured by the many little weaknesses so often manifest, and often we are constrained to sing:

Blest be the tie that binds,
Our hearts in Christian love,
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

It is still true that, "To love and to be loved is the greatest happiness of existence."

Sister Velt and I can truthfully say that the mutual love that has developed between us and the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District where we have labored the past two years has been an experience which we would not have missed for worlds of material things. The will and the intellect must of necessity form a great part in the work of the church, but it is the third attribute, the emotional, that can "change this cold world into heaven."

We believe with the poet:

It is the heart and not the brain
That to the highest doth attain,
And he who followeth love's behest,
Far exceedeth all the rest.

We thank God for the experiences of the past, and for the assurance that even richer experiences are still before the faithful of this church.

A Warning

By Joseph Luff

The flood-gates are lifting—beware of the tide!
'Twill sweep o'er the nations, subsiding their pride;
No barrier can stay it—no hand can prevail—
For God moves in judgment—His word can not fail.

The fires are kindling—beware of the flame!
For havoc and ruin 'twill surely proclaim;
'Twill feed on the structures, and laugh at the wall
Defiantly builded, and science appall.

Fierce tempests are brewing—beware of their blast!
Their fury will gather in strength to the last;
The roar of their rushing the world will astound,
And woe in the wake of their whirlings abound.

A plague is in nesting—beware of its breath!
Its touch is as mildew, its watchword is death;
No rank will escape it, no station be free,
Nor safety be found on the land or the sea.

A panic is pending—commotion and dearth
Lie close in its path, and the treasures of earth
From hand that have held them like dust shall be swept
And poverty enter where wealth has long slept.

A famine is coming—the long fertile field
Will mock at man's labor, refusing to yield;
The earthquakes, increasing, shall sport, as they reel,
With towers of granite and strongholds of steel.

Disorders upon and disasters beneath
Earth's surface shall terror and sorrow bequeath;
The nations shall war and people contend,
And man must himself 'gainst his neighbor defend.

The vials of fury, poured forth everywhere,
Shall fill the ungodly with woe and despair;
No bond shall withhold them, no cov'nant restrain
From slaughter for vengeance nor pillage for gain.

Though millions are heedless and scoffers deride,
'Twill come, and come shortly, and WHO SHALL ABIDE!
Make answer, O Zion, for surely within
Your borders shall cleansing and judgment begin.

If loving your God and neighbor, you'll purge
Yourselves of all selfishness—fear not the scourge!
For angels will camp where beholding this sign
Of Sainthood, and guard you, because ye are mine.

The Father saith "Yea!"—the Spirit "Amen!
Repeat to the Nations this warning again:
The end is approaching—Redemption is near
And Jesus 'ere long will in glory appear."

Letters to the Editor

Steps Toward Zion

Often I have thought to write you about steps towards the redemption of Zion. I am only a "new" Saint, but since I have understood the church's Zionic program, my daily prayers have been that I may be enabled to do something that will help in promoting the redemption of Zion. My whole desire, and it is a very strong and permeating desire, is to see Zion redeemed.

We Latter Day Saints need Zion established. The world needs Zion and does not know it. Would it not be a fine thing to have Zion flourishing in the midst of the world today? Think of Zion built upon the foundation of brotherhood, equality, and stewardship!

I believe that faith as a step towards the redemption of Zion is one of the most needed attributes. We need more faith, a faith that is strong whatever happens, a faith like unto Daniel's. We need also united prayer, the whole church throughout the world getting together often in prayer, and as Sister Attebery in her letter to the Herald has said, if we have faith and are filled with his Spirit, we shall not need a man-made financial program.

It would be very beautiful if we Latter Day Saints were all together, helping one another to live in justice, equality, liberty, and fraternity, for only in such a community can God's will be done on earth as in heaven. Every one of us would then be living with one hope—the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The "Lord's Tenth"

What may I add to the letter of our noble Sister Attebery, "Calls for an Act of Faith as a Step Toward the Redemption of Zion," printed in the Herald of May 25, to bring us the eternal resolve to set up altars in our homes and to consecrate ourselves with the words of Joshua: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord"? Test and experience will prove to us that there is meat in God's house and that he is blessing his children when they obey his commandments.

I have been in the church thirty-four years and have heard personal experiences of moving forward, acting, and trusting. You know Abraham said: "Of all that thou givest me, I surely will give thee one tenth," and the Martyr Joseph, also Oliver Cowdery, promised to pay the Lord their tenth. The Lord did not fail them because they did it. They proved him.

I have had the test of taking out my just wants and needs and paying everything else before I paid the Lord. We may feel that we are honest with the Lord's storehouse, but if we leave him or the storehouse till everything else is paid out, we can not be honest stewards of God.

In our earnest desire for God's favor, let us come to his altar first with the one tenth and lay the nine tenths there and prove God in blessing it.

I believe there are many real Saints who are waiting for direction.

I have promised the Lord that I will square up with him what I owe him. From now on I am paying one tenth as it comes into my possession.

Preparing for Christ

The Saints of this branch rejoice that God blessed the late conference with his Spirit and that again we can send a few more out to spread the gospel as a witness to some of the nations. With this spirit, as Brother Elbert A. Smith says, we can succeed. Let us keep it. Let us cling to it. Let us walk in the light of God.

This business depression will work out for good. Husband finds time to get acquainted with his wife and children since he is not so busy. The family can go to church now. The girl can help mother more since her sweetheart can not buy gas to speed his car. There are still conditions which must be made right. Why not keep God's Sabbath holy as he asks us to do? Why not have the ball game and auto races Saturday afternoon, and let the church-loving people have church unmolested by speeding cars and young folks rushing pell-mell to the places of Sunday amusements? It doesn't stop there—gray-haired people seem to be taken up quite as much.

We must learn the lesson of life which God has designed we should know. Aren't we slow? Why can't we wake up? You hear the cry, "Hoover is to blame!" Oh, no, one man is not alone to blame; one man does not rule heaven and earth. Like other nations our nation has forgotten God. "Pride goeth before a fall," is a proverb and it is true.

Have we been sleeping? or have we read our Book of Mormon and noted how when the people became wealthy, puffed up, wore costly clothing, they always fell. The same cause will bring the same effect. Saints, let us dress more soberly and inexpensively, both ourselves and our children. Let us eat plainer foods, let tobacco, hot drinks, and liquors alone. Let us get our sleep in the night hours.

Let us pray faithfully as did Daniel and the three Hebrew children. Let us believe and practice stewardships, have all things in common. When we do these things heaven can not keep the Christ any longer. When we remember to share with each other, to have brotherly kindness, and to work together, we shall be well on the road to Zion. Let us live and pray, and then we can cease singing, "By faith we can see Him afar," and raise our voices in gladness, "He is coming soon."

"Onward to Zion, faithful and strong,
Zion the beautiful, beckons us on."

With this spirit we will succeed.

MRS. JOHN TEETERS.

ALEXANDER, KANSAS.

After reading the interesting letter by Mrs. Louise Attebery in the Saints' Herald for May 25, I agree with her. Something must be done to increase the faith of the Saints. Earnest prayers will ascend to the throne of God, and He has promised to give for the asking, and his promises are sure. There is no hope in the world.

We must awaken and put on the whole armor of God to fight the battle before us. But few of us are able to do what our hearts would desire during these strenuous times to help pay the indebtedness. But it costs no money to pray. Therefore a united effort on the part of the whole church should bring the Lord's blessings that are needed for our program.

MRS. G. E. HEMSTOCK.

BANGOR, WISCONSIN.

In the Herald of May 25 I notice with great interest the letter from Sister Louise Attebery, suggesting that a day be set apart for fasting and prayer and exercising of faith, that the church may be relieved of her present affliction of indebtedness, etc.

I, as one of the interested Saints, think it a very good idea, for if the Lord has promised to hear and answer "where two or three are joined together" in prayer concerning a thing, how much more effective would it be if several thousand earnest prayers uttered in sincerity of faith, ascended at once to the throne of Grace? I believe there would be great rejoicing among the hosts of heaven, at the display of such trust and faith on our behalf and that it would certainly bring down the blessing so earnestly desired. It is certain that something must be done, more than bemoan the church's present plight, and it also seems that only God can do it. And I think an "act of faith" of this magnitude would at least bring the blessing of faith and a desire in each Saint's heart to sacrifice to their limit, to help their

Infection and Immunity—Cerebrospinal Fever

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Immunity is a condition of the system brought about by substances unfavorable to the presence of disease-producing bacteria. It has a tendency to neutralize the poison produced by this kind of bacteria, or in other words, a state of the system whereby contagious or infectious diseases meet with resistance. It is a mechanism that we have been able to understand more fully in late years—the resistance of the body to contagion. One may harbor in his system a dangerous disease germ in the intestinal tract, skin, or in other parts of the body, but the moment death takes place, and sometimes shortly before, the lowered resistance of the body permits these bacteria to invade our tissues and destroy them. Natural immunity requires the frequent exposure of an individual for several years, and while this is being established, many deaths and great economic loss occurs, but finally, a resistance is gradually worked up, by the bacteria continuously entering our bodies and producing antibodies within our systems and thereby ameliorate or eradicate the disease entirely from our systems. The slowness of natural immunity has been accelerated to a remarkable degree by the injection of anti-toxins or anti-bodies. This is why those who live under excellent sanitary surroundings, when exposed to infections, are more likely to contract the disease.

Cerebrospinal fever is an acute and very severe infection produced by specific germs which are usually found in the spinal fluid, also in the nasal secretions. Its origin is frequently among those living in unhygienic, overcrowded, and filthy places. Naturally people living under such conditions have poor food and impure water, which only adds to the contagiousness of the disease. It is a disease of youth, most precious possession, the Church of Christ, the restored church.

And such faith and united love and effort will surely make it possible for the Saints who are now unable to pay their tithes and offerings, though never so willing, to catch up and more.

My sincere prayers are ever for the welfare of Zion, and for anything that will help in bringing about the Zion conditions, for, in the words of the dear sister, "We need Zion, and now."

MRS. WALTER CALAHAN.

BANGOR, WISCONSIN.

and is more prevalent in the winter seasons. Carriers are also potent factors in the spread of this disease. It is epidemic and sometimes sporadic. (Sporadic, meaning a disease that occurs in single or scattered cases.) The germ is called meningococcus and is unknown in nature outside of the human body and is found in the blood almost constantly in the early stages of the disease. Death may occur within twenty-four hours after infection. This germ is rather surprisingly resistant to air and sunlight. One author found that some of the germs revived after eight or nine hours' exposure to the sun.

There are persons who have a peculiar immunity, but if directly in contact with the disease, become carriers and transmit the infection to others, and these to others, indefinitely. The healthy, passive characters far outnumber the cerebrospinal cases. It is a well known fact that a mother who happens to nurse an infant infected with this disease, becomes a carrier. There is no evidence that chronic carriers develop the disease. During the World War, on account of the great numbers of carriers, it was found impractical, from a military standpoint, to isolate them. Those who harbor the disease, as carriers, the longest, are those that have some nasal or pharyngeal irritation. Vaccinations have been found useless so far as relieving the danger from the carriers of the disease.

Telling the Gospel Story

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES

By Richard Bullard

To those who love the music of the turbulent ocean, there is a charm mingled with awe as Father Neptune hurls his mighty waves against the rock-bound coast of Maine, sending spray many feet in the air, and in time of storm causing sounds similar to the booming of distant cannons.

It was along this coast that I spent some years of my ministry, among men who go down to the sea in boats, often risking their lives as they brave the storms common along the coast of that State. Fishing is the principal industry of the towns along the coast, and these men are fishermen.

In September of 1908, I had made arrangements to hold a series of meetings at Stonington, a town well known to Latter Day Saint missionaries and for years the home of our faithful missionary of many lands, Patriarch U. W. Greene. His name is a household charm among those who have listened to the gospel story from his lips and heart, and many of those who listened are now members of the church.

Our church building stands upon a hill commanding a splendid view of the ocean dotted with islands, a picture of wonderful beauty to all lovers of the work of the Creator. I know of few scenes more enchanting than the one seen from this eminence when the fog is slowly rising from the sea and gradually revealing the islands surrounded by the white-crested waves breaking against their wall of rocks. No artist could do justice to what I have admired from that hill by the sea.

Arrangements had been made for my comfort at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Frank Carter. Sister Carter is known throughout the church as Mary Leland Carter who wrote the story, "An Instrument in His Hands," an outstanding, silent missionary since its publication, which is still doing its work to the blessing of those who study and appreciate its message.

While acting as bishop for the church, I always felt it my duty to do regular missionary work, and tried to arrange a series of subjects that reached beyond the financial department of the church, although I always tried to include it in the gospel story where it belongs—it is only departmental as we choose to make it so. To me the gospel is one whole, unbroken story and includes tithing, consecration, freewill offering, surplus, equality, stewardships, inheritances, and gathering. These principles, carried out in the lives of the church membership, will bring about the Zion of latter days. Nothing short of this can bring to us the ideals we have so long dreamed of, and praised.

Now for the incident I wish to relate which caused much joy to the household in which I was staying. When entering this home, I was at once introduced to Miss Grace H. Prescott, a cousin of Sister Carter, who had come to spend her vacation there. If I remember correctly, she was a member of the Baptist Church and a consistent Christian of that body of worshippers. At first she was quite reserved and showed but little interest in the subjects presented. Nevertheless, she attended my meetings which continued two or three weeks. I was blessed with the freedom and liberty of the Spirit of the Master, and knew the heaven was working in the hearts of some in attendance. After the first week's services, questions were asked, and answered as we were led and this evidence of inquiry reached the home of my friends where I was staying I noticed that Miss Prescott followed with open Bible the subjects under discussion, but made no outward demonstration of deep interest.

On the Saturday prior to my last Sunday at Stonington, I had some five candidates to baptize on the afternoon tide, so that the confirmations could be attended to on Sunday. I had been busy painting the back porch of the home during the morning hours, and while I was occupied with this little exercise of helpfulness, Sister Carter came to me with the message: "My cousin is ready for baptism and wishes you to baptize her with those who will be here this afternoon for that purpose."

This was the statement of Miss Prescott: "When you came through the gate to our home, I was standing at the window, and as I saw you coming toward the house, a voice quite distinct said to me, 'This is a servant of the Lord, and he will baptize you before he leaves Stonington.' But I replied, 'Never! I can not join that church!' I have fought the idea of joining an organization which will cause me to leave my church and all my friends, suffer ostracism, and have my name cast out as evil, and I thought I could not do it. But since I have listened to the subjects presented which I have followed closely and compared with my Bible, I have decided that to be honest to my conscience and the truth, I must obey, and I wish you to baptize me today." This is as nearly the message she gave me as I now remember, and to the joy of that household I was privileged to baptize her into Christ with the others who were ready to follow their Lord through the door ordained of God into the security and care of the Good Shepherd.

"My sheep hear my voice, and a stranger they will not follow," was the declaration of the Good Shepherd while he was here among men. It is true today as when Jesus spoke those words so long ago. That voice may be conveyed in dream, vision, prophecy, or through the preaching of the word of God, but it is from the same infallible source, the Spirit of truth sent from the Father and his beloved Son from the heavens above.

The year following this event Elder Daniel McGregor was sent to Maine, and made Stonington his headquarters. He found many honest souls waiting to hear the message of life, and during his stay in and near that town he baptized many, the number I can not now recall, but enough to make quite a stir among the representatives of other church organizations.

A large stone quarry provided labor for some two or three hundred men and boys at this place, and the interest of Daniel's messages had reached the hearts of a number of these men and their families. So an invitation was extended Brother "Mac," to preach to these toilers during their lunch or dinner hour. This request was willingly responded to, but after one or two sermons had been delivered, the foreman, who was not friendly to the Saints, refused to permit the preaching to be continued although the men urged a continuance of the meetings. He forbade Elder McGregor to return for another meeting. Brother McGregor was leaving the quarry, had walked but a short distance, when he turned and going to the foreman made this statement: "The day will come when grass will be almost knee high where you are now working, and not a hammer will be heard in this quarry. There will be no work in this place for these men."

This came to pass in every detail as it was delivered to the foreman on that day. As far as I know no more stone has been quarried from that place. This incident provides another evidence that no weapon formed against this work of God can prosper, but that it will come to naught.

"The work, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, . . . Remember, remember that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men." (Doctrine and Covenants 2:1, 2.) If our work has its foundations in the word of God, it will prosper and the fruitage be seen in God's time and in his own way.

Reunion Study Courses

In the Saints' Herald of May 25 there appeared an official announcement of four specially prepared courses designed for reunion use. Two of these appeared in outline form in the May Vision, "The Objectives of the Church," and "The Church School." One will appear in the June Vision, "The Message of the Book of Mormon." Due to unexpected pressure of work the fourth course, on church history, has not been prepared. However, we suggest other material which may well take its place.

"The Objectives of the Church" is based upon a pamphlet of the same title which should be sold at the reunion at five cents each. The pamphlet contains the resolutions of the last General Conference setting forth the objectives toward which all our energies shall be focused.

"The Church School" is based upon a study of the Church School Handbook which will be on sale at thirty-five cents. In eight lessons are covered the purpose, plan and method of church school organization and administration, as provided by the General Conference of 1930.

"The Message of the Book of Mormon" consists of eight lessons taken from parts one, two and three of the current adult quarterly. The purpose of this course is, (1), to teach some most vital lessons from the Nephite record, (2), to give an appreciation of the Book of Mormon as a part of the sacred literature of the church, and (3), to demonstrate most effective methods of teaching from the record.

Class supplies of this quarterly should be taken to the reunion for use.

For further selection of class material we suggest the following:

The Priesthood Manual. This is just off the press and makes an excellent study, especially for groups of the priesthood. It should be on sale at forty-five cents.

The Teaching of Religion. This is a recently prepared little book in the pedagogy of religion and is a most excellent beginner's course. It sells for twenty-five cents.

The Background of Our Church History. This is an outline of our church history well planned as a guide for class use. Price ten cents.

Extra copies of Vision for May or June. Fifteen cents each.

To Secure Credit

District directors of religious education and reunion committees are urged to plan their courses early and to arrange with the general department of religious education to secure credit for those who meet credit conditions.

In general, those conditions are as follows:

1. The class program and instructors selected should be approved for credit.
2. Instructors should be teachers of merit, well prepared in the subject they are to teach.
3. Students to receive credit should attend at least six of the eight class sessions, one point per class hour attended being allowed. Credit is not usually assigned to students under sixteen years of age.
4. If possible students should make personal preparation of the lesson assignments and manifest a genuine interest in the work of the class.
5. Each student wishing credit should pay ten cents as a credit fee to be sent to the general office.
6. An official attendance record should be kept daily of all classes, and forwarded at the end of the class to the general office. This record should include the name and street address of all who are recommended to receive credit.

Other subject matter may be chosen and organized for credit courses on approval of the general Department of Religious Education.

Order Supplies Early

The Herald Publishing House will gladly forward on consignment, a supply of any of the above study materials to district directors or reunion officials. Select the courses you wish, estimate the number of each pamphlet you think you can sell, and get the supply on hand. These study materials are not expensive and our people will appreciate this opportunity to study them together.

Let the training classes of the reunion help to equip your teachers and leaders for the most effective service of which they are capable, as they go back to their branches.

Let these study courses add materially to the good of your reunion for the entire membership in instruction, in appreciation and in zeal for the success of the work committed to the church.

What Seek Ye?

By E. J. Hayden

In John 1: 38, we find that Christ asked the above question of some who sought to follow him. It was by no means an idle query. If we give it a moment's thought, we shall realize that there is a deep heart searching required, before this question can be properly answered.

John and Andrew, like most of the Jews of their time, were looking, and hoping for the coming of the Christ, the anointed One, who should deliver Israel from the yoke of bondage and foreign rule, and establish his kingdom as the supreme power in the world. That this is true is manifest in the fact that they were among those who asked the Lord, as he stood on the Mount of Olives, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1: 6.) But, "what seek ye?" Have you looked deeper than the thought of material gain? Have you a desire to search the deep things of God? Do you seek to serve; or is it your ambition to rule? These are some of the questions which we find implied in that simple, direct question. And the answer which, at that moment, the Master discerned to be uppermost in the mind of at least one of these men, can be inferred from that which we find recorded in Matthew 20: 20-23, in which we find the two sons of Zebedee coming to Jesus, and asking for places of preferment in his kingdom.

Man by nature seeks and desires place, prominence and the praise and plaudits of his fellow men. He longs for ease, comfort, luxury, and all the good things of this life, which he sees about him in such abundance. He strives for wealth, influence and power. And all these things are good in themselves. But when place makes us proud: when prominence makes us inconsiderate: when praise causes us to lose sight of our own faults: when ease brings unwillingness to do that which is hard in the service of God and our fellow men: when comfort makes us forget those who are in distress: when luxury makes us unwilling to share with those who lack: when wealth brings greediness: when influence makes us long to rule: and power causes us to forget the rights of others, and to ignore the cry of the oppressed: in short, when the things of the world exalt self to that place where we lose sight of the larger needs of the group: then it is that they, each and every one of them, become evils which must be guarded against in order that the lusts of the flesh may not gain dominion over us.

Shall we say that to crush these desires, or aspirations; or to so far subdue them that they are no longer a factor in our lives, is the aim and object toward which we should strive? Or shall we rather endeavor to shape and mold our lives so that the very existence, not only of those things which are in themselves good, but of those also which exhale the very atmosphere of hell, shall, through us, bring a blessing to those about us, and to the world at large? This is, I believe, the true mission of those who would follow Christ.

Merely to renounce those things for which other men seek, and hold ourselves apart from the world, is to proclaim our own weakness, and inability to hold the station in the world in which we have been placed. To flee from duty is to brand ourselves as deserters. To shrink from, or refrain from using opportunity, because the task is hard, and involves responsibility, affirms our own moral trepidation. To refuse the burden which society would impose, is to find oneself a recluse, though he abide amid the throng; a hermit, though domiciled where multitudes surge.

Since we can neither yield to, nor yet ignore these, the things of the world, it is for us to find some other way: a way which, while shunning the dangers on the one hand, will not lead into the pitfalls on the other. Such would indeed be a narrow way; and being thus described, we at once think of him who said that his followers must seek, and walk in the straight and narrow way: and of his words in the wonderful prayer that he offered in behalf of those who believed on his name: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." (John 17: 16.) And again: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." (John 10: 10.) And: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." (John 17: 3.)

Webster tells us that eternal is synonymous with everlasting, and endless. And in the Doctrine and Covenants (18: 2) we find that the Lord has told us that "eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment. For his name is Endless." Therefore, if eternal punishment is God's punishment, then eternal life is God's life; and it is this life which we receive by coming to know God, through his Son, Jesus Christ whom he has sent. It is that we might have this Godlike life that Christ came into the world. In acquiring this life we must walk in the straight and narrow way. As Christ's followers are admonished that they "be not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," (Romans 12: 11) we find that the conditions necessary to meeting our problem are quite clearly set forth, and in fact it is only a part of that life which the Lord would have us live. For if we are to live the God life, it must needs be that we will live as Christ lived, doing good to all men, with our ears ever open to the cry of the needy, ever considerate of the rights of others, seeking no place, or position for ourselves, which the Lord would not have us to occupy.

The world is today demanding, through the modernistic pulpit, that there be a recasting of the gospel message; that there shall be a social gospel preached. But Jesus Christ declared a social gospel upon the hills of Palestine, when he said, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matthew 6: 38.) And it is made even more clear by Jacob (2: 23, 24): "Before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick and afflicted." And it is this same social gospel which is today being proclaimed in the doctrine of stewardships.

Our Lord said: "If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor." (John 12: 26.) And: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." (Matthew 16: 24.) Are we following Jesus? Do we wish to follow him more perfectly? Then let us look well into our own hearts. What seek ye?

If faith pleases God, then the more the faith is intelligently exercised the more he is pleased. Faith is the beginning to man in all things, not in religion only. Explorers, inventors, scientists, all, are moved forward to success by faith. The active principle of faith works everywhere. Its accomplishments are to be reached by its perpetual enlargement. In religion, man is to evolve by it from the sphere of the finite, into the realm of the infinite, being saved; the process beginning here, and continuing, ending there.—R. Etzenhouser, in "The Whole Gospel Briefly Set Forth."

OF GENERAL INTEREST

Wealth to Be Cherished

(Editorial by John A. Judd, in Southern District Herald, England.)

What is true Wealth? Too often it is measured in terms of money, property, jewelry, etc. A man is said to be wealthy when he has large possessions, and yet the Lord said to some, "Knowest not, that thou art poor, naked, and blind." The "wealth of the church" can not be measured in terms of money; it can only be measured by her service to humanity. The church has duties to perform, that can bring her untold wealth and which if neglected, is nothing less than a crime. There are "sins of omission" which will reach down through future generations, and these "lost opportunities" for which no amount of repentance or sorrow can make up.

Earthly wealth is essential for the progress of the work, we can not carry on without it; if we fail to consecrate our wealth to the church, or pay our tithing, no amount of repentance will make up for this neglect. The missionaries can not go out; souls are not warned, and many who should be enjoying the "gospel of light," will be sitting in darkness. Often too lightly, some think that sometime in their lives, they will do better; remember Esau sought a blessing with tears, but the greatest blessing of all, he had lost.

There is one kind of wealth which we should cherish, "our children" for in them there is an ever-growing supply of souls for the church; a wonderful wealth of souls that no money can buy. The value of children is not always appreciated, and the church that makes no provision for the young will soon die out. What if half the children born to the members of the church in the past hundred years, had been kept within the church? If the law had been kept in respect to our children, what a difference it would have made. Many in the church stand in condemnation because of their children; and this will follow them for the following commandment is binding upon the church.

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the Doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands: And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord." (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.)

How many parents in later years, when they see their children drifting, losing sight of the church and the spiritual side of life, wish that they had given them a better start in life? Then let us not count our wealth in terms of money, houses and personal belongings, but rather in the souls of men, women and children, and in the wealth of character. Into God's harvest field, let us gather the children, that they may grow up to be useful in the church, and a blessing to humanity. Happy are those laboring in the church school, where the joyful songs of the children are raised in praise to their Maker.

A Fair Comment

The following is an editorial clipped by a reader from the New York Sun of Saturday, April 16, 1932. Though the reader will notice misspellings in names and other mistakes, he will be struck by the spirit of fairness and liberality in which it is written. We are presenting it as it appeared in the Sun, with some corrections in brackets.]

So closely associated with Utah and Salt Lake City have become Mormonism and Mormons that it may be somewhat difficult for Americans to understand the present gathering of thousands of members of this religious body from almost every country in the world at Independence, Missouri. American interest in Mormonism was centered in the exodus in the middle of the last century of the followers of Brigham Young from Illinois and the hardships of their journey across the great plains and the Rocky Mountains. It was a dramatic episode in the history of this country and came as a climax to a series of religious and political uprisings that extended from eastern Ohio to western Missouri and resulted in the sacrifice of many human lives. In fact, it completely overshadowed the fate of the followers of Joseph Smith, who did not undertake the journey to Great Salt Lake but remained in Missouri, many settling near Independence, which, according to revelations, they declared, is the location of the Zion where eventually are to be gathered all who stood steadfastly faithful to the religious teachings of their leader.

The Mormons came to Missouri following the collapse of their financial institutions at Kirkland [Kirtland], Ohio, in 1837. Joseph Smith and one of his chief disciples, Sidney Rigdon, were charged, whether deservedly or not was not definitely determined, with responsibility for the financial losses which the Kirkland colony suffered. Already many Mormons had settled in southwestern Missouri and were making progress in Mormon colonization schemes. Smith was welcomed by these people, some of whom were his own converts; others he had assisted materially in their western migration. Missouri, however, was growing less cordial to the Mormon settlers as their numbers increased; they were largely from the North and anti-slavery in sympathy. The two factions frequently clashed; they met in a violent struggle at an election at Gallatin, where State troops, which had been called out to quell the disturbance, arrested some of the Mormon leaders and frightened many of their followers into flight into Illinois. In that State the Mormon settlement of Nauvoo, on the bank of the Mississippi, was in the throes of a struggle between its own people and neighboring communities, which were objecting seriously to Smith's presence. The Illinois Governor permitted Smith's removal to Carthage for trial on charges brought against him by Missouri authorities. While waiting in the jail a mob raided the building. Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum, were shot to death. The colony at Nauvoo continued for two more years and Brigham Young, succeeding Smith, led his followers to Great Salt Lake.

After the civil war conditions greatly improved for the Mormons in Missouri. Following Smith's death most of them rejected the leadership of Brigham Young. They also rejected many of his teachings, among them polygamy, and founded a church which they declared was the legal successor of the one which Joseph Smith had founded and to which they gave the name of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. A son of Smith became the head of this reorganization and held that position until his death in 1914, when he was succeeded by his son, Frederick Mason [Madison] Smith, the present leader. The Missouri membership includes many prosperous farmers of northern Missouri and southern Iowa. They have striven with even greater zeal than the church of Salt Lake City for converts; the result is shown in the attendance at the present conference of representatives from many foreign lands and a membership of 110,000. Several years ago the church began erection of what it was hoped would be one of the largest church buildings in the world, a structure with a vast auditorium surmounted with a great glass dome. It is as yet unfinished. It stands on the lot which Joseph Smith declared in one of his revelations was his field of Zion, a literal gathering place for his followers.

OUR TASK: SACRIFICE AND SOCIAL PROGRESS

By J. A. Koehler

1. If you call devotion to country "patriotism," what would you call devotion to the cause of Christ? What reasons can you offer for devotion to the cause of Christ? the cause of the church?
2. Try to estimate the worth of the church. Is it worth the sacrifices which are necessary to maintain it?
3. Try to imagine what your life would have been without the church, without the friendships it brought you, without the inspiration and blessings it has brought to you. Make a contrast of the picture. Try to imagine what society would be like without churches.
4. Is there any other institution through which our desires, our hopes, our ambitions can be realized? Or are likely to be realized?
5. The work of the church is at stake. What can we do about it?

3. When you try to tell another person about the gospel, do you use arguments or testimonies? Do you think you could make use of both?

Friendship's Road

Friendship is a chain of gold,
Shaped in God's all perfect mold.
Each link a smile, a laugh, a tear,
A grip of the hand, a word of cheer.
As steadfast as the ages roll,
Binding closer soul to soul.
No matter how far or heavy the load
Sweet is the journey on friendship's road.

—Author Unknown.

Your load may be heavy to bear,
And you weep as you travel your road,
There are others with burdens as heavy,
That laugh as they carry their load.

Your road may seem rough and stony,
And you sigh as you carry your load,
There are others with paths just as rocky,
But they laugh as they travel this road.

Nauvoo, Illinois

An interesting session of the Nauvoo, Appanoose, and Sonora District Sunday School Convention was held in the Saints' church Sunday afternoon and evening, June 5. Five Sunday schools of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Latter Day Saint faith were represented on the program, the local branch's contribution being a story by Florence Ourth, scripture reading by Roderic Lewis and a fine address on the "Cause and Cure of Depression," by District President F. T. Mussell.

Mother's Day was observed with appropriate exercises in the morning and a talk by the pastor, and in the evening a pageant, "Famous Mothers," was given in which nearly every member of the branch took part.

Brother and Sister E. F. Robertson visited Nauvoo on their return to their mission in Maine, and were guests of Wilfred Wood, brother of Sister Robertson. Their visit will long be remembered because of its help and encouragement, for they brought the spirit of the conference with them. During the Sunday school hour the senior classes united and Brother Robertson addressed them, relating personal experiences that showed God is still working with his people. The worship period was continued, and Brother Robertson preached on "Love." In the evening he occupied again with a sermon on "The Signs of the Times."

The steamer, Cape Girardeau, put in at the harbor one morning and on board was ex-Governor Len Small who is the present candidate for governor on the Republican ticket, also William Thompson, former mayor of Chicago, and a number of other politicians. They were making a cruise of the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers in the interest of deep waterways. A large crowd gathered and they were all invited on board to shake hands with Mr. Small and others in the receiving line. It was announced that the boat would stay only thirty minutes, so the parties did not visit the principal part of the city, but Mr. Small, several editors and two Methodist ministers, took time to visit the Mansion House, where they registered, and the rest of the church buildings under the escort of J. C. Page, Edward Kemler and Mike Baumert.

On May 29, the evening service was dispensed with so that all might attend the baccalaureate service for the graduating class of Nauvoo High School in the school auditorium. The address was given by the Reverend K. C. Meyer, of the Lutheran Church, and the invocation by Elder J. C. Page. No Latter Day Saints were among the graduates this year, but at the eighth grade commencement there were two, Roderic Lewis and Vera Garrett, also Gertrude and Irene Koch, grandchildren of Sister Dighton, who were members of our Sunday school for some time.

The Unity Club is sponsoring the organization of a Boy Scout troop and Arnold Ourth has consented to act as scoutmaster.

Two old landmarks are being torn down, the old John Taylor residence and a large brick building that was used as a store in the early days. It seems too bad that these buildings could not have been preserved for historical attractions for the future.

Nauvoo members were glad to welcome home Irene Layton who has been teaching in Independence. She will spend the summer with her parents and return to Independence in September. Jack Sanford and Roberta Lewis arrived home from Graceland, Jack to spend the summer with the home folk, but Roberta stayed only a week before leaving for Boston, where she is to make her home with Brother and Sister E. L. Traver, while she is attending Boston University. Mortimore Fisher, who had just graduated from the University of Kansas, came around by way of Nauvoo to pick up Roberta. He was accompanied by his twin sister, Elizabeth, and his fiancée, Gertrude Laird, of Roseburg, Oregon, who will spend the summer in the East. Mildred Sanford joined the party and went with them to Boston, where she will visit places of historic interest for a few weeks. She is to teach the third and fourth grades again in the town school.

Mary Lee is attending normal school in Warrensburg. She is to teach the Columbia School in the fall.

Kenneth Yaxley, a former Graceland student, and his bride, spent a few days of their honeymoon in Nauvoo as guests of the Lewises and Ourths.

Children's Day was observed with an illustrated talk to the children in the morning by our pastor, and in the evening the children gave a pageant, "Of Such Are the Kingdom," under the direction of Florence Ourth.

This church is supplied each Sunday with beautiful flowers from the garden of Brother and Sister L. H. Lewis, who are great lovers of flowers. Their home place with its winding rows of iris, masses of peonies and other flowers, is becoming one of the show places of Nauvoo.

There is to be no reunion in Nauvoo this year, but a week of special meetings will be substituted beginning August 6, with all day meetings the thirteenth and fourteenth. Several rooms have been furnished in the Nauvoo House so that anyone desiring to spend their vacation in Nauvoo may communicate with J. C. Page and enjoy the beauty of this historic spot. The Pages have also purchased a house nearby that may be used as a stopping place for those desiring to spend a few days.

Following the week of special meetings, the young people's camp will be held in Nauvoo.

Omaha, Nebraska

The few months of the year just prior to the General Conference were busy preparatory months. To strive to merit and to carry on under the spirit that was manifested in that assembly, seem to be not only our goal, but our task.

If the sacrament meetings have taken on a more dignified air, much of the credit is due to the former pastor, Elder Melvin Russell. The Lord's Supper for the month of April was in his charge, and that evening Brother Russell preached his farewell sermon. A few days after that he and his family moved to Cameron, Missouri. The Saints were sorry to have them leave, and wish for them success in their new endeavor.

On April 17, this congregation was happy to have the pastor of some three years ago, Elder John L. Cooper. He preached in the morning, and reminded his hearers that they should bring the Spirit of God to church with them, and not wait until they get to church to acquire it.

Omaha members were grateful when they heard that the present pastor, Elder Ray Whiting, had been reappointed, and that they were to have his association for the next two years. Brother Whiting occupied at the pulpit service on the morning of April 24, and brought the encouragement of the conference. He said that the conference made him more conscious than ever that there must of a necessity be a complete change in our lives.

A beautiful May Day, and the sacrament meeting was in charge of Elder W. T. Wellman. A spirit of peace prevailed the assembly, and reigned in power.

Mother's Day was very fittingly observed both in the family worship period, and in the pulpit service that followed,

A young man, Merl B. Grover, with a white carnation in his lapel, choose for his text, "Behold, Thy Mother."

On Wednesday the eleventh of May, the members were visited by President Frederick M. Smith, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. The regular prayer service was turned into a preaching service at which both President Smith and Bishop DeLapp spoke. President Smith warned the congregation that if prosperity should again return, it would be but temporary.

Sunday, May 15, the young people of Council Bluffs and Omaha made an early morning trip to Missouri Valley, Iowa. The sermon for the eleven o'clock hour was delivered by an Omaha young man, Marion C. Cooper, and was particularly adapted to the needs of the youth, in that he urged them to "be strong," and wise in making choices.

Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was guest speaker May 22. Brother Smith, too, falls in line as being one of Omaha's pastors of some thirty years ago. He choose for his subject, "What Does Your Church Mean to You?"

A special district conference convened in Omaha on Saturday evening, May 28, and the following day. Apostle John Garver was here. This was Brother Garver's first official visit since the General Conference, at which time he was given jurisdiction over our district. Brother Garver preached both Saturday evening and Sunday morning. At the business session on Sunday afternoon the ordination ceremonies were taken care of. Apostle Garver delivered the charge to the men. Fred Lang, Merl Grover, and Marion Cooper were called to the office of elder. Wilbur Wallace was called to the office of priest, and John Hewitt to the office of deacon. George W. Taylor, of Columbus, Nebraska, was called to be a deacon, but was not present for the ordination. The Saints were again fortunate in the evening, as they were in the morning, to have Brother George Anway, of Kansas City, Missouri, sing. Elder Blair Jensen, another former pastor, was the speaker at the evening pulpit service, and based his remarks on the topic, "The God of Latter Day Saints."

"One of the best sacrament meetings we have ever had," was the comment made by many on Sunday, June 5. Pastor Ray Whiting was in charge, and read part of the article that appeared in the Herald entitled, "Under This Spirit." Many wonderful testimonies were given, and truly the worshipers enjoyed a touch of divinity. A surprise came on the evening of this Sabbath, when they were again privileged to hear Apostle Garver. He chose the text, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." Where there is ability there is responsibility.

On Children's Day they were happy to welcome into the church seven children. The sermon prior to the baptism was delivered by Elder Marion Cooper, and the ordination was performed by Elder Merl Grover. This was a pretty service as the children were seated around the flower decked font. Also, at this service four babies were blessed. At the close of this day of devotion, the choir, which has been under the direction of Sister Anne Hicks, rendered its last anthem of this season. Pastor Ray Whiting was the speaker, and took for his subject, "Be Ye Reconciled to God."

On Tuesday evening, June 14, the branch was favored with a musical treat, when Nell Atkinson Kelley, Anne Self, and William Hill, jr., presented a concert at the church. Sister Kelley is leaving for the summer; Anne has just returned from the Eastman School of Music, and "Billy" has just won special recognition for his musical ability in a State contest.

A wedding that occurred at the Council Bluffs church on June 3, united in marriage Mindred Keairnes of Omaha, and Helen Hendrix of Council Bluffs.

June 5, Sunday, four new members were enrolled in Macon, Missouri, Branch, by baptism, William H. Burns, Mildred Waddle, Marjorie Waddle, and Carl Haynes, all of Macon. They were baptized by Elder S. J. Joyce at Bevier font.

A Conference Visit

Angola, Indiana.—The spirit of the 1932 conference will hold pleasant memories for all who were fortunate enough to attend. Before going, we thought that this conference would be attended only by a few who lived not a long distance away, this because of the financial conditions of the country. But we were badly mistaken. The Auditorium was well filled at almost all sessions, and the peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit was present.

The prayer services, held each morning, were a great help and strength. In them the gifts of the gospel were experienced, the Holy Spirit being manifested in tongues and prophecies, telling us of the perilous times yet to come and admonishing us to be faithful to the covenant made at the water's edge. It was the Spirit of peace and good will.

We left Angola Tuesday morning at four o'clock and went by way of Fort Wayne, Indiana, Indianapolis, Saint Louis, and arrived at Independence that night at twelve o'clock, having covered a distance of seven hundred and twelve miles in twenty hours of steady driving. On the return trip we left Independence, Friday, April 15, at 4 a. m., going by way of Keokuk and Carthage and Peoria, Illinois. This trip registered seven hundred and sixty miles, and we arrived safely home at twelve thirty that night.

While in Independence we visited our old-time missionary, I. M. Smith, and wife. Brother Smith brought the gospel to a little band of neighbors who lived five miles east of Angola, and the idea of Mormonism created no little commotion in the neighborhood. Our Disciple friends began to cry "Debate! debate!" and secured Clark Braden. Brother I. M. Smith secured the assistance of Elder S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, to defend the work, and certainly Brother Scott can do justice when the gospel is under discussion. The result was nineteen fathers and mothers accepted the gospel of the Reorganized Church. But time has claimed a number of these by death, some passing away quite young.

The Saints at Clear Lake are happy to have again Brother A. C. Barmore, an old-time missionary in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana. The members of that branch regret to lose Elder and Sister O. J. Hawn, who have moved to Independence, Missouri, in response to a call from the Presidency. For some time Brother Hawn has not been well, and the doctors at the hospital recommended a change of climate.

Saints traveling between Chicago and Toledo on Road Twenty are invited to stop with Elder George Cassel and family at Angola, five miles east of town. Telephone Angola 961J.

MRS. GEORGE CASSEL.

Brentwood, Missouri

Marshall and Berry Avenues

The Saints of this congregation have rejoiced over the last General Conference. Although few attended, many followed the proceedings of the meetings through the Daily Herald.

The young men's club, organized March 13, gave a spaghetti supper in the church basement April 21. After about ninety-five people had been served, they found that they had earned more than twenty dollars, the total amount to be used for church improvements and charity work. Under the leadership of Brother Kaler, this club has done many things. A sum of more than eleven dollars was given for paint and other improvements on the local church building, and five dollars went to charity. These young men are attempting to do their best to help the general church with offerings.

All the Saints have been given new thought and understanding in regard to the church program and objectives. Recent church services have brought out a number who had not been attending so often. And with the recent improvements, painting, and repairs on the church, everyone seems to take new heart and viewpoint. These changes have been brought about with the aid of several of the men, and the women deserve the credit for the wholesome meals served to the men on Thursday of each week.

Another newspaper has been added to the publicity list. The Brentwood Owl has consented to insert branch news into its columns. This is the fifth weekly paper to give this branch favorable publicity.

Many of the members attended the district conference at Belleville, Illinois. A wonderful time was reported. The church was filled to capacity at all services. May the church continue to grow, locally and generally.

Tulsa, Oklahoma

The Saints of Tulsa have been working with renewed courage and enthusiasm since General Conference. Every member has been inspired with the need for greater service.

Sunday morning, May 1, the Saints enjoyed a beautiful sacrament service in charge of the pastor, Brother Emmett Lancaster. The spirit of this service and the radiance of the beautiful day brought to each a renewed appreciation of God's goodness.

"Mother" was the theme of the morning service, May 8. Flowers formed a setting for the program. The male quartet sang, "Faith of Our Mothers," and Mrs. Alma Adams sang, "Little Old-fashioned Mother." Ruth Kelley gave a touching talk, "A Girl's Tribute to Her Mother," and Paul Moore responded with "A Boy's Tribute to His Mother." "Blessed Are They," was the theme for Brother Lancaster's sermon. He interpreted each of the Beatitudes as a quality of the character of mothers.

Sunday morning and evening, May 29, Apostle Roy S. Budd was here. Saints were glad to welcome him again to the state of Oklahoma. At the church school hour Brother Budd talked to the entire adult division. The morning service was a special memorial service, dedicated to those of our branch who have died during the past year. These are, Edmund L. Thomas, Peter Adamson, sr., Florence Cato Duncan, William W. Smith, and John Wise. Mrs. Maude L. McComb gave the history of Memorial Day; Paul Moore read Lincoln's Gettysburg Address; Alma Adams sang, "Let There Be Peace," and Brother Budd gave an inspirational talk. The theme of Brother Budd's sermon in the evening was "Prayer." He stressed the value and effect of prayer, and brought attention to the call to the church to make June a special month of prayer. There was a large crowd at both services.

Monday, May 30, Brother Budd and Brother Lancaster visited the Saints in Sperry, Brother Budd preaching there in the evening to a large group. On Tuesday they visited the Saints in Skiatook. Brother Ed. Dillon, of Oklahoma City, district president, came to Tulsa on Wednesday for the purpose of making a trip through the district with Brothers Budd and Lancaster. During Brother Lancaster's absence the services were in charge of Brother O. A. McDowell.

The women's quartet sang, "Take Time to Be Holy," as the opening of the communion service, June 5. Following the sacrament, Brother McDowell asked for a number of prayers; many responded. This responsiveness was felt during the entire service in prayers, testimonies, and hymns.

For the May monthly meeting of the women's department the women of Tulsa accepted the invitation of the department of women at Sperry to meet with them. Quite a number of the women made the trip and had an enjoyable day. On May 26 the Temple Builders gave a three-act play, "And Mary Did." The play was enjoyed by a large crowd and netted a substantial sum to the building fund.

June is the month of graduates and brides and Tulsa has her share. On June 3 three members graduated from Tulsa

Central High School. They are Charlotte Hopkins, Ruth Kelley, and Milburn Peacock. On June 7, Don C. Bailey, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Bailey graduated from the University of Tulsa with the degree of bachelor of arts.

Miss Loretta Viles became the bride of Houston Snow, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Snow of Sand Springs on June 3, at the home of the bridegroom's parents. Elder J. E. Lancaster officiated. This day was the birthdate of the bridegroom's grandmother, Sister H. R. Harder, widow of Brother Hudson Harder. The young couple will reside in Sand Springs.

God has blessed the efforts of the priesthood in their program of home visitation. This is evidenced in the increased attendance at services and an increase in offerings sufficient to enable the branch to meet the June 1 note and interest on the building, amounting to $775.75. The priesthood are making a special effort to visit each family during the month of June in order that Tulsa Branch may respond wholeheartedly to the sacrifice period called for by the church.

Sacramento, California

Twenty-fourth and Kay Streets

The priesthood of the branch have organized into committees for more extensive work. The committees are program, visiting, missionary, educational, financial, and building maintenance.

Brother Joseph Bussell and family, accompanied by Brother Jabez Elam, have returned from the East, where they attended General Conference and visited Saints and relatives in eastern Oklahoma and Arkansas. They report a splendid trip and testify to a greater faith in the church and the work that is to be done.

The pastor has just concluded a series of two months' Sunday afternoon preaching services at Auburn, California. All of his discourses were doctrinal sermons. Some nonmembers attended and were made friends to the latter-day cause.

An invitation to all the branches of the district to join with this branch on Rally Day was accepted. Early in the morning they began to arrive. Services commenced with a prayer meeting. Two hundred and twenty-five were reported at the eleven o'clock service. The young people occupied the choir, under the direction of Sister Hazel Blohm, and sang joyfully. President Frederick M. Smith delivered the sermon. Never was a sermon more appreciated. The spirit of his office clothed him, causing the Saints to sing in their hearts, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." The Evening services commemorated Memorial Day. The orchestra, led by Brother Burdick, rendered appropriate selections. Just back of the orchestra the beautiful American flag waved in the breeze, a lighting effect achieved by Ives Honeychurch. He spends many tireless hours doing things that the church may be more beautiful and attractive. The members are grateful.

Mother's Day was observed, the Temple Builders, led by Sister Edna Burdick, presenting a play dedicated to the mothers of today. They also gave all the mothers present a bouquet of sweet peas.

A young brother, Jack McDonald, who has been very ill with typhoid fever for the last two months, is recovering. The Saints thank the heavenly Father, for they know he does hear the prayers of his children.

April 6, the branch held a special service commemorating the birth of the Restoration Movement. Many incidents were brought out with regard to local work in past years.

The Idola Club continues to be active. Its members surprised the pastor and his wife the latter part of April. A program was presented and many useful gifts were bestowed. Brother and Sister Dawson are faithful and true and have the love and respect of everyone.

The church and its location are getting well advertised, especially in musical circles. Because of the splendid ac-coustics and beautiful setting, the church has been used on several occasions by various music teachers and clubs. The recitals have been well attended, and a gift has always been made to the building fund for the use of the building.

Sister Gertrude Bidwell, church school director, put on a musical program April 22. Her daughter, Miss Betty, who has an exceptionally, lovely voice, sang several numbers.

Easter Sunday services were a joy to all. The church was very attractive with flowers and lighting effects by Ives Honeychurch. The first part of the service was a program by the children after which a Christian Flag was presented the school by Sister Cora Taylor. At eleven o'clock the choir sang beautiful selections, followed by a sermon by G. P. Levitt. That evening the choir again sang, and the sermon was by the pastor. A little child, Wayne Randolph Fox, was blessed by Elder E. C. Burdick and the pastor.

It was in March that Brother Esias Epling, recently ordained to the ministry, preached his first sermon. It was well delivered, and many feel that this brother will be a power in the Lord's work.

In the latter part of March a manufacturers' dinner was given, and netted the branch thirty-seven dollars, to be applied to the building fund. That same evening a girl, Margaret Lewis, was baptized in the church font. She is a studious, fourteen-year-old girl who is now helping in the children's division.

Conference in Southern New South Wales

A lengthy report of the district conference for New South Wales, Australia, held April 23 to 25, appeared in the Newcastle Herald and Miners' Advocate. Brother H. Ley, who is a reporter on the regular staff of that journal also a priest in Hamilton Branch where the conference was held, secured the publication of the story. From it we quote excerpts as follows:

"Reports indicating progress in all departments were submitted at the annual conference of the southern district of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, which was convened at the Saints' Church, Tudor Street, Hamilton, on Saturday. The sessions were continued yesterday, and will conclude with an Anzac Day service this morning.

"The district president, Elder A. J. Corbett, presided over large attendances. At the majority of the services the seating accommodation was taxed to its utmost. The missionary in charge of Australia, Elder W. J. Haworth, of Sydney, was also present. Approximately fifty delegates attended from Sydney. In addition to the preaching and prayer meetings, there were educational and musical sessions.

"In his report, the district president expressed appreciation of the cooperation accorded him in all the branches he had visited. The work, he said, was progressing. He visited the Newcastle District on eight occasions and during recent months conducted a mission in Hamilton Branch. The services were successful and a spiritual uplift to the members. Reports from others centers indicated a decided spiritual impetus. He regretted having to report the loss of the services of Elder W. J. Vaughan, who had been appointed to labor in the Wingham and Taree Districts. Elder A. V. Robinson had been appointed as missionary in the Newcastle District, and was located at Wallsend. Evangelist J. H. N. Jones, of Victoria, visited the district and attended services in the various branches. He also regretted having to report the death of Sister Ann Williams, of Hamilton, during the year. The late Sister Williams was the oldest member of the church in Australia. Since all the branches were well cared for by an efficient priesthood, he looked forward to the future with optimism.

"According to the report of the district secretary, R. K. Imrie, the numerical strength of the district was seven hundred and seventy-three. During the year there were thirty-eight baptisms.

"At the prayer service held yesterday morning, the ordinance of baptism was administered to one candidate. Brother H. J. Jones was ordained to the office of elder, Brother E. Haworth to the office of priest, and Brother C. McLaughlin to the office of teacher.

"During the business session on Saturday afternoon, the presidency received a cablegram from the conference at the church headquarters, Independence, Missouri, United States of America, in which it was stated that Apostles G. G. Lewis and E. J. Gleazer had been appointed to labor in the Australian mission. The announcement was applauded. Prior to going to America about nine years ago, Mr. Lewis was employed in the Commonwealth Navigation Department at Newcastle Custom-house. He is the eldest son of the late Bishop G. Lewis.

Cadillac, Michigan

Another visit from Apostle D. T. Williams, May 26, encouraged this branch. His subject was "The Church Moves Upward." Saints of this region were happy to have Brother Williams again appointed to this territory, but it is regretted that he can not be in Cadillac as often as before.

In spite of financial conditions, the Saints have worked faithfully in their endeavor to repair the church building. It has been redecorated, the work being donated by two nonmembers, Howard Oligney and Bert Billings. Their help is much appreciated. The roofing was put on by the members of the branch, and no expense was involved except for the purchase of the material. The Ladies' Aid Society earned practically all of the money by having socials and bake sales, under the leadership of Sisters Violet Oligney and Alta Billings. Sister Joseph Scott is leader of young people.

Elder Joseph Scott, pastor, is unable to be with his congregation except on one Sunday of the month when he is off duty at the city hall. Brother Harry Briggs has charge of most of the services, and appreciates the help of Brother James Southerland, of Leroy, and Brother R. D. Davis, of Marion, when it is possible for them to be here. Brother Charles Benson has also ably assisted.

The church school department is rapidly growing under the leadership of Brother David Oligney.

Brother Joseph Scott announces their new address to be 125 West Pine Street.

Alexander, Kansas

June 13.—Attendance in this little branch has ranged between thirty and forty out to day services on Sunday—Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m., young people's meeting at 7.30 p. m., and preaching again. And the people come a distance of from six to fifteen miles.

Brother Herman Kueffer and family have begun to attend, and Brother Kueffer sometimes preaches. He gives good, earnest talks. He also teaches the men's class. Sister John Teeters teaches the women's class. Both use the quarterly, "The Message of the Book of Mormon," by C. I. Carpenter. In all this church school has five classes.

A quiet little wedding took place at the home of Brother and Sister J. A. Teeters when Mr. Laurel Bondurant and Miss Myrrl Coddington were united in marriage by Elder John Teeters. The bride is a member of the church and both are excellent young people. They will live on a farm some distance out of Alexander. The bride is a niece of Sister John Teeters.

An evening memorial program May 29, was in charge of Sister Vida Teeters. Miss Vida is now attending Hays City Teachers College. She will receive her junior high school life certificate in August.

A wiener roast and games were enjoyed the evening of May 30, when Sister Teeters and her helpers entertained as the result of a contest. The games were played on the church lawn, but the merrymakers went to the creek bank for the roast and campfire.

On June 12, the Children's Day program was had at eleven o'clock after which all went to Walnut Creek for a picnic dinner especially for the children. Brother and Sister George Kelley and little Jack, of Modoc, Kansas, were present, and at two o'clock in the afternoon Brother Teeters baptized little Jack. This completes the Kelley family Circle. Brother Kelley is a son of W. H. Kelley and Sister Kelley is a sister of Earl Bailey.

Mason City, Iowa

June 13.—Mason City group started church school again April 10, and is having an average attendance of fifteen or twenty.

June 5, Brothers C. E. McDonald and Stephen Robinson, of Des Moines, were at Mason City for sacrament and preaching services. This was a memorable day, the presence of the Spirit being felt by all. Three families from Charles City were here, and at noon a picnic lunch was served to about twenty-one. Brother McDonald preached in the afternoon.

An attractive program by the children added to the enjoyment of Children's Day, June 12.

Great Falls, Montana

A portion of that good spirit which prevailed during the sessions of the late General Conference seems to have wafted its way across the hills and prairies and found lodgment in the hearts of Saints who are endeavoring to promote the interest of the work in Great Falls, Montana, Branch. Although the branch has not grown in numbers of late, there seems to be a gradual development in unity and spirituality. An urgent desire to become better acquainted with the gospel law is also making itself manifest.

It was the privilege and pleasure of this group to have Apostle J. A. Gillen here a few days during the latter part of May. The day of his arrival being his birthday anniversary, a little surprise was arranged in his honor at the home of Brother and Sister E. V. Graybeal. One had to see the changing expressions on Brother Gillen's face to fully appreciate his surprise at a birthday remembrance so many miles from home.

Another event planned for Brother Gillen was a trip to Fort Benton, Montana, from which place fifty-six years ago he embarked on a steamboat and sailed down the Missouri River amid shouts and shots of Indians, with Sioux City, Iowa, as his destination. A half century has brought about many changes in surroundings. Fort Benton, the oldest town in Montana, now has a population of about two thousand. Part of the old fort of adobe blocks, however, still remains.

Brother Gillen's sermons and visits in the homes of the Saints have left a greater determination to build up the work here, and the spirit which characterized his efforts has remained, testifying to local people that the Lord is indeed mindful of his own.

Great Falls Saints were pleased when news came that the Joint Council had reconsidered the appointment of Patriarch George W. Thorburn and assigned him to this territory again. "When can we expect a visit from Brother Thorburn?" has been an oft repeated question the past few weeks. The Saints are also expecting a visit from Brother L. O. Wildermuth in the near future.

The clouds of "depression" hang low, as far as temporal things are concerned, but through the blessing of God's Spirit, members are looking to the day when they hope, as a group, to be able to join forces with those who are privileged to redeem Zion.

Fall River, Massachusetts

Activities have been limited of late in this branch. Midweek and Sunday services, along with the work of a young people's club comprise the major interests. Attendance at midweek prayer services continues around eighteen, which is better than has been for a number of years; sometimes this increases to twenty-two or so. Sunday services attendance has also been limited. About twenty-seven were at the June sacrament service, and thirty at the evening service to hear a Gracelander speak. This is in the neighborhood of the maximum attendance.

The work of the branch falls upon the shoulders of the pastor, Elder James W. Heap, who lacks the support of able assistance in the priesthood, and who with his individual effort has done notably well. There are at present no young men of the priesthood in this branch during the year's activities.

A young people's organization called the "?" Club has functioned remarkably well during the year, holding the youth together and enjoying socials. The name designates what may be done next, almost anything. This organization has been a successful means of giving the youth a proper environment.

Enthusiasm seems to be lacking to a large degree in church attendance, and the one-time prominent locality of aged Latter Day Saint workers from the West now seems to be taking the defensive position of holding on without any progress. Being in the heart of the textile country, this city has been seriously affected. This has taken hold of our members in an economic depression.

Graceland College has been presented a number of times in the past and especially this month of June. Three young people of this city have each spent three years there, and this fall another young woman hopes to experience Graceland life. Graceland is assuming its proper place in the church program.

Those who remain active here look forward to the continuation of unity and good feeling in the church as it moves forward into the future.

Minot, North Dakota

A year ago this country was parched, but now it is drinking heaven's rains. As a result vegetation and crops look good. Brother F. B. Spaulding, associate pastor, and wife have returned from California, where they spent the winter.

The Saints are looking forward to the reunion of this district, to be held at Logan, June 22 to 26. Apostle J. F. Curtis and Missionary P. T. Andersen are expected to attend. The district conference will be held June 25. Saints are invited to come and camp the five days and make the time profitable.

Sister M. D. Graham is greatly missed from local services. She has been in the hospital for over six weeks. Her speedy recovery is a matter of prayer in the branch.

In March, Minot members celebrated the seventy-fifth birthday of Brother William Sparling. Speeches were made in his honor by the following: Mrs. M. D. Graham, Warren K. McElwain, Ralph T. Darling, Laurel V. McElwain, and Warren McElwain.

Mother's Day was appropriately observed. "That Wonderful Mother of Mine" was sung by L. V. McElwain, and Pearl M. McElwain sang "Ireland Must Be Heaven for My Mother Came From There." The speech makers were Ralph T. Darling, F. G. Spaulding, W. K. and L. V. McElwain.

Another milestone was passed in the life of Grandmother McElwain when her seventy-fifth birthday was observed by the branch. One of her daughters, Mrs. Frank Stowell, and her husband and part of the family came from Fargo, North Dakota, to participate and wish her many more returns of the day. Her son, Warren McElwain, and three grandsons, Jerome Stowell, L. V. and W. K. McElwain, spoke of her ancestry, her life and character, and her acceptance of the restored gospel and what it meant to her posterity.

Summer again, and the Saints have taken up a practice had for a number of years, going from place to place with the services.

Santa Ana, California

Children's Day in Santa Ana was observed with a ceremonial program. Under the leadership of Sister Charles Calkins, the children had prepared a splendid service. Songs, drills, and recitations were given by the smaller children in an entertaining manner. Then, to soft music, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Fink came forward with their young daughter, Patricia, followed by Mr. and Mrs. Donald Nimmo with Anita Mae. These parents presented their children to the church to be blessed. The ceremony was performed by Bishop David Carmichael. These two small girls are descended from families long prominent in the church; Anita Mae Nimmo is the great-granddaughter of Brother D. S. Mills, one of the missionaries who in earlier days brought the gospel message to California and converted many to the truth. Little Patricia Fink, on the maternal side, is a descendant of Sister Olive Ames, who, with her four children, hid in the bushes at Haun's Mill and witnessed a mob kill friends and fellow church members.

The speaker of the morning was Apostle G. G. Lewis, who gave a short address to the children appropriate to the occasion. Then very quietly the audience filed downstairs where the ordinance of baptism was performed by the pastor, Brother Albert Starkey. The four children who were to be baptized, as well as Brother Starkey, were dressed in white. The font was decorated with masses of greenery and flowers, and the ritual of baptism was performed with reverence and beauty. Confirmation followed immediately. The children who became members of the church are Alberta Whisler, Bonnie Faith Beck, Elaine, and Walter Mills. Elaine and Walter Mills are the great-grandchildren of Brother D. S. Mills and Brother Joseph Burton.

Santa Ana observed District Day and Rally Day together on April 24, when District President Will Teagarden, spoke morning and evening. A luncheon in the basement of the church was followed by discussions from branch and district officers and interested members. Sister Stella Hodges, district chorister, gave a splendid summary of problems and their solutions in the department of music. Brother Launce Sutherland discussed phases of the church school.

Two very practical gifts were recently presented to the church by the pastor. The first delighting the little folks, who came to Sunday school one morning to find the table and chairs in their little room painted a soft green color, the work of Brother Starkey. The older members noticed the improvement in the outside appearance of the church building when the sign bearing the name of the church and the hours of service had been neatly redone. This also was the work of the pastor.

Thayer, Missouri

This branch is proud to announce two weeks of meetings to close June the month of prayer, starting June 26, and continuing to July 10. Local members feel lifted up by this arrangement and are sure that the little band here will be blessed and encouraged to carry the latter day work to greater heights. There is work for every one to do, and with the cooperation and strength resulting from this series, they expect to go forward.

No doubt Brothers Hayden and Baker will be here on this occasion, and they will help to bring about greater faith.

Thayer Saints have much to look forward to. July 17 and 18, is the time set for the district conference when they hope to see Saints from over the surrounding country. They have looked forward to the conference and feel sure it will prove successful. Of course the trials and hardships which Saints and all others face today will make it more difficult for some of them to attend, but Thayer Branch hopes many will be fortunate enough to attend and mingle with those of the faith. It has been suggested that Apostle J. F. Garver may be present at the conference, and the members hope to welcome him then.

Independence

Rain compelled the young people to hold their special sacrifice prayer meeting Sunday morning at seven o'clock, under a roof. They met in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church in charge of President F. M. McDowell, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, Elder D. S. McNamara, and Brother Roy Settles, president of the Independence Young People's Council. Though attendance was somewhat smaller than had been hoped for, because of the rain, an excellent service of worship and prayer was enjoyed. The event was sponsored by the young people's council.

Sunday night, according to the summer schedule, was to have been the opening evening of the Campus meetings. The week before all evening meetings in the nine congregations in Independence were discontinued, and members living in a radius of several miles had made plans to be present to hear the first of Apostle F. Henry Edwards's summer series of sermons. But Sunday was a rainy day, and early at the morning services, announcements were made that the Campus service would be held at the Stone Church.

"The Faith of Our Fathers" was the theme of the inspirational discourse of Apostle Edwards, and the Choir of Central Church, Kansas City, gave a pleasing thirty-minute concert, which added to the attractiveness of the service.

Stone Church

Weather conditions were reflected in the attendance at services all day Sunday. Perhaps the church school suffered the most, but by eleven o'clock attendance began to increase until many listened to the stirring sermon of Elder C. Ed. Miller.

Reminding the congregation that right here in Independence God has promised a perfect city if the Saints obey his commandments and do his will, the speaker proceeded to show how we waste our time, our efforts, and our money. He discussed the costliness of mistakes, and urged sacrifice, cooperation, and help for the church in its present crisis.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, sang "Peace, Perfect Peace," the contralto solo being taken by Mrs. Alice Burgess, and "The Woods and Every Sweet Smelling Tree," Lilly Belle Allen singing the soprano solo. Elder H. G. Barto presided over the service assisted by Elder G. E. Harrington.

Sister Estella Wight, for twenty-five years a member of the editorial staff of the Herald Publishing House, was entertained last Thursday night by the Board of Editors of the church with an outdoor supper in the garden of President and Sister F. M. McDowell. It was regretted that President F. M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Garver were absent from the city on church business, and unable to attend this function. Sister Wight is editor of Stepping Stone and Zion's Hope.

On June 13, Group Eight helped Elder Richard Bullard celebrate his eightieth birthday. Brother Bullard was born in London, England, in 1852. He has lived in the United States forty-nine years, coming first to Providence, Rhode Island, and Boston. There he accepted the gospel. His career as missionary is rich with experiences in the gospel, and he has occupied in six different offices of the priesthood from Aaronic teacher to patriarch. The birthday celebration occurred at the home of Brother and Sister Charles E. Sterrett and was also a farewell party for this worthy couple who are moving to Detroit, Michigan.

Walnut Park Church

On Friday evening, June 10, a large audience assembled at Walnut Park church to hear presented a cantata, "The Pisie's Triumph," by the junior department, directed by Sister Erwin Moorman. They were assisted by the Walnut Park Orchestra, conducted by Orlando Nace.

Children's Day services began with an early prayer meeting in charge of Elders Benjamin Bean, William Gard, and Fred Lanpher. The church school session was cut short to allow time for the Children's Day program. Flag Day was also observed in this program, the exercises being in charge of Sister J. H. Logeman, jr. Elder members gave their places to the young ones at this service.

The church was decorated with flowers along the altar, beautiful blossoms brought by the Saints from their gardens, and a little white gate adorned with pink roses and the word "Baptism" had place on the rostrum.

At the baptismal hour the twenty candidates for baptism entered from the rear and marched through the gate to places on the platform. A quartet composed of Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, Arlan Chapman, and Milford Nace, sat in the gallery and sang, "Go Ye Through the Gates." A talk to these young people who were about to make their covenant with Christ was made by Pastor Frank McDonald. Then the quartet sang "Onward to Zion," and the congregation went to the basement font to witness the baptism.

On the morning of that day the Galilean Class had for its speaker Sister L. E. Hills, who talked on the Book of Mormon. This subject was made very interesting, and the class hopes to have Sister Hills talk again.

At six o'clock the confirmation service took place, and in the evening the speaker was Elder J. Arthur Davis.

Walnut Park held its annual picnic at the Campus June 14. Guests of the evening were Pastor Frank McDonald and family, President F. M. McDowell and family, Apostle F. H. Edwards and family, and Elder D. S. McNamara. The outing was much enjoyed. On the following evening the crowd assembled at the church for union prayer service, and friendships were again renewed with these families.

Elder H. L. Barto was the speaker last Sunday morning, delivering a splendid sermon. Thinking of Sacrifice Week, he said: "All weeks should be weeks of sacrifice for the Saints, that the purposes of God may be realized. The hour has come when we must all labor together."

A little daughter, Brenda Joan, was born June 12, to Brother and Sister Arthur E. Constance.

East Independence Church

A lovely, quiet Sabbath marked the opening of the month of June, a day when the congregation met to partake of the Spirit of the Master in his house. Church school was active, and the Lord's Supper which followed was characterized by the peace of the heavenly Father.

The next Sunday was Children's Day, and the church was prettily decorated with daisies and asparagus. The junior department gave a program of song, under the direction of Sister Alta Dutton. Sister Emma Christensen told the story of Jesus and the little children in a touching way. Brother A. H. Christensen gave a discourse filled with reminders of the duties of Saints and the way to lead little children. The congregation then went to the banks of the Blue River for a basket dinner after which the pastor led into the waters of baptism John Arthur Crabb and Ethel Ruth Johnson.

The Saints have rejoiced lately at the inspiring sermons presented by those who have occupied the pulpit. Brother William Gard, at the close of Children's Day presented a beautiful lesson advising the children and young people to take advantage of the opportunities for preparation in the gospel work.

Brother H. V. Minton, appointed by the bishop in Zion, gave a stirring sermon on "Sacrifice" to open the week of sacrifice.

Brothers C. K. Green, Harry Friend, and E. T. Atwell have also brought fine messages to this congregation.

June 19 being Father's Day, an appropriate program was given by the women of the adult division. The fathers occupied seats of honor on the rostrum.

The two children baptized on Children's Day, were confirmed by William Gard and Harry Friend.

Brother and Sister Logan Butler have moved into this district. They are a young married couple. Sister Butler is a graduate nurse and a young woman of ability. She has been appointed supervisor of the young people's division of the church school, and is entering her work with the promise of being much help.

Kansas City Stake

Gladstone Church

During May the Saints of this congregation listened to the following speakers, F. B. Blair, L. C. Connelly, and Elmer J. Moran, of Kansas City, and James L. Gray, C. V. Hopkins, and Ammon White of Independence.

The Children's Day program was given at the morning service June 12. Two children were baptized in the afternoon. Doris Jean Moran and Joseph Good.

Several new members have moved into this district, and are welcome additions to the branch.

A former member, Mary E. Johnston, died May 28, at La Veta, Colorado. She and her husband, E. B. Johnston, were active workers in this group when they lived in Kansas City.

Pastor C. A. Selbe is still ill in the hospital at Saint Louis. His condition is about the same.

Gladstone Saints desire to support the policies of the church, and pray for God's guiding Spirit.

Holden Stake

Atherton

Friday night, June 3, closed a two weeks' meetings by Patriarch Albert Carmichael. He talked along lines of spiritual growth and stewardship. He said even though he is now a patriarch, he still has the fire of stewardship and Zion from his former office of Bishop. His sermons were full of instruction, and the Saints found him one hundred per cent back of the efforts which tend toward Zion and its redemption.

Sacrament was well attended and a good spirit prevailed. In the evening Missionary S. S. Smith preached a real missionary sermon.

Last Friday evening a social gathering of the choir members was given in honor of Sister Hughes who has been musical director for several years. Sister Anna Lou Haws now enters upon her work, and the members feel sure she will give us very able and helpful service.

Brother D. R. Snively was chosen young people's leader, and Sister Holman, supervisor of adult department. Sister Mae Curtis was given charge of the primary department.

Children's Day was beautifully observed. In the children's play occurred the blessing of Brother and Sister Heath's baby. Sister Roderick May related her experience of baptism by J. J. Cornish, when the shaft of light descended upon them during the observance of this ordinance. Brother Dempsey who was also present verified the truth of this experience. Sister Edith Koehler, whose father, William Clow, witnessed this experience, spoke of hearing her father relate many, many times this unusual manifestation of God's power. These testimonies were interesting, and much appreciated. Following the program, three children were baptized by Brother Otho Clark. In the evening came the confirmation service followed by a sermon by Brother G. W. Beebe, pastor. His advice and counsel was prompted by the Spirit of God, not only to the ones who were confirmed, but to the membership of the branch.

Buckner

The newly-elected officers of Buckner group were in their places June 1, with J. E. Martin, of Independence, as pastor. Other officers are: S. S. Smith, former pastor at Walnut Park, and W. E. Grubb, assistants; church school director, Fred Immer; Earl Grubb, assistant; adult supervisor, S. S. Smith; young people's supervisor, C. L. Allen; children's supervisor, Ruth Grubb.

The sacramental service was well attended and spiritual. Children's Day was observed with an appropriate program at 11 a. m. Then came basket dinner and baptismal service in the afternoon and a musical program by Independence musicians and an excellent sermon by Brother A. E. Allen in the evening.

Reflections

The Fleshpots of Egypt

The children of Israel, suffering from heat, thirst, and hunger during the early stages of their long journey through the wilderness, became sick at heart. Or perhaps it was at stomach. They forgot their bitter years of slavery—a slavery that they had grown up under from childhood. They forgot the hope of freedom, and a country of their own. They forgot the promises of God to them. They remembered only one thing—the fleshpots of Egypt.

And the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness to kill this whole assembly with hunger.—Exodus 16: 3.

The modern world may smile at their simplicity, and thinks it is very much wiser than the poor folk of ancient times. It would have gone straight for the Promised Land without any complaining, without that silly incident of the Golden Calf, and would certainly not have taken forty years for a journey that should have occupied only a few months at most.

But we moderns have our faults, too. At present we are in an economic wilderness, suffering the discomforts of a period of severe readjustment. We have forgotten to look forward to the Promised Land of a reformed and improved world. We have lost sight of the freedom which it is possible for us to attain. We forget that the prosperity which we worshiped led inevitably to the disaster of the times we are now suffering. We are blind to the fact that any economic order of society which is motivated by selfishness and organized for exploitation will always produce booms, extravagance, gluts of the market, financial crashes, unemployment, and suffering.

We are still, at the present moment, worshipping the Golden Calf of wealth. The children of Israel were no more foolish than we are. And we have history to learn from that they didn't have.

The Economic Ideals of Zion

One of our correspondents recently made a very fine suggestion: that we should produce for use, and not for profit. The purpose of industry should be to serve a need, not to make millionaires.

It is the economic ideal of Zion that every man shall have an opportunity to work at the job for which he is best fitted, with the understanding that he may fit himself for better positions in life. It is also one of the ideals of Zion that every man who is able to work shall be required to do so, and that there shall be no parasitism, either of indigents or of the wealthy, nonproductive leisure class. There will be no leisure class, either at the top or the bottom levels of society. The economic arrangements of Zion will be for the benefit of the whole body, rather than for the profit of a few.

The present economic order is haphazard, and irregular. People flock into some new line of production or service without adequate preparation for it. A large percentage of them are doomed to failure and the loss of all their savings. Even those that survive do so in a competition that wastes, duplicates services, and overproduces. The economic ideal of Zion is an order of things in which these evils will be eliminated through organization and scientific direction and control of industrial effort.

Among the leading writers and thinkers of the world there is strong condemnation of our present system, or, we should say, lack of system. There is a demand for some new order, though what that order is to be is only vaguely suggested. Cooperation is hinted at. Government control has been found in many cases too complicated and unwieldy, though in some cities municipal control has worked wonders of efficiency and economy.

It is perhaps too far a reach of the imagination to think of a world organized on the basis of stewardships. Some smaller unit of society shall have to make an experiment, and when some single successful unit of stewardship organization is effectively operating, we shall have something to show the world worth talking about. We believe that it can be done. We believe, under the guidance and inspiration of the Spirit of God, men who are converted and regenerated not only can but will do it.

The Social Ideals of Zion

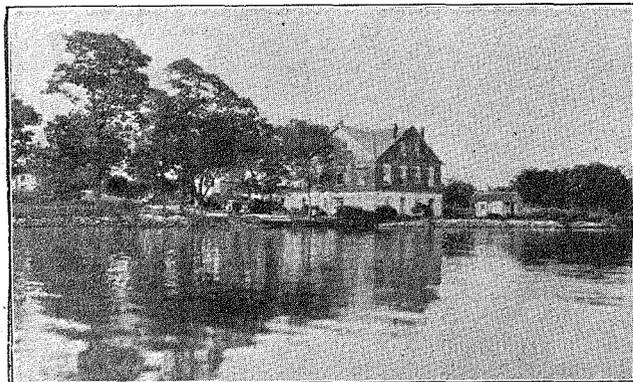

We think this one factor should be emphasized: the social ideals of life will encourage men to spend less time working for profits alone, and more time in self-improvement and community welfare. Modern men, for all their brightness and common-sense, have worked too much like the bees, who can only accumulate honey and continue at that one task until the hive is robbed and they die. "Man shall not live by bread alone," said the Master. Wealth and property is not enough. Business and profit taking may fatten the body, but starve the soul. Many a man has smothered his soul in a bank account.

There are other things in life: culture, education, neighborliness, charity, friendships, and, as Jesus reminded us, "Every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." There is the soul to consider.

Summer Days in Old Nauvoo

VISITORS ENTERTAINED AT FAMOUS NAUVOO HOUSE

Nauvoo House, by the Mississippi River

No member of the church has done his full duty by himself and family until he has visited Nauvoo. He has missed one of life's real pleasures. And we do not mean, either, that he can get the benefit out of his visit by passing through in his motor car, spending a few minutes shaking off the dust while he has the gas tank filled and his windshield cleaned. He should stay for a few days, letting the peace and quiet of the place soak into him while he rests in the shade of the tall and beautiful trees, goes boating on the river, and refreshes his memory of history as he looks at the older houses built by the people of another day.

Nauvoo House was built for the entertainment of travelers in the days of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church. In recent years it has been modernized, and many who visit Nauvoo are delighted to stay there, since it is so close to the cool waters of the river. Conditions have made it necessary for Nauvoo House to become self-sustaining, and it is now operated under the management of James C. Page for the church. Visitors will be assured of a cordial and friendly welcome, and they are certain to enjoy their stay as a happy memory.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

For thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, has revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house: therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee. And now, O Lord, God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant: therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it: and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.—A prayer of David (2 Samuel 7: 27-29).

"Prayer seems to me to be the way we link up our lives with the eternal source of all energy. It is the way we make it possible for God to help us."—Edmund B. Chaffee.

Prayer—Communion With God

The ideal prayer is a conversation—communion—with God, whether spoken or felt. All too many public prayers are said for their effect on earthly ears. On a great public occasion, one reporter for the Boston Transcript wrote that a certain man's prayer was "the most eloquent prayer ever addressed to a Boston audience." The writer's unconscious satire condemned the prayer, for it should have been addressed to God. Prayers addressed to the audience are vain displays of eloquence.

One of the most insipid things in human experience is the oral meditation, addressed to no one in particular, making no requests, admitting no repentance, and benefiting no one. It is prayer divested of the only real excuse for prayer, which is a belief in and a need for the Spirit of God. There is no prayer without a consciousness of God.

Prayer grows out of a sense of human helplessness. A man does not really pray until he is terribly worried about some of the most serious concerns of his life. No real prayer was ever complacent—and those who make prayer a daily habit must avoid the tendency to make it a daily period of mumbling. Prayer must be passionately sincere, it must be provoked by an almost desperate personal sense of deficiency and need.

Everyone of us may reflect, as we contemplate the universe, whether under the blazing glory of the sun, or under the mystery and solemnity of the incredible vastness of the star-lit heavens, that all its marvelous construction and operations are the work of a Supreme Personality. He made us, too, and we are a little part of Himself. We are a part of all the creation, and feel our kinship in a way that makes us at once humble and reverent. Our understanding makes us want to achieve harmony with that Power, to understand it, to know its purposes, to submit ourselves to it. That is the beginning of prayer.

NEWS BRIEFS

Stone Church Sacrifice Offering $1,600

The effort to sacrifice on the part of Stone Church Saints preceding and during Sacrifice Week, resulted in an offering of approximately sixteen hundred dollars Sunday morning, June 26. This sum was collected at the special sacrifice service reported in the news from Independence. The congregation is happy over this fruitful sacrifice drive and as a result of it, many have learned new and frugal habits. The members plan to continue to sacrifice for the welfare of the church.

Though reports are yet incomplete, and the total amount of sacrifice offering from Independence is undetermined, indications are "good," according to the bishop in Zion. It is possible that a more definite report will be available next week.

Apostle M. A. McConley in Southern California

Since General Conference, Los Angeles has been the focal point of Apostle Myron A. McConley's church work. In company with Apostle G. G. Lewis, he is now devoting himself to intensive missionary efforts in the various branches and missions of Southern California District. His tireless efforts and buoyant courage are appreciated by the Saints and friends of that territory.

Sister McConley had been ill for some time, but Saints at the General Conference in April, were happy to hear that she was resting better and to see Brother McConley in his place at conference. Before the sessions had adjourned, however, he found it necessary to return to his wife's bedside. Sister McConley is still ill in a sanitarium near their home in Los Angeles, and many who love her are praying for her immediate recovery.

District President Receives Gold Seal Certificate

Elder Amos T. Higdon, president of Spring River District (southeastern Kansas and part of Missouri) received a gold seal certificate in Religious Education at the first institute held in the district, June 18 and 19, at Coffeyville, Kansas. The certificate representing five hundred hours of work in Religious Education, was presented to Brother Higdon by Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of Religious Education and guest speaker at the institute.

Spring River Saints enjoyed the institute, and attendance was representative of the various branches. The largest number attending any one session was one hundred seventy-five. Emphasis was given the cause of sacrifice in view of the opening of Sacrifice Week, and a fine feeling prevailed. Elder Lee Quick, a widely known church worker, was also present.

Boys Conduct Milwaukee Church School

Bobby Pratt, age nine years, and Raymond Cone, twelve, conducted the church school of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Branch, the morning of Children's Day. They were assisted by others of the junior members of the school. Dignity, order, and reverence marked the session, and the program presented by the children was good. Two babies were blessed at this service. In the afternoon Bobby and Raymond were baptized and confirmed members of the kingdom of God on earth.

Australian "Maori" Club

Long strides in social and church activities have been made since Easter by the Maori Club of Wallsend Branch, Southern New South Wales District, Australia. This club, which was organized after Brother and Sister A. V. Robinson moved into the branch several months ago, has a membership of almost fifty, and is doing much for the Saints at Wallsend who are few in number and find themselves in a place where church work is not popular. The name "Maori" is taken from the language of a native New Zealand race and means, "Come here; there's a gathering." Brother O. J. Jones is president of the club.

Memorial Services at Nauvoo

Memorial services last Sunday in quiet, old Nauvoo commemorated the anniversary of the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum. President Elbert A. Smith, a grandson of Joseph the Martyr, was the speaker. Services were held both at the Saints' church and near the rolling Mississippi River, where are buried Joseph, Emma, and Hyrum Smith. A prayer service at the church at eleven o'clock drew a considerable number of Saints from neighboring branches as well as local members, and the afternoon memorial service was witnessed by many members and friends. Brother Elbert A. Smith was the speaker, and there was a special ceremony in which an abundance of flowers was placed on the graves.

It was eighty-eight years ago Monday, June 27, that Joseph and Hyrum paid the supreme sacrifice of their lives for their faith and their God. They were shot down by a mob at Carthage Jail. History-loving Saints all over the world remembered the sacrifice of these brothers with deep appreciation and gratitude.

Religion and Science

Religion has always shared with science the belief in the controllability of the environment. It is unfortunate that so strong an antithesis has been made between the two modes of control—the scientific and the religious.

There are two aspects of control. We must have a knowledge of the mechanics of the things with which we are dealing; and we must know what our goal is to be in using them. Now it is the function of science to give us knowledge of the processes of nature. Religion relates this knowledge to the goals or ideals of life. This means that science as science can carry on its analyses and experiments without religion. Religion, however, rests upon science for its information. Life demands both.—Edwin Ewart Aubrey, in "Religion and the Next Generation."

A Good Investment

Benjamin Franklin said that when a man emptied his purse into his head no man could take it away from him. A good education is something which thieves can not steal. Some men put their money into their clothes; some like to put it into a fine automobile; some put it into a mansion; some into very expensive furniture; some like it in Persian rugs; some prefer it in thoroughbred cattle or pedigreed sheep, or even dogs and cats; but not one of these investments can compare for safety, and probably for pleasure, with the investment in desirable knowledge.

A cultured intellect means more than any outside adornment. It lifts us into a higher sphere; it transports us into the company of the great and good of all ages; it widens our mental horizon and saves us from the narrowness of petty thinking. It is a good investment; and it is possible to all. Not all may go to college, but all may attend the university of books, and learn from them what wise men have to tell the world. And it may be that even in dollars and cents this education will pay a thousandfold.

My people, the misfortunes that are upon you are not sudden nor do they spring without cause. Even as the palm springs from the seeded soil, so misfortune springs from seeds within you. Look into your hearts and spirits to find from whence comes the dreaded maladies and need. For a long time you have been nurturing the seeds with greed and lust; you have watered them with the stream of selfishness, you have denied the weak protection and the needy help. You know it not, but the illusion that you clasp to your breast is not happiness, but the scorpion of self-gratification. Turn your hearts from hatred and greed and give yourselves to the love of all life and all nature. Turn your hands to good works rather than the storing of mats and possessions, then the rainbow of your spirit will glow with a clearer, more beautiful light.—The words of a Hawaiian sage, from "Paradise of the Pacific."

A bad book is a big thief. For it robs a man of his time and of his good principles. Many young people have been ruined by the vile literature which is so common. Of bad books we can never read too little; of the good never too much.

Books should to one of these four ends conduce: For wisdom, piety, delight or use.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

Our Task

Transmitting Our Spiritual Heritage

By Alice M. Burgess

The words, "our spiritual heritage," fill the mind with a dozen pictures of vivid blessed experiences while the heart thrills with a peculiar sense of kinship with the Divine. I see the strong faces of the ministry of God in conference assembled and hear again the fervor of their hundreds of voices lifted to the moving strains of "Redeemer of Israel." I glimpse a family altar where the little household bow in the agony and glory of their renunciation as they send forth the man of their circle to labor in God's vineyard. There flashes into consciousness the sick bed of a dear one who has been given up to die by the physicians, the blackness of despair lifted by the assurance of heavenly succor as I hear again the inspired words of the ministering men of God. My mind stirs in remembrance of the electrifying power of the preached word and the peace and ecstasy of many an hour of prayer with God's people, and my heart glows anew over the achievement of some hard task for Christ's church. There is a blending of the joy of service, the security of faith, and a warm fellowship and love, all transcended by the divine peace and exaltation of the definite presence of God's Spirit.

Spiritual heritage! That means, too, the voices of our parents and grandparents singing in deathless faith the songs of Zion. That means the whole significance of our religious life, the motivation of all our struggles and sacrifices, the supreme responsibility of our generation. This is a thing almost too big and too subtle for analysis.

A Living Faith

Any attempt to analyze and evaluate the spiritual heritage of a Latter Day Saint discovers first the presence of a living faith. Many religious and intellectual leaders of the world today are realizing the possibility of a higher or deeper phase of consciousness wherein we may "make contact with the Divine," or "gain for ourselves a knowledge of the reality of God."

Belden, in his Religious Difficulties of Youth is convinced that "There is possible to every soul a spiritual sensation or conviction of God's reality. This is the testimony of the saints of all generations and he would be bold to the point of recklessness who would deny its genuineness. . . . The greatest need of humanity today is the soul that has made this personal investigation and has discovered God for himself and can speak, therefore, with conviction.

It is in this fundamental moral and spiritual miracle that there is to be found the best proof of the divine in human life."

Howard McCluskey, instructor at the University of Michigan, spoke to the National Interdenominational Student Conference of 1925 at Evanston, Illinois, as follows:

"I maintain there are powers, there are secret powers we haven't yet dreamed of, and the new psychology is beginning to indicate to us, if we could develop the technique by which we could dig down and get to those tremendous powers which we will call, for want of a better term, spiritual powers, we would begin to understand the secret of life and begin to get hold of the thing that will keep us from slumping. It is coming to me with powerful conviction that there actually are resources at our command which we have not yet tapped. There are tremendous reservoirs of strength. There are uncharted seas that would literally make us supermen if we knew how to get them."

Even that scientist and scholar, Mr. Overstreet, in his recent book The Enduring Quest, spends a number of chapters trying to analyze that "marked phenomenon of consciousness" which has characterized prophets of all ages, a sort of "illumination" which enables the individual to become vitally a part of all life and brings a sense of "oneness of existence, the utter livingness of reality." He decides that this level of conscious life is a further stage in the progression of consciousness in which the individual becomes vividly one with the universe.

Over a hundred years ago the boy Joseph Smith had the splendid audacity and the limitless faith to test out the scriptural promise concerning these "secret powers" and he tapped these "reservoirs of strength" and secured an "illumination" or revelation of divine truth. From him, from his fellows, and from hundreds of spiritual leaders since him we as a church have a spiritual heritage of light and knowledge that goes beyond anything in the religious world today. It is our birthright to know for ourselves the reality of God and to walk the path illumined by the power of his Spirit. We have seen our sick healed, we have heard Him speak through his prophets to the church. We are called to a higher level of intelligence which is the glory of God.

To Transmit This Living Faith

We as a church have been intrusted with the torch of revelation, we have been endowed with the authority and power of a God-chosen priesthood, we have been blessed with gifts of healing, tongues, faith, wisdom and knowledge. What can we do purposefully to transmit this heritage to others?

First we must see to it that this flame of living faith is kept alive in our own hearts. We must live in close and prayerful contact with the Divine. We must occupy our birthright and exercise our heritage of spiritual gifts and blessings. We must seek earnestly and passionately for an ever-increasing power of God's Spirit in our own lives.

Then by a careful plan of religious education in the home and in the church school we may teach our children of the glory and wonder of the spiritual heritage that is theirs. We may help them in worship services arranged for them to begin to enter in to that heritage as fast as they develop mentally and spiritually. If they are surrounded by the constant manifestations of God's presence and power in our lives and in their church life, our children will constantly and gradually grow in grace and spiritual knowledge.

We must be sure that the leaders and teachers of our young have not only educational preparation but also the deeply spiritual life the definite conviction of the reality of God and his power which is the birthright of every Latter Day Saint.

The Spirit of Consecration

Another factor in our spiritual heritage is the far-reaching spirit of consecration peculiar to Latter Day Saints. The spirit which sent our early missionaries through the trackless wilderness to find the land of Zion. The spirit which offered the most precious jewels, and treasures, to adorn the walls of the temple of God. The spirit which lives today in a consecrated unsalaried ministry and in the hearts of thousands of our sincerely converted Saints.

He who has received the birthright of a living faith will not falter in the utmost consecration of his talents, his money and his life to Christ's Cause.

Transmitting the Spirit of Consecration

Here again if we would transmit the spirit of consecration to our children we must surround them with consecrated parents and teachers. The leaders of our young people must lose themselves in the kingdom of God. The Church of Christ must come first with them if they are to interpret and impress its great significance and importance upon the young.

Then the children and youth of the church must be given a definite sense of their own responsibility in the carrying on of the work of the Lord. They must be made to feel that their service, the consecration of their talents, energies, and moneys is necessary (as it is) to the support of the church. Every church, large or small, should give its children and young people definite projects and activities in the church work, should seek from them an important contribution to all forms of church life.

The Larger Scripture

The Latter Day Saint heritage includes the possession of a larger scripture, an additional chronicle of the life and mission of Christ and the religious experience of other peoples besides those recorded in the Bible; it includes also the record of the Word of God to his church today.

The problem of acquainting our youth with the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as well as the Bible, of giving them an appreciation of the three church books and a working knowledge that will enable them to use them in seeking wisdom, above all the transmission to the young of the spiritual lessons of the past so that they may profit by the religious experiences of the race, this important task is the responsibility of the church school and the ministry aided at all times by the religious teaching of the home.

This is a task that requires great study and infinite care. These books must be studied and taught in the spirit of reverence, yet their human characters and life situations should be seen sympathetically and an accurate historical basis must be laid. Another big problem is to choose the lessons from these books in accordance with the life needs of those who are taught. All this intricate problem of the transmission of our religious culture is more and more satisfactorily met by the department of religious education. But the leaders in this department need the prayerful cooperation of every parent, teacher, and leader in the church.

An Unlimited Creed

Aside from the simple Christ-authorized ordinances of baptism, laying on of hands, and the Lord's Supper the Latter Day Saints heritage is one free from restrictions of dogma, ritual or creed. We are free to "go in and out and find pasture," to "seek learning even by study and also by faith," to "become acquainted with all good books and with languages, tongues and peoples." Our young people should be inspired to great heights of knowledge and learning. They should be encouraged to fill their minds with the great truths, the noble thoughts, and the beautiful things of life. They should be led to see that nothing that is really true or beautiful will be found in last analysis to be inconsistent or hostile to the religion of Christ.

The Closer Fellowship

True Latter Day Saint fellowship is a closer-knit bond than the usual church fellowship. The direct simple faith, the spiritual blessings that are peculiarly ours and the sense of being a chosen people, the one religious body which has restored to the world the gospel and church of Christ in unbroken integrity, binds us together in close and democratic union of soul to soul. This communion of spirit, this interest of all for each and each for all is a very precious heritage—one which we must not fail to pass on to our children.

Every Latter Day Saint is his brother's keeper; there is no room for snobbishness or selective aristocracy. We are all called to one aristocracy, an aristocracy of spirit. Parents, teachers and ministers are failing if they fail to transmit this spirit of sacred fellowship to the coming generation. The forward movement of the church necessitates a solidarity of interest and purpose, a continuation of this sense of kinship with each other.

This close sense of Christian love, this spiritualized brotherhood that we have in the church should but lay the foundation for a deeper sense of brotherhood with all humanity. It is not a "holier than thou" attitude nor a religious provincialism that is the true Latter Day Saint heritage. Rather it is the oneness of spirit that Christ prayed for when he asked that his disciples might be one even as he and the Father were one.

Ideals of Stewardship

Other churches have ideals of stewardship and splendid books and treatises have been written upon this subject by the religious leaders of the world. But with our definite faith and contact with God, with the Latter Day Saint spirit of consecration, with the larger scripture to guide us and that close fellowship under Christ we are justified in claiming the ideals of stewardship as peculiarly ours and we should feel their demonstration our especial responsibility.

For a hundred years the church has been trying to work out a project Christianity. Our purpose has been not only to bring mankind closer to God, to restore the gospel of Christ to the world, but also to apply that gospel in our own lives so definitely as to work out a new pattern of Christian living. We have undertaken to establish in very deed the kingdom of God upon the earth. We are pledged by repeated instruction and by many revelations to become actual stewards under God, holding our mental powers, our physical energy, our properties, our talents, all that we are and have, in trust to use and spend entirely for his glory.

An Unfinished Task

"With the unfinished task each generation passes on to its successors the experience of the past and its own experience in dealing with it. In this way the tides of human life may ebb and flow but there abides as a continuum through it all the unfinished task of human reconstruction and the progressive realization of the kingdom of God." (Bowers, The Curriculum of Religious Education.)

We may well feel discouraged over the unfinished state of this project of stewardship and the establishment of Zion. It is hard to see what progress we have made in the past century toward the culmination of our hopes. But surely we have laid some foundation stones upon which the next generation can build: a better coordinated general church organization, a well established department of religious education with trained leaders to meet the needs of the children and youth of the church, a careful evaluation of our objectives and a definite program of united and purposeful activity throughout the whole church, an experienced and more or less educated ministry, and a membership of higher educational and cultural standards than the previous generation. If we can preserve with this achievement the fire and power of spiritual life that was the endowment of the founders of this church and transmit the whole to the coming generation, working with them in a vigorous and unflagging effort toward the development of our birthright, our children will be in position to make swift strides toward the establishment of the kingdom of God.

After all, since the building of Zion means the actual perfection of the Saints, we can not expect it to be accomplished quickly. We must needs depend upon our children for the completion of the task; but let us see to it, each of us, that we pass on undimmed the ideals of stewardship and that we lay a sound foundation for the structure they may erect.

A Priceless Heritage

How carefully a conscientious father will husband his wealth and property, how ceaselessly he will toil to add to the family estate in order to have a substantial heritage to pass on to his children. How ceaselessly the mother with plan and labor to make the family income meet the needs of her growing children and have a few dollars left over each month to add to the family exchequer. How hard we work and how constantly we plan to give our children the "right start in life."

Every church member has a heritage of religious light, of nobility of religious ideals, of freedom of thought and of definite projects for Christianized living which can not be valued in terms of earthly wealth. Have we made an inventory of our spiritual heritage so that we may preserve its value? Are we transmitting to our children our whole spiritual estate, with an increment due to our efforts?

Are we preparing our children to enter into this heritage? Have we given them an accurate estimate of its value and are we training them to take over the responsibility of the administration of this heavenly estate? Are we expending as much thought and energy on giving our children the right start spiritually as on the problems of a financial start in life?

Let us pray for an enlargement of vision and a deepening of understanding and sympathy. May we so transmit our spiritual heritage to the coming generation that they may be able to go forward to the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth—even as it is established in heaven.

A Word for Graceland College

In America for a good many years past, education has been a sort of fetish. It was assumed that anyone who had passed through high school and college, and perhaps a university course, was fully equipped for citizenship. Secular education has been one-sided and unbalanced because it gave its attention largely to the acquiring of knowledge without sufficient attention to the character of the individual, and we have discovered that an educated criminal is more dangerous than he would have been without the education. It is a waste of public money and individual time to educate men and women who are not to have the character and the ideals that will enable them to make proper use of their scholastic training.

The correct basis for education is set forth in the Scriptures, "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge." (2 Peter 1: 5.) As a prerequisite to the acquiring of knowledge, the possession of faith and virtue are presupposed to furnish the foundation of character that can profitably take training. In too many of our public schools, colleges, and universities faith has not been reckoned with or considered necessary. In some of them it has been undermined and destroyed. In many of them scant attention has been given to the possession of or development of virtue or character. As a result we have not reaped the benefits that were hoped to be received from popular education. "Besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience Godliness; and to Godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." Not only are there certain prerequisites to the acquiring of knowledge, but, it having been obtained, the individual is to continue the development of his character by the addition of these other fundamental virtues.

In my judgment Graceland College is better equipped than any other school I know of in the world to help our young people acquire an education in harmony with the word of God just quoted and in harmony with the further commandment in our own Doctrine and Covenants, "Seek knowledge even by study and also by faith."

I witnessed the laying of the corner stone of Graceland College. I was present at its dedication. I watched its development. I lived in Lamoni, where I could observe its growth over a period of years and am personally acquainted with numbers of the graduates from Graceland College who are now active in the general ministry of the church and others who are engaged in church work locally along various lines. I am personally acquainted with numbers of younger graduates and students who I am convinced in future years will render a splendid service to the church. I know by observation and reputation a great many others who are not known so intimately at first hand. Two of my own sons have graduated from Graceland College. So I believe I am in a position to speak out of some experience and opportunity to observe and with a degree of knowledge in this matter. I would advise those parents who can arrange for their sons and daughters to attend Graceland to do so, even at some cost of sacrifice. I am sure that they will be well repaid. It is true that an occasional student attending Graceland has been dissatisfied. That is inevitable. It would be claiming too much to assume that Graceland has never, as an institution, made mistakes in the past, or that mistakes have not been made in the handling of individual students. No institution in the world or in the church is infallible; but the surroundings socially and morally in Lamoni, the consecrated purpose and devotion of the faculty, the aims and ideals of the college, the character of the boys and girls who come there as students from year to year, all conspire to give our sons and daughters an opportunity there that they could find nowhere else in the world. I know one young man who first attended one of our larger western universities one year. The next year he attended Graceland, and he told me that Graceland was a hundred per cent better than the university. For him it was a hundred per cent better. In the university he had scholastic opportunities; in Graceland he had scholastic opportunities plus other vital opportunities that gave him a start in life that he could never have found elsewhere.

Graceland was fostered in its beginning by the church. President Joseph Smith, Sister Marietta Walker and many others of the abler and most consecrated of men and women of the Reorganization cooperated to bring the college into existence, to give it direction and life, and to strengthen it during its younger years; so it is only in harmony with church precedent established over such a very long period of time that the recent General Conference should have made the work of Graceland College a part of the church program for this year and have put the stamp of unanimous approval upon Graceland's immediate objective, thus set forth in the conference action:

Whereas, the welfare of Graceland College is closely coordinated with the welfare of the church, and

Whereas, the present physical plant and educational set-up of Graceland College is designed to function most efficiently with a student body of three hundred fifty to five hundred students, and

Whereas, the interests of the church are conserved by the youth of the church continuing their higher education in our own church college, therefore

In harmony with the report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College

Be it resolved that one of the objectives of the church, governing and directing the efforts of its representatives and constituency is 200 freshmen at Graceland College in 1932.

I have no reservations at all. In fact I am happy in lending my influence to the furthering of this objective, and trust that the Saints everywhere will cooperate and endeavor to see that it is realized.

Number 48

Cerebrospinal Fever

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

An ordinary case of this disease usually begins with an excruciating headache, chills, intolerance to light, nausea, dizziness, and prostration. These symptoms come on from two to ten days after exposure. With these pronounced symptoms, there follows, shortly, rigid and retracted muscles of the back of the neck; soon after the muscles of the back are similarly attacked. After the back muscles are attacked, an arching of the back occurs; the shoulders, neck, and heels resting on the bed, leaving a space under the back. This position is called the opisthotonos position. By this time, the patient is rendered helpless and is unable to straighten the leg completely when the thigh is flexed upon the abdomen, when the patient is in the recumbent position. Kernig was the first to discover this, hence, it is known as Kernig's sign. This symptom is almost never found in any other disease, or in health. In a short time, inflammation of the joints occurs, followed by muscular cramps, convulsions, and delirium. Special nerves being involved, the patient exhibits an extreme intolerance to light and sound, followed by blindness and deafness. Tremor of the eyeballs and paralysis of the eye muscles, together with the loss of sense of smell and taste are not uncommon. The temperature is variable, ranging from ninety degrees to one hundred and four degrees Fahrenheit. From the first to the fifth day, a characteristic eruption makes its appearance, followed by other skin manifestations. The duration of the disease is from a few hours to several weeks, but usually reaches its height in about three to eight days. The patient that recovers has a protracted convalescence. If it terminates fatally, he goes into a stupor, or coma. The fatal form of the disease is characterized by the sudden and exaggerated symptoms already enumerated, resulting in death, in a few hours.

What is known as the abortive form, in the course of an epidemic, terminates in prompt recovery. It is very common for the disease to take on a chronic form, which is of unusual and prolonged duration, which either finally terminates in death from exhaustion, or complete recovery. Preventive measures are very hard and very difficult, due to the large number of carriers in existence of mild and abortive cases, which only adds to the difficulty in administrative control. It seems that most preventive measures have been impractical and noneffective. All preventive measures attempted should be under the most skilled medical advice obtainable.

The near failure of preventive measures should not lead us to assume an indifferent attitude. Vaccines have been tried with some apparent results, and appear to be logical and deserve extended observation. The general treatment is symptomatic. While the anti-meningitis serum is not practical as a preventative, it is useful in the treatment of some of the cases and for this reason, lumbar puncture should be performed promptly in all cases, which includes the mild, both for purposes of diagnosis and for an introduction of the serum. The patient should be isolated in a well-ventilated, darkened, large and airy, room. The diet should be of the most nourishing form possible. Feeding by the rectum may be necessary. Local cold compresses and ice bags should be applied to the head and spine, together with counter irritation to the spine. Medicines are quite frequently useful, but should only be administered by a competent physician.

True and genuine repentance is a turning away from everything that is of a sinful and evil nature, and strictly adhering to those things commanded of the Lord.—D. E. Tucker, in "The True Gospel and the True Church."

Greatness lies, not in being strong, but in the right using of strength.—Beecher.

AMONG THE BOOKS

Christian Faith Turns to the Future

Rufus M. Jones, whose writings enjoy a widespread fame, sends a stirring call to the Christian peoples of the world for a united faith to meet our most perplexing problems. The following extracts, selected from the foreword to his recent book, "A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age," take the true measure of our present age and the condition of its society.

It is a sad spectacle that so great a part of the Christian world, blinded by the glitter of its material gains, and deceived into a false sense of security and a notion of a social righteousness that it did not possess, was content, ostrich-like, to hide its head in the sands of creed and tradition, ignoring the rapidly changing conditions in social and economic life. The awakening has been rude, but it has come at last; and it has been hastened by the frankness, courage, and honesty of men like the authors of this volume. (A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age, by Rufus M. Jones; New York, The Macmillan Company, 1932.)

There is a faith that overcomes the world, or at least there has been such a faith, and there is a faith, as is only too obvious, that is overcome by the world. . . . There are many confusions abroad which are bound to arrest attention and to chill optimistic hopes. Among the many confusions there are two types that are most clearly in the foreground of present-day consciousness. The financial confusion is a well-recognized fact, patent to all observers. Every industry is affected. Every investor of money is seriously concerned. Every laborer is made anxious. Every banker is worried. Every statesman in every country is harried over problems of budgets and balances, currency values and doles. Never before, perhaps, to quite the same extent has the whole world been made conscious at one time of business depression and of the tragedies of unemployment.

There is at the same time a drift of moral and spiritual confusion which is as widespread and as ominous. . . . The old order has given way and there is a vast element of moral chaos. Crime waves have swept over great centers of population in countries that used to be sane and ordered. Bandits infest not only what the pious call "heathen lands," but, as well, lands which boast of "Christian civilization." They are almost certainly symptoms of a deeper trouble. The steadying power of a great faith has for many persons waned. The rush and hurry, the speed and drive, which prevail, are significant signs of nervous restlessness, if not of hysteria. Serenity and calm are not characteristic virtues of the age. Depth of life and power of endurance which come from the vision of great realities are none too common. The horizon of life with its far perspectives and expectations has narrowed, and the focus of attention has become distinctly secular and this-worldly. Question marks blur the most sacred arks and sanctuaries. There is a "run" on the bank of the ages and the most stable moral and spiritual assets of the past are being critically scrutinized.

At last, the world has been shaken awake and is clearly conscious of its financial confusions. Its experts are busy night and day endeavoring to discover how to save the remnants of wealth, how to stabilize currency, and how to care for those who suffer from unemployment, with the hope eventually of finding a way to give regular employment to all the able-bodied workers of the world.

There is as yet no such awakening to the prevailing moral and spiritual confusion, no such urgency to discover what is the matter with our lives, or what is more important, to find out how to rebuild the shattered foundations of the spiritual structure. It is high time to awake out of sleep and to put on the armor of light. . . .

This situation in which the world finds itself can not be remedied by a spray of rose water. There is no quick panacea which will put things right. The kind of obsession which has infected our lives and minds calls for a new type of "cure of souls," and a most serious work of searching the deeps of our being. It is not the business alone of some one lone prophet crying in the wilderness. It will need the cooperative efforts of all those who have experience and wisdom and vision and insight.

The various types of confusion, almost certainly, go back to a common root and basis. We shall not get permanent stability in any one field until we are on the way to get in the other fields. There are moral and spiritual grounds involved in the economic and financial confusion as well as purely economic grounds. It is impossible to defy the moral laws of the world and still to have a stable, economic order and to have business go on "as usual." Before the troubles of the world are over we must right wrongs, deal justly, and love mercy, and walk humbly before our God. There are moral and spiritual principles of life that are older than banks or stock-markets and they underlie and undergird the whole of individual and social and national well-being. . . .

The Christian message and the spiritual task, like the economic and financial problems, have suddenly broadened out and become world-wide issues. We can not have an effective message or a dynamic gospel for China or for India unless we can discover some fresh power, some deeper interpretation of life that will transform our own civilization and inaugurate a new epoch of faith here in America. . . . We must learn how to consume our own selfishness in a new flame of love for Christ and his kingdom. We need to have our smug self-satisfied lives invaded by an absorbing and self-annihilating passion of sacrificial love.

We want to know why Christianity is running on low gear. We need to ask what ought to be expected of the Christian church in this new age. What is its program and what is the secret of its power? What realities survive all the acid tests? What is the live nucleus of our faith today and what message can the churches offer a confused world in these days? . . .

There is a faith, a message, a power of life, a mighty experience of God . . . which can unite us all in one tremendous world task, adequate for this epoch.

Who Does Go to Church?

A DESCRIPTION OF A CHURCH ATTENDANCE RECORD SYSTEM THAT HAS PROVED ITS VALUE

By Ward A. Hougas

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins went to church Sunday night, the first time in three months. Old Silas Martin was there, too, with his week-end company, a Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Babcock from Saint Louis. And Deacon Jones came back to refresh his memory as to what the church teaches. But who were those three young couples who sat just under the edge of the balcony? Oh, yes, here they are, names and addresses of them all, visitors from the church two blocks down the hill.

Romance? Fiction? Neither—just an up-to-date attendance record system in the hands of a live-wire pastor—and it works. It not only works now but has worked from its very beginning many months ago.

How many pastors wish they knew just who does come to church and how regular they are in attendance. In the small congregations it's easy to look around and recognize the various members of the congregation. In the city churches it is not only difficult—it is impossible.

Many families are forgotten until they have drifted so far they can't be brought back. Many people just don't realize how poor an attendance record they really do have. An up-to-date system has no end of uses for the pastor who is really interested in his work.

The system of which we speak is simple and effective and is designed primarily for the Sunday evening service—the service at which most of the visitors are present.

Two kinds of cards are required for use, the service card which is used for but one service and the permanent record card in the index file which carries the permanent record for a year. (See samples below.)

The service card is about 3½x6½ inches in size and is punched in one end so that an ordinary program pencil can be looped into it. As each person enters the church at the evening service they are handed a card with a pencil attached. At the time of the offertory the organ plays softly for a minute or two while the one in charge explains the use of the card, every one signs the card, fills out the blanks and the cards are collected at the same time that the offering is received.

The following information is asked for on the service card: Name; address; phone number; are you a visitor? If so, with whom? Did you attend church school here this morning? If not a Latter Day Saint what is your church affiliation? The card carries the name, address and phone number of the pastor, associate pastor and secretary.

Those who attend the church school or morning service and who do not expect to be in attendance at the evening service call for a card which is signed, properly checked and returned.

But a very few minutes are required on Monday mornings to enter the attendance of even several hundred members on the permanent record cards and the work of keeping the record is complete. The work of the record has only been begun, however.

One of the most valuable usages is in connection with the visitors. A letter to them, a personal letter from the pastor, not some cut and dried form, thanking them for their attendance and inviting them back works wonders. A letter to the members who bring company to the service is even more effective in stimulating missionary spirit among the membership. It is equally encouraging to the member to learn from their company of the Sunday previous that the pastor was interested enough in their work to take time to write their guests personally.

Then there is the priesthood. Maybe in some places they all go to church regularly but not so where this system has been in operation. A six months' summary of attendance with some averages proved a very interesting and effective subject for one priesthood meeting. It is a stimulator, too, and gives the pastor some definite information for use in an effort to organize an active priesthood.

Six-months' attendance records on the bulletin board tend to increase interest in continued attendance.

What type of people attend the morning service? Who are interested in the evening service? What relationship is there between church goers and tithe-payers? Does your priesthood visiting get results?

Who does go to church anyway? These and a dozen other similar questions can be answered by the use of an attendance record system that works. The cost is low—in fact, the difference in the evening offering will almost pay the cost to say nothing of the added interest on the part of the membership.

The biggest value of the system, however, lies in the story which it tells to the pastor who cares enough to take the time necessary to analyze the picture. Without some such system pastoral work at best is apt to be more or less haphazard, unorganized and, to a great extent, fruitless. The system is not copyrighted but has been standardized and printed in quantities by a former missionary so that it seems practical for any church with a congregation of a hundred or more.

Do you know your visitors? Do you follow up their first attendance? Do you encourage those who are showing missionary zeal? Are you keeping track of the activities of your priesthood? In other words, are you a pastor or simply the man elected by the branch to be its head?

(Any pastor who would be interested in a supply of cards for the use of the system that the author describes can get details by writing to the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, and giving an estimate of how many of each kind of cards will be needed.)

Autobiography

XXI.—Notes From the Records of 1906-1907.

By James Franklin Mintun

I prepared a tract on the subject, "Are you a Christian?" and had several hundreds printed for distribution during a series of tent meetings, and used several hundreds more that I secured from the Herald Publishing House. On July 21, I baptized five, among whom was Brother William Robinson, who did a good work in Des Moines in after years, and Brother and Sister Rosser Davis, who had formerly been Utah Mormons.

In the tent meetings I note that to reach the public I used two thousand of the leaflets, "Are You a Christian?" and about three thousand special notices of the tent meetings, besides many tracts that I secured from the Herald Publishing House. For several days while engaged in these tent services, Brother W. D. Bullard, of Independence, Missouri, was in the city on the account of the serious illness of his daughter, Sister Minnie Mather, and he rendered help at the tent services. She died on the seventeenth of September, the funeral services being held at the residence in Council Bluffs, and the remains taken to Independence, Missouri.

After the death of Sister Mather, it was the desire of Mr. J. H. Mather, that I should bring my family to the city and keep house for him. So I consulted with the President of the Highland Park College regarding the bringing of my two youngest children to the city, and what credits he would allow from the Woodbine Normal, and permit them to enter the college. He would allow full credit to them from the Woodbine Normal. Both of the children were to graduate from the Woodbine Normal, and I wished to avoid the graduating expense if I could continue them in the college along their line of work, for I was not able to pay such an expense at this time, and by consulting in regard to the expense at the college I would save considerable just at that time. On September 27, Sister Rachel Vice died, and I conducted the funeral the next day, and on the twenty-ninth, tent work was closed for the year.

In agreement with all concerned it was finally decided that I should rent the home of Brother W. R. Vice, whose wife had just died, other arrangements being made by Mr. Mather.

I then returned home, sold my property there, and what goods I could profitably, and moved the family to Des Moines, making our home in the house vacated by Brother W. R. Vice at the death of his wife, he to occupy one of the rooms, securing the same for the rental of fifty dollars till April 1. I arrived with the family in Des Moines October 17, and the children began their college work on the twenty-third of the month. The rest of the month was quite fully occupied in the city.

My daughter Ruth had secured the school at Runnells for one year, so that the family were near together, and all busy. My time was fully occupied in attending and assisting at all the services, preaching once or twice each Sunday, teaching the Sunday school class, and assisting at the religious services, preaching several funeral sermons, administering to many sick, and using as much of my time as possible in visiting in the homes of the Saints to give encouraging instruction, and looking for property that I could buy that would make us a home in the near future. I purchased a property on November 17, then made some improvements on it as I could, which occupied my time till December 1.

At the beginning of the year 1907, I was at home and in my mission, making reports to the bishop and the minister in charge. . . .

I spent one evening at Mr. Rubenstein's, a Jewish family that had become somewhat interested in our claims. They invited two of their Jewish brethren to be present, who were at the time studying to become rabbis. During the evening's conversation the question arose as to who Jesus, who was called Christ, was. I referred to Genesis 8:12, in which is contained the blessing of Judah by the patriarch Jacob, in the which is found this prophecy, "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." I inquired of them who they considered the Shiloh to be. They answered without hesitation, "The Messiah." Then I said, "Has not the scepter departed from Judah?" They hesitatingly answered, "Yes." "Then has not the Messiah come?" I said. "And, if so who was he and when did he come?" They made no answer. I said this proves that Jesus was the Messiah or the Christ, he being the one who came, claiming to be the Christ, before the scepter departed from Judah. Then I presented Isaiah 9:6, 7, which reads:

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even for ever. The zeal of the Lord shall perform this."

"Who do you believe should sit upon the throne of David?" I asked them. They replied, "The Messiah." "Then, when was he born, as here spoken of?" They could not answer, but only said, "We do not understand that scripture." I then referred to the claim made by the historian Luke, in Luke 1:26-33. They would not continue longer, but said, "We will look these matters up, and inform ourselves."

I note one item in my records that brings to mind how I was able to secure an education for my children. On the twenty-ninth of April, I received one hundred and fifty dollars as a loan of Brother S. B. Kibler, that I might continue the education of them. When one of the children would teach a term of school, then I could pay the loans I secured, or if they could not I would extend the loan, or borrow of some other party to repay the loan used, and then in time the children would repay all that was borrowed. And in this regard, wish to say with a heart full of gratitude for the willing sacrifice that my children have made that I might be kept in the missionary work, that up until the death of my wife, in 1920, my girls, would use all they had made in supplying the family, and I would have to loan them money enough to go to the next term of school, till they could teach for a while then they would return it. Otherwise than this I could not have been in the missionary work as much as I have been. May God reward them, and I believe he will.

On August 1, I enjoyed the privilege of seeing my second daughter, Alice, graduate from the Primary Training Course in the Highland Park College. My heart was glad that my children sought to prepare themselves for honorable positions in life, and that God was so good to me that they could have the privilege of securing such advancement.

A brother came to my home one early morning and made a confession of two grievous sins, which was the second offense. He felt so humiliated that he would not at first consider he was worthy to enter my home, but I told him that my home was a place where sinners might come, confessing their sins, and seeking advice what further was required. He was in a disposition to not attend church services again, because he knew he must be cast out of the church, but I finally persuaded him that the place where he had received the greatest strength to withstand his weaknesses was at the services of the church, which he confessed was the case and he promised me that he would not only attend but would do what he could to honor God in those services. He was a frequent attendant at prayer services after this, and gave of his means to assist in supporting the work of the church, and many time through administration received blessings for himself and his adopted children. After he had confessed to me, I gave information to the branch president, and it was thought advisable for another of the priesthood to visit him and get the confession, if such was true, before a court of elders was appointed. So a brother, holding the office of priest was sent to see him. He told him what had been heard by him, and wished to know if it was true. He told him that it was. Then he asked him why he told it, for if he had not told it, no one would ever have known it. But the brother said, "God knew it, and why should I try to keep it hid from his church so that I might be meted out a just penalty for my sin?" The visiting priest said, "Well, you are a fool for ever having told it to any one." The brother who had sinned went at once and confessed to his wife, and told her he was no more worthy of her as a wife, and for her to accept of all the property, and go to herself, and pay no more attention to him. She said, "I can help you more by remaining your wife and filling the place of a wife, than to turn away from assisting you when you need me the most. I will forgive you if you will promise to overcome, and live honorably as you know you should." I knew him for several years, and he honored his place as a husband and as a father to some adopted children. When the decision was rendered by the church that it was possible for one in the condition that he was in to live such a life in the future, and become sufficiently repentant to again reenter the church, I could not get in touch with him, and learn of his life so that I might know whether to advise him to apply for readmission into the church. One thing that encouraged him to attend the church services was this: I told him that I could not encourage him that he could ever secure celestial glory, but that he was acquainted with the fact that there were more glories that men could attain to, and the church might assist him to secure one of the lesser glories if he would overcome his sins, and live as near the Lord as possible.

One time when several of the elders were present in Des Moines the sinful brother came to be administered to, but I found that the majority of them would not assist me to administer, for the reason that the revelation said, for the second offense, "they shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out." He had suffered the penalty by being cast out, but I told them it did not say that he should not ask forgiveness, or that when sufficiently penitent the Lord would not heal his physical infirmities even while he was in an out-cast state. He was administered to, and blessed with physical relief. His faith was such that whenever the little children he was caring for would get sick, he would bring them for administration, and in nearly every case that came under my observation they were relieved. These were lessons in God's mercy to me and others.

About this time my wife's illness resulted in what was thought to be inward cancer. She was being treated under the care of Doctor Joseph Luff, who advised that she be examined by a local physician and his diagnosis sent to him. Doctor J. A. Goodrich, made the examination, and pronounced the affliction cancerous, and sent the diagnosis to Doctor Luff, and he also decided it was cancerous, and advised to put her under the care of a specialist in the city, who would be near her, in the case of an emergency, the possibility of the cancer eating off an artery. We, wife and I consulted with each other, and prayed about what was our duty, and thus concluded: God has revealed two methods of treating disease, one by administration, the other by a church physician, and as she was being administered to by the elders, we decided to request Brother Luff, the church physician, to continue the case. He consented, but said for us to depend principally on the administration, and to continue them. We did so, and as a result, by another examination some months later, the cancerous nature of the disease was removed, and God received all the praise, and neither physician but what was willing we should give God all the praise.

On November 5 I was selected one of the permanent trustees of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League, in which position I labored as long as I was in Iowa, and then was transferred to the Ohio Anti-Saloon League while in Toledo. On November 10 I was voted in as a member of the Ministerial Association of Des Moines, becoming a member with the understanding that I would labor with them in the civic and temperance interests of the city and state.

My wife's health was not good during the latter part of this year, but she sacrificed my presence many times for the work's sake, when it might have been better for her had she not have done it. Above all else I thank God for a good wife during the time of my missionary labors, who though oftentimes absent was a strength to me.

You can do anything that you try to do,
If you only try to do it.
You must get a little start,
You must have a little heart,
Then a long strong pull and go to it.
Oh, it may take years to worry it through,
And you may break a leg and an arm or two.
But in the by and by you will find it true
That you will do anything that you try to do—
If you only try to do it.

New York District Conference

Sherrill, New York.—As the world's in the midst of never-to-be-forgotten times, so the Saints had in Buffalo, June 4 and 5, a not-soon-to-be-forgotten district conference. Members were disappointed that Apostle Paul Hanson was not there, but understand that he was called home by the serious illness of his father. The new district missionary, William I. Fligg, was here. He gave a fine talk on missionary work Saturday afternoon after a sermon on the subject, "The Picture Before Us, What Will We Do Now?" by F. C. Mesle.

Business session followed, during which the election of officers took place. Doctor P. L. Weegar was elected to succeed himself as president of the district, with Brothers E. V. Wagner and F. C. Mesle, first and second counselors, respectively. Other officers were sustained or reelected as the case might be. Arrangements were made for ordinations which took place Sunday morning during a splendid sacrament service. Richard L. Harris was ordained to the office of deacon and Brother A. Butler to the office of elder.

The Saturday evening session included some very good papers and talks on Religious Education, worship, and recreation, by Eugenia Norton, William Eidt, Sanford Morden, jr., and Dorothy V. Mesle. Important lessons were taught by drama by the Zion's Club of Buffalo and Niagara Falls' talent. There were several special numbers in music and readings which were very much appreciated, and two numbers by the New York District Choir, under leadership of District Chorister Catharine Lambert, were especially enjoyed; in fact our president wished it could have been broadcast. At the close of the evening's program, Saturday, a large class of Buffalo students were presented with credit slips and certificates, resulting from some real work. Brother Hewitt, of Toronto, addressed the class in presentation with fitting remarks.

During the Sacrament session a prophecy was given, promising, under conditions, the endowment, and many good things if we measure up to God's requirements.

Junior Church was carried on in lower auditorium, and during the services the babies were cared for.

Toronto was nicely represented at the conference and Niagara Falls added much to the program in more than one respect. Rochester had a delegation of six present. The Mesle family represented Sherrill, and Sister Ada Davison was the only one from Syracuse present, but she did her share musically. Two or three of the smaller branches, due to unemployment among the membership, have temporarily given up the use of their halls and are meeting in the homes. We think it never pays to give up assembling together, if at all possible. Buffalo Branch is growing and the need of an addition to their church building was especially noticeable at the time of a conference.

There was an optimistic tone to the conference, and it is hoped that this was carried home by all.

In Sherrill the group is small but the Saints seem to turn out to church services better than members of other churches. Eleven and twelve, respectively, were out to prayer service last night and one week ago. There are less than twenty Saints in town. Brother and Sister Floyd Rathbun, seventeen miles away, at Morrisville, are very faithful in attendance, and always willing to help in any way possible.

Last Sunday a few from Syracuse were down to carry out a joint Children's Day program. Local workers would not have been ashamed to have any of the Herald readers present to hear that program. The group adjourned to a quiet little part in the town and enjoyed a picnic dinner, thirty-two being present. Sister Eleanor Whitehead came with the Davison family and stayed down a couple of days to visit. If Syracuse and Sherrill groups could be brought into closer proximity, there would be a good-sized branch. Only those who have labored in small branches, where the one's and two's are very much missed when absent, and the preacher's wife feels that she must go whether she feels like it or not, and perhaps fill two or three people's places, know what it is like. Sherrill is bereft of young people. Either they are off at school, except during vacation, married to out-of-town companions, or business takes them away.

Detroit, Michigan

From Detroit's Beacon Light

The Detroit branch picnic was held the afternoon of June 18, at Zachariah Chandler Park. Everyone was invited, and brought baskets filled with picnic lunch. Lemonade was furnished. The committee in charge had all details well worked out. Ball games began at two o'clock.

The mass meeting of the women occurred June 7, at First Church. Lunch was served at twelve thirty. This was the annual business meeting, and officers were elected.

Friends extend sympathy to Brother and Sister R. E. Ulman in the sudden death of their daughter, Geneva. This young woman's pleasant smile and kind words will continue to live in the hearts of the Saints.

The annual Detroit branch business meeting for election of officers was held Tuesday evening, June 7, at First Church.

First Church

The Sunday school officers and teachers of this congregation have enjoyed during the past season, a series of get-together meetings in the form of dinners. During the meal the work of the department was discussed and new suggestions were made. Among the speakers who of late have addressed this assembly are Brother Mottashed, Brother Bruce Brown, Brother David Dowker, and Doctor Pearse. May's meeting ended the activities until this fall. The workers extend appreciation to all who have made these dinners possible.

With the coming of summer weather the recreational activities of the young people have increased. Among the active groups are the Cappa Epsalon Temple Builders, the Sunny Side Girls, and several Sunday school classes.

Mother's Day was impressively observed with program numbers, an abundance of flowers, and the blessing of the little children of Brother and Sister James Green and Brother and Sister Jack Barss.

Elder K. H. Green is now conducting a series of three sermons on "Church Government." The first of these occurred June 19, at the morning service. These sermons have been delivered in other groups where they have proved most instructive. The themes are, "Priesthood Authority," "The Organic Law," and "Tracing the Priesthood From the Beginning." Brother Green has had wide experience in the church; he was in the mission field in the city of Chicago, and in Eastern Michigan District for several years. Twice he has been president of the Detroit District, and for a period of twelve years, he was a counselor to several First Church pastors.

Roseville Church

Sister Eleanor and Brother Frank Everts are the proud parents of a new son.

Considerable illness has been experienced in this group. The members are happy that Sister Teal has recovered sufficiently to come out to church once more, and they rejoice at word from Elder Alvin Ellis, of South Boardman, that he is recovering from a serious operation. Prayers are requested in behalf of Sister Wilsie.

Wyandotte Church

All of the meetings in the different departments are well attended, a good spirit prevailing. Everyone is working to forward the cause of Christ as is demonstrated by the missionary effort under the direction of Brother Norman Jones, who appreciates the cooperation of the Saints.

The priesthood has been active in visiting and encouraging members of the congregation and helping to brighten the lives of some of the more unfortunate ones.

The support given by the junior choir in the past few months has been a great help.

The Mother's Day program given the evening of May 8, under the direction of the department of recreation and expression, was a success. The little drama, "Ponder the Ways of Thy Feet and Let All Thy Paths Be Established," was composed and given by members of this group.

East Side Church

The blessings received through prayer and administration are helpful to the faith of this congregation.

A larger attendance at the Sunday morning eight thirty prayer service is desired.

Sister Anna Mae Pappas, leader of the department of recreation and expression, and Brother John J. Nesbitt, a prominent young man in this branch, were united in the bonds of matrimony May 7, at the home of Sister Mae Pappas in Battle Creek, Michigan.

The women of Group No. 13 held a bake sale not long ago. It was so successful that they are planning another in the near future.

The condition of Sister Vera Boos who is in the Herman Keifer Hospital, is greatly improved.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

A former pastor and missionary for southern Nebraska, E. F. Robertson, and wife, of Maine, visited Lincoln on their way back to their field from the General Conference.

On Mother's Day this branch had a number of visitors. The main reason for their coming was the fact that Brother and Sister Robertson were in Lincoln, and they took this opportunity of meeting them. Among those present were Brother and Sister D'Arcy and Brother and Sister Rasmussen, of Auburn, and Brother Dave Gamet and family, of Tecumseh. The new missionary for Southern Nebraska District, Brother W. A. Smith, of Independence, also worshiped here that day. An all-day service with basket luncheon was planned, and thoroughly enjoyed. A Mother's Day program, in charge of Sister Weller, was presented at the close of the Sunday school hour and an inspiring sermon was preached by Brother Robertson at 11 o'clock. After lunch, there were several administrations and the baby boy of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Hale was blessed under the hands of Pastor B. M. Anderson and Brother Robertson. At three o'clock Brother D'Arcy delivered a wonderful sermon, and at seven thirty Brother Robertson preached, using as his topic, "The Signs of the Times."

"Chintz Cottage," a three-act play, was given at the church the evening of June 3, under the direction of Sister Schrunk, assisted by Rogene Anderson, the leader of our young people's department. A good attendance netted these young folks a nice sum of money. The cast was as follows: Dorothea Hunt, Roxie Fletcher, Margaret Jones, Carrie Hale, Rogene Anderson, Francie Schrunk, and Mary Reichenbach.

Brother and Sister Bailey suffered a sad loss when their oldest son, Harold, was killed in a motorcycle accident Sunday evening, June 5. He, with his companion, Miss Nicholas, were returning to Lincoln from Beatrice. A truck was stopped on the highway, and in attempting to pass between it and a car coming from the other direction, he hit the truck, killing his companion instantly. He passed away in a short time, never regaining consciousness. The funeral was held on Wednesday at two o'clock at Hodgeman's Mortuary, Brother E. J. Lenox in charge. Burial was at Lincoln Memorial Park.

A baby boy, Gerald Edward, was born to Brother and Sister Ezra Oehring, June 9.

A Sunday school picnic was enjoyed by young and old at Antelope Park the afternoon and evening of June 11. There was a ball game and other recreation. A basket supper with ice cream and cake for all, was served in the evening. This picnic was in charge of Brother Poague, church school director. About seventy attended.

A business meeting was held the evening of June 8. After hearing reports from the various officers, it was decided to do some necessary repairing on the church, and a committee was appointed to see about installing a new gas furnace. The old one is in a dangerous condition for another winter's use. It was decided to hold an officer's and teacher's meeting once a month.

Sister Poague and Sister Weller were in charge of the Children's Day program, June 12. The white arch with the text, "Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me," across it and the white gate, with vines and flowers decorating it, made an appropriate setting for the program. It was made more impressive by the baptism of two little boys, Roland Poague and Donald Reichenbach, and confirmation took place at the same meeting. The infant son of Sister Madsen was blessed also. Sister Anderson played soft music during these ordinances. The children who took part in the exercises are to be commended for their effort, as well as those who were in charge. We feel that it was the best organized and executed Children's Day service Lincoln has had.

The women's department is busy with quilting and other work.

Lake Orion, Michigan

June 14.—The spirit of the late General Conference has entered the hearts of the Saints here, and they are having some very spiritual meetings. Interest in the work is growing.

Members were glad to have Apostle D. T. Williams returned to this district, and greatly enjoyed the report he brought from the conference.

The church school is well attended, and all seem to be interested in the study of the gospel work.

The branch is proud of its young people. They are always ready and willing to assist when called upon. Some fine musical talent is found here.

On last Sunday a fine Children's Day program was given under the leadership of Sister Verna Schaar, who recently returned from her school at Tingley, Iowa. Twenty-one young people and children took part.

It being decision Day, four young people decided to come into the fold of Christ. At eight thirty in the morning the Saints assembled on the shore of Lake Orion, where Brother Frank Davis performed the sacred rite of baptism for Edna Jean, and Verna Mae Gonyou, daughters of Brother and Sister Simeon Bruce Gonyou, and Cameron, and Barbara Bernice Dollinger, children of Brother Jack Dollinger.

After the baptism, the Saints went to the church, where the young people formed in line on each side of the aisle, down which the new members marched and took their seats upon the platform. The songs for the church school has been selected especially for the occasion and were sung by the young people, "I Would Be True," "Just as I Am," "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken," and "Consecration."

After the church school session, the program was given, and at the close of this, the four who had been baptized were confirmed by Elder Dur M. Taylor. The members are happy to welcome these new Saints to the branch, and hope that other young people will soon be led to make the great decision.

First Institute for Spring River District

Spring River District held its first institute at Coffeyville, June 18 and 19, Elder C. B. Woodstock in charge. The opening service Saturday was a prayer meeting at ten o'clock, which had an attendance of nearly thirty-five. Institute classes were held at 11 a. m., 2.30 p. m., 3.30, and 7.30 p. m., and after the evening class a short social and musical program was enjoyed.

Elders Woodstock and Martin conducted a fifteen minute worship service at nine thirty Sunday morning, followed by another institute class. Then Elder Woodstock presented Elder Amos T. Higdon, district president, a gold seal certificate, representing five hundred hours of institute study. Brother Higdon preached at the eleven o'clock hour on "Sacrifice" in conjunction with Sacrifice Week conducted by the church.

At twelve o'clock a basket dinner was served to nearly two hundred people at Forest Park.

Another institute class was presided over by Brother Woodstock, followed by priesthood meeting in charge of Brother Cadwell.

From seven fifteen to eight o'clock a musical program was in charge of Brother Leslie Epperson, consisting of selections by a ten-piece orchestra, and several instrumental and vocal numbers. This did much to get the congregation in tune for Brother Woodstock's closing talk, "The Call of the Church."

During the services Sunday two baby girls were blessed, one the daughter of Brother and Sister Loyd Martin, the other the daughter of Brother and Sister Atkinson.

Attendance at services was larger than was expected. The highest number present at any of the sessions was one hundred and seventy-five. Eighteen branches were represented.

The following district officers were present: Amos T. Higdon, Lee Quick, Norman Gray, R. G. Smith, and Andy Jones.

A fine spirit was present at all the meetings during the two days, and everyone was helped by the institute work.

Vancleave, Mississippi

(Mobile District)

Children's Day was observed at Vancleave, June 12, there being a fine crowd present, and everyone enjoyed himself socially and spiritually. The church school hour was devoted to the children. Branch President A. G. Miller also gave them a little talk.

In the afternoon Brothers A. G. Miller and W. C. Yocum officiated at a baptismal service, nine candidates being inducted into the church. Confirmation was held at the church at seven thirty o'clock and just preceding the preaching service.

The recreation and expression department meets regularly, and the young people gave a Negro minstrel June 11, at the home of Brother and Sister H. E. Jennings. Although it rained, a big crowd was present, and the program was much enjoyed.

The women have been doing very helpful work in their department.

Saints in this vicinity hope in the next few months to accomplish many things.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Saints of this branch send greetings to all Saints and friends throughout the church, and wish to announce that they are now holding their regular services in the lower auditorium of the Asbury Church, located at the corner of West Washington and South Eighth Street. Members and friends passing through Milwaukee are welcome.

The gospel work in this city has taken on new growth and the few remaining families of Saints are zealously trying to carry on in greater unity and love, the task intrusted to them.

Sunday, June 12, was a red letter day for them. Bishop C. J. Hunt was there to instruct and encourage. His optimistic attitude and words of hope were a great help.

Since this was Children's Day, the church school was conducted by children. Bobby Pratt, age nine years, and Raymond Cone, twelve, were in charge, and a good program was presented by the few junior members of the school. The two babies were blessed at this service, the infant son of Everett and Elnora Lindsay, and the infant daughter of Thomas and Ruby Sylvester. The room was appropriately decorated in pink and white and the songs of canaries added praise to the Creator.

A baptismal service was held at three o'clock when the local priest, G. W. Lindsay, inducted three into the church and family of God, William Lawrence, twenty-six years old, and the two boys above mentioned, Bobby and Raymond. Confirmation services followed immediately.

Webb City, Missouri

Oregon and Second Streets

The district conference met with this branch May 20 to 22, and was a source of great encouragement to the Saints here. Since the conference, District President Amos T. Higdon has spent a week in Webb City, and with the priesthood of the branch put on a visiting campaign in behalf of Sacrifice Week. They visited almost every home in the branch and this will surely bring good results. Brother Higdon preached some fine sermons on Sunday and was present at the sacrament service June 5, at which time God's Spirit was felt in abundance. Under its influence, Brother Higdon was moved to speak first to the priesthood of the branch, then to Pastor Waldron, and then to the membership. Everyone rejoiced, and it is hoped that the members will not forget the counsel given, but, remembering it, do their part to move forward.

The children gave an appropriate program June 12, being led by Sister Neva Trimble, supervisor of the children's division, and Sister La Fern Waldron, director of junior church.

At two thirty in the afternoon seven children were baptized by Pastor Waldron, Carrol Neal Beutte, Wilma Vida Burns, Eldoralynn Deaver, Milville Pierre Mottet, Maxine Neva Jones, Imogene Eva Jones, and Iris La Fern Waldron. The baptismal service was well planned and beautifully and reverently carried out. The confirmation preceded the evening preaching service, the pastor being assisted by Elder Charles S. Warren, of Independence, Missouri, and Elder F. L. Freeman. Then Elder Warren preached an instructive sermon.

Sister Hettie Sutherland has recently been chosen branch solicitor by the district bishop's agent. She is entering this work with enthusiasm.

The pastor is conducting a class in "Church Objectives" on Thursday evening of each week. Thirty-four have enrolled in this class, and though its first meeting night was quite rainy, nineteen braved the storm and gave good attention.

Kansas City Stake

The sacrifice drive which for some time has held the attention of Kansas City Stake, ended Sunday evening when the offering was collected in the fourteen local churches.

Central Church

The ministry of the stake met on the afternoon of June 12, to discuss the organizing of the forces of the stake for the special drive preceding Sacrifice Week. The task of making a personal visit to each member of the stake was well worked out.

In recent weeks the speaking force of the stake has been augmented by President F. M. McDowell who addressed Saints at Central Church June 19, at Fourth Church, June 21, and at Grandview, June 23. His help was much appreciated.

The women of Central Church made memorable their last church dinner of the season, June 24, by handing to the stake bishop, Brother C. A. Skinner, a check for $1,576.35, their sacrifice offering. This sum was accumulated during the course of many months as the result of sacrifice measures and earnings of the housewives and business women of the church. An account of the hundreds of ways in which these thoughtful sisters saved and helped to gather together this large offering, would be most interesting. Central Church is proud of the spirit of sacrifice which has touched its women. Sister Mary Moats is president of this group.

Argentine Church

Bishop R. T. Cooper, of Independence, Missouri, gave the sermon for the church school at eleven o'clock June 19, introducing some needed instruction in regard to the principles of our faith. This was much appreciated.

Speakers for June 19, were Elder Daniel P. Cooper, in the morning, and Elder W. S. Brown in the evening.

On the closing day of Sacrifice Week Brother William Fox was the morning speaker, and in the evening Bishop C. A. Skinner called to mind many instances of sacrifice on the part of early Saints who gave all they had, some of them their lives, for the glorious latter-day cause. For a text he chose Romans 12: 1.

Second Church

In this small congregation a faithful few are very much alive in the gospel and are enjoying the Spirit of the heavenly Father, especially at their prayer meetings.

On Children's Day two boys were baptized by Brother P. J. Raw, one his grandson, Patrick J. Raw, the other, Wilford D. Evans. Sister Mildred Lungwitz arranged a good program at the church for both Mother's Day and Children's Day.

The O. B. K. Class meets the last Sunday of each month.

Recent speakers have been E. W. Lloyd, E. S. Zink, P. J. Raw, W. S. Brown, C. E. Wight, O. G. Helm, and F. A. Evans.

A little son, Robert Lazelle, was born to Brother and Sister Claude H. Anderson, May 29. Sister Anderson was formerly Leona Sherman and her home is in Chicago.

Sister Mary Pickett, seventy-two years old, passed away June 10.

Two marriages have occurred in this congregation in late weeks, Sister Anna M. Myers became the bride of John E. Valear April 21, and Lavina Kiso was married to Harry Stimson June 1, Pastor F. A. Evans officiating.

Bennington Church

Recently Elder Joseph Curtis, associate pastor, and Sister Curtis celebrated their fortieth wedding anniversary with their entire family of five boys and three girls and their husbands and wives and twelve grandchildren. They reenacted the wedding ceremony of forty years ago, Elder Orville Helm officiating. A banquet dinner was given in their honor by the Haita Club at the home of their youngest daughter, Mrs. Bert Canterbury, on the following evening.

Mount Washington Church

"The Open Door" was the theme for the worship service during June, and Sister Lois Gibson conducted this period.

The pastor was in charge of the June sacrament service, being assisted by R. L. Bishop and the local priesthood. Stake Missionary J. Charles May gave some timely remarks, and a fine spirit was felt. Brother May was the evening speaker.

The adult and young people's divisions met with the children's division in the worship program June 12. At this time five children were baptized by Pastor Bolinger. The decorating committee was commended for the beautiful treatment it gave the baptismal font. During the eleven o'clock hour the upper auditorium was the scene of the confirmation service. Those officiating were Elders Herbert Gould, T. C. Lentell, and W. F. Bolinger.

The young people began Sunday, June 19, with an early morning prayer service the theme of which was "Our Loyalties." President Floyd McDowell was present and gave a fine talk. Brother Will Gould spoke sincerely and interestingly on the theme, after which several expressed their desires to put first things first.

Brother Herbert Gould was the morning speaker that day, and his theme was "The Privilege of Sacrifice." Sister Trego, a World War mother, gave the members of the church as well as many nonmembers a treat in the evening by showing them pictures she secured on her trip to France with a group of World War mothers. Her lecture was helpful.

Elder C. E. Wight was the speaker for the young people at their prayer service early June 26, and an active meeting followed his talk.

"Sacrifice" was the theme of the eleven o'clock hour, and the topic of the pastor's sermon was, "The Gospel Is True."

That evening the Aeolian Chorus gave a pleasing musical program, which was followed by a discourse from Brother Orville Helm, pastor of Bennington Heights Church.

The young people are planning a picnic party for July 4.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

An inspirational program of which local members are proud, was rendered the morning of June 12, under the theme, "Zion Redeemed." Sisters Margaret McMillen and Marie Graff sang "Hope of Zion," and in the prologue Nettie Bigler quoted several prophecies from the Book of Mormon and gave sketches of the lives of the three Presidents of the church. A pantomime of the hymn, "Puritan," accompanied by a quartet, was most effective, and a dramatic story of church history, presenting scenes in the early life of Joseph Smith the Martyr, gripped the attention of the congregation. At the close, Sister Anna Cramer gave as a reading the words of the hymn written by President Frederick M. Smith, "Zion, the Beautiful Beckons Us On," and the congregation sang "Consecration." Jane Robson played as a saxophone solo, "Glorious Things Are Sung of Zion." Sisters Bigler and Cramer deserve the credit for this program. They are students of the Book of Mormon, and worked untiringly to present the program. Many in the congregation testified of the presence of the Holy Spirit at the meeting, and all were happy. Zion should indeed beckon the Saints on, and New Philadelphia members ask the prayers of their brothers and sisters, that they will be faithful to the end.

The funeral of Walter F. Williams, twenty-one years of age and a nonmember, was conducted at the church. The young man was killed in a motorcycle accident June 1. He, with his mother, brother, and sister, had been a regular attendant at the church school. Elder William Goudy was in charge and preached the funeral sermon. Interment was made in East Avenue Cemetery.

A volunteer choir will participate in the services of Kirtland reunion in August, and New Philadelphia singers are now holding rehearsals on reunion songs, under the direction of Samuel B. Mansell.

The adult members were entertained on a recent Friday evening by the young people's department. A varied program was given and refreshments were served. The young people enjoyed a swimming party at the Dover Y. M. C. A., April 25.

Southern Wisconsin Conference

The semiannual conference of Southern Wisconsin District was held at Lancaster, June 18 and 19. A preconference sermon was given Friday evening by Elder J. E. Vanderwood, the discourse being based on texts from Doctrine and Covenants.

Saturday morning at ten o'clock class work opened, the first part of the hour being conducted by Bishop C. J. Hunt on the theme, "The Contribution of the Church to the World," the second part by Elder J. E. Vanderwood, on "The Meaning of Sacrifice."

An organization meeting was had at two o'clock in the afternoon. Since Apostle J. F. Garver was unable to be present until evening, business was postponed until then. Round table talks began at two thirty, speeches being made by Bishop Hunt, retiring bishop of the district; Lee Root, new bishop's agent; Harry Wasson, director of Religious Education; J. E. Vanderwood, new missionary of the district, and George Noble, associate president.

Prayer by Apostle J. F. Garver opened the eight o'clock business meeting. The report of Bishop Hunt was read, and a rising vote of thanks for his services was extended to him by the district. The appointment of Lee Root as bishop's agent for the district was approved. A communication from Phillip Davenport, president of Soldiers Grove Branch, regarding the proposed sale of Bell Center Church building, was read and accepted.

Brother Henry Woodstock was elected district president, to fill the vacancy made by Brother Leonard Houghton's resignation. For associates he chose Brothers George Noble and Harry Wasson.

After the transaction of business, Apostle Garver gave a short sermon.

Early Sunday morning a very spiritual prayer meeting was held. The nine forty-five church school was conducted by directors of Religious Education. The school was divided into three classes. Elder Vanderwood taught the adult class, Nora Root, juniors, and Sister Erne Edwards, beginners. A brief talk on the ideal of the church school was given at the close of the session by Harry Wasson.

"Who will go?" was the text of Apostle Garver's morning sermon. The choir gave special selections, some of its members being soloists. At the close of the sermon an offering of eighteen dollars was taken to defray the expenses of the conference. Then a plate dinner was served at the hall by women of Lancaster Branch.

In the afternoon Elder Vanderwood delivered a sermon, and the conference adjourned subject to the call of the presidency. This was a fine gathering, a spiritual feast to all present. Branches represented were Madison, Evansville, Janesville, and Soldiers Grove.

Shidler, Oklahoma

The Saints are responding to the call of the sacrifice period in a commendable manner.

A Children's Day program was given June 19, which was well attended and much enjoyed. It was followed by a community dinner. Then at three o'clock came a beautiful baptismal and confirmation service. Fourteen were inducted into the kingdom, eleven children and three adults. The services were conducted by local priesthood.

June 1, the members were happy to have here Elders F. Ed. Dillon and J. E. Lancaster, district officers, and Apostle Roy S. Budd, who preached an inspiring and helpful sermon, leaving the congregation with renewed courage to do their bit for the latter-day cause.

Independence

A meeting of officers and teachers of the children's division of Religious Education in Independence, held in the young people's room Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, was well attended. Elder D. S. McNamara, director of Religious Education in the center place, was in charge, and Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of the general department, was present to assist with ideas and suggestions. Considerable discussion of study materials and projects for the year to come was had at this session.

A similar meeting of officers and teachers of the adult division convened at the Y. K. T. room Monday evening at eight o'clock, plans being formulated to more definitely organize the work of this part of the church school.

The Young People's Council of Independence will sponsor a trip to Marshall, Missouri, July 10. All who plan to go with the caravan of cars are to meet at the Auditorium at 7.30 a. m. with basket lunches. The travelers will return home at 4 p. m. This is one of a series of summer events sponsored by the council.

Stone Church

The thought and effort of several hundred Saints in the Stone Church, during Sacrifice Week, reached culmination in a beautiful service Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, a service witnessed by a large number of people whose countenances showed deep interest and concern.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied by Robert Miller, sang two anthems, "More Love to Thee," and "Turn Ye Even Unto Me," soloists being Nina Grenwalt Smith, soprano, and Velma Brocaw Nunn, contralto. For a scripture lesson Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp read from Doctrine and Covenants 59. Then Miss Anita May, daughter of Missionary J. Charles May, told the story of the church in the South Sea Islands. She described in simple, touching language some of the sacrifices of missionaries to those islands, Glauod Rodger, Charles Wandell, Joseph and Emma Burton, Brother and Sister Charles Lake, Brother Clyde F. Ellis, and others including her own parents. Anita was born at Papeete, Tahiti, while her parents were on a long mission in the islands. A solo by Brother Colin Ferrett, the young Australian bass soloist, was much appreciated.

"The church needs Saints upon whom it can depend," stirringly declared Pastor John F. Sheehy in his sermon on sacrifice, "Men and women willing to sacrifice until every missionary who has been released can be put to work again." He made very forceful and appealing the sacrifices of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and of Emma Smith. His talk was a challenge to all who believe in the restored gospel to lend their aid and support and love to the church in its present crisis.

After the sacrifice offering was collected by the deacons, Bishop G. L. DeLapp offered a special prayer of blessing upon it and the church.

Again rainy weather made it necessary for the Sunday evening Campus-scheduled union service to be held at the Stone Church, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards addressed the Saints on the theme, "The Church's One Foundation." This was the second sermon to be based on famous hymns, and both speaker and congregation are finding a wealth of inspiration in them.

Group eight misses the cheerful and helpful presence of Brother and Sister Charles E. Sterrett, long-time residents of Independence. They have gone to Detroit for a year, to be with relatives. A farewell party was given them by the women of the group the evening of June 13. Fifty-six were present to say good-bye and wish this worthy pair Godspeed.

Englewood Church

Children's Day was another outstanding Sunday for Englewood. A feeling of deep reverence fell upon all who entered the door of the little church home. At the close of the lesson period of the church school, the primaries were ushered to the front row of seats to witness the baptism of eleven of the older children of their department. This was also Decision Day.

Flower decorations about the baptism font made a fitting setting for the ceremony, and the candidates to be baptized followed ten members of the priesthood to the platform. The officiating elders were Perry Hiles, A. G. Hougas, and D. S. McNamara, and the candidates for baptism were Adrie Hougas, Kenneth Stobaugh, Charles Moore, Eugene Alma Wilcox, George Kenneth Willis, Imogene Petentler, Barbara Long, Patty Donaldson, Betty Jean Sheldon, and Norma Dean Sheldon.

Elder Earl Moore addressed the congregation while the children were changing for the confirmation service. Music was in charge of the chorister, Pauline James Arnson, assisted by Dorothy Koehler Waters at the organ. Then the members of the priesthood confirmed the boys and girls. The entire service was most impressive.

A program by the children's division in charge of Mrs. Lyman Fike, the primary superintendent, was given in the evening.

A "surprise" was given Pauline James Arnson, the faithful chorister, June 16, when the women's department and the Friendly Circle took advantage of the choir's social evening on the lawn of Brother and Sister Earl Moore, and presented her a beautiful quilt and a "friendship" flower pot. A large number were present to enjoy the fun of the evening, the surprise, and the supper of hamburgers and wieners and their "trimmings." Sister Arnson is a member of the Stone Church Choir, but for many months now, she has been directing the music in this congregation. Her services are much appreciated.

The Dramatic Class held its first birthday anniversary at the home of Mrs. Earl Moore last week. As a special treat Mrs. Elma Eaton gave a review of "The Barretts of Mimpole Street," by Rudolph Besier. Mrs. JoZelma Taylor, teacher of the class, has made plans for the summer's work; the class will take no vacation.

Englewood recently sustained a loss when the family of Brother Lyman Fike moved to Mount Washington. Sister Fike has been the primary superintendent for six years, and the three boys, Wallace, Melvin, and Elmer, played the oboe, slide trombone, and clarinet in the orchestra. They have attended Englewood Church for nine years. Wallace Fike is still meeting with this congregation, and the choir has the help of his rich bass voice. He is a dependable choir member. Irene, eldest daughter of Brother and Sister Fike, was a valuable helper in the music of the branch until her marriage at Easter to Brother Paul Gould who took her to their new home in Cleveland, Ohio. Irene was the church school chorister at the time of her marriage, and Dorothy Koehler Waters was elected to fill the unexpired term.

Last Sunday Pastor Perry Hiles was the morning speaker. Since this was the closing day of Sacrifice Week, his theme was "Sacrifice."

In the afternoon a workers' council was conducted by the pastor and his assistant, and some helpful changes were discussed and passed upon.

Enjoy Gift of Tongues

Alpena, Michigan.—A new experience was had by local members the other night when, in the midst of a cottage meeting, the branch teacher arose and read the scripture lesson from the thirty-second section of the Doctrine and Covenants in tongues. Everyone was greatly impressed. The local group often experiences the gifts of the gospel, and have been promised in these gifts that a greater work is to be done in the future than has been accomplished in the past. Individual members have also been given this assurance. They are, therefore, looking with faith into the future.

London, Ontario

This branch has had a number of visiting members in the past month, some coming from Stratford and others from Detroit.

The church school observed Children's Day June 12, a large number enjoying the splendid program presented by the junior division in charge of Sister Grace Perry and the adult school in charge of Brother Fred Heddington. Elder Frank Gray, church school director, assisted by other workers, decorated the baptismal font and platform with flowers and vines and crepe paper work. Three junior pupils were baptized prior to the program. Elders MacGregor, Gray, and Winegarden officiated. Sister Winegarden's class and Sister Mitchell's class took part in the junior department program, and Helen Mills and the Neal brothers in the adult program. The confirmation service finished the activities of the church schools.

In the evening the Young Men's Bible Class had charge of the service, Elder Percy Farrow being the speaker. The singing of the young men was favorably commented upon.

We are pleased to see Bruce MacGregor, a junior school member, around again after a severe attack of the flu.

The attendance at the Friday night church school has increased of late. The meetings are interesting and educational with the lectures on health given by Doctor Campbell, Orlo Dent, and Raymond Sinclair, medical students and members of the school.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs

This group is still active in carrying on the gospel work at Blue Springs.

Sister Emily Raschke and Winfred Robinson were married April 30, I. M. Smith officiating.

Sacrament service May 1, was well attended and a spiritual meeting. Gladys Amelia, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Alfred Johnson, was blessed by Elders O. W. Sarratt and R. J. Stark.

In the evening Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra were missionary guests. Brother Veenstra's sermon, Sister Veenstra's testimony, and their music were much enjoyed.

A Mother's Day program was given at the morning service May 8, and Brother John Stowell was the evening speaker. Brother B. J. Scott, of Independence, occupied the evening hour, May 15, and on the following Sunday Bishop J. A. Koehler preached morning and evening. Two other speakers of the last month whose messages were most helpful were H. A. Higgins and W. H. Hattey.

The branch business meeting was held May 6, in charge of Brothers W. S. Macrae and F. A. McWethy, and the following officers were elected: Pastor, O. W. Sarratt; church school director, R. J. Stark; music director, Flossie Tomlinson; branch clerk, Gerald Phillips; solicitor, W. E. Oglevie, and treasurer, Gerald Phillips.

Marshall

Elder G. R. Wells, again appointed to Holden Stake, has been helping at Marshall during the past several weeks. In the last three years he was given pastoral responsibility at Lees Summit, Grandview, Warrensburg, and Knobnoster, but this year he is to be free from direct pastoral charge. He is still an interested worker, however, because he is a member of the stake high council and as such finds it necessary to be acquainted with branch conditions. Besides preaching at Marshall, he has assisted local officers with branch visiting, corrected branch records, and made a card index of the Saints, in convenient form for the pastor to carry.

Harmony marked the Children's Day exercises. Much credit is due the musical leaders for the way they trained the children. There was a variety of musical numbers. Sister Dixie Spohrer, chorister, gave a reading accompanied by the pianist, Frankie Thayer. Brother G. R. Wells delivered a fitting talk in the form of a Bible story. It was impressive. Roses, lilies, and other flowers decorated the platform, and Brother Harold Thayer compared the children to the flowers, speaking of the responsibilities of parents in cultivating these buds of promise. He then pronounced the benediction.

The attendance contest ended in a picnic in the basement of the church after the church school. The picnickers had been invited to the farm home of Sister Marion Terrell, but rain prevented their taking this trip. Since it was Father's Day, Brother Wells gave a fitting talk for the fathers.

Among the seventy-one graduates at Marshall High School this year was Sister Frankie Thayer, daughter of Brother and Sister Harold Thayer.

Iowa City, Iowa

The summer group of students at the University of Iowa numbers about fifty-five. During the first term of the summer session this group is presenting a series of Edward Partridge lectures at the Iowa Memorial Union conference room at seven o'clock each Sunday evening. Elder John Blackmore began the series Sunday night, June 19, with the theme, "Biblical Interpretations of Life." Bishop Edward Partridge was presented as leader of the Colesville Branch, the first settlement in the land of Zion, a man who stood for a combination of religious fervor with intelligence, and intellectual training. The Colesville group erected its first building in Missouri for both a church and a schoolhouse.

Other themes and speakers included in this series are as follows: "A Scientist's Interpretation of Life," Doctor Lee Edward Travis; "An Educator's Interpretation of Life," A. R. Gilbert; "A Minister's Interpretation of Life," Doctor F. M. McDowell; "A Father's Interpretation of Life," Doctor Lonzo Jones. The group hopes that a series of this kind will be carried on from year to year in Iowa City.

Sylvania, Ohio

The Northwestern Ohio District one-day meeting was held in this branch Sunday, June 19. District President E. L. Ulrich and F. L. Clark, district director of Religious Education, were in charge of the services of the day. "Service" was the theme. The church school commenced at nine thirty, Elder W. S. Hettrick giving the adult sermon and Elder E. L. Ulrich, the junior sermon. Both discourses were of uplifting nature. At noon a basket lunch was served in the basement, and at two o'clock another service opened at which ten-minute talks were given by Elders W. G. Kimball, W. R. Wirebaugh, R. F. Slye, C. Brough, and E. L. Ulrich on the theme, "Service" These talks presented to the one hundred and forty Saints present the many different ways in which we can be of service to God and his church. The members were blessed spiritually to the enlightenment of all.

Missionary J. G. Halb is holding a series of meetings, commencing June 24. He opened the activities of the year with another missionary series, the first conducted at Sylvania for some time. Attendance was fairly good, mostly Saints being present.

During the month of March local members were busy raising the church building and excavating the basement for the junior church school. Other improvements have added to the value and appearance of the building.

Elder W. M. Grice was here the first week in May and held a week's services with good attendance. One was baptized previous to his coming.

Brother Hettrick, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Brother Wirebaugh, of Bradner, Ohio, have been here at different times, and their help has been much appreciated.

Chicago, Illinois

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

June 19, Elder H. P. W. Keir chose for his text, Hagai 1: 5: "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways." Brother Art Sherman sang, "Open the Gates of the Temple," and Brother Floyd McNickels played the organ. This day began Sacrifice Week.

The women have been meeting each Thursday for weeks past, quilting for each other. One hour in the afternoon is spent with the Bible class, Sister Warren, teacher.

A picnic has been planned for July 4, by the Sunday school. Early in March Central Saints were encouraged by the week of services conducted by Elder Roscoe Davey. Though the weather was cold, a fair attendance was had. Easter was observed with a pageant by the church school, "Easter Triumph," a sermon, and special music by the choir.

On April 26, Brother Keir preached the funeral sermon of Sister Alta McNickels. Sad, indeed, is the passing of this young mother, and the heart-felt sympathy of the Saints goes to her loved ones.

Mother's Day was observed with a sermon by Brother Keir and appropriate music by choir and soloists. Red and white roses were beautiful.

This spring the branch has had to part with five families of members. Brother and Sister Schmidt and son were tendered a farewell the evening of April 26. Games, conversation, and a short speech by Brother Keir characterized the evening, and a purse was presented the family. Brother and Sister Joe Smart and children have returned to Canada. Brother Ray Hurst and family have gone East. Others who are gone are Sister McCabe and children, Brother William Cochran and family, and Sister Rose Millman and sister. Thus have the local ranks grown smaller. Those who are gone will be missed, for they are workers.

After General Conference, Elder Roscoe Davey brought new courage to Chicago's South Side. He presented an interesting account of the good times had at conference and the membership rejoiced with him.

May 15, Allen McPeak and Ruth Sevy were married by the bridegroom's father. They are taking a trip West and upon returning will live at the home of the bride's sister, Sister Horr. Best wishes are extended to Brother and Sister McPeak.

This congregation has of late been favored with some splendid sermons. Patriarch F. A. Smith was here and preached. During his stays some of the young people received their patriarchal blessings.

Children's Day was observed with a program. Wild and garden flowers, children's voices raised in song, colored lights, and singing birds made a most enjoyable time. Each department of the church school was represented. Sisters Lela Eskridge, Lucille Olliver, Erma Sherman, and Eugene Horton were in charge.

At the following Wednesday evening service, six precious souls were baptized, James Miller, Donald Bennett, Jack Eskridge, Dick Keir, Charles McKay, and John Bradbrook. Brothers Keir and J. J. Olliver did the baptizing and Brothers Davey and Edstrom were in charge of the service. The confirmation followed the baptisms. A good service was enjoyed, and Brother Davey bore a strong testimony of what the latter day gospel had brought into his life.

The music department has greatly helped the services, and splendid individual work has been done by a number of the faithful musicians.

The young people recently gave a play at the church on two evenings, "An Old-fashioned Mother," Sister Tessie P. Wainwright directing. Proceeds went to the local funds. Music for the occasion was by Sister Eskridge and Sister Naomi West.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Keir are the parents of a son born June 15.

Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island, Canada

June 5, Brother Myley Sagle took a load of Saints from Little Current to Manitowaning in his open truck for an all-day meeting. Elder H. A. Dayton was in charge of the ten o'clock prayer meeting, and since this was the first Sunday of the month, sacrament was shared. The Holy Spirit was present. At eleven o'clock Elder J. H. Bond was the speaker, emphasizing the necessity of making right decisions. After the sermon, the Saints sought the shade of the maple trees in the yard to eat lunch. Elder H. A. Dayton preached at three o'clock in the afternoon, telling of the actions of conference and the good accomplished there.

Local members hope that the meetings may continue and that much good shall be accomplished by them. They wish to remain steadfast and obedient to the commandments of the divine law.

Holdenville, Oklahoma

The Lord is mindful of his people, especially those who are hungering and thirsting for righteousness. He surely was mindful of those at Holdenville when the way was opened up a short time ago for a visit from Apostle Roy S. Budd and Elders J. E. Lancaster and F. Ed. Dillon.

A large crowd consisting of members and nonmembers gathered at the church on Saturday evening to receive such blessings as the Lord saw fit to give through the teachings of this trio of brothers. Members drove from Seminole, Wewoka, Tate Mountain, Weleetka, and Wetumka, to hear them.

By request of the congregation Brother Lancaster remained over Sunday, and the Saints heard three more wonderful discourses during his stay. His departure was regretted, but he left a promise to return in the near future.

Sunday, June 12, there were four baptisms. Two girls, nine and eleven years old, and two young men who have carefully investigated the latter day message and promise to be good workers.

After the visit of the missionaries, the Saints decided to begin their midweek prayer meetings. At the first meeting, the eleven-year-old girl bore her first testimony, telling how much she wanted to go the right way. Surely this is the Lord's way of beginning.

Holdenville members are striving to keep the work going in this region. They are hoping in the near future, to have a longer missionary meeting.

Western Michigan Conference

Surely, the spirit of the late General Conference has found its way to Michigan. The annual conference of Western Michigan District convened at Bendon, Saturday and Sunday, June 18 and 19.

Most of the branches of the district were well represented. From the opening meeting Saturday, which was a social meeting, until the closing preaching service Sunday night, the Spirit of God was the dominating power. During the business session not a dissenting note was sounded. The new missionary, Charles E. Harpe, was present and gave one of his inspiring sermons, which was appreciated by all. Sunday afternoon and evening were occupied by Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City, the afternoon sermon being preceded by a timely talk from the bishop's agent, Elder John Bennett, of Free Soil.

The theme of the two days seemed to be that of sacrifice, and all who expressed themselves, voiced a desire to do the best they could.

The officers who served last year were reelected, as follows: President, Elder Buell Shelly, with Elders John Randall and J. Cecil Doty as his counselors; Sister Mary Tubbs, of Free Soil, secretary, and B. H. Doty, musical director.

District members are hopeful that the spirit which prevailed during these two days may continue to be the power by which the work will be carried on. If it is, this district, with the rest of the church, will go "over the top" in the efforts to build Zion.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Calumet Branch has been active during the past weeks. Very few services have been missed, and those were because of bad weather, or some other unavoidable cause. The group has had one visiting elder in the recent past, Brother Lancaster, of Tulsa, Oklahoma. He delivered a remarkable sermon.

The first Sunday in June was rally day at Canton, Oklahoma, and seven Calumet young people motored to Canton to enjoy the services. There was a splendid attendance, and enthusiastic interest was shown.

Decision Day was a very busy one here. Following the regular church school session, there was a program given by the children and the young people. After a basket dinner came a short preaching service at one thirty, and the members went to the river where six people were baptized. Four of the candidates were young people: Mrs. Evelyn Schmoyer, Miss Ethel Owens, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Owens; and two were children, Ray Merit Walbaum and Carlus Crownover. In the evening, confirmation and preaching services were conducted. Special music, prepared for the occasion, was rendered by two groups of young people.

Spring River Young People

Joplin, Missouri.—Approximately one hundred and thirty young people of Spring River District gathered on the bank of Spring River at Forest Park, Thursday evening, June 16, for a wiener and marshmallow roast. An interesting program was given by Pittsburg people after which games were played and refreshments were eaten. The young people are endeavoring to hold these meetings once a month, and plan to scatter them over the district. The next gathering will be at the same place July 12, and will take the form of a watermelon feast.

This group has also carried out some dramatic work in a one-act play contest, and the plays were staged by the three winning contestants, Pittsburg, Kansas; Parsons, Kansas, and Cardin, Oklahoma, at the last district conference at Webb City, Missouri.

Joplin Branch young people held a prayer meeting June 12, which was well attended by the group. There were a number of testimonies and prayers. The theme was, "Seeing God, or Seeing the Beautiful." These prayer meetings will be held the third Sunday of each month.

Missionary Meetings in Medina and Bandera Hills

Medina, Texas.—J. W. A. Bailey and D. S. Palmer have just closed a ten-day meeting in the little chapel built and given to the church at Bandera, by Sister Virginia Hay, who when a girl was a member of the Lyman Wight Colony.

The house was full nearly every night. Communion service on Sunday was in charge of Elder Carl F. Wheeler. Sunday night was the last night and the house was full with a number on the outside.

Brother Bailey made many friends in this community, and the Saints hope to have him return soon. One was baptized and others are investigating and more friendly to the church.

Several county and district officers attended. On every side people were saying this series was the finest thing they had ever heard.

Sarnia, Ontario

The Chatham district institute and conference convened at Sarnia, June 18 and 19, with a record attendance. Out of the thirteen branches in the district eleven were represented, and visitors came from London and Eastern Michigan Districts.

The conference was opened by District Missionary D. J. Williams, and class work on "Family Evangelism," conducted by Apostle D. T. Williams, proved most interesting.

The main feature of Saturday evening's entertainment was a one-act comedy, "Crazy to Reduce," presented by the women of Sarnia Branch.

At the close of the Sunday afternoon service an ordination ceremony was held, and three young men were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood. These young men, if faithful, will be a power for good in their respective branches.

Children's Day was observed with the baptism of six children and a program by the boys and girls.

This branch has been operating under the new church school plan since the first of the year, and it is believed when the system is perfectly established, the efficiency of the branch will be increased.

Buchanan, Michigan

Sunday, June 19, one was added to the congregation here, a brother of Steven Martin, the worthy local deacon. The young candidate, John Martin, was made welcome in the local ranks, and it is believed, if he is faithful, he will some day be called to teach this gospel to the world. Brother Gross, of Shultz, Michigan, lately of Buchanan, was here for the baptismal service, and Brother J. W. McKnight, of Galien, assisted with the confirmation.

Sister Viola McCarty, nee Gross, was joined in wedlock to Brother George Seymour June 3. Peace and happiness along the way of life are wished for them by the branch members. Brother Seymour is the local priest, recently ordained.

Brother and Sister L. W. Johnson, Sister Sarah Most, Sister Claude Glover and husband, Claude Glover, attended the district conference at Lansing, June 12. They report a splendid spirit there.

Brother Gross moved to Battle Creek, or rather, that is his nearest branch for the present. He has work there. But he retains the pastorate here and hopes to return in the fall. The Saints will welcome them back.

Conditions here are not very encouraging due to the economic depression. Nevertheless, the Saints trust in and pray to the Lord, that he will come to the aid of all.

Nine Baptized at Vancleave, Mississippi

Nine candidates were baptized into the church on Children's Day in the little branch at Vancleave, Mississippi, a part of Mobile District. Brothers A. G. Miller and W. C. Yocum officiated.

For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother.—Jesus.

When we pray for any virtue, we should cultivate the virtue as well as pray for it; the form of your prayers should be the rule of your life; every petition to God is a precept to man.—Jeremy Taylor.

MISCELLANEOUS

Pastoral

To the Saints of Rock Island District, Greetings: I wish to express my appreciation to the Saints of this district for their kindness to me and for their response to the call of the church during Sacrifice Week, and now I ask the cooperation of all in the task that is yet ours during the remainder of the year. Missionary L. G. Holloway has gone to spend some time in Des Moines District, and I am left alone to represent the general church in this field for a time. During the months of July, August, and September, I should like to spend my time in missionary work, except where the interests of the local work demand my attention. My first missionary effort will be at Galesburg, beginning Sunday night, June 26, and from there I shall be ready to go to other places when a special series of meetings is desired. Will branch presidents kindly send me word as to their desires in this connection, and let me remind you that if each branch attempts to choose the time of year when the weather is most suitable, that all will want meetings about the same time. Some will have to choose the warmer months and some the colder months of the year if all are to be supplied. Please inform me as to your needs, and I shall try to supply these needs as conveniently as possible for all concerned. Write me without delay so I can arrange my program in advance. Will branch presidents and church school directors, kindly send me their quarterly reports at the close of the quarter? Let me suggest that the members of the priesthood obtain copies of the new Priesthood Manual from the Herald Publishing House for careful study as to priesthood duties and responsibilities. The price is forty-five cents. This work should be used as a study text in local priesthood meetings. In all lines of work, efficiency is the call of the hour; as ministers for Christ, we must become efficient if we are to carry forward the Lord's work to meet the call of this age. Great opportunities are before the church, which demand qualification, willingness, and consecration on the part of all. My field address is 2325 Twenty-third Avenue, Moline, Illinois. In cases of emergency call Moline 1848, or Moline 3137. Let us all labor together to make the last half of 1932 the best half of the year, in advancing the Lord's work.—E. R. Davis, district president.

Counselor to District President Chosen

During the Toronto district convention, only one counselor was chosen in the district presidency. This notice will inform the Saints of Toronto District that Elder Duncan Clatworthy, of Ridgetown, Ontario, has now been chosen to fill the vacancy in the district presidency, and that he is recommended to all concerned as a worthy elder who is well qualified to fill this place.—James A. Wilson, district president.

Reunion Notices

Toronto district reunion will convene at Lowbanks, Ontario, July 23 to August 8. We are pleased to announce that Apostle D. T. Williams, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, and Elders William I. Fligg, Percy Farrow, and Grant St. John, of the general church, together with other leading speakers will be present. We have reduced the prices of tents to two dollars per week and board to four dollars and fifty cents per week. Come and spend a week or two on the shore of Lake Erie, and hear these general church officers.—J. L. Prentice, secretary-treasurer.

Notice of Silence

Brother Max Beebe, of Utleyville, Colorado, priest, having refused to surrender his license upon request of the district president, notice is hereby given that the said brother has been placed under official silence and is not authorized to act in the office of priest until this silence is revoked.—

Glaude A. Smith, district president, Eastern Colorado District.

New Addresses

At the age of eleven years he was baptized and confirmed in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In 1919 when Fayette County's first Dairy Calf Club was organized, he became a member and continued his membership until 1929. During this he won many medals and honors in judging and showmanship as well as on his cattle. Through his club work he was awarded trips to Detroit, Michigan; Memphis, Tennessee, and Saint Louis, Missouri. After his graduation from high school he helped his father with the work on the farm where he was born and lived his entire life. Rex had a sunny disposition, was cheerful happy and contented, and enjoyed the association with friends and loved ones. He had planned going West for a trip soon, but for the past three weeks had been suffering with a wisdom tooth which he had extracted Saturday, June 11. The strain and nervous shock were too great. He passed away suddenly a few hours later. Besides his parents he leaves three sisters, Wanita and Myrna, at home, and Mrs. Gladys McMillan, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, other relatives, and a host of friends. The funeral was in charge of George McFarlane, from the Union church. Interment was in Union Church Cemetery, the sermon being by E. R. Davis.

Letters to the Editor

Anxious Times

The frailty of man is very apparent. It is so easy to neglect to do first things first. We always think of doing these things at some future time, fully complying with the law, and hope, in the meantime, that the Lord will continue to bless, knowing if he does, that the blessings are undeserved.

Satan and his forces are ever alert to gain the attention of God's people, and draw them from the path of duty; he wants them to lose sight of their goal. Once they lose the missionary spirit, they are nothing short of dangerous ground. Discouragement is his satanic majesty's best tool. Not long ago I read the story of Satan having a sale of his wares. On Discouragement he put the very highest price for very good and sufficient reasons. So many varied excuses are offered—buried in debt, people not interested in the gospel message, our own church folks not abreast of the times, not examples to others, and a hundred others.

The sacrifice period is upon us. Let us do our best, and that is hardly good enough for the work we claim to love. These are anxious times. Business in this region is at its lowest ebb, and this makes it necessary for our people to exercise considerable faith regarding future months. Thus far we have not wanted for necessities, and the Lord will let none of his people suffer if they put their trust in Him. What a pity we, as a people, are not better prepared for this situation and able to bring more cheer to the world generally! May the Almighty forgive us for our failure, and help us in the future to do more toward the redemption of Zion.

MARY MESLE.

Looking for Faults

Many persons spend a great deal of time watching to find faults in others. They are looking for evil, rather than for good. Such a mental attitude has a tendency to keep evil active in their own lives, although they may expect to find it only in others. It is not important whether or not they voice their accusations; the influence upon their own lives comes from the attitude of mind that causes them secretly to hope for faults in others.

One who is conscious of his own need to put forth his highest endeavors has no time to look for faults of which he may accuse others. He concentrates upon the good in all, and brings it into expression by his recognition of it.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

The Victory Beyond

The first news to come in concerning the results of Sacrifice Week, has been good news. The reports are incomplete, and it will be a little time before an official statement can be made. But the first indications are that the people are sincerely devoted to the church, and that they are willing to give to the limit of their power.

What happiness it brings, at a time when difficulties confront the church, and the faith, loyalty, and friendship of the people are tested severely, to realize that our people are possessed of spiritual resources that are not to be broken by even the bitter trials that have come to them.

The Scripture tells us how the little band of disciples endured the venomous hatred of a dominant religious hierarchy, the brutal indifference of the Roman masters, persecution, and the crucifixion of One whom they had come to regard as the invincible Lord. But they had a faith that would not die; for they had seen a vision of that invisible world whose glories outshone all the splendor of earthly grandeur; they had witnessed the Power that held all creation in the hollow of its Hand. They measured the material world with the spiritual rule and found it little, and all the men that were in it little, when compared with the glory and power of the kingdom of God. Suffering temporary defeat, they had that wherewith they became victors over all their foes.

We have seen a great vision. Though our material world may come clattering down around us in ruins, we know that in the eternal order these are not the things that are ultimately important. We have that wherewith we may rise victorious over all defeats. But for the present we must follow in the bitter path that was trod by the disciples of Jesus. It is the price of the victory that lies beyond.

We can start from here on the road that leads to the kingdom of God.

I use the Scriptures, not as an arsenal, to be resorted to only for arms and weapons, but as a matchless temple, where I delight to contemplate the beauty, the symmetry, and the magnificence of the structure, and to increase my awe and excite my devotion to the Deity there preached and adored.—Boyle.

The Beautiful Work of Faith

The beautiful work of faith goes on. No matter what the perils of the time—the weakening of law, the faltering of justice, the disintegrating fiber of moral character, the growth of sectional and national bitterness and hatreds—the Spirit of God continues responding to the individual needs of the people who diligently seek Him.

Faith has its work. It is the initial step that frees the mind of the darkness of doubt, fear, and sin. It is a healer of both body and soul. It fortifies against the shocks and disappointments to which the conditions of life expose us. It is a strong defense in all times of trouble.

The work of faith is beautiful. To see how it aids in the restoration of physical power and health, of mental peace and serenity, of the calm contemplation of all things that enables one to master both self and environment, brings to us in accumulated power the testimony of the efficacy of the spiritual life.

All the Christian world is troubled. Power, wealth, influence—all that a world can offer it—have been tried and have been found in vain. Only faith is left. And faith, neglected for a while, is found at its usual work: helping, lifting, inspiring, building. Our faith is our precious possession.

Do some say that religion has failed? Religion has not failed. Prosperity and the benefits of the material world had nearly stifled faith, and religion was often pushed aside by other things. Now that those other things have failed, we have been driven back to religion and faith, which are strong as of old.

We, too, had been led astray. We, like others, had failed to distinguish between that faith which is the true heart of religion and those external accoutrements in which popular religion had been clothing itself. We, too, were disappointed when those external and unnecessary things were stripped from us.

The beautiful work of faith goes on. In humble homes and humble hearts it continues the loving ministry of the Spirit of God. Are we reaching for that faith? Or have we been reaching for something else?

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

The language of prayer should be simple and direct, yet dignified and elevated. Simplicity and directness are demanded by sincerity of worship, and something of elevation by the nature of God, to whom we go. Heart-felt adoration and desire can never dwell needlessly upon the language in the way of rhetorical finish or ornament.

This does not prevent the use of imagination in prayer, and the forms of highest beauty. Imagination must be used to break the dullness of worldly states and lead the soul to apprehend God. And strong feeling expresses itself in symbols of beauty. The Bible prayers are direct, but full of suggestion. And they sometimes take the forms of the highest poetry. But it does not follow that such language should be imitated. When a prosaic mind expresses itself thus, there is always the suspicion of artificiality; and better a thousand times that prayers be unadorned, even clumsy, than artificial. The garnishing of prayer with quotations from the poets and the hymn writers is a breach of literary taste as well as of religious propriety. . . . A child does not quote poetry when he talks confidentially to his father.—McFadyen, "The Prayers of the Bible."

The Proper Language of Prayer

The "You" Fault

I always receive a shock when I hear anybody, in public prayer, address God as "you." The speakers may not intend any lack of reverence, and often they are very humble and good people; but the use of this form of address conveys an impression of too much familiarity.

The visitor, especially the nonmember, is likely to think that the speaker uses such a form of address through ignorance; and that may cause a bad reflection on the church. Although our own people are likely to be lenient in their judgments, the practice is one that should be avoided.

Other people, even when they use the traditional terms, make mistakes in selecting the right ones. In the following paragraphs an attempt will be made to present the correct usage. The main trouble is that of selecting the right case of the pronoun.

"Thou" is for the nominative case, and therefore for the subject of the sentence. (Example: "Thou art all-powerful.") "These" is for the objective case, and therefore to be used as the object of transitive verbs and of prepositions. (Examples: "We worship thee," "We come to thee.") The possessive adjective "thy" should be used instead of the ordinary "your." (Example: "Give us thy Holy Spirit.")

Something About Verbs

For the verb "to be" here are the correct usages in prayer: "I am," "Thou art," "He is," for first, second, and third persons, singular, respectively. In the plurals we follow ordinary usage.

For many other verbs the archaic form of the language requires special endings in the singular number: for second person, —st, or —est; for third person, —th, or —eth. (Examples: Second person, "Thou comest," "Thou runnest"; third person, "He cometh," "He runneth.")

For the Good of the Work

Some people make countless errors without ever being aware of them. Consequently they never know the extent to which they prejudice the cause of the church in the opinions of nonmembers before they have heard the message. It is impossible to estimate how much carelessness and indifference hinder the work of the church and prevent its acceptance by the better-educated groups of people.

We must be willing to sacrifice for the good of the cause. That sacrifice includes the time necessary for the training required to perform an effective and worthy ministry. There is no basis for the assumption entertained by some people that God loves an ignorant better than an educated one; and nothing to prove that the ignorant man is more humble than others.

The simple rules given above are easy to master. All who take part in conducting worship services for the church should know them. It is necessary to the dignity and beauty of the services.

"Wonderful Experiences" for Apostle

J. A. Gillen

"Wonderful experiences have been mine in meeting with the people of this mission." These are the words with which Apostle James A. Gillen describes his six weeks of missionary work in the North Pacific Slope Mission to which he was assigned by General Conference.

At present Brother Gillen is working in Seattle Branch, but lately he has traveled and preached in Montana, met with members in Idaho, and visited the Saints at Portland, Oregon. He plans next to attend the reunion of Eastern Montana District, at Fairview, July 8, 9, and 10, where he will be one of the speakers.

Though the work is strenuous and his help is in great demand, Brother Gillen is feeling strong and well. His health is good. Cheer, vigor, and faith radiate from him, and daily his circle of friends, members and nonmembers, expands.

The new mission includes a wide territory—Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia, but Brother Gillen is accustomed to big assignments in the cause to which he is devoted.

Kimnor Klub Holds Debate

The Kimnor Klub of Balmain Branch, Rozelle, Sydney, Australia, presented a series of four debates on different phases of baptism during April and May. "Resolved That Baptism Is Essential to Salvation," was the opening topic, and the debates generated considerable interest not only among the Saints but also among their friends. The Kimnor Klub, which is the public speaking club of Balmain Branch, is composed of young workers whose ambition is to take the "t" out of "can't." The club motto is, "We learn to do by doing."

Canadian Young People Honor Mother

The hearts of mothers in Lowbanks Branch, Ontario, Canada, were gladdened when their sons and daughters presented a beautiful and an appropriate evening service on Mother's Day. The main feature of the evening was a pageant, "Mother," in the presentation of which stage setting and lights were ingeniously arranged to produce an effect modeled after James McNeill Whistler's famous painting, "Mother." Musical numbers, choruses and solos, were also greatly appreciated by a good crowd. The program was given by the young people's class.

This class of young people is alert to the needs of the branch and active in giving help in program, music, class work and other lines. Its services have made outstanding other special days of the year.

Kansas City Stake Raises $2,800 Sacrifice Money

A sum of about $2,800 is now in the hands of the Kansas City Stake bishop as a result of an intensive "Sacrifice" campaign conducted by the priesthood throughout the congregations of the stake. And money is still coming to the bishop. This is material evidence of the consecration and sacrifice of the people of this area.

For the last year the women of the stake have been actively sacrificing. At their annual jubilee dinner, June 24, their club handed the bishop a check for $1,576.35.

Eleven Baptized at Flint, Michigan

Eleven children were received into the fellowship of the church by baptism and confirmation, on Children's Day, June 12. These children had been prepared for membership in a special class conducted each Sunday morning over a period of three months.

Elder Arthur Oakman in Bay Cities

Saints of the Bay Cities, California, have welcomed Elder Arthur Oakman, general church appointee, and he is proving a valiant helper. Twice recently he has preached at the San Francisco church on Danvers Street, making his meetings doubly enjoyable by preceding his sermons with a vocal solo. His rich baritone voice is much appreciated.

Brother Oakman was assigned Northern California District as his mission by the late General Conference, with the Bay Cities as his objective. Previous to that time he was missionary to Saint Louis District, and had also done missionary work in Kansas City Stake. About four years ago this young minister came to America from his home in Enfield, England, to attend Graceland College. He is widely known in musical circles in this country, having sung in two conference oratorios besides doing considerable individual solo work.

Reflections

We know a charming little lady that recently went to the Sanitarium for a serious operation. If she did any weeping or moaning, she must have done it in private, for no one saw her shed any tears of self-pity.

The operation, to the delight of everyone, was a great success. Whether it was due to the skill of the doctors, or to the prayers of her friends, or to her courage and obedience, or to all three, no one is able to say. So the honors are distributed.

A few days after the operation she is sitting up in bed, entertaining the doctors and nurses with little stories and poems, and radiating a spirit of good cheer and kindness that touches everybody near her.

A noble and gallant soul!

A writer in the International Journal of Religious Education says: "The average man craves help and guidance in the temptations and perplexities of commonplace living."

That is just the trouble with the average man: always more interested in his temptations than his opportunities, always walking around the slippery places to see if somebody won't trip him or push him in. He'll talk all night about his weaknesses, but go to sleep if you try to tell him how to overcome them.

Of course, no one will admit being an average man.

A letter from F. S. P. says: "I know a barnyard mystic who told me the other day that the way to grow cabbages was to get your spirit in tune with the spirit of the cabbage, as you hoed it, and it would grow for us. But who wants to have a spirit like a cabbage?"—Shame on you, F. S. P.

When a man starts out by telling you, "Of course, I don't want to——" you know that is the very thing he is going to do. It is the usual introduction for gossip, complaints, back-biting, and many of the other things that people ought to be careful about.

Honesty is a delicate thing: it does not bear over-much talking about. What has become of that genial tribe of swindlers and liars that used to call themselves, "Honest John" Something-or-other? The tribe is not dead, but they go by a different name nowadays.

An old friend dropped into the office the other day and told an interesting story. A Mr. X came to this friend to borrow money. Mr. X delivered a thirty-minute oration on how honest he was. My

Our Task

The Christian Ministry

ITS ENRICHMENT

By John W. Rushton

The Evolution of the Church and the Ministry

The growth of institutional religion in organization and the development of the priesthood must be considered in order to understand the meaning of this article. A critical study of the New Testament will show that the Christian church did not come into being fully and perfectly organized at the commencement. The saying of Jesus recorded by Saint Matthew—"I will build my church" (16: 18)—was a promise and not a declaration of a fact accomplished. In this quotation the word "church" does not have the content which it possesses today: It meant an assembly or association of persons drawn together by a mutual recognition and appreciation of God's will and purpose being revealed in and expressed through Jesus Christ. It was not until this fundamental qualification was in evidence, as was witnessed by Saint Peter's response to the Lord's questioning, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," that the idea of the "church" was introduced. The ecclesiastical institution with its graduated priesthood and ritualism which we know today was a slow and gradual development requiring time and experience.

The Different Kinds of Ministry

The ministry of Christ was almost entirely evangelical, being concerned with propaganda the central theme of which was the nearness of the kingdom of God and the need of preparation for that event. The consciousness that he was the looked-for Messiah and the Son of God was not because of any direct claims He made, but a conviction born of the experiences which the disciples had of His grace, power and the truth overwhelming them with cumulative assurance. After the death of Christ and the resurrection to which they gave enthusiastic witness this group of ordinary men began an intensified campaign and with flaming enthusiasm literally took the world for Christ. Their itinerary carried them to almost every part of the then known world the work of evangelization being augmented by the tremendous enterprise and zeal of Saint Paul as a result of which Gentiles and Jews of all nations and classes were gathered into the new movement making permanent organizations imperative. With the organization of local churches and congregations the demand for nurturing, teaching, educating and shepherding required another kind of ministry. So there grew up the twofold functioning of the Christian ministry; the missionary or evangelical and the local or pastoral.

The New Testament makes the division between the two easily identifiable. With the first the effort to win converts to Jesus Christ and his teachings together with the teaching that the apocalyptic Kingdom was about to be established, was paramount; with the second division, the need of culture in the practice of the Divine life, the solidifying of the converts into a definite institution, the disciplining of them in cooperative activity with loyalty to the Christian ethic was of the supremest importance. The one was devoted to the ministry of "witnessing," the other to the establishing of the church in the teachings of the apostles and the regulating of the affairs of life individually and communally.

Prophets and Priests

The study of comparative religion shows that men have always been conscious of their intimate relationship to Powers outside of themselves upon whom or which their welfare depended, leading to all kinds of cults which had for their end the placating their displeasure or winning their favor. Gradually, for some reason or other, (probably because the mass did not have the time to devote to the matter or because of the opportunity to exploit the situation), it became customary for some to claim and the rest to recognize that claim that they were upon more friendly terms or had some kind of access to the Divine which the others did not have, a hierarchy came into being. To this work of influencing the Gods on behalf of the mass certain ones dedicated themselves and were given special privileges, being considered on an equality with the chiefs or rulers, and at times even above them. As Carlyle says: "Mankind has always had priests, if not true ones, then false ones." The history of mankind is largely the account of man's efforts to "get right with his God."

The duties and functions of this class of men are readily classified under three heads as follows: sacrifice, which meant the doing or giving of something for the purpose of averting wrath or of winning approval of God for the people; intercession, which means that some priest stands between the people and their God as intermediary representing the people and their needs to God and of representing God in some definite response to the plea; and benediction, the giving of Divine favor, in blessing or comfort or guidance to the people. From out of these experiences there has developed the vast and varied forms of cults and worship which are inextricably bound up with the history of the race.

The two chief groups of such religious men concerned with these transactions between God and the people are "prophets" and "priests." Singularly these two orders are not always friendly to each other nor complementary in their work. Frequently they are antagonistic to each other and the success of the one means the decline of the other. According to the history of the Hebrews as recorded in the Bible, the prophet was seldom of the temple (only two of the prophets mentioned in the Old Testament are definitely catalogued as being priests, Samuel and Ezekiel). Jesus Christ is spoken of as being "prophet, priest and king."

The word prophet comes from the Hebrew N'abi which means "forth-teller." The word priest is from the Hebrew kohane meaning to "draw near." In Von Ogden Vogt's Art and Religion he says this: "Priests have always stood for order and stability, the maintenance of things as they are; prophets have always produced disorder and change and hoped for things as they should be. Priests are conservers and instructors; prophets are destructors and radicals." (Page 82.) "The priest teaches personal and individual matters; the prophet carries these up to some national or universal view for fresh examination and revision. The priest seeks the prevalence and power of present morals and customs as they are maintained by rites and forms; the prophet breaks present forms to lay foundations for a better morality that shall be. The priest relies upon some ancient sanction for his sacred authority; the prophet claims the authority of immediate inspiration." (Page 83.)

I once heard Doctor H. L. Willetts of University of Chicago say: "The prophet is the disturber of peace." By which he meant that the prophet declines to condition his life in and by the past and believes that the best is always to come. In this contrast between prophet and priest it is not intended to underestimate the work of one by the undue glorification of the other. As a matter of fact the ideal ministry should be a combination of both. Besides speaking of the work of the priest as being that of teaching, spiritual advising, pastoral, overseeing and of using the ritual and sacraments of the church as an artist to express the soul's quest for God, Vogt presents this as describing the work of the priest and church minister: "The work of the priest is a difficult one. He must take the new truths of the prophet and the great general principles laid down and he must study and apply them to particular conduct. He may tell the people just what the great principles mean in their homes, in their work, and in personal morals. He must say what is right and wrong in each special instance in such a way as to induce general agreement. The prophet disintegrates old standards; the priest must integrate new ones; and that is a very hard thing to do. It is disastrous to life to be all the while in a prophetic whirlwind. Society needs a hundred years or so of quietness and stability to make civilization possible." (Page 85.) But besides these priestly duties the modern minister owes it to the church and to society to cultivate the prophetic quality.

"The pastor of a modern church must be jealous of his work and word as a prophet, a severe and perilous calling. It is disastrous for religion if the voices of social justice, the prophetic demands for righteousness in all departments of life, be found chiefly outside rather than inside the institution of religion, and we are, alas, close to this disaster." (Art and Religion, page 89.) Perhaps enough has been said to indicate the high and holy functions of these two great departments of ministerial work. The prophet stands aloof from the world and is a strict individualist, communing with the unseen Reality, and as the mystic companion of God gathers the "hidden wisdom" bringing his message warm from the heart of the Eternal. The priest working with external things, through rites, symbols and sacraments seeks to convey the intangible, mystical values produced by the prophetic ministry, within the grasp of ordinary men; making current in common experience the values of the Divine. May we say, the prophet, possessing the gift of spiritual tongues speaks his message in the language of heaven, and the priest with the gift of interpretation takes that message and translates it through the symbolism of the church services into universal discourse.

The Significance of Ordination

While the minister must draw his inspiration from God and develop his power through the cultivation of "the Divine presence," being at once the "celebrant" and the "sacrifice," he also owes responsibility to men and women. As Carlyle has expressed it: "As priest or interpreter of the Holy is the noblest and highest of all, so is a sham priest the falsest and basest; neither is it doubtful that his canonicals, were they the Pope's tiaras will one day be torn from him, to make bandages for the wounds of mankind, or even to burn into tinder, for general scientific or culinary purposes." (Sartor Resartus, page 144.)

For practical purposes, the Christian minister is appointed to represent men and women and has their authority to serve them as teacher, shepherd and counselor in spiritual things and is entitled to their confidence, support and sympathy so long as he labors for their welfare "Godward."

Ordination does much for him. It symbolizes public assent to the inward urge which has prompted him to accept the "holy calling," it provides a field of service and opens a door of opportunity. But ordination will not remedy defects of character or undisciplined living, nor supply the lack of education. We repeat what we have said and written on other occasions: "While we reverently acknowledge the miracles of grace through inspired illiteracy, we still believe that the 'polished shaft' in the hands of God can achieve more and better service." None can be too good or too well trained for the Master's service. God can do more through inspired intelligence than through inspired ignorance. The ministerial "commission" can add nothing to personal qualifications, nor does it relieve the one ordained of the stern necessity of personal effort. The minister's competency and effectiveness will depend upon his knowledge of God and His ways with the sons of men, and that knowledge in his case as with professional men in other fields of human service, must depend upon his experience—in his case—with God. A minister can not tell what he does not know, nor do the things he has not learned. And much of this the minister must learn upon his knees. There must be the times of solitude, withdrawing from the multitudes to spend nights in communion with God to prepare himself for the actual conflict with the powers of earth and hell, for there are still many "devils" who go forth only through prayer and fasting.

The Ministerial Ideal

Always the minister must beware of substituting emotionalism and ecstasy for serious study, or allowing himself to think that sympathy and an easy sociability can do duty for careful thought and hard work. Having done all possible himself to prepare and qualify for his high duty, "he is then only ready for the Altar and awaits the fire from Heaven." Genuine consecration must characterize all the minister's work and with Saint Paul he must learn to say: "By manifestation of the truth I commend myself to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

To save himself from the dangers to which a constant intimacy exposes him the minister must keep his mind under strict and vigilant watch, being clean in thought, in word and action. No treachery can be quite so vile as that which uses the holy profession to gain the esteem and confidence of men and women to exploit such a treasure for nefarious ends.

Again we quote Thomas Carlyle: "Awake! Arise! Speak forth what is in thee; what God has given thee that the Devil shall not take away. Higher task than that of priesthood has God given to no man: wert thou but the meanest in that sacred hierarchy, is it not honor enough to spend and be spent therein?" (Sartor Resartus, page 122.)

In the light of these comments perhaps a new meaning can be found in the saying of the Master: "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." It is our great privilege to elevate him as the world's Savior, and he will be the Magnet winning all to his sovereign sway.

Make This a Year of Sacrifice

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

The special sacrifice period has drawn to a close. Many have answered to the call of the needs of the church.

The remainder of the year lies before us. What are we going to do with it.

Will the end of this special sacrifice period end our sacrifice for this work until another like period is called in the future?

These are questions well worth pondering over.

Let the year 1932 go down in the history of the church as a year of sacrifice—a year of self-denial for the good of this work that we are engaged in.

In Luke 9: 23, we have the words of Jesus. And He said unto them all, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me."

There is just one way to sacrifice that will bring us closer to our goal than any other year in the past century.

An exceedingly great per cent of the income of this people is spent for food.

By the closest economy and abstinence from the nonessentials, we can lower our budget and increase our amount of tithing.

Much of the food on the market today is adulterated or denatured by refining processes.

One of the greatest sacrifices that we as a people can make, is to abstain from the use of such foods—delicacies that our false appetites crave.

How can we hope to enjoy that Spirit of peace and love when our physical and mental powers are dulled by such indulgence?

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." (1 Corinthians 3: 16, 17.)

There may be various ways in which we can defile this temple. But surely if we yield to those desires that eventually harm our physical and mental condition, we are indeed defiling this temple.

We can not gorge our systems with all the pie, cake, candy, and other delicacies that are obtainable in these modern times, and expect to have good health and an abundance of the Spirit of God.

Science teaches us that a balanced diet is essential to a pure blood stream. Our blood stream determines whether we shall have health or otherwise.

In the Herald for November 26, 1930, Doctor A. W. Teel, our church physician, in an article concerning health says, "Wheat is especially rich in vitamins, mineral salts, protein, and carbohydrates. Supplement these with the fat of milk and carbohydrates of honey or unrefined sugar, with their additional vitamins and minerals and we have a diet 'fit for a king,' and a perfectly balanced diet. An unbalanced diet fills our hospitals, asylums, and jails."

In connection with this let me quote Isaiah 7: 15. In prophesying of the birth of Christ, we find this statement: "Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and to choose the good."

Then, too, we have the "Word of Wisdom" in these the last days, found in the eighty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants. "Nevertheless wheat for man," is one statement contained therein. Not the white refined flour that we have today, but the whole grain. Remember the saying, "The whiter your bread, the sooner you're dead." Fruits and vegetables are needed in a correct diet according to the "Word of Wisdom."

What are the promises in these words? Are they not perfect health and strength, and wisdom and great stores of knowledge? From whence do we receive this wisdom and great stores of knowledge? Is it not through the Divine Spirit?

Then, Saints, if we would sacrifice these nonessentials and seek to obtain correct knowledge of our daily diet, we would live to a good old age with perfect health and strength and enjoy an abundance of the Spirit of God.

In the Old Testament times, we find that men lived to be several hundred years old. In Deuteronomy 34: 7, we read: "And Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated."

Undoubtedly by knowledge obtained through direct revelation from God, these people knew what to eat to give them perfect health.

Daniel also had this knowledge. When brought before King Nebuchadnezzar to be taught according to the knowledge of the Chaldeans, he was expected to eat a "portion of the king's meat." He pleaded to be allowed to eat that which he knew would be good for him. What was the result? The answer is found as follows:

And at the end of ten days their countenances were fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat. . . .

As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom; and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams. . . .

And in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm. —Daniel 1: 15, 17, 20.

Were we as a people to heed these things, we would have perfect health, an abundance of the Spirit of God, and as a result would have peace and love in our hearts one toward another, and reach that plane of perfection that God would have us attain.

Do the women of this church realize how they may be hindering the onward progress of this work? Especially wives of the priesthood, whose husbands are hindered in carrying on the duties of their offices as a result of their physical and spiritual condition.

Then, too, there are the missionaries who must suffer. They are likewise hindered in their great work of spreading the gospel.

In recent issues of the Herald, were notices of three of the traveling ministry having had operations.

In 1920 a prophecy was given in Kirtland Temple to the effect that the women of this church were holding back the work and hindering the work of the missionaries by feeding them too much meat and rich foods.

The money now being spent by the Saints for hospital and doctor bills and for operations, caused by incorrect eating, would go a great way toward paying off the church debt.

Much could also be saved by the use of a balanced diet. The body does not need as much food when it receives what it needs. Then, too, the price of meat, tea, coffee, pie, cake, etc., would amount to quite a little sum.

It would be a great sacrifice to do without the things that one is accustomed to, and to learn methods and food problems that are new to one, but how great the reward.

Truly it would be hard to adjust one's self to conditions that would arise as a result of our following this plan, but are we as a people going to be big enough to make the sacrifice?

Think of the missionaries and their families, especially those who must cross the waters. Are we going to be content to sit idly by and let them make their great sacrifice.

Let us go forward—pay off the church debt—reach our goal, by making 1932 a year of daily sacrifice.

Weekly Health Letter

Erysipelas

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

This issue comes near the first birthday of the Weekly Health Letter. Number one appeared in the "Herald" of July 8, 1931. Since that time the Letter has regularly brought information and advice of a valuable character to our readers. During this time Doctor Teel has been an ideal contributor—always far ahead of his assignment. Both Editors and readers join in expressing their appreciation of his services.—The Editors.

Erysipelas ("Saint Anthony's Fire") is an acute, specific, infectious disease which essentially is a septic inflammation of the skin and subcutaneous tissues, usually beginning on the neck and face with a marked tendency to spread, its cause being often directly traceable to some internasal infection. It may cause abscesses of the internal organs—lungs, spleen, and kidneys. The predisposing factors are abrasions, wounds, puerperal state, alcoholism, diabetes, nephritis, or anything that will cause lowered vitality. It is highly contagious and one attack predisposes to subsequent attacks.

It may occur from two to seven days after exposure, beginning with severe, chilly sensations which are soon followed by an eruption of red spots which rapidly coalesce, presenting a crimson or violet hue and giving the skin a shiny appearance. The patient is annoyed by itching and complains of heat and of a tingling burning sensation, the skin area being swollen and firm, hot and tender to the touch. The features are distorted, due to the marked swelling of the face. The fever usually drops suddenly after five or six days, followed by moderate desquamation. A blood examination reveals a marked increase of the number of white corpuscles (leukocytosis). There may be nausea and vomiting, convulsions, headache, pains in the limbs and a temperature rise of 104 to 105°F. The fever drops suddenly when the disease has run its course. There are various other complications that may arise, but the outlook is favorable, except in debilitated subjects—puerperal states and infants. All cases should be isolated because they are especially dangerous to surgical and obstetrical cases. While it is a self-limited disease and the patient may get well without any treatment whatsoever, it is always best to have a competent physician in attendance.

A laxative, especially if the bowels are constipated, should be administered in all cases. Various local applications are comforting to the patient and frequently limit the spread of the disease. The diet should be liquid and nutritious. Applications of solid nitrate of silver or tincture of iodine will often check the spread of the disease, but this is best left to the attending physician.

Autobiography

XXII.—IN AND NEAR DES MOINES, 1908

By James Franklin Mintun

On the twelfth of January at the business meeting it was decided, after proper consideration and the consent of the Saints, to engage in a special missionary effort, beginning January 28.

In the preparation for the special meetings a committee was appointed to secure means to meet the expenses, and several days were spent in putting up notices in public places, and on bulletin boards which we made, and erected in various parts of the city. At these special meetings evangelical minister C. E. Butterworth assisted, and gave several blessings, and also Brother Wardell Christy. It being so rarely that I had enjoyed anything of the kind, my record says, and I present it here, "My wife had so far improved in health that she attended many of the services." You may know that I fully appreciated having her in such health that she could enjoy going to public services once more. During these meetings my work was principally calling on the people and advertising, Brethren Butterworth and Christy doing the principal part of the preaching. I assisted the patriarch in giving the blessings. My son and youngest daughter received theirs, the contents of which have been of great comfort to me.

On February 13 to 16, the conventions and conference were held at Des Moines, where I assisted at all the services. I continued the missionary services after the conference with the assistance of Brethren Nelson P. Sheldon, M. H. Cook, and W. Christy. During the time of these meetings Sister Cushatt, a daughter of Brother W. C. Nirk, came to the city with her daughter, Lela, who had lost her sight, to see a specialist, and called at my place before going to see a specialist for advice and counsel, and administration. I was led to advise her to have the daughter administered to before going to a specialist, and arranged to fast from the evening meal, and to meet at the church with the other brethren for the administration. The brethren felt led the same way as I had advised. The mother brought the girl to the services, and although the church was brightly lighted the girl had to be led to a chair for administration. Immediately after the administration Sister Lela arose and walked to a seat in the audience without any need of one leading her, and strange as it seems, the light did not hurt her eyes. This occurred on February 19. The next day the mother and daughter returned home, without going to a specialist to see whether the daughter needed any further assistance or not. The special services closed February 23.

Feeling the burden of the work in the city, seeing so much to be done, and wishing to know just what to do, and how to do it, and my family being in need of financial assistance, I note my record says, that on March 1, "I sought the Lord in fasting and prayer for spiritual guidance, and for temporal assistance for the family."

I received a request to visit Sister Frank North's on the account of sickness of her babe, and learning that Sister Mary Doss had been converted through the preaching of her father, Brother Green Cloyd, I requested her to go with me in this visit. The doctors had given the child up to die, but through prayer and administration the child improved.

I now arranged with the city authorities to hold street meetings, having decided to try to reach the people for a time in this way. I learned that because of the Utah Mormons, and the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America, some of the Saints that I had expected to assist me, felt that it would not correctly represent us to put ourselves in a class with the ones mentioned, as they viewed them; but there were others who were willing to assist. I never felt chagrined to be on an equality in the one respect of holding meetings on the street, but I had not continued long till I did feel chagrined, and mortified. One of our brethren disgraced himself and involved the name of the church. When I heard of this event, I felt till this was corrected I did not care to be on the street. The brother to whom I refer did not hold any official position in the church, but the people on the street did not know this, but when they contrasted his condition with theirs at that time, they would be more favorable to them than to our church. I sought to have this corrected as soon as possible, for the sake of the church, and the brother who had sinned. But I held no more street meetings that summer in the main part of the city. But while we were holding some street meetings in Highland Park that summer with Brother M. H. Cook, the two who had formerly visited me to make inquiry about our faith were in town and had heard of our meetings and were present, so Mr. Wright and Mr. Hopkins came, and with them we had a pleasant conversation. On the account of rain and cold we did not continue long in this part of the city.

In the latter part of May Sister Anna Johnson, a daughter of Brother William Lewis of Saint Joseph, Missouri, was at a hospital and had quite a serious operation, to whom I was called to administer, and after several visits and administrations she improved and recovered.

Our custom had been that as our children attained their eighteenth birthday we made them a present of a watch, such as we were able to purchase; but on the account of the son working, and needing a time piece badly, the older children agreed that we would make him the gift one year earlier, so that out of our mites we had enough to make the purchase, and on his birthday, June 2, I presented it to him, with a heart full of gratitude that this could be done in agreement with the feelings of all, and with a pleasure to all.

While in Highland Park preaching on the street I called socially and enjoyed conversing with Brother H. H. Hands on gospel topics at his business place, and called at his home and had several talks with his wife answering some of the questions she still did not understand, but on June 21 she was baptized, and proved a noble Saint of God.

On December 21, I had a complete nervous breakdown as a result of "continual trying conditions in the church and home work. My wife was poorly nearly all the latter part of the year, and not well except a little of the time during the year, and when I was away making calls, or out of the city I was continually burdened with her condition. Several Saints were found in serious wrongs, and I labored in sympathy with them to right their wrongs. Then several troubles among families existed, which I was called to assist to bring about a reconciliation, and save the wrongdoers. Then there was some trouble in securing what was due us. However God came to my relief for which I rejoiced. While I was yet weak from the nervous attack, I secured a tree for the Christmas entertainment, administered to one sick near Fort Des Moines, then called to Enterprise to administer to a babe, that as soon as administered to went to sleep, and in that sleep passed from life without a struggle, the Spirit of God giving comfort to the parents in a marked degree." On the twenty-fourth I preached the funeral sermon of this babe, buried it at Youngstown, then returned to the Christmas entertainment to assist. On December 28 I gave a talk to the Saints on the adjustment of troubles, advising each to do his part, to bear and forbear, and to save the wandering ones. At 5 p. m. went to Baxter to preach the funeral of Sister Amanda Elliott, the next day.

This was one of the busiest years of my labors, and associated with some of the most complicated problems. I was in continuous counsel every week one or more times with the branch officials and especially the branch president, as well as with the district officials, and I was given to much prayer that the burden of my wife's affliction might be lifted, and that I might have wisdom, grace, and strength to meet the problems of the mission in a way to do no harm, and to bless all who were in a receptive condition to receive a blessing from the Lord.

This year's work closed so that I had peace with all men and my God, for which my heart now wells with gratitude, for I had met with many possibilities of troublous differences, had God not been with me.

Present and Future Events in the Lives of the Jews

By Hazel L. Minkler

At some future time, historians in recording the history of the Jews will find that this history, since 1830, will resolve itself into two periods, namely, the restoration of the Jewish state, and the preparation for this great event, which has been taking place since the restoration of the gospel on the above date.

The Book of Mormon as a Factor in the Restoration of the Jewish State

That the appearance of the Book of Mormon in 1830 was to presage the restoration to Palestine of its former fertility is shown by the words of Isaiah who, in speaking of the time of the coming forth of this book says:

Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?

By placing these two events in such close proximity, it is evident that the prophet intends us to regard them as the first and second, respectively, of those events which, following each other in logical order, are to prepare the way for the final gathering of the Jews to the land long since promised to their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Moreover, since the Book of Mormon is to be instrumental in bringing the Jews to the knowledge of Jesus as the Messiah whom they rejected (Book of Mormon, Mormon 2: 41) it is evident that it provides the justification for all the other events which were to take place during this period of preparation for Jewish independence. After the joining of the two "sticks" (the Bible and the Book of Mormon) the one of which was to confirm the testimony of the other concerning the identity of the Messiah, the Lord commanded Ezekiel to reveal the sequence of this act in the following prophecy, as found in Ezekiel 37: 21, 22:

And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.

From this prophecy we may reasonably infer that the reestablishment of Palestine as an independent state is to be contingent upon, and simultaneous with, the acceptance by the Jews of the Book of Mormon.

Prophecy Fulfilled

The second of the two prophecies which we have cited above is known to have been fulfilled in 1853, with the restoration to Palestine of the former and latter rains which, for so many centuries had been absent from the land. Then, with the capture of Jerusalem by the British, on December 9, 1917, the complete conquest of Palestine, October, 1918, and the Balfour Declaration, November 2, 1917, by which Palestine was converted into a homeland for the Jewish people, Zionism which, in its modern phase began late in the nineteenth century, became a reality, and the work of colonization, reconstruction, and reclamation was begun.

Elwood Mead, one of our leading agricultural scientists, has the following to say concerning present conditions in this ancient land:

My knowledge of Palestine is based on visits in 1923 and '27. I went to study and report on the Jewish settlement. In order to do so, I talked with Jews and Arabs in their fields and in their homes. I learned how they lived, what crops they grew, what tools they used, and the income which came from their labors.

The Jewish colonies and settlements represent the 20th century. They had comfortable homes, good schools, they used modern tools, and many of them grew crops which represent an acre value of ten times that which was possible under the methods of the fellaheen.

Surrounding these cases, which represent sanitation, comfort, progress, were the Arabic farms which, with their mud huts, dirt floors, and primitive methods of cultivation and harvesting were a counterpart of the life of two thousand years ago. There had been no progress. On the contrary, the life they lived for centuries before the English Mandate, with its uncertain taxation, its lack of encouragement, its awful poverty, gave no hope of change for the better, if development depended upon the initiative and expenditure of the Arabs. Instead of trying to drain the malarial swamps along the Mediterranean coastal plain, or in the valley of Esdraeldon, they abandoned the land, and moved their homes onto the hills. These unused and unpeopled pestilential areas were the opportunity of the Jew. He risked life and health to reclaim them through drainage. Now they are dotted with orange groves, market gardens, and alfalfa fields. Some of these colonies, especially the irrigated ones, have already the beauties of ancient Palestine, described by the prophets.

I saw the stone columns which had supported irrigation head gates, built by the Romans, lifted out of the mud where they had rested for about one thousand years.

In addition to these achievements the Jews have reafforested hillsides, have harnessed the Jordan River, and are about to bring forth vital substance from the Dead Sea. "The remarkable town of Tel-aviv has arisen on the Jaffa sands, the only exclusively Jewish municipality in the world.

Immigrants, together with other Jews, are taught Hebrew, and that tongue has been resuscitated as a living language.

Hebrew theaters have been organized, a living literature in Hebrew is encouraged. Newspapers and public signs are in Hebrew. Schools have been opened in great numbers; a Hebrew university has been built on Mount Scopus, near Jerusalem, a definite revivification of Jewish life has occurred, expressed in Hebrew terms.

The Jewish homeland, thus established, must be regarded as the connecting link between the period beginning A. D. 70, at which time the Jews were scattered among all nations, and that of the restoration of the Jewish state. It is the dawning of that new day in which the Jews will once more be in sole possession of the land of Palestine, and in which they will hold an honored and respected place among the nations who once despised them. Truly "The kings of the Gentiles shall be nursing fathers unto them, and their queens shall become nursing mothers," a prophecy which is even now being partially fulfilled in the British control of Palestine. Forming but one sixth of the present population of the land, and being ruled by the British under a colonial form of government, the Jews are far from realizing the promise of God to their fathers that this land should be theirs as an everlasting inheritance, but we believe that with their acceptance of the Book of Mormon as it is presented to them by a divinely endowed ministry for Christ, this ancient promise will begin to be realized. As pertaining to this period of Restoration, certain outstanding events are outlined in the Scriptures, and these we shall now briefly consider.

The Appearance of Christ Upon the Mount of Olives

From the reading of Zechariah 14: 1, 2, we infer that, when the Jews are restored to the land of their nativity, other nations, looking with envy upon their material possessions, will combine to war against them for the purpose of taking a "spoil." Then we are told that the Lord, himself, shall come down to fight against those nations, and that "his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east," and that this mountain shall cleave in twain, leaving a very great valley between its east and west portions, after which half of it shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

It appears from the reading of Doctrine and Covenants 45: 8, 9, that the Jews will at this time receive the certain knowledge that Jesus is the Messiah whom they rejected, for these verses tell us that the Jews will look upon him and say, "What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet?" and the reply to this question will be, "I am the Lord," and "These wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus, who was crucified. I am the Son of God." Then, we are told, the Jews shall weep because of their iniquities, and lament, because they persecuted their king. This event shows us that while the Book of Mormon is to bring this people to a belief in Jesus as the Messiah, his spectacular appearance upon the Mount of Olives is to bring them to a knowledge of his divine origin.

Status of Jews Among the Nations After Their Acceptance of Christ

What shall now be the position of the Jews among the nations of the earth? Isaiah tells us that they shall be greatly sought for by the nations which once despised them, and Zechariah says:

It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also.

Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord.

Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you.

They shall be priests and ministers of the Lord. (Isaiah 61: 6.) The nations who will remain on the earth during the millennial reign of Christ will be granted this privilege only so long as they are obedient to the laws of Christ, and these laws must be taught them by the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of Zion (in America). "And many nations shall come, and say, Come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." The "law" here spoken of has been interpreted to mean the Doctrine and Covenants which contains the special revelations of the Lord to the Gentiles in latter days, and the "word of the Lord" as the Bible, the special contribution of the Jews to sacred literature.

Zechariah tells us that every one that is left of the nations which fought against Jerusalem shall go to Jerusalem from year to year to worship the Lord, and to keep the feast of the tabernacles, or suffer from the lack of rain.

New Names Which Shall Be Given the City of Jerusalem

As the result of its new status among the nations of the earth, Jerusalem shall be called "A city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts, the holy mountain"; (Zechariah 8: 3). "The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." (Isaiah 60: 14.)

The Unused Talent

By E. R. Davis

(From a sermon reported by Mrs. John C. Stiegel.)

Now I will liken these things unto a parable. For it is like as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, and to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several abilities; and straightway went on his journey. Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same; and gained other five talents. And likewise he who received two talents, he also gained other two. But he who had received one, went and digged in the earth and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of these servants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And so he that had received the five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents; behold I have gained beside them, five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He also that had received two talents came and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents; behold, I have gained two talents beside them. His Lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

Then he who had received the one talent came, and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not scattered. And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; and lo, here is thy talent, take it from me as thou hast from thine other servants, for it is thine. His lord answered and said unto him, Oh wicked and slothful servant; thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gathered where I have not scattered. Having known this, therefore, thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers, and at my coming I should have received my own with usury. I will take, therefore, the talent from you, and give it to him who hath ten talents. For unto every one who hath obtained other talents, shall be given, and he shall have in abundance. But from him that hath not obtained other talents, shall be taken away even that which he hath received. And the lord shall say unto his servants, Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.—Matthew 25: 13-31. Inspired Version.

In Luke 19: 13 we read, "Occupy till I come," and in the twenty-fifth verse of the same chapter, "Unto every one who occupieth shall be given, and from him who occupieth not, even that he hath received shall be taken away from him."

I also wish to draw your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8 where we read the following language: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." In Ephesians 4: 8, Paul writes with reference to Christ, "He gave gifts unto men." And in his first epistle to the Corinthians (12: 4) we read, "Now there are diversities of gifts." And in the seventh verse, "But the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal." From these scriptures we learn that God has given one or more gifts to each of his creatures, and that the purpose is that all should profit by these gifts.

But in order that the gifts might be of benefit, it is necessary that they be developed and used. Now the Saints give me money from time to time to use in my ministerial work. If I keep that money in my pocket, or use it for some other purpose, then I am untrue to my trust. And if God has given me a gift which I am not using for his purpose, or use it for something for which it was not intended, then also am I untrue to my trust. In this connection your attention is invited to Doctrine and Covenants 46: 4: "Seek ye earnestly the best gifts. . . . They are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments . . . that all may be benefited." In the first letter to Timothy (4: 14) Paul admonishes him, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee," and in his second epistle (1: 6) he writes, "Stir up the gift of God which is in thee."

The gifts of God are to be sought after; stirred up, developed and used, but not neglected, that both the church and society might be benefited thereby.

Now we come to the point for a careful consideration of the outstanding point in the scripture reading, quoting from the eighteenth verse. Jesus in the parable says, "But he who received one [talent] went and digged in the earth and hid his lord's money." Luke presents it as follows: "Behold thy pound which I have kept laid up in a napkin." It is evident from both of these writers that Jesus wished to convey the idea of God-ownership, for the person who has received the one talent admits that this talent belongs to his lord, but that he has buried it or laid it up in a napkin, unused.

What Have You Done With God's Gift?

Jesus goes on with the parable in statements of the slothful servant: "I knew thee, that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not scattered, and I was afraid and went and hid thy talent in the earth." In other words he buried it, but he said to his lord, "Here is thy talent. It is thine," again admitting God-ownership.

Are you afraid? Have you hidden God's talent? Each one should recognize that the gifts of God unto him are placed in his care that he might develop and use them for the benefit of himself, his Lord, and the Lord's work.

Then we come to the point in our lesson where rather a severe rebuke is forthcoming. The Lord goes on to say, "Having known this, therefore, thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers and at my coming I should have received mine own with usury"—in other words, Put the talent to work.

In another place in the scriptures we have the following splendid advice, "Get thy spindle and thy distaff ready and God will send thee flax." Far too many expect the flax to be forthcoming before they get the spinning tools ready. The admonition of the Lord is to get the spinning tools ready first, and then the materials with which to work will be forthcoming.

The Lord goes on in the parable in severe rebuke, "Oh, wicked and slothful servant!" And a little farther on he says, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness." He who fails to develop and use the talent must be a slothful and unprofitable servant and eventually must be cast out.

From Luke 16: 12 we glean the following thought, "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give unto you that which is your own?" This means that if we have not been faithful in that which belongs to God which has been placed in our possession to be developed and used who will give us that which otherwise might have been our own had we been faithful to the trust imposed in us. We hold in trust all our powers, given by our creator to be used to his glory for the good of society. We have need to discover and enlarge these powers.

There are certain hindering causes that must be overcome if we are to accomplish our full purpose in life. From the fourth chapter of Mark we have the following illustration: "There went out a sower to sow . . . and some [seed] fell among thorns . . . and these are they who receive the word among thorns: such as hear the word [of God] and the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things entering in choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." Luke 8: 14 says, "And that which fell among the thorns are they who, when they had heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of life and bring no fruit to perfection." From these scriptures we learn that the cares of this world, deceitfulness of riches and the pleasures of life may be permitted to choke the gift or talent that it may become unfruitful and not be brought to perfection.

For a few moments let us give consideration to the deceitfulness of riches. We read in the word of God that the love of money is the root of all evil. It is not the money that is the root of all evil, but the love of money. Jesus says, "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" And again Jesus says, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." One's life does not consist in the abundance of the things he may gather around him which are of a material nature, but in the use which he makes of the things which come into his possession.

We have the story of the foolish rich man whose barns were too small to hold the produce of his fields. He instructed his servants to tear down the old barns and build bigger ones. And when the larger barns were filled he said to himself, "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." Far too many have been doing this, and are still doing so, which has resulted in the present condition in which the world finds itself. But God said unto his rich man, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee. Then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?" They will be left for his heirs to quarrel over.

I am reminded of the story of the man who saw his angry face in the glass, and when he saw how cross he looked he was ashamed of himself and, from that time forth, began to gather virtues such as pleasantness, kindness, brotherly love, and all other good traits, so that when he died he left no estate for his heirs to quarrel over but took it all with him. In other words, he laid up treasures in heaven where moth and rust could not corrupt and where no thieves could break through and steal.

So many today are worried about their material possessions, fearing that some thief will break through and steal, or some bank will close on their life's savings, but give little thought and consideration to the laying up of treasures in heaven. The Master continues, in his story of the rich man, "So shall it be with him who layeth up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God."

Let us consider what might be our loss if we fail to magnify our calling. In the story of the marriage supper the guests who had been invited had each offered some excuse instead of accepting the invitation gladly. Jesus said of them, "The wedding is ready, but those who were bidden were not worthy." Quoting from the twenty-second chapter of Matthew, "The servants went out and gathered together as many as they found and the wedding was furnished with guests. But when the king came in to see the guests he saw there a man who had not a wedding garment on." How sad this picture is. When the King comes in to view the guests at that time shall any of us be found without the wedding garment on? And shall we hear the voice of the king to his servants, saying, "Bind him hand and foot and cast him out where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth"? Luke (14:24) uses the following language, "None of those men who were bidden shall taste of my supper."

And in the story of the foolish virgins who had no oil in their lamps we are told that when the bridegroom came, those who were ready went in and the door was shut. May none of us be found without a wedding garment on, without any oil in our lamps, or unworthy to taste of the supper. But may it be our happy lot that, because of having occupied till he comes, we shall hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things, therefore I will bless you in many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Shall we be faithful then in seeking for, developing, and using the talents God has given us and occupy faithfully till he comes, is our prayer in Christ's name.

William H. Fuller

By T. M. Carr

At eleven thirty the morning of June 5, Brother William H. Fuller, colored, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, passed away after a lingering illness. He was born a slave January 1, 1851, at Fayetteville, Georgia. The date of his birth was confirmed to me by another aged Negro at Brother's Fuller's funeral, who said that they came to Uniontown together at the close of the Civil War and that at that time William Fuller was fourteen years old.

He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Heman C. Smith at Irvington, California, September 11, 1892, and was confirmed by Heman C. Smith and Joseph F. Burton. Then came the call to serve in the priesthood, and he was ordained a priest, April 21, 1900, at Lamoni, Iowa, by Elders John H. Lake and I. N. White.

As a priest Brother Fuller labored in the missionary field for a number of years, ministering in Illinois and California. While in California he baptized Harry Passman who later represented the church in Palestine.

He was a man of great faith and constancy. Once while preaching on the streets of Chicago, he used all his money, and though his room rent was paid for a few days in advance, had to fast two or three days. Finally, with the faith of a child in his father, he took the matter to the Lord. In substance he said: "Lord, I have been sent out to represent thee, to preach thy law. If you want me to preach, I will continue until I die. If you do want me to preach, help me. I am going to put my hat on the pavement when I preach tonight. If you want to help me, cause the people to put money in it." When he started to preach, people stopped to listen. Then they put money in the hat on the pavement. As Brother Fuller heard the money fall and clink in his hat, his troubled heart was filled with gratitude and he preached with power. At the close of the sermon, he discovered that he had enough money to live on for several weeks.

He enjoyed talking of the church and its progress and of the men he knew when we was in the mission field. He would recall name after name and ask after first one man and then another. The list of living men he knew was growing pitifully small. In March or April of 1929, Patriarch F. A. Smith, with Elder Warner and I, visited Brother Fuller. He and his wife had been living with a brother-in-law and were burned out about two months before our visit. When we located them, they were living with another brother-in-law, and clothed in borrowed garments. The fire had occurred at night. His greeting was, "Brothers, my head is low in the dust." He was glad to meet Brother Smith again, who had been secretary of the Quorum of Twelve when Priest Fuller was under church appointment.

I do not know the reason for Brother Fuller's release from the field—old age, in all probability. But he returned to Uniontown and gathered around him colored people and the white people who were willing and started a Sunday school. In this he has been helped by the colored members and by some white members of the priesthood. Through this Sunday school some white members have been brought into the church. Elder B. F. Warner, one of the district presidency, a plasterer by trade, while working in Uniontown years ago, attended the colored school. For this reason, whenever help was needed at Uniontown, the call was for "Brother Bennie." We were summoned twice in April and May to administer to our aged brother.

June 7, Elders J. E. Bishop, B. F. Warner, and I conducted the last services for Brother Fuller whose picturesque life was so enriched by gospel experiences. His relatives and friends were gathered at the house, his widow sitting by the coffin. Elder Warner offered the invocation, I preached the sermon, and Elder Bishop concluded the services at the grave.

We left Brother William Johnson in charge of the Sunday school, and promised to visit him as often as possible.

Builders of a Church

By Merl B. Grover

A great master builder once erected the foundation of a mighty structure which he proposed to build for his sons and daughters. It was some day to be their home, their shelter in the long days of winter which he could see in the future. He knew well that if he himself fully completed the edifice it would never be fully appreciated by them, so he built only enough of the foundation that he knew the building could not fall, not be built wrong on that foundation. Then, giving explicit instructions as to the procedure to be followed, he left the completing of the structure to his children. He still sat by to advise and counsel them, but took no active part in the labor. In his deep fatherly wisdom, the great master knew that if they finished the building with their own hands, they would never forsake it, because of the part which their lives had played in its creation, and the satisfaction which they derived therefrom.

For a time the sons and daughters of the mighty builder labored diligently together to complete the house of their father. Many of them made marvelous contributions to it, some of them even giving their lives, for it was truly a stupendous undertaking requiring a great deal of time and labor and sacrifice. But there came a time when the work on the structure gradually decreased, and finally completely ceased. The sons and daughters had lost interest. Some were pursuing foolish ventures, forgetting their interest in the work of their father. Others had become slothful and still others—those who had the superintendency of the work—diverted it in such a way as to bring profit to themselves. When the great master saw this, he left them for they no longer hearkened to his counsel. In time the children became so engrossed in their work of elevating themselves in the eyes of the world that they erected an entirely separate structure beside the half finished one of their father. The nature of this new building was such that its black smoke and sooty boilers cast a film upon the fine old building, and at times even endangered it, but through it all, the beautiful though half finished old house stood undaunted and steadfast, so strong was its foundation.

Many years passed by and the children had nearly all come to live in the completed substitute beside the strong but forgotten foundation. At last, however, there came a day when a few of the younger sons and daughters became dissatisfied with the filth and stench and blackness of the substitute building, and sought about for a better place in which to live. A few strove to construct houses of their own after the pattern of that of their father; others, believing that the great builder would some day come back and instruct the completion of the task, patiently waited. Many days passed and there were now a great number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren who began to look longingly upon the old structure. Then one day the great builder did return. He quietly sought out a young man and after considerable preparatory instruction, told him to lead the way in the completion of the master's house. He was given all the old tools which his fathers had used, and shown the correct way to use them. He was given some new materials and some new instruction and with the counsel and advice of the old master builder, the young man and a number of others began building. They builded well for a time, but their numbers were few, and some of them, like their fathers, became slothful. The master builder still sat by, watching, counseling, and patiently waiting.

Small Christian Colleges Distinctive

Independent colleges, generally church-related, make their highest contribution to the educational system of the country by being distinctive rather than by duplicating tax-supported institutions. The facts presented in the following pages indicate that our public system of education is enormous in scope, that the rapidity of its growth has been overwhelming, that the mounting costs of education, if all are to be served, will prove colossal. Extreme diversity of educational offerings, over-supply of students trained for professions, a growing tendency toward selection of students, personalized education with corresponding expense, and cultural education for leisure could be cited as additional dominant tendencies. In the light of these well-known facts, clearly it is not the business of church-related colleges to attempt an impossible load. It is not their

The construction still goes on, but the story is now in the present instead of the past. At a certain place within the house, the master has placed fine tools within easy reach of all who labor. He has told his builders that if they will each one use every tool which he has provided, his house will soon be finished. But the people have not yet done so. Some will use certain ones and ignore the rest. Very, very few are using them all. The master still watches and waits, but no longer patiently. His great form has again entered the walls of his house and the sifting time is here. Workers who are not builders are speedily removed. "Today," he says, "my house must be builded."

place even to provide one more unit of the same kind in a system already very large. Their contribution should be distinctive.

We conceive that small church-related colleges, independently supported, have three distinctive qualities which set them apart from tax-supported institutions and afford the basis for this unique contribution which they make to American education.

First, by reason of independent support they are able to undertake educational experiments and to pioneer problems of education to an extent not permissible in institutions under political control and responsible for mass education. Ways in which church-related colleges are alive to this diversification in their educational work were reported in the September Bulletin.

Second, by reason of independent control and small size (usually from four hundred to one thousand students) coupled generally with location in smaller communities, church-related colleges have been able to select students carefully and to largely control the environment surrounding their college years. These features giving more personal education to each student, closer relations between teacher and student, a higher level of association among students, tax-supported and very large institutions have been unable to supply because of their extreme diversity of training and types of students, their immense size and their location usually in large centers of population.

Modern tendencies toward more personal development of each student and a broadening conception of education dealing with the whole personality including physical, moral and spiritual as well as the purely intellectual, lend emphasis to these advantages. Heavy expenditures on quadrangles at Harvard, Yale, Chicago and elsewhere testify to growing recognition of this fact. These qualities have always characterized the small Christian college.

Third, the church-related college is unique in its opportunity to promote spiritual values. It not only stands for these values as a trustee of the spiritual element in higher education, but promotes them in daily living. This is not to substitute goodness for intellectual development; we can not afford to throw the cloak of religion over shoddy intellectual work. It is an assertion in fact that liberal education reaches its highest levels only as it liberalizes the whole personality through integration of character development with intellectual development. This the small Christian college is exceptionally equipped to do.—B. Warren Brown, in The Liberal Arts College Bulletin.

How the Church Grew at Drumright and Oilton, Oklahoma

Seed Is Sown

In February of 1927, Brother B. F. Pollard secured employment with one of the major oil companies of Drumright, and early in the spring he moved his family there from Texas. They succeeded in locating part of four families of Saints, and soon had arranged for meetings in a country schoolhouse centrally located. Brother Pollard began preaching, and a Sunday school was organized. There was preaching service each Sunday night, and soon this small band had fair-sized crowds and good interest.

By early summer this interest grew into a pressing demand for a series of sermons. The Saints secured a larger school building on the main highway. Brother Pollard hesitated about beginning this new undertaking because he had no help in song or anything else. His working hours were none too congenial, as he was working from midnight on or "graveyard" as some expressed it. But the few Saints were eager that their friends should have an opportunity to hear "the conclusion of the whole matter," or the message of the Restoration. One week of meetings was announced. Crowds were good and attention fine, and Brother Pollard preached with liberty. Each night's experience encouraged him to yield to the demand for more.

The end of the second week found the meetings just well started. The speaker held the crowd with additional hearers each night into the third week. He was a busy man, leading the song service, praying and preaching, then home from night's services to work. Off duty at eight o'clock in the morning, he tried to catch some sleep in time to read a little and go back to the church. This continued for twenty-one nights, and Brother Pollard began to feel that he was overworked. No one had said anything about entering the church. The speaker was tired and a little discouraged, and so he told the Lord that he thought he would quit—he could not see any particular results and the undertaking was too great for him. He thanked the Master for the wonderful outpouring of His Spirit, for there had been one night that Brother Pollard had not been able to find time to look at his books, but he did not want for a message for the people.

Labors Bear Fruit

On the twentieth night at the close of the services a couple of strong, portly men and their wives approached the pulpit. "It is enough, Brother Pollard," they said; "you have the truth. We want to be baptized tomorrow, Sunday."

Brother Pollard was overjoyed, and as he returned home, he asked the Lord to forgive him. Now he had received abundant pay for his weak effort. The next day he baptized these candidates together with an aged woman.

Then the activities of the group of Saints redoubled in earnestness. They located an old, unoccupied union church building which they bought, tore down, moved to a central location, and erected by night, as all of the men were working then. They could easily have used a little of their 1932 leisure time then. Nevertheless, the workers finished their task in harmony. The women were busy serving sandwiches and drinks. A nonmember gave the ground; and oil company donated the gas for lights and heat; one friend gave the paint; the pastor and his son applied it. There were no expenses of any kind, and the Saints were not worried about balancing the budget.

The present depression in this group, has increased the congregations, made more loyal worshipers, and peace and harmony prevail. Thirty-three people have been baptized and sixteen babies blessed. The sick have been healed through prayer and administration. The Saints have enjoyed the gifts of prophecy and spiritual dreams and visions in their midweek prayer meetings. It is an uncommon thing when this group does not enjoy a one hundred per cent participation meeting. Nevertheless, they feel that they can improve in quality and are striving so to do. They know nothing of the bickerings to be found in older branches, and are of one heart and mind.

Two Confirming Experiences

Here are two outstanding experiences Brother Pollard relates, experiences he has enjoyed in baptizing. One Sunday he had five to baptize, two men and three women. He had baptized a man and his wife when the third man came to him. As he laid his hands on this third candidate for baptism, the Lord spoke to him by the power of his Spirit saying, "This is the greatest man you have hitherto baptized." There is no use to ask if this man has proved true. God's medium of communication makes no mistakes. Recently he was called to occupy responsible position in the priesthood. His deportment commands the respect of all. He is not a man of many words, but firm and steadfast. These were some of the fruits of the three weeks' meeting before mentioned.

The second experience is a very recent one. Brother Pollard was baptizing a man of middle age. When he raised his hand and said "Having been commissioned, . . ." God spoke to him in unmistakable words, "Suffer it to be so now." This man was following the Lord in baptism; it was mere form for him—he seemed not to have old sins to bury. He went down with a smile and came up with a smile. That smile still lingers with him. In less than twelve hours he was called to the priesthood.

Brother Pollard tells it this way: "I baptized him at six o'clock Sunday evening. At two o'clock the next morning I awoke as tired and restless as I had gone to sleep. I was tired and wornout trying to look after the increasing number of Saints (Note: I had been laboring here alone in the priesthood for five years). As I was about to give up, a voice spoke to me saying, 'Call Brother ——,' (the young man whom I had just baptized); 'he will help you. If you knew him, you would not ask any questions as to his help.' I want to be a living witness to this man's integrity and faithfulness. I have never yet seen him and his wife come to church alone. They are regular attendants. He fills his car with people, hitches on his trailer, and I have seen him bring as many as twenty people to church with him on Sunday night. He is a leader of young people's work here. All respect him."

"It is a real pleasure to be pastor of so noble a group of people," declares Brother Pollard. "Wife and I drive around during the week, learning who the new people were whom Brother and Sister —— brought out to church with them last Sunday night. We gather all this information, return home, prepare our notes for Sunday night's preaching services, and go to the church to find the house crowded to the doors. I feel sorry for a pastor who can not preach under these conditions. I have my notes at hand and they are a fine thing, although preaching under these conditions, I seldom have time to read them. The Lord seems to fill my mouth, and I am pressed for time to deliver his message. My experience is that a pastor will make a mistake to try to do all the work himself. Moses made that mistake in the wilderness, and the Lord called his attention to it and told him to call other men, saying 'Put some of thine honor upon. . . .' When he did that, things moved along well. If you enlist the help of the membership, you give them an opportunity to save themselves by helping others."

The work of the church in this group is steadily progressing. Recently six people were baptized, four of them heads of families. When Apostle Roy S. Budd was in Drumright a few days ago, Brother Pollard asked him to help in confirming these new members. Brother Budd made arrangements with Brothers Earl D. Bailey and his son, of Tulsa, Oklahoma. Brother Earl D. gave a soul-stirring sermon after the confirmation on Sunday night. These helpers were most welcome.

Drumright has had but few visits from district officers, but the Saints presume frequent visits are not possible because of depleted missionary forces. They feel that they must be contented for the time, and do their best in a local sense to keep things going. The gospel work in Drumright, Brother Pollard thinks, has just begun. They need competent helpers especially in a musical line. All the families of Saints are employed or partially so. None have had to call for outside help.

Among Idaho Members

From the Idaho District News

Brother J. L. Sandidge, the new missionary to Idaho District, is busy among the members. He entered the district by way of Lewiston, May 19, and his first stop was Grangeville where he met Elder P. F. Klaus who with his family were finishing their move from Ascotin, Washington, where they were active workers, Brother Klaus being branch president. He is in business in Grangeville and is having marked success making impressions through contacts with people of town and community. This combined with his love for the church is breaking ground for the good work to be accomplished there in the not far distant future. Brother Klaus made an appointment for Brother Sandidge to speak for the Union Sunday School at Fenn. Brother Sandidge left that community with a standing invitation to return and preach to them. Weiser was the missionary's next stop and there he met and was made welcome by Brother Frank Nicher and family and Brother W. W. Lovelace, judge of the probate court. Meridian, his next stop, found him making the acquaintance of more staunch Saints. May 29 he visited Boise Branch, giving attention to the Sunday school, and speaking to the Saints at eleven o'clock. Brother Sandidge is happy to be finding his place as a helper in his new field. He takes the place of Missionary O. W. Okerlind.

Saints of this district have observed June as the month of prayer, it having been so designated by the First Presidency. They also have done their best in sacrificing during the week set aside by the church.

Boise Branch

This branch was glad to welcome the new district missionary, Brother John L. Sandidge, who came Sunday, May 29. On Sunday morning he preached a fine sermon on the happenings of General Conference. No evening service was held due to the baccalaureate services for the Boise High School, which was attended by most of the members. Brother Sandidge left for Hagerman June 1, and from there he expected to visit the various branches in the district.

Lois Dellenbaugh graduated with the 1932 class of Meridian High School, May 20, and Margaret Bullock graduated with the 1932 class of Boise High School June 3. Both of these girls expect to attend Graceland College.

Children's Day was observed June 12, with a program under the direction of Sisters Bullock and Hull, and a sermon by Pastor Cato, followed by a picnic lunch which is a regular feature of this day's program, at Tourist Park. Following the lunch there was a baptismal service in the Boise River.

A number of Boise Saints have motored to Arrowrock

Dam to see the water flow over the spillway. This is a beautiful sight in the spring, but this is the first spring for three years that there has been enough water in the dam to make use of the spill.

Some familiar faces are gone from Boise for the summer, and other new faces are to be seen in the congregation. A number of visitors have worshiped here.

Rupert Branch

A quiet wedding was solemnized May 15, uniting Harry Waylett and Helene Montrose. The marriage took place at two o'clock in the afternoon at the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister G. E. Montrose. Brother Arthur Condit officiated. Hazel Hammond was the bridesmaid and Carey Waylett was best man. The happy pair will live in Rupert.

The annual music week program was held here the first week in May. May 1 at the Methodist church a program was given consisting of one number from each church in town. The Saints were represented by a violin and piano duet by Sister Hanford Plowman and Helene Connell.

A group of young people gave a surprise party on Howard Hudson and wife to celebrate their return to Rupert.

A baby boy was born to Brother and Sister G. E. Montrose, May 17.

The young people went out to the home of Sister John Rutledge May 13, for a social gathering.

Three little boys, William and David Montrose, and Harold Meuleman, were baptized May 20.

Hagerman Branch

Four children were baptized on Children's Day. The service of baptism followed a program at the church. Basket dinner was spread on the church lawn for all who attended, and at two o'clock in the afternoon confirmation service was had.

Following the Mother's Day program at the church about fifty gathered at the home of Brother and Sister J. H. Condit for a picnic.

The department of recreation and expression is busy. Not long ago it gave an attractive program and social.

Taylorville, Illinois

Decision Day was observed by the Saints of this branch June 12, and a beautiful service was arranged by the juniors. The baptismal font was decorated with flowers gathered by the children. The service began with the singing of "The Old, Old Path," by the young people; prayer by a junior, Cecil Ettenger; scripture reading by another junior, Jack Sharrock. The sermon was by Pastor O. C. Henson, and the charge to the candidates was given by Brother Walter Daykin. Then Brother Floyd Sharrock led five juniors into the waters of baptism. The evening service was also given over to the juniors, and a pleasing program was rendered.

Taylorville members are happy to have here for the summer months Brother Walter Daykin, of Iowa City. The Sunday night preaching services have been given over to him, and he is delivering a series of lectures on the parables of Jesus found in the New Testament. Brother Delmer Jones, of Graceland, is also here, and has been placed in charge of the young people's department.

The needs of the church are not long being forgotten in this hour of depression. It will be very hard for Saints of this locality to sacrifice at this time because of the miners' strike which has placed the entire membership out of employment. Each Sunday, however, the pastor has stressed the needs of the church and has urged the Saints to begin to make plans for their sacrifice and to ask the Lord to open up the way.

One of the priests of the branch, Brother Floyd Sharrock, and family prayed earnestly around the family altar each night for the Lord to open the way for them to have something to give. They had not a cent of money, but would do any kind of work if it were offered. On the following morning a neighbor came over and said that he had twenty dollars in money which he was willing to divide between two of his neighbors if they would paint his house. Brother Sharrock gladly accepted the offer and earned the ten dollars which he gave to the church as a sacrifice offering. These Saints feel that their love for the church is measured by their attitude and willingness to serve. They think the work of the church must go on, and that God will help those who are willing to try.

Portsmouth, Ohio

West Side Mission

Though few in number, the Saints enjoy the Spirit of the Father, and are moving forward in the latter-day work. The Sunday morning nine o'clock prayer meetings are proving attractive.

The stay of Elder F. May, of Dayton, Ohio last winter proved decidedly helpful to this group. He gave Bible lessons, plays, and drills in learning the names of the Bible books. Under his instructions old and young became more familiar with the Holy Scriptures. Among those was little Joseph Rose, four-year-old son of Brother and Sister W. M. Rose, who can now recite the sixty-six books of the Bible, pronouncing each name correctly. He memorized the Lord's prayer and a number of other scripture quotations. So prodigious is his memory that a brief feature article was written about him and printed in a local newspaper along with his photograph.

A series of tent meetings has been drawing fair crowds and considerable interest, Elder O. A. Rexroad, the speaker. Sunday, June 5, he baptized three candidates. Others are expected to ask for baptism.

Missionary John R. Grice, of Columbus, will be here soon, if present plans materialize, to hold a four or six weeks' series of meetings.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Members of this branch are grateful to the Father for the blessings received by the wonderful work of the priesthood. A regular meeting of the priesthood on Wednesday evening assures a band of men ready to serve the people. They have already accomplished the reestablishment of a mission in Camden, New Jersey. Although no regular meeting place has been obtained there, the Saints gather in the various homes and much interest is shown.

In the past several weeks local members have enjoyed a few unusual activities in the church, also some social affairs.

On Mother's Day the church was beautifully decorated. Decorations were simple but symbolic of the occasion and there was an appropriate program during the worship hour.

The evening of June 3, a strawberry festival was held at the home of the pastor, under the auspices of the church school class of which Sister Livingstone is teacher. A good social time was had and a substantial sum was realized.

On the evening of June 7, the Laurel Club held its annual supper at the church. Twenty members and their husbands enjoyed a home-cooked meal contributed by the members. The tables were daintily decorated with laurel, daisies and roses. After the supper a program of songs, instrumental numbers, and readings was given.

Philadelphia Saints were inspired by a visit June 12, from Apostle Paul M. Hanson, who delivered an edifying sermon on the spiritual and financial conditions existing in the church. Since Brother Hanson is the new general church appointee in this territory, the branch looks to an instructive winter with perhaps an institute.

Because of Brother Hanson's visit here, Children's Day was postponed until June 19. At the eleven o'clock hour the three children's departments rendered an old-fashioned program in which almost every child took part. The church was decorated with real and artificial flowers, trees, and shrubs with streamers of crepe paper in pastel hues forming a rainbow. These decorations were also used for the evening service at which time nine young people were baptized by Brother Henry Livingstone. Brother William Hartley talked on "The Meaning of Baptism," and the charge to the candidates was given by Pastor Livingstone.

Church conditions in the East are not favorable, but the spiritual condition of the Saints is better than for some years. When economic conditions improve, this branch can be counted on to share its part of the financial burden and in every way support the general church. All the Saints are praying that the blessings of God will follow their activities.

Newton, Iowa

It was said at the Des Moines district reunion, recently, that the Saints of Newton were "like one big family." And truly the spirit of harmony and humility is in this group. The prayers and testimonies on Wednesday evening testify of the willingness and desire of the Saints here to do their part.

Many local people attended the reunion in Des Moines, and were benefited and encouraged by Elder J. F. Sheehy and President E. A. Smith.

On the concluding Sunday of the reunion the Newton Religio department young people presented the play, "The More Abundant Life," and the small choir under the leadership of Kleta Finley, sang three selections. Those taking part in the play were Harold E. Shippy, pastor, Mrs. Flora Benson, Kleta Finley, Margaret Griffith, Mrs. Bernice Benson, Clifford Benson, Seibert Chestnutt, and Keith Stakes. Thirty-one were in attendance from Newton.

Local members are planning a farewell party for Kleta Finley who leaves soon for Wagner, South Dakota, where she will teach school. She will be presented a new Saints' Hymnal. Miss Finley, who attended Graceland, has a talent for music and a pleasing personality. Newton Saints wish her success.

Mr. and Mrs. Seibert Chestnutt and Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Cooper have been blessed with baby girls.

Work in Newton has been fair, but at present is dull. Several of this congregation are without work. Gardens this year, however, have done well, and the congregation is planning to send a box to the Harvest Home Festival this fall.

San Francisco, California

Danvers Street Church

Although infrequent reports from the San Francisco Branch have come to Herald columns of late, the Saints here have continued to carry on under the ministry of Pastor Emery S. Parks. They are firm in the faith.

Saints were glad to welcome to the Bay Cities Elder Arthur Oakman who has occupied the pulpit on two occasions. Each time he made his service doubly enjoyable by preceding his sermon with a solo. His rich baritone voice makes the simplest hymn a thing of beauty.

The Bay City Branches were pleased when Elder G. P. Levitt moved to San Francisco early in the year because of business connections. Even though his secular work keeps him very busy, he makes this an opportunity to minister to the different branches from time to time. He presided at the sacrament meeting of San Francisco Branch June 5, and the service under his direction, was a time of spiritual feasting.

Apostle J. W. Rushton preached his farewell sermon in this pulpit on May 29. Members will miss his uplifting sermons, but they wish him Godspeed in his journeyings.

On Children's Day, the worship period was given over to a program by the children under the direction of Sister Irma Otis, director of the children's department. At the close of the program Isabel Nelson and Chester Nelson were baptized by Brother E. S. Parks. The beautiful ceremony of blessing little children was made more sacred when Margaret Louise Hinton, the tiny daughter of Herbert and Romla Hinton received an inspired blessing, Elder J. A. Saxe officiating. In speaking of this ceremony, Brother Saxe says that the words came to him as though he were reading a book.

Sister Hattie Putney is again requesting the prayers of the faithful that she may regain her health and strength. Please remember her.

Elder George S. Lincoln, who has been convalescing for nine months at his hillside home on the Russian River, was the morning speaker June 19. While he is feeling stronger, he is returning to the country again for further recovery. He is a man of strong faith, and his love for the work and the Saints never wavers. The Saints ask for him your prayers.

The women of the adult department, under the leadership of Sister Lydia Gann, are busy with their needles, and have reduced by many a dollar the debt on the dining hall. Their activities toward caring for the needy are under the direction of Sister E. B. Hinton, social service worker. This group is known as the Temple Builder Club, and is affiliated with the Women's Federation of Clubs of San Francisco.

On account of the resignation of the former branch secretary, Romla Hinton, Lorin B. Shaffer was elected for the unexpired term.

Far West Stake

The Young People's Convention

Another very successful young people's convention has gone down in the history of Far West Stake. In spite of adverse conditions, good crowds gathered at the Cameron Church and enjoyed the activities of Saturday and Sunday, June 25 and 26.

The convention opened Saturday night with a lecture by President F. M. McDowell followed by an organization meeting. In his informal lecture President McDowell asked the question, "Are we spectators or participants?" and suggested an organization of the young people of the stake in an attempt to help more young people to actually get into the game and be participants.

After this stirring appeal, the matter of organization was taken up. Stake President Ward A. Hougas presided and first asked for the approval of the young people in the appointment made some time ago of Leonard G. Ehlers, of Stewartville, as supervisor of young people's activities. This was whole-heartedly given by a standing vote. As a result of the election Wayne Simmons, of Cameron, will act as president; Kenneth Piepergerdes, of Maple Grove Branch, as vice president, and Helen R. Beadnall, of Saint Joseph, as secretary-treasurer. These officers, together with the supervisor and stake president, will form the executive council. The matter of a name was left to the executive council.

The Cameron young people, as hosts to the convention, offered a brief recreational program and then the guests from a distance were entertained for the night.

Sunday dawned a beautiful day and started off with a fine lecture by Doctor McDowell at ten o'clock. "The church needs you," declared Brother McDowell as he challenged the loyalty of every young person present. The answer to this challenge was forthcoming in the allegiance meeting which followed the lecture after about ten minutes of singing the songs of Zion. The church was well filled with young people and a true spirit of reverence and devotion was over all. The adults had a separate service at this hour at which time

Bishop Milo Burnett preached to them. Many young people stood on their feet to pledge their allegiance to their church. Many expressed the desire to be "participants" and not merely "spectators" in this great game of life.

With a plate heavily laden with sandwiches, salads, and cake in one hand and a glass of water in the other, the Saints gathered in groups on the church lawn to visit and renew old acquaintances during the noon recess.

A double quartet composed of young people, from Stewartville, gave a musical prelude to the afternoon lecture by President McDowell, his final message to the convention.

The big stake-wide talent program was the event of the evening. Much talent was shown and each one who contributed helped to prove that there are many young people in Far West Stake who really desire to be participants in our church.

"Where do we go from here?" was the pertinent question asked by Elder Ward A. Hougas in his sermon following the program. Expressing his faith in the young people of this stake and the young people of the church, he put the question squarely to all and answered it in the theme of the Convention, "Onward to Zion." The church will go on. Will the young people go on with it? We believe they will.

Trenton Branch

June 19 was a day long to be remembered by Trenton Saints. It was Decision Day and Children's Day and was the occasion of an all-day meeting. A helpful sermon was delivered by Elder J. D. Proffit at the morning service on the subject "The Restoration." At noon a basket dinner was enjoyed in the basement of the church. At half past two a children's program was given. At the close of this service the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Anson was blessed. Mrs. Anson gave in her name for baptism which was performed the next Sunday.

Several new workers have augmented the ranks at Trenton. Brother Clyde Anson has recently moved back to the branch and is again functioning in his priesthood. Mrs. Evaline Green and son, Paul, have moved from Pickering and are a great help in the work. The Saints were glad to have Brother Elijah Morrison, of Spickard, worship with them again. Brother Morrison is ninety-two years old and has been very poorly all winter and spring but is now able to be at the services and take an active part again.

Some of the Saints are attending community prayer services regularly. Brother Proffit was called to Spickard recently to organize a community prayer service there, and reports a good interest.

First Saint Joseph Church

June has been an outstanding month for First Church. The Sunday evening vespers are growing in favor and have been the cause of increasing the average attendance for the month to a figure more than three times that of last June. They are preventing the "summer slump" which is so discouraging, and have been gradually increasing the attendance since they were commenced the first of May.

The month of June has had four splendid services. June 5, the UI-Lik-US Players presented a religious drama after which Apostle E. J. Gleazer gave a fine sermon. June 12 was Children's Day with its delightful program of music and flowers and children with a sermon by Elder H. C. Timm. Apostle Gleazer was again the speaker on June 19, when the junior young people showed their talents in an allegorical play, "The Perfect Gift." June 26 brought two big attractions which, combined, drew the largest crowd of the month in spite of the fact that the young people were at Cameron. The prelude was presented by the Little Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Hugh McNutt and the sermon was delivered by President F. M. McDowell.

In addition to the fact that these services are increasing the attendance and bringing out many visitors, they are also affording many young people as well as adults an opportunity to participate in a service which helps make it their service.

Children's Day was a day long to be remembered by the children as well as by those witnessing the activities of the day. The children, with their leaders, took charge of the worship period of the church school. At the close of the worship period, everyone reverently descended to the lower auditorium where the font had been prettily decorated. A very impressive service followed as twelve children entered the waters of baptism. Without interruption, all assembled in the main auditorium again for the confirmation service. The day was completed with a program and sermonet at the vesper service.

Kansas City Stake

As a result of the sacrifice drive conducted in this stake about $2,800 was turned over to the stake bishop, and it is thought that more will be given in this week.

Central Church

Children's Day was observed with simple but impressive exercises. Daisies and asparagus formed a setting for the occasion. Following a short lesson study in the various departments, the primary, junior and intermediate departments assembled in the main auditorium for the sacred ordinance of baptism which constituted the eleven o'clock hour. Bishop C. A. Skinner officiated, administering this ordinance to six of the primary pupils: Kathleen Bowser, Anna May Payne, Grace Furness, James Curtis, Lynn Sandy and Earl Spears. Preceding this service, Caroline Joan, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Hoffman, was blessed by Elders Mesley and Blair.

Friday, June 24, the Women's Club held the annual jubilee dinner, about one hundred and fifty attending. The dinner was prepared by the Walter Criley family, and was most excellent in its serving. Sister Margaret Blair served as a charming toastmistress. The principal address was given by President F. M. McDowell early in the course of the dinner owing to the necessity of his leaving for the bedside of his mother at Research Hospital. Sister Leonard Lea gave two excellent readings and Brother Colin Ferrett entertained with inspiring song numbers. Community singing was led by George Anway. Perhaps the most thrilling speech of the evening was given by Sister Estella Moore, treasurer of the club, who presented the bishop with a check to the amount of $1,576.35 to be applied on the mortgage of Central Church a payment of which was due July 1. Considerable amusement was had from various ladies when they told how they had earned their talent money throughout the year and how hard they had worked to earn ten dollars, the goal set at the beginning of the year for each member of the club. The Business Women's Circle won high honors of the evening, having turned in the largest amount of any one circle, $169.79. Guests of the evening were President and Sister F. M. McDowell, Brother and Sister Harold Burgess, Brother and Sister Leonard Lea, Brother Colin Ferrett, Brother and Sister Jellings, Sister Alma Warren and many others.

Tuesday, June 7, Mr. F. S. Anderson and Miss Gertrude Keown slipped quietly down to the church office and were united in marriage and then motored out of Kansas City for a two-weeks' honeymoon, thinking they would keep their marriage a secret. However, the news leaked out and their many friends were on hand on their return to extend their love and good wishes. They are now living at the Anderson home, 2910 East Thirty-third Street.

"Why the Chimes Rang Out," a beautiful expression of self-sacrifice, was portrayed in a play by the intermediate department at the eleven o'clock service June 26. This simple but impressive lesson reached the hearts of the people, and found lodging, as reports from the bishop indicate that the people of Kansas City Stake turned in something like $2,800 to the general church fund during the sacrifice period.

The sacrament service Sunday morning was well attended despite a number of the members being out of town for the holidays.

Central people were very happy to have Apostle John W. Rushton occupy the pulpit at the evening hour. He is en route to New York to sail on his mission. The church was well filled, and the people enjoyed the inspiring words of Apostle Rushton. At the close of the service, an informal reception was held in honor of Brother Rushton, giving all his friends a chance to bid him bon voyage and Godspeed.

Mount Washington Church

The O. B. K.'s are having very interesting prayer meetings each Sunday at eight thirty in the morning, and try to have a church official to preside over them. The O. B. K. volley ball tournament started last week. The boys and girls teams were both defeated in last week's games against Fourth and Armourdale Churches.

Bennington Heights Church

An Easter pageant was presented here and afterwards given at several other local churches through the loyalty of the cast of twenty-four people, Sister Emma Helm, directing.

The Wednesday evening prayer meetings have an attendance of from fifty to fifty-five, which is a splendid showing.

The Saints enjoyed a splendid Children's Day program June 12, directed by Sister Georgia Binninger. In the afternoon seven new members were added to the congregation, the baptismal service being held at Central Church, Joseph Curtis and D. C. Stafford officiating. The confirmation was in the evening by Pastor O. G. Helm, Joseph Curtis, Bishop C. A. Skinner, and J. Charles May, missionary.

The morning of June 19, Brother Edgar H. Agin was the speaker. Brother Agin is one of the promising local men and the members enjoy hearing him. His subject was "Sacrifice." At the evening service Stake Missionary J. Charles May gave some special music and a splendid sermon on the different glories. Brother May also spoke at the eleven o'clock hour on June 26. Brother May is now working among the Saints of Mount Washington and Bennington, and plans to hold a series of meetings the first week of July at Bennington. In the evening of June 26, Brother R. E. Jones preached an excellent sermon.

On Tuesday evening of sacrifice week a goodly number of the members attended Fourth Church services to hear President F. M. McDowell speak on sacrifice. Every one present seemed to feel the spirit of sacrifice after hearing his wonderful talk.

The Young People's History Class recently held a class meeting at the home of Brother and Sister S. S. Armstrong. Ice cream and cake were served, and all had a good time and expressed their desire to do all they could to make the class worth while.

Several of the ladies who have attended here eleven years or more met June 22, at the home of Brother and Sister Phillip Kelley, and organized the Loyalty Club with twenty-four members. The gathering was also a farewell party on Sister Lena Hastings who is leaving to spend several weeks in Milan, Missouri.

Hibbard, Indiana

Hibbard Branch had its all-day meeting June 19, in its new church. A fine time was experienced by all present. One hundred and three shared the big dinner. Brothers Pement, McNice, Myers, and L. L. Bennett were present. The young people had a fine program, and Brother McKnight delivered a sermon in the afternoon.

Independence

Approximately four thousand dollars is the sacrifice sum of the Saints in Independence, according to the bishop in Zion, Brother J. Stanley Kelley. Reports are as yet incomplete, and it is thought this figure will grow during the coming week.

The Standing High Council of the church went into session for the second time since General Conference, Saturday evening, July 2. Two deliberative sessions were held Sunday and another on Monday morning.

Stone Church

The spirit of true devotion and consecration hovered over the sacrament service at the Stone Church Sunday morning, and the power of the Holy Spirit directed those in charge of the meeting, and was felt by many in the large congregation. A divine admonition, given through President Elbert A. Smith, exhorting the people and the officers to be steadfast in the faith and to be courageous and strong in the midst of the present and future difficulties of the church, deeply stirred the Saints.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, and with him in the stand and assisting were President F. M. McDowell, Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry, President Elbert A. Smith, Bishops J. Stanley Kelley and R. T. Cooper, Elders D. O. Cato and H. G. Barto, and Brother Paul N. Craig who led the congregational singing.

For a basis of his short and appealing address Brother McDowell chose the hymn, "O for a Faith That Will Not Shrink," and his plea was for the people to exercise such a faith. The oblation talk was by Bishop L. F. P. Curry.

For the third Sunday evening in succession rain made it necessary to conduct the union Campus service at the Stone Church. It being the first Sunday of the month, the Stone Church Choir, under the direction of Brother Paul N. Craig, was present to give the music. It added a patriotic touch to the program by singing "America the Beautiful," and Miss Lilly Belle Allen, soprano soloist, sang "Star-Spangled Banner."

Apostle F. Henry Edwards, speaker for the summer, chose as his theme "America the Beautiful." In the stand with him were Bishop M. H. Siegfried who was in charge of the service, and Patriarch Ammon White.

Saints of Independence mourn the passing of Sister Maybell Edith Dell, wife of Charles L. Dell, Saturday, July 2. She was a woman of cheerful and helpful disposition. Though long afflicted with ill health, Sister Dell accompanied her husband to many of the smaller branches in surrounding stakes, where her cheer and missionary spirit won her scores of friends. On Sunday her passing was announced as far away from Independence, in the places where she was known, as Blue Springs, Missouri. The funeral was held July 4, at the Stone Church, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Left to mourn are her husband; two daughters, Doris and Mrs. Esther Dobson; a son, Arthur, and her father, Mose Williams, all of Independence; three brothers, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, George Williams, Asa Williams, and Joseph Williams, and four sisters, Mrs. Bertha DeCrow and Mrs. Hazel Myers, of Kansas City, and Mrs. Eva Michael and Mrs. Mary Albers, of Independence, and many friends.

Spring Branch Church

The morning prayer service July 3, was in charge of Elder Robert Fish, assisted by Alma Tankard. A fairly good crowd was present, and many helpful thoughts were given.

The church school was in charge of the superintendent, Frank Robinson and George Bilquist assisting in the worship service. One hundred and seven were present.

The sacrament service was in charge of the new pastor, G. W. Eastwood, assisted by Robert Fish and Alma Tankard. The church was nearly filled with worshippers. Special musical numbers on the piano and organ were by Sister Wino-gene Boyce and Sister Jalmer Nelson.

Everyone likes the new pastor, and thinks the branch will be blessed by his help and support.

Sister Ernestine Lloyd was married, June 23, to Noel Rodgers by the pastor, at his home. This couple has the congratulations and good wishes of the branch.

Brother Hays, of Second Church, addressed the church school for a brief time, June 26, talking on the field of imagination.

Special observance of the week of sacrifice was had at the eleven o'clock hour when the special sacrifice envelopes were collected, and Bishop R. T. Cooper was the speaker. His subject taught the congregation how the Bible was compiled. A special musical number was given by the three daughters of Brother and Sister C. J. Dixon.

A good spirit was had at the Wednesday night prayer service, June 29, Elder S. C. Andes in charge, assisted by Morris Jacobson. Local members were happy, on this evening, to welcome Apostle and Sister F. Henry Edwards.

Brother and Sister Chester Andes are the parents of a daughter, Deloris Marie, born June 13.

Sister Robert Fish entertained her Sunday morning and evening junior classes at the Campus Friday. Games and a taffy pull were enjoyed by the children.

Frankfort Branch

(Northern Wisconsin District)

Pepin, Wisconsin.—Many are taking more interest in the Sunday school which is regularly conducted by a young worker, Brother Amos Livingston, who is doing much to build up this department.

Through the untiring efforts of Sister Mercia Perkins, a splendid Easter program was given, and on Mother's Day an appreciative crowd attended and gave tribute to Sister Perkins's zeal.

Elder R. W. Smith, of Hammond, Indiana, was here May 29, and preached in the morning. He was accompanied by his wife and two sons and Sister Louisa Shedd. Dinner was served to about sixty in the dining room. Visitors were also present from Madison and Tamah, Wisconsin, and Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Local members think that the time is ripe for some profitable missionary work to be done in Frankfort Branch.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Special days of the spring and early summer have been appropriately commemorated by this branch. A fine Easter program, March 27, was much enjoyed by the Saints and their friends. The musical part of the hour was supplied by the Young People's Choral Club. The sermon, "The Risen Christ," was by Elder D. Clatworthy.

On May 8, the young people's club presented a delightful program in the evening, honoring mother. There were pageants, choruses, and solos appropriate for the day. A pageant, "Mother," was given, stage setting and lighting producing effects similar to that of Whistler's famous painting, "Mother." Attendance was splendid.

On Children's Day, the children did fine under the direction of Mildred Clatworthy.

Early in the year the church school sponsored a contest on acquaintanceship with the Old Testament. Questions asked both teams of scholars, determined the winning side. The losers treated the winners to a concert.

District President James Wilson and Bishop McLean, of Toronto, and Elder Hanna, of Hamilton, were here June 19, Elders Wilson and Hanna speaking in the morning, and Bishop McLean in the afternoon. Women of the branch

A Correction

Two corrections in the first paragraph of the report of the conference of the Society Islands Mission, printed in the Herald of May 18, page 479, will greatly improve the meaning of what is written. Line five should read: "by delegates chosen by the five district conferences." And the latter half of line seven should read: "but the ardor of those." The editors regret that these errors slipped into the report to confuse and mislead the readers.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MICHIGAN.—District conference convened at Bendon, Michigan, June 18 and 19. Dis. Pres. Buell Shelley and associates, J. L. Randall and J. C. Doty, assisted by Missionary C. E. Harpe, in charge. The opening session was Saturday morning at 9 o'clock, served lunch in the basement of the church, and everyone enjoyed the day.

June 26, the regular Sunday classes were held, then in the evening a Father's Day program was had. The young people's choir presented a fine entertainment. Selections were given by Vina Minor and Helen Phipps, also the local school teacher, Miss Hiemiller, gave a pleasing number. Nine fathers sang the hymn, "I Need Thee Every Hour," and Elder D. Clatworthy gave fine advice to the fathers and mothers on training the young in the way they should go.

a prayer service in which there were twenty-four testimonies and five prayers. Business session opened at 10.30 with the district secretary acting as secretary of the conference. The following reports were read: District president; director of church school; summarized ministerial report; ministerial report of Elder J. E. Bennett; statistical report of district secretary; report of treasurer and bishop's agent, J. E. Bennett; a letter of greeting from Missionary C. E. Harpe; Elder B. H. Doty gave a verbal report of his ministerial work in the district. At 2 p. m. business was resumed. It was resolved that the bishop's agent and district presidency be given the right to visit Joyfield Church and use their judgment in its disposition. Three other resolutions were passed, one admonishing the solicitors of the different branches to be prompt in their monthly reports to the bishop's agent, the other two being admonitions to the priesthood. A resolution was also passed disorganizing the Kasson Branch. The recommendation of the name of Amos Berge to the office of elder and John Robinson to the office of priest was approved by the conference, which referred the recommendation of these men to the district presidency and apostle in charge with power to act. The election of officers resulted as follows: District president, Buell Shelley; associates, J. L. Randall and J. C. Doty; secretary, Mary Tubbs; church school director, J. C. Doty; musical director, B. H. Doty; bishop's agent and district treasurer, J. E. Bennett. At 7.30 a program was given under the direction of Elder B. H. Doty. Sunday morning a priesthood meeting was held in charge of Elder C. E. Harpe. This was followed by a prayer service at 9 o'clock. The Saints came in fasting and prayer for Sister Buell Shelley who is seriously ill and also Elder Harpe's daughters who were suffering. The service, in charge of Elder James Davis, was most inspirational. Nine prayers were offered and fifty-seven testimonies. At 10 o'clock Elder Harpe, of Lamoni, Iowa, preached, and at 2 o'clock Elders B. H. Doty and J. E. Bennett gave half hour talks. Special music was furnished at each of these services by Traverse City Saints. At the 2 o'clock service Fred Marsh was ordained a priest. The conference was well attended, every branch in the district being represented. The Saints returned home feeling this was one of the best conferences ever held. Western Michigan members are grateful to Bendon Saints for their kindness and hospitality.

Our Departed Ones

To this union were born five children, two of whom preceded their mother in death; two girls, Aline and Nadine, who have homes of their own, and a boy, Noble, who remains with his father in the home. She died at her home near Belleville, Alabama, after a long period of sickness, June 19, 1932. No higher tribute could be paid to Sister Dee than that she proved to be a saintly woman to all who knew her. Funeral services were held at Pleasant Hill Church at McKenzie, Elder Lyle D. Flynn presiding, and Elder H. H. Wiggins delivering the sermon.

SHULTZ.—Leonard Arthur was born July 15, 1913, and passed away May 19, 1932, at Tillamook, Oregon, age nineteen. He had been a faithful member of the church for several years. MOORE.—George Ray, son of Forest P. and Thelma M. Moore, was born December 9, 1924, at Portland, Oregon, and died May 29, 1932. He had suffered many years of his short life, but it was believed he was recovering to normal health. He had grown physically, and his mental powers were keen and alert, in spite of his years of intense suffering. He received help and relief through administration, but his life was not to be spared, and so, quite unexpectedly came this last illness of only a week. He passed away at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Appleman. Elder H. I. Velt officiated as minister in charge at the burial service.

Blue Pencil Notes

During this time of world crisis and of deep distress in America, I note a popular woman's magazine carrying a full page advertisement telling our society ladies how to color their finger nails to match their various and numerous gowns. The matter seems very important as it is set forth that one's friends soon tire of one if one's nails are always one color.

Also in this time of grave crisis in the world and at home two great (that is, large) political parties meet after opening their conventions with prayer spend the major portion of their time shouting for booze—"We want beer!"

Who can longer doubt the ability of American men and women to rise to patriotic heights in times of crisis? With America's talons tinted to match her togs, and with Uncle Samuel once more restored to his liquors, the impoverished, the disinherited, the penniless may consider their problems as good as solved, their hunger pangs alleviated. If they can not eat they can at least watch some one else drink and be merry. In a way the two items previously mentioned are related, for with prohibition out of the way, if one's tie be red one may tint one's nose to match one's tie, as in day of old.

A current "movie" has this appropriate title, "Merrily we go to hell." The advertisement says, "Adults twenty-five cents, children ten." But why pay even ten cents? Look about, the show is free and continuous.

Too often prosperity undermines character, but sometimes adversity develops the heroic strain in humanity and redeems it from its low estate; and an example of fortitude under adversity always cheers and heartens spectators—sometimes rebukes them. Some years ago one bright spring day I was walking down the streets of Lamoni feeling very depressed in spirit. I do not remember the reason now, so it may not have been important. I met an aged brother, totally blind. He was tapping along the side of the walk with his cane and whistling a cheerful tune. There was I, able to see the beautiful green trees, the flowers, the blue sky, the faces of my loved ones, yet down-hearted and complaining. As he passed the blind brother preached me a very powerful sermon without saying a word. Thus President Joseph Smith used to console himself in his afflictions in later years, that they permitted him to set an example of fortitude to his brethren.

Politics

The Candidates

The two great political parties have now placed leaders before the voters as candidates for the highest office and honor that may be bestowed by the country. Both candidates for the office of President are men of experience and, we believe, of integrity. Each, in his own way, has served the nation, making his contributions toward ends which he conceived to be right, and for the benefit of the country.

We regard it as a circumstance most unfortunate that the political conventions that nominated these good men should be affairs so much governed by noise and so little by thought, so much by expediency and so little by principle. There were manifested such offensive things as "ballyhoo," crushing "steam roller" tactics, and "wire pulling," rather than the calm spirit of sane voting. There can be no doubt of the light that this kind of thing places us in before the eyes of the world. Every thinking citizen must regret that our political conventions are managed less like deliberative assemblies than like a stampede of cattle on the western plains.

Between now and November 4 we shall be deluged with oratory; the demagogues of both parties will be turned loose upon us. And because they know us for what we are rather than for what we ought to be, they will try to frighten, prejudice, mislead, and "bamboozle" the voters. There are many reasons to fear that they may succeed.

The great leaders will not be responsible for this method of conducting the campaigns. They would be powerless to prevent it even if they would. In a sense, they are now caught in the whirlwind of politics, and will be tossed helplessly about until the election ends the storm. They shall be great men indeed if they manage to keep their heads among the influences and powers that will be brought to bear on them.

The Liquor Question

We greatly fear that many people who should remember have forgotten the evils of the saloon, and the terrible and nauseating conditions that prevailed while they flourished.

All parties profess to abhor the saloon—as if the evil were somehow resident in the saloons and not in the liquor they dispensed. The evil is liquor—alcohol! Whether a man drinks it from a glass or a bottle, whether he drinks it from the bar or in the alley, makes no difference. Let nobody try to deceive us on this question.

The old days when there were grog shops on every corner, when the stench of liquor was everywhere in town and city, and staggering drunks made it necessary for women to go out only with escorts, have gone, and too many people have forgotten their evils.

We must believe, of course, in the ballot; we believe, too, in the right of the states to undertake the change of the Constitution by the regular and legal means. And we think that we know how to submit to the will of the majority. But so long as the argument about prohibition goes on, we propose to exert our influence against one of man's most ancient and destructive enemies—alcohol.

Harvest Festivals

The Independence Harvest Festival will be held in the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, October 11 to 16 inclusive. Preparations for the festival have been going forward for several months, and we trust that with this announcement of the date it will be possible to make definite plans for displays, etc.

Hitherto the Saints throughout the church have been requested to participate in this festival to the limit of their abilities. We still desire this participation. However, the needs of the Saints in distant centers, the high cost of freighting large quantities of foodstuffs to the center place and several other factors have combined to make it unwise to stress this church-wide contribution at this time. Instead we suggest that a local festival be planned in each of the various districts, and that the prize exhibits be sent to Independence for inclusion in the central display. The remaining offerings may then be held for distribution under the direction of the local bishopric.

Local festivals should follow the general plan adopted for the gathering which has been so remarkably successful in Independence. They may well be made the occasion for district-wide two-day meetings. We invite district presidents and bishops (or Bishop's agents) to promote such meetings and to cooperate with the workers in the branches where they are held so that the best possible missionary and educational gains shall be secured.

The Saints of Independence, the stakes and nearby districts are requested and urged to cooperate in making the coming festival in the center place a worthy successor to those which have preceded it. The various relief agencies of Independence and the general church are likely to be hardpressed this winter, and it is imperative that large quantities of foodstuffs shall be available for distribution among those who are in distress. To your generous and tastefully arranged contributions will be added the prize enough? What measures can we adopt that will help us to improve?

exhibits of the district festivals which have been held prior to October 11. The resultant display should be attractive and inspiring and should aid the Bishopric in the relief work pertaining to their calling.

Inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul.

And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion; and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 4, 5.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP.

There is so much bad in the best of us,
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it ill behooves any of us,
To talk about the rest of us.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

NEWS BRIEFS

Returns of Sacrifice Week

The returns of the June Sacrifice Week can not be estimated in dollars and cents alone. True it is that reports from stakes, districts, and branches indicate a surprisingly large monetary sacrifice (a complete report is not yet compiled by the Bishop). But the Week of Sacrifice has meant more than money—it has brought about a re-fueling of the fires of loyalty and devotion on the part of each member; it has increased the working efficiency of the priesthood; it has banded the Saints together for a common purpose; it has brought peace and harmony and unity to the workers; it has meant that more people this year have participated in spite of hard times, to raise the total sacrifice offering. In many, many branches the Saints have learned the broader, deeper meaning of sacrifice, and in consequence, have enjoyed the blessings of the heavenly Father.

Increase of Baptisms in Lamoni Stake

Last year baptisms in Lamoni Stake numbered thirty-six. This year's record promises to surpass that of last year with respect to numerical additions to the church. The first six months of 1932 find the total of baptisms thirty-seven, and others have requested the ordinance. Several branches and missions have taken on new life.

Apostle D. T. Williams in Great Lakes Mission

Saints of the great Lakes Mission—Michigan and Ontario—have welcomed Apostle D. T. Williams to their branches and accepted his help with gratitude. Since General Conference, Brother Williams has traveled many miles, visited scores of branches, preached a great number of stirring sermons, and made countless new friends.

He is the "new" missionary in charge of that mission, and a few Sundays ago was made welcome in his office by Toronto members. In the morning he presided over two good prayer meetings; at noon he spoke to the church school, and in the evening the theme of his sermon was "The Test." Next day he sought out Saints in the surrounding country, preaching that night at Humber Bay. On Tuesday evening he spoke to the group at Woodbridge, and on Wednesday at Guelph, Ontario.

Then he went to the Owen Sound reunion at Port Elgin, July 3 to 10, where his missionary zeal helped to produce a very successful reunion.

Eight Baptized at Belleville

This week Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin, a very effective missionary pair, are concluding four weeks of meetings at Belleville, Illinois. With worship and church school programs, song services, recreational events, and fine sermons, the Baldwins are stirring up great enthusiasm and interest. Eight people were baptized July 3, and more are deeply interested in the gospel message.

Many Church Ordinances Mark Reunion

The North Dakota reunion this year was made distinctive by the fine spirit which prevailed in all services and by the many church ordinances it included. Happily the Saints gathered at the old reunion grounds near Logan for their annual reunion from June 22 to 26, the district conference being held on Saturday afternoon.

On Sunday morning two of the faithful ministry were ordained elders, a baby was blessed, and six sisters received administration. In the afternoon four children were baptized members of the church and kingdom of God.

General church appointees present to help in this reunion and conference were Apostle J. F. Curtis and Elder P. T. Anderson. These were loyally supported by district and local ministry and workers.

Eagle City Branch Presidency Continues in Dyke Family

The branch presidency at Eagle City, Oklahoma, has never left the Dyke family. Elder John R. Dyke was the first president of the group of Saints gathered there years ago. Elder Lemuel D. Dyke succeeded his father, and Elder Lester E. Dyke is the present presiding officer. The women of the family have also been faithful in their labors for the church.

Elder and Sister John R. Dyke celebrated their golden wedding anniversary June 15, with their friends. On this occasion one officer writes: "If our wishes for them were gold, they would have wealth untold."

Patriarchs Busy in Toronto

A few weeks ago Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and Patriarch John Shields paid simultaneous visits to Toronto, Ontario, and contributed to the spiritual uplift and encouragement of the branch there. During his stay, Patriarch Smith preached on two Sundays and gave fifty-two blessings. Patriarch John Shields gave seventeen blessings. The local Saints were grateful for the help of these ministers.

Our TaskThe Christian Ministry*ITS ENRICHMENT

By John W. Rushton

PART II

Immediate and Specific Duties

The minister of the church no matter in what capacity he may serve, whether as missionary or as pastor, deals with public in much the same way. The pastor confines his efforts to perhaps a smaller group, while the missionary covers a wider territory and meets with perhaps a larger or at least a more diversified class, having more opportunities for controversial preaching with a view to winning consent to his propaganda. But in practical effort both are concerned with preaching; disciplining according to ritualism, sacraments, teaching and worship through a recognized technique; and ministering to humanity in the peculiar way that is necessary because of sorrow, bereavement, sickness and trouble.

The Pulpit and Preaching

Much has been written on this supreme art of the minister and special training to equip him for this great task is available to all who consider theology and the ministry as a profession; and still there is need for emphasis upon the urgent need for especial care in this feature of ministerial duty. The place and importance of the pulpit in the church can not be overestimated. If the Altar is the Shekinah, the place of the Divine glory, the pulpit is the fountain of Divine wisdom. As Vogt says in the book referred to before: "The place for new thought is the pulpit. The pulpit stands for prophecy, for proposals of change, for fearless examination of truth, for an outlook toward the future. Yet the community desires also to value the past. It needs to revere and to conserve the great spiritual victories and judgments of the fathers. It needs to preserve and pass on its great wealth of inherited devotion. The place for this conserving force is the service of worship. Here is the proper vehicle of transmission. Here is given abundant expression, in the elder forms, of the great answers that religion always has to the few primary, personal problems of existence. The new things are not yet formulated. They need examination and criticism. The place for setting forth new proposals is not in forms and exercises, but in the free utterance of the free preacher. Religious education, like all education, will include the culture derived from the past and the scientific examination of proposals for the future." (Pages 112, 113.)

The pulpit is the place from which the clear message of truth finds convincing expression through the radiant personality of the preacher. A personality charged with a message which grips the messenger produces what the late C. Sylvester Horne called "The Royalty of the Pulpit." In his Yale lectures of 1914 Mr. Horne argues that the Christian church has been the nursing-home of great orators. To have great oratory there must be the inspiration of a great cause and great ideals. Hence Christian eloquence is the highest of all. "A man's soul must be aflame." This to him is the supreme qualification for the ministry. And those who were privileged to hear this minister of Whitefield's chapel in London, can never forget that he himself was the most fitting illustration of his own argument.

The Christian ministry must have its focal point in Christ; for effective preaching must be evangelical. "The ministry that is not evangelistic ministry is not in the full sense a Christian ministry."

Personality and the Preacher

In the Bedell lectures of 1926-27, Doctor Charles Franklin Thwing, speaking of preaching and teaching, tells of his experience with Phillips Brooks under whose preaching he sat for many years, and calls attention to the fact that this great preacher interprets the preacher as having two forces or conditions. They are personality and truth, personality setting forth the truth, and truth as incarnated in, and expressed by personality. And Thwing quotes from Doctor Brooks' Lectures on Preaching as follows: "Even if we look at preaching only, it must still be true that nothing can ever take its place because of the personal element that is in it. No multiplication of books can ever supersede the human voice. No newly opened channel of approach to man's mind and heart can ever do away with man's readiness to receive impressions through his fellow man. There is no evidence, I think, in all the absorption in books which characterizes our much reading age, of any real decline of the interest in preaching. Let a man be a true preacher, really uttering the truth through his own personality, and it is strange how men will gather to listen to him. We hear that the day of the pulpit is past, and then some morning the voice of a true preacher is heard in the land and all the streets are full of men crowding to hear him, just exactly as were the streets of Constantinople when Chrysostom was going to preach at the Church of the Apostles, or the streets of London when Latimer was bravely telling the truth at Saint Paul's"

"However the gospel may be capable of statement in dogmatic form, its truest statement we know is not in dogma but in personal life. Christianity is Christ; and we can easily understand how a truth which is of such peculiar character that a person can stand forth and say of it 'I am the Truth,' must always be best conveyed through, must indeed be almost incapable of being perfectly conveyed except through personality."

Of Brooks Thwing writes again: "How nobly Brooks illustrates all that he has just said in himself. He was the great preacher because he was the great personality. As a great personality he gave himself to religion. He was my preacher for the years of my education. But he was my preacher because, in part at least, he was my man and my friend." (Education and Religion, pages 6, 7.)

I have read of Brooks that his personality was so strong and silently communicative that "no one could stand under the same umbrella on a rainy day without feeling conscious of his presence, and feeling better." For so noble a work it is not unreasonable to say, "God wills the dedication of the finest intellectual powers."

To the service of the King of kings we must bring the best we have. Happily the day is past when it was considered to be a justification for suspicion and condemnation that a minister should use correct English, and be careful of his grammar and try to be artistic in his gesticulations, though there still lingers the idea that popular preaching, as it is called, need not consider these features too closely, and we still hear the old saying that "if the preacher will but open his mouth the Lord will fill it." However, we need not seek popularity by vulgarizing the message, nor by using cheap and tawdry materials with which to drape the greatest drama ever presented in human experience. The pulpit does not compete with the vaudeville stage, nor should the preacher become buffoon or charlatan to gain his audience. Mr. Horne has finely said on this point a few things worthy of repetition: "Let me lay it down that there is nothing in Holy Writ to warrant the assumption that a man is likely to be more spiritual if he is an ignoramus; or that prophetic power in the pulpit especially attaches to the preacher whose heart is full and his head is empty. Knowledge is really not a disqualification for the ministry; neither is there an incompatibility between the seer and the scholar. Because Festus chose to assume that much learning had made Paul mad, we need not be seriously afraid that a similar cause will be likely to produce that effect in us. That Moses brought to his great democratic task a finely trained, balanced and disciplined intellect was of immeasurable value to him, and gave him at once a portion of personal ascendancy when he came to deal with those whose misfortune it was, that they had been deprived of his advantages." (The Romance of Preaching, pages 58, 59.)

Simplicity of diction must not be confused with slang. To stir the finest emotions it is not required that we be profane. We can speak of heaven and spiritual things in what Saint Paul calls "heavenly conversation." It may be that there are deeper meanings to the "gift of tongues" than that of "unknown languages." Perhaps it means the gift to explain the eternal and heavenly to creatures of time and earth to the satisfaction of their souls through understanding.

The Technique of Worship

Much could and ought to be said of the worship and the order of divine service through which the congregation expresses its spiritual aspirations, and the art which should belong to the minister's conducting of the different forms of worship. Perhaps at this point we may lay down a sure foundation by reminding ourselves of a fact which the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Church seem to remember and the Protestant church in general seem to overlook; that is: We meet in church services primarily to worship God and not to be entertained by the dramatics of the church and its appointments, nor by the organist and choir nor yet by the preacher. It is well to keep in mind that we would gain much if we would make it part of the practice of our religious life to spend a little time in our church in individual communion and even to sit quietly and "think well of the name of God." Because the mediaeval church went to extremes in the mechanical and symbolical aids to worship which tended to put the stress upon the "objective" rather than the "subjective," protestants unhappily all but ignored or treated with contempt the symbols, rituals and sacraments through which the soul enjoys the "unspeakable riches" of God's presence, and through which we "utter things otherwise inexpressible." Worship may be the "parables" through which we worship God as they were the earthly stories through which Jesus spoke the things of God. Happily, today and in our own church there is a strong disposition to recover the "beauty of holiness" in church services.

The noblest evangel, the most powerful ministry can be spoiled by careless and irreverent attitudes and conduct. Sometimes the boisterousness of our social greetings disturb the serenity and calm of spirit which must ever characterize the seeker after God. The Church is God's house, and at least we might be observant of the ordinary courtesies and etiquette that would govern us in visiting our neighbor's home. Sometimes God speaks to our souls "in the still small voice," and we are liable to miss Him because we are so noisy ourselves. There were times when men could not "see Jesus" because they obscured Him by their own stridency. Above all else the purpose of our Sunday services and other opportunities for worship is to cultivate the "presence of God." It would be well to insist "God is in His holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him."

The Meaning of Worship

The qualities of worship should include reverence, exaltation and dedication. The order of our worship is based upon praise, prayer, illumination, and benediction. The purpose of it all must be vision, adoration and unity with God. For this reason worship must be shared in by all. The contributions of the choir, organist and preacher should be directed to make that sharing easy and real. All who take part in the service must be one in the effort. For this reason there must be the closest cooperation between the pastor and the director of music so that the whole service shall be balanced with a view to uniting the entire congregation in the theme of the occasion. The whole service should be an artistic blending of all parts into a perfect whole—a poem of spiritual energy. The ritual should not be too elaborate and intricate, but on the other hand it must not be simple to the point of easy familiarity which engenders contempt. As Doctor Vogt has shown, there is in worship an experience "ineffable, and awful, mysterious and blessed always, which many people may enjoy," but if they will seek through their worship to parallel the most significant elements in their experience with God, all can take part in and secure great comfort of soul through this means.

Much is being attempted by way of experimentation to improve the forms of worship among many of the churches and it might be well for us to consider this aspect of our own ministry especially as the number of congregations with these demands is being increased. "Bad form is ugly and tyrannical. To live without form is to live futilely. Good form may be the very vehicle and guarantee of freedom. Freedom in the experience and in the expression of worship is the gift of technique in the art of worship."

Rites and Ceremonies

While we have comparative few of these features compared with some churches yet we have some very fine and suggestive rites and ceremonies all of which can be made artistic expressions of a religious experience of great value. I speak now of the beautiful ceremony of the blessing of infants; baptism; the laying on of hands; administering to the sick; the Lord's Supper; solemnization of marriages, and the offering. We should develop a technique and cultivate a reverent form in which these ceremonies may be performed with something like art, getting away from the slovenly and careless ways of doing these things. Let us not forget that these rites are symbols—expressions of a spiritual value. They are made sacramental in so far as the "means" are consecrated for sacred uses. The bread and wine take on a spiritual value when they are set apart for this purpose; the oil used in administering to the sick becomes "sacramental" in the same way. The "collection" is another expression of sacramental service, for in the service we not only express our gratitude for God's blessings but together with ourselves we also consecrate our gifts for His service. I may illustrate something of my meaning by elaborating upon these two features a little.

In administering to the sick I have developed a little ritual of my own which I think helps. In using the oil and making the initiatory approach instead of pouring the oil on the head, I saturate my middle finger and then lave the forehead, making use of a formula similar to this: "In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit I anoint you for your healing, praying God's blessing to be with you." Then, the prayer of supplication follows.

The offering in the Sunday services follows the invocation and public recitation of the Lord's prayer. The brethren who take up the offering come to the chancel or the rostrum and I read out the offertory sentence, which is a passage of scripture from the Bible usually; or, the book of Doctrine and Covenants sometimes, after which while the organ plays the offering is taken up, then while the deacon brings the baskets up to the pulpit, the congregation stands and the dedicatory prayer is offered.

"In all of our ways let us consider God who will give us the desires of our hearts."

Whatever we do and whatever may be the instrument which we use as a symbol expressing some spiritual value, it is not what we do nor what we use so much as the spirit in which the thing is done and way we use the instrument. Perhaps the following lines, supposed to have been written by Antonio Stradivarius, will make this clear:

This is my fame—
 When any master holds,
 Twixt chin and hand a violin of mine,
 He will be glad that Stradivari lived,
 Made violins, and made them of the best.
 The Masters only know whose work is good.
 They will choose mine: and, while God gives them skill,
 I give them instruments to play upon,
 God choosing me to help Him.

Extending the Faith

By S. S. Smith

PART I.

The expressive words found in the commission of Christ was laden with spiritual life. This final discourse as it came fresh from the lips of the Savior of men, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," stirred to the depth those lowly apostles that heard it, and they took the matter seriously and literally. From then on their task was obvious, and missionary work was the business of their lives.

The book of the Acts of the Apostles partly chronicles their journeys as well as their achievements in the first century. We trace their march as missionary soldiers in Samaria, Syria, Galatia, Macedonia, Pamphylia, Cyprus, Greece, Rome, and the then distant ports of Hispania.

Tabulation of Accomplishment

We can but think of Paul as an ideal representative of these early times, for he made the purpose of his ministry the predominating thing of his life, and no hardship, trial, or privation, was too great, but what he met it fearlessly and successfully. (2 Corinthians 11: 23-27.) Two centuries later the intrepid missionaries of the church were still fired with the same zeal, and we trace their course into Edessa, Armenia, Media, Persia, Bactria, Parthia, Arabia, India, Cyrene, Carthage, Egypt and Gaul, in fact to the most distant sections of the great Roman Empire.

If the representatives of the church then, with their hampered means of publication, their slow methods of travel, their inadequate ways of doing things, could make such headway as we know they did, why falter on the threshold of this, our day of opportunity, in the fields that now lay open to us with our greatly improved facilities? We little realize the great work these formidable missionaries accomplished, and what their real achievements meant to the nations, and the advanced civilization that followed, for when Rome fell, it fell into the hands of people that knew of Christ and his religion, and such doubtless had its effect on the thought of the world, for their governments and laws were drafted, partly at least, on a Christian basis.

Ours, a Final Witness

To us who have been made the custodians of this latter-day work, he has committed the work of bearing the final witness to the last generation of men. It is not within God's purpose that the gospel should stop with us. There is no such thing as a stagnant Christianity, for when it becomes stagnant it ceases to be Christian. Health-giving water always flows, and the lamp that is functioning in the manner intended by its creator is a lamp that shines. So with the membership, and especially the missionary, each soul to whom the light has come shall pass it on to another. We need men who can refuse the voice and call of the world, yet who are susceptible to the still small voice of the Spirit.

God has not left the world without witness. When the world has reached the flood tide of evil in its highest crest, judgments will be no longer delayed, and destruction will come as surely as it did upon the antediluvians. If faithful we shall escape the great overwhelming flood tide of evil that will engulf the world.

The church does not inflict penalties, penal servitude, imprisonment, bodily misery in penances, nor does it sequester worldly estate to enforce its mandates as a sovereign master of earth. The glory of the church will be to uphold the law of nations, as well as of God, and the glory of our missionary labor will be in the living faith we possess and transmit to others, whose life and strength are laid upon Jesus Christ. The work of the local minister is at home, and the missionary abroad, one being the goal, and the other the starting point.

Missionary Work Not Subsidiary

In our class work and preaching, as well as our quorum and general conference consideration, our purpose should ever be, to get away from the thought that missionary enterprise and work is merely subsidiary—a sort of side-line, and to be reckoned as but an appendage to the routine work of the church. This church is distinctly missionary in toto, if it is anything, and ever will be, so long as it functions properly, for when it ceases in its great missionary objectives, no longer is it the body our Lord intended it to be. It therefore should appear, the whole forward movement of our cause is one of missionary fervor to all nations, and the subsidiary features of it, if any, are something else. We should seek a higher level of understanding and devotion with these objectives in view.

World-wide Propaganda

Those who take this view should stand upon an elevated plane of international as well as inter-racial thinking. It is to be hoped, it is true, we will face unflinchingly the vexatious questions of the church, but probably somewhat differently than in the past, and especially the immediate past, yet from a missionary point of view, it is the old problem of reaching men, but on a wider range of latitude—a more extended scheme of generalization. Ours is the onerous duty, to guard zealously and hold custodianship of the revealed word of God, as well as by prophetic voice speak the living oracle. We must personally live, and faithfully transmit God's message of salvation to man, and that does not mean the people of one nation, or to several nations, but to the nations of earth that are debased. It is our business to elevate them, to open the door, to proclaim liberty, and tell them "the Desire of all Nations" is now ready to receive them into his church.

If the consecrated missionaries of the early centuries, with their limited resources, could subdue the savage instincts and make pliable to gospel influences, the barbarous and hostile nations among whom they sojourned, such as the Celts, Goths, Norsemen, Teutons, Magyars, and Slavs, we should not have a doubting heart and be afraid to tackle the South American republics, the South African provinces, and even India, Japan, China and Mexico. Surely our missionaries could do as great feats as they, and especially so with the cordial and hearty support of the membership of the church behind them.

The proclamation of the great restoration gives evidence of these facts as here stated, and will yet bring to pass a far wider experience such as the church of latter days has never known. It is because of the inherent virtues this work contains, and its superiority to everything else as a solution to human problems, and as a relief to the toiling masses in subjugate poverty with but little chance of relief, that justifies us to offer the message to all mankind, of not only an industrial Zion, but a message that brings peace and joy that the world can not give. This church, through Christ our Lord, has introduced durable ethical principles, and wherever its mandates are honored it invariably produces a high quality of character in a manner known to no other religion of earth. It will therefore be focusing it down to a small magnitude, to know these inherent virtues and not tell the world of them, and also the realities upon which it rests. Rather should we give chance for salvation to the masses that know it not, and then can we say, this church is functioning healthily and giving its full ministry of service.

A General Proclamation

"Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession," seems to some to be a very remote possibility at the present juncture; but yet not so far away if we will envisage this message with the proper spirit. We need to shift the gear of our ecclesiastical machinery from its present localized tendencies, and some phases of modern unwarranted methods, to that of old-time evangelism, and then connect up with the power-line and we are ready to go. Then it is evident the divine purpose in the establishment of the two missionary quorums, the twelve and seventy, stresses the reality, as in former centuries, this great message, again brought back by angels to Joseph Smith was intended to be proclaimed, and this, too, shows the value of missions. It would seem the time is opportune, to turn back and away from the beaten fields, where the twelve and seventy of recent years have trod, where the gospel has long been organized, and leave such local work to the high priests, the evangelical ministers, and the presiding elders and local officers of districts and branches, for such is their distinct work, and thus let the missionary quorums go and be free to minister to the ends of the earth.

It does seem we are nearing the time to act, in launching a far greater and more extended scheme of evangelism than we have ever attempted before. The hastening time being upon us, and the unrest and quickened pulse of the world signals to a more accelerated pace upon our part. Such should act as the spur that gives impetus to all those who possess this responsibility and know the situation. The signs of times, to all those who will look with the eyes of the Spirit, warns to be up and doing, and this should hearten and stimulate all who believe in the love of God, and the power of Jesus Christ, and the redeemableness of the honest of heart of all nations. It therefore looks to the missionary men on Zion's watchtower that the dawning of the morning has indeed come to go forth to a still greater work.

Must Carry On

Our responsibility, under God, as the twelve and seventy, with these weighty duties upon us, imposes again and again, this ever-present task to carry on, and our bounden duty is to create in the souls of men of every nation and kindred and tongue, the desire, and will, for self surrender, for personal sacrifice, for unhesitating loyalty to the truth, and to Jesus Christ and his gospel law; for the reason of the intrinsic values such conveys upon men, for better citizenship, to government, to home and to God. Only by a practical application of what Christ calls "this gospel of the kingdom," can this sin-sick and passion-torn world be saved.

Then let us reread these prophetic pronouncements, let us classify and study them carefully and prayerfully, for the devout reliance we place upon our Lord of missions, the knowledge we serve under his holy priesthood commission, the willingness we submit to his continual spiritual direction, and the devotion and energy we give in extending the faith, will be measured our success as promoters of the noblest enterprise ever propagated among men. Then, no lesson is more clear and definite than this: To honor God and his law, possess the indwelling of the Spirit of God, and have the real stamina to carry out all missionary enterprises. In the cultivation of true missionary endeavor, and in our growth to the stature of a fuller manhood, we will find the safest guarantee for promotion and advancement, not only to ourselves, but to those to whom we administer.

Its Purpose Is Salvation

In missionary apologetics the concept of the Apostle Paul, who preached the gospel to the people that they "might be saved" is the proper one. It is often slighted and misunderstood, however, for some seem to think the world is not to be "saved" in any such manner. They regard the mission of Christ a work of teaching and leading, rather than a work of preaching. This hypothesis is assumed, and the evidence of the other rejected or ignored by such exponents, for in the initial stages of the coming forth of this work those called were to "proclaim the everlasting gospel, by the Spirit of the living God, from people to people, and from land to land." (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 1.) This should be sufficient evidence, but we have it again in the following: "Go ye and preach my gospel, whether to the north or to the south; to the east, or to the west, it mattereth not, for ye can not go amiss; therefore declare the things which ye have heard and verily believe, and know to be true. Behold this is the will of him who hath called you, your Redeemer, even Jesus Christ. Amen." (Doctrine and Covenants 79: 1.)

Then it is evident this great message was to be publicly proclaimed, and that to every nation. It is reasonable to suppose that each nation that is visited, after the introductory stages of its presentation, the continued evangelization may be carried on by that nation's native sons.

The generation in which we live has brought forth many substitutes for the gospel, and some are offered with a degree of success. Many panaceas are heralded for soothing and healing the world's ills and sorrows, and many may and doubtless do think they all have a place in the universal scheme of progress; but let it be said once again, God has restored his church, he has ushered in his dispensation, and it has no other objective only the redemption of the human family by implanting in the hearts of nations the seeds of the kingdom of our Lord.

Reinforcements Needed

As we have passed the century mile-post of our history in the great restoration movement, we today find ourselves facing the most marvelous opportunity of all time for extending the faith. Our hopes should be bright and full of augury for the future, if we but grasp this passing opportunity now awaiting us. The imposing good fellowship of other days, we trust, will not be broken, and we will yet see the reinforcement of our depleted ranks to a far greater extent than at present with called and commissioned men. To accomplish this we must solemnly renew our allegiance to our Lord, and pledge our fidelity to carry on, and call upon our fellow compatriots to a still further sacrificial obedience to the ideals of Christ Jesus as set forth in the spirit and fact of this noble restoration movement. We are destined to see this work accepted far more general than now, and there will be a decided stride towards the ends intended.

Our task for this our second century seems obvious, yet with our limited missionary forces we offer our praise and gratitude for the sacrifices and showing made in the past, but not without a pang of regret over our mistakes and divisions, yet with great hope and a sincere prayer for the future, that in our forward advancement it will be to larger undertakings with the expectancy of immensely larger results.

A Fresh Start

The auspicious gathering of our late general conference gave some evidence at least of a missionary spirit and purpose, which we hope will be the leaven that will unite and germinate our forces more fully, and such will emphasize the evidence of a further need of a vigorous crusade of aggressive evangelism at home and abroad, which will demand our fullest spiritual cooperation. If there is any one thing that distinctly should be stressed, as an outstanding feature and necessity, it is the fact of a stringent need for a fresh start, with a true missionary endowment from on high, inspiring a greater and a deeper revival of vigorous witnessing in behalf of the fundamentals, the distinct objectives, and unrivalled glory and power of our evangel of latter days.

To such a wide missionary program it should and will give a renewed sense of humility, when through these humble advocates has been manifested the power of God to redeem the people. Let us then, turn loose the twelve and seventy from perplexing tasks of local activities in organized branches and districts, that they may launch out into larger fields of evangelism, that the darkened condition of mind of the nations yet unborn to gospel influences, may yet shout for joy, that light has dawned, and that salvation has come to their house.

There is scarcely a single joy or sorrow, within the experience of our fellow creatures, which we have not tasted; yet the belief in the good and beautiful has never forsaken us. It has been medicine in sickness, richness in poverty, and the best of all that ever delight us in health and success.—Leigh Hunt.

Diphtheria

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Diphtheria is an acute infectious disease, which in the old days, the people called malignant quinsy, membranous angina, membranous croup and true croup. It is both epidemic and contagious and has its beginning in the air passages, especially the throat, characterized by a false membrane. It is caused by a specific germ called the Klebs-Loeffler bacillus. This bacteria produces a potent toxic substance, the composition of which is unknown. There are various other germs in all cases, which adds to the severity of the disease. Bad hygiene increases its virulence and is one of the chief causes of its spread. Many people are susceptible to it. The more susceptible one is to the disease, the more severe its manifestations. It is more apt to occur in those who have had a previous attack. About seventy-five per cent of the fatal cases occur in children under five years of age. A catarrhal condition of the nose and throat promotes the growth of the germ and its toxin. The secretions of the nose, throat, and saliva are easily disseminated in the atmosphere and may be found a considerable distance from the patient. The membrane in the throat presents a gray, dirty, bleeding surface. The poison of the diphtheria germs rapidly enters the lymph channels. These channels, in turn, remove as much of it as they can.

The disease frequently starts two days after exposure, beginning with a pain in the throat, with some fever, possibly ranging from 99 to 101 degrees F. and may be mistaken for follicular tonsilitis, which also has a membrane, but not of such a dense, heavy, gray and bleeding form. Soon after the onset of the disease, the glands of the neck, around the ear and angle of the jaw become swollen. If the disease, unfortunately, extends into the windpipe, the child will show signs of obstructed breathing.

Of late years, the microscope has been a great benefit because of its discovery of the germ in the early stages of the disease. In the old days, it was thought that sewer gas, leaky drains, bad gutters, garbage dumps, etc. would cause the disease, but this is not the case, as this is but the lack of sanitary surroundings.

In all cases of the least suspicious sore throats, the persons should have a culture from the throat made, which is simple as the state now provides laboratories with branches in different places, for examination of these cultures. Many physicians are equipped in this manner themselves. Every physician should thus be equipped, should he live in a town that has no other provisions for this.

Under proper treatment, diphtheria is not to be dreaded as much as it was a few years ago. Sometimes its lessened fear is dangerous and has been the cause of quite a number of deaths on account of not applying the proper treatment early enough. This malady is easily spread by infected articles of clothing, discharges of the nose and throat of persons who have recently been affected, and the throats of diphtheria carriers (persons who show no signs of the disease). The milk supply, and animals such as cats, have been the cause of some epidemics.

When the disease begins to extend to the windpipe, hoarseness or complete loss of voice, with a croupy, rasping cough is noticeable. The variety that attacks the windpipe, runs a rapid course, the patient dying from suffocation. The duration of the disease is from two to fourteen days, the average being about nine days, unless complications prolong it. The complications are numerous and may involve the nervous system, set up pneumonia, capillary bronchitis, or heart conditions, causing the patient to die from this sudden cessation of the heart action. Antitoxin is the specific cure for diphtheria, but its efficacy is directly traceable to the promptness with which it is used. Any delay is dangerous; long delays mean death.

"Antitoxin is to diphtheria, what sunshine is to snow."

"A syringe of antitoxin is better than volumes of advice."

"The physician who delays in giving antitoxin belongs with the man who waited until the house burned down to put out the fire."

"Sore throat in diphtheria season is as suspicious as a strange negro in a hen house."

"Great epidemics from little sore throats grow."

"Take no more chances with diphtheria, than with a coiled rattlesnake."

It is not enough to begin; continuance is necessary. Mere enrollment will not make one a scholar; the pupil must continue in the school through all the long course until he has mastered every branch. One who has observed the course of men for many years says that success in life depends upon staying power. The reason for failure in most cases is lack of perseverance. Men get tired and give up.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

Autobiography

XXIII.—NOTES FROM 1909 AND 1910

By James Franklin Mintun

The most important work of the ministry is not of the spectacular sort, and is accomplished in a quiet way. Accounts of routine work are likely to be repetitious. Out of the generous quantities of material furnished by the author we select for presentation to our readers some of the less usual events that will be of interest. The ellipses in the account are represented by the usual little rows of dots. Let the reader understand that they indicate long periods of hard work, filled with preaching services, administrations, and special duties that fall upon the servants of the church.—The Editors.

On the fourth of April I had an experience which gave me added evidence of the history contained in the Book of Mormon, viewing some copper plates, on one was a view of the tower of Babel, another a view of the flood, and on another was the Ten Commandments. These plates were found in this country. . . .

The beginning of the year 1910 found my desires for the onward progress of the church, and a willingness to do my part in that progress, but it found me with conditions in my home that saddened me, wife continually ill, at times worse than others, but with a heart desirous to avoid hindering my work so far as possible, and in association with this one of my children in such condition as to not be able to work at her profession on account of a breakdown in health trying to continue in the schoolroom while passing through a siege of influenza, so that she might be able to assist the family the more, but the lack of wisdom was manifest in that she could do nothing in her work for a year, and yet so ambitious and saddened with her condition that to occupy her time provision was made so that she could take some lessons in stenography as she was able. . . .

There was much sickness among the saints, at the beginning of the year and the attendance was small at all services. As a result of caring for and administering to the many sick as well as at home I became quite ill, yet continued to answer calls for administration, and assisted in every way that I could, under the circumstances in the homes and in the church. . . .

I had an extended conversation with the State Curator, E. R. Harlan, in regard to the lack of information that he found among those with whom he came in contact in regard to our position on polygamy, and when he had been called upon to give a talk he had to correct misunderstandings in this matter. He requested the use of my 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, and carried it with him for about a year or more, and used the evidence therein to assist in correcting misunderstandings on this question. He showed that the church was opposed to polygamy and everything associated with such a sin, in all its teachings in the beginning of the existence of the church. That seemed to be the main error that he was called upon to correct at that time. . . .

I had been a member of the Ministerial Association for over a year, and associated with many of the ministers in temperance work in the Anti-Saloon League, of which I was a trustee, but because I appeared during the conference at a meeting in which Brother W. E. Larue, was making a reply to being refused admittance to the Ministerial Association of Kansas City, the association of which I was a member passed a resolution on May 3, revising their constitution and by-laws, so that missionaries could not be members of it, especially if they were not members of an evangelical church, as they would interpret the word evangelical. Action was taken on my name, and information sent me May 18, the action being taken while I was out of the City attending to funeral services at Pacific Junction. . . .

The association gave as their reasons for expelling me from membership that I did not represent an orthodox or evangelical church. The dailies all gave of their columns freely for me to make reply, and in that reply I challenged the membership committee or any one they would choose of their association to meet me in debate, when I would affirm that I was both orthodox, and evangelical according to the teaching of the Bible. I, in doing this, followed the instruction, "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself." (Proverbs, 25:9.) None would accept the challenge, and this caused some of the ministers to be my friends, and charged those who had been instrumental in the action taken of being cowards, or they would have taken the action when I was present to speak for myself and the church, or else give me a chance to meet the issue later on. . . .

The district convention and conference was held in Des Moines, June 3 to 5, at both of which I assisted. I assisted Brother C. E. Butterworth to hold evangelical services, and give some blessings, from the 6th to 12th, part of the time. On the 6th I was called by phone to come to Runnells to meet some Utah elders, who had been granted the use of the church there, and reply to them. They claimed in answer to inquiries that they were not advocating polygamy. I asked them what they would call the selling or giving away literature that advocated polygamy, and they denied doing that. I asked them if their edition of the Doctrine and Covenants did not have in it a revelation that did teach polygamy, and why were they sending from their mission house in Chicago a tract entitled, "Polygamy," one of which I had with me? They at first denied they were doing that, and finally they admitted they had some of those tracts with them, the same as I had received from their Mission House. They did not remain to use the church further. . . .

I engaged in the debate with W. G. Roberts on the 25th of the month at Ottumwa, Brother Amos Berve acting as moderator, who proved very helpful and agreeable—a pleasant companion. From the beginning Mr. Roberts began such dishonorable tactics, that even the members of his own church would not continue to come; and the audience continued to dwindle down till not more than thirty were in attendance. After completing the church propositions, I expressed a desire to have better order, and the rules more fully observed. The chairman, with the two moderators spent one half hour counseling in regard to order, and decided that there should be a better observance of the rules governing honorable debate. For a session the rules were better observed and I was encouraged, with the exception that the audience continued to dwindle. I then gave notice to Mr. Roberts publicly that if this disorderly method continued with him, I would at the close of this proposition on the Book of Mormon, refuse to continue the debate on the fourth proposition. His charges against the Saints, and the ministry of the church unaccompanied by any argument or evidence, was not a part of honorable debate, and he was asked to desist from it by the chairman and moderators, but he would not. When he was called to order, and the chairman would decide against him, he would say, "All right" and then begin as bad or worse than before, and the chairman finally concluded that Mr. Roberts could not be held to the rules with a "block and tackle," as he expressed it. At the close of the second night of the debate, Brother Berve said, "Brother Mintun what have you decided to do?" I said, "I will sleep upon that question, and let you know in the morning." I arose early, having had during the night an outline to follow in what I should do. I prepared an answer to the matter that was pertinent, and made my affirmative argument in favor of the Book of Mormon the first session, then I outlined my statement to present the last ten minutes of the last session, when I would withdraw from further debating, giving my reason for it. I took this to the chairman before the evening, and advised with him, and he said that, "No honorable man could do less than you have decided." Mr. Roberts had the closing speech, and he arose after I had read my reasons for not continuing to debate with him, and said, "I never was so ill-treated in all my life." He had

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.

And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

And when he saw them, he said unto them, go show yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God,

And fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?

There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.—Luke 17: 11-19.

Gratitude for Answer to Prayer

What was the prayer of the ten lepers? It was a very short one, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us," but it must have been uttered in faith, for the effects were immediate.

It was not for vanity or for vindication that Jesus sent the ten men to the priests, but to comply with the law, in order that the rule of exclusion from society might be suspended for the healed men.

Jesus was disappointed that only one of the ten was grateful enough to return and give thanks for the answer to his prayer. And, sadly enough, the grateful man was a Samaritan—an outsider. Nor was Jesus disappointed to lose the praise of the other healed men. He was disappointed to find the men of his own country so heartless. If they would treat Him whom they called Master that way, how would they treat each other? What a quality of character it revealed in the men! How long before such people could be made ready for the Kingdom!

It is easy for us to condemn those of ancient times nothing to say that related to debate. At the close Mr. Roberts, moderator, a very good man, came and desired to know what items I had prepared to use in the next proposition, "The Bible is the perfect will of God to man, essential to his salvation." I sent these items to him afterwards. When I bid Mr. Roberts "Good bye," I said, "Mr. Roberts, when you can decide that you will act the part of a gentleman, and observe the rules of debate agreed upon, I will meet you in the future upon any prominent difference between the church you claim to represent and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. You can keep that in mind!" I have not heard from him since. . . .

I closed the year with the good will of all Saints and friends so far as I had any knowledge, for which I was glad, for I had labored under quite a handicap on account of sickness, especially with my wife. My labors was not fraught with the results that I would have been glad to see, but God approved of what I had done for the salvation of souls and the encouragement of the burdened from any and all causes.

for their ingratitude. But how often are we grateful for the blessings that we receive in answer to prayer? It is very easy to go our way and not think about praying until the next time we are in trouble. As we read the Bible we observe that the only way the Lord could keep in touch with the children of Israel was to keep them in trouble of some kind. Modern people are often like that.

The prayer of gratitude reveals a greater soul than does the prayer for help. Gratitude is the mark of the mature and balance soul.

A LETTER FROM ONE WHO WAS HELPED

A letter from Sister E. E. Barnard, of Kingsley, Michigan, brings the following expression of gratitude: "Two months have passed away since I requested the Saints to pray for me that I might be healed. . . . I wish to thank all who have remembered me to God in their prayers, for their prayers were not prayed in vain, and I received the desired blessing. To God I give the honor and the praise. . . . I can not thank my heavenly Father and the Saints enough for their loving-kindness to me." She admonishes us: "Do not fail to pray for those who ask for help by prayer. We do not know how much in need they may be."

She Only Wanted an Invitation

By Ella Lambkin

I called on a woman who has been confined to her bed for weeks suffering the pains of rheumatism. I called because I felt that I should. I did not want to go. A few weeks before my husband and I had called and the poor soul was suffering so terribly that it was distressing to see her. When we left she said, "Will you ask the people to pray for me tonight?"

Besides my natural dislike of seeing suffering the woman is so deaf that I can not make her hear a word.

But she has been attending Sunday school for some time, although not a member. Anyway I could not get rid of the feeling that I ought to go and see her on this particular Sunday. I got up quickly and went before I could have time to put it off.

A half hour later I left that house more deeply stirred than I have been in a long time and the above question has troubled me since.

When I went in I found the patient's sister from Philadelphia there. She appeared to be a very pleasant woman, rather jolly.

I walked around the bed thinking that I had come at a most inopportune time since the patient had turned over to take a nap. She looked at me for a moment in a dazed, half asleep way, then she reached out a thin hand and said, "Oh, I'm so glad you've come." I sat beside her with her hand in mine. There was some general conversation and then she began to talk.

"When we first came here," she said, "I wanted my children to go to Sunday school somewhere. There was a little church where they could go right down the alley and be perfectly safe to go alone. I sent them every Sunday and they liked going. Then one day some people from another Sunday school came to see me and asked me to send the children to their Sunday school. I told them I was sending them to Sunday school nearby. The woman said, 'But you don't want them to be Mormons do you?' Do you know that up to that time I never had paid any attention to what church it was. The old man we rented our house from belonged to the church so I decided that the first time I had a chance I would ask that old man about the name of the church." She stopped talking and looked out the window.

Her sister said, "She forgets sometimes that she is talking. She doesn't talk much anyway."

But the dear old lady was not forgetting—she was remembering—living over again an evening that was pleasant to think about. She began again.

"I was sitting on the porch one evening—it was a pleasant evening—the sun was going down behind the trees. The old man came up the street and turned in to my porch. He said, 'I was lonesome and thought I'd come over and talk a little. My wife had to go away tonight.'" She smiled at the memory. "I said, 'I am lonesome, too.'" Her husband worked nights.

Then she asked him about the name of the church, and he explained about people calling them Mormons because they believe in the Book of Mormon, but said that was not the name of the church. He told her about the congregation there and the pleasant times they had.

"And do you know," she went on, "even then no one invited me to go to church."

Soon the people built a house on Main Street, and a short time afterward the Saints built a new church right across the corner from it.

"I used to think they seemed like such nice quiet people," she went on. "I would like to go over. I knew a number of them. And I used to watch the ladies come on Thursday to quilt and wish I could go over and join them. They seemed so nice and they always seemed to be having such a good time. I like to quilt. After we came here I used to go back to East Saint Louis on the street car to meet with the women and quilt. Then I got rheumatism so the last time I went I had to crawl up on the street car. I had to give that up."

There was another pause and the sister said, "I haven't heard her talk like that since I came here. She usually doesn't say much." Then the story started again. The whole story was so clear in her mind that I am sure she had been lying there for days living over again those days of intense desire, for what—for an invitation to the Latter Day Saint Sunday school—the Latter Day Saint Aid.

"One evening I said to my husband," she took up the story, "'Every couple in the neighborhood are going down the street. Let us go, too. Let's go to a show.'" We went to the show and walked home with Mr. and Mrs. J. and Mrs. J. was saying how sore her finger was from quilting and tomorrow was quilting day again. I said, 'Are you short of quilters then?' and she said, 'Yes, there used to be six or seven, but now there are only three of us and we have so much to do.'" The smile came again at the memory of her angling for an invitation. "Would it be all right if I came and helped?" she asked, and Mrs. J. said, "Sure, we would be glad to have you." An invitation at last!

The next day she went over to the church with her shears and her needle and thimble. She went in and didn't see anyone. She thought she must be early so sat down in a seat to wait. "Then," she said, "I thought maybe I ought to call some one, so I said, 'Mrs. Boren.' And Mrs. Boren said, 'Hello, come on up here.'"

I had heard the same story before from others but never sensed the long waiting, the intense desire to join the group, the happy elation over the first invitation. Can it be possible, do you suppose, that there are others about us who are wishing they had an invitation to join us? While we go along thinking that everyone is looking down on us because of our religion, are there actually lonely souls who envy the comradely freedom of our association so typical of Latter Day Saints? Do we appear clannish as though we do not want others to bother our closely-knit group? Supposing we invite a dozen people who laugh at our invitation and ignore it, might we better not do that than risk missing one hungry soul who waits our asking?

I wonder if we sometimes forget that we have the best thing on earth and we shouldn't be selfish with it.

The dear old lady finally said, "You know the other time when you were here with your husband, and I asked you to pray for me? My arms hurt me so all day that I couldn't rest. Later that evening the pain suddenly left and I said to the nurse, 'I believe the people are praying for me,' and I rested all night without pain."

A Question of Equality

As I read Brother H. W. Savage's letter in the Herald of April 27, I felt that it doubtless voiced the unexpressed desires of many others. I, too, had anxiously watched the papers for any news of the several little groups in the church who, we had heard, were working cooperatively.

Brother Savage thinks that the reason people have not been more interested in getting a cooperative movement started in the church is that each thinks he is enough of a business man to keep ahead of the crowd and thus secure more for himself. This doubtless is the case in some circumstances but in many more I believe it is the feeling that the officers in such a movement will have to be endowed with a special spirit of discernment as were those among the early Christians, to make the movement successful. It will take divine wisdom to keep out the parasite that would fatten off the work of others in such an organization as much as the capitalists do now in the present system.

"Oh, but," says one, "It will not be that way in Zion. We will each be just one big family there, all working together for the advancement of Zion." I sincerely hope it is that way there now. I have not been there lately, but twenty odd years ago some of the study classes in the Religio could only be entered by one's having an invitation. Also a charitable organization of the sisters selected its membership that way. Does that look as though all were willing to work together?

I have heard it argued that equality does not mean the same amount for each person. That the people have been brought up in such different environment and some had been accustomed to having things so different from others that their needs would be greater than those who had led a more simple life. That that was what the Lord meant by "each having his just wants and needs."

If that is the correct explanation of the phrase, "just wants and needs," why the need for any change at all? That is the same system we are living under now. Why take away from those who have a relatively large share of property now to give to those who desire and think they need more than their average brothers? Also why did the Lord say in temporal things we should be equal, otherwise we could not be equal in spiritual things? Does it not look, rather, as if the Lord intended to raise up those who had not had opportunity and advantages and give them a just reward for their labor while those who have been getting more than their share of the same because they were reaping much of the profits of their brothers' labor should come down and live on a medium level with them?

Perhaps this depression is the schoolmaster that will teach us to be more fraternal and get us in a proper frame of mind, so the Lord can use us in his plan for Zion building.

I often think of a dream or vision that Brother Ammon White had about how the redemption of Zion would be brought about. As I remember it, it stated that it would be brought about by power; that its officers would have the same spirit of discernment that condemned Ananias and Sapphira.

If we will set about in earnest molding our dispositions and developing our characters to be worthy of our high calling, I believe the Lord will not be slow in giving us further instructions about Zion building.

Mrs. C. F. B.

Editorial Note: One of our members, searching among some old tracts, came across the following passage on equality, written by the late Bishop E. L. Kelley, which gave so appropriate a comment on the problem in the writer's mind that we thought it well to reprint it here.

Equality

Equality is the condition or quality of being equal. Persons under this condition are neither superior nor inferior; greater nor less; better nor worse.

This does not mean that one is just as tall as another, or that all must weigh in the same notch, eat the same amount of food, or sing well in the same key; but it does mean that there are no servants and no masters, no exalted and no debased, none specially privileged and none whose rights are specially abridged.

In temporal matters each is supplied according to "his needs and wants inasmuch as his wants are just." But it is not necessary that all shall engage in the same business, or work at the same trade, nor that they shall have the same sized family, nor have a stewardship of the same amount of property. The equality of the holding is based upon the needs and just wants of all and is determined according to the reasonable demands, circumstances, business capabilities, talents, and calling of each.—Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The program of Christian education consists of all those activities and processes which, under intelligent direction, enable persons to become increasingly Christlike and to work together in achieving a Christian world.—International Journal of Religious Education.

We are doing a great deal toward making ourselves look old and ugly when we give way to worry and fretfulness.—Ruskin.

Toronto, Canada

Speakers from the local priesthood for the past few weeks were Bishop A. F. McLean and Elders James A. Wilson, James Pycock, B. H. Hewitt, Percy Farrow, Douglas Cameron, and others. This city was also favored with a visit by Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith who preached two Sundays and gave fifty-two blessings during his stay. Patriarch John Shields was here at the same time and gave seventeen blessings. The Saints were much pleased to have the help of these brothers.

Several men of the branch were called the first Sunday of June to officiate in the priesthood: Eldon Oliver and James Bavington, priests; Samuel Crump, teacher, and Allen Bailey, Kenneth Pugsley, and William Dean, deacons. The names of these men were then presented to the Toronto branch business meeting, and after each had expressed his willingness to act, the calls were endorsed and prepared for presentation to the Toronto district conference in October, as required by the new regulations passed at the General Conference in April. None of these candidates is over twenty-seven years old, and the Saints are happy in the thought that the Lord has called them and is preparing them for responsible positions.

The children's department held a special service Sunday morning, June 19. After an appropriate program, several were added to the church. Elder J. L. Prentice baptized six and Patriarch John Shields, one. The candidates were confirmed the following Sunday morning at the commencement of the prayer service. The branch is pleased to see the results from this department under the able leadership of Sister Elsie Castle, supervisor.

The department of women is running on schedule. Sister Mary Wilson, the supervisor, assisted by the other officers tries to get results just as if there was no depression. With their banquets and demonstration dinners in which the meal is supplied free and the department gets the full price of the ticket, with tours of inspection in which the workers take one hundred women through a plant or store and receive twenty-five dollars for each visit; with educational talking pictures presented at the church by the government from which the women get the collection, and with the twelve groups at work on different enterprises under their respective captains, the women lose no time. They also have rummage sales, home cooking sales, and lawn socials. In their meeting the last of June, they gathered in about four hundred dollars from their groups in less than ten minutes and passed a resolution presenting a check to the pastor, Brother J. L. Prentice, for $958.75 covering the interest on the church mortgage for six months ending July 1. With real optimism they then made plans for the coming three months.

Toronto Branch was pleased to have present on a recent Sunday the new missionary in charge, Apostle D. T. Williams. He presided over the young people's prayer meeting at 8.30 and also the general prayer service at 9.45. Then he addressed the church school at noon and was the speaker in the evening, his topic being "The Test." Brother Williams spoke at Humber Bay Monday night and at Woodbridge Tuesday night. He went to Guelph to speak Wednesday evening on his way to the Port Elgin reunion.

The department of young people has been arranging for the young people's convention, preparing the cantata, "The Shepherd Boy," and playing in the Latter Day Saint Tennis Club. Toronto members are happy to see that Brother James Bavington, supervisor of this department, has been appointed by general church officers to serve on the young people's advisory council.

North Dakota Reunion Is Active

Saints of North Dakota were very happy to meet again at the old grounds near Logan, to hold reunion, June 22 to 26. Beautiful weather and optimism on the part of the people in these trying times helped many members to find their way to meet here.

Fortunate indeed were the members to have Apostle J. F. Curtis and Elder P. T. Anderson, missionary to this State, as speakers. They brought messages of peace and love as manifested to them through the heavenly Father. Brother Anderson made each one resolve to be "doers of the word, and not hearers only." Brother Curtis presented the gospel principles so clearly, that many friends were convinced of its truth.

After preaching service Saturday, the members toasted marshmallows over a bonfire (the rain did not stop them), and then enjoyed a song fest around the glowing embers. Singing "Graceland Forever" must have inspired five others to enter the old "West Door" this fall. Anyway six persons plan to attend Graceland from North Dakota.

Sunday morning, June 26, Brothers Frank Spaulding and W. K. McElwain were ordained to the office of elder. The baby son of Brother Allen Stredwick was blessed, and the ministers administered to six sisters.

Four children were baptized by Priest Laurel V. McElwain Sunday afternoon.

The district conference was held Saturday afternoon with Apostle J. F. Curtis in the chair, assisted with Warren McElwain, who was elected district president for the coming year. The district voted to send two hundred dollars to the Bishop in this sacrifice period.

A very fine spirit prevailed throughout the reunion. Each person left the grounds for his home with new courage and determination to do God's will, and carry His message to others.

Iowa City, Iowa

Doctor Lee Edward Travis, professor of speech pathology at the University of Iowa, spoke on "A Scientist's Interpretation of Life" as the second of the Edward Partridge lectures at the Iowa Memorial Union Sunday evening, June 26. Harry Lorange was chairman.

Scientists today, Doctor Travis said, have largely discarded the mechanistic theory of life and consider "Life" itself as the fundamental, organizing principle in the universe—the force that is not subject to further analysis and that makes individuals more than just the sum of their chemical elements. Science as a profession is followed often at the price of criticism, ridicule, and social ostracism, but it has also its rewards—one good discovery is worth everything.

The "true" scientist, as Doctor Travis pictured him, is humble; he sees the many-sidedness of questions and can not be dogmatic or dictatorial, can not be too sure of his facts. He is sympathetic toward his fellow men, knowing the interdependence of human beings. He is religious, awed by working in the presence of phenomena beyond his understanding, realizing his own insignificance.

The following "new" people, most of them former Gracelanders, are in town for the summer session of the University: Mr. and Mrs. Brand Banker, Mr. and Mrs. John Blackmore, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Donald, James W. Evans, Mrs. L. E. Flowers, A. R. Gilbert, Wendell Gillen, Elsie Hammer, Ruth Hansen, Keith C. Harder, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. L. William Johnson, Bob Kelley, Edmund G. Kelley, Noble Kelley, Harry Lorance, Mr. and Mrs. Howard McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Methner, Almer Sheehy, Vera Travis, and Jack Williams.

Elder and Mrs. Charles Harpe, of Lamoni, were present at the group meeting Sunday evening, June 26. Mrs. Harpe has been at the university hospital for some time with her two daughters, Ruth and Muriel, who have been ill.

A baby daughter was born to Doctor and Mrs. Lonzo Jones June 24. The Joneses are now living at Mount Burge Farm, several miles out from Iowa City. Mr. and Mrs. Donald Jones are managing the farm and dairy.

Portland, Oregon

The Saints here have been greatly encouraged by the wonderful reports coming from General Conference.

This congregation was sorry to lose Brother D. B. Sorden and family from this field. The Saints not only have enjoyed having them here, but have benefited greatly by their quick understanding and intelligent and spiritual leadership. Under their influence the members have grown considerably, and while they regret the change that was necessary, they are happy to realize that another branch will have this same opportunity of development under Brother and Sister Sorden's splendid spirit of loyalty and consecration.

On Friday evening, June 3, a dinner and reception were held in the lower auditorium of the church to welcome Brother and Sister Velt, new missionaries to this district. Over one hundred attended. Elder W. H. Barker was toastmaster and short speeches of welcome and pledges of support were made by the divisional leaders. Much amusement was caused when many members at the banquet table were introduced to the Velts by a small group of singers who had composed a verse about each one, to the tune of "Yankee Doodle." At nine o'clock the group met in the main auditorium where a forty-five minute concert was enjoyed. This consisted of violin solo, H. I. Velt; piano solo, Perry Hunt; vocal solos, Fay Buchanan, Lloyd Appleman and Sister H. I. Velt; duet, Fay Buchanan and Lila Livingston; trios, Ardath and Matie Young, Ruby Hunt, Fay Buchanan and Lila Livingston. The evening was well enjoyed by all, and the Saints are happy to have Brother and Sister Velt here.

Children's Day and Decision Day, June 12, was observed here with the children's division giving a fine dramatization of "The Call of Samuel," in the main auditorium during the church school hour, and a children's baptismal service at the eleven o'clock hour in the lower auditorium. The children's program was in charge of Sisters Effie Verhei and Carolyn Larson.

During the weeks preceding Children's Day, the associate pastors, Brothers J. L. Verhei and A. Livingston, who have been in charge of the branch since Brother Sorden left, visited the children who were prospects for baptism, and talked with them and their parents. A fine spirit attended these visits, and the children, all between the ages of eight and thirteen, seemed to sense keenly the step they were taking. With the splendid work that has been and is being done in the children's division of the church school and junior church, the branch can look forward to consecrated and intelligent workers. Surely if the parents will keep up the good work that is being carried on the short time these children are under the influence of consecrated workers on Sunday and week days, their children will not be lacking in knowledge and the spirit of the church.

Eleven boys and girls were baptized at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday, by Brother W. H. Barker, at an impressive and beautiful service. The font was decorated with ferns and baskets of flowers. Two tiny tots sang "Let Them Come to Me," and the whole children's division responded with "Youth's Prayer." Confirmation services followed immediately. A special quartet sang a dedication hymn. Three of the children baptized were from Sherwood, a mission twenty miles away, presided over by a Portland priest, Brother Clark Livingston. The Sherwood Saints met here that day.

Annual election of officers was held June 14. Brother J. L. Verhei was elected branch president, after being recommended by Apostle J. A. Gillen, who presided over the meeting. Brother Verhei has been an associate pastor for several years and is a loyal and earnest young man. Sister Fay Buchanan is choir director for the year, and Brother Paul Hardy, is branch secretary. Albert Livingston and W. H. Barker have been chosen by Brother Verhei as his associates, with Brother Livingston as director of religious education.

The Saints are very happy to have Apostle J. A. Gillen again after a four-year absence from the Northwest. They feel that with his centering his activities in the immediate Northwest, they shall be greatly blessed through his nearness, and that through his influence they can reach new heights of spirituality. His three splendid sermons here gave the congregation determination to set about accomplishing its goal more earnestly. The force with which he stated he knew the source of the message which he brought, made every Saint realize that God has not forgotten his people, and is ready and willing to bless them beyond all hopes if they will but live higher.

On a recent Wednesday evening the Saints were made happy when Robert Bailey senior, and Robert Bailey junior, father and son from Sherwood, were baptized in the font at Portland, just before the prayer service. Brother Clark Livingston officiated. Sister Cecil Bailey has been a member of the church for years, and since two young daughters were baptized Children's Day, this baptism of husband and son completes the family circle, leaving only one small daughter not yet eight years of age. The prayer service following the confirmation was of unusual good spirit.

Portland has been made sad by the death of several Saints during the last few months.

Sister Alice B. Savage, mother of Sister E. A. Roycraft, passed away the early part of the winter. She has been a faithful member and had many friends in Portland.

Sister Carrie Sund, an aunt of Carroll Olson, church statistician, passed away early in the spring. Her death came as a shock, as she was ill only a few hours. Sister Sund had been residing with her sister, Mrs. Herbert Haskell, near Camas, Washington, for the past two years, but before that, had lived in Portland for a number of years. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her, for hers was a lovely life, entirely devoted to helping others and the church. She is mourned by many and missed by all.

Two of the younger people have gone on just recently. Leonard A. Shultz, age nineteen years of Tillamook died May 19. He had an operation in which a kidney was removed, some time ago, and never fully recovered. Little Ray Moore, son of Forest and Thelma Moore, died May 29, after a short illness. Ray had been ill three or four years of his short life, but for the last year or so had been growing stronger and more healthy. It was hoped that he was gradually overcoming whatever was preying upon his strength. Medical treatment seemed to be of no avail, and only through administration by the elders could he seem to get much relief during his years of illness. Sympathy goes to the bereaved ones.

Sacrifice week has just closed, and while local results are not yet checked, the members are hoping each has done his or her part. They are remembering the church in prayer and are hoping to remember, too, that sacrifice will not end with this week. If the church is to succeed in her task without serious restriction, the members must meet the needs of the day with more consecrated effort. While many of the Saints here have had their wages cut to an almost impossible living scale, few are out of work entirely. While their giving power, financially, may be lessened, it should be a call to them to increase their praying power, and this seems to be the case. So they are hoping that where they are restricted financially, they shall overcome through prayer and personal consecration.

Jefferson City, Missouri

At last the few members of the church living in Missouri's capital city have secured a small church in which to meet. The members bought a store, and the brothers have remodeled it into a neat little meeting house. It is located at 1400 South Monroe Street, eleven blocks south of the courthouse.

A full house for Sunday school and preaching service was enjoyed the last two Sundays of the month of June. Local priesthood members are faithful in taking charge of services and bringing the gospel message to the people. The group is feeling fine after having spent some years moving from one place to another. Visitors are very welcome at their services. When you go to Jefferson City telephone Brother Wintermyer, 1006J; J. E. Dawson, 1547 Blue, or Roscoe Moorman, 2469.

Detroit, Michigan

Detroit's Beacon Light

The women's department met June 7, at First Church, for its closing meeting of the season. A luncheon had been arranged under the supervision of Mrs. Emory Fultz, who had group number eight to assist her. The occasion was a surprise birthday party for Nellie H. Harkness, city supervisor. At the end of the luncheon Mrs. Henrietta Davis presented Mrs. Harkness with a leather desk set, a gift from the city-wide women's department. Following the acknowledgment of Mrs. Harkness, the annual business meeting took place, and resulted in the unanimous reelection of the entire roster of officers for the coming year. Group number six under the direction of Mrs. Deens, of River Rouge, made its annual report and turned in one hundred sixty-five dollars to the mortgage fund, for which this group of women is to be highly commended. The next meeting of the women will be September 13.

The young people's circle lately organized by Elder J. Charles Mottashed is proving successful. Their first outing was a wiener roast at Zachariah Chandler Park, followed by a strawberry social at First Church, and a splash party at Jefferson Beach. This group is composed of the young people from five groups, and every person between the ages of sixteen and twenty is invited to attend.

First Church

June 13, First Church held its annual business meeting for the election of officers. Brother George Booth was unanimously reelected to the office of pastor. All other officers were sustained with the exception of the leader of the department of recreation and expression, Guy Armstrong, who resigned, Maxine Talberg takes his place.

Children's Day was distinguished by a program by the children. They sang songs and gave recitations. Two babies were blessed, Frederick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Skinner, and Ronald James, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Heaviland. Also two little girls, Ruth Oliver and Jacqueline Mitchell, were confirmed.

First Church young people enjoyed services June 20, with Pontiac young people. Luncheon was served at noon in the church basement, and at three o'clock the young people of the various branches entertained with a musical program and a church history play.

Miss Marguerite Heaviland and Miss Margaret Ayres graduated in June from Cooley High School.

East Side Church

June 15, the annual business meeting for election of officers was held after the prayer service, Elder J. Charles Mottashed in charge. The following officers were elected: pastor, Elder Wilbert Richards; secretary, Roy Stark; statistician and chorister, Elidora Richards; pianist, Ilene Lively; superintendent of Sunday school, Gerhard Gustavus; superintendent of recreation and expression, Elizabeth Lively; junior church leader, Lucy Volz; publicity agent, Gilbert Gustovus. Following the meeting the women of Group thirteen served strawberry shortcake and ice cream.

People of East Side thank Brother Belrose for his splendid service as superintendent of Sunday school for the past four years. He was compelled to discontinue his work on Sunday mornings because of his daily work which makes it necessary for him to work far into Saturday night.

Wyandotte Church

Brother Vincent Schaar, of Orin, Michigan, has been lending his efforts in the interests of missionary work here.

Successful Reunion for Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota Districts

Considering the very trying financial situation found everywhere, it was difficult for officers of these districts to forecast the kind of a gathering this year's reunion would be. But everyone concerned is happy to say that the reunion of Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota, held at Chetek, Wisconsin, July 1 to 4, was very successful.

Saints were present from Minneapolis, Princeton, and Carlton, Minnesota, and from Durand, Chetek, Antigo, Ladysmith, and Madison, Wisconsin. The meetings were much enjoyed by all.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was present and preached some fine missionary sermons. A number not of the church seemed much interested.

Good classes were taught by Brother Wesley Elvin, who also acted as secretary and treasurer of the reunion. Brother Elvin did much to make the reunion successful.

Food was largely donated by Saints of Chetek, and cooking and serving were done by local members. Those who did not bring food to the grounds were charged fifty cents a day; children under ten, free. Other camping facilities were free, those in charge trying to make the reunion as inexpensive as possible. The Saints subscribed liberally to the expense of the reunion, and payment of indebtedness on the cottage located on the reunion ground.

Everyone went home happy in the assurance that God is still caring for his people. They firmly believe that as many of the Saints as prove loyal to the work of the church, will find there a consolation not found anywhere else in the world.

There are many sincere Saints in Wisconsin and Minnesota who are trying to fight the good fight of faith and are pressing toward Zion.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

June 19 was the fifth anniversary of the dedication of the local church building. Bishop H. E. French and Patriarch J. E. Matthews preached splendid sermons, and God's Spirit was present in power. The choir rendered several beautiful anthems. This day was another milestone in the history of the branch.

Saints of Second Branch remembered the month of prayer and sacrifice, and tried to do their part to help the church in its time of need.

Wednesday evening, June 15, six adults were baptized by J. E. Matthews. They were Barbara Brassine, Cora McNeal, C. H. Hamilton, Ruth Hamilton, Arlene Cramer, and Donald Pendleton. A beautiful spirit was present at the confirmation service. J. E. Matthews gave the charge to the new members. Elders G. H. Kirkendall, J. E. Matthews, W. B. Reeves, and R. E. Madden confirmed the new members. The Saints rejoice that God has seen fit to bring this splendid group into the gospel work. Their prayers in behalf of these candidates were answered.

The June sacrament service, in charge of R. E. Madden and J. E. Matthews, was marked by the presence of the Holy Spirit which encouraged the congregation. In the evening "Prophetic Vision" was the theme of G. H. Kirken-dall's sermon.

The women's department met June 9, at the cottage of Blonde Carey, twenty-seven being present. Meetings of this group are made happy and helpful by thoughtful discussion and reading. A paper, "The Gospel as Taught at the Time of Christ" was read by Viola Wemlinger. The variety program was good and many helpful thoughts were expressed in poems and articles.

The department gave a bake sale and rummage sale during the month, clearing more than sixty-two dollars.

June 12, was Children's Day and the church was appropriately decked with flowers. The program of stories, pantomimes, recitations, and songs was given by and in charge of the children.

In the evening Doctor W. B. Reeves preached on "Friendship, the Sweetest Influence."

Artland, Saskatchewan

This region is having lovely weather. Plentiful rains are providing moisture, and crops are looking good.

Brother Will Cornish has gone to Loon Lake to organize a branch. He also has been visiting Saints out in the district.

Four children were baptized on Children's Day.

Brother Ralph Vauter and family, and Sister Vauter's brother, Herald McWillus, from Czar, Alberta, have moved into this community to make their home. Local Saints are pleased to have them.

Brother Herald McWillus decided life was too lonely to bear alone, and recently made a visit to his former home, returning a few days later with a wife. Brother A. J. Cornish officiated at the wedding.

Brother Thomas E. Harper has been very sick, but is improving. He is home from the Macklin Hospital, where he was under the doctor's care for nearly three weeks.

Brother A. J. Cornish is planning to take a number of members in his truck to Saskatoon when he goes to attend the conference.

The Baldwins Visit Belleville

Did you ever go into the home of a Latter Day Saint family to find that you could talk of business with Father, of the children and the neighbors with Mother, of parties and school with the young folks, but with no one could you start a conversation about the church? Let me assure you that this was not the home of Belleville Saints in the last three weeks. The first thing you will hear and the last, if you call, is the church, what it is doing, what it must do, the new objectives, the beauty and reasonableness of the doctrine, and who has been and who is going to be baptized.

Even among the little folks you will hear of their class work, their new songs, and above everything else, their part in the sacrifice period. You will hear how they went without ice cream cones, walked home from church to save their carfare, went without candy that their pennies might go into their box, and be placed on the altar with the others.

What is back of all this enthusiasm? Evangelist Richard Baldwin and his good wife, Alice. They have been holding services in Belleville, Illinois for three weeks and are to continue another week. They have been treating Belleville people to an old-time gospel experience with an ultra modern touch that does not detract from its stirring qualities, but rather adds to them.

Our morning service is not a merger of two services. It is one united service with one theme carried through smoothly and effectively. Sister Baldwin is largely responsible for the worship program, which seems to fit into the theme of the sermon so that the worship program is the introduction to the service and the sermon is the climax.

The close of Sacrifice Week was celebrated with an effective program and sacrifice service in which the congregation marched to the altar, led by the children, and left its gifts.

Brother and Sister Baldwin are a fine team. She has shown her ability to support him in his work through the whole series of services. On the other hand we have had some interesting demonstrations of his equal ability to support her. At a special service held for church school workers there was one such demonstration. At the Fourth of July picnic when Sister Baldwin had charge of the recreation, it was noted that Brother Baldwin was unostentatiously in exactly the right place to be of the most help in the games.

Brother Baldwin is a very positive speaker. His whole-hearted belief in the thing he teaches has a strong effect upon the hearer. His sermons are like a stream of clear water, so deep that the adult thinker finds it stimulating and so clear that the children can see the point.

The results? Eight were baptized on the third of July. The Saints have renewed their faith in the God of Israel, of Moses, and of Joseph Smith. There has come to them a new appreciation of the precious message delivered to the Saints of latter days.

Holden Stake

Knobnoster

Knobnoster Branch hopes to move forward in the grand procession of the Saints of God.

Many were disappointed to learn that Brother G. R. Wells could not serve here longer as pastor. His splendid sermons and wise counsel were a source of inspiration.

At the annual business meeting, Elder J. T. Nutt was elected pastor; Ben Kramer, church school director, and Sister Elsie Nutt, director of music.

Children's Day was fittingly observed June 12. An interesting program was given at the eleven o'clock meeting, in charge of Sister Nutt and Burgess. Three children were baptized by the pastor.

Bennet Enfield, a worthy young man, was graduated from Knobnoster High School last spring. He is contemplating entering Graceland College in the fall.

A good sacrament service was held July 3. Brother Erwin Moorman and family, of Independence, were present and contributed to the success of the service. The pastor is making a consistent effort to "feed the flock."

Bishop J. A. Koehler and Elder W. H. Eliason have been recent visitors, and their sermons were well received. Men of the local priesthood occupying the pulpit recently, were E. E. Petre and E. L. Moorman.

Post Oak

May 29, a memorial service was held. The names of all deceased members were read and the sermon was by Brother F. L. Sawley. Brother Sawley visited with the Saints two weeks. As he said, he was tired in body, but strong in the faith, and his sermons are wonderful.

June 5, Brother W. S. Macrae and Brother W. H. Eliason were here.

Church school officers were recently elected. Brother Manly Snedd was chosen and elected superintendent. Brother Ernest Ensley has supervision of the adult department, Sister Manly Snedd, of the juniors. Efficient service has been given by Brother Lester Hutchinson, who has been the superintendent for a number of years, and his efforts have been much appreciated.

June 12, the children of Post Oak and Clinton gave a fine program. A talk was made by Brother S. S. Smith at the close. Brother Smith is the Holden Stake missionary.

At two thirty, four children were baptized by Brother Duffy and Beckett. They were, Louise Anders, Laura Snedd, Marion Hutchinson, and Robert Kirk. They were confirmed at the evening service, and a good sermon was preached by Brother Smith.

An aged sister, Comorah Landon, who has been sick for the past four months, has been taken to her daughter's at Pittsburg, Kansas, to be cared for. Sister Landon is eighty-six years of age. Should any Saints in Pittsburg care to call on her, the address is 103 East Madison Street.

Lamoni Stake

Children's Day at Lamoni

Lamoni observed the third Sunday of June as Children's Day. In the afternoon six children were baptized in the basement of the Coliseum. A tank had been placed there for the occasion. Almost two hundred witnessed the baptism and the confirmation. In the evening the children's division of the church school presented a pageant, "The Chain of Love," written by local workers. In the center sat Gretchen Kelley representing the church. To her came two children inquiring what they could do to help her. She then showed how children might help by paying tithing, playing fair, assisting in the home, praying, etc. Child missionaries brought in groups of children from foreign countries, England, China, India, Holland, Hawaii, and Lamanites of America. At the close they sang, "In Christ There Is No East Nor West," repeated the pledge to the Christian flag, and sang again of the "Chain of Love" that should bind all children of the world together. As the curtain went down the children presented a pretty tableau as they held aloft the links of a chain which bound them together. A quartet sang softly, "Blest Be the Tie," as the scene closed. Educationally the program has been considered the best presented for many years.

Young People's Outdoor Service

On the last Sunday of June the older young people held their morning gathering in the South Woods. At six-thirty they were seated on one of the slopes singing, "Holy, Holy, Holy," the first hymn of their prayer service. At eight o'clock breakfast was served by the campfire—bacon and eggs, rolls, and fruit. At nine o'clock, on the hillside the morning assembly was held. Walter Johnson, superintendent of the young people's division, presided. A quartet of girls sang, "Rock of Ages," and, "Abide With Me." Gretchen Kelley spoke concerning "What the Church Means to Me." It was one of those frank, earnest talks that show both sides of a young person's nature: the query whether the church is worth while and the deep seated conclusion that after all it means everything—home, friends, ideals, inspiration to do the things worth while, and lasting satisfactions. Mabel Carlile followed with "What the Church Has Meant to My Parents and Grandparents." This was one of those reviews of testimonies that stirs up hidden loyalties. She told a fascinating story of maternal ancestry who joined the church in Ohio in the early thirties, went through the persecutions of Far West and exodus from Nauvoo, and the dropping out to wait for the Reorganization. She also told of paternal grandparents who heard the gospel in England, came to Utah, and then escaped in disillusionment to wait for the young Joseph. The young people are hoping for another such service.

Sacrifice Service

On June 24, the evening service at the Coliseum commemorated the close of Sacrifice Week. For two weeks this had been engaging the attention of the Lamoni Branch. Many envelopes had been turned in, but a number had saved theirs for this service. The choir, organized for the summer months, made its first appearance, about fifty in number. The congregation sang some of the old hymns of the church. The opening one had been learned for the service by young and old, "O Zion Haste," from the new Hymnal. G. W. Blair, for the stake bishopric reviewed with appreciation the response of the Saints to the visits of the priesthood. Ed Downey, Lena Graham, and Mabel Carlile spoke in terms of sacrificial devotion of their response to the call of the church. The choir sang an offertory hymn, "We Give Thee But Thine Own," and the sacrifice envelopes were received. N. R. Carmichael and G. W. Blair received the offering and Roy A. Cheville offered a prayer of blessing. In it he stated that it was presented to the Lord for his church and that the sacrificing of the Saints had already consecrated much of it. The choir then sang, "Seek Ye the Lord," Grace Lane Muceus directing, and Gertrude Walden singing the solo. The pastor then caught up the theme of continued sacrifice, reminded the congregation that the day of sacrifice was not over and the long test was still ahead. A feeling of unity and devotion pervaded the congregation.

Baptisms in Lamoni Stake

The year 1932, promises to surpass the preceding year with respect to numerical additions to the church. Last year the baptisms in Lamoni Stake totaled only thirty-six. The first six months finds that number surpassed and other requests for baptism have been made. Several of the branches and missions have taken on new life. By branches the reports are as follows: Allendale 9; Lamoni 7; Andover 7; Bloomington 5; Chariton 4; Davis City 3, and Lucas 2.

Sacrifice Returns

Some June reports are not yet received by the stake bishopric, but returns show that the receipts for June are well over two thousand dollars. The returns indicate something more than dollars and cents collected: it represents the loyalty and devotion of many Saints. This year more people have participated to make up the total. There are several quarters and dimes from children of the church school, small amounts from those with meager income, orders from general church appointees on "back allowance," and college faculty, as well as larger cash offerings are included in this amount.

Castroville, California

Castroville, the baby branch of California, sent to the Bishop a check for twenty dollars for direct payment on the church debt, July 2. This is the first payment on a voluntary fund of four hundred dollars which the Saints of this small branch propose to pay to the church by Christmas. It is figured on a basis of five dollars for each of the membership of eighty, and represents sacrifices made by many who have already started to make their payments towards the liquidation of their obligation. Many felt that an estimate of fifteen years was too long a time to expect the Lord to wait on his people to clear up the church debt, and that if every member would make the sacrifice, he could raise an average of five dollars every six months. This would pay the debt in approximately fifteen months instead of fifteen years.

Pastor A. R. Lawn says of this group that all of the members are poor and many have been out of work for months, but they did not hesitate to vote unanimously that they should make the effort to sacrifice continuously. They hope and pray that other branches will catch the spirit of the thing they are trying to do, and are sure, if they do, they will receive rich blessings.

Every local member who is able to attend church services and prayer meetings will testify that God is with this people, and the meetings continue to grow more spiritual. At the prayer service June 30, five, being in serious condition, were administered to, and all received immediate and wonderful healings. One brother who is believed to have internal cancer and has been getting weaker and weaker was filled with the Spirit of God, and testified to the knowledge of his healing. He is a member of the priesthood and trying to live a godly life. His wife who was also suffering with intense pain in the eyes was immediately healed and another sister's eyesight was improved.

The Saints of Castroville are rejoicing in the Spirit of the Lord, and thank God for an opportunity to make a sacrifice for his work.

Independence

For the first time in four weeks there was fair weather for Sunday evening, and the Campus services were conducted at the Campus, having been sent to the Stone Church by rain on the three preceding Sundays. Apostle F. Henry Edwards easily mastered the microphone and everybody, even to the far edges of the audience, heard him deliver an inspiring sermon on the subject, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," which took its theme from the Latter Day Saint hymn of that name. Every age must have its own prophet, said the speaker, for since men continue to need God, He will speak to those who seek him; and the prophet becomes the symbol of that communication which establishes the kinship between God and man.

A caravan of a score or more of cars left the Auditorium early Sunday morning, taking a large number of young people to Marshall, Missouri. This trip was the first warm weather event sponsored by the Independence Council of Young People, Roy E. Settles, president. Arriving at their destination, the travelers joined Marshall Saints in the services of the morning. At eleven o'clock President F. M. McDowell was the speaker, his theme being a charge to all, "Mind the Light."

At noon local and visiting Saints spread picnic lunch on the grounds and spent a happy time getting acquainted and visiting. Then at two o'clock the Independence young people presented a short program of instrumental and vocal solo, duet, and quartet numbers. In this program the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. H. C. Burgess, of Independence, gave invaluable aid.

Stone Church

Four incidents in the life of Jesus which made him the Christ are the topics of four short worship service talks during the remaining Sundays of this month by S. A. Thiel, superintendent of the church school. His opening talk Sunday morning to adults, intermediates, and juniors was, "The Temptation of Jesus."

"The Church on Trial," the first of a series of three Sunday morning sermons by Elder Leonard Lea, gave emphasis to the speaker's belief that while the church is on trial today, this is its great opportunity to help men and women and to give to the world a new type of spiritual and moral fellowship. He reminded the congregation that even though churchmen in the past decade have grown wealthy in beautiful buildings and rituals, they have become spiritually impoverished. Now in time of world-wide hardship and material loss, men's thoughts are turning towards spiritual matters; they are beginning to realize that our spiritual heritage is of primary importance, and they are coming to church. Adversity is forcing them into action for their souls' sake.

The church is on trial, said Elder Lea; the world needs its spiritual riches. This is the time to go on. We are the church. We can not quit now.

Though the heat on this morning was intense, the Stone Church Choir was faithful in its service. Directed by Paul N. Craig and with Robert Miller at the organ, it sang, "Judge Me, O God," by Mendelssohn, and, "As Pants the Hart," by Spohr, Lilly Belle Allen singing the soprano solo.

A pleasing cello solo was played by Irving Jenkins, accompanied by Robert Miller at the organ. For the first time in a number of weeks the musical program from eleven to eleven thirty was broadcast over KMBC. Elder S. A. Thiel was in charge of the service, assisted by Evangelist U. W. Greene.

Walnut Park Church

A service in the interest of Sacrifice Week, sponsored by the women's department, was held at the church the evening of June 24. A quartet consisting of Marian Campbell, Anna Mosier, John Reynolds and Erwin Moorman, accompanied at the piano by Gladys Reynolds, sang, "The Old, Rugged Cross." Talks by Bishop J. S. Kelley, Elder John F. Sheehy, and Pastor Frank McDonald inspired the Saints to a greater degree of sacrifice in behalf of the church.

At the eleven o'clock service June 26, the Saints were happy to have Elder R. S. Salyards preach. He read from Doctrine and Covenants 4, and spoke of the conditions in the world. "God is bringing down the mighty of the land," he declared, "and exalting those of low degree." The choir assisted with the anthem, "More Love to Thee, O Christ." It was at this hour that the special sacrifice offering was taken up.

On this day the members of the Galilean Class and their families left the church at six o'clock in the morning and enjoyed an out-of-door breakfast. After the lesson was presented by the teacher, Imal Burke, they returned to the church in time for the eleven o'clock service.

A large number of Saints gathered July 3, for the sacrament hour. Elder Amos E. Allen, of the Enoch Hill congregation, made the opening remarks, reminding the members that they were renewing their contact with God. This was followed by a talk by Pastor McDonald. At the close a special prayer for the sick of which there are many at Walnut Park, was offered by Elder C. K. Green. A wonderful spirit prevailed the entire meeting.

On the following Sunday Elder A. B. Phillips was the speaker, and his sermon was much enjoyed.

Walnut Park church was the scene of a pretty wedding July 7, when Miss Juanita Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Harris, of Humansville, Missouri, and Charles Hall, son of Mrs. J. E. Hall, of Independence, were united in marriage by Elder John F. Sheehy. Preceding the ceremony a program consisted of a vocal solo, "Somebody Loves You," by seven-year-old Mildred Crabbe; a violin solo, "The Rosary," by Frank White, and two vocal solos, "One Alone," and, "I Love You Truly," by Barton Donaldson, of Kansas City, Miss Margaret Chapman accompanying at the piano. Miss Chapman also played the "Lohengrin" Wedding March, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March. The bride was given in marriage by her father and attended by her sister, Mrs. Clarence Petre, matron of honor. J. Hoke, of Lees Summit, was best man for Mr. Hall. This young couple have the good wishes of the Saints.

Enoch Hill Church

The worship hour of the church school June 26, was in charge of Mrs. Agnes Hartman. The theme, "Loyalty," was effectively brought out in a talk by Elder H. E. Winegar and a quartet composed of Ruby Johnson, Ruth Hayes, Rilla Johnson, and May Worth.

Elder William Ecclestone occupied the morning preaching hour following a trombone and baritone duet by Herbert and William Mills and a musical reading, "None of Self and All of Thee," by Nellie Mae Kramer.

A sum of over two hundred dollars was taken up in the sacrifice offering on this morning.

The Saints on Enoch Hill were glad during Sacrifice Week to have Apostle F. Henry Edwards and family, and Bishop J. Stanley Kelley and wife with them at their weekly prayer service and also to enjoy a picnic dinner with them on the Campus on Tuesday evening. Pastor John F. Sheehy met with them on Tuesday evening.

Twenty-three of the Enoch Hill young people made the trip to Marshall last Sunday, and all seemed to have a good time.

An expression class has been organized with JoZelma Taylor as teacher. There are about twenty in the class. If they continue with the enthusiasm which they now have, they will soon be able to accomplish something very worth while. This class meets at the church each Friday evening.

The speaker last Sunday morning was Elder R. S. Sal-yards.

Spring Branch Church

The prayer meeting a week ago tonight was in charge of Jesse Smith, assisted by Morris Jacobson. An unusually good service was enjoyed, there being many helpful testimonies.

The prayer service the morning of July 10, was in charge of J. Andes, assisted by George Bilquist. Many in the branch are unable to attend meetings because of sickness, but all were remembered in the prayers of this hour. Elder O. J. Hawn, who is at the Sanitarium, was also remembered. This congregation has enjoyed some wonderful talks from him in the past few months.

Elder Harvey Mintun was the morning speaker. He was assisted by the junior choir which sang special numbers, Sister Mildred Smith, soloist. Elder Robert Fish was in charge, assisted by Elder Clair Austin.

Local Saints were happy to have a former pastor, Elder J. C. Mabbott, present, also Sister Mabbott, and their daughter, Dorothy, of Bates City Church.

Brother and Sister Arthur Peer were honored by a short visit from the pastor of Saginaw, Michigan, Branch, Clinton Loomis, and Brother Frank McCray.

Kansas City Stake

Grandview Church

The La-Da-Sa Club closed its activities for the summer with a spring luncheon June 6, at Kaloka Country Club. Rabbi Samuel S. Mayerberg, of Kansas City, Missouri, was the speaker. The club has turned in one hundred dollars to the church since the first of the year.

Children's Day was observed June 12, with a play, "Zion Builders We Would Be." Five children entered the waters of baptism, Elders J. A. Harrington and Daniel Tucker officiating.

As a result of sacrifice week a sum of one hundred seventy-five dollars was turned in to the stake bishop.

After ten years of faithful service as pastor of this church Elder C. D. Jellings has been forced to give up this part of the work. Elder George Mesley comes as the new pastor, with Brother Jellings as his associate. A reception was given for Brother and Sister Mesley the evening of June 30, at the church. The orchestra, under the direction of Brother Fred Brose, played two excellent numbers. Brother Jellings praised the work of all the departments during his pastorate. The senior choir, under direction of Brother Lester Fowler, sang a beautiful number and the junior choir, under the direction of Sister Lester Fowler, rendered a number. A trio was sung by Emily Foley, Edith Fowler, and Verna Tate, also a solo by Brother Lester Fowler. The program was planned to acquaint Brother and Sister Mesley with the work of the different departments. Brother Jellings made a few remarks as retiring pastor and Brother Mesley as incoming pastor. Brother Cyril Wight, of the stake presidency, was present and in behalf of Grandview Saints, presented baskets of flowers to Brother and Sister Jellings, and Brother and Sister Hayes. Brother Hayes has been associate to Brother Jellings for a number of years. A basket was also presented to Brother and Sister Mesley. The Laurel Club took advantage of the occasion and served dinner at 6 p. m. They also placed bazaar goods on sale, and cleared about twenty-five dollars from the supper and bazaar.

MISCELLANEOUS

Pastoral

To the Officers and Members of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, Greetings: It has pleased the appointing powers of the church to assign me to ministerial duty in your district. It was my privilege to spend my twenty-second birthday in your midst. That was quite a while ago. I was acquainted with the workers in those days. Some of these have passed over the river, others are living but somewhat out of touch with the church, still others are alive and doing all they can. I then spent almost a year among you, including parts of the years 1895 and 1896. I, at first, thought my work would be solely that of a missionary, but at the conference at Lansing, June 11 and 12, it pleased the district to elect me to the office of district president. Hence it will be my duty to serve you in a double capacity. Consequently, I shall be pleased to receive any word from you regarding the missionary needs of the district and also the administrative work which comes under the office of presiding elder. Am visiting the various centers for acquaintance sake now. Later I shall hold a series of meetings in each branch. For the present my address will be as given below. Any change that may occur will be advertised. Would suggest that all officers possess themselves of a copy of the new Priesthood Manual, and observe carefully the instructions contained therein. I am especially anxious to establish a thorough system of reporting. At the conference I selected as counselor Elder Alva J. Dexter, 1943 Saint Joseph Street, Lansing. I was authorized by the conference to select another later. I have since chosen Elder Walter F. Ryder, 648 Prospect Avenue, Southeast, Grand Rapids. Both of these men were the previous incumbents in the district presidency. Any administrative work that may be required in your locality you may refer to either of them or to me. We will do our best to serve you.—A. C. Barmore, district president, 1660 Horton Avenue, Southeast, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Conference Notices

The semiannual district conference of Northeastern Kansas will convene at Fanning, July 23 and 24. Apostle Roy S. Budd will be present. The election of district officers will be held in connection with other business in the interests of the district. Priesthood will send their reports to District President Dave Little, Burlingame, Kansas. The first service will be at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Attendance of every member who can come, is requested in order that the district may more fully cooperate in the interest of the church program.—Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, district secretary.

The annual district conference of West Virginia will be held at Harmony Branch, on Indian Creek, near Washburn, August 6 and 7, beginning Saturday at 2 p. m. with regular business session.—Haydie Bumgardner, district secretary, Washburn, West Virginia.

Reunion and Conference Notice

A joint reunion of Seattle and British Columbia, Spokane, and Portland Districts will be held at Silver Lake, Washington, August 5 to 14. The annual Seattle and British Columbia district conference will take place during the week. We are expecting President Floyd M. McDowell, Apostle J. Arthur Gillen, and missionaries from the three districts as speakers. Trained teachers and recreational leaders will conduct classes and furnish supervised recreation for all age groups. Tents will be available for renting at the following prices: 8 x 10, $3.50; 10 x 12, $4.00; 12 x 14, $4.50. All orders should be mailed at once to District President M. E. Lasater, 6751 Division Avenue, North West, Seattle, Washington. Meals will be served at the dining hall, charging twenty-five cents for breakfast and thirty cents for lunch and dinner. A short order lunch service will also be provided. Those driving to the grounds should take the New Everett Highway between Seattle and Everett and turn at the sign pointing to Silver Lake. The grounds are located at the west end of the lake. Those coming by interurban should get off at the Silver Lake station and walk down the hill one-fourth mile to the lake, then turn right another one-fourth mile to the grounds. A good crowd is expected, and we are sure there will be a spiritual feast for all who attend.—Florence E. Earl, district secretary, 10714 Second Avenue, North West, Seattle, Washington.

Reunion Notices

Western Oklahoma district reunion will convene August 5 to 14 inclusive, at Eagle City, one half mile west of town at the usual place. Apostle Roy S. Budd plans to be present, and the preaching services will be of the missionary type, the forenoon and afternoon speakers being chosen from the district priesthood. All who can come prepared to do their own cooking should do so. In the past the home branch has had to bear the brunt of the work of the dining tent and has thus been deprived of many of the services. All desiring to rent tents during the reunion please have orders in the hands of Elder Lester E. Dyke, of Eagle City, Oklahoma, not later than July 20, that he may have time to secure tents in time for the services. There is plenty of room to camp on the grounds. The secretary will gladly furnish information concerning the reunion, accommodations, and other items. A dining tent will be conducted during the reunion. Come and make this reunion spiritually successful.—Roy L. Diamond, secretary, Eagle City, Oklahoma.

Special helpers and workers of the general church who will be present at the Lamoni stake reunion, July 29 to August 7, are Apostles J. F. Garver and Roy S. Budd and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp. The reunion will this year be conducted on the same basis as that of last year. Those wanting rooms should get in touch with Sister Ed Downey, Lamoni, Iowa.—Cora Levenson, secretary Lamoni Stake.

Kansas City Stake Minutes

KANSAS CITY.—Semiannual stake conference was held at Central Church, the business meeting occurring the evening of May 16, in charge of the stake presidency, Cyril E. Wight, Charles D. Jellings, and George Mesley. Apostle J. F. Garver, in charge of the Central Mission, was present, and was invited to occupy the platform. A hymn by the congregation, prayer by C. D. Jellings, and special musical number by Stake Missionary J. Charles May, and Brother George Anway, accompanied by Brother May's guitar, opened the hour. Minutes of the special conference held in February, were read and approved. The report of the stake presidency was read by Brother Wight, recently returned from a business sojourn in Oklahoma, lasting about six months. Of the ministry reporting, it was learned that twelve high priests performed six baptisms, eighteen elders, eleven baptisms, fourteen priests, one baptism. Eight of the teachers and eight of the deacons also reported their regular work. Elder J. Charles May was welcomed as stake missionary. Reference was made to the oratorical contest of Sunday, May 15, encouraging in its promise of future leadership. Reference was also made to the results of the depression which will arouse the members to a more vigorous presentation of the gospel of the discipleship. For some time a comprehensive survey of the fifteen churches in the stake has been under way, its purpose being to give the council of presidency and bishopric a factual knowledge of the work, conditions, attitudes, and needs of all the congregations. Following the Christmas period Elder J. E. Vanderwood did special work and taught classes in Doctrine and Covenants in several of the churches. Bishop C. A. Skinner reported cash on hand $2,238.05; received from all sources $8,167.19, and expenditures, $9,905.18, leaving cash on hand $500.06. The report was approved subject to audit. Bishop G. L. DeLapp said that it would be several months before the Bishopric could get to an audit of the books. By motion, the stake presidency was authorized to appoint an auditing committee. The stake statistician reported: Transfers out, 216; transfers in, 163; baptisms, 40; deaths, 14; marriages, 22; divorces, 1; ordinations, 6; silences 2; children blessed, 31. There was a total gain of 203, and a total loss of 230, making a net loss of 27. The stake reporter's report indicated the loyalty of some local reporters and called attention to reporters who are silent and never report, and to those who are parsimonious with their reports. The stake historian reported satisfactory progress in the securing of new data concerning the sixty acres once held in the name of Bishop Partridge, Central Church property occupying a part of the original plot. The director of Religious Education, George Mesley, in his report emphasized the necessity of the priesthood's activity in the teaching of God's word as found in the three standard books. The Stake O. B. K. Council sponsored a new year inventory campaign which resulted in the filing of 175 inventories; the music contest which doubled its number of participants and resulted in the discovery of considerable talent that can be effectively used in local church services; the Independence-Kansas City L. D. S. Basket Ball League; the religious drama tournament in November, and the stewardship oratorical contest held on this conference Sunday. The week-day religious school work was confined to Malvern Hill Church, during the past winter, the other Kansas side churches failing to take up the work. Sister Florine Hands Graham had charge of the work and reports the highest enrollment as 214, the lowest, 203. There are about seventy-eight unchurched families in this group. The mothers of the children in the school are much interested and will contribute twenty-five dollars. Mrs. F. L. Waters was called forward and presented a gold seal certificate issued by the General Department of Religious Education. The secretary of the Kansas City stake delegation to the General Conference in April, reported that seventeen delegates had a perfect attendance; four were absent only one day; one was quarantined, and three were absent from all sessions. A recommendation from the stake presidency advising the closing of North Kansas City Church, was approved by motion. In 1918 a motion was adopted to dispense with the eleven o'clock and eight o'clock preaching services in the branches on stake conference Sundays. A resolution was introduced that the closing of the various churches in the stake on conference Sunday be left optional with each group. This matter was referred to the stake high council for such action as it deems advisable. Following is a list of the officers of local churches in the stake who took office July 1, and continue for one year: Central Church: Pastor, C. E. Wight; director of Religious Education, Roy Thrutchley; young people's supervisor, Doctor E. P. Nelson; children's supervisor, Mrs. H. A. Koehler. Second Church: Pastor, Francis A. Dixfield, 33; Vinalhaven, 61; nonresident group, 72. Rockland Branch did not report. Ministerial reports were read from the following men: Elders E. F. Robertson, district president; A. Begg, Harlan Billings, Pearl Billings; Priests James Robbins and Ralph Candage. The district treasurer's report showed $50.41 in the treasury. Officers for the year were chosen: District president, E. F. Robertson; associate presidents, H. R. Eaton and A. Begg; organist, Jennie L. Carter; clerk, Louise Eaton; chorister, A. Begg; treasurer, Pearl Billings; superintendent of Religious Education, E. F. Robertson. Speakers for the conference were President F. M. Smith, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Bishop E. L. Traver, Elder Newman Wilson. The conference was grieved at the absence of Henry R. Eaton; he is usually present. But a short time before the conference, he underwent a surgical operation at the hospital. He is improving, and the Saints hope to see him at the fall conference. Conference meetings were of high order. The weather was beautiful. Adjournment was had to meet at Little Deer Isle in the fall at the call of the district presidency.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—The conference of Northeastern Illinois convened with Mission Branch June 24, 25, and 26, and a fine and peaceful spirit was present throughout its sessions. There were two very good prayer services besides the sacrament service which gave spiritual tone and uplift. Apostle J. F. Garver was present and did the preaching in his characteristic manner. The Mission and Plano Saints gave a good program Friday evening, and the Deselm Orchestra an excellent group of selections Saturday evening before the preaching service. These were appreciated by the conference. The resignations of Cecil Schmid, counselor of R. E. Davey; Ray L. Hurst, publicity agent, and Sister Hattie K. Bell, director of Religious Education, were accepted. Brother C. A. Edstrom was elected as counselor; Brother Harold McCaig, publicity agent, and Sister Clara B. Esterbrook, director of Religious Education. The conference legislated to call a special conference previous to the General Conference for the election of delegates to the same. It was decided that the district president and treasurer report to each district conference instead of annually. The secretary was instructed to convey a vote of thanks to each of the resigning officers. Mission Saints are awake and eager to share with others, and a vote of thanks was tendered for their hospitality. Everyone seemed thankful for the privilege of assembling with God's people and receiving the divine unction which encourages the Saints "onward and upward."

Our Departed Ones

ROTHWELL.—Eunice E. Rothwell, of Independence, Missouri, wife of W. H. Rothwell, was born in 1886. She entered the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at the age of nine years. Married W. H. Rothwell, and to them were born three sons, William A., Ora J., and Ralph B., and two daughters, Mrs. Mamie Faun and Ruby Rothwell. Passed away at Independence, Missouri, June 19, 1932. Besides her husband and children, she leaves to mourn her mother, three brothers, and three sisters. The funeral was conducted from Carson and Son Chapel. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

JAMES.—Ida Amelia Hardesty was born at Valparaiso, Indiana, August 22, 1860. Was married to Frank James, of Valparaiso, March 17, 1885. They went to Oklahoma in 1892. Two sons were born to them, Vernon, of Seminole, Oklahoma, and D. V., of Prague, Oklahoma. Her husband preceded her in death. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Ripley, Oklahoma, in 1906, by Hubert Case. Died June 26, 1932, at Cushing, Oklahoma. Interment was at Sumner, Oklahoma, the funeral sermon being by F. Ed. Dillon. The Restoration has lost in Sister James another true witness.

"The Whole Duty of Man"

And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness of the flesh. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.—Ecclesiastes 12: 12, 13.

The man whose eyes are weary with study, and whose ears are dull with much hearing, will often ask himself, "What does it mean? What is it all about?" And then he will seek some simple explanation and guide that he can use at all times.

Such a simple explanation is offered by the ancient writer above. Isaiah swept aside the whole complicated fabric of Levitical tradition and made a summary of righteousness in the following words: "Wash you, make you clean. . . . Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." Micah said, "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" In answer to the lawyer who asked him, Jesus gave the two great commandments for human conduct: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Every church has among its members those who make their principal claim to righteousness on their obedience to a single passage of scripture. Self-satisfied, standing on a pedestal, they challenge all others who do not conform.

Observe this: No Christian life was ever built on a creed of "Don'ts." No man can claim to be a developed Christian, until he can write into his practical creed for personal living at least one "Do" for every "Don't."

Every creed quoted from the prophets above is affirmative. When they attempted to sum up all that they knew of the spiritual life, they came out with a list of things to do.

Zion must begin, if it is ever to be built, upon the simple basis of the rules above laid down by men who were closest to the sources of divine inspiration. Cleanliness, righteousness, kindness, justice, mercy, reverence, and Godliness—these are the fundamentals. Nothing else can succeed, no matter how well planned, for the good of the church and the people, until these qualities are produced in human life.

Blue Pencil Notes

Four years ago I wrote a poem which included these lines:

Who is that knocking at our front door?
Old John Barleycorn is back once more.
He's all fixed up in the nicest way—
Wearing the cross, and wishing to stay.

Who is that calling both sheep and goats?
Old John Barleycorn out after votes!
His voice is sweet as Jacob's tone—
His hands as hairy as Esau's own.

Now whose foot is that in our front door?
Old John Barleycorn, just as of yore!
He is all dressed up—the wool outside;
But underneath is the tiger's hide.

We slammed the front door in his face and thought that ended the matter, but this year Old John Barleycorn did not knock at our front door. The politicians of both parties saw him afar off and ran and fell upon his neck and cried: "We want beer!" So they are bringing him right up the front walk with a brass band and banners and everything.

Old John Barleycorn usually does come back. Once long ago people were eating and drinking and there came a great flood that ruined every wine cellar and put out the fires of every distillery. Only eight souls escaped. And then the chief of the eight, Noah, immediately raised grapes and made wine and got drunk and the trouble started all over again. It began right there with the return of "light wines and beer." If there is one thing to admire about the Devil it is the fact that he never gives up—and alcohol in all its forms as a beverage has always been one of his favorite instruments to "steal men's brains away." It would seem that in this machine age when a drunken driver at the wheel may slaughter

ter your children or mine, the most rudimentary brain could see that there is no room for alcohol in our modern civilization. But John Barleycorn seems to have stolen a great many men's brains away recently—and did not get much at that.

For a number of decades temperance agencies in America conducted a very vigorous and successful campaign of education. Then prohibition was written into the constitution and we thought that ended the fight, so the campaign of education relaxed. The matter was left to the enforcement agencies. But the Devil never gives up! There is no gain to ignore facts, the enormous shift in public sentiment, if it does not actually lead to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, will make prohibition almost impossible of enforcement. It might even lead to civil war in the wet states.

The old Indian, when told that white men put their bad citizens in prison, demanded to know, "What-um you do when you get-um more bad folks than good ones?" It is impossible to send even a very large minority to prison. Obviously the thing to do is to renew with vigor the campaign of education. A generation taught to abhor alcohol is safer than one that has a desire for it and is withheld only by the mandate of a law that on every hand is derided. The preachers of righteousness, if defeated at the polls should resort to their most successful weapon, popular education.

The Report of Sacrifice Offerings

The final report of the returns from the offerings given by the church during Sacrifice Week are being made ready at the moment that we go to press. We regret not having the report for this week, but Bishop G. L. DeLapp promises them for the Herald of next week. The whole church will await with interest the result of this effort.

Beyond question, the present task which confronts Christianity in the world today is one of the most momentous of all its undertakings. In a word, the primary task before us is the appreciative recognition of the expanded range of truth which has been gained through the various fields of research, and the discovery of how to penetrate this new body of knowledge with a corresponding spiritual significance for man's life and faith. Certainly not less important is the task now confronting us of transforming the social and economic order of human life so that it will manifest in the sphere of practical living the spirit and ideals of Christian faith and hope and love.—Rufus M. Jones, in A Preface to Christian Faith in a New Age.

OFFICIAL

Allowances

Since the last General Conference there have been a number of inquiries relative to the status of the missionary family allowances. Misunderstanding may have arisen as a result of the methods used in reporting the family allowances for the years 1930 and 1931.

In order to properly balance the books of the Presiding Bishop it was necessary to charge the Family Allowance Expense Account and credit Family Allowances Payable. The missionary families, therefore, did not actually receive the amount shown as charged against them. The total amount of allowances unpaid and due the missionary families as of December 31, 1931, was $85,737.83. The amount unpaid and due as of June 30, 1932, is $87,506.75.

We trust that this information may clear up any misunderstanding which may have arisen in this connection.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Purposes of the Harvest Home Festival

THE PURPOSE OF THE HARVEST HOME FESTIVAL IS TO BEAUTIFY ZION

By John F. Sheehy

Beauty

Nearly every one has a back yard, or a piece of land behind the house. Unhappily, some back yards resemble a city dump more than anything else, filled with ashes, cans, and trash.

Front yards ordinarily are kept pretty. Why not extend the front yard clear around the house? Impossible! Well, then, do what you can to make the whole place beautiful. Back yards can be made into places of beauty, places for good home recreations—in fact, into what are known as summer "outdoor living rooms." It is a shame to have rubbish and weeds on land that could very well produce vegetables and flowers.

The Harvest Festival calls for the people to clean up and beautify the premises about their homes. It calls for all to work for the common good.

The only objective is not merely to grow flowers, fruits, and vegetables, but to grow the prettiest flowers and the best fruits and vegetables.

It is suggested that we remember the aged, the sick, and the shut-ins with the products of our gardens, and especially with the flowers. Our gardens can produce unlimited harvests of happiness.

Working Together

Why the exhibit? Here in Independence the Harvest Festival is held in the lower chamber of the Auditorium. A week before the exhibit the men and women are busy at work erecting and decorating booths. The pounding of nails and the happy laughter that echoes through the building is indeed a joyful sound. Here we find hundreds of people working together. People working together come to know each other better, and happy friendships are made that are lasting. People come early and work late. They find a fellowship that has true spiritual value. They know that they are helping the general church to provide for the poor. They also know that the beauty of the booths attracts thousands of visitors to the Auditorium night and day, for a week in every year.

Missionary Value

Thousands of people visit the Harvest Home Festival. It has become a part of our program. It is now an established custom. People for miles around know that each fall the Saints of Independence will have a Harvest Festival. They come and are well pleased, for thus far each exhibit has excelled preceding ones. While some of the features are alike, no two exhibits present the same appearance. Decoration scheme is one thing that makes a difference, and this year, on account of the George Washington Bicentennial, the colonial colors and patterns will be carried out in the themes of ornamentation.

People come to the exhibit and see the Auditorium dressed up to its best. They come and learn something of the ideals of the church. Truly, in many ways, the Harvest Home Festival is a thing of beauty. It promotes interest in others, and especially in the sick, the poor, and the needy. It brings many groups of people to work together. It brings to our doors strangers who become our friends. It is one of our missionary projects.

It is ridiculous to say all young people are drinking since prohibition. We don't find it so. We have no evidence that boys and girls on the verge of delinquency are in this unhappy position because of the prohibition laws.—Miss Jessie Binford, director of the Juvenile Protective Association of Chicago.

Nothing is too high for a man to reach, but he must climb with care and confidence.—Marcus Aurelius.

GO PREACH THE GOSPEL

By Elbert A. Smith

1. The author's text is often called "The Great Commission." Can you quote it from memory?
2. How long a time did Jesus, as teacher, spend with the disciples who studied under him? Do you think modern men should be content with less time for preparation for their ministry?
3. What was necessary in addition to a knowledge of the message they were to teach? What conditions were they to reach?
4. Was the "Great Commission" extended to all who should feel like obeying the command? To whom was it limited? Why was it so limited?
5. How great is the field? When shall we be able to do our duty by our task?

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER

Under this heading will be printed short articles on prayer, with occasional examples. Requests for prayer will also be gladly received and printed.

Request for Prayer

Mrs. O. H. Crisman writes asking prayers for her young brother, Durward LeRoy Fry, of Tuthill, South Dakota, who was run over by a truck two years ago, and who has since failed to make satisfactory recovery. The doctors in attendance on the lad are somewhat baffled, and are inclined to advise an operation, without promising any real hope. Sister Crisman has faith to believe that the boy might be helped by Divine intervention. There are no elders nor any branch near the home of the boy, and we believe that the Saints will respond to this appeal.

Christobel Walter, formerly of the Island of Grand Cayman, and now of 2411 Seventeenth Street, Port Arthur, Texas, asks that the Saints set aside a special day of fasting and prayer for her mother, Jane Rebecca Walter, who is blind. Facing the necessity of an operation, Sister Walter feels a greater trust in the Lord than in medical skill, and believes that with the prayers of the people she may be healed. Once totally blind, she has already received help from prayer, and is able to distinguish colors. She has faith that the same Power can effect her cure.

NEWS BRIEFS

Presiding Bishop and Counselor Together Often

Pressing church matters bring Bishop L. F. P. Curry, of Dallas, Texas, and his counselor, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, of Independence, together frequently for consultation. Between these consultations the volume of the work of Presiding Bishop is done in the offices at the Auditorium, Independence, Brother DeLapp in charge, nevertheless, a considerable amount of matters requiring the Presiding Bishop's decision and signature is forwarded to him.

Bishop Curry was in Independence over the weekend of July 4, arriving Saturday, July 2. When he comes there are conferences in the Bishops' offices all day and sometimes far into the night. Brothers Curry and DeLapp plan to meet again either in Independence or Dallas, July 24. They try to confer at least once every three or four weeks.

Brother DeLapp has been very busy with office work since his return, June 26, from his trip East with President F. M. Smith.

Busy Season for Sioux City Music Department

Sioux City, Iowa, musicians have forgotten that summer is often choir vacation time. During the spring and early summer the music department has been actively boosting all branch activities.

A special program given by this department June 19, will be of interest to musicians everywhere. In addition to an entertaining variety of instrumental and vocal numbers, there were short talks on "The History of Music," "Hymnology," and "The Necessity of Music in the Church." A few nights later this group held an old-fashioned "hymn sing." On such special occasions as Mother's Day and Children's Day the musicians have given generous help.

Son of Patriarch J. F. Martin Is Drowned

Kenneth Martin, only son of Patriarch and Sister J. F. Martin, of Wheeling, West Virginia, was drowned July 4, in a creek near the spot where the Martin family and other Saints were picnicking. When the boys of the company went in swimming, ten-year-old Kenneth stepped beyond his depth. His death saddens the Saints of all West Virginia, for he was a merry, lovable boy, but most of all, he is missed by his parents and sister, Frances. On Children's Day, just fifteen days before he was called from his earthly home, Kenneth was baptized by his father.

Welsh Delegates Attend English Conference

The visit of the delegates from Wales to the Southern district conference at Enfield, England, May 14 and 15, was not without pleasing incidents, we are informed by the Southern England and Wales District Herald. Madock Morgan, recently baptized in Wales, was ordained to the office of priest, and on the following Sunday at Enfield, preached his first sermon. It proved a good effort. This young brother has taken university degrees, also passed tests for the Metropolitan Police. He speaks English fluently, and district officers have great hopes of his efforts for the church in Wales.

Nine Baptized at Des Moines Reunion

Nine candidates were baptized members of the church during the successful reunion of Des Moines District, conducted at Des Moines, Iowa, June 12 to 19. President Elbert A. Smith, Elder John F. Sheehy, and Elder A. L. Loving assisted district officers in the reunion.

Board of Stewards Beautifies Rock Island Church

The Board of Stewards of the branch at Rock Island, Illinois, has done much during the past few weeks, with the help of other workers, to beautify the local church home. Landscape gardening of shrubs and perennial plants has resulted in attractive grounds, and in the church building itself, the basement has been prettily decorated, and plans are being made to build a platform for programs.

Officers' Visit Encourages Central Michigan Saints

A recent tour of Central Michigan by the district presidency has done much to insure more effective organization for and execution of the church work, and to establish harmony and peace. The priesthood have been inspired anew to do their duty; local branches have been encouraged, and everyone seems eager to rise above trivial things and engage in the Master's business.

Branches visited in the district were Houghton Lake, Alma, Saginaw, Midland, Coleman, Beaverton, Gladwin, Butman, West Branch, Prescott, Whittemore, Tawas City, Mikado, Twining, Farwell, Clare, and Bay City. Elder Hubert Case is the district president.

Report of Department of Statistics

By Carroll L. Olson

During the month of June the following reports were received by the Department of Statistics, resulting in the indicated changes in the total enrollment of the church:

Total enrollment June 1, 1932.....	110,802
June baptisms	622
Deaths	62
Expulsions	17
<hr/>
Total loss	79
Net gain during the month	543
Total enrollment July 1, 1932	111,345

In addition to the above the following miscellaneous reports were also received:

Transfers	497
Blessings	249
Marriages	76
Ordinations	25
Divorces	8
License resigned	1

The total of 622 baptisms is a very good showing for the month of June. It is well above the average for this month and has been exceeded only twice in the past thirteen years. In fact there have been only four months out of the past 150 months in which more baptisms than this were reported and those were in the years 1921 and 1929 when the records for baptisms were established.

Most of these baptisms took place on Children's Day. Next month we will give a complete report of Children's Day baptisms, by which time we should have received all of the reports applying to this date.

Most of the baptisms, as one would expect, were for children. However, a large number were of older young people and adults, there being 178 baptisms of those above 15 years of age.

Independence had the largest number of baptisms, among the stakes, with a total of 95. Far West had 24 baptisms, Holden Stake 22 baptisms, Lamoni Stake 21 baptisms, and Kansas City Stake 8 baptisms. In the latter case it is probable that not all the June baptisms had been reported by the end of the month. This made a total of 170 baptisms for Zion and the Stakes.

The outstanding district during the month was the Detroit District, with a total of 30 baptisms. Of this number 13 were baptized at Detroit, 11 at Flint, 4 at Lake Orion, and 2 at Pontiac.

The Central Oklahoma District had 25 baptisms, 12 of which were credited to the Shidler Branch, 6 to the Drumright Mission, 3 to Holdenville, 3 to Tulsa, and 1 to Oklahoma City.

The Eastern Michigan District reported 22 baptisms. Owendale had 9, Caseville 7, Port Huron 5, and Saint Clair had 1.

In the Central Michigan District 18 baptisms were performed. Saginaw had 9 of these, Bay City 4, Harrison 2, Tawas City 2, and Twining had 1.

The Nauvoo District likewise had 18 baptisms, 7 being credited to Fort Madison, 5 to Keokuk, 4 to Macon, and 2 to Burlington.

The Northern California District had a total of 17 baptisms, with the Fresno Branch having 7, Sacramento 7, Oakland 2, and Stockton 1.

The Spring River District also had 17 baptisms, these being distributed to the following: Webb City 7, Nowata 4, Miami 3, Joplin 2, and Carthage 1.

The Southern Ohio District also deserves mention with a total of 16 baptisms, distributed as follows: Second Columbus 6, Third Columbus 4, Lancaster 3, McDermott 2, and Creola 1.

Go Preach the Gospel

By Elbert A. Smith

(A sermon delivered Sunday morning, April 10, 1932, in the Auditorium, during General Conference. Reported by Elder G. G. Lewis.)

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not, shall be damned.—Mark 16: 15, 16.

Since the dawn of time, a great many men have gone on a great many missions in obedience to a great many masters, but there never was a commission given greater than this one: "Go preach the gospel."

The Preparation for the Commission

It is my purpose to consider some of the factors associated with the giving of that commission. First of all comes the preparation that led up to it. I am reminded that Christ spent three years, day and night, constantly with his disciples, teaching them the things that they were to teach others. Not only did he teach them by precept; he taught them by example. One of them afterwards recalled, "the word became flesh and dwelt among us." That remains yet the most effective way to preach the gospel. After Jesus had been with the disciples for three years and after they had observed the Lord's Supper the record says that he offered up a prayer of dedication in which he said, "Father, I pray not for the world. I pray for those whom thou hast given me out of the world that they may be one, even as thou and I are one."

Did you ever notice that he repeated that petition three times in that prayer—that they might be one. He recognized that they could not successfully enter upon the mission that he was to give them if they continued divided by jealousy and with contention in their midst. Finally at the last he cautioned them, "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high."

It was not enough that they should know the message; it was not enough that they should have an intellectual perception of things he had taught; they must have a spiritual quickening of power from God that would warm their hearts and equip them to present that message in power; it is the letter that killeth when it is devoid of the spirit. It is the spirit that maketh alive.

I am persuaded that we need about the same preparation that they had in that day. First of all, we need to hear and understand the words of Jesus. "Hear ye him" was the first admonition given to this people. His teachings as recorded in the New Testament scriptures, in the Book of Mormon, and in the Doctrine and Covenants are the message that we are to teach primarily. We need also to receive his Spirit in the form of an endowment from on high, otherwise our ministry is cold and lifeless and without profit. And finally we need to heed his petition that "they might be one, Father, as thou and I are one."

We have heard a great deal of talk about the financial program. It has often been said this year we should have a spiritual program to parallel our financial program. If we are to make it our program to liquidate our financial liabilities, I think we need as well to start out and try to liquidate our spiritual liabilities. How about a "five year program" to eradicate official and personal liabilities that divide districts and branches, that divide brethren, that divide the quorums of the church? How about a program to liquidate these liabilities that beginning with those of us who are the leaders in the general quorums of the church so that we with authority and an example that can not be challenged may go out and preach peace to the Saints who live in the small branches?

I am persuaded that this is the greatest thing we could do at this conference, greater than any legislative enactments we might pass after laborious discussion. For if we have the spirit of peace and of brotherhood so that we can all cooperate, we can work under almost any legislative system that you would be likely to set up; but if we do not have that spirit of peace, then our cause is almost hopeless. But why should we wait five years or one year to realize a program of that sort? Jesus said, "When thou bringest thy gift to the altar and rememberest that this brother hath aught against thee, go first and make thy peace with thy brother and then go and bring thy gift to the altar. The church of Jesus Christ stands today at the altar bringing its gift to this General Conference. Let us first make our peace and then offer our gift."

The Men Commissioned

Next we might consider the men to whom this commission was addressed. There seems to be a misapprehension in the world generally, since this commission is written in the Bible, "Go ye into all the world and preach," that any man who reads those words is thereby called and commissioned to that work. But we must remember that this commission was addressed to a selected group of men—eleven of them, men who had been called and chosen by divine authority. They did not among themselves decide that they would go and preach, but Jesus said to them as we have recorded in John 15: 16, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you and sent you forth that you might bear fruit and that your fruit might remain." He also said, "As the Father had sent me so send I you." One of them wrote, "No man taketh this honor upon himself save he be called of God as was Aaron." And so they increased their ranks as other men were called and ordained even as they had been.

There is no manner of question that the commission of Jesus Christ was an authoritative commission, and no matter how the world may balk at it, his is an authoritative religion, and men of themselves have no right and no call to go into the world to represent him. This commission was renewed in these latter days when the church was again set up on earth and the priesthood was restored with authority and certain designated chosen men were again given this commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel"; but when I have said all that, we must remember that back of those chosen men was the whole body of the church upon whom also was placed the responsibility to see that this work should be made possible. We have it stated in the book of Doctrine and Covenants (Section 119, paragraph 8), "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."

So while certain ordained men are sent forth under this commission, it rests upon the whole church, laboring men, business men, professional men, housekeepers—men and women of the church in every avenue of life to see that this work is made possible.

We must remember that authority always brings responsibility. If in these last days we have been given this authority, also in these last days this great responsibility is placed upon us. If Christ were to appear today coming into this assembly with a halo of light about his head and should put his hands upon the ordained men and say to them, "Go and preach the gospel," with what joy and vigor they would hasten upon their mission. And if he should turn to the membership and say "the responsibility rests upon you all to see that these men are supported," with what joy they would pay their tithing and their offerings. Yet that is the thing that has happened to the church in these last days. That is the thing he tells us we shall do, and the fact that the task becomes more difficult in these troublesome times should but revive our determination to see that it is done.

The Field

Consider the field—go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. To my mind this is one of the evidences of the divinity of Jesus Christ. We know how narrow racial prejudices are even today. We have a poor opinion of the Japanese and the Negro, and they have just as poor an opinion of us. Two thousand years ago racial animosity was much more bitter than it is today and the Jews at that time were perhaps the most narrow and bigoted race in the world. Gentiles were unworthy of the notice of God. If one of them should wander into the temple of God he should be put to death without mercy. Jesus grew up in this environment—a Jew in an orthodox Jewish home in a little Jewish provincial town with nothing of a human nature to give him a world vision. There was not another Jew living on earth that would have given the message he gave—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." That was not the language of a Jew. That was the language of the Son of God. It reminds us of his statement, "Believe me for the very work's sake." The magnitude of the work compels our belief.

Is that too big a field today? Not for a church endowed with power. No less a vision would be worthy of our allegiance. The early Christians did go out and teach all nations, and I make bold to say that the early Latter Day Saints went out and taught many nations. Many of the truths that they promulgated abroad have since then been accepted by the Christian world. But all that does not mean that we shall run at random with our limited forces, north, south, east, and west, all over the world; but that we shall cultivate the field within the reach of our power and as our power increases and our opportunities increase that we shall increase the radius of our missions. Though the field seem large, Jesus said that this gospel shall be preached in all the world, and who shall rise up to judge God when he makes such a promise.

Consider the promise that went with the commission, if you teach all the things that I command you, lo, I am with you always even until the end of the world. That promise remains true today to every man that goes out, having been called and ordained, and keeps the conditions and preaches the very things that Christ called him to preach. But if we should attempt in our own pride and in our own power, without doubt the task is so far beyond our capacity that we find no comparison to illustrate its magnitude. God knows how to help those who are humble and he knows how to humble those who are proud.

Among the many traditions that cluster around the name of King Solomon there is one to the effect that on a certain occasion he made a great feast and invited all the animals in the world to come and eat. When the feast was all ready there was one great monster came up out of the deep and ate it all in three bites. King Solomon said to him in surprise: "Who are you?" The monster replied: "O King, I am the smallest and the youngest of thirty thousand brothers and they have sent me to find out when dinner will be ready." King Solomon said that it humbled his pride and he realized that the thing he had tried to do only God could do—God could feed all the animals every day.

I do not know but what some of the things that have happened to us have been designed to teach us penitence and humility and dependence upon God in this great task; and that may apply to the whole world. Humanity did heap together treasures and goods and provisions beyond anything that man had ever dreamed of and then came along this great depression and swallowed it all in three bites, and if we do not learn our lesson there may be thirty thousand worse ones to come later.

The Message

Consider now, last of all, the message.

Sidney Rigdon, speaking in Nauvoo about the early days of the church, said, "We were very poor. We hadn't a change of clothing. We had only corn bread and sorghum to eat, but those were happy days because we had the gospel." Is the gospel any less precious today? It is even more precious in view of the condition of the world. This is a missionary church. I am not underestimating the value of our zionic program; but that is not the subject this morning. Yesterday we adopted a document saying that we should always stress the two objectives of the church—the evangelizing of the world and the building of Zion. Mine is the first theme and the other falls to President Frederick M. Smith for this evening. I do believe that only a missionary church can ever build Zion. The church that is on fire with the gospel message can receive those who are converted and build them into Zion; but a church that has lost that fire can neither make new converts nor utilize those already made.

There are many things that we were never told to do, but there was one thing that we were told to do and that is, "Prosecute the missionary work to the extent of your ability." In the early days of my ministry when I attended district and general conference the ministry were discussing missionary problems—tent work, street work, tracting, foreign missions, and so on. Later we diverted our attention to more academic themes. I am not saying that these things may not well be studied, but we lost something when we ceased to a degree to study our own particular job. In those days we had a constantly growing missionary force; today we have a constantly diminishing missionary force. That condition must be corrected.

I think there are two things that have hurt us all when we have thought about them: one has been that in this time of poverty when our poor have asked for help we could not always help them either with money or with employment because we had a great debt that must be paid. And in this time of crises when the world needs the gospel of Christ and when the apostles come back with the statement that they never saw such a time for its preaching we can not send out our missionaries—many of them—because we have a debt that must be paid. Then, brethren, for God's sake in the shortest possible time let us pay that debt and rebuild our missionary force. In the meantime, in harmony with the document coming from the quorum of twelve some days ago, let us appeal to every branch to revive its missionary spirit. Why not in every branch on a Sunday night have a missionary sermon? I stood in front of one of our beautiful little churches a few weeks ago in a splendid neighborhood and the district president said, "We have fine people all around us within a few blocks of this church who have never heard our message. They do not know that we exist. They do not go to church and we never go into their homes to invite them. We never take tracts into their homes." Why not go out to our neighbors with tracts? Why not send our ordained men out to make openings and conduct missionary meetings in the neighborhood of every branch? Jesus taught us plainly that he who seeks to save others shall save himself while he who seeks to save his own life should lose it; and I have a feeling that if the church will go out to save others it will save itself.

What is it that we are to preach? What is the message? In Doctrine and Covenants 42:5 we are told plainly that the priests, teachers and deacons are to preach the principles of the gospel as they are found in the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. One of our bishops said recently, "Many of our people seem not ever to have read the Book of Mormon or the Doctrine and Covenants. They have heard about the Bible." Perhaps he was a little too sarcastic, but in these three books is found the fundamental message that we are to preach. Some one has said, that no matter what else a man may know if he does not know the thing that he ought to know in his own business he is an ignorant man. And the school boy who was asked to define gross ignorance said it was one hundred and forty-four times ordinary ignorance. Certainly the thing we need to know in our work, and the thing our fathers did know, the thing we need to know, no matter what else we may know, is the message that is found in the three standard books of the church. And that should be the thing we should preach firstly and not secondarily.

I am glad that the document that came from the joint council with the approval of the presidency and the twelve and the bishops (See Church Objectives.) sets forth the thought I have just presented. We are renewing our appreciation of the message that was given us to preach to the world. When Joseph Smith was taken to Carthage jail there is no question of doubt that he knew or was morally sure what was going to happen. He said, "I am going as a lamb to the slaughter."

It is recorded by one of the witnesses who was with him that as he paced the floor of Carthage jail when the mob was assembling he turned to one of the men and said, "I wish I could preach one more sermon to the Sanits." What do you suppose he would have preached if he had been permitted to preach one more sermon. I thought of that saying as I lay on my back in the hospital week after week and month after month uncertain of the future, and said in my heart I wish I could preach just once more. When men pass through such experiences and have an opportunity to preach once more, first of all they want to preach the fundamental message that Jesus Christ gave to this church. I wish every minister would go from this conference preaching every sermon this year as though he had but one more sermon to preach. I wish that every member would go from this conference as though he had only one more year to live. Perhaps that is all that many of us have. We never know when we preach that the sermon may not be the last one. I wish we might go out like Isaiah with the word of God like a fire in our bones. That is the only fire that will fire men to the preaching of the gospel. Men used to have an incentive when they believed in hell fire, when they believed that the lost were in literal fire for ever and for ever, when they exhausted their imagination and their oratory to picture that condition, men would go to any extreme of sacrifice to save their brethren from such condition. But we do not believe in that kind of hell any more.

I remember when I was a boy and heard some stories about that condition, one day I lighted a match and held my finger in the flame as long as I could stand it to try and form some opinion of what it could be like all over in fire in hell for ever. I concluded it would be a very undesirable condition. I resolved that I would be a better boy—or at least more careful. We do not believe that any more, but you have only to go out on the streets of any city and look into the faces of the people to realize that there are millions in hell right now because of mis-spent lives; and there is only one thing that will save them and that is the gospel of Jesus Christ. And that is sufficient incentive to send us out to preach that gospel. In fact that is the only thing that will save the world from its present condition. I am going to close with one more story.

I have told it before and you have heard it often and you will hear it oftener if I live, because it illustrates the thing that I want to put over. Most of you are acquainted with Bishop John Zimmerman. About ten years ago I visited the Philadelphia reunion and at that time Bishop Zimmerman had a colored man who acted as his chauffeur. This colored man drove me about some and I talked with him. I don't know if it is just proper to converse with a chauffeur, but being a chauffeur myself I took the risk. I talked a little about Bishop Zimmerman. I was curious to know how Bishop Zimmerman looked to his colored servant. So I said to this colored man: "What kind of a man is Bishop Zimmerman?" His face lighted up and he said, "Bishop Zimmerman is the finest man in the whole world." That spoke volumes. He thought a moment and then he said, "I have often thought that if everybody was like Bishop Zimmerman this would be a different world." Now you remember the statement concerning Christ, "in him the word (the gospel) became flesh and dwelt among men"; and he said, "the works that I do ye shall do also." I do not know whether that colored chauffeur ever read the Bible or not, but the Bible that lay on Bishop Zimmerman's center table had become flesh and blood in the person of Bishop Zimmerman and even a colored chauffeur could read it, and it was written in such plain type and with such power and force and clarity that he could see that if all men would accept that message this world would be made over—between dawn and dark this would be a new world. And that is the mission that is the message that Jesus Christ gave to us when he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach this gospel to every creature." We need a ministry with a rededication to that message. We need a reconsecrated membership back of that ministry. May we some how under the power and mercy of God find our way through this conference in such Spirit that we may go out from this conference with that sort of ministry and with that sort of belief in obedience to that commission, "Go preach the gospel."

Extending the Faith

By S. S. Smith

PART TWO

In the judgment of the writer, this broadened view as presented in the previous installment of a world-wide evangelism, includes more than the limited concept of "select centers" where our work has long been organized. A propaganda extending to many foreign fields, never as yet visited, in gospel proclamation, is not a wild thought, but that which is conformable with reason, truth and revelation. Those having special jurisdiction of the missionary enterprises of this great restoration movement, the twelve and the seventy, should refuse to put a diminutive interpretation upon their office and work, other than they are at the head of a world-wide concern, and that their commission is a divine one reaching to all nations.

A World Survey

It would seem, a correct estimate of our plans and objectives in missionary propaganda, can only be reckoned on the basis of a world's survey; and the genius of it, as well as the power of it, will be demonstrated in the latitude and the spirit of its expansion. A lesser interpretation will but belittle us in our great objectives, for one of the first indications of the voice of Jehovah in these last days was, "thrust in thy sickle and reap." The early revelations to the Palmyra Seer were indictive of this fact, and from the very start of the great movement the announcement was:

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto men upon the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountains without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1.

Let them return, preaching the gospel by the way, bearing record of the things which are revealed unto them; for verily, the sound must go forth from place to place unto all the world; and unto the uttermost part of the earth, the gospel must be preached unto every creature, with signs following them that believe.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 15.

I give unto you this first commandment that ye shall go forth . . . preaching my gospel two by two in my name, lifting up your voices as the voice of a trumpet, declaring my word like unto angels of God; and ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 2.

The absorbing task to those assigned to these particular missionary duties is the welding of the honest of heart to that of the kingdom of God, wherein it shall be in evidence that all nations are of one blood, one brotherhood, of one capacity, and one destiny in Jesus Christ. Everyone who is fortunate to link fortunes with this missionary group, no matter what his nationality, should settle it for ever, to be worthy of this glorious heritage, and unflinchingly resolve to qualify spiritually, then persevere in the task, that being born of God and his Spirit he will overcome the world.

We Must Speed Up

Our great missionary enterprise should move forward, far more rapidly and extensively than it does at the present. Under Christ's command, and under his authority we hope to see a crusade put forth that will yet save or damn the nations. We can not think in terms of spiritual endowment, when we do not fully possess it in our home circles. This high level of missionary effort contemplated, can not rise higher than the source of its supply. We hope for greater success in this field, and to bring it about we must supply the correct influence and environment for it to germinate in the home. Those unable to go themselves on such commission, must volunteer to stand by those who do go, that an ample sustenance is given to them and their families, not amplifying, however, the promise of our Lord to provide for the missionary in the fields where his individual services are rendered. We feel if our ideals are right, and our faith strong, it will gain for the cause a garner of new recruits, and secure the necessary reinforcements, and contributions so urgently needed and will be forthcoming, that we will register a long advance toward our missionary goal.

Select Center

The present plan to make "select centers," which virtually are the branches, the points of contact for the missionary is a very limited concept indeed of the real duty of these missionary quorums, for the reason we do not have branches in all countries. The natural sequence has been, the branches have naturally become points of gravity, and now the chief enterprise seems to be to traverse around in a beaten track, from one branch to another, and in such effort the missionary is virtually doing the work that belongs to the local division, the high priests, the evangelical ministers as well as the local elders. We are not critical of the present program of thus making branches the centers of activity, and the plan is a good one when applied to local forces, and should work admirably with them, for the centralization of effort will surely bring results, but such mostly should concern the local and not the missionary only in exceptional instances.

The following passages from the Doctrine and Covenants clearly indicate the manner in which the missionary work of the church is to be carried on:

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers and deacons, so far as possible, thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they now will but take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past. . . . The twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7, 8.

No later than 1920, President Frederick M. Smith voiced similar views to the above, as given by his father, and said of the twelve:

Let them not be unduly concerned with the work of the standing ministry, only as they shall be directed by the presidency therein; and let contention cease concerning the prerogatives of the leading quorums. The work awaiting the efforts of the missionary forces is great and there is no time for contentions. Let the apostles move out, as they have in the past been directed, in the task of taking to the peoples of the world the message of peace, and they shall find comfort and satisfaction in their labors.—Doctrine and Covenants 133: 2.

The field is large and the time opportune. Let the missionary work be prosecuted with great vigor, and if the twelve will devote themselves whole-heartedly to this work, the church will be greatly blessed through their administration. And let the quorum of twelve be further admonished that upon them rests the onerous burden of the missionary work of the church, and be not concerned with local administrative work except in emergencies or as sent by the presidency, leaving the care of the local work to those officers previously indicated in the law.—Doctrine and Covenants 134: 5, 6. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 135: 4.)

The glad news of the restoration is not being heralded abroad to the nations as extensively as it should. The Indian races of America are in need of it badly, and rightfully should it be, for it is our bounden duty to acquaint them of their identity, and restore to them their Holy Scriptures, and this work should be hastened. New blood should be brought in, and thus a yearly garner of new recruits be in evidence. The missionary should be free and untrammelled by the burden of branches and districts, and left free to “push the preaching of the word into new fields now widening before them.”

We hope to leave with you a greater hope, which will engender a greater inspiration for this noble work and larger purposes before us. The honest of heart of every clime can be won for Christ, and that speedily and victoriously, if the church and its missionary ministry do not seek to restrict our worldwide objectives to narrow latitudes, and we become fully consecrated and awakened to a new birth—a new baptism as it were, that will lead us on fearlessly and with enthusiasm with this moving spirit now seems to be germinating in our ranks today.

Adaptability of the Message

If we are grounded in the truth that this great latter day work is all that it is claimed to be, and all that was included in the faith of primitive times, and we purport to have divine testimony of it, we should be literally sold out to it as it were, and to the fact it is the best religion of earth, and it is bound to be adaptable to all grades of society of all nations, and will yet prove the greatest factor in human progress toward a better and nobler civilization. If this truly is the case, it will be clear that all who would see the advancement of those who espouse it to a final and zionic development within, should seek the extension of the faith to other latitudes without, for this is our custodianship, this is our calling as missionaries of the church. If the church can not do this, and we restrict and bind our missionary arm down to a mere local proportion, we are forced to admit it is not a missionary church with a worldwide commission, and we have distorted its primary plan to a limited endeavor.

How truly then, should our efforts be to give a more wide opportunity for its acceptance, and put it forth in a way that will attract men, and be desired by the honest and clear-thinking men of the world; and we here predict, if we mistake not, this very cause will yet become the greatest regenerating and developing force the race has ever known. It is therefore not extravagant to say, our cause is the most noble, and it will yet be prized by the best people of the world, for its glory is just that, never once has it stood still, and its present struggles for greater magnitude and latitude of work, now as it always has, and always will be, to lead the way, and it should march abreast and even in advance of the best thinkers of the age.

Fundamentals Stressed

No greater tragedy could come to the church than to cease preaching the fundamentals, the basic truth of the gospel, and to lack full grasp of the old time message, the restoration, the Book of Mormon, the angel's message and the call and commission of the latter day prophet. The whole plan of the gospel should be taught, with its doubts and vagaries left out, for there is no other remedy for sin, and it is that which will prepare dying men to meet their God in triumph.

The need is glaringly apparent for men truly consecrated, whom God can touch and send. We need men who will preach the simple gospel with great power, who will continue "faithful to their mission and service of their Lord," and press the triumphs of the cross far and near. We need men who will not compromise, or preach a muffled gospel, but the full gospel, who are willing and ready to ring the alarm bells, and speak the truth regardless of the consequences.

Christ did not mould his message in the cast of Jewish myth or Pharisaic tradition; Peter and John did not waste time eulogizing the merits of effete Judaism, nor did Paul the great missionary to the Gentiles meander around in his missionary journeys prating about the "spiritual values," or the conceited philosophies of the Romans. But Paul does say, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." (1 Corinthians 2: 4.) Those who come within the range of such preaching, if honest of heart, will feel the energizing power of a new life. No cunningly devised fables can save men from the leprosy of sin. The only hope of the world today, is in God, and the only Savior is our Lord Jesus Christ. May our resolve be to preach the fundamentals of our faith, and be valiant in the Spirit of God.

Debts and the Budget

We have been struggling with the problem of our debts, and the raising of the budget has given our late conference profound concern, and we are face to face with a perplexing situation, with a depleted treasury, with only as many missionaries in the field as we can support, and have found it necessary to put a brake on the wheels of progress in our mission fields lest we should incur additional expenditures that will swamp us.

If every member will determine and pledge to become a part of the present program, and pay the tithe we owe to the Lord, the problem will solve itself automatically, and speedily. Let none of us hold back in the harness now. Whosoever does so, will doubtless realize some day, that just to that extent he has interfered and hindered in the success of our great enterprises. It should be recognized in carrying out this great line of operations we must have some definitely stated income upon which to depend from year to year. Otherwise we will only suffer embarrassment and final defeat. If those in charge of the appointments do not know on what to depend, it will be hard to approach even an approximation of our strength. Heaven is depending on us to render this support justly due the Lord and his cause. If we fail in this crisis then we must face the solemn responsibility of our unwise decision. There will be no failure, only as we individually fail to make proper decision and provision out of our untithed principal and income, the same as we meet our own necessary expenditures. As we plan for the payment of our coal bill, the groceryman, the clothing account, the painting of our houses and our taxes, so we must plan in the same regular systematic way for the support of the Lord's work. Shall we rally to this call of the bishop, and resolve to faithfully discharge these humble obligations to furtherance of the work of our Lord? We verily believe in doing this we will be giving the Lord a reasonable service. Our stewardship ever has to do with the elements of faith, love, gratitude, obedience and honesty; and its faithful discharge does not rest upon the stern and rigid duty alone, but more truly upon the exalted plane of appreciated privilege and welcomed opportunity.

A Good Omen

A new conference year has opened up, and we are hopeful that in the sending of three of the twelve overseas it will prove a good omen for our missionary enterprises. The Lord's church is organized for service, and its mission is to carry the gospel to the world. Through the centuries it has been God's plan, that through his church shall be reflected his saving truth, his fullness and his sufficiency, for it is his depository in which the wealth of his mercy, his love and his grace is found in full and final display.

May the missionaries of the church possess this hope, then the Lord of the harvest may be pleased to use us in this larger capacity, and we can rouse ourselves to that condition where he can use us, in some measure at least, to not only deepen missionary conviction, but to quicken the pulse of missionary endeavor in this hour of our greatest opportunity. Then should we commandeer all our spiritual forces and contribute to these results, for the work will be accomplished, if not by us, others will be called to take it on, and this spiritual power supplied to the called and truly consecrated men of the church, will bring it about. Let us then widen our borders, extend the faith, to that of a world-wide evangelism, and God's great work will truly come unto its own, and be consummated, and "the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."

Each day, each week, each month, each year, a new chance is given you by God. A new chance, a new leaf, a new life, this is the golden, unspeakable gift which each new day offers you.—Selected.

Measles

By A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician

Measles is one of the most readily communicable of all diseases. It ranks high as a cause of death and its contagiousness is comparable to that of smallpox and influenza (grippe). The estimated death rate per 100,000 population in the United States varies from 4.3 to 14.3 per cent. It is an infection that is peculiar to man, but has been conveyed to monkeys, guineapigs and rabbits by taking the secretions from the nose and throat of an infected patient. All races of people are susceptible and the death rate is much higher in the cities than in the rural districts. In the temperate zone and in the large cities it is more or less constantly present. It is more prevalent among girls and boys. It caused serious disability during the World War in the training camps. The most common complication is pneumonia, which frequently results fatally, and many cases are followed by tuberculosis. The patient usually is attacked by this disease within ten to fourteen days after exposure. This immunizes the patient from further attacks. This is a contact disease, and its mode of transmission is the passing of the disease directly from one person to another.

The nose and throat contain the virus and it is believed, by most experimenters, that the discharges from the nose and mouth are the principal means of transmission. Measles is not necessarily a universal disease and any careful mother, living in towns with good sanitation and proper public sentiment, can raise her children without their contracting the measles. In the North, the mortality is almost two thirds as high as that of scarlet fever.

Great care should be maintained by the nurse and she should be careful to wash her face and hands as she leaves the sick room. The disease comes on with chilliness, muscular soreness, headache and intense nasal catarrh. The eyes are intolerent to light, and watering of the eyes, coughing and sneezing are prominent symptoms. About the ninth day the eruption begins to fade and finally disappears entirely, by plant-like desquamation. In camps, jails, and other places where the hygiene is poor, there is a variety characterized by profound prostration and is frequently called: black measles, hemorrhagic measles, or malignant measles. The treatment consists of isolation, protection from drafts, rest in bed and protection of the eyes against bright lights. All cases should be prohibited to use their eyes for reading or similar work for some time after convalescence and certainly not during the progress of the disease. Some cases are complicated by inflammation of the middle ear (otitis media). For this reason, it is necessary to pay strict attention to the nose and throat during the first stages of the disease. Violence should be avoided in any irrigating or spraying of the nose as there is danger of driving infection back and up into the Eustachian tube. The mouth must be kept thoroughly clean as gangrene of the cheek has been known to occur in many cases, and may result fatally or greatly disfigure the patient.

The diet should be light and nourishing, and the air in the room should be kept moist by some antiseptic vapor, of which water and turpentine is a favorite among some. An antiseptic vapor seems to allay the irritation and soreness of the throat and many ambitious patients get up too soon and I have known a number of cases of this kind, when nearly well, they exposed themselves to drafts and the extremes of temperature, with heat or cold, and it resulted fatally.

The patient should be isolated for at least three weeks. If the cervical glands become enlarged, the application in rapid alternations of cold fomentations have proved very beneficial. In general, if a patient is obedient to hygienic rules and has the proper care, little treatment is required, beyond rest in bed and restricted diet. It is much better, though, that all cases be under the supervision of a physician.

Autobiography

XXIV.—TRIALS FROM WITHIN

By James Franklin Mintun

Some of the saddest passages to be found in the biographies of church men are those which concern the trials that are brought upon them by the church members who should be helping them. One can stand the buffetings of the world, but it sickens the heart to find enemies within the ranks of those who should be friends. We present some passages from the author's account in order that a lesson may be taught that may save other men like experiences.—Editors.

At the beginning of 1911 Mr. Fred Settles, came to my home in Des Moines to investigate the faith of the restoration. He spent the day, and then continued his investigation in a very humble and zealous manner, till the twenty-ninth, when he was baptized, afterwards being ordained and did a good work at Perry, Iowa.

Brother J. W. Peterson came to the district January 8, lodging with me, and on the 17th we began a series of missionary services. . . .

One of the most trying experiences associated with the continued illness of my wife occurred at about this time, when a report started about the family, that we received allowance for one of our children after it was dead. This made it necessary to secure a record of our allowance each year, from the Bishop and the Bishop's agent, where we had formerly lived. Brother Alma M. Fyrando, both of whom were very kind and willing to furnish the information. When I received this information I presented the facts to the parties who had been misinformed, and they very promptly corrected what they had said so far as it was possible for them to do so; but the injury that it did to my sick wife who had sacrificed so much for the purpose that I might remain in the mission work could not be fully corrected. One thing was very favorable to us, and that was the Saints had so much confidence in us that but few were believers in the report. That is the way I and my family have lived so that we could have the confidence of the Saints and the approval of God, for if we could have the approval of God, we could bear the rest if we had done what we could to have the confidence of the Saints. At this time I will mention the peculiar circumstance in association with the continued sickness of my wife. As I have mentioned before she had a nervous breakdown, this was very serious at the time, but somewhat improved, at times, but on the account of a large goiter she was never free from this nervous condition that made life something of a burden. Then she would take much worse in a physical way and by administration she would immediately be relieved. She was always cheerful, and when she was not able to be on her feet she would say when asked how she was, that she was quite well and smile, not wishing to complain. This brought me trouble at one time. I was at the morning service and requested prayers for her, for she was in a serious condition. After the forenoon service Brother O. Salisbury and I administered to her, and she was so improved that when a sister called to see her in the early afternoon, she concluded that she had not been so ill as I had reported, not knowing that she had been administered to. Some one who had heard me tell how sick she was in the forenoon, also heard her tell how well she appeared in the afternoon, and in a time when a few sought to prove that she was not as I had reported, and that I had not reported the truth. Had it not been for my diary, and the remembrance of Brother Salisbury that that was the day we had administered to her it surely would have had the appearance of a falsehood. It was nothing strange to all concerned after we had presented the fact of her administration that such a change had occurred, for the Saints were well acquainted with how oft she had been very sick and immediately restored by prayer and administration, to a great extent, though she had not been entirely restored to health for years, but she would say, when asked about her health. "I am quite well for me," though at the time not able to be on her feet, but for a short time. Her nervous breakdown was the result of the care of the children when I was away, and of an invalid mother. . . .

On the 14th I received a statement from Doctor Goodrich concerning the condition of my wife and wrote to Brother J. W. Wight and E. A. Smith, giving them such information, so they would know how to advise under the conditions. By reason of the sickness of my wife, and some misunderstandings I was made to endure some trying experiences. A few going so far as to say that my wife was pretending to be sick to keep me in the city. All who knew my wife, and her sufferings she had endured, and the sacrifices she had made for the work's sake, could not even think of making such an unkind accusation. Wife and I forgave them who felt that way, for they did not know what they did by adding to our already great burden; and we trust God forgave them. We felt the approval of heaven for what we endured for the work's sake at this time.

Any person who violates the provisions of the prohibition act violates the principles of the constitution of the United States, and can not be held to be attached to the principles of the constitution, nor can it be said that such a person possesses good moral character.—Court of Appeals, Washington, District of Columbia.

Letters to the Editor

"What Shall We Preach?"

The article of President Elbert A. Smith, printed in the Saints' Herald of June 15, fits in beautifully with the letter written a few weeks ago by Sister Attebery. The financial distress of the church makes the time opportune to tell the members: "This is your church, and this is your personal debt, and it must be paid. What are you going to do about it?"

Who can place the blame? and who can honestly excuse himself by saying, "It is no fault of mine that the church is in debt"? Every member, young or old, priesthood or laity, is equally guilty. It is my debt, and it is your debt, my fault and your fault. And I have not much faith in a person who must be begged or coaxed to do his own work, nor do I believe God has much patience with him.

God in his tender love for his people has so richly blessed us in every way that like spoiled children, we have become disgruntled and can not be pleased. And God has decreed a wholesale spanking which we richly deserve. How severe and long this spanking will be, remains to be seen.

We need to commit the "act of repentance" as well as the "act of faith" before God will help us very much.

Alma preached with plain and simple words which stirred his people to repentance, and they tried to do their duty. He told them that he had to talk plainly for he wanted to stir them up to repentance, so that they would do their duty, or they would all be lost. And when we consider our own situation, we realize that if ever we needed plain preaching, it is now. If we fail to heed the instruction given, we must suffer the loss that God said belongs to the fool who "would not learn wisdom."

I hope the entire priesthood will "preach and teach" in plain and simple words the honest duty of every member of the church, so that each one will understand every word and try to do what he is asked to do, for no one else can do it for him. It is his own personal duty.

I believe it is the duty of the priesthood to warn the membership now in all soberness, of their own responsibility and duty (time is so short). Then the people will choose whom they want to serve, and perhaps there will be more unity among those who remain to serve the Lord. Surely the church needs much repentance and weeding out before the members shall all pull together with one purpose.

May God endow his ministry with a knowledge how and what to teach, is my prayer.

Des Moines District Reunion

On June 13 the branches and groups of the district met in the Des Moines Church at ten o'clock in the morning for a sacrament service. Saints from all points were present, with only one exception, to the number of about four hundred, when District President Henry Castings called the meeting to order. He was assisted by his counselors and Brother John F. Sheehy, of Independence, Missouri. This change in the regular schedule of services met with general approval and gave ample time for serving the emblems and giving of testimonies without crowding the time; dismissal came a little before noon. The testimonies were of a spiritual character and caused rejoicing among the Saints.

Basket dinners were served by the visitors in the church dining room and in the city parks.

Those who participated in the morning service came back for the two thirty meeting which started with a baptismal service, there being six persons who received the ordinance at the hands of Elder C. E. McDonald. His own eight-year-old daughter was among the number baptized. The others were Lawrence and Kathryn Werges, of Prairie City, Dale Robinson and Thomas Morgan, of Des Moines, and Donald Ackelsen, of Newton.

Brother Sheehy preached to the congregation, his sermon being highly spiritual and instructive. The seats on the main floor were occupied by happy worshipers.

Stephen Robinson had arranged a program for six thirty which was presented by young people from Nevada and Des Moines. It was well executed, and received hearty applause.

Brother J. F. Sheehy preached at night and every night during the following week to large and appreciative audiences. His sermons were filled with divine fire and partook of heavenly wisdom, every one touching the heartstrings of his hearers, leading them to higher ground, and enlarging their vision. Righteous desires were strengthened and duties were made plain. At all these services there was a good representation from a part of the branches. Brother Sheehy also conducted a class at ten thirty each day which helped the workers to solve their problems.

Two sisters, Masile and Darlene Dalbey, gave a recital on Monday night before the preaching service. Sister Lucy Longan Orr presented this program, of exceptional merit, consisting of piano numbers by Darlene who is nine years old, and readings by Masile, a former Graceland student.

Eva Cook, district chorister, presented a program of song on Wednesday evening that was beautiful and harmonious, making a splendid setting for the sermon that followed.

Keith Davis who recently finished a course in violin in New York City, gave a recital on Friday night that was enjoyed by all and for which he received much praise. He was assisted by Arnold Carlson on the piano.

The other evenings were given to prayer and testimony for thirty minutes preceding the sermon. These were not so well attended as the other services, but proved successful in bringing a spirit of genuine worship into the meeting.

The last day of the reunion, Sunday, June 19, began with church school at nine thirty in charge of district officers, the attendance being large. President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at eleven o'clock, his sermon touching on many points vital to Latter Day Saints. He spoke with a goodly degree of the Spirit and with authority. A spiritual prayer and testimony service was held at two thirty, there being thirty-eight testimonies given. Brother Elbert preached again at night. Preceding his sermon, Brother Stephen Robinson presented a splendid program which has already been described in the Herald of July 6 from Newton.

Sister Earl Shalley brought her class of boys and girls from Nevada, and they lived in the lower auditorium of the church for most of the reunion. She and Earl are to be commended for this noble work.

Brother Stephen Robinson arranged for recreation on two evenings after church. He was assisted by Brother E. E. Spencer. A trip was made by all who wanted to visit the Snouse Opportunity School in which Sister Wildey is a teacher.

One unusual event that occurred preceding the reunion was the baptism of Sidney Werges, husband of Anna Sweely Werges, at his home in Prairie City by Brother Castings and McDonald on Wednesday night, of June 8. Brother Werges, who has been sick for many weeks before and after an operation at the hospital, was very desirous of uniting with the church, but could not stand to ride to Des Moines. So a tank was secured, the water warmed, and on the evening named these two ministers baptized him and confirmed him at his own home. Sister Christiana Salyards supervised the arrangements for the service as she is an aunt of Sister Werges. His son and daughter were baptized the following Sunday, and Brother Castings arranged for two carloads of Saints to go to the Werges home, seventeen miles from Des Moines, after the afternoon service that day, and confirmed them and administered the sacrament to the family. In both of these services Sister Eva Cook and Vivian Castings assisted by singing. Myrtle Cook and Grace Smith sang at the last service. Brothers Sheehy and Verne Deskin assisted at the latter service.

On the last day Brother A. L. Loving baptized Mrs. Filer, (mother of E. G. Beye), Joe Mahaffey and Ione Wilson, bringing the total number of baptisms to nine during the reunion.

Saints from Newton, Nevada, and Webster City came as groups, having dismissed all services on the two Sundays. This reunion was unique in that it was the first of its kind to be held in the district. It is outstanding in that it was very successful and fulfilled our highest expectations.

Eagle City, Oklahoma

The hearts of local Saints were stirred by the golden wedding service of Elder and Sister John R. Dyke in the little church at Eagle City, June 15. This loved and honored couple marched down the aisle following their son, Elder Lemuel Dyke; their great-grandson, Glen Ward, as ring-bearer; their great-granddaughter, Lavona Parsons, with little Audette Smoot, flower girls, to music played by their granddaughter, Mrs. Fern Parsons. They took their place in a bower of flowers where the vows were read by Elder Lemuel Dyke, following prayer by Elder Lester Dyke. After congratulations, a company of about one hundred and twenty-five enjoyed a basket dinner in the little grove by the church. The season's best vegetables and fruits and fried chicken made a wonderful feast.

The afternoon was spent visiting friends and relatives and listening to music played by the Eagle City orchestra, also by an old-time stringed band, and by the Dyke family. A number of presents from friends and relatives were lasting remembrances of the day.

John R. Dyke and Emma Ewell were united in marriage by Elder William Leeka, in Fremont County, Iowa, June 15, 1882. They went to Oklahoma in 1892. He was appointed postmaster of the Dyke Post Office near Eagle City in 1894, previous to railroad or city. Sister Dyke was the second white woman in this part of the country. They were among the little band of Saints here when Eagle City Branch was organized, and are held in high esteem by their friends and neighbors.

Canton group has an "L. D. S." flower bed on a hill side in the park at Canton. This attracts attention and is a lovely advertisement.

Money is scarce in this part of Oklahoma. More are willing to work for fifty cents a day and board than can find employment. The wage is spoken of as three and a half per day, meaning three square meals and half a dollar. Gardens have been good, the wheat crop short. Cotton men are unable to hire help because they have no available cash.

But the Saints are planning for and looking ahead to the Western Oklahoma reunion, to be held August 5 to 14, inclusive. They are sure of potatoes and freshly canned green beans to serve, and pray that the way may be made clear for many to attend. District members are looking forward to meeting Apostle Roy S. Budd as well as others living nearer home.

Son of Patriarch J. F. Martin Is Drowned

Wheeling, West Virginia, July 11.—Saints throughout the church will be grieved to learn of the sorrow that has come to Patriarch and Sister J. F. Martin by the drowning of their only little son, Kenneth. The Martin family, with some other Saints, had planned an outing for the Fourth of July. All went well in the forenoon, but shortly after dinner Kenneth with the other boys went in the creek nearby. He was not able to swim and the creek was quite deep at this point (a fact of which they were unaware). The boy stepped suddenly beyond his depth and went down. When aid arrived and the body was rescued, life was gone. It was a sorrowful company that wended its way back home that evening.

Kenneth was born February 22, 1922, at Kirtland, Ohio, and died July 4, 1932. He was baptized by his father on Children's Day, June 19, 1932. Just fifteen days after uniting with the church, this child was removed to that great family over yonder. He was a merry, lively boy, and will be missed by all. Left to mourn are his parents, one sister, Frances, and many friends. The funeral services were conducted by L. A. Serig, assisted by James E. Bishop. Interment was at Kirtland, Ohio.

Rock Island, Illinois

Local Saints have just finished an intensive effort in behalf of the June sacrifice period, and have realized some splendid results in carrying out the program of home visiting as outlined in the general pamphlet. Many who had not been attending expressed their faith in the church and a desire to meet with the members again. Perhaps a more lavish program of home visiting all through the year, would result in more good than has been achieved. Some of the contributions made express the spirit of sacrifice indeed, for in the world-wide depression many Rock Island people have not escaped. Special services were prepared for both sacrifice Sundays.

The branch gathered for a Fourth of July picnic at the State Park, "Black Hawk," and enjoyed the day in games, contests, etc. Brother Charles Gunlock, and Brother and Sister Clifford Huntley, of Chicago, and Brother and Sister Stanley Phillips, of Canada, formerly of this branch, are visiting here during their vacations and were present at the picnic.

At a recent meeting fifty new songbooks were pledged to the branch by individuals, and classes, so the local congregation may soon enjoy the new Hymnal in congregational singing. The choir is meeting regularly under the leadership of Sister Thomas Willets. The pianist, Sister Emma Lindley, is suffering from injuries received in a fall, and has been unable to meet with the singers for some time.

The Oriole Girls gave a banquet for their mothers the evening before Mother's Day, with Brother and Sister F. C.

Bevan as honor guests. The two-course dinner, decorations, favors, and games were worthy of the praise they received. Sister Helen Lindley, Oriole monitor, is also sponsoring the play "Truants," which the girls hope to present soon.

The Board of Stewards, with the help of other willing workers, have made the church lawn a beautiful and attractive place. Shrubbery and perennials have been arranged to enhance the space which formerly was vacant and unattractive. The basement of the building is prettily decorated, and plans are begun to build a platform for certain programs and entertainments which are held in the lower auditorium. Brother R. R. Welday's condition is now sufficiently improved so that he can again serve as chairman of the board. Saints are glad to note his slow but steady recovery from his recent serious illness.

Children's Day and Mother's Day were honored with appropriate programs by the children. The fathers were remembered on their day also, with special evening program features. Beginning at seven thirty each Sunday evening, a half hour of special numbers is enjoyed. Vocal and instrumental music, readings, poems, and short talks are presented.

Interest and attendance at the prayer services on Wednesday evening have been steadily growing. Sacrament services have been well attended and of an inspirational character. Pastor F. C. Bevan insists that the sacrament meeting is the one indispensable service for the continuance of spiritual life, and members have found it, indeed, to be one of invaluable strength. They trust that they may be able to live true to the inspiration which God gives to them in these spiritual meetings.

Sioux City, Iowa

The past few months have been full of activity and enthusiasm for Sioux City Branch. Since the conference in April a marked increase has been seen in spiritual interest. The attitude of "diggin' in" and securing the foundation stones of faith seems to have spread to a great number of the members. Sacrament services have been milestones in life experiences because of the devotion of the Saints. The themes, "Zion," "In the Light," and "Prayer," have brought forth valuable testimonies of God's blessings.

The departments have been busy promoting their various activities. The music department helped with Mother's Day and Children's Day programs. On the latter day three children, Lorraine Welch, Clifford Law, and Lucille Connell, were baptized and confirmed. On the evening of June 19, this department presented a program of musical numbers with short talks on "The History of Music," "Hymnology," and "The Necessity of Music in the Church." An old-fashioned "hymn sing" was conducted the evening of July 3.

Recreation leaders have sponsored two wiener roasts at Stone Park.

A six o'clock chicken dinner was served by the downtown women June 10. The Riverside women are working on a quilt. Although a large number of these women are not members of the church, they are zealous workers and generous contributors to the church needs.

The sacrifice period was fruitful. Brother C. E. Burnett opened the week with a sermon which was, without doubt, dictated by the Spirit. The monthly prayer service held that morning has been mentioned by all present as a feast of God's blessings.

One Saturday evening in June the church was the scene of a beautiful wedding when two of the popular young people of the branch, Evelyn Trede and Sam Grafio, were married. Elder C. J. Smith officiated in the double ring ceremony, and Genevieve Sands and Miss Helen Ryan added the musical part of the program. A considerable number of relatives and friends were present. Mr. and Mrs. Grafio will live at Mapleton, Iowa.

Two of the old-time members of this branch have been claimed by death. Brother Triffley Beauchenne and Sister Lucy Ann Ferdig. Sister Ferdig was one of the oldest members of the Reorganization, having been in the church seventy-one years.

Sioux City Saints look forward to the series of two-day meetings to be held in this district. They hope, with their brothers and sisters throughout the church, to become examples of consecrated sainthood.

Rock Island Young People's Convention and Conference

The annual young people's convention and conference was held at Rock Island church, June 10 to 12. Apostle John F. Garver and Elder Eugene E. Closson motored from Lamoni, to be guest speakers, arriving in time for the first meeting Friday evening. Brother Garver, who is in charge of this field, presided over the conference on Saturday, and Brother Closson supervised the young people's activities and lectures. District people were happy to be privileged to hear these two inspiring leaders once more, and appreciated the efforts they exerted to present such valuable thoughts for district consideration and development.

The Friday evening program was entertaining. The Gray family orchestra from Davenport, and the Shephard family orchestra, from Moline, were especially enjoyable. Readings were given by Sister Marion White and Barbara Ann McAdams. Musical numbers were rendered by Sister Ethel Spengler, Sister Nellie White, Sister Zazel Gray, Sister Louise Gunlock, Sister Marion White, Brother Leslie Davis, and Brother Richard Sacfield. Brother Closson gave a short opening address which caused his hearers to investigate their philosophy of life and attitudes toward the "perpendicular pronoun."

Saturday morning a fine lecture period was enjoyed with Brother Closson as teacher. Several interesting points in leadership were discussed which should make supervision more effective.

At the business session the conference approved the recommendation to ordain Brother William Allen, of Waterloo, to the office of elder, and Brother Laurence Symmonds, of Muscatine, to the office of priest. They decided to consider Rock Island Church as the recognized place for all future district conferences, conventions, etc., instead of rotating as has been the past custom. Some interesting reports were presented, including the financial report which shows this district to be among those who raised their quota for 1931. Over six thousand nine hundred dollars was raised in tithes and offerings.

The Saturday evening service was divided between Brother Eugene Closson and Brother L. G. Holloway. Brother Closson discussed the value and place for recreation in the church and illustrated his theory with a delightful demonstration which all enjoyed, and found practical for use in home branches. Brother Holloway discussed the church in terms of a relay race which can be successfully completed only if each runner does his very best. This generation must be true to its trust and not suffer the torch of truth to be slackened while it rests in its hands.

The Sunday services were well attended, beginning with the devotional services at nine forty-five and continuing through the day. Brother Closson addressed the young people and adults at the church school hour and Brother Garver was spokesman at the morning and afternoon preaching services. Being in close touch with the official proceedings of the church, he brought a very definite picture of the needs of the church at this time, its responsibilities, its unattained goal. To this district, as members of the church, has come the appeal to save it from further retrenchment and help it to become the light of the world.

Under the direction of Brother Closson, a young people's organization was effected which has enthusiastically begun to enlist the young people of the district between the ages of fifteen and thirty. Brother Leonard Stiegel, of Moline, was chosen to be the general supervisor; Brother Thomas Beil, of Clinton, president; Brother Verle Bean, of Joy, vice president, and Sister Gladys Heide Martens, of Fulton, secretary and treasurer. Rock Island District expects some excellent work from the young people under this splendid corps of officers. Attendance at young people's camp at Nauvoo is one of their objectives.

The closing sermon, Sunday evening, was by Missionary Leonard G. Holloway.

Dunlap, Iowa

The junior department observed Mother's Day by carrying out the theme, "Love at Home," in their service.

June 4 and 5, several from this mission were privileged to attend an institute at Logan, conducted by President F. M. McDowell and Apostle J. F. Garver. Some wonderful meetings were experienced.

Children's Day was observed with an appropriate program given chiefly by the children. The infant son of Brother and Sister Cecil Talcott was blessed by Elder Elvin Baughman, and given the name, Carlin Lon.

Elder Joseph Lane preached here one Sunday in June, and Elder E. Y. Hunker spent two days here the latter part of the month. Their visits are greatly enjoyed.

The young people spent an evening in recreation at the country home of Brother and Sister D. A. Holcomb a few weeks ago. After eating a picnic supper, they played various games, then ended the evening with songs around the campfire.

Denver, Colorado
